House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

Speaker: The Honourable Roland Michener

Thursday, January 18, 1962

FIFTH SESSION—TWENTY FOURTH PARLIAMENT—OPENING

The parliament which had been prorogued on the twenty ninth day of September, 1961, met this day at Ottawa for the dispatch of business.

The house met at three o'clock, the Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Speaker read a communication from the Secretary to the Governor General, announcing that His Excellency the Governor General would proceed to the Senate chamber at three o'clock on this day, for the purpose of formally opening the session of the dominion parliament.

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the pleasure of His Excellency the Governor General that this honourable house attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And the house being returned to the Commons chamber:

OATHS OF OFFICE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-1, respecting the administration of oaths of office.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that when the house did attend His Excellency the Governor General this day in the Senate chamber, His Excellency was pleased to make a speech to both houses of parliament. To prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy, which is as follows:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I welcome you as you resume your parliamentary duties.

We look forward to the presence this summer of Her Majesty the Queen Mother, who for many years has endeared herself to the hearts of all Canadians. We shall also have the pleasure of receiving Their Royal Highnesses the Duke of Edinburgh and the Princess Royal.

During the past year, I have visited several provinces and made an extensive trip to the Northwest Territories. The great north brought home to me the vastness, the far horizons and the beauty of our country. Flying over it, I thought of the wonderful heritage which Providence has entrusted to us. May we be worthy of this stewardship.

While the world outlook contains elements of continuing danger, there are some grounds for cautious optimism. Major military conflicts have been avoided and the processes of conciliation and negotiation are in progress or in prospect on many of the important international issues. The Canadian government remains devoted to peace as its primary objective.

Recurrent Soviet pressure on Berlin makes it necessary for the governments of the North Atlantic alliance to reconcile the preservation of essential rights and interests with a constant readiness to discuss and enter into equitable and safeguarded engagements. My government has consistently worked towards that end, and approves the resumption of preliminary talks with the U.S.S.R., the success of which will depend on Soviet good faith.

In other areas of tension, Canada has been prominent in international efforts to relieve political, economic and administrative strains which have sometimes accompanied the transition from dependent to independent status of new nations. International peace keeping arrangements continue to warrant effective Canadian support.

International agreements on measures of controlled disarmament remain vitally necessary if the world is to be freed permanently from the menace of war. As a member of the expanded disarmament committee recently reconstituted, my government supports the decision to resume disarmament negotiations in March.

The commonwealth continues to grow as an important instrument for freedom and peace, linking five continents and people of many races. The strengthening of this association is a primary objective of my government. During 1961, Canada joined in welcoming Cyprus, Sierra Leone and Tanganyika to full membership in the commonwealth.

My government derives particular satisfaction from the endorsement by the United Nations of a world food program sponsored by Canada, for which you will be asked to authorize a contribution.

You will also be asked to appropriate funds to maintain Canada's external aid program.

Canada's diplomatic representation has been expanded in the commonwealth, in the French speaking countries of Africa, and as well in Latin America and in Asia.

While striving to reduce international tensions and promote the peaceful settlement of international disputes, my government still considers it necessary to provide the support required to strengthen and maintain the defence forces necessary to continue an active role in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Important negotiations are now under way between the British government and the European economic community following the decision of Britain to ascertain whether terms can be negotiated on which it might become a member of that community. My ministers are following these negotiations carefully, having in mind that their outcome should give full recognition of the vital interests of the commonwealth and to Canada's position and interests as a major trading nation.

My government in recent international meetings has reiterated its support for the expansion of world trade on a multilateral non-discriminatory basis and its readiness to play a constructive role in the promotion of world trade. It stands ready to work with other countries in the pursuit of this goal.

My government plans to recommend to you a number of measures that will constitute further steps in working out the purposes of confederation and identifying more clearly the Canadian nationality in various aspects of public and business affairs. With this purpose in mind, you will be asked to give effect, with modifications, to the recommendations of the royal commission on publications.

By means of conferences with representatives of provincial governments, progress has been made toward agreement on a means of amending our constitution in Canada, which would be the final step to bring our formal legal position into line with reality. A formula to accomplish this purpose has been sent to provincial governments for their consideration.

Legislation will be proposed to require reports to be submitted by business and labour organizations concerning the extent and nature of their operations and whether, and to what extent, they may be owned or controlled outside Canada.

A measure relating to the Senate will be placed before you.

My government will ask you to take steps to ensure that the forthcoming redistribution of electoral districts is made in an equitable manner upon an objective basis. To this end you will be asked to approve for the first time in our history a measure to create an independent commission to recommend the changes required in the electoral districts as a result of the decennial census.

Comprehensive measures to put into effect my government's economic policies were enacted in preceding sessions of this parliament. The benefits flowing from these policies are now evident in record levels of employment, of production, and of export trade. There has been a substantial improvement since last year in the unemployment situation. As the result of the efforts of my government through its municipal winter works incentive program, notable progress has been made in meeting the recurrent problem of seasonal unemployment. The government has already announced its intention of asking you to approve another and larger program of assistance to municipalities for winter works projects.

Further measures to stimulate economic activity and promote national development will be placed before you this session. One of these will be the construction of a railway in the Gaspe peninsula from Matane to Ste. Anne des Monts. Another will be the construction of a floodway and other works to conserve and control the waters of the Red and Assiniboine rivers in Manitoba, for which agreement has now been reached with the province regarding the division of costs.

Other measures which will help to enlarge employment by stimulating economic activity will include a bill to increase the total amount of financing of exports which can be undertaken by the Export Credits Insurance Corporation and an amendment to broaden the scope of the Small Businesses Loans Act.

The success of the recent "Resources for Tomorrow" conference demonstrated the benefits of co-operation between governments in this field. My government, in consultation with the governments of the ten provinces, is examining suggestions made at that conference for co-operative measures to encourage the wise management and multiple use of Canada's natural resources.

The provision of low cost electric power is one of the most important factors in the economic growth and industrial development of Canada. As a further step in the national development policy, my Prime Minister has invited the provincial governments to join with the federal government in early discussions of the steps that might be taken toward the establishment of long-distance power transmission to link provinces and eventually the different regions of Canada.

You will be asked to provide for an expanded program of encouragement to scientific research by industry in Canada.

A bill will be placed before you intended to enable Canada to participate effectively in arrangements for reinforcing the international monetary fund when additional resources are required to maintain stability in exchange markets in the face of substantial capital movements.

The maintenance of fair prices for farm and fishery products also continues to be a matter of prime concern to my government and you will be asked to provide the funds necessary to sustain the price stabilization policy. My ministers have achieved a gratifying success in finding markets for grain and thereby reducing surplus stocks. The drought in the prairie provinces during 1961 has resulted in severe losses, however, and you will be asked to provide assistance by means of acreage payments to the farmers who have been affected. Legislation will also be proposed to extend the period of application of the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

Important measures in the field of social welfare will also be proposed at this session. Your approval will be requested for an increase in the amount of the universal old age pension payable under the Old Age Security Act, and also for legislation to increase the amount to which the federal government will contribute under the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act. After the concurrence of the provinces for the necessary amendment to section 94A of the British North America Act has been secured, parliament will be asked to approve a constitutional amendment in order to permit the introduction of a contributory system of old age pensions and related survivors' and disability benefits which will be in addition to the existing old age pension legislation and will take into account private pension arrangements and the need for legislation concerning portability of pension rights.

You will be asked to authorize the establishment of a national council of welfare similar to the council of health which has had a long record of usefulness.

You will be asked to approve an amendment to the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act to authorize the payment of allowances under specified conditions to merchant seamen, firefighters, foresters, members of voluntary aid detachments and certain other civilians whose war services overseas have been recognized in other respects. Other amending bills will provide for increased allowances and other improvements in the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act and also for the extension of the effective period of the War Services Grants Act and the Veterans Insurance Act and for the extension of the qualifying period under the Veterans Land Act.

My government will also ask you to appropriate moneys required in the unemployment insurance fund to safeguard the rights of workers until the report of the special committee inquiring into the unemployment insurance program has been received and can be acted upon.

You will be asked to increase the federal grants to universities and make suitable provision in those cases where alternative arrangements are made for supplementary provincial grants in lieu of federal grants.

My government is initiating negotiations with the provincial and municipal authorities with a view to removing the tolls on the Victoria and Jacques Cartier bridges in Montreal; should these be successful you will be asked to approve legislation for this purpose.

You will be asked to authorize the institution of an automobile ferry service between North Sydney, Nova Scotia, and Argentia, Newfoundland, and to provide for the construction of the necessary vessel and docks.

Other measures will be introduced to amend the Broadcasting Act, the Canada Shipping Act, the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act, the Bankruptcy Act and a number of other statutes. You will be asked to approve the ratification of the universal copyright convention.

Members of the House of Commons:

My government intends to ask you to reconstitute the special committee on procedure of the house and request it to make recommendations on the elimination of closure of debates in the House of Commons.

The estimates required for the public service and for payments authorized by parliament will be laid before you.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I pray that God in His wisdom may grant you light and grace in your deliberations and the fulfilment of your duties.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved:

That the speech of His Excellency the Governor General to both houses of parliament be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the house.

Motion agreed to.

THE LATE MERVYN ARTHUR HARDIE

The late M. A. Hardie

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as we return to our duties we also return to one of those occasions when the house becomes as one. We recall the work of those who have passed on during the interim, and I am speaking now of Mervyn Arthur Hardie, the late member for Mackenzie River. He was first elected to the House of Commons in 1953 and re-elected in 1957 and 1958. A young man, his life had been given to public service. He had served on the Yellowknife council and the Northwest Territories council.

One thinks of him as a young man of indomitable courage. Indeed, as I look back over the years that I have been a member of the House of Commons I can say that nothing that has taken place has had a greater appeal than those simple words of Mr. Hardie on his return to this chamber after many months in hospital. His was a message of deep and abiding faith. It moved the house because of that fact. Indeed, there is nothing more moving in the life of men than a faith in God and all that faith means in the lives of those who have that belief.

Mr. Hardie knew his constituency well. I saw him there when I visited the Northwest Territories in the summer on the occasion of my meeting with the Northwest Territories council. There was a luncheon in advance and it was obvious then that he was suffering greatly. Indeed, before the luncheon was over he had to leave and go back to hospital. His health was failing greatly, but his determination and that courage which he displayed throughout with regard to the suffering that was his will always remain as an ineffaceable memory of one who, in but a few short years in the House of Commons and in a comparatively short life, gave to members on all sides of the house an understanding of that peace that passes understanding.

I know I speak for members in all parts of the house when I say that by that faith he possessed he left his imprint on all of us. We mourn his passing and I extend on behalf of the government of Canada, and I know on behalf of the whole house, to his wife and family this expression of our sincere sorrow.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): On behalf of our party, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Prime Minister for what he has said about a man who was a very loyal and courageous member and supporter of the party, but who was also more than that. He was a very loyal and courageous servant of his country. Mervyn Hardie was a very courageous man, at times an unconventional one. He served Canada not only courageously but at times in unconventional and adventurous ways.

He had a brusqueness of manner which was never able to conceal a warm heart and generous disposition. That is one of the reasons why he had friends in all parts of the house. He was hard hitting in debate but he never allowed his hard hitting to extend beyond the confines of this chamber. He was above all, Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister has indicated, a man of the north. He was passionately dedicated to serving that great part of our country, to advancing its progress and its welfare.

In his later months he served under conditions of much pain and some weakness. I happen to know that he knew many weeks before he died that the end was as certain as human things can be. I remember saying to him when he had made up his mind to go to Yellowknife last summer that I thought it was unwise for him to go so far at that time. He replied: "I am the member for that constituency and I am going to be there to greet the Prime Minister when he arrives," and he was there. He served in circumstances that would have daunted anyone of less courage. Neither pain nor weakness prevented him from doing his duty up to the very end. While neither medical science nor prayers could save him for further life on this earth, he will long live in the memory of the members in this house, all of whom were his friends, and in the memory of the many friends he had throughout the country. So I join the Prime Minister in tribute to him and in extending our deep sympathy to his bereaved and saddened family.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to associate the members of this group with the very eloquent and moving tribute paid to Mervyn Hardie by the Right Hon. Prime Minister and by the Leader of the Opposition. We counted Merv Hardie a very great friend. We recognized his great courage and sincerity, and we acknowledge that he worked unceasingly in the interests of the people he represented in the House of Commons.

Merv Hardie was a product of western Canada and the Canadian north. He grew up in Saskatchewan in the hungry thirties. Nothing came easy to him. A substantial part of his schooling was obtained at that little prairie university conducted and administered by Father Athol Murray of Notre Dame of Wilcox, and at great sacrifice to himself he was able to acquire an education in very difficult times.

He served his constituents and our nation faithfully and well until the very end, and particularly at the time of his passing our thoughts were with Mrs. Hardie and the children.

[Mr. Pearson.]

We know that Merv Hardie gave his all, not only of himself but of his financial resources to the serving of the nation. At this time perhaps I may say for our group that we feel parliament should consider this and other like instances so that at some future date we may take appropriate steps in order that in circumstances like these the financial suffering for those who are left behind may be minimized.

We join with the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition in extending to Mrs. Hardie and the family our very deepest sympathy.

THE MINISTRY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF MINISTERIAL CHANGES— APPOINTMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): At this time it is usual, if there have been any changes in the ministry, for notification to be given to the house. I would first point out that Hon. Paul Comtois, who represented the constituency of Nicolet-Yamaska, was appointed lieutenant governor of the province of Quebec on October 6, 1961. Thereupon there was a vacancy in the portfolio which he held. This vacancy has been filled by the appointment of the hon. member for Quebec South, Hon. Jacques Flynn.

Furthermore, the presidency of the Queen's privy council for Canada has been given to the hon. member for Bellechasse, Hon. Noel Dorion, Secretary of State.

It is customary also to refer to the parliamentary secretaries and the appointments to which they have been allocated. Before doing so I wish to mention the fact that the former parliamentary secretary for external affairs, the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), for reasons of business and the other claims that come to those young men who serve in public life, found himself unable to carry on in this position. Regretting the fact that that is so, I want to add as well the appreciation of the government, and I think of Canada as a whole, of the services he rendered in the United Nations on behalf of this nation.

The following are the appointments to the parliamentary secretaryships. There has been very little change.

To the Minister of Transport the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Martini).

To the Minister of Justice the member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell).

To the Minister of Finance the member for Carleton (Mr. Bell).

To the Minister of National Health and Welfare the member for Huron (Mr. Cardiff).

To the Minister of National Defence the member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Chambers).

To the Minister of Agriculture the member for Brant-Haldimand (Mr. Charlton), the member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson).

To the Minister of Fisheries the member for Gaspe (Mr. English).

To the Minister of Veterans Affairs the member for Saskatoon (Mr. Jones).

To the Minister of National Revenue the member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

To the Minister of Trade and Commerce the member for Halifax (Mr. Morris).

To the Minister of Public Works the member for Quebec East (Mr. Tassé).

To the Minister of Labour the member for Essex South (Mr. Thrasher).

As parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister, in succession to Mr. Martineau, I am very pleased to announce the appointment of the member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard). He will become one of my assistants along with the member for Peel (Mr. Pallett), the chief whip.

INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) presented the following message from His Excellency the Governor General:

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons a certified copy of an order in council appointing the Hon. Donald Methuen Fleming, Minister of Finance, the Hon. Leon Balcer, Minister of Transport, the Hon. Gordon Churchill, Minister of Veterans Affairs, and the Hon. Ellen Louks Fairclough, Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons as commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of chapter 143 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, intituled: An Act respecting the House of Commons.

STANDING COMMITTEES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved:

That a special committee be appointed to prepare and report with all convenient speed the lists of members to compose the standing committees of this house under standing order 65. The said committee to be composed of Messrs. Balcer, Churchill, Habel, Pallett and Peters.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Churchill, that Mr. Paul Martineau, member for the constituency of Pontiac-Temiscamingue, be appointed chairman of committees of the whole house.

(Text):

I wish to add in that connection, sir, that I propose the name of Mr. Martineau, a young man with a distinguished record of war service and of public service, a member of the bar, a student of the rules and one who I think the house will agree has been fair and reasonable in his relations with the members generally in the house and who will be able to discharge the duties of deputy speaker with honour to himself and in keeping with the traditions of this chamber.

(Translation):

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the opposition I am pleased to support the recommendation which the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) just made to the house.

I am certain that, thanks to his past experience as parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister, the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) will be able to perform his new duties with efficiency. I hope he will also be able to interpret the standing orders of this house in the same spirit of objectivity, humanity and fairness as you have always shown, Mr. Speaker, when giving rulings from time to time.

On behalf of the opposition and of all those who sit with us in this house, I offer the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue my warmest congratulations and my best wishes in the exercise of his new duties.

(Text):

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the posts of deputy speaker and chairman of committees are important ones and we think that changes should not be made in any light fashion. It has been the custom over the years in the House of Commons at the beginning of a parliament to elect a speaker and deputy speaker. It has been the custom also that the occupants of these important positions remain in those positions during the life of the parliament. There is another custom and it is that, in the event the government should be successful in a coming election and the administration is returned, the person who occupied the position of deputy speaker usually moves to the position of speaker.

I do not know if the government feels that it cannot face the electorate in a confident manner and is therefore changing the person occupying this position at this time. We do think however that it is more in keeping with the impartiality of this position if the person who holds the position maintains it through the life of a parliament and the government does not—as appears to be the case in this parliament—merely use it as a stepping stone for the further advancement within the government of certain members of the government during a given parliament.

This is the third time in this parliament that we have had changes in this position. Many members of parliament in the past have said that the position of Speaker should be a permanent one; that in so far as possible we should move those persons who are the Speaker and Deputy Speaker out of the day to day partisanship of parliamentary debate.

I suggest to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) that he is not elevating the position of Deputy Speaker by making so many and such frequent changes. I wish to tell the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) that what I am saying this afternoon on behalf of this group is in no sense a personal reflection on him, but merely a criticism of the government and its method of using this position within this parliament as a stepping stone to the cabinet.

We expect this will be the last change that the Prime Minister will be able to bring about—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: —but because we feel that this is degrading to parliament itself we shall oppose the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? Is it agreed that the members are called in?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that in the latter days of the last session when we had as deputy chairman of committees Mr. Gordon Campbell Chown, member for the electoral district of Winnipeg South, there was general acceptance of his capacity and ability in the discharge of the responsabilities attaching to that position. All of us are, of course, deeply regretful that the previous occupant of this position, the member for Spadina, Mr. Charles Rea, was unable to continue his duties in that capacity. I doubt whether he will be back with us. Mr. Chown filled in during the latter part of the session and in view of the general satisfaction which I feel he gave I have pleasure in moving, seconded by my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), that he be appointed deputy chairman of the committee of the whole house.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for the motion I am about to move unanimous consent is required. We are now entering on the debate on the speech from the throne but there are several matters in the supplementary estimates which should receive the early attention of the house, and to place the house in a position where it may proceed therewith I intend to make this motion. I might mention that one of the supplementary estimates is designed to meet the situation in the prairie provinces where in consequence of drought there has been a pronounced diminution in the crop.

The house already knows as a result of statements made during the recess that we intend to introduce a measure to provide for acreage payments. Because of the need for early action I ask for unanimous consent to move, seconded by my hon. friend the member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), that the house at its next sitting resolve itself into committee to consider of the supply to be granted to Her Majesty. In addition, if I may mention it as well at this time, I intend to follow that, also with unanimous consent, by moving that at the next sitting the house resolve itself into committee to consider ways and means of raising the supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

All I wish to have in this connection is the will of the house, if the house will accept the motion, in order that the matter to which I refer, together with one or two others, might receive early attention rather than having to wait until the completion of the debate on the speech from the throne which in the ordinary course of events would be necessary before this matter connected with acreage payments and one or two other questions could be dealt with.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): The motion proposed by the Prime Minister does involve a departure from the rules of the house. It would, as the right hon. gentleman has said, require unanimous consent, and he is requesting such consent.

That consent should, I think, only be given in circumstances where urgent or immediate action is required of a type which would justify the interruption of the ordinary business of the house—in this case, I take it, it would be the address in reply to the speech from the throne. The Prime Minister has mentioned one case which he thinks does justify such an interruption and we do not quarrel with him in that. He has said there might be two or three others which would justify the same change, or the same interruption and we should be glad to consider those when we have information in regard to them. However, we are not disposed to object to the Prime Minister's request for unanimous consent to moving a motion for the purpose he has indicated. The only one which he has indicated in detail concerns the payment of acreage payments to farmers for relief consequent on the drought.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Might I just add this, because I want to be as fair as the Leader of the Opposition. There is also the program in connection with winter works. I do not go beyond those two.

Mr. Pearson: We do not oppose the two matters which the Prime Minister has mentioned—the acreage payments and action in regard to winter works. We appreciate the fact that these matters are sufficiently important to justify an interruption in the debate on the speech from the throne and we would agree with the Prime Minister's motion on that understanding.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): We are quite prepared, and, indeed, quite pleased to give unanimous consent to the Prime Minister moving the motion he has in mind. I am certain we should be prepared at any time during the session to set aside normal business, if that seemed to be required, in order to deal with urgent matters. The Prime Minister has told us the two particular matters he has in mind. They have to do with acreage payments and the winter works program. I might say that the acreage payments are something that might have been paid last fall—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is rising to express the viewpoint of his party. The request is for unanimous consent, and this is not really a debatable matter. If the hon. member is willing to give consent, all well and good, but if not that ends it.

Mr. Argue: In spite of the fact that this might have been dealt with in some other way, in view of the Prime Minister's statement that these matters are urgent, we are prepared to give consent that they be brought in at an early date.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister the unanimous consent of the house to move the proposed motion with respect to the committee of supply?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker moved:

That this house will at the next sitting resolve itself into a committee to consider of the supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister the unanimous consent of the house to move the further motion with respect to the committee of ways and means?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved:

That this house will at the next sitting resolve itself into a committee to consider of the ways and means for raising the supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

AFTERNOON SITTING ON FRIDAY, JANUARY 19

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, again asking the unanimous consent of the house, I should like to move:

That when the house adjourns this day it shall stand adjourned until tomorrow at 2.30 p.m., and that the provisions of section 1, standing order 2, shall be suspended in relation thereto.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister unanimous consent to make the proposed motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion may I ask the Prime Minister or the leader of the house this question. In view of the fact that we have had no prior notice of the suspension of the debate on the throne speech, when is it the intention of the government to interrupt the debate in order to deal with the one or two matters which the Prime Minister has in mind?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think, Mr. Speaker, that we might discuss that on Monday. We will proceed in the regular way on Monday and Tuesday. I think that would be early enough to give consideration to that question. I hope that the hon. gentleman will agree that that is proper.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Diefenbaker the house adjourned at 5.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, January 19, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

TABLING OF NEW REGULATIONS—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies of new immigration regulations approved earlier this week to take effect from February 1, 1962. The new regulations are in two parts, the first of which has been formally approved by the governor in council as P.C. 1962-86 of January 18, 1962, while the second part requires only the approval of the minister under section 62 of the Immigration Act. These new regulations consolidate, revise and replace the various regulations passed in previous years, including those issued under previous ministerial authority.

Part I of the new regulations deals with such important questions as visa requirements, admissible classes, the responsibility of transportation companies and most of the major administrative and policy matters dealt with in the present regulations.

Part II extends the field of jurisdiction of the immigration appeal board and ensures that all appellants will be given an opportunity to submit their appeals to an independent tribunal which is free to conduct its proceedings independently of departmental officials.

The most important provision of the new regulations is section 31 which is in fact the core of Canada's immigration policy. The new regulation 31, replacing section 20 of the former regulations, lays primary stress on education, training and skills as the main condition of admissibility regardless of the country of origin of the applicant. If a person can qualify on these grounds and has sufficient means to establish himself in Canada until he finds employment or, alternatively, is coming forward to approved employment or with suitable plans for self establishment in Canada, he or she is admissible subject only to the normal requirements of good health, good character and so forth. This means that any suitably qualified person from any part of the world can be considered for immigration to Canada entirely on his own merits without regard to his race, colour, national origin or the country from which he comes. This is a substantial advance over the former regulations in that the selection of immigrants, in so far as selection on the basis of skills is concerned will be done without discrimination of any kind.

Likewise if a person has the requisite skills and potential ability to establish himself in Canada he or she may also be sponsored by a parent, parent in law or fiancé already in Canada provided the sponsor is a Canadian citizen. The Canadian sponsor must be able to provide care and maintenance for such immigrant until the latter is able to look after himself. The sponsorship at the Canadian end takes the place of the requirement that the immigrant himself must have sufficient means or, alternatively, firm employment or self employment opportunities.

Subsection (c) of section 31 also provides for the admission of a somewhat wider list of immediate dependants and close relatives. It applies not only to sponsors who are Canadian citizens but also to persons other than Canadian citizens who have been legally admitted to Canada for permanent residence and who wish to bring forward a mother, father, husband, wife, grandparent, fiancé or an unmarried minor child. This provision is of universal application; its principal effect will be to improve the position of persons from countries which have received less favoured treatment in the past, by the inclusion of grandparents and fiancés in the admissible categories of dependents and by the elimination of age limits with respect to fathers and mothers.

Subsection (d) of section 31 continues unchanged the special provisions regarding the admissibility of certain classes of relatives such as brothers and sisters, adult sons and daughters, orphan nieces, etc., which applied to certain countries specified in former regulation 20(c). The reasons for the continuation of this special provision are essentially historical, based on the immigration patterns and policies that have been established over many years. This situation could only be changed by introducing restrictions and withdrawing privileges which have been enjoyed for many years by close relatives and sponsors from European and western hemisphere countries—those parts of the world from which Canada has traditionally derived the vast majority of its population. This the government does not deem wise or equitable to do. To introduce restrictions at any point in the new regulations would have run counter to the government's basic objective which remains to foster and encourage, wherever possible, changes and improvements which will result in the immigration of larger numbers of suitably qualified immigrants to Canada.

The general effect of section 31, taken as a whole, is to improve the position of nationals of all countries, without weakening the position of any. The chief beneficiaries will be the Asians, Africans and nationals of Middle Eastern countries. Not only will sponsors in Canada be able to apply for a wider circle of relatives from these countries than formerly, but for the first time unsponsored applicants from these parts of the world with the necessary qualifications will be admissible to Canada. Heretofore, qualified persons from these areas without relatives in Canada could only be admitted by order in council.

Next to the Asians, Africans and nationals of Middle Eastern countries, persons from the Central and Latin American countries, including the West Indies, stand to benefit. Nationals of these countries will for the first time come within the admissible classes on the basis of their education, training and skills.

To a less significant extent, the nationals of European countries will also derive additional advantage from the new regulations. In the past, persons from continental European countries other than Britain and France could be admitted if they came to Canada to enter approved employment or to establish themselves in approved business, trade or profession, or in agriculture. Henceforth, they will come within the admissible classes if they have the necessary training and skills to qualify and have sufficient means to maintain themselves in Canada pending their successful establishment.

The new regulations make no mention of the special agreements which are in effect with India, Pakistan and Ceylon, formerly referred to in section 21. This does not mean that the agreements do not continue in full force and effect. Quite the contrary, the enlarged provisions of the new regulations bring directly into the admissible classes those qualified but unsponsored immigrants from these three countries who formerly were covered by the agreements and make it unnecessary to have a special regulation to provide for them. It is in fact the view of the government that the agreements with India, Pakistan and Ceylon will no longer be necessary, and it is the intention to arrange discussion on this point at an early date with the representatives of the governments concerned. Until such time, however, as these discussions have been completed to the mutual satisfaction of the governments directly concerned, these agreements will remain in effect without change.

Less important revisions of the new regulations include an extended definition of "child". The new definition makes provision for illegitimate sons or daughters under 21 years of age in cases where the mother herself is a legal resident of Canada or an immigrant to Canada. The literacy test in the former regulations, which was not satisfactory and, in fact, rarely used, has been abolished. The requirement of education, training and skills contained in the new regulations will, to a large extent, take the place of any formal requirement concerning literacy. The provisions of the former regulations dealing with passport and visa requirements have been reorganized and developed in more orderly fashion.

Part II of the regulations, made by the minister under section 62 of the act deal entirely with the jurisdiction of the immigration appeal board and appeals procedure. Under the former legislation the general board of immigration appeals, as it was then known, was given only a limited measure of jurisdiction to hear certain classes of appeals; the remaining classes of appeals were being dealt with by the minister or by the local, regional or headquarters appeal boards consisting entirely of departmental officials. This practice has been subject to criticism on the grounds that no opportunity was given for an appeal presented to a tribunal free to conduct its proceedings independently of departmental officials.

The assignment of all appeals to an independent board is further evidence of the government's desire to have all matters relating to appeals from deportation dealt with in the most impartial manner possible.

For the first time also the regulations codify and clarify the procedures and the rights and privileges of persons subject to deportation in so far as questions relating to the conduct of inquiries under the act are concerned.

The provisions of part II of the regulations safeguard the interest of the individual and ensure that he will receive a fair hearing. These provisions follow the principles of natural justice and are in line with the spirit of the bill of rights.

It is my hope that the new immigration regulations will commend themselves to all members of parliament, regardless of party, to all Canadians and to prospective immigrants around the world. They represent a conscientious and sincere effort on the part of the government of Canada to enshrine the principles of equity and justice which will guide responsible officials in the discharge of their difficult and complex duties.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I notice, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. lady indicated that the order which she has tabled was dated January 18. I congratulate her upon having chosen that day to give a more liberal interpretation to the regulations.

Mr. Chevrier: That is well said.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not attempt, of course, to follow all of the details although I listened attentively to the outline contained in the hon. lady's speech, but there are one or two observations I should like to make. Of course the hon. lady has done the best she could to indicate that the tribunal would be independent, but she knows that without an amendment to the Immigration Act the final decision in all these cases is vested by parliament in the minister and cannot be transferred by order in council to anybody else. All the appeal board can do is act in an advisory capacity to the minister, however much she may seek to bind herself to accept its advice. That is the law and that, of course, was one of the things members on the opposite side of the house objected to when they were over here, and which they were going to change five years ago.

The hon. lady has said that the new section 31, which is substituted for section 20 of the existing regulations, abolishes discrimination. Of course it does nothing of the kind. It substitutes one set of criteria for discrimination for another. I am one of those who think that the words "discrimination" and "selection", as any dictionary shows, mean precisely the same thing, and they cannot mean anything different.

The hon. lady is well aware, as she has said previously in the house, that there is in the existing regulations no racial or other similar discrimination, and I am glad there is not going to be any such discrimination now. But I suggest that what the hon. lady has done is to make it necessary to look at every individual case and compare it with every other case, and that, by abolishing some of the convenient general categories she is going to create an administrative problem that it will be absolutely impossible to cope with if we are to have any substantial immigration. Of course, if the pattern of 1961 is to be followed, when we had a net emigration from this country, it is probable that the new regulations are well designed to serve that end.

Finally, I should like to point out that what the government undertook to do five years ago was, not to change the regulations but to change the act, and that has not been done.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough) has now given to the House of Commons a most important statement on a most important matter. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I can say to the minister how much we regret that it was not possible to give the other members and parties of the house a preview of the regulations and the changes about which she has now given us notice. I say this because I am certain everybody will understand that, even with all we have been told in this statement, the implications and the interpretations are of such a nature that it is not possible at this time to make any major comment upon them.

However, we welcome at long last some official statement from the government and I am certain it will be understood when I say, with all due respect, that after all the vituperation we heard on immigration policy and other matters when certain hon. members sat on this side of the house—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is going outside the scope of the statement that was made. I am not restricting him in commenting on the views the minister has expressed, but this is not a debate and he should keep himself to the matter which was announced by the minister.

Mr. Winch: At this stage, Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not entering into a debate, because that would take much longer than you would allow at this time. I am pointing out that at long last we have something that we understood was to come in by way of legislative enactment and which after five years the government has discovered can be carried out by regulation.

We welcome anything, whether it be by legislative enactment or regulatory change, that is going to mean the placing of the citizenship and immigration laws of Canada on a basis which will better demonstrate what democracy means to our country, our peoples, our governments and legislative bodies. We welcome anything that will demonstrate to the world that we are completely honest in our position on immigration; that it should be on a non-discriminatory basis and not influenced by colour, sex, creed or the country from which these people come.

We have heard only very briefly of the new principles of immigration under section 31, I believe it is, based on education and skills primarily. We hope that when we have had a chance to study what the minister has told us this afternoon we shall find that as an immigration policy carried out by regulation in Canada it will be determined by the status of the economy of this country and the ability of Canada to absorb immigrants without detriment to those who are already resident here. We hope it will place those who come into our country in positions of employment with facilities for education which will enable them, immediately, to become first class citizens.

It was difficult to follow the whole of the announcement, but we also hope there will be no repetition of difficulties which have been felt so severely by some of those who are already citizens of this country, such as the Chinese and the East Indians. We appreciate the fact that an announcement has been made and trust that a full interpretation of the statement will be given at a later date and that all of us will have an opportunity to go thoroughly into the entire question of immigration and the granting of Canadian citizenship.

TRADE

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he can inform the house whether the negotiations between Canada and the European common market for the removal of obstacles to trade are being conducted at the present time along the lines of those which have recently resulted in an important agreement on these lines between the United States and the European common market.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Our negotiations in GATT have been proceeding. In so far as the general import of the question is concerned, I think that at a very early opportunity the house will be made fully aware of what is being done in connection with this matter.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, and ask him if he would table a copy of the document forwarded by the United Kingdom to the Canadian government described as a summary of the speech made by the Lord Privy Seal of the United Kingdom on October 10 in Paris on the subject of the common market and referred to by him, according to the United Kingdom Hansard, as a full summary of that speech.

[Mr. Winch.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will look into the question asked by the hon. gentleman to determine whether or not an affirmative answer can be given.

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder whether the Prime Minister would also look into the question of tabling the full text of the speech as well.

URANIUM—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Would the minister comment on a report in the London Economist to the effect that Britain and Canada have reached a tentative agreement on the sale of 12,000 tons of uranium at a price of $5.25 a ton and that the agreement will be signed by the end of January?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would say that the report is purely speculative. I should like to report to the house that the British and ourselves are making progress in this matter and I hope it will not be long before we reach a satisfactory conclusion.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question. Can he give the house an assurance that immediately this contract is signed the government will take steps to allocate a contract to the producing companies?

Mr. Hees: As soon as the agreement is signed with the British government, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government will certainly see to it that as soon as possible after that the mines are notified of the quantities that would apply to them.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PAYMENT ON 1961 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I wonder if I might direct a question to the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton). In view of the continuing need for additional payments to western producers is the Prime Minister in a position to say when the final payment on last year's wheat crop may be made? Will it be made at an early date?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): That matter is before the wheat board. Naturally, the payment will be made at the earliest possible date consistent with the completion of the accounts. I do not have the actual information but I believe the payment will be made before very long. Assuredly it will be made in advance of seeding, which is one of the occasions most important to the western farmer.

Mr. Argue: A further point in order to clarify the Prime Minister's answer. Will this be the final payment or a supplementary payment in view of the increased price for wheat?

Mr. Diefenbaker: My understanding is that it would be a final payment.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SECRETARY OF STATE—REFERENCE TO ACTIVITIES OF QUEBEC LIQUOR POLICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the statements made by Mr. Lucien Tremblay and Dr. Poirier, which were quoted in newspapers, has the minister any statement to make concerning the activities of Quebec liquor police officers in Bellechasse county during the last general election.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. If I understand the hon. member's question correctly it relates to a matter which, having taken notice of in the press, I would say was not part of the administrative responsibility of the minister who is Secretary of State but is a matter which relates, rather, to his conduct outside the ministerial field. I would suggest to the hon. member for Laurier that, such an inquiry is not appropriate to be introduced in this way as a question.

Mr. Chevrier: May I bring two things to Your Honour's attention—first, the fact that this is a matter which comes under a division of the chief electoral officer and election matters affecting a constituency; second, the fact that the minister has already made a number of statements dealing with the matter. I should therefore think a question as to the statement which he has made would be appropriate.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister volunteers to make a statement on the matter raised, well and good; but I would not find the subject matter to be within the scope of proper questions relating to the administrative responsibility of the government. It is a subject which could be raised in the house in other ways but not by questions relating to the administrative responsibility of the government.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

BOMARC BASES—INQUIRY AS TO OPERATIONAL DATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister advise the house when the Bomarc squadron at North Bay and the Honest John battery in Europe will become operational?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): As far as the dates on which units of this kind become operational are concerned, it has never been the practice to advertise beforehand when those dates would be, and I do not see any good reason for departing from that practice at the present time.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Would the minister advise the house when either of these units will be armed with either a conventional or a nuclear warhead?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, when a decision has been made in that regard, as was indicated in the house last year, the house will be informed of it.

TRANSPORT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PURCHASE OF DOMESTIC ENGINES FOR FERRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. For the information of the house let me say that my question is based on a rather intriguing newspaper report in the Gazette of January 15 which bore the headline "Ottawa Advises B.C. to Purchase Domestic Engines for Ferries".

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Herridge: I am trying to be helpful. In view of the fact that according to this report the lowest tender for these ferry engines was submitted by Ruston and Hornsby, Limited, England, and in view of the fact that this action has caused a protest from the United Kingdom trade commissioner who said that this was unfair to British firms and that the Canadian firm would import many of the parts for the engines from the parent company in the United States, is the minister in a position to inform the house of all the circumstances surrounding this report?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Kootenay West for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question.

This matter concerns the proposed construction of a ferry for the British Columbia government, and an application for the government's recently introduced shipbuilding subsidy which is providing so many jobs for Canadians in shipyards all across Canada.

Whether or not Canadian engines will be used in this proposed ship, let me say in answer to the hon. member's question that the purpose of the government's shipbuilding subsidy is to assist Canadian shipyards and Canadian workmen, a purpose with which I feel sure all hon. members agree.

TRANSPORTATION

ROYAL COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him when the oft promised and long delayed report of the royal commission on transportation will be tabled in the house?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say we received the report a few days ago. The reason the hon. gentleman was not notified is that the house was not sitting, and out of deference to it we decided to wait until it met so that the hon. gentleman would have no cause to complain that the government was acting in a way detrimental to parliament.

Mr. Chevrier: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Prime Minister forgotten that he indicated to the house on several occasions that the report would be tabled?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it will be tabled, and if the hon. gentleman would like to have it tabled early next week it will be done. I shall do my best to have it here at the earliest possible date.

[Later:]

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he inform the house when the government anticipates receiving the second and third reports of the royal commission on transportation?

Mr. Diefenbaker: As the hon. gentleman must recollect, Mr. Speaker, because it is just a matter of half an hour ago, that question was asked by the hon. member for Laurier regarding when the second report would be received. It has been received and it will be tabled early next week.

AGRICULTURE

BUTTER—DISPOSAL OF SURPLUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture.

Will the Prime Minister advise the house whether a request has been received from farm representatives for a consumer butter subsidy of 14 cents a pound in order to dispose of the large stocks of butter?

If so, would the Prime Minister indicate whether any action is intended by the government to meet the problem of this record butter surplus?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I read in the press that the dairy council had made a recommendation along that line. Unfortunately the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) is absent through illness. However, as soon as he returns, which I expect will be shortly, this matter will be answered.

Mr. Hellyer: A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister say whether this is the only surplus the government has with which to butter up the electors?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO LAY-OFFS OF MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, his first question.

In view of the recent statements made by officials of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation that a scheduled shut-down at the Wabana iron ore operations at Bell Island, Newfoundland, affecting some 500 miners is soon to take place, would the minister advise the house whether the government contemplates any action to avert this lay-off?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, because the hon. gentleman did not give me notice of his intention to ask this question, I think he will understand if I say that I shall take it as notice.

LIVESTOCK

RABIES—COMPENSATION TO ONTARIO FARMERS FOR LOSS IN OUTBREAKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and, in his absence, for the acting minister. Inasmuch as I have sent him notice of my intention to ask this question perhaps I could expect an answer.

Due to the increased incidence of rabies in Grey and Bruce counties as well as in other sections of Ontario, would the acting minister say whether the Department of Agriculture will again co-operate in the payment of compensation to farmers for losses of livestock through this disease?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad as acting minister of agriculture to look into that matter and give the hon. member an answer as soon as possible.

ONTARIO

INQUIRY AS TO BY-ELECTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question based upon a statement which appeared in the Toronto Telegram of January 15 and, I believe, made in the presence of the Prime Minister by the Minister of Finance to the effect that the by-elections in Ontario were little general elections the importance of which is paramount. In view of this statement—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have not heard the hon. member's question but the factual basis clearly indicates it does not involve the administrative responsibilities of the government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, Mr. Speaker, I thought the fact that this was a statement made by one of Her Majesty's ministers of the crown gave the question the required validity. However, I shall bow to Your Honour's ruling and simply ask the Prime Minister who is in a very happy mood today whether the cataclysmic events of yesterday have caused him to give any consideration as to when the next federal general election will take place?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): When a question is asked in such a mellifluous way, naturally it demands an answer. I remember when the hon. gentleman was sitting over here on this side of the chamber and the then government lost nine, ten or eleven federal byelections. When we asked a similar question, they said, "Wait until the general election". We waited and the government went back.

WATER RESOURCES

REPORTED DIVERSION FROM JAMES BAY TO GREAT LAKES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It has been reported that Governor Kerner of Illinois has been pressing President Kennedy's administration for a deal with Canada for diversion of more water from the James bay watershed into the great lakes system. Can the minister inform the house whether a deal has been made or whether such negotiations are now in progress?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker; there are no negotiations in progress between Canada and the United States on any such plan.

COMBINES

RAW FISH—INQUIRY AS TO ACTIVITIES OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Can he say what progress is being made by the restrictive trade practices commission with regard to hearings into the production, sale and distribution of raw fish in British Columbia, which hearings have been postponed by a number of court injunctions.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I checked on that matter, Mr. Speaker, two days or so ago. My information is that one of the injunction proceedings restraining the commission with respect to a certain course was disposed of in British Columbia the other day. There is therefore now just one further stage with respect to one of these injunction proceedings to be settled or disposed of in the Supreme Court of Canada. As soon as that has taken place, the hearings can and will be resumed.

AIR TRANSPORT

C.P.A.—APPROVAL OF FLIGHTS FROM WESTERN CANADA TO LONDON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can he say whether the announcement he made on behalf of the government toward the end of the last session to the effect that Canadian Pacific Airlines were authorized to fly a route from western Canada to London has received the approval of the United Kingdom government as to landing rights in London?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): The answer is not yet, Mr. Speaker.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH B.C.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Can he report any progress in his negotiations with the province of British Columbia on the Columbia river project which was described in the speech from the throne on November 17, 1960, as the largest of Canada's national developments but which was not mentioned in the speech from the throne delivered by His Excellency yesterday.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): As I think the hon. gentleman knows, Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Minister of Finance has asked the premier of British Columbia to name a day or days when it might be convenient for him to meet with the Minister of Finance in order to discuss this matter further.

COLUMBIA RIVER—REFERENCE OF TREATY TO HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government to submit the Columbia river treaty to a committee of the house for examination during the present session of parliament.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I think that question was dealt with at the last session, Mr. Speaker. There is no intention of submitting the treaty to a committee of the house for examination.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS TO IMMIGRATION ACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In the absence of any reference in the speech from the throne to amendment or revision of the Immigration Act, I wonder whether the government has abandoned its declared intention to put such legislation before parliament and is now content to legislate by order in council.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The answer to the last part of the question is no. After very careful study it was felt that the proper procedure would be to pass the regulations first and give them an opportunity to work, consult with the various groups who are interested, seeking their advice and co-operation and then, after that has been done, to make the necessary amendments to the act.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. lady describe the undertaking with respect to the Immigration Act as one of the twelve?

INDIAN AFFAIRS—IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a supplementary question. I wonder whether the course which the hon. lady just outlined with respect to the Immigration Act is the one that is going to be followed with respect to the Indian Act?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): After the recommendations of the joint committee of both houses have been fully digested and discussed with the interested parties I expect that in due time there will be amendments to the Indian Act.

SPORTS

ADVISORY COUNCIL—PROCEDURE RESPECTING GRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The question is based upon the presumption that some confusion still exists about the advisory sports council. To whom should an organization apply for funds or assistance under this legislation? Should it apply to the minister or to the chairman of the council? If it should apply to the chairman, where is he?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Application can be made through either party. The chairman will be in Ottawa frequently. Any communications will, of course, be going forward to him. Application can be made to the minister or to the chairman, whichever is convenient to the person making the application. Either course is perfectly satisfactory. The information is passed on to the council.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ROYAL COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether he is in a position to advise the house whether the royal commission inquiring into medical care insurance will report to the government before the dissolution of parliament.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am not in a position to say.

UNITED NATIONS

ANGOLA—REFERENCE TO CURRENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It has been reported that a reign of terror is being conducted in the northern borders of Angola by Portuguese troops against pastors, deacons and known Protestant Christians—

Mr. Speaker: Order. While the hon. member is dealing with a matter of international interest, I think he is getting beyond the scope of any of the ministers of this government.

Mr. Badanai: Speaking on a point of order, sir, I beg to submit that I merely wished to ask the minister whether he is aware of this fact and whether a protest has been made on behalf of Canada against the atrocities.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. gentleman will refer to the precedents, I think he will find that while external affairs may be proper subjects for inquiry by oral questions before the orders of the day, the details of what goes on in various foreign countries could not very readily be handled in this way.

AIRPORTS

SAULT STE. MARIE, ONT.—CONSTRUCTION OF TERMINAL BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. E. Nixon (Algoma West): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he is in a position to say when a start will be made on a permanent terminal at the Sault Ste. Marie airport and whether any consideration has been given to starting this project as a winter works program.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I will be in a position to answer that question on Monday or Tuesday.

Inquiries of the Ministry

WINDSOR—ENLARGEMENT OF RUNWAY FOR C.P.A. FLIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): In view of the announcement of Canadian Pacific Airlines that it is going to have a run from Windsor to Mexico, can the minister say whether the Department of Transport proposes to enlarge the runway in order to take care of the aircraft in question?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): The Department of Transport is doing an extremely efficient job in keeping all our airports right up to date and well prepared to receive all the necessary transports.

IMMIGRATION

ACTION RESPECTING ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES IN CHINESE IMMIGRATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration if the government has abandoned the investigation into the alleged irregularities in Chinese immigration?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that question might more properly be directed to the Minister of Justice because the responsibility of my department is now the regularization of the status of those persons who make voluntary statements and apply for adjustment of their status.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am most happy to direct the question to the Minister of Justice.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I am afraid the hon. member will have to repeat it if he wants an answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: For the benefit of the Minister of Justice I will repeat the question, sir. The question was, has the government abandoned the investigation that was being conducted into the alleged irregularities in Chinese immigration into this country?

Mr. Fulton: The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY, MOVED BY MR. RODRIGUE BOURDAGES AND SECONDED BY MR. J. F. BROWNE

The house proceeded to the consideration of the speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor General at the opening of the session.

(Translation):

Mr. Rodrigue Bourdages (Laval): Mr. Speaker, on the second day of this session of the 24th parliament, my first words are intended directly for the Prime Minister of our country (Mr. Diefenbaker).

I want to tell him how deeply touched I am that he should have chosen me to move the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I want to thank him sincerely. I also wish to offer him the thanks of the people of the constituency of Laval, who, I am sure, were very flattered by this great honour. Today, Laval is certainly the most densely populated constituency; French Canadians make up almost 95 per cent of its population.

I think that the Prime Minister has proved once more his sincerity and his honesty toward the French Canadians of the country by asking one of their own to move the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

At this time, I would like to extend my warmest congratulations to the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion) who was recently appointed chairman of the privy council by our Prime Minister.

Quite recently, the Prime Minister asked a very talented colleague, the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn), who has now been appointed Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, to join his cabinet. I am sure that he will render most valuable services to this country.

Mr. Speaker, Providence has been kind to hon. members of the house in many respects. Among others, we are happy to see you back in the chair, radiant with health and always ready to preside in all dignity and fairness over the numerous debates which take place in this house.

To assist you in that difficult task, the Prime Minister suggested, which was by no means easy, considering the question which had to be put yesterday, the member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau), who has none but friends among us and whose kindly disposition has become a byword, as Deputy Speaker of the house.

At this time, I would like to tender my congratulations to all parliamentary secretaries who have been reappointed, and I also want to express my best wishes to the two new ones.

Mr. Speaker, as I am unable to greet each hon. member individually, may I tender them, without forgetting anyone, my best wishes for a happy new year and the best of health.

(Text):

As every member already knows, Mr. Speaker, the very talented member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne) has been rightly chosen by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) to deliver a speech in approval of the speech from the throne. My colleague was born in Vancouver and I was born in Halifax. We now meet in Ottawa today with the same kind of spirit. It is a coast to coast parley, if one may put it that way. May I congratulate him and wish him all kinds of success.

(Translation):

May I add that, after hearing the speech from the throne read by His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, every hope is possible. Indeed, every Canadian has strong sentiments of pride and gratitude towards His Excellency.

As for my compatriots, they are rejoicing that one of them, a prominent figure, is in this country the representative of Her Gracious Majesty the Queen.

At the outset of this fifth regular session of the 24th parliament, it is important to draw a picture of the events of the last four years on the federal stage. One can thus see the extraordinary improvements in the national life of Canada brought about by a Conservative administration under the able direction of the right hon. the Prime Minister.

As soon as it came into power, the new government was faced with problems of capital importance that were almost insoluble.

The economy was marking time, if not in recession. The price of Canadian commodities was on the rise; our products could not be sold on foreign markets. The building industry was almost at a standstill; moreover, competition from foreign products was taking away from us not only our export markets, but was also threatening our own domestic markets.

What were the consequences of this unfortunate situation? Unemployment was ever increasing in our country; Canada seemed doomed to an economic recession for an indefinite period. Prompt and effective action was necessary. Therefore, the Prime Minister and his lieutenants earnestly set themselves to the task. They united their efforts and their talents. In this way, the disaster that was imminent in 1958 could be avoided; Canadian economy took a new turn. It now seems to be on the way to set new records.

Strong action was taken in all sectors of our economy and, as a result, the Canadian people have enjoyed increased purchasing power in the past four years.

What problems were we faced with? First, there was social security. The Conservative government gave to the aged, the disabled, the blind and the veterans of world wars

I and II and of Korea allowances and pensions large enough for their daily subsistence.

The unemployed needed generous assistance. The government gave them enough money to keep the wolf from the door. Their hopes were renewed and they soon found employment.

That is concrete evidence, Mr. Speaker. It is obvious that increased purchasing power in Canada largely contributed to the continuous flow of business and to the recovery of our economy.

Since 1957, the building program was intensified to provide our citizens with modern and comfortable homes at a price proportionate to their income. Thus, thanks to the steps taken by the federal government, half a million new houses were built in this country. The C.M.H.C. lent the sizeable amount of $2 billion to various building contractors. According to forecasts, an equal number of new homes will be erected within the next four years.

The campaign for the sale of Canadian manufactured products led to an important increase in our export trade. According to the figures released by the dominion bureau of statistics at the close of 1961, our exports have exceeded our imports for the first time in 25 years. This policy had a most fortunate result, namely the balancing of our international trade.

Here is where the union of the vital forces of the Canadian nation is to be noted with pride. Private enterprise did not remain at a standstill. It gained strength. It was encouraged from all sides. Every industrialist, every businessman, big or small, received the same welcome, the same enthusiastic encouragement.

The Conservative government has always believed in the necessity of private enterprise, for private enterprise is the very essence of democracy. It gets its inspiration from work seriously accomplished, from a desire to improve one's lot. Why, indeed, is Canada the pride and joy of the United Nations? Because Canada is a free nation, a nation where one finds joy in thinking for one's self, where one may make his savings grow, where one may think of his children. A good father wishes to live on through his family. For his offspring, he not only wants welfare, he wants a life of well-being. For his children, he will build an industrial enterprise, a business enterprise. In short, he wants to enjoy to the fullest the pleasures of family life.

Canada, under the Conservative regime, is living its finest hours of freedom. There is here a place in the sun for everybody. Each is entitled to live his own life, to have his own means of subsistence, even to enjoy luxuries. Private enterprise and the state are two great friends who, provided they keep on understanding and helping each other, will never see hovering above them the dark cloud of doubt and suspicion. For man is not made for the state; it is the state that is made for man. That is how the present government thinks and acts.

International trade is based on private enterprise. In Canada, it reveals impressive figures which reflect a great improvement.

On January 12, 1962, Time magazine had this to say:

> Exports have increased by 7½ per cent to a record of 5.8 billion; and even if imports have gone up by 3 per cent, the value of imported products amounts to 5.7 billion.

These results substantiate the forecasts of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees), who, in a memorable gesture, sent all his salesmen abroad in order to find new and broader markets for our products. The experiment was conclusive. In common market countries, our sales went up by 16 per cent; in Japan, by 38 per cent; and in Asiatic countries, Canadian exports, having increased by 61 per cent, reached $312 million for the first eight months of the year.

In eastern Europe, the increase is about 90 per cent; in Latin America, approximately 36 per cent. As for China, that country will accept delivery of 233.5 million bushels of wheat between the years 1961 and 1963.

In the Saturday, December 9, edition of the Financial Post, the following appeared:

> (1) 1962 will be a year of prosperity and progress for the whole Canadian nation;
> (2) business firms are expecting an increased turnover and much larger profits;
> (3) those forecasts are the result of an elaborate survey made by experts in the fields of finance, economy and industry and thousands of businessmen were polled in every province of the country.

Here are, in short, the conclusions of the survey I have mentioned:

> (a) At least 75 per cent of the Canadian companies expect a boost in the sale of their products; the remaining 25 per cent forecast about the same turnover as in 1961 which was already large; consequently, a widespread optimism prevails in the business world;
> (b) The volume of export sales will be improved for almost all companies; this is the result of the sales campaign undertaken by the trade and commerce department, ably supported by all federal government departments;
> (c) Corporation and individual profits will be considerably increased, in 60 per cent of cases; they will be similar to those of 1961 in 25 per cent of cases, and 15 per cent only of the people polled expected a slight decrease in profits;

(d) Three companies out of four expect that commodity and export prices will remain as they are;

(e) Salary levels in general will continue to increase, according to at least 75 per cent of the people polled;

(f) At least half of the Canadian enterprises of large or medium importance which have been polled have well defined plans for the improvement of their plants, and intend to develop new industrial plants in 1962. Such are the extraordinary results of the industrial and commercial activities of the country, which constitute the best evidence that the economic recession which plagued Canada over the last three years is now definitely a thing of the past.

This is obviously only the first step in the expansion of our international trade. We have reason to hope that other markets will soon be opened for our products and that the efforts of free enterprise ably seconded by the officials of the trade and commerce department will be successful.

Barely a year ago a far too large number of Canadians were dispirited by the climate of depression. The reason was that several prophets of doom and gloom were predicting that the worst disasters would befall the Canadian nation, while strangely ignoring the effort made to effect a recovery in all sectors of our national economy.

Such a pessimistic approach to our problems could have been nefarious for many. Perturbed by the climate of depression foreseen by the members of that gloomy caravan, they could have cancelled all their plans for development and exports, which were essential to the development of the economic life of the nation.

It is certain that businessmen from abroad, concerned over the bad news from Canada, delayed and even cancelled their plans for investment in this country. One has to admit that some foreign newspapermen, influenced by the constantly pessimistic statements of the government's opponents, expressed their misgivings in articles published in French and British newspapers.

Fortunately however, facts have confirmed the success of the steps taken by the Conservative government, which in time created an atmosphere of irresistible confidence among businessmen. The economy of Canada is definitely launched on the road of progress and prosperity.

The Conservative government opens new economic vistas. It promised, for instance, that it would take dynamic steps to offer direct assistance to industries. It built paved roads in inaccessible areas in order that the products of the soil and the sub-soil may reach the heart of the country. It built wharves, enlarged harbours and facilitated the entrance of cargo-carrying ships. It built railways that link the spur lines to mines of all kinds. Thanks to its efforts, the farthest corners, the most forsaken places are open to the benefits of civilization.

A start has been made. We will go farther into the interior, mountains will be levelled, if necessary, bridges will span gullies. But Canada will go forward. Canada's future is most promising. The Conservative government will see to it. It has made promises. It has kept them. It even wants to go beyond its promises and, consequently, give to the people so long neglected in those remote regions, a true, realistic hope, not the visionary hope of the previous administrations, of having at last the right to live like everybody else.

The Conservative party is the friend of the underprivileged, of the poor. It wants to help them, to grant their every wish, if possible. The happiness of all is the key to its success.

Today we can state strongly that Canada is living in an era of prosperity. Industry, trade, business hire more and more people. In fact, the number of Canadians at work has increased from 6,029,000 in August 1957 to 6,381,000 in August 1961, which represents a total of 352,000 new jobs created by the party in power during those four years.

The experts predict that the gross national product will go up 6 or 7 per cent in 1962. Unemployment will decrease and employment will rise. The purchasing power of Canadians will have no equal.

These wonderful successes are the doing of shrewd and intelligent administrators who have retained the unlimited confidence of the people.

Confidence of the people is the strength of a people. The whole story of these last four years is one of common efforts, of mutual help. Canada is made up of ten provinces, all have their part to play within confederation.

Each has its own characteristics. Each is beautiful in its own way. They make up a magnificent display. They need one another. It is much more than a good neighbour policy. It is close unity. In a few words, it is a profound national unity, well understood and respectful of vested rights. Alone, man would perish. United, he sets up what we call a society. Canada is strong because it is united, because we have the feeling that its unity will develop into a closer and more efficient association. From Halifax to Vancouver, Canada is a great and grand country. Certainly in its geography, but even more so in its citizens. To them indeed, Canada is a nation with two splendid cultures, a nation which commands respect, because it is a self-respecting nation.

Such is the thinking of this government, Mr. Speaker. In this society, various classes live together without any clash between one another. That is because they are not so unhappy after all. Man is the basis of every society. He has certain duties of course, but he also has certain rights. Our Prime Minister has sealed them forever in a masterly way in his bill of rights. Let praise be given to whoever deserves it.

The speech from the throne read by His Excellency the Governor General has pleased all Canadians. The new measures which this government intends to introduce prove in a tangible way and unequivocally that, it definitely intends to improve the standard of living of all citizens in the ten beautiful provinces forming this nation whose future looks brighter and brighter. By his brilliant leadership and, above all, his foresight and the clearness of his judgment with which he leads the Conservative team, our present Prime Minister has proven one of the greatest prime ministers in the history of the Canadian confederation.

One of the most popular measures announced by the government is that concerning the construction of a railroad from Matane to Ste. Anne des Monts in the province of Quebec. Ever since the last century, the Gaspé peninsula, left to her own means, in spite of a generous and resourceful population has been economically isolated from the rest of the province of Quebec and even from the country. Previous administrations repeatedly deceived the people of Quebec. Because of their inconsistency, they have lost the confidence of Quebec.

It is only after the Conservative party led by a great Prime Minister had taken over that the Gaspé peninsula could hope for something. Only a Prime Minister who has modern and dynamic ideas could, in less than four years, do what generations had not been able to achieve.

I already see mines being developed, industries being built up. I can see carload after carload of all kinds of products coming from that land with a promising future. That measure is both a tribute to and the recognition of the gigantic job done by the untiring member for Gaspé (Mr. English). Before long, Mr. Prime Minister, we shall be able to say, thanks to you: "Gaspé peninsula, the land of tomorrow, because it is the land of today".

The pensioner, who has given his best years to his country and who, on account of his age, must withdraw from the workers' front line, the man or woman who is perhaps alone in this world, those are the ones whom the Conservative government did not forget. It looks with sympathy upon the situation of those wonderful people who are the wisdom of this nation. It wants, in a noble gesture, to give them hope for a happy old age.

So, our invalids, our veterans, and the blind, and all those who are in a sad plight, will know better days and, thanks to a measure taken by a Conservative government will have brighter days in their ill-fated lives. The Conservative government's action, it can readily be seen, indicates clearly that it is bringing to Canadians of all age groups, and especially to those who are less fortunate, better days, greater comfort and a most promising future.

The Conservative government, fully conscious of its role in the continuing betterment of the comfort of all Canadians, will see to it that a Canadian welfare council be created. I am delighted with this news, which represents a very important step, taken by the Conservative government, toward a better life. Although the structure of that council will only be discussed at a later date, I am convinced that the Conservative government, thanks to that measure, will improve the fate of all Canadians. May I be allowed to express the hope, Mr. Speaker, that our young people will also benefit from such a measure.

Our young people in fact—the hope of our nation—form a class on which are focused all the objectives aimed at by a people that wants to be great and strong. Our young people, I am sure, have not been forgotten by the Conservative government. Hardly a month after the setting up of the sports council—an initiative which has been so widely acclaimed across the country—the Conservative government is not sitting back. It has already announced the setting up of a welfare council. I welcome this measure, Mr. Speaker, which, again I hope, will, through its results, pave the way to a still better future, in giving our young people the ideal which must be the shining beacon of the coming generation. I strongly hope that this measure will also contribute to stop juvenile delinquency, which is not without causing some concern to our psychiatrists and educators.

Ever since May 14, 1930, when the Jacques Cartier bridge was inaugurated, its users have been forced to pay substantial sums to cross over that bridge which connects Montreal with the south shore. As for Victoria bridge, it is one hundred years old. Both bridges are a bane to greater Montreal motorists; they are a constant nuisance, morally and financially.

We had to have a wise and enlightened administration—to put it briefly, the present government—to take steps to put an end to this toll system.

The legislation which the Conservative government will introduce will be a highly popular one. Besides filling with joy the people of the Montreal metropolitan area, it will assist business on both shores. This legislation will thus prevent those traffic jams which have become so notorious. It will bring relief to the workingman who needs all his money for his family's livelihood. This Conservative government measure, I know, will fill with joy the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sevigny), the member for Longueuil, who has always had at heart the removing of the tolls on the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I have to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Dupuis: It is most interesting. Carry on.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Bourdages: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So, I must say, bravo, well done, Mr. Prime Minister.

One sentence from the speech from the throne which particularly impressed me was that which referred to the recommendation of a number of measures that will constitute further steps in working out the purposes of confederation and identifying more clearly the definition of Canadian nationality.

Mr. Speaker, these aims will no doubt help to instil in both French and English speaking Canadians, a greater feeling of national pride. In turn, this will add to the joy, which we all share, of being part of a nation whose strength is based on two languages and on two cultures which must blend and work side by side more than ever, so that the economic and cultural strength of our dear Canada can be proclaimed all over the world.

Our country believes in justice. It believes that the past is a guarantee for the future. The Conservative government strongly abides by these principles and has wanted to adopt them as its own. The government has served with devotion the cause of the citizens of the country, in keeping with the life of its peoples and of history. Its ideal is to strive ever more so that the light of freedom, which makes citizens happy, prosperous and productive, will shine throughout Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the year 1867 knew great men who were given the name of fathers of confederation. Today, close as we are to celebrating the centennial of that great event, the whole population of our country can be proud of its Prime Minister, one who because of his energetic action deserves the title of father of modern Canadianism.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour to move, seconded by my colleague from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne):

That the following address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

May it please Your Excellency:

We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada in parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both houses of parliament.

(Text):

Mr. J. F. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, it has always been considered a tribute to the people of a particular area when the Prime Minister chooses their representative in parliament to second the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I should like to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) for recognizing the people of Vancouver-Kingsway in this way and to say that I know of no time in our history when such a tribute would have been more appropriate. I think it can truly be said that the people of Vancouver-Kingsway are Canadians of average circumstance and it has, indeed, been to the welfare of the average Canadian that the Prime Minister has chiefly devoted himself.

Before I begin my remarks in connection with the speech from the throne I should like to extend my best wishes to all hon. members as we enter upon this new session and to congratulate all those who have received new appointments during the recess. This has already been very well done by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Bourdages) and I am sure I do not need to refer to each of them individually because the warm applause which greeted their names when they were outlined by the hon. member for Laval indicated clearly the degree of approval felt by the house at these appointments all of which, I am sure, will prove to be very popular. It also gives me a great deal of satisfaction to have this first opportunity to congratulate the mover of the address (Mr. Bourdages) on the truly fine speech he has just made. I know the people of his riding will be justly proud of him and will feel, as I do, that his remarks reflect very accurately the strong sense of national unity and the feeling of confidence in the future felt by Canadians generally in the leadership of the Prime Minister.

I wish to say something about this feeling of confidence because it is so important to us both as individuals and as a nation. I am sure we have all learned from experience that when we approach any job or any problem with the idea that we may not have the right solution or that things are not going to go very well we inevitably end in failure. This is just as true of a nation as it is of an individual and I raise the matter at this time not only because of the extreme importance I attach to it at any time but because of the unprecedented and unwarranted attempts on the part of some people in this country to promote feelings of pessimism and gloom. Not only is there no reason for such feelings but any such attempt is not in the best interests of this country. I know that those which preach gloom and despair are only sealing their own fate. However, these pessimistic utterances must be recognized for what they are and the best way to do that is to examine some of the outcries that have been raised and then to look at the facts.

I think we should first look back to some of the major problems which were facing us at the time of the last election. We should recall what was promised by the Prime Minister in relation to them, and consider where those problems stand now. The time has long passed when during the course of a single speech one could begin to recite all the accomplishments of the present administration because they are far too numerous. It is interesting to note, however, that notwithstanding the serious problems which were facing us at that time this government has succeeded in carrying out its election undertakings to a degree never before seen in this country. Mr. Peter C. Newman writing in Maclean's magazine of September 23, 1961, stated that 50 of the 62 specific promises made had already been carried out or were in the process of being discharged. Then there is the article in the Executive magazine of January, 1962 by Mr. John D. Harbron in which the author after outlining the major appeals to the electorate by the Prime Minister goes on to say: "all of which he was to keep". It is evident from independent reports such as these that with the fulfilment of the measures outlined in the present speech from the throne the government will not only have kept its promises but it will have gone far beyond them.

Now let us consider some of the specific problems. First, the question of trade. This is one of the fields in which attempts have been made to promote gloom and despair. There might have been some reason for gloom and despair in 1956. At that time we had a trade deficit amounting to $713 million. In other words we had an excess of imports over exports to that amount. We had a huge grain surplus which could not be disposed of, and markets were being lost throughout the world. Since the present government came to office our exports have increased steadily each and every year. Our grain surplus has been disposed of. We have strengthened our position in old markets and gained new ones. By the end of 1960 our trading deficit had been reduced to a small fraction of what it was in 1956, and for the first ten months of 1961, the latest figures which I have been able to obtain from the dominion bureau of statistics, we had a trading surplus of $52 million. There is every reason to believe that when the final figures are published we shall have had an excess of exports over imports for the first time since 1952.

Before I go any further, I should like to say something about the use of statistics in a speech such as this. I know that statistics are sometimes hard to follow and that sometimes they seem dull and uninteresting. For this reason I should like to say a few words to show how the improvement indicated by these statistics concerns the average man. Let us consider grain, for instance. In the first place, disposing of our surplus has helped the farmer in several ways. There have been cash returns from the sales. Moreover, the prospects for future sales have been improved, and because there is no longer a huge surplus prices have improved. Much of this grain, because of its ultimate destination, moved through the port of Vancouver, the largest grain shipping port in the world. It provided jobs for people in the transportation industry there. It provided jobs for grain handlers in Vancouver. It brought ships to the port of Vancouver, and this in turn provided business for our merchants and jobs for our people. It is not possible to follow through each of the statistics I intend to use in this way but I can assure hon. members that each of them is just as vital and alive as the example I have used.

This vast improvement was not brought about by pessimism. It was brought about by confidence and constructive action on the part of the government. It was brought about by such actions as bringing our trade commissioners home to meet with our businessmen and helping them to sell their products; by sending numerous trade missions abroad; by our ministers getting out and selling grain to China, Poland, Czechoslovakia and other countries; by providing long needed credit facilities for exports. We now find a further expansion of these successful policies outlined in the present speech from the throne. We also saw the elimination of the premium on the Canadian dollar—a step which some people felt was in itself a solution to our trade problems—and we saw an improvement in the facilities of the industrial development bank in order that our businesses might expand more readily. The results obtained from these policies have shown clearly and conclusively that the policies of the government were correct and that the criticism and pessimism of the opposition was wrong and unjustified.

Closely related to the general field of trade is our relationship to the other members of the commonwealth not only with regard to trade specifically but in connection with other matters. It will be recalled that when this government took office our trading relationship with the commonwealth was not in a satisfactory condition. Shortly after taking office the Prime Minister was instrumental in bringing about a commonwealth trade and economic conference just as he had promised he would during the election campaign. Since that time our trade with commonwealth countries has increased by 19 per cent. It is little wonder, then, that the government should have expressed concern, just as other commonwealth governments have expressed their concern, when there arose the possibility of these gains being upset by the decision of the United Kingdom government to begin negotiations with a view to joining the European common market. Naturally, no one disputes the right of the United Kingdom to join or not to join the European common market. That is their decision and their decision alone. By the same token we have a responsibility to protect Canadian interests and safeguard the interest of the commonwealth. By expressing our views we have accomplished two things. First, Prime Minister Macmillan has stated that if the United Kingdom does enter the common market, commonwealth interests will be protected. Naturally, we rely on that statement. Second, the commonwealth governments by making their views known have brought clearly to the attention of the six nations of the common market the difficult problem with which the United Kingdom is faced and this will strengthen the ability of the United Kingdom government to protect commonwealth interests during the negotiations.

In the light of these facts I can only describe as fantastic the position taken by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) that expressing our views was squealing before we were hurt. This is the same type of unjustified criticism used by the opposition in the field of general trade and will prove once again the policy of the government to be right and the pessimism of the opposition to be wrong.

Another closely related problem is that of domestic trade and the position of the proprietors of small businesses. In this field the government has been extremely active in assisting this part of our economy and has brought before parliament approximately fifty measures designed to stimulate business in Canada. Among them were the setting up of the small business branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce, the reduction in taxation and the making available of loans up to $25,000 on a long term basis, all of which had been needed for many years.

Once again we see the government not content with all that it had done. It has brought before this session of parliament, as foreshadowed in the speech from the throne, an extension of these measures which have already proven successful. I have the utmost confidence that these measures will prove to be just as effective as those already implemented.

Dominion-provincial relations is another of those fields which needed attention by the federal government. When the present government took office the financial arrangement was governed by the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act of April 1, 1957. The provincial governments were not satisfied with this arrangement even though its terms were binding upon them until March 31, 1962.

The present administration called a conference to discuss the matter in November, 1957 and following that conference, although they were under no obligation to do so, they increased the provincial share of the yield from personal income tax from 10 per cent to 13 per cent. They also initiated the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants, providing a total of $100 million over a four year period, again without any obligation to do so but because it is the policy of this government to provide equality of opportunity to all Canadians.

In the over-all picture there are two types of grants which the federal government makes to each of the ten provinces. First are the unconditional payments such as statutory subsidies, tax abatements and things of that nature. In 1956-57 these amounted to $552.6 million dollars. In 1961-62 they are estimated at $876 million. Then there are conditional grants which include such matters as health, hospital insurance, welfare, vocational training, highways and transportation, resources development and many others. In 1956-57 they amounted to $111 million. In 1961-62 they are estimated at $550 million or five times as much.

The total of all payments to the provinces in 1956-57 was $689 million. In 1961-62 they are estimated at $1,470 million. In other words they have more than doubled since the present government came into office.

But the startling thing about these figures, Mr. Speaker, is that notwithstanding the vast increase in payments to the provinces by the federal government, the average Canadian pays a lower rate of income tax to the federal government than he did when this government came into office. When one takes that in consideration, I am sure all will agree that I was not unjustified in stating at the outset of my remarks that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) had devoted himself to the welfare of the average Canadian.

Hon. members will recall that at the last session I placed on the record of Hansard copies of the actual income tax forms for 1956 and 1959. These documents showed quite clearly that the average Canadian was indeed paying a lower rate of tax.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not accurate.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): The documents are on the record of Hansard and will speak for themselves a lot more accurately than the—

Mr. Fulton: Martin bureau of statistics.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): They will speak a lot more accurately than the hon. member for Essex East.

In considering the welfare of the average Canadian it must be recognized that the most important thing is that he has to be in a position to obtain gainful employment in order to provide security and happiness for his family. Indeed the greatest threat to the peace of mind and security of the average man throughout the world has been recurring periods of unemployment. It is in trying to ensure the opportunity of employment for all of our people that the government has made its most strenuous efforts.

Limitations of time will not permit me to recite all of the vast array of measures taken by the government in this field. I can honestly say, however, that in my opinion its efforts in this regard have far exceeded those of any previous government in our history. It is unfortunately a problem which short term measures alone cannot entirely cure although the government's actions have considerably improved the situation. The government has, of course, long since commenced a number of long term measures the results of which will become increasingly apparent.

During the last five years the total Canadian labour force has grown almost twice as fast as in the preceding five years making it necessary to create a tremendous number of new jobs. At the same time technological improvements have made it necessary for those in the labour force to have a far higher degree of education and skill than has been the case in the past.

As a result of a survey of the dominion bureau of statistics it was shown that almost half of those without jobs were young single persons between the ages of 14 and 19 most of whom needed further training in order to find suitable employment. Further training is also required by many of those in the older age groups also because their jobs have been made obsolete by rapid technical change.

Education has, of course, always been a responsibility of the provincial governments. The federal government, however, recognizing the urgency and the immensity of the problem, has stepped in to help solve it as soon as possible without infringing in any way on provincial rights, by paying to the provinces 75 per cent of the cost of building new vocational and technical training schools and 50 per cent of the cost of operating them after construction. This will be of tremendous assistance in fitting people for jobs particularly among the younger people who, as I have pointed out, need it so urgently. For those older workers who are unemployed and need retraining because of changing conditions the government pays 75 per cent of the cost.

For those who have unfortunately been unemployed the government has made substantial increases in benefits available under the Unemployment Insurance Act, both in regular and seasonal benefits. Not only have the amounts been increased but also the maximum period during which benefits may be drawn was increased from 36 to 52 weeks. The formula under which benefits may be drawn has also been made considerably easier.

Then, too, the government has set up a commission to inquire into the Unemployment Insurance Act. It is my hope that they will recommend changes which will provide a greater measure of security for the workingman and I have forwarded to them my own suggestions in this regard.

We have contained in the speech from the throne which is now before us an outline of the steps that will be taken by the government. This is a genuine indication that the government does intend to implement the measures that are necessary to protect the interests of the working people until such time as this commission can report and its recommendations be implemented.

While unemployment has proven to be a long lived and difficult problem, we should not lose sight of the fact that more Canadians are working than ever before, and that labour income in total has risen very substantially as have average weekly wages.

In 1956 the average Canadian workman earned $69.44 per week, and in 1960, the last year for which complete figures are available, he earned $75.83 per week or a gain of 17.1 per cent.

The cost of living during the same period rose by 8.3 per cent and, as I have previously pointed out, income tax rates have declined for the average Canadian, so that a substantial improvement in our standard of living has been achieved during this period of time.

In providing for the general welfare the government has also passed a number of measures to assist people in special circumstances. Since the present administration came into office we have seen hospital insurance brought into being on a national scale. Hospital construction grants have been increased and a fund set up to aid in research on children's diseases. Pensions for blind persons and for disabled persons have been increased. Old age assistance payments and unemployment assistance payments have been increased. And, once again, in the present throne speech, we have heard announced further increases proposed in these fields.

To encourage amateur athletics and to improve physical fitness an annual amount of $5 million has also been made available.

Old age pensions were increased from $46 to $55 per month and again in the present speech from the throne we have further increases announced. Residence requirements were reduced from 20 years to 10 years and for the first time pensioners who meet the necessary residence requirements can travel to any part of the world for an unlimited length of time and still draw their pensions. Then too, the commission of inquiry was set up to make recommendations on how to implement a contributory system of social security over and above what we already have. This has led to the present announcement in the speech from the throne of the government's intention to seek those constitutional amendments which are necessary to bring such a scheme into being.

It is perhaps in the field of veterans affairs that the greatest improvements of all have been made. Veterans pensions and payments under the War Veterans Allowance Act were increased by substantial amounts in both 1957 and 1961. There have, of course, been many other improvements to these acts such as the easing of the eligibility requirements, the raising of total allowable income and others. Unfortunately time does not permit me to deal with them in detail. However, I should like to give you just one or two examples of what this increase has meant to veterans. A married 100 per cent disability pensioner with two children now receives $287 per month. The comparable rate in effect five years ago was $144. When hon. members of this house stop to consider what this means to one of our veterans who served his country so faithfully, they will realize that he is now receiving in this instance double what he was receiving five years ago. I am sure that we sometimes do not stop to consider what vast improvements have been made in the last few years in this regard. In the case of a married veteran on war veterans allowance, the monthly payment prior to 1957 was $108 per month. It has now risen to $144 per month. The Veterans Land Act and many other pieces of veterans legislation have also been substantially improved. Then in the present speech from the throne we have placed before us further improvements in that regard. If any proof were needed of the sincere concern of this government for the welfare of the average person in this country, their actions in this field alone would provide it.

As I said at the outset of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, it is not possible during the course of one speech to deal with more than a small portion of the outstanding record of the government and its plans for the future. Before this debate is concluded, however, I am sure that my colleagues will have brought every aspect clearly before this house and the Canadian people.

In summing up, Mr. Speaker, may I say this. It is quite clear that there is no cause for pessimism in this country. Our world trade which is so important to us is at an all-time high, and by the very nature of the problems which it has overcome during the past four years the government has proved that it has the necessary energy and ability to overcome those which will face us in the future.

More Canadians are working and are earning more than at any other time in our history. While we are still faced with unemployment the improvements already made have been heartening and there is every prospect that, when the full benefit of the long term legislation already enacted by the government is felt, we shall be in a position to provide full employment for all our people. Our standard of living is at an all-time high. More has been accomplished in the field of social justice from the period of June, 1957, to the present time than at any previous time in our history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is wholly inaccurate.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): By any analysis of the government's record there is no cause for fear now or in the future. By any analysis of our economy and its future prospects there is no cause for pessimism. By any analysis whatever there is every reason for all Canadians to move forward to a greater and brighter future under the brilliant leadership of the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, one of the world's outstanding leaders.

On motion of Mr. Pearson the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Diefenbaker the house adjourned at 4.28 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, January 22, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

FINANCE

TEXTILES—TABLING OF FURTHER TARIFF BOARD REPORTS ON REFERENCE NO. 125

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies in English and in French of two reports, the ninth and tenth, relating to reference No. 125 on textiles, which I received from the chairman of the tariff board while the house was in recess. These are the final reports pursuant to reference No. 125 and complete the board's review under this reference. I am also tabling transcripts of the evidence presented to the tariff board at its public hearings.

The ninth report covers batts and batting and coated or impregnated fabrics. It was released to the public on November 3, 1961. The tenth and final report which deals with hats, caps and related products was released on November 14, 1961.

SWEEPSTAKES

LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH HOSPITAL SWEEPSTAKES BOARD

Mr. J. F. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-2, to provide for the establishment of a hospital sweepstakes board.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

COASTAL FISHERIES PROTECTION ACT

PROVISION FOR EXTENSION OF FISHING ZONE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-3, to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act (twelve mile fishing zone).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BILL OF RIGHTS

AMENDMENT RESPECTING NATURALIZED CANADIAN CITIZENS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-4, to amend the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Pickersgill: The purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to end a very real discrimination which exists in the laws of Canada at the present time, and to remove the possibility of having the citizenship of any Canadian citizen taken away. It is the same bill as I introduced at the last session and arises out of a particular case, a very worthy case, that had come to my notice.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

AMENDMENTS REVISING MEDIATION AND CONCILIATION PROCESSES, ETC.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-5, to amend the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

APPLICATION OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING TO CROWN AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-11, to amend the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act (application to civil service).

Mr. Pickersgill: Explain.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the bill seeks to apply the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act to Her Majesty, and consequently to the civil service of Canada, except those provisions relating to strikes and/or lockouts, and provides a system whereby the report of what would be known as a conciliation board would be presented to parliament in sufficient time for parliament to deal with it prior to the next budget.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INTEREST ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING CHARGES ON CREDIT DEBT

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-6, to amend the Interest Act (finance charges).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Nasserden: The purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to make mandatory the giving of information regarding the amount of charges on a credit debt and also the proportion of such debt which that constitutes per annum.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO PLACE CEILING ON INTEREST RATES

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-8, to amend the Interest Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING MAINTENANCE OF ABANDONED LINES

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-7, to amend the Railway Act (abandonment).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PROVISION FOR APPLICATION BY TRUCKERS TO TRANSPORT BOARD ON COMPETITIVE RATES

Mr. J. F. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-9, to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. Benidickson: Explain.

Mr. Pickersgill: Explain.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to provide that representatives of the trucking industry shall have the right to make application to the board of transport commissioners for disallowance of a competitive rate when they consider that such rate has subjected motor vehicle operators to undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR PRINTING OF NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS IN BOTH ENGLISH AND FRENCH

Mr. Speaker: By unanimous consent of the house a bill may be introduced by another member at the request of the member in whose name it stands. Has the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel) unanimous consent to introduce this bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. J. A. Habel (for Mr. Boulanger) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-10, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

[Mr. Nasserden.]

Some hon. Members: Explain.

(Translation):

Mr. Habel: Mr. Speaker, I must say that this bill is exactly the same as the one introduced last year. Its purpose is to enact that all documents referred to therein be printed in both languages.

(Text):

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO ABOLISH CAPITAL PUNISHMENT EXCEPT FOR TREASON

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-12, to amend the Criminal Code (capital punishment).

Mr. Pickersgill: Explain.

Mr. McGee: The purpose of this bill is precisely the purpose of the similar bill which was introduced in the last session.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT WITH RESPECT TO WATER POLLUTION

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-13, to amend the Criminal Code (nuisance).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Herridge: The purpose of this bill is to give effect to certain proposals eloquently advanced by the Prime Minister when he was a member of the official opposition for the effective control of pollution in interprovincial rivers.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO ABOLISH IMPOSITION OF CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-22, to amend the Criminal Code (corporal punishment).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING USE OF TRADING STAMPS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-24, to amend the Criminal Code (trading stamps).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Proposed Legislation

REPRESENTATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE ELECTORAL DISTRICTS IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-14, to amend the Representation Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA GRAIN ACT

REVISION OF GRADES RESPECTING RAPESEED AND MUSTARD SEED

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-15, to amend the Canada Grain Act (rapeseed and mustard seed).

Mr. McIlraith: Explain.

Mr. Rapp: The purpose of this bill is the same as the purpose of the measure I introduced at a previous session. The act requires a provision for new grading to bring it up to the standard that is needed by our exporters and by buyers in foreign countries.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO REDUCE AGE OF VOTERS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-16, to amend the Canada Elections Act (age of voters).

Mr. Benidickson: Explain.

Mr. Howard: This bill merely seeks to allow electors to vote in Canada at the age of 18 as compared with the age of 21.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PROVISION FOR DISTRIBUTION OF NAMES OF CANDIDATES

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-34, to amend the Canada Elections Act (campaign contributions).

Mr. Pickersgill: Explain.

Mr. McGee: Mr. Speaker, the specific purpose of this bill is to require the returning officer in each constituency to place in the hands of the electors immediately following the nomination of the candidates, the names of the candidates, the names and addresses of their official agents, in order to encourage campaign contributions on a broader and more democratic basis.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-17, to amend the House of Commons Act (internal economy autonomy).

Mr. McIlraith: Explain.

Mr. Howard: The commissioners of internal economy are, apparently, appointed by virtue of the provision of section 16 of the House of Commons Act which provides that there shall be four members of the cabinet plus yourself, Mr. Speaker, to deal with expenditures of money relating to the House of Commons. I understand that this system was originally designed at the time of confederation because of the difficulty of transportation over the distances which many members had to travel in order to get to Ottawa. It was presumably felt that members of the cabinet, who were likely to have their homes in Ottawa, could attend to this work more conveniently.

However, the situation at the moment is that the cabinet itself, by virtue of its majority of four to one compared with Your Honour, has control over monetary and financial matters affecting the House of Commons and it would seem to me that this is not a desirable thing. The bill seeks to remove those provisions in order that the commissioners of internal economy might be selected by the house itself.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING HOLDING OF BY-ELECTIONS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-20, to amend the House of Commons Act (election writs for by-elections).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Pickersgill: The purpose of this bill is to uphold the rights of parliament and the electorate by laying down definite prescriptions so that by-elections for vacancies in this house will be held within a reasonable period of time.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FINANCE

PROVISION FOR PRINTING OF NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS IN ENGLISH AND FRENCH

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm) moved for leave to introduce Bill

No. C-18, respecting the printing of negotiable instruments in the English and the French languages.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SMALL LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO REDUCE MAXIMUM INTEREST RATE

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-19, to amend the Small Loans Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Argue: The purpose of this bill is to reduce the maximum interest rate on small loans from 2 per cent per month to 1 per cent per month.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT REQUIRING STATEMENT OF TRUE INTEREST RATE CHARGED

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-23, to amend the Small Loans Act (advertising).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Argue: The purpose of this bill is to make it a provision in the law that the simple interest shall be stated in advertisements in connection with small loans.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PENSION ACT

AMENDMENT PROVIDING FOR APPEAL TO COURTS

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-21, to amend the Pension Act (judicial appeal).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. McIntosh: In brief, the purpose of this bill is to provide that an applicant who has had an unfavourable decision from the commission may appeal to the courts of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

PROVISION FOR NATIONAL FLAG, ANTHEM AND INDEPENDENCE DAY

Mr. Speaker: I am informed that the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), who is unavoidably absent, has requested the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Dubois) to introduce this bill for him, which he may do by unanimous consent of the house. Is it agreed that he may do so?

[Mr. Pigeon.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. V. F. Dubois (for Mr. Allard) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-25, respecting the sovereignty of Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Pickersgill: Explain.

Mr. Dubois: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to give recognition to the sovereignty of Canada by having a holiday called Sovereignty Day and to adopt a distinctive national anthem and national flag.

(Text):

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INDIAN ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING POSSESSION AND CONSUMPTION OF INTOXICANTS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-26, to amend the Indian Act (liquor rights).

Mr. Pickersgill: Explain.

Mr. Howard: This bill, Mr. Speaker, seeks to place native Indians on the same footing and with the same rights and responsibilities with relation to liquor as everyone else in the nation. It provides further that the right to be in possession of liquor on an Indian reserve shall be the subject of a plebiscite of the members of the particular band.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING WAGE EARNERS' ASSIGNMENTS

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-27, to amend the Bankruptcy Act (wage earners' assignments).

Mr. Benidickson: Explain.

Mr. Argue: This bill provides that, where an individual has credit obligations which he is unable to meet at the moment, procedures may be applied for the regular retirement of those obligations, which procedures would protect the individual from unconscionable and unnecessary repossession of his chattels.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING SENATE REPRESENTATION

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-28, to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1960, with respect to representation in the Senate.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to take a step toward curing a most unsatisfactory and frustrating situation that exists in the other place at the present moment.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT DISCRIMINATION BECAUSE OF AGE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-29, to amend the Canada Fair Employment Practices Act (age discrimination).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

LOTTERY

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN LOTTERY COMMISSION

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-30, to provide for a Canadian lottery. (Translation):

Mr. Pickersgill: Explain.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide for the establishment of a Canadian lottery, the proceeds of which would be used to increase family allowances. (Text):

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FLAGS OF CANADA

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR NATIONAL FLAG OF CANADA

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member, who states that he has authorization to present this bill for the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger), leave of the house to do so.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (for Mr. Boulanger) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-31, respecting flags of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BROADCASTING ACT

ISSUE OF LICENCES SUBJECT TO COMPLIANCE WITH BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-32, to amend the Broadcasting Act (human rights abuses remedied).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Proposed Legislation

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to protect legitimate free enterprise against the monopolistic instincts and practices of publishers who own radio stations.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

APPLICATION OF PROVINCIAL DRAINAGE LAWS TO PIPE LINES

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-33, to amend the National Energy Board Act (drainage works).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is the same as that of a bill introduced at the last session. The purpose is to make pipe lines operating under federal charter subject to provincial drainage laws in the same way as pipe lines operating under provincial charter.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AERONAUTICS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE CANADIAN AIRCRAFT REGISTRY

Mr. John Drysdale (Burnaby-Richmond) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-35, to amend the Aeronautics Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: Explain.

Mr. Drysdale: I should like to thank the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate for his avid interest in this matter, and I hope he will support the bill when it comes forward. The purpose of this bill is to provide a central Canadian aircraft registry in order to record the title to and all encumbrances against Canadian civil aircraft. Provision is made for registration according to nationality in order to comply with the provisions of the convention on the international recognition of rights in aircraft. By providing a central aircraft registry according to nationality, Canada can then become a signatory to that convention.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

WAR SERVICE GRANTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND TIME FOR RE-ESTABLISHMENT CREDIT

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-36, to amend the War Service Grants Act.

Proposed Legislation

Mr. Pickersgill: Explain.

Mr. Churchill: The purpose of the amendment is to extend that date through which the War Service Grants Act will be in operation.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

VETERANS INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING EXTENSION OF TIME FOR INSURANCE CONTRACTS

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-37, to amend the Veterans Insurance Act.

Mr. Benidickson: Explain.

Mr. Churchill: This explanation is similar; the amendment will extend the termination of the act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS

PROVISION FOR FURNISHING OF FINANCIAL AND OTHER STATISTICS

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-38, to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

MERCHANT SEAMEN COMPENSATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PAYMENTS FOR ORPHANS OF SEAMEN

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-39, to amend the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act.

Mr. Fulton: Explain.

Mr. Carter: The purpose of this bill is to enable an orphan to live in the home of his guardian or foster parent and still retain eligibility for full benefits under the act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CIVILIAN WAR PENSIONS

AMENDMENTS EXTENDING PAYMENTS TO CERTAIN GROUPS

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act to permit the payment of allowances, similar to those provided for veterans and their dependents under the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1952, to surviving former members and to certain dependants of deceased members of a number of civilian groups of Canadians who made outstanding voluntary contributions to the war effort during World War I and World War II under difficult and dangerous conditions.

Motion agreed to.

CHILDREN OF WAR DEAD ACT

AMENDMENTS PROVIDING FOR EXTENSION OF BENEFITS, ETC.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency.

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act to clarify the definition of "student"; to extend the benefits under the act to certain classes of children; to extend in certain cases the education-assistance period; to extend in the case of particular students the age limit at which all benefits will cease; to accept a student for assistance under the act where his education has been interrupted by ill health or other good cause; and to increase the rate of allowances.

Motion agreed to.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENTS TO GUARANTEE LOANS, ESTABLISH LIMITS, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act to provide for the making of guaranteed loans during the period July 1st, 1962 to June 30th, 1965, and to establish four hundred million dollars as the limit of guaranteed loans that may be made during the new loan period.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO EXTEND PERIOD OF GUARANTEE ON LOANS

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act to extend the period during which guaranteed loans may be made to the 30th day of June, 1965.

Motion agreed to.

COPYRIGHTS

APPROVAL OF GENEVA CONVENTION, 1952

On the order: Government notices of motion:

In committee of the whole—The following proposed resolution:—

That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament approve the universal copyright convention signed by Canada in Geneva in 1952 and protocol 3 thereto, and that this house do approve the same.

Mr. Speaker: The next item in the name of the Secretary of State appears to have a typographical error in that the words "in committee of the whole" are inserted before the resolution. Would the Secretary of State wish the leave of the house to have these words struck out and proceed with the matter now?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the words "in committee of the whole", may be deleted from this item?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NEW GUINEA—INQUIRY AS TO DISPUTE BETWEEN NETHERLANDS AND INDONESIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he can make any report to the house on the dangerous dispute between the Netherlands and Indonesia in regard to part of New Guinea, and whether he thinks there is a reasonable chance of successful mediation of this dangerous dispute?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that this is a very dangerous situation. We have been pressing for negotiations, as various other countries have. At the moment I am not able to say whether or not there will be such negotiations, but I think the longer action is delayed the more chance there is of something being worked out to settle this dispute.

UNITED NATIONS

UNESCO—INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR CANADIAN ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am sorry I have not been able to give notice of the question. In view of the excellent position in which Canada is to assist United Nations organizations by providing personnel for purposes of education in French speaking Africa, is the minister in a position to make any comment on the request of UNESCO for assistance from Canada to the extent of $900,000?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Our aid is channeled to other governments; there is an arrangement between Canada and the respective countries although some of it goes through the United Nations agencies. At the moment there has been no provision made for the payment of $900,000 through UNESCO.

I should mention that we do have many different types of assistance for countries in Africa, including the commonwealth scholarship plan, as well as the plan for aid to French speaking African countries, and there is the special commonwealth aid program for Africa under which we are paying $3.5 million per year. There are various plans of that type under which we give aid.

Mr. Argue: Could the minister say whether a request was made for this by the UNESCO organization and, if so, did Canada make a direct reply.

Mr. Green: I would have to check the files to find out if a request was made. In any event, there has been no provision made for payment of that amount.

TRANSPORT

P.E.I. CAUSEWAY—REQUEST FOR REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. He will recall that on June 21 last he promised to furnish his report on the Northumberland causeway in the near future. Is the minister in a position to present that report now?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Since that time many matters have intervened which make it impossible for me to reply to the question at this time.

Mr. Bourget: Can we expect the report to be presented to the house before the dissolution of this parliament?

Mr. Walker: If my hon. friend can tell me the date of dissolution I might be able to answer that question.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the minister whether he is making the investigation personally?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Walker: That question does not beget a reply.

[Later:]

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): In view of the reply given to the hon. member for Levis that in effect the minister was not prepared to table a report on the subject of the Northumberland causeway, is he prepared to table a preliminary report on the same project which was made available to the Prime Minister prior to his visit to Charlottetown on December 6 last?

Mr. Walker: No, Mr. Speaker. There was no official report at that time.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED PAYMENTS BY GREEK AND ITALIAN IMMIGRANTS TO PRIVATE INDIVIDUALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Can the minister inform the house as to the findings of her investigation into allegations that sums of money have been paid out by Greek immigrants to private individuals in order to secure their entry into Canada?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I did not catch the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, but I think the hon. member was asking whether an investigation was under way. If that is the gist of the question then the answer is yes.

Mr. Hellyer: My question was whether the minister will present her findings. Does she have anything to report?

Mrs. Fairclough: I am sorry. The investigation is still in progress.

Mr. Hellyer: Has the minister received complaints to the effect that entry of immigrants from Italy, who had previously been denied entry, had been expedited by payments to the Paragon travel agency in Toronto?

Mrs. Fairclough: I have no such report and if there is anything in my department it has not yet reached my desk.

Mr. Hellyer: Does the minister intend to seek the aid of the R.C.M.P. in the investigation?

Mrs. Fairclough: I would be glad to entertain any proposal the hon. gentleman cares to make in that regard if he will give us sufficient information to proceed.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

FINANCE

TEXTILES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON IMPORT QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is in a position to inform the house whether any decision has been reached regarding current import quotas on textiles and other goods.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Negotiations looking toward agreement with respect to 1962 export quotas have been under way for some time with representatives of the Japanese government.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON BILINGUALISM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. In view of the widespread interest and concern being expressed throughout the country with respect to the question of bilingualism in Canada would the Prime Minister consider appointing a royal commission to examine all aspects of the subject?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

OIL

INQUIRY AS TO VOLUNTARY QUOTA ON CRUDE EXPORTS TO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce to inform the house whether representations have been made to the Canadian government to obtain a voluntary quota system with respect to the export of crude oil to the United States?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am not aware of any such request from the United States administration.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SARNIA, ONT.—CURRENT STATUS OF PROPERTY SALE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether there are any negotiations going on at the present time, to her knowledge, respecting the sale of the Sarnia reserve?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Although from time to time rumours reach my office, to my definite knowledge there is nothing at the moment.

POSTAL SERVICE

REPORTED FAILURE TO COLLECT MAIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General. Has the Postmaster General any comment to make in regard to the report in this morning's Gazette to the effect that 6,000 letters had been discovered lying for two weeks in a forgotten mail box?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): May I just say, Mr. Speaker, that when I heard the dulcet tones of the hon. member for St. Denis I knew the house was really back in session.

This was a case of mail boxes having been removed from streets during street repairs, when we could not reach them with our trucks. The contractor who was to clear the box was informed by the post office, and through an error in the contractor's organization the chauffeur who drove the truck was not properly informed and therefore the box was not cleared.

This was a considerable annoyance to myself and the Post Office Department. I might point out that we have between 7,000 and 8,000 of these boxes across Canada, each of them being cleared several times a day making a total of perhaps 40,000 clearances. The very fact that this instance has attracted so much attention is proof that our system of control is generally satisfactory and that this is a most exceptional case.

However, it has been my experience that mistakes occur less frequently when they are punished. Since this is clearly the responsibility of the mail contractor concerned, a substantial financial penalty is being levied against the contractor and we have directed him to take disciplinary action against those in his organization who were directly responsible.

As minister, I do not take a disinterested attitude toward failures in our service, nor condone errors when those errors represent carelessness. I think this attitude may in part be responsible for the steady decrease in the number of complaints from the public regarding our service over the last several years.

Mr. Denis: I wonder if the minister could ever find anything wrong in his department which is his responsibility?

Mr. Hees: Things are different since 1957.

LIVESTOCK

RABIES—COMPENSATION TO ONTARIO FARMERS FOR LOSS IN OUTBREAKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I was asked a question by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce as to whether, due to the increased incidence of rabies in Grey and Bruce counties, as well as other sections of the country, the minister would say if his department would again co-operate in the payment of compensation to farmers for losses of livestock from this disease?

The answer is yes. The department is prepared to continue to reimburse provinces for up to two fifths of the amounts paid by the provinces to owners of animals that have died as a result of rabies.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

B.N.A. ACT AMENDMENT—POSSIBLE INFRINGEMENT OF BILL OF RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask the Minister of Justice whether his department has scrutinized the bill which was introduced today to amend the British North America Act to see if it infringes the bill of rights?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I should not expect they have examined it yet. As I recall the procedure worked out, private bills are examined after they are presented to the house. My hon. friend will recall certain difficulties on an occasion last year as a result of a device which was resorted to in that connection by one of his friends.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Friday, January 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rodrigue Bourdages for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate I want to follow the time honoured and good custom of congratulating the mover, the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Bourdages), and the seconder, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne), of the address in reply.

They would not expect me to agree with all the things they said or the arguments they brought forward but they undoubtedly discharged their task to the satisfaction of their colleagues, and I take it that was their chief objective in discharging this honourable responsibility. I should like also to congratulate them on the skill of their brick-building with the straw that was available to them.

I should also like to congratulate the hon. member who has been appointed Deputy Speaker of the house, and I do that in a very sincere way. I feel sure that he will discharge his important and honourable function with fairness, impartiality and intelligence—those qualities, Mr. Speaker, which you have exhibited to such a high degree in your occupancy of the chair.

I should like to congratulate my hon. friend from Quebec South (Mr. Flynn), on his elevation to the cabinet as Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, and those other hon. members who have been made parliamentary secretaries or have been given other distinctions.

The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys must have been highly flattered by all the publicity given to his appointment to the cabinet. Perhaps, however, his satisfaction in this regard may have been modified by the realization that the attention which was centred on Quebec at this particular time was not exclusively devoted, I feel sure, to his promotion. There is no doubt that more was expected than even this important promotion —especially by the press—because of officially inspired and officially sponsored speculation.

We have in Canada today a government and a Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) who seem to enjoy giving birth to speculations and then to destroy their own speculative infants. Hence, Mr. Speaker, the fiasco of the deluxe pilgrimage to Quebec with private cars, aeroplanes and attendant officials, and all the panoply of an expectant press which is so flattering to the ego of ministers. What a circus performance that turned out to be, with a result, I think it is fair to say, that could have been achieved quietly and inexpensively in Ottawa.

What did it all accomplish, in this time of difficulties, deficits and very serious problems? The verdict of one member of the press gallery in connection with the accomplishments of this trip—the parliamentary correspondent of the Globe and Mail—had this to say when writing on January 3 of this year. I quote from Mr. Walter Gray's column:

> The attendant publicity, and the Prime Minister's statements over press speculation—which the press maintains was originated by Mr. Diefenbaker himself—has left a cloud of foul air over parliament hill.

As it happened, this double-shuffle ended in a "no deal" and all the ministers sit—though perhaps somewhat less easily—on the same front benches who were there previously. It was merely another chapter in the record of a government which prefers agitation to administration, surface excitement to sober results.

The circumstances surrounding the distribution of the throne speech seem to have been part of the same pattern—

An hon. Member: Pessimism.

Mr. Pearson: I am thinking of the delay in giving it out to the press until it was actually produced in the other place, which provoked—

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman allow a question?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member received a confidential copy in the usual way. Did he respect the confidentiality of that document, or did he make it available to others?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I received a copy of the speech around two o'clock in the afternoon on which it was delivered. It has been the custom to do that. I am grateful to the Prime Minister for that courtesy, although in earlier years I have received it a little earlier; but I am not complaining about that. I observed the appropriate security arrangements in regard to that speech.

I am now talking about the alteration of a custom to give advance copies to the press. The delay in doing so has, as perhaps it was meant to do, provoked some very startling rumours indeed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman a simple question? Did the hon. gentleman deliver to anyone the confidential document that was handed to him?

Mr. Pearson: I acted with perfect propriety in this regard, something which it may be difficult for the Prime Minister always to understand. There was a reason for this delay. This is not an important matter in itself. The reason may have been a last minute excision of a paragraph; it may have been merely the fact that the government did not get around to taking action, or it may have been a way of showing some form of displeasure at the attitude of the press. But whatever the reason, the delay did cause a great deal of speculation and this was no doubt all part of the electoral war of nerves which is going on at the present time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the hon. member remember that Mr. King did the same thing?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I should like the Prime Minister to exercise that patience which he normally shows in this House of Commons.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman objects to what was done. Does the hon. gentleman remember that Mr. King did the same thing?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am raising this matter because it is all part of the pattern of what I call the electoral war of nerves. So far, and this is perhaps what is worrying the Prime Minister, the government's assaults in this war of nerves have all been very easily repulsed and the only casualties so far have been the good name and the reputation of the government itself. The electoral battle, it will be recalled, was to have been joined last autumn over the issue of free enterprise versus socialism—an issue which, coming from this particular government, provoked only a yawn in the country. Then there was the sordid mess, provoked by the government, of the Coyne affair and the action of the other house in protecting successfully the right of an accused to be heard before the body which was being asked to condemn him by a bill of attainder.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): With the assistance of a Liberal advertising agency. Who paid them?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think this time is as appropriate as any—in fact, it is more than appropriate—to remind the house that the member who has the floor is entitled to an uninterrupted hearing.

Mr. Pearson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but these interruptions do not really disturb me very much. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) seems also to be pulsating with excitement this afternoon.

We recall we were to have had an election on the Coyne and Senate issue, too, but the government soon backed away from that one in the face of an aroused and hostile public opinion.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Pearson: Then there was to have been a quick dissolution of this house and a quick election on the massive program which was to have appeared in the speech from the throne. Well, we do not hear so much about that now. The evidence of declining popularity and especially the evidence of the five Ontario by-elections, two of which, in Toronto, were described by the Minister of Finance before they were held as a "miniature general election whose influence would be paramount" was enough to—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, no.

Mr. Pearson: Oh, I have got the statement here.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I said they had been described as that.

Mr. Pearson: Anyway, this evidence of declining popularity has perhaps removed the impulse to have an election on a quick dissolution. So goes the war of nerves, leaving people more bored than shell shocked. When the election comes it will be on the record of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: I am delighted to have said something which has won the unanimous approval of this house save for those hon. members in the corner to my right in the N.D.P.-C.C.F. group who did not express their views with regard to the statement I have just made.

I do not this afternoon intend to join in the speculation about the date of the election because that would involve trying to read the mind of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker). That, of course, as I imagine even his colleagues have found out by now, is a fruitless occupation. The most discouraging prediction I have discovered about the election date comes from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker). I am sorry he has to leave the house.

Mr. Walker: Right here.

Mr. Pearson: It was difficult to pick the hon. gentleman out among his more conspicuous colleagues.

Mr. Walker: Thank you.

Mr. Pearson: The most discouraging prediction came, as I said, from the Minister of Public Works. His prediction would put the election off until parliament was automatically dissolved in 1963 under the provisions of our constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: I hear some applause for that, too, from nervous members from some parts of the country.

An hon. Member: All Liberals.

Mr. Pearson: The minister said in Nova Scotia last December that the delay in calling an election was due to the government's desire to fulfil all its promises before appealing to the people. That is a prediction which would mean an indefinite delay in setting an election date.

I can understand the desire of hon. gentlemen opposite to wait. Perhaps they are delaying for the same reason as inspired Right Hon. R. B. Bennett to put off his fate until the last moment in 1935. Of course, we must remember that the Prime Minister has always placed great faith in the healing virtues of delay, as in the camouflaging magic of confusion. We on this side believe that an election should be held—that the people of this country should be given a chance to express themselves at the earliest possible date. It should be an election with the full and detailed government program placed before the people, together with a detailed national accounting, so that they would know what has been going on in the country in recent years in order that the people can decide in the light of all the facts. The sooner that comes about in the conditions I have mentioned the better for Canada, though, of course, the worse for this government.

Let me say a few words about the speech from the throne itself. It is not a very ambitious document but I do not intend on this occasion to try to deal with all the references contained in it. My colleagues will deal with some of the proposals and some of the ideas, and I shall not attempt to cover the whole field today.

As far as international affairs are concerned there is nothing in the speech from the throne, except a few platitudinous sentences, to describe the sombre and, indeed, the dangerous situation which we face in the world. No ideas are put forward concerning ways in which we might meet these dangers and solve these problems except in a general and unimpressive way. There is no recognition of the fact that the menace of communist imperialism and colonialism is as great as ever—perhaps, in some respects, greater than ever. I think we are particularly conscious of that menace today as I speak on the forty fourth anniversary of the establishment of the independent republic of the Ukraine, the short lived and tragic history of which we all know. That history surely brings home to us that while overseas colonialism and imperialism of the older type is on the way out and has almost disappeared, the kind of colonialism which imperialistic communist powers impose by moving across adjacent borders to destroy ancient civilizations and subjugate their populations is stronger and more menacing than ever. It is not likely there will be real peace in the world—creative and constructive peace—until that type of colonialism is removed, too. I have no doubt that when the time comes we shall have a full debate on international affairs at which time we shall be able to examine why, among other things, Canada's influence in these matters has declined rather than increased in the last four or five years.

Mr. Green: That is a foolish statement.

Mr. Pearson: If it is a foolish statement, as is stated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs Mr. Green), may I say that it is being made by many objective observers of international matters today.

I am also very conscious of the fact that in dealing with the program in the speech from the throne I cannot be sure that I am dealing with the full government program or all the government proposals, owing to the fact that the Prime Minister has introduced into our constitution a new convention—and it is a very dubious one indeed—of making his own speech from the throne after the official one has been handed down and of including in that political speech of his own things which he thinks will perhaps get more credit for himself and for his party, as coming from him, than from any more exalted or objective source. He has done it more than once and for all I know he may be doing it today. That situation makes it difficult to introduce a debate on the speech from the throne when we do not know whether or not we have the full government program outlined in that speech.

However, as we have the program outlined in that speech, its declarations contain no call to national action; they make no challenge for a national response. They do not even seem to call for an early election.

On January 20 the Globe and Mail, a paper certainly not friendly to this party but traditionally very friendly indeed to the government, referred to the speech from the throne in an editorial entitled "An Uncertain Trumpet" as one with a "curiously thin and inadequate note". What an unhappy contrast, in content, inspiration and challenge, to President Kennedy's state of the union message a few days earlier.

One commentator has likened the program in it to a budget with the dollar sign thrown away completely, and this at a time when this year's budgetary deficit is likely to be $700 million or more, when our cash deficit is likely to be well over $1 billion and when we are told by the government that this is a time of expansion and moving forward. If the dollar sign is to be thrown away completely, as this prediction has it, I wonder whether the cheque writing machines are now ready for overtime work.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, we recall the words of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton). I am sorry that he is not in his place today and I regret even more the reason for his absence. I know that he is ill.

We all wish him a speedy recovery. However, we recall his words on November 29 1961, in Saskatoon—I happened to be in Saskatoon with him on the same day—when in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix he is reported as follows:

> Today Hon. Alvin Hamilton, home from grain-selling trips which have taken him half way around the world, said that there would be no farm acreage payments in this calendar year. He did not attribute this to lack of federal dollars but said that the cheque machines required to roll out the barrels of money were busy with other financial details.

It was therefore left for the Prime Minister a little bit later to make the announcement of acreage payments. Of course, that is the usual procedure followed by this government. The good announcements come from the Prime Minister and the hard and harsh announcements come from the other ministers, as was the case with the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) when he had to speak within a few hours after the Prime Minister had spoken—I am thinking of New Brunswick and Fredericton—and had given no indication that the bad announcement was to come shortly from the mouth of the Minister of Public Works about the Chignecto canal.

The speech from the throne contains a lot of old stuff. There are some promises of things that were promised years ago, no doubt on the assumption by the government that repetition is reputation. A good example of this is closure. We remember the ringing statements of the Prime Minister in 1957 and 1958 about what he was going to do with closure. Now, in 1962, we have the ringing declaration in the speech from the throne that the matter is going to be submitted to a parliamentary committee.

Some of the promises in the speech are promises to talk with the provinces about doing something in 1962 or to begin talking with the provinces about doing something. Of course, the contributory insurance plan of the government comes to mind in that connection. Some promises are to pay out large sums of money on the eve of an election without saying how much; a railroad here or a railroad there; a bridge in Montreal without tolls or in Prince Albert a bridge to political resources; a ferry promised now for a causeway promised once and refused yesterday.

Perhaps the most notable thing about the speech from the throne is its omissions. Some of these notable and important omissions are explainable only by the characteristic inability of the government to make up its mind, never to do today what it can put off until tomorrow or, if a royal commission can be appointed, until a few years from now.

Four main matters are omitted from the speech from the throne, in so far as any effective proposals for dealing with them are concerned. There is no program of action, although there are a few words, for the stimulation of economic growth, or even an indication of awareness of its necessity. Presumably—and I shall have something to say about that matter today—the government is quite satisfied with the economic growth we are experiencing at the present time. Second, there is no program of effective action to combat chronic unemployment, especially in certain areas. Third, there is no definition of a coherent policy indicting that the government recognizes the dramatic and important new trading patterns and policies that are now taking shape in Europe, and the opportunities and the challenges which these changes represent for this country.

Fourth, after two years of indecision and procrastination, confusion and contradiction, there is still no statement of an intelligible Canadian defence policy, especially whether Canada is or is not to have nuclear arms. This omission—and I should like to say a few words about it—merely confirms the shocking refusal of the government to make up its mind on defence policy, especially on the use of nuclear weapons. With all the confidential and secret information at its command, it delays, doubts and procrastinates. Yet it attacks the opposition, which has not the responsibility for policy and has never been given any of the confidential information on which policy must be based, for not finally and dogmatically laying down policy in this field. Could there possibly be a more complete abdication of governmental responsibility? The government spokesmen, when they speak—and let us remember that they speak with ministerial responsibility, each one of them—contradict each other and indeed they contradict themselves.

The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness) agrees that nuclear warheads alone make sense for some of the arms we now have secured. Statements have been made confirming that these arms will have nuclear warheads, and other statements that they will not have them. Other statements have been made saying that no decision will be reached as long as the disarmament conference is proceeding or as long as there is a chance for a nuclear test ban or as long as there is no deterioration of the international situation. "We will make up our minds after these other things happen."

At the United Nations, on the other hand, reflecting presumably the view of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Canada voted for a resolution, opposed by most of her NATO allies including the United States, the United Kingdom and France but strongly backed by uncommitted, neutralist and communist members including the U.S.S.R., which was designed to prevent the extension of the nuclear club. This is a most desirable objective but one which is entirely inconsistent with the use of such weapons in Canadian custody or under Canadian control.

Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, we are spending millions on weapons, some of them already in the hands of Canadian forces, which will have only a minimum of effectiveness without nuclear warheads.

Mr. Green: May I ask the Leader of the Opposition a question? How would he have voted on that Swedish resolution?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I will tell the hon. minister this, that if I had voted one way in New York I would have expected to be backed up by statements of my ministerial colleagues in Canada—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: —and if I were minister I would refuse to take a position at the United Nations which was contradicted by statements made by my colleagues at home.

Mr. Green: Will the Leader of the Opposition now answer the question, please?

Mr. Pearson: We are going to have a debate on external affairs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: The minister has not denied the accuracy of anything I have said and I leave him to ruminate over the conclusions he may wish to draw from that record of contradiction. I say that the record is one of paying millions for weapons which have no warheads at all. Perhaps they will be filled with sawdust.

Mr. Hees: How would you have voted?

Mr. Pearson: We are spending millions of dollars for weapons that have no warheads and we are told that when the emergency develops we will then decide. Believe me, if an emergency develops in the way it is likely to develop the minister may not have very much time to decide. It will take 17 to 20 minutes for a missile to reach this continent. Is he going to have time then to move his warheads from the United States to North Bay? But that is the policy of the government with regard to these things. What kind of irresponsible confusion and concealment is this?

Mr. Diefenbaker: You have given an example of it.

Mr. Pearson: I know that it is almost impossible for the Prime Minister and his colleagues not to ask us what we would do because we on this side were so much more successful in doing the right thing when we were in government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: I do not blame them a bit for trying to get our views, especially as they do not seem to have views of their own.

Another notable omission in the speech from the throne, which I have mentioned and propose to deal with at considerable length, is the shocking, startling mismanagement of international economic policy by the present government. We have been told and we are going to be told in this debate that the state of international trade is most encouraging, that everything is fine, that our exports are going up.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Hear, hear. An all-time record.

Mr. Pearson: I was hoping for that interjection and I knew I would not be disappointed. Notwithstanding what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has said here and the other day in Winnipeg, our relative position in regard to export trade has declined in the last five years. It has declined notwithstanding what the Minister of Finance said in Winnipeg. We are no longer the fourth trading nation in the world but the fifth, notwithstanding what the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) are telling us. World exports have increased by 21 per cent since 1956 while Canadian exports have increased 11 per cent. Are we holding our own in world trade? Is the minister satisfied with the position we have achieved in world trade, especially as our increase in the current year is due largely to the fact that we are selling so very much more to communist countries and Cuba? Is that any foundation for satisfaction?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Do you object to that?

Mr. Pearson: I do not object a bit but I do not go around making these foolish statements that everything is fine with trade and that we are going ahead beautifully.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): When did you stop making foolish statements?

Mr. Pearson: Well, I would have a very hard time equalling the record of the minister in that regard. If he will just contain himself for a little while, I have some of his more startling statements in my notes and I will be glad to put them on the record.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They will be the best part of your speech.

Mr. Pearson: We will see about that. It is understandable that the government should have very little in the speech from the throne about trade policy because of the confusion of trade voices in this government, especially in respect of what we should do about the European common market and parallel developments, including the application of the United Kingdom to join the common market. The Prime Minister and some of his colleagues, most recently the Minister of Finance in Winnipeg last Saturday night, I think—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Friday noon. Wrong again.

Mr. Pearson: The Prime Minister has told the country that in respect of the United Kingdom's application to join the common market he is confident that the United Kingdom will protect our interests. He said in Halifax that he was confident that commonwealth trade ties would not be greatly harmed. The Minister of Finance repeated that in Winnipeg last Friday noon. This represents a very startling change, especially on the part of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not at all.

Mr. Pearson: Well, I will now begin to quote the minister's words.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I hope you will quote them correctly because you have not been doing so for a long time.

Mr. Pearson: If the minister will throw his mind back to his trip to Accra, I would point out that in respect of this particular matter he said there that Canada acknowledged the sincerity of the United Kingdom with regard to doing their best to protect commonwealth interests. The minister said, "But hope is not enough; good intentions are not enough". Then he talked about the slippery slope on which we were entering and he pleaded with the United Kingdom not to join the European common market because it would be bad for them and bad for the commonwealth. His words were echoed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Then, Mr. Speaker, when the discordant music of this governmental anvil chorus got back to Canada and did not go over so well with the people of Canada, the government began to change its tune. Since that time the Prime Minister in Halifax and in Newfoundland, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) over the air and also the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce have all begun to sing a different tune. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that they have gone so far in this—and this is the ultimate in casuistry, if not hypocrisy—they have gone so far in trying to explain their earlier position as to argue, especially the Minister of Agriculture, that they were merely giving the United Kingdom ammunition. The Minister of Agriculture has said that by our arguments and by our objections we were giving the United Kingdom ammunition presumably to blast its way into the European common market. These ministers say now that they were putting the British in a stronger bargaining position. That is a very different position indeed from that which they took last summer and last autumn.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce may remember the speeches he once made—I suppose he is trying to forget them now—in which he said that any trading arrangement which represented freer trade in the Atlantic area would mean exposure to United States competition and that would be fatal. That, he said, is why an Atlantic trading community is nonsensical and impossible and would cause mass unemployment in Canada. Does the minister deny that he said these things?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I should like to correct that statement. I said that it would be fatal for some Canadian industries, and I think the Leader of the Opposition would agree with that.

Mr. Pearson: The minister has also said it would be nonsensical, impossible and would cause mass unemployment in Canada. The minister must remember he said that more than once.

At the time he was making these speeches, and this was some months ago, his colleague the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sevigny) was saying that what we really should work for is a western hemisphere free trade area including the United States of America.

Perhaps the best example of the transition from inconsistency to incoherence was given by the Minister of Agriculture during an interview in Victoria, British Columbia, at the beginning of December. This really provides comic relief. During a press conference he said that the European common market was only a European rich man's club surrounded by a high tariff wall. I shall quote from a newspaper which is most friendly to the government, the Victoria daily Colonist of December 2. This is what the minister is reported as saying:

> If Britain goes in and joins this cloister, this monastery—

He had switched overnight from a club to a cloister.

> —everybody will be taking in everybody's washing.

This is the assessment of this important European and world development by the Minister of Agriculture. What he calls an exchange of washing resulted in the European six increasing their trade in 1960 over 1950 with the outside world by 23 per cent, and increasing their gross national product by 6.5 per cent in one year. When this minister or any minister talks about the high tariff walls of the European market, he forgets, or perhaps he never knew, that the European common market is averaging national tariffs at the level of January 1, 1957 and, as announced, is willing to reduce that average 20 per cent on the basis of reciprocal concessions. Indeed, this objective was announced two years ago when Dr. Hallstein was in Washington. Perhaps the government does not know that the United States has already negotiated that kind of deal with the European common market for important reductions in tariffs. Is this restrictionist? I wish the Minister of Agriculture were here to reply.

Is this Canadian government ready to bargain on that basis? Perhaps we will learn something about this during this debate. Will the government be so naive as to merely sit back and hope that it can get the benefits of negotiation by others? We do not know about this, but perhaps one of the ministers will tell us something about it.

Our own position in this matter, Mr. Speaker, is the belief that we should be in the forefront of this kind of negotiation, not following behind. Perhaps I may be permitted to do something I have very rarely, if ever, done in the house in order to indicate the consistency of the position we have taken. I should like to quote from a speech I made in January, 1958, on this very matter in Vancouver at the board of trade. I said this:

> In Europe, six continental countries are prepared to form a customs union to be complemented by free trade arrangements with the United Kingdom and probably also the Scandinavian countries and the rest of continental Europe.

This has almost come about.

> When these arrangements are completed, there will be a tendency in some parts of this large area to aim at European economic isolationism. These countries have tried to gain easier access to the United States and Canadian markets without any substantial degree of success and they may now feel that the only other alternative is a large economic unit of their own, as self-sufficient as they can make it. That would be an unhappy development.
> Indeed it would be tragic—politically and economically—if the free world should now divide into separate economic blocs while the Soviet world remained a massive, single, trading unit.
> There is increasing evidence that Soviet leaders are more and more interested in conquest by economic methods, used and controlled by the same means and for the same purposes as are the diplomatic and military arms of that government.
> The west is gradually—too gradually—recognizing this major shift in Soviet policy, and the necessity of taking steps to meet it. If declarations of interdependence from Washington and Paris mean anything, they must mean closer co-ordination of our economic and scientific activities in NATO. It will not be possible, in the long run, for allies to work together in close defence co-operation and grow increasingly apart in economic conflict.
> If then we do not wish to weaken the western coalition; and if, in Canada, we do not wish either to face the United States alone or become too dependent economically on it, then surely the best policy for us is to seek economic interdependence within the north Atlantic community through freer trade. A first, and important step in this direction—and one certainly, in my view, which should be given careful, sympathetic, and detailed consideration—is the United Kingdom offer of free trade with Canada.
> For Canada a north Atlantic area with the freest possible trade would certainly mean a much greater export market in the United States and in Europe; lower cost of production for many Canadian industries—and lower living costs, I would hope, for Canadian consumers.

Then, I add this paragraph, too:

> In short, it seems that the era of gradual tariff reductions through GATT has come to an end. We do not surely wish to replace it by a western Europe and a North America aiming at self-sufficiency. If not, then surely the best alternative, and the best way to meet the Soviet economic and political challenge is an Atlantic freer trade area to complement the European customs union and free trade zone. For Canada, is this not the best way to reduce our economic dependence on the United States while expanding our trade, maintaining our economic development, and raising even higher our living standards?
> This is a challenging prospect and is surely worth serious and immediate consideration, negotiation and planning. Could there be a finer initiative for Canada?

Mr. Speaker, that initiative was not taken by this government. This initiative would have shown the way to reduce obstructions to trade between countries, not only in the north Atlantic communities but in the whole of the free world; in the first instance, with a European economic community and with the United States and the United Kingdom, if she were not in that community.

I admit that there has been some sign in recent weeks of—what shall I call it—backsliding into relative realism. The Globe and Mail of January 3 put it this way:

> Ottawa tried to turn a blind eye to the common market when Britain made the first move toward membership but has now been forced to face the facts.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope that is so. I admit, and I am glad to admit, that on January 15 the Minister of Trade and Commerce also spoke very differently from earlier occasions. He said Canada faced here a situation which was admittedly full of difficulties and adjustments, but also offered new opportunities. It is too bad that six months ago or a year ago the government did not concentrate on the opportunities offered instead of worrying so much about the danger. We might be in a different position today if they had done that. But they did not.

As a result of their negative policy, I hope to be able to show to the satisfaction of hon. members that we have forfeited a good deal of our bargaining power in the negotiations before us.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Nonsense.

Mr. Pearson: I hope that this recent declaration by the minister means a change in attitude on the part of the government. But let us look at the record which gives cause for anxiety because it shows the blindness of the government over European economic developments as they occurred and the stupidity of its policy and its attitude when it awoke.

Professor MacDonald of the economics department of the University of Toronto put it very well in an article in the Canadian Forum a few weeks ago. He said this:

> That Canada should not have been prepared for the inevitable is disturbing. Either Canadian intelligence did not sense the strong change of official opinion in Britain, which is inexcusable, or the Canadan government refused to recognize it, which is irresponsible.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the conduct of the Canadian government in those days was both inexcusable and irresponsible, and unworthy of any Canadian government.

Let us look at the evidence. Let us look first at the evidence about blindness. The Minister of Finance, on April 25, 1961, as reported in Hansard at page 3979—and remember this was less than a year ago—had this to say:

> Let them—

He was referring to the opposition:

> —be frank enough and informed enough to talk about it—

That is, Britain joining the common market:

> —as though it were what it is, something very tentative.

This, I repeat, was April 25, 1961, and according to the minister it was something very tentative. He also used the word "hypothetical" in his statement. But the minister most concerned in the United Kingdom had made it perfectly clear months previously—I think it was in a speech in Paris—that the United Kingdom was going to attempt to do this.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You are not right there.

Mr. Pearson: Where did the government get the information on which to base that kind of statement made by the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): From the British government.

Mr. Pearson: I shall have some quotations on that too. Now, having convinced themselves from sources of information which presumably were open to them in London, although I do not know what they were, that the United Kingdom would not apply for membership, the government's reaction when that application was made and they were actually faced with it, was one of shocked consternation, of complaint and criticism and irascible objections to it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is silly talk.

Mr. Pearson: We shall see whether it was silly talk or not. I shall give some evidence on it. One reason for this reaction no doubt was that the opposition had been right on this matter and the government were proven wrong.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The opposition were never right on this matter.

Mr. Pearson: The best reflection of this sterile, negative and complaining attitude of the government was shown at the conference in Accra. The Minister of Finance in the famous luncheon speech which he made at Winnipeg had this to say last Friday, and I quote from his statement on page 2.

Mr. Denis: He will deny it anyway.

Mr. Pearson: It was one of the most extraordinary statements the minister has ever made, that at no time had there been anything remotely approaching coolness and hostility in our relations with the United Kingdom.

Mr. Pickersgill: Ask the British.

Mr. Pearson: He also said that we have never tried to make things difficult for the British.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Very true.

Mr. Pearson: In other places, with his flair for courtesy and modest understatement, the minister had this to say:

> To say we criticized the U.K. at Accra is a blatant lie.

That is one of the favourite expressions of the minister in describing statements with which he does not agree, that they are blatant lies. At times he accuses people who make these statements of nazi big lie techniques but, Mr. Speaker, if statements to the effect that the Canadian government made it difficult for the United Kingdom government at Accra and other places are blatant lies, then practically every reporter at Accra was guilty of blatant lying. I shall just quote from some of the reporters who were present.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): None of them was present at the conference. They were all outside.

Mr. Pickersgill: One wonders whether the minister was present.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was a closed conference, you understand.

Mr. Pearson: The minister has said they were not present at the conference because it was a closed conference. The fact that it was a closed conference undoubtedly explains why the office of the Minister of Trade and Commerce very courteously handed his statement to the press. It was that kind of closed conference. At least that particular speech was no hidden report.

Mr. Norman MacLeod of the U.K. press, reporting at Accra, had this to say in reference to the position taken by the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

United Kingdom association with the European six—

Referring to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I continue:

—unless it can be accomplished on terms of existing empire preferences, will mean the end of the commonwealth eventually.

I suppose that is not making it difficult for the United Kingdom, to say that it would mean the end of the commonwealth eventually. Mr. MacLeod went on to say that this was the blunt fact and the historic choice which the Canadian trade minister laid on the conference table, either the commonwealth or the common market. The minister put it up to the British in those terms, notwithstanding the fact that the prime minister of the United Kingdom had denied that such choice was required in the policy to be adopted.

The minister, according to Mr. MacLeod, then emphasized the economic disadvantages of the U.K. moving into the common market, and to make sure his warnings were made public—these are my own words—his speech, as I have said already, was released to the journalists at Accra. In that speech he also said:

There is no substitute for the terms of access we are now accorded in the U.K. market.

Does that not make it difficult for the United Kingdom? Does that make it easier when the Minister of Trade and Commerce adopts the attitude that if existing preferences are not maintained as they are now it will mean the end of the commonwealth eventually? What a policy to adopt. What an attitude to take. In that statement he nailed the Canadian government's colours to the preferential mast—no change—and yet the Minister of Finance says there was no criticism from Canada. Are all the headlines and stories from Accra false and lying? The Gazette on September 14 carried this headline "Hees leads attack on U.K. move".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Most of the headlines were misleading.

Mr. Pearson: Another read "U.K. must choose Commonwealth or bloc—Fleming".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Those headlines were very misleading.

Mr. Pearson: On September 12, 1961, the Toronto Globe and Mail had this to say:

Finance minister Donald Fleming's airplane had barely touched down in Ghana, where he is attending a conference of commonwealth finance ministers, before he had started crying his familiar song of woe.

What does Mr. Fleming expect to achieve by such public breast beating? It is time that he understood that politics is the art of the possible. and that there is no sense at all in complaining about a decision which is being forced upon Britain by sheer economic necessity.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And which Britain says she still has not made.

Mr. Pearson: Then, in the Toronto Telegram of September 13, 1961, there was the headline "Tears at Accra." I repeat this was the Toronto Telegram, the source above suspicion. It continued:

Mr. Fleming should beware of creating an image of Canada as an international crybaby. Canada believes in looking after its interests, but it supports the progress of mankind everywhere.

The Vancouver Province, of September 15, carried the following:

Trade minister Hees' cry from Ghana is plaintive, primitive and pointless.

There could be no better three words than those to describe the attitude of policy of the Canadian government in this whole matter, "plaintive, primitive and pointless." The newspaper added "It must be the heat." The Vancouver Province, which is a charitable paper, had a good excuse for the Minister of Trade and Commerce because it went on to say it must be the heat.

Then there is the very responsible, very accurate, well informed and intelligent financial editor of the Gazette, Mr. John Meyer, I am sure the minister reads his article every morning, as I try to do.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not with profit.

Mr. Pearson: The minister says, "Not with profit". On September 13, 1961, Mr. Meyer had this to say:

> The press reports from Accra, where the commonwealth economic consultative council is meeting, were discouraging ... All that is being accomplished at Accra is to strengthen the growing overseas conviction that Canadians are incapable of looking after themselves.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And he was just as inaccurate as those other quotations of yours.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we are not incapable of looking after ourselves, but the government is incapable of looking after the nation's business.

The government is now so anxious to forget this whole sorry episode and the critical reactions to it that whenever they are reminded of it they cry "foul", "murder" or "blatant lie".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Or "Liberal misrepresentation".

Mr. Pearson: But their words are on the record, even though the conference was off the record. The Minister of Finance cannot deny that he said:

> We believe that the United Kingdom is too deeply entangled ever to be able to withdraw. This is a slippery slope.

Did the minister say that, or not?

An hon. Member: No answer.

Mr. Pearson: The ministers concerned cannot deny that they took the position that common market membership would pose great dangers for Great Britain, and in the words of the Minister of Finance:

> Political relationships within the commonwealth will be fundamentally changed.

The answer to that was given in London by Mr. Harold Macmillan, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, on July 31, 1961, when he said:

> I do not think that Britain's contribution to the commonwealth will be reduced if Europe unites. On the contrary, I think its value will be enhanced.

Then he stated his belief that the choice between the commonwealth and the common market was a false one, and I say that the Canadian government adopted a false and dangerous policy in trying to drive that home as an unavoidable choice.

This childish lecturing and hectoring of the British is all the more amazing in the light of the government's own record in the field of United Kingdom-Canadian relations. There was the famous 15 per cent diversion which raised great expectations in the United Kingdom some years ago and which fell so flat. There was the free trade offer and the sterile response to that by this government. There is the policy of pinpricking protectionism at a time when our balance of trade with the United Kingdom is so very favourable.

No wonder that a member of parliament and former economic secretary to the treasury, Mr. Nigel Birch, speaking at the annual Conservative conference last summer in Brighton had this to say:

> The fact that preferences have been whittled away since the war has not been by our will but by the will of the commonwealth countries themselves. Look at what happened when John Diefenbaker became Prime Minister of Canada. He wanted to increase imports from Britain by 15 per cent. We were delighted. We offered him anything up to a full customs union. What happened? Nothing.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Birch was wrong.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Benidickson: Everybody is wrong.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, of course everybody is wrong except the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: That's right.

Mr. Pearson: Then came the sorry episode over the question of consultation between the United Kingdom and Canada regarding Britain's application to join the E.C.M. There was the complaint which was given so much publicity, that the Canadian government was not being told about British policy, and in particular that they were not given the full text of Mr. Edward Heath's speech of October 10 in Paris and received only a summary.

They developed this matter into a great issue, with all their normal sense of confused excitement. They built it up and they built it up and they built it up. Then the full text was made public and the crisis very quickly ended. But it did further damage to the reputation of this—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There was no crisis.

Mr. Pearson: It did further damage to this country's reputation abroad.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Pearson: The minister again says no, so I am going to have to put a few quotations on the record.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, a few more of those quotations.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if the minister would only admit once in a while that he has made a mistake, that things once went wrong and they are trying to make them better now.

Mr. Benidickson: Impossible.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Does the hon. member—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the minister wishes to ask a question, perhaps he would rise.

Mr. Chevrier: He never rises. He interrupts repeatedly from his seat.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I would gladly accept the invitation if the hon. member would allow a question.

Mr. Pearson: Of course.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Does the hon. member say we should not have sought to obtain a full text of that speech on a matter so very important to Canada and to the interests of Canadians?

Mr. Pearson: That would depend upon how much information was given to the government in the summary. If they had all the necessary information in the summary—and I will have something to say about this—

Mr. Hellyer: Do you not trust the British?

An hon. Member: They don't trust the British.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not true.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that my speech has to be prolonged, but I have to put on the record so many of these statements because the minister will never admit that he is wrong. He is not only omniscient, but he is infallible. Therefore when he goes around saying that people who disagree with him are blatant liars, we have to put on the record of this house who are these people who are disagreeing with him.

When I say that this episode caused damage abroad to the reputation of Canada's government I am under an obligation to support that statement with evidence, and I propose to do that.

Here is a quotation from a highly respected London weekly, The Spectator, of December 1, 1961:

> The publication of the full text of Mr. Heath's Paris speech to the Six makes it clear that last week's fuss was unjustified. So far from taking advantage of the darkness of the conference room to sell the commonwealth down the river, the British government appears to have stuck up for their interests to an extent that should impress even the Canadian Minister of Finance.

I charge the government with knowing this and creating this rather silly diversion of non-consultation; this affectation of chagrin and consternation, as a smokescreen to conceal their own foolishness and errors.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Silly talk.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I hope all these very profound and wise interventions of the minister are getting into Hansard. I would hate to see any of them missed. The last one was "silly talk".

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

If the government really wanted the fullest possible consultation and to keep in the closest possible touch with the British over their application to join the common market, why did not the government months ago—as they were requested to do—send some special representatives, or at least one special representative to Brussels to keep in touch with what was going on?

Why did not the government accept the invitation of the British government to send them a list of goods in which they were particularly interested and which might be affected by these developments, and give some priority as to the way it would affect Canada?

Why did they turn down that invitation at that time? And now, after Mr. Heath came out here for a second visit and things went off better, why is the government making a great virtue of the fact that they are sending representatives to Brussels in 1962?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Because now is the time. They have entered a different phase of the negotiations.

Mr. Pearson: I have had some experience in the world of diplomatic negotations in both economic and political matters. The time to keep in touch with the other parties in such negotiations is right at the beginning, not at the end. If it is desirable to send a Canadian mission to Brussels now it certainly was desirable a few months ago. No wonder the Financial Post correspondent in London reported on December 9, 1961 that as a result of this mix-up—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Name?

Mr. Pearson: His name is Mr. Archer Mark. He is a Financial Post correspondent in London, and he said:

> As a result of this mix-up we were branded as hostile and untrustworthy.

No wonder the Brantford Expositor, another paper friendly to the government, wrote in an editorial on November 30, 1961:

> Two leading Canadians, and indirectly Canada herself, have emerged looking ridiculous from the Drew-Fleming tantrum over not getting a full text of the British statement to the Paris opening of the common market negotiations, October 10.

The report went on:

> When it indulges in political grandstanding, as in the Drew-Fleming affair, the government should take care to confine the performance to home grounds and not expose Canada to ridicule in a country where we still need to keep lots of friends.

This ludicrous complaint about no consultation is all the more ludicrous coming from a government which has recently, to say the least, been very careless about consulting the United Kingdom when we have been contemplating at times economic action as a government which affected her interests. So careless was it about consultation with the United Kingdom in connection with the air agreement that it announced the agreement before it got the approval of the United Kingdom. As a matter of fact, it has not been able to get it yet. This demand for full information and more consultation sounds especially silly coming from a government whose high commissioner, no doubt acting on instructions from Ottawa, because that is the way in which high commissioners usually operate, refused to meet with United Kingdom representatives and other commonwealth high commissioners to deal with this particular matter.

Mr. Benidickson: Another case of putting the cart before the horse.

An hon. Member: Which matter?

Mr. Pearson: The European market and the implications of United Kingdom accession to it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You know that was denied.

Mr. Pearson: Within an hour of this situation becoming known a statement was issued by a representative of Canada House underlining the fact that this had been done deliberately. That statement, I admit at once, was re-explained and denied a few hours later. The world was then told that the non-attendance of the high commissioner was of no significance at all; it was due to a previous engagement, even though this meeting had been called days earlier. The Secretary of State for External Affairs in his desire to be helpful—and he always tries to be helpful in these matters—added that the high commissioner was also suffering from a bad cold.

The attitude of public opinion in the United Kingdom at that time was expressed in Sunday Times, a reputable newspaper now under the ownership of a former Canadian—a former Conservative candidate in Toronto, I believe. That paper had this to say last October:

> Nobody in London wants to quarrel—but nobody seems to be able to keep on terms with the Canadian government.

The Manchester Guardian thrust this home on November 30 when it said this:

> From now onwards, Canadian views should be heard as freely as before but heeded less.

I do not think any Canadian could have got any pleasure out of reading that sentence in such a famous newspaper.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): A shameful statement.

Mr. Pearson: Then, in the Hamilton Spectator, a newspaper devoted to the interests of hon. gentlemen opposite, the following statement appeared on January 6:

> The only thing we seem to have succeeded in winning was a reputation for sulking.

Let us contrast this attitude with the attitude taken toward these developments by the United States—an attitude which combined an understanding of the developments themselves with a determination, as is proper, to protect national interests—the same kind of determination as we should show. In contrast to our own negative and sterile attitude, their attitude was positive and farsighted. Consider the report of Mr. Herter and Mr. Clayton. Consider the position of the United States administration as put forward by the under secretary of state, Mr. Ball. Listen to this excerpt from President Kennedy's state of the union message on January 11; I wish we could have had something like this in the speech from the throne. He said:

> Will we in this country adapt our thinking to these new prospects and patterns—or will we wait until events pass us by?
> This is the year to decide. We need a wholly new approach—a bold new instrument of American trade policy.

That certainly applies to this country. Then the President went on to say, in the same speech:

> Concessions, in this bargaining, must, of course, be reciprocal, not unilateral. The common market will not fulfil its own high promise unless its outside tariff walls are low. The dangers of restriction or timidity in our own policy have counterparts for our friends in Europe. For together we face a common challenge: to enlarge the prosperity of free men everywhere and to build in partnership a new trading community in which all free nations may gain from the productive energy of free competitive effort.

On November 9, at Windsor the Minister of Finance pleaded that the United States should supply bold leadership in this field. He said we were counting on it. Then, in Ottawa, after that leadership had been given by Washington, the Canadian government gave a cool and qualified endorsement of the United States plans to the United States delegates who had come here to explain what that leadership might mean, together with the policies and the proposals which would be based on it. Indeed, after that conference, when the Minister of Finance was asked whether the Canadian government had given any form of undertaking to support President Kennedy's proposal for a major reduction in world tariffs, the hon. gentleman replied as reported in the press, and I quote from the Globe and Mail:

> No, no, that was not a matter for discussion. It would have been premature and inappropriate for Canada to offer such support.

The reason the minister gave was that the matter was before congress.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Would be coming before congress.

Mr. Pearson: Yet within 24 hours of that statement the Canadian government issued a note on the subject of the Chicago water diversion complaining about a matter which was then before congress. How ridiculous can you get?

Mr. Green: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this question of diversion was before the courts in Illinois.

Mr. Pearson: I do not think that really improves the minister's position very much. It is also before the courts. Now it is before congress.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce who is referred to in the press as the sartorial star of the meeting was asked to make a statement on January 4 at the opening of the conference. He was asked whether he had anything to say about this meeting which might have been of such vital importance to both countries. Well, the minister is reported as replying jauntily: "We are theoretically against sin".

An hon. Member: Not in practice?

Mr. Pearson: I would advise the minister in his own interest to leave that word "theoretically" out in future.

Mr. Hees: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. If I made that statement, it had no connection with the impending meeting with the United States ministers.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just another misreport.

Mr. Pearson: That statement exempts the minister from one accusation but it certainly exposes him to another one. When he is confronted by the press gallery as he enters an important meeting of this kind between ministers of the United States and ministers of Canada, and he is asked whether he has any statement to make about the meeting, and replies, "We are theoretically against sin", that statement exempts him from any conscious effort to do any damage but it does not pay much of a tribute to his realization of the importance and impressiveness of the meeting in question.

Mr. Hees: Again, Mr. Speaker, I say that if I made that remark—and I do not remember making it—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: —it was not made in any connection with the impending meeting with the United States ministers.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Just on the same day.

Mr. Pearson: I accept the minister's explanation without question, Mr. Speaker. However, his statement "We are theoretically against sin" might well have been applied to the communique which came from the meeting, for that is about all it contained. Therefore I say that in the course of this debate we should have from the government some statement with regard to this matter which is of such vital importance.

Perhaps I may be permitted to put on the record what we in this party said immediately with regard to the President's state of the union message. The proposal was made on January 11, 1962. We said this, and the statement was issued in my name:

> President Kennedy's proposal for expanding trade is a farsighted program. It would have the active support and encouragement of a Liberal government in Canada. I believe that Canadians should be among the first to welcome such a policy, because of the great benefits that will flow from it.
> The President is asking congress for authority to negotiate with the European common market to lower trade barriers through mutual concessions. We cannot tell how quickly the President's administration will be able to move on these lines. But I am sure that Canada should be encouraging the movement. Indeed, a Liberal government would have taken the initiative earlier. We would share fully in negotiations for expanding the trade with Europe of both the United States and Canada. We would also be interested in discussing U.S. proposals that would include the reduction of U.S. tariffs on Canadian products, which are an important barrier to our trade.
> Above all, however, the United States proposal recognizes the need for maximum economic cooperation among the countries of the democratic world, in the face of the threat of communist expansion and aggression. Canada should be pressing forward, not holding back in these realistically farsighted efforts.

I now wish to say something about the economic situation in our own country, the domestic economic situation. The conclusion which the speech from the throne comes to with regard to that situation, the evidences of which are all around us, shows the unawareness of the government as to what has happened and what is going on.

There are more men at work, there is more trade and there is more production, they say, and the government seems to be very much satisfied with its efforts to cure the recession which for so long it refused to recognize.

Mr. Hees: Nonsense.

Mr. Pearson: Of course there are more men at work. We have more men and women coming into the labour force every year, but if we cannot get more people at work from year to year, what chance have we? Of course our trade is expanding. If it were not expanding, where would we be? However, it is expanding less than formerly, relatively speaking. Of course there is more production but the percentage of increase in production is not such as to give satisfaction to any member of the Canadian government. I shall have something to say about that matter.

In its turn the government complains that the situation is largely the fault of the press —and not only of the press but of members of the opposition—because it does not paint the true picture of the government's herculean and triumphant efforts in the field of economics. Here is what the Prime Minister said in Toronto, and these are words which should not be forgotten. On January 13 as reported in the Globe and Mail and indeed in other papers, we find the following:

> The Prime Minister said the efforts of the government to improve Canada's economic position have been questioned by a servile press.

The Minister of Public Works, who is not in the house at the moment—

An hon. Member: Here he comes.

Mr. Benidickson: He is just coming in again.

Mr. Walker: There is a limit to what I can take; but go ahead.

Mr. Pearson: The minister is rather thin-skinned except when he is dealing it out to others. The Minister of Public Works did not use the word "servile". However, he referred to the bias of the press—the government seems to be peculiarly worried about the bias of the press these days—and says that the bias of the press was due to the fact that it was too Liberal; that the bad reception in the country of the efforts of the minister was due largely also to the fact that the ministers were modest and inarticulate and shrank from proclaiming the achievements of the government. On December 4, in Nova Scotia, the minister said to his colleagues that they should get out and talk; sell their achievements to the Canadian people. Here is what he said as reported in the press:

> The Liberals were in power 22 years and it seems that a strong Liberal bias has been built up in most of the press and the broadcasting stations...
> Perhaps we Conservatives and cabinet ministers in particular have not talked enough about the successes we have had!

If they talked only about their successes, Mr. Speaker, they would certainly not have much to talk about. Then he went on to say this:

> Certainly it is our duty to do so from now on.

The minister's sense of timing was not as exact or as fortunate as it sometimes is because almost at the same time as he made this statement there appeared in the press another item to the effect that the ministers —and this was said with some satisfaction— have made 300 speeches in the three autumn months. Yet it is said they are not talking enough. They made 300 speeches in three months, and of course they were practically all political speeches. Yet it is said they are not talking enough, that it is a matter of propaganda, they cannot get the message across. Moreover, in the preparation and placement of these 300 speeches, the ministers are assisted by the largest number of personal executive and publicity assistants on the public payroll in our history. The ministers must have read the information in the parliamentary return which was made last session. This showed that on June 1, 1957 there were 39 people in this category of executive assistants, publicity assistants and personal assistants and that on May 1, 1960 there were 73. There have been some notable additions since then.

An hon. Member: No horses.

Mr. Pearson: Horses would have been cheaper than some of these people. In view of the nature of their duties, perhaps horses might have been as useful to the country. Indeed, notwithstanding the Minister of Public Works, so sensitive is this administration to the necessity of publicity and propaganda, to putting campaigning ahead of governmental administration, that one minister returned from a trade mission to Europe —he cut it short—for the purpose of a political mission at home. I should not like to say that without confirming it by the minister's own statement. The Minister of Agriculture, on November 15, as reported in the Winnipeg Free Press and other papers, said this. The minister has not denied this statement. He will accept it.

Mr. Fulton: Which other papers?

Mr. Pearson: The article reads:

> Agriculture minister Hamilton, at the request of Prime Minister Diefenbaker, cut short his recent visit abroad and cancelled his proposed selling trip to the iron curtain countries so that he could go out on the hustings.

Mr. Fulton: Which other papers?

Mr. Pearson: The article went on to say:

> But he cancelled that trip and hurriedly returned home arriving Monday in Ottawa. Tuesday he held a press conference. Asked why he did not go to the iron curtain countries as scheduled, he replied:—

This is a quotation from the minister at the press conference.

> "When the Prime Minister came back from Japan and before I left for Rome we had a talk.

He said there were other things that were more important and asked me to cut my trip to a week so that I could get out across the country."

The minister's experience as he gets out across the country is not particularly satisfying to him because he particularly, but other ministers as well, has complained, that the press was not giving sufficient publicity to the things he and his department were trying to do. On November 30 in Saskatoon he said this, and this is a rather interesting observation from a minister:

I don't think I'll ever believe implicitly in the truth of a news story again.

Then, Mr. Speaker, he gave an illustration to justify his disillusionment, one that was 100 per cent accurate. He said that this story had not been reported, but it had been fully reported by the Canadian Press news agency. However, undaunted at this rebuff the minister returned to the press charge in Victoria on December 2 and made this immortal statement:

There's a new type of newspaper man coming up...
who has no moral code and sense of objectivity.

The whole story of the relations of this government with the press is one of advances spurned and unrequited love. The main culprits, of course, are, however, not the press. The main culprits are the opposition. There would be no anxiety, there would be no criticism, there would be no misunderstanding at home or abroad over the Canadian government's efforts if it were not for the predictions of gloom and doom by the opposition which, as I have said before in the house, is a very flattering, if totally false, assessment of the influence and power of our words.

To show how false it is, perhaps I should put on record what I said on March 9, 1961 in this house with regard to the economic situation to be faced at that time. This surely is, at least in some respects, an answer to all these allegations and charges of doom and gloom. I said then, as found on page 2820 of Hansard:

When I talk about them—

I was talking about our problems.

—when I use the word "seriousness", I do not want anyone to think that this country will not eventually face up to and overcome those problems and once again remove that seriousness through expansion and growth. We have met very difficult and dangerous economic and employment problems before in this country and have overcome them, and we will overcome this one. But we will not do that in the way it should be done and in the time it should be done without strong, effective leadership and sound and strong policies.

Then, when we were having our debate on the budget last June in this house—and this is evidence of the hollow falsity of these charges of doom and gloom—we were talking about the gross national product and I said to the minister that I thought he was being too gloomy and too pessimistic in his predictions. I was wrong; he was not being too gloomy or too pessimistic. He was not being pessimistic enough, according to the returns that are coming in.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That must make you happy now.

Mr. Pearson: I said then that I believed that the gross national product in current dollars would be higher than that estimated by the minister. Then, Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of the year I was asked to make a statement, as leaders of parties are often asked to do, by the Edmonton Journal on the prospects for 1962. I had this to say, and this summarizes our view on the position in which we in this country find ourselves, at least economically. I said:

We Canadians can start 1962 in a spirit of hopefulness. In saying this, I am assuming that the international situation will not further deteriorate, that the awesome threat of nuclear destruction will be lessened rather than intensified. If that is not so, no one can look optimistically to the future.

Then I went on to say:

...the general climate of the world economy is good. In these circumstances, we are the masters of our own fate. There is nothing to prevent us having a good year. It depends on ourselves, on our running our national affairs and our private affairs wisely, creatively, with vigour and decision. If we do not make good progress, it will be because we waste our opportunities, not because external circumstances deny opportunities to us.

Then I added these words:

Since last spring—

The spring of 1961.

—we have experienced a normal economic upswing from the previous recession. Unfortunately, this improvement has so far been modest and slow. Fortunately, we can expect the business recovery to gain more strength this spring and summer. Competent economic forecasts suggest that our national production in 1962 may well be between four and six per cent higher than it was last year. That is a welcome improvement in our prospects. But it is still regrettably little. After a recession, we ought to do much better.

And, Mr. Speaker, we should have done much better than we have done in the last four and a half years. The government is now boasting because there is this kind of recovery. Production, they say, is bigger than ever. Employment is higher.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Leader of the Opposition a question because I am not sure I caught him correctly. Did he use the words, "after a recession we should have done much better" and, if so, is he admitting that the recession is over?

Mr. Pearson: No, I did not use any words that would justify that interpretation. I said that we should have done much better during the last four and a half years.

Mr. Fulton: I understood the hon. member to say that after a recession we should have done much better.

Mr. Pearson: If there is any doubt in the hon. gentleman's mind, I am glad he has given me the opportunity to remove it because the people of this country know when the recession began. It began in the summer of 1957.

Mr. Fulton: You said "after a recession".

Mr. Pearson: Because there is this doubt in the hon. gentleman's mind, I will take advantage of the opportunity to put some figures on the record in a few moments that will remove that doubt.

Mr. Fulton: What did you mean by "after a recession"?

Mr. Pearson: Was the recovery we have made in 1961 a miracle? What does the government expect? Are they still living in the dark ages, in the centuries when things stayed much the same? Do they not know that in Canada our population increases every year and that therefore our gross national product must go up every year to get ahead at all? Do they not know that Canadians use science and technology, that our corporations invest in new equipment and that technological progress every year enables us to produce more?

Of course our production goes up. The question is, how much? In four and a half years of Tory government it has gone up only by 1½ per cent a year on the average. Let the Minister of Finance deny that figure if he can. Of course, in some years production increases have not been as bad as in other years. Nineteen fifty nine was the best year. Production went up in that year by all of 3 per cent. The minister told us then that things were going to be fine. He was even tempted to say that he would balance his budget. But in 1960 things got worse again and, of course, Mr. Speaker, they are better now. However, each time in these cyclical fluctuations, each time this has happened, we have gone down farther than the time before and our recovery has been less. That is the long range danger to our economy in the kind of situation in which we find ourselves. Each time we do have this kind of recession we are saved from the worst consequences by the kind of social security and transfer payments that were instituted in this country under Liberal governments.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the Leader of the Opposition a question? Is he referring to the $6 increase in the old age pension made by him and the other "six-buck boys"?

Some hon. Members: Forty six dollars.

Mr. Pearson: That is not a very bright observation by the minister. The minister is getting a little tired and his interventions are not now as sparkling as those to which we are accustomed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Would you care to answer?

Mr. Pearson: The question is, what about this time next year? If we get the same kind of Tory administration we have had for nearly five years, then we will be slowing down again, according to the economic forecasts of the experts, and without having come anywhere near solving our basic problems. The most basic problem of all is chronic unemployment. We would be back again to the only 2 per cent increase in production which we had in 1960. What would that mean? It would mean again growing unemployment; our economy working far below its capacity; missed opportunities for the people of Canada. It would mean the loss of millions of dollars worth of production which we could have had if only there had been a government capable of asking, capable of progressive, sensible, farsighted economic policies.

An hon. Member: You have got it.

Mr. Pearson: Let us see what has happened to the country in the last four and a half years, if we have it. Do these members on the front benches not know, Mr. Speaker, that throughout the post-war years with a Liberal government in office, production in this country increased at an average rate of 4.6 per cent per year? This was the average that we achieved over the whole period from the beginning of 1946 to the middle of 1957. If you take away those difficult years of reconstruction immediately after the war, the average is much higher, but to be fair I have included those years. The best this government could do in any year has been 3 per cent, which is much less than our average, and over the long period of four and a half years their average is only 1½ per cent. It is about one third of our average increase during a Liberal administration.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): May I ask the Leader of the Opposition a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Pearson: Yes.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Would the Leader of the Opposition give us the figures for the increase in foreign investments in Canada, the taking over of our capital resources in the same period?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This will keep me a little longer, but if the hon. gentleman will look at the figures he will see that our position here has deteriorated also in this regard.

What has been the cost of the inability of the government to put into effect good policies which would have made for growth during this period? This is why Canadians today are without hundreds of thousands of jobs that they ought to have, that they have a right to have and that they would have if the rate of economic progress under a Liberal administration had continued. This is why the government goes more and more into debt, and why it cannot now afford to do a lot of things the country needs.

Now, they boast that 1962 looks like a better year. Is the kind of improvement we have had this year good enough for the government? It is not good enough for the Canadian people. The Prime Minister talks about faith in Canada. I say that to be satisfied with the probability that things are going to be a bit better is not faith in Canada. It is an insult to Canada. So is complacency about unemployment and satisfaction with one of the lowest rates of economic growth in the world. The Prime Minister and his colleagues boast about recovery when our production per person in 1961 is actually less than it was five years ago. He and his colleagues think a government with a record of that kind is good enough for this country. We Liberals have higher standards, more faith, more confidence in Canada. We know, because it has been proven before this government came into office, that Canada can achieve great things and that our economy can be the envy of the world. It was and can be again, and with a different government it will be.

Nevertheless, the throne speech makes the smug, complacent claim that, thanks to the government, our economy is recovering. Well, I am glad they said that. It clears the air. The government is taking credit for the recovery we have had. This recovery has not been the kind, I should think, that would make any government proud, but let them take all the comfort from it they can. Let them remember this, if they claim responsibility for the economy at one moment, they must assume responsibility for it at other moments. If they want the people of Canada to think that because unemployment is not quite as bad as it was last year, they are responsible, then whom do we blame for how bad it was before that and still is? The record, Mr. Speaker, is now absolutely clear. The government thinks that the state of our economy is something about which the government should boast. By its own admission, it is responsible, responsible not only for its talk but for the facts, the facts the Canadian people know. The economic slow-down, the decline in our production per person, the chronic unemployment, the lost production, the missing jobs, are all things about which the people know and are all the failures of these wasted years of Tory government. They are the cost of not growing.

No calculation is possible in terms of frustration, loss of human dignity, lessening of incentive and ambition on the part of those who have been unable through work to participate in what growth we have had. However, we may make a calculation in terms of financial loss. We find it in the figure of $900 million depletion in the unemployment insurance fund; we find it in the figure of $250 million spent as the federal share of unemployment assistance; we find it in the figure of $5 billion of goods and services lost in 1961 because of joblessness, more than $100 million a week.

May I continue the record of hard economic facts? I have been asked to put these facts on the record, and I am glad to do so. Expenditures go up and up. In the first eight months of 1961 alone, they are up 8.9 per cent. The Minister of Finance estimated last June they would be up 7 per cent. Revenues are up only 1.9 per cent, and the minister's estimate was 2.6 per cent.

Another hard fact is that while under Liberal government from 1946 to 1957 the national debt was reduced $2.4 million, under 4½ years of Tory government the national debt has increased by nearly $2 billion. Do not believe Tory spokesmen who tell you over the years that the national debt has decreased per capita, because it has not. In 1957, it was $664 per person, and in March 1961 it was $688 per person. I commend these figures to the Prime Minister.

Another hard fact is that taxes have increased along with deficits. It is a Tory fairy tale to say that they have not. Those who try to deceive us on this score must have guilty consciences. The Prime Minister, of course, promised to reduce them, and we remember that promise. The fact is that since assuming office the government has increased taxes by more than $150 million each year. During the last financial year, in spite of a quarter of a million increase in our population and a huge deficit, the per capita tax rose $12 to $190. The Prime Minister said he would reduce taxes by $120 per family, but he has increased them by $36.

Then there is the depressing and gloomy succession of deficits, not one of which was predicted by the minister in the terms that actually happened, including this year's deficit—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Nor in the terms that you and your friends predicted.

Mr. Pearson: —which we are told is between $600 million and $700 million; and this at a time which he has characterized as one of expansion and recovery. If we allow $700 million for his deficit this year that is the average between his low and his high. This is the record. These are the facts. This is the cost. I give the budget deficits as follows, 1958, $38.5 million; 1959, $609.5 million; 1960, $413 million and 1961, $300 million; 1962, $700 million; 1963, (?). Then there is the depletion of the unemployment insurance fund, $900 million, depletion of the special defence fund $165 million, giving the total bill, the cost of "following John", as $3,126 million.

Mr. Benidickson: It wasn't worth it.

Mr. Pearson: Let it be remembered that there were deficits without development, debts without growth.

Perhaps the Minister of Finance will recall his own words in June, 1958 when he said:

> These huge deficits—

This was in 1958 after a period of Liberal surpluses.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And deficits.

Mr. Pearson: I continue:

> These huge deficits ... carry serious implications ... for the future health of our country.

The facts are clear, Mr. Speaker, based on the experience of recent years. They provoke thought and they require understanding as a basis for sound policy and action in order to make the country progress. But there is no awareness on the part of the government of the serious, complicated and persistent nature of our economic problems which these facts reflect. The Prime Minister and his colleagues are too busy patting themselves on the back while they drag their feet, which is a very difficult gymnastic feat.

The results of these wasted years are now shown in the government's inability even to understand the problems confronting them, which is an essential foundation for doing something about them. The reputation of Canada and the government's reputation to look after its own affairs have gone down. People travelling abroad these days are a little depressed having other people ask them what has happened to Canada. The answer is that there is nothing wrong with Canada that a change of government won't correct. If the ministers are not aware of this situation, if they are not aware of these questions, then they are living in a fool's paradise induced by reading and believing their own propaganda.

Mr. Walker: You should go beyond Mexico.

Mr. Pearson: Most observers abroad who ask these questions are not influenced in their judgment by party or other subjective considerations. They are not members of a servile press. They are not influenced by opposition speeches or even government fairy tales.

Remembering that people on similar missions, when they come to Canada, spend far more time with ministers of the government than they do with members of the opposition, why, unless he was sincere in his analysis of the situation after a trip to Canada, should the editor of the London Financial Times write in May of 1961:

> Think back to the days when I was not alone in believing Canada to be the best-governed country in the world; when she was reaping unexpected dividends from the bleak and prospectless thirties.

Then, comparing conditions between the first and second decades that followed world war II, he speaks of:

> —a Canada which was confident and sure of herself and her destiny—as against:

> —a Canada which economically is confused and almost apologetic; a Canada which led the world in growth and which attracted capital from the four corners of the globe—and is now:

> —a Canada which is ranked behind even laggard economies—

Why should the editor of an English financial journal write like this?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Because he does not know the situation in Canada.

Mr. Nowlan: How much was he paid for it?

Mr. Pearson: Are you going to blame that on a servile press? Are you going to blame the opposition?

An hon. Member: He does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Pearson: Why should the responsible London Times feel on October 31 that it was necessary to give some reasons for the bad press Canada has had, and for the disillusionment about our country? The Times gave its own reasons, one of which was repeated and emphasized in its annual financial revue when it referred to the Coyne affairs as an "unprecedented and unseemly family squabble—a blow to the Canadian image".

Mr. Jones: They had the same thing in Britain in 1917.

Mr. Pearson: No wonder the Edmonton Journal, a paper friendly to the government, found it necessary to write on January 10, 1962:

> The consensus from other sources is that Canada's influence in international affairs is at a low ebb now.

Mr. Green: You are smearing Canada now.

Mr. Pearson: Why did the government not do something about the situation so that friendly editors would not write such criticism?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Why should the editor of the Calgary Herald, which I understand is a paper constantly friendly to the government write on October 28, 1961 as follows:

> The present government has seriously mismanaged our monetary and economic affairs, and has also done harm to our country's reputation which it will take years to repair.

I find it painful to say these things, if only for the reason that I have so many good friends within the Conservative party, but it seems to me that somebody had better start saying them.

If this government had done as much for Canada as they claim, why should the former chief of the general staff, now the president of the Toronto stock exchange, say to the Empire club in Toronto on January 11, 1962, after three months in Europe:

> The British were sharply critical of Canada's opposition to the U.K.'s proposed entry into the tariff-cutting common market...
> The open dispute between former Bank of Canada governor James Coyne and finance minister Donald Fleming caused Europeans to feel Canadians must be an immature and juvenile people.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we are not immature, but the government is.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not think he was giving his own opinion.

Mr. Pearson: As a people we are not immature and it is time to remove that impression by mature and efficient administration of our affairs. Let us correct these false impressions which make the members of the government so angry when they are repeated.

An hon. Member: You are the only one who is angry.

Mr. Pearson: That correction will not be made by this government. Nearly five years of inept and confused administration, with more emphasis on travel and talk than on thought and action, have shown that there is little hope for this.

As the London Economist put it on November 25, in an edition which referred to the "years of disillusionment since 1957":

> His—

They were referring to the Minister of Finance:

> —colleagues, even his Prime Minister, are so busy finding ingenious ways to conceal reality that even the Canadian public is utterly confused.

I do not know whether or not the Canadian public is confused, but the Canadian public is certainly disenchanted and disillusioned with the present government.

Look at the record of the past year: the Coyne affair; the policy regarding the United Kingdom and the European common market; nuclear confusion and indecision; continued heavy unemployment; the Columbia river treaty mess; the Quebec hospital scandals; the assault on the Senate.

We are told that everything is fine now. We are told that the government has carried out 50 of its 62 promises.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Three quarters of the egg is good.

Mr. Nowlan: Who is your speech writer?

Mr. Pearson: With regard to these promises, the numbers game is of course an amusing diversion. I should like to inform my friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) that we are all trying to help him—

An hon. Member: He needs it.

Mr. Pearson: —and there was another promise made last Saturday afternoon, to the effect that the national press club might be called "royal". However, these interesting and amusing diversions—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Do you disapprove of that?

Mr. Pearson: I do not think this is a matter of such great importance that it is necessary for me at this time to express my view one way or the other. This numbers game is an amusing diversion, but the promises that really matter and which the Canadian public will not forget are these basic, fundamental promises. First, to give good, steady and efficient administration of the nation's business; second, to ensure that no Canadian would suffer from unemployment; third, to put and keep our economic and financial affairs in good order; fourth, to reduce taxes and interest rates; fifth, to reduce government spending; sixth, to eliminate waste and extravagance in government; seventh, to balance the budget; eighth, to increase Canada's prestige abroad. Not one of these promises has been carried out.

Mr. Benidickson: That is the record.

Mr. Pearson: Presumably they are included in the 12. However, we on this side of the house do not lose any of our faith and confidence in our own country and people because of the ineptness and confusion of the government of the day. We Liberals have a deep and abiding faith in our country, confidence in its destiny and hope for its future in a world at peace.

We Canadians have been facing grave problems in recent years and we will continue to do so. We criticize the government for not even being aware of any of these problems. If it is not aware of them, how can it effectively deal with them?

There are deep-seated problems. Only a fool or a blind partisan would deny this and try to give the impression that if it were not for speeches of the opposition or a few press articles, everything would be fine in this country and our people would really appreciate what a good government is doing for them.

Every fair-minded Canadian must admit that there has been economic slowdown; that there has been massive unemployment, tight money, higher prices, huge deficits. I know that these problems are complicated and deep-seated. I know that in some cases they are unique and unprecedented and that there is no single or easy solution for them.

But I also know that hard, fresh thinking is required if we are going to find that solution. What is required is action by government based on wise and planned policies, not on political illusions or outmoded ideas. Above all the people must be given a full and frank assessment of our problems, of our position at home and in the world, and they must be told what is expected of them.

With a sound and steady government—which we do not have now—with farsighted plans and policies, with leadership which puts national interest above party advantage, Canadians can solve their problems today as they have solved them in the past. Challenge, sacrifice and hard effort are all part of the Canadian tradition. Give them a chance and Canadians will, as always, be worthy of that tradition. Canadians will be given a better chance, Mr. Speaker, after the next election. May it come soon.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), that the following be added to the address:

> We respectfully affirm that Your Excellency's advisers, because of their continuing failure to bring forward policies to deal with the real problems confronting this country, do not deserve the confidence of the House of Commons.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, between now and six o'clock I have but a very short time to commence my reply to the lengthy speech we have listened to, in which distortion and confusion have played so large a part. I intend to be as gracious as I can, but having listened to the hon. gentleman this afternoon I can only say that those in the Liberal party who have been saying that the greatest weapon we have is the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) have not been speaking without authority.

I have followed the hon. gentleman in the press as he has made his various speeches throughout the country. I recognize some of the words he used today—somewhat diluted in the House of Commons; somewhat more restrained than they have been in the country—and I intend during the time at my disposal to deal with some of those allegations, in particular with the matters he has spoken of this afternoon.

However, I cannot understand the leader of a great party smearing his country as he has done. We can disagree as to economic conditions but when it comes to the type of language used by the hon. gentleman this afternoon, speaking of those great days of the past I cannot understand it. May I quote for his edification—because after all, I sent out for this while he was speaking—words written by one who is recognized as a devotee of the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Michael Barkway. He does not like us, but this is what he has to say in the Waterloo Review in the summer of 1960 about those of whom the hon. gentleman has spoken so highly—the members of the government of which he was a member. Mr. Barkway says this:

> I am one observer who lived through the period in Ottawa and find the memory both poignant and painful.

He was speaking of the period from October 1955 to June 1957. The article continues:

> There were times in those 20 months which were shameful. They were always foreboding; a Canadian Gotterdamerung, unrealized or misunderstood by its principal actors ... By October, 1955, the cabinet was unhappy and rudderless.

You can get some great words from this article I suggest to the Leader of the Opposition. Let me continue:

> Its self-preoccupation largely detached it from public sentiment. It was giving first priority to the difficult task of hanging together. In June 1957 at the end of the period covered by Dr. Eayrs' book, it accomplished the task in a manner which few of its ministers had thought conceivable; nine of them mounted a common gallows.

The writer then goes on to speak about those wonderful days when Canada had such an international reputation. Let me read this passage:

It would be valuable above all to have a complete picture of the way Canadian relations with the United States were handled. Dr. Eayrs most properly devotes the longest chapter of his book to this subject. It is sandwiched between an account of the travails of the truce commissions in Indo-China and a spine-tingling tale of Mr. Paul Martin's efforts at the U.N. assembly of 1955 to secure the admission of new members (which loses nothing of excitement by drawing heavily on Mr. Martin's own version of it).

That is what hon. gentlemen opposite want us to go back to. Let me read what Mr. Barkway has to say a little further on:

Examples of the confusion and mismanagement in this most vital area of foreign policy could fill a book. In this small compass, and with necessarily incomplete knowledge, it may be best to indicate some of the unpublished background to just three of the problems Dr. Eayrs deals with.

Mention was made by hon. members of the opposition a few months ago of the Columbia river. What did Mr. Barkway have to say about that?

The most graphic are, perhaps, the Columbia river, continental defence, and economic affairs. On major economic questions the Department of External Affairs could do little between 1955 and 1957 except to tag along after Mr. Howe.

What a picture of those latter days is revealed here. Reading on, we find this:

On defence questions it could occasionally mitigate the effects of the armed services' bargains with Washington, but more often had to salvage such traces of decency as a man may gather to himself after losing his shirt and pants in a poker game.

I am reading from one of the pundits of parliament.

In the early Columbia river negotiations it obstructed and very nearly ruined the defence of Canadian interests which General McNaughton maintained almost single-handed.

Then the article goes on to say this in reference to another question:

The worst of it, which has never before been told, is that the draft note which Mr. Pearson and Mr. St. Laurent both approved did not merely question the adequacy of the 1909 treaty: it actually said that it was not adequate to deal with the Columbia case. There can seldom have been a more timorous or unnecessary surrender.

Those were the days to which hon. members opposite wish us to return, the days when Canada's image, as a result of the attitude taken by the opposition in joining with the government in maintaining that image, was known all over the world. There was not any of this smear operation.

If the opposition want any more read I can read a number of further pages on the subject.

Mr. Pickersgill: Go on.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think I have read enough to indicate a complete answer. Those who would like to read more will find a copy of the magazine, I understand, in the library.

I will have a word to say regarding the mover and seconder of the address—and I shall enlarge on that—but there is one matter to which I wish to refer particularly at this time. It was not dealt with by the hon. member for Algoma East and understandably so. In accordance with our Canadianization policy, one of the things we did shortly after we took office was to set up a royal commission known as the O'Leary commission. Speaking of royal commissions, there was a reference by the Leader of the Opposition to the number of royal commissions we have set up. I have not the exact figure in mind but my recollection is that we have set up some 13 and that the Liberal party in the same period of time set up 12.

Royal commissions are set up for the purpose of securing information and making recommendations which, by reason of the complexity of events, would be impossible to secure otherwise. We set up this royal commission, and in the few moments at my disposal I intend to place before the house and the country the recommendations we intend to implement. But do not let the Leader of the Opposition run away with the idea that I shall not be back at eight o'clock in order to deal with some further matters.

On June 15, 1961, I tabled in the house the report of the royal commission on publications. Since then there has been time for a mature and searching appraisal by the government, and by the public, of the conclusions and recommendations of the commission and the information and argument on which they are based.

The commission, in vigorous and persuasive language, calls our attention to the unique role that Canadian magazines play, or ought to play, in our national life. The report states:

So far as the printed word is concerned, it is largely left to our periodical press, to our magazines big and little, to make a conscious appeal to the nation; to try to interpret Canada to all Canadians, to bring a sense of oneness to our scattered communities. It is but necessary to note the veritable deluge of United States publications submerging Canadian print on our newsstands to understand the magnitude and, in the past, the impossibility, of their task.

So pervasive, indeed, is this penetration, so obviously fraught with social and economic consequences, no examination of any aspect of Canadian communications can fail to take it into account. Here, inescapably, is the stuff of national concern.

The commission then proceeds to examine the case made by publishers of Canadian magazines that they are suffering from "inequitable competition" in a variety of forms. These forms are too numerous to discuss in any detail today.

Mr. Hellyer: Will the Prime Minister identify the document from which he is reading?

Mr. Diefenbaker: They include the various advantages of foreign publishers: their ability to conduct circulation campaigns in Canada as a by-product of their domestic campaigns, their control of Canadian newsstand agencies and their special postal arrangements. There has been an accelerating tendency for Canadian advertisers to place their business with foreign rather than Canadian magazines as a means of covering the Canadian market. Foreign publishers have succeeded in extending and intensifying this practice through the production of so-called Canadian editions, special editions, Canadian sections, split runs, and similar devices. While the commission does not accept all of the arguments of the Canadian publishers, it strongly upholds the general claim that present conditions of competition are unfair to Canadian magazines.

The commission concludes that a genuinely Canadian periodical press can exist only by assuring for Canadian publications, under equitable conditions, an adequate share of domestic advertising. They define a Canadian periodical as follows:

> A Canadian periodical is one published in Canada, owned either by Canadian citizens or, if a corporation, by a company incorporated under the laws of Canada or of one of its provinces, and which is controlled and directed by Canadian citizens and is not a licensee of or otherwise substantially the same as a periodical owned or controlled outside Canada.
> A Canadian periodical is (also) one edited in Canada by a staff normally resident in Canada, its typesetting (in whatever language) and its entire mechanical production must be in Canada and its publication must be from a place or places within Canada.

In applying this conclusion, the commission makes two main recommendations:

(1) That periodicals containing advertising that is primarily directed to the Canadian market be no longer permitted to enter Canada from abroad.

(2) That the deduction from income by a taxpayer of expenditures incurred for advertising directed to the Canadian market in a foreign periodical wherever printed be disallowed.

It is the intention of the government to implement the first of these recommendations; that is to say, the government proposes, in due course, to prevent the importation of periodicals containing advertising that is primarily directed to the Canadian market. This will not in any way interfere with the continued importation into Canada of the many magazines that are printed and published abroad and that carry advertising that is primarily directed to their own home markets. It will, however, prevent publishers of magazines in other countries from preparing, as a by-product, and sending into Canada, adaptations of their magazines in which they carry advertising directed to the Canadian market.

As for the second major recommendation of the report, it is the intention of the government to implement it but with an important modification. If this recommendation were implemented without a change the result would be not merely to prevent the future establishment in Canada of foreign-owned, foreign-edited periodicals, but to put an extremely heavy, they claim, burden on those which have already been established here. The latter, in that they import most, if not all, of their reading matter as a by-product of their parent magazines abroad, have an unfair competitive advantage over their Canadian competitors; and this advantage must be offset. On the other hand, they have established themselves in this country in good faith, they employ Canadian labour, and they attempt to supply Canadian readers with a specially adapted product.

Accordingly, in applying the recommendation that advertising placed in non-Canadian magazines be no longer deductible as an ordinary business expense for tax purposes, the government will introduce an important, although partial, exception. As a general rule, the recommendation will be applied, and this tax change is expected to make it unprofitable to initiate the publication of any new by-product magazines in this country. However, there will be an amelioration in the case of non-Canadian magazines that are already, as of today, published and printed in Canada, and that are or will shortly be carrying on editing operations in this country. When Canadian advertisers place advertisements in these latter magazines, their advertising outlays will continue to be deductible expenditures to the extent of 50 per cent. In other words, half the burden proposed by the royal commission will be removed from those non-Canadian periodicals that have established their operations within this country.

Both these recommendations, that relating to imports of Canadian-directed advertising and that relating to advertising in non-Canadian magazines, are of a fiscal nature. I make this announcement now so that adequate time, in all fairness, will be given for all existing plans and contracts that are normal and reasonable to be completed.

Nevertheless, the announcement I am making at this time will give immediate encouragement to Canadian magazines. All advertisers interested in reaching the Canadian market through the periodical press will, from today, be laying their plans in ways that will give greater and more assured support to the truly Canadian publications.

The government has considered the relationship between the recommendations of the royal commission and our commercial obligations to other countries under the general agreement on tariffs and trade. The commission establishes very clearly that the issues at stake, both in regard to imported magazines that carry Canadian advertising and in regard to the non-Canadian magazines that print and publish in Canada, are not essentially of a commercial character but go into the very fabric of our culture.

Mr. Hellyer: You are reading your speech.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nevertheless, we are not unmindful of our international obligations and will carry forward the appropriate consultations in regard to the lines of action upon which we have now decided, with any other governments that may be concerned.

In conclusion I wish to emphasize most strongly that our proposals involve, to use the language of the commission, "no interference with editorial comment, no tax on ideas or information, and no actual interference with readership preference". Under these proposals the right of all Canadians to subscribe to, or buy at the newsstands, the magazines of their choice, will be fully maintained.

Mr. Hellyer: Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: I hear an hon. member say "six o'clock". I take it that the Prime Minister has only a paragraph to finish. Does the house accord him leave to finish it?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hees: "Six o'clock" has been called.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the house has given leave to the Prime Minister to finish, if he wishes to do so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I conclude with these words. Thanks to the studies and recommendations of Mr. O'Leary and his colleagues, we shall be putting before this house, in due course, measures that will offset the competitive handicaps under which Canadian periodicals have been labouring, while fully protecting the reading preferences of the public and fully preserving the freedom of the press.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I shall now deal in general terms with the subject matter of the amendment and also with the several matters to which the Leader of the Opposition alluded, leaving to my colleagues in the several departments the responsibility of going into greater detail in answering many of the generalities which characterized the remarks of the hon. gentleman. However, I do follow him in his courteous reference to the mover (Mr. Bourdages) and seconder (Mr. Browne, Vancouver-Kingsway) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. He stated that the course he followed was traditional but none the less a necessary course to be followed in the House of Commons. Indeed, the hon. member for Laval and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, young men in their early forties and members of this house for a number of years, discharged their responsibilities in a manner that deserved and merited the congratulations of all. I can think of nothing more difficult and no position more trying than that of being the mover or seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

The Leader of the Opposition dealt in a generous way with by-elections and the like, not federal by-elections because you will remember there were four not so long ago which the prophets in the opposition said they were going to win. They came back with one of the four they anticipated. In any event, I should like to draw the attention of the house to the attitude of the late Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King as recorded by Boswell. It is interesting to read something of that mythical dissertation which was interrupted recently. I think it would be a great benefit to history if it were permanently interrupted but it is not going to be. This is just an interim break. But it is of interest in reading "The Mackenzie King Record" to see these words recorded by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill):

> On August 9, the government had lost four by-elections and on the way to the Citadel from the station, Churchill told Mackenzie King he hoped "the by-elections are not causing you worry". I said I had expected to lose all.

Then Churchill explains the reason. He said:

> "My experience is that by-elections don't mean anything when you come to place a really large issue before the people." At another time he referred to the by-elections as a fire started on ice, that it blazed up very much at the beginning, but did not necessarily spread ... went out after a while.

Having regard to the experience we have had in by-elections, I can only say that our personal experience in days past was that we won the by-elections but when we came to the general elections we were not so successful.

I was quite interested in the dissertation of the Leader of the Opposition regarding the cabinet, my colleagues surrounding me, and his horror at the fact that he had read some place that there was division amongst us. Well, as I look at my colleagues and down this front bench I do not see any changes since 1957. I can only say that the exaggeration that was given to recent incidents had no basis in fact and that the unity among us is, as always, strong and I know, most effective.

In any event, and I cannot quote from the work of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate because he has not got that far yet, I will be interested in finding out what is said with regard to November, 1944 in the treatise on Mr. Mackenzie King when that particular period is dealt with. I hope that those of us who know the facts as they were will find the truth set out in the volume in question, and I can tell the hon. gentleman that we in this party have never had anything like the manner in which that great Canadian patriot, Ralston, was treated in 1944 at the time he was pushed out of the cabinet.

Mr. Pickersgill: Better tell us about Mr. Stevens too.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, as soon as the hon. gentleman is hurt you hear from him. I intend to make some general references to the speech from the throne now. Without exaggeration, I think that the Leader of the Opposition today put both feet down with boldness and imagination and on both sides of several questions. He was short on facts and long on adjectives. I am not going to follow him in his adjectival self-delusions. However, I will say this. I am going to try this evening to unravel, if I can, some of the knots of absurdity and incongruity. This speech was not one which was equal to the efforts he has made in the past. I was somewhat disappointed in it in some particulars. He was dealing with many of the things he has said over and over again from one end of Canada to the other.

He stayed away from the speech from the throne, except to make a general reference to it. This general reference did not betray the knowledge of British constitutional practice and the difference between that practice and the practice in the United States that I would have expected. After all, he had experience in Washington. He endeavoured to compare the speech from the throne to the state of the union speech delivered by the President of the United States. There is no similarity whatever. He criticized the speech from the throne in that it did not have, and I borrow these words from the hon. gentleman, "bold and imaginative words." I have heard that statement over and over again, and I intend to deal with some of these bold and imaginative stands.

I have before me the Queen's speech given in the United Kingdom on October 31. I find that it is approximately four columns in length. It refers in a very matter of fact manner to some of these questions with which we are dealing here. It starts off by referring to the visits of the Queen; the welcome to the United Kingdom of the president of Indonesia; the support of the government of the United Kingdom for the United Nations; the improvement of relations between east and west, which remains the primary object of the government's policy; discusses negotiations in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization; refers to the Geneva conference on Laos; refers to South Africa and the change in the relationship. Then, concerning the European trade question, it says the government will make every effort to bring those negotiations to a successful conclusion. There is a reference to certain legislation that will be introduced, and then the speech contains an omnibus section at the end to the effect that other measures will be laid before the house in due course.

This is the style that speeches from the throne have followed throughout the years in the parliament of Canada. This is not an exhortation, as is the state of the union address in the United States, to a congress that is removed from the president. This is simply a statement of the bill of fare which is to be brought before parliament.

I am going to make one or two references in general to the speech from the throne, and mention that it deals with the international situation. I do not know what we are expected to do other than put the facts before the House of Commons. Mention is made of the recommendations to work out some of the purposes of confederation and identify more clearly the Canadian nationality. Mention is made of the royal commission on publications and also of the constitutional conference which was held with representatives of the various provinces.

Then there is the question of redistribution, and I noticed the hon. gentleman stayed away from that. He made no reference to the fact that this provision would remove politics from redistribution, and I think it must have been a guilty conscience that caused him to make no reference to this fact. In regard to the economic situation, the steps that have been taken and are being taken answer his repeated question, "what has been done?" As an indication of the fact the hon. gentleman has not read this portion of the speech from the throne, I read this paragraph:

> Comprehensive measures to put into effect my government's economic policies were enacted in preceding sessions of this parliament. The benefits flowing from these policies are now evident in record levels of employment, of production, and of export trade. There has been a substantial improvement since last year in the unemployment situation. As the result of the efforts of my government through its municipal winter works incentive program, notable progress has been made in meeting the recurrent problem of seasonal unemployment.

So far as training is concerned, those who are unemployed and unable otherwise to secure work can take advantage of a program that has been launched in Canada and which today is being imitated in the United States of America. This will ensure young men and women as well as older men and women of an opportunity to obtain the technical knowledge and technical training, without which employment becomes very difficult to obtain.

Then there was mention of the university grants. I am surprised that no reference was made of that. After all, during the election campaign of 1958, the hon. gentleman referred to this matter. He speaks about dollar marks being placed on promises. On the one hand he condemned deficits and on the other hand he went ahead with promises that would multiply the expenditures of this country by hundreds of millions of dollars. In that year he was in favour of a scholarship system financed by the federal government. Oh, it was going to be the most comprehensive system that was ever brought into effect in this country. Where is that scholarship system now? He has been silent about it since he made his speech in Quebec when he altered his entire plan. Mr. Lesage was not at the convention in Ottawa in 1961. He was away for personal reasons, but he is now in Quebec city. At the time of his speech, therefore, and for the first time, the Leader of the Opposition suddenly saw the light and came to the conclusion that it is most necessary to uphold the constitution. Since that time, he has said nothing more about the university courses or training or promises of scholarships.

In addition to that, he has departed from the principles that were enunciated at this meeting in January, 1961 whereby cost sharing programs between the federal government and provincial governments were to be discontinued if his party were to come into power. It is a most interesting thing that there is no reference to these questions that were of such paramount importance in 1958 and also at the convention here in January, 1961. We still believe in the necessity of federal assistance to universities. We still believe that in the world today in the face of the challenges to the free world by the communist world and the fact that Khrushchev has said that by 1986 he will have been able to destroy the free world economically, there is a necessity for assistance to universities.

We intend, as we state, to ask parliament to increase the federal grants to universities. We increased them up to $1.50 per capita since taking office, and we intend, if parliament accedes, to make a further increase of 50 cents per capita, bringing the total to $2, and to make suitable provision in those cases where alternative arrangements are made for supplementary provincial grants in lieu of federal grants. It is interesting that the hon. Leader of the Opposition stayed away from that subject because after all, Mr. Speaker, one must be bold and imaginative. You know the new slogan with which they are littering the country, "the Liberals have the answer." They had the answer. I intend a little later on to return to this, as my hon. friend often says, in order to point out what the answers are, who has the answers, and who among them agree on the answers.

I am surprised the hon. gentleman could not have made some reference to the other place. What he did say was just a passing mention but, Mr. Speaker, I remember the day when Mr. King went forth in shining armour to reform the Senate and he got resignations signed in anticipation by the appointees. There was a great election campaign on that subject but we never heard anything more about it. You know what the reform slogan was: live Grits for dead Tories.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is our slogan for the next election.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We have not seen a live Grit since.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is our slogan.

Mr. Grafftey: Where are you going to get the live ones?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If they do not show more life than they have for the last four years we know exactly what the consequences will be. I also noticed, Mr. Speaker, that when he was talking about an election the hon. gentleman's voice was softened and became almost inaudible. We heard this talk in 1958 and the challenges which were thrown then. Yet when we gave them an election what did they say? They cried "We don't want it". You remember the famous amendment of 1958—"Give us back our jobs." It is wonderful how history repeats itself. Today they come out with an innocuous amendment that is general enough to suit even the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. This time there are no particulars. It is simply a generalized statement without any material basis to support it within the amendment.

So far as the Senate is concerned there are many possible suggestions as to what might be done. There is the suggestion of compulsory retirement with an age limit. There is also the suggestion that the Senate might be deprived of significant legislative jurisdiction, whatever the vestigial remains might be, with regard to money bills. There are many other possible suggestions. There is also the question of tenure. All these matters will receive consideration when the subject comes before the house, and when we discuss seriously a matter that has been of a general and widespread interest down through the years.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the Prime Minister permit a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: The answer is no.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon gentleman will remember how often that answer was given when he sat over here. That is the answer we always got.

Mr. Pickersgill: So long as we know the answer is no.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I might recall, Mr. Speaker, that when I used to live on a farm in western Canada we had bears around and I remember an old farmer saying to me: "When you are out hunting bears don't allow yourself to follow rabbit tracks." I know that this will be one of the matters which will be discussed in recognition of the need for making parliament stronger, more efficient and more effective.

Now, sir, I wish to deal with the subjects in the order in which they were mentioned by the hon. gentleman. He spoke of foreign affairs and dealt with that matter at some length. I was quite interested in the views that he expressed because, after all, down through the years we have endeavoured to bring about a high degree of unity within our country on our international affairs and relations. Over and over again, when we were on that side of the house, we referred to the hon. Leader of the Opposition in eulogistic terms for the stands he took on behalf of Canada.

Mr. Pearson: Especially over Suez.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It must be a guilty conscience. He could not keep silent. I was speaking generally, and the hon. gentleman has referred to one example. Even he could not be totally perfect. As I mentioned a moment ago we endeavored to bring about a high degree of unity and I could not understand this afternoon why he, obviously not in a spontaneous remark made on the spur of the moment but as the result of intensive preparation, went out of his way to make personal and disparaging references to this country internationally and the manner in which, inferentially if not directly, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has discharged his responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I find that difficult to understand. That must be the new Pearson, the new Liberal party, the new image. But let me point out these facts, and I know the Secretary of State for External Affairs will have something to say in this regard. Generally speaking, I think Canadians highly regard the manner in which the minister has discharged and carried out his duties.

Mr. Speaker, in order to build yourself up in your own image you do not have to disparage others, and that disparagement—

Mr. Pickersgill: Look in the mirror.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —was the one point in his speech where I felt that while it was the voice of the Leader of the Opposition, the handiwork was that of someone else.

What was done at the last session of the United Nations? The earlier initiative toward world wide research in radiation was advanced and supported. Strong objection was taken by the government of Canada to Soviet nuclear tests and efforts were made unceasingly toward securing the resumption of disarmament negotiations.

In so far as the spread of nuclear weapons was concerned, we took our stand strongly and effectively. We gave support to a policy which we ourselves advanced four years ago regarding the control of outer space. We have taken our stand against the troika principle and strong support for the new acting secretary general of the United Nations came from the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the light of the events of the last few weeks, what U Thant has done has shown him to be an outstanding secretary general of the United Nations.

In addition to that we took our stand with regard to the question of the financing of the United Nations. I am not sure that in the days ahead, however, consideration should not be given to this question, to the end that nations that are not making their contributions should be required to come more effectively within article 19, which reads:

A member of the United Nations which is in arrears in the payment of its financial contributions to the organization shall have no vote in the general assembly if the amount of its arrears equals or exceeds the amount of the contributions due from it for the preceding two full years.

There should be no free riders in an international organization designed to maintain and preserve peace.

In addition to that, when I listened to the hon. gentleman today speaking with such disapproval of what this government had done internationally and saw the shame that came to his cheeks as he felt the loss of the international stature of Canada, I can only say that he must have gained that in Acapulco, because wherever I have gone I have found that Canada's international position is now, and has been through the years, among the first in the nations of the world.

In addition to that there is the initiative taken in connection with the world food program which brings honour to Canada. We endeavoured to bring it about as far back as December 1957, within NATO. Through the years we have continued to advocate the need for such a body, but we had not been able to achieve it until this year. The plan which was advanced by us four years ago has been altered very little. That plan has been accepted by the United Nations and under it Canada intends to make her contribution and to play her part to use that institution not only for the removal of overhanging surpluses but to alleviate human suffering.

The hon. gentleman asks, what have we done? I cannot understand his asking that question. As far as the Colombo plan is concerned, we increased the contribution from $35 million to $50 million a year, and it has been so for the past three years. We have made it effective for a period of three years.

What has Canada done? I could understand this criticism coming from someone else, but not from the Leader of the Opposition.

In answer to the question, what has Canada done, I would say, what about her contribution in the Congo; what about her contribution in the Middle East; what about her assistance in the Far East? Wherever in the world there are international organizations and Canada has been asked to take her part, she has taken her part and will continue to do so in the years to come.

We thought that was beyond party politics, but today the hon. gentleman, for reasons known only to himself, dared to stand up in parliament and deprecate this country and its international position. It is beyond me to understand the particular variety of political chivalry that would impel one to do that.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman laughs. I ask him, what did he mean by his statements this afternoon? Are we falling down with regard to NATO? Our contribution to NATO has been enlarged. One does not want to boast within his own country but I can say that our contribution to NATO, relatively speaking, places us in the forefront of the nations that compose that body, the greatest defence we have.

Then the hon. gentleman said that this country was against Britain. I remember when he sat over here that year after year, as he made his annual report as secretary of state for external affairs, no ordinary microscope could find any reference to the commonwealth. Our attitude to the commonwealth is that this body represents the greatest instrument for peace anywhere in the world. It covers all the continents and brings together men and women of all colours and races. It does this effectively. I will deal with further aspersions in that connection when I refer to the common market.

There was also a reference to the effect that this was the 44th anniversary of the independence of the Ukraine. We did not have to be told that. We brought that before the United Nations. All through the years the hon. gentleman did not deal with that question there.

The hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin)—I do not like to refer to him in his absence—has also discovered the problem now, because only a few days ago he made reference to the fact that the suggestion I made some time ago, that there be a resolution brought before the United Nations at its next session, should not be delayed that long but should be raised at this time. The reason it has not been raised at this time is that there were already one or two resolutions on this subject, and it is necessary to have the support of other nations throughout the world in order to bring in such a resolution if there is to be any effective action taken by the United Nations in regard thereto.

We took our stand—and it was not a popular one at the time—in September, 1960, when I had the privilege of speaking at the United Nations. After Khrushchev had come out in favour of self-determination for all the peoples of mankind I called upon him in the name of fairness, justice and equity and in pursuance of the principles of the United Nations to make it possible for those captive peoples under his control to be given the right to self-determination. That is the attitude which this party has taken throughout the years. We are glad the need for action in this regard has suddenly been recognized in these last few months by those who for many years in the United Nations, knowing of the situation and having heard the calls of these people, never at any time raised a voice on their behalf.

With regard to east-west relations, the Leader of the Opposition has spoken of the seriousness of world conditions and he has done so with that knowledge which experience brings and which his associations through the years make possible. I think we can say that while there is at the moment a lull, nothing has taken place in recent weeks which would lead one to believe that the problems which face us in our relationship with the U.S.S.R. have greatly diminished.

The United States ambassador in Moscow is now engaged in probing Soviet intentions regarding Berlin. In Berlin the west wants certain guarantees and undertakings from the Soviet union. A basis for negotiations exists if the Soviet union really wants a settlement. Negotiations, as I see it, could ultimately benefit both sides and would certainly reduce the dangers of war which have arisen as a result of Soviet pressure on the city.

What are the factors which have caused the hot and cold tactics to which we have been subjected during the past three years? It may be the answer is that we are no longer dealing with a monolithic organization nor with an absolute dictator on the Stalin model but that we are dealing with a communist world in which decisions result from complex pressures and in which the decision of one man or one group, or even of one country, does not always prevail. In these changed circumstances we should recognize that the Soviet challenge is different from that which we faced ten years ago and that western policies must be adjusted accordingly taking full account of political and economic as well as military factors.

It is not likely that any of us need be warned against acquiring a false sense of security from the divisions, the schisms, which have appeared in the communist world, where they are known, I think, as heresies. The communist world is divided against itself today. But though they are divided among themselves they are united in one thing, and that is their unity against us. Their dispute is about means, not about ends, and we would be running grave risks if we were to base our policies on the assumption that the communist world is crumbling.

As I see the picture—and the Secretary of State for External Affairs will deal with this in detail—the task of the west today is to pursue a steady but not rigid course, watching the adversary closely but without being deflected by his Pavlovian tactics. Our aims in Berlin are clear. They are reasonable. The western world intends to maintain them, not just in the interests of West Berlin but because they have a wider significance as a test of western resolve to fulfil its pledged word. The Soviet government has before it an opportunity to demonstrate its good faith and willingness to bring about a removal of those difficulties which have separated us.

Of one thing there can be no question. The only places which become danger spots are those chosen by the U.S.S.R. or its communist assistants or associates.

The hon. gentleman mentioned the question of nuclear arms, a problem which has affected all the nations in the western world. This is a subject which I hope will be debated and discussed at length. But I want to make this very clear: there has been no dilatory action on the part of this government. We made our enunciation of policy as far back as 1959, clearly, definitely and absolutely. Since that time we have continued in that policy, and when the debate takes place on international affairs we shall deal with this matter and point out at the same time the tremendous cleavage and schism which exists on this subject within the ranks of the opposition despite the fact that in this regard the advertising represents the Liberals as having the answer. I should like to hear that answer some time expressed without equivocation. I think that anyone who has had the privilege of reading the interview one page long given by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate to the Windsor Star a few days ago, will wonder who was speaking about whom and what the policy is with reference to this and several other matters.

Now I might pass on to the next problem that is, the economic one. I must say I felt a degree of sympathy for the Leader of the Opposition today.

An hon. Member: He needed it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I believe in extending sympathy even if they think they do not need it when it is apparent that they do need it. It is an awful thing; for four long years they have been preaching doom and gloom. But they do not want that mentioned. They have gone across this country and spoken about the degradation of our country internationally and economically. What about parliamentarily? No, they do not talk about that. Do hon. members recall the reference the Leader of the Opposition made to that? He said: "Here is something about old stuff". That was about the opportunity for parliament to remove the closure procedure. He may think it is old stuff, but we who sat on that side of the house during the days when parliament was trampled on do not regard it as old stuff. He asks: "Why haven't you done it?" We are now giving parliament the opportunity to carry out that which we said would be placed before it. But what if we had not believed in the necessity of not applying closure? There have been times when everything has been done on the part of the opposition to bring it about, that which as long as this government is in power, will never be visited on the House of Commons or on free speech within this house.

I am going to refer to the economic situation. They blame us for everything today. Internationally, it was a sordid picture. Economically, where was the country going, the Leader of the Opposition asked. Well I intend to make some references to recent press statements after having dealt in general with the economic situation within our country. The detail will be filled in by the Minister of Finance and others who will follow.

The hon. gentleman blamed us today for lower productivity per individual. That was a new accusation. According to him we are to blame because men today are not producing as much as they were producing per person four or five years ago. That is how far they have gone. I have been across this country and I have also listened to Canadian people everywhere. Do you know what I have heard? Over and over again it has been said to me that this perpetual groaning on the part of the opposition, this degrading of our country, has gone beyond what is reasonable and beyond what is regarded as the proper attitude to take in parliament. We want criticism. Criticism is of the essence of parliamentary government. But that dirge they chant, that funereal appearance they assume, and that attitude of gloom they adopt for their own personal glee, are things which the people are beginning to see through in the light of what has been done and the policies that have been followed by this government.

I will refer to some of the things that have been done, first generalizing on the Canadian economic scene today. Mention was made of the fact that elsewhere in the world everything was fine. I have simply to read what the President of the United States said the other day. He has also mentioned on a number of occasions, that since the war there have been four or five recessions. He has mentioned the difficulty of these successive recessions, each followed by a shorter period of general prosperity. The other day he also stated that this year we have turned the corner and are on the way up. The opposition picture Canada as if it were a place by itself, with difficulties not found elsewhere. One has just to read the United States press week by week. There you find out the fact that they also face a situation similar to that which we have faced in Canada. As to Canadian economic activity, the pace of expansion has accelerated as the year progressed and as the economy continues to advance most economic indicators passed their previous peaks and were still pointing upwards as the year ended. National output rose significantly in both the second and the third quarters of the year, and the indications are that this trend continued in the final quarter of 1961. The quickening rate of business activity improved the labour situation and employment rose.

I might also point out that the strength of the current expansion is evident in the new records attained in such important fields as national output, industrial production, incomes, consumption and commodity exports. These are notable achievements in view of the fact that there was a partial failure of Canada's 1961 grain crop. The upswing has been unusually strong and broadly based. The significant feature of the upturn is the broadness of its scope and the extent to which the improvement has permeated the Canadian economy. Some Canadian industries achieved record output and sales in 1961. Others operated above their 1960 level. New annual production records were achieved by both the mining and manufacturing industries.

In connection with mineral production, there was an increase of approximately 2.8 per cent. There was also an increase in gas exports. As a result of the policies of this government in making possible a national policy, we have been able to achieve new records. New annual production records were also chalked up in primary steel and wood pulp. Cement shipments were higher by 6 per cent than they were in 1960 and constituted the second highest figure on record after 1958. The gross national product amounted to approximately $37 billion and there was a significant gain between the second quarter and the third quarter. The achievement of this gain is remarkable, again I point out, when consideration is given to the $300 million or $400 million decline in the grain crop when compared with that of 1960. If we had had an average grain crop in 1961, it would have meant an increase of about 3½ per cent in the gross national product. However, the opposition just go on, Mr. Speaker, and wail and whine.

How greatly the foreign trade situation seems to worry, frustrate and annoy them. However, the improvement in Canada's foreign trade was one of the most encouraging economic developments in 1961. At the end of the first ten months of 1961 commodity exports stood at an all-time high. Imports were moderately higher than they were in 1961 and for the first time since 1952 Canada had a surplus in commodity trade. When we came into office there was a deficit in commodity trade of some $713 million. As a result of our policies, the encouragement of export markets and the action taken by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and his officials, and those of the other departments of government, and by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) directly, the improved situation was brought about. The record level of exports was achieved largely by expanding foreign sales to countries other than our two traditional best customers, namely the United Kingdom and the United States. Sales to western Europe and Japan continued to expand during the year, and there were large exports of grain to communist countries.

I do not know what the suggestion was today on the part of the Leader of the Opposition. However, if he is criticising the sale of wheat to communist countries, I ask him to repeat that criticism in those areas of Canada which are particularly affected by the benefits that come from the export of that wheat.

Mr. Nowlan: Or anywhere else in Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Minister of National Revenue says, "or anywhere else in Canada". I wanted him to get the warmest reception. That is why I mentioned those provinces that have the largest amount of wheat. I used to be told that there was an east and a west. I have not found that to be the case. There has been a desire on the part of hon. members of this house, from whatever part of Canada they came, to contribute to the benefit of each and every portion of the country to the end that there is prosperity.

I have noticed that certain elements in the press have stated that the improvement in our trade situation is due to United States economic improvement rather than to our policies. Canada's total trade—that is to say, commodity exports and imports taken together—amounted to $9½ billion in the first ten months of 1961, 5.8 per cent more than in the corresponding period of 1960. Exports total $4,801 million, 7.2 per cent above the level in the period January to October 1960.

What are the facts with respect to whether or not this increase has arisen in consequence of improvement of economic conditions in the United States? In over-all exports the level over 1960 was the result of an increase of $52 million or 2 per cent in sales to the United States and of a rise of $292 million or 33 per cent in exports to countries other than the United States and commonwealth countries. I think I have said enough in this connection to indicate that because of the tremendous efforts made by this government and its departments and as a result of the legislation which the government introduced in order to encourage export sales these results have followed.

Industrial production hit a new peak. In October, 1961, it was 6.1 per cent higher than one year earlier. And so I might go on. The higher level of housing starts and increased activity in other construction fields after mid-year provided a stimulus to the building materials industries and the construction trades in general. All of these things brought about a great improvement in our employment situation.

We are not complacent about it. Neither are they complacent in the United States where their percentage of unemployment is higher than ours. They are adopting various policies to which the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) will refer during the course of his remarks. We have been facing a situation within our country where unemployment is always seasonally higher than anywhere else and, in spite of the prophecies of the opposition, we are able to say at this time that in every month during the year there has been a comparative reduction in unemployment. All of Canada's regions shared in the improvement in employment throughout 1961, compared with one year earlier.

I should also point out that while our percentage of unemployment is lower than that of the United States, further consideration should be given to the fact that in that country considerable numbers are called into the armed forces. Furthermore, the Canadian labour force has increased 10.4 per cent compared with 6.1 per cent in the United States, which indicates that we have that additional problem of larger and larger numbers coming into the labour market, greater in percentage than is the case in the United States.

I could deal with sales and review in general but throughout it bears out what I have just stated, that our policies, ridiculed, condemned, ignored today by the Leader of the Opposition, have brought about changes that few could have anticipated a few months ago.

With regard to our relationship to the United States in defence sharing, the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley) deserves commendation. In joint sharing with the United States in 1961 we built up a 25 per cent increase over 1960. The 1960 figure was $112 million and in 1961 the amount was $142.6 million. That was the first time that we had a favourable balance amounting to $50 million. This does not take into consideration the "swap" deal. In addition we received $42 million in defence sharing in European countries and in Australia last year. If there only could have been the slightest suggestion on the part of the Leader of the Opposition that things were changing beneficially. But no, not at all. I wonder why he was so silent. Was it because the sole policy that the opposition has built up, the economic degradation of this country, has now proven to be ill-timed and ill-conceived?

Sir, we are no different from the United States. Here are the words of the President of the United States in his state of the union message:

At home, we began the year in the valley of recession—we completed it on the high road of recovery and growth... At the year's end the economy which Mr. Khrushchev once called "a stumbling horse" was racing to new records in consumer spending, labour income and industrial production. Moreover, pleasant as it may be to bask in the warmth of recovery, let us not forget that we have suffered three recessions in the last seven years.

Listening to the hon. gentleman today referring to recessions, you would think they were something peculiar to the present government of this country.

The time to repair the roof is when the sun is shining.

That is the course we have followed and that is the course we intend to follow on the upturn that is taking place everywhere in Canada.

The hon. gentleman is a profound reader of articles from abroad. In one or two cases he read from journals that do not have quite the wide significance that he would have led us to believe. Let me read from some articles written in Canada. There is, for instance, the Financial Post outlook on January 6.

Canada ended 1961 with business on the upbeat and with buoyant forecasts for 1962. This year's g.n.p. consensus is, should rise by at least 5 per cent to top the $39 billion mark.

Again, on October 28 the Financial Post said this:

The upswing in industrial production and profits, coupled with the current scaling down of unemployment, make it clear that the Canadian economy is well into its fifth expansion of its post-war years.

Why go abroad in order to prove what is wrong with your country? I do not understand this greater interest than ever before in papers and periodicals abroad. Charles Lynch in the Ottawa Citizen had this to say:

Canada gets glad tidings on economy. In almost every sector of the economy, except agriculture, things were humming at such a pace during the third quarter of this year that gross national product rose by 2.7 per cent.

In agriculture it should be noted there was the largest income yet, even though agriculture in western Canada suffered a tremendous loss. In the months since last May or June the price of wheat has increased by approximately 20 cents a bushel. Here is what the president of the Bank of Nova Scotia said.

The past 12 months give us much cause for encouragement.

I wish he could whisper a few of these words to the Leader of the Opposition.

We have moved from the midst of a recession into a new phase of expansion.

Then he said:

How strong the forward surge will be is not yet clear; but it is clear that 1962 will be a better year than 1961.

Then there is this quotation originating with the Prudential Insurance Company of America:

Canada's gross national product will rise 7.3 per cent to a record $39.4 billion in 1962, the Prudential Insurance Company of America says in its annual economic forecast.

And so it goes across the country in magazine after magazine and article after article I think I will have to send some of these to the hon. gentleman rather than read them in the house.

Mr. Chevrier: How about the president of the Royal bank?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then, he will have some information gained in Canada about Canada rather than the derogatory articles from outside of Canada.

I am going to say a word now about the common market. I do not believe too much need be said. I should like to refer again to the slogan "the Liberals have the answer". It is a great slogan given today. It is said the Liberal party has taken a strong stand in this regard. We find reference made to Walter Gordon. He is in a position, in relation to the Leader of the Opposition, as exemplified by the phrase, "Walter, Walter, lead me to the altar". The Liberals have the answer. They had the answer from the lips of this same Walter Gordon who said to the people of the maritimes, exile yourselves from the maritime provinces.

An hon. Member: Wait until we get him down there.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, he has been down there. He said, I really did not mean that. Here is what he says and he is one of the leaders, but unlike his fellow expert, Mr. Kent, he is allowed to be articulate. This is what he said on August 29, 1960. The Leader of the Opposition read what he had said. That used to be a failing of Mr. King's; his speeches were filled with copious quantities of quotations from previous speeches.

We will see what Mr. Gordon said, as reported in the Toronto daily Star in August, 1960. Let us remember the bold and imaginative, Mr. Speaker; decisiveness, certainty. What did the director of policy and activity of the Liberal party say? This is what he said:

> We hear a lot these days about the potential effects on Canadian exports of the European common market, and sometimes, that we should explore the possibilities of establishing a common market or free trade area on the North American continent.

This was in the speech today. It was put there quietly, just inserted. What did Mr. Gordon say?

> But we should think twice before concluding that the same approach would be desirable on this continent. After all, some of the keenest promoters of the common market in Europe have political union as their ultimate objective, a union incidentally in which no one of the present countries would wield a dominating influence.

The Liberals have the answer, but here is what Mr. Gordon said:

> A similar approach on this continent might have a very different result if eventually it led to some kind of political union between Canada and the United States. In our case, because of our much smaller size, this would really mean absorption by the United States. This is a prospect which I, for one, would not look upon with relish—not that I am in any way anti-American—but just that I think Canada has something to contribute to this weary troubled world as a separate, independent nation with no axe to grind.

Miss LaMarsh: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, yes, they applaud what he said but they say the very opposite in the House of Commons.

Now, I come to another bold and imaginative statement. The Leader of the Opposition quoted what he said in Vancouver on January 25, 1958, calling for immediate planning for a north Atlantic free trade area. He complained because Canada dared to place Canada's position before the United Kingdom when the United Kingdom was considering entering the common market. What would they have said if we had not done so? What would the position of the United Kingdom have been if they bargained for the purpose of securing for us, within the commonwealth, the best possible bargain they could? There has been no complaint on their part. They have been very glad to have our views. They have used them there for the purpose of assuring that there shall be no sacrifice of any measure of those things that bind the commonwealth together in trade. They criticize us for it today, but what would they have done?

I will tell you what the Leader of the Opposition said. He did not quote this part of his speech. After these bold words, he concluded by saying this:

> For Canada a north Atlantic area, with the freest possible trade would certainly mean a much greater export market in the United States and Europe.

Then, he conceded that certain Canadian industries would have to receive special consideration under a free trade agreement. He did not elaborate further. The thing which he told us we should do and which would have to be done, is the very thing for which he criticized us, securing special consideration. You remember a while ago what they were saying, Mr. Speaker? We should join the European common market. They had never read the treaty of Rome. They did not know that only European countries could belong as members. They suddenly changed their standpoint today and endeavoured to leave the impression that the United States was going to enter into something of this kind. I will quote President Kennedy's words:

> I am proposing, in short, a new American trade initiative which will make it possible for the economic potential of these two great markets to be harnessed together into a team capable of pulling the full weight of our common military, economic and political aspirations.

I personally believe this, that in the years ahead the free world will have to come closer together than ever before, economically and politically, if we are to survive in freedom.

Then, what did the president say?

> I am not proposing—nor is it either necessary or desirable—that we join the common market, alter our concepts of political sovereignty, establish a rich man's trading community, abandon our traditional most favoured nation policy, create an Atlantic free trade area, or impair in any way our close economic ties with Canada, Japan and the rest of the free world.

This has been our attitude. We have done everything to encourage Britain to place the viewpoint of Canada before the community, and it has been done.

As a result of the serious decision recently taken by the council of ministers of the common market, the Six have moved from the first stage to the second stage of the 12-year transitional period leading to the achievement of their economic community.

The position of the common market at the end of the fourth year is generally as follows: The Six have reduced tariffs among themselves by 40 per cent, and eliminated import restrictions, also amongst themselves, over a wide range. They have taken the first of three steps bringing their individual tariffs towards the level of their common external tariff. They have paved the way for common transport and commercial policies. They have made appreciable progress towards the free movement of labour, services and capital wtihin their community. That is one of the principles of the treaty of Rome, free ingress and egress of labour among the countries in the treaty area; complete freedom of access on the part of labour, that is, under the treaty. They have continued to develop closer political ties.

The government of Canada recognizes the implications of the common market. We understand the political and economic reasons which led to the creation of this economic community. We have demonstrated our desire to co-operate with it and with the United States in the part we have played in the establishment of O.E.C.D. and all Canadians are proud of the fact that this organization is now under the chairmanship of the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This, Mr. Speaker, provides me with an opportunity of replying to those who say that there has been any disagreement between the Minister of Finance and myself, that there is and has been no foundation for those rumors at any time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Methinks the lady doth protest too often.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the hon. gentleman knows as much about ladies as he does about Mr. King, then he speaks with some authority.

While Canada has co-operated with its partners I make it clear that if the strengthening of Europe were to be achieved at the expense of the commonwealth, or other parts of the free world, we do not believe it would fulfill its promise. Canadian representatives have brought these considerations to bear in the discussions regarding European integration. I can say that so far as negotiations between the United Kingdom and the Six are concerned, the British position, stated by the Lord Privy Seal, is that the British government indicated their willingness to accept the broad lines of the Rome treaty as it is, and indicated they shared the political aims and objectives of the Six. Second, the political significance of the commonwealth and its contribution to strength and stability in the world were emphasized. He, I think, made it clear that the safeguarding of commonwealth interests was the central consideration affecting the United Kingdom's decision to join.

We represent the government of Canada. We represent the people of Canada and, lest the result of what Britain was doing were to weaken the relationship within the commonwealth, were to place us in a detrimental position together with Australia, New Zealand and other countries of the commonwealth, then it is our responsibility to place that view before the British government. I can say the British government recognizes that Britain is at the centre of a world wide trading system and is aware that production facilities have been developed in many commonwealth countries to serve the British market.

Much of British industry in turn has developed on the basis of favourable access to markets in many parts of the world and the British government has, in the face of these considerations, indicated that commonwealth interests should be accommodated. It has given assurances to commonwealth governments that this would be a crucial feature of the negotiations. This was our concern, as I pointed out a moment ago, not the attitude of trying to say to a sovereign nation within the commonwealth "You shall not do this." We were concerned with the protection of our trade. We realized how much was at stake. We consider—and the British fully understood this and understand it now—that they should be provided with the fullest information on the implications for Canada, because only in that way could the British negotiators be aware of all the factors that have to be taken into account to safeguard those interests.

When I hear hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the house talking about Canada's stand against Britain and the commonwealth I must remind them that the foundation of the Conservative party is close relationship with the British commonwealth. That was our foundation when it was an empire and that has continued to be the foundation ever since. That is the position of this party and, despite whatever representations the opposition make to the contrary, our relations with the commonwealth are close and will continue to be so.

We hold that we are entitled to consultation and by that I mean the fullest consultation. Consultation is more than the reporting of what has been done. I have repeated on a number of occasions, and I think there has been some general support for my view, that when the negotiations have finally arrived at a point as between the United Kingdom and the countries of the European community, then in that spirit which at all times actuates the members of the commonwealth, we should meet together in a commonwealth prime ministers' conference and there talk over the matter in the light of our common dignity and the maintenance of the strength of this body of free countries all over the world, which has so much to contribute to peace. It is naturally agreed that before the final decision is taken the fullest consultation is of first importance, and in the past I have expressed my hope that, while all the countries are not in agreement, it would be possible that such a prime ministers' conference might be held in Canada.

Since becoming Prime Minister and attending such meetings I have advocated that although most of the meetings of the prime ministers should take place in London, from time to time, but not in rotation, there should be meetings throughout the commonwealth thereby implementing the concept of the equality of each member within that family.

Now, sir, I wish to say a word on the subject of national development. That was another subject which was not dealt with today. You will remember in 1957 and 1958, when we spoke of the need to develop our northern areas. That idea and view were ridiculed as being a policy of development from igloo to igloo. I look back over that period and think of the plans we brought into effect. One has only to travel in the north of Canada to see the tremendous changes that have taken place. In the provinces we also made provision for co-operation in the provincial development of all things designed to bring about a strong economic development in every part of our country, the development of our national resources, the development of our northern regions, urban redevelopment, transportation and communication development, and a balanced regional economic development as practiced through the Atlantic provinces grants.

These are some of the things we have done, and though the opposition speak about plans not being carried out, I shall not deal with that tonight but wait to hear the hon. gentleman from Bonavista-Twillingate and hope there will be an opportunity of following him. There is, indeed, a tremendous loss to the history of our country by virtue of the hiatus that has taken place as he searches for promises. Let me point out, Mr. Speaker, that it shows they agree there is a hiatus.

Mr. Pickersgill: What is it?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Apparently that definition applies to the hon. gentleman who is in Newfoundland by personal adoption. They think it is a hiatus, too.

We said we would bring about the development of our resources. There is the road program in the north to allow exploration of new mineral areas, the development of the northern community of Frobisher Bay, and improved transportation and communication.

In the provinces, in addition to the road program in the north there is the roads to resources program, forest access roads and railways designed to open up the country. One of these is the Great Slave lake railway, which is also giving to Canadians an opportunity to participate in Canada's development, as is the case with the regulations for oil and mineral development in the north.

We went ahead in other provinces. There are the tourist roads in the maritimes, and in Ontario there is the federal aid to the upper Thames river project. We brought about a national policy with regard to western gas. We have aided provinces in power development. We set up a royal commission for the purpose of determining a means whereby there could be an equalization in freight rates between the various parts of our country. In development we have extended aid to the provinces far beyond anything that has ever taken place. Indeed, when one looks at the deficits, if it were not for the extra aid we have given to the provinces several of those deficits would not have taken place.

We have provided subventions for maritime coal. We have done our part to end the pollution of our vast water resources. We have built or are building, in co-operation with the provinces, various great water irrigation plants such as the south Saskatchewan river dam and another referred to in the speech from the throne, the Red and Assiniboine rivers project. We have brought about a new concept in agricultural development by the legislation known as ARDA.

These are some of the things we have brought about in order to achieve that degree of development which is the concept of our development policy. While I do not often refer to articles in detail, there is an article in the Toronto Saturday Night of January 6 which deals generally with power, railways and minerals being the key to our development.

We have launched a tremendous power policy with the assistance of the provinces. We are hoping that with regard to the Columbia river agreement between the province and the federal government can be reached so that the treaty may be brought before the present session.

I have already mentioned one railway, and there is another mentioned in the speech from the throne. As I look back over a period of 25 years visiting various parts of eastern Quebec, there has not been an election since 1925 when those opposite did not tell the people of Gaspé to elect them and they would build a railway from Matane to Ste. Anne des Monts. Here is a wonderful area to be developed, not only from the point of view of resources but also as a tourist attraction. We intend to make available to the people of that area something that has been denied them for so many years.

In addition to that the opposition ridiculed us in those election campaigns for our ideas about the north. You have only to go up there to see what has been done. I went to Inuvik and along the Mackenzie river. There is tremendous development there, almost 100 million acres being taken up for oil, minerals, gas and the like. The potential finds are now apparent. All these things are part of the development that we had in mind, so long delayed and so long derided by the present opposition when in government.

The greatest need in the years ahead, as I see it, will be the assurance of power to all parts of Canada. It is for that reason that in the speech from the throne we make provision for the beginnings of action which we hope will bring about the establishment of a national power grid in all parts of Canada. Manitoba has already approached us in this regard; other provinces are interested. My hope is that we shall make progress, to the end that in this respect Canada will not fall behind but will be in the forefront in the maintenance of such necessary things as the provision of power to all parts of our country, assuring a new equality of development in every part of our country.

There is one other matter in the province of Quebec that is receiving our attention in this development plan which covers all the provinces of Canada. That is the reference of the Richelieu-Champlain waterway project to the international joint commission. The opposition, when in government, gave this matter little or no attention from 1937 on. We felt some action should be taken and we have given serious consideration to proposals for the improvement of this waterway.

On September 8, 1961 I pointed out to the house that when the examination had been completed and a decision had been made as to the proper course to be adopted, the house would be made aware of that decision immediately. On December 18 the government announced its decision to refer this matter to the international joint commission for study. The United States government has been informed of our desire to have this matter submitted to the commission and of our willingness to do this by means of a joint reference of the governments of Canada and the United States of America.

The nature of this joint reference is at present being considered by the various departments of government concerned and we should be in a position shortly to discuss the fullest details with the United States. At that time the house will be made aware of the progress we are making.

In the development policy for agriculture in all parts of our country, agriculture in eastern and western Canada has received every consideration from this government. Indeed, as I examine the expenditures that are made for agriculture in eastern and western Canada in connection with support prices and all other matters that enter into that field, I find that on a per capita basis there is a high degree of equality in all parts of the country.

As you know, in western Canada this year there was a serious crop failure. When we came into office we thought action should be taken to bring in cash advances. Well, the Liberals had the answer. But when we asked them to do this in 1954, 1955 and 1956 they said it could not be done. When we said that action should be taken to remove the tremendous overhanging surplus of wheat by securing markets in various parts of the world, the Liberals again had the answer. The answer was, no. When, in order to assist in removing those surpluses and to benefit other parts of the world under the Colombo plan we suggested that, to use this immortal slogan, the Liberals had the answer—it was, no.

So I could go over the picture. How did we bring about the tremendous sales of wheat? We extended credit sales of wheat to various countries. The Leader of the Opposition today speaks with that uncertainty which boldness and imagination demands but I have his statement here, made in 1958, that he thought we ought to sell non-strategic products to communist China. But they did not do it.

Mr. Pearson: We made the agreement with the Russians.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman says he made the agreement with the Russians. Then why is he implying that there is something wrong in selling wheat to China?

Mr. Pearson: On a point of order, the Prime Minister has made an inference which is false and misleading. I should like to point out that I approved of wheat sales to China at a time when hon. members opposite said it meant we were being soft on communism if we approved that course.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What does that mean, saying "I am in favour of it but we are too soft on communism?" I want to tell the hon. gentleman this: that is one subject, softness on communism, that he should not discuss.

In every case where we asked for something to be done the Liberals had the answer, as the advertising says. The answer was, no. Take, for example, advances to farmers. All those things which have been put into effect since this government took office were approached in the same way by the previous government. The answer was always the same, and it was always in the negative. In 1958 we brought into effect acreage payments and I know what the reaction was. I am not going to harass anyone or cause any wounds to be opened but I remember the description "peanuts". All I can say is that I have travelled in western Canada and that is not what the small farmers say. All through the years there have been requests in western Canada for a fair and reasonable price approaching parity with regard to that portion of the wheat sold in Canada for domestic purposes. The sum of $40 million was made available in 1958 and again, two years later, in 1960 which in fact brought to the farmers of western Canada a price equivalent to a parity price in respect of that wheat consumed in Canada.

We intend this year again to bring into effect a similar system whereby farmers will receive the same amount as in 1960. Mention was made by someone—I believe it was the Leader of the Opposition—that the Minister of Agriculture had stated that the payment would not be made in the calendar year, that the cheque machinery was working too slowly and it would be impossible to do it. Exactly what the Minister of Agriculture meant was that we were sending out cheques to the western farmers in respect of wheat through P.F.A.A. and there would be no payment made during the calendar year 1961. There is nothing unreasonable about that statement. One thing this government has done has been to see to it that when farmers find themselves in difficulty, whatever part of Canada they live in, they receive that consideration which in the past was so often denied.

When I said a moment ago that our policy was for other parts of Canada, too, I think of what we have done in connection with tobacco. I also think of what we have done in connection with sugar. I have before me an editorial which appeared in the Chatham daily News on December 2 under the heading "New Sugar Policy is Welcomed by Growers". It reads:

> Details of the federal government's new Canadian sugar policy have been made public and do not need to be recapitulated. Under this program the new support will be given to sugar beet growers starting with the 1962 crop.

The article goes on to indicate what private members can do and ends by saying that credit is due to the hon. member for Kent, Ont. (Mr. Danforth) for his persistent efforts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And while that hon. member is named in his own paper, the same applies to all the members supporting the government in western Ontario.

Now I come to the question of social security. Among the most important measures forecast in the speech from the throne are those relating to old age pensions. We already have in Canada four major government systems for providing for old age pensioners as well as numerous private pension plans. Therefore it is desirable that the house and the public should understand how the measures referred to in the address affect this program.

The four matters to which I refer include first, a government annuities plan, which is used by a great many individuals and groups as a foundation for their security. We propose to retain this important feature and hope it will continue in the future to be as useful as it has been, whatever additional pension measures may be introduced. The second, in point of time, is what is now the Old Age Assistance Act. Under this an old age pension is provided jointly by the provincial and federal governments to persons who are in need as determined by a means test applied by the province in accordance with both provincial and federal law. It is not generally known that this payment of old age assistance is contributed to by the federal government on a 50-50 basis. This pension looks after those who have been unable to provide for their own old age and who need a pension before the age at which the universal pension is payable.

We propose that the amount of the pension should be increased and we believe that the economic capacity of this country warrants the benefit of an increased scale for our old people who are in need. The cost of doing this will, of course, rest on the budget and, as is the case with regard to all these measures, will ultimately be met by the Canadian people through their taxes. The third of this pensions group is the old age security pension payable as of right to persons at 70 years of age without regard to need. As in the case of old age assistance, the government has reached the conclusion that it can and should ask Canadians to accord a higher priority to the welfare of older Canadians than in the past and to pay pensions on a higher scale than heretofore.

In creating a complete system of providing for retired persons which will be made out of all the measures, due regard should and will be had to the levels of these old age security pensions financed by the special levies under the act.

A fourth element which is often overlooked is provision for aid under the Unemployment Assistance Act. Under this act parliament provides, through provincial and local authorities, half the money required for the payment of what is widely termed public assistance or relief. I would point out here that if the new policy of the new Liberal party as enunciated by the Leader of the Opposition in Quebec city is brought into effect, that is the kind of joint expenditure which will be ended.

Under the Unemployment Assistance Act, parliament is now sharing in the payment of substantial amounts to old people as well as to other people who are unemployed or unemployable for various reasons.

These are the four plans for dealing with old age pensions. There are now hundreds and possibly thousands of private pension plans which have become an important and integral part in employer-employee relations in Canada. Usually these plans are financed by contributions of employers and employees. These are normally recognized under income tax arrangements which permit contributions to these plans to be free of taxes but which impose taxes if they are payable on the pension payments themselves if they exceed the exemptions on the taxpayer's income. The new feature that will be proposed to parliament will be to add to this system. It will enable the structure to be completed in addition to an increase in the amount of payments for old age pensions.

We find that there are still a good many people who wish to have greater provision made for their old age, and who are able and willing to contribute to such retirement pensions but who are not covered either by government annuities, by private pension plans or registered retirement saving plans. In order to complete the structure for old age pensions it is necessary that parliament should have the authority to enact a statutory system of old age pensions and related survival and disability benefits that would be comparable to that under the modern British and United States legislation in the nature of benefits that could be provided.

At the present time parliament's authority derives from section 94A of the British North America Act which permits it to make laws in relation to old age pensions so long as they do not affect the operation of provincial laws. This constitutional authority does not permit parliament to enact a plan which would include benefits payable under specified circumstances to the widows and children of contributors or to contributors who become disabled before they are old. To extend the law in this most desirable way it would be necessary to secure constitutional authority. With this idea in mind I have written to the premiers of all the provinces asking their concurrence in an amendment to section 94A of the British North American Act. I should like to table a copy of the letter to Premier Robarts of Ontario. The text of the others is similar. If the house is willing, the letter could be appended to Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister the consent of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For the text of letter above referred to, see appendix]

In His Excellency's speech reference was made to the desirability of the new plan taking into account private pension arrangements and the need for portability of pension rights. I should like to make it clear that pension rights under this type of national plan would be portable. On the other hand, we must contemplate private plans remaining in operation. Pension rights under them should be made portable, if necessary by the passing of either provincial or federal legislation. Our plan should take these private plans into account and should not require additional contributions by those already contributing under satisfactory private arrangements.

I have taken note of the proposal made public recently by the Leader of the Opposition, or by the Liberal party, for the payment of additional contributory pensions. At this time I am not going to outline the deficiencies or the weaknesses of palatable sections which when examined are found to be hollow and shallow. However, I feel it necessary to note that the plan contemplates no change in the constitution and no extension of benefits to dependants of contributors nor to disabled contributors. We feel that any plan limited in this way would be most seriously deficient.

As I set out in the letter to the various premiers of the provinces, believing that this is something which should be done we are going to ask parliament to consider the necessary amendment. Ever since the Clark report came in we had been hoping that the provinces would be able to come to an agreement on the question of having our constitution amended in Canada or of patriating the constitution. However, while progress has been made in that regard, we now feel that what we undertook to do in 1958, and have intended ever since to do, on the basis of an amendment to be passed in the parliament of Canada is now impossible. We believe this change should be made now. As it will take further time to reach agreement on the method of amendment of the constitution in Canada, we intend to proceed by way of an address to the Queen requesting the amendment to be made by the parliament of Westminster and have asked the various provinces to concur in that request. When we have been able to secure that amendment, over and above the old age pension paid and the increase which we intend to place before parliament, there will be in effect a pension system contributed to by the people of Canada to the end that there will be available for all Canadians, on a portable basis, pensions in keeping with their needs and also with their ability to to make payment.

First, there will be a reasonable and fair old age pension. We have shown our feelings in this regard by adding to the $6 provided or introduced by the previous government, a further increase of $9. When I proceed tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, with the concluding portion of my remarks, I shall deal with this matter somewhat further. Then there are two other matters I wish to deal with because the Leader of the Opposition covered them and I wish to assure him that all the information asked for by him will be furnished.

Mr. Herridge: I just wish to ask the Prime Minister one question. I was particularly interested in his reference to a national power grid. Does he believe that any power produced from British Columbia waters which is surplus to British Columbia's requirements should be made available to the rest of Canada rather than be exported to the United States?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Minister of Justice has dealt with this on a number of occasions and there is nothing that I could add.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the house leader could give some indication whether or not the speech from the throne will be interrupted this week and when, if this week, to deal with the matters referred to earlier by the Prime Minister?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I do not think we need to look too far ahead just yet. We will continue with the speech from the throne tomorrow.

Mr. Argue: Shame. Let us make the payments. Come on.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT—LETTER TO PROVINCIAL PREMIERS RESPECTING OLD AGE PENSIONS

Ottawa, January 17th, 1962.

The Honourable John P. Robarts, Q.C., M.P.P., Premier of Ontario,
Toronto, Ontario.

My dear Premier:

My colleagues and I in the federal government have come to the conclusion that the Canadian social security system should be improved by the addition of a plan for graduated old age pensions on a contributory basis in addition to the basic old age security pension, for all those who can reasonably afford additional provision for their old age and who have not already undertaken it under private pension plans or other contractual arrangements. We believe that a plan of this kind, which would have some resemblance to the American social security laws and the recent British legislation, should also contain provisions for the payment of benefits under certain circumstances to the widows and children of contributors who die, and to former contributors who become permanently disabled.

The British North America Act was amended in 1951 by the addition of the following as section 94A:

"It is hereby declared that the parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to old age pensions in Canada, but no law made by the parliament of Canada in relation to old age pensions shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a provincial legislature in relation to old age pensions."

The law officers of the crown advise me that this authority would permit parliament to enact a contributory, graduated old age pension plan but would not permit the inclusion of benefits payable under certain circumstances to widows and children, nor to contributors who become disabled before they are old. To extend the law in this most desirable way, it would be necessary to replace the present section with one reading as follows:

"94A. It is hereby declared that the parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to

(a) old age pensions, and

(b) pensions and other benefits incidental to, or conducive to the better operation and administration of, a scheme of old age pensions, but no law made by the parliament of Canada under the authority of this section affects the operation of any law enacted by the legislature of a province in relation to any of the matters specified in paragraphs (a) and (b) of this section".

My colleagues and I had hoped that agreement would have been reached by this time on a means of amending Canada's constitution in Canada and that this change in section 94A would have been one of the first amendments made under the new arrangements. It is now evident that it will take some further time to reach agreement on the methods of amendment of the constitution in Canada and it will therefore be necessary to proceed by way of an address to the Queen, as in the past, requesting that the amendment be made by the parliament at Westminster. I am writing therefore to ask that you concur in a request for an amendment to section 94A of the British North America Act in the form proposed above.

Yours sincerely,

John G. Diefenbaker

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, January 23, 1962

The house met at 11 a.m.

EXCHEQUER COURT

EXTENSION OF JURISDICTION TO INCLUDE DIVORCE

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-40, respecting the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DIVORCE

PROVISION FOR OFFICE OF PARLIAMENTARY PROCTOR, REGULATION OF COSTS, ETC.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-41, to establish the office of parliamentary proctor and to regulate taxation of costs.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

MEASURE TO MODERNIZE DISSOLUTION AND ANNULMENT

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-43, to provide in Canada for the dissolution and annulment of marriage.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION OF MINIMUM RATE OF WAGES FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-42, to provide for minimum wages for employees.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

REPRESENTATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING HALIFAX ELECTORAL DISTRICT

Mr. E. L. Morris (Halifax) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-44, to amend the Representation Act (Halifax electoral district).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Morris: The purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to give electoral recognition to the status of Dartmouth as a city of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT

AMENDMENT OF REGULATIONS RESPECTING SALE OF MORTGAGES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-45, to amend the Bills of Exchange Act (instalment purchases).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to protect people who are being sold goods by unscrupulous companies who, immediately after arranging a contract with certain guarantees, sell the original document and the purchaser then has no safeguard under that guarantee. This has worked a very great hardship on people buying things like aluminum windows and storm doors from door to door salesmen.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

TRANSPORTATION

ROYAL COMMISSION—TABLING OF SECOND VOLUME OF REPORT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the house moved with such commendable celerity through the early item that I missed motions. With leave of the house I should like to revert to motions.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table two copies in English and in French of the second volume of the report of the royal commission on transportation. This volume completes the analysis and recommendations of the commission. The third volume, which will be printed shortly, will include a number of studies prepared for the commission and will be tabled when it is ready.

The commissioners have asked to be discharged of their responsibilities and that request has been acceded to. They have been thanked for their contributions to the public service.

I will not endeavour to summarize or comment upon the substance of the report. I think hon. members will find that the report clarifies and illuminates the issues underlying the very difficult problems confronting Canada in the field of railway transportation.

I feel that the report will help parliament, the government and others concerned in reaching solutions to the problems that were placed before the commission.

A very excellent summary of the main points of the report has been prepared by the staff of the royal commission and has been given to the press. That might also be tabled so that any hon. member who is interested in a short compendium of the contents of the report will have the benefit of this summary.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, it is of course impossible to comment from this side of the house on the report which the Prime Minister has just tabled. I am sure all of us who are interested in this vital matter will want to carefully study the report as well as the summary which the Prime Minister has also tabled in the house.

I should like to extend the thanks of the opposition to the members of the royal commission for the work they have done. While I do not know all of them, I have been in association with some of them previously and I am sure that in the discharge of their responsibilities they have acted in accordance with the highest traditions of commissions.

I do not know what is contained in the report by way of recommendations, but I do hope the government will not deal with them as they dealt with the recommendations contained in the first report which—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Inasmuch as there will be an opportunity to debate this matter later on, I think the hon. member should restrict himself to the comment he has made and should not bring in other debatable matters particularly as no opinions were expressed by the government in the tabling of this report.

Mr. Chevrier: I trust that the government will see fit to deal objectively with the recommendations contained in the report.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): This is one of the occasions when a spokesman on a particular subject in the House of Commons is unable to make any worth while comment because we have not had the opportunity which the Prime Minister has had of seeing the report. All I can say is that the royal commission was established to consider urgent and important problems affecting the whole transportation industry of Canada with particular reference to rail transportation.

We are looking forward to reading the report. We trust that the report will have within it helpful recommendations and that the government will act on those recommendations so that we may obtain, as far as the railways are concerned, equalized freight rates in order that the rail facilities so necessary for Canada may be developed in an efficient manner and made available on a more equitable basis to freight users in all parts of Canada.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ROYAL COMMISSION ON TRANSPORTATION— IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister based on an article appearing in the Globe and Mail of January 22 to the effect that the government is considering new legislation aimed at abolishing across the board freight rate increases in accordance with recommendations made by the royal commission on transportation. Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation to this effect at this session of parliament?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): That article, of course, is purely speculative in every way. When the government is in a position to advise the house of the course to be followed, action will be taken. It will have been noticed that in addition to the items particularly mentioned in the speech from the throne there is provision, as is customary, for other matters which may arise or become necessary during the course of the session. The report will be thoroughly examined and considered and if it is felt that recommendations contained therein can be brought in during the present session, that course will be taken. At the same time I point out that the hon. gentleman has called upon us to have an election. That is not consistent with the suggestion he expresses now that we should bring in measures over and above those already covered by the speech from the throne.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): May I raise a point of order. I wonder, since we are starting a new session, if some restriction could be placed on those questions which are so phrased as to begin, "Would you care to comment on a newspaper report—?" Could the question not be framed directly to the minister with regard to something which is under his jurisdiction; otherwise we spend so much of our time commenting on what may be just a rumour appearing in a newspaper?

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): On the point of order that has been raised—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I cannot accept the point of order in general terms.

If any question which is asked is subject to what may be a pertinent objection which the house leader has raised, I would be very glad to entertain it in that way. Otherwise, it does not seem to be permissible to raise an objection in general.

AIR TRANSPORT

C.P.A.—APPROVAL OF FLIGHTS FROM WESTERN CANADA TO LONDON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. I wonder if the minister would care to comment on a report in this morning's press that Canada has asked for more time before opening the Anglo-Canadian air services agreement for renegotiation. Would the hon. gentleman comment on the position of the C.P.A. with regard to its bid to be designated as a carrier on the polar route to Britain?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): At the time of my discussion last November with Right Hon. Peter Thorneycroft, the British minister of aviation, it was agreed that a further exchange of views would be desirable in about two months. I have in fact recently communicated with Mr. Thorneycroft as part of a further exchange on these matters and I expect to hear from him shortly.

Meanwhile, officials are studying the problems involved with regard to the Canada-United Kingdom air agreement since I believe that arising out of my current exchange with Mr. Thorneycroft another round of talks will be arranged fairly soon during the coming weeks.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): A supplementary question. May I ask the Minister of Transport what the position is with reference to the bilateral agreement between Canada and the United States, talks in connection with which were started between the two countries last year and interrupted abruptly? I should like to know whether there is any chance of that agreement being renegotiated.

Mr. Balcer: Yes, the government hopes to be in a position to reopen those talks in the very near future.

Mr. Argue: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Can the minister tell the house whether C.P.A. and T.C.A. have now worked out co-operative plans for developing the routes that will be under renegotiation?

Mr. Balcer: No, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PERMISSION FOR FAMILIES TO JOIN SERVICE PERSONNEL ABROAD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence a question. In view of the concern in the minds of Canadian troops who were sent overseas last fall and the concern of their families at home, has any decision been reached or is any decision being contemplated so as to permit the families in Canada to join the husbands and fathers now serving in military establishments in France and Germany?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker. When special reinforcements were sent over to strengthen the air division and army brigade in Europe late last summer or early last fall their dependents did not accompany them and it was stated at that time that this matter would be reviewed between January and March of this year. That is being done and there will be a decision shortly.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—STATEMENT AS TO LAY-OFFS OF MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Is the minister now in a position to make some comment on the announcement by Dosco of a substantial reduction in the work force at their Wabana mine?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have an answer to the question asked me in this regard last Friday by the hon. member for Trinity-Conception (Mr. Tucker). The hon. member for St. John's East has, of course, indicated an interest in this matter and has conferred with me about it.

The Wabana iron ore mine of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation, Limited, known as Dosco, has been a traditional supplier of medium grade iron ore to Britain and western Europe since the turn of the century. In recent years the increasing availability of competitive higher grade ores, particularly from several countries in South America and Africa, has resulted in an oversupply of ore on the world market which has cut into Canadian sales abroad including those of Dosco. In addition, the European steel industry, and particularly that of Britain, will apparently be operating in the coming year at a level below that of 1961.

I have seen no reference to a shut-down at the Wabana mine, an expression which the hon. member for Trinity-Conception used. He also used the word "lay-off" which I believe fits better the situation involved.

While no positive statement has yet been made to my knowledge by the company about the number of miners that may be laid off, it seems highly probable that a substantial cut in the work force is contemplated and it would appear inevitable in view of present-day iron ore market conditions.

Several attempts have been made by the company in recent years with the assistance of my department to mechanize the Wabana mine and to improve the recovery and quality of the ore. Not all of these have proven successful.

To establish closer relations between overseas customers and Canadian ore producers, including Dosco, I understand that my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, is considering the organization of an iron ore trade mission to Europe which would be composed of senior representatives of the iron ore industry, the Department of Trade and Commerce and my department.

May I add that Bell island has been declared a labour surplus area. The federal government therefore provides complete removal expenses for men and their families who may find employment elsewhere. May I also add that the government of Newfoundland has recently announced the construction of a trade school on the island. This school will be eligible for substantial federal government assistance under the technical-vocational training agreement which was enacted to assist in situations such as exist on Bell island.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the hon. gentleman a supplementary question. Does the announcement that Bell island is a surplus labour area and the people will be assisted to move out of that area mean that the government has now embarked upon a policy of moving people out of the Atlantic provinces?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is the Liberal-Gordon policy.

Mr. Flynn: I entirely disagree with the interpretation that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate gives to the application of this act, which has done a lot of good.

[Mr. Flynn.]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SONS OF FREEDOM, B.C.—INQUIRY AS TO EMIGRATION TO BRAZIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Justice a question without any political implications that concerns some 2,000 of my constitutents. Has the minister received any request for co-operation or assistance from the attorney general of British Columbia with respect to the Sons of Freedom problem in general or to their emigration to Brazil in particular?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, not as yet. However, I have received from the attorney general of British Columbia by way of a report information of his knowledge of the activities of the Doukhobors in that connection. The report has also been sent to me. As yet matters have not progressed to the point where any positive action can be taken. In other words, the attorney general has been in touch but as yet there has been no formal request.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Can the Minister of Justice assure the house that the government will help the Sons of Freedom to move themselves from this country if they wish to do so?

Mr. Fulton: I am not in a position to give any such blanket assurance, Mr. Speaker. Until we know precisely what move may be contemplated and under what arrangements, we shall not be in a position to deal with it. However, I can remind the hon. gentleman and the house that, on an earlier occasion when another specific move was contemplated, this government in co-operation with the government of British Columbia made a concrete offer of assistance.

TRANSPORT

SPRINGHILL, N.S.—INQUIRY AS TO MAINTENANCE OF RAILWAY SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport this question. Despite the encouraging assurances he gave last September, is the railway from Springhill to Springhill Junction now being torn up?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Does the hon. member mean torn up by the company?

Mr. Pickersgill: By someone.

Mr. Balcer: I do not know, Mr. Speaker. I have not inspected that railway recently. However, I must say that discussions are still going on between the company and the provincial government.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have a supplementary question. Can the minister ascertain whether or not the railway is being torn up; if so, can he say whether the government has any proposal to stop it or whether this is, in fact, a part of the national development program?

Mr. Balcer: We made an offer to take over this railway if the provincial government would agree to pay for the maintenance of the said railway. Until the province accepts this proposal the railway is the property of the company.

FINANCE

REPORTED RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING EXCHANGE RATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the government given consideration to a return from a manipulated exchange rate to a true floating exchange rate as recommended by Mr. W. Earle McLaughlin, in the annual report of the Royal Bank of Canada.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): No return is necessary, Mr. Speaker, because the government has never adopted a manipulated rate policy at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister announced it in the budget speech.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not a manipulated rate.

TAXATION OF ADVERTISING ON FOREIGN TELEVISION STATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. McLennan (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. If advertisers in foreign magazines directed to the Canadian market are not allowed to deduct the cost of advertising for tax purposes, will the same regulation apply to those advertising on foreign radio and television stations when that advertising is directed to the Canadian market?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): This subject, of course, lies outside the scope of the report of the royal commission on publications and lies outside the scope of the announcement which the Prime Minister made in the house yesterday. So far as the subject is one to be considered on its own merits, I can only say that if any action were taken in that field it would be a matter for an announcement in the house at the proper time.

UNITED NATIONS

ANGOLA—REFERENCE TO CURRENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What is the government's attitude on the Angola question now before the United Nations with regard to atrocities against clergymen and known Protestant Christians? Does the minister intend to enter a vigorous protest in the United Nations debate now in progress?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The debate on the question of Angola is in progress in the United Nations. According to the last reports I have received, a resolution has not been tabled by the Afro-Asian nations. Once that resolution has been tabled, Canada will be in a position to decide what attitude to take.

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

QUEBEC—REPORTED CHANGE OF TOPOGRAPHICAL NAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): I have a question for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. I regret not having sent him notice of it but I feel confident that he is quite familiar with the problem. My question has to do with a controversy regarding the reversal of a decision reached last February to change the names of certain topographical features on the northern coast line of the province of Quebec. Can the minister inform the house why federal pressure was brought to bear to change the decision as reported in Le Devoir on Tuesday, January 16, 1962?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I did not hear the question. Would the hon. member repeat it?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question relates to something that is a fait accompli. He might well put it on the order paper or deal with it in debate.

AIRPORTS

SAULT STE. MARIE, ONT.—STATEMENT ON CONSTRUCTION OF TERMINAL BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): On Friday last the hon. member for Algoma West inquired as to when a start would be made on the construction of a permanent terminal building at the Sault Ste. Marie airport, and if it had been considered as a winter works project.

I am advised that when tenders were called for the permanent terminal building at the Sault Ste. Marie airport in the latter part of 1961, prices received were all very substantially above our estimates of cost for this project. Since a temporary terminal building is servicing the airport effectively, it was therefore decided to make an extensive investigation and review of the departmental plans and estimates. This review is now close to completion but will probably be subject to some modifications in the plan itself and to a fresh tender call later in the not too distant future.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SECRETARY OF STATE—REFERENCE TO ACTIVITIES OF QUEBEC LIQUOR POLICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State, in his capacity of minister responsible for the office of the Chief Electoral Officer. Has the minister asked or does he intend to ask the Chief Electoral Officer to conduct an inquiry into the part played by Quebec liquor police officers during the 1958 election, in the constituency of Bellechasse?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not think this matter comes under the jurisdiction of the Chief Electoral Officer. I believe that there is at present a case sub judice and, therefore, I do not feel that the hon. member's question should be answered.

SHIPPING

SAULT STE. MARIE, ONT.—REPORTED PLAN TO CONSTRUCT NEW LOCKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister care to comment on the press report that in the United States there are plans under way to construct new locks, particularly at Sault Ste. Marie, that would make the present seaway out of date. Would the minister care to comment on that part of the report which says that seaway engineers have already agreed to specifications for these new locks?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I will take this question as notice.

[Mr. Balcer.]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, January 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rodrigue Bourdages for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Pearson.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at the time of the adjournment I was dealing with the section of the speech from the throne that had to do with social justice. In order to commence my remarks today, I shall read that section:

> Your approval will be requested for an increase in the amount of the universal old age pension payable under the Old Age Security Act, and also for legislation to increase the amount to which the federal government will contribute under the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act.

When I spoke in the city of Toronto in 1957 I enunciated the new frontier policy, and so named it on behalf of the Conservative party. Following the example of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) yesterday, I will read a section of my remarks made at that time. I do not want him to have a monopoly on reading what he said on other occasions.

> The Prime Minister of Ontario has just said that human betterment is of the essence of government ...We intend to maintain all the social security measures. We intend to maintain a standard to keep pace with a rising productivity of this nation. In parliament and outside, we have condemned the meagre and niggardly assistance given to old age pensioners by the increase of 20 cents a day, which leaves them in a position where they have less purchasing power than they did in 1951. The same position applies to war pensioners and also to the retired civil servants.

At that time I felt the proper course to follow in connection with social security, particularly for older persons, was to make necessary adjustments on a cost of living basis. If that course were followed, then the amount of the increase to be given to the old age pensioners would be very, very small because one of the most remarkable contributions that has been made by this government since 1957 has been that we have been able to prevent inflation. We have been able to maintain the Canadian dollar and its purchasing power, a course which should have been adopted for several years prior to 1957 when the increase in the cost of living continued unabated to a very considerable extent.

I referred also in that speech to the war pensioners and to civil servants, and I might add by way of keeping the record clear, that this government has seen that these groups have received justice during the period we have been in office.

Now, having given the matter the very fullest consideration we have come to a conclusion, and legislation will be placed before the house. Old age pensions will be increased by $10 a month and the amount of increase we contribute to old age assistance, blind pensioners and disabled persons will be on the same basis.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: While those who represent the N.D.P. will naturally speak of this as being meagre—a "pittance" is the usual expression of the hon. member for Assiniboia applied to anything done in that connection—I would like someone to examine the situation in the province of Saskatchewan regarding social security measures for which the province could give extra assistance. He would find that while the members of that party are loud in their protestations in the House of Commons, yet in the province of Saskatchewan, the amounts paid by way of old age assistance and other forms of assistance are less than in some other provinces throughout the country.

I should also add that when that party came out in favour of $75 a month the Leader of the Opposition, speaking with the restraint which he displays from time to time, stated that such an amount was ridiculous and could not be provided.

Mr. Pearson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that the Prime Minister, speaking with the inaccuracy for which he is famous, has again misquoted me. I said that a sum of that magnitude applied after 65 years as well as the increase in amount, was irresponsible at this time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was before the hon. gentleman came out with his policy, which upon examination proved so nebulous. Its purpose was simply to mislead the old people of this country into believing that in one year after a change of government they would receive the full amount.

Mr. Pearson: So they will.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Its purpose was to make them believe that in one year after a change of government they would receive $75 a month but he, in November, said it could not be provided by any responsible government.

Mr. Pearson: It can and it will.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I intend to make some further references to the literature of the Liberal party which claims that the Liberals "have the answer." That is their 1962 slogan; but I am sure all the older people in the country will remember that in 1957 too the Liberals had the answer for them, the answer being an addition of $6. They are the same old group now as they were then, the same assortment that said $6 was enough in 1957. I shall say nothing further regarding social security now but will deal with it again when the measures are before the house.

Now, due to the interruption of the hon. member for Assiniboia last night I wish to make reference at somewhat greater length than I had intended to matters which I referred to earlier. That interruption will be found at page 75 of Hansard where the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) is reported as asking a question as to whether the speech from the throne would be interrupted this week "to deal with matters referred to earlier by the Prime Minister". It reads:

> Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I do not think we need to look too far ahead just yet. We will continue with the speech from the throne tomorrow.
> Mr. Argue: Shame. Let us make the payments. Come on.

He was referring to the acreage payments, and that brought to mind something he wants to forget, because he has adopted the attitude of speaking with authority for the farmers. However, I well remember the reply given by him on August 30, 1958, when we introduced the system of acreage payments. It is to be found on page 4348 of Hansard in the speech of the Leader of the Opposition who said:

> We are quite sure, on this side, that the grain producers, with that problem before them, will welcome this particular assistance, will welcome this particular grant though they may be disappointed in the amount. I have no doubt that when my hon. friend from Assiniboia gets up immediately after I conclude he will call it peanuts.
> Mr. Argue: I did that a couple of days ago. I shall call it a pittance today.

The hon. member now knows the extent to which the farmers of western Canada welcome the "pittance" of August, 1958 and that of January, 1962. They recognize this system is fair and is particularly helpful to the small farmers. It actually represents an amount equivalent to the two-price system being distributed, not on the bushel system, which would mean the larger farmers receiving a disproportionate amount, but in a manner that makes possible distribution among the small farmers in reasonable equality.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Last night when dealing with our wheat sales abroad I mentioned the tremendous increase that had taken place in export sales, not only in wheat but in other products. I think it should be placed on the record that concerning capital goods this government has encouraged long term financing of exports in order to ensure that we can successfully compete in other parts of the world. This long term financing of exports of capital goods was made possible by an amendment to the Export Credits Insurance Act in 1961, which provided $200 million for that purpose. Under this legislation contracts involving export sales of $41 million worth of capital goods have been concluded, and cabinet approval has been given to provide an additional $100 million. The speech from the throne, states that the government proposes to raise the ceiling from the present figure of $200 million on total funds available to finance the export of Canadian capital goods. All these things have been beneficial to Canada and are today paying dividends as shown in the national economic recovery.

In connection with wheat and livestock in general, there has been a farm cash income from cattle 10 per cent above that of 1960. With regard to dairy products there is a problem with the surplus of butter, and this is being studied. Income from dairy products for the first nine months of the year are higher than for the corresponding period a year earlier.

The export of wheat and wheat flour last year reached the very high level of 354 million bushels. I remember that when the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill), then minister of trade and commerce, stated some years ago that 300 million bushels would be the aim, this was ridiculed by the opposition. Yet in the year 1961 we achieved a level of more than 50 million bushels beyond what was estimated at that time.

The strengthening of Canada's position as the largest seller of wheat in the commercial markets of the world has come about as a consequence of tremendous sales efforts made by various departments of the government, in particular the departments of agriculture and trade and commerce. Our traditional markets remained strong in 1961, with sales to Japan reaching a record level.

I should add that I visited Japan in response to a repeated invitation. I stayed there for a period of four or five days. There is in Japan an interest in Canada, a recognition of this country and a realization that Japan is going to continue to take its place with the free nations of the world to maintain freedom and the economic strength of each and every member of the free world.

Heavy European purchases virtually exhausted our stocks of Durum wheat. Besides the sales that were made to China providing so much employment in Vancouver and other coast ports, sales were made to Poland and Czechoslovakia. Along with these booming sales we have experienced substantial increases in price. Not many months ago the price of wheat at Fort William was $1.67. It is now close to the international wheat agreement maximum price of $1.90. Contributing to this increase was the government's action in reducing the value of the Canadian dollar as compared with the United States dollar. This step brought about improvement in prices generally for agricultural products for export and increased the opportunities for Canadians to export. Further, no effort has been spared to lessen the effects of the severe drought in the west during the past year.

With regard to the payments estimated for 1961, cash farm income was $2.9 billion; realized gross income, $3.3 billion; realized net income $1.4 billion. These are all slightly above the corresponding figures for 1960 in spite of the sharply reduced output on the prairies.

I thought I ought to make reference to the agricultural situation, which was another matter to which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) did not refer. I am sure that as he travelled across Canada in his pilgrimages, he found everywhere appreciation for what this government has done to maintain agricultural prices in all parts of our country.

As I listened to the hon. gentleman yesterday I began to look back a few months. I looked back to that gathering of the seers in Kingston in September, 1960. That was a gathering to which I think more and more attention will be paid than in the past. I repeat that the slogan for the election, whenever it comes, is "The Liberals have the answer".

Mr. Pickersgill: "Live Grits for dead Tories".

Mr. Diefenbaker: I like interruptions from the hon. gentleman. Whenever I want to get a laugh anywhere across Canada I just mention his name. I was dealing with that meeting.

Mr. Hellyer: They cry when we mention yours.

An hon. Member: That is just little boy talk.

Mr. Pearson: Non-intervention.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to recall this because I know my hon. friends opposite do not want to hear about this conference. I intend to refer to it in some particular because those who were the heads of that conference, those who expressed themselves at that conference, are now the cornerstone of this new temple, the new Liberals who allegedly have the answer. The chairman was Walter Gordon.

Mr. Pearson: I thought they were the same old gang. Make up your mind.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then there were the various committees: Maurice Lamontagne, unemployment, fiscal policy, monetary policy; Mitchell Sharp, foreign policy; C. M. Drury, vice chairman; T. W. Kent, vice chairman. This is quite an interesting gathering. All these people are now receiving more than usual attention from the leadership of the Liberal party.

They gathered together there. Hon. gentlemen opposite speak about circuses. I think of that gathering at Kingston as the circus of the bureaucrats. The gathering of those who today are in the leadership of the Liberal party includes the very same people who in the days of war and from 1945 on paralysed parliament.

Mr. Pearson: Oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They paralysed parliament and interfered with the rights of the provinces. They believe that desirable economic objectives can only be attained by turning a nation into a disciplined and controlled unit. They believe that the principles they followed in the days of war and under those so-called emergency legislation enactments following the war are once more to be imposed upon the Canadian people.

I am going to refer in particular to quotations from the statements they made. We do not accept those principles. We have not lost, as they have, our belief in democracy. We believe that changes must take place; that they should be within the framework of the constitution and without invading that constitution. Some of the recommendations that were made at that conference would once more require the implementation of emergency legislation in Canada depriving the provinces of their rights and invading the jurisdiction of the provinces.

I think of these people. I am not going to name them all, but most will be able to identify those who treated parliament with patent and unconcealed contempt and deprived it of its rights, those men referred to as bureaucrats in a previous government. They were our masters. That is what we fought against year after year in this House of Commons. These are the men who want that power again and they have made it clear that they are ready to act in accordance with the statements they have made. These are the men who bypassed parliament, the men who found it easier to rule by order in council under so-called emergency legislation. These are the men represented by the statement made in the House of Commons on April 21, 1953 by the minister of trade and commerce of that day, whose deputy minister was Mitchell Sharp—"If we have overstepped our powers I make no apology for doing so". These are the bright bureaucratic boys. These were the dictators who dominated Canada. I shall refer, as well, to some of those recently acquired and the views which they expressed at that particular time.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) spoke yesterday as he always does about mumble and jumble and disorganization. I notice that Mr. Drury was one of this distinguished group. He was deputy minister of defence when Mr. Currie made his report. That report was made, it will be recalled, in 1953 and this is what Mr. Currie said:

> The conclusion I have come to is that while there has been a general breakdown in the system of administration, supervision and accounting—

"A general breakdown". This is one of the pilots of Liberalism of today. He said there had been a general breakdown in the system of administration, supervision and accounting in the whole department of defence. Then the report adds this:

> —it was only at Petawawa that extensive irregularities over a prolonged period of time took place.

I intend to refer now—not because I do not want to see outstanding men desirous of coming into public life—to some of them.

An hon. Member: Don't smear them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Everyone wants to see the best come into public life, but it is a strange, strange thing, this agglomeration, this grouping. You can see it forming every day. They had the answers in 1945-1957. It is the same old bunch. When I read that the Leader of the Opposition describes his party as the new Liberal party I look over and see the same old faces that were there in the old party. In the advertising, or in the resolutions, they are referred to now as the new Liberal party. Why is that? I suppose it is the sting of conscience. I ordinarily would refer here to those who constitute the philosophical wing were it not for the fact that the philosophical wing appears now to be in control.

I should refer first to Mr. Lamontagne. He is also a candidate. He made a speech at Kingston, and I intend to give the Leader of the Opposition an opportunity again to say whether or not he agrees with the views of his advisers—views which have been revealed so clearly at that conference and since. Mr. Lamontagne made a certain statement, and I have the quotation here. He advocated rigid state controls to achieve the triple objective of the Liberal party. Controls, and it could be done. That was the Lamontagne thesis. The Saskatoon Star-Phoenix, a paper which has certainly never been one of our major supporters, said of this:

A government sworn to all three objectives would need to rule with whips and scorpions.

So this is the new philosophy. The Hamilton Spectator said this was "back door socialism". That may be the reason why the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) is reported as having ambitions to join with some of the hon. gentlemen who are now sitting opposite me.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: After all—and the hon. member for Assiniboia is always most congenial—when his own party will not use the word "socialism" any more he is bound to go to some who hold that view.

Then the Quebec Chronicle-Telegraph said of those remarks of Mr. Lamontagne:

That lecture would have been worth its weight in gold to Fidel Castro.

These are the views which are broadcast across Canada. I intend to quote the references because these are the men who were in the background before. Now they are in the foreground. These are the philosophers, and we want to know the extent to which advisers who hold these views are listened to when they give advice. The Ottawa Journal had this to say about it:

The refrain which ran all through the Kingston conclave was the refrain of the state as a shepherd.

Among other things I have a list here of what is proposed. There is the price board. I ask the Leader of the Opposition whether he believes in this price control board, this so-called conciliation board. Is this the way in which the Liberals are going to control the economy of Canada?

The determination of monetary policy and the management of the public debt should be divorced. A special and permanent price conciliation board could be set up or this task could be assigned to an enlarged and stronger restrictive trade practices commission. It is desirable that those who enjoy special monopolistic controls within our so-called free and competitive system be submitted to a scheme of public supervision. Moreover, such a scheme appears necessary if we really want to prevent market power inflation and the unfair distribution of the national income which it creates.

I ask the Leader of the Opposition: are these the views of Mr. Lamontagne, an adviser today of the first rank? Do they represent the kind of Canada that the Liberal party would bring into being if it should obtain power; or are these just statements that were made for the information of the assembled conclave, not intended to be carried into effect? What are some of the views? The Victoria daily Times is not a paper that is regularly antipathetic to the Liberal party, and in an editorial it has this to say with reference to this speech:

—his speech at a recent unofficial conference of liberally-minded Canadians . . . does not represent Liberal party policy.

Then it goes on to say:

It seems unlikely that the Liberal party is ready to embrace what can only be considered a repudiation of its basic philosophy and its policy in office. . . . The board's ruling would not be final, a price increase could be effected even over the board's objection, but the intention of the device is to concentrate the power of the state and of public opinion against the increase. This is state control of prices by indirection and inevitably would lead in the end to direct control.

The Winnipeg Tribune points out the same situation. I am not going into detail but it says that this is a serious matter. Even the Winnipeg Free Press could not swallow this doctrine. It had this to say:

The power to legislate with regard to prices has a history which is of general interest in view of the proposal by Mr. Maurice Lamontagne at the recent conference of Liberals at Queen's University.

Then it says this:

Price fixing by governments must inevitably lead to confusion, uncertainty and inefficiency.

The Saskatoon Star-Phoenix says:

Disagreement continues to mount over certain policies and proposals advocated at the conference of liberally-minded individuals . . . A proposal made by Professor Maurice Lamontagne, economic adviser to Liberal leader L. B. Pearson, has evoked strong opposition. Mr. Lamontagne's proposal included the establishment of a federal board which would approve or oppose price increases by monopolies.

Then it says:

Apart from the fact that Mr. Lamontagne's proposal contravenes long-established Liberal policy—

That may be the reason for calling themselves the new Liberal party now.

—it points up the way in which the so-called "ginger group" . . . would dictate Liberal policy.

That is the dream of Mr. Lamontagne.

The Winnipeg Free Press said: this proposal means an attempt by the federal government to regulate so-called monopolies with regard to prices. The Quebec Chronicle-Telegraph takes the same view and says that this is a policy that is contrary to the principles of free enterprise and a denial of the principles of old Liberalism. Well, that is not all. Mr. Lamontagne occupies a central position and no doubt will be able to expound these doctrines in the days ahead.

Recently, however, there was another acquisition, Mr. Tom Kent, a very fine gentleman. He is a special assistant. I wonder whether he has the answers. I know that when the Leader of the Opposition appointed him he said, "he will serve in an anonymous and inarticulate capacity". Mr. Lamontagne was not in that position. Mr. Kent has the answers, 67 pages of them, which he placed before this conference. If his doctrine is not acceptable, why is it that he is taken into the family as an adviser? I do not have to make any observations about it. The Regina Leader-Post said this:

. . . the inarticulate Mr. Kent has already acquired considerable prominence for his radical views and for his advocacy of planning and restrictions imposed on business by government. In his silent service behind the Liberal throne, the assumption is Mr. Kent will attempt to mould Liberal policies to conform with his personal views. This cannot be other than disturbing to many faithful followers of the Liberal party.

I understand that. That is why it is new. The new Liberal party has the answers.

Their Liberalism has moved a long way from outmoded laissez faire concepts. They acknowledge the state has a role to play in safeguarding the public from abuses in our private enterprise economy. But their thinking has not reached the extreme position held by Mr. Kent that private business and the corporations are speeding to their doom and desperately need rescuing through government intervention.

I am going to give the Leader of the Opposition an opportunity to clarify this matter so that we will understand exactly the degree to which these views constitute the reason for the program, "The Liberals Have the Answer", which is being distributed across Canada.

Mr. Kent pointed to expenditures "on advertising and merchandising generally" for immediate government scrutiny.

He is going to get all the papers in Canada under his control.

While not enlarging on what "merchandizing generally" covered—

I am still quoting from the Regina Leader-Post which is often quoted as a model of correctness.

—he singled out advertising, proposing that by stages expenditures in this category become non-deductible for income tax purposes. Later, he hedged somewhat in declaring he did not pretend to complete certainty that "this is the right thing to do." But he added he was "quite sure that it would yield great benefits" in averting the present alleged waste of money and talents in the stimulation of "unimportant wants."

Is that the Liberal party concept?

Mr. Kent evidently is among those who would save the people from their own follies in spending their money as they desire. He suggested that with less spent on "unimportant wants"—

That is, advertising, merchandising.

—there would be more money "for schools and the rest." This, in turn, suggests the tax collector will gather the money the people cease to spend foolishly for use "for schools and the rest."

Mr. Kent expressed the somewhat arresting view that since advertising expenses are deductible before profits are determined, the government in effect is subsidizing advertising.

I want to give the Leader of the Opposition this chance. Are the views of Mr. Lamontagne and Mr. Kent the views of the new Liberal party? Does he accept them? I am going to be very reasonable. He can pick whichever horn of the dilemma he wants. He can pick the most comfortable of these two horns. Let me read on.

To one holding Mr. Kent's views, it would be but a short hop into a socialized state.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I see a smile on the face of the house leader of the N.D.P., and there is reason for that smile. Listen to the next sentence.

It seems that Mr. Kent would be more at home as a consultant to a party other than the Liberal party.

I am going to read some excerpts from this philosophy, for this was a gathering of the erstwhile bureaucrats of the war period and the period immediately thereafter and others variously gathered together. These are some of the ideas. Would there be any increase in social security if Mr. Kent had anything to do with it? I refer to page 39, and this is a long statement, Mr. Speaker. This is what he says:

The measures I have suggested do not include any increase in general social payments such as family allowances and pensions. If we are to maintain that exclusion, as I believe we should, because other measures are far more urgent—we must recognize that there are many welfare problems hardly touched.

Then he comes out with his views about taxes. The Leader of the Opposition says that taxes are too high. May I say that there are 75,000 Canadians paying less income tax today than they were paying when we came into office.

An hon. Member: Seventy five per cent.

Mr. Pearson: Get the facts straight.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am grateful for the assistance of hon. gentlemen opposite. Seventy five per cent of Canadian income taxpayers are paying less today than they were paying when this government came into office. I speak to the Leader of the Opposition through you, Mr. Speaker, and remind him of the words—the wise words, as I think they were once referred to by the Leader of the Opposition—of Mr. Kent. Let me read what he has to say about taxation:

I am not, of course, arguing that we owe all this to high taxes . . . But the fact is that high taxes have not prevented an economic performance that is, by all previous standards, good.

That was in September, 1960.

The burden of proof is on those who claim that taxes at the present level do economic damage, compared with what would happen if governments spent less and individuals were able to spend more . . . It follows that, while a sharp rise in tax rates certainly has some "disincentive" effect at first, it will weaken, not strengthen, as people grow accustomed to the new tax levels.

This is the philosophy of the new Liberal party, the Liberal party that, it is said, has the answer.

It is hard, in other words, to see that taxation at the levels to which we are now accustomed exercises any large restraining influence on economic activities.

I simply quote these observations by way of answer to some of the statements that were made by the hon. gentleman. The quotation continues:

In short, the conventional arguments about the anti-productive effects of taxation are unacceptable.

Then he goes on to say this:

We have, in other words, to ensure that our economy does in fact work successfully—fairly, efficiently, inventively—while sustaining a bigger tax burden.

Is that the new Liberal party policy? Is that the answer they have? Then he comes out with this idea. The people across Canada will be interested to learn that the chief adviser to the Leader of the Opposition who has now been taken unto his bosom in an even closer relationship, said this:

The major step to greater equality lies, however, in steeper taxation of inheritances.

Is that the new Liberal answer? Is that what is meant when it is said that the Liberal party has the answer? Then he explains the statement:

There is no justification for such large inequalities of opportunity as survive our present succession duties and gift taxes.

Is that one of the answers they have? He continues:

The proper basis of taxation is, I suggest, the individual's total receipts, in inheritance and gifts, from one source or several; and beyond some modest total, they should be taxed on a considerably steeper scale than now operates.

I again give the Leader of the Opposition the opportunity of saying whether this is the philosophy of the new Liberal party. If not, I cannot understand the appointment of advisers who hold to doctrines that are so economically difficult to accept.

Then we come to advertising:

The only solution—

Everything is swept away there.

—therefore lies through public policy. It is the proper role of government to step in and alter the incentives—not to interfere and lay down detailed instructions about what should be done or not done, but simply to make advertising less attractive.

What is this doctrine enunciated by a man who has occupied such positions as the editorship of the Free Press? Is this the doctrine that we are to have placed before the people of Canada or is it going to be kept in the background? I think one can guess the answer to that question. He states further:

In principle, there is no reason why advertising should not be taxed, like liquor or gasoline or thousands of other useful things . . . the better first approach probably is to refuse to allow advertising, and perhaps other merchandising expenditures, for tax purposes.

Here in my hand I hold material bearing the slogan "The Liberals have the answer". I hope the Leader of the Opposition will tell us the degree to which he, Mr. Kent, and Mr. Lamontagne diverge. This is strange doctrine. We continue on from there. If we get away from allowing advertising as a deduction, these are the great results that will follow:

If, for example, we did reduce advertising, it would thereby become easier also to raise existing taxes on consumption—liquor revenues, gas tax, vehicle licences, real property taxes, and general sales tax.

Do you see the unveiling of this remarkable economic charter of Canada's Liberalism? If we did this we would be able to increase liquor revenue, gas taxes and finally the sales tax. Then he continues:

Our provincial premiers could better have their day.

Then he goes on to say this:

Having mentioned property taxes, which so closely affect the most poverty stricken of our three levels of government, I would say that here increases seem very reasonable.

Then he finally sums it all up in this way:

While a general capital gains tax has many undesirable features, and certainly is not to be preferred to increased taxation of inheritance, there is a very great deal to be said for a specific tax on increments in property values.

Is that the new financial direction of the new Liberal party? I could give a number of quotations with regard to this matter but I do not think it is necessary. I have simply placed before you, Mr. Speaker, the basic doctrine and the basic supports that stand behind the Leader of the Opposition and his advisers who daily or regularly place these views before him. Speaking of circuses, may I say that I wish to see the Leader of the Opposition perform. Does he accept the views of Mr. Lamontagne and of Mr. Kent? Again I give him a choice. He can say yes or he can say no. That will be a performance compared with which the acrobatics exhibition one could see in any circus would appear most modest. I hope the Leader of the Opposition will reply at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Pearson: Will the Prime Minister turn around? We cannot hear him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: These views are economic nonsense. That is all they are.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has, in his somewhat agitated and personal attack on certain persons who cannot defend themselves in this house, asked me a question. I am asking him if he would like an answer to the question now?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

Mr. Pearson: I was asked certain questions about statements expressed by individuals at a conference at Queen's University some years ago. The Prime Minister, being the head of the Tory government, will have a very difficult time understanding, but this congress—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not an answer to the question. Do you approve of these statements or do you not?

Mr. Pearson: I want to answer the question. I said the Prime Minister may have difficulty in understanding this, but at this conference it was made clear that there would be a free, open and full discussion and the people would be speaking there in their individual, personal capacities. Therefore—sit down, Mr. Prime Minister, sit down—it would be just as foolish for the Prime Minister to assume that those who made statements at that conference were speaking—be calm, sir—that those who were speaking at that time were laying down policies for the Liberal party as it would be for me to assume that Mr. John Fisher, in his statements in earlier years, was reflecting the views of the Tory government today.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have been waiting for an answer. He would not answer the question. How could he answer it and not accept people with doctrines which he does not uphold, because he is afraid to say he agrees with them. These people have become the philosophic segment of the Liberal party and the advisers to the Leader of the Opposition. They were appointed, at least Mr. Kent was, since they expounded these views. The answer of the Leader of the Opposition makes it clear what the situation is. In spite of the views that they hold and held and declared, he says they do not necessarily represent his views but he appoints them as advisers. About what are they advising him? Why get advice on matters which you are not going to accept? I leave it to the common sense of the house and the country to answer that question. Now, we begin to see something of the meaning of the new Liberal party.

Mr. Pearson: Before the Prime Minister leaves this, I wonder if he would accept a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I made way for the hon. gentleman, but instead of answering he blustered.

Now then, Mr. Speaker, I come to one other matter and that is the prophecies the Leader of the Opposition has made. You know, he is a man of tremendous defiance. In 1958, he said "Bring on the election; the sooner the better". Then, when we brought it on he said, "Well, I did not expect you to do that."

Mr. Pearson: Why are you always looking back? Look ahead.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is easy to be defiant when it is vocal defiance. I want to go back over the predictions.

Mr. Pearson: You are always going back look ahead.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to read some of the predictions in 1958—"by their words you shall judge them". Speaking in Vancouver in February, 1958, he said:

> The Liberal party is going to make gains in every province.

If they come as close next time as after these prophecies that were being made, we will be quite satisfied. On February 22, 1958, at Cobourg, the Leader of the Opposition was asked to forecast the next federal cabinet. He said, "All I can tell you is it will be Liberal." Then, on March 26, we find this quotation in the Toronto Globe and Mail:

> In the past two weeks there has been a great change in public opinion in favour of the Liberals.

A little later he said:

> I have found a great revival in the party, a new spirit of energy and enthusiasm . . . we have a future.

They also have a past. At another point, he said:

> I have been stimulated and encouraged by what can only be called a revival of Liberalism.

On November 6, 1957, he said:

> The Liberal party has nothing to worry about in facing the voters in the next dominion election.

Then, when they are talking about the situation in one province, Quebec, it is well to go back to see what they were saying. I am not going to mention the prophecies of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) with regard to Saskatchewan. I have them here.

Mr. Argue: I am being overlooked.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to mention the prophecies with regard to Quebec because the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) makes prophecies regularly. About two weeks before the election the hon. member for Essex East was at Westmount. I do not know whether or not he had any of the frontbenchers with him at that time. However, he charged that rumours started by the Tories that the Liberal party had been weakening in Quebec province were sheer propaganda and not substantiated by facts. He said:

> Actually, we not only expect to get all our seats back but expect to gain two additional ones.

I read this simply for the purpose of keeping the record clear as to the kind of prophecy that was made then. Finally, at Chambly, Quebec, the hon. member for Essex East went on to say this:

> Not only will we hold all our seats in Quebec but we will take two more.

He was at least consistent at that time. I have before me, but I am not going to use it, an article that appeared in the Windsor daily Star. If the hon. member were here I might use it because it deals with that matter, too.

My colleagues, Mr. Speaker, will deal with the various matters with which I have not dealt.

Mr. Pearson: What is to be dealt with?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have not too greatly exceeded the length of time taken by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Chevrier: But you got lost several times.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We have our problems, and they are joint problems. We have tried to meet those problems honestly and fairly. Yes, I will quote from the Windsor daily Star:

> We don't know what the outcome of the next election will be. We do know that the majority of the campaign promises made by the Tories have been carried out.

If one looks around the world, one sees the situation in the United Kingdom today. There, with the opening of parliament, strong men having strong views expressed them. In the United States, in Australia and in other countries they have gone through similar difficulties.

> The party in power has made blunders—they all do. But so far, there has been no pipe line "closure", no horses on the army payroll and—

Mr. Pickersgill: Your horses are in the Senate.

Mr. Diefenbaker:

> —no contempt for the people shown by many Liberals who held power for more than 20 years and now brand as stupid those Canadians who sincerely felt it was time for a change. In this man's opinion, the major weakness of the opposition, has been its willingness to be cry-babies, destructive critics but weak on solutions.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I have had the opportunity on former occasions, Mr. Speaker, to follow the Prime Minister in the throne speech debate and have often wondered what hour I might get in. On this occasion I almost wondered which day I was going to get in. The hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin) has just said I was lucky to get in at all, that the Prime Minister might have taken up the whole of the eight days in view of the reduction in the length of time allowed for the debate. Well, in any event, we have had the longest speech that the Prime Minister has yet delivered in the House of Commons.

Mr. Balcer: And the best.

Mr. Argue: But, so far as setting forth an economic program for the full development of Canadian resources, it has been the most barren. Our country has stagnated under the Conservative government in the last few years, and there has been more unemployment in this post-war period than in any similar period since the end of the war. We have already had statistics placed on the record showing by way of real per capita income how our country has been standing still, and in some years slipping backwards.

If one relates the loss of any increase in real incomes in Canada, then I would suggest that on a per capita basis Canadians have been losing at least $40 to $50 per year in incomes each and every year that this government has been in office. In 1957 real per capita purchasing power in Canada, based on constant 1949 dollars was $1,437. In the next year, 1958, this had dropped to $1,414, a decrease of $23. The year 1959 was almost the same, with more stagnation, more marking down, more indecision and ineffectiveness on the part of the government. Per capita income then was just $1,426, a meagre increase of $12, and in 1960 it was $1,425, a drop of $1 per person in real per capita purchasing power. The figures for 1961 are not available but the change in the gross national product, which would indicate an increase of some 1.3 per cent in real incomes, is still inadequate and is a very small increase in the real standards of living.

Before the Conservative government took office one heard criticism from time to time by working people that they were paying too much into the unemployment insurance fund, and they were objecting to paying into a fund that seemed to be getting larger and larger and larger. They asked why they should contribute to it since it always seemed to be growing; but now that criticism has ended. When this government came into office the fund began to wither away. So much unemployment created such a tremendous drain on the fund that a surplus of $926 million on December 31, 1956, is apparently in imminent danger of being wiped out altogether.

What does the government say about this. In the throne speech it is stated:

> My government will also ask you to appropriate monies required in the unemployment insurance fund to safeguard the rights of workers until the report of the special committee inquiring into the unemployment insurance program has been received and can be acted upon.

That is an indication of a further $1 billion cost by this government to the people of Canada.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has followed a regular procedure since taking office in allowing the Governor General the most meagre latitude in presenting the speech from the throne, after which the Prime Minister comes into the house and, day after day, speech after speech, does his best to garner the greatest possible amount of publicity. This year has been no exception. The Prime Minister has been doing it in stages. He was able to get in his prepared text last night before six o'clock and thus was able to scoop the news. He was able to get in more announcements in the evening and also some announcements this morning, but what he did not tell us is by what means the Canadian economy will be called upon to meet the many worth-while expenditures which he has announced.

He has given us one side of the financial ledger. He has said these are some of the expenditures his government is recommending. I am not objecting to the expenditures; I am in favour of them, but he has not been candid with the Canadian people when he has not told us how these expenditures in general would be met. One would expect the Minister of Finance to do so in a budget, and I suggest this government owes it to the Canadian people to present a budget in this parliament before an election is announced.

We are in favour of the legislation that the Prime Minister has announced and which is designed to bring about certain improvements which we have advocated for many years, and we are prepared today, tomorrow, and for the balance of the eight-day throne speech debate to set aside the regular business of the house so that we can go ahead with some of the measures that have been announced.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) decides when the election will be held. We suggest that the legislation that has been forecast should be presented to parliament immediately so that the Canadian people will be assured that these measures are on the statute books.

We suggest further that the government should present its budget. When it has presented the legislation forecast and the budget, we shall then welcome an election or as soon thereafter as the government may care to call it. But we do not want any repetition of promises. We feel the Canadian public have a right to know how the moneys will be raised to meet the many important expenditures that are being announced.

Much has been said in this debate about Canada's position in external trade and the handling of the discussions with the United Kingdom surrounding the United Kingdom's proposal to join the European common market. Two different approaches have been taken. One thing is certain, the United Kingdom's plan to join the European common market does bring into very serious question the ability of Canada to hold the United Kingdom market for important products in the years ahead.

I have a publication here credited to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) and circulated through his department. It points out that the European common market will have very high tariffs against many Canadian products—a tariff against Canadian wheat of 20 per cent; against flour of 30 per cent; against tobacco of 30 per cent; against plywood of 15 per cent; against maple flooring of 10 per cent, and so on, right through many products that are most important to Canada's welfare.

This is the context in which the government is negotiating with the United Kingdom with regard to its entry into the European common market. We do not know what the outcome of these negotiations will be. We feel that it does in fact threaten the economic future of the Canadian nation. We feel there has to be some association of Canada with the European common market so that this huge market, this market of western nations, this market where standards of living are increasing, will be available to Canadian products.

We point out strongly that Canada had an opportunity in October, 1957 to do something about this question of our success in holding the United Kingdom market, when the free trade offer to Canada was made by the United Kingdom. We had a chance then to get into a common market between the United Kingdom and Canada. We had a chance then to secure the market in the United Kingdom for Canadian products. This government muffed the chance. This government failed. This government was too shortsighted to enunciate a policy. Following this, Britain has come to the conclusion that it has no choice but to join the European common market. Whatever serious repercussions may follow for Canadian trade, much of the blame can be laid at the doorstep of this administration which failed to take appropriate action when the far reaching proposal of a free trade area between the United Kingdom and Canada was made.

There are many things in the speech from the throne with which we agree. There are many things that need further clarification. There is one statement which reads as follows:

> My government will ask you to take steps to ensure that the forthcoming redistribution of electoral districts is made in an equitable manner upon an objective basis.

We have heard a great deal about independent bodies. I take it the Prime Minister is suggesting that the method for the redistribution of seats in the House of Commons will be taken out of the hands of the House of Commons and given, at least in the first stages, to a so-called independent body. Let us hope it is independent. Let us hope it is not loaded with a bunch of Tory politicians. It is fine to say we are going to have an independent body. We shall look at the personnel of the independent body when it is appointed and if we think it is independent, we shall be pleased.

I suggest to the Prime Minister that if he wants an independent body he should have consultation with the other political parties in this country to try to work out an approved board or commission which will not be merely a plaything or in danger of being a plaything of the government, but will in fact have the confidence of the members of all parties in the house.

An hon. Member: Put Lamontagne on it.

Mr. Argue: We suggest also that in making this proposal the Prime Minister has failed to say what will happen in Saskatchewan. We read that Saskatchewan is likely to lose four seats.

An hon. Member: A poor government out there.

Mr. Argue: Somebody says, "A poor government out there". Will any measure be taken by this government or will any proposal be put before parliament that will reduce the loss to Saskatchewan in any redistribution that will take place? That is important. That question has not been answered. A former administration did something to reduce the loss of seats in that province. One would expect nothing less from the Prime Minister, who comes from Saskatchewan, than was given to that province by way of protection by a former administration.

We hear a great deal about national unity and it behoves all of us in the House of Commons to do everything we can to bring about a sense of national unity and of national purpose in this country. We would be blind if we did not realize that in the province of Quebec there are important sections which feel they should go the whole way by becoming a separate nation and withdrawing from confederation, which in my judgment has proven so successful in most respects over the years.

What is this government doing to suggest to the people of Quebec, to those whose mother tongue is French, that they have equal rights in our nation? I cannot say whether there is anything in the press reports that there was a paragraph in the speech from the throne that was to make the announcement that legislation would be brought in to provide bilingual cheques. It is said by the people in Quebec who take rather extreme views on certain of these questions that this will do very little to bring about their renewed confidence in confederation. That may be right. But why hesitate on a small matter—if this is a relatively small matter—with regard to the things necessary to bring about greater unity in our country? Parliament passed a bill on second reading on January 31, 1958 to provide for this, with only nine members opposing it. Is it significant that every single one was a Conservative? Why has not action been taken to bring about this very simple step forward of bilingual cheques?

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose for the luncheon recess I was saying that the government had not moved forward in such a way as to give proper recognition of the bicultural nature of this country. The journey of the cabinet to Quebec city has already been highlighted in this debate. Very little came of that journey. One of the things that Canadians looked for was a recognition by the Prime Minister that members of the cabinet from the province of Quebec should take a more leading role. Consider the representation from the province of Quebec in this cabinet. We find one cabinet minister in the front row and five in the second. With the possible exception of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer), who is not known to be particularly close to the Prime Minister, the people of the province of Quebec see their ministers in possession of very junior portfolios. I suggest this is one of the ways in which the Prime Minister has failed to give proper recognition to the people of Quebec and to the bicultural and bilingual nature of our country.

The Prime Minister announced this morning that we are to see some increase in the old age pensions—an increase of $10 a month. That is welcome. It is long overdue. The policy of this party in this regard is clear. We say the minimum pension should be $75 a month and that on the basis of this minimum should be built up an adequate pension system. We thought this was perhaps what the government had in mind but it appears from the letter addressed to the premier of Ontario, which was tabled, that the government does not have in mind a general, comprehensive old age retirement plan but rather a plan in which a further means test will be used—a plan which will not embrace in any way those who are now covered by private pensions. We shall have some further remarks to make on this subject if and when the government gives us the advantage of seeing this legislation. As we see it now from the details contained in the letter, it would appear to be inadequate in many respects.

We regret that at this session the government has failed to move forward in the field of health insurance. I have an amendment which I wish to move at the conclusion of my remarks and this will make it clear that we feel the government should be moving forward to provide a prepaid medical care program for Canadians.

The Prime Minister spent some time dealing with the government's program for agriculture. He repeated time and time again in his presentation that the government program for agriculture was designed to assist the small farmer. I suggest that the general, overall program for agriculture is inadequate. It is hesitant and it does nothing to help farmers even small farmers in any particular fashion. I ask the Prime Minister: where are the deficiency payments for hogs? These were promised. We even had legislation. Where are the deficiency payments for eggs? The last was made in the fall of 1960. Egg prices have been scandalously low and still are scandalously low. Many farmers have marketed hogs and obtained prices less than the government's stated prices. What the government has done, through the Agricultural Prices Support Act, is to place these products on the open market and let the prices go as low as the market will allow. Where is the support price for poultry? There is no effective support price for hogs, eggs or poultry yet these are the products which many small farmers produce and in respect of which they desire support by way of price stabilization.

How does the government's program to take feed grain away from the wheat board help small farmers? It has, in fact, worked to the detriment of small farmers by making it impossible for the wheat board to control the sale of feed grains. As far as all farmers are concerned, this government is following the same course as it has in so many other fields—a lot of legislation, a lot of words, a lot of window dressing but very little by way of real benefit.

The Prime Minister says we are going to get some acreage payments. The day parliament opened he said he wanted the debate on the speech from the throne set aside at an early date. Then he talked for two days. We could have dealt with this matter yesterday, but he was talking. We could have taken it today, but he was still talking. He has not even said he would act tomorrow. Apparently he has changed his mind; he thinks there is no hurry now. The speech from the throne says that these payments are to be made because there was a drought. The matter is put in these words:

> The drought in the prairie provinces during 1961 has resulted in severe losses, however, and you will be asked to provide assistance by means of acreage payments to the farmers who have been affected.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) comes into the house and in the light of the statement in the speech from the throne says that the acreage payments are to be in compensation for a two price system. Which is it? Or should I venture to suggest that there are going to be two acreage payments? There should be, one because there has been a drought—that is what the speech from the throne says—and the other because there should be compensation for the low price of wheat going into the domestic market.

The drought did not happen this winter; it happened last summer. The Prime Minister went out to check on the crop situation. He flew out and landed somewhere in northern Saskatchewan. He apparently looked at one or two crops of wheat and he issued a statement. He said that he was very pleased that crop conditions were not nearly as bad as he had expected. He landed where there was a crop but he did not go to the southern part the province where, throughout many areas, the yield was zero. There was no crop at all.

He sent the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) out a little later to check on the crop. Where did he go? He landed at Riceton and the television cameras were there, these press and television people who never look after the Minister of Agriculture according to the minister. They were right with him. They went to the farm of Gordon Brown of Riceton and the minister had his picture taken, in a dry area where many farmers had no crop, in front of a 20,000 bushel pile of wheat.

This tremendous publicity was spread across Canada. I am sure a lot of people in eastern Canada thought that the farmers of western Canada were simply crying once again and said to themselves, "Look at the great crop". Because the weather was hot the Minister of Agriculture had his picture taken with his shirt off. He may lose more than his shirt in the weeks ahead, but all this was very misleading propaganda.

The Minister of Agriculture then said and the Prime Minister agreed that the reason for not making acreage payments then was that the wheat board machinery was so busy turning out cheques for the farmers. If you want a laugh, that is all you have to tell the farmers. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture did not say as they should have that the wheat board could not print the cheques because there was no money. Surely it is a fundamental principle of parliamentary control of the purse that parliament has to vote the money first whether or not the machinery to print the cheques is working. Parliament was not asked last fall to provide the money. The Minister of Agriculture says that the machinery has broken down.

Mr. Pickersgill: The whole government has.

Mr. Argue: The machinery might have worked overtime. The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that here we have more misleading statements and further lack of action. Belatedly the Prime Minister now says, "We will do it; we will set aside the business of the house". The opposition say, "fine, let us do it immediately", but last night the leader of the house said, "Well, there is time; we will do it later".

We want action in this field and we want it now. I suggest that there should be a further and substantial increase in prairie farm assistance payments to compensate for crop failure, as well as the acreage payments to which the Prime Minister has referred.

The government takes credit for selling a lot of wheat and a lot of wheat has been sold. But other countries are doing fairly well too. Australia has been selling wheat to China. From December 1, 1960, to October 28, 1961, Australia sold 71 million bushels of wheat to China. In a much longer period, Canada sold 51 million bushels of wheat to China. Australia has done better. In the case of India, Australia sold 14 million bushels of wheat within that period of time while in the last crop year Canada sold less than 4 million bushels.

In the face of this kind of record the Minister of Agriculture was in Rome and he was going to go to the iron curtain countries. It has already been placed on the record by Victor Mackie of the Winnipeg Free Press that the Minister of Agriculture said he did not have time to sell any wheat because the Prime Minister wanted him to come home and go out on the hustings to make political campaign speeches across the country.

China has not bought any flour under the agreement. When some of us suggested that this was not a firm contract the government said, "Certainly it is a firm contract; China will take it". But China has not taken any flour. Mr. Mackie quotes the Minister of Agriculture as using these words:

> It is our attitude that there is no breach of contract by the Chinese if they do not take flour.

In other words, there would be no breach of contract if they did not take anything, because there was no contract. It was merely an exchange of letters which would result in a sale of wheat if the price is right, if we have the wheat, and if China wants it. There is a great job to be done in continuing to sell our wheat and I suggest that the Prime Minister would have been much better advised if he had allowed the Minister of Agriculture to go behind the iron curtain to continue to try to sell more wheat even to iron curtain countries, even to countries to which this government provides no diplomatic recognition.

What is the government doing for the small farmers? They said they were going to do a great deal. So far we have had no acreage payments. So far the debate on the speech from the throne has not been set aside to provide such payments. They say they have protected the farmers by their crop insurance scheme. In 1961 because of the drought net income from agriculture in the province of Saskatchewan fell to $122 million from $354 million, a drop of two thirds in one year because of the crop failure.

Where is the crop insurance plan? Oh, it is on the statute books. You can read it. It is there. It sounds good but very few farmers are able to afford it. The rates are too high. In the province of Manitoba about 25 per cent of the farmers are under the scheme. In Saskatchewan only 197 farmers out of 100,000 felt last year that they could afford the premiums under the act. There is little possibility of this legislation being used in any comprehensive way unless further and substantial amendments are made by the government so that the premiums may be reduced and so that there will be a reinsurance feature in order that in a time of widespread crop failure the costs may be borne not merely by provincial governments but also in some measure by the federal government. We have had a lot of window dressing and a lot of things are being said, but not much is being done.

We had a controversy in the house last year, Mr. Speaker, about a certain pamphlet printed by the Department of Agriculture entitled "ARDA". It was distributed before the legislation was passed by the house. It was such a wonderful program that they distributed the literature on it early. The resolution was presented in the house on December 15, 1960. The minister was going to act. He was in a hurry. On May 22, 1961, he said, as found on page 5195 of Hansard:

—I hope in this year 1961, a minimum of at least one tentative agreement in each province for at least one pilot area and, I hope, several in each province.

My information is that not one agreement has been signed, not one.

Mr. Pickersgill: Too busy on the hustings.

Mr. Argue: But the literature is printed and propaganda is spread across the country. Apparently the government is more interested in propaganda in respect of their legislation than they are in actually doing anything. ARDA was introduced in the house in December, 1960, and up to now, January 1962, not one single tentative agreement has been signed. The government just appointed the director a few weeks ago. You see, Mr. Speaker, as long as the propaganda is in the offices of the agricultural representatives across the country and the government can spread their propaganda before the election, the small farmers about whom the Prime Minister waxes so eloquently can go without any of the benefits that might otherwise be available to them under the Agriculture Rehabilitation and Development Act. We are looking for action. There has been a profuse amount of window dressing but in many respects that I have detailed this afternoon this government has failed the small farmers, to say nothing of intermediate or larger farmers. We shall await further statements from the government. But if the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) wishes these payments to be made, they can be put through this house without any further delay.

In the face of all the failings of the government that I have enumerated, Mr. Speaker, I wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge):

That the amendment be amended by inserting the following words after the word 'country':

"including the failure to promote the planned development of our resources, sound monetary, fiscal, investment and trade policies which will develop our economy so as to provide:

1. expanding export markets for agricultural and industrial production;

2. full employment;

3. and, in co-operation with the provinces, a prepaid medical care program for all Canadians; and for these reasons"

The amendment as amended will therefore read as follows:

We respectfully affirm that Your Excellency's advisers, because of their continuing failure to bring forward policies to deal with the real problems confronting this country, including the failure to promote the planned development of our resources, sound monetary, fiscal, investment and trade policies which will develop our economy so as to provide:

1. expanding export markets for agricultural and industrial production;

2. full employment;

3. and, in co-operation with the provinces a prepaid medical care program for all Canadians; and for these reasons do not deserve the confidence of the House of Commons.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to follow the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) in congratulating the mover (Mr. Bourdages) and the seconder (Mr. Browne, Vancouver-Kingsway), of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I feel sure that all hon. members of the house will agree that they did an excellent job. They spoke clearly, concisely and objectively. I am sure that the people in their constituencies will feel as proud of them as we who are members of the same party felt of them on Friday afternoon.

Judging by the speeches of the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the C.C.F. party, there is a distinct lack of knowledge on the part of the opposition with regard to the soundness of the Canadian economy today, and of our economic prospects for this year which we are just entering. Hence I thought that I should like to take a few minutes of the time of the house, Mr. Speaker, in order to speak about economic matters under five headings, namely

(1) economic indicators which show the progress which our economy has made during the past year; (2) what the government has done, and is doing, to assist our producers; (3) Britain's negotiations for entering the common market; (4) the progress which our economy has made since we formed the government in 1957; and (5) the economic outlook for 1962.

First of all, then, I should like to speak about the economic indicators which show where our economy has been going during the past year. The figures I shall quote are from the dominion bureau of statistics, and in every case are the latest figures available from the bureau.

1. Gross National Product: In the third quarter of 1961, the gross national product reached a high of $37.4 billion on a seasonally adjusted basis. This was an increase of nearly $1 billion from its second quarter level, and represents a gain of 4 per cent over the same period a year earlier.

2. Consumer Spending: Consumer spending continued upward during the past year, and in the third quarter, was 4 per cent higher than in the third quarter a year ago.

3. Exports: Exports of goods and services advanced at an accelerated pace during the past year, rising by 2 per cent from the first to the second quarter, and by 6 per cent from the second to the third quarter. As the Prime Minister pointed out in his very eloquent and able presentation to the house, merchandise exports for the first ten months of the year showed an increase of 7.2 per cent from the same period a year earlier. In the latest three months comparison, the increase was twice as great, namely 14 per cent.

4. Industrial Production: A substantial advance has taken place in industrial production since March of 1961, and during the last three months for which figures are available—August, September and October—the index of industrial production was 6 per cent higher than a year earlier.

5. Personal Incomes: The trend in total personal income gathered strength as the pace of business quickened during the year. Following a moderate increase in the second quarter, personal income moved up strongly in the third quarter and reached a level 4 per cent higher than in the third quarter a year ago.

6. Labour Income: A principal factor in the stronger income trend has been the rapid increase in labour income. Labour earnings increased 4 per cent during the 12 months between October 1960 and October 1961, and in the latest three months were 5 per cent higher.

7. Corporate Profits: Corporate profits, which are particularly sensitive to changes in business conditions, have shown a rapid acceleration in 1961, and in the third quarter, were 10 per cent higher than a year earlier.

8. Employment: The total of those with jobs rose 1.6 per cent in 1961 in comparison with 1960. In the October-December period there was an increase of more than 2 per cent, and in December alone an increase of 3 per cent. These increases have been accounted for principally by the upsurge in manufacturing, and in the latest three months manufacturing employment showed a 6 per cent increase.

9. Unemployment: The trend in unemployment has been gradually downward since the beginning of 1961. By August, the number of unemployed persons had fallen below the level of a year earlier, and in December, was 18 per cent lower than in December a year ago. People who were unemployed in December were 115,000 fewer in number than in December a year ago.

10. Cost of Living: It is well known that in periods of rapid economic expansion heavy upward pressure is exerted on the level of prices and hence on the cost of living. For example, between 1949 and 1961 the index of consumer prices rose by 29 per cent, or an average of 2.4 per cent per year. It is most gratifying to note, therefore, that during the first 11 months of 1961 while the government's program of national economic development was building up, the consumer price index rose by only .8 per cent or one third of the average yearly increase during the previous 12 years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to outline the steps which the government has taken to help our producers achieve the very satisfactory results I have just mentioned.

1. We have lowered the exchange rate to a more realistic ratio with other world currencies which has had the effect of making Canadian exports more competitive in world markets, has discouraged excessive imports and has provided needed impetus to our tourist industry. The full benefits of this step should be felt increasingly during the year.

2. We have held trade and industrial conferences in Ottawa and the provinces to bring the services of the Department of Trade and Commerce directly to businessmen in all parts of Canada. By so doing we have stimulated their interest in export trade and helped them to produce more efficiently.

3. We have greatly expanded our trade mission and trade fair programs to show businessmen the opportunities which exist in foreign markets and help them display their products in these markets. These programs will be pushed forward and expanded during the present year. Businessmen have co-operated enthusiastically in the development of our trade mission program.

4. We have introduced export credit facilities to provide long term financing for capital goods exports. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) said while he was speaking, sales to date for which contracts have been signed and which were made possible by use of export credits amount to approximately $41 million; credits which have been authorized by the government but for which sales are still being negotiated by the companies concerned, amount to approximately $100 million. Thus, $141 million in all has already been committed of the $200 million made available for long term export financing.

To provide further assistance to Canadian manufacturers of capital equipment and thus expand Canada's foreign trade and increase employment, the government proposes to ask for further legislation to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act, as has been announced in the speech from the throne. I shall, of course, be giving hon. members complete details when the proposed legislation is introduced later this session.

5. We have greatly expanded the functions of the industrial development bank to provide small and medium sized firms with a larger source of working capital.

6. We have made available loans to small businesses to release working capital for these small but very important industries which obviously had no alternative source of funds for growth.

7. We have introduced accelerated depreciation to encourage production of new products and the establishment of new industries in labour surplus areas. Since March of last year the department has approved applications for double depreciation on assets valued at close to $100 million. Sixty per cent of the approved assets relate to firms located in surplus manpower areas and a wide variety of new products will be manufactured with the approved assets. They include new types of steel, chemicals, electronics, plastics, foods, paper, textiles and many other products. At the present time applications for an additional $55 million are being considered by my department.

8. We have set up the national productivity council to help industry become more competitive and thereby increase sales and provide more jobs.

9. We have established a national design council and a national design branch within my department to assist Canadian industries with their design problems and by encouraging improved designs make possible more sales and more jobs.

10. We have introduced a domestic commercial service which is a completely new arm of the department and has been created to help new industry become established and to expand.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak about Britain's application to enter the common market. In recent weeks few subjects have been more in the public mind than the British negotiations with the six member governments of the European economic community with a view to membership. The interest and concern of the Canadian business community regarding this important question is very natural indeed.

Early this month my cabinet colleagues and I enjoyed full and frank dicussions with Mr. Edward Heath, Lord Privy Seal of the British government, who is the minister responsible for Britain's current negotiations with the six. These useful and constructive talks were carried out in a most cordial atmosphere. Mr. Heath informed us of the current developments in the negotiations and stressed the efforts being made by Britain to safeguard the essential trade interests of Canada and other commonwealth countries.

For our part, we welcomed his statement and emphasized the extent and importance of Canadian interests in the British market. We were reassured as a result of this meeting that Great Britain has very much in mind the importance of Canadian trade interests in the United Kingdom and the need to do everything possible to safeguard those interests. We are co-operating closely with the British by providing full and complete information about Canadian interests in the British market in order that their negotiators may be in the best possible position to safeguard our trade interests.

They have asked for relevant data and this we are providing for the whole range of our exports to the United Kingdom. Today we have a group of senior and qualified officials on the spot for this purpose and to reinforce the officials who are already in Brussels and London. The officials concerned include the assistant deputy minister of trade and commerce, responsible for trade policy, and the head of the department's international trade relations branch. As the negotiations evolve we will be ensuring that the right men are in Brussels at the right time to meet the needs as they arise. Our concern is to make sure that the interests of all Canadian producers across the length and breadth of Canada are fully understood by the British. There will be, during the period of the negotiations, the closest co-operation between the British and Canadian governments.

I should like now, Mr. Speaker, to take a few moments to give a comparison of key indicators which show how the Canadian economy has progressed since 1956, the last year that a Liberal government held office. I will mention ten specific indicators. The first is total employment. In 1956 the total number of jobs amounted to 5,703,000; in November, 1961, 6,115,000, an increase of 452,000 jobs or an average of approximately 100,000 new jobs each year since this government took office. This represents an increase of 8 per cent in employment. Second, there is the gross national product. In 1956 the gross national product amounted to $30.6 billion; in 1961, the annual rate in the third quarter was $37.4 billion, an increase of $6.8 billion or 22 per cent. Dealing with exports, merchandise only, in 1956 the total was $4.8 billion and in 1961, taking the latest 12 months as October, 1960, to October 1961, they were $5.7 billion, an increase of $900 million, or 19 per cent.

For imports, merchandise only, the figure in 1956 was $5.5 billion, and in 1961—the latest 12 months—$5.7 billion, an increase of $200 million. Those figures show how this government during the past four and a half years has achieved the first positive trade balance since 1952.

Total personal income in 1956 was $21.9 billion, and in 1961 the annual rate, third quarter, was $28.7 billion, an increase of $6.8 billion, which is an increase of 30 per cent.

Labour income in 1960 was $14.9 billion and in 1961 the annual rate, third quarter, was $19.5, an increase of $4.6 billion, or an increase of 30 per cent.

Corporation profits in 1956 were $2.91 billion and in 1961 the annual rate, third quarter, $3.55 billion, an increase of $640 million, or 22 per cent.

With regard to the industrial production index, October, 1949 is taken as 100. The index in 1956 was 155 and in 1961 it had risen to 177, a gain of 22 points, or an increase of 14 per cent in industrial production.

Consumer spending in 1956 was $18.8 billion and in 1961 the annual rate, third quarter, was $24.6 billion, an increase of $5.8 billion, or 30 per cent.

Total personal savings in 1956 amounted to $1.3 billion while in 1961 the annual rate, third quarter, was $1.7 billion, an increase of $400 million, or 30 per cent. These figures, Mr. Speaker, I believe make it clear how the economy has fared under this government and show how it has grown steadily and at the present time is in a very strong and satisfactory condition.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are you satisfied? I wonder would the minister permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Hees: I will after I finish speaking, as I have only a limited time. I would be pleased to answer any questions afterwards.

Yesterday, the Leader of the Opposition quoted certain newspapers when trying to run down Canada and prove in some way that our economy is not sound, trying as I take it to discourage investment in our country—because that is the effect of what he did. We know the reason why he says these things is to try to convince the electorate that the economy is not in good shape, which is not the case. The Leader of the Opposition quoted certain foreign newspapers. I, however, would like to quote not from an English newspaper or others published outside Canada, but from newspapers which are published in our own country.

Mr. Pickersgill: The servile press.

Mr. Hees: I quote from the Financial Post of January 20, the latest issue, and this I believe is an objective newspaper which certainly has never done anything to bolster the fortunes of the Conservative party and has never been opposed, as I know it, to the Liberal party. On its front page it carries the heading:

> The OUTLOOK—Weekly roundup of the latest facts and expert opinion on the economic weather ahead . . .

In this article Mr. Dalton Robertson says the following:

> Three recent developments in the Canadian economy—in goods, in men, in money—reflect the burgeoning expansion of business and hold out the prospect of good times through 1962.
> Canada's unemployment situation is sharply healthier than it was six months ago or a year ago.
> At mid-December, seasonal factors discounted, only 6.1 per cent of the work force was unemployed. This compares with 7.4 per cent as recently as last July and a record high of 7.9 per cent a year earlier.
> With the underlying trend in unemployment downward throughout 1961—in contrast to upward through 1960—it is clear that the business recovery is broadening and strengthening in the places where it counts most.
> The forcefulness of the upturn in business activity shows in these bright facts:
> Unemployments increase between November and December—or between September and December for that matter—is the smallest in any of the past five years. At the same time, the seasonal decline in employment between November and December is one of the smallest on record.
> The 180,000 increase in employment over the past year is proportionally equal for both men and women—distinct contrast with the year-to-year increase in 1960 when almost all of the advance was in female workers getting relatively low-paid jobs.
> Employment in manufacturing is up by 80,000 to 90,000 in the year—whereas in 1960, jobs in manufacturing, where the pay is highest, were on the decline.
> These increases in manufacturing and, to a lesser extent, in construction employment have led to a reduction in unemployment among men. By contrast: A year ago, the increases in total employment were due to the flow of new women workers into the labour force—while slackness in manufacturing was causing lay-offs among men workers.
> These trends suggest a number of good things are in store for Canada. With more family breadwinners back at the better-paying jobs, retail sales stand to make substantial gains in 1962. With a rise in total consumer spending, the whole economy will get an extra forward push.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a very objective opinion on our economy, a very thoughtful opinion indeed.

Finally, I would like to speak about the economic outlook for the year we are just beginning. The Canadian economy is entering a new period of sound expansion and in my recent travels across the country I have found that our producers are approaching the new year with confidence and optimism. I believe that the program of national economic development which was initiated by the government more than a year ago has made a substantial contribution to our fortunes. However, it is our businessmen, our industrial workers, our farmers, our fishermen, our lumbermen, our miners, and other primary producers with their enterprise, ingenuity and skill who have made our economy move steadily forward. They have our gratitude and admiration and we look forward to working with them in the year ahead, as we have worked together in the year that has just ended.

If we can achieve that essential co-operation between management and labour, which is so necessary to make our products competitive in an increasingly competitive world, there are no heights of economic progress which we cannot reach. With government, labour and management working together as a team we can, and I believe we will, make 1962 the most prosperous year this country has ever known.

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I wish to congratulate the mover and seconder of the motion in reply to the speech from the throne. They did well; they made a very worth-while contribution to this debate. They told us something about their own constituencies, for which we are all grateful. They also made valiant efforts to defend the inadequacies of this government. In this they did very well, but I think the government will need all the defence they can muster in order to present themselves in a good light to the people.

I listened to the speech of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees). There were several fallacies in his arguments. He talked about the increase in production. He did not say anything about the increase in the total Canadian per capita production. He did not compare like with like, because on one occasion he referred to the production for three months and compared the increase in those three months to the production for the whole of a previous year.

Mr. Hees: No, you are a little wrong. You will learn when you read Hansard.

Mr. McMillan: In the last two or three months the members of the government have shown that they have an uneasy feeling that they are not selling themselves well to the people. I notice the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) said that the people have not been told of the great accomplishments of this government. They have had four and a half years in which to bring about these great accomplishments. There have been accomplishments of a kind and in the two months before Christmas members of this government fanned out across the country and tried to resell themselves to the people on these accomplishments.

Any group of salesmen can easily sell products with exaggerated promises of high performance, but the second or third time around, they will find the going a little rough. So, too, with the members on the treasury benches opposite. As salesmen they are finding the going tougher and tougher because the results that they have given to the Canadian people have been so poor.

In Windsor, Nova Scotia, the Minister of Public Works had this to say:

> The Liberals were in power for 22 years and it seems that a strong Liberal bias has been built up in most of the press, and broadcasting, as you must all realize daily.

Then I saw a reference to something the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) had said after his historic visit to the Citadel in Quebec. He referred to the press as a servile press. During and after the pipe line debate I do not know of any other government in Canadian history that was rolled around more by the press, radio and television than the St. Laurent government. Mr. St. Laurent defended his government. That was natural. But he never uttered a word of resentment because his government was being criticized. Certainly I never saw anything published in the press to the effect that he resented this criticism.

If democracy is to survive we must have freedom of the press; we must have freedom of dissemination of news among our people and we must have this whether or not we like it at the time.

We have come to a new year and the government is now embarking upon a set of new proposals to help us cure our ills. Before giving consideration to these proposals as contained in the speech from the throne I thought it might be well to go back to 1961 in retrospect because events and measures that were taken in that year were harbingers of things to come in this year.

According to the press, the Prime Minister said in Ottawa on December 20:

> It has been a wonderful year for me. I look back on the year with a good deal of pleasure, both personally and politically.

I am glad the Prime Minister had a wonderful year personally, but I think that many people in Canada and many of his followers would be much more satisfied if he had had a better year politically.

The year 1961 began and ended on a rather comic opera note, with a great deal of tragedy thrown in between for the Canadian people. I have tabulated month by month a few items of political significance that caused dismay and suffering among our people. They also caused a loss of prestige to our government both at home and abroad. In January, for instance, the Prime Minister went down to Washington to sign the Columbia river treaty during the dying days of the Eisenhower administration. He did not at that time have a signed agreement with the government of British Columbia, the government most vitally interested. In a similar situation, when the St. Lawrence seaway project was developed, Ontario and the state of New York joined to develop this power and before signing any international agreement with the United States Mr. St. Laurent had an agreement signed with the province of Ontario.

The failure of the government to do this has brought about all kinds of complicated negotiations between them and the government of British Columbia. These negotiations have had a comic aspect although they should be of grave concern to all Canadians and especially the people of British Columbia.

We have had the spectacle of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) and the premier of British Columbia playing hide and seek with one another in Vancouver and Victoria. Also, the Minister of Justice, in a speech in his native province of British Columbia, denounced Premier Bennett and caused an international incident by denouncing Mr. Udall, secretary of the interior of the United States, at the same time.

On another occasion, to assure us that there was some harmony at least between the two governments and that they were not completely on a war footing, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) came into this house and said that the premier of British Columbia had gretted him with the words, "Hello, Columbia". The Columbia river is carried forward as unfinished business into 1962.

February of last year has a record for that month. At mid-month we had 719,000 people unemployed, 12,000 more than February of the previous year. The Prime Minister and the ministers on the treasury benches did not consider that unemployment was a problem at all in Canada until parliament was called into session the previous November. What is worse the measures taken to stimulate the economy at that time in order to increase employment were inadequate.

In March another record was established and this record was not a pleasant one for the taxpayers of Canada. In that month the Minister of Finance tabled the estimates and we learned for the first time that our budgetary spending would be over $6 billion despite the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) had told the House of Commons that our expenditures would be cut by the elimination of waste and extravagance.

In April another record was set. Canadian National Railways posted the highest deficit in its history, a deficit of $67,500,000. Carloadings have always been considered an indication of the state of our economy. Ever since this government came to power carloadings have been down. They have been down every month compared with the corresponding month of 1956, the last year when the previous administration was in office. Not only have they been down as compared with corresponding months in the year 1956 but they are, generally, down as compared with corresponding months during worsening years of Tory rule, though there have been only one or two monthly exceptions.

In May this government put the wheels in motion to fire governor Coyne from the Bank of Canada. They did this contrary to all those high ideals of justice expressed in the immortal words of the bill of rights. I think nothing has done more harm to our prestige abroad than this particular action taken by the government at that time.

In June the Minister of Finance brought in his budget. It was a record budget with a record deficit of $650 million. I know the Minister of Finance allowed himself about $50 million leeway each way but the hon. gentleman is always modest about naming the amount of the expected deficit so I think the deficit will, in fact, be higher than this.

In July the Prime Minister talked about an election "sooner or later". He promised we should have one and issued a challenge to the Senate. Unless the Senate would withdraw its amendment to a certain bill which this house had sent to it he would go to the country over the issue of Senate reform.

In August we learned that the Minister of Finance had taken a personal interest in the unemployment insurance fund. He was taking the hypothecated and depreciated bonds in that fund under protective wing. Now he has nothing to protect. According to the speech from the throne the taxpayers of Canada are to be allowed to make up the loss in that fund arising from mishandling and poor investment.

In this month also the people were becoming aware that we were buying United States interceptor planes. They could recall the closing down of our plant at Malton. They could recall also that at that time the completed planes were cut up into little pieces with a blow torch so as to conceal the evidence of the ingenuity, the high degree of workmanship and the productivity of Canadian workmen. The end result was a loss to Canada of valuable skilled workmen and a loss of many jobs in Canadian industry.

In September there was the Accra commonwealth conference when the government took exception to Britain joining the common market. We heard all about the published and the unpublished documents. We heard both the official and the unofficial statements made by our two ministers at that conference. After so much criticism the Minister of Finance came up with what I thought was a most novel idea. He said he was using these tactics in order to help Britain at the Brussels conference. This contention is certainly not borne out by the press in Britain. The London Times said the Canadian government was playing politics. The London Spectator said the Canadian government had no business telling Britain how to run her economy when they had made such a mess of their own.

In October the news stressed the division in the cabinet concerning the use of nuclear warheads in air defence and particularly concerning the warheads proposed to be used in the Bomarc bases. The Bomarc bases are nearing completion and some decision on this question should be reached by the government. At the present time should an occasion arise for the use of these bases we have nothing on hand as warheads except some sawdust and sand. I realize there is a difference of opinion in Canada as to whether we should have nuclear warheads or not but I think our government should take a stand. In my opinion it is irresponsible for the government to do otherwise; refusal to reach a decision is in my opinion indefensible.

In November, the dominion bureau of statistics reported that immigration was down by one third. We have since learned that during the full year 1961 more people left Canada than entered it. Many of those who left Canada were young, well trained Canadians who went elsewhere because they found better opportunities were available. Many others who left had come to this country only recently as immigrants. I knew some of them. They could not get jobs and they went back to their home countries. We are, in effect, exporting some of our unemployed. In the same month the Manchester Guardian contended in an editorial that Canada was bringing discredit upon itself as a result of a decision to make public issue of the secret speech by Mr. Heath to the common market in Brussels.

December is the comic opera month, because in that month we heard about the proposed firing of the Minister of Finance. We heard about the great shuffle in the cabinet that never came off. We heard about the great journey of the cabinet to Quebec. Then there was the aftermath. We heard the reference of the Prime Minister to the servile press and then there was the mutual glorification meeting in Toronto when the Prime Minister referring to the Minister of Finance said that no man could be more loyal or devoted. The Minister of Finance, of course, had to reply in turn that the Prime Minister was one of the greatest men of our time.

Then the Minister of Finance went to Montreal and he called all this big Liberal lies.

An hon. Member: So they are.

Mr. McMillan: It is all Gilbert and Sullivan type opera without the music. This government has given us little leadership. It has made few definite decisions and it has played politics to the full. They think more about getting votes than they think about the welfare of the country. Surely this is a government that acts on impulse. We have government by impulse.

As 1962 rolled in the printing presses were busy printing new money, and I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is the most serious domestic problem of all at the present time. Our fiscal and monetary policy is basic to the welfare of all Canadians. We will have more to say about monetary policy shortly.

I have often criticised the government. At the time of the conversion loan I predicted that among its effects would be the following: it would tend to stagnate trade and cause unemployment, it would increase taxes at all levels of government for a generation, it would raise the cost of production and every new home buyer would be saddled with a mortgage at a high interest rate which he would be paying for most of his working years. I also said that it would increase the cost of living. All these things have come about.

I said at the same time that the government would always be a prisoner of its mistake at the time of the conversion loan. It is. It has not bothered the government that it has had to increase the gross debt by over $3 billion and our net debt by about $2 billion. They just print new money to cover the debt. It has not bothered the government that they have depleted the unemployment insurance fund completely. They hand the bill to the taxpayers. They think little of going into debt at the rate of $2 million a day every day since the government has been in power. They have shown little concern about loading the head of each family in Canada with an extra $500 in debt. They do not mind paying high interest on interest.

But this all pales into insignificance if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) surrenders completely, and if he continues to do what he is now doing in the Department of Finance with the monetary policy. Since last June the minister has been using the printing presses to debase our currency at the rate of $5½ million to $6 million a day, about three times the rate that we are plunging into debt. Debasing or watering down our dollar is something akin to a milkman watering milk. You would be fooled because the dollar and the milk would look the same afterwards but their value would be less.

I realize that where you have economic growth you must have some increase in the money supply. In the early 1950's there were four years when the money supply was increased at an average rate of $400 million a year. Now it increases that much in about as many months or three or four times faster and we have no boom such as we had to finance in those years.

The mechanics of creating new money are simple. The banks buy bonds and they can issue many times the price of those bonds in new credit. The Minister of Finance has resorted to this type of financing because he cannot get the public to buy bonds in the volume that he requires. New money is being created to buy government bonds and the public pays the interest. All economists say that it is a dangerous thing to issue a lot of new money to cover overspending, and this is exactly what we are doing at the present time. We are in a period of inflation. In 1960 even the minister himself had this to say about inflation:

> Let us give no quarter to such a defeatist doctrine. Inflation acts like a drug on the economic system. Even small doses breed a craving for more.

I fear that the minister has now become an inflation addict. If the rate of inflation now current is allowed to go on unabated, I predict dire consequences for the Canadian people. By the minister's own words, he has adopted a defeatist doctrine. The savings of citizens, whether in the banks, insurance, pensions or what not, will rapidly decrease in value if we go on this way. I say that a government that has adopted this defeatist doctrine is a menace to the welfare and future of every man, woman and child in Canada.

I read the correspondence between the minister and the new governor of the Bank of Canada and certainly the new governor does not take any responsibility in connection with the issuing of new money. That is within the responsibility of the Minister of Finance. The new governor stated that his responsibility would be the day to day operation of the bank. When the new governor presents his annual report I think he should be brought before the banking and commerce committee to tell us where we are going. When the Minister of Finance was asked at the time of the Coyne debate last summer why the governor of the Bank of Canada had not been brought before that committee, his reply was to the effect that so far the appeal had only been halfhearted. I think the governor should be brought before the committee this year.

I want to say a few words about the stabilization fund and the price of the Canadian dollar. I read an article in the press in which the Minister of Finance took a good deal of satisfaction from the fact that so little money was required from this fund to hold the Canadian dollar at a discount. After the Coyne affair I never thought it would take very much money to hold our dollar at a discount because of the loss of confidence created by that incident. In fact, lately the minister has had to pour money into the market to prevent our dollar from going too low and already the Canadian taxpayer has been handed a bill of $127 million for the operation of that fund.

The point is that Canada is not now considered by many as a favourable country in which to invest money. In my limited acquaintance I know people in Buffalo, Cleveland and Toledo who used to buy Canadian securities and who now say they would not invest another dollar in Canada. When the Prime Minister went to London in the fall of 1957 he spoke in Albert Hall and there was considerable criticism of him at that time in the British House of Commons. I put some of that criticism on Hansard at that time. Ever since then our prestige in Britain has fallen. This fallen prestige has been caused by the action of this government at the Montreal conference and at the Accra conference, and because they increased the duty on British woollens and because of the latest row over the secret speech—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time expired.

Mr. McMillan: I have just a little left.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the will of the house that the hon. member should carry on?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Churchill: For five minutes.

Mr. McMillan: I wish to thank the house for the courtesy extended to me in allowing me to carry on. I just wished to say something about our prestige abroad. Certainly Canadians in England have a feeling that they are not so welcome in London. You hear taxi drivers and other people talking about our fiscal problems and our other troubles here in Canada. The little people in Europe have become aware of the fact that Canada is in trouble. I found that to be the case in travel agencies and in hotels. I just wish to give two or three instances. While I was in Rome I was in the coliseum and was talking to a man who was selling postcards. When he found out that I was a Canadian he asked me what was wrong with the Canadian government and what was wrong with the Canadian money.

Mr. Ricard: What did you say?

Mr. McMillan: The same thing happened in Naples. It was necessary for me to stop in Lisbon for two hours while waiting for a plane. I went into a restaurant in order to buy some lunch and as I had no European money, I told the restaurant owner of the situation and he said that it did not matter, that he took any money in the world. However, when I presented him with a Canadian $5 bill he said, "I take any money in the world except Canadian money". While I was there he took British money, French money, Italian lire, United States money and also money from one of the African countries. However, he would not take money from Canada. I think the reason for his refusal to do so is that he "got stuck" with some Canadian money when it fell last year. I know that this does not indicate the value of our money but it indicates that the little people in Europe are getting wise to what we are doing here—

Mr. Ricard: That applies to what the Liberals are doing.

Mr. McMillan:—or rather what this government is doing in Canada. In conclusion may I say that I hope the Minister of Finance does not carry on as he has been doing in the past. I hope he has not sold out, for some members of the financial community look to him to hold the line. However, if he has sold out completely and if he goes on as he has been going and keeps on printing money as he has been doing in the last six months I say "God help Canada and God help the Canadian people".

Mr. J. C. MacRae (York-Sunbury): My first words, Mr. Speaker, must be to congratulate the mover (Mr. Bourdages) and the seconder (Mr. Browne, Vancouver-Kingsway) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I should also like to congratulate the new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn), the newly appointed Deputy Speaker—yourself, sir—and the parliamentary secretaries. I would be very remiss also if I did not express to the Speaker of this house what I am sure is the feeling of all of us, namely that we are glad to see him back again in good health presiding over our deliberations with fairness and, it seems to me most important of all, with unfailing good humour.

A few years ago when I first entered this house after the 1957 election, a much wiser and slightly older member of the House of Commons gave to me, as a new member, a piece of advice which I think was extremely sound. He said this: "In your parliamentary life you will find many things in which you could be vitally interested. I would suggest to you that you select three or four of those in which you are most deeply concerned and prosecute those in parliament on every logical and possible occasion. In other words do not spread yourself too thin." Following that advice, I determined that my three major projects as a member of parliament would be—to attempt to raise, if I could in some way, the economic standards of the maritime provinces of Canada; second, to concern myself with legislation concerning education, especially vocational and technical education of our youth; and third, the field of veterans legislation.

In the few minutes that I have at my disposal this afternoon I should like to talk about the first of these matters, namely our maritime economy, its problems and solutions for them.

In 1957, before the election of June 10, those of us who were selected to carry the Conservative banner in Atlantic Canada came together for a momentous meeting under four extremely able members of our party. Those gentlemen are now the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean), the Solicitor General (Mr. Browne, St. John's West) and the hon. gentleman who is now the senator from Royal but who was formerly the minister of veterans affairs. There we drew up a platform of those things for which we would stand. Over the next few years that particular platform became known popularly as the Atlantic resolutions.

I wish to discuss these resolutions this afternoon because in that election and the next one the right hon. gentleman who is now the Prime Minister of this country promised in my constituency and in others—in fact in all of the maritime constituencies in which he appeared—that these promises would be kept. May I say that those promises have been kept in full measure. I should like to discuss each one of them in turn. The first resolution or the first plank upon which we stood in 1957 stated that there would be:

> A national development program of federal assistance for developing the resources of the Atlantic provinces having regard to their different needs and varying financial capabilities.

As a tangible example of action that has been taken under this resolution, our Conservative government and those who supported it can point with pride to the roads to resources which have been built especially in our four maritime provinces. The federal government has provided over $30 million to the Atlantic provinces in this connection. It should be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that roads as such are normally a provincial responsibility. This was something that was done entirely at the expense of the federal government. These roads have opened up formerly inaccessible areas of Atlantic Canada. New airports have been built at St. John's, Gander and Halifax. Just a few days ago I was advised by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) that there was to be constructed at Fredericton a new airport building which, with its related works, will cost almost $1 million. A few years ago, one of the most contentious issues in my own province was the Beechwood power project. The federal government made a loan of $30 million at a low interest rate to New Brunswick for this vital power project. Here is something that I should like to stress, Mr. Speaker. This was a loan which had been consistently denied by the former federal Liberal government.

One of the most vital factors in the Atlantic development is the provision of cheap electrical power. This will attract industry and will put in a competitive position the products that we are able to manufacture. This is something that was long recognized by the able gentleman who was premier of our province between the years 1952 and 1960 and who is now the genial Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming). As a result of his vision and his dynamic leadership, our province is now beginning to feel the full effects of the programs which he instituted and in which, after 1957, he was so generously aided by the Conservative government here in Ottawa.

I notice that the order paper contains a resolution in connection with a national power grid. The governments of the Hon. Hugh John Flemming and the Hon. Robert Stanfield in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia were able to show what could be done in this regard when they instituted the New Brunswick and Nova Scotia power grid just a few years ago.

Resolution No. 2 is as follows, and I quote:

> Industrial decentralization; by placing a more equitable share of defence contract expenditures within the Atlantic provinces; by the establishment of crown corporations; by encouraging private enterprises to locate in the area; and by encouraging the processing here of our natural resources as a result of special fiscal considerations.

Our able Conservative government has established a small business branch within the Department of Trade and Commerce and this branch is assisting small businesses to participate more fully in defence contracts expenditures. A regional office of the Department of Trade and Commerce has been opened at Halifax and this office assists businessmen in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. A similar office has been maintained for some time in St. John's, Newfoundland. This office will place the entire resources of the Department of Trade and Commerce at the disposal of the maritime business community. We know, too, that the resources of the industrial development bank have been increased from $160 million to $400 million. Many more categories of business are eligible to borrow from this source. Double depreciation allowances are permitted businesses which locate in surplus manpower areas. This has had a very beneficial effect on some areas of the maritimes. The federal government subsidy to the shipbuilding industry is providing many more employment opportunities in the maritimes.

Now, what has been happening more specifically in New Brunswick as a province, and in my constituency in particular? Only recently an electronics plant located in Campbellton and it will eventually employ from 1,000 to 1,500 people, thus providing a tremendous boost to the economy of that area. I know that the industries we have established should be based on the natural resources of our area. The greatest natural resource that we have is our forests. In Grand Falls a plant has been established which will manufacture shoe lasts; a veneer plant has been established in my constituency and a chipboard plant in Milltown, Charlotte county. There are many others.

I should like to quote from the Telegraph Journal of January 9, 1962, and in so doing I am quoting the premier of New Brunswick, a Liberal premier:

> New Brunswick experiencing $100 million industrial expansion.
> Projects costing $100 million and seen as likely to create at least 7,000 jobs are in definite or tentative planning stages for New Brunswick, mostly in the north and in the Saint John area.
> "The future looks very bright," Liberal premier Louis J. Robichaud said in an interview. "I am confident that with co-operation of government and industry we will provide year-round jobs in New Brunswick, proportionately as many as they have in wealthier provinces."

The present Liberal administration in New Brunswick attempts to take some credit for this situation. I want to be fair and I will say they have assisted to some extent within the last year and a half. However, the great bulk of the credit for the establishment of these industries and what is happening in our province today must go to the farsighted policies of Hugh John Flemming and his Conservative government. They were aided nobly after 1957 by the farsighted policies of the Prime Minister of Canada and his able government.

Personally, in so far as public works are concerned, I would rather see a factory started in Fredericton that would give year-round employment to 200 men than all the public buildings that have been built there since confederation. I can well remember sitting in this chamber during the bitter debates after 1957 and I recall when things got too hot for the Liberals they would shout, "Twenty cents a day". Well, I should like to say that 20 cents a day is just four times the amount Mackenzie King said he would never give to any Conservative province in 1935.

You know, in Fredericton we make some of the best shoes in the world. There is the Hartt Shoe Company and the Palmer-McLellan Shoe Company. The first major defence contract that has come to the Palmer-McLellan Shoe Company in 17 years was awarded this past year, a contract for 42,000 pairs of shoes. During the past year one of the finest agricultural research stations in the whole of Canada has been built in Fredericton at a cost of about $2 million. Camp Gagetown, one of the largest and finest military camps in the British commonwealth of nations, continues to grow. During 1957 it was said that if the Conservatives were elected this camp would be closed. However, as I have said, it has continued to grow and it is one of the finest camps in the whole of the British commonwealth.

Item No. 3 reads:

> Atlantic provinces power development by means of financial assistance for the development of low-cost electric power which would fully preserve the rights of the provinces to build and operate both thermal and hydro installations and transmission lines and by immediate subvention on coal produced in the region and used for generating electric power therein.

I have mentioned the Beechwood power development and the power grids that were established. The government, in a tangible way, provided loans for 40 years at a low rate of interest for the establishment of the power grid between Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Mr. Arthur Johnson, the past president of the Atlantic economic council—a most worthy organization—has said that this grid has saved the two provinces the incredible sum of $60 million annually.

In the past four years, coal assistance in the form of subventions has been more than doubled. To be specific, in 1956-57 federal payments for coal subventions were just under $7 million and in 1960-61 they amounted to over $15 million.

Item No. 4 reads:

> Adjustment of freight rates and provision of transportation facilities to allow our producers reasonable access to the markets of Canada.

Transportation is one of the keys to our whole economic well-being in Atlantic Canada. We know, of course, that the federal government pays subventions on freight rates every year amounting to about $14 million. All of us have been anticipating with deep interest the second volume of the report of the royal commission on transportation which was tabled today. I have not had an opportunity of reading it but it is my hope, and the hope of all of us, that it will contain many recommendations which will go some distance toward solving this difficult problem. We need a national policy on transportation. We do not accept the recommendation of the Gordon commission that we leave the maritimes, nor are we going to be second-class citizens in that part of Canada. I have every faith that the McPherson report will suggest some solution which will correct the injustice under which the maritime provinces now suffer.

Item No. 5 reads:

> Capital projects program to provide federal capital assistance for provincial projects designed to enlarge the basic economy of the area.

I am sure you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that in my discussion of the first item, a national development program, I have shown that this plan has been implemented in good measure. There are other projects about which we feel rather strongly, some more strongly than others, and for which I would urge continuing government consideration. There is the causeway to Prince Edward Island and the corridor road through Maine as well as the integrated development of Saint John river power. I would urge the power development of the huge Passamaquoddy project, and I should like to mention the Chignecto canal project. I was disappointed last fall when it was shown that, as a transportation project, the Chignecto was not feasible. I was delighted, however, when the Prime Minister said the government of Canada would take another look at this project to see whether, from a power angle, it would be feasible. I hope something will be worked out as a result of that.

Another item or promise in 1957 was the establishment of the Canadian coast guard. This was of vital importance to our fishermen and others who follow the sea. This has been done as promised.

Finally, in 1957 there was the special adjustment grant for all provinces with a per capita income substantially below the national average. In 1958 the government undertook to provide an additional $100 million in the Atlantic provinces grants over a four year period; effective in 1962 this grant will be raised.

There has been considerable discussion this past year in my native province about federal contributions to New Brunswick and a completely unfounded statement that contributions have decreased. A political football was made of this in the past year but the true facts are that in 1956 the total of unconditional and conditional grants and payments to New Brunswick was $29.5 million and in 1961-62 these grants will amount to $60.5 million, or more than double.

What about social justice payments? In the year 1956-57 the Liberal administration made payments in New Brunswick of approximately $46 million. In 1960-61 that figure had increased by almost 60 per cent to $75.5 million. Figures do not lie, Mr. Speaker. They are there on the record.

When Liberal party spokesmen talk of discrimination against New Brunswick, as they have done in the past year and a half, let us remember that the per capita amount received by New Brunswick from tax rental in 1956-57, when the Liberal party was in office, was $32.11 per person. In 1961-62 it amounts, with the addition of Atlantic provinces adjustment grants, to $56.24 per person, and in 1962-63 it will amount to $58.12. It is worthy of note that the national average is $48.64 per capita, and therefore I do not feel we have any complaint there.

I have discussed the part that the federal Conservative government is playing in the resurgence of our maritime provinces at present, but even though they are the most important member of the team bringing this about, we must never forget there are other players on the team as well. The provincial governments must carry their share of the load. Far too often our provincial governments have wasted their energy and their efforts in petty jealousy and quarrels. Also, the management of our industries must be willing not only to co-operate but give their full support. They must remember that the well-being of those who work for them will reflect in their prosperity.

Finally, labour must use common sense. Far too often the working man has been misled by unscrupulous labour leaders. I do not say that is so true of Canada, but we have only to look at the Hoffas and Becks in the United States to see what I mean. Labour must be made to realize that we cannot price ourselves out of our own and foreign markets by demanding more for our labour, services and products than others can or will pay.

We in the maritimes, and as a matter of fact Canadians in all parts of the country, will have to realize that there is nothing free. A year and a half ago, in June, 1960, the majority of the people of New Brunswick temporarily accepted the premise that they could receive free hospitalization, and in so believing they turned out the most able premier and government that they had had for decades.

There is a cartoonist whose work I admire greatly, Collins of the Gazette. He draws that familiar figure of the little man in the barrel, with the derby hat and bristling mustache, usually labelled "You know who". A few months ago he drew a cartoon and, the saying has it that a picture is worth more than a thousand words. It seemed to me this cartoon was worth even more than that. It shows our little man in a supermarket, having the most wonderful time in the world filling up his shopper's cart with all the packages that are marked "free". There is free government this and free government that, and he goes along until his cart becomes so piled up that he can hardly see over it. Then the final drawing shows him reaching the cash register, with a long cash register tape and a woebegone look. The caption underneath says "You have to reach the check-out counter sometime". We all have to reach the check-out counter sometime in our spending as well as everything else.

There is a new spirit in Atlantic Canada today, a resurgence of pride and a spirit of well being that was not there before 1957. For a century it was said that the maritimes greatest export was brains, but today educated men and women are staying in the maritime provinces, as well as those who have not the advantage of the education they might like to have, because there is more opportunity there than ever before. I feel, too, that under this government and its dynamic policy of national development in all areas of Canada, our part of this great nation will continue to grow and prosper as it rightly should.

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, may I first of all join with those who have congratulated the mover (Mr. Bourdages) and the seconder (Mr. Browne, Vancouver-Kingsway) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. If I do so, it is not because I agreed with their views when they praised the present government, but theirs was a commendable effort and I congratulate them for it.

I should also like to extend my congratulations to the new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn). I hope that he will be able to survive all that fuss made about his appointment. I wish him every success in his new office, and I trust that the Canadian people will benefit by it.

As for you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, whom I had the privilege of knowing for a long time as a painstaking and hard worker, I am convinced that you will carry out efficiently the new duties entrusted to you. You have been elected by the house with an overwhelming majority to replace the member called to the cabinet. You will only have to study the work accomplished by the Speaker of this house and to follow the example set by him since his appointment to this high office in 1957, and I am sure that you will find only friends on both sides of the house.

(Text):

Before dealing further with the speech from the throne I should point out that I have read the amendment which was presented by the hon. member for Assiniboia. Having studied it closely I can see that it is a compliment which states openly what is understood in the amendment proposed by the leader of the official opposition. If we take the amendment and the amendment to the amendment we can read them this way:

We respectfully affirm that Your Excellency's advisors, because of their continuing failure to bring forward policies to deal with the real problems confronting this country, including the failure to promote the planned development of our resources, sound monetary, fiscal, investment and trade policies which will develop our economy so as to provide:

1. expanding export markets for agricultural and industrial production;

2. full employment;

3. and, in co-operation with the provinces a prepaid medical care program for all Canadians; and for these reasons do not deserve the confidence of the House of Commons.

Having discussed the matter with our leader before he had to leave the house I can state that we are ready to support the amendment to the amendment.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to touch upon every subject mentioned in the speech from the throne nor do I propose to point out the numerous omissions which characterize that speech more than its contents.

The leader of the Liberal party, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) has done that tremendously well in his speech yesterday, and I believe a certain number of my colleagues will take up a few points in particular. That is why I will limit myself today to one point only, that is the amendments to the constitution.

I must say first of all that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) made an honest effort in his suggestions to the provinces. He would have been the first one to admit, I am sure, that his proposals could not all be accepted and that they would even be the subject of lengthy discussions. Indeed, I could not understand how a sensible man would expect his first proposals to be accepted immediately since it is most dangerous to amend the constitution.

We will soon be celebrating the centennial of confederation. We should not pass premature amendments, amendments where caution would be thrown to the winds and which would only make it worse for Canada. And besides, if you read what Father Arès, Jesuit, has written about these amendments, you can see that nowadays you cannot be too cautious before touching them.

It is best to wait in order to make sure that mutual understanding will persist, complete mutual understanding in all fields of endeavour of the Canadian people, in order to build up mutual confidence and mutual respect throughout Canada, before tackling the ticklish matter of amending the constitution.

It would be best to wait a year or two, even three, before bringing our constitution back home.

It has been in England now for nearly a century, and we have always managed to survive and even to improve our lot, despite what is being said in some circles.

That is why I am asking the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) not to speed things up. I am asking his leader, the Prime Minister, not to be too much in a hurry to link his name to the repatriation of the constitution. When the constitution does come back, it should be such that we should not have to blame ourselves for acting too hastily.

Speaking of the repatriation of the constitution brings to mind an exceedingly delicate matter, a topic on which many words and much breath have been wasted. I refer to separatism, a movement which sprang up some time ago in the province of Quebec.

Of course, as opposed to some Quebec Conservative members, I have no connection with that movement, quite the contrary, and the fact is rather well known.

Is that movement really serious? I do not think it is, not for the moment at least. You only have scattered efforts by various groups without a leader in the true sense of the word. If they had men like Hitler, Mussolini, Bourguiba, Castro or even Camilien Houde, great demagogues, we might have reasons to fear an early split within confederation. As it is, the movement is already divided among capitalists, socialists, to mention only those two. No wonder, because with our Latin temperament, it is extremely difficult for us to work together. We are so individualistic.

Would it be beneficial to turn the province of Quebec into a French Canadian republic? I would be inclined to answer yes, in certain respects. It would certainly promote the development of French culture completely freed from English influence which taints our language with anglicisms. But the separatist movement, which is not new, will have the great advantage of awakening English speaking Canadians and prompt them to a careful self-examination. For, let us not forget that if there is a separatist movement in Quebec, the majority group is chiefly responsible for its existence.

In 1867, when confederation was born, we were in theory equal partners. But unfortunately things were different in practice. What fuss, what inconsistencies, had to be put up with. The provinces with English speaking majorities saw as one of the greatest advantages of confederation a means of anglicizing more easily the French Canadian nation.

Immediately after confederation, have we not seen the New Brunswick government forbid the teaching of French and religion in the schools, ostensibly because that teaching was only tolerated before confederation. It had, nevertheless, been specified under the Confederation Act that any legislation prior to confederation should be maintained. But so-called tolerance then disappeared. Fortunately, the situation has since improved.

When Manitoba entered into confederation, towards 1870—the union was completed in 1871—Sir Georges-Etienne Cartier, recalling what had happened in New Brunswick, was cautious enough to include clause 22 to protect the minority of that province.

Despite the laws, around 1890 the English speaking majority in Manitoba managed to persecute the French speaking minority and their schools. The law had been disregarded. Slowly things got better.

In 1911, it was the turn of Ontario, when that province passed the notorious regulation 17 outlawing French schools.

Then it was Saskatchewan, around 1928, under the leadership of Mr. Anderson, and bitter criticism against the Gardiner government because it tolerated religious habits and the crucifix in Catholic schools. He knew how to excite the passions of the Anglo-Canadian majority in that province and overthrew the Gardiner government to set up his own persecuting laws.

Even British Columbia, to a lesser degree, however, proved extremely narrow-minded.

But let us rejoice, persecutions began on the Atlantic coast and reached British Columbia; let's hope they have been drowned in the Pacific.

Outside the province of Quebec, French Canadians have been treated as poor relatives, even within the federal service. How many senior positions have we held in the civil service? Did we not have the necessary qualifications? That was not the reason because in proportion to the number, we were just as qualified, if not more. Most of our candidates to senior positions had the advantage of being bilingual.

Such an attitude was equivalent to giving French Canadians a certificate of incompetence that they did not deserve.

During the last session, I recommended during the debate on the Civil Service Act that an additional 5 per cent be paid to anyone who could prove that he was bilingual, not only for new positions but also for promotions. There was practically no discussion on that issue; there was no serious examination and the majority in the house, except for two or three Conservative members voted for refusing that right to intellectual superiority. I am happy to see that the Liberals and the C.C.F. have unanimously supported my motion.

What is one to think of that decision of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) who, in his proposed building program for the next few years (about 15 projects) and in spite of the advantage found in the fact that Hull is close to the centre block of parliament did not give any thought about locating a single building on the Quebec side, in Hull or vicinity.

A short while ago, the Post Office Department requested the appointment of a superintendent for district No. 2. This district covers the ridings of Pontiac, Gatineau, Hull, Papineau, Argenteuil, part of Labelle, Glengarry-Prescott, Russell, Ottawa East, Ottawa West, part of Carleton, Stormont and a few others where the French speaking population is at least equal to the English speaking population if not in majority. I asked that the civil service commission be urged to select a bilingual candidate for that position. At that time the Postmaster General replied that the decision was up to the civil service commission, which is not entirely true because the civil service commission accepts the qualifications required by the department. Generally, it is the deputy minister who makes a decision (sometimes after consultation, sometimes on his own). The civil service commission could not require a bilingual candidate for that position because the department made no such request.

And what about the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming) who did not appoint a single French Canadian to any important position? It could be that the minister did not try too hard.

Were we too shy to claim vigorously what belonged to us by rights? We have perhaps a certain responsibility in that regard, but could the majority not be a little more generous? Could the English Canadian majority not behave like true Anglo-Saxons? Before the situation deteriorates, as Great Britain did for several of its colonies to which it granted independence before it was too late to keep them as friends and customers, could the majority not prevent such difficulties?

What meanness was shown when the French Canadians started asking for a distinctive national flag, without any symbol of interdependence. There were cries of indignation from various English sections of Canada, from the Daughters of the British Empire, the Veterans Association, the Orange Sentinel and many more. We even heard Mr. Smallwood, after having supported the entry of Newfoundland into confederation, say that as far as he was concerned, there would be only one flag, the union jack.

He became a Canadian, but his soul still belongs to England, because the union jack is a combination of three crosses: St. Andrew's cross, St. Patrick's cross and St. George's cross, representing the three countries which joined together to form the United Kingdom: Scotland, Ireland and England.

As for the Veterans Association, do those who live outside of Quebec not remember that, during the 1914 and 1939 wars, the heroic deeds of our troops could seem to be those of English soldiers, since there was only the union jack?

Talking about the veterans, on November 11, 1961, a remembrance ceremony had been organized at Lansdowne park before the football game. In the parade could be seen six or seven union jacks, one American flag and only one Canadian flag, the Red Ensign. The band played only "God save the Queen" and did not bother at all with "O Canada". Is this not ridiculous? Everyone claims to be a Canadian but such actions show the contrary.

How about the constant opposition to the request for bilingual cheques made year after year. Was it really necessary to introduce motions to request bilingual cheques when, according to the B.N.A. Act, all official documents of the federal government can be bilingual. My cheque is an official document. It was just as easy to make it bilingual as it was for Mr. Veniot to introduce bilingual stamps in the Post Office Department. It would have been as easy to introduce bilingual cheques as it was for the Liberal party to repair the sorry situation of two currencies one English and the other French, when they introduced bilingual currency.

One Mr. Jacques Gagnon, of 127 Ste. Marie street in Hull, told me about his experience with the federal police patrolling the parkways. Referring to the famous expression "I don't speak French" here is what he says:

> Besides, that does not surprise me any more. Again, I had received that answer from an officer of the Royal Mounted Police, on December 12 last, when I was arrested on the Gatineau Parkway, not far from Gamelin boulevard. I had been ordered to check with Ottawa, on Wellington street, where nobody spoke my language, absolutely no one out of 15 police officers who were in that office.

Now, don't tell me that the federal police is so totally deprived of bilingual employees that a French Canadian who does not speak English has to go around with a pocket dictionary in order to make himself understood by the federal mounted police in Ottawa.

I am not blaming the policeman on duty, but the officers who are so ill-advised as to place him in such a false position.

Another thing which has often displeased visitors to the parliament buildings is the fact that, with certain members of the House of Commons police, it was almost impossible to make themselves understood if they spoke French. It would have been so easy to show the real character of the federal government in requiring that all those employees be bilingual. All French Canadians are bilingual; some English Canadians are, but they are not the majority.

The same applies to the R.C.M.P. on duty around the parliament buildings. The odd officer speaks French, but the great majority do not understand a single word of French. When I brought up the matter, I was told that efforts were being made to place, as much as possible, bilingual officers on duty on parliament hill. I can assure you that the efforts were not very successful.

There should also be on duty, at any time of the day, a bilingual official at each Canadian port, but it is not so.

In our diplomatic corps also, there should not be a single unilingual diplomat because a country is often characterized abroad by its diplomats. It should not be more difficult for an English speaking Canadian, especially for a scholar, to learn French than it is for a French Canadian to learn English.

I remember once going to Paris as a delegate to attend a meeting of NATO parliamentarians and what surprised me most was the fact that the delegates from all other countries were bilingual or trilingual, including those from England. The only unilingual delegates were the English Canadian and American delegates.

I know that in some places I will be accused of fanaticism. Am I a fanatic when I ask that the French and Catholic minority groups be treated at least according to the spirit if not the letter of the law?

Am I a fanatic when I ask that French Canadians in the provinces with an English majority be given the same treatment as the English minority in the province of Quebec as far as schools are concerned.

Am I a fanatic when I claim for my compatriots a chance to accede to the higher positions in the civil service of my country?

Am I a fanatic when I ask that my fellow French Canadians be served in French in the custom ports of this country?

[Mr. Caron.]

Am I a fanatic when I insist that our representatives abroad be in a position to show a true picture of Canada where two races and two cultures live side by side? And I could go on forever quoting examples but this would not add strength to my argument.

I do not care, Mr. Speaker, if English speaking or French speaking Canadians learn English or French. What I want is recognition of the superiority of those who took the trouble to learn both languages and I want them to obtain preference from the civil service commission. This would be an incentive to others.

I hope that the majority which is directly responsible for this separatist outburst in the province of Quebec will make a serious self-examination and act, for once, like true Anglo-Saxons. The majority would then realize that French Canadians have shown themselves truly anxious to comply with all the provisions of the Confederation Act.

Quebec has never treated the English minority of that province like a poor relative. Why should the other provinces not follow that example, so that after a hundred years in the confederative pact, it could be truly said that we have really become equal partners.

All those grievances do not mean that I am in favour of separatism; I feel that that movement is too risky and has too many disadvantages for the province of Quebec and for French Canadians in the other provinces.

If such a movement were to succeed, what would be the lot of French Canadian minorities in the other provinces except in New Brunswick where the minority represents about 47 per cent of the population. Left to themselves, those minorities would be easy prey for those who would anglicize us, and our fine French culture would be limited to the province of Quebec; Canada would thus become poorer not wealthier.

Considering the plight of our brothers who live in other provinces, I feel that separatism is an attitude of unspeakable selfishness towards more than a million of our compatriots.

It will be objected that the sacrifices we have to make to maintain a mixed culture impair the quality of spoken French because numerous English expressions continuously find their way into our conversation. I ask the question: Is that really true?

We know that all modern languages have developed from the corruption of two or more foreign languages. French is a smooth blend of Latin, Greek and Frankish. Many words were added to the English language by the Normans. You will note that all words ended in "al" and "ion" are French words. The same holds true in respect of Spanish and Portuguese. Is it really so bad that the French language in Canada, by adding certain English words to its wealth, be somewhat different from the French language spoken nowadays in France?

How many words and phrases did we not retain here, in this country, old French words and phrases which have completely disappeared from the stock of words used in France. For goodness' sake, let us not make a tragedy of the fact that our French is in a constant state of flux. Even in the various parts of France, there are great differences, and no one thinks it is a crime. For goodness' sake, just as no one should be a better Catholic than the Pope, so we should not be more French than the French themselves.

Another danger may come up in the economic field. Is it believable that a country with a population of five, six, or seven million people could successfully compete on the world markets? We find that the European countries have formed the common market and the free trade area to compensate for the deficiencies of a too small population. Could the province of Quebec do better than those countries? No.

Moreover, the separation of Quebec would mean almost insuperable difficulties for the maritime provinces if they did not get outside assistance from the United Kingdom or the United States. What would be the position of Ontario, which would have to support the west alone, and more particularly the prairie provinces in their lean years. The difficulties would be almost insuperable. The resulting upset would make the whole of Canada powerless with regard to its domestic problems and insignificant on the international level.

We can always improve our economic position and, in this respect, must commend the premier of the province of Quebec for finding out that all our eggs unfortunately seemed to be put in one basket. He therefore went to Italy and France trying to find new investment capital in order to diversify existing industries and create new ones in Quebec. In so doing, he served not only the province of Quebec but the whole of Canada.

The separatist movement has no chance of succeeding at this time. But I warn English Canadians to hurry and revert to the spirit of confederation, which aimed at the integration—not the assimilation—of French Canadians. If not, though you may celebrate the centenary of that memorable pact, your efforts to appease the separatist feeling will not succeed, and it will only need an able leader to upset everything. Nothing but the good faith of the majority, which has everything to gain by showing some magnanimity, can save confederation.

The English speaking provinces should consider the Quebec school laws and rectify the discrimination against minorities in other provinces, where they are overtaxed for the maintenance of their schools, whereas, in Quebec, the minority looks after its own business.

In spite of all our difficulties and all the deficiencies we may find among our English fellow citizens, we have to admit that things are constantly improving for us, even though this improvement is very slow.

Let us always keep in mind that a people which does not want to die always asserts itself in the end.

Let us be French Canadians, fundamentally attached to our language and customs, but let us also be Canadians for the greater benefit of our country as a whole.

Let us see, for instance, what has happened in Switzerland over the last 600 years. That country is made up of Germans, French and Italians, and its leaders have succeeded in having the three languages taught in the schools and in creating a nation that is truly Swiss. It is different from all other nations and it has its own characteristics that are recognized throughout the world. It has made up a people that gets along almost anywhere. In fact, I have met Swiss people recently who have made their homes in Ontario and in Quebec. It is thanks to that triple culture that they were able to find a place for themselves almost anywhere in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, in closing—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne Messrs. Bourdages (Laval) and Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway) for the able manner in which they performed their tasks.

The competence, integrity and dignity which are typical of the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) will make him an accomplished Deputy Speaker.

I also wish to pay tribute to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion), on his appointment as chairman of the privy council, and to the member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn), our new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

The selection of the member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard), to fill the post of parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister, was a most happy one. His work and attendance record in the house have set him up as an example.

We all rejoice, I am sure, at the good tidings which Her Majesty the Queen's worthy representative brought us in the speech from the throne. All the provinces rightly rejoice over the measures announced by the government. As for Quebec, the people realize that the present government will soon give them a railroad in the Gaspe peninsula which will develop an important area too long neglected by the former Liberal administration. The Gaspe Copper Mines were waiting for that news to invest several additional millions of dollars in the district which will soon be the scene of an extraordinary economic growth.

Recently, I was reading in a magazine all the economic advantages which will result from the construction of that railroad.

The people of that district have long been requesting the construction of a railroad on the north side of the Gaspe peninsula. As far back in 1881, La Minerve, a newspaper which was most popular in its days, published an article to the effect that the construction of a railroad was essential to the economic development of the Gaspe peninsula.

Since this railroad will bring its products to the market, the Federal Metal Company, a metal refining plant at Ste. Anne des Monts, will be able to start producing from 800 to 1,000 tons daily.

Gaspe Copper Mines, of Murdochville, will cut down its shipping costs by sending its ore to Ste. Anne des Monts instead of Gaspe. The distance is the same—69 miles—but the incline will be in favour of Ste. Anne.

Two important saw mills, those of James Richardson, at Cap Chat, and of J. A. Couturier, at Marsoui, will be able to undertake the production of wood chips, a material which cannot be shipped otherwise than by rail and which has an extremely good rating on the market.

Farmers who own wood lots will be in a position to sell their non-marketable timber for the production of chips.

The Ungava Transport Company was only waiting for that link before building and putting into operation between the north and south shores a ferry boat capable of carrying trucks and vans. The steamship La Gaspésienne which operates at present between Ste. Anne des Monts and Sept Iles, is not readily apt for that kind of transportation.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

These, Mr. Speaker, are briefly, some of the economic advantages which will be brought about by the construction of a railroad in that area.

I should be remiss if I did not point out the hard work of the hon. member for that riding, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. English) who, with the co-operation of his colleagues from Quebec, worked without rest to obtain the construction of that railroad which is essential not only to the economy of the Gaspe peninsula but also to the general economy of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that the elimination of tolls on certain bridges of the Montreal district, by arrangement with all parties concerned, will help develop business, industry and tourism on the south shore.

The announcement some time ago by the right hon. Prime Minister that the border waters commission was considering the Richelieu waterway indicates that this government intends to give the province of Quebec legislation which was indiscriminately withheld by the former minister of transport, who is today the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). When the hon. member for Laurier was member for Stormont and minister of transport, he used to receive delegations in a rather off-handed manner. Moreover, he ignored the briefs presented to him when meeting county councils and chambers of commerce, seeking the abolition of tolls on the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges—

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Pigeon: —the study of the Richelieu waterway, as well as the construction of a railroad in the Gaspe peninsula.

Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to quote from an article published at the time in Le Devoir of Montreal, that is on Thursday, May 20, 1954. I am quoting the words of Mr. Pierre Vigeant, a journalist who, incidentally, has also striven to obtain the construction of a greater number of railroads, at the time, in the province of Quebec. Here is what Mr. Vigeant wrote:

Anti-Quebec speech by Mr. Chevrier.

In connection with the impending retirement of the Minister of Transport, Mr. Lionel Chevrier, and of the Minister of Finance, Mr. Douglas Abbott, we put forward the opinion, a few days ago, that we could hardly expect our interests to be defended by English speaking Quebec ministers or by French speaking Ontario ministers. And we expressed the hope that the next change would make it possible for us to have all the influence we are entitled to within the federal cabinet. After Mr. Abbott, Mr. Lionel Chevrier has just undertaken to show the soundness of our argument.

While defending the bill providing for the setting up of a railway between Beattyville-Chibougamau and St. Felicien, he delivered a speech against Quebec. Not only did he turn down the claims voiced by the members of the Saguenay district and the members who supported them.

"Adding insult to injury", as he would say, he strongly admonished them and sermonized Quebecers who dare to claim their autonomy or complain that they are not getting their share from the federal government.

And Mr. Pierre Vigeant goes on to say:

Mr. Chevrier was quite energetic in his reply. He accused Mr. Gagnon of working against national unity and he added that his arguments were both false and insignificant. He stated that Mr. Balcer's speech indicated that the member had not examined the question before he spoke. He accused Messrs. Gagnon and Balcer of indulging in petty politics, whereas his own speech was steeped in such partisanship as we seldom see in the house.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make those remarks before coming to the heart of the matter.

There have always been numerous reasons for French Canadian dissatisfaction with the federal government. Some were well-founded and others were merely based on prejudice. However, one of the most serious causes of discontent of French Canadians throughout Canada, and not only in Quebec, was undoubtedly the offhand and indifferent attitude of the previous government not only towards the French Canadian minority, but towards all minorities in Canada. And minorities then included everything that was not Liberal, not Grit.

Mr. Martel: Quite true.

Mr. Pigeon: Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I seriously think that the previous government which could have done so much during the 22 years it was in power, is greatly responsible for the discontent of certain groups of Canadians. Some people were driven to despair by the lack of understanding of the government of the time.

Need I illustrate the point? In 1942, there was only one member from Quebec in the Canadian cabinet.

Mr. Speaker, after 90 years of confederation, it has been found that contacts and lines of communications have been established from north to south and from south to north. It has also been realized that two great racial groups could live side by side indefinitely, respect and help one another, with no love lost between them. Love is a feeling which cannot be imposed; either you love or you do not love. But I will not have anybody ever questioning the French Canadian's dedication, nor his patriotism. It seems to me that the contributions of French Canadians to public affairs, the co-operation they have given the authorities, their graves which are scattered all over the military cemeteries of Europe and Asia, are sufficient proof of the patriotism and sacrifices of my fellow French Canadians.

Despite the best intentions in the world, no matter how perfect the judicial and constitutional framework, it may be that the 1867 confederation is no longer suited to the needs of 1962. Perhaps we, the representatives and mandatories of the whole Canadian nation, should examine our conscience and ask ourselves if we have really discharged all our public and official duties.

Let us ask ourselves whether major amendments should not be brought to confederation, or whether it should not be reconsidered in the light of present circumstances and of rightful aspirations of the various ethnic groups which constitute the Canadian nation. And once we have noted the shortcomings and virtues of our present constitutional system, perhaps there will no longer be any reason to talk about secession but simply of complete and genuine Canadianism.

In a few years, Mr. Speaker, our great country will be a hundred years old. Already, in many places, people think of the most adequate and noble way to celebrate that century of Canadian existence. Does it not seem, Mr. Speaker, that the best approach, in such circumstances, would be to give birth to a true Canadian way of life, commensurate with our history and our responsibilities.

An event of such significance occurs but once in a man's life and it is not without great emotion that we Canadians will witness the first centennial of the country where it is most agreeable to live in these troubled times. We are the privileged children of an improved civilization, entirely devoted to the service of man. The symbol of the evolution this country is undergoing is found in this house itself where, today, members can express themselves freely in their own language, knowing in advance that they will be heard and understood by their colleagues of another origin.

An hon. Member: It has always been like that.

Mr. Pigeon: It has taken 90 years to come to the system of simultaneous interpretation, first because science at that time did not make it possible for us to dream of such a complicated device and also because statesmen did not keep pace with scientific progress.

National unity is the end product of moral and spiritual components which are found in the chairs of our universities, in our trade unions, in our armed forces, in the Sunday sermon and, above all, in the heart of each of us. We have inherited a long and glorious tradition after hard and often needless fights. Not that our forbears were mistaken about the value of the things they fought for, but actually because the mental attitude of some of their contemporaries made these fights possible although they were not necessary.

This national unity so often praised on the hustings and in this house is our own heritage for which we are in some way responsible. Perhaps not the members of this parliament personally but the members of parliament for the whole of Canada who, since 1840 and after 1867, have edified the structure of the great Canadian way of life which has fostered the development of our nation.

The great interplay of historic circumstances made possible the blending of Canadian sentiments and the communion of our minds and hearts in the pursuits of a common ideal. However, we have no right to delude ourselves nor to let our imagination summon empty dreams. This national unity, which we welcome, must be pursued from day to day and is each and everyone's business.

I even wonder whether the expression "national unity" has not been made out-of-date by events and whether we should not rather say "national awareness". Indeed, "national unity" has been for a long time a fact in our schools, at our public meetings, in our churches, before being confirmed and sealed on the battlefields all over the world.

The problem we are facing now is one of strengthening within the Canadian state this spirit of national unity based on centuries of tradition and fashioned in the Canadian mind by British institutions adapted to North American conditions in the 19th and 20th centuries. This awareness may be found in the numerous aspects of our literature, of our newspapers, of our radio and television which, most of the time, present the true image of our life in Canada, the life which is familiar to Canadians. Nevertheless, we still lack a most important symbol of our "national awareness", a symbol around which school children gather to sing the national anthem in the morning, and which is the rallying point of our soldiers on the battlefield or the last sight of the sinking ship. That symbol, as you have recognized it, is the flag. And we still have no flag. Or rather, we have too many flags, but not a single one which would identify our soldiers abroad or our athletes taking part in international competitions. A flag is not only the symbol of an adult nation: it is also the result of that nationality itself, its official confirmation by way of enactment from the responsible authorities. Is there anything more depressing for the Canadian delegates to international conferences than to realize the importance of having one's own flag?

We not only need a flag; we also need a national anthem. Is it not disappointing for our official representatives, when they visit other countries, not to find the spot of native land that a flag and a national anthem would symbolize? Canada is an adult nation. Our men and our women have left their marks in many fields. We have achieved the stature of a major country, but there is nothing to prove it to the face of the world. Until the Canadian government has discharged the sacred responsibility, as bestowed upon it by its terms of reference, of selecting a national flag and a national anthem, we will always look like poor relatives in a world searching for true friends. The time has come for this house to assume before history the great responsibility of deciding what will be our national flag and what will be our national anthem. As things are going now, our country will be one hundred years old and we shall have no flag to hoist on the 1st of July, 1967, and our young Canadians will have nothing to sing on this memorable day which will mark our first centenary. It is our duty to assume our responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a motion in this house asking for the setting up of a committee of both houses before which official organizations representing the authorities would express their views so that our hope of having a national flag may be fulfilled. I would be very glad if this motion were agreed to. We could then invite the premiers of the ten provinces to appear before this committee and know what are the views of Messrs. Smallwood and Bennett concerning a distinctive Canadian flag.

Mr. Speaker, it is commonplace in the foreign countries to point out the good feelings between the main ethnical groups in our country. Would it not be possible to transpose this wonderful lesson of national co-operation on a higher level, thus inspiring the concert of nations.

Even at the time of the league of nations, our delegates were showing poise and self-assurance. It is a known fact that Canada has no territoral ambitions, that it does conceal any covetousness, and that, having realized at home harmony and co-operation, it can share its recipes for friendship and co-operation with the other countries of the world.

It is probably not by mere chance that the original form of the British commonwealth of nations should have been developed by a Canadian. It was quite understandable that one of our most brilliant statesmen at the time should bring into the solution of our relations with other countries of the British empire the same pattern followed in the Canadian parliament in the light of our tradition. This British family of nations, which progressively emerged in the world between 1896 and 1931, including the glorious and decisive periods of 1919 and 1927, introduced into international law a formula both revolutionary and simple which was confirmed by the treaty of Westminster, on December 11, 1931. British statesmen—and in this regard some of our great Canadian parliamentarians are in no way inferior to them—have always kept pace with developments. The commonwealth was no more a laboratory product or an artificial creation in 1931 than the new commonwealth is now after weathering the Suez crisis in 1956. I believe together with many of my colleagues, that when the interest of the nation is at stake, there should be no party barriers. Besides, we in this house should all have enough patriotism and common sense to forget the strict discipline of political parties to join with the leader in whom the Canadian people has put its confidence in order to support him wholeheartedly and assure him of our most enlightened co-operation.

Mr. Speaker, the student of politics knows that British politics, and therefore Canadian politics until 1931, have always consisted in adapting formulas to facts while giving principles the best possible direction. When the Canadian parliament got its sovereignty, it had inherited that way of thinking and the ways of Cromwell, Curzon and Lloyd George had set a fashion here. It is therefore in no way surprising that the same flexible and fearless attitude which made it possible for this country to remain faithful to the throne while unobtrusively establishing a separation could be found in men like Lafontaine and Baldwin, Macdonald and Cartier, Borden and Diefenbaker. It was a Conservative government who appointed our first diplomatic agent in London. It was also a Conservative government who established Canadian troops as a distinctive unit in the first world war. It was the Hon. Mr. Borden who valiantly fought to have Canada sign the treaty of Versailles on its own behalf, and not as a junior partner nor in the shadow of the British flag, but as the first overseas country freely linked to its British sovereign. It also was a Conservative government which succeeded in obtaining the statute of Westminster.

It was under a Conservative government that simultaneous translation of debates was introduced in this house, as well as in the parliamentary committees. Furthermore, it is now the task of a Conservative government to reaffirm before the world the dignified and special position of this country in the world, in the economic field.

We belonged to the league of nations, we now belong to the United Nations. We are a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, we contribute to the Colombo plan and we have saved the new commonwealth formula in 1956. Is there another country in the world which can boast of so many positive actions in favour of world peace? Is there, even within the commonwealth, another country which has contributed more to international stability and to the rational economy which we need so much. There remains for us to make an historical and rational gesture, and I have no doubt that once again it will be made by a Conservative government. I refer to our full participation in the inter-American system, which we can achieve by becoming a full member of the organization of American states. It would seem that, in this respect, our predecessors had unjustified and no doubt unjustifiable fears.

This means that, not only are we not split between two poles, but that, on the contrary, we are the link between two great systems, two great schools of thought and, especially, two great historical realities: Europe, with its heritage of nobility and greatness; America, with its wealth and its future.

In such circumstances, it is therefore imperative that Canada, while maintaining its links with the British commonwealth of nations, for as long a time as its interests will require, should not however neglect its obligations towards the American continent. Now, there already exists that marvelous organization of American states, which superseded in 1948 the pan-American union, and which includes all countries of the American continent except Canada. Evolving from the prophetic dream of Simon Bolivar in 1826, the organization is today the finest expression of the yearning of those who wish to live in peace. It is also a legal monument where are engraved, in the flesh and blood of patriots, the great realities of our times and the fine achievements of a group of men who want to give the world an example of sincere and active co-operation.

It is regrettable that Canada is not yet a member of the organization of American states. Already, invitations to become a member would have been possible; more recently, the trip of the ex-minister for external affairs again placed in the limelight the whole problem of our relations with the inter-American system, and the late Hon. Smith had stated at Rio de Janeiro and at Ottawa that the government would reconsider the case of the OAS and of Canada.

I earnestly wish that Canada will soon occupy the seat left vacant in the pan-American union because, in doing so, it would wholeheartedly play its due role, that of an intermediary between the old and the new world.

By belonging to the OAS, Canada would be in a much better position to explain to its neighbours of the other Americas and often to the United States, the role of the commonwealth in the world, as an instrument of peace and prosperity.

Our role in the OAS would be not only to protect Canadian interests, but also to achieve once again the co-ordination of those two great forces which are the commonwealth and the OAS. Also, in conferences grouping ministers of the British community, our country could explain and better bring home the power and value of the inter-American system which, since 1889 has brought to our continent a policy of progress.

For too long, below the 45th parallel, has remained unnoticed the important work done by those great countries which are our friends to the south. And it is up to Canada to enshrine in history that conjunction of two great regional forces: the organization of American states and the commonwealth of nations. No other country possesses that double American and British nationality; no other country has, in such unique circumstances, the great advantage of having only friends in those two vast regional organizations. But in order to succeed in this delicate and important mission, Canada must belong fully and without second thoughts to those two organizations which it wants to bring together. This is a great mission, but Canada is certainly equal to the task.

(Text):

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Assiniboia, and to say we believe the structure of social justice can only be built upon the foundation of planned development of our resources, upon sound monetary, fiscal, investment and trade policies, upon co-operation between all levels of government and upon co-operation between these governments and the people.

We believe there has to be a much greater participation on the part of the people in the development of policies necessary to give us a sound economic structure in the future. We support wholeheartedly the limited response on the part of this government to the needs of the Canadian people at this time, but we are of the opinion that we cannot, shall I say, promote the sound improvement of our economic situation by this piecemeal, debt-creating approach.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

We are referred to as socialists, I am quite proud to be known as a democratic socialist, but that does not mean to say we do not believe in sound economics. We believe two and two make four, and the way to provide all the necessary welfare benefits for the Canadian people, and the services they need, is to put people to work and have them producing goods and services rather than having them idle under present circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, I have limited time. I should like to speak at greater length on several aspects of the government's proposals at this time but I shall limit my remarks to practically one subject. We were all very interested in the mention made in the throne speech of a proposal for building a national power grid. Indeed, we were very pleased to see it mentioned in the speech because members of our group stressed the necessity for it some years ago. Trade unions have written to the Prime Minister and other cabinet ministers suggesting such a course of action and we are pleased to see at the least this mention of a proposal to build a national power grid because it offers an opportunity for the beginning of a well planned, long term development program. When I say "well planned" I mean something not entered into in a hurry but something planned over a period of years so that the investment to bring the project to completion can be undertaken without too great a burden on the Canadian economy.

At this stage I shall refer to the Columbia river situation, a subject which has been of great national, provincial and local interest. In my opinion, and that of the members of this group, the government made a mistake in signing the Columbia treaty prior to having an agreement in writing with the government of British Columbia. That, I think, goes without saying. It showed a lack of foresight. There was too great haste in signing it, and a lack of sufficient planning and acquisition of the facts required upon which to base a sound judgment at the time. Since then too there has been a lack of co-operation between the federal and provincial government, and between the provincial government and the persons directly or indirectly concerned.

I intended to have a lot to say about this, aspect Mr. Speaker, but I shall have to leave it and go on to deal with a particular angle of the whole matter. However, I cannot help just mentioning that the hearings held in Revelstoke, Nakusp, Kaslo and Castlegar attracted an attendance of some 1,000 supporters of the Columbia conservation confederation.

There were many supporters of the Conservative government amongst them. They belong to all parties. Regardless of political opinions we marched shoulder to shoulder on that occasion and some 300 people made verbal or written representations to the controller of water rights and expressed their objection to the building of the High Arrow dam. Objections were raised by the city of Revelstoke, and by the Arrow lakes water resources committee, by the women's institutes and farmers' institutes and by the chambers of commerce in southeastern British Columbia.

Objection has also been raised by the B.C. federation of labour, the mine, mill and smelter workers union—in fact, nearly all the unions in British Columbia—the British Columbia fish and game clubs and the resort operators' associations.

In addition to that, four professional engineers of well-known reputation gave testimony expressing their opposition to the building of this dam. Also, excellent briefs were presented that were designed to show the effect on the lives of some 2,000 people, on 18 communities, on the natural resources, recreational facilities, fish and game, and wildlife in general. Two excellent briefs were presented on the moral aspects of the present procedures and proposals, which I will deal with at a later date. One of these was by Dr. C. S. Fowler of Castlegar, and the other, I am very glad to say, was presented on behalf of the Anglican Lord Bishop of Kootenay, who expressed in strong language his attitude toward the undemocratic procedures and proposals in connection with this development. However, I must leave the details of that important matter until a later time.

I now come to this stalemate between the federal and provincial governments with respect to the Columbia river. Before I deal with some aspects of this question I wish to place on the record the position of this party.

We held a convention of the New Democratic party quite recently in British Columbia. At that convention the following resolution was adopted unanimously:

> Power. Our cheapest source of power must be developed first. Available statistics suggest that this can be developed on the Columbia river. The New Democratic party favours the McNaughton plan which would eliminate the High Arrow dam project and the flooding of thousands of acres of valuable B. C. land. This low cost power must be used in British Columbia to create new industries and the thousands of new jobs which are required to expand our industrial production rapidly and to end mass unemployment in our province.
> No firm or long term contracts should be made for the export of power or sale of downstream benefits from British Columbia.

That resolution was adopted unanimously by the founding convention of the New Democratic party in Vancouver, British Columbia, in 1961. The B.C. federation of labour met a few days previously. They have a research director for natural resources who understands the subject. He has a better knowledge of the subject of the conservation of natural resources and the natural resource problem in general than any official of the trade union movement I have met to date.

He studied this question and presented his views before the convention. As a result the B.C. federation of labour adopted unanimously a most interesting brochure on power and politics. If anybody wants to read it I am quite sure I can get copies for them. This is a responsible, thoughtful policy entitled "Power Resources Belong to the People". I do not have time to read it fully but I wish to deal very briefly with some of the conclusions. Among other suggestions are these three:

> 3. Stop any plans which will mean the export of cheap Columbia power to the United States to the detriment of British Columbia's economic development.
> 4. Development of the Columbia river project as soon as possible. Labour favours the McNaughton plan which would eliminate the High Arrow dam project and the flooding of thousands of acres of valuable B.C. land.
> 6. There must be full federal-provincial co-operation and planning in developing B.C.'s long term power needs. A national power grid system would guarantee cheap and plentiful electricity to provide for future domestic and industrial needs in an expanding economy.

Since that date the B.C. federation of labour have been so concerned about this matter that they sent a telegram to the Minister of Justice, dated November 24, 1961. This is what the telegram says:

> The B.C. federation of labour opposes the export of power from British Columbia. Such a policy, we believe, will only lead to the further industrial development of the United States Pacific northwest and is tantamount to exporting jobs and industrial opportunities which under normal and proper development of the Columbia project would be provided for Canadians. We strongly urge the Canadian government under no circumstances to succumb to the pressures now being exerted by the Canadian chamber of commerce, the British Columbia Social Credit government and United States politicians for a reversal of the federal government's long standing policy on the question of power export.

That telegram is signed by Mr. R. R. Smeal, president, and Mr. E. P. O'Neal, secretary treasurer of the B.C. federation of labour.

In addition to that, quite recently Mr. Strachan, the leader of the New Democratic party in British Columbia who has been very concerned about this problem, issued a press release. I am going to quote from it because we want to show where we stand on this important question. This is dated November 24, 1961, and reads as follows:

Power—Columbia river. For the second time in seven years the Social Credit government of B.C. is openly conspiring with U.S. interests to sell out the future development of this province for the immediate gain of a fast buck and to satisfy its political ambition.

The only justification for the Socred attitude is the hollow desire to humiliate both the present federal government and the previous Liberal federal government which had the courage to halt the Kaiser dam giveaway.

The present High Arrow dam scheme is nothing more than the old Kaiser dam deal in disguise. The Kaiser aluminum company's letter of April 2, 1958, written to a committee of the U.S. Senate (attached hereto), proves beyond doubt that Premier Bennett has always been obsessed with forcing on B.C. a type of Columbia development which is only second best. To get his way he has openly invited U.S. intervention into purely Canadian affairs.

The Social Credit government set out from the start of the present treaty negotiations to deliberately sabotage full economic development of the Columbia to provide the maximum possible benefit to Canada via the McNaughton plan.

The point has now been reached where the federal government must act to take all and any necessary steps to halt the present Social Credit plans, to propose alteration of the treaty to eliminate High Arrow, and to develop the Columbia for the benefit of Canadians, if necessary entirely under federal auspices.

I do not consider this an infringement of provincial rights. In fact I submit it is the right and indeed the duty of the federal government to protect the people of B.C. against this Social Credit government which has proved that it cannot be trusted to place the interests of its country before its own personal political ambition.

If the federal government fails to take this action they too will be guilty of betraying Canada's interests.

That is the position of the New Democratic party and of organized labour in British Columbia, whether they are unions affiliated with the Canadian Congress of Labour or independent unions. In order to bring into focus the attitude of the powers behind the scenes in British Columbia we should look at the attitude of Dr. Gordon Shrum who, as is known to anyone who knows what happens in British Columbia behind the scenes, is the real power behind power policy in British Columbia.

This gentleman has an excellent war record. He was decorated for bravery; he was awarded the O.B.E. He has an excellent record as an administrator and as a professor at the University of British Columbia. This is what he has to say, according to Bill Fletcher of the Vancouver Sun in an article appearing in that newspaper on Friday, August 25, 1961:

"B.C.", said Dr. Gordon Shrum, "couldn't care less about the Columbia".

[Mr. Herridge.]

Dr. Shrum, the approachable, outspoken chairman of the B.C. Electric Company and the B.C. energy board, meant simply this: The government and the big utility company it now owns are committed to development of the Peace river.

They are satisfied with the economics of generating power on the north central B.C. river and transmitting it 600 miles to the lower mainland.

They are content that they have out-foxed both Ottawa and Washington. And, if nothing is ever done to unsnarl the complications on the Columbia it won't matter a ruddy kilowatt to the people of this province.

A confident Dr. Shrum outlined his views on the future power picture for me this week.

That statement has not been denied to date. I emphasize again that these are the words of Dr. Shrum. If hon. members know who Dr. Shrum is in British Columbia they will realize that there is a lot behind these words.

I wish to make some comments about a speech by Dr. Keenleyside who is a member of the energy board of British Columbia and chairman of the B.C. power commission. I might say that some members of the press gallery and some persons who have been associated with Dr. Keenleyside in the United Nations and in various government departments tell me he operates the best personal publicity bureau of any civil servant in Canada. I know something of his very effective publicity through the public relations division of the B.C. hydro commission. Anyway, he has made a speech and distributed it widely across Canada. Moreover he is available, I understand, according to information given to me to Canadian clubs and other groups. He is quite willing to address them on this question and to place his views before them.

First of all, I wish to say that I am one who takes strong exception to employees of the public in the civil service or those who are heads of bodies such as the hydro commission making public statements on highly controversial issues. Those are matters which should be dealt with by the elected representatives of the people and by the people themselves. I have read Dr. Shrum's views. Dr. Keenleyside takes a different view and as I have said before he has been voicing his opinions by making speeches to any appropriate group which has been willing to listen.

Now I should like to make a few comments on the text of the speech which was made by Dr. Keenleyside on December 15, 1961. This speech was made in Nanaimo. I quote:

To the extent that our power problems are political in character I shall have no comment to make although, in present circumstances, any discussion of these problems may have political implications. But any such implications will be incidental to my argument. Like everyone else, I have views on public matters, but I have taken no part in past political controversies and I have no intention of doing so now.

That is the understatement of the year. In fact, in my opinion, Dr. Keenleyside as a public employee and servant of the people is improperly engaged in one of the sharpest political controversies between governments in recent years.

Further on, as reported at page 5 of his speech, Dr. Keenleyside had this to say:

Nevertheless, low costs of large quantities of firm power are still important factors in deciding on the location of industry and the growth of population. Thus it is of the very first importance that British Columbia should have available quantities of power adequate to meet every foreseeable demand and at a price that will stimulate that demand.

Every industrial enterprise and every prospective settler should be aware that the cost of power in B.C. is at least as low as it is anywhere else on the continent. This has never been true in the past; it can and should be made true in the very near future. Any development program that does not aim directly at this target should be discarded.

Dr. Keenleyside, according to his speech, proposes to reach this target by selling Canadian power in the United States over a long period of years. I just mention this in order to show the contradiction in his argument. He continues, as appears on page 6:

The energy board indicated that the Peace could meet incremental loads of about 1,750 mw up to about 1975-78 and Columbia could meet incremental loads of about 2,500 mw up to about 1978-83. Thus well before 1985 the initial plans for these two rivers will have to be expanded or other sources developed to meet our domestic needs alone.

In that statement he puts the Peace ahead of the Columbia. He goes on to say as appears on pages 6 and 7:

It is appreciated that the cost of coal in Alberta is relatively low and so long as thermal plants can be constructed at the load centres there may not be large markets for the export of power from British Columbia. Nevertheless, the Alberta authorities are already showing an interest in Columbia power, and if, as was pointed out earlier, the costs of thermal power increase, our hydro generation, in spite of transmission costs, may soon become competitive in Alberta . . . But an interprovincial tie might well prove to be mutually advantageous. This will be particularly true if the present experimentation in high voltage, long distance, low cost transmission techniques proves successful, as Russian, Swedish and New Zealand tests seem to suggest.

The dream of a national network may be much nearer than was anticipated even three years ago. It is a dream that we all should seek to turn into reality.

However, although Dr. Keenleyside talks of Alberta showing an interest in Columbia power, he would prevent this development occurring for many years by selling surplus power in the United States on a firm basis over a long period of years. He continues:

This does not, of course, apply to the sale of downstream benefits which are not exports and the sale of which is permitted under the terms of the Columbia treaty signed by Ottawa and Washington.

Article 5 of the treaty provides that Canada is entitled to one half the downstream power benefits and that the United States shall deliver to Canada at the boundary this amount, less a transmission loss and amounts disposed of under Article 8, which provides that by exchange of notes a portion of this power can be sold in the United States.

However, without a doubt, the basic purpose of the treaty is to provide large quantities of cheap power and, in so doing, benefit the people of British Columbia as a whole through industrial development and the increased employment which will result. Undoubtedly, this purpose would be defeated and Canadians placed at a competitive disadvantage if the bulk of low cost downstream power were committed to the United States on a firm basis for a lengthy period as suggested by Dr. Keenleyside.

To continue, he goes on to say as reported on page 8:

Informal discussions have been held over the past year with agencies and organizations in the United States and we now know that a solid market exists for firm power at an attractive price.

This statement has never been proved to date and no one can say that it is a fact at this time. To continue the quotation:

If the Peace river power is not at first completely utilized in Canada some part of it could be offered to the United States at Blaine for about 5 mills.

Dr. Keenleyside here is suggesting that the Peace river is to have the whole Vancouver market with the intention of selling the downstream benefits to the United States over a long period of years. Then he continues, as appears on pages 10 and 11:

The terms of our agreements will not be 80 years but from 15 to 25 years, and the agreements will provide specific assurances that the power can be repatriated at the end of the contract term. This has already been publicly accepted by the U.S. authorities.

Well, anyone knows that if we sell firm power over a period of 15 to 25 years to the United States experience has proved that they build industries, they build communities based on that power, and it will never be recaptured by Canada.

Further on he says on page 11:

During the ten years, 1950-1960, there have been deliveries of firm power to the United States from Canada of about 150,000 kilowatts to 176,000 kilowatts each year.

Mr. Macdonnell: Will the hon. member permit a question? I understood him to say, and I have understood it to be the fact, that if we export power for lengthy periods communities are built up which are based on that power and that in spite of all the treaties in the world you would not get the power back. Notwithstanding that, have the United States authorities recently been ready to agree that this should happen? In other words, is what I have considered to be a fact invalidated at all by recent action of the United States?

Mr. Herridge: The latest I have read is that in the first instance they would not sign a contract for power unless it is over a very lengthy period and on a firm basis, and I suggest that experience proves that when you sell power over a lengthy period you cannot recapture it. There is discussion in United States newspapers about the industries that can be established on the basis of this power. Dr. Keenleyside goes on to say on page 11:

> During the ten years, 1950-1960, there have been deliveries of firm power to the United States from Canada of about 150,000 kilowatts to 176,000 kilowatts each year. These figures represent a little over half of one per cent of the total net generating capability of Canada today.

My comment in that respect is that Dr. Keenleyside fails completely to mention that all of these deliveries are on a short term basis and in some cases on an interruptable basis. I quote from page 13:

> Sometimes it is a temptation to believe that there is some proof in the stories that one hears from time to time about the determination of influential interests in Ontario and Quebec to protect certain schemes or plans of their own by preventing the federal government from allowing British Columbia to use its power resources to maximum value.

By "maximum value" he means sales to the United States. Maximum use for British Columbia power resources is to sell the surplus power to Canadians. This seems to be an attempt on his part, in my opinion, to raise the old east versus west bogey, which I think is a most unfortunate approach. On the same page he says further:

> Among our own people the fear has been expressed that a sale in the United States of our downstream benefits, as provided in the treaty, will mean that we would be selling cheap power to the Americans instead of bringing it home to use ourselves. If this were true I should certainly be among the first to oppose it. But, except in a very limited and temporary sense, it is not true.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this again is a complete distortion of the facts. Dr. Keenleyside knows it is true. He participated in all discussions that were held here in Ottawa during which there was never a hint of such a policy with respect to the sale of downstream benefits. Then, on page 14 of his speech he says:

> The United States would get about 1 million kilowatts by making new expenditures which would be the equivalent of one mill per kilowatt hour.

[Mr. Herridge.]

I have discussed this with engineers, Mr. Speaker, and, of course, Dr. Keenleyside does not know this. I turn to page 15 where he says:

> B.C. could provide for its own needs by developing the Peace and paying a little over 4 mills for Peace power.

Without a doubt 4 mills is low. This is the key to the situation. It is in my opinion, to force Peace river power on British Columbia and keep out Columbia power and sell it in the United States. On page 16 Dr. Keenleyside says:

> It was, of necessity, a compromise document and, on the whole, it gives Canada a return which a few years ago would have been discarded as a quite Utopian fantasy.

Here is my comment on that. This return was not to be on the basis of the sale of power in the United States. It was to be on the basis of cheap power delivered to the Canadian border. Then, I turn to page 18 where he says:

> And who can say with complete assurance that the federal government will continue to refuse to give Victoria the same kind of assistance that it is giving Regina in the case of the South Saskatchewan dam?

Talk about not entering into political controversy, Mr. Speaker. In the first instance, the projects are not comparable, in my opinion, and in the second instance, this is a highly political statement on the part of Dr. Keenleyside and I think an improper statement coming from an employee of the people of British Columbia. He is our servant and he needs to remember that. I quote from page 19:

> We should . . . as soon as sale contracts can be negotiated in the United States proceed to the immediate development of the Columbia river treaty projects with a view to obtaining the first financial returns from the sale of the downstream benefits at the earliest possible moment—hopefully 1965.

In my opinion and in the opinion of a good many persons with whom I have discussed this matter, this policy is a complete sell-out of our power resources to the United States.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I should like the indulgence of the house for two or three minutes.

Mr. Churchill: Five minutes.

Mr. Speaker: May the hon. member have a few minutes to finish his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Herridge: I am sorry to have taken the time of the house but I am very concerned and feel very deeply about this matter, and I represent the views of a lot of my constituents and many other Canadians.

While the United States will appreciate this additional power and the flood control that this treaty will provide, no mention has been made to date of the even greater value of this enormous quantity of water for irrigation and other purposes. Friends of mine in the United States came to see me and informed me that already a number of pipes of huge diameter are being installed above Grand Coulee dam and plans are being made for the irrigation of hundreds of thousands of acres. We can use this water to irrigate hundreds of thousands of acres in the Okanagan in British Columbia.

In the future power can be obtained from a number of sources, but with the increase of population water will become an ever scarcer and more valuable commodity. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I urge the government to take advantage of the present situation to:

1. Renegotiate the treaty and in so doing make the Mica Creek dam the heart of the development on the Columbia and eliminate the High Arrow dam with its unnecessary destruction of natural resources, communities and a large amount of public and private investment. We can at the same time provide our friends in the United States with ample stored water, flood control and so on.

2. Preserve this million acre park intact with its abundance of recreational, fish and game resources.

3. Establish a river basin agency which should represent the various interests in the basin. The primary impact of a water resources development and management program is on the people of the region affected. To date they have simply been told what is going to happen to them by their servants. The influence of water development is widely felt on agriculture, on forestry, on industry, on recreation and on fish and game resources. Such a development has a pronounced effect on the physical characteristics of the area in which all the residents have rights and important interests. Therefore, it is essential that the basin agency should represent the populace generally in the same manner as a legislator would represent them in other fields.

4. Proceed immediately to promote the development of a national power grid in order that surplus power from the Columbia would be used to develop Canadian industry and promote employment.

5. Promote an appreciation and understanding on the part of the public generally of this vast project and so enlist the co-operation of the people and their organizations.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say this. Let our motto be: Use Canadian power to develop Canadian industry and, second, use Canadian water to develop Canadian agriculture. I urge the government to seize the opportunity presented by this stalemate to promote the planned development of our resources to the advantage of all Canadians. I thank hon. members for their consideration.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I should like to add my congratulations to those extended to the mover (Mr. Bourdages) and the seconder (Mr. Browne, Vancouver-Kingsway) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne as well as to those extended to the newly appointed Deputy Speaker and the new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn).

I intend to answer some of the charges made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and others who have spoken from the other side of the chamber, by dealing with two departments with which I have endeavoured to make myself familiar while I have been here, namely the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and, just as important, the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

When I first arrived here it was a surprise and a source of wonderment to me that the federal government could go along for so many years without recognizing the necessity for creating a department of forestry inasmuch as the activities of such a department would undoubtedly increase the economic stature of Canada. The second matter that surprised me was the fact that such little attention was being paid to the activities of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys having regard to the fact that the mineral industry in Canada latterly has been responsible for some 40 per cent to 42 per cent of our total exports. In the time during which I have been here it has been the practice of hon. members opposite to adopt the attitude of scorning the expressed policy of the government of developing Canada as a whole rather than as a group of ten provinces. I refer particularly to the Leader of the Opposition, the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin) who I am sorry to note is not in his seat but who cannot go without mention, as well as another absent member, namely the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets). These members and many more like them on the opposite side of the chamber tend to look upon Canada as it is often described, namely as a narrow ribbon of population stretching from the Atlantic across to the Pacific. They forget completely that well over 40 per cent of the nation's resources lie above the boundary line of the sixtieth parallel.

The resources of the north have always been a challenge. They have always constituted a potential which, if attacked with vigour, imagination and vision, would produce for Canada an economic impetus which would be felt in a corresponding rate of growth in our national economy. It seems to me that the Leader of the Opposition and those who support him look not to national development in terms of the development of natural resources in a national sense but rather to the development of measures which are calculated to impress those more highly populated areas of Canada in which of course, a greater number of votes are to be reached. In this consideration perhaps lies the secret of 22 years of Liberal tenure when the north, in the language of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), stagnated. In those years, Mr. Speaker, little was done in the way of vigorous, imaginative and aggressive development of the resources heritage which belongs to all Canadians and which lies within the confines of this vast part of Canada. However, one needs only to make comparison.

It is all very well for hon. gentlemen opposite to attack the policies of the party of the north. That is indeed what this party is, but not in the sense that it expects to gain votes for developing the north; for in that area constituting 40 per cent of Canada there are only two seats, namely the one for Yukon and the one for Mackenzie River. Hence one cannot confront the government with the accusation that they are attempting to garner votes by putting national funds into the development of northern resources. The common sense conclusion must be that the government is making a sincere endeavour to develop these resources for the benefit of the whole of the nation.

It is easy for the Leader of the Opposition to say that what is required are wise and far-sighted plans and policies—I believe those were his words—with leadership which puts national interest above party advantage. Surely the Leader of the Opposition cannot accuse the government of putting party advantage above the national interest when the professed intention of the government is to develop the resources of the northern areas which are represented, in terms of seats in the House of Commons, by two out of 265. I ask hon. members opposite, Mr. Speaker, if they really believe the words of their leader when they accuse this government of putting party advantage before national interest when they follow the aggressive, enlightened and vigorous policy of developing the north and when the intention must be that of promoting the national interest and only that?

There are two parts of the speech from the throne upon which I should like to comment before dealing with the activities of the two important departments I have mentioned. One is that portion which deals with—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps this will be a convenient place for the hon. member to interrupt his address.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, before we adjourned I had mentioned that there were two points in the speech from the throne to which I wished to refer as they are of particular interest to me. One is the provision which parliament will be asked to make for an expanded program of encouragement of scientific research in Canada, a provision which I should like to believe is the result of the work of the special committee on research which was established last year. It is, I believe, the responsibility of government to expend moneys in partnership with private industry particularly in the field of applied research so that the facilities of governmental agencies, especially those of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, are made available to fundamental research.

The other provision in the speech from the throne to which I wish to refer is the subject of a bill which I have introduced this session concerning representation in the Senate, and I will simply refer to that by expressing the hope that the measure concerned will make provision for representation in the Senate for the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Before the dinner adjournment I was drawing comparisons, and I should like to refer very briefly to the fact that I put on record in Hansard last session a table of comparative statistics as to the amount expended on investment in northern development in the five years prior to 1957 and the amount expended in the four or four and a half years subsequent to 1957. In most cases the investment was multiplied five times and in many cases it was tenfold.

In answer to those who are critical of the progress which is being made in the northern development program, I have some figures here from the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. For the fiscal year 1956-57 federal expenditures on road construction and maintenance in both the Yukon and Northwest Territories amounted to $2,655,000. In the current fiscal year the estimates provide for $9,278,000. I should explain that the final figure for expenditures is not available since all the accounts are not in, but the program is proceeding according to schedule. To me this increase in federal investment in Canada's northern areas is indicative of those wise and planned policies to which the Leader of the Opposition was referring yesterday in his remarks, expenditures which I think I should say were completely overlooked when he and his colleagues formed the government.

In total the votes for work in the north administered by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources have grown from $11,318,000 in 1956-57 to $36,536,000 in 1961-62. The resultant stimulation of prospecting which will undoubtedly bring about a greater and more rapid exploitation of the nation's mineral wealth in the northern areas of our country cannot, in my view at any rate, be overemphasized.

A more startling comparison, however, exists with regard to oil and gas exploration activity in the areas north of the sixtieth parallel. The total number of leases, permits and reservations in good standing in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon is 2,133 covering 106,680,022 acres. Compare this with the January, 1957, total of 12 million acres under permit in addition to about 6 million acres in the two reservations in the Yukon territory and the small proven field at Norman Wells.

Since major oil and gas exploration got under way in 1957, about $56 million has been spent. Between now and 1970 indications are that a further $300 million will be spent and the total may well go far beyond this. Information at the present time about plans for the coming year indicates that expenditures of the order of $15 million will be made over the next 12 months. I will not bore the house by including the breakdown of the permits, leases and reservations which are now in good standing in the territories. Suffice it to say that it is as a direct result of the oil and gas policies of the government that such a large expansion in the stimulation of oil and gas exploration in the northern areas of Canada has come about.

Passing to the activities of the mines and technical surveys department, again I refer to the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition when he said that what is required is wise and planned policies, farsighted plans and policies with leadership which puts national interest above party advantage. Again I emphasize the point that the policies that the government is following in the development of these northern areas of our nation cannot be held to be anything less than in the national interest, particularly in view of the remarks that the Leader of the Opposition and his colleagues have made time and time again criticizing the government for making these large investments in Canada's north rather than making them in the more populated, vote-catching areas of the south. I submit it is in the national interest of those opposite that this nation be developed as a whole and not region by region.

A brief glance at the economic situation relative to the mineral industry in the country provides, I think, some very startling comparisons. Canadian mineral production in 1957 was valued at $2.1 billion, with metallic minerals accounting for $1.1 billion and industrial minerals accounting for $442 million and mineral fuels $555 million. Per capita value of mineral output was $128.64. The seasonally adjusted index of physical volume of the mineral industry was 235.8, with the index set in 1949 at 100, and the index for the industry as a whole in 1957 was 148.6.

Canadian mineral production in 1960 is valued at $2.5 billion, with metallic minerals accounting for $1.45 billion, industrial minerals $480 million and mineral fuels $570 million. Per capita value of mineral output is estimated at $140. The seasonally adjusted index of physical volume of the mineral industry is estimated at 257, and the index for the industry as a whole in 1960 is estimated at 169.

In the three year period from 1957 to 1960, the total value of mineral production increased $400,000, or 19 per cent, averaging a little more than 6 per cent per year. The index of physical volume for the industry in that period increased from 235.8 to an estimated 257.0, or 8.5 per cent.

At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned that the value of our mineral exports was 40 to 42 per cent of the total value of the nation's export trade. Exports of minerals and products based on the mineral industry in 1950 were valued at $812 million. The value of the total exports in that year was $3,118 million.

Exports of minerals and mineral-based products, for the first nine months of 1957 and 1960 were valued at $1,521.5 million and $1,718.9 million respectively. Total Canadian exports in 1957 and 1960 were valued at $3,570 million and $3,899.6 million respectively, and on this, Mr. Speaker, the conclusion can be made that minerals and mineral-based products accounted for approximately 44 per cent of total exports in the first nine months of 1960, up from 42 per cent in the like period of 1957, and 26 per cent for the 1950 calendar year. The importance of the mineral industry to the nation's economy, I submit, cannot be overemphasized.

The sum total of mineral products on a comparison basis will be illustrated when I say that iron and its products exported in 1957 accounted for $392.8 million, or 11 per cent of the total, while in 1960 they accounted for $464.9, or 12 per cent of the total. Non-ferrous metals and their products brought in $742.8 million in 1957, which was 20.8 per cent of our total exports, and in 1960 they brought in $920.6 million or 23.6 of the total. In fact, exports of mineral products increased all along the line from 1957 to 1960, and I believe that the increase is in a large measure attributable to expanded activity in the development of natural resources brought about by the policies of this government.

We have been criticized by the opposition for not taking any action. We have been criticized by the hon. member for Assiniboia for stagnation in the development of the nation's natural resources, but let us have a look at the facts in so far as the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys is concerned.

Action taken relative to the development of the north started in 1958 with a $6 million photographic project of the Arctic. Second, the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys has recognized a definite need to secure additional information about the resources potential of the Queen Elizabeth islands area of Canada. This region may be a valuable future potential source of oil and minerals. The department has therefore organized and dispatched a research team of 60 professional and sub-professional personnel to the area, and this group has produced valuable practical information which will be essential to the ultimate development of the resources of the Arctic islands.

Third, shoran geodetic control work was completed in 1958 for the Arctic islands and fourth, a program of accurate topographic mapping of the Arctic islands, which will continue for four or five years, was commenced.

The fifth point is that in co-operation with the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources a survey is proceeding of localities in northern Canada which may serve as sites for new communities. Sixth, preliminary surveys for power facilities on the Yukon river have recently started.

The seventh point in the program is that geological work in the north has been greatly increased since 1957 in accordance with the expressed government policy of developing Canada's northland. The eighth step was the launching of geographical surveys in northern Canada, which are now under way in co-operation with the department of northern affairs, to help develop the economy of surveyed areas and assist local Indian or Eskimo populations.

Surveys are proceeding towards new locations or relocations of settlements in northern Canada, and the tenth point is that an intensified program has been undertaken of recording the earth's magnetism and magnetic storms, particularly in northern Canada to assist navigation, surveying and geophysical prospecting. Is that indicative of a lack of wise planning and policies? Things that should have been done long ago are now being undertaken by this government to develop a part of Canada which for years and years was forgotten and which, in the words of the hon. member for Assiniboia "stagnated" under the rule of the Liberal regime.

What about the roads to resources program?

Mr. McIlraith: What about the bridge at Prince Albert—an improper use of the funds?

Mr. Nielsen: Would the hon. member repeat that?

Mr. McIlraith: They built a bridge at Prince Albert which was an improper use of the funds as voted by parliament.

Mr. Nielsen: My friend the hon. member for Ottawa West, interjects from his seat, as his colleagues are wont to do from time to time, and if I had not asked him to repeat his question I would not have heard it. That, Mr. Speaker, is the way he gets it in Hansard. He sneaks it into Hansard, as so many of his colleagues do, and it is not until next day that we get an opportunity to read what they have said, and then we do not always have an opportunity to reply. Well, there have been more bridges built than the bridge at Prince Albert and remember, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals were speaking for years and years about the Saskatchewan river dam project. The Liberals have been speaking about roads and bridges all across the country but there had to be a different government come in to do what the Liberals were only talking about.

Sound action has been taken by the mines and technical surveys department in relation to the roads to resources program. A very significant contribution to the roads to resources program is being made by the geological survey of Canada in connection with surveys over 60,000 square miles of potential mineral territory in northwestern Ontario. Commercial aircraft are being employed to assist in the aerial work. This type of program provides the opportunity of working with the provinces in developing new techniques in prospecting on a regional scale. The geochemical work, in particular, may have broad applications to mineral exploration in Canada. Already, prospecting has been stimulated in northwestern Ontario as a result of this activity in mineral exploration. The aeromagnetic maps prepared by the geological survey of Canada and the Ontario department of mines are being distributed and are aiding considerably in encouraging mineral industry activity.

The geological survey is actively continuing its program of aeromagnetic survey work through Canada and makes maps quickly available to assist in the search for new mineral deposits.

Officers of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys have been responsible for mineral resource appraisals in connection with all proposed road programs across Canada since the establishment of the roads to resources program, a program which was initiated by this government and talked about for many years by those opposite.

Before my time expires I wish to deal very quickly with the federal contribution made in respect of the development of social services in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, that part of Canada which I again say constitutes 40 per cent of the nation's wealth and resources—perhaps even more than that.

In the Yukon territory federal contributions were made to schools in the following amounts: to the Destruction bay school $45,500; to the Takhini school, $214,500. This is still under negotiation. The Watson lake school, $72,865; to the Selkirk street school, $149,370; to the new high school, $367,188 of $1¼ million. Negotiations are still going on there. The federal government is contributing 75 per cent of the estimated total cost of the new vocational school in the amount of $743,000. To the separate schools program there were grants of $162,000 and $40,000 in those years.

The federal contribution to education in the Northwest Territories was $5,036,987 in 1957-58; $5,059,486 in 1958-59; $3,910,314 in 1959-60, and $2,240,514 in 1960-61, with a gross expenditure of $16,247,301 since this government took office. There is a forecast for 1962 of well over $2 million.

The same story can be told throughout federal department after federal department having anything to do with the north. Where before you had a complete absence of attention to the north—indeed, a complete neglect—you have now a sincere and a very well meaning intention to develop Canada's northland to the benefit of the nation.

I can point out several small indications, such as the Prime Minister's visit to the Yukon territory and the Northwest Territories, which areas for the first time in Canada's history were visited by a Canadian prime minister. The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) said during the last session that he visited Canada's northland. I said then, and I say again,—and I challenge him now that I see him in his seat—to tell us when he did visit the northland. If he indeed did travel above the sixtieth parallel he certainly did not look around him to see what potential this area of Canada had to offer to the economic development of the whole nation.

What action has the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys taken relative to applied research in the mineral resource development of this nation? In the first place, the practice followed over the years of assisting the mineral industry by laboratory research projects carried out in the mines branch laboratories has been accelerated during the past two or three years. Projects are carried on at the specific request of companies and also in line with fundamental research plans of the department directed toward greater development and utilization of Canada's mineral resources. In particular, stress is being laid on techniques which will lead to further processing of minerals in Canada, something which I submit was entirely overlooked for many, many years by those opposite.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the hon member that his time has expired.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address myself to one of the most urgent and certainly most ignored problems in Canada, the plight of the dairy farmer. Before doing so I wish to join in the congratulations to both the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

(Translation):

I should like to offer my congratulations to the new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn) on his recent appointment. I have been closely acquainted with the other distinguished member for the constituency of Quebec South, Hon. C. G. Power, who is a great Canadian and who successively held four portfolios. Although the present Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys does not belong to the same party as Mr. Power, I suggest that he take him as his model.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, the seconder of the speech from the throne, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne) concluded his remarks with these words:

By any analysis of our economy and its future prospects there is no cause for pessimism. By any analysis whatever there is every reason for all Canadians to move forward to a greater and brighter future under the brilliant leadership of the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, one of the world's outstanding leaders.

I should like to refer to the language used by the Prime Minister in the opening campaign speech at Massey hall on April 25, 1957, which is very much in the minds and memories of us all. He said:

We will assure the farmer of his fair share of the national income by maintaining a flexible . . . price support program to ensure an adequate parity for agricultural producers based on a fair price-cost relationship . . . It represents in general the viewpoint of organized agriculture across Canada. It represents the experience of every other country with free economy in agriculture. It represents the need at this time if agriculture is to take its proper place in this nation.

I will now read from the Ontario Union Farmer of January, 1962, page 1, an article entitled "Promises of the Government":

These are the written words of the Conservative government and we quote further—"Canada now has a Prime Minister and a government who are not only greatly concerned about the farmer's position in our national economy but are determined that everything possible will be done to place agriculture in its proper position in that economy".

Then the editor says:

Lately there has been a considerable selling campaign in action to promote the idea that the present government has fulfilled all their promises to agriculture and to the farmers concerned.

Thank goodness we have a few people in farm union ranks, at least, to challenge these statements.

Then the article continues:

In view of the fact that inflation was not checked, the dollar value remains near the half way mark, and there is certainly no justification to say that farm people enjoy the degree of equality promised and advocated for years by our present Prime Minister.

I should like to refer this house to a few figures, the latest that I have been able to obtain from the Ontario department of agriculture. These figures refer to total standard fluid and special fluid milk bought and they are for Leeds county: $4.86 a cwt. for special fluid milk and $2.51 for secondary milk, or an average of $4.23. If we look at the figures for the years 1960 and 1961 we see prices dropping substantially. There was a drop from $2.60 to $2.53 in 1960-61, or a decrease in the average from $4.59 to $4.52.

What about the cost of products? I am referring to the latest figures available to us for products delivered, via Ottawa, November 1960-1961. For oats delivered, Ottawa, the price was $62 per ton. A year later it was $67.80. With respect to barley the price was $54.25 in 1960 and it went up to $62.50 in 1961. For bran the price was $50.25 in 1960 and it went up to $54 in 1961. For shorts the price was $52.35 in 1960 and it went up to $57 in 1961. For dry and freshening feeds the price was $73.25 in 1960 and it went up to $77.25 in 1961.

I read from the Toronto Globe and Mail of April 20, 1957:

For the farmers Mr. Diefenbaker pledged a fair share of the national economy through a flexible support price program to ensure parity between farm prices and costs.

At St. Patrice de Beaurivage at the beginning of his campaign the Prime Minister spoke on the same subject.

(Translation):

Speaking on the same subject, Mr. Diefenbaker added: "We recognize that the farmers' prosperity is the basic condition for the general prosperity of this country. The reforms we advocate can be summed up as follows: reasonable prices by means of price support, and substantial markets for your products."

(Text):

Let me refer to some of the figures I was able to get just today about the price index. I think we heard the Prime Minister tell us he was maintaining the value of the Canadian dollar. If this is so it certainly does not prevail with respect to some of our people in farming constituencies. These figures refer to commodities used by farmers and I am taking first the figure in August, 1957, which was 241. In 1962 the latest figure available was 262.4, an increase of 10 per cent. If we take out the living component we find that in August, 1957 the figure was 257.6 whereas now it is 287.8.

If we turn now to the consumer price index we find that in November 1956 it was 120.3. The figure in 1961, the latest figure available, was 129.7.

One of the last things which Mr. Grant Dexter wrote before he died was a series of articles which he called "Fountain Pen Money" as a result of the fiscal and monetary policies adopted by this government. These are matters we can fairly bring to the attention of the house and of the public. An article which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail on September 11, 1961 was headed "Costs in Canada, U.S., Higher, Rising Faster Than Elsewhere: Study". The Montreal Gazette on December 7 carried an article headed "Living Cost Index up Half-Point to Record". On October 6, 1961 the Ottawa Citizen carried a story pointing out the cost of living in Canada was rising higher and higher.

Leeds is a typical dairy county with 30,000 milk cows and an annual production of 180 million pounds of milk. I would say that between three-fifths and nine-tenths of all the land stretching from Leeds to the Quebec border in Glengarry is used for dairy farming.

These are old settlements—the oldest and proudest U.E.L. settlements in Canada—and it will not do to tell these people to move off the land or to grow trees.

But all Canada is interested in this dairy problem. Ontario is by no means the only province which is interested in this solution. I recall to the house that in Ontario important fluid milk shippers are established at Halton, Ontario, Lincoln, Essex, Haldimand and Simcoe. Processed milk shippers are established in Oxford, Elgin, Perth, Huron, Hastings and Prince Edward. I invite representatives of dairy constituencies to stand up and be counted now, in their speeches in this house as well as in caucus, because the dairy industry is in trouble and it is about time parliament recognized some of the facts.

I stress the lead that Ontario must give, because 37 per cent of all fluid sales in Canada come from the province of Ontario. This is not a small business. This is a billion dollar business with 350,000 farm families and as many in the other branches of the industry, such as processing and marketing, dependent upon it. I may say we have 50,000 fewer dairy farmers today than we had ten years ago so it is not a case of this constituency growing; it is a case of this constituency now being in serious trouble.

May I refer now to some figures prepared by the economics department, Ontario Agricultural College. First, dairy specialty farms. This refers to a particular group of people, the producers of fluid milk. After making allowances for expenses and the interest on capital the net income from labour amounts to $3,027. There were 156 farms included in the survey made of that grade. Fifteen low labour income farms which were also surveyed showed an annual loss under this labour income item of $2,035. I ask any fair minded person in parliament: how would you like to have $30,000 tied up in a farm in order to earn an income from labour of $3,000? The Prime Minister spoke to an audience on May 16, 1957 and said that the farmer was the forgotten man in Canada's boom. I say now that the dairy farmer is the forgotten man in Canada's recession.

I turn now to refer to the report entitled "Dairy General". This deals with the people who sell to the processing plants. Here we see yet another picture. One hundred and twenty eight farmers stated their receipts, their expenses and the money left as operators' income. The final figure, net labour income, amounted to $1,212 a year. That amounts to 30 cents an hour for his labour for a man supplying milk to a manufacturing milk plant. I remind the house of the Prime Minister's promise that something would be done to assist the Canadian farmer who, he said, had been relentlessly squeezed between declining prices for his products and rising living costs. Well, never has the situation been as serious as that which affects the dairy farmer today.

Without a sound and healthy dairy industry there cannot be a sound rural economy in a great many sections of Canada. This is the most widespread industry in the country and it affects the livelihood of many people in every province. Any policy we adopt must be national in its scope. This is a complicated problem and it is one whose solution calls for the most careful study and analysis because conditions which prevail in one part of the country do not prevail in another.

For example, 50 per cent of prairie milk goes into butter and skim milk powder. Ninety per cent of the cheese is made from Ontario and Quebec milk. British Columbia is the only province where 50 per cent of the milk produced is used as whole milk. This situation makes a national policy difficult to formulate. Some of the figures I intend to read now will, however, make the situation clearer to hon. members. First, I think it is important to note where the milk produced in Canada goes. The amounts of milk going into various outlets are approximately as follows:

Butter and skim milk powder	42 per cent
Whole milk and cream	31 per cent
Condensed products and ice cream	9 per cent
Cheese	7 per cent
Farm butter and milk used on farms	11 per cent
	100 per cent

This means that 73 per cent of production goes into two outlets which return over 80 per cent of the total cash income for the whole industry. Our policy, as a national policy, should, surely, be directed toward expanding these two largest sources of income, but this is not the case.

Our problem is that the consumption of butter is declining at a rate which is creating a serious situation, one which is frightening well informed people in the agricultural industry today.

A second serious point is that whole milk consumption is not keeping pace with our increase in population; for some years we have seen a regular decline in consumption per capita. What is going to happen very shortly is that this basic industry will collapse. A national policy must reverse both the trends I have mentioned. We must consume far more dairy products, particularly butter and whole milk. It is essential that this should be done and it should be tackled on a national basis because nothing else will be sufficient.

One might say that there is another solution, namely, to cut production. However, this is not a solution which we on this side of the house would favour. We may leave it to the wisdom of some of these agricultural people who have done a lot of research on this question and who have suggested for example the introduction of a reduced lactation period, unified marketing plans within provinces, etc., all designed to control overproduction. But a national policy should be directed to increasing consumption immediately.

The promised land, the supreme gift of God, was, according to the book of Joshua, a land flowing with milk and honey. The fact is that we are a severely depressed land stockpiled with butter, and what is flowing is not milk. I was reading an article in the Rural Co-Operator of January 10 which indicated that beer consumption in the Toronto area increased by 12 per cent last year. I will read hon. members later an account of what happened to milk consumption in the same period.

Before getting to the heart of this problem may I offer the house some general facts that we should consider before enunciating a solution to the difficulties of this industry. Canada total milk production is estimated at 19.2 billion pounds, 4 per cent higher than in 1960. There has been a build-up in cow numbers since 1960 and this will possibly last through 1964. The numbers of milk cows on farms has increased in the five year period from 1957 to 1961 by 6.2 per cent in Ontario and by 5.6 per cent in Quebec, for a national average of 3.8 per cent.

Along with this increase in the cow population a great tendency has been noted to increase the size of commercial farms. There has certainly been an increase in efficiency, in technique, in ability to provide better pasturage. From 1948 to 1957 the number of cows on factory milk farms increased from 17 to 20 and on fluid milk farms from 23 to 30. The capital required for a factory milk farm now averages about $22,000 and for a fluid milk farm about $38,000.

One of our problems is the fact that the production per unit has increased substantially. The average last year was approximately 5,900 pounds per cow. One very large herd in Ontario had a production rate of over 10,000 pounds per cow right throughout the herd.

Now, is there a solution to this problem of current over-production? This over-production problem may only be with us for a few years. There is a solution. We have to deal with this butter situation. We have to face it now. We cannot put it off. I remind the house that the government had ample notice of this problem. The dairy farmers and the Canadian federation of agriculture have made representations to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton). I recall reading an address which was delivered in the other place by a former provincial minister of agriculture, on January 24, 1961. This address was reprinted in a great many farm journals and a good many editorials. Nothing has been done. No attention has been paid to the problem. The present butter surplus is the direct result, Mr. Speaker, of this government succumbing to the temptation of promising before the last election that there would be a 64 cent floor price on butter. I say that with authority.

For three and a half years the government has watched the surplus build up until it is now a great depressant to the dairy industry. In this connection, I would tell the house that between 1949 and 1958, when there was a 58 cent price on butter, the domestic disappearance of butter increased year by year. The disappearance was 261 million pounds in 1949 and 322 million pounds in 1958 at the 58 cent floor price. In 1958, we had this pre-election offer of 64 cents, without any deficiency plan whatever, although many experts requested a deficiency plan in order to put butter on the market on the basis that would ensure its immediate use. Butter consumption started down in 1958 and has dropped every year since. We now have the situation of a very serious build-up of stocks, one that is worrying a great many experts.

I remind the house that Mr. Pierre Cote, who was president of the national dairy council, has, on several occasions, given addresses on this subject. He gave one on January 16, 1962, and I notice that he gave an important address on December 1, 1960, which was directed to the government. He has spoken on this subject repeatedly, asking that the government immediately take steps to get rid of this surplus which is actually depressing the value of all dairy products.

We on this side ask for an immediate consumer subsidy of 14 cents a pound so that butter can be put on the market at 50 cents per pound. Then it will be consumed before it is spoiled. There might be a little variation of this policy. There may be other ways by which this can be done, but we have to get that butter to the public at a price that will ensure its sale. I suggest that the government give consideration to the 50 cent figure. It might be that we could do this in other ways by means of deficiency payment, but we have to get rid of this butter. We have to get people back into the habit of consuming butter.

Our national goal should be the consumption of 20 pounds of butter per person per year. With 18 million people in this country, this consumption rate would restore the balance. We are now consuming approximately 15.1 pounds per person. I might tell you that for many years we had a much larger rate of consumption of butter than this. I will refer, if I may a little later in my remarks, to some of the actual consumption rates by Canadians. There has been some popular chatter about cholesterol and heart disease. This question was handled by the former minister of agriculture to whom I have referred. He indicated that studies had been made in the United States which indicated the extent to which Canadians suffered from heart disease in comparison with the people of the United States who consumed far less butter. We know that the people of northern Ireland, Finland and New Zealand consume over 30 pounds per capita with a very slight incidence of heart disease. The United States has the highest incidence of heart disease in the world with a butter consumption of something over 6 pounds per person. There was a time when we, in Canada, consumed about 34 pounds of butter per person. I ask the house, therefore, to consider very seriously the question of whether or not the Department of Agriculture should give some thought to reversing this adverse publicity which is debasing our industry.

The next thing we have to consider is the problem of the consumption of fluid milk. There has been a steady downward trend in the consumption of fluid milk since 1956 when consumption was 314 pints per person per year. In 1961, the consumption per capita was around 302 pints. A comparison of the decline in fluid milk and cream since 1955 is even more startling. Canada must rapidly become milk conscious for the sake of national health as well as for the sake of the dairy industry. We do not dare compare this trend with the consumption of alcoholic beverages in the same period.

In our world of the dairy industry, a permanent cloud rests in the lowering of consumption of our milk products per capita. This consumption, which was 1,150 pounds per capita in 1950, has lowered to 940 pounds in 1960 whereas production remains at a base of 1,035 pounds. Our future markets will be established by the solution to the equation formed by a growing population but meanwhile progressively consuming less of our products. I say to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness) that one of the ways we could do this would be to make milk available to our soldiers and to people in service hospitals. We should give them all the milk they can drink. I am sure those of you who were soldiers can remember how much you would have liked to drink milk in large quantities. Then, what about the penitentiaries? What about making milk available to those people in some volume?

What about a school program? In the United States and in almost all parts of western Europe a school milk program is doing a great deal to alleviate this problem. Could we reverse the trend in this country with a school milk program? I say we could.

I was noticing again an article published in one of the newspapers showing what had been done in the Windsor area. The milk producers league increased the use of fluid milk by 6 per cent in one year through the institution of a school milk program. In England we have a situation where they are getting rid of milk in volume by the use of vending machines. The government is taking an active interest in this program and they have increased milk consumption by 10 per cent by this technique. It would not be difficult to adopt this program in Canada. We must make milk available to our armed forces, our hospitals, our penitentiaries and particularly our school children. We could do this and it would be the best thing we could do for the nation. In the United States, about 4 per cent of the fluid milk being used is being used by school children. In Canada, the figure is less than 1 per cent. There is nothing that will improve this rate of consumption like a consumer subsidy for the fluid product.

Then, what about strontium 90? We have heard a lot about strontium 90 in recent days because people are so conscious of what has been happening as a result of these tests in the atmosphere. There has been much adverse publicity lately about milk as a carrier of strontium 90. Although it is in all foods, greater publicity has been given to milk because of its purity and because milk samples are available at all times of the year in all parts of the country for purposes of tests. I think it is time the Canadian government took a special interest in making it clear to the people that the cow screens as much as seven eighths of the strontium 90 from her diet. We do not know how much strontium 90 is carried in wheat, cabbages, lettuce and other things because these tests are not easy to do. They are easy to do in connection with milk. Even the one eighth of the strontium 90 which remains in milk can be removed. Dr. B. B. Migicovsky, of the research branch of the Department of Agriculture has developed a technique whereby this can be done. Another important thing is this. If the human body has a choice between calcium and strontium 90, the tendency is for the body to discriminate against strontium 90 and to take calcium. Our greatest source of supply for calcium is milk. In other words, in order to be safe from the hazards of strontium 90 a person should drink milk.

It is urgent that we build up our consumption of milk products, particularly, as I say, of butter and fluid milk. Gilbert MacMillan says that one of the most important means to this end is to have a federal standard for whole milk. I refer to the many submissions that have been put forward by him and other dairy experts who say that it is about time that we had a federal standard for whole milk which would clearly define the fat and solids-not-fat content of milk. Mr. MacMillan is well known to the Department of Agriculture. He was president of the Dairy Farmers of Canada and served on the National Dairy Council. He was president of the Canadian Ayrshire Breeders' Association. His opinions are studied all over the world and I think it is about time that we studied them in Canada.

I wish to refer only briefly to the problems of our powdered skim milk people. I am referring to a few comments by Mr. Philippe Pariseault that he made a few days ago. He says this:

> We have seen then from September to November, a movement without equal in export sales and the give away prices varying from 5 cents to 5¾ cents at port of embarking for spray process powdered milk and 4 cents to 4¼ cents for roller process milk powder. How can one cover costs at these prices?

These prices do not even cover the drying expenses. Consequently the producers have suffered very seriously.

One of our greatest products in the dairy industry is cheese. This is a matter in which we are interested in Leeds county. I know that in years past you have heard George Fulford and Hayden Stanton speak about Leeds cheese. At the turn of the century we had 85 or 90 cheese factories in Leeds county. Today we have eight. Yet this is a product which the British would like on a premium basis if we could produce the kind of cheese they want in their market. All our experts tell us that there is a great market for mature quality cheddar in the United States. They say there is there a potential market of tremendous importance.

One of the problems arises from the fact that modern techniques seem to go against getting the kind of flavour for which the farmers were famous years ago. Although I do not know this, maybe they were not quite as sanitary then, but at least they produced a product that was known all over the world. Today we have a great many tests. Refrigeration seems to do something to cheese as also does pasteurization. However, it is necessary for us to be much more interested in our cheese community. Hector Arnold who, I believe, has Conservative sympathies, has protested the regrading regulations. He says that exports have been held up. There is available an article to which the Minister of Agriculture might care to refer. It is to be found in the Rural Co-operator of January 16, 1962. He mentions the grading requirements at the moment which are doing a great deal to spoil our export sales to Britain.

I know that some thought is being given to the matter, particularly by new Canadians. In Leeds we have many Dutch people who are highly skilled in dairy matters. They have been able to teach us a great deal about techniques of their own. They are splendid farmers and some of these people are going to start to produce a Dutch cheese that we hope to put on the domestic market and thereby perhaps help in fighting this 13 million pounds of import of foreign type cheese that is coming into Canada because of people's taste preference.

I have not addressed myself to some of the other basic problems of this industry such as the matters discussed by Dr. David MacFarlane and other people who mention the disparity in price between fluid milk and manufactured milk. I think many of these problems are within the purview of the province or even of the industry itself. It is a responsible, wise and shrewd industry which has given a great deal of thoughtful advice to the Department of Agriculture. What we must do is rapidly build up demand. Today in Leeds, when a farmer needs to buy a coat for his wife or a tire for his truck, it is necessary for him to sell cattle because he cannot pay for these things out of his milk cheque; nor indeed in many cases can he pay his taxes or the interest on his mortgage. Some of our townships are falling very seriously behind in past due tax payments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Hon. W. J. Browne (Solicitor General): At the present time, Mr. Speaker, we are debating the subamendment. If I read the subamendment in conjunction with the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), the two joined together would read somewhat in this way:

> We respectfully affirm that Your Excellency's advisers, because of their continuing failure to bring forward policies to deal with the real problems confronting this country, including the failure—

Here I am quoting from the subamendment of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue).

—to promote the planned development of our resources, sound monetary, fiscal, investment and trade policies which will develop our economy so as to provide:

1. expanding export markets for agricultural and industrial production;

2. full employment;

3. and, in co-operation with the provinces, a prepaid medical care program for all Canadians; and for these reasons do not deserve the confidence of the House of Commons.

It does not read correctly, Mr. Speaker, but I think what the hon. member meant was quite clear. It has always seemed to me that the serious speeches that have emanated from the northeast corner of this building have never been given the attention which they deserve. I know that the hon. gentlemen over there in that corner are serious minded men who study the writings of learned men who have thought out a way in which the world should be governed. They have thought this matter out and from time to time they have placed their ideas before us. Unfortunately most people do not take them very seriously. However, tonight I think I shall be justified in trying to analyse what the hon. member for Assiniboia meant. I do not think he gave the explanation in his speech or by the words which he has put into this subamendment.

I think that the key words in the subamendment—and these should be carefully noted by everyone—are "failure to promote the planned development of our resources". What is meant by "the planned development of our resources"? If you were speaking to a grade 8 child and you asked him what a plan meant, he would probably say, "Well, mother plans to take us to the movies on Saturday afternoon". But when you speak about a plan to the hon. member for Assiniboia or to his revered leader who led the C.C.F. party in Saskatchewan to victory for so many years, to them it means an entirely different thing. It means something that will affect the lives of everybody who comes under their sway or power.

Let us therefore look at this planned development of our resources and let us see what could be involved if we were to adopt this suggestion as a move towards settling the real problems confronting the country. The Leader of the Opposition had the good sense to say nothing in detail as to what should be done to improve things. He knows full well that this government has been doing a great many things which all hon. members in the opposition in both parties have supported. They have supported nearly every measure we brought in which has resulted in benefit to this country and has improved the trade of this country.

I remember reading a long time ago a statement by a writer who lived in a socialist country. He started out his book by saying, "Have nothing to do with planners". That left a great impression upon my mind and I should like to repeat what he said: "Have nothing to do with planners". What does that mean? These people are not going to be satisfied just with planning to bring about the right sort of climate in which industry can thrive and people can prosper. No, they want to plan everything. They want to plan not only the development of our resources but sound monetary, fiscal investment and trade policies.

Let us deal with monetary policies. Does it mean that they are going to take control of the banks and nationalize them, as the labour party wanted to do in Great Britain, nationalize both railways and do away with all sorts of private enterprise as the labour party did in Great Britain? The labour party of Great Britain went down to defeat ten years ago and it is very doubtful whether the British people will ever go back to the labour party again after the experience they had with them.

With respect to planned development, I suppose there was never a man in the history of Canada who had as good an opportunity to carry out a planned development of resources as did the premier of the province from which I come. In 1949 the present premier of Newfoundland was asked to form a government and he was a socialist. He was always a socialist as long as I knew him although he called himself a Liberal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: The Liberals may like that but we certainly do not.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The former leader of the C.C.F. party once told me that this man was more of a socialist than Mr. Douglas.

Mr Argue: Who said that?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The former leader, Mr. Coldwell, told me that. We know the definition of Mr. St. Laurent that socialists are only Liberals in a hurry, so when I say that the premier of Newfoundland was a socialist he could probably be described as a Liberal in a hurry.

When he came into office in 1949 he had the greatest opportunity that any man ever had to build up a sound and prosperous province because the public debt of the province of Newfoundland at that time was only $5 million. As a result of arrangements which had been made with the government of Canada, the public debt which was roughly about $70 million was reduced to about $5 million. In addition, there was a cash balance of about $42 million and assets which were afterwards realized amounting to another $8 million, so there were really financial assets of $50 million. I cannot remember the verse from Omar Khayyam but I do remember the principle that he had in mind when he said he would like to destroy the present state of things and remould it nearer to the heart's desire. That was the opportunity which the premier of Newfoundland had in 1949.

Mr. Howard: You even misinterpret Khayyam.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): In the first election that took place in Newfoundland in May, 1949, the premier was elected with 22 or 23 members to about 3 or 4 in the opposition. Here was a socialist with $50 million and he started to plan.

Mr. Peters: A socialist never had that kind of money.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I am very sorry but I cannot understand what hon. gentlemen over there are saying because three or four of them speak at the same time. However, I think they should listen to this because I am quite sure that the premier of Newfoundland has read all the books they have but long before they did, before some of them were born, including the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Pitman). They should listen to the lesson that is to be learned as to what a planned economy means. This man started out and was going to build up industries. He was going to plan the development of our resources, and he started off with the hardwood industry.

Mr. Howard: Is there any charge for this lesson?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): No, but I should like the hon. member to listen to it. If he does not want to hear it he can go out of the chamber but if he is going to stay here I should like him to listen.

Mr. Howard: I can stay here and I will still not hear anything.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): This is no Horatio Alger story. This is the story of a socialist and it is an example of what could happen to this country if we ever listened to the men in the northeast corner of this house. The premier of Newfoundland started out to build a birch plant and he made an agreement with a very experienced lumberman. The premier was in a hurry to get the plant going and he was convinced that Newfoundland had lots of birch trees that were suitable for the sort of plant that he had in mind because he had seen birch trees growing in the forest and, after all, if a person who is not a lumberman sees these beautiful birch trees growing he thinks there is a great deal of good wood there though he does not know what is inside the trees. He had to find that out. He had to find out what a difficult thing it is to have a birch plant.

However, the premier made this agreement with this lumberman who, before the document was signed, changed it from a personal agreement to a company agreement. He had the right to assign to a company and immediately formed a company and did so.

Let me tell you about the next step that took place in the construction of this birch plant, the first of 15 or 20 industries which our socialist premier in Newfoundland undertook.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Hon. gentlemen do not want to hear this. It is not pleasant news for them. This is not a story of success but rather a story of failure, failure that would be present in greater measure if we were ever to adopt the silly ideas contained in the subamendment.

Mr. Peters: We will be campaigning on them in the next election.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I am afraid my hon. friends do not want to hear the truth. I have said a hundred times that they have these wild and woolly ideas in their minds but I should like to tell them what actually happened when a socialist had charge of a government. They do not want to hear the story but I am going to try to get it across.

When this plant was started some property was acquired which was cleared and they built a plant. There was no supervision. There was no one appointed to see that the goods that were to be there were the goods that were needed, that they were of good quality or what quality or what quantity they were. The man with whom the contract was made to build the plant had his own plant right next door, just as near as the summer residence of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) is to the national park. He sold $365,000 of his own goods to this new industry that was being established.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I deny that I ever sold any goods to this industry.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Not the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was the last person mentioned by the hon. member.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I know the hon. member does not make that amount of money even if he has a best seller. The lumberman sold $365,000 worth of materials from his own private company to put into this plant and there was no one to inspect anything. There was no one to certify that the bills were correct and the minister of national resources was therefore unable to pay the bills. There were millions of dollars of unpaid bills lying on his desk and he resigned his position for he could not sleep at nights. He was sleepless because of worrying about the condition of things.

The hon. member for Assiniboia is very much amused, but I shall not take too long to tell the story. It is only just started, but after all the premier of Newfoundland did not have much experience of government and it is easy to understand how he could make mistakes. The minister of natural resources resigned. He could not take it any longer, and I had it from the mouth of the auditor general himself that there was nobody to sign the vouchers. The bills were still unpaid; hundreds of thousands of dollars were still unpaid. The deputy minister of economic development and the deputy minister of natural resources would not sign them. Neither would the deputy minister of finance, and the auditor general had to collect the lot of them and bring them down to the premier for signature, a man who never saw one of them presented, and he signed them all "Joseph R. Smallwood". That is an example of socialism.

That plant cost $6 million. I could go into great detail about it. How much money did it give back in profits? The smallest coin I have in my pocket is a one cent piece, but the plant did not give back even that much profit. I would ask the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), or any of his colleagues who so frequently like to come to the assistance of the premier of Newfoundland, to deny the statement I have made. That was the premier's first attempt before he met with Dr. Valdmanis who was employed here by the Liberal government, I believe at one time in the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. At least he advised on the immigrants coming into the country and he was also in the Department of Trade and Commerce, although I do not say he had a big job. He was employed too at Carleton University, and later he wanted a job and went to Nova Scotia to look for one. From there he went on to Newfoundland where he met the premier, and when he entered the presence of the socialist minded premier the latter thought he was an angel come from heaven. He called in the press and Mr. Don Jamieson of CJOXN to listen to the brilliant man who at one time had been minister of finance in Latvia before the war, who had worked under Dr. Schacht in Germany in the cement and gypsum industry, and said this was the man who would help build up industry in Newfoundland.

An hon. Member: What about the statue?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): That came later but this was the first introduction of Dr. Valdmanis to Newfoundland.

Mr. Argue: Why not talk about the mess over there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will hon. members who do not have the floor refrain from making remarks?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The hon. member has said why do I not talk about the men over here.

Mr. Argue: The mess.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I do not know about any mess here. When the hon. member wishes, he can get an opportunity to talk about a mess. The hon. member does not want to hear about the mess that took place under socialism.

Mr. Argue: I submit that the subject of Joseph Smallwood is irrelevant at this time.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) agrees with the hon. member for Assiniboia that the subject is irrelevant because the hon. member for Laurier does not want to hear what a so-called Liberal premier did in a province as a socialist, and the hon. member for Assiniboia does not want to hear the true story.

Mr. Chevrier: I wish to raise a point of order. During the debate on the speech from the throne the Speaker has repeatedly interrupted the debate when matters under discussion are matters coming under provincial jurisdiction. For the last five minutes the hon. minister has been dealing with matters which fall to a large extent under provincial jurisdiction and I submit that if he is going to be allowed to do that then surely others on this side of the house ought to be given the same treatment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the hon. minister was using that subject as an illustration, but I would ask him to continue.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I am also going to make certain references to socialist enterprises that took place in Saskatchewan. I seem to remember something about a box factory out there.

An hon. Member: And a shoe factory too.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): However, I shall go on to outline the socialist enterprises undertaken by the government of Newfoundland after 1949. First of all there was this $6 million plant. Then there was the cement plant at Corner Brook.

Mr. Pickersgill: Which is now making money.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I almost forgot about the steel plant, and it is not often hon. members hear a story of this sort. It is a fascinating story and it is seldom the house hears one like it. This steel plant was going to be 20 times as big as the first one. They were putting in one big plant but in two or three years there were going to be 20 buildings. A big plan was drawn up by Dr. Valdmanis, and I have a book at home which contains pictures showing the layout of all the buildings along the lake. The people of Newfoundland were told that so great a debt was owned to Dr. Valdmanis, this great genius from Latvia, that the premier said one day the people of Newfoundland would erect a monument to his memory. He further said he would not like to be premier for one hour after Dr. Valdmanis left, that he would rather lose his right arm than Dr. Valdmanis, and the premier was a right handed man.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is this a point of order?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I was—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What is the hon. member rising on?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member is rising to ask leave of the minister to ask him a question.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Certainly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the reason the minister is outlining these tremendous efforts made by the premier of Newfoundland to do something for Newfoundland because there is nothing he can say his government has done for Canada?

An hon. Member: That is one of your poorer efforts.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The hon. member is asking if the reason I am referring to the efforts made by the premier of Newfoundland to get industry going in that province is because our government has done nothing for Canada. If my hon. friend wants me to talk about what our government has done for Canada I would not have enough time tonight to do that.

[Mr. Browne (St. John's West).]

Mr. Pickersgill: That is what we want to hear.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate does not like what I am saying because he owes his seat there, and also his seat when he was over here and held office as minister of the crown, to the premier of Newfoundland, about whom I am speaking tonight. He could not possibly get elected in Newfoundland, or any other part of Canada, if he did not have the support of the premier of Newfoundland.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am rising now on a question of privilege, a question of personal privilege. I owe my seat to the electorate of Bonavista-Twillingate who voted freely in an election, just as freely as they do in any other part of Canada, and I got a larger majority in the election of 1958 than I did in the election of 1957.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is misleading to say—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Harkness: Do not defy the Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member having stated his point of privilege should take his place.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have taken my seat, sir.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): No one knows better than the hon. member the debt which he owes to the premier of Newfoundland, and I cannot say a word against him for showing gratitude to the premier for the kindly interest the premier took in him when he took him out of the position of secretary to the privy council and put him in the seats of the mighty, in the front benches of the House of Commons. He was an ambitious man. But he had worked close to Mackenzie King, a great Liberal prime minister who ruled this country longer than any other Canadian prime minister, so he could not help but be saturated with similar ambition. He is a brainy man.

An hon. Member: I'll say he is.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): He is a great speaker. I do not think there is a more fluent speaker in the house. The only trouble with him is that he cannot stop the fluency. He is an explosively fluent man. I know the hon. gentleman is really trying to draw a red herring across this matter.

He asked me two questions. I was not going to spend much more time dealing with the socialist activities of the premier of Newfoundland, but I think I can draw this conclusion for the benefit of my hon.

friends over there in the northeast corner, as well as my hon. friend who comes from the northeast corner of Newfoundland, that if a man tries 15 or 20 industries surely he ought to have one success.

I defy the hon. member to state one of the successes. I will name the industries, as far as I can remember them. I am likely to forget some of them. There was the birch plant, the steel plant, the cement plant, the gypsum plant. In those last two there was graft to the amount of $500,000. There was the battery plant and the rubber plant. By the way, the rubber plant cost $2 million. That was $2 million right down the drain. The rubber was so bad that after people bought the rubbers produced they brought them back to the stores and said, "These are rotten; we cannot keep them together". Twenty thousand pairs were sold in Montreal for $1 a pair. When the premier was reproached about it he said, "Don't you think I was smart to sell them to the French Canadians?" Twenty thousand pairs that cost, I suppose, about $5 a pair. There was $2 million lost on that. And who do you think is renting that building in which the plant was established? It is now rented by the Department of National Defence. That is the first return for the provincial government of Newfoundland from the 20 industries they started, the rent they are getting from the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman asked me a question. I do not want to intrude in this—

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): No, you asked me a question.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman challenged me to name one industry. I was accepting his challenge.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman does not want to hear it—

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The hon. gentleman asked me a question. He asked me what was my reason for criticizing the premier for the efforts he made. Thirty million dollars went into these industries and not one cent has been returned except the rent obtained from the Department of National Defence. The rent they are going to get for the next couple of years will be a good investment for them. There was no profit in those industries. There were other industries. There was the glove factory, the tannery and the candy plant. I cannot remember the rest. However, I think one can conclude from what I have already said that the results of these ventures of the government into business is justification for the statement that socialism is unsound.

We can readily believe that sometimes you can get a very clever man, like the hon. member for Assiniboia or one of his colleagues over there, who might think he could do better if he were premier. In fact, he would go much further. I will deal with that in just one moment when I have fully answered the question of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

He asked, what did we do for the people of Canada? Let me start with that. The first thing we did was to increase the benefits for old age pensioners. We raised the old age pension from $46 to $55 in the first year we were in office, and we made a similar arrangement with the provinces for these people to receive old age assistance at the rate of $55. Does the hon. member say that was not to the benefit of the people of Canada?

Mr. Drysdale: He is inarticulate now.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): In the last session, we raised the pension for soldiers and the war veterans allowances. Does the hon. member say that was not to the benefit of the people of Canada?

Mr. Drysdale: He is still inarticulate.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Yes, he makes no reply to that. When Newfoundland came into confederation in 1949 the government of that province received $15 million from the federal government in the year 1949-50. In 1956-57, the year before we came into office, the government received the sum of $24 million, from the federal government—$17 million as unconditional grants and $6½ million as conditional grants. In the present year they will be receiving $62 million in grants, $38 million in unconditional grants and $24 million in conditional grants. That is an increase from $24 million to $62 million, or an increase of 150 per cent in the grants made to Newfoundland.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to inform the minister that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I may be allowed to ask the minister one question about the figures he just gave.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Before the hon. member asks a question, as the minister's time has expired the unanimous consent of the house is required.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Argue: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is a custom in this house that immediately an hon. member sits down another hon. member may ask, "May I ask a question?" We have done that hundreds of times under the rules.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would remind the hon. member that the minister's time has expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think it is a rule of this house that one may rise and make a correction of a factual statement. The minister gave the figure for the year 1956-57 as the last year—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I ask the minister, is it not true that in the year 1957-58 the payments were under Liberal legislation exclusively?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, this is my first opportunity, as a freshman member, to participate in a throne speech debate. It is a double pleasure to speak in this debate just after you, sir, have taken the chair for the first time. I wish to extend to you and to the new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn) my felicitations upon your appointments. Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is a double pleasure because it is likely that this will be the last such speech prepared by the set of advisers now sitting to your right.

An hon. Member: Wishful thinking.

Miss LaMarsh: A year ago, it may be recalled, we on this side of the house, in our anxiety to see what the government proposed to do to alleviate the dreadful unemployment then at large in the country, gave up the right to participate in this debate. We left open to the government sufficient time so that they might, in lieu of the time taken on the debate on the speech from the throne, bring forward whatever massive program they had in order to assist the people of Canada.

Even those feeble assists given to the economy by this government in 1961 have borne some stunted fruit, but the Canadian people stand today, more than a year later, not much closer to the gates of economic heaven than they did at the time I first came into this house.

While it is true that unemployment is somewhat reduced and employment in Canada is higher, what of those thousands who remain without employment, so many of them out of work and out of benefits now for more than months, some for years? Is the government to be content with the winter works program and its temporary survival training courses, these projects of little note and narrow impact? Are we in this country expected to be satisfied with these measures, in light of today's unemployment figures, in the same sense as the man who keeps beating himself over the head with a bat and who answers, when he is asked why, "Because it feels so good when I stop"?

What an indictment was given yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) of this past year of government by impulse. One would anticipate, with such major issues as our trade position, our long term employment policies, the ills of transportation, of immigration and the like left undecided after the longest session of our parliamentary history, that such a searching criticism as that levelled by the Leader of the Opposition would for once be met by a statesmanlike, carefully detailed answer of defence, if defence there be, of government policy.

Instead, we were treated once again to that far from unfamiliar action of the right hon. gentleman who now leads this government, a niggardly personal attack upon those in this party and its policies. Instead of attacking the problems of Canada the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) once again indicated that he is not equal to doing more than attack the Liberals of Canada. Once again he showed his contempt for parliament and the people. The people called for the solid bread of a clear, consistent policy of growth and expansion, for the impetus which can be given to a national economy by wise and steady leadership. In place of the bread for which they call they receive a crumbling cake demonstrating a cynical belief that once again the Canadian people can be bought off.

Where, in the debate which took place yesterday and this morning, did the Prime Minister show those great qualities of heart and mind demanded by people in these swiftly changing times? Instead, the right hon. gentleman lurched from point to point, once calling us the new Liberal party and then complaining that the same old people were within the party. And every now and then, with a glint in his eye for what he has shockingly called a servile press, he tossed out a piece of his crummy cake designed to take the country's eyes off his otherwise tasteless display.

To top it all off he had the temerity to say, as did the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) in yesterday's debate to be found at page 57 of Hansard, that the Leader of the Opposition was smearing this country. In fact, the Leader of the Opposition attempted to state the facts as we on this side see them and as, indeed, it is our responsibility as members of the opposition to state them. He sought to bring these facts to the attention of the country and to the house. As for the accusation that he was smearing the country, I should like, with great respect, to read some of the things which the right hon. gentleman himself said in a debate which took place on March 15, 1955. I refer, first of all, to his words as reported at page 2035 of Hansard:

> No one here wants to speak of depression. We on this side of the house hope the government will act, because there is no depression in other countries of the world. In Britain there is no such thing as serious unemployment today, the unemployment in Britain being less than half of our unemployment with a population several times greater than ours. The same condition prevails in West Germany and in other private enterprise countries.

Remember that this talk of a depression in 1955, this criticism of a government for its unemployment figures came from a man who now guides Canada's destiny and who has guided it into, but not out of, the greatest unemployment in our history. Then again, also as reported at page 2035, we find this passage:

> We do not believe in preaching pessimism; we do not want to see the condition of affairs brought about which will create panic; but we are asking the government to act now.

That is what we on this side are doing. We are asking the government to act now. We are not smearing the Canadian people; we are not preaching doom and gloom. Our words amount to little more or less than those used by the right hon. gentleman who now calls them almost subversive.

There is a further quotation which I think hon. gentlemen should hear and it is to be found at page 2037. I ask hon. members to listen to it with great care bearing in mind that in the speech from the throne in 1960 there was a singular word which did not appear. That word was "unemployment". It does occur in the speech from the throne which was presented to us only a few days ago. But listen to what the then private hon. member for Prince Albert had to say as reported in Hansard:

> The government does not even recognize that there is serious unemployment. Unless they do recognize that fact they cannot achieve in their minds any actuality for the solution of the problem.

This is from a man whose spokesman in the government later said: unemployment is not a serious condition in this country; it will go away with the snow. There is one further quotation to be found on the same page and these words were spoken by the same hon. gentleman:

> That is the position of affairs here in Canada, which is an island of unemployment, as it were, in the midst of other private enterprise countries which are going ahead and which have kept unemployment down to basic levels. Surely that fact alone and the loss of our trade from month to month and from year to year, accelerating as it has in the last few years, should cause this government to decide to lift itself from its supine attitude, not of indifference but of apathy coupled with hope, and actually do something to meet the situation of the unemployed who are today asking parliament to act.

I take it that to talk about unemployment and trade losses was not smearing the government of that day and the people of that day. Those who now sit in the seats of the mighty and who are responsible for such purple passages in the Hansard of that year are the same individuals who have been at the helm while unemployment has mounted and trade has slipped.

There is one final passage I should like to quote in which the hon. member for Prince Albert, as he then was, summed up the burden of his thinking. I, at this time, will make the same appeal as he did then:

> Will the Prime Minister not assure the Canadian people that he believes action is necessary and that ... one of the first things to which this conference will give consideration is the problem of unemployment? Will he not state that he realizes that if we continue to deliberately delude ourselves concerning the unemployment situation we shall bring about a fear complex in this country which will have serious results in the future?

So went the gloom of that day. This was from a man who at that time said he was speaking out for the benefit of Canada. Well, we on this side of the house speak out for the benefit of Canada. We on this side ask the government to recognize this problem, not to sit back in contentment because a few thousand more people are at work than were at work a year ago. We ask them to remember the hundreds of thousands of families in this country who tonight are still without an adequate income.

We have been subjected in this country to a series of numbing shocks—shocks so severe that our foes gloat, and our friends agonize over our future. First was the shock of that tidal wave of unemployment which rose and rose to subside only when seasonal workers might find spring employment. Three quarters of a million Canadians and their friends and relatives shivered without incomes, and others feared the deluge might catch them as well. Then, when all Canada began to draw a tentative breath and hope that unemployment might be easing, came the shock of the Coyne fiasco, as unholy a row as has ever been seen in this country and caused entirely by the refusal of this government, led by a self-styled defender of the rights of the individual, to permit one particular individual his day in court.

Then, we had the long delayed budget wherein the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) swallowed his tail without blinking. I have forgotten exactly what reptile this trick imitates. Surely, no minister has ever before so completely reversed himself, maintaining all along that his 1960 speeches respecting devaluating the Canadian dollar and his 1961 speeches say the same thing and that he was right both times.

Then, this strong right arm of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Diefenbaker) went off on a trade jaunt to Ghana where, by careful leaks, he and his breezy cohort proceeded in a working conference to discuss the imminent entry of Britain into negotiations to join the common market. There, Mr. Speaker, we were treated to a neat switch on the old adage and these ministers conducted themselves there as though perhaps they were of the view, "If you can't join them, beat them." These two ministers who bear the responsibility for finance and trade and commerce have, by speeches from one part of the country to another, in all of their public utterances over a period of months, made clear that Canada by whining, wheedling, kicking or screaming or any show of petulance or anger, would make it clear that the British government might not, although duly elected to look after its own people, enter into such negotiations.

Well, we have lost now, Mr. Speaker, more than a year. We have lost now the original favoured position for discussing our entry into the Six. We have lost this impetus and we have gained nothing but world wide condemnation in this loss. We, in this country, but a few short years ago were thought of as being ably and well governed, but now we receive letters from those in and out of financial institutions, people from all parts of the world and particularly from England and the United States, asking us what it is that Canada proposes to do. What has happened to Canada? Why is it that she proceeds no longer in a calm and studied way? Why is it that she appears governed by impulse?

Then, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the chief cause of complaint, the complaint of all Canadians against this evil genius, as he has been called, this man who sits in the highest seat in this country, this man who must have—

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. lady should withdraw that statement.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Walker: I think the phrase should be withdrawn.

Some hon. Members: Order; sit down.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Mr. Walker: The opposition sounds like a bunch of noisy lambs.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion has been made, and I think it not without substance, that the application of the term "evil genius" to a member of parliament is contrary to the practice and the rules. I suggest to the hon. lady that she might very well reconsider that expression.

Miss LaMarsh: Yes, Your Honour; I was merely quoting what I had read elsewhere.

An hon. Member: Whom were you quoting?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. lady probably appreciates that to adopt a quotation of others is to adopt the words themselves. I would not think that that modified the position.

Miss LaMarsh: I do not know that my personal knowledge of the term is completely correct. I will bow to Your Honour's superior judgment in this regard and will desist from the use of the phrase.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: I have indicated my position fairly clearly. I think the proper course for the hon. lady to follow is to withdraw an expression which is unparliamentary.

Miss LaMarsh: I so withdraw, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but it being 9:45 o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 38 as provisionally amended, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question on any subamendment now before the house.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Argue) which was negatived on the following division:

On motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) the debate was adjourned.

(Text):

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the house leader what we will do tomorrow and whether he has decided yet when the interruption of debate will come for the discussion of the matters which were referred to by the Prime Minister?

Mr. Churchill: We will continue this debate tomorrow, Mr. Speaker. At the conclusion of the sitting tomorrow I shall be able to inform the house with regard to the question asked by the hon. member.

It being eleven minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, January 24, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1961-62

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1962, was presented by Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

TRADE

TABLING OF COMMUNIQUES FOLLOWING MEETINGS WITH U.K. AND U.S. GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIVES

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I should like to table communiques of two recent Ottawa meetings, first the communique issued on January 4, following the meeting which certain members of the government had with the Right Hon. Edward Heath, Lord Privy Seal in the United Kingdom government, and, second, the communique dated January 13 issued at the conclusion of the seventh meeting of the joint Canada-United States committee on trade and economic affairs. If it is the wish of the house that these communiques be printed as an appendix to Hansard, I think that would be the suitable course.

Mr. Speaker: It is proposed that the documents just tabled by the minister be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard. Is it agreed that this course should be followed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For the text of communiques above referred to, see appendix A]

PUBLICATIONS

ROYAL COMMISSION REPORT— REPORTED U.S. REACTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the right hon. gentleman taken cognizance of the statement of the state department of the United States, as reported in this morning's Globe and Mail, concerning the proposed restrictions on non-Canadian magazines, and the affirmation by the official that the United States would seek some form of trade compensation if the Canadian government went through with its plan?

Has the Prime Minister any comment to make on this statement?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Yesterday there was a statement by the press representative of the state department to the effect that the reported plan for the disallowance of income tax deductions in respect of advertising in Canadian editions of foreign magazines was of the same general character as the 20 per cent tax formerly imposed by the previous government. All I can say is that there has been no official communication directly received by the government since I set forth the terms of the projected legislation. However, there was an earlier message received by the Canadian government last August.

There is nothing further that I can add. We believe that this legislation is necessary in the interest of the Canadian identity and as an assurance that Canada's destiny will be preserved. As far as the question of compensation and the like are concerned, while believing that this matter comes entirely within our rights and is not merely a commercial question within the terms of GATT, we are naturally prepared, as I said, to listen to the views expressed regarding it though not to depart from the general plan and purport as placed before the house by us. We in Canada believe we have the right to assert the preservation of those things which are Canada's and that our Canadian publishing industry is challenged in such a way that unless action is taken we shall, in the days ahead, be dependent entirely or almost entirely on the viewpoint of another nation, however friendly.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question. During the intergovernmental discussions which took place recently the communique concerning which was tabled earlier today, were conversations held in connection with the subject mentioned in the question? May I further ask whether or not consultations will be held between Canada and the United States as seems to be indicated in the statement by the official of the United States state department.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, during the progress of the meeting between United States and Canadian ministers that was informally mentioned.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Chevrier: May I follow up the last part of my question, namely, whether or not consultations will take place with the other government as referred to in the press report upon which I have based my question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I made that very clear when I made the statement the other day.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could put a related question to the Minister of Finance and ask the minister, in view of his opposition to what was done by the previous government, when did he see the light on the road to Damascus?

Mr. Speaker: I think the minister need not reply to that question, as it is an improper one and anticipates a debate which might take place later in the house.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Would you permit me, sir, to say this, in view of the form in which the question was asked? The government's proposal on this occasion is very different from the tax that hon. gentlemen opposite imposed when they were in power.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

REPORTED DISCUSSION RESPECTING OF SECOND ROUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works arising over a report by Robert Moon in the Regina Leader-Post of January 19, under the headline "Decision likely on second trans-Canada highway." Can the minister say whether discussions, in fact, have taken place between the officials of his department and highway authorities with regard to the construction of a second trans-Canada highway?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I have not read the article, but I can assure the hon. member that when any announcement is made in this connection it will be made by the Prime Minister. In the meantime the Prime Minister's policy still is in effect, namely, that we should finish this very difficult and very expensive trans-Canada highway before we proceed with any further ventures.

Mr. Argue: I wonder if I might repeat a part of the question. Is the minister in a position to tell the house whether, in fact, any preliminary discussions have taken place as the article says between officials of his department and highway authorities?

Mr. Walker: There have been no official discussions by my department with any other official department, to my knowledge.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask a supplementary question? Is the minister's statement to be interpreted to mean that the trans-Canada highway is to be finished in all the provinces before any alternative is undertaken?

Mr. Walker: In due course we will have further word on any subject such as that. My hon. friend from Newfoundland, his adopted province, is an expert in setting bear traps but he has not succeeded in setting any for me so far.

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Is the Minister of Public Works aware of, or has he read, all the promises that were made by his colleagues with regard to the trans-Canada highway when they were sitting on this side?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's supplementary question turns out to be an assertion of a debating point which I take it he will have an opportunity to pursue in the future?

Mr. Bourget: It is in accordance with the answer given by the minister.

Mr. Argue: That is what is wrong with it.

CIVIL DEFENCE

CORNWALL, ONT.—GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATION IN FALL-OUT DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): My question is directed to the Minister of National Defence, although I think perhaps it might come within the purview of the Prime Minister. It arises from a Canadian Press dispatch stating that the federal government has ignored requests to have a representative take part in a debate on fall-out shelter policy in Cornwall sponsored by the Voice of Women.

My question is, would the minister assure these people that there will indeed be a representative of the federal government in attendance at a debate to take place this month in that city?

Mr. Egan Chambers (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): Since my name was mentioned in the Canadian Press dispatch to which the hon. member has referred, perhaps he would permit me to give an answer. I received an invitation from Cornwall on Friday last and on Monday I telephoned the sponsors of the meeting to say that I would be there. On Tuesday this item appeared in the newspaper saying that no response had been received. I will be there.

REQUEST FOR NATIONAL TRAINING PROGRAM BY ST. JOHN AMBULANCE BRIGADE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister given any consideration to sponsoring a widespread national training program in St. John Ambulance courses across the country to take care of emergency cases where families may take refuge in fall-out shelters in the event of atomic war?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I know that the St. John Ambulance brigade has been working with the civil defence authorities.

(Translation):

GRAIN

WHEAT BOARD—APPOINTMENT OF EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question. In his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary.

Has the Minister of Agriculture taken the necessary steps to appoint a representative from eastern Canada to the advisory committee of the Canadian wheat board? If so, who is he and when was he appointed?

(Text):

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): When a decision is made on this matter, Mr. Speaker, it will be announced in this house.

SHIPPING

MOOSONEE, ONT.—REQUEST FOR SURVEY REPORT ON SALT-WATER PORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, and ask him for an explanation of a news item which appeared in the North Bay Nugget of January 20, to this effect:

> A federal survey of the possibility of creating a salt-water port at Moosonee, at the mouth of the Moose river on James bay, has concluded that the project is not economically feasible.

Can the minister say whether this report has been forwarded to Toronto and will he table a copy of it in this house?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): There is no report available at this time, Mr. Speaker. When there is a final report I can assure the hon. member that I will bring it to the attention of this house. We have been working with the Ontario government on this matter and in due course, if possible, we will make any submission of it.

Mr. Garland: I have a supplementary question. Can the minister say whether any economic or engineering studies have been made in this particular case.

Mr. Argue: A political survey.

Mr. Walker: A feasibility study has been made. As the hon. member appreciates, one must determine the feasibility before one can determine any of the other matters.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): With regard to this matter I should like to ask the minister whether he has any comment to make upon the reported statement of Mr. Robert Macaulay that, whatever the federal government report may be, Ontario plans to go ahead with this project.

Mr. Speaker: I question the propriety of inquiring from the Minister of Public Works for Canada about statements made by the minister for Ontario.

Mr. Fisher: It seems to me you raised a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Nipissing asked a question as to whether a report was available. In the public domain Mr. Macaulay was commenting upon a so-called federal government report. That is why it seems to me it is relevant within the minister's province.

Mr. Speaker: I understood the hon. member to be inquiring as to the intentions of the provincial minister. Surely he cannot expect the federal minister to answer with regard to that matter.

NORTH BAY—REPORTED INTENTION TO CONSTRUCT LOCKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport regarding an announcement made several weeks ago by the hon. member for Simcoe East to the effect that several locks were going to be introduced into the trent canal system in order to open up navigation to the North Bay area. The question arises from protests made by the Canadian Fish and Game Association. Has the minister taken into consideration the fact that plans for this waterway may open inland waters of Ontario to both lamprey and smelt infestation?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): This matter was raised and my officials have taken it into consideration. Unfortunately I am not in a position to give the result of that consideration. The decision of the government to go ahead with these locks has met with a good reception in that part of northern Ontario.

TRADE

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—PARTICIPATION IN NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It is based on a newspaper story by the Canadian press in this morning's Globe and Mail under the heading:

U.S. expects Canada ... to join future inner six talks.

My question is this. Will he advise the house whether the Canadian government is prepared to participate in any new negotiations undertaken by the United States to reduce tariffs with the European common market?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): That, of course, is a hypothetical question, Mr. Speaker. It will naturally depend on when this happens and also on the circumstances. I have had occasion to point out that the goals set forth by President Kennedy are identical with those pursued by the government of Canada. We are both seeking an expansion of trade on a multilateral non-discriminatory basis. After the United States president has obtained the necessary powers from Congress, if he then pursues negotiations with the European economic community and if it is then proposed that the scope of the discussions should be enlarged in order to include other countries, you may be sure, Mr. Speaker, that Canada will be intensely interested. We are ready to play our full part in pursuing the goal that we hold in common.

RUBBER FOOTWEAR—REPORTED EXCEEDING OF QUOTA BY JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has his attention been drawn to a statement by Mr. Greig Smith, secretary of the rubber association of Canada, to the effect that Japan has exceeded its self-imposed quota on the importation of rubber footwear into Canada by some 66 per cent during the last calendar year? If so, has the minister any comment to make?

[Mr. Fisher.]

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am examining the assertions that are contained in that newspaper article.

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF SPEECH BY U.K. LORD PRIVY SEAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is he prepared yet to answer the question I asked him on January 19 concerning the tabling of the speech of the Lord Privy Seal of the United Kingdom?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will see that it is tabled.

Mr. McIlraith: May I ask the Prime Minister to give consideration to doing so reasonably promptly, in view of the fact that the throne speech is going on and it may be desirable to make reference to it?

Mr. Diefenbaker: It has already been published in the newspapers and I thought the hon. gentleman would have it. I shall try to get it again and table a copy today.

Mr. McIlraith: I would not like to rely on newspaper reports of the speech because the government denies them so frequently.

Mr. Churchill: What about a recording tape?

Mr. Pickersgill: As a supplementary question I would ask when the Prime Minister tables the report of Mr. Heath's speech that he table, at the same time, the report which was made to the Canadian government and which they found insufficient. I ask this so that the house and the public may be able to compare the two.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question was completed before he began to elaborate on it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it was completed before it was started. So far as that question is concerned we would naturally wish to communicate with the British government on whether or not the document in question can be tabled.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the Prime Minister undertake to do that?

POWER

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL GRID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he inform the house what steps he has taken to date to promote interest on the part of provincial governments in the development of a proposed national power grid?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Decidedly informal discussions have taken place from time to time. My memory of the matter is that a letter has been sent to the premiers of the various provinces. In consequence of and following their replies, further steps will be taken. However, I will have the matter looked into and will be in a position to give the hon. gentleman a full answer tomorrow.

UNITED NATIONS

ANGOLA—SUGGESTED CANADIAN AMENDMENT TO PROPOSED AFRO-ASIAN RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the resolution proposed at the United Nations by the Afro-Asian nations yesterday requesting that all aid to Portugal be withdrawn owing to the situation in Angola, will the Canadian government consider proposing an amendment to this resolution asking that aid be cut off to any nation which oppresses people in territory under its control?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this Afro-Asian resolution dealing with the Angola question is at present under consideration in the department. My impression is that an amendment such as the hon. member raises would not be relevant to this particular resolution because it deals only with Angola.

Mr. Cardin: Does the minister not feel that such a resolution would be discriminatory?

Mr. Green: I do not think that an amendment of that kind would be a suitable one for this particular type of resolution.

FISHERIES

GREAT LAKES—U.S. FUNDS FOR LAMPREY CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. The Owen Sound Sun-Times of January 19 reported that President Kennedy has requested from congress the sum of $967,000 for lamprey control in the great lakes. Can the Minister of Fisheries advise us if this money is for the international great lakes fishery commission?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, from the figure mentioned I can only assume that this represents the United States' share of the budget of the international great lakes fishery commission for the next fiscal year. By agreement Canada provides 31 per cent of the budget of this commission and an amount of approximately $350,000 will be included in the estimates for the next fiscal year as Canada's share.

NEWFOUNDLAND—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO STORM VICTIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the recent storm which took place on the east coast of Newfoundland and which destroyed private wharves, slipways, fishing equipment and boats belonging to fishermen, many of whom will be unable to resume fishing operations unless they get assistance, would the minister advise whether the government contemplates assuring that special assistance to the fishermen affected is provided?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member sent me notice of his intention to ask this question but since it relates to the situation so far as fishermen have been affected I have taken the liberty of passing the question on to my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, more than one department was advised of the effects of this storm in Newfoundland in December. On receiving reports of the damage following the storm the Department of Fisheries undertook a survey of the area involved to determine the extent of the damage. This survey is not yet completed.

AGRICULTURE

BUTTER—MAINTENANCE OF SUPPORT PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Labelle): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister in a position to tell the house whether the government will meet the request of the representatives of the dairy farmers that the support price of 64 cents per pound be maintained for 1962-63?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Agriculture): As the hon. member is aware, dairy policy for the ensuing year is announced prior to May 1, but not a great deal prior to that. I can assure him that this matter is receiving consideration and there will be an announcement by that date on it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WINTER WORKS PROGRAM—INQUIRY AS TO FACILITIES IN UNORGANIZED TERRITORY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold Hicks (Fraser Valley): I have an urgent question for the Minister of Labour. Before the close of the last session I got the impression that he had completed arrangements to provide, under the winter works program, the same facilities for persons living in unorganized territory as for those living in municipalities. I have just learned that 35 men living in the Popkum area of B.C. have been refused winter work because they have no organization to collect the 25 per cent stipulated. Why should they be expected to provide this amount when they have no access to taxes?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): We have included the unorganized territories under our winter works program. However, no submission has been received from the province of British Columbia relating to winter works projects in this unorganized area. I am informed that a submission was forwarded to the province by this area, but was rejected by the province. So far as we are concerned we are dealing with unorganized territories on the same basis as municipalities, and are contributing 50 per cent of labour costs when provincial approval has been secured.

INCOME TAX

DEDUCTIBILITY OF RADIO AND TELEVISION ADVERTISING EXPENDITURES IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): In view of the answer given by the minister yesterday I wish to ask the Minister of Finance whether any expenditures now made on advertising on radio and television stations in the United States by Canadian taxpayers, would be deductible as a business expense.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): That would depend on circumstances. I do not propose to give the hon. member an off the cuff reply to a question of that kind.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was not asking for any off the cuff reply. I was asking if the minister could find out. Perhaps he could take this as notice of a question as to whether these are allowed as deductions?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If the hon. gentleman has questions of that kind I suggest he put them on the order paper in accordance with the rules of the house.

[Mr. Harkness.]

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

LINDSAY, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO SALE OF CANADIAN ARSENALS PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production and ask him has the government given consideration to the sale of the Canadian Armament Corporation plant in Windsor, Ontario.

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): No sale of this plant has been made. A request was received by a company from Toronto to purchase the plant, and I have submitted it to the directors of Canadian Arsenals who are studying the question. There is no question of a sale for the time being.

POSTAL SERVICE

MONTREAL—REPORTED DELAY IN DELIVERY OF CHRISTMAS MAIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Is the Postmaster General aware that thousands of Christmas cards and letters mailed before Christmas in the city of Montreal did not reach other sections of the same city until after Christmas? Would he care to comment on that?

Mr. Speaker: The urgency of the matter seems to have disappeared with the Christmas season.

Mr. Denis: In view of the fact that this happened would the minister take steps to ensure that Easter greetings will arrive on time?

Mr. Speaker: All I can suggest to the hon. member is that he might renew his question next November.

Mr. Pickersgill: In order that the question might have a little more urgency may I ask the Postmaster General whether he would take steps to make sure Valentine greetings are delivered on time?

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, January 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rodrigue Bourdages for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Pearson.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government welcomes the test of confidence that is being put to the house in the amendment now under debate introduced by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson). In the time at my disposal today, just 30 minutes, it will be necessary for me to be quite compendious in my treatment of some of the subjects.

I have some comments to make about the speech of the Leader of the Opposition and about issues, both those which he raised and those which he so carefully evaded. Of his speech I will say that in general it was a compound of distortions, errors, half truths, half quotations and selected anti-Canadian quotations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There was little, if anything, in it that was constructive. If the Liberals have the answers that they claim to have, then certainly they are carefully hiding them. There is no better proof of that than the way in which the Leader of the Opposition, any time anybody asked him a question, sped away from that question as fast as he could. There was nothing new in his speech. Indeed, his speech was most unoriginal. It was a repetition of the same old baseless and empty charges and false accusations. As a performance it was old hat.

It was evident that the Leader of the Opposition was using Hansard as a convenient vehicle for gathering together in one place a lot of newspaper quotations mostly from partisan, anti-government sources to serve as campaign propaganda in the next election, and he has left Hansard to groan under this dismal burden.

There were many subjects omitted from his speech. After touching ever so deftly, ever so lightly, indeed, almost ignoring some recent events and certainly completely ignoring subjects of very great national importance, and ignoring and misrepresenting the contents of the throne speech, he touched on, I think it is fair to say, three subjects: first, international trade patterns; second, the state of the Canadian economy; and third, he besmirched the image of Canada abroad.

I shall be obliged, because of the time limit, to confine myself largely to the first two of his subjects. In regard to the third, I say only this, that if anyone is astute enough and selective enough he can always find articles in the press abroad that are critical of Canada or Canadian policy. They were there also in the days of the previous government. This is not a new phenomenon. You will find these opinions expressed by people who do not know Canada or Canadian conditions or who sometimes become self appointed authorities on Canada after a week end visit to Ottawa or Toronto or a visit to some Canadian port or city.

But not every Canadian would besmirch his own country by constructing his most important speech for 1962 out of the most careful selection of every adverse comment abroad that he could find, assiduously omitting the many which comment favourably on Canada and Canadian policy and then seeking to exalt his own image of himself by reflecting in a personal way on his distinguished successor, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green).

Sir, if this is the new Pearson let me say, as one who has known the gentleman for many years, that I personally very much prefer the old Pearson.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is obvious.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Was Canada's prestige abroad lowered when the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker), at the United Nations a year ago last autumn, made that eloquent and effective plea in the cause of the subjugated peoples of Europe under the heel of the U.S.S.R.; or when the Prime Minister, at the commonwealth prime ministers conference last year, took a firm stand on principles that saved the commonwealth; or when my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, with great patience and persistence has been carrying on an effort at the United Nations on behalf of disarmament and the control of arms and denouncing the way in which the Soviet union has been defeating these efforts?

Did Canada's prestige abroad suffer on these occasions, or did Canada's prestige abroad suffer at those many economic conferences under commonwealth auspices at which Canada took a leading role?

Has Canada's prestige abroad suffered when we see that our relations with the United Kingdom are as close and friendly as ever, notwithstanding the efforts of malevolent persons who misrepresent those relations as being disturbed, and when we have in this way healed the wounds that were inflicted on those relations five years ago by the previous government over the Suez issue?

Did Canada's prestige abroad suffer when our relations with our closest neighbour, the United States, are today as close as ever they have been and are based, I think, on a clearer and better understanding of one another than they ever have been?

For personal reasons I make no comment on the organization for economic co-operation and development. I leave these facts to speak for themselves, and those of us who know him hope that the Leader of the Opposition will be better able to resist the temptations of the green-eyed monster.

I turn now to the subject of international trade patterns. On this subject the Leader of the Opposition departed far, far from the facts. He has done it before on this question. Therefore I wish to take it a stage at a time and to discuss it as simply and as clearly as I can.

First of all I refer to the European economic community, which finds expression in the European common market. This is an existing fact, a fact of primary importance. The E.E.C. has very important economic goals and very important political goals, the latter being quite often overlooked by some people on this side of the Atlantic. The six countries concerned are moving closer toward these goals and they have declared for closer political integration.

Similarly, they are moving toward a closer integration of their economic policies. They are moving toward a common external tariff, toward the free movement of persons and capital within their borders and toward the erection of a number of institutions.

Our relations with the E.E.C. are, on the political side, very warm and very friendly. All six countries are our allies and we recognize the value of a strong and united western Europe as a bastion of freedom.

On the economic side, the interests that we have in common with the community are enormous. We, along with the United States, have in the post-war years extended aid to these countries and have contributed substantially to their reconstruction and economic revival. We rejoice in their economic comeback.

We look upon the European common market as an enormous and growing market for Canadian exports. We have been taking full advantage, and urging Canadian producers to take full advantage of every opportunity to expand their sales in that quarter. Great success has attended those efforts. Canada's sales to the six countries of the common market have quadrupled in the last 10 years. Our sales to the common market countries are running currently at about half a billion dollars per annum.

Our concern as to the policies of the community are, first of all that they should adopt outward and not inward-looking policies, and second, we have deep concern over their agricultural policy.

The question is sometimes raised: can Canada join the community? The answer, Mr. Speaker, must be no.

The treaty of Rome, which gave rise to this institution, provides clearly that membership is open only to European countries. It is a distinctly European institution. There is provision for association of what are called associated overseas territories. This category is not applicable to the self governing countries of the commonwealth. It applies to some countries that have been in association with these six countries. We have some examples in northern Africa. So that—

Mr. Pickersgill: What about article 238?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —there is no provision there for North American countries.

There is an article in the treaty which provides for association, as it is called—not associate membership, but entering into association. Greece, for instance, has become an associate member. It has been made clear by the six that the kind of association which is contemplated there is with less developed countries, and not what we commonly call the exchange of trade advantages. That is not the kind of association which is contemplated. Of course, the community as an institution has been negotiating at GATT. We have been negotiating with them for a year and a half, so that is not to be confused with membership in the association or association in the sense to which I have just referred.

Some Liberals who have been saying that Canada should join the common market—and Mr. Douglas, the leader of the N.D.P. has been openly advocating this—are obviously not acquainted with the subject they purport to discuss. This matter has been touched on by President Kennedy who dealt with the subject in very plain terms when he said: "I do not know what the word 'associated' means in that question". He had been asked whether the U.S. proposed to become "associated" with the common market. Then he added:

> I have not heard it proposed the United States should become a member of the common market or associated with the common market in the sense that the word is ordinarily used.

The fact is that Canada, particularly as a country looking for a larger market for the export of its agricultural surpluses, is not the kind of country that the Six would find it suitable to be associated with in the meaning which is contemplated by certain clauses of the treaty as I have indicated. There has been a certain amount of error and confusion on this point and for that reason I thought it well to deal with it now.

I pass, now, to the application of the United Kingdom for membership of the common market. These negotiations are currently proceeding. It becomes, then, a question of what terms can be negotiated. What decision has the government of the United Kingdom taken? It has not taken a decision to enter the European common market. That is perfectly clear. Hon. members opposite, and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) in particular, talk as though this was the decision which had been taken. The decision which the United Kingdom government took was to open negotiations, to ascertain whether acceptable terms of entry could be negotiated. That decision was taken at the end of July, not until after Mr. Duncan Sandys had been here in that month and visited other commonwealth countries. The decision with respect to entry will be taken, we have been assured, only at an advanced stage of the negotiations. That stage has not yet been reached. Undoubtedly, the United Kingdom government strongly desires to enter the common market, but not at any price, and Mr. Heath, when he was here—and he is conducting the negotiations for the U.K. government—made that abundantly clear within the last month.

The Leader of the Opposition and some newspapers were saying long ago that the United Kingdom was going into the common market. They were saying this even before the U.K. had decided to negotiate. Their statement has been contradicted by the United Kingdom government itself, and I think they know their own business better than the Leader of the Opposition knows it for them. We are, of course, fully aware of the possibility of the United Kingdom joining the common market and our planning takes this possibility into account. In the present stage, current interest is concentrated on the terms which are under negotiation.

The next question is, what is the meaning for Canada and the commonwealth of the United Kingdom entering the common market? There will, of course, be some pluses and some minuses. We can only consider these in terms of the net result. Obviously, the E.C.M. will become larger and enormously more powerful, both politically and economically. How will it use that power? This is a question which is of vital importance to Canada and to the commonwealth. The policies and attitudes of the various members of the community are not all the same. The question then is, will outward-looking policies prevail? We hope so. Only time will supply the answer to that question.

The importance to Canada of this question can be gauged from the importance to Canada of the United Kingdom market. We sell to that market today approximately $1 billion worth of goods per annum and these exports cover a wide area. They include agricultural products, industrial raw materials and manufactured and semi-manufactured products. There is a great variety in our sales to the United Kingdom, and these sales have been expanding; this is not a static market. Seventy six per cent of all that Canada is selling to the United Kingdom could be affected by the entry of the United Kingdom into the common market, depending upon the terms. This is because these goods enter under the commonwealth preference system and in many cases are guaranteed free entry or free entry with a preference. This is a matter of agreement. Canada has bought and paid for these advantages in the United Kingdom market; it has been a matter of exchange of trading preferences. The United Kingdom market is Canada's leading market abroad for wheat. What of the prospect of a 20 per cent tariff against Canadian wheat if the United Kingdom enters the common market, replacing free entry into the British market as is the case today? That is not all. The countries of the E.E.C. have erected many quantitative restrictions in the course of their agricultural policy. Agricultural protectionism is high in Europe and it takes many diversified forms. If the United Kingdom were to enter the common market without taking steps to protect commonwealth, including Canadian, interests the results could be very grave for Canada and for the commonwealth. Our trade, both in agriculture and industry, could suffer enormous losses and dislocation.

In the course of our discussions with the United Kingdom we have received assurances that they will safeguard the vital interests of the commonwealth or they will not go into the common market. We value those assurances and we appreciate them. We recognize the difficulties which confront the United Kingdom and the heavy responsibilities which Mr. Heath, in particular, bears in these negotiations. We have sought to help him in these tasks.

Here I point the difference between the Liberals and ourselves. They have been trying to push the United Kingdom into the common market. For example, Mr. Walter Gordon of Toronto has been saying on various occasions that Canada should encourage and support Britain's plea to join the E.C.M. Apparently he is not greatly concerned about the safeguards necessary to protect the interests of Canada and the other commonwealth countries the importance of which is recognized by the United Kingdom government itself following our discussions at commonwealth conferences and in bilateral talks.

We can trace this attitude on the part of the opposition to the historic Liberal opposition to the commonwealth preference system and, indeed, going further, to the indifference that the Liberal party has shown in the past to the commonwealth as an institution. They have shown it often in relation to the commonwealth preference system, and in the blithe way in which they would, apparently, throw away the advantages which Canada enjoys in the British market. They reveal themselves as oblivious to the interests of Canadian farmers, Canadian workers and Canadian producers.

Two days ago the Leader of the Opposition said we had been remiss in not selecting priorities. Do hon. members realize what that means? He said we were remiss because we had not come forward and made proposals for the sacrifice of Canadian interests or producers on the altar of entry into the common market. His idea is that Canadian industries, including agriculture—because agriculture has an enormous stake in these negotiations—should line up on the right, as it were, and step forward for extermination. The Canadian government has not regarded it as its responsibility to sacrifice Canadian interests. We have considered it our responsibility to have due regard for Canadian interests in the larger context of seeking those measures which will strengthen the economy of and good relations within the whole free world.

The importance of these economic factors in maintaining the commonwealth has been misunderstood and underestimated by hon. members opposite. I wish they had been at the Accra meeting to hear the representatives of the commonwealth countries there. Country after country pointed out the importance to them of the maintenance of these commonwealth trade arrangements. Indeed, a representative of one of the leading countries said there, "If you do away with our trade preference, my people will ask what is the use of belonging any longer to the commonwealth?"

Mr. Pickersgill: Was that the representative of Canada?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. Some of the newer countries of the commonwealth have not the same background as we have. This fact has been misrepresented and distorted by hon. members opposite but it is a plain fact readily recognized by all who are up to date in their knowledge of the commonwealth.

Mr. Pickersgill: Such as the press.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I come now to the question of commonwealth views. The concern that we have expressed is shared by all of the commonwealth countries, and all of the commonwealth countries spoke unanimously on this subject at Accra and elewhere. The misrepresentation of what happened at Accra has been enormous. It has been said that Canada led a ganging up on the United Kingdom. Nothing could be further from the truth. That statement was published by the nephew of the Leader of the Opposition. It is not a true statement. There was not any ganging up. It is a bad picture to draw of the United Kingdom as if it were not able to look after itself at a meeting of the commonwealth countries where we always meet as friends. When hon. gentlemen opposite take the position that was taken, they are attacking the position of the whole commonwealth, because it was an unanimous expression of concern. And so, Mr. Speaker, there is no right to select Canada as a whipping boy for those who disapprove of a position taken by the entire commonwealth including Canada.

I am pressed here for time, but let me say this. We have always recognized that entry into E.E.C. is a decision which the United Kingdom will take and the United Kingdom alone. We have been concerned for the interests of Canada and the commonwealth, and we have properly, frankly and amicably expressed that concern and the grounds for it at these meetings, as was our duty. The course that we have taken has, in fact, greatly strengthened the hands of the United Kingdom in these present negotiations, the Leader of the Opposition to the contrary notwithstanding.

We are assisting the United Kingdom in these negotiations with all required information in relation to Canadian trade. Those negotiations are about to enter a new phase. There have been discussions at Brussels hitherto carried on by our very distinguished ambassador there, Mr. Sydney D. Pierce. I do not like the way in which hon. members opposite seem to downgrade a very eminent Canadian representative there in the person of Mr. Pierce. But because the negotiations are about to enter a new phase we have arranged to send over a strong team of trade experts to Brussels to be available there at all times for constant consultation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not bureaucrats?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): These negotiations are of vital importance to Canada, and Canada and other commonwealth countries are not parties to the negotiations. Therefore, consultation is of the highest importance. That has been recognized in our talks with Mr. Heath. I have no apology to make for having renewed the request of the Canadian government addressed to the government of the United Kingdom for a copy of his Paris speech of October 10 which was of such vital importance to all of the commonwealth countries. When we received a copy of that speech we were delighted with it and had the opportunity of congratulating Mr. Heath and expressing our appreciation to him of the full contents of that speech when we had our recent meeting with him. I invite hon. members to read what was said in the communique issued following the talks with Mr. Heath.

Mr. Speaker, there has been the grossest kind of misrepresentation of the position taken by my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and myself, at Accra. The discussion there and in our other meetings, whether in London or Ottawa, has always been frank. Views have been expressed in friendly terms. There have been no bitter speeches. Some newspapers have been saying there have been, but their statements are just fairy tales. There is no news in good relations between Canada and the United Kingdom, but if someone can imagine that there is some disturbance of relations, that makes news.

I do not accept the statements of the Leader of the Opposition in this matter. He was not at Accra, and no newspaperman was inside that conference. But I will accept the statements made by British ministers since the Accra meeting.

One of the leading British ministers at that conference was Mr. Reginald Maudling, then the president of the board of trade. Mr. Maudling was in Canada a fortnight later and was asked about this. At page 9056 of Hansard of September 28, 1961, I gave the full text of the Canadian Press dispatch on a statement he then made but at this time I shall quote just one paragraph from it:

He—

That refers to Mr. Maudling; and remember, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Maudling was a veteran of all these commonwealth economic conferences where the subject had been discussed. I continue:

He described the recent meeting of commonwealth ministers at Accra, Ghana, as "the best discussion we ever had". He didn't agree with all that was said but he considered that everything said was reasonable.

That statement was made by Mr. Maudling who was present at Accra.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would you expect him to say anything else?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In the face of the blatant nonsense uttered by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) and other hon. gentlemen opposite, here is what was said by Lord Amory, the British high commissioner to Canada, a former chancellor of the exchequer. This statement was made just two days ago on his arrival in British Columbia.

Mr. Chevrier: Why is the minister so exercised?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The minister is exercised about the untruths uttered by hon. members opposite who utter untruths because they think they will help them back into power and I detest their actions in this regard.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister is calling everyone a liar these days.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): These are the words of Lord Amory according to a Canadian Press dispatch dated January 22:

Lord Amory said there is no resentment in Britain about Canada's early reaction to proposed British membership in the six nation trading bloc. "Canada was fully justified in putting any reservations she had fully before the government of the United Kingdom," he said.

Those are the words of Lord Amory. But that is not all. Let me read from Lord Amory's speech to the Canadian Manufacturers Association in Toronto, November 22, 1961. Here are some of the comments he made:

—we in Britain do understand the anxieties expressed by your government—

Speaking of the Canadian government.

—about the possible consequences upon Canadian trade and the commonwealth if we enter the European common market.

Nor have we any reason to resent the forthright way Canadian ministers have voiced these anxieties.

It is right and healthy that on such occasions we should speak frankly to one another, and there is no reason whatever why doing so should impair our friendship or our confidence in one another. I am sure that it is not going to do either in this case. Personal relations between British and Canadian ministers are close, friendly and cordial. And though we each have our own ideas we agree that in a matter of this kind it is impossible to be sure how things will in fact turn out or what their effects will be in this rapidly changing world.

Speaking of the anxieties expressed by the commonwealth countries he went on to say:

Those anxieties are not vague apprehensions without substance.

And further:

We understand very well Canadian anxieties about trade in the various categories of importance to Canada in which there is at present free or preferential entry to Britain—foodstuffs and notably wheat, raw materials such as aluminium and timber, and manufactured goods.

Mr. Speaker, I will accept those statements as accurate statements as to what has been the tenor of the discussions between Canada and the United Kingdom in relation to the United Kingdom application to join the common market, but I will not accept the untruths and distortions that have emanated from the opposition on this subject and, not least of all, those from the Leader of the Opposition that we heard on Monday last.

What of our trade relations with the United States? No new initiative or wider approach would be possible today without participation of the United States having regard to the extent of its interests.

President Kennedy's announcement of a few days ago has been received with the keenest interest by the Canadian government. We have expressed our policy in virtually identical terms. We recognize that his initiative is in the very early stages. His message to congress on the subject is, I believe, expected today or tomorrow. His proposal will then have to run the gamut of congress. It is estimated it will take at the very least six months before congress can act on any such legislation.

We would not wish to prejudice, by what might be considered in some quarters as foreign intrusion, the course that that legislation may follow in congress or the consideration that may be given to it there. It is clear that the United States are pursuing the same goal of seeking an expansion of world trade on a multilateral, non-discriminatory basis as we are. The means is not free trade, but freer trade. This is not to be confused with joining the common market.

President Kennedy was quite clear on this when he said recently:

> I am not proposing, nor is it either necessary or desirable, that we join the common market, alter our concepts of political sovereignty, establish a 'rich man's' trading community, abandon our traditional most-favoured-nations policy, create an Atlantic free trade area, or impair in any way our close economic ties with Canada, Japan and the rest of the free world.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that these words apply with even greater force to Canada's situation. Like the United States, our trade and economic interests are far flung; only we depend relatively much more on foreign trade than does the United States. Just as our southern neighbour has political interests all over the world so our own political interests are very wide, embracing many areas and countries. We have a European heritage and we are a member of the Atlantic community but we also value our membership in the commonwealth, we are a country of North America, we have close relations with the United States, and we have developed increasing trade bonds with third countries such as Japan.

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt): It is an honour for me, Mr. Speaker, and for the people of Nickel Belt that again this year I should be given the opportunity to join my colleagues in this traditional debate on the speech from the throne. I should like to do as my colleagues on both sides of the house have done and congratulate the seconder (Mr. Browne, Vancouver-Kingsway) who accomplished his task very well and was apparently so short and sweet in congratulating the government.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to offer my congratulations to the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Bourdages), who moved the address in reply to the speech from the throne, and to the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau), who has been appointed Deputy Speaker.

I must not forget to congratulate the hon. member who has now become Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. I have to remind him of the fact, that, representing, as I do, a constituency where the mining industry is quite important, I will often have to call upon the services of his department, and I will perhaps be one of those who will be paying the closest attention to whatever he does.

(Text):

I am sure the people of Nickel Belt would like me on this occasion to address myself to the general problems that face us in Canada and not necessarily deal with certain details which hon. members undoubtedly will have the opportunity to discuss under various circumstances during the session. The backbenchers have been greatly helped in this debate, of course, in this way. On the first day we had the occasion to hear the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and also I must admit, we had the opportunity of listening to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) himself, who spoke in rebuttal. As has been mentioned, this may be an election year, and therefore the record of the government is undoubtedly a matter for discussion. Notwithstanding what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) believes the Leader of the Opposition, with evidence in hand has indicated to the people of Canada the shortcomings of this government, as a member of the opposition I am certainly proud of the information given on Monday last by the Leader of the Opposition concerning the grave problems in Canada. On the other hand, I must admit that we had occasion to listen to the Prime Minister himself who was called upon to defend himself and the government against the accusations made against him.

The difference between the two speeches was obvious to all members of the house. As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, in the last portion of the first day the Prime Minister, when he was called upon to speak, spent all his time making reference to a document written by Mr. Blakely and purporting to deal with the situation in 1955 and 1956. Notwithstanding the fair record of the Liberal party at that time we are, of course, prepared to admit that, in the face of the promises of this government and of the Prime Minister, the Liberal party could not be elected in 1957 and 1958. But surely to goodness the Prime Minister himself does not wish to believe that he can be elected on a worse record.

What was the course of the Prime Minister on the next day? To what purpose did he engage the attention of the house? On the next day we were taken back to 1952 and 1953. It was an example of the old process of diversion. We have problems to discuss and to solve but the Prime Minister took us back to 1952 and 1953. He attacked one Mr. Drury and others. I am told that Mr. Drury has a wonderful record of service in this country. The Prime Minister attacked persons who cannot stand up in this house and defend themselves. Those were the people who were attacked on the second day. That is a type of diversion.

We must recall that the Prime Minister took charge of this government under a theory of diversion. Then it was diversion of trade. We now have diversion of issues. A little later we had a good example of it in the speech of the minister representing Newfoundland. Although the speech was entirely out of order we were diverted into exclusively provincial matters. While we are busy here this week trying to discuss problems facing Canada and to enlighten ourselves with regard to them, we have this kind of diversion.

Then this afternoon we had the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) criticizing the Leader of the Opposition because he, the Leader of the Opposition, had used quotations or information received from people who had something to say in criticism of this government. Then the Minister of Finance himself went on to speak for half an hour using all the quotations he could possibly locate in order to excuse his government and possibly to improve his position. Is that not a diversion from the problems with which we are faced? Let us deal with the problems themselves and not try to divert the discussion into other channels.

If the attempt to divert the discussion in this house fails, resort is had to the old routine of saying that the opposition is a party of doom and gloom. It is no such thing. A loyal opposition is an integral part of our parliamentary system and we appreciate it in that way; it should be so appreciated at all times and not just when the Conservatives are in opposition. It should be appreciated whenever the Canadian parliament sits.

Is the Prime Minister going back to the theory of Mr. Khrushchev, namely complete imperialism? A few months ago we all received reports of the praesidium meeting in Moscow when Mr. Khrushchev had occasion to deliver a speech which was possibly similar to the one we heard last week. As we find from reading the reports of it, nobody was allowed to object. In those reports we have seen absolutely no objection. Is that the type of Canadian parliament our Prime Minister wants? Do the members in this house recognize the Prime Minister who says he wishes to stand for the best traditions of this parliament? What type of tradition are we upholding if we are trying to muzzle the opposition which has a purpose and a function? I realize, of course, that as the Conservatives were in the opposition for so long a period, the Canadian position may not be affected. But nevertheless I believe we should have this respect.

Before I go on to speak about economic matters I should not like the members of the New Democratic party to think that I am forgetting them. Of course, it is rather hard to know what these initials mean, as we hear so many versions. For instance, just the other day I heard Mr. Douglas, the new leader of the N.D.P., referred to as the newest displaced politician. He was apparently so well displaced that even the person who was trying to become his successor could not fill his shoes. More recently I have heard people refer to the N.D.P. as the new demolition party. There may be some truth in this reference. If they are trying to demolish anything, it may be the party itself. We have read this in the papers. I think it is time that someone stepped up to protect the right to vote of the Canadian people. Certainly this party will demolish something if from now on the workers of this country cannot vote as they wish according to their choice but rather must ask someone else in what manner they should vote.

There is no doubt that we are facing an election year unless the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) is prepared to imitate in every respect the action of Lord Bennett some 30 years ago when he stayed in office for the full five year stretch. Undoubtedly everyone recognizes that an election should normally take place this year. If the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and other speakers on the government side are right, the present administration must be a great success and I think it is only proper and fair that members of the House of Commons should demand an election this year.

Furthermore, we must demand a proper accounting, something which will satisfy the Canadian people so that when they go to the polls they will know with certainty the problems with which the country is faced. I say that an election should take place but I also say at once that an accounting is necessary. Immediately upon the conclusion of this debate, why could not the Minister of Finance present his budget? That is possible, and certainly in that way the Canadian people could be enlightened.

I have read comments on the speech from the throne. There is not too much to be found in it but I should like to refer the house to a comment I read in a paper that is very friendly to the government, the Globe and Mail of January 20. The editorial commences in this fashion:

> There was a general expectation in Canada this week that the speech from the throne, opening what is presumably the last session of the present parliament, would be a resounding election manifesto. It has proved to be nothing of the kind; it would be difficult to imagine anything further from a blast of trumpets. It is, in fact, a curiously thin and inadequate statement from a government which must soon face the voters.

The present situation is a harmful one. In the face of the weakness of the government in expressing itself as to the state of affairs in Canada, people are wondering just what they are heading for. I should like to read another paragraph from the same editorial because it puts the situation quite well.

> We shall apparently have to wait until the budget is brought down for an answer—which may be several months. This is hard on the public and still harder on business concerns, which must plan their 1962 programs, without knowing whether they face higher taxes, another bout of inflation, or some radical change in government economic policy. This uncertainty will hardly promote enterprise and expansion.

So far as an accounting is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I think the major emphasis should be on the promises made by the Conservative government, and they are many. There have been discussions about them but I will restrain myself and only refer to a few of them. There is the problem of a balanced budget about which the Minister of Finance, who has just taken his seat, has spoken so often. What is the situation in that regard? We have had deficits ever since this government has been in office. In the last ten years of what they call poor Liberal administration there were not only balanced budgets but surpluses amounting to $2.4 billion. What have we had in the short time that this government has been in office? We have had deficits totalling $2.2 billion. A short period of four years was sufficient to wipe out the surplusses provided this country by a Liberal administration.

There was a promise to lower taxes by about $130 per person. When we review the figures we see that taxes have increased. That is a matter of accounting which should be explained to the house and to the Canadian people. We should be told why this has happened because that was not the promise.

The Canadian people were also told that the government would stop foolish spending and reduce the cost of government. What do we find now? I should like to refer the house to the figures which hon. members may find in the estimates for 1961-62 and I would ask hon. members to compare them with the total expenditures in 1957, the last year of Liberal administration. We find that in 1957 the estimates totalled $4.8 billion under a Liberal administration. We also find that these people who were going to cut the cost of operating the government are now spending $6.4 billion, an increase of nearly 25 per cent. Is that not a matter of accounting? Should the Canadian people not know why this has occurred. Should these same people who promised a decrease in expenditures not be asked to explain why there has been an increase of this order? Under the Liberal government the Canadian people were accustomed to travelling in a medium-priced car but under the present government they must now afford a Cadillac. I think it is time that we should ask the Canadian people if they wish to travel in a Cadillac under this government or go back to the medium priced car and the costs to which they were accustomed in previous years.

Mr. Godin: Maybe the hon. member would be interested in these figures. Not only have the administrative costs of the government gone up but capital expenditures, which could be beneficial for Canada, have gone down. There has been an increase in expenditures on the administrative side while expenditures on the capital side have gone down. I should like to refer hon. members to a publication, "Private and Public Investment in Canada", which contains figures for investment of all types, including capital investment by the government. Here are the figures:

	Millions of dollars
1957	1,151
1953	1,209
1959	1,092
1961	996

Capital expenditures have decreased, expenditures that would provide something permanent for Canada. The expenditures that create jobs have gone down. In the type of inquiry that we could possibly pursue in a budget debate we would find out how costly it has been to "follow John", as it has been put. I have a number of other figures here which I should like to place before the house. Since the Conservative administration has been in power we have had deficits in the following amounts:

1958	.....	$ 38,500,000
1959	.....	609,500,000
1960	.....	413,000,000
1961	.....	300,000,000
1962	(estimated)	700,000,000

There is the depletion of the unemployment insurance fund from 1957 to 1961, in which last named year the figure is $900 million, and also the depletion of the special defence fund from 1957 to 1961 amounting to $165 million. This makes a grand total of $3,126 million.

In the speech from the throne it is indicated that the government desires to require financial returns and reports from foreign corporations and unions. I have no quarrel with this, but surely it should apply the same principle to itself and bring forward as soon as possible a proper report and accounting with respect to all these matters I have mentioned.

The government has had in four years possibly 1,500 days to talk about itself and to administer the affairs of the country, but an election would give our citizens one day in which to exercise their choice, and I believe after a proper accounting that that one day should be given to the Canadian people to allow them to make their decision.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that in the course of this session we will have the opportunity of discussing numerous problems, especially those which are related to the amendment of the Canadian constitution, as it is indeed mentioned in the speech from the throne. From the remarks which were made this afternoon, I understand we will have an opportunity to discuss that subject but, for the time being, I should merely like to say that the amendment of our constitution certainly entails problems which will have to be solved before a complete and satisfactory solution is found.

I should like to call the attention of hon. members to an article which was published in the magazine Relations under the signature of Rev. Father Ares, a Jesuit. Father Ares seems to have read the suggestions made in that connection for he thoroughly covers the subject.

I should also like to call the attention of the house to the speech which was made yesterday by my colleague from Hull (Mr. Caron), who spoke authoritatively on one of the most important problems in Canada.

(Text):

Before I conclude I wish to say that the speech from the throne was weak and that it was, in parts, a rehash of former speeches received under the present administration. In that connection I quote an article from the Globe and Mail of January 20, in the following terms:

A curious feature of the speech is that the sections announcing these goodies, and particularly those relating to farmers and fishermen, are copied almost word for word from the speech from the throne which opened the 1957-58 session.

This afternoon I am pleased to support the amendment to the address in reply, proposed by the hon. Leader of the Opposition. If the government is satisfied that its record is what the Prime Minister and other ministers of the crown state it to be, why could we not immediately proceed to a budget debate, have a proper accounting of the affairs of the country, and then grant the reasonable request of Canadian people by giving them the only thing they wish, an election date?

Mr. John Smith (Lincoln): I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne and at the outset would like to congratulate you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, on being elected to the post you hold where you will assist us in our deliberations during the session now opened.

I would also like to extend my congratulations to the deputy chairman of committees (Mr. Chown), and I believe I would be remiss if I did not pay a tribute to the former deputy chairman, the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Rea) who is unable to be with us at this time due to ill health. I am sure I speak for all members of the house in wishing him well and hoping he will be back with us in the very near future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Smith (Lincoln): I should also like to thank the whips on both sides of the house for the assistance they have given us in the past in our parliamentary duties, and I extend my hearty congratulations to the mover and seconder of the speech from the throne for a job very well done.

It is not my intention to deal with the major problems facing the country at present. I am prepared to leave those matters to our cabinet ministers, to deal with matters such as our national defence policy, the common market and other problems of that kind, although I have my own definite opinions on them. Instead I shall deal with some of the common problems that affect the common people of the country with whom I have been very closely associated during the last 25 or 30 years.

I am pleased to note that the throne speech foreshadows much new legislation to improve our economy, further, expand our trade abroad, provide more jobs and opportunities for our young people, and assure a greater measure of social security for our senior citizens. Any program proposed to give greater stabilization to Canada's economy must contain strong measures to ensure the stability and growth of our farming industry, and I am pleased to note there are proposals in the speech to assist the western farmers in the drought stricken areas by means of acreage payments.

During this time of farm product surpluses in many parts of the world I am pleased to note it is the intention of our government to continue, in an orderly manner, the principle of price stabilization and other measures designed to provide the farmer with a fair share of the national income.

The proposed immediate increase in old age pensions, old age assistance pensions, disability pensions and blind pensions, to be followed by the introduction of a contributory retirement pension for all, will be most welcome news to all Canadians.

The proposal to grant war service allowance to merchant seamen, overseas firemen, Red Cross and other civilian personnel who saw service in a theatre of war, will fulfil a request that was made to the former government on many occasions, but upon which they did not act. Time will not permit me to deal with all the proposals contained in the speech from the throne. However, the more one examines its text the more one is convinced that when the proposals contained in it are put into effect in legislation they will provide another great stimulus to our national economy.

I should like to deal with two segments of our economy that affect the Niagara peninsula in general and more particularly Lincoln county, the riding I have the honour to represent. I refer to our secondary or light industry and our fruit and vegetable growing industry.

I begin my remarks in this connection by congratulating the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and the members of the cabinet for negotiating last year with Japan voluntary quotas on certain lines of goods being imported from that country in such large quantities that our Canadian industries making goods of the same class or kind were being destroyed.

I regret, however, to note from a press report in the Globe and Mail of January 23 that shipments to Canada of rubber soled canvas shoes and boots exceeded by more than 66 per cent in the first nine months of 1961 the amount that Japan had voluntarily agreed to ship to Canada. If this is a correct report on the manner in which this negotiated agreement is being honoured by Japanese exporters, I think our government should bring the matter to the attention of the Japanese government in very strong terms.

I might say at this point that I do not blame the government of Japan or the people of Japan in matters of this kind. I blame the importers of Japanese goods, who seem to be most anxious to bring those products into Canada because their margin of profit is much larger than it is on Canadian manufactured goods.

I should like to bring to the attention of this house, and the Minister of Finance in particular, how voluntary quotas on Japanese electronic receiving tubes coming into Canada has helped to provide more jobs for Canadians. I will cite two plants as examples, one in Toronto and one in my own riding.

I paid a visit to the Toronto plant about six months ago, before the quotas went into effect. I found the plant in a depressed condition, with rows of idle machines, employment at a very low level, production at about 20 per cent of the normal capacity of the plant, and the company sustaining a heavy monthly deficit.

I paid a visit to the same plant just prior to Christmas and found a changed condition since quotas had become effective. Employment had increased by over 60 per cent, production had increased by over 60 per cent, and the company was spending $400,000 on plant expansion, research and development to produce new lines of electronic goods not now made in Canada.

I also visited the smaller plant in my own riding owned by an entirely different company and found the same type of progress since quotas were put into effect. The number of employees has risen from 52 to 130. A class of learners is being trained and will be put on the production line as soon as they become skilled in this intricate work.

This on the spot check that I made on conditions in these two plants before and after quotas were put into effect makes it quite certain in my mind that if quotas on electronic tubes had not been negotiated with Japan last year, at least one or perhaps both of these plants would be closed today.

I recommend to the Minister of Finance that he continue his negotiations with low wage countries for the establishment of quotas as a means of protecting the jobs of Canadians against the competition of those countries whose wage rates are a fraction of ours and whose production costs in general are very much lower than ours.

This has also come to my attention, Mr. Speaker. In some cases I believe Canadian manufacturers have reason to complain about the present method of levying federal sales tax and excise tax. I shall cite two cases, one being the manufacture of axes and the other electronic receiving tubes. If a 2½ pound axe, which is commonly used in Canada, is made in this country it bears a sales and excise tax of 16 cents. The same type of axe made in Sweden bears a sales tax and an excise tax of 11 cents. That is a difference of 5 cents, which is very important in these very competitive lines of manufacture.

I also find that a Canadian made electronic receiving tube with a manufacturer's selling price of approximately $1 bears an excise and sales tax of 26 cents, whereas exactly the same type of tube made under United States patent rights in Japan and imported into Canada bears an excise and sales tax of 14.5 cents, a difference of 11.5 cents.

It can readily be seen that this method of assessing for tax purposes places the Canadian manufacturer at a great disadvantage and might very well offset whatever tariff protection there may be on the imported article.

I have found that in some cases goods brought into Canada from low wage countries at a much lower distributor cost price and with a much lower sales and excise tax are sold to Canadian consumers for the same price as goods of the same class or kind made in Canada by Canadian workers.

I have discussed this matter with customs officials and have been advised that in both these cases sales and excise taxes are levied on the following basis: for Canadian manufactured goods, at the manufacturer's selling price to the distributor, and for imported goods, at the value for duty or import broker's purchase price.

I feel this is a matter which should receive some attention and it should not have to be delayed two years waiting for a decision from the tariff board, which apparently is the procedure at the present time. In 1961 some adjustments were made in the levying of excise sales tax on imported electronic tubes, but the tax is still less than that collected on goods of the same class or kind made by Canadian workers in Canadian plants.

I understand some other goods are assessed in a different manner and that tobacco by the pound, either imported or home grown, carries the same level of sales tax and excise tax; so do cigarettes by the pack and playing cards by the pack, besides a number of other articles.

I should like to cite another example of unfairness to a Canadian industry in my riding. This case concerns the manufacture of high test firebrick of a class or kind used in all of Canada's steel plants and refineries. Little or no raw material of the kind required to make this brick is produced in Canada, yet this company is required to pay a duty of 15 per cent on raw material coming into Canada and to compete with brick of the same class or kind entering Canada duty free from countries in Europe which are not too friendly to our Canadian way of life. I think this is a matter which deserves urgent attention.

I regret that Bill No. C-72 to amend the Customs Tariff was defeated in the Senate last year. Had that bill been in effect at the present time I am sure many unfairnesses to our Canadian industries and our Canadian workers could be corrected without the necessity of waiting for long periods of time for decisions by the tariff board.

I should like to speak for a little while about fruit and vegetable growing which is an important industry in my riding and in other parts of the Niagara peninsula. There are approximately 5,000 registered growers in the peninsula. Twenty four plants are engaged in the processing of fruit and vegetables and there are 12 plants which manufacture wines, juices, jams and jellies. Legislation passed by this government during the last three years has given the growers all the protection they have asked for to safeguard them from the dumping of surplus United States crops during the Canadian crop harvesting season. I refer to price stabilization, the assessment of fair value for duty and seasonal tariffs, all of which have done a good job in this regard.

However, the growers have other problems. The surplus pack of canned goods from the United States is always a threat and it has a depressing effect on Canadian market prices for canned goods. The change in the distribution of fruit and vegetables has created marketing problems which have not yet been solved. Small grocery stores and home canning have given way to distribution through the big chain food stores.

The building of new schools, hospitals, roads and the other local improvements which follow housing and industrial development has led to taxes on the farms being increased to a point at which farming is becoming less attractive. I am told that 80 per cent of all the fruit and vegetable processing plants in Ontario is now owned and controlled by United States corporations. The Canadian Horticultural Council is the body which makes representations to the Department of Agriculture on behalf of the fruit and vegetable growers. I hope the council is giving these changing conditions in the fruit growing industry its full consideration.

I have made recommendations to grower organizations and marketing boards suggesting that more facilities are required in the Niagara peninsula for processing and cold storage, particularly for small cold storage units on the farms and increased cold storage facilities at the shipping and processing plants. I have also recommended to the processing plants that they should seek some kind of government guaranteed bank loans on canned goods in bond during the canning season when millions of dollars are required in a very short space of time to pay the farmers for the crop and the cost of operating the plant. This, I think, might help to keep some of the smaller independent Canadian processors in business. I have further suggested to the processors and growers that they should seek quotas on imports of canned goods rather than ask for higher tariff protection which besides being difficult to obtain is often not too effective.

I am pleased to be able to say that business in my riding has greatly improved even though we still have problems. There are one thousand fewer unemployed people in the St. Catharines area than there were this time last year. The new subsidy on shipbuilding put into effect by this government last year has greatly helped our two shipbuilding yards, and our automobile parts industries, I am told, are employing more people now than in any previous year.

Water pollution in our rivers and in the great lakes has become a very serious matter especially in the lake Ontario and lake Erie areas. It is my conviction that the regulations passed last year by this government to assist municipalities in the construction of sewage disposal plants and trunk sewers should be extended beyond 1963 in order to encourage municipalities to proceed with major projects which could not be completed by 1963 in time to get the full benefit of the rebate on their loans.

Now I should like to deal briefly with the question of air transportation. During the past years we have seen many changes in rail transportation. Branch lines are being disbanded and passenger services curtailed as a result of which the Niagara peninsula, like other parts of Canada, is required to depend more and more on air transport.

In common with other areas, the Niagara peninsula has great need of improved air transportation for both passenger and package freight. I think the Department of Transport might well review the present regulations for the financing and construction of new runways and the other facilities required for the landing of the types of aircraft now used by industries and feeder air line companies.

I am sure if the Department of Transport undertook the building of necessary facilities, such as longer runways, at regional airports, the congestion at the larger air passenger terminals could be greatly relieved. Industries in the Niagara peninsula that have even medium sized planes have to keep them at Niagara Falls, New York, or Malton airport, Toronto. I do feel that air transportation has an important part to play in the development of our future economy, and the matter of proper facilities required at regional airports in our industrial areas is becoming more important each year.

I should like to again bring to the attention of the Prime Minister the historical importance of the old town of Niagara, the seat of the first government of Upper Canada. I believe that among the many acts of parliament that were passed there in those colonial days was an act to abolish slavery in Upper Canada. I trust that this part of Canada will not be overlooked when plans are being made for Canada's centennial. I should like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity of speaking at this time, and I hope that I have not overrun my time.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, I have a few observations which I should like to make on the speech from the throne. Before I begin, I should like to associate myself with the congratulations that have been tendered to the mover (Mr. Bourdages) and seconder (Mr. Browne, Vancouver-Kingsway), of the address in reply, and also with the felicitations and good wishes which have been extended to the Deputy Speaker, to our new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn) on their appointments and to the parliamentary secretaries on the occasion of their reappointment.

The more I study the speeches from the throne brought down by this government the more they remind me of those fancy Christmas stockings that we admire at Christmas time. They bulge and are attractive and, in some cases, we can get a glimpse of what is inside. There is one difference, of course, because when you get one of those fancy stockings you know you really have whatever is inside of it. This is not always true of speeches from the throne. We know from experience that sometimes the contents have a very unhappy knack of disappearing, sometimes for good, sometimes for several sessions and then sometimes to reappear in quite a different form as did the changes in the Immigration Act which were announced a few days ago by the minister in the form of new regulations.

Well, now we have a new stocking in front of us, stuffed with what appears to be all kinds of good things designed, no doubt, to impress the Canadian people with the wisdom and generosity of this government. I think we can take it for granted that when this particular stocking was being stuffed the possibility of an election this year was not overlooked. Yesterday or the day before the Prime Minister plucked out a few of those things and held them up so we could get a better view of them. I refer to things like the old age pensions and the pensions for the blind. I am sure we all found them very attractive. It will be a very happy day for Canada when someone can devise a plan which will remove old age pensions completely from party politics.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the speech from the throne had nothing in it to emphasize to the Canadian people that these good things, desirable as they are, must nevertheless be paid for. We, as parliamentarians, are supposed to give leadership to the people. We certainly ought not to lead them into thinking they can get something for nothing. It is quite understandable that the people of Canada do not realize that all these good things have to be paid for because, since this government took office, we have not been doing that. We have not been paying for them out of our own production. Instead, we have been borrowing and paying for them out of the production of others. During the past five years that this government has been in office the apparent generosity of this government has added $2,000 million to our public debt. This seems very strange to me coming as it does from a party and a government that was elected on a specific promise to reduce expenditures.

We can all remember, in 1957, how hon. gentlemen opposite went back and forth across the country decrying the waste and inefficiency of the Liberal party and saying that when they took office they were going to cut down expenditures by $500 million. Indeed, when the expenditures were presented for the year 1956-57 I can remember how the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), who were then sitting in opposition, attacked the Liberal party and castigated the Liberal government because they had allowed expenditures to reach the high level of $4,433 million. Now, four years later, in 1961-62, we have this same group proposing estimated expenditures of $6,415 million and that, Mr. Speaker, is only an estimate. The actual expenditures might very well prove to be much higher. Instead of a reduction of $500 million as was promised, we have an increase of nearly $2,000 million, up 42 per cent. This certainly is one promise the Prime Minister has not kept and, so far as I can see, he is not going to be able to keep it.

The throne speech presents a very glowing account of our economic recovery, and that account has been expanded by speakers from the government benches who have told us that our exports are up, more people are employed than ever before and everything is just wonderful. Well, of course a large part of these exports are accounted for by sales of wheat to China. I realize this is a very difficult question and I have every sympathy with the government that has to make a decision in matters of this kind. The interests and welfare of the farmers and our trading position as a nation are both vitally affected. These are things that cannot be ignored.

But there are other considerations, too, which ought not to be overlooked. In the first place, this raises the question of the motives and values by which our actions are governed. We cannot salve our consciences by saying we are selling this wheat to feed hungry people. There are millions of hungry people in the world waiting to be fed. We are not selling food to them because they are not offering us dollars in return.

Experts who are acquainted with this matter raise a question as to whether the wheat being sold to China is actually reaching the hungry people who need it. There is a great deal of evidence that this wheat is being used as a political weapon, an instrument of coercion, by an unscrupulous government in order to force people to go along with what they want at a time when that particular government is becoming discredited and unpopular. In other words they say, "Go along with us or you do not eat".

In a time of war, trading with the enemy is an act of treason. At the present time, in this twilight zone between peace and war, we are nevertheless engaged in a cold war no less deadly and no less dangerous. The government of China is our implacable foe dedicated to our destruction just as fanatically as is Khrushchev and the Soviet union. We must exercise the greatest care because if, by our sales of wheat, we are bolstering and strengthening an unfriendly or enemy government, it might very well turn out that along with our wheat we might also be selling our freedom.

As the Minister of Finance pointed out earlier today when he was talking about what are the real interests of Canada, surely our paramount interest is to preserve our freedom. That is a matter that must be taken into account in all our relationships with enemy countries.

Someone has made a great deal of the argument that more people are working today than ever before. I really do not see why they do not say that more people are working today than 50 years ago, as it would prove exactly the same thing. There are more people working today than there were 50 years ago simply because there are more people. That is the only reason that there are more people working today than there were a year ago. The undeniable, irrefutable fact is that, despite this improvement in our economy, our economic growth has lagged and is still lagging far behind our increase in population; and this at a time when our rate of population growth has declined.

If we take the population figure presented by the bureau of statistics for June 1, 1953, 1957, and 1961 we find this situation. In 1953, the population was 14.865 million; in 1957 it was 16.589 million and in 1961 it was 18.168 million. The increase in the four years, the period from 1953 to 1957, is 1.744 million. The increase in the four years from 1957 to 1961 is only 1.579 million. Under normal circumstances the increase from 1957 to 1961 should be considerably greater than that from 1953 to 1957 but in actual fact it is 200,000 less. What a great unemployment problem we would be faced with today if that rate of growth from 1953 to 1957 had been maintained during the period this government has been in office.

Sensible people know that we cannot continue indefinitely going further and further into debt. There is a limit to our borrowing capacity as a nation and there is a limit to the debt burden we can carry as a people. If our economy is to support our present expenditures along with the additional expenditures envisaged in this speech from the throne, our rate of growth must increase considerably over what it is at the present time.

As a Newfoundlander I am naturally most interested in those particular things which the stocking holds for my own province. I wish to thank the government for the reference to the proposed pensions for members of the merchant navy, the forestry units, the firefighters and other groups of this kind who served during the last war. I appreciate the increases in veterans disability pensions and veterans allowances which have already been granted and I welcome this further recognition of the services of those groups which I have just mentioned. I must, however, express some disappointment that the method decided upon in granting these awards is to amend the civilian pensions act rather than the veterans charter. From my own experience I believe that the veterans allowance payments would be far more suitable having regard to the needs of the members of these groups. This decision to amend the civilian pensions act is tantamount to denying these people any status as veterans. A person does not become a veteran just because he puts on a uniform. I refer back to the gallant exploits of the Jervis Bay. They were unequalled in the history of our naval tradition or in any of our military traditions. Yet these people, if they are entitled to a pension, cannot be recognized as veterans but must get it as civilians. A member of a service can only give his life in the service of his country. That is the supreme sacrifice. When he has done that, he has given everything. I wish to point out to the house the fact that in my own particular riding more members of the merchant navy made the supreme sacrifice in the service of their country than of any other branch of the armed services.

I also welcome the reference to the provision of an east coast ferry service between the mainland and the east coast of Newfoundland. The speech from the throne tells us that the eastern terminal is to be Argentia. Since this is a United States military base I would ask the government to explore the possibility of acquiring access to this terminal without the necessity of having to get permits from the military authorities.

I also welcome the reference to the extension of the period of application of the Farm Improvement Loans Act and of the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. No doubt the Farm Improvement Loans Act has been of some use to farmers, but from my experience the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act has been of doubtful value to the fishermen of my province for the very simple reason that the banks have shown themselves to be extremely reluctant to make loans to fishermen.

If the fishermen are to be assisted in the same way that farmers are assisted, some other means must be devised outside of the banking system, and I would recommend that the government consider setting up a fishermen's small loans board to deal with this problem. Fishermen's insurance should also be extended to include nets, gear and other items of equipment which are not now covered and in addition a disaster fund should be set up to protect fishermen against those circumstances and exigencies which sometimes suddenly occur and confront our fishermen as groups and as individuals with disastrous consequences.

We do not think it is too much to ask that our fishermen be accorded the same treatment as is being given to the farmers of our country. It was a great disappointment to all of us that this principle was not followed by the government in assisting our fishermen who are suffering from the catch failure in my province. Hon. members will have learned from press and radio reports that the past year has been a very trying one for our province. Disastrous fires destroyed millions of acres of valuable timber and brought woods employment to a standstill. On top of that some 12,000 or more of our fishermen suffered a catch failure. In a year of normal catch an inshore fisherman earns on the average a net income of about $650. Out of that he and his family have to try to subsist for the winter and then secure sufficient supplies to enable him to resume his occupation when the season opens in the spring. Under these circumstances it is easy to understand that a reduction in the catch of 20 per cent or even 10 per cent is attended by extreme hardship but when there is a catch failure which ranges from a complete, total blank up to 25 per cent of the normal catch then the circumstances in which our fishermen find themselves are indescribable.

When the farmers suffer a crop failure we come to their assistance by making acreage payments. We are not against that. We have always supported measures providing for acreage payments. We did so last year and the Prime Minister announced that we are going to do so again very soon. But contrast this with the treatment which has been given to our distressed fishermen. When the government finally made up its mind to assist our fishermen at all, this was the scheme that they proposed. First, they agreed to match dollar for dollar provincial road allocations to be spent after October 15 and, in addition, they agreed to grant up to $300,000 on two conditions. The first condition was that the money had to be spent on a winter works program, which it was pointed out was not practicable in the situation in which most of our fishermen found themselves. The second condition was that the provincial government would contribute 25 per cent of the labour costs involved.

Our premier has estimated that this assistance works out to about $20 per fisherman, not for one month but between seasons. On the northeast coast where the catch failure was the worst that means from November to April or perhaps May. It amounts to $20 for 150 days or 13 cents a day per family or roughly 3 cents per head, and that with strings attached. Our premier has termed this treatment shabby. Compared with the treatment that is accorded to other Canadians in similar circumstances, I think he could have said that it is not only shabby but shameful.

There are other matters upon which I had hoped to have time to enlarge. I particularly wanted to say a word about the Atlantic provinces, my interest in whom is second only to my interest in my own province. We all remember the Atlantic resolutions that were framed and advertised so well just prior to the 1957 election. The three most important of these resolutions have still not been implemented, namely, the national development program for the development of the resources of the Atlantic provinces, industrial decentralization and the capital projects program. These are still outstanding and time is running out.

In the meantime the age old disparities between the Atlantic provinces and the rest of Canada still remain. Unemployment is 75 per cent higher than the rest of Canada while income is 40 per cent lower. The unemployment figures released by the government on January 16 emphasized this disparity. In Ontario 4.7 per cent of the work force were unemployed, in the prairie region 5.4 per cent and in the Atlantic region 10.8 per cent.

We shall never cure the economic illnesses or solve the problems of the Atlantic provinces by the piecemeal methods which have been employed up to this time. What we must have is a complete survey of the financial and geographical disabilities under which we suffer. Then we must have measures enacted in this house that will offset these disabilities and put the Atlantic provinces on the same footing as the rest of Canada. We can begin by making a complete survey of the fishing industry and proceed from one industry to another.

I see that my time is almost up so I will conclude by saying that in spite of all the glitter and the fancy wrappings the speech from the throne is not an inspiring document. It ignores completely the main problems with which the country is faced, problems of defence, problems involved in connection with the common market, and others of that nature. It makes no mention of the dangers Canada must face as a member of the free world. It calls forth no challenge. It gives no indication of the firm and wise leadership so sorely needed in these troubled times. Therefore, I have much pleasure in supporting the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Crouse: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Carter: Certainly.

Mr. Crouse: In addition to the other benefits that will accrue to the people of Newfoundland from the new ferry service that will be implemented between North Sydney and Argentia, would he care to comment and give the house his opinion on how much more employment this will provide for the people of Newfoundland?

Mr. Carter: Well, sir, I had hoped to deal with that problem at much greater length in the speech I have just concluded, but I would point out to my hon. friend that we know from experience it will take at least three years for that ferry service to become a reality. During the last election campaign my opponent went around telling my constituents that the Solicitor General stated that all he had to do was to phone Mr. Hees when he got to Ottawa and in ten minutes he would secure two coastal boats for my riding. The first coastal boat materialized about eight months ago, and the last one this summer. In reply to my hon. friend's question, when it does materialize it will provide an extra day or two employment for the people in that area who are now working only two or three days a week.

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to join with previous speakers in this debate in extending congratulations to the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I also wish to congratulate the Deputy Speaker on his appointment to this important position. It is a distinct honour and well deserved. No doubt he, along with our popular Speaker and chairman, will enjoy the confidence and respect of all members in the house.

I would like to deal with matters pertaining to the welfare and progress of my constituents in Waterloo North, and Canadians generally, under the leadership of our esteemed Prime Minister and his government.

It is gratifying to know that Her Majesty the Queen Mother, along with their Highnesses the Duke of Edinburgh and the Princess Royal, will visit Canada sometime this summer. In 1939 the Queen Mother visited Canada, and her itinerary included my riding of Waterloo North. At that time I was among the amputees who were honoured in being presented to her, and I hope that their visit this year may be a most pleasant one. The visit of the Queen Mother reminds us of the continued growth of the commonwealth, which is playing a great part in the world in maintaining freedom and peace. The strengthening of the commonwealth is a primary objective of our government.

Several items, particularly those relating to old age pensions, aid for our Canadian industries and university assistance, were particularly commendable in the speech from the throne. As member of parliament in a riding which is strongly industrial I was happy to see four proposals which should assist in no small way toward helping industries to develop, and employment to increase. Aid to scientific research by industry and a national electric grid should be of tremendous assistance over the coming years. Critics might say these two moves will not bring aid to industries and cut employment fast enough. I do not think they are really designed to do that. Instead, I am sure they are intelligent steps which, although they will not pay dividends for some time, will help to promote a steady industrial growth for all regions of Canada during coming decades.

The third item, broadening of the Small Business Loans Act, will give a further shot in the arm to our secondary industries at a time when our country is striving to move ahead in this phase of business activity.

Critics may again say that the measures outlined in the speech from the throne are not bold enough. However I say that the variety of moves, whether they are small or large, is an indication that our government has the welfare of many groups, individuals, and yes, of all Canadians at heart.

During the last four years many changes have been made in Waterloo North in regard to industry. The main street in the city of Waterloo with its new civic square, approval of new post offices in the twin cities of Kitchener and Waterloo, and of university buildings and other structures too numerous to mention, are some of the improvements that have taken place or are contemplated.

We will be asked to increase federal grants to universities and make suitable provision in those cases where alternative arrangements are made for supplementary provincial grants in lieu of federal grants. These increases will be welcomed by all universities across Canada, including universities in my riding of Waterloo North, the University of Waterloo, the Waterloo Lutheran University, and the University of St. Jerome's College, all of whose progress has been phenomenal. These institutions in the past have received financial aid from our government.

One of the most interesting developments during the last year in the North Waterloo riding has been the continued rapid development of the University of Waterloo. This institution was incorporated only five years ago. Since that time student enrolment has grown to over 1,200, with a faculty of 111 providing instruction in arts, science, engineering and graduate studies. The university is located on a 240-acre campus and now has three large science and engineering buildings in use, the last of which was constructed during the past year. As of this year the financial assets of the university total in excess of $9.5 million.

Construction of an arts building is now under way and is scheduled for completion in the fall of 1962 at a cost of $1,350,000. One of the interesting features of this building is that it includes a 500 seat amphitheatre patterned after the Stratford Shakespearian festival theatre, which suggests the possibility of a close relationship between the University of Waterloo and Stratford, so essential in our modern world of today.

Also under construction at the present time, and scheduled for completion in 1962, are three teaching and residence buildings for federated and affiliated colleges. The university of St. Jerome's college, federated with the University of Waterloo, is building a residence to accommodate 100 men students. The Sisters of Notre Dame, associated with St. Jerome's college, are building a women's residence for 55 students. Renison college, an Anglican institution, is building a residence for 40 men and 40 women students and the total construction costs of these church colleges is in excess of $2,500,000.

The University of Waterloo has pioneered in the introduction of co-operative education in Canada. Co-operative education embodies a program in which the student alternates periods of on-campus study with equal periods spent in gaining practical experience in an industry, business firm, or service agency related to the student's university course.

The Waterloo Lutheran University, like others, has made tremendous strides during the last few years. This university, which celebrated its fiftieth anniversary last year, can look back over the past five decades with pride. Affiliated with the University of Western Ontario from 1925 to 1960, it is now an independent degree-granting university, and there has been tremendous growth on the campus since it became an independent degree-granting institution in 1959. I was pleased to be one of the speakers in December at the dedication of the new women's residence and the laying of the cornerstone for two more new buildings, the university theatre auditorium and the students' union. Also included in this expansion program are a men's residence and a dining hall, the former due to be constructed this year, as the final stage of a $1,500,000 expansion program. Enrolment has reached a total figure of 1,220 for the academic year 1961-62, which is an increase of 50 per cent over 1960-61.

The two distinct units controlled by this university are Waterloo University College and Waterloo Lutheran Seminary. The seminary is a sister institution to Waterloo University College. Its purpose is to educate young men for the ministry. Its graduates serve in seven provinces, the United States, India and South America. The federal Department of Labour recently approved additions to Eastwood collegiate in Kitchener, Waterloo collegiate in Waterloo, and the Elmira district high school for vocational and technical training. My riding of Waterloo North, with its many public schools, separate schools, collegiates, colleges and universities will present many fine educational opportunities to our youth.

Over the past four years our government has amended the Pension Act on many occasions. These amendments include increases to disabled veterans and their dependants, war veterans allowance, Veterans' Land Act improvements, and other important changes.

It is gratifying to know that we will be asked to approve an amendment to the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act to authorize the payment of allowances under specified conditions to merchant seamen, firefighters, foresters, members of the voluntary aid detachments and certain other civilians whose war service overseas has been recognized in other respects. Other amending bills will bring about increased allowances and other improvements under the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act, and an extension of the qualifying period under the War Service Grants Act, Veterans Insurance Act and Veterans' Land Act. I am sure that every veteran in Canada and the citizens of this country will appreciate the approval of such amendments. As long as one veteran or his dependant is in need of assistance, this government will gladly meet this obligation.

One point that I have raised in the house on several occasions and which has given others and myself much concern is the qualification respecting the continuation of the allowance after death of a pensioner in receipt of a pension of less than 50 per cent. The present legislation provides that in the case of those in receipt of a pension of less than 50 per cent at the time of death and whose death is not established as due to pensionable disabilities, no pension or allowance is payable.

A great many widows have brought this to my attention and to the attention of other hon. members. I hope that the present legislation can be amended at some future date in order that we may improve the financial circumstances of these widows.

It is most satisfying to know that this session the government will propose important measures in the field of social welfare. What could be more important than assisting our senior citizens and looking after those who come under the Old Age Assistance Act, blind people, and those who are disabled? Our government has always been intensely interested in the welfare of these citizens and these improvements in the field of social welfare will be deeply appreciated by all concerned.

Recently our government passed a bill providing $5 million for encouraging our youth in fitness and amateur sport. Representatives have now been chosen to sit on this council and should in the near future be able to carry out their important tasks. I hoped that someone would be selected from western Ontario, because this is one of the hotbeds of interest in fitness and amateur sports in Canada. Canada is fortunate in having so many outstanding sportsmen. Although only a limited number can be selected for the council at this time, I am sure others will be ready to assist this program which is so essential to the welfare of our youth. Incidentally, I might mention that this week is minor league hockey week in Canada and 200,000 boys will participate in this great game.

I should like to say a few words regarding agriculture in Waterloo county and the province of Ontario. Before doing so I should like to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton), for the success he has achieved in finding markets for grain, which has helped a great deal to reduce surplus stocks. Our government should also be commended for the proposed legislation mentioned in the speech from the throne. This should be of great assistance to the farmers of Canada, especially those in the prairie provinces.

We in Ontario, as well as people in other provinces, were disturbed to hear of the losses sustained by the prairie farmers during the 1961 drought. However, we are being asked to provide assistance by means of acreage payments to those who have been affected. As one who represents an Ontario riding, Waterloo North, I should like to say that this province ranks first among Canadian provinces in agricultural production and has for many years had the highest annual farm cash income of any province. It has one of the most diverse farming areas of any single administrative unit in North America.

It may be interesting to know that of the 1.5 million estimated rural population of Ontario, one third live on farms. The size of most farms is between 50 and 100 acres, but there are some 23,000 farms of 200 acres or more. The average size is 140 acres, which is much smaller than the average prairie farm.

Livestock is the foundation of the agricultural economy of Ontario. In my riding dairy farming comes first in agricultural production, followed by hogs and beef feeding. Sheep used to be a familiar sight on many Ontario farms and it is certain that the new inducements our government is offering in the way of transportation of breeding ewes from the west, premiums on good lamb carcasses and price support for wool, are going to make farmers take another look at this line of livestock. There is a great deal of good land for sheep farming in the province of Ontario. I understand that under the transportation assistance program for sheep which was announced recently by the Minister of Agriculture some 6,000 western range ewes were moved into Ontario last fall.

I now wish to say a few words about our younger folk. It is heartening to note that 4-H and junior farmers organizations are strong movements in the province of Ontario. There is no doubt that the cultivation of youth in the cause of our primary industry will bring the most suitable people into agriculture with the awareness of the need for good breeding and management practices already instilled into them.

Members of the 4-H organization contributed the facts and figures for a recent farm safety survey. This was a valuable type of service which we all hope will bring a reduction in the number of injuries and the amount of damage caused by carelessness at work on the farm. I understand that the federal Department of Agriculture contributed something in excess of $100,000 toward 4-H activities last year.

I should like to mention one further point. Ontario's poultry industry is one of the most remarkable developments in agriculture in this country. The production of chicken and turkey meat has multiplied several times in the last decade, and egg production has gone up by more than 1 million cases. Some of these products are beginning to be better known in the markets of Europe. The application of efficient management, breeding and feeding principles—for which federal research takes some credit—are among the reasons for the spectacular success of these industries.

I come from a community which is one of the largest cosmopolitan centres in Canada, and I think that old and new Canadians were deeply impressed when they learned that for the first time a bill of rights had become a reality under the leadership of our Prime Minister.

This bill, which is well known to Canadians, provides for the recognition and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Our Prime Minister has through the years urged that such a bill be enacted. His untiring efforts in bringing about this bill should be an inspiration to all our people. The stand of our Prime Minister against racial discrimination at the commonwealth prime ministers' meeting in London bears living testimony to the principles for which he stands.

Since this bill was enacted I have heard people from all walks of life express their views with these words: "It is great to be a Canadian". Others have asked "What is a Canadian?" To this question may I express my observations in this way? We are citizens of Canada, either by birth or by adoption and naturalization. We are citizens of the commonwealth. Our skins may be brown, yellow, black or white, but we are Canadians. Our names may be Poloski, Fraser, Wong, Spermanti, Dubois, Schmidt, Weichel or Jones. Our forefathers may have come from Glasgow, Prague, Tokyo; from Dublin, London, Paris, Rotterdam, Berlin, Madrid, or from countries such as Poland, Italy, the Ukraine or Israel. We may be labourer, student, businessman, member of parliament, news reporter, doctor, lawyer or machinist. Whatever we are, whatever our occupation, whatever our background, if we accept Canada as our country and with it the democratic way of life, we are Canadians.

We have the right to speak freely, to worship freely; but with these rights, we must learn our duties—to speak wisely, to worship wisely, to choose our leaders wisely. We inherit two great cultures, the Anglo-Saxon and the French, and more than 30 others as well. We are creating out of these a new and growing Canadian culture. At times we may whine when things go wrong, be unfair in our criticisms, forget to help the other fellow when in need, be unappreciative of some of our blessings. However, we finally realize that it is great to be a Canadian.

As we old and new Canadians travel along life's pathway together may we unite in one great effort for the progress of our country and the peace and welfare of all nations in the world. Perhaps I can close with these words as written by Kipling, words so often expressed during world war I:

> It ain't the individual nor the army as a whole,
> But the everlasting teamwork of every blooming soul.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): As the calendar year comes to an end I am always interested in reading the statements which are made by political, industrial, financial and trade union leaders on the occasion of the new year messages. I was most interested in the messages which were published just before January 1 of this year and in particular I was impressed by that which was released by Mr. Claude Jodoin, president of the Canadian Labour Congress. Opening his new year message, Mr. Jodoin said that the year 1962 was certain to be a decisive one in Canadian history. He stated:

> We are confronted with major changes and developments both within and without the boundaries of our country. As always, the challenges which confront us are accompanied by great opportunities and responsibilities. This is a time at which we should firmly determine to meet them. The need is for a firm determination to meet these challenging and rapidly changing conditions and to be ready to adopt new approaches which alone can meet the needs of 1962 and the years to follow.

I am sure we would all agree that those challenging words emphasize the responsibilities and the problems which are before all of us as we meet this session early in 1962. There are many problems to be faced. There are many decisions which can only be made by the government of Canada; there are imperative problems which are in need of solution.

Having listened to the contributions which have been made to this debate on the address I feel, being basically a compassionate man, that perhaps many of the Liberals in this house have been a little too harsh on the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in expecting him to have found solutions to these many problems within the period 1957-62. Being, as I have said, a compassionate man by nature, I believe that although they should have been resolved, and must be resolved, we should remember in our criticism the make-up and the temperament of the Prime Minister. It is only fair that we should. Let us not forget that the right hon. gentleman is slow in reaching decisions. That is emphasized by the fact that it took the Prime Minister three weeks, according to stories which appeared on the front pages of our newspapers day after day, to reach a decision as to what to name the dog he was given for Christmas. I am glad he finally chose the name "Happy". It was mentioned to me the other day, and I could not help but agree, that someone ought to come along now and give a dog to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and name the dog "Slap". If we had a prime minister with a dog named Happy and a leader of the opposition with a dog named Slap we would, indeed, have a slap-happy situation in that respect. I think they are slap-happy in their approach—

An hon. Member: What about your dog?

Mr. Winch: I own neither a dog nor a cat. All I have are principles.

Speaking about slap-happiness I believe the most slap-happy speech I have heard in all my years of politics was the speech delivered in this house last night by the Solicitor General (Mr. Browne). I am glad he is in his place at the present moment. It was extraordinary to hear a minister of the crown—

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Last night we were debating a subamendment on which a vote was taken. That debate was concluded and I think it is a breach of the rules to refer to a debate which has been concluded.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) would allow me to say a word on that important point of order which has just been raised by the Solicitor General. I think most of us who have had some experience in this house are aware that the debate on the address has always been regarded as a single debate. The only thing we are restricted from doing in this debate is to discuss a decision that has been made by the house. We are not prevented from discussing any extraordinary argument which may have been advanced before that decision was taken.

I refer Your Honour to the fact that what we were dealing with was a subamendment which had some relation to the amendment and it would seem to me extraordinary, in view of the fact that what was said last night had nothing to do with parliament or national affairs, if Your Honour should restrict the comments of one hon. member after permitting another to wander so far afield.

Mr. Winch: I do not think I need to worry about this point of order because I know, Mr. Speaker, that in your justice you recognize the right of members to speak in this debate on any subject whatever. I am also confident you do not intend to impose what would amount to closure in the light of the reference to the abolition of closure in the speech from the throne itself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think it has been the general practice to allow a considerable amount of latitude in the subjects treated in the course of this debate. I think that as long as the hon. member relates his remarks to the amendment he will be in order.

Mr. Winch: That is exactly what I am doing.

I find it extraordinary that the sins of omission and commission of a Liberal premier should be laid at the door of the New Democratic party. We have been charged with many things, but that is a brand new one to me. It certainly demonstrates the depths of political expediency to which the government must be driven in an endeavour to try to bring into disrespect their political opponents and to win votes when the election is called.

In particular, Mr. Speaker, certain statements have been made which I think we are entitled to answer. It was very noticeable that when the Solicitor General made his so-called contribution to the debate last night he not only had something to say about the province of Newfoundland but also about the province of Saskatchewan. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that mention was made of two crown corporations established under a C.C.F. government which are no longer in existence. Admittedly, they are not. No mention was made, however, as to why they were established or the reasons that led to their cancellation. The important thing is, if any government is to be condemned because two of its ventures failed, then should not my hon. friend on the other side of the house apply that principle to his party's beloved system of free enterprise? During the first nine months of 1961, 2,006 bankruptcies occurred in Canada under that system, with total liabilities of $4,100,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Tory government.

Mr. Winch: If my hon. friend thinks it is right that the people should know that under a C.C.F. government in Saskatchewan two crown corporations went under, then does he not also think that they should know about the other crown corporations which did not go under? May I just very briefly refer to the auditor's report of the Saskatchewan crown corporations for 1959 and 1960, wherein I find this, and I quote:

> In spite of the reduced level of economic activity in Saskatchewan during 1959-60, the net revenue received from crown corporation surpluses, excluding the Saskatchewan Power Corporation and Saskatchewan Government Telephones, totalled $1,290,917 . . . a return of 16.64 per cent; . . . in the years 1947-60, with an average capital investment of $8,704,165, these corporations . . . have earned a total of $11,853,774 after losses have been deducted.

Mr. Jones: Not the losses of the other crown corporations.

Mr. Winch: That is after all losses were deducted.

Mr. Jones: Not the losses of the ones that were discontinued.

Mr. Winch: I continue:

> In addition during this period they have made significant contributions to the Saskatchewan economy by way of $702,766 in municipal taxes, $7,873,450 in royalties and $45,900,599 in wages and salaries.

Yes, I can understand my hon. friend, the Solicitor General. He has only one objection to the success of crown corporations and that is that their profits are going to the people of Saskatchewan and not to a minority group of profiteers.

Mr. McIntosh: I wonder if my hon. friend would permit a question?

Mr. Winch: I have already lost some time through a stupid point of order. Nevertheless, you can ask me anything that you like afterwards.

Mr. McIntosh: I know why you do not want to answer that.

Mr. Winch: There seems to be a deliberate and conscious attempt, for some reason or other, to create a belief in the public's mind that the Prime Minister really meant what he said some time ago, that the next campaign will be fought on the issue of free enterprise versus socialism. We accept that challenge. But in order to accomplish that then, somehow or other, they have to drive the Liberals and the New Democratic party into the same camp. We have seen an indication of this in the various speeches during this session.

I admit right off the bat that there are, without doubt, similarities between the New Democratic party, the Liberals and the Conservatives. This is only natural. It is understandable. It has to be so. Because the Conservatives and Liberals are in such a race to steal our program that similarities are bound to occur. However, there are major, important and fundamental differences. One of these differences was mentioned only this afternoon by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter). I think I heard him correctly when he said something to the effect that we were giving away our freedom in the selling of wheat to China. I am certain that is the way it was said.

Mr. Carter: No, those are not the exact words I used.

Mr. Winch: Here is the quote: When we sell our wheat, we sell our freedom.

Mr. Carter: On a point of order, may I say those are not the exact words I used. I was not speaking from a text, but what I did say was that we should take care lest when we sell wheat to China we might be selling our freedom.

Mr. Winch: It will be very interesting to read Hansard tomorrow. However, the principle is the same. May I say that so far as the New Democratic party is concerned, if Canada has its surpluses, whether or not we like the governments in the countries concerned, we should assist the hungry of the world by disposing of those surpluses. This is the moral responsibility of this country. Moreover, sir, if the principle is correct that when we sell to China we have to watch out that we are not selling our freedom, then I presume the principle applies across the world and Canada will have to consider that in our sales to all countries, some of which are behind the iron curtain, we are in danger of losing our freedom. I just wonder what would be the situation if that principle were to be applied so far as the trade of Canada is concerned.

However, I said there was a fundamental difference between the New Democratic party and the others. In view of the fact speakers before me on the other side of the house have insisted on bringing up this matter, I think the fundamental difference should be made clear in this forum. Very briefly, in order that I shall not be misunderstood, may I say that it is our contention that every man and woman must learn that his welfare is to be found in the welfare of the whole community. This can only be learned through sharing social responsibility, and methods which do not vitalize and broaden social action shape results that are undemocratic. I have no hesitation in saying that the objective of the New Democratic party, the objective of those of us who sit here, cannot be handed to the people; that is why we do not make promises. Our objectives will arrive and endure when the people find an opportunity to accept and appreciate social responsibility.

We realize in this corner that we are in a social revolution today. We are not concerned about any revolution that may come tomorrow or one which is around the corner. Our concept of society, Mr. Speaker, our concept of Canada, is that natural forces compel change, growth and progress. We desire to remove, through democratic action, the existing restraints upon natural social change. I can say that basically and fundamentally the motivation behind this group speaking in the House of Commons is to use the instrument of political democracy, the parliament of Canada, in order to build an economic democracy which will provide not only greater economic efficiency but the greatest happiness to the greatest number.

We realize that Liberals, Conservatives and Socreds do not like the thought of revolutionary change. They do not like anything which will endanger the maintenance of their beloved system of free enterprise, business as usual and the devil take the hindmost. However, whether the Liberals and Conservatives like it or not, they are facing change. Progress and real democracy demand that we replace monopolistic enterprise by democratic socialism. We believe that this is something that could and should be done by common sense, conscious, deliberate methods and not through being the victim of blind processes, as unfortunately is the case far too often when governments move only when ultimately they are compelled to do so by circumstances or by public opinion built up for them by the New Democratic party.

We have always stated—and I wish to reiterate it—that it is the responsibility of all of us to emphasize that the ultimate goals of a real society in Canada, a society of personal and collective security and permanent peace, must be achieved by utilizing the political instrument for its supreme task of enabling this nation to meet the challenging times.

We are undoubtedly facing challenging times, Mr. Speaker, I know that if anybody dares to criticize the government or their party, their actions or their statements, we hear from the Conservative side of the house a great deal to the effect that we are doing a disservice to Canada and that we are bringing Canada into disrepute. When they say this they are completely ignoring the duties and responsibilities of members of parliament and are showing their own callousness and ineptitude. It is therefore necessary for them to bring out the blindfold in order to hide their own failures and shortcomings.

We live in an age of anxiety. We have anxiety in Canada domestically as to individual economic security and anxiety as to whether we are to have peace or war. It is the responsibility of all of us in this House of Commons to recognize that fact, to face up to and confront the problems and to see what we can do about them.

We hear a great deal about the national production and increases in employment. That is all to the good. We are happy about it. However, Mr. Speaker, statistics do not fill the bellies and pay the rent of those who are out of work; and I may say that there are many people who are out of work in my own province of British Columbia. According to the latest figures we have the second highest ratio of unemployment in Canada. Some people are losing their homes and their furniture—they are even losing their morale—because of the failure of this government to solve the problem they told us they were going to solve in 1958. I wish to say this, Mr. Speaker, you can use all the statistics you wish to use, but what the unemployed Canadian workers want are jobs and not statistics gumbo. I say that something is wrong in this country of Canada and with the government of Canada, when, at a time when there are slums to be cleared, homes to be built, roads to be built, hospitals and universities to be built, new resources to be opened up, we have existing conditions and unemployment.

I know the answer comes back, "Where is the money coming from?" I have enough pride in Canada and in Canadians to believe that if we can find, as we did, $44 billion in order to wage two world wars and maintain the Department of National Defence, we can find the money with which to put our unemployed to work. I am certain that the people of Canada will respond to an invitation to make an investment in prosperity and peace just as fully as, if not more fully, than they will respond to an invitation to make an investment in order to win a war. If the government have not that confidence, they have no business to be in the seats of administration in this country.

I have heard it said so often that these things are impossible. I heard that word "impossible" from a government speaker just the other night when we had a debate at Carleton University. It should be understood that the word "impossible" means only one thing, namely those things that have not been done yet. Let us start doing some of the things that are long overdue, not only in the domestic field of endeavour but also in the international field.

May I say that one of the greatest heartbreaks of my life is to see the way in which this government has brought Canada into international disrepute and made her the laughingstock of the nations of the world.

Mr. Churchill: That is nonsense and the hon. member knows it.

Mr. Winch: I know that the Conservatives attack the Liberals and members of the New Democratic party, saying that we are the ones who have done that because we face up to the facts in Canada and in international affairs. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it is this government that has done it. Down in the United Nations we have the Secretary of State for External Affairs—a man for whom I have the greatest admiration—who is speaking, I presume, on behalf of Canada, sponsoring a motion for no expansion of the nuclear club. Not only does the motion go through the committee but it goes through the general assembly. Then at the same time we go over to Europe and we visit the military camps of Canada in France and Germany where we see our infantry with the Honest John. We know that this year they are going to be supplied with CF-104's. We are also getting Voodoos in Canada. We have two Bomarc bases for which there are no conventional warheads. None have ever been designed and there are none on the drafting board now. The weapon is useless unless it has it. How do you put the two things together? It is political hyprocrisy, and hypocrisy is conscious and deliberate dishonesty. The government is therefore guilty—

Mr. Churchill: You are going too far now.

Mr. Winch: The government is guilty of conscious and deliberate political dishonesty when it says one thing in the United Nations and has an entirely different policy at home.

Mr. Jones: Is the hon. member in or out of NATO this week?

Mr. Winch: Oh, the hon. member will have his chance to speak if he ever dares to do so.

Mr. Jones: The hon. member has interrupted others.

Mr. Winch: That is the situation unless, of course, there is no intention of having nuclear warheads. If that is so, just what business has the government had in sending down the drain the hundreds of millions of the taxpayers' dollars spent on the CF-104's, the Voodoos, the Bomarcs and the Honest Johns? Members on the other side of the house cannot have it both ways. As a result of policies at home and pronouncements in the United Nations you have made Canada a laughingstock.

Mr. Churchill: Where?

Mr. Winch: Throughout the United Nations.

Mr. Churchill: Nonsense.

Mr. Winch: Excuse me. Go down to the United Nations and after some of these speeches are made talk to the delegates from other countries and they will say that this is not what is being said in Ottawa. That is the situation. Face up to it.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Winch: I know it is true or I would not be standing in my place saying it. I am asking you to have the intestinal fortitude to decide on a national defence policy, nuclear weapons or no nuclear weapons, and let the Canadian people know where you stand. At least have the guts to say yes or no.

These are some of the issues which should not be left until after the election. This House of Commons and the people of Canada are entitled to know, now that the house is in session and in light of the fact that the government has over 200 members out of 265, just what the policies are with respect to domestic and international affairs. I say further that if you have any answers, if you have any solutions, if you are sincere Canadians interested in Canada, you will not wait until there is an election. You will use your power now to do now those things which should be done. Action, not promises, is what is required. You have the authority and the power.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Winch: I will finish in one sentence. Let me say this. For everything that is of benefit to Canada at home and abroad and which is in the interests of the people you will have the unqualified and full support of every member of this group.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, it is a wonderful privilege to represent the great and predominantly agricultural district of Athabasca. As I stand here I think it is a rare thing to be able to say in any parliament that the promises made to the people of one's riding have largely been fulfilled I do not think any government in the history of Canada has ever been able to go to the people tomorrow, next month or perhaps even next year and say to them, "We have done what we promised to do".

I offered myself in public service to the people of Athabasca and said I would come to Ottawa with an open mind to see what things it was possible to do and to implement to the best of my ability the promises that we made. I have never been more proud than I am at this moment to be able to go back at any time our great leader decides to go to the country and say to my people, "I have been your hired man and I am asking you for the same job again".

Some of the chores we have been given by the people of western Canada have not been easy. Canadian taxpayers were affected because the economy of the country was in a slump. We have steered the ship of state through very troubled waters and today we can say that we are bringing the ship home with a well-stocked hold.

We have unemployment. There is chronic unemployment. Both the Liberals and socialists say that we have done nothing about it. We have not permanently cured unemployment but we have done something about it. We have been seriously criticized for depleting the unemployment insurance fund. What was the fund for? It was to fill the gap between full employment and unemployment. This we have done. What would they have had us do? Leave the money there that these people had paid into the fund for the purpose of protecting themselves against such an emergency? No, we have spent the money and we are proud of it. We have not created government jobs for everybody in Canada like the socialists would have us do, and if you look at the record in Saskatchewan you will know well why we have not. This is still a land of freedom and opportunity, a land where a man is expected to pull his own weight. The socialists would have labour and the farmers join in an unholy marriage. They call it the New Democratic party but it is rank socialism with a new name.

Mr. Douglas in his concluding remarks at their convention challenged the people of Canada by saying that he would give them rank socialism. He said, "If you do not believe I will nationalize everything, look at my record. We have nationalized everything in Saskatchewan that we could get our hands on and we are going to carry on until we have nationalized everything and have brought you Jerusalem the golden. Let me say to each and every member that you cannot share wealth which you are not going to go out and earn.

When I have spoken before in the house I have said that the policy of this government is to make us strong at home and generous abroad and that we were not confining ourselves to matters of international agreement around the council tables of the United Nations or even NATO but were speaking economically as well. We cannot be generous abroad until we are strong at home, until we pull up our economic socks. How are we going to do this?

Mr. Argue: Get rid of John.

Mr. Bigg: Not by nationalization, not by going back to the old laissez faire of leaving things alone. We have got to go back to work as individuals. No labour union can guarantee us an income for Canada. The farmers know this fact. They know that men like myself have come to Ottawa to represent them honestly, fairly and truly and to speak good common sense, to tell them that we have got to work and create wealth before we can share it. Anyone who says differently is a liar. There is no way by which you can share poverty and get to Jerusalem the golden.

Mr. Douglas won a provincial election on the promise of free medicine. There is nothing free in this world. If you want medicine you will have to pay for it. You cannot give the people of Saskatchewan free medicine, and now the socialists admit it. They say they will give them free medicine if the federal taxpayers will pay 60 per cent of the cost. Free medicine. They started shoe factories, they started box factories and they all failed. You cannot compel a man to work his best. I agree that in Russia where men can be regimented from the cradle to the grave a certain amount of work can be forced out of them and if mass production methods are used more tanks can be turned out even by slaves, but you cannot get better work out of Canadians. They must be led not driven.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but it is now six o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I have some indication from the house leader concerning the business for tomorrow and the rest of the week?

Mr. Churchill: The intention is to continue with the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

Mr. Argue: That is terrible. Shame. You should proceed with the acreage payments tomorrow, after all this fanfare.

Mr. Churchill: As tomorrow is the fourth appointed day for this debate there will be a vote on the amendment at 9.30 p.m. On Friday we will take supplementary estimates unless, for some reason now unknown to me, we have to make a change. If some crisis arises we may have to disappoint the hon. member for Assiniboia. I hope he will not call the payments "peanuts" again.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX "A"

CANADA-U.K.—COMMUNIQUE ON EUROPEAN TRADE DEVELOPMENTS

Ottawa, January 4, 1962

Canadian ministers and Mr. Edward Heath, Lord Privy Seal in the British government, have concluded two days of useful and constructive talks concerning European trading developments. The Canadian ministers taking part in the meeting were Hon. Donald M. Fleming, Minister of Finance, chairman, Hon. Howard Green, Secretary of State for External Affairs, Hon. George Hees, Minister of Trade and Commerce, Hon. Alvin Hamilton, Minister of Agriculture.

During the discussions Mr. Heath informed Canadian ministers of current developments in Britain's negotiations with the European economic community. He stressed the efforts being made by the United Kingdom to safeguard the essential trade interests of Canada and other commonwealth countries. Canadian ministers welcomed his statement and emphasized the extent and importance of Canadian interests in the British market. They indicated that they would provide the British government with complete information on all aspects of Canadian trade interests relevant to the negotiations in Brussels. The ministers reaffirmed that full consultation and co-operation would be maintained between the two governments throughout the negotiations in Brussels and that the means to this end would be adapted as circumstances might require.

There was complete agreement on the great value of commonwealth trade links and the need to maintain them. It was also agreed that when the talks with the European economic community are further advanced it may be desirable to examine what additional arrangements for consultation with commonwealth countries are necessary.

Mr. Heath and the Canadian ministers noted the conclusions of the recent meeting of trade ministers arranged by the GATT in Geneva concerning future tariff negotiations, trade in agricultural products, and obstacles to the trade of the less developed countries. They welcomed the recent reaffirmation by the ministerial council of the organization for economic co-operation and development of the objective of expanding world trade on a multilateral non-discriminatory basis. They stressed the importance they attach to further progress in the reduction of tariffs and other barriers to world trade.

SEVENTH MEETING OF JOINT CANADA-UNITED STATES COMMITTEE ON TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

The seventh meeting of the joint Canada-United States committee on trade and economic affairs was held in Ottawa, January 12 and 13, 1962, under the chairmanship of Hon. Donald M. Fleming, Minister of Finance.

2. The United States was represented at the meeting by Hon. C. Douglas Dillon, Secretary of the Treasury; Hon. Stewart Udall, Secretary of the Interior; Hon. Orville L. Freeman, Secretary of Agriculture; Hon. Luther H. Hodges, Secretary of Commerce; and Hon. George W. Ball, undersecretary of state. The United States delegation also included Mr. Livingston T. Merchant, United States ambassador to Canada.

3. Canada was represented by Hon. Howard Green, Secretary of State for External Affairs; Hon. Donald M. Fleming, Minister of Finance; Hon. George Hees, Minister of Trade and Commerce; and Hon. Alvin Hamilton, Minister of Agriculture. The Canadian delegation included the Canadian ambassador to the United States, Mr. A. D. P. Heeney.

4. The committee noted the improvement in the level of economic activity in both countries since the previous meeting in Washington in March, 1961. They agreed on the importance of achieving sustained economic growth in accordance with the resolution adopted at the first ministerial meeting of the OECD on November 17. Measures for the expansion of world trade would be essential to the achievement of these aims.

5. Canadian ministers reiterated their support for the expansion of world trade on a multilateral, non-discriminatory basis, and Canada's readiness to play a constructive role in the promotion of freer world trade. United States members welcomed this statement and pointed out that the United States had consistently supported these objectives for many years. The committee recognized the importance of the recent decision at the GATT ministerial meeting to explore new arrangements for the multilateral reduction of trade barriers and for moving toward freer trade. The United States members emphasized that the new trade legislation being sought at this session of congress is intended to contribute substantially to this objective.

6. The United States members explained the general nature and purposes of the trade expansion program which the United States administration will be submitting to congress, which, if approved, would enable the United States to make a greater contribution to the growth of international trade on a multilateral basis, and in this way contribute substantially to the strength and prosperity of the free world.

7. The committee examined the problems inhibiting international trade in agricultural commodities and underlined the importance of securing international agreement on measures which would provide adequate access to world markets for agricultural producers. They agreed that such measures should take full account of the comparative advantage of production in agricultural commodities among different countries. United States and Canadian ministers expressed the hope that coming international discussions would effectively contribute to the freeing and expansion of international trade in agricultural products.

8. The committee noted the current negotiations between Britain and the European economic community and the widespread consequences which British entry into the E.E.C. would have for the rest of the world. The committee recognized the great importance of the commonwealth as a unique association of free nations bridging five continents and the constructive contribution which it was making to world peace and stability.

9. Canadian ministers emphasized that the commonwealth trade links, including the exchange of preferences and the historic right of free entry into the United Kingdom market, were an essential cohesive element in the commonwealth association. They stressed the importance the Canadian government attached to Britain's efforts in their negotiations with the E.E.C. to safeguard the trade interests of Canada and other commonwealth countries.

10. The committee recalled the constructive conclusions reached at the recent ministerial meeting of the GATT concerning the trade of the less developed countries. They reaffirmed that it was the continuing policy of both countries to assist the efforts of those countries to expand their trade and improve their standards of living.

11. The committee recognized that direct exchanges of views at the cabinet level are useful in helping to maintain soundly based and effective economic co-operation between Canada and the United States. Such understanding and co-operation will be all the more necessary in the years ahead if each country is to play its part in a changing world with a full recognition of the essential interests and aspirations of the other.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, January 25, 1962

The house met at 11 a.m.

CURRENCY, MINT AND EXCHANGE FUND ACT

AUTHORIZATION TO PURCHASE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND SECURITIES

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act to authorize the Minister of Finance to purchase, out of the exchange fund account maintained under the act, securities of the international monetary fund.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING OF JOINT U.S.-CANADA COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to ask the Minister of National Defence whether, as reported in a press article, the Canada-U.S. joint defence committee has not met since July, 1960?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): I cannot offhand recall the exact dates, Mr. Speaker, but I think it was somewhere in that area.

REPORTED AGREEMENT TO INTEGRATE NUCLEAR TEST AND DISARMAMENT DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I wish to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he has any comment to make on the recent statement of the British prime minister as to the attitude of the United Kingdom in its negotiations with the United States, agreeing with the Soviet union that the nuclear test discussions should be integrated with the general discussions on disarmament?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I would not care to comment on the statement by the British prime minister but, during the recent session of the United Nations, either General Burns or I suggested it might be worth while to have that particular part of the disarmament subject dealt with in the general committee. In any event, we had no particular objection to it, so that is the course which has now been proposed by the west.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SINCLAIR REPORT—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING LICENCE LIMITATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and ask whether it is his intention to introduce any legislation this session based upon the recommendations of Dr. Sinclair with respect to licence limitations?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): No decision has been reached in this regard, but it would seem unlikely. This would depend on the length of the session.

Mr. Howard: As a supplementary question, would the minister care to comment upon a Canadian Press dispatch relating to the minister's visit to the west coast last year, in which dispatch the minister is quoted as saying he is opposed to licence limitations.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member seems to me to be seeking an expression of opinion rather than information in asking about something said by the minister a year ago. Furthermore, the urgency that is usually required of oral questions seems to be lacking, as there was ample opportunity since then to ask that question.

AIRPORTS

SYDNEY, N.S.—INQUIRY AS TO IMPROVEMENT OF TERMINAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the alleged unsafe condition of the air terminal at Sydney, Nova Scotia, would the minister please advise the house if there are any immediate plans to improve conditions there?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): The airport at Sydney is in no way unsafe. I have had some representations from the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) relating to various improvements which could be undertaken at the airport, and these representations are being investigated by my department at the present time.

(Translation):

SHIPPING

COASTAL TRADE—INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER DISCUSSIONS WITH U.K.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) a question. Could he give us a progress report on negotiations between the Canadian government and the British government with regard to some announcements he made in this house during the last session concerning some restrictions on inland or coastal traffic, which was to be limited to vessels sailing under the Canadian flag?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce to the house that the United Kingdom government, as was provided in the treaty, has agreed to serve as go-between with the other signatories so as to inform them of the Canadian government's intentions and ask for their approval of this government's decision.

I am happy to report that up to now Australia, Ceylon, Malaya and Sierra Leone gave their agreement to that decision. New Zealand and Ghana have unofficially indicated that they were about to transmit their agreement. We still have to hear from Nigeria, Cyprus and the Irish Republic, but we are expecting an answer very soon.

Mr. Chevrier: Is the minister able to tell us when the new regulations will be enacted?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, as I said during the last session, for the government's intentions to take effect legislation will have to be introduced during the current session. As soon as the last signatory of the treaty will send us his approval, the appropriate bill will be submitted to the house.

(Text):

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO EMPTY ELEVATOR SPACE AT LAKEHEAD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I wish to direct to the spokesman for the Minister of Agriculture a question prompted by concern among the laid-off elevator workers at the lakehead over the fact that there are in lakehead elevators this year 18 million fewer bushels of wheat than there were last year. Can the minister give an explanation for this situation or can he give any assurance that this empty space will be filled before the shipping season opens?

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): I find it rather difficult to answer this question offhand, Mr. Speaker, but I will make inquiries from the department and have an answer for the hon. member tomorrow.

POWER

STATEMENT ON ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL GRID

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) asked me what steps have been taken to promote interest on the part of provincial governments in the development of a proposed national power grid. I stated my recollection was that a letter had been sent to the premiers of the various provinces.

In that letter I pointed out that there are substantial advantages for the nation as a whole that could be achieved in the development and use of electric energy if approached on a regional and national basis and that the establishment of long distance transmission facilities between provinces, and ultimately between the different regions of Canada, would make possible the development of hydro electric sources in remote locations that would otherwise be deferred for many years or not developed at all.

I expressed the belief that interprovincial connections and arrangements would make possible substantial economies in reserves and in capital requirements, and would be of benefit to industry and to consumers generally.

I further pointed out that the government of Canada, owing to the nature of the problem, would be glad to assist in its study and solution. It affects the nation as a whole as well as each of the provinces and the relations between provinces. To that end, in view of these circumstances, I expressed the view that a conference should be convened where the provincial ministers primarily involved, accompanied by their technical officers and power advisers, could discuss with federal ministers the basic problems associated with the development and transmission of electric power within Canada. I expressed the hope that such a meeting, if agreed to, could be convened at Ottawa at an early date. I have asked the views of the provincial premiers and when their response is received, the house will be advised further.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Wednesday, January 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rodrigue Bourdages for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Pearson.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, it is a great compliment to a backbencher to be interrupted by experienced members of the house. I had this privilege yesterday, as recorded on page 170 of Hansard, when the house leader of the New Democratic party made one of his negative remarks. I was not surprised because we have never had anything but negative remarks from that corner of the house or from those who sit to their left. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) suggests that we can get rid of all our problems by merely getting rid of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and his government. I suggest that is not our problem but rather, as the present government has done, we must do more to get rid of surpluses as we have done with our surplus wheat.

Our Liberal friends are also negative. They appear to agree entirely with such criticism. They offer nothing but negative criticism. The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) said that it is treason to sell wheat to red China.

Mr. Carter: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I did not say that at all. I said that in time of war it is treason to sell to an enemy.

Mr. Bigg: I believe you have confirmed what I have said. Getting rid of our surplus grain when there is a surplus is something very close to our hearts in western Canada. It is not only important to western farmers but it is important to the whole economy of our country to keep our ships busy, our railroads busy, the dock workers in Vancouver busy and to reduce storage costs. We have been accused of gambling with the Canadian taxpayers' money. I would venture to say that the money we save on storage of this grain alone will make up for any possible loss on delivering the grain to China.

But enough about grain. I think the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and the leader of the left-wing party should concentrate on getting rid of other things than the Prime Minister and the present government. I should like to see them help us get rid of the idea that Canada owes us a living. We owe Canada a great loyalty, the loyalty of labour. I should like to suggest that the time is now ripe when the federal government should take some steps to establish a labour code for Canada. We do not want to dictate to labour but it seems necessary that by adding to the bill of rights or by means of some other federal statute we give support to the workers of Canada, the man who wants to work. I suggest five points that might be covered in such a labour code. I think we should guarantee workers the secret ballot. Democracy is a farce without the secret ballot. I think we should regain control of our unions by seeing that the headquarters of all unions are in Canada and that any recognition of international unions is no more than, shall I say, a spiritual one. The real control of unions should be within Canada. Their headquarters should be here and the dues should be paid here. No man in Canada should have to pay dues to a union, whether or not he belongs to it, except as a matter of choice. Having paid those dues, he should have the right to have the books audited, the same as any other organization.

I think we should eliminate the criminal element in our unions in Canada by barring persons from holding office or by saying we will not deal with men who have a criminal record within the past five years covering certain crimes such as violence to the person, sedition and riot. I am not going into the specific details, but the working people of Canada know this is essential. I should like to see the time come when we would step out in front and give the working people this basic freedom to elect their own officers and make sure they have the right kind of officers.

Then, too, I feel before a union has the right to call workers out on strike there should be a secret ballot taken. If they do go on strike then, from time to time during that strike, another ballot should be held to ascertain whether or not the workers are willing to subject their families and themselves to the economic strains of remaining out on strike beyond a reasonable length of time. I think this can be done. The constitutional angles can be worked out, and we should go on record as saying that we will give the working men of Canada the same fundamental rights which we preserve for every other segment of our community.

There are other things which are required, when we look to the future. Transportation across Canada will remain one of our major problems. When a second trans-Canada highway is built—I know it will be built and you know it will be built—I believe we should take a good look at it to make sure it is built well to the north of the present one. We look to the orderly development of the north, and if this highway is to be effective and add to our tourist income and the orderly development of the resources of our country, I am convinced that, especially going across the prairies, it should be to the north of the North Saskatchewan river. No one who is travelling across Canada as a tourist will go across the dry prairies twice in one summer. They will cross from Winnipeg to Calgary, but on the return trip they will take advantage of our incomparable parkland which lies in the northern part of the three prairie provinces.

Our roads to resources program is something of which we can be very proud. This again will have to be expanded. One of the most important parts of our roads to resources program will be to make sure that these roads link us up in an orderly manner with the north. Wood Buffalo park, which is one of the largest parks in Canada, is in the northern end of my constituency and has a rich mineral potential. I should like to see some amendments made to the National Parks Act, particularly with reference to Wood Buffalo park, to open it up for prospecting. The objection has been made that this action might interfere with our large buffalo herds, but the buffalo herds are nowhere near the prospecting area in this park. I am very keen to see a new look taken at this particular park in order to insure that the people of Canada are not deprived of the mineral resources and the prospecting possibilities which lie in that part of our country.

As I said before, Athabasca is largely agricultural.

We are proud of the record of our Department of Agriculture during the past four years. Of course there will always be problems in agriculture. One which I think is very important is the question of the grading of pork. It is some years since I have seen first-grade bacon on sale in Canadian stores. I have challenged the packing plants to produce first-grade bacon for sale in Canada. They sell it abroad; they sell it to the luxury trade, but we cannot get it in the ordinary stores across our country. I think the reason for this is that we do not grade our pork in the same way that we grade beef. If we did it would take the profit out of buying C-grade pigs and selling them as A-grade pork products.

This government changed the policy of paying premiums to the Canadian farmer for raising grade A and grade B hogs. Last year alone this change encouraged the farmers of Canada to raise their standards of hog production. In the province of Alberta alone we had approximately 27 per cent grade A hogs instead of 21 per cent, an increase of 6 per cent in one year. I say again that pork should be graded in order to encourage the farmer to raise a higher standard of hog, and there is no limit—at present, anyway—to the sale of our first-grade products. Incidentally, if we embark, as we have in connection with other products, on price supports I think it is only common sense to say that the Canadian consumer should also have the advantage of eating first-grade pork products.

Getting rid of this government is no answer to our problem in regard to unemployment. Our problem is to make sure that every boy, girl, man, woman and child in Canada wishing to earn a living is trained for that purpose. Our educational program all across Canada has up to the present time been inadequate for producing enough skilled workers for the pioneer country. I am glad to see that this government is taking and has taken solid steps toward providing trades training for everybody willing to take this training.

Our physical fitness program is an important part of this trades training program, because a man cannot work in an active trade unless he is physically fit. If we are physically fit and have most of our people trained for trades, then we need leaders in our country. This is where university training comes in. With an adequate system of university training across our country those who have the native ability will be able to take their places out in front. With increased grants to universities I am sure the youth of Canada will take advantage of this program and will keep on supplying the leadership which we need.

We have been accused by both opposition parties of having no defence program. These are strange words from people who are either isolationist or pacifist. The Conservative party has never been either of these things. We are proud of our record in international affairs and we are proud of the stand we have taken on home affairs. We have decided to be strong at home and generous abroad. In order to be strong at home it is necessary for us to play our part in the defence of our country, the defence of this hemisphere, the defence of the west and, perhaps most important of all, the defence of man's dignity and freedom everywhere.

The opposition parties say we have no policy, because to some of them being strong at home does not sound like being generous abroad. But you cannot be generous abroad unless you are strong at home. Unless we have a free country here, not only free now but free forever, it is impossible for us to pull our weight in the world or in the councils of the world.

Canada is certainly not respected abroad solely because we are rich. The underprivileged countries of the world do not love us for being rich; they love us for being generous. Our contribution of $50 million a year to the Colombo plan alone is admired by the nations of the earth. No country pays more that Canada to look after their fellowmen.

We know where we are going in this party. We believe in it. We also believe in being strong at home. We believe in keeping our armed forces adequately prepared for any eventuality. We believe in providing them with the finest equipment, whether for use in the air, on the land or on the sea. We believe in supplying them with equipment we can afford. If we can produce an aeroplane which is adequate, or very nearly adequate, for $1½ million in comparison with aeroplanes which might cost $7 million or $8 million apiece, we are going to produce the cheaper aeroplane. We will produce them in Canada with Canadian labour. This sounds like solid, sound policy to me.

I will always vote for anything approaching or sounding like national service. I do not mean compulsory national service. I should like to see the time come when every young man and young woman in Canada is ready, willing and able to serve his or her country at any time they are called upon to do so. My own life has been one of service to my country and it has been a very happy and, I hope, fruitful one. I have been in the service of Canada for some 27 years and I cannot exaggerate the challenge and satisfaction which comes from belonging to one of our great services.

Members of the House of Commons, I take great pleasure in reviewing at this time the record of this government, and I can only say that if we go on expanding the program which we have started so well, I am sure Canada will never regret 1957 and 1958, and that we will be asked to carry on in 1962.

(Translation):

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to associate myself with those previous speakers who have congratulated on their promotion some of our colleagues to your right, and I refer in particular to the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) and the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn).

As for the others, the forgotten ones, those who had ambitions but who had to remain inconspicuous, I sympathize with them, more especially as it seems quite obvious today, on the eve of an election, that they have missed the boat for a one-way trip.

Mr. Speaker, the present government has been charged with lack of leadership. I rather think that will be the characteristic of the Conservative administration, whose term of office is about to expire, and especially its inability to take a stand squarely and firmly and to propose solutions to the problems we are now facing in Canada, when those problems first came up.

In such a context, the speech from the throne did not disappoint us. In fact, it does not indicate at all in what way the government intends to make up the astronomical deficit of nearly a billion dollars which we are going to show. Nor does it mention how the government intends to readjust our economy in terms of the common market. In short, apart from the winter works program which we have often denounced as inadequate, the speech from the throne does not mention anything, not a single long term or short term measure capable of putting to work a substantial proportion of our unemployed.

The speech from the throne does not say a thing about the government's position in the field of nuclear weapons. The silence of the speech from the throne on the matter of nuclear weapons is ample proof that we were justified in the criticism we levelled against this government last year when we said that it had no defence policy.

Furthermore, the speech from the throne does not propose any concrete measure to promote national unity at a time when confederation is subject to a large-scale assault.

Last Monday, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), in a speech which can be considered as extraordinary, and which has been commented on in the press all over the country, expressed not only the deception but the discontent both of the opposition and of a majority of Canadian citizens, because we are in this rather extraordinary position where about 50 Liberal members of the opposition are now able to speak on behalf of the majority of Canadian voters, as is shown by the latest Gallup polls conceding to the Liberal party a much more considerable proportion of the votes than to the Conservative government, which does not represent anything any more, although it is still in power.

Mr. Speaker, issues are not lacking today, but I shall limit my remarks to only two of them. First, unemployment, and then national unity.

I want to raise the question of unemployment because I represent a constituency mostly made up of industrial workers and also because the unpopularity of the government is mostly the result of its inaction concerning that question of national importance. But before coming to that point, I should like to go back a little so that there is no misunderstanding, and quote figures which were given in a speech by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) when, on March 2, 1960, he quoted the official figures supplied by the dominion bureau of statistics for the period 1946-56 concerning unemployment during that 10-year span of Liberal administration. And I do not hesitate to quote these figures since they were then given in the presence of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) who asked one or two questions, but did not dare question those figures.

Well, the hon. member for Laurier established and proved that the annual percentage of unemployed in Canada, in comparison with the labour force, from 1946 to 1956, was never any higher than 2.8 per cent. You will recall that according to experts, you have full employment when unemployment is only 3 per cent of the labour force. Those figures are indisputable. Therefore it is a fact that for the 1946-56 period, in terms of average annual percentage, there was full employment in Canada, and that was under a Liberal administration.

And that was the situation when the Conservative government took over the affairs of this country. Since then, everyone knows that unemployment has reached astronomical proportions which compare easily with the figures for the 1930-35 period. Astonishingly enough, the government has always been helpless and unable to find at least a partial solution to the problem, despite considerable administrative deficits which now amount to $2 billion.

Mr. Ricard: You are talking about the Lesage government.

Mr. Deschatelets: And I would say that none of those deficits included expenditures directly intended to solve the unemployment problem. There is no direct expenditure meant to solve this problem with the exception, of course, of the amounts spent for winter works. And even now seasonal unemployment is mentioned. Referring to the speech from the throne, I find at page 2 of Hansard for January 18, the following sentence:

> —notable progress has been made in meeting the problem of seasonal unemployment.

I am very anxious to hear at election time the Conservative members, especially in urban constituencies, tell the Canadian workers that we have had seasonal unemployment from 1958 until today.

Mr. Pigeon: Let Mr. Lesage take—

Mr. Deschatelets: At this time, it is the first problem—

Mr. Pigeon: Let Mr. Lesage take his responsibilities.

Mr. Deschatelets: If my hon. friend has any question to ask, he will have every opportunity of doing so a little later, but I wish to say this. My hon. friend has already taken part in the debate on the speech from the throne and he was wise enough not to mention the unemployment question.

Mr. Speaker, after reading that sentence in the speech from the throne, I say that even now the government is still trying to deceive the country, to minimize a problem which has lost nothing of its seriousness, and I will prove it with figures, one of which was given to me by the Minister of Labour himself. To make my task a little more difficult, I shall use only the statistics for last November 30.

Through sampling, the dominion bureau of statistics established that on November 30 there were 349,000 unemployed in this country. This figure represents about 5½ per cent of the labour force. It is already high for that month of the year. I mentioned earlier that I represent a labour riding, that I am familiar with the situation and that I do not admit that the figure of 349,000 tells the true story.

I contacted the Minister of Labour and asked him to give me the number of unemployed receiving unemployment insurance benefits as of November 30. The letter I got from the minister shows that, as of November 30, 385,964 unemployed were receiving unemployment insurance benefits. There was, therefore, 36,900 unemployed receiving unemployment benefits over and above the figure given by the dominion bureau of statistics.

Therefore, I say that if approximately 386,000 unemployed were drawing unemployment insurance benefits in November, those people had met several requirements provided under the law: they had worked, they had lost their job for reasons beyond their control; in short, they were eligible for unemployment insurance benefits.

If there were 386,000 unemployed on November 30, I should like to know how many there were then who were not entitled to unemployment insurance benefits for various reasons. That figure has never been disclosed.

I said earlier that the government, by means of a subtle policy, attempted to minimize the importance of this problem, to conceal its actual acuteness.

It will be recalled that for the past year or year and a half, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) has not given us every month the statistics released by the national employment service whereas, under the previous government, we were provided with all available data and their interpretation was left to each individual.

I made enquiries with unemployment insurance experts. Last year, I stated that with the help of experts, I was ready to place that evidence at any time before the industrial relations committee which has not sat for the last four years. Indeed, it is the only committee of the house which has not convened except for the setting up of the committee at the beginning. That committee would have been best suited to deal with Canada's most important domestic problems.

To sum up, on November 30 we had 386,000 unemployed who received benefits, that is genuine unemployed. In addition to that, the number of unemployed who received no benefits, because they had been unable to prove that they were entitled to them, is estimated at 128,666. So as a grand total we had the impressive figure of 514,666 unemployed in Canada last November 30.

Mr. Speaker, if to that already huge total for the month of November you add the wives and children of those unemployed, that is the Canadian citizens who suffer from that evil, you reach a figure that surely indicates the national significance of that problem.

Let no one ever tell you that the Prime Minister and the Conservative government have kept their promises, at least the most important promises that were made to the Canadian people.

As I said a moment ago, I challenge the Prime Minister to go in any urban riding in Canada today and claim that he fulfilled his commitments as far as unemployment is concerned. And he had made the firm commitment that "No one shall suffer", and this statement will constitute a backfiring slogan in the forthcoming election.

Let us examine the defence offered by the government since last year to the charge that they showed nothing but inertia in the solution of the most important domestic problem we face. I followed and I read again with amusement the claims of the Secretary of State (Mr. Noel Dorion), the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pierre Sevigny), who for a year and a half have been campaigning up hill and down dale instead of staying in their office and looking after the affairs and the problems of their departments. They made comments about unemployment which were utterly irresponsible. And I am going to try refuting them.

The Secretary of State and the Associate Minister of National Defence made the following statements:

1. The present unemployment situation (they said this at practically all the meetings where they spoke) must be blamed on the former government.
2. It is the result of unforeseen and unforeseeable circumstances.

Let us look into the first reason advanced, i.e. that "the former government must be blamed."

Earlier today, I quoted indisputable figures to the effect that, in the decade from 1946 to 1956 the average annual unemployment did not exceed 2.8 per cent of the total labour force. This is based on irrefutable figures. Moreover, I shall advance this argument, which is also unassailable. When we left office in 1957, we had an amount of $926 million in the unemployment insurance fund. Now, if there had been massive unemployment under our administration, why was such a large amount left in the fund?

As to the second reason alleged, it is slightly more subtle: "The unforeseeable and unforeseen circumstances which the government had to face."

I should like to turn against the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), as a boomerang, a feat that he likes to recall, namely the reading in January 1958 of the report on Canada's economic prospects. This is a fact that should be emphasized today, after the government has been four years in office, because when the Prime Minister read to the house in January 1958 a report on economic prospects, he could at that time attempt to throw confusion just before a general election. All the same when he read that document, he acknowledged publicly that clouds were piling up on the horizon. Today, four years later, his ministers cannot plead ignorance.

I apologize for taking up so much time on this academic discussion, Mr. Speaker, because there is only one thing that matters and it is that the present government was elected on definite promises, and got the support of 208 members of parliament. When it came into office, it received a rich inheritance. There were $926 million in the unemployment insurance fund.

Mr. Ricard: Unemployment was then on the rise.

Mr. Deschatelets: We had reduced the debt by more than $2 billion following numerous surpluses. As early as 1958, there was nothing to stop the present government from taking energetic steps, as was its duty, to face existing problems.

I submit that if, way back in 1958, the government had followed the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition—nobody can refute that—and substantially reduced taxes instead of increasing long term expenditures, we would not be in the tight spot in which we find ourselves today.

I cannot blame the government for trying to delay the general elections. How could a Conservative member justify before his electors the inertia of his government after the four years it has been in power?

In the speech he made to move the adoption of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, the member for Laval (Mr. Bourdages) stressed the importance of national unity. That is the second point I wish to deal with. That is a very important question especially in present conditions. But if we want to obtain tangible results, the first requirement whenever we speak of national unity is to speak with conviction.

It is essential that a political party preaching national unity at least be a party representative of national unity. Mr. Speaker, in 1958, during the first session, I said that the Conservative party was not representative of national unity, but a party where could be found reactionary and opposing tendencies. Subsequent developments proved that I was right. We all remember that last fall, as he does even now, the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) denounced confederation; does this not prove that I am right?

If we examine certain speeches made in this house during the Suez crisis in December, 1956, for instance, the speech made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) and by Conservative members then sitting in the first row, we find that the contentions and ideas of the hon. member for Roberval on national unity are completely opposed to those of the leader of his party.

Therefore, how can a political party, comprising such diverse elements now preach on national unity, especially when one of the Conservative leaders, a few years ago—and I am talking here of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill)—claimed that the support of the province of Quebec was not needed to get a Conservative government elected?

I hope the Prime Minister will remember that most of the Conservative members in Quebec were elected with the full support of the Union Nationale, and I find most extraordinary the efforts of the Secretary of State, for instance, who tries to deny something that is common knowledge and that he, himself, should be the first to admit.

I have also here a letter addressed by the member for Gaspe (Mr. English) to the Hon. Mr. Duplessis after his election, and in which he thanks the premier for the work done by the Quebec liquor board police.

Mr. Speaker, we have witnessed in this House of Commons the consequences of that situation no later than last year—

Mr. Roland English (Gaspe): Mr. Speaker, I would like—

Mr. Deschatelets: Is the member rising on a point of order?

Mr. English: Mr. Speaker, I should like the hon. member to read into Hansard the contents of the letter he has just referred to. I have no intention of defending the Hon. Mr. Duplessis, but I have always been one of his good friends and it seems to me that I can be proud to say so in this house. However, I should like to acquaint myself with the letter which the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) has just referred to.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I am willing to read this letter for I have it right before me. However, I would not like the time taken for this to be counted in the limited speaking time at my disposal. I will gladly read the letter if I am given a little extra time.

Mr. Pigeon: You have already wasted 15 minutes.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont has just referred to a letter and he knows very well that he is not entitled to do so unless he produces such letter or reads the full contents of it. Otherwise, that would be the equivalent of innuendos—

Mr. Pigeon: He is an expert on the matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt an interesting debate but I must inform the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont that his time is up.

Mr. Pigeon: You will be more serious next time.

Mr. Caron: The press is always wrong.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Deputy Speaker, first of all I should like to tell the house how glad I am to see that our distinguished Speaker (Mr. Michener) is still presiding over the proceedings of this house.

I should like also to take this opportunity to congratulate you very sincerely on your appointment as Deputy Speaker of the house.

May I also extend my most sincere congratulations to the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, Messrs. Bourdages and Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway), as well as to my great friend the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn), our new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

I also extend my heartfelt congratulations to my colleague from St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) on his appointment as parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister should have appointed you also.

(Text):

Mr. Grafftey: I have hardly got under way, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) is interrupting me. We meet today in a very different House of Commons from that in which members met a number of years ago. Why? Because the members who support the present government are active members of parliament who travel to every corner of this country to keep in touch with the people. We meet in a different House of Commons today because the people of Canada are more interested in what is going on here than they have ever been before.

Why are the people of Canada more interested? Simply because as a result of the actions taken by the government the House of Commons in which we meet today has at last been restored to its proper role in the public affairs of this country. In comparison with days gone by, I ask hon. members to look at our attitude as displayed in the speech from the throne with regard to redistribution, closure and all those things that make this House of Commons a more central and active body in our public affairs. That is the reason. It is something that is hard to pinpoint but I ask everybody to stop, think and compare the role that the House of Commons is playing in our national affairs today with that played seven or eight years ago. I repeat that the people of Canada are interested in what is going on here because the doors of the cabinet are open. Members of parliament are working and by a sincere approach to parliamentary rights this institution has been restored to its proper place in Canadian public affairs.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, we must remain as it is, because the Progressive Conservative party, under the leadership of our eminent Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), will always keep in touch with the Canadian people. I repeat, we shall always keep in touch with the Canadian people. In fact, during both periods after the last two sessions, each member toured his constituency. So I repeat that we are the party of the people; the voice of the people will always remain our strength.

(Text):

I will not be so presumptuous, Mr. Speaker, as to lecture the opposition today. I could not do so and I would not. I also agree very often with what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) says, that they are not responsible for policy and sometimes I thank God that this is so. It is the government that is responsible for policy. I also realize that the word "bipartisanship" is often very loosely used. Perhaps we bandy it about too loosely. For my own part, nobody likes more than I do a purely political combat both within the House of Commons and outside the house when there is a sincere difference of opinion on the administration of public policy.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You are too tough for your opponents.

Mr. Grafftey: I am sure the hon. member for Essex East, like myself, has a sincere love for good, honest, clean, political warfare when there is a sincere difference of opinion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I say you are too tough.

Mr. Grafftey: But I want to put one thought before the House of Commons today. What has the party of divide and rule been doing lately? I have always said and I say again that there are two fields with regard to which the major parties in the house should have a basic, united approach. One relates to our prestige abroad; the other relates to national unity at home. As a young man, before I came into the house of Commons I said to my friends and also publicly that I would never use national unity or our prestige abroad as political weapons. But what has the Leader of the Opposition been doing lately? What has he been doing lately in the province of Quebec? He is against joint federal-provincial programs in that province, but outside of the province of Quebec he is in favour of them.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Quote him.

Mr. Grafftey: I do not have to quote him. I just have to ask hon. members to look at the speech he made in Amherst, Nova Scotia, and his other speeches outside the province of Quebec. Has he ever made such speeches in the province of Quebec? No, because he is still a captive of the old divide and rule boys.

(Translation):

We advocate the same policy for all Canadians throughout this vast country, Mr. Speaker. I am not "Martin" in the province of Quebec and "Martin" in the province of Ontario: I may say in all sincerity that I am Grafftey in every Canadian province.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This was also the statement of your former chief, Mr. Duplessis.

Mr. Grafftey: I would not say that the party of Cartier and Macdonald is the only party of national unity, but I do say that we have sincerely and actively supported the true spirit of national unity, every single day, every single week and every single year. I reiterate that we advocate the same policy for each part of this country.

(Text):

The other subject is our prestige abroad. I understand that the subject of Suez was brought up in speeches a few days ago. A few years ago there was an honest and sincere difference of opinion on the subject of Suez between the two major parties in the House of Commons, but I should like to put this thought before the house. On major matters involving international affairs the then secretary of state for external affairs at all times received nothing but bipartisan support from all members of the present government and Conservatives generally from one end of the country to the other. We united, put country before party at all times, and never washed our dirty linen outside of the Canadian family circle.

One who has read Canadian history with any degree of care must admit that after confederation in 1867 we really did not have too many basic and fundamental problems abroad. I think that is perhaps quite true of many young countries not long joined together by confederation or which have recently achieved nationhood. To put it briefly, we did not have too many axes to grind abroad. Today, however, there is a different picture. Canada is playing a greater and greater role in world affairs. For example, there are the problems with respect to the common market. We also are aware of the position the opposition has taken when we have had these problems abroad.

I say to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and to all members of his party, that as Canada is becoming a more adult nation in the family of nations on the world scene, it will not be helpful to our prestige abroad if every time we are faced with a problem, before a practical solution is even suggested—oh, I admit again we are responsible for the solution of these problems—they say, "Oh, we are losing prestige abroad. Is it not a terrible thing?" I suggest that by sowing these seeds abroad the Liberal party, under their present leader, are doing that which we never did during the war and post-war years.

In Brome-Missisquoi, from where I come, the two historical ethnic groups that formed Canada in confederation live side by side in greatest harmony. I am going to be very frank with all hon. members. We all know, we can talk about it openly right here today, that the question of separatism is being discussed quite widely within the province of Quebec. It is being discussed here, it is being discussed there. It is being discussed on television, on public platforms, just as it has in years gone by. The very minute the subject was brought up, what happened? We heard the same old story. The divide and rule boys rushed into the province of Quebec and said, "Oh, national unity was never at a lower ebb." Again, they are putting party before country. I sincerely hoped, Mr. Speaker, that this was the sort of subject I would never have to touch upon when, as a young man, I was elected as a member of parliament to this House of Commons. However, such action on my part has been made necessary by the course that the Leader of the Opposition has taken in directing the activities of his party.

We have heard the expression "national unity" bandied about by many members of the opposition. The party of Macdonald and Cartier, the party now directed by the Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker has, in this modern day and age, done more for national unity in the last four or five years than any party before it. I say definitely that the provinces—I do not like to use the expression because it sounds almost as if one were doing the provinces a favour—have never received better treatment. However, I will say this, that the attitudes of this government have caused better dominion-provincial relations than ever before. I think it would be right to say that if one chose to look at a few statistics in the Department of Finance he would see that the provinces have received better treatment from this government than from any government before. Realizing that the municipalities have great problems by our winter works program and by our legislation in relation to housing we have done more than any preceding government to put the municipalities of this nation on a sound basis.

With this in view, sir, I should like to suggest for the consideration of the government the establishment of an agency of government which might be known as an agency of provincial-municipal affairs. It has been suggested that we might have a permanent secretariat for the continuing dominion-provincial conferences. Also, it might be wise to have the same central agency for so many of the joint dominion-provincial programs which need so much assistance and co-operation. We see also many taxation and housing problems facing the municipalities. We see from the federal government the municipal winter works incentive program. It is with this in mind that I have suggested at the present time the advisability of establishing an agency of provincial-municipal affairs. I noticed that in the United States the president has tried to pilot through congress approval of the nomination of a secretary of urban affairs. It is not just because of that, however, that I make this proposal for the government's attention. I do suggest that, in the Canadian scene, what I have said merits some consideration.

Many people have said, Mr. Speaker, that the next election will be fought on the basis of free enterprise versus public ownership or pure socialism. Reference was made to this by our leader, and by the leaders of other parties as well as many others outside parliament. Well, this is certainly going to be one of the major issues in the next election campaign. On this subject I do not even pretend to speak for my party or my government, but for a few brief moments I should like to touch on this very important topic. Today, sir, the choice is not one between free enterprise and state ownership; it is a question of degree. How much state ownership should there be and how much free enterprise?

Before getting into my very brief discussion of this point which divides the major parties of this house, I should like to make a few general remarks. I think we will all admit that before the turn of the century, and before the rise of trade unions, old time free enterprise displayed many irresponsible attributes. In the old world, and I think a lot of us are very sorry when we think of this, there was much bitter cleavage between the owners and the workers, the haves and the have nots. It is my firm impression that, for good or for bad, it was in this bitter atmosphere that old world socialism was born. I firmly believe today that the New Democratic party and the Liberals are attempting to apply old world doctrines of the past to new world realities. They are adhering to outmoded conventions in the new world where there is no class bitterness, even though I would be the first to admit we have much progress to make in pushing back the frontiers of want.

Then, I am sure the members of the opposition are going to ask me what the members of our party stand for? For many years we have said that where, in the national interest, an economic activity is desirable and private enterprise cannot or will not initiate it, then the government can and should provide the necessary stimulus for the initiation of that activity. This is one of the principles to which we have always adhered. But we believe that in many cases individual Canadians know what is best for them. You cannot legislate to change the hearts of men. Unlike the Liberals or the New Democratic party, we do not possess the arrogance to believe we can always tell the individual what is best for him or her.

These are the basic differences of degree which I think should be made clear, because that is what is in the hearts of those of us who believe in this development of the free enterprise system. We believe where there is government there must be planning. Those who oppose us in the House of Commons appear to think we are for a hodge-podge of non-planning.

That which divides us from hon. members opposite is simply this: we do not believe you should have planning and government in as many places as they would like to have them. We plan and we govern where necessary. I believe that the Liberals and the New Democratic party would like to plan and govern for the sake of planning and governing.

We believe that government is of the people. Their attitude to the whole business of socialism versus free enterprise, in degree, is based on the fact that they have become detached from the realities of 20th century life. I think they have become detached from the people, in fact.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. Grafftey: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does my hon. friend agree with the view of the late Arthur Meighen, that the Conservative party in recent days has abandoned its traditional position and has become quite socialistic?

Mr. Grafftey: I could not accept that quote verbatim, but I would say this: I will agree quite sincerely, yes. I will agree that in so far as the Conservative party is not the captive of doctrine, the way you are, we can abandon fields of activity. We are not the captive slaves of doctrine.

Mr. Bourget: It is a question of degree.

Mr. Grafftey: It is a question of degree. I am quite sure that we as Conservatives often use the expression. "Maybe our grandfathers would roll over in their graves if they could see what we are doing now."

An hon. Member: They sure would.

Mr. Grafftey: But we are still not abandoning our principles. The trouble with the Liberals and the New Democratic party is that their change in degree is very different. You are captives of your doctrines.

Those things which move the present administration are based on our high degree of respect for the individual and individual rights. I put the following proposition before each and every hon. member. The spark from heaven—who picks it up? The crowd, never: the individual, always.

Conservative action and principles do not concern themselves with idealistic doctrine. We are not the captives of a doctrine. We concern ourselves with the individual, the rights of the individual and those things which make a free individual in a free enterprise economy. These are differences in degree which are very important.

We also recognize that free enterprise, when it is free, as opposed to public ownership, is often regulated by government. Let us admit that the government sets the rules of the game. We also understand that by proper planning even a Conservative administration has a large, proper and important role to play in the public sector of the economy.

We recognize that the provinces have a great need for schools; the municipalities have a great need for houses; the provinces have a great need for roads. We recognize that in this day and age—some people think, for good or bad: I think, for good—government has a large and important role to play in planning the public sector of the economy. We admit that the government, by its taxation policies, may affect the whole economy. By its policies, regulations and action it can encourage free, individual, private enterprise. I also say that the government has its responsibilities in economic growth, in what we always talk about as a steady growth of the annual gross national product.

With other levels of government, municipal governments and provincial governments, let us all admit that the federal government obviously has responsibilities in this public sector of the economy. But we say we differ from the Liberals. In order to put their program before the people, Mr. Pearson and Mr. Lamontagne, and all those who have been speaking lately, would use such a high degree of state regulation and control that we would be living under worse than wartime conditions. We do not believe, although we are living in very tense days, this is at all the right thing to do in a democratic country. That is all there is to it.

I repeat myself and I say this. In Canada we have a civil service that is second to none and I am very proud of it, as is every other Canadian. We have a great civil service. But this is not thanks to the present Liberal opposition. When we talk about the old bureaucrats coming in and wanting to take over, we just mean that a number of years ago, in the post-war years, by political interference with the top ranks of the administration, no party in the history of this country did more than the Liberal party to change the proper balance of power within this country. We saw the unholy spectacle of senior politicians jumping into senior posts of the administration and within a very short time, as if nothing was wrong with it, they jumped right back again into the political arena. Nothing damaged the spirit of the parliamentary rights of a proper democracy in this country more than that performance.

What do we see now? I see this even in my own constituency. I see this type of bureaucrat, who was not a credit to the public affairs of this country, coming out into the partisan, political field. These are the type of men who are controlling the Liberal party today. These are the type of men who think, "Oh, the heck with the people; we will govern anyway". You remember, "Who is going to stop us?" They say, "We will tell the people what is good for them". They do not ask the people what they think they should have. They say, "They do not know what is good for them. We are going to tell them what they should have anyway". They are far removed from the people.

That is the Liberal attitude. That is the attitude today on the top rungs of the Liberal party, a party that has forgotten its lesson, a party that is still so removed from the people that it accepts the points of view of former senior bureaucrats now in the active political arena who would like to impose this whole type of regulatory state control on the Canadian people and this House of Commons. That is the sort of closure attitude that we saw in earlier days. That was the whole attitude of years gone by. But the Canadian people will not be fooled by it again.

This party has often said it was a mistake to attempt to transfer Liberal doctrine from the old world to the new. There is one thing they have transferred. The old world Liberalism was born in Malthusian and Ricardian gloom. They have certainly transferred this gloom to the new world. They are so gloomy that they do not think the people know what is best for them. They are so gloomy that they do not think this is a united country. They are so gloomy that they do not think we have any prestige abroad. But the people know better.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

(Translation):

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the youthful and buoyant member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) will excuse me, I trust, if I do not try to follow him in his meanderings, in his twisted arguments, and more particularly in the inconsistent views he just now expressed in his speech.

According to parliamentary usage, Mr. Speaker, I would like to tender my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, the hon. members for Laval (Mr. Bourdages) and for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne), for their excellent contribution to this debate.

I also want to take this opportunity and congratulate the new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn). We have known him at work as deputy speaker. We did not always like his decisions, but we nevertheless wish him every success in his new and important responsibilities.

As for you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, all I have to do is to extend to you the same good wishes I expressed when you were appointed Deputy Speaker of this house and to repeat what I said then: I trust that you will put into practice and apply the rules of the house in the same spirit of justice and kindness shown by the Speaker himself.

During the last session, I made an offer to the government with respect to the co-operation that the opposition was willing to extend concerning the business of the house.

I wish to renew this offer I made last April. I think every member will agree that sessions are too long and especially that sittings are also much too lengthy at the end of a session. It would definitely be possible to shorten them if we could agree on more orderly debates.

Even if an election may possibly be held this year, why not come to an agreement on the length of debates? For instance, the leader of the house could perhaps inform us of the business of the house, one week in advance, as he did on some occasions last year. In my opinion, it will be appropriate to agree on the length of debates concerning legislation, appropriations for the various departments and other measures introduced by the government. This could be subject to certain reserves I proposed during a debate we had last April. Thus, Mr. Speaker, we would avoid the rush and cramming which marks the end of every session. I hope the government will take into consideration this suggestion which is made solely for the purpose of being useful to the house.

Mr. Speaker, the speech from the throne does contain a few measures we will support, but its main characteristic is that it makes no mention of our current fundamental problems such as chronic unemployment, exports, defence and economic development.

For the past 12 months and even before that the Conservative government has lost its popularity with the public. Gallup polls and the by-elections which are held now and then are a proof of that.

(Text):

Mr. Churchill: Three by-elections in May that prove the other thing.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: And that is why the Prime Minister ordered his ministers to drop everything and go after voters. It is indeed the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) who said so in a statement to the press. And the Prime Minister is travelling across the country with his ministers to take the people by storm for fear that the popularity of his government will decline in the public opinion.

Besides, an inquiry we have made clearly shows that, during a 73-day period after the prorogation of the last session, the Prime Minister spent less than half the time in his office.

The same goes for the other ministers who, instead of dealing with the affairs of state or the affairs of their departments, spend their time playing politics and contradicting themselves on important issues. The more they travel and the more they speak, the less the population thinks of them. They have lost the confidence of the Canadian people, and I dare say, with proof on hand, that we now have the most incompetent government that Canada has ever known since confederation. If proof be needed, here it is.

What should we think of a government which, in its haste to say that it has reached an agreement with the United States government on the greatest international hydro-electric power development project ever, signs a treaty even before having entered into an agreement with the province which owned the potential electric power, that is to say, British Columbia. This government made itself ridiculous in the eyes of the people by putting the cart before the horse.

Now, what about the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) who picked a quarrel with the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, Mr. Udall, because the latter was impatient with the delays of the Canadian government in carrying out its obligations under the treaty? What a fine example the Minister of Justice has given us of the international co-operation which must exist between our two countries. Is it any wonder that we, on this side of the house, should say that we are losing prestige in the United States?

What about the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and his leader, the Prime Minister who dismissed the ex-governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Coyne, without even giving him an opportunity to appear before a committee of his peers of the House of Commons, and this contrary to every right mentioned in the bill of rights sponsored by the Prime Minister himself? What harm has not this domestic quarrel done to Canada's prestige abroad. And the Minister of Finance, not satisfied with having contributed to the firing of the former governor of the Bank of Canada, went to Montreal, barely a week ago, and attacked him violently.

Mr. Speaker, I prefer Mr. Coyne's word to that of the finance minister, and many citizens have the same opinion. I have only one thing to say to the minister: he debased himself, in that quarrel, and the result of the by-election in the provincial riding of Eglinton has proved it eloquently.

How touching it was, yesterday, to hear the Minister of Finance tell us about the great friendship that exists between himself and the British ministers, and about the warm and friendly relations he had with them, in connection with the entry of Great Britain into the common market.

Mr. Speaker, I give the same importance to that statement as to the praise the Minister of Finance had for the Prime Minister after the latter had tried to remove him from office.

What should we think of the contradictions in the field of defence? While at the UN the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) moves resolutions on disarmament and the abolition of nuclear tests, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness) spends the enormous sum af approximately $600 million to buy entirely useless armaments, unless they are equipped with nuclear warheads.

And what about the attitude taken by the Prime Minister himself in connection with the customs tariff bill last year, when he violently attacked the Senate, simply because its members refused to give discretionary powers to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan)? How can he reconcile such attitude with the clause of the Canadian Bill of Rights which provides for appeal against decisions rendered by a lower court?

After having threatened the Senate with calling an election on the matter, the Prime Minister had to swallow his threat, because he was afraid to face the Canadian voters.

How can we trust a government whose members do not even trust themselves, or each other?

After having liquidated Mr. Coyne, the Minister of Finance was almost liquidated himself by the Prime Minister. He himself just missed being the victim of the Prime Minister's wrath.

The Minister of Justice has also been placed on the black list and, according to press reports, it is the Secretary of State who was supposed to replace him.

The Prime Minister may go on denying those squabbles and quarrels to his heart's content, but he certainly will not deny that the information published in the press on this matter was based on ministerial indiscretions.

Do you know what came to mind when we read the information and rumours which circulated for a week all over the country? They reminded us of what happened very recently in Moscow, where there also the supreme authority of the government was being questioned, and where internal quarrels within the party were making the headlines.

How can we have confidence in a government, when several of its ministers contradict one another publicly on a matter which has become vital for this country? I refer of course to our trade policy.

The Minister of Finance says that Canada should not belong to any trade group from which the United States would be excluded. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) for his part, says that any trade alliance including the United States would be dangerous for Canada. Finally, the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sevigny) proposes that both Americas form a vast common market. As for the speech from the throne, there is not a word about that in it. It simply states that Canada must keep away from any trade alliance and organize its trade on a multilateral basis.

Can you imagine greater confusion? How can we trust a government which behaves like that?

How can we trust a party in power when, on a matter gaining more and more momentum in Quebec, the question of separatism, the Conservative members of the same province take diametrically opposite stands? The ministers from Quebec have all made statements and denounced the idea of separatism; but the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) supported it time and again. Rumour even has it now that he is about to become one of the leaders of that movement in Quebec and that he would be followed by several Conservative members.

Who in this house represents the real stand of the Conservative party?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi will follow them.

Mr. Chevrier: Now, concerning the speech from the throne, I must say that it contains a sentence which, to say the least, is mysterious and becomes practically incomprehensible when compared to the stand taken by the Prime Minister in his speech before a group of Ontario Conservative women. I should like first to quote that enigmatic sentence of the speech from the throne:

> My government plans to recommend to you a number of measures that will constitute further steps in working on the purposes of the confederation and identifying more clearly the Canadian nationality in various aspects of public and business affairs.

We heard rumours before the opening of the session to the effect that the government was ready to declare "O Canada" our national anthem and to introduce bilingual cheques. But following the speech made by the Prime Minister in this house, after the Leader of the Opposition, we now know that such is not the Prime Minister's intention.

On those two matters as well as on many others, the Conservative party is quite divided. But there might be one measure that could greatly contribute to identify—and here I use the very words of the speech from the throne:

> —more clearly the Canadian nationality.

This would be to give our country a distinctive flag. But there again, after the talk given by the Prime Minister to a Conservative women's club in Ontario, it would seem that we have nothing to expect from this government.

The Prime Minister seems more interested in aggravating the division within the Canadian nation and in setting the rest of Canada against Quebec than in promoting national unity by trying to find a solution to the present crisis.

About this famous speech of last Saturday, here is what the parliamentary correspondent for Le Devoir, whose sympathy for the present government surely is not found wanting, had to say. The article, published in the 23rd January, 1962 issue of Le Devoir, is entitled:

> What is Mr. Diefenbaker driving at?
> Even the old guard of the Conservative party is baffled by the Prime Minister's intervention and the Quebec wing of the party admits that its leader has placed himself in an unpleasant situation from which he will have to pull himself promptly by expressing his views more clearly.

Then the article states:

> In any case, it is being said everywhere that Mr. Diefenbaker's denunciation of Mr. Pearson, in the wording reported to have been used and which has not as yet been denied, is in very bad taste. Nobody is pleased with it because a certain unfriendliness that political leaders have always tried to temper might be revived between the two ethnic groups.

Those are not my words but those of Mr. Clement Brown who, as everyone knows, has much sympathy for this government.

I fully share the views expressed in this quotation and I think that the Prime Minister owes explanations first to this house and also to the whole Canadian nation, in regard to his intentions and his stand on this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chevrier: What has the young member for Brome-Missisquoi, to say about this statement, he who always uses the expression "divide and rule"? What has he to say about the report published in Le Devoir and in which the leader of the nation is asked, under the circumstances to at least give some explanations? And I repeat, the Prime Minister owes the Canadian people, as well as this house, an explanation in this respect.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned this morning, I was dealing with a subject in which, I am sure, we are all interested. Along the same lines of thought, I should now like to refer to a speech made in Sherbrooke by the Minister of Justice.

In it, he accused the Liberal party of accentuating the differences between the English Canadians and the French Canadians. He took the Liberal party to task, and especially the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), who, according to him, on the subject of federal-provincial relations, preached one doctrine in the province of Quebec and another one in the rest of Canada.

Here is part of an article from Le Soleil of November 6, 1961, which quotes the minister as follows:

> As long as people like Mr. Pearson would offer us double-dealing programs and as long as politicians like the Liberals would promise to increase federal aid when they find themselves outside Quebec and pledge that they will do away with it when they are here, we could expect serious conflicts between the two groups.

I challenge the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton)—I understand he intends to make a contribution to this debate—to prove that on the subject of federal-provincial relations or any other political problem, the Leader of the Opposition expressed in the province of Quebec views which were different from what he said elsewhere.

I think that the Minister of Justice is cheeky and arrogant when he says such things, especially after the speech delivered by the Prime Minister himself before a group of Conservative women at the Chateau Laurier.

I think the minister was impudent in making such remarks. One wonders if the Conservatives are getting ready to ignore the province of Quebec during the next election campaign and to follow the doctrine set forth by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill), emphasized by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton), in 1957 and 1958, namely that their party can form a government without the province of Quebec.

A party which acts that way, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Balcer: You said that in 1958 and you know what were the results.

Mr. Chevrier: —undermines the very basis of confederation.

Mr. Ricard: That is what you have always done.

Mr. Pigeon: Dishonest, dishonest.

Mr. Chevrier: That is moving backwards—

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member has just said that the member who has the floor is dishonest. Twice did he state: "You are dishonest." I ask that he withdraw his remarks.

An hon. Member: It is true.

Mr. Robichaud: The member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would repeat the point of order. I did not hear the words complained of and do not know that they were recorded.

(Translation):

Mr. Robichaud: The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has said twice that the hon. member for Laurier was dishonest and I ask him to withdraw his statement.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that those words came from the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, they do not disturb me at all.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: A point of order having been raised, I think it should not be passed over too lightly. Perhaps the hon. member for Joliette-l'Assomption-Montcalm would indicate whether or not there is any substance in the accusation that is made.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) has implied that the Conservative party wanted to divide the country, which is utterly false. That is a dishonest statement from the hon. member for Laurier.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: That was not quite the point that was made. The point was that the hon. member had accused the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) who had the floor of being dishonest. If such a statement was made, I am sure that the hon. member would not wish it to remain on the record.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I shall comply with your decision and abide by standing orders.

Mr. Chevrier: I said that if the Conservative party does that, it will undermine the very basis of confederation while giving a poor example of national unity. It is just going backwards, and if it goes on in this way, I have only one thing to say, that one day it will reap what it has sown.

There is another matter mentioned in the speech from the throne, that is the establishment of a national power grid. It has been said that Ottawa will soon start negotiations with the provinces with a view to creating that power system. I wonder if that is another visionary project. But if I understand it well, it would mean taking power from those provinces who have a great abundance of it and giving it to those who have not.

The principle of the project has perhaps some value, but the province of Quebec, which is one of the richest if not the richest, in hydroelectric power will, I am sure, think twice before accepting such an arrangement.

However, I would like to draw the Prime Minister's attention to the statement made yesterday by a government expert with regard to hydroelectric power. I am thinking of Mr. H. L. Briggs, one of the ablest men in Canada, who is member of the national energy board in Ottawa. I would like to read this statement into the official record. In a speech he made before the Engineering Institute of Canada, Mr. Briggs said this:

(Text):

That no advantage is clearly apparent to justify the construction of a trans-Canada grid system.

(Translation):

And a little farther on.

(Text):

A transmission grid system interconnecting major power resources across northern Canada, built with tapoff connections taken southward at intervals for the purpose of supplying large power consuming areas, is for economic reasons of no interest.

(Translation):

And again:

(Text):

The major objection to a national grid is that it would necessitate interruption of transmission, taking power out here and putting it in there. The only economical way to transmit power over long distances—500 miles and more—is by direct current transmission. The conversion from alternating current to direct current and back again, which would be a necessary element in a national grid, is a very expensive operation. Over long distances only continuous high value—firm power—loads are able to make a line pay off.

(Translation):

Here is the conclusion:

(Text):

So that instead of a national grid we should be directing all our efforts, especially research, towards the tapping of isolated large potential sources of hydro power in Canada.

(Translation):

Such is the opinion of the Canadian government expert, Mr. Briggs, recently appointed by the Prime Minister himself. Besides, if I understand the situation, this project is, to say the least, premature. According to the information I have at this time, this item is on the agenda of the next interprovincial conference, so that if the provinces come to an agreement, there will be no need for a federal-provincial conference.

I will now deal with another aspect of the speech from the throne.

No new measure is found in the speech from the throne to promote economic development and to fight the chronic unemployment problem which affects the country.

Since the Conservatives have been in power, the economic situation has deteriorated, which is why unemployment has taken alarming proportions. Our economic growth has not been strong enough to provide enough jobs to absorb the increase in the labour force.

In 1961, the rate of increase of our national product was only about 2 per cent, which is lower than the increase in population; whereas at the time we were in power, the increase, over a period of 11½ years, was approximately 4½ per cent. Moreover, in 1961, unemployment reached the rate of 7.2 per cent, a record that has been surpassed only under the Bennett administration.

What has happened since 1957? Our economic development has slowed down. It has become less than the population increase. Our per capita production, in real value, has diminished, so that if that development had continued at the same rate under the Conservative administration as under the Liberal administration, that is 4.5 per cent, we would have produced $11 billion more that we do now.

That is why there is so much unemployment. According to the latest statistics released by the Department of Labour, the number of unemployed stood at 413,000 in mid-December and that despite the measures of which the government boasts in the speech from the throne.

The speech refers to far reaching steps which have improved the economic situation. I say to the members of the government that, in spite of those far reaching steps, it remains true that unemployment, in mid-December, was more than double what it was when we were turned out of office in 1957.

In spite of those long range measures, the unemployment insurance fund has dwindled to less than $100 million, whereas it was close almost to $1 billion at the time we left office.

Besides, those far reaching steps mentioned in the speech from the throne make no reference at all to the structural, chronic and cyclical features of unemployment, nor to unemployment caused by automation. No steps are contemplated to check that particular aspect of unemployment.

In the 12 months from June 1960 to June 1961, 48,000 Canadians, 30,000 of whom were Canadian born, left this country for the United States. Does the government propose to solve unemployment by means of emigration?

Those far reaching measures, referred to by the government, provide nothing, or practically nothing, for the depressed areas. So far, the government policy has been practically valueless in respect of those depressed areas.

When we suggested to the house a ten point program—as mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition and other hon. members—we were held up to ridicule.

The speech from the throne simply says that, with regard to trade, the government continues to advocate multilateral exchanges. In the matter of international trade, we are now going through a troubled period, and all the government does is to blame the ministers of the British government.

The harsh, difficult and complicated competition between the United States, Canada and Great Britain with respect to the new arrangements of the common market hardly seems to have worried this government until just a few months ago.

Instead of embarking on a dangerous protectionist policy, instead of complaining, as did the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Finance at Accra, instead of its ministers protesting and contradicting one another, the government should reconsider our trade policy in a more liberal light. It is only proper to consider the possible extension of European achievements to the Atlantic region, so that existing groups may be transformed into a wider partnership.

Just consider the course taken by the President of the United States. He suggested to congress a dynamic and interesting plan which consists in lowering their tariffs by at least 50 per cent, provided the common market countries do likewise. Those countries have not, as we have, close trade relations with Great Britain. Has any thought been given so far to the difficult position the free world will be in with respect to the countries forming the common market?

What is Canada doing now, to ensure the expansion of our trade with Europe? Nothing.

As to our policy, it is quite clear. The Leader of the Opposition has explained it in Vancouver, in 1958, and in this house. It consists of the setting up of an Atlantic economic community, of which Canada, the United States, Great Britain and other western European countries would be members.

This policy has been advocated in Canada by an ever-growing number of leading businessmen. It has been discussed at the conference of the manufacturers association, held in Halifax. It has been suggested by many Canadian businessmen, but the government does not seem to pay any attention to recommendations made to it.

Mr. Eric Kierans, president of the Montreal stock exchange and of the Canadian stock exchange strongly supported this last September 13 when he stated:

> I do not think it is possible to find a satisfactory answer to our lowered production and to unemployment without putting an end to our present conservatism . . . We must keep up with developments, get out of the rut of tradition, and be dynamic and imaginative in the face of new conditions . . . It is urgent—

He adds:

> —that Canada go ahead and join the common market.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I had thought that perhaps as I began my remarks this afternoon I would remind the house that today is the day when we celebrate the glorious traditions of that great Scottish poet, Robbie Burns, and that I might take the liberty of introducing one or two quotations from his works into the record at this point. However, sir, as I listened to the speech which has just been delivered by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) and cast my mind back over other speeches we have heard from the other side of the house, particularly from the official opposition, it occurred to me that perhaps these quotations might come more aptly after a brief review of what they have said; because never in my view, sir, has there been a clearer illustration of the depth of perception and ability to analyse character than is afforded by some of the pungent remarks of the great poet as applied to the kind of speech we have just heard. And in that connection, I was going to say that we have just listened to an unfortunate speech from the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), but I will not use that word because I recognize that at a time like this, with the winds of election in the air, there are certain tendencies which manifest themselves on the part of those who have previously been in office. They tend to be carried away by their own enthusiasm, perhaps by their own desperation and I put down to that tendency the kind of remark that was made by the hon. gentleman.

But there are some things he said cannot be overlooked. The first one of those with which I should deal was that part of his speech in which the hon. gentleman challenged me to give an example of an occasion where the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) had said one thing in Quebec and another thing in other parts of Canada. Well, I do so gladly. The part of my speech in Sherbrooke to which the hon. member referred was the portion in which I was dealing particularly with a remark made by the Leader of the Opposition. I have not got the exact text before me, but this remark has been widely quoted. It is to the effect that if a Liberal government were in office it would regard it as one of its responsibilities to bring about an end to the co-operative cost sharing programs between the dominion and the provinces. This is what the Leader of the Opposition said in the province of Quebec. I challenge him to say where he has ever said anything even remotely resembling that in any other part of Canada?

Mr. Pearson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; the minister has quoted me and I would ask him to give the source of the quotation or the speech I made in Quebec about which he is talking. I ask him to do that, because he has made this statement.

Mr. Fulton: I said I did not have the text before me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: But I pointed out to the hon. gentleman that he has been widely quoted to this effect and has never before issued a denial. We recall speeches he has made on some occasions when it has been suggested that the press reports were not entirely accurate. I take it that is what he is saying now.

Mr. Pearson: May I speak to the point of order? Will the minister, not having any source on which to base the remark except some unnamed press report which he cannot identify and the date of which he cannot specify, at least say that his reference is to the speech I made in Quebec city about two months ago?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, that is it.

Mr. Pearson: We can clear this up. The speech I made in Quebec city and that part of it which dealt with the subject about which the minister is talking, was also made the week before in Winnipeg.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: I think we will have to send for the record.

Mr. Pearson: You had better.

Mr. Fulton: Then, we can set this matter straight. I hope to have it before the conclusion of my remarks.

The next thing to which the hon. member for Laurier referred and which I want to correct, was that portion of his remarks dealing with the Columbia river treaty. The hon. gentleman said in that respect that we had concluded a treaty with the United States without even arriving at any understanding with British Columbia. Everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, that this is not correct. Everyone knows that we had the most complete understanding with British Columbia. Everyone knows that we had the agreement and the consent of the British Columbia government to sign the treaty in Washington on January 17 last year. All these facts have been put on the record. The correspondence establishing these facts has been quoted in the house. Everyone knows, except apparently the hon. member for Laurier, that what has happened has been that British Columbia has changed its position. It is, therefore, completely inaccurate and reveals a prodigious lack of knowledge of the circumstances, to say what he did say, that we signed a treaty without having any understanding with British Columbia.

Now, sir, I must presume that possibly the hon. gentleman knew as little about the St. Lawrence seaway as he apparently knows about the Columbia river. This then would, of course, explain why my colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) had such a mess to inherit, a mess that is still being cleared up, in terms of contract claims miscalculated and similar matters. Indeed, perhaps, it explains also why there was such a mess with respect to tolls on the Jacques Cartier bridge.

This, in turn, Mr. Speaker, brings me to the remarks of the hon. member for Laurier in which he referred to changes in this government under the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker). Of course, the hon. gentleman must himself have poignant recollections with regard to cabinets and those who leave them as well as those who enter them, poignant recollections of the days when he came back, hat in hand, to see if he could gain readmission to a cabinet which, on an earlier occasion, he had left. However, perhaps we can overlook those things and, as I say, put them down to over-enthusiasm generated by the atmosphere in which the hon. gentleman is now living.

There was one portion of his remarks which I do not think can be overlooked and that was his direct attack on the Prime Minister with respect to Canadian unity. It was a grossly wrong thing for the hon. gentleman to do, to suggest that the Prime Minister would do anything to disrupt Canadian unity. This kind of attack is the measure of the desperation of my hon. friends opposite, for it is well known that no man in the—

Mr. Chevrier: Made in the House of Commons, not outside.

Mr. Fulton: —no man in the history of Canada has devoted himself—

Mr. Robichaud: What attack?

Mr. Speaker: Order; the minister has the floor.

Mr. Fulton: —no man has devoted himself or his whole life to the cause of unity in Canada to a greater extent than has the present Prime Minister. If my hon. friends need reminding of that fact I would point out that in 1958, in recognition of the services of this Prime Minister to the cause of Canadian unity, the Canadian people from coast to coast caused to be sent to this House of Commons in support of that Prime Minister, the largest group of members from any party in the history of this country, including the largest group of members from the province of Quebec. Certainly, it was the largest group from Quebec ever supporting this party, if not the largest group in the history of Canada supporting any party. Not all the skilful efforts of which the hon. member is capable will serve the purpose which he has in mind, that of creating a schism between the Conservative party and the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chevrier: It is there now.

Mr. Fulton: In general, as I listened to what I shall call the self-starting wrath, the sharp words and the shrill tones of the hon. member for Laurier, my mind was cast back to one of the quotations from Robbie Burns. It applies, of course, equally to all of those speeches we have heard from all members of the opposition, and will indeed hear probably more frequently in passing days. This self-cultivated wrath reminds me of the quotation from Tam O'Shanter:

> Where sits our sulky sullen dame
> Gathering her brows like gathering storm
> Nursing her wrath to keep it warm.

Then, I come to the speech delivered by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) in which he has himself admitted he uttered one statement which would be generally regarded as being accurate. This was the statement he made to the effect the next election will be fought on the record of the present government, a record which I regret to say he then proceeded to distort.

Indeed, I was conscious, as I am sure you were, sir, of more than passing expressions of dismay crossing the countenances of those who sit behind him when they realized the position they were being placed in, that it was going to be fought upon the record of the government; because the record of this government under our Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) is a record of greater accomplishments in more fields than in any similar period in Canadian history.

In order to see this record in proper perspective it is necessary to set it against the background of the situation which this government and its Prime Minister inherited in 1957. Here I can do no better than refer to words taken from the Montreal Gazette outlining the situation, as follows:

> They reached the treasury benches, after 22 years in opposition, at an awkward moment. The national economy . . . was already beginning to sputter. A downturn in employment, already apparent, was to get much worse before it changed for the better. The rate of economic expansion was slowing down almost to a crawl. They inherited a trade deficit of enormous proportions. Despite the slowdown, inflationary pressures remained disconcertingly strong . . .

This then, sir, was the situation when we assumed office. It is against that background that the record of the government under the Prime Minister has to be assessed. And that record, against that background, is outstanding. It is a record of recession halted, of recovery initiated, of expansion under way, of developments undertaken and of promises fulfilled.

When we come to compare that record with the record of our predecessors in office, and when we come to analyse that record as compared with the situation that we inherited, then indeed I can understand the embarrassment of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) when he is reminded of that old gang with whom he used to sit in office, with many of whom he has surrounded himself again—that same old gang. No wonder he was embarrassed the other day when the Prime Minister made some reference to the gathering at Kingston where the old gang reappeared.

Again, sir, I was reminded inescapably, in thinking of the embarrassment of the Leader of the Opposition and those who sit behind him, of another quotation from Robbie Burns, taken from "Ae Fond Kiss".

> Had we never loved sae kindly,
> Had we never loved sae blindly,
> Never met—or never parted,
> We had ne'er been broken hearted.

Here they are, as the Prime Minister pointed out, the same old gang and it is no wonder that there is embarrassment on the other side of the chamber when those personalities and that record are compared with those of the present government. But one thing must always be borne in mind in discussing a record of accomplishments: that results are only accomplished as a result of hard work and planning. They only come about as a result of team work. There is a team in the present cabinet, and a good team that works together.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chevrier: Pulling in four directions.

Mr. Fulton: It is a team that is proud to work under a great leader such as our Prime Minister. Even our friends who jeer and scoff would not, I think, deny the fact that good results do not come about by accident. Heaven knows, they claimed enough credit for the circumstances and happenings in the years they were in office, and I can hardly think they would be unwilling to admit that these things have not ceased to come about except by hard work and planning.

The record which I want briefly to analyse today has come about as a result of intensive planning and constructive work in a number of fields. I wish to refer to a few particularly. I think for first of all of the trade and economic field where the greatest credit, under the leadership of the Prime Minister, is due to the constructive planning of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), the former minister of trade and commerce, now the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill), and his successor, the present minister. I should like to mention just a few things that form part of this record.

First of all there were the initial steps. We did not let the grass grow under our feet. We called a commonwealth trade conference within a few months of taking office in 1957, and more recently there has been what has been described as the most successful trade conference in Canada's history, when all the trade commissioners of our missions abroad came back and met in conference some 1,300 Canadian businessmen. In the past year seven trade missions have been abroad and there are 20 to go within the next 12 months. The results are already beginning to become apparent in terms of our increasing trade.

Then there was a further measure in the extension of export credits. Under this government new facilities for the financing of export from Canada have been made available to the extent of $200 million, and a further increase is forecast for this year in the speech from the throne.

As a result of these efforts we can see the following as typical accomplishments. It has been made possible for Canadian firms to accept orders to supply a newsprint mill in Chile. Orders have been accepted in Canada for the production and export of 70 diesel electric engines for the Argentine, 56 diesel engines for Brazil, rails to Mexico and projects in eight other countries, for a total of $82 million, are now under consideration; and five others, for a total of $214 million, are to receive immediate study.

Other measures in this general field of the expansion of our export trade include, of course, that bold and courageous measure of the devaluation of the Canadian dollar announced by the Minister of Finance in his budget last June. I do not suppose that anybody anywhere, even in this house, on whatever side he sits, would not readily admit that this has been one of the most helpful measures in stimulating production and export from Canada.

What have been the results? The most obvious result, of course, is the reflection in the record that at the present time production is at an all time high; employment is at an all time high, and our trade deficit has been transformed from an enormous deficit into a respectable surplus.

Mr. Pearson: What about our balance of payments?

Mr. Fulton: There are forecasts made in newspapers and by economists of all shades of political opinion or leaning that in the current year Canada's gross national product will reach a level of $40 billion, an increase of 7½ per cent over last year.

My hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition boasted in the course of his speech about the average increase in the g.n.p. of 4½ per cent during the years 1945 to 1957. It would have been a miracle if they had been able to avoid an increase in the gross national product at a time when Canada, with her economy undamaged, was in a position to enjoy almost unrestricted access to the markets of Europe, not only in the provision of consumer goods but even in terms of producer goods while those shattered economies were being reconstructed.

Mr. Pearson: Have you ever heard of exchange controls?

Mr. Fulton: Those conditions were totally different from those we have faced since 1957. I should have thought therefore that the Leader of the Opposition, who claimed some desire to state matters accurately and with a sense of proportion, would have given due credit to this government for this great increase in the gross national product which is forecast for this year, bearing in mind the fact that there have been the economic difficulties, which we have shared, incidentally, with even so strong an economy as that of the United States.

Other manifestations of the success of this planning in the export field are found in the fact that a trade deficit of $713 million which we inherited in 1957 has been transformed into a modest but respectable surplus.

Turning from this brief summary of the measures taken with respect to export trade and production, may I emphasize that the government has not neglected the domestic economy. It will be appreciated that measures dealing with export credit facilities and so on of the kind to which I have been referring are of primary interest to large manufacturing concerns engaged in the export field. But we have been conscious of our responsibility to find constructive measures to look after the needs of small and medium sized businesses as well.

Important and far reaching measures in this field have been taken under the initiative of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming)—measures such as the Small Businesses Loans Act. For the first time in our history loans under government sponsorship are available to small business to a maximum amount of $25,000. As a result of the legislation it is estimated that 90 per cent of the whole field of those engaged in small business are eligible for loans of this type. The success of the measure and its soundness can be seen when we find that since the inception of this legislation no fewer than 2,737 loans to a total dollar value of $23 million had been made up to November 30, 1961.

Also in this field must be placed the changes in the Industrial Development Bank Act. As a result of the amendment which we introduced, the financial resources of that bank have been increased from $150 million to $400 million. The coverage has been extended so that instead of the facilities of the bank being available to very restricted fields of business they are now available to the whole field. Again, the results can be seen in the statistics. Comparing the number of loans made last year with the loans made in the last full year of the former administration, we find that they have risen from 232 in 1956 to 1,070 in 1961, an increase of nearly 500 per cent, and that the total of loans made up to the time the Liberals were dismissed from office was only 349 as against 1,364, the present total, representing an increase in total loans of almost 300 per cent. In terms of the annual value of loans up to 1956, the figure was $17 million. At the end of 1961 it was $71 million. We find, finally, that the total of the loans made in the 17 years of the bank's activities amounts to $320 million of which $206 million have been lent in the last four years. In other words, 55 per cent of the loans have been made in the last four years.

Mr. Speaker, that is a very brief summary of the record in this sphere of production and export and of the measures taken to provide economic stimulus. As the house and the country know, this record is matched in the field of our direct development programs where prodigious progress has been made. Time is limited and the story of our development program is too well known for it to be necessary for me to deal with it here. I should like, therefore, to pass to another phase of our record in this attempt to present a complete and rounded picture.

I wish to emphasize that, reflecting the humanitarian views of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) our efforts have not been limited to the field of production and physical resources. We have cultivated also, as is the duty of government, the field of social justice and of the conservation and protection of human resources. We are, therefore, able to point to a record unequalled in a similar period of Canadian history—an unequalled record of measures for reforms and improvements in the field of social justice. The years of this administration have so far seen the inauguration of a scheme of hospital insurance, an increase in every field of welfare payments both to veterans and civilians, and a tremendous record under my colleague the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) in house building, urban redevelopment and slum clearance—a program which, of course, serves a dual purpose, providing as it does for the long term welfare of our citizens as well as a tremendous economic stimulus in its immediate aspects.

Of course, we do not claim that we have solved all the problems. We have never made any such claim. What we do say is that the record is one of creditable performance, and particularly creditable performance with respect to promises made. We also claim that the success of our plans and efforts is reflected in vastly improved conditions of labour and employment. Particularly is this remarkable as compared with the labour and employment situation which we inherited.

A great deal has been made and will, of course, continue to be made by members of the opposition of the unemployment situation today. Heaven knows, we do not claim to have found all the answers or to have finally solved this problem. We recognize and accept our responsibility to continue our efforts and even to increase them as forecast in the speech from the throne. But I do think it is essential that we should invite the country to view this matter in a proper perspective. In particular it is fitting that we should remind the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) that our record with respect to unemployment in four years compares very creditably with that of the Liberal government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Not at all.

Mr. Fulton: That low growling bespeaks uncertainty. There is a muted and uncertain voice coming from Essex East. It will become more muted and uncertain still when the figures are placed on record.

If we take the last four years for which the opposition was responsible—it is true

I include the year 1957, because I hardly think they will claim a total lack of responsibility for the last few months of that year—we find that unemployment rose by 116,000 over that four year period 1953-1957. It is true that unemployment has risen by a few thousand more from 1957 to 1961; the total is 122,000 based on the mid-December figure of 400,000 unemployed. But when one considers the vast increase in the labour force which has taken place since 1957, and when one considers the complications of the economic recession which we inherited, we are entitled to suggest to hon. members opposite that there is scarcely cause for pride on their part—scarcely cause for the gloating in which they have been indulging when discussing the increases in unemployment since 1957. They find it convenient to forget the recession of 1954-55—a recession in the midst of prosperity—but it is healthy that they should be reminded of these things occasionally, because they are the ones who say: "Put us back in office." This same old gang which did so marvellously before is saying "Put us back in", but I think the people will remember their record too well.

The results of the measures taken in this field by the government generally and by my colleague the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) in particular have been that there were 65,000 more people employed in mid-December than a year ago. The unemployment rate is the lowest in any year since the year 1956, while labour income is at an all-time high.

It might be interesting in analysing these forecasts of doom and gloom to have a look at the statistics of labour income. Hon. members will find that in the last complete year when the Liberals were in office, the year 1956, labour income per man employed stood at the level of $2,666 whereas in October 1961, the last month for which I have official figures, it was at a level of $3,174. In terms of total labour income this had increased from $14,890,000,000 in 1956 to $19,642,000,000 by October 1961.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the minister but he has gone beyond his time. I allowed him a little latitude because I was rather remiss with the hon. member for Laurier when he was speaking, as a result of which he had a few minutes extra.

Mr. Alan Macnaughton (Mount Royal): On rising in this rather overheated atmosphere of Scottish border warfare I am happy, Mr. Speaker, to continue the tradition of congratulating the mover, the hon. member for Laval, (Mr. Bourdages) and the seconder, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne), of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. May I also say the choice of the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) as Deputy Speaker of the house is an excellent one, and we certainly wish him well.

Congratulations are also due to the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn) on his appointment to the cabinet as Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Canada, Mr. Speaker, is a relatively prosperous nation. Our economy has recovered some of its resilience during the past few months but that recovery has not assumed the tempo of that of our neighbour to the south. It certainly has not regained the momentum and tempo of our economy in the mid-fifties. Alongside prosperity is hardship. Regardless of which side of the house we sit, we all want a vigorous, prosperous Canada with work for all, and we want that state of affairs to exist for the long term as well as the short term.

In recent weeks, we have read glowing accounts about our economic prospects for the future. The year 1961 ended on a strong economic note. Economic recession and other signposts of danger faded into the background as the year came to a close. Now we read of predictions that our gross national product will rise by 4 per cent in 1962 against an estimated net and true increase of 1½ per cent in 1961. Our living standards remain high although we have slipped from second to third place, having been leapfrogged by Sweden. In fact I have seen some recent statistics which put us in fourth or fifth place in world ratings.

In the speech from the throne the government has announced a varied program for increasing welfare benefits, and other humanitarian policies, and the government hopes these will not impose an increased tax burden on the taxpayers. It is the government's expectation that the cost of these benefits will be absorbed by additional revenue realized by greater economic national growth, and we hear much speculation that Canada's economy will respond to the large economic gains predicted for business in the United States. On balance it is an easy and optimistic picture, but how fragile and superficial it is. When one compares last Thursday's speech from the throne with the state of the union address delivered by Mr. Kennedy early this month the result is indeed very dismal for this country. His message was a crisp, clear document listing the major problems facing the United States, and pulling no punches, while the speech from the throne was, on the other hand, filled with nebulous words and platitudinous clichés.

We still have an unemployment problem which is frightening in its dimensions, with a higher rate of unemployed than nearly any other nation in the western world. The throne speech had one short sentence on that subject:

There has been a substantial improvement since last year in the unemployment situation.

We are becoming increasingly aware that the education which would allow us to cope with our "new technology" is lagging far behind the striking advances in that technology. Our rate of economic growth has been tapering off during the last few years, and whereas the economy ought to be expanding at the rate of 6 per cent per year, our growth is barely half that amount.

As Mr. G. Arnold Hart, president of the Bank of Montreal, stated at the shareholders' annual meeting held on December 5th, 1961:

Exports... have been buoyant and spending by consumers has been rising, but private capital outlays have not recovered significantly and there has been little tendency for business inventories to rise. While we can therefore derive satisfaction from the extent of the recovery thus far——and this is important.

—it remains a fact that the present pace of business recovery in Canada still falls short of the rate of growth we wish to see.

In my opinion, the current short term recovery is bound to peter out unless steps are taken to bolster the long term rate of growth in the economy. There are no major capital development programs on the horizon, certainly none of the dimensions of the St. Lawrence seaway development, or the several pipe line and iron ore developments. Indeed, many of the large capital projects which have been in progress during the past few years will be completed by the end of this year. Canada needs projects of this magnitude. The iron ore developments alone represent an investment of merely $700 million, and without this investment our economy lags and stumbles along on the abyss of serious recession.

Canadians seem to be lacking strong national goals. Indeed, that is the case in my own province of Quebec where many of our best young men are once again seriously questioning the concept of confederation. A major reason for this concern is that a sizeable number of French Canadian university students are among the most enthusiastic separatist supporters. These students constitute our most precious resources for tomorrow and we ignore their arguments at Canada's peril.

In the past the communication of ideas between French and English students has been free and vigorous, and has done much to create a common awareness and pride in the unique Canadian identity. In recent years this vital communication process somehow seems to have lost its momentum but one of the ways some of this momentum could be regained would be to have many more student exchanges between the French and English speaking universities. The recent Laval conference in Quebec city held in November, is a good example of what I have in mind. We need many more meetings and conferences of this nature.

To my English speaking compatriots I say it is not enough to take the separatists with a mere shrug of the shoulders. We should seriously examine the causes of the dissatisfaction of these "angry young men". My French Canadian friends should also pay serious attention to the good will and real efforts of so many English speaking Canadians in all provinces and parties who believe that French Canadians are essential partners in the building of a great nation.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I now wish to repeat in French what I have just said in English:

To my English speaking compatriots I say it is not enough to take the separatists with a mere shrug of the shoulders. We should seriously examine the causes of the dissatisfaction of these "angry young men", and my French Canadian friends should also pay serious attention to the good will and real efforts of so many English speaking Canadians in all provinces and parties who believe that French Canadians are essential partners in the building of a great nation.

(Text):

Canada seems to be losing at a frightening rate our prestige at the United Nations. In yet another area our conduct in relation to the international monetary fund is the subject of severe criticism by other countries. Somehow we seem to be out of harmony with the policies of our historic allies in America and in Britain. One can read almost daily in the press of some further deterioration of these precious relationships.

Canada above all is a trading nation. We are fifth amongst the world traders in terms of total volume, although in population we rank eighteenth in the world. There are striking developments in international trade today which will have profound implications for this country's future. Above all else, there is the dynamism of the European common market. Yet in the area of international trade Canada seems to be fighting to resist change and to preserve the status quo.

One could go on and on charting these impressions of massive challenges to this country but one factor distinguishes each of them. The dire consequences of inaction will not appear tomorrow, nor perhaps the day after. But as soon as one makes a projection into the future it becomes very evident that Canada must begin immediately to grasp these problems at their roots.

The omissions from the throne speech are glaring. In it there is not a word about national purpose, and not a word about the problems of economic growth and financial stability. Never in the history of this land has the quality of foresight in our government and business leaders been so greatly required. In today's circumstances it is not good enough to have a government which is so constantly preoccupied with short run politics and government by newspaper headlines that there is little hope of really confronting these major problems. I think the most pertinent criticism which can be directed against the present administration is simply a failure in foresight.

This country did not reach its present position by burying its head in the sand and resisting change. In the past we have looked outward and beyond tomorrow. Today we must be searching for new directions. Since the late 1940's the concept of an Atlantic community of nations has grown slowly and steadily. Within recent years this process of growth has been rapidly increased by the European common market, and today with Britain on the verge of entry and with a forward-looking trade policy beginning to emerge out of the United States, the prospects for creating an Atlantic economic community are measurably increased.

Here is the direction in which Canada should be striving to progress. I can put the matter no more bluntly than to quote Eric Kierans, the president of the Montreal stock exchange, as reported in the Financial Times of October 27, 1961:

> The time to join the European common market is now... if we continue to wait and see, the opportunity of moving into this market will be lost.

As President Kennedy put it so eloquently in his state of the union address on January 11, 1962:

> The Atlantic community grows not like a volcanic mountain by one mighty explosion but like a coral reef, from the accumulated activation of all.

The Atlantic community presents us with the possibility of bringing one fifth of the population of the world into a gigantic and vigorous trading union. This type of union could be instrumental to the west in mastering our two-directional challenge, namely in the east the increasing economic potential of the Soviet union and its satellites and in the south the demands and aspirations of the newly independent countries of Africa and Asia and Latin America.

The more one contemplates the future of the cold war, the more certain it is that this war must be fought in economic terms. It is estimated that in five years time the U.S.S.R. and its satellite empire will be in a position to start large scale economic warfare. United, there is little that nations of the west cannot accomplish. Divided, and with key countries such as Canada terribly preoccupied with the short run term, we stand little chance in the face of our awesome perils.

There is no question that for Canada to enter negotiations with the European common market and eventually to align ourselves with an Atlantic economic community will demand rapid change which will bring in its train economic dislocation and some hardship in the short run. But we must be absolutely clear that our alternative, namely to drift as we are doing at present, will be fatal for the currents are running quickly, and one does not drift upstream.

It is time we came to grips with our high cost economy. Canadian producers, whether of raw materials or manufactured goods, must become competitive instead of relying on protected markets. It is time we provided new and greater incentives for small industries to extend and enlarge their economies of scale. It is time to re-examine and overhaul our outdated Canadian taxing and collecting system. New tax incentive legislation to stimulate private savings and capital investment by Canadians in this country is long overdue for there is little in the Canadian tax law to encourage the accumulation of capital by Canadians. It is time to provide better taxation incentives for business to conduct research on a much greater scale if we ever hope to be competitive in world markets. We should be using our tax system to stimulate the growth and development of our export industry, especially those export industries which offer greater opportunities for greater employment. In short, it is time to agree on the trading goals we have in mind. Nor have we yet solved the problem of assuring a satisfactory long term rate of growth for the Canadian economy.

We should make these changes now, but basic to any set of new policies there is one condition which is absolutely essential. One of the reasons for the striking economic advances in western Europe in recent years has been the ability of the different governments to induce or persuade a sense of unity of purpose and co-operation among government, management and labour, all working in harmony for the common good.

We need the same team spirit in this country, and unless we get it we shall not achieve that sense of creative purpose so vital to our national economic growth. It should be done and it must be done if we hope to remain competitive in world markets.

I fear that this present session of parliament is going to deteriorate into nerve wracking waiting until the approaching election. In this atmosphere the spirit required cannot be generated. I think it is imperative that we have the election as soon as is humanly possible so that we can begin to put this country back in the main stream of world affairs.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): It is my intention, Mr. Speaker, during this traditional throne speech debate to mention some matters that have general maritime and particular constituency significance. They can be brought under the two subjects of power and transportation. I mention power because of the words in the throne speech with respect to a national grid and transportation because of the recent tabling of the second volume of the royal commission report on transportation. Power and transportation are the two overwhelming burdens of the maritimes and nobody suggests for one minute that they can be cured overnight. It is a process of gradual chiselling away at the small problems connected with both. By means of a little bit of history I intend to show that this government has a happy record of achievement in both these important fields.

First, may I deal with power. As every schoolboy in New Brunswick knows, the story of power in New Brunswick begins with Beechwood. The Flemming administration in an aggressive way approached a co-operative Conservative government at Ottawa and laid the basis for the initial steps toward cheaper power in New Brunswick. Moves were then made with regard to thermal power and, with joint provincial and federal co-operation, the first unit was set up at East Saint John in my constituency. To give you an idea, Mr. Speaker, just what this means to new industry, may I repeat a story—

Mr. Robichaud: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I would prefer it if the hon. member would wait until I have finished because my time is limited. The great value of this thermal plant to our community was illustrated by an industrialist who, in announcing plans to locate industry nearby, said that while it is true that we have natural resources and a water site the thing that makes this area so much better economically than any other in Canada is the cheap available steam from the nearby thermal plant. We have some industrial plants in Saint John. I do not agree with those who say it is entirely a boom city. However, Mr. Irving and his associates have revived the industrial outlook.

We are particularly proud of the efforts he is making in shipbuilding. This industry, which had been in the doldrums and was employing only about 200 men, has now increased its employment roll to nearly 1,500. The extent of this success is measured by the fact that this year upwards of 100 new immigrants will arrive from Ireland and Scotland to assist with their skills in this industry. There is one reservation in this regard. It is the hope of many of us in Saint John that we can train local labour to fill some of these positions. While we do not object to these new immigrants and they will be welcomed in our community, we hope that between the federal and provincial governments it will be possible to arrange some method of training the unskilled and unemployed in our area as well.

The national grid mentioned in the speech from the throne will benefit greatly provinces such as New Brunswick. I understand that New Brunswick would complement both Quebec and Nova Scotia so far as power is concerned. It is true that Quebec has proceeded to make plans of its own on the south shore but experts have stated that the power produced from coal in New Brunswick can greatly assist long term plans that Quebec may have. In addition, unity with Nova Scotia under such a national grid as is envisaged by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) would reduce our individual operations and minimize station capacity. I sincerely hope it will be possible to arrange some co-operative scheme by way of a national grid because it would greatly assist New Brunswick in its continuing efforts to obtain the necessary cheap power.

Transportation, Mr. Speaker, is a subject that is extremely important to the port of Saint John. We have a history in this field that goes back many years, but one of the bitter blows that we received recently and which affected our port had to do with the announced intention of the Canadian Pacific Railway to discontinue their passenger sailings, that is, the white empress line, to and from Saint John during the wintertime. We were very proud of these stately ships and it is both an economic and a moral loss to us. All in the community appreciate that this has come about because of changing passenger patterns and we are prepared to attempt other approaches to obtain business. The board of trade, the labour unions and others involved in the promotion of the port are taking a sensible attitude and hoping that other forms of activity can be devised. It is expected that the export and import traffic should be at a fairly good level this season and it is also hoped that the grain traffic will continue in a volume similar to that of the last two years.

However, Mr. Speaker, there is one note of pessimism on our horizon. I refer to the attempts to bring about winter navigation of the St. Lawrence seaway. Many feel that this is a new step but I recall that when I first came to the house I attacked the then Liberal government in my initial speech for the icebreaking activity they were carrying out on the St. Lawrence. This is not something new. It is a continuing matter and we are watching the situation with a great deal of fear and sincere apprehension.

We know that the port of Quebec authorities have recently stated that there is very little cargo for ships there in the wintertime. So far as Montreal is concerned, I should like to refer to a statement which appeared in the Montreal Star of January 22 last. It is in these words:

> Icebreakermen who know the meaning of frustration say Montreal will never have year-round navigation.

We also know that in an amusing way statements have been made that Three Rivers is the greatest winter port in the world. The people of Saint John are gravely concerned, and one thing that we notice now in the press and elsewhere is that the old excuse that icebreaking was necessary to prevent flooding is not even used. These attempts to open up the St. Lawrence are not viewed with any pleasure in the port of Saint John and, of course, Halifax.

Another matter that comes to mind when transportation is mentioned is the Chignecto canal. Present plans are to finish the power survey of this project and when that is completed the report will be forwarded to the government for final consideration. If the project meets the necessary requirements, then a further full-scale survey with respect to power and the industrial possibilities will be begun. I certainly am more optimistic than I ever have been about this project. I know many who were not enthusiastic initially but who now feel that if the power and industrial possibilities can be proven we will have the canal. I sincerely hope that it will be possible to approve this final survey. Men with great economic and engineering knowledge could be appointed to a full-scale commission to review the whole matter once and for all.

I now come to the report of the MacPherson royal commission on transportation which should be a great blueprint in the future for the maritimes. It is an excellent report. It will probably replace the report of the Duncan commission of 1927 which has been so often quoted. There are three sections that have reference to the maritimes and I should like to take a moment to deal with them. On page 212 restriction with respect to the Maritime Freight Rates Act is considered and the commission has this to say:

> In fact, evidence was presented to us which would indicate that the internal payments made under the act, which are paid on rail movements only, tend to inhibit the full development of alternate modes of carriage in the Atlantic region. With this contention we are in agreement.

This suggests that we should do away with all subsidization of intramaritime traffic. I personally withhold final opinion on this because there may be some carriers within the maritimes who are in a non-competitive or partially competitive position who would feel a tremendous loss if the maritime freight rate subsidy were removed. It has been mentioned that some of the coal producers would be alarmed by this move. However, Mr. Speaker, this is a new suggestion, a forward move, and something that will have to be left to the experts to comment upon.

The second recommendation in this section is contained on page 214 of the report and refers to the extension of the act. I quote:

> Recommendations have been made to us not only by the non-participating carriers but, indeed, on behalf of the shipping public of the Atlantic provinces, to have the Maritime Freight Rates Act subventions apply to all types of carriage. There are sound economic reasons to support the proposal—

I would think that this would be excellent, and I say that without any reservation. I think particularly of the sugar refinery in Saint John, which is one of the true maritime industries left, exporting into central Canada over 70 per cent of its finished product. I am sure that this proposal would meet with their approval, and I therefore commend it.

The interesting final proposal, Mr. Speaker, is not definite but gives us room for tremendous speculation as to the future. It is contained on page 218 and states:

> Should it, therefore, be deemed advisable to give special transportation assistance to the Atlantic provinces to overcome economic lag, such special assistance might well be designed to assist the movement of the products of secondary industry where it may have the greatest employment generating impact. It should be practical and administratively possible to define secondary industry for this purpose.

This brings in the secondary industry argument which we have always considered with regard to the future prospects of the Atlantic area. I feel it will be difficult to define secondary industry, but it might be possible to work this suggestion into the plans that have been put forward by the Atlantic provinces economic council recently and also by the Atlantic premiers. The suggestion is that a capital projects commission should be set up which would investigate the feasibility of various projects that apply to the maritime provinces, and then a national development fund would be used to finance those which have possibility. This is one of the ways those secondary industry projects which are finally approved might be financed. The factor of transportation might be used as a basis for subsidization. This is a novel idea. It is something that I hope will come forward.

These are all the remarks I wish to make, Mr. Speaker. I merely wish to repeat that this government, in my honest opinion and in my frank assessment, has shown a good record of achievement in both power and transportation fields. There is a lot more to do. I suggest that one of the answers is in this capital projects commission and the national development fund. I hope that this will be kept in mind. I think we can take honest pride in what has been done by this government in every field of endeavour, but particularly in power and transportation. In the maritimes we are much the better for the leadership of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker.

Mr. Robichaud: Will the hon. gentleman now answer my question?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Yes.

Mr. Robichaud: The hon. member stated that the first thermal plant as a joint federal-provincial project was built at East Saint John, New Brunswick. In view of the statement made in the last session by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Dinsdale) and the former minister of mines and technical surveys to the effect that the federal government could not participate in this plan because the plant used oil, will the hon. member inform the house as to the amount which was considered by the federal government and when it was paid?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I simply said that the method of thermal plant assistance was set up between the provincial government and this government. It is true that there was a death-bed repentance by the former federal minister of public works; but we claim full credit, and I think honestly so, for initially setting up this plan for thermal plants. The decision to burn oil at East Saint John was a decision taken by the then government of New Brunswick, over which I had no control, and it has been verified today by the present government contrary to the promises they made during the last election.

[Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert).]

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, before I commence the remarks I have to make this time I would, despite the expression of opinion which was exhibited last week, wish you a happy term in your new appointment as Deputy Speaker. I want to congratulate you upon your promotion from parliamentary secretary to the office of Deputy Speaker. I wish both you and the newly appointed Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn), a very happy sojourn in office, although being a politician I hope I will be forgiven if I express the wish that your term in office might be brief.

We were all looking forward with a good deal of anticipation to the speech from the throne. I regret very much that, in the main, the speech from the throne ignores the economic health of the Canadian community. It is true there was an effort to play Santa Claus by handouts to this section or that section of the population. However, in the main, there is no recognition of the serious plight in which our economy now finds itself. I was amazed to hear our Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) say the other day, as recorded on page 87 of Hansard, that 75 per cent of the Canadian income tax payers are paying less today than they were when this government came into office.

I contend that this situation does not arise as a result of amendments to the Income Tax Act or a lowering of taxation levels. I contend that if his claim is accurate it is because Canadians are no longer as prosperous as they once were. Boasting of the fact that 75 per cent of the income tax payers today are paying less income tax indicates, in the light of the limited changes that have taken place in our taxation structure, that the incomes of the people have been reduced to a deplorable degree.

The economy was not really dealt with in the speech from the throne, and there is hardly any mention of the still serious problem of mass unemployment. In so far as agriculture is concerned there was what is, in effect, a handout. There was nothing for the unemployed, and in so far as the average businessman is concerned there was no hope for a growing Canadian economy. A lot has been said in recent months about the government keeping its election promises. There is one over-riding and important election promise that has yet to be fulfilled and the speech from the throne gives no indication of any intention of attempting to fulfil it, namely the promise, that as long as our present Prime Minister is prime minister no one in Canada will suffer from unemployment.

I was most amazed today when a minister of the crown referred to the activities of the government as "recession halting". That is a new terminology in Canadian political annals and I hope the attitude of the government will be on a more optimistic and positive note in the future than merely expressing the aim and hope of being engaged in the practice of recession halting.

Many of us had expected an early election. I see little in the speech from the throne that causes me to believe that an early election is imminent. I agree with my house leader, that after a budget has been presented, as far as we are concerned an election can take place at any time. The more time the government gives us to organize across the country, naturally the happier we shall be.

Many political analysts agree with me that if an election were held very shortly it would in all likelihood result in a minority government, because no matter how you analyse the constituencies of Canada, if you give any one of the major contending parties all the benefits of the doubt you do not emerge with a clear majority for any party.

I am not particularly alarmed at this prospect. A minority government, while it results in uncomfortable situations for the government in office, often means that the common people of Canada receive great blessings. This has happened when we have had a minority government in office or a government with a very narrow majority.

We are completely confident that our hopes and expectations in an election campaign will be realized. To support our hopes we have only to look at the by-elections held last week in the province of Ontario. In all the constituencies except the two in the city of Toronto the increase in the support of our party exceeded the increase in the Liberal party support.

It is significant that in each of the five ridings the Conservatives lost by 11 or 12 per cent. However, in the three constituencies outside Toronto our gain was much greater than was the gain of the Liberal party. With regard to the two ridings in Toronto, Eglinton we lost 3 per cent, the Tories lost 12 per cent and the Liberals gained 15 per cent; and in Beaches the Tories lost 11 per cent, we gained 4 per cent and the Liberals gained 7 per cent.

How is it that in these two ridings in the city of Toronto the Liberals made gains while our gains were most modest, whereas in the other three ridings we far outstripped the Liberals? We have evidence that immediately prior to voting day in these two Toronto ridings there was, apart from the advertisement in the Globe and Mail, a door-to-door distribution of a leaflet which was professed to be put out by the communist party of Canada. The leaflet urged support for the New Democratic party candidate.

In addition, we have plenty of evidence that there was almost a complete house-to-house telephone canvass made in which the message was, "This is the communist party calling, and we would urge you to vote for the New Democratic party candidate". I know that the communist party in the city of Toronto does not have the resources to conduct this kind of campaign and I deliberately charge the Liberal machine of the city of Toronto with conducting this campaign and pretending that it was the communist party relaying this message to the voters in both Eglinton and Beaches.

May I assure the Liberals that if they once again undertake this below-the-belt type of campaigning we have a people's political machine, and they may well find that there will be telephone calls saying, "This is the communist party calling. We urge you to support the Liberal candidate". We can play this game as well as the Liberal party.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Everybody knows the communist party does not support us.

Mr. Regier: The major issue facing our people, of course, is that of our own and in fact the survival of civilization itself. This is our first consideration. In this regard I am very happy to share the sentiments expressed by His Excellency the Governor General in the speech from the throne when the said:

> While the world outlook contains elements of continuing danger, there are some grounds for cautious optimism.

My observations at the United Nations lead me to believe that to be a most accurate assessment of the world situation as it now prevails. At the United Nations one cannot help noting how the newly emerging nations of Africa and Asia are beginning to take over. They constitute a majority of the population of the world and they have every right to exercise their influence.

We notice a growing resentment on the part of the major powers who see that their own influence is lessening. They are bitterly disappointed. They feel that the peoples of Asia and Africa are most ungrateful to them. After all, both Washington and Moscow have the basic concept that the rest of the world owes them great appreciation. The rest of the world does not share this proffered benevolency of either Moscow or Washington.

We can expect that in the months, if not in the years, ahead there is going to be a growing tendency on the part of the major powers to limit and curtail the growing power of the United Nations. I hope Canada will never support either Moscow or Washington, or General de Gaulle or any of the other major power leaders if and when they make moves that would curtail and lessen the growing influence of the United Nations toward the cause of world peace.

I regret that Canada's contribution to world peace is not what it might be. I admire the tremendous efforts that have been made in this regard by the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green). I should like to repeat a plea I have made previously to him, that when he is unable to represent Canada abroad he do his best to obtain as his spokesman the best person he can get. It is hardly good enough to have ministers without portfolio, or other people who may have good intentions but who have not the ability of the minister, attempting to represent as important a country as Canada in international matters.

I have been at the United Nations for at least a limited period during each of the preceding four years. I believe that only the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Pearson) has a better record than I in this regard. I regret to note that the prestige of our country is rapidly and decidedly declining.

Mr. Churchill: Where?

Mr. Regier: At the United Nations.

Mr. Churchill: Oh, nonsense.

Mr. Regier: How can it be otherwise when we have a minister making very welcome speeches on the rostrum of the United Nations and when we have at the same time—and these people are no longer ignorant; they are not so stupid that they do not know what is happening in Canada—a Prime Minister who refuses to support publicly the attitudes expressed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and when we have a Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness) who goes out of his way to put the knife into the good expressions of Canadian attitudes that are being voiced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Mr. Churchill: Utterly wrong.

Mr. Harkness: That is complete nonsense.

Mr. Regier: The Minister of National Defence is so desperate that he is appealing to Canadians in uniform to break with all tradition and to become political and to expose themselves in the battle he has waged inside the ranks of the government.

Mr. Harkness: There is no justification whatever for such a statement.

Mr. Regier: Representatives of other nations know that we are a divided house on this matter and therefore while they listen to our Secretary of State for External Affairs with great interest, while they respect him and wish him well, they doubt very much whether he is speaking for Canada because they are aware of the refusal of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) to support him without question; they know very well that back home we have a Minister of National Defence who is conducting an aggressive campaign in order to defeat the objectives of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Churchill: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Regier: My time is very limited. At the end of my speech I should be happy to deal with the hon. gentleman's question if time permits. Let us consider the attitude expressed so ably by a member of the other place who is now the deputy leader of the Canadian delegation at the United Nations. I refer to the former minister of veterans affairs. His speech on the Peking government and the possibility of its admission to the United Nations was an excellent one. Most Canadians will agree with it. He repeated almost word for word what a former leader of mine, Mr. Coldwell, said in this house roughly eight years ago, namely that we ought to recognize the regime in Peking and demand that the people of Formosa be given the right to self-determination. Well, when it came to a decision, what did the Canadian government do? It failed to follow through. It failed to support its sentiments with action and Canada continued to straddle the fence and support the policy emanating from Washington.

What about aid to underdeveloped countries? Oh, it is easy enough for us to boast that we have met every legitimate demand placed upon us by the United Nations or to point out that we are spending money on international aid which, on a per capita basis, exceeds that offered by many other nations of the western world. But in relation to our ability to render effective international aid our efforts leave much to be desired.

The Liberal policy on nuclear weapons is, I contend, no better than the policy of the government. The policy of the government is one of confusion. We are not very sure what the policy is. This, I contend, has been the deliberate intention of the present government; they want to delay any announcement of policy until after the next election.

I contend that we in Canada have nuclear weapons today but this government has not the honesty, it has not the guts, to tell the Canadian people that we have nuclear weapons and then to go out and defend its policy.

Mr. Harkness: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has just made a statement which is really an echo of stories carried in newspapers to the effect that we have nuclear weapons in Canada. This was categorically denied by the Prime Minister and by myself. There is absolutely no foundation for any statement of that nature and I would therefore ask that the hon. member withdraw the allegation that there are nuclear weapons being held in Canada at the present time.

Mr. Regier: On that point of order, the minister has no right whatever to request that I withdraw my statement. He has the privilege of calling it a false statement but I have the right to make that statement as long as I believe it to be accurate. If I may, I should like to tell the minister what leads me to make this particular statement. I have some confidence in the good intentions of our Prime Minister—more, even, it may be, than a number of his own cabinet colleagues. Last fall the Prime Minister assured this house while he was being questioned by the Leader of the Opposition on the subject of nuclear weapons that although the decision would not be subject to the consent of parliament the government would not shrink from its responsibility if and when the time for action came.

Neither the Prime Minister nor the Minister of National Defence can make me believe that if action becomes necessary, if an attack actually comes, the right hon. gentleman would then assume his responsibility and send an ox cart to the heart of the United States to take delivery of nuclear weapons and bring them up to our Bomarc base at North Bay. I am sure the Prime Minister has a greater degree of responsibility than that. The minister is now telling us that we have no nuclear weapons in Canada. I say that I believe the minister's statement is false. It could be possible that the minister himself does not even know whether or not we have nuclear weapons here.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has just stated that my statement is false. It is contrary to the rules of this house to say that and I would ask you to have him withdraw it.

Mr. Regier: Once again, with regard to that point of order, I say I believe the statement of the minister to be false, and I contend I am within our rules in making that statement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is contrary to the rules of this house to accuse another member of deliberately making a false statement. I do not believe that the hon. member who has the floor has indicated that a false statement was deliberately made by the minister. He could, perhaps, assure the Chair that that was not his intention.

Mr. Regier: I am only too happy to do that, Mr. Speaker. I intended my latter remarks to indicate that the possibility does enter my mind that perhaps the minister himself is unaware whether or not we actually have nuclear weapons in Canada.

Mr. Harkness: On a question of privilege, I said categorically that there are no nuclear weapons in Canada. I am, I think, in a better position than anyone in Canada to know whether or not there are. Having stated categorically that there are no nuclear weapons in Canada, for the hon. member to say that what I have said is false is not permitted by the rules and I would ask for a complete withdrawal on his part of his statement that what I have just repeated is a false statement.

Mr. Regier: If it will make the minister happy I am perfectly prepared to withdraw the statement that he has stated a falsehood. I believe that in his own mind he has not done so. But I am not bound to accept the minister's statement that there are no nuclear weapons in Canada. I have the right to my own opinion as to whether or not nuclear weapons are actually on Canadian territory at the present time. I come back again to this point. If there were not, this government would be proven to be completely irresponsible in that they had refused even to place an order for conventional weapons to supply our Bomarc missile sites.

Before concluding I should like to mention a few other problems. I hope this government, prior to holding an election, will consider its obstinate refusal to view favourably the pleas of retired civil servants. The government has gone a long way towards adjusting pensions for civil servants who will be pensioned off in the years to come. An increase was given in 1953 of 7 per cent, in 1956 of 7 per cent, in 1957 of 6 per cent and in 1960 of 6 per cent, but the government has refused to pay compensation to those civil servants already retired, many of whom are suffering severe hardship even though they know there is $1½ billion in the pension fund. They feel that some of this is rightfully theirs and they believe they ought to receive consideration.

It is also my hope that the government will "call off the dogs" in regard to so-called Chinese illegal immigrants. The government's policy in this respect is a disgraceful one. We may remember that a certain Herr Hitler, upon finding one of his officers killed by a sniper in a German occupied village, be it Russia or elsewhere, would take revenge on the village by demanding the production of the culprit within a limited number of hours, or let the village suffer the consequences. The consequences at times were a wiping out of the whole village on the following day. Communist countries have been found guilty of using the same terror tactics but never before, to my knowledge, has a Canadian community, or a section of a Canadian community, been asked to "produce the culprit or else".

The government has dragged through the mud the good reputation of tens of thousands of loyal Canadian citizens of Chinese descent, and I very much regret that one of the members of parliament has been aggressive and active in helping to smear people of the same origin as himself.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Regier: I have also been disgusted to read reports in Vancouver, reports on good authority, that lawyers are asking for $1,500 or $2,000 as fees in order to assist in bringing in an immigrant, while the local member of parliament has to do the leg work. The procedure is very simple but the lawyers are taking advantage of the situation and are offering protection at the rate of $55,000. While I am dealing with this subject I wonder how the search warrants are being obtained for raids on private homes, and I hope the Prime Minister will take a very careful look at some of the practices that are being carried out. I know the task is difficult, but when the R.C.M.P. and the Department of Citizenship and Immigration have a difficult task they should not resort to unheard of practices in Canada, demanding of a whole community that they produce the culprits or else suffer the consequences as a community. That practice should be terminated at a very early date.

National unity has become a topic of discussion within recent years. I come from the province of British Columbia. Down through the years we in that province have had happy associations with our French Canadian fellow citizens residing in the province of Quebec. We are not alarmed by the so-called separatist movement. We do not believe it reflects the opinion of the vast majority of the people of Quebec. However, if they want to go it alone, British Columbians will not make any effort to stop them. We shall wish them godspeed and good luck, and we shall work as neighbours with them in the future.

Mr. Cardiff: Does the hon. member speak for British Columbia?

Mr. Regier: I am speaking on my own behalf, but believe I also express the sentiment of the vast majority in the province of British Columbia.

Mr. Cardiff: That is a little better.

Mr. Regier: We have no desire to hinder or impede the aspirations of the people living in the province of Quebec. We only ask in return that our rights be respected. We, too, entered confederation upon certain terms and conditions and we have always received respect for those rights. We trust our compatriots in the province of Quebec will continue to grant respect for those rights. On this issue we share most of their sentiments in that we believe the people of each province should continue to enjoy certain basic rights that are native not only to their blood but to their tradition and choice.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. member answer a question, as he agreed to do?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time having expired, the unanimous consent of the house would be required. Is that consent forthcoming?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the hon. member whether he will name the countries whose representatives at the United Nations have indicated to him that Canada's prestige has been lowered? What are these communist countries?

Mr. Regier: I wish to assure the minister that I hardly ever had even a nodding acquaintance with representatives of communist countries while attending sessions of the United Nations. However, I would say that without exception all the delegates to whom I had the privilege of speaking about Canada in New York said to me that Canada's prestige, because of our lack of definite policy, has continued to decrease.

Mr. Churchill: What countries? The hon. member has not answered the question. I asked what countries are represented by these people to whom he has been talking.

Mr. Regier: I am willing to defend Canada's attitude when I am outside Canada. I am even willing to defend this government. But the minister is asking too much when he asks me to label other countries.

Mr. Churchill: Just libel Canada.

Mr. G. C. Fairfield (Portage-Neepawa): The Prime Minister stated in his speech on Tuesday that he noticed a great lack of enthusiasm on the part of the Liberal party to discuss agricultural questions when members of that party were speaking in western Canada. In fact, they seem to have left the appraisal of agricultural policy up to the farm unions and the federation of agriculture. Perhaps it is just as well. The hon. member for Essex East is not in the chamber, but I must tell him that he has not got the sympathetic ear of Canadian farmers, either in the east or the west.

I should like to deal with one item which appeared in the throne speech, and I quote:

> The success of the recent "Resources for Tomorrow" conference demonstrated the benefits of co-operation between governments in this field. My government, in consultation with the governments of the ten provinces, is examining suggestions made at that conference for co-operative measures to encourage the wise management and multiple use of Canada's natural resources.

The Prime Minister made a speech in Regina, I believe in February, 1958, in which he stated it was the intention of this party, if elected, to set up a national conference on conservation. This promise was implemented by a meeting of federal and provincial cabinet members on November 17, 1958 in order to examine ways and means of setting up such a conference.

In August of 1959 a secretariat was set up in order to determine the terms of reference. Their planning finally resulted in the conference which was held in Ottawa last October and November. I believe a summation of this conference has been distributed to the public. I do not think I anticipated these events when I made the following comments in August of 1958 as found at page 3506 of Hansard of that year. At that time I stated as follows:

> It seems to me that a national conservation foundation, supported financially by this government and by private enterprise, could do for Canada what similar bodies are doing for other countries, and if truly national in its representation could offer logical and much needed means of bridging the gap between the efforts of federal and provincial governments and private bodies concerned in the field of wildlife management.

On examination of this summation which I have obtained of the conference held in October and November we find some tentative recommendations which have been made. For instance, on page 2 we find the following:

> Many of the research problems would be substantially met by the adoption of the proposal of the research workshop—establishment of a renewable resources research council.

At page 5 of this summation we find the following:

> A national, interprovincial body in the resources field, perhaps a natural resources council should be established with provision for federal and provincial finance and participation, and with a staff of its own.

At page 7 of the same document we find the following:

> A national resources council should be established consisting of appointees, governmental and non-governmental, of both federal and provincial governments, whose functions would include:
>
> (a) Delineating resource regions and setting up, where considered desirable, ancillary regional resource councils crossing provincial boundaries if necessary;
> (b) Advising the government of Canada on national policies;
>
> (c) Suggesting to provinces programs for resource use and development;
>
> (d) Providing services such as libraries, information, research and engineering;
> (e) Allocating funds provided by the government of Canada to assist provinces with approved development programs.

One thing which I find is of quite a great deal of interest and which would be of great value in broadening the scope of interest in this council is to be found at page 9 of this summation where we find the following:

> To be effective, this agency should be representative of the federal and provincial governments, commercial interests, universities and associations.

The studies of the conference on water and wildlife are of most particular interest, as far as I am concerned and I think to many other communities in Manitoba and throughout Canada. I am sorry to bore the house with so many quotations but I do not think this document has been very widely read and yet it is an important document. As found at page 28 of this summation I quote these two guide lines:

> 1. A more positive stance in resource development matters is required in Canada. This is particularly so in "official circles" in Ottawa but is also true in the provinces.
> 2. The development and management of the water resources of Canada should be based on multi-purpose integrated planning which takes account of the needs for domestic and industrial water supply, recreation, irrigation, power, flood control, navigation, pollution abatement and other uses.

Again at page 29 we find the following, and I may say that this is a most significant paragraph as far as I can ascertain:

> There is widespread feeling that federal participation in water resource development is based on a series of ad hoc arrangements administered by several departments without any effective co-ordination between them. Legislation and administration is frequently negative rather than positive —i.e., it is designed to protect the status quo rather than to search out and encourage possibilities for a more rapid development of resources.

In this respect there is a problem that affects my riding and probably affects the whole of central Manitoba as well as the city of Winnipeg somewhat. The federal government has agreed in principle with the government of Manitoba on a system or plan of flood control of the Assiniboine river valley. This has been a great problem to that part of the country for many years. Preliminary investigations on this subject were begun in 1945 and have been continued up to this time. This entails the construction of a dam at Shellmouth and a diversion at Portage la Prairie or a dam at Holland, Manitoba. It seems now that the provincial government would rather have the diversion at Portage than the dam at Holland because of the better cost benefits of the diversion at Portage la Prairie. I have lived in this area for some time now and there is no doubt of the necessity of control of flooding of the Assiniboine river, but, as referred to in the last paragraph which I read from the summation of the conference, I believe this is really an "ad hoc" arrangement.

Here we shall have a ditch 600 feet wide, starting at the Assiniboine river and going northward to lake Manitoba, a distance of 18 miles or 19 miles. It practically slits Canada in half. It will have seven railroad bridges and only three highway bridges across it. It is intended to carry the excess flood waters of the Assiniboine river into lake Manitoba. Those who are in authority say that this is a method of conservation of water, that they are going to store it in lake Manitoba; but as a conservation project, it seems rather odd to me, because even with fair-sized floods they admit it will raise the waters of lake Manitoba only a matter of inches. At any rate, when it reaches lake Manitoba of what use it is going to be from there on I do not know because from there most of it goes into Hudson bay and the Arctic ocean. They contemplate digging another ditch between Portage la Prairie and Winnipeg from lake Manitoba back to the Assiniboine in order to carry some water from lake Manitoba to assist Winnipeg in draining their sewage down the Assiniboine river into the Red river.

But what I fear about this diversion and I am afraid that many others in my area fear it as well—that it may fail as a flood control measure. At the lake end of the diversion the country is extremely flat for three or more miles and in fact it is about on a level with the surface of the lake. At times in the spring here, with strong north winds and when the lake is backing up, you will see shockingly great ice jams up against the south end of the lake, sometimes as high as 30 to 40 feet. When the water is starting to drain out this diversion into the lake and then strikes these dams of ice, in order to protect the community from flooding which would occur the dikes of the diversion, this would necessitate closure of the gates at the entrance of the diversion at the river. In other words, this would be a $12 million failure. I have asked engineers what they would do about it and they have said that they would go out and dynamite these ice jams that occur. I have never seen any ice jams broken up satisfactorily by dynamite.

When one considers the splitting in half of a whole community, in fact, practically the whole province, the cost of valuable farm lands for the project, the certainly doubtful water conservation benefits and, above all, the possibility of failure of the project as I have explained, one wonders whether the construction of the Holland dam, though more costly, would not in the long run be of more benefit to the community and the country. It would be a true water conservation project with satisfactory flood control as well. One difference between the two, and it is quite substantial, is that the dam is more expensive. The only other difference is that instances of the Assiniboine breaking its dikes in its lower reaches and flooding the countryside would, with the dam, occur once in 80 years while with the diversion it would be once every 144 years, if the diversion works. This is my only apprehension and it certainly has not been allayed by any studies I have made of the subject.

My second interest in the report of this conference has to do with wildlife conservation and management. We all know the history of the disappearance of the carrier pigeon which occurred in our grandfathers' day and the near extinction of the buffalo which was prevented only at the last minute. As stated in this report, wildlife is a recreational resource and should be a public responsibility. Here are some of the goals as outlined in the summation on page 32:

1. Wildlife management will continue to be primarily a public responsibility.

2. No species should be allowed to become extinct through the instrumentality of man.

3. Management practices will not be nationally uniform, but will vary with local conditions and the requirements of various jurisdictions.

4. Ethical considerations are at least as important as economic considerations in wildlife management.

5. Ideal populations of wildlife species are those that will maintain themselves without serious disturbance to their environment and satisfy the public demand for recreation. Compatibility with other interests should be sought through mutual adjustment.

6. Adequate habitat is the quantity and quality of living space that will protect the production and distribution of ideal populations.

When one examines the figures, particularly of migratory waterfowl, one sees that the hunting pressure on this species is far more than they can stand, particularly in the United States. I think many hon. members have seen the figures and there is no point in reiterating them here. Upwards of two million duck stamps are issued per year in the United States and approximately 800,000 duck shooting licences are issued in Canada. With a population estimated at possibly 35 million ducks in North America, this means a great deal of pressure.

However, let us not forget that from the point of view of the tourist industry at least this is a tremendously important recreational resource. Here we find that despite all warnings we are depleting the capital stocks of breeding birds not only by hunting but by destroying the breeding areas by uncontrolled drainage. Despite our history of cycles of dry and wet years, this drainage has caused a permanent reduction of breeding areas, particularly in western Canada.

All of you are perhaps familiar with the results of the drought which occurred in the thirties. At that time the duck population became very dangerously low. Fortunately, people were so broke that they could not buy licences or shells to shoot ducks so there was not the same pressure on the capital breeding stock. This is not true at this time. In western Canada we seem to be entering a dry cycle and unfortunately, or possibly fortunately, because of the economic upsurge of the country at this time under the present government people are able to afford lots of ammunition and the pressure on these birds is extremely high.

Dr. Albert Hochbaum, an internationally renowned biologist, is in charge of the Delta waterfowl research station in Manitoba and he states unequivocally that the scattered small sloughs and potholes in western Canada make up in total the most important breeding grounds for ducks probably anywhere in the world. I am happy to see that there have been consultations between Canadians and their counterparts in the United States with regard to the preservation of the integrity of the remaining areas, possibly through the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act in Canada. Perhaps this can be done on a co-operative basis between the United States and Canada and without embarrassment to the farming operations of the areas involved and perhaps even with some subsidization to the owners of the land in question.

We have got to understand that this is not only a national but an international question. We not only have to replace some of these breeding areas but we also have to change some of our hunting regulations. Many hunters will recall that in the past two years we have restricted the shooting of canvasback and redhead ducks because their numbers are extremely low but it requires a trained biologist to distinguish these birds even at close hand. Certainly untrained hunters, and that includes most of us, cannot recognize these birds in the air. The regulations must recognize the varying habits and reproductive abilities of different species of waterfowl. In poor years this may lead to regional limitations as a protection for those places frequented by the rarer species.

Many hunters in western Canada say, "Well, if we do not shoot them someone down the line will". There is interprovincial and interstate jealousy regarding the sharing of the waterfowl supply. Publicly sponsored shooting preserves have become a blot on the management of waterfowl in the whole of North America. The Milwaukee Journal of October 12, 1960, had this to say about the publicly sponsored killing of Canada geese at the Horicon wildlife refuge:

> Goose shooting at Horicon does not qualify as a sport. It is a slaughter. If this is what waterfowl refuges were created for, then we are no better than savages.

In this context we must gauge the need for the continuation of this species of wildlife against the recreational needs of the public, always remembering, of course, that the supply of waterfowl is not inexhaustible. In my opinion Canada has an opportunity to take the lead in shaping a modern plan of waterfowl management that is based on the life facts, and needs, of the different species of ducks and geese. In this way we may promote by example—we know, of course, at whom this is aimed—a pattern of wildfowl management that will influence practice and procedure in other regions of the annual range of waterfowl.

(Translation):

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, in keeping with a long established custom in this house, I should like first of all to congratulate the mover of the address, the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Bourdages) and the seconder, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne). I am glad also to take this opportunity to congratulate you sincerely on your appointment to the post of Deputy Speaker and chairman of committees. We are sure you will ably fulfil your duties in this important post you will occupy during this session.

I should like also to extend my congratulations to the new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn).

I hope that, during this session, the new minister, the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn), will show me the same consideration as did his predecessor.

These, Mr. Speaker, are all the bouquets I have to toss at the government, at least for the time being. I propose to find fault with the speech from the throne, as is the right and duty of any member of the opposition. However, I certainly do not propose to stoop to the level reached by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) last Saturday when addressing a group of Conservative ladies, here in this city, or when, during his speech on the address last Monday and Tuesday in this house he attacked certain persons.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, I cannot allow to go unchallenged the statement made earlier this afternoon by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) when he said that the first project under a joint federal-provincial program for thermal power plants was the building of the East Saint John plant. Hon. members in this house know very well that statement after statement was made last year by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Dinsdale) and the former minister of mines and technical surveys to the effect that the federal government could not contribute to the construction of the East Saint John thermal plant, because that plant was built to use oil, not coal. Furthermore, the hon. member charged that the present government of New Brunswick was not keeping its electoral promises. The facts are that tenders were called only a few weeks ago by the New Brunswick electric power commission for the construction of the first phase of a thermal power plant to be built at Grand Lake. This plant will use coal only. This plant is designed to use 100,000 tons of coal a year in order to help the coal miners of New Brunswick. One hundred thousand tons is equal to 10 per cent to 12 per cent of the total coal production of the province of New Brunswick.

We have reached the fourth day of the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. This, according to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Diefenbaker) own statement was supposed to be a long one. The facts are that the speech from the throne opening the fifth session of Canada's twenty fourth parliament was somewhat shorter than the one which opened the fourth session on November 17, 1960. If the Prime Minister's statement is to be accepted, I suggest we cannot help but give some serious thought to those unconfirmed reports circulated on parliament hill on opening day to the effect that the speech from the throne had been toned down by some last minute deletions.

In other words, those social and respect-paying visits to the Prime Minister's office on the opening day, first by a group of 60 members of his party and later on by a different and smaller group, could very well have been anything but social calls or respect-paying visits. No wonder that what was intended to be a long speech from the throne became a somewhat shorter speech than last year. No wonder the customary advance copies of the throne speech for the press, radio and television were suddenly withdrawn.

As this session progresses we will be in a position to judge the sincerity of the government when it implements, through new legislation or by other means, the measures described in the speech from the throne. In reviewing briefly the speech from the throne delivered on November 17, 1960 at the opening of the fourth session of the present parliament, I noticed certain things which I feel should be brought to the attention of this house. On page 3 of Hansard for November 17, 1960, we read the following:

> Among other measures in the long range program, you will be requested to approve a number of major projects of national development. The largest of these will be the development of the water power on the Columbia river. Agreement has been reached with the government of the United States on a plan for the co-operative development of the use of these waters and a treaty will be submitted to you for approval in due course. You will also be asked to take the action necessary to fulfil Canada's part in implementing it.

When asked by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), as reported on page 16 of Hansard for January 19 of this year, whether it was the intention of the government to submit the Columbia river treaty to a committee of the house for examination during the present session, the Prime Minister replied that there was no intention of doing so. I ask now, how can we believe, how can we rely, on what we read in the speech from the throne under this government?

Again on the same page of Hansard for November 17, 1960, we find the following words:

> A bill to revise the Immigration Act will be laid before you.

Those words were read by His Excellency the Governor General in the Senate chamber. There was a solemn commitment on the part of the government to undertake to revise that very important act.

Mr. Fulton: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Robichaud: When I am finished, Mr. Speaker, because my time is limited. Once again, the government shirked its responsibility, and on the second day of this session announced new immigration regulations when it had already promised to change the act and to do so with parliamentary approval.

Mr. Fulton: Does the hon. member know—

Mr. Robichaud: On the same page of Hansard we find this:

> Amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act will be placed before you to safeguard the basic purpose of the act, to strengthen the fund and to correct abuses which have developed in practice.

After the longest session in Canada's history, the government did not have the courage to face a critical situation, an unavoidable situation, which it had created by its lack of policy and its mismanagement of the nation's business. This government took office in 1957 after years of progress and growth under the previous Liberal administration. Anyone who reads the present speech from the throne cannot help but realize there is a general election in the offing in this country and that we have here a government which is still unaware of the fact this country needs a national program, a program which can step up the rate of economic expansion and minimize unemployment in this country.

The speech from the throne, as well as the speeches delivered by the mover and seconder of the address, are nothing but self-congratulatory documents—speeches congratulating the government because in December, 1961 and January, 1962 the unemployment figures are lower than for the same period last year, a period when the unemployment record was the highest in Canadian history. There is very little in the speech from the throne which could give assurance that this government is prepared to initiate at long last a policy or a program which could result in stepping up the rate of economic growth and minimize the unemployment problem.

What is there in the speech from the throne for the Atlantic provinces? What is there for these provinces which in 1961 were relatively worse off in relation to Canada as a whole than they were in 1958 or 1960? In the first 11 months of 1961, while the rest of Canada seemed to be holding its own in average unemployment, the Atlantic provinces were showing an increase of 11.7 per cent. The slow recovery of the Atlantic region is proof that something must be done for its development; some drastic measures must be introduced to launch a regional development plan calling for large scale federal assistance to local industries, and a larger public works program by the central government.

What is being done about those very important promises embodied in the 1957 Atlantic resolutions? What about resolution No. 1, which reads as follows:

> A national development program of federal assistance for developing the resources of the Atlantic provinces, having regard to their differing needs and varying financial capabilities.

What about resolution No. 2?

> Industrial decentralization by placing a more equitable share of defence contract expenditures within the Atlantic provinces by the establishment of crown corporations; and by encouraging private enterprises to locate in the area and to encourage the processing here of our natural resources as a result of special fiscal consideration.

What about resolution No. 5?

> Capital projects program to provide federal capital assistance for provincial projects designed to enlarge the basic economy of the area.

Notwithstanding the position taken by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae) in this house on January 23, Tuesday of this week, I say that those promises embodied in the Atlantic resolutions have not yet been redeemed and there is nothing in the speech from the throne which indicates that they will be honoured in the present session.

The hon. member for York-Sunbury spoke in complete contradiction of the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Fleming), who in Fredericton on October 22 last made a review of the Atlantic resolution promises and claimed that those not yet redeemed would be honoured at the next session. The hon. member for York-Sunbury gave to the federal government credit for the establishment of an electronic plant in Campbellton. The people of New Brunswick know that the plant under consideration in Campbellton, New Brunswick, is being financed by the government of the province of New Brunswick and the company's operation will be partly financed by a guaranteed loan from the province.

The hon. member for York-Sunbury has forgotten that during the Liberal administration, right in his own backyard, only 12 miles from Fredericton, the federal government spent from $60 million to $70 million for the construction of Camp Gagetown, and during those years of construction from 3,000 to 5,000 men were employed in the construction of that camp.

The hon. member, while mentioning different airports where some work has been done in recent years, seems to have forgotten Cornwallis in Nova Scotia, Greenwood and the Halifax dockyard. He seems to have forgotten the Chatham air base, St. Marguerite, the munitions depot at Renous, and again in his own constituency, the munitions depot at McGivney. He also seems to have forgotten the air base at Summerside.

There is nothing in the speech from the throne leading to the establishment of a national development fund which would result in the expansion of industrial capital in the area. Such a fund could operate jointly with provincial governments and result in the expansion of secondary industries in the Atlantic provinces. It could also take care of those capital projects which are essential and which must be undertaken if the Atlantic region is to share in the creation of lasting assets required to bring the Atlantic economy in line with that of the rest of Canada.

A situation where unemployment remains 75 per cent higher and where incomes are 40 per cent lower than the rest of Canada cannot be accepted and must not be accepted as incurable. If such countries as Britain,

Italy and Norway are able to cope, and to cope successfully, with similar situations, why should we in Canada allow such conditions to prevail?

On October 23 last the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) saw fit to release a statement on the Chignecto canal. This statement, ruling out construction of this long awaited project, was based on what the minister called a special study which had indicated that it would be "very unsound economics" to proceed with the project at this time.

What is still to be found out is, what kind of study has been carried out and by whom? Everyone in this house recalls the announcement made in June, 1960 by the Minister of Forestry, then premier of New Brunswick, who stated, as reported in the Chronicle-Herald for June 22, 1960:

> The premier told newsmen that his government proposes to share in the payment of up to 50 per cent of the cost of a study of the feasibility of the Chignecto canal, from an engineering standpoint "in the light of modern conditions and in relation to proposed routes".
> He would make the offer to the federal government, which would be asked to pay the balance of the cost of the engineering study.

On the same day, June 22, 1960, as reported at page 5242 of Hansard, the Minister of Public Works had this to say:

> In reply to the hon. member for Charlotte, may I say that after consulting many times with Premier Hugh John Flemming, and the government of the province of New Brunswick, having undertaken to pay one half of the cost thereof the federal government has agreed to a survey being proceeded with to determine the feasibility of building the Chignecto canal.

Premier Robichaud of New Brunswick, as soon as he assumed power in New Brunswick after the June 27 election of that year, made it known in no uncertain terms that his government would honour the commitments made by the previous administration and that his government was prepared to pay one half of the cost of the Chignecto survey.

What results did we get? On October 21 last, the Prime Minister, in an interview in Fredericton stated in referring to the Chignecto survey that there would be a determination shortly.

As reported in the Telegraph-Journal of Monday, October 23, Mr. Diefenbaker said:

> "A very careful and comprehensive survey was undertaken to ascertain the economic possibilities" of the canal. He was unaware whether the survey had ended. When the study was complete the public works minister would give his views on the matter.

I repeat, the Prime Minister said he was unaware whether the survey had ended. Here was the Prime Minister, on Saturday evening in Fredericton unaware whether the survey had ended, and on Monday, October 23—48 hours later—the Minister of Public Works released as a shock to the entire population of the maritimes his most disappointing and unacceptable report.

Where was the survey promised prior to the June 1960 election in New Brunswick? The people of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia have a right to know what type of survey has been carried out in order to justify the minister's statement. On what basis could a cost of $142 million be determined if the promised engineering survey had not been carried out at all?

Had the Minister of Public Works and the Prime Minister already forgotten a report which was tabled in the House of Commons on January 19, 1953, part of which reads as follows:

> The commission finds that at the present the economic returns to the Canadian people on the investment in the proposed South Saskatchewan river project are not commensurate with the cost.

This, however, did not prevent the present government from signing an agreement with the province of Saskatchewan for construction of this project on July 25, 1958.

How can we believe a Prime Minister who states on October 21, at a press interview, that he was unaware that a survey had ended, when as we have every reason to believe, only a few days before, the whole matter had been discussed by the cabinet and the Minister of Public Works had been instructed to prepare a statement on the whole matter?

How can be believe the same Prime Minister when a few weeks later in Charlottetown he tried to impress his audience by declaring that the long proposed causeway to link Prince Edward Island with the mainland was economically feasible? How could he know so little about the Chignecto canal and pretend to know so much about the causeway when, according to the Minister of Public Works' own admission in this house on January 22, no official or preliminary reports had been made available to the Prime Minister prior to his visit to Charlottetown on December 6 last?

The citizens of the maritime provinces have reacted to the bombshell dropped on them by the Minister of Public Works on October 23 last. The government cannot ignore the demand of the maritimes population and the Chignecto canal must become a reality.

The Prime Minister must be reminded again and again that no public project anywhere in Canada can do as much for an area as the Chignecto project can do for the Atlantic provinces. This offhand dismissal of the whole idea is not being accepted hands down by the citizens of the maritimes, and the present government has no right to base its appraisal on such an incomplete assessment of all factors, whether engineering or economical.

As I stated earlier, while the Canadian economy demonstrated some growth during 1961, it was not the stable and continuous growth which Canada enjoyed from 1950 to 1957. While during these years the gross national product increased at an average rate of 5.6 per cent annually, the facts are that since this government took office the average increase has been less than 1½ per cent annually.

What has been the performance of the Atlantic provinces in this supposedly booming year of 1961? According to statements which we hear every day in this house coming from the government side, we must accept it as a satisfactory situation. I have here a report produced by the Atlantic provinces economic council dated January, 1962, and this report gives a summary of the performance of the Atlantic region. Population increased by 1.8 per cent. Well, the federal government cannot take credit for that, I am sure. The labour force went up by 4.4 per cent. Here again, no credit can be taken by the government. It is true that employment itself increased by 3.6 per cent, but, at the same time, unemployment went up by 11.7 per cent during the period. Is that a satisfactory situation?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Premier Robichaud thinks things are good.

Mr. Robichaud: Indeed, if it were not for the foresight and the action of the provincial government of New Brunswick, in the Atlantic provinces, unemployment would be up by 14 or 15 per cent.

Mr. Stewart: Nonsense. Give the figures.

Mr. Robichaud: I am giving the figures. These figures have been produced as a result of a survey made by APEC. Farm cash income, down 5.8 per cent as compared with 1960; fish landings, down 6.6 per cent; pulpwood, down 28.7 per cent.

Mr. Stewart: Why didn't you set the price a little higher? That is up to the provincial government.

Mr. Robichaud: Ask the Minister of Forestry what he did on that matter when he was premier of New Brunswick. He was there for eight years. He had plenty of time to do it. Perhaps for the same reason as was stated earlier by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert—he had no responsibility. When it was decided that oil would be used in the East Saint John thermal plant, who was responsible for the decision?

All the hon. member for Saint John-Albert had to do was to turn to his colleague, the Minister of Forestry, sitting two seats away from him, and ask him why.

To continue the report: coal, down 18.2 per cent—

Mr. Stewart: Read the rest of the figures —the ones further on.

Mr. Robichaud: I will. Manufacturing shipments, no change; housing construction, up 5.8 per cent. Here I would say that the federal government may take some credit. Building permits, up 16.3 per cent. Well, the federal government can certainly take no credit for that. Retail sales, up 1.2 per cent. They had to show an increase because the population had increased by 1.8 per cent. New car sales, 6.4 per cent.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Up.

Mr. Robichaud: Yes, but that is no help to the economy of New Brunswick or the Atlantic provinces.

The decline in Atlantic income derived from our primary industries such as farming, mining, forestry and fisheries is significant indeed. It is true that due to the foresight of our provincial governments, particularly in the province of New Brunswick, some action has in recent months been taken which leaves us with hopeful signs for the future. The facts are, however, that nowhere in the speech from the throne can we find any reference, any hope that this government will contribute or is prepared to contribute to the development of our resources in the Atlantic provinces having regard to their differing needs and varying financial capabilities.

I have on the order paper a resolution which calls for urgent consideration of the advisability of establishing an Atlantic provinces capital investment fund for the purpose of financing large projects essential to further economic development of the primary industries in these provinces. Such a fund, together with special low rate capital loans, provided by Ottawa for new industries, would result in promoting industrial development in the Atlantic area.

Nothing in the speech from the throne gives the least hope that the government intends to introduce measures which would create conditions to attract capital into the development of our national resources. The first and most effective measure to be connected with the establishment of a capital investment fund should be a provision for federal tax concessions to industries now established and willing to establish themselves in the Atlantic area.

There is an urgent need for such extraordinary measures in the Atlantic region, but the time has come for extraordinary national measures to make it possible for our area to participate equally and properly in the fundamental principle which led to confederation 95 years ago.

(Translation):

Not only has the speech from the throne ignored the urgent needs of a baffled people, but one wonders if the government of the day is not more interested in luring the electors than in trying to remedy the alarming conditions which face the Canadian people at the outset of this new year.

In spite of an accumulation of successive deficits which total over $2 billion, of the depletion of the unemployment insurance fund in which there was $900 million, the present government, in the four and a half years it has been in power, has been unable to ensure in Canada the progress, prosperity and prestige enjoyed by our country under the previous Liberal governments of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King and the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent—

Mr. Speaker: I wish to remind the hon. member that his time has expired.

(Text):

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): It is customary in a great many debates for hon. members to rise and say they have no intention of participating but are encouraged to do so by what has been said by a previous speaker. That, sir, is the situation under which I enter this debate, not only because of what was said by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) but because of statements made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier), the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson).

The speech we have just heard ended on a note presently being sounded by many prominent members of the opposition about an alleged decline in Canada's prestige throughout the world. Statements like that cannot be allowed to go without question, and I intend to deal with the matter. Just a few minutes ago we heard the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam talking about his experience at the United Nations. It seems that everybody who goes to the United Nations becomes an expert on that great world organization. The hon. member told us about conversations he had down there with people who expressed dislike for Canada's policy and for Canada itself. Apparently he agreed with those statements.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

When I asked him to name the countries whose representatives made such remarks, he declined to do so. He said everyone with whom he talked at the United Nations expressed dislike for Canada's policy, but he failed to name a single representative or country. He himself was quite prepared to downgrade Canada, and to proclaim in the House of Commons that in his opinion, and that of some of his dubious friends at the United Nations, Canada's prestige is not as high as it used to be. I repeat he did not name a single one of those representatives.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Churchill: Yesterday the hon. member for Vancouver East, also speaking about his experience with the United Nations—he in his own opinion being another expert with regard to that organization—said as reported in Hansard at page 168:

> —one of the greatest heartbreaks of my life is to see the way in which this government has brought Canada into international disrepute and made her the laughingstock of the nations of the world.

Now, sir, some of the best representatives in the House of Commons come from the great province of British Columbia. These two gentlemen represent the constituencies I have mentioned, but there are other representatives of that great province in this house and I do not know a single person in British Columbia who would downgrade Canada in the way these gentlemen did yesterday and today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: That is not in the tradition of British Columbia, a province which has been in the forefront of activities aimed at national unity and keeping the prestige of Canada high throughout the world. I regret that the province should now, through the mouths of these two representatives, be disturbed, as we are disturbed, over expressions which would lead to the discredit of our great country. Of course the stage was set a few days ago by none other than the Leader of the Opposition who, with all the experience he has had as a former secretary of state for external affairs, and with his experience in international affairs, went so far as to lend the weight of his influence to downgrading Canada, and engaged in casting aspersions at the present Secretary of State for External Affairs. He set the tone and lesser lights followed it, but none of these gentlemen represent the opinion of Canadians. They are so far removed from the people that they have lost touch with the opinion of Canadians across the country.

One of the best representatives in the government at present is our esteemed colleague and long-time member of the House of Commons, the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He is the type of representative, who along with others from that great province, established the reputation of British Columbia in the House of Commons. He has been in the house since 1935 and was one of its most effective members during all the years he sat on the opposition benches. He is a man dedicated to the task of maintaining Canada's proud name in the international realm. He is dedicated to the pursuit of peace and the people of Canada recognize that and pay tribute to him for the great leadership he is showing in a very difficult sphere. He is struggling for peace.

An hon. Member: It is a pity his party would not follow suit.

Mr. Churchill: His party is right behind him in his efforts. The Secretary of State for External Affairs is struggling to achieve disarmament. We all know the history of the world during the last 30 or 40 years and the great difficulty there has been in maintaining peace, difficulty negotiating with communist countries, and difficulty pertaining to attempts to achieve disarmament. Yet, in the face of all the disappointments he has had throughout his lifetime, he is carrying a torch in this great endeavour to maintain peace in the world and to effect disarmament.

What man could pursue a greater cause in the face of the disappointment of earlier years? In spite of that the Leader of the Opposition, who served in the capacity of secretary of state for external affairs, attemps to discredit the present occupant of that office and, to my great regret, both inside and outside the house lends the weight of his experience and authority to suggest that Canada's influence in world affairs had decreased, the inference being that when he was secretary of state for external affairs Canada's international status was never greater.

I well remember the late Gordon Graydon, the former member for Peel, being our spokesman on external affairs, and the close co-operation that existed between the opposition and the government in the field of international affairs. The late Mr. Graydon supported the then secretary of state for external affairs, realizing the difficulties of his position and realizing that, for the benefit of Canada's stature in the world, the Canadian parliament should present a united front. That situation prevailed until the Suez crisis in 1956 when the then secretary of state for external affairs was not at his best. I will not recite the situation that prevailed in those days. I offered criticism, as did others of the action of our then secretary of state for external affairs. However, we did not downgrade Canada. We did not say that Canada's international reputation was destroyed because of the mistakes he made during that crisis. We pointed out those mistakes but we did not downgrade our own country.

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, Canada's stature in international affairs has never been higher than it is under the leadership of the greatest prime minister of our day, namely, the present Prime Minister. Who, among the leaders of the world, had the courage at the United Nations a year ago to stand up and lay before the United Nations and the world the situation with regard to Russia and the falseness of the Russian position in pretending that it is not an imperialist power and that it is not subjugating nations which have come within its sphere of influence? It was our Prime Minister who did that and he received world acclaim for so doing. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that Canada's stature in world affairs has not been diminished one iota, since this government took office.

Mr. Chevrier: It has been diminished.

Mr. Churchill: It now stands high among the nations of the world. Who are these people who are condemning Canada at the United Nations? A great many members of the House of Commons have travelled widely around the world. Every one of them, when he comes back home, tells of the great acclaim that is accorded Canada by people in countries of the world. Who are these representatives at the United Nations, these unnamed people, who are decrying Canada? I suspect it is some of the people who go down there from the New Democratic party—the old and defunct C.C.F. party—who have been decrying Canada and then that somebody perhaps has agreed with them, thinking they represent Canada.

Mr. Winch: Ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Churchill: They are not good representatives of Canada abroad. I know that you yourself, Mr. Speaker, have travelled very widely. I suggest that if you go to any country in the world, outside of the iron curtain countries, you will find that the name of Canada is held in the greatest esteem and for very good reasons. There is no obligation undertaken by Canada under the United Nations that she has not fulfilled. I ask hon. gentlemen opposite this: Have you already forgotten the war in Korea when Canadian soldiers, airmen and representatives of the navy played their full part? Have you already forgotten our troops who are in the Gaza strip between Israel and Egypt and who have been there in rotation for years performing their duty in behalf of maintaining peace? Have you already forgotten our men who are in constant danger in the Congo? Have you forgotten our men who have been standing guard in Europe for so many years?

Canada has been playing her part in all international affairs where assistance has been required of a military nature and has similarly played her part where assistance has been required on the economic plane. Canada has never failed to pay her share of the cost of the United Nations, has never failed to respond to requests for food for the underdeveloped countries, has never declined to assist the various other operations conducted by United Nations bodies, whether it is with regard to medical care, health education or providing educational opportunities.

There is no field in which Canada has not been playing her part internationally. We are one of the leading members of NATO, an organization which is set up and maintained in order to preserve our freedom. I may mention the Colombo plan. My hon. friends opposite can share with us in any credit that is due Canada under the Colombo plan and I may say that a great deal of credit is due. We co-operated with them in days gone by when they proposed appropriations for the Colombo plan and they have co-operated with us similarly. Under the Colombo plan Canada has played her full part with other nations of the world in assisting underdeveloped countries.

Just a year ago I had the good fortune to be in India at the official opening of the Canada-India atomic reactor in Bombay. Full praise was given to Canada's assistance in that operation by Prime Minister Nehru, by representatives of his government and by the people who were assembled there on that occasion. I had the good fortune to go into the state of Madras where, under the Colombo plan, Canadians and Indian engineers and the people of India have constructed great hydroelectric works. The reception afforded our party is almost beyond description.

We travelled through some 15 to 20 Indian villages in the state of Madras, and at every village there was an arch expressing welcome to the Canadian representatives. At every village the villagers turned out to shout again and again, "Canada", "Canada". Thousands of people in that area know Canada and know what Canada has done. Ten thousand of them worked on the dams and on the works in that Kundah project. The word "Canada" is there on large boards. It is inscribed permanently on bronze plaques in buildings that have been erected at the power stations. The people of the province of Madras who worked on the dam and those who are benefiting from the electric power supply know the word "Canada", are happy to meet Canadians and speak highly of Canada.

The same is true in Pakistan. One of the finest hydroelectric developments in southern Asia is at Warsak. The great dam was built there by Canadian engineers and skilled Canadian technicians, with the assistance of the people of Pakistan themselves. It is a great monument to Canada's efforts to assist an underdeveloped nation. The people of Pakistan, from President Ayub Khan down, could not fully express their appreciation of all that Canada has done. You cannot tell me that Canada's name is not held high in India and Pakistan. There is no discrediting of Canada in those two countries.

The same is true in Europe. Not a country in western Europe has anything but good to say with regard to Canada. Canada is known in western Europe. There is the friendliest feeling for Canada in western Europe. You have only to go to France, Belgium or Holland, as I have done as the representative of the government on trade matters or with regard to the Canadian wheat board or as the representative of the government to attend memorial services at Vimy Ridge or at the cemeteries in Belgium and Holland, to find out that this is so. Irrespective of the particular field of endeavour that one represents, I have found nothing but respect and praise for Canada and an understanding of Canada which the people of these countries find it difficult to express.

You cannot tell me that Canada's name is not held in high regard in these countries. France, Belgium and Holland have not forgotten the contribution Canada has made in two wars. These things remain in the hearts of these people and, although there may be the odd criticism here and there of some action, basically the people of these countries have nothing but the highest regard for Canada and the Canadian people. On some other occasion I hope to inform the House of Commons of the great respect, care and attention which the people of these three countries that I have mentioned pay to the sacrifices made by Canadians in both world wars.

I put it to my friends here in the House of Commons that these reports about Canada's name being held in low regard at the United Nations have no resemblance to the truth whatsoever. Two or three disgruntled representatives of some country at the United Nations find fault with Canada over something that may have happened but that does not represent the feeling of the people of these various countries. All you have to do is to visit the countries to see what the reaction of the people is. Canada's name is held in high regard.

Canada is respected for several reasons. As I have said, Canada has played its full part with respect to its obligations under the United Nations and has been playing its full part in NATO all these years. Canada is recognized as a country that has no selfish ambitions for power and as one which makes no demands upon other nations. Canada is recognized as a generous country that is ready to help, ready to exchange students, ready to exchange technicians, ready to send doctors, nurses, scientists and engineers abroad to assist in countries which are developing.

Where in all of that is disrespect for Canada? Where in all of that has Canada lost her prestige throughout the world? She has not lost it at all. It is higher than it has ever been and those people in this country who pose as experts on the United Nations, as experts with regard to the opinion of people in other countries, are not fooling anyone at all. They do not know what the situation is in other countries of the world. Let them stand up here and tell us what country of the world is finding fault with Canada other than some iron curtain country. I challenge them to put the names of these countries before us. Oh, no, they do not want to embarrass those dubious friends of theirs at the United Nations. They do not want to get themselves involved in some way with some peculiar type somewhere in the world. Oh, no. They will not disclose that information. They will decry Canada. Canada is this, that and the other thing. Canada's reputation, they tell us, has been destroyed.

Not one word of that is true. Canada's reputation is high and Canada's prestige throughout the world will be retained under the leadership of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Foreign observers see in this country a stability of government which they did not recognize in 1956. They see a stability of government which they recognize as good for this country and good for the world.

Within the British commonwealth of nations Canada's position is still the same and still assured. There is the greatest friendliness within that organization. Our party has always stood for a strong commonwealth of nations. Not so with the Liberal party across the way. I pointed out in 1956 that I had gone to the trouble of reading all the speeches that had been made by the Leader of the Opposition when he was secretary of state for external affairs. I kept notes of all his speeches to see on what occasions he had mentioned the commonwealth. He almost never mentioned the commonwealth or did so simply by way of an aside if there was to be a commonwealth conference. I examined all his speeches in the House of Commons and he never mentioned the commonwealth unless in response to a question. That represents the stand of the Liberal party with regard to the commonwealth. On the other hand, our party has always been strongly in favour of a strong commonwealth. We have supported the commonwealth and will continue to do so.

I hope there will be an end in this debate or subsequently to these disparaging remarks about Canada's prestige in world affairs, these disparaging remarks with regard to one of the greatest members of the House of Commons, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, these disparaging remarks with regard to the leadership afforded by the Prime Minister. This is not the way in which Canada should present herself to the world. We can have all sorts of differences locally—and there are plenty of things on which to differ—but as far as world opinion and international affairs are concerned we should show a united front. That is not being done at the present time in the light of what was said by the Leader of the Opposition just the other day. This is not good for Canada and no one knows better than the Leader of the Opposition the damage that can be done to Canada's reputation abroad by statements such as he made in the house the other day.

I suggest that if the name of Canada, a country which has given so much in the past and which is continuing to make such a great contribution at the present time, is to be maintained as it has been down through the years responsible Canadians must not downgrade our country. For a small country Canada has made proportionately as great a sacrifice during the last 40 years as any country in the world and Canada is prepared to continue in all the efforts that are now being made to defend ourselves in case of necessity, to negotiate in order to preserve the peace and to lend all our efforts for the preservation of peace. Let us not forget our young men scattered throughout the world at the present time and our young men in Canada who are standing on guard hour after hour in case of necessity. Canada is playing her full part and Canada's name should be praised and not downgraded in the House of Commons.

(Translation):

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join those who spoke before me in congratulating the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Bourdages) and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne) for the honour the government has bestowed upon them by asking them to be respectively the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

I also wish to commend the Deputy Speaker, the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau). I wish him success in his new office. We hope, or rather we are sure, that he will perform his duties with understanding, judgment and impartiality, the more so since he will have you as an example, Mr. Speaker.

The hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn) also deserves congratulations for having been appointed Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. I wish him and the new parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister, the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard), every success.

Like most hon. members, I have followed closely the speech which was delivered by the leader of the Liberal party (Mr. Pearson) during the debate on the speech from the throne, and I wish to say that seldom have I been as proud to be a Liberal and to have for a leader the hon. member who spoke in this house on Monday. I know that those feelings are fully shared by my colleagues.

His comments reflected common sense and moderation. In spite of what the hon. members opposite may think, he has drawn a true picture of the state of affairs in Canada, and that is why his speech hurt. It did indeed, and the pain it caused may be seen in the fact that there were 74 interruptions by seven ministers, not to mention those by private members.

Do you know who won the competition? None other than that man of a few words, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). No, it was not the Prime Minister. I would say that it was on the part of the minister, a bit of a revenge for the 1956 convention. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) was well ahead with 46 interruptions.

Would you like a few samples from his stock of words, which paint him better than the best painter's brush could? Here are a few:

[Mr. Churchill.]

Nonsense ... That is not true ... Silly talk ... Lies ... Foolish statement ... Misrepresentation ...

And there are many others. All on fields in which, it must be agreed, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has long shown himself to be an expert.

The runner-up was the Right Hon. Prime Minister with seven interruptions. He surely deserves a certificate of merit. His interruptions, although not so numerous, were a little more insidious.

I am sure it will not please my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) nor the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill) to hear me quote some statements and some views set forth by the Prime Minister, and then say what I think of such behaviour in this house.

On page 39 of Hansard for January 22, 1962, concerning a copy of the speech from the throne sent to the Leader of the Opposition, the Prime Minister stated:

The hon. member received a confidential copy in the usual way. Did he respect the confidentiality of that document, or did he make it available to others?

Mr. Speaker, whoever has carefully studied the two men since 1957 cannot but wonder that such a question should have been put by the one who has asked it. He should be the last one to doubt somebody else's statements, especially those made by the leader of the Liberal party, who is known as a man who has always shown the highest regard for truth and the oath of office.

And what are we to think of that other inference, of a truly personal nature, made by the Prime Minister, and which I find on page 73 of Hansard:

I want to tell the hon. gentleman this: that is one subject, softness on communism, that he should not discuss.

The Prime Minister was indeed justified in stating during that same speech:

To increase one's own prestige in one's eyes it is not necessary to run down another.

He was really speaking "ex cathedra" when he talked that way.

The third one was the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) with his six interruptions. I must admit that they were slightly less numerous than those he made during the famous pipe line debate.

Fourth in line, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) with four.

Ex-aequo in fifth place, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker).

Now, sixth in line, we see the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) to whom we shall give a consolation prize.

No doubt, the speech of the Leader of the Opposition helped further aggravate the almost open sores of the present administration.

When I speak in this way, it is not because I am despaired, as I am not here to get myself re-elected, no more than are my fellow members.

We are here to look after the public's interests and, from time to time, pass judgment on those of our colleagues who, in our modest opinion, may show weaknesses in carrying out their responsibilities.

I not only listened to the Prime Minister but also admired the elegance and flourish of his gesture which invariably precedes his word in the best tradition of ancient Roman rhetors. I also admired the varied modulations which expressed a great variety of feelings, and I also admired the great ease with which he passed from the angriest to the most amiable tones.

Mr. Speaker, may I point out that it is six o'clock?

(Text):

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, before the house recessed I was saying how much I had admired the performance of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker) last Tuesday, during the debate on the address in reply.

Neither should I fail to mention his great facility for resorting to irony and sarcasm and more particularly the incredible agility of his gyrations among his colleagues, an agitation which gives us an almost unique and priceless opportunity to study him in profile, from the back, in full face, half and three-quarter face, from half back, semi-profile, in short in all the postures very peculiar to him and which command the required applause.

I also discovered in him a rather doubtful talent for imitation. Perhaps, because of one of his more recent statements he has, this year, dropped one of his favorite practices which consisted in looking straight and insistently at the press gallery. If he ever decided to make peace with the newspapermen and return to his old love, I should hardly be surprised if he became one day the half pleased recipient of an "Oscar" which, for him, would admirably replace the Nobel prize for peace.

His final scene in the last parliament, in 1958, had left me dumbfounded. However, I realized that having been some time in opposition he could not be expected to forsake his true nature so soon. The display and the show we witnessed Tuesday morning appalled me. Just to think that the performer was the first citizen of my country. If he ever deigned to glance at my humble remarks, he would doubtless have a taste of the medicine so often served to others, and if he realized what others feel under such attacks, he might perhaps decide to leave to others in his party who are well qualified in this field and able to do that kind of work such a task unbecoming to the Prime Minister of my country.

Conservative members complain when we speak like this. Some of them—not all of them fortunately—speak one way and act differently.

If we challenge what they do or what they say, we are accused of working against national unity. Mr. Speaker, this way of thinking reminds me of the strong protests of somebody who would try to strangle you and be shocked if you shouted for help.

Mr. Speaker, shortly before the six o'clock recess, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) charged the Liberal party with using mean and fraudulent tactics in the election held in two neighbouring ridings of Toronto. He contended that the Liberal party was responsible for the distribution of certain communist pamphlets. He also asserted in a most assured way that the electoral machinery of the Liberal party in Toronto had been used to make phone calls, ostensibly from representatives of the communist party, to advise voters to cast their ballots for the candidates of the new party.

The hon. member stated moreover that this campaign could not have been the work of the communists, on the ground that they did not have the required means. Now—I am only addressing myself to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam—I must say I am rather surprised to find him so well informed on the financial status of the communist party, for it is usually a well kept secret.

I might add, again for the benefit of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, that I would not be surprised if the communist party really conducted this base attack. We have a party called the social credit rally which has a 15-minute television program every week during 26 weeks a year, and to my knowledge, that party has no official source of income.

Furthermore—and here I am slightly hesitant—I would not be surprised if the communist party had succeeded in these attacks, for to whoever has read the article published by Mr. Tim Buck in the May-June 1961 issue of "The Marxist Review" under the title "The New Party and our Responsibilities", the doings of certain communists are no surprise. Mr. Speaker, it would be dishonest on my part to infer, by quoting that article, that the new party is a communist party. It would be dishonest, unskillful and, in my opinion, wrong. But this does not mean that the communists do not have their reasons for granting them their support.

I should like to quote two paragraphs from pages 20 and 21 of this pamphlet:

(Text):

Politically the New party is the fruit of more than 40 years of interest and experimentation by the labour movement, ripened by the pressure of the great historic changes taking place in the world—

To those good comrades who ask: "Why should we devote energy to help the New party, why not concentrate upon building our own?" The answer is that there is no solid wall between positive activity in your union or any other organization on behalf of the New party and the building of our own; on the contrary, the two tasks supplement each other.

(Translation):

That is what Mr. Buck thinks and those are the instructions he gave his supporters and members of the party.

Once again, I do not claim the new party to be a communistic party but, in view of the formal accusations put forward by the hon. member of Burnaby-Coquitlam, I thought that I could be as bold as he was and return the stone he threw on our side.

That does not keep me from having great respect for a great many members of the new party who are sincere, just as I know that others have slipped in by opportunism, because they were disgusted or merely trying to attain prominence.

To come back to the speech from the throne, Mr. Speaker, like some of my colleagues, I do not deny that it contains some good news, such as the increase in old age pensions and perhaps certain other measures.

The Prime Minister recalled with emotion what he has done in the field of old age pensions. But how could pensions be increased, Mr. Speaker, if not because the law was already on the statute books of Canada and it had been put there by the previous administration.

The Conservative members have only to weigh the introduction of that social measure, they only have to weigh the amount which we have paid and compare it with the $19 which the Conservative party has added to those pensions, and I hope that they will be objective enough in their judgment to realize where the greater share of the credit belongs.

Besides, it is no secret that in the past the Conservatives have never entirely approved the very principle of allowances, of social measures. Do you want examples? Concerning old age pension only, Mr. C. H. Cahan, ex-member for St. Lawrence-St. George, said this on April 15, 1926, page 2470 of Hansard:

(Text):

It assumes that at 70 years of age every Canadian who has lived in this country for 20 years is utterly incapacitated to earn a living. I object to that assumption, because actual incapacity should be the fundamental principle embodied in any pension scheme.

At page 2474 of Hansard of April 15, 1926, Right Hon. Arthur Meighen said:

Now aside from the fact that the provinces have taken care of this situation, this being their responsibility under the constitution, this legislation is not framed on the principle of disability at all. As a matter of fact there is no principle of any kind underlying it.

(Translation):

No wonder, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. King's bill on old age pensions was nipped in the bud in the Senate by a Conservative majority.

(Text):

Mr. Ricard: Not by the Conservatives. Can I ask a question—

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): You may ask questions when I am finished. I shall then be glad to answer them. Besides, I figure that the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister is entitled to participate in the debate and that he may take the floor without having to ask permission of his whip.

Another thing, Mr. Speaker, about those increases. When the Liberal party increased old age pensions—I am not discussing the amount—at the same time, it increased family allowances. The cost of living index at the time was 74.6 while it is now 129.2.

Why have family allowances been completely ignored? Why have they not been extended in the case of the 16 to 18 year-old age group, as the Liberal party had suggested, and as it is still proposing to do?

When the Liberal party introduced the Family Allowances Act, the Conservative party raised an outcry of protest. Neither insults nor, in some cases, abuse were spared.

No wonder there is no mention of them in the speech from the throne. I could quote a few arguments put forward by those who spoke against the family allowances bill at the time. Mr. John Bracken, a prominent figure, called it a "national bribe" as reported in Hansard for June 27, 1944.

According to the official report for June 27, 1944, Mr. Graydon stated:

(Text):

Liberal party politics.

(Translation):

According to page 5577 of Hansard of July 31, 1944, Mr. H. A. Bruce said this:

(Text):

I am not intimidated by the threat the Prime Minister has made and I now declare that this measure is a bribe of the most brazen character, made chiefly to one province and paid for by the taxes of the rest.

(Translation):

According to page 5365 of Hansard of July 25, 1944, the same Mr. Bruce said this:

Surely there must be some alternative to baby bonuses which will preserve the sanctity of the family, maintain a normal birth rate and place the major economic burden of raising children where it belongs, upon the parents.

(Translation):

Is it surprising that there should be so much confusion in the name, ideas, speeches and actions of some Conservatives.

First of all, the name breeds confusion. Mr. Speaker, how can one explain that in 1962, the party is still called both progressive and conservative at the same time? It is a paradox, better still, an anachronism, in this day and age, when our society undergoes basic transformation, when we have to adapt to changing conditions not only in Canada and in the United States, but throughout the world, including Asia and Africa.

Here is further proof that they often contradict themselves. My leader has often been accused of seldom speaking about the commonwealth. Mr. Lester B. Pearson was quoted; I think it was by the Minister of Veterans Affairs, when he spoke of the Suez crisis which occurred when the Liberal government was in power. In my opinion, the role played by the present Leader of the Opposition during the dark days of the Suez crisis, when he was secretary of state for external affairs, is much more glorious than the one which the Prime Minister of Canada played at the commonwealth prime ministers' conference in London where one could see the beginning of the disintegration of the commonwealth, because of the way he acted at that conference.

(Text):

Mr. McGee: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): When I have finished my speech I shall be delighted to answer any questions.

(Translation):

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the role played by the former secretary of state for external affairs in the Suez crisis amounted to preserving world peace. That is why he received the Nobel prize for peace.

And here is another example of the contradictions that are to be found between the speeches and the deeds. Everything has been said in this house and outside about the bill of rights. We adopted it. And then what happened? The first government to transgress it is the very same one who introduced the bill, by condemning a man without giving him a hearing.

Again last Tuesday, none other than the Prime Minister himself violated the principles of the bill, in this very house, in accusing former servants of this country, persons who were absent, laying serious charges against them, when he knew full well that they could not come here to defend themselves before him and to refute his charges.

(Text):

Mr. Henderson: Watch your blood pressure.

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I shall follow the advice that the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Henderson) has just given me.

I should now like to deal with a problem affecting my section of the country, since it has to do with agriculture. We have had a problem, which I have submitted to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton), and I must thank him very much, because he did deal with it. Besides, my colleagues of the other three constituencies in the area had done the same thing. He dealt with it and applied the solution that the federation of the C.F.U. of the four constituencies of my area were asking for. Unfortunately, and it is not the minister's fault, a sharp rise in the price of grain followed closely the adjustment, so that the grants were almost wiped out. But just the same, I would point out that the Minister of Agriculture did act upon the request of our C.F.U.

Today, we have a problem in the cheese industry. This is a part of the economy of my area which is very important and remunerative for our farmers, because our production reaches from 8 to 10 million pounds a year. That whole production is sold to one purchaser through the Saguenay Co-Operative Chain.

Since April 1, 1961, the curing of cheese was fixed at 10 to 21 days in the curing rooms. The curing temperature was formerly from 45 to 50 degrees, because the purchaser acquiring the whole production of cheese of the area himself asked that the cheese be kept at temperatures varying from 45 to 50 degrees. The federal government has put the minimum at 58 degrees. That is a general rule, but our cheese is of a rather special kind, in that it is not produced in round cheese, as the Canadian cheddar, but in squares, and the greater part of it is not exported.

This is causing great damage to our industry, in that we are losing points and money on the grading of our product.

The 21-day regulations are also slightly surprising, because recently the period of curing was set at 10 days in the plans supplied by the federal government for the construction of curing houses in Canada.

The Catholic Farmers' Union has held talks with the Minister of Agriculture, who replied that he was under the impression that those regulations had been applied in our province—

(Text):

Mr. Churchill: Your time is up.

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Because—

(Text):

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): The minister replied that he was under the impression that the officials of the department had come to an agreement with the representatives of the C.F.U.

I would ask the minister to send a representative in our province to hold further discussions with the directors of the C.F.U. in an attempt to find a solution to this problem.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding my remarks, I should like to relate a minor but very pleasant incident which occurred at the beginning of January 1961 when my leader was the guest of an international conference of newspaper circulation managers. At the guest table were seated the chairman and all the delegates to the conference as well as the president of the Montreal Gazette. My leader was introduced by Mr. Colvey, the Gazette's circulation manager.

I should like to tell the house how he introduced my leader, as reported by the press the following day.

(Text):

Mr. Pearson, he said, is the greatest citizen of this country and the future prime minister of Canada.

The article continued:

The Gazette being known as a Conservative paper and Mr. Charles H. Peters, president of the council of the administration of this daily, being at the head table, this political allusion did not pass without creating a stir among the guests.

[Mr. Brassard (Lapointe).]

(Translation):

It is easily understandable.

Mr. Speaker, I hope it will not be too long before the government gives us an opportunity to go to the country, let the Canadian people have a look at the balance sheet of the nation and see Mr. Colvey's so accurate prophecy come true.

(Text):

Mr. McGee: The hon. member indicated he would reply to questions at the conclusion of his speech. Does he now agree to do so?

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Surely.

Mr. McGee: The hon. member made a statement a few moments ago that the Prime Minister had presided over the beginning of the dissolution of the commonwealth. I would like either the hon. member, or his leader who is in the house, to say whether he agrees or disagrees with the Prime Minister's stand on apartheid at that conference, instead of trying to weasle out of the question as he did.

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): I will not ask my leader to answer in my name. All I can say is that the hon. member did not hear me or did not understand. I said that the way he proceeded at the last conference of the commonwealth prime ministers had been disastrous since we had lost a member of the commonwealth. I was speaking about the way he proceeded.

Mr. Chevrier: He does not understand anything.

(Text):

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): I appreciate very much the privilege of participating in this debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne which was very ably moved and seconded by the hon. members for Laval (Mr. Bourdages) and Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne). In doing so I wish to go on record as supporting the address and most emphatically opposing the amendments to it.

I have listened with interest to the remarks of the last speaker, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Brassard), and cannot help but feel he was a bit unfair—indeed it might be put more strongly than that—in accusing the government of using old age security allowances, old age assistance, blindness and disability allowances in such a way as to favour one section of the country as against another. In fact I do not see how he can contribute to unity and good fellowship in all parts of the country by accusing the government of that kind of conduct.

The contents of the speech from the throne indicate that the government will continue to serve the best interests of all sections of the country, fairly and impartially. Recent articles in the press divulged that the government has fulfilled some 50 or 52 of 60 promises it made, and the measures outlined in the speech from the throne will certainly contribute very substantially to the fulfilment of election promises made in the 1957 and 1958 campaigns. The promise made to our elder citizens that their interests would not be forgotten will be fulfilled by the proposed increase of $10 per month in old age security. Recipients of old age assistance and the blind and disabled will be provided with similar increases by co-operation between the federal and provincial governments. The needs of the farmers will be met by acreage payments in the prairie regions and in other parts of Canada through price supports and stabilization of prices under the Agricultural Stabilization Act.

Of exceptional importance, I believe, is the information contained in the throne speech that conferences are being held with the various provinces concerning the amendment of our Canadian constitution and that agreement has been reached on methods for accomplishing this objective in our own Canadian parliament. Ratification by the provincial governments of this agreement will mark the completion of Canadian sovereignty.

Of paramount importance also is the intention of Canada to begin the construction of an electric power grid from coast to coast. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Dinsdale) told the northern development conference in Edmonton last fall that whereas only 22 per cent of Eskimo children had access to school in 1957, 60 per cent of these children are now in school, some of them already in high school, and that by 1968 there will be a place in a classroom for every child of school age in the Northwest Territories. The territories themselves are also being reorganized and will have two districts instead of one. The two councils should be able to give closer attention to the needs of these areas.

These developments clearly show that the present government has in no way lost the vision which the people of Canada found so appealing in 1957 and 1958 and which I would predict they will again find appealing in 1962.

We have some national problems which are grave, and there are plenty of these problems. Time does not permit us to cover much of this ground in the time allowed to each member who speaks. However, there is one of these problems to which I should like to draw some attention and on which I should like to make some comment. It concerns our butter surplus.

I should like to commend the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) for the efforts he put forth in order to bring before the members of this house and the country generally the situation as he sees it. He put a great deal of effort into the preparation of his speech. I cannot agree with the solution he suggested. However, he put on the record a great deal of information.

One of the promises which helped to elect this government was that the farmers of Canada should have a greater share of the national income. With this objective in view the government three years ago increased the support price of butter from 58 cents to 64 cents per pound. Because our housewives are buying 25 cent margarine instead of 64 cent butter, we have accumulated upwards of 200 million pounds of butter which is surplus to our requirements. Because butter tends to deteriorate if kept too long in storage, the surplus has proven to be an embarrassment to all concerned. There is no market for this surplus outside of Canada. Butter is available on the world market at half the price of our product. We therefore cannot dispose of it outside of our own country without being accused of dumping. It is doubtful that the domestic market can be expanded to an appreciable extent as margarine has been found to be a generally accepted substitute and it is available at less than half the price of butter.

I do not suppose that any agricultural problem has been given as much consideration during the last two years as has the matter of this butter surplus. I wish to commend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) and the government for one thing in particular, namely for not reducing the support price on butter. I submit that we cannot assist the farmers to obtain a greater share of the national income, as was promised, by cutting the prices of their products; nor do I believe that cutting the price of butter would contribute any appreciable relief to the present situation. The farmer's expenses are inclined to be rigid; and if the price of his product is cut, his only alternative is to produce more units in order to satisfy his requirements. The solution lies rather in diverting our small surplus production of milk to other uses, preferably for use as a supplement in the rations of hogs, poultry and veal calves. This diversion should take place before the milk leaves the farm and before the costs of transportation, processing and other possible costs are added to it.

The Dairy Council of Canada, at their recent convention, requested the government to solve this problem by subsidizing the consumer price of butter to the extent of 14 cents per pound while maintaining the support price at its present level of 64 cents per pound. The weakness that I see in this proposal is that we have no reasonable assurance that the remedy would be successful. It was found by Great Britain and the Netherlands some years ago, when they were faced with a similar problem of the substitution of margarine for butter by housewives, that the buying habits of the consumer were not changed until the price of butter was dropped almost to the level of the price of margarine. I think this situation could be explained by the fact that those people who find margarine an acceptable substitute at a cost of 25 cents per pound are not likely to return to their butter-buying habits until butter can be purchased for approximately the same price. It would likely be found that the purchasers of margarine are those who are most influenced by economic considerations and they are not likely to purchase butter unless the prices are nearly comparable. The proposed subsidy of 14 cents per pound would therefore probably not result in diminishing our butter surplus.

Again, I think another weakness in this proposal is that the domestic market is still consuming 75 per cent of all the butter produced in Canada. Therefore only 25 per cent of our production is surplus. If a general subsidy of 14 cents per pound were applied, we would be subsidizing unnecessarily three pounds out of every four pounds. We would therefore be paying for four pounds or 56 cents per pound for every pound of surplus that we disposed of. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is too expensive a way to solve the problem.

I would suggest that the solution lies in the more complete organization of the dairy industry under marketing boards through which the producers themselves can take the necessary steps to prevent the very small surplus of milk production from exerting undue pressure on the price structure of the dairy industry. Milk is the most universal agricultural product in Canada. Production of many farm products is confined to limited areas but milk is produced almost everywhere. When the dairy industry is depressed the whole of our economy suffers.

No matter how we undertake to support the dairy industry, the surplus will find its way to the point of support. We tried skim milk powder and got into trouble with the surplus. We changed from skim milk powder to butter and we are now in trouble with that. There is no solution to this problem, I submit, except to control the surplus at its source and have the milk fed to farm animals before it gets into the channels of trade.

[Mr. Thomas.]

Press reports indicate that the provinces of Ontario and Quebec are at present reviewing their milk marketing legislation with a view to more effective organization of the dairy industry in these provinces and if these areas, where about 70 per cent of the milk in Canada is produced, are brought under closer control then a small surplus should not be permitted to depress dairy prices, and if the milk can be fed to livestock on the farm the build-up in our dairy butter surplus should be stopped. Nothing effective can be done until the build-up in our butter surplus is stopped. If this can be done, I think it will not be too difficult then to find ways and means of disposing of the surplus. We can dispose of it as we disposed of our canned pork. Coupons could be given to those whose incomes are small or who are in receipt of welfare payments of various kinds so that they could buy butter at a price level the same as that of margarine. There are other ways that it could be done but I can see no point in speculating about ways and means of getting rid of our surplus until we have managed to find some means of stopping the build-up of that surplus.

I should like to place on the record several comments concerning the dairy problem made by leaders in the industry at the dairy farmers of Canada convention held in Montreal last week. Mr. Frank E. Lutes, president of the dairy farmers of Canada, is reported in the Western Producer of January 25, 1962, as having stated that there is an urgent need for a national milk plan. He is quoted as follows:

> Lest there be those who fear the element of compulsion suggestive in board marketing, let us consider that the lack of direction and planning in our national production is posing some real compulsion at the moment—compulsion to reduced income on the part of a great number of dairymen.

Mr. Romeo Martin, general manager of the Quebec co-operative fédérée, said that a steady increase in butter production since 1949 has been coupled with a steady decline in domestic consumption and that more margarine and other substitutes were being consumed each year and many Canadians were cutting down on fats in their diets. He said that better equilibrium between production and consumption is essential but should not be sought by lowering production since present farm cash income is much too low.

Again we come back to the point I have tried to make that farm requirements are quite rigid and that if you cut the price of the farmer's product his only recourse is to increase the number of units produced which only adds to the problem. Mr. Martin is reported as having said that Canada's butter surplus had no outlet in foreign trade and that world prices were much below Canadian prices. The convention recommended that quotas be established on fluid milk production, based on each producer's production in 1961.

It is quite evident from the news reports of that convention last week that the dairy farmers themselves are quite aware of the need for some measure of production management and with both producers and governments working on the problem it will likely only be a matter of time until a solution will be found which will prevent the accumulation of unmanageable surpluses of butter. Then the butter surplus can be reduced without unduly disturbing the price structure of the industry.

I wish to refer to one or two other matters before I conclude. The various programs of the federal government for the promotion of better living conditions in all parts of Canada have proved to be beneficial to my constituency of Middlesex West. Our appreciation goes out to the government for the new post office building now under construction in the village of Delaware. Plans are being prepared also for new public buildings at the village of Lucan and the town of Strathroy. The government is participating with the province of Ontario in the construction of the $1 million Parkhill dam. Seventy five per cent of the cost of a new $1 million extension to the Strathroy district collegiate institute to serve as a composite high school will be contributed by the federal government. The province will contribute the other 25 per cent. A grant of $243,000 was made toward the construction cost of the new Strathroy hospital.

Numerous extensions to rural mail routes have been allowed to provide better service to individuals who have been able to qualify under the revised regulations. House to house service in the suburban areas of the city of London has been widely extended as suburban development has proceeded. The Hutton side-road overpass has been completed and the grade crossing fund under the control of the federal government stands ready to contribute 50 per cent of the cost of the new four-lane overpass on Oxford street west as soon as the city has completed its plans for the rebuilding of that traffic artery.

I feel that this opportunity should not pass without mention of the fact that the Queen's guineas prize for baby beef steers has been won by junior farmers in Middlesex county for the past three years in succession. This award was instituted many years ago and was called the King's guineas, and it has now become a special prize of $250 awarded to the boy or girl who feeds and exhibits the best baby beef animal from the province of Ontario at the royal winter fair at Toronto. This year the winner was Shirley Earley of R.R. No. 3, Kerwood; the 1960 winner was John Giles of Glencoe and the 1959 winner was another of the Earley clan, a cousin of the 1961 winner. This is an indication of the very fine type of livestock that is produced in Middlesex county. Full credit must be given also to the young people concerned for their skill in feeding, training and exhibiting these animals.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I feel very strongly that this government has done a wonderful job of administering the affairs of this country. I feel that they continue to offer the best hope for continuing government of the people, by the people and for the people of Canada.

Mr. Matheson: Will the hon. member permit a question? Will he kindly indicate whether or not he agrees with my recommendation of January 23 that the government grant an immediate consumer subsidy of 14 cents per pound on butter so that butter can be put on the market at 50 cents a pound without loss to the producer?

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Speaker, I think if the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) will read what I said in Hansard he will find my answer fully given.

Mr. Matheson: Do you agree or not agree?

Some hon. Members: Read his speech.

Mr. Thomas: I think there are better means of dealing with the problem than by paying a subsidy as the hon. member has suggested.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): It is a great privilege, Mr. Speaker, to speak on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I shall use the limited time at my disposal to make a few observations and suggestions which, without being presumptuous, I submit with sincerity.

First of all, sir, I should like to congratulate you upon your appointment as Deputy Speaker. I have had occasion to observe your fine qualities and friendly attitude which will ensure success in the discharge of your duties. I should like also to congratulate the new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn). If he achieves the success in his new position that he achieved as deputy speaker during the past session, then I am sure he will enjoy a successful term of office. Congratulations are also in order for the mover (Mr. Bourdages) and seconder (Mr. Browne, Vancouver-Kingsway) of the address who, in their speeches—leaving the usual exaggerations aside—displayed remarkable enthusiasm for what the throne speech contained. Under the circumstances, this is quite understandable.

It is true that the speech contains some measures which are good and will receive unanimous support, such as the legislation designed to increase old age pensions, pensions for the blind and disabled. We were happy to learn that steps will be taken to set up a contributory old age pension system, conditional upon the agreement of the provinces. I am informed, however, that this procedure is not really necessary. The government has the power to introduce a contributory system of old age pensions without an amendment to the British North America Act. The appointment of an independent commission to recommend the redistribution of federal constituencies is to be commended, provided the members of this commission are selected after consultation with, and approval of, the leaders of the opposition parties. The increase in federal loans to finance exports and the broadening of the Small Businesses Loans Act are measures that may well prove beneficial and will receive my support, as will the increase in assistance for the education of the children of the war dead.

The rest of the speech, however, with the exception of a few localized handouts, contained vague and guarded references of a miscellaneous nature but nothing tangible was said about a national program which would expand our economy and create employment on a mass scale. The unemployment picture may be a little better than it was, but not much. I have just received a report from a northwestern Ontario commission on unemployment. This is a body of men appointed by the mayors of the two lakehead cities, Fort William and Port Arthur, to study the problem and offer suggestions. Questionnaires were mailed to more than 3,000 employers and 120 union locals. Replies were received from 800 employers and 27,000 men and women. These have disclosed that since 1956 the rate of growth of jobs at the lakehead has slowed down to one third of the rate in the early 1950's.

Between 1951 and 1961 the twin city population increased by over 25,000 persons. The population has increased by 35 per cent and the job opportunities have increased by only 12 per cent. The immediate result has been an increase in unemployment, particularly since 1956. There are about three times as many unemployed registered now as there were in 1951. The population increase will have its major effect on employment between 1963 and 1970. By 1966, there will be at least 1,200 extra job seekers coming from the schools each year. Our present rate of increase in jobs is about half the required rate. It is therefore obvious that the government must make strenuous efforts to meet the employment problems in the years ahead.

[Mr. Badanai.]

While I have been pointing out the difficulties in the district of Thunder bay, everyone knows that this is also the experience of other regions in Canada.

The establishment of a capital development fund to encourage secondary industries and employment-creating development, administered by an advisory council, should be considered at the earliest possible moment; and the establishment of a municipal road fund to enable municipalities to expand their services and construct much needed municipal projects.

The ultimate goal of the government should be a real attempt to enact employment policies which would provide the substance of the right of the individual to be gainfully employed. The country is tired of hearing the recital of accomplishments of the government, many of which in reality are without substance. There is recovery, but there are no jobs.

No doubt many hon. members have had the experience of talking with a jobless man, married and with a family. You get the feeling that he has to fight a constant battle against frustration. Unemployment insurance benefits may keep his body together, but what will keep his spirits up? All around him are the signs of a prosperous community and he is not a part of it; and those who are part of it, in some instances treat him as a second-class citizen. Unemployment is by far the biggest problem facing the government today.

The kind of economic policies and measures contemplated in the speech from the throne will not provide enough jobs in the time immediately ahead. It is a serious and complex problem which requires a concentrated effort in relation to which, up to the present, the government has given no dynamic leadership.

The speech from the throne did mention the need to bolster the unemployment insurance fund. The special committee appointed by the government to study the question of the unemployment insurance fund—which has taken a severe beating in the past four years—will in its own good time recommend some action which I hope will place the fund on a sound actuarial basis.

The latest figures of the dominion bureau of statistics seem to show that seasonal unemployment is something apart from chronic unemployment. It is an occurrence even in good times of full or near full employment and should be dealt with separately.

During a debate on a supply motion last September I suggested that consideration be given to setting up two separate systems with separate funds, one for seasonal workers and the other for non-seasonal workers. The latter would serve non-seasonal workers, which was the purpose for which the unemployment insurance fund was originally established—to give regular workers some degree of protection against loss of wages during brief periods of unemployment. Such a fund should be as nearly self-sustaining as possible, while the other fund would require substantial annual assistance from the government. Since a decision has to be made soon and the day of decision cannot be postponed indefinitely, I sincerely trust that this suggestion will be considered by the government.

On various occasions I brought to the attention of the government the need for a new building to house the unemployment insurance commission in Fort William, which now occupies an old, dilapidated building which served as a post office 30 years ago when the city had less than half the population it has today. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) is well aware of the situation and agreed with me that a new building is the only solution to this problem.

Recently it has been suggested that the present post office, which cannot be operated efficiently any longer—it lacks space to take care of the present postal traffic, which has increased threefold, and the location does not lend itself to an extension of facilities or an extension of the building—should be relocated and a new post office should be built on the site where we hoped the new unemployment office would be constructed, moving the present unemployment insurance commission office to the present post office building. This move would be history repeating itself 30 years after a similar move had been made. This is not my suggestion; it has been suggested to me by those in authority in our city. However, I do suggest that the departments concerned give serious consideration to these matters as soon as possible.

Another project that would help the employment situation in the lakehead area and which could be undertaken as a winter works project, is the extension of the existing administration building at the lakehead airport and the extension of airfield runways to handle Vanguards and other large aircraft.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) announced in Fort William last April that $650,000 had been appropriated by the Department of Public Works for this project. Only a few days ago I was advised that treasury board, in their review of the Department of Transport estimates, had reduced to $100,000 the amount for this project to commence late in the fall. This is a disappointment, as we anticipated that the work on the airport would mean employment for several hundred men early in the year.

The speech from the throne differed very little from the generalities of other throne speeches to which I have had the privilege of listening. One passage which struck me as being rather obscure was the reference to the promotion of world trade. It did not propose any line of action. It simply said something to the effect that the government has renewed promises of support for the expansion of world trade on a multilateral, non-discriminatory basis. What does it all mean?

What a contrast to President Kennedy's recent state of the union message in which the president spelled out the movement of the United States toward lower tariffs and freer trade. Had the speech from the throne contained a proposal that the government would examine the possibility of joining the European common market, and given assurance of definite action for early implementation leading up to the immediate creation of a north Atlantic market with the gradual removal of tariff barriers on either side of the Atlantic, such a statement would have been something to cheer. But instead there was a sidestepping of the issue with meaningless phraseology.

Mr. McGee: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Badanai: After I am through, I will. Japan has adopted a program of trade liberalization affecting many products which we export, notably, pulp and paper packing, wrapping and tissue paper, nickel and forest products and many other items. This liberalization of trade has been made possible by the high international evaluation of Japan's ability for expansive economic growth. Where does our Canadian prospect for economic growth stand? The prospect for economic expansion is closely related to the tariff and tax policies of the government which, so far, have been deficient in the real promotion of trade, and no amount of genial salesmanship on the part of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) can be regarded as an effective substitute.

There is not a word in the speech from the throne about trade with Latin America, though this is a field which, if properly cultivated, might yield an appreciable harvest. It has been reported that Dr. Raul Prebisch, executive secretary of the United Nations economic commission for Latin America, expressed the thought that the people of Latin America would welcome the opportunity of sitting round the conference table with Canadians to explore whether there are any fields in which mutual trade can be expanded. South America's 150 million people could offer a new and substantial market for Canadian products. In 1960—I have not the figures for 1961—we purchased approximately $270 million worth of goods from South America, while they only purchased from us something like $127 million worth.

The continent of South America appears to be ready to accept a new concept in international relations and trade, in the hope of exchanging their products for manufactured goods and machinery which at their present stage of low technological development they cannot hope to produce themselves.

The field is, therefore, wide open for Canada to sell her manufactured goods in this rich market. Such goods are badly needed in Latin America to help the economic balance of those countries and, in exchange, we would receive valuable natural products. Let us not forget South America when we are considering the expansion of our exports.

Another disappointing feature in the speech from the throne was the total absence of any reference to tax cuts. I know that some will say: how can taxes be cut at a time when welfare costs are to be increased? The way to cut taxes is simple: just cut them. We can learn from the experience of other nations, an experience which has shown that lower taxes often mean higher revenues. This is because more goods can be sold at lower prices. One has only to look at the phenomenal success of food markets and chain stores for proof of this contention. They have shown that low prices and high volume run up larger profits.

The truth of the matter is that far from having recovered its buoyancy, as we have been led to believe by this government, the Canadian economy is still going backwards, and the fact remains that in the absence of meaningful tax reductions there can be little prospect of a lasting improvement in our economy.

Last October I visited Italy. I was particularly impressed by the tremendous economic progress which a country so poor in natural resources has achieved during the past few years. Italy's gross national product for 1961 was expected to have reached, by the end of the year, the highest percentage increase ever recorded. Industrial production, also, was expected to reach an increase of 15 per cent as compared with the previous year.

I asked officials of the government and leading men in industry whom I had the privilege of meeting what was the secret of this prosperity. The reply I received was to the effect that the recovery of the Italian economy, which had been in the doldrums after the war, was no miracle but, rather, the result of common sense in applying efficient methods of manufacturing and production and flexible government tariffs and export policies, including a moderate tax incentive policy, to aid exports. We would do well to ponder the reasons underlying the success in world markets achieved by a country as poor in natural resources as Italy.

I also visited Israel. Here, indeed, is something to behold. In spite of very limited natural resources and a small population the per capita productivity of this country is simply amazing. They have a productivity council, one of the most successful of its kind, and with the aid of the government it is training 4,000 students a year in industrial management courses. It is to be hoped that when the Canadian productivity council gets into top gear—and I am afraid it is running in low gear now—it will make Canadians more conscious of the need for productivity than it has been able to do so far.

The Montreal Gazette of January 24 has an editorial on this subject from which I wish to quote a paragraph:

> The competition that Canada faces in her trade with the world is along a vertical, as well as along a horizontal line. That is to say, she must compete not only with the industries of other nations as they are today; she must be preparing to compete with these industries as they will be in a few years time, say by 1970. To win today (difficult as that is) will not be enough, if Canada will lose tomorrow.

It was generally anticipated that the speech from the throne would disclose information that an amendment to the Immigration Act would be introduced at this, presumably, the last session before the general election. However, the Prime Minister decided on an order in council approving a formula which changes the regulations. This course was taken as a substitute for a change in the act. The statement read by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough) last Friday with reference to regulations which will make it possible for immigrants in all parts of the world to enter Canada if they can qualify in respect of education, training and other skills is supposed to be an improvement on the former regulations. This seems to me to be just another way of saying to a prospective immigrant, if for any reason he or she is not wanted: we are sorry, but unfortunately you do not meet the requirements of our regulations so your application for admission to Canada is therefore not approved.

My friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) aptly described the new regulations when he said:

> The hon. lady has said that the new section 31, which is substituted for section 20 of the existing regulations, abolishes discrimination. Of course, it does nothing of the kind. It substitutes one set of criteria for discrimination for another. I am one of those who think that the words "discrimination" and "selection", as any dictionary shows, mean precisely the same thing, and they cannot mean anything different. The hon. lady is well aware, as she has said previously in the house, that there is in the existing regulations no racial or other similar discrimination, and I am glad there is not going to be any such discrimination now.

But I suggest that what the hon. lady has done is to make it necessary to look at every individual case and compare it with every other case, and that, by abolishing some of the convenient general categories she is going to create an administrative problem that it will be absolutely impossible to cope with if we are to have any substantial immigration. Of course, if the pattern of 1961 is to be followed, when we had a net emigration from this country, it is probable that the new regulations are well designed to serve that end.

Finally I should like to point out that what the government undertook to do five years ago was, not to change the regulations but to change the act, and that has not been done.

For my part, Mr. Speaker, I am going to reserve my criticism of the minister's statement until we can see how the new regulations are going to operate. The provision for the admission of a wider list of non-white immigrants who have relatives in Canada, and the broadening of the type of appeals which may be taken before the immigration appeal board, is a welcome change with which few, if any, can quarrel. However, the unfortunate fact is that in 1961 fewer people immigrated to Canada than emigrated from the country, mostly emigrating to the United States.

No one is advocating wide open doors to all and sundry, but I cannot let this occasion go by without expressing concern at the slow flow of desirable immigrants which, for all intents and purposes, has been practically stopped since 1960. Those of us who retain faith in the growth and development of this great and glorious country which we are proud to call our own, believe that desirable immigrants should advance our economic and cultural well being, and be capable of creating a Canadian industrial development by enlarging Canada's domestic market.

What is the worth of an immigrant? The department of immigration of Australia has the answer to this question which in effect, means that before an immigrant begins earning and spending, each adult immigrant worker's value, as he walks to his bench or desk, or to the construction site of a building, has been calculated by Australia's federal treasurer, at $15,000. This is the official cost of feeding, rearing and training an Australian born child up to the working age. Today, every tenth shop girl in Australia's shops owes her place behind the counter to the growing demand which immigrants are creating and helping to fill.

Feet that once trod pavements in Britain and Europe are now wearing two and one third million pairs of Australian made shoes and sandals, and this means an extra factory bench in shoe factories to every ten existing previously. Inside the shoes, the immigrants in a year wear five and three quarter million pairs of socks and stockings of Australian make. They need 2,000 tons of soap. They puff 5¼ million pounds of cigarettes and tobacco. They eat more than 1½ million gallons of ice cream. According to the bureau of census and statistics, an immigrant and his wife supporting two children are estimated to spend each year on the average for food and drink $1,275—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

(Translation):

Mr. Theogene Ricard (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes that remain, I should also like to comment on the unconsidered statements which have been made in this house in the last few days. Opposition speakers have tried to make us believe that Canada's prestige with the other commonwealth nations was declining.

Mr. Speaker, as you were in our group, you know that I had the advantage of going around the world two years ago, and that I attended the commonwealth parliamentary conference in Canberra.

At that conference, I was able to meet parliamentarians from all the commonwealth countries and I discovered with pride that Canada was held in very high esteem and was very much respected by people, as well as its Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green).

I also had the opportunity, last October, to attend the NATO conference in Paris. There again, I had contacts with parliamentarians from every country and, to my great satisfaction, I found among them an unparalleled esteem and respect for Canada. When hearing some remarks like those made in this house by people who are supposed to have great experience in the matter, for instance the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), I may well say that, apart from being surprised, I was deeply affected.

Far from throwing discredit on our country, far from belittling the prestige it enjoys and should enjoy abroad, I feel that we should use all possible means to boost Canada, because it is a great country, which commands universal admiration.

Wherever we went—and you are aware of that as well as I am, Mr. Speaker, since you were a member of the party—when we uttered the word Canada, when we said we were Canadians, we were greeted with open arms and with these words: "I would like to live in your beautiful country".

This is quite different from what the members of the opposition would have us believe and it is quite different from the disparaging comments these gentlemen put on record.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being 9.30 o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to section 4 of standing order 38 as provisionally amended, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question of any amendment before the house.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. Shall I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. McGrath: May I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the main motion.

Mr. McGrath: May I move the adjournment of the debate?

Mr. Herridge: I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: I think the proper course is for me to call it ten o'clock and deal with the order of speaking when we resume.

Mr. Herridge: I rise on a question of privilege. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) this afternoon paid tribute to Scotland's immortal bard. I wish to join with him on behalf of this group. With his humanitarian sense of brotherhood, if he were alive today and viewing the Canadian scene, I am sure he would say to all those in Canada who preach disunity:

> Diel take all talk of a first race
> Great weapon of the Nazi case
> And may this evil soon be hidden
> On some auld midden.

Mr. McGrath: As a poor, humble Irishman, may I call it ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Might I inquire what the business will be for tomorrow, and can the house leader give any indication what it will be on Monday?

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow we will take the supplementary estimates which were tabled the other day. The business on Monday will depend on the progress which is made tomorrow.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will the Minister of Finance be here tomorrow?

Mr. Churchill: Will the hon. member for Essex East be here tomorrow?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will the Minister of Finance be here tomorrow?

Mr. Churchill: It will depend upon whether or not the hon. member for Essex East is here.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, January 26, 1962

The house met at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF SPEAKERS OF PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURES

Mr. Speaker: By leave of the house may I make reference to an unusual circumstance. We frequently have distinguished members of other legislatures with us in the House of Commons but I think this is the first occasion on which we have had no less than six presiding officers of Canadian legislatures with us in the gallery. I do not know whether hon. members will regard this as a good thing; it depends upon the view they take of speakers.

I once heard Lord Attlee at a dinner at which there were a great many Speakers of the commonwealth present trying to find a collective term to describe them. He chose "a spout of Speakers".

I assure hon. members that our distinguished guests are here this morning to observe and not to admonish. On your behalf I take the opportunity of welcoming to the House of Commons Hon. William Murdoch, Speaker of the Ontario legislature; Hon. H. A. Veniot, Speaker of the Nova Scotia legislature; Hon. Mr. Richard, Speaker of the New Brunswick legislature; Hon. A. W. Harrison, Speaker of the Manitoba legislature; Hon. J. R. McLean, Speaker of the Prince Edward Island legislature and Hon. Peter Dawson, Speaker of the Alberta legislature. In addition, we have Hon. Frank Connors, member of the legislative council of Quebec representing the president of the council; Mr. Oswald Parent representing the speaker of the legislative assembly of Quebec; Mr. F. A. Dewhurst from Saskatchewan who, if reports can be believed, may soon become the Speaker of the Saskatchewan legislature; Mr. W. McKay, clerk of the Prince Edward Island legislature is here. British Columbia and Newfoundland are not represented because their legislatures are in session.

These gentlemen are here to attend the meeting of the Canadian area council of the commonwealth parliamentary association which comprises all of the Canadian branches.

May I also extend our welcome to the wives who are accompanying the members of the council.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FULTON—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE ON JANUARY 25

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The matter arises out of an exchange between the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and myself during yesterday's debate. This is the first opportunity I have had to secure the texts of the speech in question and therefore to set the record straight. The passage to which I refer appears at page 191 of Hansard. As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, I had been challenged by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) to give an example of an occasion when the Leader of the Opposition had said one thing in Quebec which he had not said in other parts of Canada. Starting at the top of page 191 of Hansard I am reported as follows:

> I have not got the exact text before me, but this remark has been widely quoted. It is to the effect that if a Liberal government were in office it would regard it as one of its responsibilities to bring about an end to the co-operative cost sharing programs between the dominion and the provinces. This is what—

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member proceeds—and apparently it takes some explanation to make his point—will he indicate what is the point of privilege he raises?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The point of privilege is that the Leader of the Opposition made a statement reflecting on my veracity or my accuracy. I was not able to refute it at the time. I am now in a position to refute the statement of the Leader of the Opposition. Since this matter has been reported in the press as well as having been raised in debate I think that, on a question of privilege, I am clearly within my rights in requesting an opportunity to clear it up.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fulton: I am speaking on a point of privilege and I continue as follows—

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I rise—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: I observe that the hon. member for Laurier is rising in his place. Is he rising to speak to a point of order?

Mr. Chevrier: I am rising to speak to a point of order.

Mr. Fulton: I think a question of privilege has priority.

Mr. Chevrier: Speaking to a point of order—

Mr. Fulton: A question of privilege has priority over a point of order unless you, Mr. Speaker, rule otherwise.

Mr. Speaker: I think probably the hon. member for Laurier would be rising to question whether a matter of privilege arises. Of course, that is something that must be decided, namely whether the matter raises a prima facie question of privilege. That is a matter for the Chair to decide. If the point the hon. member wishes to make is that the statement made yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition misinformed the house, there is a possibility that a question of privilege could arise and the Minister of Justice would have the opportunity to make his submission in order that it may be seen whether it amounts to a question of privilege.

Mr. Fulton: I put the matter on both bases.

Mr. Chevrier: I was rising, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fulton: I put the matter on both bases, namely that my veracity was attacked and that the house was misinformed by what the Leader of the Opposition said.

Mr. Speaker: Before I hear the minister I would be willing to test my views as I have expressed them.

Mr. Chevrier: Your Honour was expressing my intention very clearly and much more emphatically than I could have done. My point is that this is not the manner in which to proceed to do what the Minister of Justice intends to do. What he should have done, in accordance with the rules of the house and as Your Honour has explained to the house on many occasions, was to have risen afterwards with the text in hand and to have then made the correction. What he intends to do now is not, strictly speaking, a matter of privilege. He intends now to correct a challenge to which he was put yesterday and which he was unable to accept. He wants to do so now as a matter of privilege and I submit to you with deference, sir, that he has no right to do that at this time under the rules of the house. He may do it in debate if he wants to on another occasion, which is in accordance with the rules by which we abide in this house, but certainly he cannot do it in the manner in which he is attempting to do it now.

Mr. Pearson: On the point of order, since my name has been mentioned—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think I need not hear the Leader of the Opposition on the point of order. Would hon. members allow me a minute?

Mr. Fulton: The reply I was going to make to the hon. member for Laurier—

Mr. Hellyer: The Speaker asked you to allow him a minute.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the minister allow me a minute? Since a point of order has been taken I should like to say a word about it before we go further with the alleged question of privilege. The point is made that this is a matter of personal explanation which is permissible, of course, where a member has been misquoted or his remarks have been misinterpreted and this arises in the course of debate. There is a reference in Beauchesne, citation 113, in these words:

> Members often raise so-called "questions of privilege" on matters which should be dealt with as personal explanations or corrections, either in the debates or the proceedings of the house. A question of privilege ought rarely to come up in parliament. It should be dealt with by a motion giving the house power to impose a reparation or apply a remedy.

And further down the page:

> But a dispute arising between two members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

That is the normal practice and unless the Minister of Justice considers that the breach of privilege which he asserts goes beyond a matter of difference as to facts and involves misconduct on the part of the Leader of the Opposition, which would arise if there were a deliberate misleading of the house, then he seems to come within the citation. But it is possible for privilege to arise where a member has given wrong information to the house. If he has misled the house knowingly, then of course that would probably be the subject of a motion, referred to a committee and dealt with as a matter affecting the privileges of the house. Having said that, I will hear the minister further.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I take it that I have the same rights as the minister to deal with this matter after he has spoken.

Mr. Speaker: I have disposed of the point of order. Certainly, the Leader of the Opposition will have the right to deal with the matter which is raised.

Mr. Fulton: I pointed out that my veracity or accuracy had been attacked and that the house had been misled and in terms which I think, sir, as I read the relevant passage, the house will agree can only be described as deliberate. I intend to show—

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Chevrier: Your Honour has not ruled that the Minister of Justice could go into the merits—

Mr. Speaker: Order; I have indicated what I consider are the guiding principles. I propose now to hear the minister.

Mr. Fulton: I had read the passage from Hansard down to the point where I had remarked:

> This is what the Leader of the Opposition said in the province of Quebec. I challenge him to say where he has ever said anything even remotely resembling that in any other part of Canada?
> Mr. Pearson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; the minister has quoted me and I would ask him to give the source of the quotation or the speech I made in Quebec about which he is talking. I ask him to do that, because he has made this statement.

I think I can fairly summarize here by saying that I said I did not have the text before me but that the Leader of the Opposition had been widely quoted to that effect. The Leader of the Opposition then continued:

> May I speak to the point of order? Will the minister, not having any source on which to base the remark except some unnamed press report which he cannot identify and the date of which he cannot specify, at least say that his reference is to the speech I made in Quebec city about two months ago?
> Mr. Fulton: Yes, that is it.
> Mr. Pearson: We can clear this up. The speech I made in Quebec city and that part of it which dealt with the subject about which the minister is talking, was also made the week before in Winnipeg.

My recollection is that the word "verbatim" was used there.

Some hon. Members: It certainly was.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Fulton: But it does not appear in Hansard so I make no further comment on that matter. The Hansard report continues: "Some hon. members: Hear, hear". Then, I find this:

> Mr. Fulton: I think we will have to send for the record.
>
> Mr. Pearson: You had better.
> Mr. Fulton: Then, we can set this matter straight. I hope to have it before the conclusion of my remarks.

As I explained, sir, I was not able to obtain the record before the conclusion of my remarks or indeed even before the conclusion of the sitting of the house yesterday.

Mr. Chevrier: That is why there is no question of privilege.

Mr. Fulton: This is the first moment at which I am able to raise the matter. I have now, however, secured copies of the text of an address by the Hon. L. B. Pearson at the Campbell testimonial dinner, November 2, 1961, Winnipeg, Manitoba and of the text of an address by the Hon. Lester B. Pearson, leader of the Liberal party of Canada, at the federal nominating convention, Quebec East, Monday, November 6, 1961. I should say also, sir, that in case this was not the only speech the hon. member delivered in Winnipeg at that time I endeavoured to secure the text of any others. I also have had the press checked for that period. I could find no other evidence there was any speech delivered at that time other than this one, with or without text, and certainly no reference to the subject matter in dispute in the Winnipeg press.

Now, sir, I have gone through the Winnipeg text and in order that the position may be perfectly clear I think I should place on the record the paragraph—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order, sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order; I think if the minister were to conclude by stating that the speeches are not identical that would complete his case. I would think it would be improper to try to establish the facts of the case at this time.

Mr. Fulton: I can conclude very shortly, then, because I should like to read a sentence which appears in the Quebec speech—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fulton: This is the sentence in question and that is why I am going to read it.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Essex East is rising on another point of order, I will hear him of course, but I have disposed of the problem which presented itself at the beginning of this question of privilege.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Quite, but you have given the Minister of Justice ample opportunity to state his alleged question of privilege. That question has not been stated, and the minister is the last man in the house who should violate the rules.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member for Essex East being the first?

Mr. Speaker: One of the rules is that members shall have an opportunity to present the facts before the house, and I trust the minister will be able to complete his presentation of the facts.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, sir. It is true that both speeches contain passages dealing with the problem of dominion-provincial relations but the Quebec speech text contains this sentence:

> As a matter of fact we believe the federal government should withdraw from the field of joint programs which are of a permanent character once these programs are well established across the country.

That sentence does not appear anywhere in the Winnipeg speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: Nor is it represented in effect in the Winnipeg speech.

Mr. Martin: (Essex East) On a point of order—

Mr. Fulton: That sentence was not in the Winnipeg speech either verbatim or in effect.

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the minister at considerable length in what I think was a sympathetic and proper effort to determine whether he was asserting a matter that involved a privilege of the house. It seems to me there is a dispute about the facts. Unless the minister proposes to make a charge, or asks leave to make a motion, I do not think that what he asserts is prima facie question of privilege.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A travesty of justice.

Mr. Speaker: This is a question as to the exact words that are used in debate, a question which often arises. I now give the minister the opportunity, if he wishes to do so, to complete his case in that way, and also leave to make a motion. If he does not, then I think I should at least give an opportunity of explanation to the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Fulton: I think that possibly a motion would be going a bit far, and the matter would be satisfactorily disposed of by an apology to the house by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, you challenged the minister to present a motion. Naturally he is backing away from that.

Mr. Jones: You are exposed before the whole country now.

Mr. Fulton: An apology will suffice.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think it is appropriate that the hon. member whose name has been brought into question should be permitted to give his explanation, but I hope he will limit it to that. What is involved, as I have indicated, is a dispute over the facts. If he wishes to comment on the facts, that is his privilege.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I do wish to clarify the facts which have been confused and misrepresented by the minister. In the first place, the minister suggested I took a word out of Hansard, that I cut "verbatim" out of the blues. The minister suggested this, and in an interjection an hon. member opposite deliberately stated I had taken it out.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard).

Mr. Pearson: That statement, Mr. Speaker, is a lie, or an untruth if you prefer that word; and if the member who made the intervention would raise that as a question of privilege I should be delighted.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Speaker: I would hope the hon. member who has the floor would withdraw the word "lie" and use the word "untruth". There would be a serious question of privilege arise if an hon. member charged another hon. member with lying. We can always appreciate that I did not hear the intervention now in question.

Mr. Pearson: The remark was that I took a word out of Hansard before it appeared. Having been charged with that—and that would be an offence—I have the right to say that that statement is a lie. It is an untruth. That is a matter of fact and it can be proved by the examination of the blues to see whether it is true or not. I say that statement is not true.

Mr. Speaker: That satisfies the proprieties, of course. I thought the Leader of the Opposition was accusing a specific hon. member of lying.

Mr. Pearson: No. I was merely saying that the statement, whoever made it, to the effect that this was done, was a lie. That is exactly the same as saying a statement is untrue. The Minister of Justice accused me yesterday of making a statement which was untrue and nobody asked him to withdraw that statement.

Mr. Fulton: I did not use the world "lie". I will if you like.

Mr. Pearson: The minister's statement that there was anything different said in Quebec, or rather, as he said on another occasion, that I said nothing elsewhere along the lines of the statement I made in Quebec—that statement, I claim, is untrue.

An hon. Member: Read Hansard.

Mr. Pearson: I have the text before me. In my Quebec speech I said: "As I said last week in Winnipeg, these programs must be made more flexible." I made that statement in my Winnipeg speech, I could read the paragraph dealing with this point if I so desired. I also have the text of a statement I made in Guelph and I would be glad to quote from that to support my position that I did not make a statement in Quebec that I was not willing to repeat in any other part of the country. The minister has been unable to establish his wrong and misleading allegation to the contrary.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I think we should not allow these proceedings to become a debate. There will be opportunities to pursue the matter later on, I daresay.

MR. JUNG—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE ON JANUARY 25

Mr. Douglas Jung (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I have to rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday afternoon when I was in my office the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) made a reference to me during the course of his speech in which he dealt with certain aspects of the investigations into illegal Chinese immigration. This is what he said. I quote from page 204 of Hansard:

> The government has dragged through the mud the good reputation of tens of thousands of loyal Canadian citizens of Chinese descent, and I very much regret that one of the members of parliament has been aggressive and active in helping to smear people of the same origin as himself.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

An hon. Member: What can you expect?

Mr. Jung: Mr. Speaker, at no time have I done anything to smear my fellow Chinese, nor have I ever entertained any such preposterous thoughts. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton), the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) himself, have all received very extensive representations from me regarding the Chinese immigration regulations and also the investigations into the irregular entries. These representations from me have been so numerous that persons less generous and less sympathetic would long ago have lost patience with me.

Also, my speeches on the subjects are contained in Hansard and I invite anyone to say that there is anything in them which can be construed as smearing the Chinese in Canada. Far from smearing them, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member has had ample opportunity to deny the charge which was made during his absence. He should normally have taken objection when the matter arose in the house, but he has taken the first opportunity, I take it, and I have heard him. I think this matter should not be pursued. It is a matter which the hon. member rightly resents and explains, but it does not raise a question of privilege on its face.

I do not think this question falls to be decided, as I take it the hon. member is satisfied to make his explanation.

Mr. Jung: Mr. Speaker, under ordinary circumstances I would have been delighted to ask the hon. member to withdraw those remarks, because I think they are an imputation on my character and on my activities as a member of parliament.

However, because he has already said it I see no point in asking him to withdraw the remark because it is already on the record. I am taking this opportunity to say that this is not the first time I have been attacked on account of my racial background and I doubt that this will be the last. I want to say that I am proud of my racial background, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Jung: —and I am prouder still of being a Canadian. I hope I will never lower myself to make the same remarks about others as those remarks made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

NEW DELHI—STATEMENT ON SECOND EDUCATIONAL MEETING

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have a brief statement to make concerning the second commonwealth educational conference which was convened in New Delhi on January 11 and is ending today.

It will be recalled that the idea of a formal scheme for commonwealth educational co-operation was first put forward by Canada at the 1958 Montreal conference of Commonwealth trade and economic ministers. Following that initiative by Canada a commonwealth educational conference was held at Oxford, England, in July 1959 where the commonwealth education program was launched. Since that time it has developed most successfully and has met to a most rewarding degree the lofty expectations of its founders. Canada has played an important part in the implementation of the program which the government regards as a strong force for better understanding and for continued close relations among members of the commonwealth.

I have here a list of the students attending universities in Canada under this scheme and of those from Canada attending commonwealth universities abroad. Perhaps that list could be printed at the end of my statement. I would point out that there are now 184 scholars from other parts of the commonwealth in Canada and 61 Canadians studying abroad. The reason for the difference in numbers is, of course, that there are not the university facilities in many of these commonwealth countries which we are fortunate enough to have in Canada.

At this recent meeting in New Delhi, Canada was represented by a full delegation headed by our High Commissioner in London, Hon. George A. Drew, who also led the Canadian delegation to the first conference at Oxford and has followed the development of the commonwealth education program with a close and expert interest. The delegation also consisted of representatives of Canadian educational institutions and of national educational organizations which included provincial representation.

I have here a list of delegates which, perhaps, could also be printed at the end of my statement. Hon. members will realize that it comprises a very distinguished group.

The delegation participated effectively in all matters of common interest which came under discussion. Many recommendations were put forward for the continued development of the commonwealth education program and for improvements in its operation. These recommendations will now be submitted to member governments for consideration with a view to implementation.

I am sure hon. members will be glad to learn that the Canadian government has extended an invitation to hold the third commonwealth educational conference in Canada. This will probably be held in the year 1964. The offer is being recommended for acceptance by the delegates meeting in New Delhi.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs leave to have the lists of names incorporated in the record at the end of his statement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I am sure the house is interested in this report by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The conference held in New Delhi was an important one and, as the hon. gentleman says, it will have the effect of promoting a greater measure of co-operation and understanding in the commonwealth which we all regard as an essential instrument for stability and peace.

The minister has said that the third conference will be held in Canada in 1964. He will not misunderstand me if I say there is, therefore, a possibility that the hosts to that conference will not be the present government. However, that is a matter to be decided by events. We all heard with great interest that the delegation which represented Canada at New Delhi was composed not only of Canada's high commissioner and other representatives of the government, but that provincial governments and departments of education were represented, as well, together with outstanding educationists. This is, of course, as it should be, in view of the fact that the provinces have a juridical basis for their concern and interest in education. We thank the minister for his report.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Speaking for the C.C.F. party, which attaches great value and importance to the commonwealth and its increasing role in world affairs, may I say that we welcome the statement made by the minister with reference to this conference. It is further evidence of Canada's willingness to participate in the development of educational opportunities within the commonwealth.

I believe we are in a most fortunate position in Canada. Our tradition of twin cultures enables us, in particular, to assist those persons who come from the African states and whose official tongue is French.

[Editor's Note: The lists referred to by Mr. Speaker and by the Secretary of State for External Affairs follow.]

CANADIAN DELEGATION TO SECOND COMMONWEALTH EDUCATION CONFERENCE

New Delhi, January, 1962

Honourable George A. Drew, High Commissioner for Canada, London, leader of delegation.

Mr. M. Cadieux, Deputy Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, vice-chairman of delegation.

Mr. B. Scott Bateman, Deputy Minister of Education, province of Manitoba, past president, Canadian education association.

Dean G. F. Curtis, faculty of law, university of British Columbia, chairman, Canadian commonwealth scholarship and fellowship committee.

Dr. J.-Gerard DeGrace, Joint Deputy Minister of Education, province of New Brunswick, president of "L'Association Canadienne des educateurs de langue Francaise".

Msgr. Jacques Garneau, secretary-general, Laval University, member, Canadian commonwealth scholarship and fellowship committee.

Dr. Marion Grant, Acadia University, Wolfville, Nova Scotia, member, Canadian commonwealth scholarship and fellowship committee.

Dr. F. C. A. Jeanneret, chancellor, University of Toronto.

Reverend H. F. Légaré, rector, University of Ottawa, president, national conference of Canadian universities and colleges.

Mr. Gerald A. Mosher, principal, Gorsebrook school, Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Mr. Freeman K. Stewart, executive secretary, Canadian education association, member, Canadian advisory committee on teacher training and supply.

Representatives of the following federal government departments were also included:

Department of External Affairs

Department of Labour (vocational training branch)

Department of northern affairs (education division).

Canadian Coastguard Service

SEARCH AND RESCUE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW NAME FOR TRANSPORT FLEET

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): The government has decided that the main Department of Transport fleet of ships will in future be known as the Canadian coastguard. The decision to adopt the new name for the fleet was taken in recognition of the tremendous expansion it has undergone in the past several years in the scope of its operations, in the number of vessels and in the standards of operation that have been achieved. This fleet has been known as the Canadian marine service.

At the same time it has been decided to adopt a new colour scheme for its vessels and a distinctive insignia for their funnels. The ships will have red hulls with white superstructure and funnels instead of the former black, white and yellow combination. A moderately stylized red maple leaf and band on the white funnels will make them easily recognizable at a distance as Canadian coastguard vessels.

The use of red for the hulls is of significant practical utility, particularly for icebreakers, as they will be more easily seen from vessels they may be escorting and by pilots of our own helicopters under conditions of poor visibility. The same need for visibility and ready identification applies to the Canadian coastguard vessels which are on search and rescue duties.

New types of uniforms will be issued which will provide comfortable and smart clothing appropriate to the conditions of the service. These uniforms are modelled on the wartime battle dress and berets are to be provided.

The essentially civilian character of the fleet will remain unchanged. Pilot vessels and canal craft will continue to be operated as separate units by the appropriate divisions of the department.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I think all hon. members of the house would agree with the statement made by the minister, which in effect is a sort of streamlining of the vessels which operate under his department. I am sure the men, officers and others who work on and operate these ships will be delighted with the announcement the minister has made.

I should just like to add that perhaps the minister should give consideration to a statement made by the former minister of public works, now the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that the government of Canada would soon be having a merchant marine once this government took office. The minister might well give consideration—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: —to that and perhaps announce a decision to that effect to the house in the near future.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, several years ago when the Department of Transport was under the auspices of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Hees) we looked forward to this step. There were some indications that we were going to have real wavy navy in the marine service. We welcome the steps that have been taken.

There is no indication in the minister's statement, of course, that this is going to lead to the kind of coastguard service that the United States provides. We look forward later in the year to some kind of announcement by the minister which would indicate that the search and rescue operations of the Canadian marine service will be expanded, particularly on the great lakes.

REPRESENTATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY

Mr. W. F. Matthews (Nanaimo) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-46, to amend the Representation Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Matthews: Mr. Speaker, I explained this bill verbatim last session and I do not think a second explanation is at all necessary at this time.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-47, with respect to the readjustment of representation in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, this bill has been before the house in three previous sessions. It merely seeks to arrange that a redistribution commission can be set up to govern and adjust the constituencies of this parliament.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

FINANCE

REPORTED STATEMENT BY A FORMER GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question arises out of a statement reported to have been made yesterday in Toronto by Mr. Graham Towers, former governor of the Bank of Canada, to the effect that Canada's economic performance of the past five years has been unsatisfactory and that per capita gross national product today is smaller in real terms than in 1957.

My question is to the Minister of Finance. Has he any comment to make on this matter?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think it is quite clear that the question is one beyond the scope of oral questions on the order of the day. Furthermore I would advise the house that, if the minister replies, there is no time limit on his speech.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very glad to make comment on this matter because it is quite clear that the Leader of the Opposition has followed a practice of selecting a little piece out of an extended speech made by the gentleman concerned and then bringing this before the house as though it were the whole speech.

Mr. Pearson: Read the whole speech.

An hon. Member: Like Winnipeg.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There are many things that are dealt with in the speech in the reports that are available to everyone in this morning's press. I would have thought that it would have been of interest to the Leader of the Opposition that Mr. Towers is reported as saying:

> Canada's currency was overvalued for most of the period, although considerable relief has resulted from the fact that the dollar now sells at a discount of 4½ per cent compared with the U.S. dollar, compared with an average premium of a little more than 3 per cent in 1960.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The value of the rule which I invoked is apparent. Questions of this kind only introduce debates. Now that each side has made a statement, I think perhaps we might call the account even.

INDUSTRY

REPORTED SALE OF FARM IMPLEMENT COMPANY TO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct to the Prime Minister a question arising out of a press report that the Cockshutt Farm Implement Company may be sold at an early date to the White Motor Company of the United States. My question is this. In view of the Prime Minister's interest in reducing farm implement prices and the inquiry that took place in this house last year, I wonder whether any discussion has been held with farm organizations which might lead to the retention of the ownership of this company within Canada and perhaps its development by the co-operative movement and the producers themselves?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): No such discussions have taken place, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman will, of course, understand me when I make this suggestion. In the province of Saskatchewan a government of the kind to which he refers has gone into various businesses including steel production and the like. This might be a matter he could transmit to that government for its attention.

AUTOMOBILES—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. In view of the fact that he has now had the Bladen commission report on his desk for many months and in view of the requests made by the automobile industry and other industries allied therewith, may I ask him if the government is going to act one way or another with regard to this report before the dissolution of the present parliament?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, although he has been in the house a long time, has quite overlooked the fact that the implementation of the report would involve the kind of action that is taken in a budget.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not entirely so.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Therefore his question is quite premature. Every other hon. member knows that questions of that kind are not answered in the house. His curiosity in that respect can only be satisfied when the next budget or a budget is introduced.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, I have been receiving delegations on this subject. You will remember that in making my announcement last June with respect to it I invited delegations and expressions of opinion. I have been receiving expressions of opinion from representatives of the automobile industry, the automotive parts industry, municipalities where these industries are located and others, and this subject is continuing to receive very active study. Indeed, there are some futher delegations yet to be heard. I am hearing the president of one of the motor car industries on Monday next, one who comes from the city of Windsor, incidentally.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for an unusually lucid reply. May I say to him that while—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There will be opportunities for debate. If the hon. member has a supplementary question he may ask it, but otherwise I think he should restrain himself.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was just preceding my supplementary question by a compliment to the minister, something I am not usually given the opportunity of or justification for doing. May I ask the minister if we are to take it from his reply that there will be a budget before the next election and that in that budget the government will take action to try to deal with the situation that is seriously affecting the automobile industry?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

An hon. Member: Buy a rule book, Paul.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member, as he knows, should have no expectation of receiving an answer on the orders of the day to a question as to when the next election will be. The hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, that was not my question. My question was based on the seriousness of the situation affecting this industry and in that connection I have the right under our rules to ask the Minister of Finance whether or not we may expect a budget in which the recommendations of Professor Bladen will be considered one way or another by the government. That is my question and I ask the Minister of Finance to answer now.

Mr. Speaker: I remind the hon. member that was his first question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, no.

Mr. Speaker: Well, it was not precisely in those terms but that was the substance of it. I am sorry, but I cannot accept his argument. The hon. member for Skeena.

TEXTILES—COMPLAINT RESPECTING DISRUPTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has he taken note of the complaint made by the Canadian apparel and textile manufacturers association to the effect that unnecessary disruption of the Canadian textile industry has been caused by Japan's failure to announce 1962 quotas for shipment of clothing and textiles to this country? Is there any foundation to this complaint?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is not unusual in the early part of the year, while we are still negotiating with representatives of the Japanese government for the establishment on their part of export quotas for the year, for representations to be made by the Canadian industries that are affected. As a matter of fact, so far as the textile industry is concerned, we are in frequent contact with the representatives and spokesmen for that industry. So far as negotiations are concerned, Mr. Speaker, I said in reply to a question a few days ago that the negotiations with respect to the 1962 quotas are proceeding. I must say that I always wish these negotiations would proceed more quickly than they do, but whatever textile products may be entering Canada from Japan in this present period before the quotas are determined for 1962, most certainly they will be taken into account in the establishment of the quotas.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING WITH B.C. PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): I have a question for the Minister of Finance on the Columbia river negotiations with the premier of the province of British Columbia. Recently when the premier was advised by you that it was impossible to meet him in Toronto were any further steps taken to arrange a future meeting? If so, what were the results?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I think I can put quite briefly the state of the correspondence between Premier Bennett and myself. The last letter that I received from Premier Bennett was dated November 27, 1961. That letter was made public by the premier after it was sent. I sent him an interim acknowledgement dated December 9, 1961, and replied to the letter at length on December 23. That letter concludes with these words:

> I am, as always, ready to meet with you and invite you to suggest several alternative dates in January for consideration.

The only communication I have received from Premier Bennett in response to that letter was a telegram which reached me on the evening of January 4.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Was the minister in Quebec then?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. I received this telegram at my home in Ottawa. It reads as follows:

> Will be in Toronto at King Edward Hotel on Friday January twelfth only. Would make time available for discussion on Columbia if you thought advisable.

That telegram was signed by "W. A. C. Bennett minister of finance." I responded early the following morning on arrival at my office with the following telegram to him:

> Reurtel deeply regret cannot be in Toronto January twelfth. Will be engaged all day at meeting of Canada-U.S. continuing committee on trade and economic matters in Ottawa. Hope you can suggest other dates for our meeting.

I have had no response to that communication, Mr. Speaker, I wrote the premier a letter also on January 5. In it I quoted for confirmation his telegram to me and my telegram to him in reply and added the following:

> I am very sorry that I am not available on the date you suggested, but the date of the meeting of the Canada-U.S. committee was set several weeks ago and involves a large number of ministers and officials from both countries. It is expected to continue also on January 13th.

That concludes the recent exchanges. As I say, Mr. Speaker, I have had no communication from Premier Bennett since I received that telegram on the evening of January 4. If it were the wish of the house to have these documents printed as an appendix to today's Hansard, I have copies available for that purpose.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hellyer: A waste of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the correspondence in question be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hellyer: No.

Mr. Speaker: I hear an objection. I will recognize the hon. member for Laurier who I believe has a question to ask.

Mr. Chevrier: May I direct a question—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not think there was any objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Trinity said no. I do not know whether or not he meant it. Does the hon. member for Trinity seriously object?

Mr. Hellyer: From what the minister had said, Mr. Speaker, I could not determine anything that would justify the expenditure of the taxpayers' money for printing these documents.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In that event, in view of the interest of other hon. members of the house in a matter of extremely great importance to Canada and an extremely important element in co-operation between Canada and the United States, I would ask the house to permit me to read the letter which I wrote to Premier Bennett on December 21.

Mr. Chevrier: Go ahead.

Mr. Speaker: Only with unanimous consent can that be done.

Mr. Hellyer: This procedure would also involve delay, Mr. Speaker, and incur considerable expense. Perhaps I had better withdraw my objection.

An hon. Member: The Liberals are not interested.

Mr. Speaker: The inclusion of unread documents in Hansard must be by unanimous consent. I recognize the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I have an indication—

Mr. Chevrier: Your Honour has given me the floor twice. Surely I ought to be allowed to ask a question. I have the floor.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Laurier would allow me to ascertain whether or not I have overlooked something to which I should have attended.

Mr. Chevrier: I will, of course, bow to your wishes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): One hon. member indicated that he was not willing to give unanimous consent to the printing of these documents. That member has now indicated that he is withdrawing that objection. I wonder whether the correspondence could be printed by unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the correspondence be incorporated in today's proceedings?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRADE

INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED U.S. TARIFF CHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): My question to the Prime Minister is the following. What attitude does the government intend to adopt in the face of the vast tariff changes submitted to congress by President Kennedy yesterday and which are designed as stepping stones to an open trade partnership between North America and western Europe to stop communist expansion in the economic field?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The government of Canada has made it very clear that it is most anxious to see the widest possible development of multilateral trade without discrimination. Any initiative in this regard will naturally receive the most favourable consideration by the Canadian government. Indeed, by reason of the communist danger that faces us and particularly Mr. Khrushchev's claim that by 1980 the U.S.S.R. and communism in general will have destroyed economically the free world depending on private enterprise, I am one of those who believe that in the years ahead any step that can be taken to strengthen each and every nation in the free world economically should receive the support of all.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Can the Minister of Finance indicate the date when he will be presenting the next budget?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am in no position to indicate the date on which the next budget will be presented. It is most extraordinary for hon. members to expect the Minister of Finance in the month of January to indicate the date of the budget. It is only seven months since the last budget was introduced.

Mr. Chevrier: It was a pretty bad one, too.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I would say this so far as the hon. member for Essex East is concerned. In his impatience and curiosity—

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister is replying to the supplementary question of the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I say to the hon. member for Skeena that if any hon. member of this house has representations on this subject that he wishes to make to me I shall, of course, be glad to receive them, but I think they should be informed representations and not the kind of political claptrap that we hear from the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I ask this question by way of a supplementary only because of its importance to the city of Windsor and to Canada generally. If the minister cannot tell us the date, can he give us the month when the budget will be brought down?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, it will be a suitable month in the year of our Lord 1962.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SPECIAL ALLOWANCES FOR SERVICE PERSONNEL ABROAD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the government authorized any special allowance for members of the armed forces serving overseas to restore their purchasing power to the level enjoyed before the devaluation of the Canadian dollar?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the matter of the amount of the allowance paid to personnel serving in Europe has been the subject of a survey which has been carried on during the past few months, the results of which will be available shortly. On the basis of those results a decision will be made whether or not there should be any change in the amount.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SPECIAL ALLOWANCES FOR PERSONNEL ABROAD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a supplementary question. Has the Department of External Affairs made any change in its allowances to officers serving overseas to reflect the change in purchasing power brought about by the devaluation of the Canadian dollar.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

BRITISH GUIANA—REPORTED SENDING OF HON. MEMBER FOR BURNABY-COQUITLAM AS FINANCIAL ADVISER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question based on a report in last night's Ottawa Citizen about my excellent friend, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam? The report was to the effect he is going to leave next week to advise the government of British Guiana on its system of taxation. My question is, was this as the result of an arrangement between the government of British Guiana and the government of Canada?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, no, no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Finance? Does he not think that the services of the hon. gentleman ought to be preempted to Canada?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Canada will not bid for those services under any circumstances.

AGRICULTURE

EFFORT BY UNITED STATES FARMERS TO BENEFIT FROM CANADIAN LAW

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): My question concerns the Minister of Agriculture but, in his absence, I should like to direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Is it possible that American farmers, who get subsidies to reduce their grain acreage, may be doing some farming in Canada to take advantage of Canadian legislation?

(Text):

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I did not quite understand the hon. member's question, but if he is implying that farmers from the United States are coming over here to take advantage—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the parliamentary secretary might perhaps take the question as notice and examine it. It appeared to me it was a question that went beyond the jurisdiction of the Canadian Minister of Agriculture but perhaps it could be taken as notice.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASES FOR PREVAILING RATES EMPLOYEES

On orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance about a matter which I understand comes under his jurisdiction. Since approximately last June has there been a freeze order against wage increases for carpenters, plumbers or electricians employed in the parliament buildings and can he make a statement soon that increases in line with established trade union contracts and rates will be made applicable to all federal government prevailing rates employees affected?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for a declaration of policy. If the minister wishes to deal with the matter on the orders of the day he will have the opportunity to do so, of course, but it seems to me that the hon. member is asking for a declaration on an important matter of policy.

Mr. Winch: Wage increases, sir.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is asking for information with respect to the wages paid to any particular group of employees on prevailing rates, I suggest that he put his question on the order paper and give particulars so that there will be no difficulty in identifying the particular group about whom he is speaking. If it is a question of policy, I think he is aware of the policy followed by the government in relation to the wage rates of persons in the prevailing rate categories. Obviously this is not a matter for the orders of the day.

PUBLIC BUILDING

ERECTION OF OFFICES IN MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Could the minister give the house a progress report on the negotiations between the municipal authorities of Montreal and the C.B.C. concerning the construction of the corporation's buildings in the eastern part of the metropolis?

(Text):

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I am not in a position to say today exactly where that matter stands. There are negotiations going on, as the house knows. I will inquire as to what stage they are now and inform the house later.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSED ASSUMPTION BY GOVERNMENT OF PORTION OF FUNDED DEBT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): May I ask the Minister of Finance what disposal, if any, the government has made of this proposal of Canadian National Railways that the government should assume liability for a further approximately $1 billion of the Canadian National funded debt?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): All questions pertaining to the capital position of the Canadian National Railways are being discussed at the present time. The hon. member will recall that the period of years covered by the Canadian National financing act expired last year and was extended for a further year by act of parliament. Negotiations are proceeding at this time and will continue, I expect, for some little time to come with a view to working out terms in this respect which might be appropriate to be submitted to parliament for approval in due course.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

INQUIRY AS TO MANAGER FOR U.S. PROJECT "GEMINI"

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Is the Mr. James A. Chamberlin who has just been named project manager of the United States project "Gemini", the same Mr. Chamberlin who assisted in designing the Avro Arrow?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): I shall have to inquire.

Mr. Hellyer: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That would be a new question. I recognize the hon. member for Kootenay West.

UNITED NATIONS

PORTUGAL—INQUIRY AS TO SALE OF ARMS BY CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the debate now taking place in the United Nations general assembly on Angola, and in view of the assurances given this house last session that Canada would cease shipping arms to Portugal under the NATO agreement, would the minister care to comment on the statement purported to have been made yesterday during the debate by the Indian representative Mr. C. S. Jha, to the effect that of the 15 NATO countries only Norway had announced it would refuse arms to Portugal?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The important word in that statement is the word "announced". Only Norway had "announced". The situation so far as Canada is concerned was explained to the house by the Prime Minister on June 24, 1961. The hon. member for Kootenay West will recall that the Prime Minister then said Canada has not delivered mutual aid to Portugal since November 1960 and earlier shipments to Portugal as to other NATO countries were made on the understanding that they would be used only to strengthen the defensive capacity of the organization and only for the defence of the NATO area as defined in article 6 of the North Atlantic Treaty, which does not include Angola. Moreover, commercial sales of munitions to Portugal have not been made for over two years. That was the situation as announced in June of last year and that continues to be the situation today.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question? Were any arms sent under any other provision, such as mutual aid? The hon. member used the words "commercial sales"?

Mr. Green: No, the hon. member has not heard me correctly. In my statement I referred first to mutual aid and then dealt with commercial sales. There has been no shipment of arms under any other provision.

IMMIGRATION

ELIGIBILITY OF AVRO EMPLOYEES IN U.S. FOR READMITTANCE TO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): May I ask this question of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Will Mr. Chamberlin and the approximately 25 other ex-Avro engineers now employed by the United States national aeronautics and space administration, qualify for readmittance to Canada under the new immigration regulations in case their services should ever be required here again?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking about the regulations and the law. He is able to interpret them just as other hon. members can. It is not in order to ask for an opinion or interpretation of the law or to pose a hypothetical question.

Mr. Hellyer: I think the government has done a great disservice to Canada—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will have the opportunity to debate that matter.

SPORTS

GALT TERRIERS—REQUEST FOR GRANT TO PARTICIPATE IN WORLD HOCKEY TOURNAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister received a request from the Galt Terriers for a grant to enable them to participate as Canada's representative at the coming world hockey tournament in Colorado? If so, what was the response to this worth-while request?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, there has been a request received in the department. I have referred it, along with many other requests, to the incoming advisory council.

Mr. Argue: I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question arising out of the minister's answer? Is he in a position to say whether the incoming council will be able to make a decision on this request in order that the Galt Terriers will have the money in time to go to the world hockey tournament?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): The council is to have an organizational meeting on February 5 and 6, and this is one of the matters that will be referred to them for consideration.

SHIPPING

GREAT LAKES—INQUIRY AS TO ICEBREAKER SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware of the recommendations made by the secretary of labour, Arthur Goldberg to President Kennedy that the offer of the Finnish government to lend the United States a super icebreaker in an attempt to keep the great lakes open on a year round basis—

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking whether or not the minister is aware of something happening in the United States.

If he has a question to ask the minister about something within his jurisdiction, perhaps he would put his question.

Mr. Badanai: The question is, has the government any intention of considering such a proposal to keep the great lakes open by using an icebreaker during the wintertime?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of what is going on between the United States secretaries in the American cabinet. It is not clear as to just what the suggestion is. I think my hon. friend is asking if it is the intention to keep the great lakes open in the winter. At the present time, we have certain regulations so far as shipping on the great lakes is concerned and the opening of navigation in the spring, and there are no changes contemplated.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Production and marketing branch—

611. Payments to western grain producers to be distributed on the following basis, namely, $1 per cultivated acre up to a maximum of 200 acres per farm in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, $42,000,000.

The Chairman: Shall this vote carry?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Agriculture): I regret that illness prevents the Minister of Agriculture from presenting this estimate to provide for an acreage payment to western grain producers. Thus it falls upon me to do so and I take advantage of the opportunity to compliment you, Mr. Chairman, on your appointment to the important post you hold. I know of no one who could fill the position in a more distinguished manner.

It will be recalled that because of the serious financial position, particularly of the smaller western grain producers, and also due to the absence of a two-price system for wheat, previous acreage payments were made in 1958 and 1960. The reasons why this form of assistance was decided upon in those years were given at length by the Prime Minister and myself when it was originally proposed and debated in this committee. Perhaps I should refer to the Hansard reports in which those debates are recorded so that any members of the committee who would like to refresh their memories in regard to these matters will know where to find them readily. They are in Hansard of August 30 and September 6, 1958, and of August 8 and 9, 1960.

I shall not repeat the comprehensive statements made on those occasions but will very briefly sum up the principal reasons why it was decided to provide this particular form of assistance to western farmers. After a careful examination of various programs suggested to improve the income position of these farmers it became quite apparent this was the most equitable and practical method of meeting the difficulty. Second, this method ensures that the smaller, worse-off farmers receive the greatest proportion of benefit from the money provided, and this is one of the main considerations which must be borne in mind in extending assistance of that kind.

Third, assistance by acreage does not stimulate production of particular commodities, thus creating and increasing surpluses which have been found difficult to dispose of in the past. In this connection it is encouraging to record that we have made very great progress in the last year or more in disposing of our large surplus of grain, particularly wheat. Nevertheless a system of assistance which would considerably encourage the production of certain of these grains and cause a move away from a more diversified type of agriculture in western Canada would be a step in the wrong direction.

Fourth, acreage payments are a type of payment which does not serve as an impediment to the marketing of agricultural commodities or to free trade in them, while many of the alternative schemes of assistance which have been suggested would have that undesirable feature. In view of the fact we are dependant to such a great extent on exports of our agricultural products, that is something which we must always keep in mind in any agricultural assistance we institute.

This year there is a very important additional reason why a payment of this kind should be made. It is to be found in the reduced farm income, particularly of people in certain areas of western Canada due to the drought which took place there last year. This drought in the long run did not prove as devastating and serious as at one time was believed would be the case, but nevertheless it did have very serious effects which are particularly apparent in the income position of many farmers in western Canada. How serious that is can be shown by comparing the average wheat yield this year with that of previous years. During the past crop year the average wheat yield is estimated to have been 10.4 bushels per acre, whereas for the previous five years it was 19.7 bushels per acre. In other words, this year's yield was not very much more than half of what had been secured on the average in the previous five years. This gives a good indication of the situation in which many farmers will find themselves, and demonstrates the necessity of assistance in the form proposed.

The payments to be made under the authority of this vote will follow the same pattern as the two previous payments. That is, each producer holding a wheat board delivery permit will receive $1 for each cultivated acre listed in the permit, up to a maximum of $200. Payments will be made to holders of delivery permits for the current crop year, that is 1961-62, and it is estimated that approximately 235,000 payments will be made.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I do not wish to be rude but will the minister clarify one matter? Do I understand that while payments will be made on the permits books, a person with two or three permit books will be entitled to one payment only? If so can he say how a cross check will be made as there were a number of extra payments made last time by error?

Mr. Harkness: The payments will be made through the wheat board as they were on the two previous occasions and the checking will be done on the basis of their records. Every effort, of course, will be made to ensure that a man who may happen to hold two permits will not be paid on both of them. On the last occasion there were some cases where this happened and repayment was requested. In the final check of every case where an error of that sort was made, repayment was sought. It is always possible that errors can be made in cases of people with similar names, but I do not think that is a material matter so far as the scheme generally is concerned. However, there are several matters which caused questions to be raised at the time payments were made previously. I might mention a few of them so that there may be no doubt in anyone's mind as to the situation at the present time. The first of these matters is in connection with joint permits, that is, a permit in which more than one person is shown as the actual producer. This covers partnerships and things of that sort. Where payments are made to more than one individual as actual producers, payment will be made to them jointly to a maximum of $200 for each such producer. In other words, if they have more than 400 acres and two people are in partnership on a joint permit they would each get $200. If they had only 300 acres they would receive $150 each, in that particular case.

The second matter is in connection with co-operatives. Payment will be made to co-operatives based on a maximum of 200 for each active member of the co-operative and again to the extent of the total cultivated acres shown in the permit. If there are five people in the co-operative and they have 1,000 acres they get $200 apiece; if they have 500 acres they get $100 apiece.

The next matter is in connection with landlords. A large number of questions were raised last year as to whether they would get the payments, and there were complaints when they did not. I should like to make it clear that since the payment is made to the party shown as the actual producer in the wheat board permit, landlords are not eligible for payment unless they are listed as the actual operators of the land. The next point concerns the acreage eligible for payment. All acreage to a maximum of 200 acres which is shown in the wheat board delivery permit as being under wheat, oats, barley, rye, flax, cultivated forage crops, miscellaneous crops, summerfallow and new breaking is eligible for payment. This means, of course, that the only land which is not eligible is that which is natural pasture. There is one other point in this regard; it is the one I have just mentioned, but perhaps it should be put separately so that there may be no confusion. The acreage which is listed in the permit book as being uncultivated land or natural pasture is not eligible.

I trust this explanation will ensure that there is no such confusion with regard to these various points on this occasion as there was in regard to all these matters on the first occasion when acreage payments were made in 1958.

When I was introducing this estimate in 1958 and also in 1960 I referred to a table which gives the breakdown of specified acreage groups as shown by the wheat board delivery permits and I think it would be of advantage to members of the committee if I put this on the record of the house as I did in 1958. I would therefore ask the permission of the committee, Mr. Chairman, to have this table printed in Hansard.

The Chairman: Has the minister permission to table this document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table referred to follows.]

The following table indicates the specified acreage groups as shown in wheat board delivery permits for the 1960-61 crop year:

Specified acreage groupings	Number of permits	Average acreage per permit	Average acreage cereal crops

Mr. Harkness: As may be seen, this table shows the specified acreage groupings for the crop year 1960-61, in other words, the last crop year for which we have a complete record. It shows in particular that in the group having up to 99 acres of cultivated land there are 20,172 farmers. The average acreage per permit is 65. In the next group having between 100 and 199 cultivated acres there are 54,926 farmers with an average acreage per permit of 144. In the next group having between 200 and 299 cultivated acres there are 49,123 farmers with an average cultivated acreage of 247. This table also shows the breakdown into wheat, oats and barley but I shall not read that out; it will appear in Hansard.

What these figures mean is this: taking these first three groups we have 124,221 farmers out of a total of 223,994 holding permit books who have cultivated acreage amounting to less than 300 acres. The third group I mentioned had an average of 247 acres and the two other groups held an average of less than 200 acres. In other words, these are small farmers and they constitute more than 55 per cent of the total of farmers in western Canada holding permit books. This demonstrates that the particular type of payment now envisaged gives to these people the greatest proportionate benefit from the funds allocated for the purpose. It also makes it clear that the common assumption made by many people that all the farmers in western Canada are big farmers is not correct. The majority are small farmers in actual fact.

There is some other information which I think would also be of interest and value to the committee, namely what was paid in the course of the two previous payments made in 1958 and 1960. In 1958, in Manitoba—these are round figures—there were 43,900 payments made to a total value of $7,206,000. In Saskatchewan, 109,460 payments were made to a total of $19,958,000. In Alberta there were 79,145 payments to a value of $13,219,000 and in British Columbia 1,653 payments amounting in all to $265,000. In other words, 234,162 payments were made and the total amount paid out was $40,649,123.

In 1960, the total number of farmers paid was 227,710, a reduction of about 7,000, and the total amount paid out was approximately the same, namely, $40,432,000. In order to save time I shall not break it down this time for the various provinces. I might say, however, that due to the increase in average farm acreage which has taken place since those payments were made it is estimated that the average payment will be higher on this occasion. Therefore the total amount paid out will be somewhat higher than it was on those two previous occasions. Also, it is estimated that there will be a certain increase on this occasion in the number of payments which are made.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is the estimated average?

Mr. Harkness: The estimated average of what?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You said it was $178 under the previous plan.

Mr. Harkness: No particular sum has been estimated, but it is estimated that the average payment will be higher because the size of farms has increased somewhat during the intervening period.

Mr. Argue: It will be very few dollars in any case?

Mr. Harkness: Yes. The acreage payments made in 1958 and 1960 I think without any question have shown their value to the western farmers and western farmers have demonstrated their approval of these payments in no uncertain way. When the acreage payment program was first introduced to the house in 1958 hon. members opposite were very critical of it. They complained about the method which was being used and about the size of the payment. This was the occasion on which the hon. member for Assiniboia, in particular, was talking about "peanuts" and things along that line.

Mr. Argue: Hear, hear.

Mr. Harkness: However, the history of these two payments has demonstrated without any question that they have been extremely valuable and they have been very well received by the farmers of western Canada.

At this particular time, in view of the drought which was experienced last year, the smaller farmers of western Canada particularly—and, as I have indicated, they constitute the majority—will find the payment which is proposed in this estimate a very great help indeed. The estimated amount of between $41 million and $42 million which will go into western Canada as a result of these payments will have an extremely beneficial general effect not only on the economy of western Canada but also on the economy of eastern Canada, in the form of orders for manufactured goods of all kinds which otherwise farmers and their families in western Canada would not be able to purchase.

I hope that this estimate will receive the universal approval of the committee.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to join with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness) in congratulating you upon your appointment as chairman of committees of the whole. There is no doubt that you are qualified and able to hold that office. You can rest assured that, for our part, we will make your task easy and enjoyable.

Following a statement on the official assistance program to the western farmers that the government intends to implement, I would like to say a few words of approval about these credits which will undoubtedly contribute to help the western farmers who have suffered losses through drought during the 1961 season. We would have thought, however, that the government would have announced a program that would have taken into account the promises made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) during the 1957-58 electoral campaign. Such is not the case.

I should just like to mention here what he said in Moose Jaw on March 15, 1958 and which was reported in the Montreal Star on March 17, 1958. I quote:

(Text):

The Prime Minister also promised that sympathetic consideration would be given to making deficiency payments to wheat, oats, and barley growers so that their returns bear a fair relationship to production cost.

(Translation):

That promise is probably one of those which the Prime Minister forgot to fulfil, and it is not the least, since it concerns 220,000 farmers in the three prairie provinces. Once again, the Prime Minister repudiates his promises to give parity and not charity to grain growers.

In 1960, when a similar vote was before the house, the Prime Minister, after having apologized for not being able to grant the deficiency payments asked by the wheat, oats and barley growers, said:

Deficiency payments applied to deliveries of grain would fail to help those producers most in need and if adopted would require very large subsidies from the treasury, which would inevitably lead to increased surpluses and would add further to the burden of financing the disposal of those surpluses.

And a little further on, the Prime Minister said:

As a result, our policy has consistently emphasized measures to attack the basic problems of agriculture; measures such as export assistance, crop insurance, a vastly improved and comprehensive agricultural credit policy, rural development, conservation and the like. We believe that the basic problems of Canadian agriculture will yield only to long range solutions.

Such was the Prime Minister's agricultural philosophy at that time. And now, in order to solve the problem, we have to take emergency measures as we did in 1958, 1960 and again this year, in other words, handouts, charity. No measure taken so far has given the results expected and the long range effects which were supposed to be felt.

The Crop Insurance Act would have played a suppletory part if the object of the legislation had been really to help the farmer, instead of being merely eyewash.

A few areas have been organized in the western provinces, but, in its application, the act did not reach as far as it should have, because it imposed too heavy a financial burden on the provincial governments.

Farmers in the east have a lot of sympathy for those of the west, and they proved it often last summer as well as in 1958 and 1960.

The fortunes of our farmers in the east are closely tied to those of their fellow farmers in the west, because it is from them that they get much of their supply of feed grain. Indeed, when agriculture is flourishing in the west, our whole economy is the better for it.

Mr. Chairman, the financial help given to farmers who suffered losses last summer will no doubt be appreciated, but, next spring, comes sowing time, it will not be enough to pay for the expenses they will have to incur in order to buy seed grain, gas and other items.

At the present time, most farmers have delivered the greater part of their grain; by next spring, they will have practically none left to bring in a cash income.

These circumstances will give rise to a serious problem where the farmer will be in for trouble if he cannot find ways of financing.

The regulations of the Farm Credit Corporation and the provisions of the Farm Improvement Loans Act do not allow loans to be made to cover operating expenses. Of course, farmers may get a personal loan from the credit unions or the chartered banks but there again, only a small portion of them take advantage of such loans because they have no securities to offer.

I would therefore suggest that the government amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act in order to enable the corporation to grant short term loans as the Liberal party has often recommended and as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has also proposed in the brief submitted to the government four or five years ago.

If we really wish to help farmers, those neglected citizens—

(Text):

Mr. Smallwood: I rise on a point of order. I am wondering whether we are debating the whole agriculture policy or whether we are debating acreage payments.

The Chairman: I noticed that the hon. member had strayed rather far from the subject of the item.

(Translation):

I would ask the hon. member to revert to the vote under discussion because the rules require that we deal only with the item under consideration.

(Text):

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Before you make your ruling, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word.

The Chairman: I believe I have already made my ruling.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure that the Chair—

Mr. Argue: You cannot get away with that.

The Chairman: I shall be glad to hear the hon. member as well as any other member. But as the hon. member and all other members have heard, I have made a ruling. However, further explanation may be forthcoming. I shall be glad to hear the hon. member.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure we desire to assist the Chair, particularly as the Chair assumes its new obligations. I believe that the Chair in turn would want to realize the importance of this matter. When this matter was first proposed in 1958, discussion was preceded by a statement by the minister who engaged in a very thorough exposition of agriculture policy. The Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Chairman: I hope the hon. member will confine his remarks to the point of order and will not stray far afield.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is exactly what I am doing.

Mr. Harkness: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Argue: Oh, no.

The Chairman: The minister has risen on a question of privilege.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member for Essex East has stated that in 1958 I did certain things which I did not do. I would ask him to refer to Hansard of the dates which I gave when I was speaking a few moments ago in order that he may not make statements which are completely incorrect with regard to what I have done or not done.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was about to make the observation that the debates on this matter in 1958 and 1959 will show that there was a thorough discussion by those proposing the matter. In particular, if Your Honour will look at Hansard for August 30, 1958, at page 4345, you will note the participation of the Prime Minister in this matter and observe that he reviewed the whole past policy of the government, that of other governments and what this government proposed by way of program. That was all with regard to this particular item. Then you will observe that the Leader of the Opposition spoke later on the same day in reply. He made an argument with regard to the important contention of the Prime Minister. He dealt with agricultural policy. Then on September 6—

The Chairman: May I say—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I finish?

The Chairman: —that it will not be necessary for the hon. member to continue. He has sufficiently enlightened the Chair on the subject. As I was saying to the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska, I did not preclude him from proceeding. I only asked him to assist the Chair by keeping his remarks as closely as possible related to the subject under discussion.

Mr. Argue: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word if I may do so.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I had not finished speaking on the point of order.

An hon. Member: Two great experts.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Your Honour has requested that the hon. member stick close to the subject. We must understand what this means. What the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska has been doing is complaining, as was done on other occasions and as was permitted in the debate, that this particular item is no substitute for a full agricultural policy. In view of the precedents and in view of the rules I submit that he is entitled to indicate that this policy, which is satisfactory as far as it goes, is not sufficient and that it is no excuse for the government having failed to define its policy as announced by the Prime Minister.

The Chairman: The hon. member is not invoking a point of order. He is really making a contribution to the debate. However, it being one o'clock I do leave the chair.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I believe we were dealing with a point of order at one o'clock and if I might be allowed to say a few words on the point of order I would appreciate it. The hon. member for Essex East pointed out that when an item of a similar nature was debated on previous occasions a wide range of debate was allowed dealing with the government's agricultural program as it affected agricultural producers in the country. I feel that the hon. member who has the floor is in order when he puts forward a case for similar payments or treatment for farmers outside the three prairie provinces. I think this is in order. Perhaps a 30-minute speech dealing only with that point would not be in order, but I submit that pointing out why benefits to one area should apply to other areas should be pertinent to this item.

Mr. Harkness: On the point of order, I must take issue with the contention made by the hon. member for Essex East, particularly his statement that in introducing this matter in 1958 I made a long, general agricultural speech. If he will look at Hansard, which I hope he has done—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have it right here. I will deal with it.

Mr. Harkness: —he will find that I confined myself entirely to the matter of acreage payments. I did not make a general speech at all. The Prime Minister also did not speak on this estimate at that time. The Prime Minister in 1958 and again in 1960 made a statement in the house on general agricultural policy in which this matter was mentioned along with a number of others, but that was not as part of the discussion of the estimates in any way whatsoever. The Prime Minister made his statement on motions. Therefore the contention that the Prime Minister made a general agricultural speech on a similar item of estimates when it was before the house is not correct.

I should also like to point out that on the two previous occasions there was considerable difficulty because hon. members opposite tried to turn the debate on this particular estimate into a general agricultural debate contrary to the rules of the house. I would hope that we might have a ruling at the present time that the discussion will be confined to this particular estimate and that we will not go into all of the scores, even hundreds, of general matters which come under agriculture because that is contrary to the rules of the house and is not a means by which the general business of the house can be dealt with and completed in any reasonable way. If we were to follow such a procedure we would be sitting here the entire year and would never come even close to getting through our business. Therefore I think it is a matter of some importance that the existing rule in connection with a discussion of this sort should be observed.

The Chairman: At the outset of this afternoon's sitting I would simply ask for the co-operation of members on both sides of the house. The rule on the matter, being standing order 59, paragraph 2, is, of course, quite clear.

Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

At the moment I would call upon the member who has the floor to proceed and I would ask him to conform to that rule and to the general practice of this committee. Hon. members will also appreciate that one cannot rule on points of order before they arise. The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, before the hon. gentleman continues—

The Chairman: Just a moment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On the point of order, Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: There is no point of order before me.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I wish to deal with what the Acting Minister of Agriculture has said.

The Chairman: I have made a few observations and the hon. member for Essex East made some observations on the same point before the adjournment, to which the minister has replied. As far as I can see, at the moment there is no point of order before the committee and I am asking the hon. member who has the floor to proceed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, that is all right as long as it is clearly understood that what the Acting Minister of Agriculture has said is not part of the ruling, because he has tried to suggest that the Prime Minister did not participate on this item in the general discussion. If you will look at page 4745 of Hansard for September 6, 1958, volume four, you will see that he did.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am perfectly in order in speaking at this time notwithstanding the irritation it may cause the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister.

The Chairman: Is the hon. member raising a new point of order?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We are now in committee, and I have a right to rise and deal with the statement of the Acting Minister of Agriculture that the Prime Minister did not participate in a general debate in the discussion on a similar item. I am saying that Hansard at the page I have indicated clearly establishes that in the course—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member will have the opportunity in committee, as he says, to explain his point of view fully, and I would give the floor to the hon. member who has it and ask him to proceed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Very well.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, when I was interrupted this morning following a point of order raised by the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose (Mr. Smallwood), I had just suggested that the government should provide assistance to western farmers who will be in need of cash and credit for their seeding operations this spring.

That suggestion did not seem to please the member for Battle River-Camrose any more than many others; of course, government members are systematically opposed to any suggestion made by the opposition and designed to improve conditions for our farmers.

If they really want to help the farmers, if they are sincere, if they want to help—

Mr. Ricard: This government has done more than any other previous government.

Mr. Boulanger: —those neglected citizens, as the Prime Minister used to call them throughout Canada during the election campaigns of 1957 and 1958, it is high time he proved his sincerity.

There is a problem which I should like to draw to the government's attention. It has to do with the damage caused by floods in eastern Canada and especially in my riding, the constituency of Drummond-Arthabaska, in the riding of my good friend from Megantic (Mr. Roberge) and in a few municipalities of Richmond-Wolfe county.

In September 1961, we had the worst storm our district has ever known. Torrential rains fell during three days causing floods and extensive damage.

Farmers lost their crops; they lost their farm buildings. Mr. Chairman, I ask—

(Text):

Mr. Ricard: We are on acreage payments.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member is discussing a matter which is entirely beyond the scope of the item before the committee. We are concerned only with acreage payments to western grain producers who suffered loss because of the drought during last summer. The hon. member is discussing a matter which relates to something entirely different, namely, the inundations which took place in certain ridings the hon. member has mentioned. I think he should adhere to the rule as it has been explained to him.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, when dealing with damages caused to farmers by drought conditions, I think we are also entitled to speak of damages caused by flood or other acts of God from which the farmer's income could suffer. We are now concerned with the eastern farmers. They lost their crops, their farm buildings. The roads—

Mr. Ricard: I rise on a point of order. The measure we are now discussing deals with drought conditions in the west, while the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger) is speaking about an altogether different matter, that is, too much rain. Could it be that he does not know the difference between rain and drought?

I believe you should call the hon. member to order and ask him to limit his remarks to drought conditions in the west, since that is what we are considering now.

(Text):

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I regret to have to intervene again, but Your Honour is now in the chair. This point is of vital importance in this discussion, so I think we will have to deal with it. The hon. gentleman whose observations are regarded by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys as being out of order has sought to indicate that this policy is inadequate because it does not cover a situation that requires attention in other parts of the country. The argument is that he has no right, on this item, to make that kind of observation.

I pointed out to the Deputy Speaker before lunch that this intervention was without any validity. I indicated that on two other occasions when this particular item was under discussion there had been a general debate on the problems facing agriculture as a whole, and that is the precedent—

Mr. Harkness: Incorrectly pointed it out.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will deal with that. The precedent for this course, as I pointed out, had been taken by the right hon. Prime Minister himself. He took advantage of the occasion to make a comprehensive statement on agricultural policy in which the hon. member for Assiniboia, the Leader of the Opposition and others took part.

Now then, just to show that what I have said is justified, on September 6, 1958, we were discussing this proposal of acreage assistance up to a maximum of $200. In that debate there was wide latitude permitted. I have before me the Prime Minister's remarks as recorded on page 4747 of Hansard for September 6, 1958 when the Prime Minister said, inter alia:

> Mr. Chairman, this is part of an agricultural policy designed, as the Minister of Agriculture said a moment ago, to meet an immediate situation. When the next session arrives we intend to introduce a measure for which the farmers have asked from the earliest days—

Then, he talked about the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and referred to all that had been done in the past. The Leader of the Opposition complained bitterly about the inadequacy of the particular proposal for $41 million, and that is what the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska is now doing. In this debate the Acting Minister of Agriculture, supported by his colleague the minister of mines, makes references which are not warranted under the rules or indeed by the very debates which I hold in my hand in an effort to try and preclude the hon. gentleman from saying that this measure is not adequate for the purpose intended and that it fails to take into account the inadequacies and the weaknesses of existing government policy. Now, for hon. gentlemen to try to restrict debate on this item is something which cannot be supported by the attitude it has taken in the past.

I am surprised that the minister of mines should have, so shortly after taking a post in the ministry, forgotten his experiences and sought to circumvent a decision which he himself made. We have great confidence in your judgment, Mr. Chairman. I know that you are not going to allow this party in this house to be overwhelmed or engulfed by a strong majority that seeks to impose closure on us every time we seek to speak for the farmers of this country.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, if this were not a serious matter it would be laughable to hear the type of thing which the hon. member for Essex East has been saying. What he is doing is attempting to revive an argument which he made some time ago when the Deputy Speaker was in the chair and when the Deputy Speaker ruled, as a matter of fact, that the discussion of an item of the estimates should be strictly on that particular item. What the hon. member for Essex East is deliberately doing is to try to justify a full scale agricultural debate on this particular item.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As the Prime Minister did.

Mr. Harkness: It is completely contrary to the rules of the house. The hon. member, as he himself admits, is trying to contravene the rules of the house and present some precedent from the past to justify his doing so. The Prime Minister did not make a general agricultural speech on this particular item. He got up to answer very briefly some of the points made by members on the opposite side of the house.

Mr. Chairman, as I indicated a short time ago when you were not in the chair, we had considerable difficulty in 1958 and 1960 in hon. members opposite trying to convert the discussion on this item into a general agricultural debate, and I do not think that should be permitted at the present time.

The Deputy Chairman: As the minister has pointed out, the rule of relevancy was referred to by the chairman of this committee a short time ago. Even if what the hon. member for Essex East states as a precedent is true, then I say a good precedent is not created by a bad precedent. I feel that perhaps the hon. gentleman who has the floor could relate his remarks more skilfully by analogy to the item under consideration than he has heretofore. If he did so I would be very tolerant. I trust he will co-operate with me.

An hon. Member: No one expected the Prime Minister to keep the rules a few years ago.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate your remarks and I shall try to abide by them. If I refer to the damages we have sustained in eastern Canada, it is precisely to establish a comparison with those sustained by western farmers.

Western farmers have sustained damages which, according to some reports, amount to $500 million. This is the loss they are sustaining this year on account of crop failure. In eastern Canada, within a radius of a few miles only, farmers have lost perhaps one or two million dollars, not including buildings, bridges and roads. And when we want to talk about those losses, they would gag us. I regret that the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) should have thought it proper to make such derogatory remarks; he will have to put up with the consequences. We have never refused to talk about damages caused to western crops.

Mr. Ricard: On a question of privilege. The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger) says I have made derogatory remarks detrimental to the farmers of my constituency. This is absolutely contrary to the facts. If there are some who know that I have their interests at heart, it is precisely the farmers of the constituency of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot. On the other hand, if I rose a moment ago—

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I am listening for his point of privilege. If there is one coming I hope he will put it to me quickly.

Mr. Ricard: The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska said I had neglected the interests of the farmers in my constituency. This is altogether contrary to the facts because, all through the years since I was elected a member of parliament—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Order.

Mr. Ricard: —I have defended the interests of the farmers of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot and the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska should be the last one to come in here and say I have not.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sure the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot will have an opportunity to make a speech of this nature at the appropriate time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Six o'clock.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: What have you done about that matter during the 22 years you were in power?

Mr. Boulanger: Of course, we could not go through a discussion like this one without some comments from the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Mr. Pigeon: Twenty two years of doing nothing before speaking up.

Mr. Boulanger: The province of Quebec has made a request to the federal government for a substantial assistance in order to help the eastern farmers. I only wish to add a few words to support the request from the government of the province of Quebec. I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness) have a splendid opportunity of telling us today what the government is going to do about the request which the government of the province of Quebec, our farmers and myself have made with a view to obtaining relief for that area.

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Argue: I listened with a great deal of attention when the Acting Minister of Agriculture was introducing this item, and I appreciated the information and statistics he gave us.

On this occasion he engaged in very little extraneous argument but merely set forth the views of the government justifying this payment to producers in various categories. However, the first thing which strikes me in regard to the government's attitude is the long delay in making an announcement. For a great number of years farmers have been pressing for parity prices for agricultural products. In asking for parity prices they sought a set of prices related to costs of production. They did not in any way ask for handouts or charity.

One of the reasons so many members from the three prairie provinces sit on the government side of the house was the belief which producers in western Canada had in the Prime Minister, when he told them during the election campaign that there would be charity, not parity.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is the other way around.

Mr. Harkness: He is always twisting something.

Mr. Argue: I think I have been around some of the members opposite a little too long. The Prime Minister promised parity not charity, but the farmers have waited a long time for parity prices. The principle of parity prices has not been applied to a single farm commodity since this government was elected.

Other measures have been brought in by the government to deal with prices of agricultural products, but in almost every instance the action taken by the government has meant lower support prices, less support, and a smaller guarantee than the farmers had previously. The government has only acted in regard to these payments after a great deal of pressure. Its first announcement that $1 per acre would be paid was made early in August, 1958, after the government had been returned to office, and after farm organizations had continued to press every strongly for parity prices and deficiency payments.

The payments brought forward at that time were made applicable to the 1958-59 crop year and paid on those permit books. Western farmers were dissatisfied with the action which was taken and hoped that in the future the government would do more. They were determined that the government should do no less than provide the $40 million which had been put forward in the estimates in August 1958. We waited during the year 1959 for an announcement by the government. None was forthcoming. No announcement of any payment was made during that year. After persistent pressure from agricultural organizations, after a delegation of more than a thousand farmers marched on Ottawa. After protracted correspondence with the government, an announcement was made on August 8, 1960 that a dollar an acre would again be paid on acreage up to a maximum of 200 acres and that this would be paid on the 1959-60 permit books. Thus, with the announcement on August 8 the farmers did receive $1 an acre in accordance with this formula for 1958-59. With the further announcement a dollar an acre was forthcoming on the 1959-60 crop.

Producers had reason to expect that last year, again, the government would make an announcement that it was paying a dollar an acre on the 1960-61 permit books. I asked the Prime Minister in the house last fall whether he intended to take this action but all we got was the brush-off.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member asked him in July, too.

Mr. Argue: I asked him before that. I asked him a long time before that. The Prime Minister went out to western Canada in the summer and said everything was fine, that crop conditions were better than they had been—

Mr. Pascoe: So they were.

Mr. Argue: The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre says: "So they were". I could tell him that a lot of farmers in south Saskatchewan resented very much that the Prime Minister did not go to the southern part of the province and see what conditions were like there, because the crops were almost zero.

Mr. Pascoe: You are their spokesman.

Mr. Argue: I am their spokesman and I do not put forward the tripe that is just put forward now by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre in agreeing with the Prime Minister. In large parts of my riding the P.F.A.A. inspectors report that three farmers out of four have zero carryover and zero yield. How much worse off would the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre want the farmers to be than that? But the Prime Minister said he had looked at the crops and was happy because things were better than he had expected. This was at a time when thousands of farmers had no crops at all. Then the right hon. gentleman delayed some more; he delayed until this session opened. More pressure was brought to bear on him to act. Then, somebody wrote the speech from the throne. I take it it was the Prime Minister, though the Governor General reads it. And in the speech from the throne the following statement is made:

> The drought in the prairie provinces during 1961 has resulted in severe losses ... and you will be asked to provide assistance by means of acreage payments to the farmers who have been affected.

Well, I hope the government does that. The announcement made today does not derive from that statement in the speech from the throne because, as hon. members will have seen, the statement in the speech from the throne says there will be acreage payments to the farmers who have been affected by the drought. All they are doing in this thing is to use the same old catch all, paying it to a farmer with 40 bushels an acre as well as to the man who had a zero yield. Either the Prime Minister does not watch very carefully the things he writes when he is supposed to be writing the speech from the throne or—and I hope this is correct—the thing we are dealing with today is not the policy forecast in the speech from the throne.

I say this because the provision before us today has absolutely nothing to do with drought—nothing whatsoever. This money is to be paid to grain producers, wheat producers, barley producers, oats producers and to the men who produce hay. It is paid to many men who produce livestock and sell no grain. It is paid to people who do not sell a bushel of grain. It has nothing whatever to do with drought. I suggest the farmers of western Canada will be looking to the Prime Minister to fulfil by way of legislation the undertaking announced in the speech from the throne, namely to bring in acreage payments to the farmers affected by drought. The farmers who have been so affected have put forward their case for acreage payments. That has nothing to do with this proposition whatsoever. The farm unions, by way of a policy statement submitted to the government, have asked for a $5 per acre payment to farmers who have experienced crop failure as defined in the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, namely, a yield of less than 12 bushels per acre. They have asked for an acreage payment up to $1,000 for farmers who have suffered crop failure. I have a resolution on the order paper asking for similar action to be taken, asking that there be an expansion of the provisions of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act so that farmers who have experienced crop failure may receive compensation in a more adequate fashion. My resolution asks that the payment be increased and that the acreage on which the payment may be made should also be increased.

The announcement which was made today will be a great disappointment to western producers, because as far as western producers are concerned it will be considered to represent just half as much as they felt they had a right to expect. The Prime Minister announced an acreage payment on the 1958-59 crop year and an acreage payment on the 1959-60 crop year. Now he has skipped a year. The announcement today is merely in respect of the 1961-62 crop year. The farmers will realize that they have been gypped by the omission of the crop year 1960-61. The Prime Minister says it is for the two-price system. In the speech from the throne he said it is for the drought. This has nothing to do with the two-price system, though that is what he said. Why did he not have it for the two-price system in 1960-61? What was wrong with paying it in that year? Why miss a year? At least we know why this one is being included. It is an election year.

Mr. McIntosh: On a question of privilege, the hon. member for Assiniboia has been making statements saying that the Prime Minister had said this, and had said that, without giving the committee any authority in support of those statements. He has not told us where those statements were reported or recorded and I should like to know where the hon. member gets his authority for attributing, for instance, the words "parity not charity". I should also like to know what is his authority for saying that when the Prime Minister came back from the west he said conditions were not as bad as he had thought.

Mr. Argue: I am disappointed that the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek should stand up and repudiate this promise made by the Prime Minister time and time again that we would get parity not charity. My authority for what the Prime Minister has been saying is the speech from the throne. He may say that the Governor General wrote it himself and did not ask for any advice, but with the words that were placed in the mouth of the Governor General the Prime Minister has said the acreage payment will be made to the farmers who have been affected by the drought.

Of course, this has not been done. This apparently is not going to be done. I should like to know from the gladiators from the prairies who sit on the government side of the chamber whether they think the farmers have a right to expect a payment for the 1960-61 crop year.

Mr. Nugent: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. You did not deal with the last point. The hon. member has not quoted any authority for what he has said; he is merely trying to misinterpret the point of order of the hon. member. He said he repudiated the Prime Minister. There was no such suggestion. I think the point of order was well taken. The hon. member says he is quoting the words of the Prime Minister and I think it is perfectly in order for an hon. member to suggest that the hon. member who is quoting someone should give a reference of when and where such a statement was made.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I do not mind these interruptions as long as you keep track of the time taken up by these interferences. It is interesting to note how widely the Prime Minister is being repudiated, and I suggest that when—

Mr. Nugent: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Argue: There is another phony point of order being raised in the wings there.

Mr. Nugent: The hon. member is interpreting my words as meaning that the Prime Minister has been repudiated. I am merely saying that the hon. member who is purporting to quote the Prime Minister should say when and where he was speaking. The hon. member says this is a phony point of order. Certainly if the objection taken to the last point of order was sound, this one is not. This one is ill-taken. I would ask the Chair to kindly direct the hon. member to give his reference and quit giving these phony references to mythical speeches.

Mr. Argue: If I may continue with my remarks that are causing so much consternation among the members on the government side of the chamber—

Mr. Nugent: These misquotations always cause consternation.

Mr. Argue: The farmers of western Canada will be deeply disappointed that this government has omitted in the payments to them the crop year 1960-61. Of course, this is the way the Prime Minister works. The Prime Minister will not say on a given occasion the policy of the government with relation to acreage payments over a period of time. No, it is a hit or miss affair. He wants them to come begging. He wants to keep them on tenterhooks. He wants to have a carrot on the stick. He wants to feed them a little before the election and withdraw it after the election if he should be in that position.

I do not think this is the way either to treat the agricultural producers or the House of Commons. If we are to be dealing periodically with a measure to pay $1 an acre to western farmers under a certain formula, then I suggest the government should put forward this policy in legislative form and place it on the statute books so that the legislation is made in an equitable, regular manner and is not in this most unsatisfactory way of having an item in the estimates one year, missing a year and putting it in the estimates at some later time.

But the Prime Minister thinks in every field, apparently, as a politician. He has come to the conclusion that he can garner more votes by this slipshod method of dealing with a very important question. The Prime Minister would like western Canada to think that he is the only Prime Minister who has ever done anything for the grain producers. He would like them to think that his legislation has put more into the pockets of the grain producers than other legislation.

I have debated in this house for many years with former minsters of agriculture and trade and commerce, but there was one policy that was placed on the statute books in 1956 that I feel was a good one. That had to do with the national treasury paying the carrying charges on stocks of wheat held at the end of each crop year in excess of 178 million bushels.

This kind of payment is a regular one. This kind of payment is placed on the statute books. This kind of payment may not receive the same spectacular publicity because it is sure and it is certain. But I suggest it is a much better way of handling the business of this country than by the political method of the carrot on the stick, where you can have a nibble before the election and you are forgotten the year after the election.

In 1957-58 under this particular policy $33 million was paid to the grain producers of western Canada. In the next year, $40 million was paid and in the next year $38 million. In 1960-61, $42 million was paid, and for the present year it is estimated at $49 million.

Mr. McIntosh: Did you call it peanuts then?

Mr. Argue: Under this policy of paying money into the wheat board fund for storage on wheat that was held in excess of 178 million bushels the treasury has made over the years, I estimate, total payments of $202 million, as opposed to the $126 million that will be paid in the three years in which the $1 an acre has been paid.

I am not endeavouring to set one policy against the other on the basis of which policy is the better one, but I do say to this government that if their policy is $1 an acre, it should be in the statute books; it should be regularized. It should not be available only when the Prime Minister is in the right frame of mind and decides that this is the politically opportune time to bring forward this kind of payment.

The policy that is being put forward today has been put forward on the ground that it is a help to the small farmer. It is a help to some small farmers, but it is a help to the big farmers. There is a ceiling on it of $200 payable to every farmer who has 200 acres or more in crop. But according to the figures put forward by the minister this morning it is only the small farmer who does not get the full benefit. According to the figures put forward by the minister this morning 20,000 farmers with 99 acres or less will get less than $200. Another 55,000 farmers with acreages of between 100 and 199 will get less than $200. So that about one third of the farmers on the prairies will get less than the $200 put forward in this proposal. Therefore it is not something that provides a minimum payment, a guaranteed basic, floor payment to the small farmers. Instead it is put forward on the basis of a payment to farmers, one third of whom will get less than the $200.

We are still looking forward to the government fulfilling its promises of bringing forth parity prices for agricultural products, and the argument in favour of something more being done is the tremendous increase in the farmer's cost of production over the years.

The 11-factor index for the farmer's cost of production stood at 170.4 in 1947. The last figures I have available show that the index today is 286 and it has gone up 27.5 points since 1957 when this government took office. It is the price cost squeeze resulting in higher and higher costs for farmers in western Canada that has created this demand for acreage payments, for deficiency payments, for income supports of one type and another. I can understand spokesman for agriculture from other parts of Canada saying "We want a payment like this" or "We want some other payment to equal this". This payment is made on the basis of acreage and farmers who produce in eastern Canada have acres just the same as have farmers producing in western Canada. This proposition is not put forward as a well defined policy. It is put forward on a temporary basis. It is not put forward with a formula attached that will be used year after year. I think it is a slipshod way of doing business that will be bound to create in the country much more resentment than would be the case if it were made. That would remove controversy on this question from parliament year after year.

This provision in itself is not nearly enough to meet the agricultural situation as we find it at this time. If the farmers of Canada, are to get a square deal I suggest that the government should provide a system of deficiency payments for grain. These deficiency payments should be based on a formula and they should be designed to give the farmer parity prices for his grain products. Second, I would suggest that there should be a large expansion in prairie farm assistance payments that are made; that there should be an increase in the acreage on which payments can be made from 400 to 600 acres; that there should be a thorough overhaul of the government's crop insurance scheme; and that the federal government should bear a much larger share of the burden and should do more than merely agree to pay 20 per cent of the forecast premiums under this legislation.

Third, I would make this suggestion. If the government really wants to do something in a major way for small farmers, I would suggest that in addition to anything that is being done today the government should provide floor prices, and not this hocus-pocus of a national average that is in the agricultural prices stabilization legislation. I submit that the government should provide floor prices on hogs, eggs and poultry.

The farmers would not be asking for deficiency payments or acreage payments if they were getting parity prices. In recent months there has been a considerable improvement in the selling price for Canadian grain. As a matter of fact there would seem to be a real indication now that Canada, along with other nations of the world, may be able to negotiate a new international wheat agreement that will provide substantially higher prices. My fourth suggestion is this. In the present context of the international wheat situation I would think that the Canadian government should endeavour to have the international wheat agreement renegotiated with its target being an increase of 50 cents per bushel in the floor price and an increase of 50 cents per bushel in the ceiling price. This action would bring these prices more in line with the guaranteed prices that are obtained by United States grain producers and would be reasonably in line, I feel, with the upward pressure on wheat prices throughout the world at this time.

As a fifth point I would suggest that at this session the government should amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act so as to make it permanent legislation. I suggest that the government should not have it contain a date at which it terminates unless it is otherwise extended but should make it permanent legislation, in order to reassure the producers of western Canada that the government will maintain the Canadian wheat board.

As a sixth point, I would suggest the government should increase the scope and the powers of the Canadian wheat board and that this government should cease weakening the Canadian wheat board by taking feed grains sold to feed mills from under the jurisdiction of the Canadian wheat board. The jurisdiction of the Canadian wheat board over feed grains should be restored. The Canadian wheat board legislation should apply to rye and flax.

As point number seven I would suggest that, in addition to window dressing and printing pamphlets, the government should take some action in connection with A.R.D.A., the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act, should sign an agreement with the provinces in order to obtain for livestock producers—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think I have been very charitable in allowing these planks to be placed before the committee in respect of all other fields of agriculture except the one in the item under consideration. I would ask the hon. member who has the floor and whose time expires in one minute or so, to hearken back to the subject under consideration.

Mr. Argue: I would hope, in view of your ruling, that would mean that I have some further time because of the interruptions.

An hon. Member: Keep in order and you will not be interrupted.

Mr. Argue: To conclude, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say this. As far as the livestock producers are concerned, which this $1 an acre will help in exactly the same way as it will help the grain producers, one of the things necessary for the government to do in order to improve their situation is to provide them with access to grazing, by an increase in community pastures and by redevelopment of the kind the government has been talking about.

As an eighth alternative or addition to the things that are now being done, I would suggest that the government should protect the long gains of western producers in many fields. This measure will be of some assistance because $200 is better than nothing. However, the $200 payment will scarcely pay for the 3 per cent increase announced a few weeks ago in the prices of farm machinery charged by the International Harvester Company. Welcome as it is, this $200 will in no way compensate the farmer for the increased costs that will follow if this government and future governments were foolish enough to allow the suggestion of the royal commission on transportation to go forward and abandon most of the railway lines in western Canada, thereby increasing the cost of marketing grain by an enormous amount.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, may I say that this item is welcome. It is better than nothing. Previously I had called it peanuts in relation to farm costs. The bag that contains the peanuts is smaller for the small farmer than for the larger farmer. This is small compensation for the huge increase in the cost of farming and the cost of production. I suggest that the very minimum the Prime Minister should do is to make this payment on the 1960-61 crop year as well as in the present year and to make this legislation permanent.

Mr. Jorgenson: For the third time in a row now, Mr. Chairman, we have heard this same speech from the hon. member for Assiniboia in which he uses this opportunity to lay down the various shaky planks in his election platform. He uses this as an opportunity to make his one agricultural speech in the session and to create the impression that he is doing his bit here in the House of Commons in order to help the farmers he represents.

I think perhaps we can best deal with the contribution he has just made by reading an item which appeared in the Regina Leader-Post of October 20, when the opposition in the legislature were criticizing the government for the action during the drought. It reads as follows:

> Existing government policies of help to farmers had made it unnecessary to call a special session of the legislature to deal with the 1961 farm crisis, provincial treasurer Woodrow Lloyd said Thursday.

So his colleagues in the province of Saskatchewan do not agree with him when he says that conditions in the drought areas of Saskatchewan were so severe that additional assistance must be provided by the government. There is an article in the same edition of the Regina Leader-Post quoting Mr. Nollet, the provincial minister of agriculture, to this effect:

> —the government had done everything possible to help the farmers both to fight grasshoppers and to help overcome the effects of the drought... He charged that the Liberals only wanted to stir up a fuss in the face of a calamity to try to get people to believe them. He said it was "the poorest kind of political practice that could ever be followed, since it put a very low level of intelligence on the people of the province."

That is precisely what the hon. member for Assiniboia is attempting to do today. His statement that price supports have been lower since the present government took office is completely false. In most cases price supports have been raised and a larger number of farm commodities have been brought under support. Surely the hon. member does not expect he is going to get anyone to believe that his statement that price supports have been lowered is the truth. The hon. member went to some length to be critical of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture in their efforts to do something to help the farmers of Canada. I think his criticism can be effectively refuted by an article that appeared in the December issue of The Country Guide. As everyone knows, The Country Guide is a very objective and independent paper. The title of the editorial is, "Hurrah for Mr. Hamilton", and it has this to say, in part:

> But setting the drought problem aside for the time being, it should be recognized that there have been a number of positive steps forward and several important breakthroughs in the field of farm policy in the past year.

The editorial goes on to say:

> The Hon. Alvin Hamilton has held this post in the federal cabinet for just over a year now. To our way of thinking, he is proving to be an excellent minister of agriculture.

I do not want to trespass on the rules of the house, Mr. Chairman, but I feel that a number of the charges that were made by the hon. member when he digressed from the item in question must be answered. I think I should have the same leeway in replying to those accusations as he had in making them. The excerpt I now wish to read is in answer to the criticism of the hon. member that the Department of Agriculture is carrying on too much publicity. This is what The Country Guide has to say about the matter:

> He has made a special effort to explain the problems of agriculture to the consuming public in order to gain understanding and support for needed agricultural policies. He has launched an effective publicity campaign on his departmental programs to ensure that farm people will be fully familiar with how to make the best of the opportunities and assistance they provide.

The editorial goes on to say:

> First, the Canada Department of Agriculture must change its emphasis from the production or supply side to the demand side of the market. Second, ways must be found for the federal government to work in greater harmony and co-operation with the provinces on agricultural programs.

That is precisely what the minister is doing.

> Third, agriculture must work in greater co-operation with the other resource industries in Canada. Each of these three approaches is commendable.

In conclusion this statement is made:

> A great many things remain to be done.

We are the first ones to admit that the problems of agriculture as well as the problems of any other industry in this country are never completely solved.

> However, his willingness to act on any valid complaint or promising proposal, his boundless energy and enthusiasm, his sound philosophy and imaginative approach to the problems of today and tomorrow, are not only commendable characteristics, but provide hope for agriculture that has been sadly lacking in recent years. May his efforts in 1962 be as rewarding for agriculture as they have been in the year that is about to close.

Contrary to what the hon. member has been saying, these are the views of the farm organizations. This is what they are saying about the government and the Minister of Agriculture. I wish to refer to another item that appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press, I believe it is, of January 13. It has reference to a statement made by Mr. S. E. Ransom, president of the Manitoba federation of agriculture, and is in these words:

> Canadian agriculture has about reached the limit of support and intervention it can expect from governments, S. E. Ransom, Manitoba federation of agriculture president, said in Winnipeg Friday . . . He cited the recent passing of the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act as a case in point, and called for steps to be adopted along the same lines whereby farmers and farm groups could do something constructive to get themselves out of the dilemma of high cost, low return production.

The farmers themselves recognize what the government is doing to try to assist them. They are organizing in an effort to co-operate with the government, as the minister has pointed out on so many occasions and, as is stated in the editorial in The Country Guide, the minister is working for greater co-operation between farm organizations and the federal and provincial governments and related industries. We feel that this is an effective way in which the problems of agriculture can be met, first of all by government legislation designed to assist the farmers to help themselves; second, by greater co-operation and, third, by government policies designed to relieve some of the distress that exists because of low income and low yields.

No one on this side of the house has ever tried to create the impression that acreage payments are intended to be the answer to the agricultural problem. They are a measure designed to offset the effects of low income as a result of drought last year. They are intended to assist farmers, particularly those in the lower income range, to maintain their farming operations until they have had an opportunity to take advantage of the different pieces of legislation and types of assistance available to them under this government.

The hon. member for Assiniboia has criticized several of them but he is critical in the same way that Mr. Nollet has accused the opposition in the provincial legislature of being critical. Crop insurance has not been fully applied across the country but I have no doubt that it will be. The reaction in the province of Manitoba because of the drought is an indication that there is going to be a greater signing up of farmers under the crop insurance legislation than ever before because after the drought last year they realized what crop insurance could do for them.

The efforts that the Minister of Agriculture has made to get rid of our wheat and, indeed, the efforts of the Minister of Finance, have resulted in approximately a 20 cent increase in the price of wheat. Yet the hon. member for Assiniboia has the audacity to stand up here and say that prices have been reduced, that prices are going down and that there is less support. I challenge him to show me where price supports have been lowered on any commodity in this country, particularly in the past few years. I challenge him to go to the people of his constituency and, indeed, to the western provinces generally and spread the same type of claptrap that he spread this afternoon and try to get away with it.

Mr. Argue: Before the parliamentary secretary sits down I should like to ask him a question. Is he aware that in recent months many producers in western Canada have been selling eggs at 15 to 20 cents a dozen, and does he think that is an adequate support price?

Mr. Jorgenson: As the hon. member well knows the price support policy on eggs is based on the national average.

Mr. Argue: That is the trouble; that is what I said.

Mr. Jorgenson: At the end of the year, if the price is below the level that is set by the stabilization board, the farmers will be compensated and the hon. member knows that full well.

Mr. Argue: But there is no floor price.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure we all regret that the Minister of Agriculture, because of illness, is not in his seat and, on that account, is not able to introduce this measure, initiated today by the former minister of agriculture, the present Minister of National Defence. I am sure, too, that on the occasion when we first discuss a matter concerning agriculture, we noted with considerable regret the recent death of a former minister of agriculture, the late Right Hon. J. Gardiner. Mr. Gardiner, regardless of whether or not one agreed with him, was deserving of high tribute from the Prime Minister, who led the nation in expressing deep sorrow at the passing of one who had contributed so much to Canada and to agriculture. As a former colleague, I take this occasion to express in this house my own inadequate but sincere tribute to a great minister of agriculture, one who did so much for western Canada and who was one of the great parliamentarians of this period in Canada.

This measure, Mr. Chairman, was announced not in parliament but on the occasion of a visit by the Prime Minister to his constituency last fall. It was an announcement made at a time when I believe the Minister of Agriculture was in the province of Saskatchewan, meeting, at the same time, representatives of certain farm groups. The Calgary Albertan observes that the Prime Minister made his announcement of this acreage assistance following the pattern of the two previous occasions when this method was used, to constituents of his in a theatre that had seats for 800 but where only 700 people were in attendance. In any event, the Prime Minister, of course, had a right to choose this way of making the announcement, but it is an announcement that came under circumstances that at least must be questioned.

As late as last July, the hon. member for Assiniboia had asked a question of the Prime Minister in this house, and questions were put by other members of the opposition in the month of September last, as to when the house might be expected to deal with the legislation that had been forecast in news stories some time in the month of July. As I say, however, it was only last fall that the Prime Minister gave a positive announcement of the government program. When the Prime Minister did make the announcement I suppose that one would regard the observations of Mr. Rudy Usick, the president of the Manitoba farmers union, as typical of the complaints that were registered against the inadequacy of the particular program. Mr. Rudy Usick associated with his complaint the fact that since the first acreage covered the crop year from August 1, 1958 to July 31, 1959, the second covered the calendar year 1960, and the third covered the crop year August 1, 1961 to July 31, 1962, the farmers had been done out of payments for five months of 1959 and seven months of 1961.

This point was made by the hon. member for Assiniboia and has not been replied to by the parliamentary secretary who has just taken his seat. One of the most amazing things about this program is, as the hon. member for Assiniboia has said, that this is not a fulfilment of the promise made by the government and notably by the Prime Minister when he was leader of the opposition and later during the course of the federal election. At that time, he indicated to the people of Canada what his government would do to try and remedy the situation that confronted Canadian agriculture. The hon. member for Assiniboia and my colleague, the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska referred to the promises made by the Prime Minister. We were not going to have mere handouts such as this, good as it is, inadequate as it is, we were going to have a comprehensive program; parity not charity. When that statement was made, hon. gentlemen opposite asked, what was the source, what was the authority for saying that the Prime Minister had ever said that parity not charity would be the objective of his party when it constituted the government of this country.

No source was given for the statement. Let me remind hon. gentlemen that there will be found at page 2021 of Hansard for March 12, 1956 these words spoken by the Prime Minister:

> The squeeze which the farmer suffers results from the disparity in the relationship between the prices of farm products and the prices the farmer has to pay. When they are in proper relationship parity is established, and it is parity that the farm organizations across this country are asking for today. Not charity but parity.

There is my reply which the hon. member for Assiniboia did not give to the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. Hon. gentlemen will also find, at page 2026 of Hansard for March 12, 1956, that the Prime Minister expressed this objective in the form of an amendment which he moved. This amendment reads as follows:

> That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following be substituted therefor:
> in the opinion of this house consideration should be given by the government to the advisability of introducing during the present session legislation to create a parity of prices for agricultural products at levels to ensure producers a fair price-cost relationship.

There is the authority in so far as the records of this house are concerned. If any more proof is required, I ask my hon. friend to look at what the Prime Minister said in Toronto in his opening speech of the campaign on April 25, 1957; I ask them to read what he said as recorded in the Winnipeg Free Press on April 26 and likewise to look at what was reported in the Toronto Globe and Mail, indicating that the Prime Minister said on the hustings precisely what he has said in this house that what he was going to give the farmers was not $1 per acre with a maximum of $200, not charity but parity. This was the assurance given by the Prime Minister, who is in the house today, to the farmers of Canada. What do we have now? We have for a third time—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): We have $1.90 a bushel wheat.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —something altogether different from the promised comprehensive program based upon a continuing body of principles as envisaged by the Prime Minister at that time. Let the government, the Acting Minister of Agriculture and the parliamentary secretary not seek to indicate that by coming forward with this measure they are fulfilling their promises. The Prime Minister boasts of having fulfilled almost all of his promises. Well, we all know the extent to which there has been any fulfilment, and if there is one area where there has been no implementation of promises made by the Prime Minister, it is in the field of agriculture.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Nonsense.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This particular program is now brought forward at a late date in spite of assertions and hints as to what was going to be done, assertions made no later than last summer.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is just plain tommyrot.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hon. gentlemen are indicating that they do not like my remarks. They do not like to be reminded that the farmers were promised a new earth. They do not like to be told that if there is one section of the Canadian electorate that is disappointed with the government it is the farmers of Canada. They do not like this.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is all hogwash.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is why we are hearing these sitting contributions to the debate, by way of a continuous effort on the part of those who sit behind the Prime Minister to hinder those in this party who are determined to expose the government once again in this session, as it deserves to be exposed, because of the inept way in which it is conducting the affairs of the country.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You know so much about agriculture that you cannot even talk sense about it.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We who come from eastern Canada recognize that the farmers of our country, particularly those in western Canada, are facing great problems but we recognize it is our duty not to view those problems sectionally but in the light of constructive solutions.

An hon. Member: Like the Liberals did.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We give support to this measure, but at the same time we say to the government there are other sections of agriculture, for instance, the farmers in the township of Sandwich East in my own riding, in the community of Tecumseh, who last year suffered crop losses for which the government, in spite of representations, have not agreed to make any compensation. What we do for the western farmers, and what we should do for the eastern farmers, is to bring in measures which will apply equally to all sections of Canadian agriculture.

Why was this program not brought forward a long time ago? Why was it not brought forward last summer when the house was in session? Why was it not brought forward in the month of September when the house was in session? It was because at that time the Prime Minister had not decided on calling a general election. It is brought forward now because he realizes his strength has disappeared in western Canada. Because of that he seeks by this measure to recover his lost popularity and prestige, lost even in Prince Albert. I say the measure should have been brought forward at least last summer. I do not say that it represents all that should have been done but, if this is all the government is prepared to do to meet the situation facing the farmers of Canada, then it should have been introduced at a time when the farmers would not have lost five months of the crop year.

What is the explanation given by the government with regard to this matter? We have a most amazing situation. At the end of November, 1961, the Minister of Agriculture was asked if the government was going to bring forward the much-mooted acreage assistance plan. Here is what he said as reported in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix on November 29, 1961. It is headed:

Hamilton holds out promise of payments on acreage plan.

This is a statement I now read, not on the hustings but on the floor of parliament where we all have a responsibility in the light of our acknowledged recognition of what is the function and obligation of parliament in the voting of public money. At the time he made the statement no money at all had been voted. Parliament had not dealt with this matter. We are dealing with it now for the first time this session, and yet the Minister of Agriculture sought to convey to the farmers in western Canada that the government had authority to pay out this money. Listen to the statement which the minister made:

It's not a matter of money, but machines.

Today Hon. Alvin Hamilton, home from grain-selling trips which have taken him half way around the world, said that there would be no farm acreage payments in this calendar year. He did not attribute this to lack of federal dollars but said that the cheque machines required to roll out the barrels of money were busy with other financial details.

The agricultural minister did say the federal government had not abandoned the principle of acreage payments to western farmers.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that statement of the Minister of Agriculture was an inaccurate statement. The statement as reported, is an inaccurate statement.

An hon. Member: As reported.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The reason the money was not paid out in November, or earlier, was because the government had not come to parliament and asked it to vote the necessary assistance to the farmers of western Canada. That was the reason, and let the western members who sit in the house today write to their constituents and tell them the Minister of Agriculture was wrong, wholly wrong, in saying that the reason this money had not been paid out earlier was because the machinery for issuing cheques had broken down.

The Prime Minister laughs, but I ask him to listen to another statement made by his Minister of Agriculture, which I take from the Winnipeg Free Press of December 1, 1961. The headline is:

Farmers will get paid before Yule.

And the article states:

Mr. Hamilton said acreage payments still are under consideration by the government but it will be technically impossible to make acreage payments this year because cheque machines are being used for the oats and barley pools and the interim wheat payment.

An hon. Member: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is an untrue statement. That is what is wrong with it. The reason the cheques were not paid out was not because of faulty machinery in issuing them but because the government did not come to parliament and ask for authority to vote the moneys required to make these acreage payments. That is the reason that should have been given to the farmers of western Canada at that time, but it was not done. The Prime Minister made his announcement at Prince Albert and said nothing about the breakdown of machinery for the issuing of cheques. He made a forthright statement to which no exception could be taken in its accuracy of terms, but just a few days previously the Minister of Agriculture had created the impression that the money was then available, that it would be paid out to the farmers of western Canada and that the only reason for it not being paid out was because the system for issuing cheques had broken down.

Mr. Southam: Nobody said it had broken down.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend must not have been listening with great attention when he says nobody said it had broken down. That is what the Minister of Agriculture did say.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Quote him.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Verbatim.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This was the report.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You are just backing down now.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This vote represents an ad hoc way of dealing with a particular situation. There is no government policy involved in the pattern of this program. This is a single item, a palliative designed to give relief. It will give relief to an extent, but not to the extent envisaged by the kind of all-embracing statement made by the Prime Minister in his statement of agricultural intentions in the house on August 8 last year.

This is not a program based upon a continuing policy. This is not a grant related to the cost of production or to prices. The Prime Minister said that the agricultural policy of this government would be one which would take into account the cost-price squeeze and the disparity of farm prices in relation to the income of other classes in the community. He said it would be a program related to the cost of production and the revenue which farmers receive for the sale of their products. This program, good in so far as it goes, in no way meets the extravagant, comprehensive assurances given to the people of Canada by the Prime Minister.

As I mentioned a moment ago, it certainly is not what he said on March 12, 1956 in this house. It certainly is not a grant by way of deficiency payments. It certainly is not a grant made under the Agricultural Stabilization Act of which the Acting Minister of Agriculture claims authorship. It has no relation to the general problem of agriculture and no relation whatever to the general economic situation facing the farmers of Canada. It is obviously a compromise between the demands made by certain western ministers in the cabinet and the stand taken by the Minister of Finance who apparently day by day increasingly resists the demands made by his colleagues for further expenditures of public money.

Mr. McIntosh: I wonder whether the hon. member is aware that the reason why wheat, oats and barley are not covered by the stabilization act is because of the request made to that effect by organized farmers in the west?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Quite. I am not saying that is not the case. I am saying that this particular program calling for expenditure of $40 million based on the payment of $1 assistance per acre up to 200 acres is not related to the Agricultural Stabilization Act. It does not involve the principle of deficiency payments and it can in no way be represented as part of the over-all program envisaged by the Prime Minister when he spoke in this house in 1956 or when he spoke in this house in August of last year at which time he outlined the government's agricultural policy. I repeat that the Prime Minister and his supporters cannot claim that by this particular program they are satisfying the promises which were made to hundreds of Canadian western farmers.

Mr. Harkness: We were satisfying a very large number of farmers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I sincerely hope that is the case, but, as I have stated, this provision does not meet the objectives of the government's declared farm policy as announced by the Prime Minister. It does not meet the assurances given to a thousand western farmers when they descended on Ottawa two years ago to demand that this government implement its agricultural policy.

Mr. Harkness: Nobody takes your interpretation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, when the hon. gentleman and his colleagues decide, as I hope they will decide soon, to face the Canadian people they will see whether or not their policy satisfies the electorate.

Mr. Harkness: That is exactly right.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This policy is an off and on policy. We are not able to say now whether it is going to be a permanent feature of the actions of the government of Canada. Let the Minister of Agriculture say now that if he were entrusted with the responsibility of government next year, something which I doubt very much, his government would embark once again on this particular program of assistance on an acreage basis. Let him say that, and we would then have some indication of whether there is a semblance of agricultural policy.

The most serious objection to this program is that it represents a stopgap handout with no precise relationship to the entire needs of the farm economy or to the needs of individual farmers. If the acting minister were able to tell us now that the provinces were heartily accepting the crop insurance scheme which was introduced two years ago, then he would be able to talk about something in the nature of a comprehensive policy, even though that would not be a realization of the promise that what the farmers were going to get would be parity not charity. That is the kind of thing to which this government must address itself if it wishes to demonstrate it is fulfilling its obligations to the farmers of western Canada.

We have the amazing situation of the Prime Minister announcing a policy in the province of Saskatchewan to his own constituents at a time when the Minister of Agriculture was in that province—at a time when the Minister of Agriculture gave the impression, created undoubtedly by implication, that the government had authority to provide for this program. The Prime Minister, taking advantage of a visit to his constituency and speaking in a theatre in Prince Albert which was not filled, said: "We propose to embark once again on a program of acreage assistance". I say that for one minister of the crown to give the impression that the government had already embarked on such a policy and that parliament had already voted the money is a statement which calls for comment and reply by the Acting Minister of Agriculture, because it represents a base inaccuracy. This is a charitable way of dealing with that statement.

But this incident, of course, is only one further example of the way in which the government approaches these problems. The government seeks to take advantage of situations so that it can get the most dramatic effect for political and propaganda purposes. No one demonstrates this more clearly than the Minister of Agriculture in the program called A.R.D.A.—a program which is not designed to meet the current situation, a program in connection with which, as the hon. member for Assiniboia has pointed out, not one project has been realized in co-operation with the provinces under arrangements provided for in the act. The Minister of Agriculture goes all over this country speaking of A.R.D.A. as though it represented the most fundamental approach ever made to solving the problems of Canadian agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have no doubt that in the long run it will help Canadian agriculture but let hon. gentlemen not forget that that program in connection with which thousands of pamphlets have been issued was conceived by the previous government as a result of studies made by it in the upper house. The committee on land use under the chairmanship of Senator Power provided the basis for the legislation which was passed in this chamber, in connection with which the Minister of Agriculture goes from one end of Canada to the other, concealing his failure to implement promises which have been made, by representing A.R.D.A. as a charter for agriculture. Not one thing has been done under A.R.D.A. I ask the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, who is now in his seat, to give me one project under that act that has been signed by the federal government—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and the provincial governments.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

The Deputy Chairman: I regret to advise the hon. gentleman that his time has expired. The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre.

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Chairman, if the committee will allow me I should be glad to give the hon. gentleman the facts in regard to matters about which he apparently does not know anything at all. If is is agreeable to the committee, I will be glad to give them.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I thank my hon. friend for the tribute he has paid to my high agricultural knowledge. I do not think I have anything to add. I will simply say that the government—

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. gentleman this question. How much money did the former government spend under the prices support act in 12 years?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will tell the hon. gentleman this—

The Deputy Chairman: I gave the floor to the hon. gentleman from Moose Jaw-Lake Centre.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Saved by the bell.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to speak in support of quick passage of the supplementary estimates now before us. I think it is very useful to have these supplementary estimates on one sheet. I am particularly interested in item No. 611, a vote of $42 million for acreage payments to western grain producers, and item No. 614, a vote for $40,090,000 for the federal share in the winter works program. I know we are not discussing item 614, but I think having the two together on the one page indicates the government's concern for equal treatment for all segments of the economy.

The $42 million in acreage payments will help bolster the income of western farmers, and the $40,090,000 to pay half the labour costs for municipal works will add to the income of another group of workers. Having the two of them together certainly emphasizes the government's concern for all segments of the economy.

I wish to thank the Acting Minister of Agriculture for the full outline he gave of acreage payments in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, who is ill.

Mr. Chairman, you allowed opposition speakers to wander considerably in their remarks on this item.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pascoe: I hope to keep right to the one point except I think I should answer to a certain extent some of the statements they made. I deal with one particularly. I think the hon. member for Assiniboia will be fair and say that the crop was better than was first expected. If he will go through some of the reports of the wheat pool he will see that the crop index was up three points, one time, and so many points, another time, and we got more than a half crop—

Mr. Argue: Why did the Prime Minister not come to southern Saskatchewan instead of wandering all over the rest of the country?

Mr. Pascoe: He came to southern Saskatchewan.

Mr. Argue: He did not.

Mr. Pascoe: Southern Saskatchewan is not all in your area. It is in my area too.

Mr. Argue: He was not there during the crop failure.

Mr. Pascoe: He was in my area.

Mr. Argue: Then he should have learned something.

Mr. Pascoe: He was in my area and he saw something. I think the hon. member for Assiniboia will admit that the reports of the wheat pool show that the index went up by so many points and we did have more than a half crop. This was after we heard reports that there would be no crop at all in the country. I know that my own crop was much better than I had expected when I heard some of the dismal reports that the hon. member made. Also, the hon. member for Assiniboia made no reference at all to P.F.A.A., under which $50 million is being distributed. Many of the farmers who had poor crops are getting $800 cheques. That is partly due to the amendments that we brought in when we came into office.

Mr. Argue: The same rates were in effect when you were not in office.

Mr. Pascoe: They were not.

Mr. Argue: They were.

Mr. Pascoe: The whole thing was completely changed. If the hon. member will also refer to the last wheat board report he will see that already wheat exports for this year are more than 150 million bushels; already in four months more than half of the 10 year average for a whole year when the Liberal government was in power. In addition the price of wheat is now nearly 20 cents more than it was a year ago. I just draw this to the attention of hon. members. I know I should speak on the main item before us.

When I left home to attend this session of parliament I promised farming groups that I would press for early action in regard to acreage payments. They had asked me to do this.

Mr. Argue: Why did you not pay it on last year's crop?

Mr. Pascoe: The reason we did not pay it last year was because you shouted "peanuts" and we had a great job trying to sell it again to the government.

Mr. Argue: Oh, oh. Forty seven members from the prairies and they cannot get anything done. Oh, oh, oh, what a joke.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

An hon. Member: Down boy; you have made a speech.

Mr. Pascoe: As I say, Mr. Chairman, I promised this action to western farmers, and I know that other western members—

Mr. Starr: Are you applying for this payment?

Mr. Pascoe: —came back here with this same purpose—

Mr. Argue: You do not apply. You just wait until it comes in the mail.

Mr. Pascoe: The government has acted quickly to meet our wishes in this regard. This is demonstrated by the early presentation to this committee of the supplementary estimates. To do this it was necessary to alter the usual procedure and interrupt the throne speech after the fourth day of debate.

The hon. member for Assiniboia indicated that farmers did not appreciate these acreage payments. I have received many letters from farm constituents supporting acreage payments. I do not wish to take the time of this committee by referring to them all, but I should like to quote a few excerpts from some of these letters. Here is one from Cymric:

> With regard to the $200 acreage payment, I would sooner see this than to have the deficiency payments.

Mr. Argue: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, who is the letter from?

Mr. Pascoe: The letter is from H. J. Hilderman.

An hon. Member: Do you know him?

Mr. Pascoe: I will repeat what he said in case the hon. member did not hear it:

> With regard to the $200 acreage payment, I would sooner see this than to have the deficiency payments.

Mr. Argue: You did not give it to him for last year.

Mr. Pascoe: If the hon. member wants the names of all those who have written me, I have here another letter from Mr. Klenk of Imperial:

I sure favour the acreage payment over the extra payment on a specified number of bushels at the elevator, as it sure helps the farmer who has no bushels to sell.

Mr. Argue: Not so much when you miss a year, though.

Mr. Pascoe: It was on your account that we missed a year.

Mr. Argue: That is ridiculous.

Mr. Pascoe: There is another letter from George A. McDougall of Craven:

I am very much in favour of such assistance in preference to the deficiency payment. Being in the small farmer category myself, perhaps that is partly the reason but it seems by far the fairest way.

I hope the hon. member for Assiniboia heard that one.

Mr. Argue: Yes, but you should not have missed that year.

Mr. Pascoe: It was your fault that we did.

Mr. Argue: Oh, pay it now.

An hon. Member: Keep quiet.

Mr. Pascoe: There is another letter from Mr. John Blackport of Lockwood:

I am a three quarters section farmer and I think the acreage payment method will help more farmers than deficiency payments.

An hon. Member: The letters should be tabled.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, I anticipated quick passage of this estimate. I was surprised at the opposition expressed by certain hon. members here.

Mr. Argue: No opposition; we want it doubled.

Mr. Pascoe: I do not think the farmers of the west will take very kindly to what they have had to say.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman, who is one of the most fair minded members of the house, would I am sure wish to reconsider his statement. No opposition was expressed by any member of the Liberal party to this measure. We simply indicated that it was insufficient, inadequate and did not meet the promises made by the government.

Mr. Argue: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, since the hon. member has misinterpreted my remarks I wish to make it very clear that our objection is that the payment is not twice as big so that parliament would pay for the year that has been missed. Let us double it and then it will go through very quickly.

An hon. Member: Then you will ask that it be tripled.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, I mentioned nobody in particular and it is very interesting to see hon. members' reaction. If the cap fits certain hon. members, they can wear it.

Mr. Argue: Smearing John, eh?

Mr. Pascoe: I have not heard the hon. member for Assiniboia holler "peanuts" this year. I am very glad of that.

Mr. Argue: I rise on a point of order. I referred to peanuts. I said that the trouble this year was that the peanuts for the small farmer are in a smaller bag than those for the big farmer.

Mr. Pascoe: I suppose the hon. member indicates that he is not going to vote for this item. I am anxious to see what he does in this regard.

An hon. Member: He wants the $200.

Mr. Argue: I will vote for it.

Mr. Pascoe: Several days ago he rose in his place in the house and actually asked for acreage payments. This was after the government had already heard from western supporters and had decided that acreage payments should be made this year.

Mr. Argue: Wrong again.

Mr. Pascoe: I suppose now the hon. member for Assiniboia will assert that it was his very belated request that resulted in these payments. This procedure will be following his usual practice. I believe on one other occasion he asserted that he or his party was responsible for a large sale of grain to Poland after the government had completed the deal.

Mr. Argue: That is not true. It was before they completed the deal.

Mr. Pascoe: Anyway, he asserted that he did it.

Mr. Argue: I met the delegation and we cooperated with the government.

Mr. Pascoe: On behalf of the constituents of Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, I wish to thank the Prime Minister and the government for accepting our suggestions of this form of adding to the farm income. It will be a help not only to farm constituents but also to the whole economy. In this connection I refer to a news report which appeared in the Moose Jaw Times-Herald dated March 15, 1961. I should like to refer briefly to it. The headline reads:

> All Acreage Payments now in Farmers Hands—$3,801,000 Extra in Area.

Then there was an editorial in the Times-Herald which was headed "Acreage Payment Plan is Best for Farmers". The first two paragraphs of the news item read as follows:

> It is estimated some $3,801,000 has been poured into the coffers of farmers living in the Moose Jaw trading area, from federal government acreage payments.
> W. L. Burbank, secretary of the rural municipality of Moose Jaw, said today the extra flow of money from outside is bound to prosper the economy of this city.

The secretary of the municipality estimated that 95 per cent of this $3,801,000 would be spent in the local trading area. In Saskatchewan as a whole more than 106,000 grain growers received $19,732,906.

I should like to draw to the attention of the hon. member for Assiniboia the fact that this amount is certainly not peanuts.

I gave these figures in order to indicate the value of these payments at this time of the year when farmers are making plans for spring operations. I know western farmers are beginning to understand that acreage payments are actually along the lines of the two-price system they have been advocating for many years. Other groups in Canada's economy are also beginning to realize that the $42 million which this committee is asked to vote really means that the price for wheat sold for human consumption in Canada is in line with the price of products the farmer buys in Canada.

The money for this acreage payment comes out of the federal treasury. Western members appreciate the help given by the eastern members in getting this supplementary estimate before the committee. It was not an easy thing to do after the way in which earlier acreage payments were ridiculed by certain members of the opposition and even by some farm leaders.

Western farmers appreciate this government action, as was shown by the letters I read. Responsible farm leaders have indicated that they welcome the payments. As I say, even the hon. member for Assiniboia does not come right out and say that they are peanuts. Hence, Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister who first announced the government's intention should feel that the efforts of his government are fully appreciated. It is to be regretted that the Minister of Agriculture has been confined to his home for a few days, owing to the tremendous efforts he has made in the past year in selling Canadian wheat and tackling other farm problems.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the hon. member not think that the weather had something to do with his cold?

Mr. Pascoe: For all these efforts on behalf of agriculture the farmers will thank the Minister of Agriculture, and the Prime Minister and his government, on election day.

Mr. Rapp: I am very pleased to be given this opportunity to take part in the discussion of the estimates that are before the committee at the present time. This is now the third time that acreage payments will have been distributed to the western farmers. The amount will be another $42 million this year. The payments are similar to the ones that were distributed in 1958 and 1960. I remember very well the discussion that took place here in this House of Commons in 1958 when these estimates were presented to the house for approval. I also remember very well the remarks of the opposition and in particular those of our friend from Saskatchewan who at that time said they were peanuts. Those were the expressions that were used when these estimates were before the house. I must say that $42 million are not peanuts to the farmers of the three western provinces.

Mr. Argue: It is $1 an acre and that is peanuts.

Mr. Rapp: The amount is equal to the amount the farmers would have received if we had had a two-price system, namely about $45 million. We are well aware of the fact that the government gave this assistance in lieu of the two-price system. They were not in a position to subsidize our grain at the time they gave it. I refer to grain that would be exported to the United States and other countries. I can recall very well the response of the farmers in my constituency to this $42 million. In my own community the payment amounted approximately to $30,000 a year. I have lived in this community for 30 years and this is the first time it has ever received $30,000 from the federal government.

I made it a point to ascertain where these acreage payment cheques were cashed and what they were used for. Cheques totalling the approximate value of $8,000 to $10,000 were cashed at our oil and gas station where the farmers paid for their oil and gas for the year in which it was received, namely 1958. Another $8,000 or $10,000 of them I found were cashed in our rural municipalities where the farmers paid their taxes for that year. Another $8,000 or $10,000 of them were cashed at the various stores in the community.

Surely this $30,000 these people were able to get in that community meant something to them. Is it any wonder that these farmers in the west—and I stress the words "in the west"—are now so appreciative of what the federal government has done for them and that the slogan in the country is now "Canada needs Diefenbaker"; and I would say that the west needs Diefenbaker.

Mr. Peters: They surely can have him.

Mr. Argue: They want the dollar an acre.

Mr. Rapp: Other hon. members have had their say, Mr. Chairman. I have the floor and I should like to proceed.

Mr. Argue: Are you in favour of the payment for 1960-61? That is the question.

Mr. Rapp: They know what the federal government has done. They also know that for years, when they sent down here and filled the treasury benches with members of the chief opposition party, they never received anything. They have received more in five years from this government than they ever did during the 25 years that the former government was in power.

Mr. Argue: I wonder whether I might ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Rapp: When I am through with my speech.

Mr. Argue: Is the hon. member in favour—

Mr. Rapp: When I am through with my speech. The people in the west are satisfied with what the government has done. Five years ago they sent 47 members to this house. The people have seen the results and that is why the people of western Canada are saying that Canada needs Diefenbaker. For many years the people of Saskatchewan asked for the South Saskatchewan river project but only when the Prime Minister was elected as head of the government and 47 Conservative members were sent here from Saskatchewan and the other two western provinces was this objective realized.

Take the case of the people of Alberta. For 40 years they asked for the Pine Point railway but only when they sent a full slate of Conservative members to Ottawa did they get the Pine Point railway. For 20 years the people of Peace River sent Mr. Solon Low here. He was in the opposition and all he did was whine. He never did get the Pine Point railway for Alberta. Only when the present member for Peace River was sent here along with the Prime Minister did the people of that region get the Pine Point railway which is now under construction.

[Mr. Rapp.]

Mr. Argue: That is a dirty attack on a man who is not here to defend himself.

Mr. Rapp: The people of Alberta, the people of Saskatchewan, the people of all three prairie provinces know that if they want to receive attention from the federal government they must send members here who are members of the party of the Prime Minister which is now in power.

Mr. Argue: You want a dictatorship of one party. You are not satisfied with 47 out of 48. You want a one party dictatorship.

Mr. Rapp: The myth that we need a strong opposition has been killed in the west. The people know now that if they want to get results they must elect the present Prime Minister and give him the necessary support in the house.

Mr. Argue: A one-party dictatorship?

Mr. Rapp: The hon. member for Assiniboia is not really appreciative of what we have done. Since 1945 he has done nothing but whine and wail to no avail, but now we have finally reached our objective and the west is getting the attention it needed because the people there elected the Prime Minister and gave him 47 members.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, as the representative of one of Manitoba's rural ridings I should like to comment briefly on this item dealing with acreage payments. First, I should like to express appreciation on behalf of those whom I represent of the fact that these payments are being considered as soon as possible after the convening parliament. I feel sure that the government's decision to make the payments available at this time will be welcomed by all western farmers, particularly because of the severe drought experienced last summer.

The payment of $1 an acre on the cultivated acreage of each farmer up to a maximum of $200, while not a large amount to each individual farmer in relation to what he would ordinarily expect as net income in a good year, is certainly not regarded by the farmers of my area as peanuts, as it was described by the hon. member for Assiniboia. As found at page 4348 of Hansard for August 30, 1958, the hon. member enlarged on that description. In speaking about acreage payments at that time the Leader of the Opposition said:

> I have no doubt that when my hon. friend from Assiniboia gets up immediately after I conclude he will call it peanuts.

At that point the hon. member for Assiniboia interjected the following:

> I did that a couple of days ago. I shall call it a pittance today.

As a matter of fact, it adds up to a considerable amount of benefit to our rural communities and assists not only the farmers but also those who provide goods and services to our farm people. Statistics show that farm gross income across the nation is making a steady recovery in relation to the income enjoyed by other segments of our economy. But statistics do not reach down to the individuals who have suffered grievous losses owing to the drought. This fact was recognized by the government and the Minister of Agriculture early last summer. At that time steps were taken to assure supplies of feed and to provide the necessary protection against serious income loss through forced selling of our cattle.

The result of the government's action is, of course, well known. With the fullest co-operation of the provincial governments and the farmers themselves, livestock prices remained steady and the market was able to absorb all livestock offerings throughout the season. The small crop on the prairies, while generally of very high quality, left many farmers short of the necessary working capital for next year's operations. Crop insurance and prairie farm assistance are a welcome help to those farmers who suffered a heavy crop loss. The addition of acreage payments at this time will further assist them and help many who were unable to qualify for the other kinds of assistance.

I listened very carefully the other day to the long speech of the Leader of the Opposition on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I am sorry that he is not in the chamber at the present time because I thought that as Leader of the Opposition and head of what is supposed to be a national party he would present some of his party's views on agricultural problems. I found it almost beyond belief—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will the hon. member permit me to point out that the Leader of the Opposition last year expressed his views and those of his party with regard to this $1 an acre assistance. He also outlined our party's views on agricultural policy at the time that the Prime Minister did.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I am glad that he did it last year because if you will permit me to go on with my speech I would point out that he apparently considered that last year the government had done everything possible for the farmers and therefore it was not necessary for him to mention agriculture at all this year.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He said just the opposite.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): As I say, I found it almost beyond belief that he could make this long statement on national affairs without even a passing reference to agriculture or the peculiar problems of the western farmers occasioned by the drought. If this is the attitude of the official opposition to the importance of agriculture in our economy, and the hon. member for Essex East has confirmed that, then farmers across the nation—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What did I confirm? I want to make sure of everything that government members say. What did I confirm?

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): You confirmed that the Liberals have no agricultural policy. I should like to proceed with my speech.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —the hon. member has a right, as you know, to make an argument in answer to an observation made by an hon. member—

Mr. Cardiff: What is your point of order?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —but he has no right to engage in a non sequitur and that is what the hon. member has just done.

Mr. Cardiff: What is the point of order?

The Chairman: I think the hon. member may himself have been engaged in a non sequitur.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What was that, Mr. Chairman? I did not hear what the chairman said.

An hon. Member: Read it in Hansard.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): It does not really matter because every time the hon. member for Essex East opens his mouth about agriculture, the farmers all get a wonderful laugh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is the only thing they get out of the government.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): If this is the attitude of the official opposition to the importance of agriculture in our economy, then the farmers across the nation do derive some satisfaction that that party is still the opposition and will probably remain as such until they learn to appreciate the contribution our farm people make to the national well being.

All kinds of conclusions can be drawn from this lack of interest in the affairs of agriculture. Either the Leader of the Opposition feels that the present government is doing everything possible for the Canadian farmer or he feels his party is so devoid of ideas for agricultural betterment or knowledge of the farmers' problems that anything he could say would be better left unsaid.

In making the acreage payment the government has never regarded it as a handout but as compensation for the low domestic price of wheat to the Canadian consumer. The two-price system has been requested over the years by our farm organizations. The acreage payment has been used as the most equitable manner in which to meet this request. I believe that continuation of this practice by the government will receive the commendation of all fair minded western farmers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It would not have been necessary, of course, to intervene again but for the frivolous and wholly inaccurate remarks made by the hon. gentlemen who support the minister. The suggestion is made that because the Leader of the Opposition has not thus far participated in this debate, the conclusion is to be drawn that the opposition strongly supports the government's actions in the field of agriculture. One would have thought it was not necessary to rise and make a strong protest against this kind of observation. But in view of the propaganda carried on in this country by hon. gentlemen who sit behind the ministerial benches, in view of the speeches made by the Minister of Agriculture, it is necessary for those of us in the opposition to take advantage of the verbatim proceedings of this house to indicate what our views are, to reaffirm what our policies are and to point out repeatedly the inadequacies of the government's agricultural policy.

No speech to which we have listened this afternoon, notwithstanding the mild manner in which it was expressed, was more provocative in this particular than the speech to which we have just had the doubtful pleasure of listening. The hon. gentleman says that because the Leader of the Opposition did not participate in this debate, that was to be regarded as confirmation of the opposition's view of government policy.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Essex East is distorting what I said. I said that the Leader of the Opposition had made no mention in his speech during the throne speech debate, even a passing reference, to agriculture. The only conclusion we can draw is that he and his party have no ideas about agriculture.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend nas not raised a point of order, because the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Harkness: Yes he has; he says you are distorting what he said.

[Mr. Muir (Lisgar).]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If it had been the Acting Minister of Agriculture, who continually interrupts, who had made that statement it would have been another matter. However, the hon. gentleman was not interfered with when he made what I regard as remarks that were wholly out of order.

Let us deal with the last remark. My hon. friend says that the Leader of the Opposition, in his speech during the throne speech debate, did not deal with the question of agriculture. My hon. friend has not read the speech very carefully. If he reads it carefully, he will see that throughout the whole speech what the Leader of the Opposition was doing was addressing himself to the inept way in which the public business of this country was being discharged by the government. I may say, for the benefit of my hon. friend, that when we use the phrase "public business", we do not only mean those who work in our factories or who have professional occupations. We mean as well the farmers of our country.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, we are discussing an item in the estimates. I do not believe that, in the speech the hon. gentleman is making, there is any reference whatever to the business at hand.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I hope you will pay attention to what has just been said, Mr. Chairman. In one breath hon. gentlemen opposite attack the Leader of the Opposition because, they say, he made no mention of agriculture in his speech and when I reply to that accusation they say I am out of order. I cannot believe my ears. Of course, I have the right to repudiate that statement. Throughout his speech, the Leader of the Opposition was addressing himself to the maladministration of this government, to the way in which our economy had sagged. Our economy has application to the farmers of this country just as well as it has to other sections of our country.

When he spoke of the common market and the way this government has confronted that question, was he not dealing with agriculture? No single group in our country has as vital an interest in the implications of the common market as have the farmers of Canada. When the Leader of the Opposition was complaining about the negative way in which this government approached that problem, surely he was discussing the problems of agriculture just as Mr. Hannam, president of the federation of agriculture, said the other day that notwithstanding the effect of the common market on agriculture in the initial period, the long term result of some arrangement with the common market was essential to Canada and its prosperity.

Let hon. members who seek to taunt me—that is nothing unusual in this house—not say that the Leader of the Opposition was unconcerned about the problems of agriculture. Before this debate is over my hon. friend and others will hear from the Leader of the Opposition. He will reaffirm what others on this side of the house have said here, that the policy now before us of acreage assistance to the farmers of Canada is not the comprehensive measure that was promised by this government, and particularly by the Prime Minister. He will say that this measure is good in so far as it goes, but that it cannot in any way be regarded as a fulfilment of the statement of farm policy as enunciated by the Prime Minister who said that the Conservative party stood for parity not charity. He will point out that this particular, ad hoc policy of the government towards agriculture does not deal with the question of the cost-price squeeze. It does not deal with the problem of the gap between the cost of production confronting the farmer and the revenue which he receives from the sale of his product, both at home and abroad.

He will indicate that this government made certain promises, not only to Canadian agriculture—

Mr. Danforth: Are you speaking for your leader?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Did the hon. member ask a question?

Mr. Danforth: I said, are you speaking for your leader?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Now, I am going to speak for myself. I say to the hon. gentleman that this government not only promised the things to which I have referred in so far as agricultural policy is concerned but my hon. friend, who comes from my section of the country, knows that this government promised the farmers of southwestern Ontario they would be the beneficiaries of an over-all sugar policy that would assist them in their beet production. Is the hon. member for Kent now aware of the policy? The farmers of southwestern Ontario complain bitterly about the policy of deficiency payments announced by the government a few weeks ago. The government talks about its comprehensive policies, but let me remind the government of some things. This assistance to western farmers is needed. The drought and the present financial situation facing the western farmers no doubt commands attention but there are other sections of Canada, represented by the hon. member for Middlesex West, the hon. member for Huron and the hon. member for Kent, Ontario—

Mr. Cardiff: I can speak for myself.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let them rise with me and other members in the house to indicate to the government how we feel about the lack of government policy in relation to its unfilled promises, not only to the farmers of western Canada but to the farmers of Canada generally. Let them join with us instead of in the continuing imprimatur of a moribund government that is now enjoying the last days of office. That is what we should be doing in this house.

Mr. Peters: You don't much like hearing that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): When one compares the kind of policy this government has brought forward, to try and meet the conditions facing agriculture in western Canada, with some of the comprehensive measures brought in by the previous administration under Mr. Gardiner—

Mr. Harkness: What comprehensive measures? You did not bring in any comprehensive measures in ten years; not a single thing.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member for Assiniboia and the Prime Minister himself placed a tribute on the record of this house to the agricultural policy of the late Right Hon. James Gardiner, when they referred to the P.F.A.A. and to P.F.R.A.

Mr. Harkness: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister paid a tribute to the late Right Hon. James G. Gardiner and I should like to join in that tribute; but that was not an endorsement of the lack of policy displayed by the Liberal party during the last 10 years or so that they were in office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have allowed the Acting Minister of Agriculture to pay a rather belated tribute to a great man, but the rest of his remarks had no foundation. The government lays claim to having introduced fundamental agricultural policies, but the fact is that it has not. Outside of the Agricultural Stabilization Act, which was in principle a continuation of legislation introduced by the late Mr. Gardiner, this government cannot claim to have done anything in the field of agriculture, anything more than an ad hoc way of dealing with a specific problem.

Mr. Danforth: What did the late Mr. Gardiner say about sugar beets? Did he not advise farmers to grow soybeans?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am very willing to talk about soybeans. That is a subject with which I am familiar.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Then, please, do talk about it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This interruption almost tempts me to depart from my main text, but I will not be encouraged.

Mr. Cardiff: Would the hon. gentleman answer a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Certainly. I am here all day.

Mr. Cardiff: How much money did the former government in 12 years spend on agriculture under the Agricultural Prices Support Act?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have no idea how much was spent.

Mr. Cardiff: If you want to know I can tell you.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend wishes to judge government policy by expenditure. If he were going to judge government policy by expenditure then one would have to say something that one cannot in truth say, that the present administration was the greatest administration in our country. If ever there was a government that embarked upon a program of expenditure it is the government of the right hon. gentleman sitting opposite.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about the promises you are making now about $700 million more?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The speaker talks about promises. No one is a greater authority on the matter of promises than the Prime Minister.

Mr. Balcer: And keeping them.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): For the sake of the record, he did not make 50 promises; he did not make 70 promises. According to present calculations he made well over 300 promises in the last federal election and I can tell him I only know of two that I can say have been fully kept by his government.

Mr. Danforth: Where have you been?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He has not fulfilled any promises in the field of agriculture. The Prime Minister is here now. Does he deny saying in this house that the object of his agricultural policy was parity, not charity? Does he deny that? The Prime Minister, of course, cannot deny it.

I notice that five o'clock has come.

The Chairman: It being five o'clock, in order to permit the house to proceed to private members business pursuant to standing order 50, paragraph 3, it is my duty to rise and report progress and request leave to sit again this day, or at the next sitting of the house as the case may be.

Progress reported.

SWEEPSTAKES

LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH HOSPITAL SWEEPSTAKES BOARD

Mr. J. F. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-2, to provide for the establishment of a hospital sweepstakes board.

He said: My purpose in bringing this bill before the house is simply to carry out the wishes of my constituents and those of the vast majority of Canadians by instituting a national hospital sweepstakes.

Of course this is not the first time I have raised this matter in the house. When it came before the house last session a great deal of support was expressed for the bill, and I am not going into all the detail I gave last year. However, I would remind the house that I did refer to the Gallup poll on that occasion, a poll which has become a reliable indicator of public opinion on matters such as this. The last poll they took on this subject indicated that 82 per cent of the people of this country were in favour of a national hospital sweepstake.

There is also evidence of widespread support to be found in various press clippings from newspapers across the country. I do not intend to refer to very many, but this is what some of the headlines say: "Vets Want Legal Lottery", "Ontario Municipalities Want Hospital Sweep", "Ontario Votes for Sweeps". This latter headline was a reference to a vote taken in the Ontario legislature some years ago. Then there is another which says: "Unions Ask for Government Lottery". This referred to a statement by the trade union congress representing some 500,000 people in labour unions across Canada. The statement was made to the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons which was set up in 1956 to make recommendations on this matter.

Hon. members will recall, too, that I made reference to the fact that sweepstakes were common throughout the world and accepted by people universally. They were not considered by the people generally as gambling in the ordinary sense of the word. We now have various types of gambling in the country some of which, such as betting on horse racing, are legal. In addition, of course, a good many illegal types of gambling go on, too. One thing is certain: the people have an instinct to make wagers and no one can stop them doing that.

The joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons had before it during its sittings a mounted police commissioner who indicated that the present law was entirely unsatisfactory and could not be enforced, with the result that the law was being brought into disrepute. I recall also referring last session to the evidence of several law enforcement officers in the United States and other countries who had taken the same position indicating that the law could not be supported and that in their opinion some change should be made.

Then, too, it is the essence of a democracy that the wishes of the people should be carried out and I find it difficult to believe that any hon. member of this house could stand up and say that he did not think there was a large body of opinion among the people he represented who were in favour of a hospital sweepstake. This has been reiterated over and over again in the press. One can turn to the newspapers almost any time and read such headlines as: "Fourteen Canadians Draw Tickets in the Irish Sweep". One can read about the number of prizes won and see the actual names of the prize winners in Canada. As I pointed out last session, a large amount of money comes to Canada from this source—over 25 per cent of the total prizes of the last Irish sweepstake. This indicates clearly that we are paying a very large sum of money indeed into the fund, only a small percentage of which comes back. I suggest that this sweepstake is something which is wanted by the people of Canada and it is time that the members of this house accepted their responsibility and carried out the wishes of the people in this respect.

Last year I took the liberty of writing to a number of foreign embassies whose countries conducted national sweepstakes of one sort or another. They were very kind in their replies and sent me the most extensive information. I do not intend to go into detail now with regard to that, because I put it on record in Hansard last year. The details can all be found in Hansard commencing at page 6965. At that time I showed the arguments which had been put forward that hospital sweepstakes were very inefficient and that a large proportion of the money was used up in administrative costs to be completely unfounded on the basis of actual figures which were supplied by the various countries to whose representatives I wrote. They sent me complete details of their schemes and these showed that the administrative costs were very low and were not a serious factor. The money was mainly used for hospital or other charitable purposes or for prizes to the people who bought tickets.

I strongly suggest that whatever action we propose to take or whatever action we fail to take in this house, we shall not stop people from buying sweep tickets. Canadians are now buying Irish sweepstake tickets, tickets in the French national lottery, tickets in the Mexican national lottery and tickets in sweepsakes as far away as New Zealand and Australia. There have been a number of items in the press indicating this to be a fact.

I referred last year to items carried in newspapers in other countries indicating that money from Canada was finding its way abroad. I might mention, again, that a large number of editorials have appeared in newspapers across the country. I have a number of them here but I do not intend to read them because they are far too numerous. However, papers from one end of Canada to another have carried editorials on this subject. Some of them have been strongly in favour of the idea of a national lottery. Others have said they are not too favourably disposed but on the other hand they recognize the desire of the Canadian people to have a national hospital sweepstake and recognize the right of the majority to have its wishes carried out. It was a matter to be considered by this house and carried into effect.

Hon. members will probably recall the attitudes taken by the various provinces on this question. The views of the government of Quebec are well known. They have had them throughout the years, and legislation was passed some years ago to provide for a lottery or sweepstake within that province. The reason I have proposed the type of bill that I have is this: I do not believe that the scheme could work on a provincial basis. The federal government has taken the position on many occasions that payments as between provinces should be equalized as far as possible. It seems to me tremendous problems in law enforcement would be brought about if one or more provinces held their own sweepstakes, because it would be impossible to prevent the sale of tickets in another province. Moreover, the entire balance of payments as between the provinces would be upset. For these reasons I think it best that this should be done on a national basis and that provision should be made in the bill for the profits to be distributed on a per capita basis so that there would be fairness for all throughout Canada. I believe, also, that this would avoid any disagreement between provincial governments because of the upsetting of the balance of payments as between them.

I have no desire to repeat all I said last session, especially as I know there are many other members who wish to speak on this subject. I simply say that if those who are interested in what has gone before will turn to the pages of Hansard they will find set out in detail the arguments in favour of this bill.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-l'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of an amendment to the Criminal Code which would permit the establishment of a national lottery to control this outflow of Canadian dollars to the benefit of other countries.

Canadians spend some $90 million each year to buy sweepstake tickets from other countries.

We all remember the referendum held last year by the Montreal La Presse and radio station CKAC about a lottery. In the Montreal area and the province of Quebec, nearly 100,000 people voted for and only 150 against it.

Section 179 of the Criminal Code prohibits lotteries. Does that mean that there are none? Yesterday Canada was the choice land for bingos; today it is a paradise for the organizers of drawings of all sorts. Who does not know a thousand and one ways of evading the law?

Should we draw the conclusion that we should hunt down the organizers of drawings and of all those disguised lotteries?

Why not admit instead that they do meet a need? Boileau, who, in his fashion, was an excellent student of the ways of men, found out long before we did that "since we must go to law, since we must leave this earth, we must have lawyers, we must have doctors".

Quebec is not the only place where Irish sweepstakes and army and navy tickets are sold in the open. Moreover, what Canadian would accept to be judged severely because, at the races, he had dared to bet on such and such a horse?

When brought before the courts, the bingo operators generally ask for a trial by jury. Find me a jury with not a single bingo player.

Canadians spend $225 million dollars per year on gambling, 95 per cent of that amount for bets on horses.

Of the total bets, 70 per cent are made in Ontario, according to a Canadian Bank of Commerce business letter published in 1960.

People will always have a yen for gambling. In my opinion, a lottery would regulate and rectify the present situation and, according to a ruling of the income tax appeal board, winnings from bingo or sweepstakes are not taxed.

It is urgent also that a bill be adopted to allow the Bell Telephone Company of Canada to withdraw its service from a customer deemed by the attorney general of the province to be using the telephone for illegal gambling purposes.

Mr. Speaker, I want to give some of my colleagues the opportunity to express their opinion on that subject. I fully support the bill under study since I have myself submitted a bill to amend the Criminal Code.

(Text):

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, Bill No. C-2 is a most interesting bill and contains a basic, major issue of principle. I cannot speak with a knowledge of the thinking of all my colleagues in this corner of the house on this matter of sweepstakes, but I should like to express my own personal opinion.

I am in support of the principle of Bill No. C-2, if only for the reason that we may as well face reality and recognize that it is not possible to legislate the gambling habit out of the human animal. If we cannot legislate it out—and I maintain that we cannot—then surely the sensible thing to do is try to either control or regulate that gambling habit so that it is done in a legal fashion and there is, as far as possible, the guarantee of a decent return for the money gambled. In this way we could see that the money which is expended is put to a proper use in Canada.

If we oppose in principle the matter of a government controlled sweepstake for a humanitarian and beneficial purpose, then we are hypocrites in allowing by law the gambling that goes on at the present time. All across Canada, if you happen to be a member of certain clubs, it is quite legal to play poker or blackjack.

By law every citizen of Canada has the right—and many exercise it—to go to the horse races and gamble millions of dollars annually. In addition, millions of dollars are gambled annually at bingo. Let us not forget that these bingo games, which are strictly games of chance, are held in every province of Canada. They are sponsored by whom? By social clubs, by veterans clubs, by political clubs, by churches. I do not know how much we recognize clubs at which members can play blackjack or poker, but they are all legal; it is all gambling, all games of chance.

I do not know whether it is an inborn, inherent trait of an individual to want to take a chance, but annually we have countless millions of dollars going outside this country, despite all the efforts of the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) to stop it, to sweepstakes in Ireland, Australia and other countries. Surely, therefore, we should recognize all these obvious facts and realities and that we are not going to stop that trait. If people want to buy sweepstake tickets—and they are going to buy them—let them be bought within the law in Canada, under government control, with strict supervision and with a fair share of the money received from the exercise of that gambling spirit going towards a useful humanitarian project within our own country.

I do not think it is the way we should finance hospitals. It is not the way we should finance things which are necessary to Canada. But if it is going to help and we can exercise some control over the gambling instinct and keep the money inside Canada, I think we would be honest not to blind ourselves to what is going on legally in regard to games of chance and say, with regard to sweepstakes, that this cannot be done.

For those reasons, although I know certain people and organizations have objections—because whether they are political clubs, social clubs, veterans clubs or churches, it is permitted in Canada, recognized and sponsored by these people and organizations—let us not be hypocrites in this matter. Let us not deny what we know is a basic human instinct.

We are not going to overthrow this instinct overnight, or for generations, and we must recognize the desire of the majority of people. At least let us give to those who desire it the right to take part in a government-sponsored sweepstake, with the money being held in Canada for the benefit of Canadians and projects in this country.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this subject. It has been referred to as a very popular subject with a great many people in Canada. I think that of all the bills that have come before the house since I have been a member, this is by far the most sound. It seeks to establish a full time board of men who will properly run a sweepstake for the benefit of hospitals in Canada. This sort of thing has been referred to in the past as a type of taxation and some people feel that the poor, or the person who is less able to pay for it, will be taxed the most. This runs against their grain.

As has been pointed out a number of times, most people are already paying in one way or another. They are going out and buying tickets for sweepstakes. Often those sweepstake tickets never get to Ireland. The person from whom they buy the tickets is selling them under cover and sometimes the money is not sent in and the buyer is out of his money. He does not even get the chance, whether it is a fair gamble or not. This type of thing goes on time and again.

If a sweepstake such as this were set up, we in Canada could establish a very workable system. Post offices could sell the tickets without any extra expense. They could be sold almost in the same way that five cent stamps are sold, if a person wishes to buy them. I am not saying they should be priced at five cents, but they could be sold in the post offices and the R.C.M.P. and people behind the project could outlaw all other sweepstakes.

What have we today? We have laws which have not the backing of the people. Quite often when laws are in force and the people are not backing them, those laws turn out to be rather ineffective. This is the case with sweepstakes.

In a small town in my riding a very good friend of mine called me and said, "You know, Jack, it is time we legalized some form of sweepstakes in Canada". I said, "Why?" He said, "Last September I sent $1,200 out of this small town to Ireland". I said, "I did not think it was that much". He said, "Look, there are at least five or seven more fellows in this town of 2,500 selling tickets and I do not know how much money they sent to Ireland". This just gives some idea of the amount of money that is leaving small towns in western Canada to go to Ireland.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne) pointed out that 25 per cent of the tickets drawn are held by persons in Canada. I think it is a logical thing to say that we must be sending over to Ireland at least 25 per cent of the money that is taken in. That is an enormous amount of money to be leaving this country. I know it can be said that if we legalize some form of sweepstakes in Canada, money will still be going over to the sweepstakes in Ireland. Perhaps some money might go there. But with the support of the people behind the law with regard to a legalized sweepstake in Canada and with a crackdown by the R.C.M.P. on foreign sweepstakes, I think most of the money would be funnelled into benefits for our own hospital or medical care. Certainly in my own riding people have told me this, "Look, we even sell tickets to the R.C.M.P.; they buy them and put them in their wives' names". I am not saying this in order to discredit our very noble force in Canada. I am pointing this matter out in order to show that most of the people readily accept the sweepstakes idea and take advantage of it in one way or another. Even the person in the lower income bracket goes out and buys a dollar ticket on a car, to play bingo and so on.

With the ever increasing need for money in order to cover the cost of expensive drugs and hospitalization and with chronic illness becoming a big problem in Canada, and with hospitals being set up in a number of small towns to care for some of the elderly people who are chronically ill, we know we shall certainly continue to need large sums of money for hospitalization. While it has been pointed out that this may not be the best method by which to raise that money, nevertheless it is one way in which it could be raised without harming or hindering in any way any large group of people and without curtailing further development of our country as higher taxes on corporations or something like that might mean.

In this House of Commons in recent years few members have spoken against sweepstakes. I certainly think that there is a feeling of general acceptance right across Canada.

I should just like to point out a few of the things that have been brought to my attention over the years with regard to lotteries and gambling. Some time ago a school teacher said to me, "I did not know whether or not we could hold a Christmas raffle in my school so I thought the proper thing to do would be to write to the closest law enforcement body and ask what the situation was". She wrote to them; in fact, she went to see them. She said that the R.C.M.P. officer, I believe it was, said, "Well, you are perfectly able to go ahead and hold your raffle; I know that other schools do it. However, if there is any big trouble caused over it, I will have to step in; but if no trouble is caused, I will not bother with it, and you can probably go ahead". This teacher who wanted to do what was right had to take the risk on her own shoulders, had to break the law in a sense, in order to raise a little bit of money so that she could be Santa Claus under the Christmas tree in that small country school.

I do not think this is the proper approach. I know a raffle had been held in this school for years before this woman became the teacher there. She wished to continue the practice. She did not want to do away with the Christmas concert or anything like that. However, she did not want to be breaking the law at the same time and she went to the trouble of asking the police officer about the matter. He said in effect, "Go ahead; do it at your own risk. If the neighbouring people raise objection or if somebody squawks against it, I shall have to step in, take a look at it and perhaps lay a charge". This is the position in which we are placing good people who want to obey the law. We are placing them in a position in which they have no alternative.

I know of another instance. I may say that I am bringing this matter out in order to point out how people wish to obey the law and to do what is right, but that we as the law makers in Canada are sometimes placing them in a difficult position. I also know of a group of people who wanted to build a curling rink. Because there had been an on again-off again approach to lotteries in Alberta and because at the same time a group of people were fined for having a lottery to build a curling rink in one town in Alberta, this particular group of people were concerned about the matter. Again they wanted to do what was right and what was within the law.

They wrote to the premier of the province and asked him if they could hold a car raffle in order to build a curling rink in this town. I might add that the curling rink was sadly needed. They wanted to do what was right. In a sense the premier wrote back and said "Legally you cannot do it; but if you do it, very likely nothing will come of it. Very likely you can proceed and you will be all right". This again placed them in the position in which they knew they were breaking the law but that it would probably be all right if they went right ahead and broke it.

When we have in Canada laws for which the people find themselves having no respect and which are broken by them with no trouble arising out of the breaking of them, I say that we should change the laws so that people will have respect for them. In this particular case the community in question did not build a curling rink. However, a community five or six miles up the line a year later went ahead and raffled a car, took a chance of being thrown in jail if anything came of it and they built their curling rink. I may say that curling rink has flourished in that part of the community ever since then.

This is the trouble we have with sweepstakes being readily accepted and the laws not permitting them to be legally operated. Having regard to the experience we have had with sweepstakes, I think that we in Canada should be realistic enough and should have enough knowledge of human nature to go ahead and legalize a sweepstake board, make it the only sweepstake board operating in Canada and make its tickets the only sweepstake tickets allowed to be sold in Canada. If you get the people behind the idea and have it accepted by the general public, they will readily buy tickets for a Canadian sweepstake. They will not likely buy too many foreign sweepstakes tickets if they know they are illegal and that the law is going to be enforced to the hilt with regard to them. We should not have R.C.M.P. officers buying sweepstakes tickets and putting them in their wives' names. Some people think that this is not true and that I am possibly degrading our very able and efficient police force. That is not my intention at all. I am saying this, sir, to point out the lack of respect that people generally have for the law so far as sweepstakes are concerned.

I know that two years ago a young fellow in my constituency won $140,000 in the Irish sweepstakes. He had very little when he won the money and he was still looked upon as a respected citizen. Nobody said he was a thief or had broken the law. He was a hero in that particular community. The whole idea of sweepstakes tickets got a shot in the arm there because of his winning. I am proud to say, being a farmer myself, that part of that money was invested in a farm for the young man and I am sure he will make a success of that enterprise. These are the things that we have to consider.

I know that recently in the newspapers at home there has appeared what is called "play at home" bingo. So many numbers are printed each week in the weekly paper. People buy a bingo card for $1 and sit at home and wait eagerly for the weekly paper to come with the numbers for that week. At one time the prize was a thousand dollar bill. I have never had a thousand dollar bill. In the particular town in question the prize was advertised. If you walked by the biggest window of the biggest store in town you could catch a glimpse of the thousand dollar bill in the window on certain days. People buy their cards and play bingo at home in the hope of being the lucky winner. The idea has really gone over. I think the attraction is in the idea of taking a chance by playing bingo and running $1 into $1,000 without even moving off your seat at home but just picking up the weekly paper and filling in the numbers on the bingo card.

A few years ago bingos were looked upon by the province of Alberta with a sceptical eye but today bingo seems to be flourishing again. Alberta seems to blow hot and cold so far as sweepstakes are concerned but people are playing bingo at home. There are now three prizes. The first prize is a thousand dollar bill and the other two prizes are $500 and $200 respectively. This is how widely the idea of bingo and sweepstakes is accepted.

Some time ago in a large city I was asked to speak in a large collegiate or high school. I was going to speak on world affairs in general that night. I happened to walk in the wrong door of the school although I did not realize it at first. There seemed to be quite a crowd gathered there and I thought that surely they had not all come to hear me. Nobody met me at the door and I glanced around and saw that something was being sold and the thought went through my mind that surely they were not charging people to hear me speak because my advice is generally given gratis.

I went up to one of the people at the counter and said, "What is the charge, what goes on?" He said, "It is a bingo. We have a bingo here every week on this day." I was somewhat taken aback so I said to him, "I was to make a speech. Am I in the wrong school or what is the score?" He said, "No, your speech is to be made up on the second floor somewhere and here is a gentleman who will show you where to go." I went up there and made my speech to a crowd of 35 or 40 people, but down below there were 400 or 500 people taking a chance playing bingo. They did so every week for 52 weeks in the year. I do not know for how many years it has been going on. That is how widely accepted the idea is of taking a chance of running a dollar into a five dollar bill or a thousand dollar bill. These people were perhaps concerned about world affairs but not concerned enough to wait until next week to take a chance and come to hear me instead.

This sort of thing flourishes without the provincial governments doing a thing about it because they know that people generally accept the idea of sweepstakes and that it would be practically useless to curtail the practice. I know that the cost of medical care is increasing all the time and at the present time a government inquiry is going on for the purpose of determining how best a medical insurance plan can be worked out for the people of Canada. This also is a popular idea, particularly among persons who are least able to pay for their medical care. Those are the same people who some are trying to protect by keeping sweepstakes illegal. These same people who want hospital and medical care want to gamble. They want to run a dollar into a thousand dollars or a dollar into a five dollar bill. How can we protect them both ways? Certainly we can protect them to a certain extent, as the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) said, with regard to how much of their wages they gamble, but even that is a difficult thing to do.

I happen to live next door to a merchant in Ottawa who is in charge of a department in one of the larger department stores. He has told me that once the Connaught race track opens every spring business in the store takes a slight drop.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Boloney.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Do I hear the word "boloney" coming from that side of the house? It could well come from that side of the house because we have heard nothing but boloney from that side all afternoon. I would not doubt that there might still be a little left over there. But this man tells me that there is a slight dropping off of business when the track opens and perhaps after it has been in operation for a while business comes back to normal.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask the hon. member a question. Is he in favour of this bill? Yes or no.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Certainly I am.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): That is all I want to know. I am in agreement with the hon. member.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am 100 per cent in favour of the bill and I do not know where the hon. member has been.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but under the provisional rule his time is limited to 20 minutes and it has expired.

Mr. W. C. Henderson (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words. I am in favour of sweepstakes, racetrack betting and any other form of betting as long as the winnings come into our pockets. You can go over to Connaught track and see people betting there whom you might say should use their money to buy shoes instead of betting or buying sweepstakes tickets, but that is human nature. I am in favour of sweepstakes being conducted so that people do not have to buy tickets under cover.

In one town in my constituency there is a fellow who sells 6,000 books of sweepstakes tickets and that money goes to Ireland. He has got the thing worked out so well that he does not even have any trouble sending the money. He sends a wire and apparently the bank does the rest of it. The banks are in this too. I know this fellow and he makes his living doing this. He was a farmer but he quit farming because it was so profitable to sell sweepstakes tickets. What we should do is to allow this commission to start selling tickets in Canada, then anyone could buy them. I buy them all the time. I do not beat around the bush about it, and I have lots of friends who do the same.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Is this a new venture for the Conservative party?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will get the floor if he rises.

Mr. Henderson: I hate to bother him, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What did Mackenzie King say about it?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. members should listen to the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Henderson: We are going to have sweepstakes whether or not we like them. We should use the money for the hospitals. You have to be quite wealthy, almost a multi-millionaire to enter a hospital today because it is very expensive. Why should we not take a commission from these sweepstake tickets? It is the only chance you will ever get in your life to have $140,000. Some people win it. I never won a dime in my life, but I am going to take a chance again. I think it is time for the vote. We are all in favour of this, so let us have it.

(Translation):

Mr. Alfred Belzile (Matapedia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of this bill. Since I am not a lawyer, I do not pretend, of course, to be very conversant with the law. However, as the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Henderson) has just stated, gambling and lotteries are taking place throughout Canada at present whether we like it or not.

I realize that some people like to say that laws are made to be broken; but the fact remains that it is not always pleasant to see that so many offences are committed against laws enacted by the state. There is a basic principle to the effect that within a family, the father and mother must take all the means at their disposal to enforce obedience by their children.

The government is like the father of a family. In my opinion, it is only logical that it should have at its disposal all possible means to ensure the respect of its laws. We all know that gambling and lotteries are taking place in the province of Quebec and throughout Canada. Some lotteries are sponsored by philanthropic organizations, others by sport, recreational or charitable associations. On the other hand, we are aware of the fact that some lotteries benefit only one or two persons. Some lotteries thrive on the public's money and yet the proceeds are intended only for a handful of swindlers.

Mr. Speaker, I quote this sentence from the explanatory notes of the bill:

> Accordingly, a board is set up with power to operate sweepstakes on a national scale.

I suggest that the law should be amended in two different ways, the one to broaden its scope, the other to narrow it down.

The scope of the law should be broadened in the sense that honest games and honest lotteries held for charitable or welfare purposes should be permitted. One would then not only be glad to contribute to charity at home, but, his conscience being clear, he would be happy in the thought that he is abiding by the laws of his country and his province.

On the other hand, the scope of the law should be narrowed down to make it more strict, to have it prohibit severely and thoroughly games and lotteries which are of no benefit to the nation and the people.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that in this way, our people would find deep satisfaction in the knowledge that their government had made it easier for them to respect its laws.

(Text):

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): The bill before us seems to be one that is popular at the moment. In this air of popularity, it is very easy to go along with the idea. I have listened carefully to the speeches that have been made so far in this connection, and I think generally speaking statements that have been made are true. However, I wonder whether we have stopped to consider all the implications of these statements? I come from a community of which I am very proud. I have recently read the reports concerning returns to the community chest campaigns across this country this year. It seems to me that in most cases these campaigns fail to reach their objectives. They were disappointing to the people who voluntarily and wholeheartedly sponsored them.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): This is not true in Ottawa.

Mr. More: Would you please not interrupt?

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): This is not true in Ottawa.

Mr. More: I was talking about the general picture. Do not interrupt me. If you want to rise and ask a question, I will accept it. We hear so much about interruptions of hon. members opposite by government members, but nothing is said about interruptions by opposition members. I think this is out of order. I do not indulge in it, and I do not appreciate it. The hon. member is trying to disrupt my argument because he thinks I may be opposed to something he desires. I am willing to hear both sides of the story and make up my mind.

I was speaking of the results obtained in the community chest campaigns across this country this year. The results were disappointing a year ago and I understand they were even more disappointing this year. This is not true of my community, and I am glad to hear it is not true of Ottawa. I believe these community chest campaigns indicate the acceptance by the people of the community of their responsibility under our system. The point I am trying to make is that we all say we like to take a gamble, that the people want to take a gamble, that this money is going out of the country so we should give the people the opportunity to buy the tickets here.

I do not think we can legislate the morals of people, but I do say concern should be expressed somewhere along the line about the apparent growing weakness of our people to contribute legitimately to meet the responsible needs of their communities and their country. If this bill goes through it may be the answer to all the problems of some people, but it may create an awful lot more than they have now. It may leave us holding a bag that we shall have great difficulty filling.

My philosophy is that I would like to see less government and less government spending, regardless of which party forms the government. I would like to see more people stand up and say "we are responsible, we will solve our problems, we will do the job". There is a growing trend today, sponsored by a small group in the far corner of this chamber, a very vociferous group who have a lot of support, though they will not admit it, from another very vociferous group, towards declaiming that governments have an over-all responsibility and that governments can do everything. This trend is weakening our free community. I remember the day when we faced problems involving the lack of food and clothing in small communities in western Canada. Pioneers would come there, raise sod shacks, and the community accepted the responsibility and solved their problems. They did not run to the government and say "Mister, look after me". I regard this tendency as dangerous to our western democracy, and one which could in time make us ripe for communism.

We had an example from the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Henderson). I know he is a gambler—I do not say I am not—and he told us about a man who sold 6,000 books of tickets. I believe that in almost every community in Canada today there are professional sellers of sweepstake tickets. They have a sucker list to whom they can sell any ticket that is printed, but there is no guarantee that the tickets people buy from them are legitimate, or that the buyers have any chance of winning. This is happening all over the country and I would hope if any action is taken by parliament in this connection it would be on such a basis that we would not build up a preferred class of people.

Legislation to Establish Sweepstakes Board

For years I have belonged to community sporting organizations. I think it was the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) who advocated having a national lottery and making everything else illegal. This I would not support. In my community we have one of the top junior A hockey clubs in Canada. In my province we have probably the second best boys' junior hockey league, and we have kept that league alive through community support. In the city of Regina we publish a year book for the benefit of the club, and people I know have subscribed $6,000 a year to the purchases of the club through the year book. This is a substantial acceptance of the responsibility of the community, but we found that in itself it was not enough. Other people in the community, who would have howled to high heaven were the club disbanded and its work among 3,000 boys stopped, gave their assistance when we ran a "young Canadian" night and gave away a car. The tickets for that could be sold any place in the city with ease. This is an area which I believe is deserving of attention where a legitimate purpose can be served.

The prizes which are given away are not huge. The fortunate winners cannot desert their legitimate occupations and start lives of ease, but they are substantial prizes that attract the support of the public and in that way provide much needed money. Organizations such as that, and matters of this kind, should not be overlooked. I do not think anybody misunderstood the reference by the hon. member for Acadia to members of the R.C.M.P. buying sweepstake tickets, but it is unfortunate that he used that example. They are human like the rest of us. Had he said he was a member of parliament and had a ticket in his pocket for the next sweepstake, it would have been a far better example. I belong to that category and I believe if a poll were taken of the members of the House of Commons it would show almost all of us to be in that category. What is said about the gambling instinct is true, but this is something with which we should not deal without consideration of the over-all picture.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what we shall be doing on Monday? I also hope it will be possible for the house leader to give us an indication of what business we shall be taking up for the first few days of next week.

Mr. Churchill: On Monday we shall continue with supplementary estimates. Had we made greater progress today we might have considered something else for Monday, but should the supplementary estimates be passed on Monday then it would be possible to go on with other government orders, of which there are nine on the order paper now, with another seven to be added on Monday by way of resolutions and the introduction of bills. At the moment, I do not see any prospect of completing the present supplementary estimates on Monday but should the house do so I am quite prepared to go ahead with the bills standing in my name.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

COLUMBIA RIVER—CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN MINISTER OF FINANCE AND PREMIER BENNETT

Ottawa, January 5, 1962

The Honourable W. A. C. Bennett, M.L.A.,
Premier of British Columbia,
Victoria, B.C.

My dear Premier:

I acknowledge receipt of your telegram of January 4th reading as follows:

"Will be in Toronto at King Edward hotel on Friday January twelfth only. Would make time available for discussion on Columbia if you thought advisable."

I have replied thereto as follows:

"Reurtel deeply regret cannot be in Toronto January twelfth. Will be engaged all day at meeting of Canada-U.S. continuing committee on trade and economic matters in Ottawa. Hope you can suggest other dates for our meeting."

I am very sorry that I am not available on the date you suggested, but the date of the meeting of the Canada-U.S. committee was set several weeks ago and involves a large number of ministers and officials from both countries. It is expected to continue also on January 13th.

Yours sincerely,
Donald M. Fleming

Ottawa, January 5, 1962

The Honourable W. A. C. Bennett,
Premier of British Columbia,
Victoria, B.C.

Reurtel deeply regret cannot be in Toronto January twelfth. Will be engaged all day at meeting of Canada-U.S. continuing committee on trade and economic matters in Ottawa. Hope you can suggest other dates for our meeting.

Donald M. Fleming,
Minister of Finance.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming,
Minister of Finance, Ottawa.

Will be in Toronto at King Edward hotel on Friday January twelfth only. Would make time available for discussion on Columbia if you thought advisable.

W. A. C. Bennett, Minister of Finance.

The Honourable Donald M. Fleming, Minister of Finance, today released copies of his letter to Premier W. A. C. Bennett of British Columbia under date of December 23, 1961, dealing with the Columbia river power project.

Minister of Finance

Ottawa, December 23, 1961

The Honourable W. A. C. Bennett, M.L.A.,
Premier of British Columbia,
Victoria, British Columbia.

My dear Premier:

Before going overseas to the NATO meetings last week, I sent you an interim reply on December 9th to your letter of November 27th concerning the Columbia river treaty. I have now had an opportunity to review the situation.

I would welcome an early resumption of discussions on the financial arrangements, but my colleagues and I feel that it is most important that we should first remove any misunderstanding that may exist about the real purpose of the treaty. In your earlier letter of June 9 you stated that in your view all of Canada's share of the downstream power benefits should be disposed of to the United States. You return to this point in your last letter, and say that it is of paramount importance to you.

This stand is quite contrary to the fundamental purpose of the treaty, which is to secure for the people of British Columbia directly and immediately the cheapest and most abundant electric power available.

I believe it essential to reaffirm the basic position outlined in my letter of May 17 regarding the use which has been clearly envisaged from the beginning on both sides for these power benefits. As you were aware, throughout the negotiation of the treaty, discussions in the Canada-British Columbia policy liaison committee were based on the intention that the bulk of Canada's share of the low cost downstream power benefits would be delivered to Canada for the use and benefit of consumers in British Columbia. The treaty itself accurately reflects this principle. I refer in particular to the following provisions of the treaty:—

"Article V—Entitlement to downstream power benefits

(1) Canada is entitled to one half the downstream power benefits determined under article VII.

(2) The United States of America shall deliver to Canada at a point on the Canada-United States of America boundary near Oliver, British Columbia, or at such other place as the entities may agree upon, the downstream power benefits to which Canada is entitled, less

(a) transmission loss,

(b) the portion of the entitlement disposed of under article VIII(1), and

(c) the energy component described in article VIII(4)."

"Article VII—Determination of downstream power benefits

(1) The downstream power benefits shall be the difference in the hydroelectric power capable of being generated in the United States of America with and without the use of Canadian storage, determined in advance, and is referred to in the treaty as the downstream power benefits.

(2) For the purpose of determining the downstream power benefits:

(a) the principles and procedures set out in annex B shall be used and followed;

(b) the Canadian storage shall be considered as next added to 13,000,000 acre-feet of the usable storage listed in column 4 of the table in annex B;

(c) the hydroelectric facilities included in the base system shall be considered as being operated to make the most effective use for hydroelectric power generation of the improvement in stream flow resulting from operation of the Canadian storage.

(3) The downstream power benefits to which Canada is entitled shall be delivered as follows:

(a) dependable hydroelectric capacity as scheduled by the Canadian entity, and

(b) average annual usable hydroelectric energy in equal amounts each month, or in accordance with a modification agreed upon under paragraph (4).

(4) Modification of the obligation in paragraph 3(b) may be agreed upon by the entities."

"Article VIII—Disposal of entitlement to downstream power benefits

(1) With the authorization of Canada and the United States of America evidenced by exchange of notes, portions of the downstream power benefits to which Canada is entitled may be disposed of within the United States of America. The respective general conditions and limits within which the entities may arrange initial disposals shall be set out in an exchange of notes to be made as soon as possible after the ratification date.

(2) The entities may arrange and carry out exchanges of dependable hydroelectric capacity and average annual usable hydroelectric energy to which Canada is entitled for average annual usable hydroelectric energy and dependable hydroelectric capacity respectively.

(3) Energy to which Canada is entitled may not be used in the United States of America except in accordance with paragraphs (1) and (2)."...

"Article X—East-west stand-by transmission

(1) The United States of America shall provide in accordance with good engineering practice east-west stand-by transmission service adequate to safeguard the transmission from Oliver, British Columbia, to Vancouver, British Columbia, of the downstream power benefits to which Canada is entitled and to improve system stability of the east-west circuits in British Columbia."

These provisions obviously rest on the intention that, in the normal course, our downstream benefits will be physically returned to Canada. I draw your attention to the word "portion" in Article V and the word "portions" in article VIII. At no time prior to the signing of the treaty was it even hinted by you, your ministers, or your officer who was appointed as one of the four negotiators, that your government would demand that Canada's share of downstream benefits be sold in the United States.

The basic purpose of the treaty is to provide large supplies of cheap power and thereby benefit the people of British Columbia and the economy of Canada as a whole through the industrial development and employment which can be expected to result This purpose would be defeated and British Columbia producers put at a competitive disadvantage if the bulk of the low-cost downstream benefit power is committed to the United States for several decades.

The great advantages to Canada of the development and use of the low-cost power of the Columbia are brought out once again in specific terms in a study made of them by the Montreal Engineering Company. I am sending you under separate cover a copy of this report in two volumes, and I am enclosing herewith a departmental memorandum setting forth briefly some of the conclusions reached in this report.

We have accomplished what seemed at many times to be an unattainable objective when we were able to negotiate for the return to Canada, free, of one half of the downstream benefits. My colleagues and I would hope that you will be able to return to the real purpose of the treaty and agree that the bulk of Canada's downstream benefit power should be brought back for use in British Columbia, with only the temporary surpluses being sold to the United States, as provided in article VIII of the treaty.

I am, as always, ready to meet with you, and invite you to suggest several alternative dates in January for consideration.

Wishing you the compliments of the season, I am,

Yours sincerely,
Donald M. Fleming

MINISTER OF FINANCE

Ottawa, December 9, 1961

The Honourable W. A. C. Bennett,
Premier of British Columbia,
Victoria, B.C.

My dear Premier:

Thank you for your letter of November 27th concerning the Columbia river power development.

My time has been almost completely occupied throughout the last three weeks in the treasury board's annual review of departmental estimates. This task was concluded only yesterday. On Monday morning I am leaving for Paris to attend the annual meeting of the NATO ministerial council and shall be away for the entire week.

On my return I shall be writing to you in further reply to your letter, and particularly in regard to our proposed meeting.

Yours sincerely,
Donald M. Fleming

OFFICE OF THE PREMIER

Province of British Columbia Victoria
1961
November 27th.

The Honourable D. M. Fleming, P.C., Q.C.,
Minister of Finance,
Confederation Building,
Ottawa 4, Ontario.

Dear Mr. Fleming:

In view of our previous discussions concerning the implementation of the Columbia river treaty, I thought you should be advised, as the year end approaches, of British Columbia's endeavours to see the treaty projects take shape.

First, licensing procedure under the "Water Act" of this province were undertaken by British Columbia power commission commencing the 24th day of June 1961, and hearings were conducted by the water comptroller, Mr. Paget, commencing the 18th day of September and will conclude in all likelihood before the end of this year. The water comptroller's report, we trust, will follow shortly thereafter.

Second, the massive engineering required to give definition to the treaty projects has been under way since November 1960. Three consortiums of engineers have been put to work, each concerned with one of the three treaty projects involving Arrow lake storage, Duncan lake and Mica creek. By the end of this calendar year $4,400,000 will have been expended by British Columbia for these purposes and it is now to be anticipated that definitive engineering will be virtually complete on Duncan lake by early 1962, Arrow lakes by mid-1962 and Mica creek early 1963. Detailed engineering will proceed concurrently with construction when authorized.

The most important question remaining, among a number posed by the treaty, arises under provisions of clause 8 of the treaty and involves the contemplated disposition of Canadian downstream benefit electricity in the United States. I refer especially to this matter among the various factors affecting finance, because you are aware that British Columbia feels that the exchange of notes establishing sale of downstream benefits pursuant to clause 8 is the key to Canadian financial well-being. Canada's position is, of course, in effect to be assumed and discharged by British Columbia. Therefore this matter is of paramount importance to us in arranging finance.

My purpose in writing is to suggest that time and events are becoming appropriate for our respective financial officers to bring themselves up to date on this whole matter. I would appreciate learning from you a date which might be suitable for a further meeting and would be pleased to suggest, if it were convenient to you, that you and your advisers might meet in Victoria, but if this is not possible I shall be glad to meet you in Ottawa. While I am very busy preparing for the opening of our own legislature, and with the preparation of the budget, yet I feel that the treaty should be ratified as soon as possible, and therefore will be pleased to go to Ottawa.

Kindest personal regards,

Yours very truly,
W. A. C. Bennett
Premier

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, January 29, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TANGANYIKA—APPOINTMENT OF FIRST CANADIAN HIGH COMMISSIONER

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Last December, Mr. Speaker, I announced that the government had decided to extend its diplomatic relations with the independent states of Africa by opening new diplomatic missions in Tanganyika and the Federal Republic of Cameroon. I am pleased to announce today that an experienced officer of my department, Mr. Norman Berlis, has been appointed as the first Canadian high commissioner to Dar-es-Salaam, Tanganyika.

This appointment is a mark of the importance which the government attaches to the establishment of close relations between this new member of the commonwealth and Canada. Mr. Berlis, a native of Toronto, is a graduate of the University of Toronto and Osgoode Hall, and has had extensive service for Canada both during the war and in the Department of External Affairs. At present he is head of the information division. The Canadian mission in Dar-es-Salaam will have important functions to fulfil, particularly in the field of educational and technical assistance under the special commonwealth African aid program.

As an example of the close and friendly cooperation between Canada and the former British colonies in Africa, the house might be interested to know that during the visit to Ottawa on December 17 of the chief minister of Uganda, Hon. B. K. W. Kiwanuka, who is the first minister, I discussed with him the ways in which Canada might be able to extend assistance to his country under the special commonwealth aid to Africa program. The proposal to which he gave highest priority was the attachment of a senior foreign service officer to the Canadian delegation to the United Nations in New York.

I am glad to be able to inform the house that we have already acted on this request. Mr. A. K. Kironde, a former Uganda minister of works, who is to become ambassador and head of the Uganda delegation to the United Nations when his country becomes independent on October 9 of this year, has joined our New York delegation as an observer as of January 25 after spending three days in Ottawa, and he will continue with the delegation until he becomes permanent representative of Uganda. Canada is paying his expenses from our special commonwealth aid to Africa funds.

The appointment of Mr. Berlis and this request from Uganda that we help to train their permanent representative at the United Nations are very significant moves, because they are the first moves into east Africa; in due course our high commissioner to Tanganyika will probably also be credited to Uganda and to Kenya.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MANITOBA—PROVISION FOR CONSTRUCTION AND PURCHASE OF BRANCH LINES

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-48, to amend an act respecting the construction of a line of railway by Canadian National Railway Company from Optic lake to Chisel lake, and the purchase by Canadian National Railway Company from the International Nickel Company of Canada, Limited, of a line of railway from Sipiwesk to a point on Burntwood river near Mystery lake, all in the province of Manitoba.

Mr. Pickersgill: Explain.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I think what you have just read is a perfect explanation of the purpose of the bill and I have nothing to add.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING BUSINESS IMPROVEMENT LOANS

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-49, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Explain.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The purpose of this bill is to enlarge in one particular the purposes for which loans may be authorized under the said statute.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is the particular?

Proposed Legislation

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Fleming, Eglinton, moves that the said bill be now read the first time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, we have asked the minister to give us an explanation of this bill and he has simply rephrased or paraphrased what is already referred to in the title of the bill. The way to give an explanation is to give us the particular with respect to which there will be an amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Order. A bill is not debatable on first reading, and while the house is entitled to ask for an explanation I do not know that it is entitled to complain about the explanation that is given.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Some more gallery play.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE AMOUNT OF PENSION

Hon. E. D. Fulton (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Security Act to increase the amount of monthly pension payable thereunder to sixty-five dollars per month.

Motion agreed to.

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE ASSISTANCE AND ALLOWABLE INCOME

Hon. E. D. Fulton (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Assistance Act to increase to sixty-five dollars per month the maximum amount of assistance in respect of which payments may be made to the provinces under the provisions of that act, and to increase the total amount of allowable income, inclusive of assistance, by one hundred and eighty dollars a year in the case of an unmarried person and three hundred and sixty dollars a year in the case of a married person.

Motion agreed to.

BLIND PERSONS ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE PAYMENTS AND ALLOWABLE INCOME

Hon. E. D. Fulton (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Blind Persons Act to increase to sixty-five dollars per month the maximum amount of allowance in respect of which payments may be made to the province under the provisions of that act, and to increase the total amount of allowable income, inclusive of allowance, by one hundred and eighty dollars a year in the case of an unmarried person and three hundred and sixty dollars a year in the case of a married person.

Motion agreed to.

DISABLED PERSONS ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE PAYMENTS AND ALLOWABLE INCOME

Hon. E. D. Fulton (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Disabled Persons Act to increase to sixty-five dollars per month the maximum amount of allowance in respect of which payments may be made to the provinces under the provisions of that act, and to increase the total amount of allowable income, inclusive of allowance, by one hundred and eighty dollars a year in the case of an unmarried person and three hundred and sixty dollars a year in the case of a married person.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

AUTHORIZATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF LINE FROM WHITECOURT, ALBERTA

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize and to provide for the construction of a line of railway in the province of Alberta by Canadian National Railway Company from Whitecourt for a distance of approximately 23.2 miles to the property of Pan American Petroleum Corporation, at a total estimated expenditure of $2,300,000, not to be exceeded by more than 15 per cent; to authorize the issue by the said railway company of securities that may be guaranteed by Her Majesty in right of Canada to finance the construction of the said line; and in order that the said railway company may forthwith proceed with the construction of the said line of railway, to authorize temporary loans to the said railway company out of the consolidated revenue fund upon terms and conditions prescribed by the governor in council and secured by securities of the said railway company.

Motion agreed to.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AUTHORITY ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE AUTHORITY TO BORROW

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act to provide that the authority, with the approval of the governor in council, may from time to time borrow money from Her Majesty or otherwise to an aggregate that shall not at any time exceed $345,000,000 in lieu of $335,000,000 which it is already authorized to borrow by section 13 of the act.

Motion agreed to.

*TEST HOLE PROJECT, SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I.

Question No. 3—Mr. Peters:

1. Has the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys drilled or is it planning to drill a test hole in or near Summerside, P.E.I., and, if so, why?

2. How many men will the project employ, and of these, how many will be hired locally over and above regular government personnel?

3. Is this a special make-work project in P.E.I.?

4. Did any oil companies conduct drilling operations in this area in recent years, and, if so, did the department receive any information on these drillings?

Mr. Flynn: The answer to this question is rather long and I would ask leave to have it printed in Hansard without reading it.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

1. The Department of Mines and Technical Surveys is preparing to have drilled, in the near future, one or more core test holes in the general vicinity of Summerside, P.E.I., for the purpose of securing sub-surface geological information as an aid to determining the geological structure in this district.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

2. The drilling will be done by the Department of Public Works on behalf of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. It is expected that two or perhaps three drills will be operated. It is understood that each of these will require, in addition to a D.P.W. driller, a driller's helper and two to four labourers. The helpers and labourers will be hired locally.

3. The project is being carried out under the federal government winter work program.

4. During 1959, Imperial Oil Limited drilled three wells in search of oil in this general district. These were: (1) Imperial Wellington Station No. 1; (2) Imperial MacDougall No. 1; and (3) Imperial Port Hill No. 1. The geological survey of Canada, Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, has received cores, samples, and other information on these wells.

*SECTION 96A(2), INDIAN ACT

Question No. 4—Mr. Howard:

1. Since September 29, 1961, has any referendum been held among the electors of any Indian band in British Columbia respecting the bringing into force of section 96A(2) of the Indian Act and, if so, what is the name of each such band, the date upon which each referendum was conducted, and the results of the referendum therein?

2. What action has been taken, or is planned, with respect to the results of the said referenda?

Answer by: Mrs. Fairclough: The answer to the first question is yes.

The names of the bands and the dates of the referenda are as follows: Kincolith, December 5, 1961—in favour; Fort George, November 14, 1961—in favour; Necoslie, November 23, 1961—in favour; Steliaquo, December 12, 1961—in favour; Canyon City, January 5, 1962—in favour; Gitlakdamix, January 5, 1962—in favour; Greenville, January 5, 1962—in favour; Sechelt, January 4, 1962—in favour.

The answer to the second question is that the results of all referenda have been referred to the governor in council for consideration with respect to the issuing of a proclamation bringing subsection 2 of section 96 A into force in the reserves belonging to the above bands.

*TELEVISION SURVEYS, SKEENA, B.C.

Question No. 5—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1961, have any surveys been made of the need for television facilities in the electoral district of Skeena and, if so, what are the results of these surveys, and the areas or communities so covered?

2. Has any decision been made to establish such facilities in the said electoral district and, if so, when is it expected that such facilities will be installed, in what communities, and covering what areas?

Mr. Lambert: With respect to the board of broadcast governors I am advised that in answer to the first part of the question the board itself has made no surveys of the needs for television facilities in the electoral district of Skeena, nor is it aware of any specific surveys made by private operators.

With respect to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, I am advised that during 1961 the corporation did conduct a survey in the electoral district to determine the feasibility of providing television service to the communities of Prince Rupert, Kitimat and Terrace. A final decision has not been reached pending further study and evaluation of the C.B.C. engineering proposals, and an evaluation of a new proposal put forward by a private operator who has applied to the C.B.C. for network affiliation.

*ESCAPES FROM PENITENTIARIES

Question No. 6—Mr. Howard:

For each year since 1950, how many inmates, if any, have escaped from penitentiaries, and how many of the said escapees have been recaptured?

Mr. Fulton: As the number of years and the statistics are fairly lengthy I suggest the answer might appear in Hansard, and I shall at once send a copy to the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

ESCAPES FROM PENITENTIARIES

Calendar Year	Inmates escaped	Inmates recaptured
1950	4
1951	1
1952	14
1953	14
1954	15
1955	14	All recaptured

1960	30
1961	71	63 inmates recaptured (8 inmates unlawfully at large)
1962	1	Recaptured
Total	215

Note: The above indicates the escapes during the period January 1 to December 31 of year indicated opposite number of inmates who escaped.

Questions

INDIAN ACT INFRACTIONS RESPECTING INTOXICANTS, SKEENA, B.C.

Question No. 7—Mr. Howard:

For each month since January 1, 1960, what was, in each of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police detachments in the Skeena electoral district, the number of Indians, as defined in the Indian Act, (a) charged with, and (b) convicted of, infractions of the sections of the Indian Act relating with intoxicants, and with respect to the convictions, what were the penalties imposed by number of Indians in each appropriate grouping of such penalties, and the total amount of fines levied?

Answer by: Mr. Fulton: By order in council dated March 18, 1888, the British Columbia government were given and assumed responsibility for the enforcement of the Indian Act and all other statutes, both federal and provincial, in connection with Indians in British Columbia. The situation, therefore, is that although the R.C.M. Police in British Columbia do carry out police functions in British Columbia under provincial authority they do so as the agents of the provincial government under contract. The particulars sought here do not fall within federal competence and accordingly the question should be directed to the government of British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker: I would call the minister's attention to the fact that the question he has just answered is not marked with an asterisk and it is quite in order—in fact, it is contemplated—that the answers to these questions which do not bear an asterisk will simply be tabled.

Mr. Fulton: I regret having taken up the time of the house unnecessarily, I think owing to my being the first one exposed to the new procedure.

SURVIVAL AND RESCUE TRAINING COURSES

Question No. 8—Mr. Howard:

1. Since September 7, 1961, how many men (a) started (b) completed, and (c) were rejected for the first training course which was designed to increase the number of men trained to take part in survival and rescue operations?
2. How many men (a) started, and (b) were rejected for any such subsequent training courses?
3. What has been the cost to date of this program?

Answer by: Mr. Chambers:

1. (a) 20,523, (b) 17,632, (c) 3,464.
2. (a) 25,878, (b) 5,492.
3. $7,414,482.

EMERGENCY MEASURES RECEPTION FACILITIES

Question No. 9—Mr. Howard:

Since September 13, 1961, what steps, if any, has the emergency measures organization taken with respect to the planning and providing of reception facilities and shelters for those who would need them following their evacuation from their homes in the event of nuclear war?

[Mr. Fulton.]

Answer by: Mr. Diefenbaker: Planning and providing reception facilities and shelters for those who would need them following evacuation from their homes in the event of a nuclear war are, by agreement, primarily provincial and local responsibilities. The federal government provides help by way of advice, consultation, and financial support under the financial assistance program. Since September 13, 1961, these forms of federal assistance have been continued and emphasized. Certain aspects of the subject were reviewed at the conference on November 27, 1961, between federal and provincial ministers charged with responsibilities in civil emergency planning.

FALL-OUT SHELTER CONTRACTS, ARNPRIOR, ONT.

Question No. 10—Mr. Howard:

1. Since September 13, 1961, has any contract been awarded for construction, at Arnprior, of a variety of prototype fall-out shelters, and, if so, what was the amount of the contract, and who was the person awarded the contract?
2. Were there any other bidders, and, if so, what are their names, addresses, and amount of each bid?
3. Have any of the said prototype shelters been completed, and, if so, how many, and what is considered to be the best type for each particular purpose for which such shelters are considered to be necessary?
4. Have any steps been taken financially to assist our fellow Canadians to acquire such shelters, and, if so, what are the details?

Answer by: Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. The contract was awarded October 23, 1961, for construction at Arnprior of a variety of prototype shelters. The amount of the contract was $24,473, and it was awarded to N. Sullivan and Son, Arnprior, Ontario.

2. There was another bidder, M. G. Sulphur, Renfrew, Ontario, and the amount of that bid was $25,408.

3. Three such prototype shelters have been completed except for a limited amount of internal fitting on which the work is now progressing. One of the shelters is of medium size, made of reinforced concrete, designed to accommodate some 30 persons and to give some protection against blast as well as fall-out. The second is of similar character except its capacity is limited to 5 or 6 persons, suitable for a family. The third is a below ground structure of family size, made from concrete blocks affording excellent fall-out protection, with limited protection against blast. Each of these is felt to be the best type for the particular purpose in mind.

4. Yes. Persons wishing to construct shelters of this sort in their homes or on their premises may secure government guaranteed loans under the National Housing Act.

FALL-OUT PROTECTION, FEDERAL BUILDINGS

Question No. 11—Mr. Howard:

1. Since September 13, 1961, how many federal buildings (a) have been considered to have adequate fall-out protection (b) can be improved to provide such protection, and what is the estimated cost of making such improvements and providing essential facilities and supplies (c) cannot be thus improved due to the excessive costs involved?

2. Are steps being taken to so improve such buildings to provide adequate fall-out protection, and when is it estimated that this work will be completed?

3. How many of the buildings referred to respectively in (a), (b), and (c) of part 1 of this question are in target cities?

4. How many of the said buildings were considered to have been destroyed during exercise Tocsin B?

Answer by: Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. During 1961 surveys of federal buildings with respect to fall-out protection have been carried out by two departments, the Department of Public Works and the Department of National Defence. Since the surveys by the Department of National Defence and the evaluation of them will not be completed until March 31, 1962, the information given here refers to the information gathered by the Department of Public Works only.

In its surveys it has been found that 504 federal buildings are considered to have adequate fall-out protection. In its opinion 324 additional buildings can be altered to provide adequate fall-out protection at an estimated cost of approximately $5,000,000 for the necessary improvements and essential facilities and supplies. Some 4,000 other federally owned buildings could only be provided with fall-out protection at considerably greater cost.

2. The results of the detailed surveys described in 1 are at present under consideration and no decision to undertake construction has yet been made.

3. Of the 828 federal buildings, including the 504 with adequate fall-out protection and the 324 that could economically be modified, there are 281 in areas listed as possible target areas.

4. Of these 828 buildings, it is estimated that 214 would have been destroyed under the circumstances assumed in exercise Tocsin B. No detailed review was made of the other buildings.

FALL-OUT PROTECTION FACILITIES, TARGET AREAS

Question No. 12—Mr. Howard:

Since September 13, 1961, has the emergency measures organization, or any other part of government developed any measures to give priority to target areas for increasing fall-out protection for those dwelling in private houses or apartment houses by making it possible for people to make use of government, privately owned, commercial, and industrial buildings, and, if so, what are those measures?

Answer by: Mr. Diefenbaker: Since September 13, 1961, the emergency measures organization, together with other agencies of government immediately concerned, such as the Department of Public Works, has been considering measures, with special attention to target areas, that would increase fall-out protection for those dwelling in private houses or apartment houses, by making it possible for people to use government, privately owned, commercial, and industrial buildings. Before firm recommendations can be made in this matter, it has been found necessary to procure a good deal of basic information. This includes the number of buildings that already have a reasonable degree of protection against radioactive fall-out, what buildings could economically be modified to afford such protection, what numbers of people under emergency conditions they would accommodate, what costs would be involved in improving the fall-out protection factor, and numerous other related facts.

While various buildings of the types enumerated above are subject to consideration, first priority has been given to federally owned buildings. The next group given attention includes those owned by provincial and municipal governments. Extensive surveys have been carried on by the Department of Public Works with respect to federally owned buildings and these surveys are supplemented by those now in progress by the Department of National Defence with respect to army buildings. Concurrently, provinces and municipalities have been encouraged to undertake sur veys of buildings they own. These surveys are now going forward at numerous points in Canada.

The federal government has provided technical advice and in some instances has provided personnel as well to assist in the surveys. The costs of such surveys made by provinces and municipalities are recognized as an appropriate part of the financial assistance program for emergency planning, and thus to the extent of 75 per cent are met from federal funds.

Beyond the buildings owned by various governments it would be anticipated that commercial and industrial buildings would fall into the next priority for survey purposes. When the degree of fall-out protection afforded by such buildings and their capacity for habitation for survival purposes have been determined, then measures for possible use of such buildings in an emergency can be given detailed consideration.

Questions

NATIONAL SURVIVAL TRAINING COURSE QUOTAS

Question No. 14—Mr. Argue:

1. What was the quota for the first and second national survival training courses?
2. How many enrolled for the first and second courses?
3. How many completed the first course?
4. How many of those who completed the first course have joined (a) the regular forces (b) the militia?

Answer by: Mr. Harkness:

1. The quotas for the first and second SMTP courses were 25,000 each.

2. (a) First course: 20,523
   (b) Second course: 25,878

3. 17,632

4. (a) 514
   (b) 6,857

*BOMARC MISSILE INSTALLATIONS, NORTH BAY AND LA MACAZA

Question No. 15—Mr. Argue:

1. Are Bomarc missiles being installed at bases near North Bay and/or La Macaza?
2. If so, have these Bomarcs been fitted with (a) conventional warheads (b) nuclear warheads?
3. If not, which warheads are on order, (a) conventional warheads (b) nuclear warheads?
4. Do conventional warheads for the Bomarc exist at present?
5. If not, what is their present stage of development?

Mr. Chambers: Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is as follows:

1. Bomarc B missiles are being installed at North Bay. As La Macaza has not yet reached the installation phase, no missiles have been installed at this base.

2. (a) No.
   (b) No.

3. No agreement has been made for the supply of warheads as yet.

4 and 5. A conventional warhead was at one time under development for the Bomarc A missile. There has been no further development to date.

U.S. SAC FLIGHTS OVER CANADA

Question No. 17—Mr. Argue:

1. Do aircraft of the United States Strategic Air Command fly over Canada carrying H-bombs whenever an alert is called?
2. How many alerts have been called in each of the last 10 years?
3. On how many occasions in the last 10 years have aircraft of the U.S. Strategic Air Command carrying H-bombs flown over Canada?

Answer by: Mr. Harkness:

1, 2 and 3. The procedure with regard to Strategic Air Command aircraft overflying Canadian territory carrying nuclear weapons was explained by the Prime Minister in the House on June 3, 1958 (Official Record page 781) and again on March 17, 1959 (Official Record page 2011). On the former occasion the Prime Minister stated that it would not be in the public interest to give any indication of either the frequency of such flights or the number of aircraft involved.

*C.N.R. FREIGHT RATE INCREASES ON IRON ORE

Question No. 18—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the Prime Minister and/or the Minister of Transport received in the last six months any reports, briefs, telegrams, letters, etc. or delegations from any person, persons, or organizations, regarding freight rate increases applied by the Canadian National Railways on iron ore shipped from Atikokan, Ontario, to Port Arthur?
2. If so, when, by whom, to what effect, and with what consequence?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 is no, and part 2 is therefore not applicable.

*PUBLIC WORKS MINISTER'S TOUR OF ASIA

Question No. 19—Mr. Fisher:

1. Did the Minister of Public Works make a tour of southern and southeastern Asia in 1961?
2. If so, what was the purpose of the tour?
3. What cities and countries did he visit?
4. Has he made any public report upon this tour; if so, what was its gist?
5. Has his department any plans or has it set aside any funds to help carry out any recommendations or suggestions he may have made in such a report?
6. If so, what is the nature and scale of such a project?
7. How many, and what other nations, have given indications that they wish to join in such a project?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is as follows:

1. I visited Malaya, India and the crown colony of Hong Kong.

2. I was the Canadian government representative to the annual meeting of the Ministerial council of the Colombo plan.

3. Kuala Lumpur, Malaya; New Delhi, India; and Hong Kong.

4. As the house was not in session the only public reports made were in the form of newspaper interviews in Asia and Canada. The gist of them was an outline of the accomplishments of the Colombo plan and Canada's part in them.

5. No. I was assigned this responsibility as a member of cabinet. The Department of Public Works is not directly involved in the Colombo plan.

6 and 7. Not applicable.

* SHIP CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS

Question No. 20—Mr. Chevrier:

1. Since the announcement in the house on May 12, 1961, of the subsidy for the construction of ships, how many contracts have been entered into between the Canadian maritime commission, the ship builder, and the ship owner?

2. How many such contracts are for (a) operation in the deep-sea trade (b) operation in the lake and coastal trade (c) trawlers and fishing vessels?

3. In what shipyards are these being built?

4. How many such ships were contracted for with the shipyards prior to (a) May 12, 1961 (b) since May 12, 1961, and before September 27, 1961, (c) since September 27, 1961?

5. How many such applications are for (a) operation in the deep-sea trade (b) operation in the lake and coastal trade (c) trawlers and fishing vessels?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is as follows:

As it is not possible at the present time to answer specifically each part of this question, I would like to deal with it as a whole.

I might first say that contracts are not entered into between the Canadian maritime commission and the owners. What is negotiated between the commission, the owners and the builders is an agreement which covers the payment of subsidy for a specific project. The agreement can be signed only after all matters associated with the application for the subsidy have been settled, and it has not been possible up to now for the commission to complete the required detailed arrangements. Actual agreements not having yet been signed, it is considered that names of shipyards and shipowners concerned should be withheld pending formal execution of agreements.

Up to the present 79 applications have been reported to the commission in respect of vessels which could come under the subsidy. The value of such construction amounts to approximately $75,000,000, and the work is being carried out in some 30 different shipyards throughout the country.

Of the applications before the commission, 5 are for passenger and cargo vessels, 17 dry cargo, 4 oil tankers, 15 tugs, 24 barges, 11 fishing vessels and 3 miscellaneous.

*UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Question No. 21—Mr. McMillan:

What was the net amount, exclusive of loans, if any, from the treasury, in the unemployment insurance fund, at the latest available date, with securities held, quoted: (a) at par (b) at their current market values?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, at December 31, 1961, $163,305,098.55, including $157 million in non-marketable securities redeemable on 30 days notice.

*SURPLUS TRAILERS, D.E.W. LINE POINTS

Question No. 22—Mr. Badanai:

1. Are trailers now being used at D.E.W. line points shortly to become surplus equipment?

2. If so, how soon will these trailers become available for disposal, and at what price?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is as follows:

1. Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is not informed in advance of the nature or quantity of equipment to be declared surplus by the United States government the owner of the equipment mentioned.

2. When and if such equipment is reported surplus and is accepted for disposal by the corporation, acting as agent of the United States government, it will be sold to the highest bidder in accordance with corporation practices.

*COASTAL TRAFFIC REGULATIONS

Question No. 23—Mr. Badanai:

1. Do present coastal traffic regulations permit only vessels built and owned in Canada?

2. If so, what is the position of boats built years ago in other countries which have been operating on the great lakes for many years by various owners?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is as follows:

1. No. In accordance with the commonwealth merchant shipping agreement and the Canada Shipping Act, ships on commonwealth registry may engage in the coasting trade of Canada.

2. Ships operating on British registry but built outside the commonwealth, in order to engage in the coasting trade of Canada, must obtain a licence from the Minister of National Revenue obtainable on payment of a 25 per cent ad valorem duty.

*UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFIT RECIPIENTS

Question No. 24—Mr. Lessard:

According to the most recent statistics, how many unemployed are in receipt of unemployment benefits?

Mr. Thrasher: Mr. Speaker, a record is not available at any given time indicating the number of persons actually in receipt of benefit since payments are made at varying intervals in the case of postal claimants and personal payments at local offices.

*SIREN FAILURES, EXERCISE TOCSIN B

Question No. 26—Mr. Pitman:

1. How many sirens did not work properly during exercise Toscin B?

2. In what centres were these sirens located?

3. How many sirens have at present been installed and, at what total cost?

4. Have reports of complaints of freezing up of sirens been received and, if so, from what areas have these reports emanated?

5. What steps have been taken to prevent such freeze up in the future?

Questions

Mr. Chambers: Mr. Speaker, the answers to the five parts of this question are as follows:

1. 53 sirens failed to sound and there were an additional 70 partial failures during exercise Tocsin B.

2. Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa, Belleville, Toronto, Fort William, Fort Erie, Oshawa, St. Catharines, Sault Ste. Marie, Barrie, London, Dunnville, Hagersville, Windsor, Essex, Winnipeg, Edmonton, Calgary, Vancouver, Victoria, Trail.

3. (a) As of January 4, 1962, 744 sirens have been installed and an additional 857 have been procured from the manufacturer for installation.

(b) Total committed funds to date, which include purchase of sirens and installation contracts not completed, are $2,008,760.06. Cash expenditure to date is $821,108.30.

4. Reports have been received of the sirens icing up at the following locations: Edmonton, Montreal, Peterborough, Ottawa, Kingston, Hamilton, Windsor.

5. Tests are currently being conducted by the army in conjunction with national research council, a consulting engineering firm and the manufacturers to determine the most reliable and economic method to prevent icing and stoppages.

*PRODUCTIVITY COUNCIL MEETINGS

Question No. 28—Mr. Pitman:

1. How many meetings have been held by the productivity council and, how long has each meeting lasted?

2. Have any members resigned from the productivity council since it was originally established and, if so, what are their names?

3. Have all designated members of the productivity council been in attendance at all meetings and, if not, what members have been absent?

Mr. Morris: Mr. Speaker, the answers to the three parts of this question are as follows:

1. There have been five meetings held, three of which lasted one day and two lasted two days.

2. Yes, Mr. Jean Raymond and Mr. H. R. Milner.

3. The meetings of the productivity council have been well attended, and while it would be incorrect to state that all members have attended all of the meetings I can assure the house that all members have been in attendance at some time or other and many have attended all meetings. Having regard to the voluntary service rendered by these public spirited citizens, the attendance record has been very good indeed.

[Mr. Pitman.]

*T.C.A.-C.P.A. AMALGAMATION, INTERNATIONAL SERVICES

Question No. 30—Mr. Cardin:

Is it the intention of the Department of Transport to encourage the integration of the Trans-Canada Air Lines and the Canadian Pacific Airlines for the provision of service on international routes?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, any statement of government policy with regard to the subject matter of this question would be announced by the government in the usual and appropriate manner.

*U.I.C. RULING RESPECTING UNION MEMBERS

Question No. 32—Miss LaMarsh:

1. Has the unemployment insurance commission received any representations opposing its ruling that union members while engaged on union business during regular work hours cannot make unemployment insurance contributions?

2. If so, has the commission reversed its ruling?

3. If it has not reversed this ruling, what are the reasons for this ruling?

Mr. Thrasher: Mr. Speaker, the answers to the three parts of this question are as follows:

1. Yes.

2. No.

3. The commission's decision reads as follows:

The law is quite clear on the point that an unincorporated association is not a legal entity and that a member of such a society cannot be employed under a contract of service by the association of which he is a member, since he is individually as much the employer as every other member and therefore cannot also be the employee of the association under a contract of service which requires the relationship of master and servant between two different persons.

I might add that when the union was advised of this ruling by the commission it was also informed that, if desired, an appeal could be made to the umpire who is the final authority under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

*MECHANICAL TRADES WAGE RATES, POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE

Question No. 33—Mr. Granger:

1. Has the Minister of Labour received a communication from the Cape Breton district command of the Royal Canadian Legion supporting a request for the upgrading of wage rates for prevailing rate employees in the mechanical trades at Point Edward naval base?

2. If so, has any action been taken by the Department of Labour in the way of conducting a wage review or increasing the rates?

Mr. Thrasher: Mr. Speaker, the answers to the two parts of this question are as follows:

1. Yes. Representations were also received from the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria.

2. The Department of National Defence made a request for a review of the rates of pay of the various classifications employed at Point Edward naval base. The Department of Labour has authorized a wage survey to be made in the area in order to recommend any necessary revisions in the Point Edward naval base rates.

*BUTTER PRODUCTION AND CONSUMPTION

Question No. 34—Mr. Matheson:

1. What was the volume of production of butter in (a) 1957 (b) 1961?
2. What was the volume of consumption of butter in (a) 1957 (b) 1961?
3. What volume of butter stocks or their equivalent in butter oil was in storage on December 31, 1961?

Mr. Morris: Mr. Speaker, the answers to the three parts of this question are as follows:

	1957	1961
1. Creamery butter production	303,371,000	350,477,000*
2. Creamery butter consumption	321,554,000	282,288,000*
3. Stocks of creamery butter and butter oil (in butter equivalent) as at December 31, 1961, were 200,087,000*

*The 1961 figures are preliminary.

*CROP INSURANCE SCHEME, QUEBEC

Question No. 36—Mr. Pigeon:

Has the Minister of Agriculture been requested by the authorities of the department of agriculture of Quebec to participate in the crop insurance scheme?

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Speaker, while informal discussions have been held concerning crop insurance, no formal request has been received from the department of agriculture of Quebec to participate in a crop insurance scheme under the Crop Insurance Act.

*LETTER CARRIER DELIVERY REQUIREMENTS

Question No. 37—Mr. Hicks:

1. What is the principal requirement to have letter carrier delivery service installed?
2. Who establishes the requirement?
3. Is the requirement ever changed to suit local conditions?
4. Is an apartment house with 20 tenants counted as 20 points of call?
5. Has the town of Abbotsford, B.C., requested in the last year letter carrier service? If so, how far are they short of requirement?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, the answers to the five parts of this question are as follows:

1. The availability of 2,500 points of call in a compact, well built up area.
2. Treasury board.
3. No.
4. Yes.

5. (a) Yes—Abbotsford and district chamber of commerce.
(b) 700 calls.

NUCLEAR DEVICE EXPLOSION, ATHABASCA TAR SANDS

Question No. 39—Mr. Argue:

1. Have any requests been received from, or have any discussions taken place with (a) the governments of Alberta or the United States of America (b) private oil companies, concerning the explosion of a nuclear device in the Athabasca tar sands in Alberta?
2. If so, on what dates, and what was the federal government's answer in each case?

Answer by: Mr. Churchill: The possibility of recovering oil from Athabasca tar sands by the explosion of a nuclear device was brought to the attention of several federal government organizations by a private oil company in 1958. As a result, the former minister of mines and technical surveys set up a committee to investigate the technical feasibility of this proposal. This committee was composed of technical representatives from the oil company and federal and Alberta government organizations and it had discussions with technical officers of the United States atomic energy commission, who had carried out underground tests in that country.

Though there have been discussions on the technical level regarding the feasibility of such an experiment, there have been no formal discussions with the governments of Alberta or the United States of America regarding the actual carrying out of an explosion in the Alberta tar sands. The Prime Minister advised, in answer to a question on March 21, 1960—Hansard, p. 2251—that the atomic energy control board, which would have to approve such an experiment, had not received any application for permission to carry out any such explosion. This is still the situation.

*JACQUES CARTIER BRIDGE—CONVICTIONS OF TOLL COLLECTORS

Question No. 42—Mr. Pigeon:

How many toll collectors on the Jacques Cartier bridge have been sentenced by court for fraudulent operations?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the national harbours board advise as follows. Subsequent to investigations 26 toll collectors were found guilty under the Criminal Code and sentenced for fraudulent operations at Jacques Cartier bridge.

TIBETAN REFUGEES—REQUESTS FOR ASSISTANCE

Question No. 61—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs received representations regarding the plight of Tibetan refugees in the frontier regions of northern India?

2. Has the Canadian government been requested to send food or any type of aid to assist these starving refugees?

3. From whom have representations been received?

4. What reply has the government made?

5. If the government has not already done so, will it accede to requests for aid for these starving refugees?

Answer by: Mr. Green:

1, 2, 3. The Prime Minister recently received a letter from Professor George Woodcock, a Canadian temporarily resident in South Asia, concerning the present situation of the Tibetan refugees. Professor Woodcock asked the Prime Minister to consider whether the Canadian government could provide food for these refugees and air transport for its delivery to them.

4, 5. The Prime Minister replied that the Canadian government was deeply concerned both about the events which led to the flight of the Tibetan refugees and about the trials which the Tibetan people were still undergoing. The government would continue to do whatever it could to alleviate the plight of the Tibetan people by ensuring that world opinion was focused upon this grave problem. In the absence of a formal request from the country of first refuge, however, the United Nations high commissioner for refugees was unable to include the Tibetan refugees in his program. Since special international assistance for these refugees was apparently not being encouraged by the country of residence, the Canadian government would hesitate to recommend to parliament a special appropriation for this purpose.

CANADIAN CONTENT OF AUTOMOBILES AND ENGINES

Question No. 62—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the Prime Minister or any member of the government received a request for an investigation into the Canadian content of automobiles and automobile engines manufactured in Canada?
2. Has the Prime Minister or any member of the government received a resolution requesting the government to take immediate steps to see that Canadian automobile manufacturers adhere to the regulation requiring 60 per cent Canadian content?
3. Has the government received representations requesting a restriction on the movement of automotive manufacturing equipment already installed in Canadian plants to any other country?
4. If so, from whom have such representations been received?
5. Did the Prime Minister reply personally to these representations and, if not, did any one reply on his behalf, and what was the nature of the reply?

Answer by: Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. Yes.
4. Local 444, united automobile workers, Windsor, Ontario.
5. (a) No. (b) Yes. (c) Acknowledgement of representations.

*C.M.H.C. LOANS, QUEBEC

Question No. 68—Mr. Pigeon:

1. How many mortgage loans have been made from 1957 to date by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in the province of Quebec, and what is the total amount of such loans?
2. How many loans have been made in the county of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, and what is the total amount of such loans?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, the answers to the two parts of this question are as follows:

Inquiries of the Ministry

(1) Direct loans made by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in the province of Quebec

January 1, 1957 — October 31, 1961

No. of loans	Amount
21,337	$283,451,000

(2) Direct loans made by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in the county of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, Quebec

January 1, 1957 — October 31, 1961

No. of loans	Amount
703	$7,722,000

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

EXERCISE TOCSIN B

Question No. 35—Mr. Pitman:

1. In the recent Tocsin B exercise held in Canada, how many bombs were dropped in the simulated attack, and what was the total megatonage of these bombs?
2. How many bombs were of approximately (a) 1-5 megatons (b) 5-10 megatons (c) 10-20 megatons (d) 20-30 megatons (e) 30-40 megatons (f) 40-50 megatons (g) over 50 megatons?
3. What centres in Canada were supposedly hit by bombs?
4. What were the estimated casualties in each?
5. What was the extent of the simulated attack in terms of (a) ICBMs fired (b) ICBMs destroyed before reaching their targets (c) missiles fired from submarines (d) missiles fired from submarines destroyed before reaching their targets (e) bombers attacking (f) bombers destroyed?
6. What was the estimated effect in terms of immediate fall-out in Canada from bombs and missiles (a) landing in the United States of America (b) landing off target in Canada (because of our defences, etc.)?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING EFFECT OF CANADA'S TRADE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs based upon a reported statement by Mr. Arthur M. Schlesinger, special assistant to the President of the United States, to the effect that Canada's trade with Cuba hurts prospects of democratic reform in Latin America. Has the government any comment to make on this very serious indictment?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as yet we do not have a full report concerning this statement. If it was made in the terms suggested, it is a most unusual and, I think, improper thing for an official of another country to do.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce regarding the subject referred to by the hon. member for Essex East. In view of the strong pressure being exerted by the United States in favour of a trade ban against Cuba, I wonder whether the minister would inform the house as to Canada's policy with regard to trade with Cuba at this time.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am sure the hon. member for Assiniboia was in the house—at least I hope so—when at the last session the Prime Minister advised the house on the policy in this regard, namely that we trade with Cuba in the same manner as with any other country with the exception of strategic goods, which we do not ship to that country.

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF TERRITORIAL WATERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the urgency and the importance of the matter to our fishing industry, will the minister advise the house if and when the government intends taking the necessary action to see that Canada's fishing limits are extended from the present three mile limit to a twelve mile limit?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Any such announcement would be made in the house in due course, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. Can he say whether active negotiations are going on at the present time on this subject with any other countries?

Mr. Green: I think it would not be beneficial to answer that question at this time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: Beneficial to whom?

Mr. Green: To Canada. To whom does the hon. member suppose?

INQUIRY AS TO VISIT OF UNITED KINGDOM PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is he in a position to confirm or deny the reported visit of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom some time in April on the occasion of the Prime Minister's visit to New York? If so, is the Prime Minister in a position to advise the house in a general way of the purpose of this visit or of the discussions which he proposes to have with the British Prime Minister?

[Mr. Argue.]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): An invitation was extended to the Right Hon. Harold Macmillan to visit Canada either before or after his visit to the United States in the latter part of April. He has accepted the invitation. Naturally there is a great field of matters that might be discussed on an occasion such as that. No agenda has been agreed on or has even been discussed as yet. However, I could think of many matters of interest to Canada, the United Kingdom and the commonwealth which would be subjects of discussion when that visit takes place. Indeed, the meeting together of prime ministers in this way is always extremely beneficial.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LAKEHEAD—INCREASE IN CHARGES ON IRON ORE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has he received a letter from the northwestern Ontario development association protesting against the increase of 20 per cent in Canadian National Railways freight and dock charges on iron ore shipped from Steep Rock to the lakehead? If so, I wonder if the Prime Minister would inform the house whether he is contemplating any action to correct the situation.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I will take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL APPROVAL OF PROVINCIAL STATUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the Attorney General of Canada informed the attorney general of British Columbia that the federal governor in council has officially approved the archaeological and historic sites protection act, B.C. statutes, 1960, chapter 2?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): The answer to the hon. member's question is no, Mr. Speaker; but perhaps it would be agreeable if I amplified the answer somewhat to this effect. Pursuant to the British North America Act, the statutes of British Columbia for the session in question were examined by me and were left to such operation as they may have. The lieutenant governor of British Columbia was so informed.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Can the minister assure the house that this act did not represent any violation of the principles of the bill on human rights?

Mr. Fulton: I do not think I should be expected to answer that question without notice. My responsibility under the British North America Act relates to the examination to which I have referred. The advice given to the lieutenant governor of British Columbia was that which I have indicated.

Mr. Speaker: I agree that the question is not in accordance with the practice in that it asks for a legal opinion.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LAKEHEAD—ALLEGED DEPARTMENTAL NEGLIGENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Is she considering having any investigation made into the rather serious charges by Indian chief Telford Adams about the condition of the Indians in the lakehead area and to the north, including the charge that they are being ignored by the Indian affairs branch?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Whenever we receive any such complaints, Mr. Speaker, we look into them. However, so far nothing has come to our department on this matter, although I noticed an article in the newspaper.

COLD LAKE, ALBERTA—REPORTED SHORTAGE OF CLOTHING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration; I hope notice of it reached her in sufficient time. Can the minister inform the house of the situation at the Cold Lake Indian reserve in Alberta with respect to reports from that area that people there are suffering from a shortage of clothing and other necessities?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The hon. member refers to reports from that area, Mr. Speaker. We have no such reports in the department. However, we have telegraphed to the resident superintendent asking him to report at once. If the hon. member could let us have the source of his information, it might help us to track the matter down more expeditiously.

COMBINES

VANCOUVER—ALLEGED VIOLATIONS BY DEPARTMENT STORES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister inform the house if the allegations that Woodward Department Stores Limited violated the Combines Investigation Act in its relations with the firm of Hamilton Harvey, both firms in Vancouver, is the reason for officials of Woodwards being called before the combines investigation branch officers?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I think I shall be obliged to leave the hon. gentleman to draw his own conclusions, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

N. H. A.—REQUEST FOR FINANCING OF EXISTING HOMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): In the absence of the Minister of Public Works I should like to address a question to the acting minister. Has the government received from the house building industry any representations for National Housing Act financing of existing homes. If so, has the government reached any decision on this matter?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Minister of Public Works): We will take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

HARBOURS

MONTREAL—DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING AMUSEMENT PIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister tell the house if representations have been made to him by the city of Montreal as regards the development, along the Montreal waterfront, of public recreation grounds? If so, what stage have the talks reached?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the last time the mayor and the chairman of the executive council of Montreal came to Ottawa, I had the opportunity of discussing this problem with them. It was agreed that a resolution in proper form would be sent to me. For my part, I was to ask the officials of the national harbours board to examine the question. That is where the situation stands at the moment. (Text):

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING NUCLEAR ARMS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if, as a result of the report that the three power nuclear test discussions in Geneva have concluded or are being terminated, this fact will cause the government of Canada to state unequivocally its policy with regard to the possession of nuclear arms in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I think I have already disallowed questions relating to the government's policy on this important matter. It is obviously a matter of policy, and I think it is not to be expected that it will be dealt with by an oral question on the orders of the day.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did not ask what the policy is, Mr. Speaker; I asked whether this fact would cause the government unequivocally to state its policy with regard to the possession of nuclear arms in Canada. There is a rather subtle and extremely important distinction.

Mr. Speaker: The distinction is too subtle for the Chair.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister say if it is the policy of the Canadian government to equip Canada's armed forces with unarmed missiles?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the question provides its own answer and is not worthy of a reply from me.

Mr. Hellyer: A supplementary question. I am not asking for a statement of government policy but merely for clarification of existing policy.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Leeds.

ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY

OFFER OF TRAINING SHIP "BOUNTY" AS GIFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the government giving serious consideration to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's handsome offer of the Bounty as a training ship for the Royal Canadian Navy?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this offer of the Bounty has been looked into by the navy and the implications, financial and otherwise, of accepting the offer are now under consideration.

UNITED NATIONS

CONGO—REQUEST FOR TEAM OF CANADIAN ARMY OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the Canadian Press report in Saturday's newspapers that the United Nations has requested Canada to send a small team of army officers, presumably French speaking, to the Congo to help to train the central government's army, can the minister assure the house that this request of the United Nations will be met?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we did receive an inquiry from the United Nations with respect to whether we could supply some 15 French speaking officers, one lieutenant colonel and the bulk of the remainder majors, for training purposes for the Congolese army.

We have been looking into our ability to meet this request. In view of the limited numbers of French speaking officers in the Canadian armed forces, the fact that we already have some 30-odd officers in the Congo at the present time and a considerable number of others in such places as Indo-China and other parts of the world, the fact that these officers would have to be rotated every six months in conformity with our general policy respecting people in such service and the fact that the commitment would continue for several years and would involve a very large number of officers, it is extremely doubtful that we would have the French speaking officers to meet the commitment.

Mr. Argue: The answer is no, I take it. The minister gave a long answer without a conclusion.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Having regard to the answer that the minister has just given, may I ask him what he or his department is doing to increase the number of French speaking officers since there is not the number required?

Mr. Harkness: We have been making considerable efforts, as the hon. member knows, to increase the number of French speaking officers in the army, navy and air force. The military college at St. Jean was set up for that specific purpose, as the hon. member is also aware, and the number of French speaking cadets entering that college and French speaking officers from other sources who are entering the armed services is increasing.

GRAIN

WHEAT—STATEMENT ON EMPTY ELEVATOR SPACE AT LAKEHEAD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last the hon. member for Port Arthur inquired about grain stocks at the terminal elevators at the lakehead. I should like to give him the assurance that it is expected these stocks will be replenished by the opening of navigation and they are being continuously replenished by shipments from country elevators. The reason, of course, why stocks are down from last year is the unusually heavy shipments out of the lakehead last fall.

AGRICULTURE

EFFORTS BY UNITED STATES FARMERS TO BENEFIT FROM CANADIAN LAW

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska asked the following question:

> Is it possible that American farmers, who get subsidies to reduce their grain acreage, may be doing some farming in Canada to take advantage of Canadian legislation?

It is not quite clear what the hon. member means by this question but if he is referring to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and the western grain producers' acreage payments, I can assure him that only those producers ordinarily or permanently resident in Canada are eligible for assistance.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Production and marketing branch—

611. Payments to western grain producers to be distributed on the following basis, namely, $1 per cultivated acre up to a maximum of 200 acres per farm in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, $42,000,000.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, I welcome this opportunity to participate in the debate on this particular estimate which will provide $1 an acre to western farmers. Those of us who are familiar with the situation in the west know that the farmers had a very short crop. We know that many farmers have not been able to deliver beyond their initial quota. We know that many farmers, having reached the three bushel quota, did not have any more grain or, if they did, they retained it for spring. We also know that there were perhaps a small number of farmers who had a little surplus from other years, but this has rapidly dwindled.

I welcome the opportunity to support this item because it will provide something of a two price system. For years many western farmers have been clamouring for this type of measure and for years the Liberal government at Ottawa refused it. I also welcome the opportunity to support this measure because it will assist those who have not been able to qualify for payments under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act for various reasons.

I have one objection, however, in that the measure does not cover landlords. On March 17, 1961, while participating in a debate on agriculture, as found in volume 3 of Hansard for that year at page 3111, I outlined what I thought was the solution to this problem, and if the government will take note of it I think we will have that problem solved. With that one reservation I am in complete support of this measure.

No doubt the opposition will holler "peanuts." The circus barker from Assiniboia has referred to this and similar measures as "peanuts" on many occasions. The same cry was picked up by the provincial minister of agriculture. As found in the Star-Phoenix of December 14 last, Mr. Nollet had this to say after the acreage payments had been announced:

> Saskatchewan agriculture minister I. C. Nollet said that "every little bit helps" but described the payments as "peanuts" and said farmers were expecting more than received under similar payments previously in light of the "great crop losses" this year.

This is the minister of agriculture who now calls himself C.C.F.-N.D.P. This is the same minister of agriculture who, when the crop was snowed under in 1959 and there was a clamour for $5 per acre, took up that clamour too. When the federal government said, "All right, if you will pay half", he said, "Oh, no". He said, "Cut it down to $3". In addition he put forward some sort of magic sliding scale under which many farmers received only 20 cents an acre.

This is the same minister who cries "peanuts" today and says that a greater amount should be provided. This is the same C.C.F.-N.D.P. minister of agriculture of our great province of Saskatchewan who, when the federal government introduced crop insurance, said "No, it will break the province". That cry went up all over the west, and the hon. member for Assiniboia and the C.C.F.-N.D.P., or whatever they call themselves now, took up that same cry; "it will break the province". At the same time they introduced a medical scheme which is going to cost somewhere in the neighbourhood of $25 million. This is not supposed to break the province because it is supposed to boost Douglas. This is an acreage scheme to repay the farmer for crop losses, whereas the medical scheme was proposed for their own political gain. Why is there such concern that it will break the province? Surely there must be some way, such as reinsurance, to work out to details of this scheme. Why do they show such concern for the state and none for the individual farmer? Since when has the state become more important than the individual? Apparently in the eyes of the socialists the state must be preserved but the individual can suffer.

The hon. member for Assiniboia referred to the program as peanuts and said it would amount to nothing.

Mr. Argue: You are wrong again.

Mr. Korchinski: I can tell the hon. member what it will do for my constituency. I have checked and I find I have over 6,000 permit books in my constituency. If we take 1960 as an average, this would mean about $186 per book or something like $35,000 for every community. Now, if you take this $35,000 as the average and apply it against the assessment of my own rural municipality of Invermay, assuming an average mill rate of 60 mills, we find that this $35,000 will go a long way toward paying the taxes of the municipality. There are two communities in this municipality. At $35,000 to each community it represents almost all the taxes paid by the taxpayers. I say that this is not peanuts.

The Liberal spokesman, the hon. member for Essex East, had a lot to say about this program. I should like to quote, for example, what he said as recorded on page 263 of Hansard for January 26, 1962:

> I repeat that the Prime Minister and his supporters cannot claim that by this particular program they are satisfying the promises which were made to hundreds of Canadian western farmers.
>
> Mr. Harkness: We are satisfying a very large number of farmers.
>
> Mr. Martin (Essex East): I sincerely hope that is the case but, as I have stated, this provision does not meet the objectives of the government's declared farm policy as announced by the Prime Minister. It does not meet the assurances given to a thousand western farmers when they descended on Ottawa two years ago to demand that this government implement its agriculture policy.

[Mr. Korchinski.]

This speech by the Liberal spokesman reminds me of a little jingle. What he says does not mean anything or, in the words of the jingle, "I planted corn in early spring but it didn't mean a dog-gone thing; what do you think came up in the fall? The crows came up and ate them all."

I have a list of things here to illustrate how wrong the hon. member for Essex East is. Somewhere along the line the hon. member for Assiniboia intervened and said, "What about the one year you did not pay?" I say to the hon. member for Assiniboia, what was he doing all the years he was in the house?

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Korchinski: He was a C.C.F. member at the time—

Mr. Argue: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; a question has been asked as to what I was doing. The answer is that I have been prodding, pushing and pleading with the government to give at least a dollar an acre every year.

Mr. Korchinski: Very well; the hon. member says he has been pushing and prodding and wailing for all these years. I point out, however, that in 1945 there were 28 C.C.F. members in the house; in 1949 there were 13; in 1953, 23; in 1957, 25 and in 1958 after the large group of Conservatives were elected from the west, there were only eight C.C.F. members; but we got our acreage payments.

Mr. Argue: Yes, but I have always been here.

Mr. Korchinski: It would appear that the effectiveness of the farm support program is in reverse proportion to the number of socialists in the house.

Mr. Argue: The hon. member just wants a one party dictatorship.

Mr. Korchinski: I come back to the hon. member for Essex East who at one time sat as a minister on the Liberal front benches. I find that since the introduction of the price stabilization bill and up to March 31, 1961, we have paid out $126 million in support of the farmers across Canada, not for one particular area but for all across Canada. As a matter of fact, the price stabilization measure has been much more effective in the east than in the west, but we are not complaining about that. Under the Liberal regime from 1946 to 1958 there was spent about $100 million. However, about $70 million of that was spent at a time when foot-and-mouth disease was prevalent in the west. In the past few years we have spent something like $126 million, while in 12 years the Liberals spent a grand total of $100 million. However, if it had not been for the catastrophe of foot-and-mouth disease they would have spent only $30 million.

Where was the hon. member for Essex East when the farmers were asking for cash advances?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was working hard for the people of Canada.

Mr. Korchinski: Where was he when they were asking for crop insurance? Where was he, as a member of the opposition, when we introduced the amendments to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act so that 15 per cent more farmers could benefit? Where was he when the farmers, over the years, asked for the South Saskatchewan dam? It only took a very short time for the Conservatives to provide this dam which will be beneficial to the farmers of Saskatchewan and to the west in general.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a point of order. I would simply recall, Mr. Chairman, to your mind that when the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska spoke the other day and sought to deal with agricultural problems in general he was arrested in his steps by the intervention of the Acting Minister of Agriculture. I am sure if that is to be the ruling, then it ought to apply to members on the government side as well as to those on this side.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry, but if I may have the floor for just a minute I would say that my ears were beginning to twinge a bit when I heard a reference to the South Saskatchewan dam. This item has no direct relevance to the vote under discussion. I would ask the hon. member to revert to the estimate under study by the committee and stay within its boundaries.

Mr. Korchinski: If I may speak to that point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would say that at page 263 of Hansard for January 26, the hon. member for Essex East said that the Prime Minister and his supporters could not claim this particular program was satisfying the promises which were made to hundreds of Canadian western farmers. I am merely replying by showing that we are not claiming this one particular scheme satisfies all those promises. It is in addition to all the other things we have done. I am merely pointing out some of those things in order to refresh the memory of the hon. member for Essex East. If I may rapidly go through some of the other measures—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You may not, if the ruling is to stand. The ruling was made against the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska and strictly enforced against me and others who spoke, as a result of the intervention of the Acting Minister of Agriculture. Now, the hon. gentleman is not in a privileged position.

Mr. Smallwood: If I may speak to this point of order, I would say that at five o'clock on Friday night the hon. member for Essex East was engaged in filibustering this vote. He spoke of nothing but what his leader was going to say, and he broke the rule himself.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That does not justify your breaking the rule.

Mr. Korchinski: I recall that one of the things the hon. member for Essex East spoke about was the European common market. If he can talk about the European common market, television broadcasts and so on, I should be allowed to review some of the things we have done. I want to point out that we had extended P.F.R.A. policy to include many areas that had never been covered previously.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We might have a clear understanding. When the Chair gives a ruling it must apply to all members. When the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska initiated this discussion last week he was stopped in his steps by the Acting Minister of Agriculture, who was upheld by the Deputy Speaker, then acting as chairman. There was much discussion on the point and we were overwhelmingly resisted in the position we took. Now the hon. gentleman opposite is engaging in the kind of speech for which the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska was taken to task. I have no objection to his continuing his speech, but only on the understanding that we on this side of the house are given the opportunity of carefully examining the government's agricultural policy which is so replete with inaccuracies and weaknesses.

The Deputy Chairman: Before allowing any further debate I should like to say that the ruling given by the chairman of the committee was quite correct, and I made subsequent reference to it in holding members of the committee to the item under discussion. Therefore it would not be fair if the hon. member continued his present rather broad discussion on agriculture. I would ask him to come back to a discourse on the item under consideration, which is the provision of acreage payments to farmers in western Canada.

Mr. Korchinski: In addition to the money that will be recovered by means of these acreage payments there will be other ways by which farmers can get money. One of these is due to the fact that for the first time in many years we increased the price of wheat to $1.90, something the opposition would have liked to do, but instead they lost the market. This crop acreage will provide some assistance to those farmers who have a lack of grain. Even though we increased our sales of wheat, farmers without grain can now have some means of support for themselves and their families.

Many farmers could not have obtained assistance from the federal government when we increased the payment for tubercular cattle from $100 to $150 for purebreds and from $40 to $70 for other classes. Farmers need finances at the moment. They have been hard hit by drought. Last fall they were helped by providing fodder and freight assistance and were also helped on that occasion by a well drilling program. In the past they were assisted when crops were snowed under, and at that time we introduced a policy which provided them a measure of relief. Now this year, because of the unique situation in western Canada, they need cash. They have taken full advantage of the increased farm improvement loans, which were raised from $4,000 to $7,500. Some of them have also taken advantage of the improvement in farm credit facilities.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Order.

The Deputy Chairman: I am afraid the hon. member is again straying from the vote under consideration, thereby making it difficult for the Chair and other hon. members who are to follow. I would ask him to stay with the point under discussion, or take his seat.

Mr. Korchinski: I might point out that in the past we have had similar situations. As a farmer I have met many hazards, with no crop insurance. At that time there was a Liberal government in Ottawa and we asked them for help. I can tell you of some other things which happened to me. In 1950 we had frost; in 1951 we were snowed under; in 1953 we were flooded, and in 1954 we had rust.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, the hon. gentleman is ignoring your ruling and he ought to be called to order.

Mr. Lambert: "Physician, heal thyself." You are the worst offender in the house.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Speaking to the point of order, I should like to quote from Hansard of January 26, page 270, when during a discussion on a similar point of order with the hon. gentleman from Essex East I said:

> Mr. Chairman, we are discussing an item in the estimates. I do not believe that, in the speech the hon. gentleman is making, there is any reference whatever to the business at hand.
> [Mr. Korchinski.]

The hon. member was then allowed to continue for another page and a half, and nothing he said had any relevance to the business at hand.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Read the following page and a half.

Mr. Argue: May I say a word on this point of order. I think it is out of order to go back and discuss the situation in 1950, although what the hon. member said is right. The farmers needed more money, but when the hon. member is talking about the very great need of farmers in western Canada to have supplementary income he should relate his remarks periodically to the item under discussion. If he did so I think he would be in order. All he is doing now is showing that the farmers in his riding, in spite of everything he says, are in a very difficult situation and need some help. That, I think, is relevant to the discussion.

Mr. Korchinski: I should like to thank the hon. member for Assiniboia, but without these interruptions I might eventually have been able to relate my remarks to the item in question. All down the years we have had similar situations. We have come to governments for assistance, but only the present government has provided that assistance.

I should like to quote an article by Peter Stursberg in Saturday Night of February 3, 1962, dealing with a time when the late C. D. Howe was a minister of the crown. He makes reference to a meeting in Manitoba at which the late Mr. Howe told a rancher that he "thought he was eating well under the Liberal regime." These are the answers the Liberals have. All I am saying is that for many years we have had similar conditions, and for many years were deprived of any assistance.

I take pleasure in supporting this item because it seems to me what the member for Essex East and the member for Assiniboia have wanted, was a measure which would provide for deficiency payments. At the time of the request I made a survey of my own constituency as to which plan would be better. Some 95 per cent of the replies I got were in favour of acreage payments. At one meeting I attended, where there were 700 farmers present, I invited them to look at my file. Nobody did so because they knew the replies I got were sent by people who were in favour of acreage payments, by small farmers who needed assistance. I can recall another meeting at Invermay which I was invited to attend, but at which I had to apologize for being late as I had a delegation who needed P.F.A.A. payments. There were a group of farmers from outside the area and I invited them to listen to the meeting which was pleading for deficiency payments. I pointed out that these were farmers who would have liked to qualify under P.F.A.A., who were certainly in need of some assistance, but who would not have benefited under a deficiency payment scheme.

For the few reasons I have indicated I take great pleasure in supporting this item, because it is certainly not peanuts but will be a great deal of assistance to my constituency.

Mr. Michaud: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few observations on the item now before this committee. At the outset let me assure the committee that I give my unreserved support to the amounts requested by the government for the assistance of western farmers. As has already been stated in the course of this debate, what is good for western farmers is also good for the whole farming population of the country. What is good for the agricultural industry of the country is good for the economy of the country as a whole.

Speaking on the address in reply to the speech from the throne the other day the Prime Minister described in ringing terms the general economy of the farming industry, yet we are faced today with a measure aimed to bringing urgent relief to the largest segment of the agricultural industry of the country, namely the wheat industry. Between these two opposing views one has to make a decision. Is agriculture really on a sound economic basis, as indicated by the Prime Minister, or does agriculture in a general way need to be assisted? For my part I have no hesitation in deciding that farmers are not now enjoying prosperous times and need such assistance as is provided by this measure. However, I feel I must emphasize before this committee that the western farmers are not alone in facing financial difficulties at the present time. What is true of the western farmers is in greater measure true of farmers in the eastern regions.

Let me cite two examples. We are all aware that the dairy industry, which is the main source of income for a great number of eastern farmers particularly, is now beset with very serious circumstances. The Canadian dairy association only a short time ago submitted to the government a measure aimed at bringing relief to this situation. All those concerned with this matter are now aware of the government's refusal to accept those recommendations.

Second, the potato industry is also of great concern to eastern farmers and particularly to New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island farmers. These farmers have to sell their 1961 crop at the present time at a price under the cost of production. Here again, where is the action of the price stabilization board about which the present government and the government supporters are so fond of speaking on every occasion? Has the Prime Minister forgotten his statement on this matter at Summerside, Prince Edward Island, during the 1958 election?

Mr. Harkness: Is the hon. member aware that there is a starch diversion program in operation to help the potato industry?

Mr. Michaud: Yes, I am aware of that, and I am aware that the price they are receiving under that system is yielding the farmers less than a cent a pound for their potatoes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Very different from what was promised them.

Mr. Michaud: Yes. That is why I referred to the stabilization price support board.

It was my privilege to visit Prince Edward Island last November. I can assure the Prime Minister that the words to which I have just referred are very vivid indeed in the minds of the potato producers of that province. Generally speaking it is reported that the net farm income in the maritime provinces during the year 1961 went down 5.8 per cent.

If I may be permitted to relate this situation to the general economic condition of the area, we say that it contributes in no small measure to the acute unemployment situation now existing in the maritime provinces. Faced by such dire circumstances the small farmers particularly are leaving their farms in alarming numbers to seek employment on the labour market, thus enlarging the labour force which is already faced with a lack of employment opportunities. Grave agricultural problems face eastern and maritime farmers at the present time.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I cannot allow the hon. gentleman to continue, as he has almost from the beginning, on subjects that are completely unrelated to the matter of acreage payments to the farmers of western Canada. I would be doing a disservice to his colleague from Drummond-Arthabaska if I did permit him to continue, and to other members of the committee who wish to speak on this subject and hold narrowly to the point that is up for debate. Accordingly I would ask the hon. gentleman to—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before you make a ruling on the basis of what the hon. member has said, perhaps I may be permitted to say a word. We have just listened to a speech in which we had a long debate on politics in the province of Saskatchewan, which did not seem to me very directly related to the matter before the committee.

Surely if the hon. members on the other side of the chamber are able to make these speeches about provincial politics, the hon. member who is seeking equal justice for all farmers in the east and the west should be allowed to continue. After all, what we are being asked to do here affects the taxpayers all over Canada, who are being asked to meet a distress situation, which we are very glad indeed to meet.

An hon. Member: Where is the point of order?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is surely reasonable for an hon. gentleman who wishes to support this program to say that in supporting it he thinks his constituents should be treated with the same kind of justice. That, as I understand it, is what my hon. friend is seeking to do.

The Deputy Chairman: I have no objection to any hon. member by analogy relating a problem of one area of the country to a similar problem in another area of the country which is presently under discussion, but I do not think it would be fair to say I did not rule the previous speaker out of order. I did, on several occasions.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was out of the chamber for a little while.

The Deputy Chairman: I probably did not do it in a concrete way but by interrupting his contribution to this debate. I am fearful that we could be on the subject of agriculture from now until 1963 if we do not keep fairly narrowly to the point. I would ask the co-operation of the hon. member, because I do not wish to limit his contribution in any way if I can possibly avoid doing so.

Mr. Michaud: Thank you for your guidance, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Harkness: You put the chairman in a bad position by your remarks on Friday.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You are the one who put everybody in a bad position. You are getting the government in wrong all the time.

Mr. Harkness: You are completely wrong.

An hon. Member: You were ruled out of order four times.

Mr. Michaud: Mr. Chairman, I was just pointing out these few facts in support of my earlier statement that if western farmers need assistance in their present plight, so do eastern farmers. I hope the government will look upon this situation with the same measure and proportion of fairness when it comes to the conditions existing in the agricultural field in eastern Canada as it does when it deals with the conditions facing western farmers.

In making these submissions I feel I am not alone. I feel I am also expressing the views of eastern farmer groups and farm organizations which on numerous occasions have expressed the views I have just expressed. Quite understandably, all western members who have spoken on this matter have done so with obvious satisfaction. Let the same opportunities for content be granted to eastern farmers' representatives in this committee by the future action of the present government.

(Translation):

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Chairman, it will be agreed that as member for an exclusively rural district, it is fitting that I should take part in such a debate to express certain views brought to mind by the item under discussion.

Wheat, as everyone knows, not only in the west but throughout the whole of Canada, is the basis of our agricultural economy, and both the western and the eastern farmers are entitled to a fair and square treatment.

When things go well for the wheat farmers, this is reflected in all provinces and particularly in Ontario and Quebec, where the farmers get their supplies of farm equipment, building materials, hardware and whatever they need for their farm operations. The prosperity of wheat producers is therefore an important factor for the development and success of the Canadian industry as a whole.

At this point, may I remark that in a discussion of this nature, anything liable to rouse the east against the west should, I think, be avoided as much as possible, because nothing would be more biased or unfair than such a course of action.

The other day, and again just now, the hon. member who preceded me seems to have slipped into that failing. The other day, as I said, the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger), spoke in favour of payments to western wheat producers whose crops were seriously damaged by the drought, but, at the same time, he wondered why the eastern provinces should not benefit in the same way when disaster strikes. He gave us as an instance, the hurricane which destroyed buildings and damaged crops last year, in his riding and in some neighbouring districts.

What the hon. member has failed to mention is that when such a disaster occurs, the provincial government is supposed to carry out a survey of the damage and get in touch with the authorities of the Department of Agriculture. Of course, that depends on whether or not the provincial government itself is willing to ask for help of the federal government.

It seems that in the case to which the hon. member was referring last Friday that procedure was not followed. I presume that if such a course of action had been taken, the authorities of the Department of Agriculture would have been pleased to co-operate with the Quebec provincial authorities as they gladly co-operate with the various governments of the country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There were requests.

Mr. Dorion: What is the meaning of this policy of assistance for western Canada which provides for a payment of approximately $42 million to help our western farmers who have lost 50 per cent of their crop through drought last year?

The policy of assistance for western Canada under discussion at the present time, that is the payment of some $42 million to help our western farmers who have lost approximately 50 per cent of their crop through drought last year, has been asked for by the various farmers' associations of western Canada, the farmers' union in particular, and it was supported by almost all the other organizations of farmers in the west. Of course, those requests were supported, if not officially at least informally, by the provinces and in particular by Saskatchewan. It seems to me that it is a principle which is quite fair when co-operation between the different levels of government is really sought.

That is how this matter came before the federal government and that is how the producers, in whatever part of the country, should go about it when they seek to benefit from federal legislation.

Eastern provinces also benefit from the assistance given to western farmers, and this is too easily forgotten. Certain sectors of the Canadian economy are examined separately and then, because the over-all picture is overlooked, one gets the impression that one particular region is more favoured than another.

In 1939, an important eastern Canada agricultural conference was held at the Windsor hotel in Montreal.

On that occasion, Mr. Chagnon, who is now assistant deputy minister of agriculture, gave a talk which caused quite a stir and following which a brief was submitted to Mr. Gardiner, who was then minister of agriculture. I had the opportunity of reading most of that document which resulted in the implementation of a national policy to encourage the economical distribution of western grain in the east, in order to develop breeding policies for the benefit of eastern farmers.

In my opinion, that policy was excellent. The present government has improved it in order to meet the needs of the eastern areas.

This government has maintained and promoted that policy which dates back to 1942. The subsidy rates were adjusted about two years ago, and that was all to the advantage of the eastern farmers. For example, in the Lake St. John and Chicoutimi areas, these transport subsidies were recently increased by $2 a ton.

On that point, I should like to give credit to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Brassard) for his fair mindedness. On January 22, he stated:

> I should now like to deal with a problem affecting my section of the country, since it has to do with agriculture. We have had a problem, which I submitted to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton)—

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could ask the hon. gentleman what he is citing?

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Chairman, I am quoting from Hansard at page 2236.

Mr. Pickersgill: In which debate?

Mr. Dorion: The debate on the speech from the throne.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, Mr. Chairman, since you are enforcing the rules impartially I am sure the Secretary of State will wish to be reminded that it is a rule of the house that you cannot quote from another debate in the same session.

(Translation):

An hon. Member: Are you afraid of the speech delivered by the hon. member for Lapointe?

Mr. Fortin: There is one sincere hon. member on your side. Let him speak.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not the question.

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: I was about to rise when the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate took the floor to caution the minister with respect to the old problem of relevancy and to ask him to hold closely, as other hon. members have endeavoured to do, to a discussion of the acreage payments in western Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Chairman, I believe that in all logic we are perfectly entitled to point out what benefits we derive from assistance provided to western farmers, because in Quebec and the other provinces the grain we import is produced in the west. It is precisely for that reason that the hon. member for Lapointe paid tribute to the federal government for having increased the subsidies granted to the farmers for the transportation of their grain from west to east, into the lake St. John district and the Chicoutimi area.

The present government is aware of the fact that eastern farmers need feed grain at competitive and reasonable prices in order to maintain their livestock production. Farmers in Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes in particular can thus adapt their crops on their average size farms to make the best of weather conditions.

We have in the east climate and soil conditions which are suited to the production of grass and hay, but much less suited to grain crops. Our farmers can then concentrate on grass and, taking advantage of grain sold at reasonable prices because transportation is no longer a cost increase factor they can now raise livestock at a reasonable cost. Thus it is that the province of Quebec has been able to build up its hog industry to a point where, in some years, it has produced more than a million head. The maritimes have also increased their hog production considerably and have achieved a very high standard of quality.

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Again I am finding that the minister is creeping away from the topic under consideration in this item of the estimates. I must ask him to come back to that rather narrow subject or he will have to take his seat.

(Translation):

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Chairman, I am trying as much as possible to abide by your ruling. What I want to emphasize—it seems logical to me—is that it is our duty to help wheat growers, western producers, because the prosperity of the agricultural industry in Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes depends on their production and their interprovincial trade.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We all agree on that principle.

Mr. Dorion: It is precisely that principle that I remind the house, without giving any details, that those subsidies are proportionate to transportation costs, the latter depending, of course, on distance.

[Mr. Dorion.]

I have here some figures which might be of interest. Those payments represent about $5 per ton in Ontario, $8 per ton in Quebec, not including the advantage for the Chicoutimi area which results from the intervention of the Minister of Agriculture. The payments amount to over $14 per ton in the maritimes.

Subsidies paid on the shipping of western grain to the east since the establishment of that policy, that is in 1942, total about $352 million, a sizeable amount for that national policy which has been beneficial to both eastern and western Canada these past 20 years. From 1941 to 1959, 18,235,000 tons of western grain were shipped to the province of Quebec thanks to those subsidies. Together with the Agricultural Stabilization Act and the orders issued under that act, those subsidies have given excellent results.

I should have liked to give a few examples, but I would not want to be accused of ignoring in any way your ruling.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You have been most successful.

Mr. Dorion: Hardly so far.

Mr. Flynn: What a model.

Mr. Dorion: I could give one example in the province of Quebec—it is a particular case and concerns the riding of Bellechasse. We bring in grain from the west, and this movement of grain and related subsidies have been most helpful to farmers. As I said earlier, if we add to that the conditions under which the Agricultural Stabilization Act is now being administered and the orders issued thereunder—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Those subsidies are the work of the St. Laurent government, let us not forget it.

Mr. Dorion: I do not deny that those subsidies were inaugurated in 1942, and I do not think the hon. member will hold it against us if we try to improve on something worth-while which was done by the previous government. Indeed, that is what the present government has done, in my opinion.

Mr. Pigeon: Few good things were inherited from the former government.

Mr. Dorion: We believe this item will contribute to the greater welfare, not only of the west, but of Canada as a whole.

For quite some time it was feared that there would be overproduction of wheat. For a number of years, it was a very serious problem. I think the Minister of Agriculture dealt with this problem in such a way that, today, we are not only rid of overproduction, but of those surplus stocks, which ultimately resulted in distress for the western farmer himself. Our spectacular sales to Poland, Czechoslovakia and China, have had an extremely favourable result while reducing our grain stocks to reasonable proportions.

Therefore, we need not be afraid—I would say the opposite would be appropriate—of encouraging western producers who are temporarily in a difficult position calling for exceptional short term remedies—and the remedy which the government wants to apply today is of that very nature.

I read recently that by July 31, 1961, our grain exports had reached 353,500,000 bushels without wholly taking into account the new deals made possible by the strenuous effort of the Minister of Agriculture. The estimated quantity for next year would be about the same. Because of the Chinese market, it is expected that Canadian farmers will be sure to sell all their export products.

Mr. Chairman, before closing my remarks, I should like to add that there is a significant project under way, I mean the project advocated by the Prime Minister, which would not only favour the western producers but help them dispose of their stocks—I mean the world food bank.

It will be recalled—

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: I again rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. If we are going to have a debate on the world food bank, surely all hon. members are to be permitted equally to participate in that debate. If my friend the hon. member for Kent, New Brunswick, was expected to obey the rules, surely a minister of the crown and a distinguished member of the bar should also be expected to adhere to the rules laid down by the Chair.

(Translation):

Mr. Dorion: I should like to thank the hon. member for being so kind as to give me pointers. I realize one can always use the advice of younger people.

Be that as it may, I simply wished to point out—and I do not intend to open a debate on this point—that we shall have, thanks to the action taken by the Prime Minister, legislation which will be extremely favourable to the farmers. The Prime Minister's action will probably see its fulfilment during the Rome convention which is now being prepared.

Mr. Chairman, all this to say that we need feel no concern about our wheat production; that bank will make of western Canada another source of supply to be added to those we already have. So there is nothing to be concerned about voting on this item. I presume that in doing so—and I am not at all straying away from the logic of the rule which has been established and which has been so brilliantly recalled by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill).

Mr. Flynn: As interpreted by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin).

Mr. Dorion: In conclusion, all those policies of the government are linked up together and based on a truly national policy—national in its inspiration, in its application, in the good effects which it brings about, not only in western Canada but all over the country. Economically speaking, we are thus being realistic and we are working for the maintenance and progress of Canadian unity.

(Text):

Mr. McMillan: I am very much in favour of this vote to help the western farmer who has suffered because of the drought. The Acting Minister of Agriculture said the other day that in some areas there had been a complete crop failure and that in other areas there had been a partial failure. I think he went on to say—

Mr. Harkness: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I did not say any such thing. I think the hon. member has reference to somebody else. It may have been the hon. member for Assiniboia, but it was not I who said any such thing.

Mr. McMillan: The minister said that some areas only had approximately a 10 bushel yield.

Mr. Harkness: What I said was that the average yield was 10 bushels odd per acre last year whereas in the previous five years the yield per acre had averaged 19 bushels odd.

Mr. McMillan: I intended to come to that and to put the words of the minister on the record. From what the minister has said I think this indicates that there is a very serious problem in western Canada. I agree that the farmers there need help. I also wish to ask the minister one or two questions, and I will be short. Is this part of a comprehensive program for agriculture? In eastern Canada there have been serious losses by farmers who grow beans. I know some farmers who depend on beans for their cash crop. In the three years prior to 1960 they had good crops, but because of weather conditions in those years, because of floods in October when they would normally be harvesting their beans, some suffered a complete loss. Others suffered partial losses. These farmers got no help.

I should like to ask one other question. Will the government give help in respect of partial potato crop losses in the maritimes or partial or complete loss of the apple crop in the maritimes, Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia? Will the government assist the fruit and vegetable growers in case of similar loss? I heard one member from western Canada refer to the fact that much of the money under the winter works program was being spent in eastern Canada and that this would largely offset this vote for the benefit of the farmers of western Canada. I agree that the winter works program helps to relieve the unemployment situation in eastern Canada—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): To an extent.

Mr. McMillan: —but it does not help the farmer in eastern Canada who has nothing to sell.

There is one other aspect of this vote about which I should like to inquire. I have read articles in the press indicating that in some parts of western Canada last year the crop was almost normal and, as the minister said, in other areas there was only a partial crop or half a crop.

Mr. Harkness: I did not say that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Something like that.

Mr. McMillan: The minister said that in other areas there had been a crop failure.

Mr. Harkness: I said that drought conditions throughout the west as a whole had resulted in little more than half a crop, and that applied all throughout western Canada.

Mr. McMillan: I simply want to ask the minister this question. Is the method that is being used in the distribution of this money fair? Suppose one farmer has almost a normal crop and another farmer has no crop at all. Will they both get the same amount of money and, if so, is that a fair division?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, as far as the last question is concerned, the $1 an acre goes to everyone who has a permit book, and it is not directly related to whether he was dried out 10 per cent, 20 per cent or 100 per cent. Those farmers who were dried out are eligible for assistance under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and they have been compensated under that act. The man who had a good crop gets nothing, of course, under that act, whereas the man who had no crop gets the maximum payment permitted under that legislation. Compensation on that basis is being made. The payments are in process of being made at the present time, and I think most of the payments under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act have already been made.

With respect to the other question concerning help to other parts of Canada, I would point out that very extensive assistance has been provided to farmers, particularly in eastern Canada, under the Agricultural Stabilization Act for a wide variety of products. When I was administering the Agricultural Stabilization Act two or three years ago assistance was being provided under that act with respect to some 20-odd commodities. In Ontario those commodities included soybeans, winter wheat, cherries, sugar beets and a number of others in addition to those which are widespread and general such as hogs, eggs and lambs.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hogs and eggs by means of deficiency payments.

Mr. Harkness: Deficiency payments, which were extremely successful and which got us out of the terrible difficulty into which the previous government had got us with regard to both hogs and eggs.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The most unsuccessful program we have ever seen.

Mr. Harkness: And, of course, all dairy products have been under support. The great bulk of the payments made under the stabilization act have been made in eastern Canada, of course, because that is where these specialty crops and dairying are concentrated to the greatest extent. As a matter of fact, in one year alone under the stabilization act—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, this is a very interesting argument but I would point out that the hon. member for Welland is making a speech and has asked questions. The minister is not answering questions but making a speech. He should take his seat, listen to the contribution of the hon. member for Welland, and if the minister still remembers what he is saying now he can repeat it then.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member for Welland asked me two questions and took his seat. He looked at me expecting me to answer and I set out to do so. The hon. member for Essex East is following his usual method of trying to prevent anybody on this side of the house saying anything while people on that side of the house should, in his opinion, be able to say anything regardless of the rules of the house or anything else. This is but another demonstration of his constant attempts to interrupt unduly the reasonable and equal flow of debate in the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Closure.

Mr. Harkness: I was about to say to the hon. member for Welland that in one year alone we paid out in eastern Canada under the stabilization act an amount at least double the total amount of this vote.

Mr. Pugh: They would not know anything about that.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, as an eastern farmer I should like to take part in this debate and try to present to the committee some of the feelings of the eastern farmers concerning this payment of $42 million to western farmers. I am inspired to speak this afternoon in part because of the speech made previously by the hon. member for Essex East. In listening to his presentation I did not know whether he was speaking on behalf of the eastern farmers or acting as critic on behalf of the western farmers. I certainly hope he was speaking more for the western farmers. He used words such as "mere handout" and "inadequate payment".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Danforth: From anything I have heard this is not the feeling of the western farmers, and I certainly wish to say that some of the hon. member's ridiculous statements the other afternoon do not in any way represent the feelings of the eastern farmers. When I say that his statements were ridiculous, that is mild criticism. I point out that he said that the farmers of southwestern Ontario had complained bitterly about the policy of deficiency payments on sugar beets announced by the government a few weeks ago. For the record I should like to read an excerpt from a letter addressed to me from the Ontario sugar beet growers' marketing board. It is dated January 9, 1962, and reads as follows:

> I have been requested by Mr. John Van Raay, chairman of this board, to convey . . . on behalf of himself, the directors and all Ontario sugar beet growers, sincere appreciation for . . . efforts in bringing to a head the finalization of a plan for a national sugar beet policy. The government should be commended in formulating this plan that protects the Canadian farmer from low world prices—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Your constituents have been up in arms.

Mr. Danforth: This is signed by Mr. Campbell, the secretary of the Ontario sugar beet growers' marketing board.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What did Mr. O'Neil say?

Mr. Danforth: Mr. O'Neil, sir, being a well known adherent of the opposition party is no longer secretary to this board.

If I may continue with this thought a little further, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Essex East referred to the march of 1,000 wheat growers on this capital to make representations to this government. I should like to say that there were 4,000 Ontario sugar beet growers, with millions of dollars in specialized equipment, who made representations to the minister of agriculture of the former government, pleading for help for an industry that was in dire economic peril. What did they get? They certainly got an answer. The then minister of agriculture said, if you cannot afford to grow sugar beets perhaps you should be growing soybeans.

I wish to go on record at this time, Mr. Chairman, as expressing my sincere thanks to the farmers of western Canada, and their representatives in this house, for their 100 per cent co-operation with the Ontario sugar beet growers in their endeavour to provide some help to keep their industry alive. In every instance the support was 100 per cent and was deeply appreciated. It is for this reason the farmers of eastern Canada want to go on record today as whole-heartedly supporting the policy of this government which will give the western farmers some relief from these drought conditions.

I should like to say too, that as cattle growers in eastern Canada—this may not seem to have much relevance to deficiency payments but it is directly related—we were seriously concerned, when we learned of the drought condition in the west, that there would be a curtailment of fodder for these cattle. We felt there might be a great panic in the west which would result in the sale of surplus livestock and a slump in the price of cattle. We wish to go on record as saying we appreciate the stamina and courage of those western growers who, with the help of the government, provided the necessary forage to hold these cattle and thus make it possible to stabilize the cattle market, not only in the west but in the east as well. This was important to those of us in the east who raise so many cattle today.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we eastern farmers today appreciate the fact that no segment of the agriculture industry in Canada can be suffering economic trials without directly affecting the welfare of every Canadian farmer. As a result, we eastern farmers have striven for the last four years to obtain a policy which would aid the economic welfare of farmers in all parts of Canada. This effort has paid dividends because other farmers have aided us in our time of need. With the uncertainty of the elements and the markets, no farmer knows when tragedy is likely to strike. We feel that as a result of the crop insurance policy and other measures being introduced by this government the farmers are at last getting to the point where their welfare is being protected, their standard of living is being raised and they are approaching the parity they so richly deserve.

May I once again, Mr. Chairman, speaking for the eastern farmers, say that we do support these payments to western farmers and that we will do everything we can to see that the welfare of farmers in all parts of Canada is protected. It is only in this fashion that the Canadian agriculture industry can stand on its own two feet. We are not in a position to support the idea that this payment should be made to the western farmers every year, nor do I think the western farmers want it every year. We would hope that they would be in a position, as a result of good weather, good markets and good sales, to stand on their own two feet and take their place along with the rest of us. This is the situation the farmers in the east hope for the farmers in the west.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make this one comment on what has been said by the hon. member for Kent, Ontario. He said he did not want to support this acreage payment every year. Apparently what that means is that whenever it suits the political book of the Prime Minister it should be made, and when it does not then it should not. Apparently this is the reason it was not made last year and it is being made this year.

Mr. Danforth: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, that is not what I said.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then, too, there was the fact that these cheque writing machines had broken down before Christmas. A feebler excuse for not doing something has never been given by anyone.

What I rose to do, sir, was not to take any particular issue with the hon. member for Kent, Ontario, but to take serious issue with a statement made by the Secretary of State in his intervention in this debate. I trust, sir, I may have the same latitude the Secretary of State had in order to reply to the point he made. He said that the proper way in which assistance should be given to farmers was to have an application first from the provincial government that something was needed. He sought to make the sophistical argument that this was done in the case of wheat. Of course, nothing of the kind happened at all.

We recall very well when these acreage payments were first made in 1958. The federal government took the initiative itself, but it did not do what was requested by the farmers. It did something quite different and it did it on its own motion. What I am doing in rising to support the point my hon. friend from Kent, New Brunswick made this afternoon to the effect that when this kind of distress arises in any part of Canada amongst any group of farmers, the same policy should be applied.

The fact that this is not being done is, as my hon. friend showed, quite evident. I am thinking particularly of potatoes, and here it is not being done notwithstanding the fact that before the election in 1958 assurances were given that it would be done. I have in my hand a copy of the Charlottetown Guardian for February 28, 1958. I am going to read one short passage to make this point.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member for Essex East will probably raise a point of order if you read it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think this is very much in order.

An hon. Member: That is according to your own standard.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister was speaking about potatoes and he said that each year before a crop season began, that is, the first part of April:

> You will know the lowest price, based on costs, that the farmer will receive during the year.

That was done for one year, and one year only. Now that policy has been abandoned. Those farmers were not told, as the Secretary of State suggested, that they would have to do anything. They were not told the provincial government would have to make an application before this policy was put into effect. This was the undertaking given by the Prime Minister when he was on the hustings, and it has not been kept. The same kind of treatment is not being accorded to the farmers who live there as is being given the farmers in western Canada.

The Acting Minister of Agriculture, in his reply to my hon. friend from Welland made a very good point, although it was not the point he intended to make. He stated that farmers who had a complete crop failure were protected under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, and therefore these acreage payments were paid to all farmers, no matter what the state of their crops might be. That, I think is correct, but what it undoubtedly means is that these payments are not being made because of crop failures; they are being made for income maintenance purposes, which is exactly the same as in 1958 when there was no crop failure.

The minister contradicted what was said in the speech from the throne about these payments. If income maintenance is to be provided on this basis, then I for one think it is necessary when you have a crop which, as the acting minister said, was cut in two—from an average of 19 million bushels to an average of 10 million bushels, leaving out the fractions. That is a disaster for the farmers. They are dependant upon a certain level of income. They have all kinds of fixed charges and are faced with a cost price squeeze, as are farmers throughout Canada. Certainly we are very ready indeed to support this measure for what it is, but in doing so, we say that there should be equal treatment for other groups, such as the potato growers and the farmers in my riding.

I admit there are not many farmers in Newfoundland. Agriculture is not of first importance there. In the agricultural areas on the island, and in my constituency particularly, the farmers have suffered very serious drought for two successive years, as a result of which we had enormous losses from forest fires. In the eastern part of the island the farmers suffered greatly. I leave to my hon. friend from Humber-St. George's to say what the situation was on the west coast, but I can tell you that on the eastern side they suffered very seriously because of the lack of rain all summer.

Our policy should be to give equal treatment to all Canadians in whatever parts of the country they live. That there is a real need for this legislation we do not deny. We affirm it. As the hon. member for Essex East said, the relationship of this vote to the need is not all it should be, but for what it is we are prepared to vote for it.

Mr. Harkness: I think I should correct some of the misconceptions raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who himself said he was no expert regarding agricultural matters.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not say that.

Mr. Harkness: If he did not say it, he should have said it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The only people who know anything about agriculture are sitting behind the minister. Nothing is more factual, and no one can question the validity of that argument.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member for Essex East is trying to prevent me making my reply.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am trying to put you on the right track and I find it very difficult.

Mr. Harkness: The actual situation in regard to potatoes and all other agricultural products is that assistance has been extended. For potatoes alone, proportionate to the number of people engaged in growing them, there has been more assistance extended than there has been to western grain producers.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I put a question to the acting minister?

Mr. Harkness: In addition to that, the year 1960 was one of the best years potato growers had.

An hon. Member: He would not know anything about that.

Mr. Harkness: The year 1959 was also a very good one but during the last year prices came down because of over-supply, primarily in the United States. In order to take a lot of these potatoes off the market and ensure a market for Canadian produced potatoes in Canada, admittedly not at high prices, but not at bad prices, we put a starch diversion program into effect. If the hon. member looked into the matter I believe he would find that the situation of potato growers in the maritimes has been much better since this government took office than it was in the previous five years. The growers there are very much better off than they were when the hon. gentleman's government was in power.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister care to answer a question?

Mr. Harkness: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before dealing further with the subject can he tell the house whether or not the undertaking that the prices would be set at the beginning of the season has been implemented—the prices undertaking in the quotation I read from the Prime Minister's statement? Has that been carried out by the present government?

Mr. Harkness: I do not know what price statement was made, but I certainly do not think what the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said was the statement.

Mr. Pickersgill: I read it from the newspaper.

Mr. Harkness: The other matter the hon. gentleman mentioned should be dealt with. He tried to make some argument to the effect that I had contradicted what was said in the speech from the throne because I had mentioned cases of people who had no crop at all. What the hon. member for Welland was talking about was their getting assistance under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act but, as indicated in the speech from the throne and as I myself indicated when introducing this estimate, the payment of $1 per acre is designed to improve the general income position of farmers in western Canada because they have only been able to produce a crop which is a little more than half their average yield production for the previous five years.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is what I said.

Mr. Harkness: And it is also designed to provide something for them in the nature of what you might call fair prices, so far as wheat used for domestic human consumption is concerned. Those two elements are involved and the fact that people who have no crop at all, or a very small crop, can receive assistance under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act is no contradiction whatsoever.

Mr. Rogers: At the outset, Mr. Chairman, I should like to assure you that I will keep in order. After listening to the debate, and the interjections made last Friday and today, I am afraid this vote will not be approved in time for those producers who wish to use it to assist them in purchasing seed. Representing a basically agricultural district where for the most part our general economy is dependant on the prosperity of our farmers I think I would be remiss if I did not commend the government for its decision to pay these acreage payments again. At first glance this may appear to be a subject that is solely of interest to the farmers. However, all of us are affected by the state of our agricultural industry and as taxpayers we are really partners in any government sponsored activity that will improve the prospects of our agricultural community. As a consequence these payments will be welcomed by all segments of our community.

By and large, if our farmers are prosperous, our general economy is buoyant. This is certainly true in western Canada, and for that matter it is true throughout the whole dominion. Let us make no mistake. Canadian growers are in what I would call an unique position inasmuch as the price of grain is largely governed by export. This has been particularly true throughout the surplus years. In other words, I think it should be abundantly clear that the prices obtained by our producers have no relation whatever to production costs.

I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that these payments will not only cover a large area but will be distributed at the grass roots level, will be appreciated by all farmers and have a beneficial impact upon the prosperity of our general economy.

According to the figures given by the Acting Minister of Agriculture this should mean about $13 millions spread among some 79,000 farmers in Alberta. To support what I have just said, hon. members may have noticed the press last year when there was supposed to be a real drought in western Canada. I refer to the eastern press. They were lamenting all the time how it would affect the general economy, that is, machinery and other services. I think that when the government does make these payments sometimes the press are inclined to say that the farmer should stand on his own feet.

I maintain that the farmer does stand on his own feet and this is an attempt by the government to make a payment to the producer for the amount of wheat we consume in Canada. Therefore it is certainly no handout and I for one think this system should be followed year by year. It is the fairest way to spread it and I think it should be carried on until we solve the problems of agriculture.

Mr. Stefanson: Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak in support of the agricultural supplementary estimate, item 611, acreage payments to western grain producers which is now before the committee, I will be very brief. As the member for that area in Manitoba known as the interlake district, where the majority of farmers are considered small farmers, I can say without hesitation that the acreage payments will be welcomed by farmers from that area.

Last summer was the hottest and driest on record in Manitoba. With a combination of those two factors it is a miracle that any crop was harvested. However, the figures given last Friday by the Acting Minister of Agriculture, that the wheat crop for the prairie provinces for 1961 was slightly more than 50 per cent of the average for the past five years, hold true for the area I have mentioned.

The crop, although small, was of good grade and weight. This helped slightly to ease the burden. Many areas in the Selkirk constituency qualified for Prairie Farm Assistance Act payments. These P.F.A.A. payments, and now the acreage payments, will be of great assistance to supplement the income of farmers who have been hard hit due to drought conditions. I am sure they are convinced this is the fairest way of assisting and supplementing their income.

Those farmers do not consider the acreage payments as peanuts, as they have often been referred to in the house. Although the individual payment is small, the over-all payment is substantial. It is a real shot in the arm to the economy as a whole. Just about every community in the riding I represent will benefit from the acreage payment.

Opposition members who have spoken today indicated at the beginning that they were supporting the measure before the committee. When the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska spoke last Friday—I understand he is the official agriculture critic for the Liberal party, and I take it now for the new Liberal party—he showed a lack of knowledge and understanding when he referred to the acreage payments as a gift and straight charity. The hon. member for Essex East—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, would the hon. gentleman be good enough to repeat what he has just said about something I was supposed to have said.

An hon. Member: No, the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I see. I think the hon. member will agree that the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska corrected that. The hon. gentleman was speaking in a language different from that of the hon. gentleman who is now speaking, and it was not because he did not know what he was talking about—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East):—because the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska is one of the most knowledgeable men on this subject in this house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: You are just jealous because the hon. member referred to him instead of you as the agriculture expert.

Mr. Stefanson: I thank the hon. member for assisting, but I followed the translation on Friday as the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska was speaking. The hon. member for Essex East followed him and—

An hon. Member: —said nothing.

Mr. Stefanson: Yes. He put on quite a show. This great orator, the hon. member for Essex East, was sent on a pilgrimage out west this month. He spoke at a meeting in Winnipeg, a meeting to revive the Liberal party. He spoke to that group on Friday night and reports in the Winnipeg Tribune said he kept the audience rolling with laughter. It no doubt was a similar speech to the one he gave in this committee on Friday.

Do you know how much the hon. member inspired that group? When they were scheduled to meet the next morning, at the appointed hour not a single delegate was present. One hour after the scheduled starting time the chairman had rounded up two dozen.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is wholly inaccurate.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think this might be a good point at which to report to Mr. Speaker.

It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

FLAGS OF CANADA

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR A NATIONAL FLAG OF CANADA—OFFICIAL NATIONAL ANTHEM

Mr. L. P. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm) moved:

That a special joint committee of both houses of parliament be appointed to consider ways and means of giving Canada a distinctive flag and an official national anthem;

That, notwithstanding standing order 67, the said committee, on the part of this house, shall consist of 25 members, to be named at a later date, and that the quorum shall be as ordered by the said committee;

That the said committee be empowered to hear in this connection the views of Canadian organizations, public bodies and private citizens, to send for persons, papers and records; to sit while the house is sitting; to report from time to time; and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by it and that standing order 66 be suspended in relation thereto; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting their honours to unite with this house for the above purpose and, if the Senate deems advisable, to appoint some of its members to act on the said committee.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to read the following motion to the house.

That a special joint committee of both houses of parliament be appointed to consider ways and means of giving Canada a distinctive flag and an official national anthem;

That, notwithstanding standing order 67, the said committee, on the part of this house, shall consist of 25 members to be named at a later date and that the quorum shall be as ordered by the said committee;

That the said committee be empowered to hear, in this connection, the views of Canadian organizations, public bodies and private citizens; to send for persons, papers and records; to sit while the house is sitting; to report from time to time; and to print such papers and evidence from day to day, as may be ordered by it and that standing order 66 be suspended in relation thereto; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting their honours to unite with the house for the above purpose and, if the Senate deems advisable, to appoint some of its members to act on the said committee.

Mr. Speaker, needless to say that the great majority of Canadians are in favour of a distinctive national flag as well as a national anthem.

It would be interesting, if that motion is agreed upon, if various organizations across the country appeared before this committee; for instance, this committee could call the premiers of the various provinces which comprise the Canadian nation.

It would be interesting to hear Mr. Smallwood's opinion on what he understands to be a "distinctive national flag" as well as Mr. Bennett's, from British Columbia, and that of other premiers.

Mr. Speaker, need I remind you that the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, on many occasions, during its conventions, unanimously passed a motion requesting the adoption of a distinctive national flag.

The Knights of Columbus of Canada have also adopted a similar resolution.

The Catholic and national unions, and particularly those of Joliette, have already submitted to me a brief asking that I request in the house the adoption of a national flag, and of the national anthem "O Canada".

The National Federation of Canadian University Students, at its 25th convention held in Kingston, also adopted a resolution requesting a Canadian national flag and a Canadian national anthem, that is, "O Canada". That resolution was introduced by the students of St. Joseph University of Moncton.

The national federation of university students represents 37 Canadian universities and 50,000 students.

The National Youth Movement, affiliated with the Native Sons of Canada, has also requested the adoption of a Canadian flag, white and red with a green maple leaf, and the song "O Canada" as national anthem in all provinces. I believe that the very great majority of Canadians are in favour of the adoption of an exclusively Canadian flag.

On August 5, 1960, the members of the National Youth Movement made a survey at the intersection of Northcote and Queen streets, in Toronto. Here is the result: 74 per cent of those questioned want an entirely Canadian flag on which the maple leaf would be the main pattern; 21 per cent want a flag with the Union Jack; 1 per cent want the stars and stripes of the United States; and 4 per cent are undecided.

It is a fact that "O Canada" is being heard more and more in Canadian official ceremonies. We know the precedent established at the time of the royal visit, on July 1, 1959, when "O Canada" was played for the first time on the occasion of the march past on Parliament hill. "O Canada" was also played before the Governor General, Mr. Vanier, while he inspected his personal guard for the first time. It is almost never forgotten now, because protests would be immediate. It is a sign of the times.

"O Canada" is a national anthem.

"O Canada" is a truly national anthem for our country. Its words tell the history of our country, with its vast expanses of lakes, prairies, cities, mountains and farms. Never has this song failed to kindle a burning flame of love and pride for our country. For many newcomers to our shores, "O Canada" will be inspiring and will strengthen that spirit of Canadianism which will make them love their new country.

"God Save the Queen" originated in England in the 18th century, amid partisan strife having nothing to do with Canadian traditions. That hymn is waning in the Canadian west, as all those who listened to the 1958 football finals broadcast were able to realize. Our anthem, "O Canada", with its title and words, is a recognition of Canada as an independent nation, freely and willingly associated with the British commonwealth. It is high time for sleep-walkers in our midst to wake up and accept the facts of 1962.

In 1959, the Canadian institute of public opinion was carrying out a poll among Canadians with regard to the choice of a national anthem. The question was put in this way:

These are the titles of four patriotic songs. According to you, which would be most suitable as our national anthem?

O Canada	67 per cent
God Save the Queen	20 per cent
The Maple Leaf	11 per cent
Rule Britannia	1 per cent
No answer	1 per cent

This survey took place in 1959, and I am certain that if it were repeated in 1962, the 1959 choice would certainly carry more than 90 per cent of the votes.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) ask for a distinctive national flag. First of all, it would be interesting to know what he means by distinctive, because the Liberals themselves are much divided on that point.

As a matter of fact, there is no need to recall what happened at a certain convention of the Young Liberal Federation of Canada. Referring to Le Devoir of September 28, 1959, I might say that the young Liberals of Canada were divided. I shall now quote that paper:

A Winnipeg delegate, Mr. Allan Barry, said that those who are opposed to the fleur-de-lis and to the union jack have no great Canadian feeling. Those who stand for a positive Canadianism are broadminded enough to recognize the contribution made by France and England to the development of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, need I remind you that order in council 5888 was adopted on Wednesday, September 5, 1945, by the former government. Let me read you a few extracts:

It is desirable to authorize the flying of the Canadian red ensign on federal government buildings and to remove any doubt as to the propriety of flying the Canadian red ensign wherever place or occasion may make it desirable to fly a distinctive Canadian flag.

Therefore, His Excellency the Governor General in council, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, is pleased to order and doth hereby order that the red ensign with the shield of the coat of arms of Canada in the fly may be flown from buildings owned or occupied by the federal government within and without Canada.

His Excellency in council, on the same recommendation, is further pleased to declare and doth hereby declare that it shall be appropriate to fly the Canadian red ensign within and without Canada wherever place or occasion may make it desirable to fly a distinctive Canadian flag.

Mr. Speaker, that order in council was issued in 1945 under Mackenzie King's government. Who was a member of the cabinet at that time? None other than the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) who, in 1945, could easily have got up and asked that a truly distinctive flag be adopted contrary to the above-mentioned order in council. The hon. member for Laurier is not the same man today, he is altogether different. Does that mean that he has changed his mind since he has become a member of the opposition?

Must I also remind you of the article which appeared in the newspaper Le Devoir on March 7, 1958? That article was written after the election campaign of 1958 at a time when Mr. Pearson was going from one end of the country to the other, saying one thing in the English speaking provinces and another in Quebec.

Mr. Dupuis: That is untrue.

Mr. Pigeon: Here is what the newspaper said:

Mr. Pearson's statement on the necessity of a national flag got a favourable reaction in the capital. However, it was noted that in his interview with the students at the Montreal reform club, the Liberal leader was careful to add: "Perhaps discussions should be held to determine whether or not the union jack should be included in the flag". A Conservative noted for his nationalistic sympathies, made the following comment: "Mr. Pearson is giving, in Quebec, assurances to a certain well-known English speaking group—

Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) to remain in the house if possible, because I would be very happy to hear what he has to say about this question of a distinctive national flag, to find out what he means by a distinctive national flag. It seems to me that the question we are now discussing is of such importance that he should not leave the house, but that, on the contrary, he should tell us what he understands by distinctive. I think he is showing a lack of courage, and I will continue:

—A Conservative noted for his nationalistic sympathies, made the following comment: Mr. Pearson is giving, in Quebec, assurances to a certain well-known English speaking group. That is to say, he supports (or at least does not squarely come out against) the avowed opinion of Jack Pickersgill and James Sinclair in this matter. This is not what the people of Quebec had expected, steadfastly dedicated to the adoption of a distinctive national flag, one without any trace of subservience to any other country. A Liberal said to us: "If Mr. Pearson came out in favour of the union jack on our national flag, he should have remained silent. This will do more harm than good to the Quebec Liberals."

Mr. Speaker, today the Leader of the Opposition is again favouring a distinctive national flag, but I would like him to be here in this house to tell us what he means by "distinctive", to hear him say whether he still holds the same opinions he had a few years ago, that is to say in 1958. It is really unfortunate that the Leader of the Opposition, who toured the province of Quebec lately and supported the idea of a distinctive national flag, should not be here to tell us what he means by "distinctive". He did not go out of the house as the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) did. He simply is not here.

It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, because we know to what extent the Liberal party has completely transformed itself since it has been in the opposition, and that it is now in favour of a distinctive national flag.

I do hope, Mr. Speaker, that this motion will be passed, so that this committee of both houses may be set up as soon as possible, in order that the outstanding personalities of the Canadian nation may be heard with a view to adopting as early as possible a distinctive national flag and a national anthem, that is to say "O Canada".

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to participate in this debate on the adoption of a flag and a national anthem, but following the unfounded statements of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), I think it is the duty of the member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville to clear up a few points.

If the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm had merely introduced his motion in the house, I would have supported him immediately. There was nothing to add to what he said. We also, on this side of the house, are in favour of the setting up of a joint committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons. On that count, I support the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, as all my colleagues will, if the question is put before six o'clock; but I rather think he is going to be disappointed, because we on this side of the house will not kill time. But, if the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm will consider the time he consumed to talk out this measure, he will know with whom the fault will lie for his failure.

I took the floor to say that if the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm hadl simply introduced his motion, he would have helped his cause, but the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is unable to be objective, and once more, in introducing a motion asking the house to set up a joint committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons, he harked upon old sentimental stories and indulged in petty politics, to which we have become accustomed since he has been sitting in this house.

Mr. Speaker, when I hear the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm asking us where is the Leader of the Opposition at this time, I am inclined to retort: where is the Prime Minister at this time?

Mr. Pigeon: Will the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville not tell us why Mr. Martin has left?

Mr. Dupuis: I have listened to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and I hope he will show me the same courtesy. I would ask him where the Prime Minister is at this moment. If the hon. member criticizes the Leader of the Opposition for having stated that he is in favour of a distinctive flag without specifying what kind of distinctive flag he had in mind, then I will tell him that I would rather have a man who declares himself in favour of a distinctive flag than one who makes statements like those which the Prime Minister made last week concerning the flag before the Ontario Conservative Women's Association, to discredit the sacred cause of the flag in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that I should have to make this statement, because the more these old refrains are brought up in the house, the more it will harm the cause of the flag.

Instead of asking where the Leader of the Opposition is, this man who has the courage to express his opinions, instead of suggesting that the Leader of the Opposition blows hot in Quebec and cold in Vancouver, when he knows that that is entirely false, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm should be objective and ask his colleagues to introduce a motion for the establishment of a joint committee of both houses of parliament and we will vote in favour of it.

Mr. Speaker, we have had enough of those attempts to make the Prime Minister appear as being in favour of a distinctive flag, when we know that he has raised the racial issue last week. Before I resume my seat, I should like to read again the comments made by Mr. Clement Brown, a newspaperman of Le Devoir who is a friend of the Conservatives, and which appeared in the issue of January 23, 1962:

> Even the old guard of the Conservative party is baffled by the Prime Minister's intervention and the Quebec wing of the party admits that its leader has placed himself in an unpleasant situation from which he will have to pull himself promptly by expressing his views more clearly.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will have to be more specific, because he has left certain doubts in the mind of the Canadian nation. He has tried to lead an underhanded fight against the Leader of the Opposition about a cause too sacred to be dragged into the game of politics, the cause for a national flag.

Mr. Speaker, I will say to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, instead of his own motion today, which is certain to die a slow death through the lengthy speeches of his colleagues, why did my hon. friend's Conservative party refuse to state in the speech from the throne its intention of giving Canada a distinctive national flag or of establishing a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate to study such a measure. I ask him that question. He does not answer because he does not want to speak openly and also because there is a deep rift on this question within the Conservative party. And if you want to talk politics—

Mr. Pigeon: If the hon. member will allow me—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Dupuis: In the first place, you should not say "sit down", if you are polite. If you want the floor, I will relinquish it to you with pleasure.

Mr. Pigeon: If my very dear friend will let me speak.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, the member refers to the future without knowing anything concerning the Conservative party. Our party has always worked towards national unity.

Mr. Dupuis: Do you have a question to ask?

Mr. Pigeon: Here is what I should like to know. May we assume that the hon. member for Essex East has gone out, that he is not here, because he was afraid to express his opinion on this matter?

Mr. Dupuis: Is your question related to the matter under discussion?

Mr. Pigeon: I had a question, I asked it.

Mr. Dupuis: If you have no other question to ask, do not waste the time of the house, because you will "kill" your measure.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for the vote as soon as possible in order that this question be settled, that a joint committee of the Senate and the house be appointed in that connection and that we stop playing politics about such a sacred matter.

An hon. Member: You were in power for 22 years and you did not do anything about that matter.

Mr. Dupuis: Another polite gentleman, the hon. member for Montmagny.

(Text):

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I am pleased at this time, Mr. Speaker, to support the motion asking for the setting up of a special joint committee to consider ways and means of giving Canada a distinctive flag and an official national anthem. The policy of the C.C.F. movement over the years in this field is well known and has been consistently in support of a distinctive flag in Canada and an official national anthem.

I think it is time that we brought this about. I believe our nation is ready to support a distinctive flag and an official national anthem and I believe support of this kind will flow from all parts of the country.

The government has made the boast many, many times that it is a government of action, a government that believes in getting things done. In relation to these particular questions, this government has been one of inaction, of indecision. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think there is evidence that the government is opposed to this kind of move and not only will it do nothing to support either of these proposals but it will in fact make certain that nothing is done in the near future to bring about a distinctive flag and an official national anthem.

I am certain that the hon. member who has moved this motion is sincere in wishing to have for our country a distinctive flag and an official national anthem.

Mr. Lennard: We have got one.

Mr. Argue: At the very best this motion can be passed by the house and action taken to set up a committee to study these questions and to report to the house at some time. That is the very best that could happen. But I think hon. members in all parties will agree that this is not likely to happen, that even if this motion should be passed by the house and even if a committee is set up an election will likely overtake the work of the committee and therefore the best that can be obtained in fact is mere discussion and consideration and no final action in the present parliament.

From our point of view the worst thing that can happen is for this motion to be talked out. This is a private member's motion. We have until six o'clock to debate it. If it is not carried it will go to the bottom of the order paper and for all practical purposes the motion will be dead for this session. I think all members in all parties would be wise to pass this motion. In my opinion it would be a great mistake for any hon. member to take the responsibility of speaking on this motion until six o'clock and preventing the house from taking a decision on it and passing it, I would hope, so that at least this limited action in this field might be taken.

I suggest that if the Conservative party, one member of which has put this motion on the order paper, should talk it out it will demonstrate to people in all parts of Canada that it is phony, that it does not mean anything. Instead of action being taken following this motion to lead to these very laudable objectives, the motion will have done nothing to bring this about. I suggest that if the motion is talked out this will demonstrate that the people involved, the person who talks it out and the party of which he is a member, are taking very effective action—

Mr. Churchill: What are you talking for then?

Mr. Argue: —to kill the proposal and to make it impossible for any action to be taken.

Mr. Churchill: You insist on speaking but you do not want others to speak.

Mr. Argue: I think it is a well known practice of the house that each party has the opportunity, yes, the obligation, to make its position clear to the nation and to place its position on the record. Our position is in support of this very limited action, and we call on the Conservative members, Liberal members and our members to allow the House of Commons to make a decision on this question this afternoon.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I wonder whether I could ask the hon. member who has just taken his seat a question. Is it correct, as stated in the press, that at the organization meeting of the New Democratic party no national anthem of any kind was sung at any time?

Mr. Churchill: And no flags were flown.

Mr. Argue: I do not know what my hon. friend read in the newspapers.

(Translation):

Mr. V. F. Dubois (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, the question of a national flag for this country has been raised for a great many years in this House of Commons. Various designs have been suggested, but for the Canadian people there is only one flag which should prevail, and that is a distinctive national flag.

Today, Canada is composed of citizens of different origins who came here to find a better way of life and a new land. Those people of various cultures wanted to adjust themselves to the way of life of the Canadian people, of the founders of this nation. Consequently, if we want to be fair to all those people of different national origins, we must offer them an emblem which is entirely distinctive, and which has no connection with any other country.

The motion of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) is very well founded and we should support it on its merit, because it specifically advocates that our national flag should be really distinctive.

Today, we know that this country, because of an amendment to the Statute of Westminster passed on December 11, 1931, enjoys its full independence, as, from then on, it had the advantage of its own court of final appeal. Formerly, cases of some importance could be heard by the privy council in London. But today, all our cases are settled in Canada, without going overseas.

Moreover, it is the Canadian government's responsibility to appoint the Governor General, chosen from among the most distinguished men in Canada.

We have ambassadors and consuls in a great many countries. We have our representatives at the United Nations, and we know that on September 26, 1960, the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker) made one of those speeches—

Mr. Deschatelets: You are killing time, friend.

Mr. Dubois: —the like of which never had been heard at the general assembly of the United Nations.

An hon. Member: You should ask Mr. Smallwood's opinion.

Mr. Dubois: There are also those Canadians who shared the horrors of the two wars of 1914-18 and 1939-45. Our soldiers, though they distinguished themselves on every battlefield, never were able to get a flag to represent them. And, when one of them was unfortunate enough to lose his life there, to give his life for his own people, he was buried wrapped in a foreign country's flag.

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) should have his say.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am here.

Mr. Dubois: We also know—

An hon. Member: Where is the Prime Minister?

Mr. Dubois: —that this country is entitled to a national anthem.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order; we can only attend to one debate at a time. If the hon. members who are having a private debate would like to adjourn to the lobby, I am sure it would not disturb the rest of the house.

(Translation):

Mr. Dubois: Every independent country, Mr. Speaker, is proud to have its own national anthem, which celebrates the feats of arms of its history or recalls the basis for its development.

We know that at present the anthem "O Canada" is readily accepted by all elements of the Canadian people. We had the honour of singing it here in this house, and, with our voices united, we were not afraid to sing it to the Canadian people.

When our athletes go to the United States, the anthem "O Canada" is played before the start of a hockey game or some other kind of competition.

Mr. Speaker, for all those reasons, and many others I could list, I strongly support this motion of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): I have just one remark to make, Mr. Speaker.

With all due respect to the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Dubois), he has unduly delayed an extremely important vote we wish to take.

We are in favour of this measure. The Liberal leader and the N.D.P. leader have already expressed their views in favour of the motion. Let us have the question. It is late, it is 5.35 already.

Mr. Pigeon: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. We would like to know the views of the member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), so that we may know what he means by "distinctive".

(Text):

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption—

Mr. Speaker: Order; I am sorry but the hon. member for Essex East cannot be recognized at this time to answer a question. The hon. member will have the opportunity to speak in due course. Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I was greatly interested in the speech by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). I have heard the same speech, of course, on many other occasions when a private bill has been debated in the house. It is typical of the tactics he employs to take the opportunity and use part of the available time for purely political purposes. He informs the house how serious such a measure as this is, how important it is to the country as a whole that the measure be passed, what rascals we all are if we dare to talk about the subject, and then tells us we should vote on it quickly once he has made his usual political speech. I am not one of those who believe that this speech the hon. member makes is going to fool anyone in the country. If he would recognize that the people of this country who are adult enough to appreciate a flag or a national anthem are adult enough to be wise to this sort of tactic, especially after it has been used this length of time, the hon. member would not waste so much time. However, I do not want to fall into the hon. member's habit and talk only about the political aspects of the measure before us.

I believe that a lot of serious consideration must be given to the question of a flag or a national anthem, and much serious consideration must be given to the manner in which a flag shall be chosen. I suggest that when we are considering the question of whether or not this country should have a distinctive flag, we should reflect for a while on some of the more important uses of that flag. Certainly, those of us who have been in a foreign country, especially if you have difficulty speaking the language or you run a little short of money and do not know where there is a bank or where to turn for help, know how advantageous it is to spot a flag that is a distinctive symbol of home. I would suggest that one of the most important uses of the flag is to mark a little bit of Canadian soil, a friend from Canada, whether it is a ship or anything else. It is a way of letting it be known that here is a Canadian, here is a little bit of Canada or someone who is a friend of Canada's.

Many people, of course, would like to have a flag flying in their own home as a daily reminder of their Canadian citizenship. Many people would like to have the flag in the classroom or would like to start classes by the singing of the national anthem as a sort of reminder that we are an independent, sovereign nation. Certainly, the fact that Canada is not a colony cannot be emphasized too strongly in some parts of the world; we are a free, independent and sovereign nation.

If we had our own flag it would serve as a reminder that Canada is a distinct entity. I should like to caution some of those members who are most worried about the subject that there is more than the spirit of nationalism to be considered. Certainly, we are all proud of being Canadians and we would like to display some symbol to show our national unity, our national sovereignty. However, it is a question right now of just what that symbol should be and how we should arrive at it. I am suggesting that there are more important considerations to be borne in mind. Canada is growing in stature and has always been a most complex nation in terms of national background and the heritage of the people who make up this country. The flag has the purpose of drawing us together, to help give us national unity, to help make us a national entity. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, it is most difficult at this stage of the development and growth of this country to clearly define that national entity.

If it is as difficult to define a Canadian as I feel it is, then how much more complex and difficult is it to find a symbol that will show to the world what "Canadian" means, a symbol that will satisfy all people in this country, or at least the vast majority of them?

I suggest that being a true Canadian, a distinctive Canadian, means at least a dozen different things in our country at the present time. There is one large group, the French Canadian group, which feels that the true Canadian spirit is the spirit of the French Canadian habitant. He has been in the country a long time. He has a great pride in Canada and has a burning desire to have it recognized that the French Canadian spirit is certainly as patriotic as any there is. To him it is not a French spirit; it is a Canadian spirit and he feels very strongly that it is the true Canadian spirit.

However, we do have a great many citizens from the British commonwealth, people who are firmly attached to the cultural heritage they have gained from Great Britain, and they feel that any spirit which does not recognize the heritage of that country, which does not recognize the historical ties and development links which we have with Great Britain, could not be truly Canadian. They can point with considerable force and intelligence to the fact that we in this house are enjoying a parliamentary system of government, that our rules, our elections and everything connected with our form of government are of direct descent from the British parliamentary system. It would seem there is much weight in the argument that anything which has become so truly Canadian as our parliament—

Mr. Deschatelets: Would my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. Nugent: Yes.

Mr. Deschatelets: Does he realize that if he speaks until six o'clock he will kill this bill?

Mr. Nugent: In answer to the hon. member's question I thought I made it clear at the start that the matter of speaking on this and having a vote on it tonight has been in my mind. I assure the hon. member that if he is patient and listens to me to the end I can give good and cogent reasons—as I thought I had been giving during the course of the debate—why we are not prepared at present to choose a flag. No matter how trying it may be for him, if the hon. member will do me the courtesy of listening he will find this is the sum and substance of my remarks. In fact I have been dealing almost exclusively with that point, that we are not ready to choose a flag today.

Before the interruption I was dealing with our parliamentary system. I think we can call it truly Canadian and yet, because of its parentage, its direct descent from the British parliamentary system, we can also agree to some extent with those who say "Well, this is British". We have also inherited our system of common law from Great Britain and there is hardly any person in Canada who is unaware of the fact that our case law is built upon British case law. In fact nearly all former colonies within the commonwealth have inherited that same British system of common law. In our courts it is quite customary to refer to decisions of other courts throughout the commonwealth, and indeed quite often to cases in the British empire. We still have to refer many times to old British decisions, and therefore I can quite understand any lawyer in Canada searching for typical Canadian law saying he cannot envisage a typical Canadian who does not want to respect our British parentage because of our common law.

Now, in dealing with the heritage we have gained from Great Britain I might seem to be someone from England, but, on reflection, I am sure my friends realize my surname is Irish and the heritage I get from the Irish through my father is not such that all things British are particularly precious to me. In fact I was named after an Irish rebel who died in a British prison, and so can assure everyone I am not urging that a true Canadian must necessarily be an admirer of the British.

What I think important is that we are searching for a symbol of Canada, a symbol that would show it was Canadian, and we must take into consideration the factors which people want that symbol to portray. Offhand I do not think we can get a flag that will show our parliament and system of common law.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If I may ask the hon. member a question, does he not think this would be a good opportunity to terminate his speech so that we could vote, and thereby demonstrate that this is a sincere motion on the part of the government's proposer?

Mr. Nugent: If we did not know the hon. member for Essex East so well we might have taken that question seriously. However, having been here more than one day, and having heard the hon. member previously, I am sure he is well repaid by the chuckle or two that was heard after he took his seat. I think the hon. member is about as anxious to vote on this—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Give us a chance and we will vote. We will vote for the motion.

Mr. Nugent: He is anxious to have a decision made on the question of the flag, although I know he would take great comfort in the words of his leader that if they were in power the ministers from Quebec would make the decision.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, the hon. gentleman who started out pretending to make a serious speech—

Mr. Speaker: Order; would the hon. member state his point of order?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Leader of the Opposition never uttered words that bear the interpretation the hon. gentleman has now unfairly made.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member takes exception to the interpretation of what was said he is entitled to ask to make an explanation, but normally at the end of the address.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did make an explanation. We are not allowed to vote. This government will not let us vote.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I am not really perturbed by that objection. As usual, the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) rises on a point of order to make an interjection, which he does so often, to demonstrate his mastery of the rules of the house. The hon. member cannot be heard to say that he did not know it was a phony point of order—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Insult upon insult is no argument.

Mr. Nugent: —and a phony objection also. With regard to the question of choosing a flag, this afternoon I have been attempting to deal with some of the difficulties inherent in choosing a symbol that is going to show people the world over what is a Canadian. We are going to have some strong feelings from so many people in different parts of the country about what form that symbol should take.

I suggest that our real difficulty is this. Until we have a more easily defined or more homogeneous type of Canadian nationality we would be very ill advised to attempt to get a flag to represent Canada at this time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let us try it.

Mr. Nugent: As I said at the start of this speech, I feel that one purpose of a flag is to help achieve unity in this country. If there are going to be so many different views, and so many of them so strongly held, on what sort of a flag we should have, I suggest the process of choosing that flag could today cause more disunity than any other single action for years, with the possible exception of how the Liberals handled the conscription issue, or something like that.

Certainly I can understand the hon. member for Essex East wanting us to rush blindly into this. They have demonstrated, on more than one occasion, I will not say their anxiety but their carelessness about whether or not they disrupt the unity of this country. I am sure that the—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, so there can be no doubt about this, we in the opposition will support this motion—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and we trust that the government will give us an opportunity of voting on this important question so we can see whether or not hon. members sitting behind the ministry support the motion made by one of their number, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Pigeon).

We will support this motion, and if we have not the time between now and six o'clock we can, as master of our own rules, take enough time to vote on this measure and get an opinion from everyone in this house as to whether we are prepared to set up the necessary machinery as a result of which we could determine for this country the right to have a distinctive Canadian flag.

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member a question before he resumes his seat?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, let us get on. Let us vote.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

(Translation):

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of this parliament, nearly all hon. members have been called upon to speak on the advantages and the need of a distinctive emblem and to choose a national anthem. Therefore, the time has come, I believe, to take politics out of this question of national interest, and the best thing all hon. members could do for the Canadian people is to vote now in favour of the motion introduced by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Mr. J. J. Martel (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few remarks to make. I hope the opposition will let me expose my views for a minute or so.

Last year, on January 23, there was a debate in this house on the issue of the flag. Out of 19 members who took the floor at that time, 18 stated they were in favour—the other one did not have time to do so, but I imagine he would also have been in favour. Hon. members will also recall that after that debate there was a particular incident in front of the supreme court building when a young man from Ottawa, Mr. Peter Hargreave, raised his own flag up a flagstaff. This is an indication of the times, and I feel the time has come for our country, Canada, to have a distinctive national flag.

Therefore, I wish to support the motion of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm not only as regards a national flag but also as regards a national anthem.

When I hear the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) ask for the vote, I remember that he belonged to a government that was in power for 22 years and that could have taken a decision on that matter before today. That government had even adopted an order in council to designate "O Canada" as our national anthem. But all kinds of difficulties were put in the way of that order because a comma had been inserted after the O in "O Canada."

In any case, I am in favour of the motion of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and I want it to be put to a vote. (Text):

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell).

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We will never get a vote now.

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I doubt whether I shall raise myself in the estimation of my old friend, the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) by what I am doing, but I hope I am doing it for the best.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, it is not personal.

Mr. Macdonnell: I remember being on a committee that dealt with the question of a flag. I think that was my first year in this house, which was some 15 years ago. We had hundreds of flags set up in the railway committee room. We had a long, long discussion and I must say we very nearly reached unanimity at the end of it.

As I recall the situation, the then prime minister, Mr. King, by what seemed to me almost sleight of hand, pigeonholed that resolution and it has been more or less pigeonholed ever since. I hope I am being fair now. That is my recollection of what took place.

The real question at the moment seems to me to be whether this is a good time to deal with this question. I realize it is an important question. I realize there are many —particularly young people—in the country who would like action taken. I will be very frank about that. However, it seems to me that at the present moment we have, I can only describe it as being a bit of a relapse in the relations between the two old races in this country and it seems to me that this is not a very desirable time for us to get involved in a long and perhaps rather bitter discussion on a flag and national anthem.

We have a lot of things to do in the next few months. I say quite frankly that I do not feel entirely happy in doing this but I think I can say with a good conscience that it does not seem to me a good time to be plunging into this question when we have so many other things which I believe are more immediately urgent.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I must inform him that the hour for consideration of private members business—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, could the house not unanimously allow the hon. member to finish, and then we could have the vote.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: As I hear some dissent from the proposal—

Mr. Argue: There is no dissent over here.

Mr. Speaker: —the house will resume the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

Mr. Argue: Any dissent was on the Conservative side of the house, let us be clear on that.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

SUPPLY

The house resumed in committee of supply, Mr. Crouse in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Production and marketing branch—

611. Payments to western grain producers to be distributed on the following basis, namely, $1 per cultivated acre up to a maximum of 200 acres per farm in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, $42,000,000.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Crouse): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Stefanson: Mr. Chairman, when this debate was interrupted at five o'clock in order to proceed to other business, I had almost concluded my remarks. I had already expressed my support for the measure before the committee and indicated that I felt that acreage payments had the support of the farmers as well as the business people in the constituency I represent.

I was pointing out the attitude adopted by opposition spokesmen; how they bitterly criticized these payments to western grain producers and then concluded by saying that acreage payments would be of benefit and that they would support the measure. We are accustomed to seeing hon. members of the opposition throw up smokescreens of this type. The former leader of the C.C.F., now the house leader of the C.C.F.-New Democratic party, engaged in a great verbal barrage in finding fault with the agricultural policy of the government in general and concluded by saying that the measure would have his support.

I commend the government for taking this action. I also wish to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture. I am sorry that he is absent due to illness. I wish him a speedy recovery and a quick return to his place in this house.

In concluding I express the hope that the estimates before us will be passed quickly so that cheques can go forward to the farmers of the prairie provinces.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I have just a few brief remarks to make in the light of some of the discussion that has already taken place. Before proceeding with my remarks I wish to join with those hon. members who have already spoken in expressing regret that the Minister of Agriculture is indisposed and unable to be with us at this time to discuss a very important estimate of his department. The minister was extremely kind to the members of the party that went west some days ago to attend the funeral of the Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner. Undoubtedly the severe weather in Saskatchewan at that time contributed to the minister's catching 'flu. I wish him a speedy recovery and a rapid return to his place in this house. I am sure hon. members understand that while in debate we are sometimes very sharp and critical one with the other, our good wishes go forward to any hon. member or friend who happens to be ill. May I say for the record that I greatly appreciate the telegram sent to me from the office of the Minister of Agriculture on his behalf and on behalf of his assistant wishing me a speedy recovery when I sustained a slight illness last fall.

We are discussing an estimate to provide for the payment of $1 an acre to western farmers up to a maximum of 200 acres. A number of reasons have been put forward concerning why this item has been brought before us. When it was first discussed in this chamber in August of 1958 the original rationale of the Prime Minister was that the payment was in lieu of a two-price system. It was explained that a step was being taken through which the people of Canada would make a contribution to western grain producers who, in the opinion of the government and hon. members generally, were not receiving an adequate price for wheat and certainly not for that going into domestic consumption.

Our position in relation to this item has been clear from the beginning. We feel the farm organizations were correct in asking the government for deficiency payments on wheat, oats and barley, to compensate for the effects of the cost-price squeeze, for the fact that since the end of the war the costs of production of the agricultural industry have increased alarmingly, while the prices of grain in general have increased only slightly if at all.

At the time of the initial announcement of these payments I was highly critical of the government. I said the government did not go far enough in offering this assistance. I am critical again tonight. I do not feel that this present measure is adequate. I feel the government is not keeping faith with the western producers in introducing this item at this time.

I wish to make my position clear. My opinion in this regard has not changed. On August 30, 1958 as reported at page 4351 of Hansard, I had this to say, in part:

> This is not a permanent policy, this $40 million item in the estimates. We would naturally welcome any continuation of this as a permanent policy—

Approximately two years later the government announced the payment of $1 an acre once again, making it applicable to a previous period. Today, a year and a half after that, the government is again announcing the payment of $1 an acre, but this is to apply to the present term. The government has skipped a year. We thought this government had a policy. We thought at least the policy meant a dollar an acre, a total item of $40 million a year, in order to compensate for the low price for wheat going into domestic consumption. However, the government has missed a year. This is not a permanent policy; it is a hit or miss policy. When the Prime Minister announced in Prince Albert on December 12 that payments will be recommended, Rudolf Usick, president of the Manitoba farmers union made a statement which reads in part as follows:

> The net effect will be that farmers will have missed a whole year's payment because the Prime Minister has not made up his mind on the basis of payment. All farmers need the payments, but they don't appreciate the Prime Minister changing the basis of payments again on this hopscotch deal. It means the government has not made a final decision that farmers are entitled to an annual payment.

I suppose even a leader of a farm organization should be careful of his language owing to the supersensitivity of this government. As long ago as 1958, I called this thing "peanuts", in relation to the farmers' costs. Then a strange revelation was made in this House of Commons by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre. He told us why the government missed a year. As found at page 265 of Hansard he said this:

The reason we did not pay it last year was because you shouted "peanuts" and we had a great job trying to sell it again to the government.

I shouted "peanuts" in 1958. I guess the Prime Minister did not quite hear it because in 1960 he paid it again. But apparently in 1961, this single word that was used in 1958 suddenly hit the government and terrified them and they could not bring forward an estimate then because somebody had called out "peanuts". However, they bring it forward today. This is really a bit far fetched, Mr. Chairman, from a group of members who assert that they are getting everything for the farmer when they are speaking in this house. However, I would ask them—and I should like to hear them all do it—to stand up in this debate and call upon the Prime Minister to make a payment in addition to this one for the year that has been missed. This is what the farmers want to know in western Canada. Is this huge number of Tories from the prairies going to say to the Prime Minister, "We want this legislation made permanent; we want this payment for the year that you have missed"? According to his own words the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre is not timid and he knows what he wants. As found on the same page of Hansard to which I referred previously he stated:

When I left home to attend this session of parliament I promised farming groups that I would press for early action in regard to acreage payments. They had asked me to do this.

More than a month earlier the Prime Minister had said he was going to do it. Apparently the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre did not know about it.

Mr. Pascoe: I said "early payment".

Mr. Argue: Oh, he thought that the Prime Minister would do it but that he might wait too long. You will observe the determination of this man, Mr. Chairman. The Prime Minister says, "I will recommend it to parliament" and the hon. member told the farmers when he left home that he would press for early action with regard to acreage payments.

Mr. Pascoe: We get results.

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. Argue: Is the hon. member in favour of paying it for the year that has been missed? That is what I should like to know. Let him stand up and in a clear voice tell the producers of western Canada that he is not only in favour of payment for the present year but that he is in favour of the Prime Minister recommending a payment for the year that has been missed.

We know what hon. members on the other side of the house think of themselves, Mr. Chairman. According to his own words the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale thinks that you must be on the government side of the house or you are useless. That is what he said. He said that the former hon. member for Peace River, Mr. Solon Low, had been in the house for twenty years and had never got anywhere, and that all he did was to whine.

An hon. Member: What are you doing?

Mr. Argue: That is not right. The former hon. member for Peace River, with whom I disagreed on a great many occasions represented the people of his constituency in a faithful and conscientious manner in my opinion; and I think it ill behooves any member of the House of Commons to say of a man who has served this nation in parliament for 20 years that he was able to get nothing and that all he did when he was here was to whine. We have a distinguished member of this House of Commons who sat on the opposition side for a long time. The hon. member for Prince Albert sat in the opposition for a long time. He whined. He was probably the loudest whiner in the opposition. He whined day after day. He took the hide off the government time after time. He was a good member of the opposition. I think the Prime Minister was an effective member in the opposition.

Mr. Pearson: And he will be again.

An hon. Member: Self-delusion.

Mr. Argue: I think it ill behooves hon. members opposite to try to paint a picture indicating that if you sit on the right of the Speaker and are a Tory, you can get everything done. Who knows, Mr. Chairman, but that the hon. member for Prince Albert might once again in the near future sit on this side of the chamber when he would be obliged to revert to whining again from a bench on the opposition side. The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale apparently is not satisfied that there are 47 Tories in the 48 ridings in the three provinces. He apparently wants a one party state.

Mr. Rapp: Ask the people of Saskatchewan?

Mr. Argue: He wants them all of one political stripe. I may tell him that I am pleased that in our best democratic system we not only have a government but an opposition and I hope we shall always have a good and effective opposition in this House of Commons.

Mr. Rapp: That is what the people of Saskatchewan did.

Mr. Argue: We should like to know from these self-appointed champions what they think about the year that was missed. Let us double the estimates. Let us not have the Prime Minister face an electorate who will say, "You are inconsistent; you gave us valid reasons in 1958 for payment and you gave us valid reasons to make a payment for 1959. What is wrong with a payment for 1961? What happened?" Mr. Chairman, only one thing has happened, apparently, and that is the government's getting closer to an election. Hence they are going to pay it but they are not going to make it permanent by presenting legislation to the House of Commons. They are going to do it by an item in the estimates.

An hon. Member: Before the election.

Mr. Argue: I ask the government, I ask the Acting Minister of Agriculture why he does not recommend to the House of Commons legislation to place this provision in the statute books. By so doing he would save the Prime Minister a great deal of embarrassment. A great many people are going to think this is a payment for an election that is about to come up from a Prime Minister who is so inconsistent that he will not bring forward an item to pay the producers for a year ago. I suggest that the government can be accused of inconsistency. I suggest that the government can be accused of doing this for political purposes.

Mr. Grafftey: The people are not as cynical as is the hon. member.

Mr. Argue: The government has a way—an honourable one, and one in keeping with parliamentary democracy—in which to do this, namely to have the item placed in legislative form. How often has the Prime Minister from this side of the chamber said to the former government that they should not try to legislate through items in the estimates. How often has he said that the way to treat parliament is to bring in legislation, place it on the statute books. Give the people of western Canada a feeling of real confidence that there will be legislation on the statute books and that the moneys will be forthcoming.

I challenge the government to do two things. First, I challenge them to recommend payment for the year that has been missed. Second, I challenge the government to bring in legislation. Then they can boast about consistency; then they can boast about a policy of greater permanency. They have overlooked the producers; and the government's 47 members from the west are silent on the question of the year that has been missed. We would like to hear from them as well as from the Acting Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak on this particular item of the estimates I think I should first of all say something about the need for it. In the last year western Canada has gone through an exceptionally dry period. Some may not realize, and I know it is hard to do so, just how dry it can get. In western Canada we experienced some dry years in earlier periods and the last year compares well with them. In fact, many oldtimers in the area say that the last year was the driest they ever experienced.

In my particular part of the country there was no grain whatsoever and very little hay, and a lot of feed had to be shipped in to feed the cattle. Just to give hon. members an idea of how dry it was, the farmers in my particular region were cutting hay with diskers. That may be hard to realize but it is a fact. That is how short the crop was. I point this out, Mr. Chairman, only to indicate to hon. members that there is certainly a need for these acreage payments.

Western Canada suffered not only a feed shortage but also a water shortage. Manitoba and Saskatchewan brought into operation water pumping facilities to pump water to livestock. Alberta went so far as to implement a water pumping scheme but only to pump water to towns. Under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act facilities were provided in order to fill up dugouts that had been dry for the past three years. Western Canada faced a very difficult year, one which would have been much worse if it had not been for the devaluation of the dollar by the government.

We all know that last year there was a great deal of worry about the cattle market because trucks loaded with cattle were lined up going into Winnipeg. Some members felt that there might be a glut of cattle on the market and prices would go down. One can look at the export statistics and see that as soon as the dollar was devalued our cattle started to move across the line to the United States. This not only saved the livestock producers of western Canada but it did a lot for Ontario and Quebec farmers. After all, I come from the province of Alberta which is widely known to have great numbers of cattle but it is second among the provinces in that regard. The government stepped in at a crucial time, devalued the dollar and helped the livestock producers to get out of this difficulty. To a great extent the government rescued the mixed farmers of western Canada.

There was also a condition which created a scarcity of feed. At one time Saskatchewan farmers came into the irrigated areas of Alberta and forced the price of hay up to $30 a ton. This happened because of the demand for hay and the fear that there was not going to be any hay to bale. The Alberta and Saskatchewan governments accepted the federal minister's proposal with regard to freight assistance on feed. It was realized that feed could be shipped into these dry areas and sold for less than $30 a ton.

This action in effect put a ceiling on the price of hay. Hay was available in the northern areas of Alberta and the irrigated areas of southern Alberta and could be moved to the buyers at a very small cost. This action went a great way towards saving the livestock industry.

I have no hesitation in supporting this item now before us. I think it will fill to some extent the gap that perhaps has not been covered fully by the other measures to which I have referred, the devaluation of the dollar, the water pumping facilities and the freight assistance on feed.

Western Canada, as I said, faced a difficult year and came through it in relatively good condition. The optimism in western Canada is high today. Why is this so after facing such a difficult year? Because the people of western Canada realize that all through the difficult months of last summer the Minister of Agriculture was on his toes prepared to help and demonstrated to the full his preparedness to help in a difficult time. The minister was not idle abroad. He went out and sought and found markets and convinced the cabinet that these markets should be filled even if we had to sell the grain on credit. This is a very important point because for years farmers and farm groups in western Canada have been asking the federal government to sell a little more grain on credit.

The late Jimmy Gardiner was mentioned, the former minister of agriculture. Although he was an ardent fighter for western Canada, he never did gain the support in cabinet of the hon. member for Essex East. If the hon. member for Essex East had been as ardent a spokesman for the farmers at that time as he is today, he would have given the late minister some help in convincing the former government that some grain should be sold on credit.

In the last year alone approximately $100 million worth of grain has been sold on credit.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

This will give hon. members some idea of what this means to the farmers of western Canada and certainly they are grateful for it. They realize that they had a dry year with poor crops in 1961 but were able to sell whatever grain they could harvest and grain they had carried over from previous years. The fact that they were able to sell the grain they had carried over gave them a cash income that they would not have realized if we had not had a minister of agriculture who went out and sold grain and convinced the cabinet that Canada should sell grain on credit. The minister put forward a tremendous effort and moved this grain. This has done a great deal to help to improve the mood of the people of western Canada as they face another year with the hope that there will be more snow this winter and more rain and that things will more or less return to normal.

For the first time since 1952 quotas have been removed. A few years ago those same farmers who could grow nothing this year were realizing that surpluses were their biggest headache. They were afraid of a surplus in cattle. The hon. member for Assiniboia tried to convince us that if we forced the farmers into more livestock production there would be a surplus of cattle. This was the kind of talk that built up fear amongst the farmers in western Canada. Today, we have a Minister of Agriculture who has proven he can sell wheat. We have the markets. We have proven that we can get cattle into the United States market because we have a government that will act. We have captured the faith of the people in western Canada. They know that we are behind them and that their plight is not going unnoticed.

Now, these are very important considerations because I come from a part of the country which is known as the "next year country". When you felt no one was aware of the situation in this part of the country you looked forward to the next year with a certain amount of reluctance, a certain amount of hesitancy in so far as planting a crop is concerned. I can say, Mr. Chairman, that the farmers generally are prepared to go ahead. For the first time since 1952, they realize that they can sell grain if they can grow it. The Minister of Agriculture has told them to produce more livestock if they can, and they are prepared to do so. I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Welland say the other night that he supported this measure. I was pleased to hear that because last Friday afternoon I listened to the hon. member for Essex East and I could not determine whether he was for it or against it. I listened to him all afternoon. He had a difficult time expressing himself about farm problems, but I must congratulate him because he was probably doing the best he could at the time.

Today and on Friday, Mr. Chairman, we heard very little comment on the deficiency payment scheme which was blasted at us in the house in 1958. Those who spoke skipped over it rather lightly. I think it has been proven that this present measure affords the most farmers some help from the federal government. I believe most people, even the hon. member for Assiniboia, is convinced of this fact. They realize that in a dry year such as western Canada experienced last year the farmers would not receive too much under the deficiency payment plan referred to by a great many people in 1958.

I realize that in 1958 a lot of people were convinced that perhaps the farm unions had something useful in this deficiency payment program, but the government wanted to make sure they were doing the right thing. This might have been some reason for not carrying out the plan in 1959. Certainly, in 1960 it was clearly stated that this scheme was similar to paying a dollar per bushel for wheat consumed in Canada. All the members of this house know the extent to which the farmers of western Canada lost during those years in which our wheat sold below the world price.

The last time these acreage payments were made there was some difficulty experienced because they were made on the permit book for the year previous. I recall that the hon. member for Essex East had a great deal of difficulty understanding the permit book set-up when we debated this matter last year. I happened to have a permit book in my office, so I showed it to him after the debate and I am sure the hon. gentleman was greatly enlightened. Many of the farmers had crops snowed under in 1959, so they did not take out a permit book that year. When the acreage payments were based on these permit books, a lot of farmers experienced a difficult time in obtaining a permit book in order to collect these payments. While we may have missed a year, we are bringing the program up to date. Anyone who has not taken out a permit book this particular year can apply for one, sell some grain if he is fortunate enough to have any, and collect the acreage payment.

This program is designed to help the small farmer who may have been hesitant about taking out a permit book in the previous year but who is entitled to one. I believe this is a good way of doing it. The hon. member for Assiniboia has pointed out that this government has been inconsistent. I have tried, Mr. Chairman, to point out where it has been consistent in helping the farmer, in recognizing the situation of the farmer in western Canada. If the hon. member feels the government has been inconsistent in making acreage payments, then he has only himself to blame because he strongly attacked this policy. Today, we find him in favour of this policy but demanding more money. At times on Friday I thought the hon. member for Essex East wanted more money. However, it seems he did not know whether to go ahead or to go back. He was something like a balky horse, making one plunge ahead and then jumping back. A team of horses pulling that way will never move a load very far.

I should like to point out that you cannot demand a balanced budget, as some members of the official opposition have been doing, and still ask for larger and larger payments under this program. Even the hon. member for Assiniboia was demanding a budget the other day, and I suppose if one had been introduced he would have wanted it balanced. He would have been trying to have his cake and eat it too.

There is just one other point I should like to put on the record and that is with regard to credit assistance in western Canada. I should like to compliment the minister for revamping the Farm Credit Corporation. I should like to advise other members through you, Mr. Chairman, that this program has worked to the tremendous advantage of the small farmers in Saskatchewan, and particularly in Alberta. I have every confidence that this program will continue to serve these farmers in western Canada, and throughout the whole of Canada for that matter. There has been some talk about the rest of Canada being left out of federal assistance. I should like to point out to those members who feel that way that western Canada exports very little butter. Ontario and Quebec receive most of the assistance from the butter support program which represents the other large subsidy being paid by the federal government.

In addition there are those members who feel this support was wrong. The hon. member for Leeds spoke at great length about this the other day, by suggesting that, but he is only hurting the farmers for whom he speaks. We have placed added revenue in the pockets of the farmers by our support of butter prices. I think I have taken up enough time on this particular item and I thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pearson: On rising to take part in this discussion. I should like to join with other members who have expressed their regret at the fact that illness has prevented the Minister of Agriculture from being in his place during the debate.

We all, of course, wish him a very speedy and complete recovery. Perhaps I might also take advantage of this opportunity to thank the minister for his kindness and his courtesy on the sad occasion of the death of our colleague, Mr. Gardiner, in Saskatchewan, by making transport available for some of us on this side of the house to attend the funeral. As the hon. member for Assiniboia pointed out, it was on that occasion the minister contracted the chill which has kept him indisposed since that particular day. We appreciate all he did on that occasion. We have criticized the minister in this house for some of the policies he has adopted. We are criticizing him today and we shall criticize him in the future but, we acknowledge his characteristic kindness on that occasion.

I venture to say a few words on this item because, among other reasons, there was some reference last Friday to the fact that I had not participated in this debate of such importance to western agriculture and, indeed, that I had not said anything about agriculture in my address on the reply to the speech from the throne. I certainly would not want to disappoint hon. gentlemen opposite, and especially I would not want to disappoint my hon. friend from Essex East who gave the committee an assurance that I would participate. He also gave me some good verbal advice as to what I might say.

Mr. Starr: Oh, no.

Mr. Pearson: It is very interesting to note, Mr. Chairman, that when it was suggested opposite I should participate in a debate on agriculture the scope of that debate—and I am not complaining about it—was at once limited by your decision to the particular item of acreage payments. For that reason it is very difficult, under the terms of your ruling, to deal with the speech from the throne and with agricultural policies that might have been based on it.

Perhaps I might be permitted to say that when I did take part in that debate I remarked that agriculture was dealt with in a very cursory way and that we intended to deal with other facets of the subject as the debates proceeded in this session. I now have the opportunity to deal with one aspect of agriculture, acreage payments. I would point out, however, that in the debate on the speech from the throne I dealt at some length with one matter which is of the greatest possible importance to agriculture, that is, the widening of our trade opportunities and the removal of obstructions to trade in face of developments occurring in Europe and other parts of the world. Nothing could be more important to the western farmers and Canadian agriculture generally.

My hon. friend from Acadia, who has just preceded me, in the course of his interesting observations expressed the view that it was difficult to follow the position of the official opposition in their attitude towards this particular item in the estimates. He also said that the hon. member for Essex East spoke about this matter in such a way that it was difficult to find out whether he and the party for which I am now speaking were in favour of the item. He could not have been listening very carefully because if he reads page 261 of Hansard for January 26, 1962 he will find that the hon. member for Essex East said, "We give support to this measure." Surely that is clear enough.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): He must have clouded the issue as he went along.

Mr. Pearson: I am on my feet at the moment to confirm that particular declaration of support. We presume that this item in the estimates, and I should point out we are proceeding with this matter by an item in the estimates and not by legislation, though it is very difficult to find evidence to support the presumption, is designed to carry out the sentence in the speech from the throne which reads:

> The drought in the prairie provinces during 1961 has resulted in severe losses, however, and you will be asked to provide assistance by means of acreage payments to the farmers who have been affected.

It is perfectly clear, as has been pointed out by some other speakers from this side of the house, that this is not an item designed to carry out the pledge in the speech from the throne. This is an acreage payment item for income maintenance without any specific relevance to drought conditions. If this is the only measure to be brought forth by the government to deal with that proposal in the speech from the throne, then it is completely inadequate for the purpose and, indeed, is not specifically designed for that purpose at all. I do not think it will deceive farmers who have suffered from drought, for the reasons I have just mentioned.

It will of course, be welcomed by those farmers who qualify to receive it but it has nothing to do with the drought as a special, and in places, a tragic situation for certain western farmers. The reason for that is obvious. It has been pointed out by other speakers that this acreage payment will be paid, on exactly the same basis, to all farmers who qualify, whether on the acreage in question they produced no wheat, or whether they produced an above average crop of wheat on their particular 200 acres, whether they produced wheat for sale and tried to sell it, or whether they produced wheat for feed and did not try to sell it.

To describe this particular proposal, which is one of income maintenance applying to all farmers who qualify, as a drought relief measure such as is described in the speech from the throne, is to say the least misrepresentation.

I believe it has been pointed out by some speakers that those farmers who particularly suffered from drought, and who need special assistance, would get that assistance under a piece of Liberal legislation known as P.F.A.A. I would ask the Acting Minister of Agriculture when he winds up this discussion to tell me if I am not correct—and if I am not correct, I am sure he will tell me—whether there has not been a greater amount of money given to farmers on storage payments under legislation introduced by the previous government than has been paid out to farmers on these acreage payment items in the estimates.

We have another criticism of this measure. This has already been made by speakers on this side of the chamber and I am not going to spend very much time repeating it. We criticize this measure because it is not a cure, it is a palliative. It is not based on any principle which could be applied to all producers in the future who operate under the same conditions. It is an expedient; it is ad hoc legislation brought in by the government at a particular time when the government may desire to do it—and at this particular time they are doing it on the eve of an election.

It certainly does not begin to carry out the principles and the policies so often laid down by the Prime Minister for parity, not charity and for the necessity of doing something to meet the cost-price squeeze.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, what alternative does the hon. gentleman suggest?

Mr. Pearson: When the time comes we will have some very good suggestions to make, and—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): When?

Mr. Pearson: —on which to base agricultural policy; not on ad hoc expedients but on principles of general application.

Som hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the hon. gentleman tell us tonight what they are?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman,—

An hon. Member: The secret weapon.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, there are also circumstances attending the introduction of this item in the estimates—this has also been pointed out—that are unusual to say the least. We all recall that when the Minister of Agriculture was out west last November he expressed regret that it would not be possible to make any acreage payments to farmers during the year 1961. He did not base that regret on solid, constitutional reasons, that the item had not been passed, that parliament had not been asked to deal with it. That would have been, if not a satisfactory explanation, a very complete one. He based the reason for the delay in payment on the fact that the cheque-writing machines were overworked and they were busy on other duties at the time. Therefore any payment to be made would have to be made in the new year.

The reason, of course, why he postponed giving anything but a negative announcement on this occasion was that this was to be left to the Prime Minister who, when he was out west on December 13, made the announcement himself in Prince Albert that somehow or other the cheque-writing machines would be all in action again at the beginning of the year, that the House of Commons would be asked to pass this estimate and it would be made available then for those farmers who qualified for it.

There is another very interesting aspect to the background of this legislation. The Minister of Agriculture, in dealing with the reduction of our surplus grains—and we are all very glad to see those surpluses reduced, Mr. Chairman—said the conclusion could be drawn from the fact that our surplus had been so reduced that it might be unwarranted to increase acreage for wheat in the coming wheat. As evidence of the fallibility of human judgment it was only about a year ago when the Minister of Agriculture was going around the west pleading for farmers to increase their acreage of wheat, and indeed the Acting Minister of Agriculture made the same suggestion when he spoke on this matter last Friday.

Mr. Harkness: I did nothing of the kind.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I expected the minister to say that, so I had better read him back his reference.

Mr. Harkness: Yes, read it back.

Mr. Pearson: This is on page 245 of Hansard. Let us just recall the background for a moment, the statement of the Minister of Agriculture warning farmers against increasing their wheat acreage because the surplus had been reduced and if there happened unfortunately to be another bad year this year—a drought, for instance—it might be difficult to meet all the commitments which were coming up. That perhaps was a very desirable warning. But in the face of that the Acting Minister of Agriculture said on January 26, at page 245 of Hansard:

> Nevertheless a system of assistance which would considerably encourage the production of certain of these grains and cause a move away from a more diversified type of agriculture in western Canada would be a step in the wrong direction.

Mr. Harkness: That is correct.

Mr. Pearson: So the ministers had better get together on this. The acting minister had better get together with himself. The hon. member for Acadia who has just resumed his seat has something to say about the fact that the previous government had never taken any steps to sell grain on credit abroad. The hon. member was not here at the time, or perhaps he would remember—some of my hon. friends on the front bench should remember—that there was a grain agreement made with the Soviet union a good many years back.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): How many million bushels?

Mr. Pearson: It was a very good agreement, under which we sold grain to the Soviet union on credit, more grain on credit than is being sold now under the revised agreement.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pearson: We also had credit agreements with Poland, and I think with Czechoslovakia.

An hon. Member: A point of order.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): He is too chicken to permit a question.

Mr. Drysdale: I thought the Liberals had the answer.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You know how badly the answer would show you up.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member does not seem very aware of the facts of this situation. Hon. members may also recall that grain was disposed of before the present government came into office under counterpart arrangements under the Colombo plan treaty. Therefore to say that no arrangements had been made by the previous government to extend credit to the purchase of grain is completely wrong, to say the least.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I did not say you never sold any grain. I said you never sold any amount of grain on credit.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Pearson: The hon. member will have the opportunity of reading his own speech of this evening in Hansard and he will see that I am correct.

Mr. Chevrier: He would not understand it anyhow.

Mr. Pearson: The hon. member, having raised this question of trade agreements under which grain has been sold, may also be interested to know—there has been so much misrepresentation on this question that I should refer to it, Mr. Chairman, as he and other hon. members have raised it—that it was many years ago that we on this side of the chamber took the stand that anything that could be done to sell our surplus food commodities to any country of the world would be a desirable policy. I have before me clippings going as far back as—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Lamontagne never put the answer in your speech. That is my trump card.

Mr. Pearson: I did not interrupt my hon. friend, and perhaps he will sit down quietly.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pigeon: The secret weapon.

Mr. Argue: Order for the government members also.

The Chairman: Would hon. members allow the Leader of the Opposition, who has the floor, to continue.

Mr. Bourget: It is about time.

Mr. Pearson: I was about to say before I was interrupted by my hon. friend opposite, who was allowed to speak without interruption, a courtesy which is not always extended to us on this side of the chamber—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: —that these statements have misrepresented and distorted our position, which has been the position on this side over the years, that anything that can be done to dispose of our food surpluses to any country in the world, irrespective of its government, is a good thing to do. Any statement to the contrary distorts, misrepresents and denies the policies we have adopted consistently. This can be proved from the record—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pearson: Why, of course.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The hon. gentleman said that the position of the Liberal party was that anything that could be done would be done to dispose of food surpluses. Why did the Liberal government not take action to remove the embargo placed on cattle going into the United States before 1947?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I am speaking about grain surpluses and now the hon. member—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The hon. member said food surpluses.

Mr. Pearson: The hon. member now rises—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The hon. gentleman referred to food surpluses.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pearson: The hon. member for Acadia who seems a little disturbed at the moment now rises and asks me why I did not do something about the cattle embargo in 1947 at a time when I did not have the honour of being in the government.

I wish to clear up one point—and I have lots of evidence to support it—in the hope that this will be the end of these misrepresentative statements that emanate from the other side of the house in respect to our attitude toward the sales of surplus food to any country in the world to which we can sell this food. Of course we are delighted when our wheat, barley and food products generally find their way into any market of the world, communist China or any other market of the world—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The other day it was said to be treason.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, it is extremely difficult to proceed with these continual interruptions which Mr. Disraeli once referred to as the harebrained chatter of irresponsible frivolity.

In view of the fact that the debate has ranged so far and wide on this matter I thought this would be an excellent opportunity to clear up this question once and for all. It is a fine thing to see our wheat surpluses going into the markets of the world It is, of course, a cause for some preoccupation when we lose our traditional markets, when they are diminished. We cannot always count on starvation in communist countries to take care of our surpluses and that is why we have been fortunately able to move those surpluses into those countries at this time.

If my friend the hon. member for Acadia and other hon. gentlemen opposite will look at the export returns for the first nine or ten months of this year they will be happy, as we are happy, to see that there has been an increase in food exports. They will not, I am sure, be so happy to realize that that increase is not in our traditional markets. If my figures are correct, and I think they are, 70 per cent of that increase is with respect to communist countries and Cuba.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): So that leaves a 30 per cent increase to the traditional markets.

The Chairman: Order. We are now in committee. I would ask all hon. members to cooperate so that the hon. member who has the floor may proceed. If any hon. gentleman has observations to make he may rise and do so when he is given the floor.

Mr. Pearson: This increase is welcome, Mr. Chairman, because it reduces our surplus stocks of food, but one cannot help feeling anxiety arising from the fact that we cannot count on the continuation of exports to communist markets which have taken our goods because their people have been starving.

We on this side have complained, I think justifiably, that whereas, when we made an agreement with the Soviet union in regard to the export of food and other products all the details and the full terms of that agreement were made public and laid on the table of this house, we do not know even yet the terms of these agreements, letters of intent or contracts to which reference has been made. As I think this question is related to this item, it would be extremely helpful if the Acting Minister of Agriculture, before the debate on this item is concluded, would give us all the details of these contracts that have been made and which have resulted in the reduction of our surpluses and the increase of our wheat exports.

Mr. Harkness: That has nothing to do with the item under consideration.

Mr. Pickersgill: The acting minister does not want to hear it.

Mr. Pearson: I will admit this has not very much to do with the item under consideration but I ask my hon. friend who brought up these matters?

Mr. Harkness: The colleagues of the Leader of the Opposition raised these questions.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps I may conclude, Mr. Chairman, by repeating this one thought which did not seem to have made an impact on hon. gentlemen opposite when the hon. member for Essex East made the statement. We will support this item in the estimates as a measure of relief to farmers who deserve it. We deplore the fact that this kind of relief has to be given in this way through ad hoc items in the estimates brought in for a particular purpose at a time that seems most satisfactory to the government. We feel that this kind of thing should be based on principle and, when the time comes, we will bring in the type of legislation which will base it on principle and which will be much more satisfactory to our agricultural producers than anything the present government has done.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Opposition. Does the hon. gentleman agree with the basic principle expressed the other day by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo which I took to be that we ought to be very careful, when we sell our wheat, that we do not also sell our freedom?

Mr. Pearson: In answer to that question, Mr. Chairman, I would say this. We should be extremely careful to do nothing that would sell our freedom. We export for our own benefit primarily rather than exclusively for the benefit of the receiving country. With all respect to any other hon. member I do not think that in selling our wheat to countries which need our wheat we are selling our freedom.

Mr. Smallwood: Mr. Chairman, I had not planned to take part in this debate relating to an item of assistance to western grain producers in the amount of $42 million but after listening to apostle Paul and his ardent disciple from Assiniboia, last Friday and this evening respectively, I feel compelled to rise at this time. My determination to speak is given added weight as a result of the remarks we heard this evening from the lips of the Leader of the Opposition, the leader of this grand new party. After listening to his views on agriculture I feel it necessary to deal with some of the arguments that have been presented to the committee.

The matters raised by the hon. member for Essex East are easily answered. I propose to ignore them. After all, the hon. gentleman does not know anything about agriculture. As for the hon. member for Assiniboia, I shall deal with him a little later on.

It is small wonder that the Leader of the Opposition participated in this debate. He did so because the Liberal party is completely embarrassed by what the Conservative government has done for the Canadian people in the last four years.

I have before me some significant figures. During the last three years the Liberal government was in office it contributed to agriculture the total sum of $272,200,350. During the first three years the Conservative government has been in power it contributed to agriculture a total of $556,909,734.25. No wonder they are embarrassed. Hon. gentlemen opposite, to relieve their embarrassment and get themselves off the hook, are carping about a small item of $42 million being paid to western farmers.

[Mr. Pearson.]

The Leader of the Opposition indicated that the Liberals have a new agricultural policy which they will announce in due course. I hope the Leader of the Opposition will not take the advice of the Liberal party's adviser's Mr. Kent and Mr. Lamontagne, or we might have socialism in our farming industry.

The Leader of the Opposition spoke about P.F.A.A. The Liberals brought in P.F.A.A., he said. I will admit that the Liberals brought in P.F.A.A. but the Liberals used the P.F.A.A. in western Canada to distribute Liberal propaganda. The Liberals were more interested in spreading propaganda than in assisting the farmers of western Canada. Let hon. gentlemen opposite rise and deny it. They cannot do so.

Let me relate a personal experience. Back in 1953 a by-election was held in our area. There was a Social Credit and a Liberal candidate. I supported the Liberal candidate because I did not want a Social Crediter sitting here doing nothing. They sat here for 17 years without accomplishing anything. After the election was over I was invited to the P.F.A.A. school. About 100 of us were in the room. The superintendent rose and said, "You fellows are all good Liberals or else you would not be here today. Go out to the farmers and do not take more than nine claims. And while you are doing that, preach Liberal politics to the farmers." That was the position of that Liberal with respect to P.F.A.A. Let hon. gentlemen opposite stand up and deny it. I challenge any hon. member opposite to deny it. They cannot do so.

Mr. Drysdale: They have the answers, all right.

Mr. Smallwood: When the Conservatives came into power the scope of P.F.A.A. was expanded. More farmers are receiving assistance today under this measure than ever was the case before. Approximately $60 million will be distributed to farmers this year under P.F.A.A.

We heard the hon. member for Assiniboia make reference to the march on Ottawa by the farmers. What was the hon. gentleman's attitude to the march on Ottawa? The C.C.F. hired a brass band which played "Happy Days are Here Again".

An article in the Winnipeg Free Press describes the actions of the C.C.F. in this respect. It states:

> As delegates began to enter the station from the first train, C.C.F. members of parliament also outjockeyed the cabinet ministers for positions in what amounted to an informal receiving line.
> C.C.F. House Leader Hazen Argue commented to a reporter, "It's all good clean fun".

That was the attitude of the hon. member for Assiniboia. He complained that the Prime Minister visited only northern Saskatchewan—

Mr. Argue: You are wrong again.

Mr. Smallwood: —and that the Minister of Agriculture visited only a large farm in Saskatchewan. However, I drove through southern Saskatchewan this summer and I found that grasshoppers were jumping all over the place. I said to the station agent, "You are not getting much of a crop this year". He said, "We are used to it. We never get a crop here. But if we had a decent government in Saskatchewan they woud rehabilitate that land and take care of it as was done in Alberta".

We have another statement of the hon. member for Assiniboia when the Minister of Agriculture was appointed. It is as follows:

> The C.C.F. leader said he also is disappointed that the administration of the Canadian wheat board is to be dropped by the department of trade and commerce and to be taken over by the department of agriculture—
> Mr. Argue posed the question: Will the department of trade and commerce give up its interest in selling the grain and further greatly weaken necessary export markets for wheat, oats and barley?

We do not need to say more about that. The Leader of the Opposition gets to his feet and says that the people are hungry. But this government sent men across the country to sell that wheat. Today we have cleaned up the surplus in western Canada. I felt sorry for one of the Liberal members here today who was called to order. I refer to the hon. member for Kent, New Brunswick. He rose in his place and pleaded for his little farmers in New Brunswick, and well he might do so. I went through that country three years ago. Many of those little farmers down there are destitute. Here we have a Liberal member who had to wait in order to get a Conservative government to do something for them. These people are going to get help from this government. We have a rehabilitation act coming into operation. It is a long term matter. These little farmers will be receiving help over the years not from a Liberal government but from a good Conservative government.

Mr. Drysdale: That is the Liberal answer, "Let the Conservatives do it".

Mr. Smallwood: We remember what started all the difficulties in western Canada.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate probably wants to start fishing or something now, I suppose.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. member would give me a chance to do so, I should like to talk about fish.

Mr. Smallwood: It would be nice to hear the hon. member talk about something he knows something about for a change. Back in 1946, when the Liberal government signed the wheat agreement, it cost the farmers in western Canada millions of dollars. What did our friend from Assiniboia say then? As reported in Hansard of August 15, 1946, at page 4839 the hon. member for Assiniboia said this:

> I agree with the leader of this group (Mr. Coldwell) who stated that we in this party welcome the agreement.

A little farther on he said:

> I welcome the wheat agreement.

He betrayed the farmers of western Canada. He sold them out. Now he comes to this House of Commons and wants us to subsidize them for what was done then.

Mr. Argue: We are only a little group.

Mr. Smallwood: We will ignore that remark.

Mr. Argue: Just a splinter group.

Mr. Smallwood: We know where it comes from. It is like getting kicked by a mule. Let us consider where it comes from and forget about it. Surely on an item like this, Mr. Chairman, we can stop this foolishness of trying to talk politics. Let us pass this item. It is what the farmers of western Canada need. They need acreage payments up to the 200 acre maximum. I am sure that every western member is in favour of it. I know they would like to see this legislation put on the statute books so that it is established on an annual basis for the farmers in lieu of the two-piece system. We get opposition every time we bring it in. The opposition parties want to make hay.

I do not wish to take up any more time, Mr. Chairman, and I thank you for the opportunity accorded to me to express my views.

Mr. Gundlock: It is always with humility, Mr. Chairman, that I rise to speak in this House of Commons, particularly when I follow the Leader of the Opposition and at a time when so many remarks have been made about an issue with which I wish to deal.

I should like to place on the record at this time the statement that I heartily support this motion. Through you, Mr. Chairman, I should like to put on the record some remarks that in my opinion have not been made as yet. The Leader of the Opposition is a man whom I respect greatly and whom I hesitate to follow and to criticize because I am a farmer. I farmed in the dirty thirties, in the dirty forties and in some of the fifties and I still am a farmer.

There is one point that I think this committee and in fact the Canadian people should be reminded of. In speaking in support of this measure, one that is part of an over-all policy, I feel sincerely that there is one thing that should be put on the record. I have reference to some of the work behind the scenes. When I say that, what I mean is simply this. A few moments ago the Leader of the Opposition said that they counted on markets. Through you, Mr. Chairman, I should like to remind hon. members that this government has not counted on markets. They have done something about them. As I said before, the acreage payment is part of an over-all government policy. The thing that I should like to reiterate and put on record in reference to the agriculture economy of Canada is simply this. Much hard and sincere work has been done by this government. As a farmer I am proud to be here and to have an opportunity to speak in support of this measure.

You may recall, Mr. Chairman, when only a few short years ago—four or five years ago, as a matter of fact—in reference to wheat, our customers abroad in particular were giving us some trouble with regard to accepting purchases from Canada. When cargoes reached their destination there were often complaints and rejections for various reasons. When ships reached their destinations the cargoes did not measure up to the samples so far as quality was concerned. The reason for this was that cargoes were often contaminated by oil, coal dust or other foreign objects. The holds were not cleaned and in addition there were germs and insects in the cargoes. Something had to be done about it and the result was what we commonly call quality control.

You may think I am straying a little, Mr. Chairman, but this is all part of the same policy. I want to emphasize the work that has been done behind the scenes by the government. I should like to pay tribute to the former minister of agriculture because I know he did a great deal of work along this line. In fact, as a result of the work of the former minister we are assured now of satisfied customers almost universally. It was not easy to bring this about. Comparing the situation today with that prior to 1957—I need say no more as to dates—when our customers today receive a sample of our wheat and other export products as well, as a matter of fact they can rest assured that the cargo will be the same as the sample. Quality control is the answer.

What did this mean? It meant legislation and a great deal of work behind the scenes. As I said before, I should like to pay tribute to the former minister of agriculture in this regard. I had not heard any reference to this point during this debate and there was very little I wished to say, but as far as I am concerned this is a great achievement because a satisfied customer is the best type of customer, particularly when he repeats his order. The reason why our customers are repeating their orders is that they can depend on the quality of Canadian products, not only agricultural products but every other product. The holds of ships have been thoroughly cleaned and for the first time our customers can be assured that the cargo will reach them in first class condition, whether the cargo be wheat, other types of grain or any other commodity. In other words, for the first time in history Canadian salesmen can go abroad and lay a sample on the table, and the customer can be assured that the product when delivered will be of the same quality as the sample. I think this fact should be recognized by hon. members opposite and the Canadian people generally and that is why I put it on the record.

With all deference and with great respect, as I said before, I should like to remind the Leader of the Opposition that we have not just counted on business but have been working for it. We have not counted on markets. I should like to join in complimenting the present Minister of Agriculture for the work he has done. Certainly no one can criticize his salesmanship. Unfortunately he is ill at the present time. This year we have sold 354 million bushels of wheat and flour and for this he should be commended to the utmost.

As a real farmer and having regard to parity of income I support to the utmost this measure making provision for acreage payments. Hon. members opposite can talk about business. I think I can talk about business as well. We all love election campaigns. I can recall that during the 1957 campaign certain people said, "You are a farmer, but what do you know about business"? All I could do was to remind them that any farmer who had his head above water financially at that time must have been a good businessman.

I rose with great humility to add my support to this measure and to remind hon. members and Canadians generally that such measures are not what they are said to be in certain quarters. This measure is part of an over-all policy. Actually it goes further than that. It represents co-operation among all segments of our nation because without the support of the eastern members the western members could not get very far. We appreciate the fact that all segments of the Canadian economy support this measure.

Finally, I should like to recall to hon. members the co-operation between the federal and provincial governments that has brought all this about. Certainly we can look forward in the very near future to much greater benefits from the policies of the present government.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, the item under consideration was not unexpected by western grain producers. The Prime Minister has compared it with the acreage payment made in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, and that made in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1961. I should like to quote from Hansard for August 30, 1958, page 4347. The Prime Minister was speaking and this is what he had to say:

> —farm organizations over the years have contended that the Canadian consumer has been getting wheat too cheaply. Just as other producers expect a fair market price for their goods, so the Canadian wheat producer should receive a fair price for the wheat sold in the domestic market. That has been the general contention through the years.
> Over a seven-year period the average domestic human consumption of wheat has been 45 million bushels. This is only 10 per cent of the total annual disposition of western wheat. An increase of 50 cents per bushel in the price of wheat for domestic consumption would be reflected in an increase of only 6.5 cents per bushel on the basis of total marketings. To achieve this would require a contribution to be made by parliament to the wheat board, or it would result in an estimated increase to the consumer of 2 cents per loaf of bread. Such a contribution would amount to a figure considerably lower than that which is proposed for this year only—

He went on to say:

> This amount, which is designed to meet the needs of the small farmer, will be distributed by the Canadian wheat board to producers on the basis of one dollar per specified acre, including acreage seeded to flax, up to a maximum of 200 acres.

In the estimates for the period ending March 31, 1961, vote No. 576 of the supplementary estimates for that year, the payment was described as follows:

> Payment of an amount, as a higher return for wheat used for human consumption in Canada, to western grain producers to be distributed on the following basis, namely: $1 per cultivated acre up to a maximum of 200 acres per farm in accordance with regulations of the governor in council.

The amount was $42 million, the same as it is today. The severe drought in some areas of the prairies is a matter of concern to all of us. It emphasizes the income problems in western Canada. However, acreage payments can hardly be considered crop failure payments. Members from western Canada have no intention of being drawn into that position by the opposition.

In order to deal with this matter effectively, it is necessary to recall the circumstances under which this party came into office in 1957 and again in 1958. The situation in western Canada was desperate. During the preceding decade, a surplus of over 700 million bushels of wheat had been allowed to accumulate. Our country and terminal elevator systems were congested. Rigid quota regulations were necessary to ensure some equality of opportunity for delivery to country elevators. Elevator companies were forced into costly temporary and semi-permanent building programs in order to service a limited quota. Parliament found it necessary to establish the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. The St. Laurent-Howe administration reduced the initial price for oats by five cents per bushel. This was another indication of the negative attitude that was developing at that particular time.

After the final settlement of the famous "have regard to" clause in the grain agreement with Great Britain, government policy drifted from one of selling to one of storing grain. During that period the bootleg trade of grain to feed mills, feeders and businessmen developed rapidly. This trend was accentuated by the failure of the St. Laurent-Howe government to adopt a policy of cash advances on farm stored grain. The sale of grain outside the Canadian wheat board was often completed allowing substantial discounts which were lost to the producer forever.

At that time, western Canada was represented in parliament by a strong opposition. The province of Alberta was represented almost entirely by Social Credit members led by their leader, Solon Low. The provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan sent large numbers of C.C.F. members led by their national leader, M. J. Coldwell, and strongly supported by Hazen Argue and Stanley Knowles. In addition to these members, the opposition could claim John Diefenbaker, Gordon Churchill and Douglas Harkness, all from the prairies. The government was represented by a numerical minority from the prairies. These Liberal members were led by the late Right Hon. James Gardiner and by Walter Tucker. There were some outstanding men among their numbers. Their impact on the large government majority from other parts of Canada was almost negligible. Indeed, the experience of my immediate predecessor in office on the question of cash advances revealed the extent to which party discipline had destroyed the effectiveness of parliamentary representation under the St. Laurent-Howe regime. The cash advance question was also vigorously advocated by the opposition, but without success.

After the election of 1957, the Diefenbaker administration effected a system of cash advances on farm stored grain. This relieved some of the pressure on the farm cash position. It should be pointed out that cash advances were only an emergency measure. They became necessary only because of the continued failure of the St. Laurent-Howe government in its efforts to sell grain. The attitude of the Diefenbaker administration in 1957 and early 1958 encouraged the people in western Canada to reinforce his representation from the prairies. They did this despite the promises of Pearson and the Liberal party. They ignored the regional cry of the C.C.F., "Fight for the west."

The Diefenbaker administration faced a mammoth task when it took office in 1958. The decay that had set in during the latter days of the 22 year tenure of Liberalism was widespread, and overlapped into almost every department of government. The Hon. Douglas Harkness was appointed minister of agriculture. It required almost two full years to effect the reorganization of the Department of Agriculture and to clear the way for legislation that might come to grips with the serious problems that required solution. The backlog of legislation requested by farm people was considerable and included farm credit arrangements, crop insurance, conservation, and the ordinary modernization of statutes already in effect, many of which had not been looked at since they were first placed on the statute books several years before.

It is small wonder, then, that farm people were impatient. They had waited a long time. The record of the previous Liberal government with regard to promises had been most frustrating. Thus it was that the "On to Ottawa" delegation was organized. The deficiency payments controversy was born. This government led by the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, was not stampeded. This government made its decision.

The debates leading to that decision are a matter of public record. The record of the opposition groups cannot now be erased. The hon. member for Assiniboia chose to ignore the plea for a positive solution. He advocated an outright handout, a handout that would have aggravated our wheat surplus.

Mr. Argue: You are wrong again.

Mr. Nasserden: This handout would have encouraged the trend to larger farms and would have cost the treasury of Canada over a billion dollars.

Mr. Argue: Wrong again.

Mr. Nasserden: His attitude was clearly stated on April 23, 1959, as recorded at page 2973 of Hansard. I quote:

> Western Canada today is being betrayed by members of parliament of the Conservative party who represent them, in that they are opposed to the legitimate requests that have been made by the mass delegation.

In reply to that I said, as reported on the same page of Hansard:

> No one has betrayed the western farmer more than those who during the years, not only this session but in past parliaments for the last 10 or 12 years, have taken stands in parliament that were so far from what the western Canadian farmer wanted that they engendered ill will from the other parts of this nation.

Mr. Argue: Silly talk.

Mr. Nasserden: The Liberal party, with its laissez faire outlook has consistently taken a negative stand on this matter. Their friends in Saskatchewan have been advocates of acreage reduction. The hon. member for Assiniboia, representing his party, has just as consistently advocated deficiency payments and he reiterated that stand on Friday last.

Mr. Argue: $100 million instead of $40 million.

Mr. Nasserden: The policy of the government has never been one of handouts. We refused to go back and pay for the short change policy of the former Liberal administration. Our ministers chose the positive approach in this matter.

The "On to Ottawa" delegation requested a payment of 31 cents per bushel for wheat in the year 1957-58, 12 cents for oats, and 23 cents for barley. I have their brief before me and also the prices for these grains in January, 1962, and the prices a year ago. No. 2 wheat is today $1.89 per bushel. Last year it was $1.62 and in March, 1959, it was $1.66. If we take the difference between 1959 and today, wheat is selling for 23 cents a bushel more than it did when the delegation came to Ottawa. No. 1 feed oats are selling at 90 cents a bushel today.

Mr. Argue: There is no crop.

Mr. Nasserden: Last year they sold at 70 cents a bushel—

Mr. Argue: You cannot sell what you have not got.

Mr. Nasserden: That price represents an increase of 20 cents per bushel. No. 1 feed barley is selling at $1.26 per bushel. Last year the price was 91 cents and in 1959 it was 99 cents. The difference between the price in March, 1959, and this year is 27 cents per bushel.

Mr. Argue: But there is no crop.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Nasserden: In other words, the government's marketing, trade and fiscal policy has resulted in achieving very closely the objectives requested by the "On to Ottawa" delegation.

Mr. Argue: But there were no crops.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The hon. member should be allowed to proceed without interruption, so that he may be heard.

Mr. Nasserden: I can understand the reason for the interruption because the hon. member does not like to hear of the achievements which this administration has been able to effect. The present vote proposes to continue the acreage payment for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1962, on the same basis as in 1960-61. Calculated on the basis of normal consumption in Canada, the returns on wheat used for human consumption are at or above the levels that farmers and farm organizations have maintained to be a parity price.

I can understand the consternation so evident among the members of the opposition. The hon. member for Assiniboia has called this acreage payment "peanuts", time and time again. However, he cannot defend that stand, particularly after renewing his old argument for deficiency payments. Without batting an eye he reversed his tactics and urged that this vote be made permanent and statutory. His conversion comes a little late; in fact, it comes four years too late.

Mr. Argue: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, does the hon. member remember that in August, 1958, I asked that the legislation be made permanent?

Mr. Nasserden: You called it "peanuts" four years ago. You called it the same thing last year. When we first introduced acreage payments that was the time for the hon. member to give his support and endorsement of them.

Mr. Argue: That is what I did.

Mr. Nasserden: All we got at that time was a sneer and a snarl. The constituency of Assiniboia might just well have been represented in Timbuktu as in the House of Commons.

Liberal speakers have had a different purpose in their contributions. They have again been trying to divide Canada into east and west. The hon. member for Essex East used to impress us with his air of experience. All I can say is that he has learned little during the last four years except perhaps to stoop a little lower than he felt necessary when he was nearer his prime. That exhibition is becoming more pitiful with each passing day. Let us consider his reference to A.R.D.A., "that it is not designed to meet current situations". That is exactly the difference in attitude between the administration in which he was a leading light and the administration of today led by the right hon. Prime Minister. They never planned for the future. They never moved except late and little. They blindly shut their eyes to the days when easy sales to Europe would come to an end as Europe recovered from starvation and the ravages of war.

The pledges made by the Prime Minister to the grain producers in western Canada have been fulfilled during the life of this parliament. The choice made by the people on the prairies in 1958 was a good one. Never before in Canadian history has their confidence been so influential here in Ottawa. Never before has the future held such promise for western grain producers. The Minister of Agriculture, the Hon. Alvin Hamilton, is one of the greatest living Canadians. His approach to farm problems and his sympathy for farm people have won him the respect and confidence of farm people from coast to coast.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about his predecessor?

Mr. Nasserden: The Minister of Agriculture has been able to take farm problems to our urban neighbors and win their understanding and good will. This party and the people of the prairies are proud of him for the measures he has introduced to meet long range needs, and without which there can be no worthwhile future for people engaged in agriculture. All of us wish him a speedy return to the house and to the activity that he enjoys so much. It is hardly necessary for me to add that I support this measure.

Mr. Cadieu: I am glad to have the opportunity of participating in this debate because I have had so many requests for acreage payments during travels through my constituency. I told my constituents I was sure the government would not let them down.

I know I shall not be permitted to list the many sound pieces of legislation pertaining to agriculture introduced by the government under the great leadership of our Prime Minister, the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker. He is very highly respected and I can assure you that my constituents appreciate the co-operation we have had from the former minister of agriculture, the Hon. D. S. Harkness, and from our present Minister of Agriculture who is held in the greatest esteem throughout the dominion.

As all the western members with the exception of one from the three prairie provinces made strong representations seeking these acreage payments I was quite confident in telling my constituents that I was sure they would not be let down, particularly in a year such as this. As these representations favoured the two-price system they agreed that this was the fairest way it would be paid. When one looks at how the acreage payments are made, he can easily see how the present government is trying to protect the family farms. The fact is that out of a total of 223,994 permit holders 179,951 are under 500 acres per permit, leaving only 44,043 over that amount.

The farmers in my constituency were very severely struck by drought, except in a few small areas. This made things very difficult that year, and this measure will certainly be greatly appreciated. Many farmers will be receiving the full benefit of prairie farm assistance. There are a great number just about on the line, who went over the 12 bushels, and I am sure that they, as well as those farmers who were under this amount, will very much appreciate these acreage payments.

I had the pleasure of having our Minister of Agriculture visit my constituency. I am more than happy with the wonderful job he did when we were faced with one of the worst drought conditions we have ever experienced. We very much appreciate the quick action taken by the minister and his department in alleviating the difficulties which might have led to a real panic on the livestock market. He took a great interest in the movement of grain and feed. The action of the minister and his department levelled the whole thing off and we did not run into any panic. Everything went along quite smoothly. I can assure hon. members that the farmers in my constituency, and all western farmers, very much appreciate what the government has done on their behalf.

Mr. Milligan: Mr. Chairman, as a farmer in eastern Canada I should like to make a few remarks in connection with this legislation. First of all I wish to say that I am very much in favour of the acreage payment. I am very pleased to see it being brought forward at this time. I feel that the farmers in western Canada are very much entitled to some sort of assistance and this acreage payment will be very much appreciated by them.

I do not like to see it used as a subsidy to agriculture because I do not think it is such a subsidy. I should like this acreage payment to be placed on the basis of a direct subsidy to the consumer, a direct subsidy to the cost of living index, which is only one of the subsidies that those of us who are farming in other fields are helping to provide.

I think we all realize that the price of wheat on the export market is the selling price of grains in western Canada. We all realize it is not the cost of production price that should be coming back to the farmers. It is based on a highly subsidized program from every country in the world and those of us in Canada, particularly the western farmers, have not been able to obtain a realistic price for grain.

We realize that there was a drought in western Canada and those of us in other parts of Canada think that anyone who loses a crop is entitled to some assistance. On the other hand, those of us from other parts of Canada are feeling the effects of that drought perhaps just as strongly as those who were affected in western Canada. Certainly the price of grains that we have to feed in the east has increased considerably, to the point where it is unprofitable for farmers in the east to feed these grains, having regard to the price of livestock. I hope the western farmer is getting the benefit of this increase in price that we have to pay.

To give hon. members some examples I obtained some prices the other day from some of our local mills. Sample wheat, with which hon. members from the west will be familiar—I think it is a sample 5 and 6 and some other grades mixed with it; it would be below No. 5 grade—is costing our retail outlets, with the freight assistance and subsidy taken off, $1.97 a bushel. Oats are today costing our own co-operative, with the freight subsidy removed, $1.09 a bushel. That is No. 1 feed oats. No. 1 barley is costing us $1.44 a bushel. The cost of the operation of the mill is about $6 a ton, which is added to that price before the farmer gets it on his farm to be fed. Hon. members will realize that if the farmer has to pay these prices for grains for his livestock he certainly is not in a position to make very much profit. I think this is the position with most of the farmers in Quebec and the maritimes.

Therefore I feel that if this policy is going to be a permanent one it should also be extended to other parts of Canada, because there are sections of eastern Canada which contain a great many farmers in the low income group. I hoped this policy would be made a two-price system because I think the man who is selling his wheat should receive a fair return for it. The subsidy would be placed in its rightful position. It might be a basis for subsidizing the low income farmers from other areas if this scheme were continued on an acreage payment basis and extended to other parts of Canada.

I think farmers in eastern Canada are very pleased if we see one section of the economy receiving some assistance, because those in agriculture certainly need assistance regardless of where they are situated.

The minister of agriculture of Ontario, speaking at a farm meeting in Toronto a couple of weeks ago, suggested that the farmers of Ontario must grow their own grains. We cannot afford any more to buy grains and feed it to livestock at the prices we have to pay. The minister of agriculture in Ontario maintains that we have enough land in this province to do that.

I wonder what would happen if farmers in other parts of Canada did not buy western grains. We certainly appreciate what the Minister of Agriculture has done since he has been in office. We appreciate the amount of grain he has sold. This has certainly helped the west and it has helped those in the agricultural industry in all parts of Canada. It has helped those not only in the agricultural community but in every walk of life, because if the agricultural industry is down it affects the whole economy.

We realize that the minister has made some very good sales and this is reducing the surplus grain position in western Canada. I hope the minister will continue to make these contacts and these sales in other parts of the world.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what the house will be doing tomorrow and the next day?

Mr. Churchill: We will carry on tomorrow with the supplementary estimates. If they reach a conclusion, hon. members of the house should be ready for the four resolutions standing in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, January 30, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

WORLD FEDERALISTS OF CANADA—REPORTED INVESTIGATION

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have a short statement to make. It has been drawn to my attention that the November, 1961 issue of the newsletter of the World Federalists of Canada contains a statement to the effect that the World Federalists of Canada have been investigated by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and have been given a clean bill of health.

This statement is not correct. While what I have to say should not be taken as any reflection upon this organization, and indeed I am not entirely certain what is meant by the somewhat general expression "a clean bill of health", I must point out that it is not the policy or the practice of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to give any blanket or general statement with respect to any organization by way of clearance, condemnation or otherwise.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHANGE IN PRIVATE MEMBERS' HOUR THIS DAY

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a request with regard to a change in the order of business today. This change requires unanimous consent and is requested after consultation with the other parties. At five o'clock today we would normally have private members' hour. I am suggesting that this be changed to eight o'clock tonight.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed, then, that the hour from eight to nine this evening be substituted for the hour from five to six for the purpose of considering private members' business?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I express to the house leader, on behalf of the opposition, our thanks for this change, because I should say it was made at our request. I should like the government and its supporters, as well as the members of the N.D.P., to know that we appreciate this gesture.

FINANCE

CANADAIR—REPORTED DEFAULT BY U.S. AIR LINE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to put a question to the Minister of Defence Production or to his acting representative, to whom I sent notice of my question.

Is it true that an American air line, the Seaboard World Airlines, has defaulted on the payment of five CL-44's bought from Canadair Limited? If so, has the government given assistance to Canadair Limited in order to protect this company against a loss of about $5 million?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I am sorry, but I was given notice of this question only a few minutes before coming into the house. Therefore, I shall take it as notice.

PUBLICATIONS

READER'S DIGEST—ADVERTISING BY CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the report by Mr. Norman Campbell in the Ottawa Citizen that the advertiser who uses the most space in the February issue of the Reader's Digest is the Canadian government, would the Prime Minister care to comment and explain whether this is in line with proposed government legislation the supposed aim of which is to encourage more advertising revenues for Canadian periodicals?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the advertising appearing in the Reader's Digest was contracted by the government early in 1961 and before the report of the O'Leary commission. In considering further advertising contracts, the policy followed will be in keeping with that required of other Canadian advertisers, in following the course suggested by the O'Leary commission.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY

ALLEGED SHELLING OF U.S. COAST IN GUNNERY PRACTICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Would the minister care to comment on a news report to the effect that United States coastal towns were peppered with shrapnel allegedly as a result of gunnery practice by ships of the Royal Canadian Navy?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there was a complaint that shells of some sort had fallen on a part of the U.S. coast line in the straits of Juan de Fuca. This report is being investigated by United States and Royal Canadian Naval officers at the present time.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wonder if I could raise a matter of privilege related to this subject. Inasmuch as it is alleged that H.M.C.S. Skeena was involved, if investigation proves that the Canadian navy is in fact responsible for this inadvertent shelling I should like it to be known that this does not necessarily represent the attitude of the hon. member for this constituency.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF MEAT INSPECTION SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In the public interest and with the knowledge of recent developments in the investigation into the sale of unfit meat, can the minister say whether his department, in conjunction with the Department of Agriculture, is prepared to extend federal meat inspection services until such time as an agreement is reached with the provinces?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Inspection as to the quality of meat is primarily a matter for the Department of Agriculture, but I am sure they are willing to co-operate in all respects. Following the earlier investigation I corresponded with the ministers of health in the provinces regarding this situation, and I have had some replies. However, I am having a meeting later today with respect to this matter and expect to be convening a meeting with representatives of some of the provinces.

REQUIREMENT TO LIST INGREDIENTS IN CIGARETTES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The question is based on certain inquiries and suggestions coming from co-operative Conservative constituents of mine. In view of the fact that cigarettes contain other ingredients than tobacco, has any consideration been given to regulations that would require cigarette manufacturers to list and give full particulars of the percentage of all the ingredients of their cigarettes, similar to the requirement for patent medicines?

Mr. Churchill: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has not indicated any change which would make this an urgent question. I therefore suggest that he put it on the order paper.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—SUGGESTED TELEVISING OF MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. F. Matthews (Nanaimo): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Would he consider having the next meeting in the Columbia river negotations with the premier of British Columbia televised, so the taxpayer who is confused on the subject will know what is going on?

Mr. Pickersgill: He would be more confused than ever.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): This is an interesting suggestion, and I am quite sure any such television arrangement would produce as interesting a program as any of us have seen. Of course there are two parties to any such meeting, and I am not sure what the position of the other party to the meeting would be.

Mr. Pickersgill: He would love it.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

"THE LIMELIGHTERS"—INQUIRY AS TO WITHDRAWAL OF PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): While on the subject of television I wish to ask the Minister of National Revenue whether he could find out from the C.B.C. and advise the house as to who ordered the withdrawal of the television show "The Limelighters", which was video taped for showing on the C.B.C. program "Parade" last October. Would he advise the house as to the reasons?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): As the house well knows this government, and certainly I as minister, have no control over the programming of the C.B.C., but I shall be very glad to make inquiries as to the matter which the hon. member has raised and I hope to give him a report in due course.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

QUEBEC—REPORTED COLLECTION OF TAX ON CERTAIN EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General.

Could the minister give the house some information concerning a new tax with respect to the sale of certain postal matter which is to be levied, starting on February 1 by the officials of his department in the province of Quebec?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): I will take this question as notice and give a reply later on.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister and ask whether he has received replies from any of the premiers of the provinces in connection with amendments to the constitution and, if he has, whether he will table those replies in due course.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a number of replies have been received and I will table them if the house is agreeable.

UNITED NATIONS

CLOSING OF TRAINING CENTRE AT UNIVERSITY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I apologize for not sending him notice of it. The matter came to my attention just before coming into the house and is based on a Canadian Press dispatch from the United Nations which states:

Because of heavy commitments, the United Nations has been forced to cancel financial support of the University of British Columbia's U.N. training centre, it was announced today.

The U.B.C. authorities have issued a statement to the effect that the centre will be closed on May 31 unless a satisfactory financial arrangement can be evolved. Can the minister inform the house what consideration the government is giving toward maintaining this very useful training centre?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The United Nations regional training centre at the University of British Columbia was established in July, 1960, by the United Nations technical assistance administration. The centre itself does not conduct training programs, but it has assisted in arranging programs and in looking after the administrative arrangements for trainees sent to establishments on the west coast of Canada or in the northwestern United States. The total number of United Nations trainees handled by the centre in 1961 was 10. The centre has also been helpful in recruiting Canadians for service abroad under technical assistance programs.

In the last full year for which figures are available the United Nations contributed approximately $30,000 to the operating costs of the centre. The Canadian government has been making a grant of $10,000 annually since the fiscal year 1959-60 toward the expenses of the centre. The University of British Columbia has provided secretarial assistance, office supplies and other services which they have valued at approximately $6,000.

It is my understanding that the United Nations bureau of technical assistance operations has come to the conclusion that it is not in a position to continue direct financial support of the centre after May, 1962. The United Nations is, however, prepared to examine the possibility of making use of such a centre at the University of British Columbia on the basis of a fee for services rendered.

I am informed that the board of governors of the university have reviewed the matter in the light of this new development and apparently feel that for budgetary reasons they cannot continue the centre after May 31, 1962.

The Canadian government was prepared to continue its grant of $10,000 toward the cost of this centre. If, however, the United Nations is withdrawing its financial support and the centre is likely to be disbanded, a further grant from the Canadian government will obviously not be required.

I have gone into this matter very carefully because the University of British Columbia happens to be in my constituency, but unfortunately there was no way in which this centre could be carried on.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO VALIDITY OF CERTAIN PASSPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister advise the house whether the false Canadian passports carried by Vincent Mauro, Frank Caruso and Salvatore Maneri at the time they were arrested in Barcelona were stolen or counterfeit?

An hon. Member: Order paper.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the Canadian passports carried by Mauro, Caruso and Maneri were not stolen or counterfeit but were genuine passports issued on the basis of applications containing false information.

Some months ago applications for passports were made in the names of Mattiacci, Loschiano and Pallante, and since the forms were in order, vouched for by an acceptable guarantor and accompanied by the necessary photographs and fees, passports were issued in the normal way. Subsequent information received indicated that the forms contained false information and the passports appear to have been obtained by misrepresentation and fraud. When this was discovered immediate steps were taken by the R.C.M.P., in conjunction with other law enforcement agencies, to recover and cancel the three passports. Investigations in respect of these applications are continuing with a view to determining whether there has been any violation of the Criminal Code by persons in Canada.

Mr. Hellyer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister commenced an investigation to determine any possible connection between this incident and the alleged operation of crime syndicates in the province of Ontario?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to answer that question categorically. All I can say is that my department and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are constantly alert for any such activities and will have anticipated the hon. member in their attention to this matter.

Mr. Hellyer: I hope they have.

[Mr. Green.]

SOUTHEAST ASIA—MONUMENT TO CANADIAN PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): My question, like the previous one, relates to an answer given yesterday to a starred question that I put to the Minister of Public Works. I did not word it clearly enough; therefore the answer was not to my point. I should now like to ask the minister this question. Has he any further information on the plans or suggestions he unveiled at his press conference on his return from his southeast Asia trip, to build a monument in southeast Asia to the present Canadian prime minister?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I am indeed happy to have this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, of telling the members of the house of the tremendous impression our Prime Minister has made all over southeast Asia. As a matter of fact, by everyone I met out there he is considered to be the white champion of the coloured races.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder whether I might address a question to the Minister of Public Works and ask him whether he has heard what has happened to the statue of Maurice Duplessis?

Mr. Speaker: That is a matter that we might perhaps take up under public bills and statutes.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Denis: May I direct a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I see two members on their feet. Is the supplementary question directed to the Minister of Public Works?

Mr. Denis: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Leeds would allow the supplementary question to precede the one he wishes to ask.

Mr. Denis: The minister was talking about the good impression made by the Prime Minister in Asia. Is that why he is never in Canada?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

B.C.—PICKET LINE CROSSINGS BY U.S. AIR FORCE TRUCKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of a Canadian Press report that United States air force trucks have crossed a legal picket line at the Taylor, Pearson and Carson Corporation at Kamloops, British Columbia. In view of the statement—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I raise the question whether it is good practice to anticipate a question which is on the order paper by asking it orally. A similar question is on the order paper and will be dealt with in its turn, I expect tomorrow.

[Later:]

Mr. Argue: I should like to rise on a point of order. When I asked a question a few moments ago about trucks crossing a picket line in British Columbia, Your Honour ruled that there was a question on the order paper dealing with this subject and therefore my question would be out of order. I think your ruling would be correct if the questions had been similar or identical, but I would point out that the question on the order paper appearing in the name of the hon. member for Skeena has to do with trucks owned by the government or the Department of National Defence crossing a picket line. The question is No. 75 in Votes and Proceedings for Monday, January 29.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member's question is different, and if it qualifies otherwise, he could ask it.

Mr. Argue: I might point out that my question has to do with a protest now being made involving United States air force trucks; therefore I submit it is different. I will not repeat the first part of the question, but the second part is as follows. In view of the statement of the Associate Minister of National Defence made in the house last year that it is the policy of the Candian government to have its armed forces respect picket lines, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs ask the United States government to instruct its defence personnel in Canada to follow this very laudable Canadian policy and practice?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to make inquiries about this matter.

BRANTFORD, ONT.—DISMISSAL OF EMPLOYEES OF IMPLEMENT COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. It arises out of press reports to the effect that, with the sale of the Cockshutt Farm Equipment Limited of Canada of the White Motor Company of the United States, large numbers of Canadian workers at Brantford have been dismissed, with the manager resigning in protest. Can the minister make any comment on these reports and inform the house as to any steps the Department of Labour is taking in order to provide employment for those workers who have been dismissed?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker; just as soon as I have an investigation made and a report is made to me.

Mr. Argue: I have a supplementary question. Can the minister say whether any conversations have been held with the company in Brantford prior to this time, in the light of the fact that these negotiations for sale have been under way for some time?

Mr. Starr: I was not consulted in this matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Argue: The minister might have taken the initiative.

TRANSPORT

SHIPBUILDING SUBSIDIES—FUNCTION OF MARITIME COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that it is the function of the Canadian maritime commission to receive applications for subsidies and to rule on these applications according to the regulations governing subsidies, will the minister advise the house whether the action of Mr. Alec Watson, chairman of the maritime commission, in sending a telegram to an agency of the B.C. government threatening loss of subsidy unless this agency followed Mr. Watson's choice of engines means that in the future the chairman of the maritime commission will direct the purchasing policy of shipbuilders and ship owners?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to clear up this misunderstanding. I think it would be appropriate for me to state the facts as they have occurred.

As the house knows, under the present subsidy policy of our government a ship owner lodges an application with the maritime commission and the commission considers the application before deciding what amount of subsidy the applicant should receive. In this case concerning the government of British Columbia and the contract for the building of two new ferry boats, the president of the B.C. transport commission got in touch with the maritime commission and asked for information in advance on the possibility of subsidies for these two ferry boats. Discussion has been going on for some time between the maritime commission and the gentleman in question. A few days ago the president of the British Columbia transportation commission sent a telegram to the chairman of the maritime commission asking whether, if the British Columbia government was putting Canadian engines in these two ferries, they would qualify for the subsidy. He also sought some assurance that if the engines were of foreign manufacture—in this case, two British engines—the project would also be able to qualify.

The chairman of the maritime commission said there was no doubt, on account of the fact that these ships were being built in Canada with Canadian labour, that if the cost of engines made in Canada were added, the application would qualify for a subsidy as far as Canadian content was concerned. If, however, foreign made engines were put into these ships it would be necessary for the applicant to put in his application before he could receive an assurance that such a subsidy would be paid.

That is the situation. There is absolutely no intention of excluding other types of engines. It is simply that the Canadian maritime commission cannot say in advance of an application whether a subsidy can be paid and this is because of circumstances which hon. members will readily understand. For example, a prospective owner might use Japanese steel or German engines and so forth; we could not say in advance if the percentage of Canadian content in the case of such a ship would be sufficiently high to justify a subsidy. That is the reason for the telegram.

Mr. Broome: May I ask a supplementary question. Is it not a fact that the shipbuilding subsidy was designed to influence private builders into using Canadian shipbuilding facilities—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is undertaking to debate the matter rather than to seek further information.

Mr. Broome: On that point of order, I am coming to a legitimate question, if Your Honour will hear me out. Is it not a fact that the shipbuilding subsidy was designed to influence private builders in using Canadian shipbuilding facilities, and not government contracts which would automatically be built in Canada? Therefore, is any vessel built for a provincial government eligible for subsidy?

Mr. Speaker: I am not satisfied that the question is in order. If the minister wishes to answer it he may, but it seems to me the question asks for an opinion on the interpretation of the regulations, besides presenting a point of view.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to ask a supplementary question, and it is this. When the minister tabled the regulations concerning the application of the subsidy some time in September of last year, was there a clause in them having to do with the matter raised by the hon. member and, more particularly, with the Canadian content?

Mr. Balcer: All these matters of the Canadian content and the form of application together with eligibility for subsidy are covered by the regulations.

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN CANADA—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF VETERINARY COLLEGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. M. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture or, in his absence, to the parliamentary secretary. Could the hon. gentleman say whether or not the minister has received any recent representations from the four western ministers of agriculture with regard to establishing a veterinary college in western Canada?

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): We know that all the western members are interested in this subject. Last fall, during the dominion-provincial agriculture conference, the subject was raised by the Minister of Agriculture with the four western ministers of agriculture. Since then further discussion and correspondence have taken place in connection with this matter.

COMBINES

DRUGS—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has he received any indication as to when the restrictive trade practices commission will report in respect to its inquiry relating to the manufacture, distribution and sale of drugs?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not a report or any definite indication. However, I can assure the hon. member that in discussions I have received clear assurance that this inquiry is being pursued with all possible dispatch.

SHIPPING

SAULT STE. MARIE, ONT.—REPORTED PLAN TO CONSTRUCT NEW LOCKS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): On Tuesday last the hon. member for Assiniboia asked if I would care to comment on a press report that in the United States there are plans under way to construct new locks, particularly at Sault Ste. Marie, that would outmode the present seaway, and that seaway engineers have already agreed to specifications.

As my hon. friend knows, I am not in a position to comment on a press report of proposed plans affecting facilities in another country. I can only say that the St. Lawrence seaway authority has not been a party to any such reported planning, and that the authority engineers have not been asked to agree to specifications. The dimensions of the present seaway locks were established following intensive study, and there is no indication on the basis of present traffic or future forecasts that they are outdated.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I have a supplementary question. Can the minister say whether, as a result of his inquiries, he feels that the Welland canal is adequate with its facilities?

Mr. Balcer: This is an engineering opinion that I will leave for the experts.

PUBLIC SERVICE

POSTAL EMPLOYEES—REPORTED REDUCTION IN PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. According to newspaper reports, in addition to mention of a new postal service related to the mailing of cats, there is other news about the reduction of personnel in the Post Office Department. Is the Postmaster General in a position to make any comment about the matter?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): I am not quite sure what the hon. member is driving at, Mr. Speaker. In the press recently there was a statement to the effect that perhaps some staff changes at headquarters were to be made. I think that is the matter to which he refers. I merely tell him that in the five years ending March 1957, before this government took office, the headquarters staff increased by 50; but in the five years ending December 1961, it decreased by 17. That is an indication of the type of administration the department was getting previously and the type of administration it is getting now.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DISPOSITION OF SECURITIES IN FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. By his answer to my question yesterday did the minister imply that the marketable securities held by the unemployment insurance fund have been sold or converted into non-marketable securities?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): If the hon. member will look back at the budget speech of June 20, Mr. Speaker, he will find that I outlined the plan of the government with respect to the securities held by the unemployment insurance fund. That policy or program has been carried through and has been working with eminent satisfaction. As the unemployment insurance fund requires to realize on these securities they are redeemed by the treasury in accordance with their terms.

Mr. Hellyer: At what price?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Par.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. It arises out of a news story in the Times of January 27, styled "Fewer Immigrants to Canada, Lowest Total since 1947". The hon. lady is reported as having said in Hamilton:

> The number of settlers was not likely to reach the levels achieved in the past thirteen years.

Does this mean that a policy of net emigration will continue?

An hon. Member: Who wrote that question?

Mr. Hees: The hon. member will have to learn to read Lamontagne's writing. Let him go up into the gallery and Mr. Lamontagne will explain it to him.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I did not see the article to which the hon. member referred, Mr. Speaker. He identified the publication as the Times. I think there are several newspapers in the world by that name.

Mr. Matheson: The London Times.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am sorry, but I did not see the article in question and I do not know whether or not it is a quotation of something I said.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LAKEHEAD—INCREASE IN CHARGES ON IRON ORE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Yesterday I asked him the following question:

Inquiries of the Ministry

Has he received a letter from the northwestern Ontario development association protesting against the increase of 20 per cent in Canadian National Railways freight and dock charges on iron ore shipped from Steep Rock to the lakehead? If so, I wonder if the Prime Minister would inform the house whether he is contemplating any action to correct the situation.

Can the Prime Minister answer today?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a letter was received in my office on the 27th of this month. It is dated the 25th of January and was sent by the organization in question. As the hon. member knows, there is provision under the law regarding the course to be taken whenever objections to freight rate increases are raised. I would suggest that whatever representations are to be made should be made in the regular course to the board of transport commissioners.

I looked into the matter following the question asked by the hon. member yesterday, and the information I have received from the minister who reports for Canadian National Railways is as follows. In January, 1954 the railway company agreed to publish a rate of $1.20 per gross ton to be effective with the opening of navigation. This rate represented a reduction of 27 cents in the then effective rate. Similarly, a handling charge of 15 cents per gross ton was adopted. Both rates were to be subject to adjustments upward or downward to the same extent as variations were made in the rate from the Mesabi range to Duluth-Superior. Under this formula the rail rate as of April 30, 1961, was $1.45 and the dock handling charge 19 cents.

In agreeing to these rates it was anticipated, according to the railway company, that shipments would attain the estimates made by Steep Rock Iron Mines and later by Inland (Caland Ore Company). During the seven year period the actual tonnage shipped from the whole area has been less than 50 per cent of the estimate given in 1954, and in view of this continuing trend the railway company found it necessary to increase the rail rate and dock handling charge by 33 cents per gross ton or approximately 20 per cent. It is estimated by the railway company that the new rates at the present level of tonnage will not give more than a modest rate of return.

The interested shippers were advised of the decision to file a tariff of increased charges to become effective on May 1. Since that time several meetings have been held with interested shippers by the company to consider representations as to the effect of the increased transportation charges on their operation. I am also informed that further discussions are anticipated on a possible formula for arriving at a rate which would benefit shippers as the total tonnage of ore from the area increases.

[Mr. Badanai.]

HOUSING

N.H.A.—REQUEST FOR FINANCING OF EXISTING HOMES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Nipissing inquired whether the government had received representations from house building authorities in connection with extending financing to existing homes. My reply is that in May last we did receive such representations from the National House Builders Association.

The government, of course, as my hon. friend so well knows, has been under tremendous pressure to supply sufficient funds for the very greatly accelerated building program of new homes. This matter concerning existing homes and many others requiring consideration are constantly under review by the government. If and when a decision is made with regard to any of these matters it will be brought to the attention of the house immediately.

[Later:]

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Is the government giving any consideration to a reduction in the mortgage interest rate on homes?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member and other members of the house must know by this time, this is a matter that is constantly in my mind. As and when the long interest rate on bonds is reduced I can assure the hon. member that we will make a reduction in the mortgage interest rate. There is nothing this government would rather do than lend money at an even more reasonable rate to people who would like to build new houses.

AIRPORTS

DORVAL—TRANSPORTATION ROUTES USED BY CONTRACTORS

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Has the minister received any complaint to the effect that limousines serving the Dorval airport head for Montreal by taking the lower route instead of Cote de Liesse road, thus depriving a certain section of the population of that limousine service, and does he intend to remedy this situation?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did receive yesterday a communication to that effect and I immediately asked officers of my department to get in touch with the concessionnaire and make sure that he complies with the clauses of his contract.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Production and marketing branch—

611. Payments to western grain producers to be distributed on the following basis, namely, $1 per cultivated acre up to a maximum of 200 acres per farm in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, $42,000,000.

Mr. Milligan: Mr. Chairman, at the adjournment of the house last evening I was commenting on the sales of wheat that the Minister of Agriculture has been instrumental in negotiating, and I am sure we are all hoping that these countries will expand their demands and place further orders for grain. This has considerably relieved the pressure on the whole agricultural industry of Canada.

Production of livestock, dairy and poultry products has increased substantially in western Canada due mainly to large quantities of storage grain. This trend may result in surplus production and further stockpiling of these products. We are all hopeful of increased demands from export markets. However, conditions over which we have no control may reduce the export of grain from Canada. I am wondering if we should not now be looking forward to studying long term policies for disposing of our grain surplus. I am wondering if study should not be made to ascertain whether or not it would be good business to continue exporting our feed or cattle to the United States, in view of the fact that the finished product is often marketed in Canada. It is becoming more difficult for eastern feeders to obtain cattle in western Canada, and this may result in a further reduction in the consumption of western grain.

I favour a long term policy of the two price system for western wheat growers, because this would give them the kind of security to which they are justly entitled. I should like also to suggest to the minister that ways and means be provided for a delegation of members of the agriculture committee to study the policies other countries have adopted in taking care of their surpluses. I have always been concerned to find that these countries are able to purchase grain from Canada yet, under a subsidized agricultural program, have been able to undersell us in many of the importing countries.

The people in the agricultural industry are very grateful for the leadership that this government and the minister have been giving, and are looking forward with confidence in the hope that agriculture may receive its fair share of the national income. A comparison with other countries shows that in Great Britain, where 5 per cent of the population are engaged in agriculture, they receive 5 per cent of the national income; in Denmark, where 20 per cent of the population are in agriculture they receive 18 per cent of the national income; in Canada, where 13 per cent of the population are engaged in agriculture, they receive 7 per cent of the national income.

In closing my remarks I should like to say that this is one of the reasons we are in favour of these acreage payments to subsidize western wheat producers; in other words, this measure will help them obtain a fair share of the national income. I would say that the purpose of this subsidization of agriculture has been to compensate the producers for this disparity of income in comparison with the rest of the people of Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Habel: Mr. Chairman, we are right in saying that these payments to the western wheat growers fall short of the promises made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) during the 1957 and 1958 election campaigns. It goes without saying that we realize the extent of the damage suffered by the western farmers last year, when they lost their crops, and that the party to which I belong supports the proposed payments of subsidies.

However, we have the right and indeed the duty to point out that the western provinces are not the only ones where damage was suffered. In the riding which I represent in this house, most of the farmers have been unable to harvest their grain on account of a very rainy season. It therefore follows that many farmers have to face extraordinary expenses in order to be able to keep their herds. And what assistance can they expect from these subsidies? Absolutely nothing.

This government, who speaks so much of assistance to agriculture, could have convinced the Ontario government, who holds the same political ideas, to take advantage of the Crop Insurance Act. This would have enabled the farmers who lost their crops to avail themselves of the advantages of this act and thus reduce the expenditures they must incur to face the present situation.

Yesterday, the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion) took part in this debate. I was a little surprised. I am sorry that he is not here today, because I intended to refer to his speech. What amazed me, in view of his relationship with the Quebec Union Nationale, was to hear him try and justify that achievement about which we heard so much in the course of this debate, that is the long term sale of wheat to communist China. At page 313 of Hansard for yesterday he is reported as having said:

Our spectacular sales to Poland, Czechoslovakia and China have had an extremely favourable result while reducing our grain stocks to reasonable proportions.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder how the Quebec members, those who belong to the Union Nationale wing—and it is a well known fact that they are numerous here—I wonder, as I say, how those members will manage to defend the attitude of their government insofar as these long term wheat sales are concerned.

Mr. Chairman, referring to a political advertisement of 1956, allow me to quote from the newspaper Le Droit of March 31 1956:

Mr. Lapalme and his Liberal friends in Ottawa give $4,198,293,000 to foreigners... including communist Russia, China and Czechoslovakia and other countries behind the iron curtain. The greater part of that amount in pure gifts and the rest in loans which are seldom repaid—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Habel:

A first question to Mr. Lapalme and his friends from Ottawa: Why do you sell—

An hon. Member: Order.

The Chairman: Order. I would ask the hon. member to abide by the rules of the house, as it was explained yesterday by the acting chairman of the committees.

I understand how he may have strayed away from the subject matter. However, I would ask him to limit himself to the item under consideration.

Mr. Habel: Mr. Chairman, in quoting those words I was keeping to the discussion which took place in this house.

Yesterday, we were told by certain members that the opposition is deliberately raising some provinces against the others. I would remind the Conservative members, especially those who represent the Union Nationale in the house, that they would be wise to make a self-examination and to take a look at their files of political advertisements in past election campaigns, when they claimed precisely—

An hon. Member: Order.

[Mr. Habel.]

Mr. Habel:

—You would rather give to strangers than to the province of Quebec.

An hon. Member: Quite true.

Mr. Habel: Their political advertisements read as follows:

Mr. Lapalme and his friends in Ottawa: Why do you sell surplus western grain to communist countries rather than to Quebec breeders?

The Secretary of State and several of his Union Nationale friends will find it hard to explain their conduct to the Quebec electors, because they are now doing precisely the same thing as the Liberal government; they are selling wheat to anyone willing to buy it and on a long term basis, if necessary.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Habel: Certainly.

Mr. Dorion: Could he tell us whether or not he is in favour of the wheat sales which were made to certain communist countries?

Mr. Habel: Mr. Chairman, I will gladly reply that I am in favour of those sales, contrary to what they did when they criticized them.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the member for Cochrane a question?

The member has criticized the Ontario government for not participating in the crop insurance scheme established by the federal government. What does he think of the Quebec government which does not participate in the scheme either?

Mr. Habel: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, I would say that the Quebec government looks after its own affairs and that the Ontario government should do the same.

Mr. Parizeau: We will look after the affairs of Quebec.

(Text):

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Argue: Before the item carries I think we should have an explanation from the Acting Minister of Agriculture as to why no provision is being made at this time for the 1960-1961 permit book year. In other words, why has one year been missed?

The acting minister, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture have said this is a policy in lieu of the two price system for wheat grown for domestic consumption. One could argue that this measure is a strange way to bring that about, but that is not the point I want to make. If it was proper in 1958-59 to pay $1 an acre in lieu of a two price system, and this was done in other years also, I should like an explanation from the minister as to whether, in his opinion, there were any different circumstances prevailing in the year that was missed.

I am sure this vote will get the unanimous approval and support of the house, but I am equally certain that should the government bring in another item providing double the amount of money on an acreage basis, so that we could pay for the year that is missing, it would also get the unanimous approval of the house. Can the minister explain why no provision is made for the year 1960-61?

Mr. Harkness: There is no question of years being missed or not being missed. An acreage payment was made in 1958, one was made in 1960, and another one is being made at the present time.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Argue: The minister has once again underlined the fact that this is not an annual payment. I say, Mr. Chairman, it is another example of the slipshod method of carrying out business so often demonstrated by the present government, what can be described as a hit or miss method or, in the words of the president of the Manitoba farm union, "a hopscotch policy". No one can have any confidence in a government that does not have a policy, and this government does not have a policy on acreage payments.

The Prime Minister is interested in the coming election. He is concerned about votes, but he repudiates the agricultural organizations of western Canada by failing to introduce a consistent policy. I challenge the government to put this estimate in legislative form. I challenge them to make this a policy recorded in the statutes of the country, instead of making it a political matter. At the moment there is no regular basis for it, and the measure is introduced purely and simply on a political basis designed, as the Prime Minister hopes, to gather support in western Canada.

I suggest that although the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture feel this kind of political activity and political management of the country is the way to get votes, it would be better if they would bring about a regularized system of dealing with this kind of payment and manage the country in an open way, instead of in a political roundabout, catch as catch can, pay some years and miss some others method, thus leaving the whole question in a state of confusion.

Mr. Rogers: The longer you talk the more you lose.

Mr. Argue: Although we have heard that some members oppose the vote, I am quite sure the item will pass unanimously. It is interesting to recall that when a vote was taken in 1958, that measure was then passed unanimously. The same thing happened in 1960, and I believe it will be passed unanimously once again this year. Should the government have any doubt about the question let them call a recorded vote and find out for themselves. No one is opposed to the measure. All that some of us are saying is that the government should put it on a regular basis in legislative form and not pretend it is in lieu of a two price system.

In the main, the reason for it being introduced is because of the uncertainty of the Prime Minister so far as his fortunes are concerned in the next few months. If that were not the case, why not bring in a vote to cover the year that has been missed? Why turn down the demands made by western organizations for payment for last year?

I have another question for the acting minister, although I think I know the answer to it. I hope I may be proven wrong, but it has to do with a sentence in the speech from the throne which has been placed on the record a number of times. It stated:

> The drought in the prairie provinces during 1961 has resulted in severe losses, however, and you will be asked to provide assistance by means of acreage payments to the farmers who have been affected.

I hope the government do not claim the item now being discussed is the fulfillment of that forecast in the speech from the throne. It is nothing of the kind. As the minister well knows, this item has nothing to do with drought. The money it provides will go to men who produced no grain whatsoever, and to those who produced only forage crops. Producers like that will get the $200 payment provided they have permit books. Payment will also be made to men with 1,000 acres who have had bumper crops, although there are not many in that category. The payment is not based, as is the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, on drought and adverse yields.

The government have made it clear that they do not have information as to which farmers had crop failures, but to refute that is the fact that such information is in the possession of the department. Prairie farm assistance has been paid out over a wide area in western Canada. The level of such payments was increased in 1955. The administration of that act is doing a lot of good and the government do have records in their possession as to what farmers had crop failures. Inspections have been made, the information is there, and I suggest that to carry out the statement in the speech from the throne will require legislation to bring about supplementary benefits, additional benefits, designed to help those farmers who have had a crop failure.

This additional benefit has been asked of the government by farm organizations. The provision we have now is paid to everyone. It is paid to those who had no crops; it is paid to those who had good crops, and it is paid to some farmers in particular areas who are not in the business of marketing grain in any way at all.

Therefore I suggest to the minister that to carry out the forecast in the speech from the throne will require further legislation to supplement payments under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, such is the suspiciousness of mind and the complete preoccupation with political considerations of the hon. member for Assiniboia that he imputes nothing else, as a result, to people on this side of the chamber, and quite incorrectly so. He has stated in effect that this acreage payment is being made for purely political reasons and has implied that it is being done because, as everyone knows, we are getting on toward the end of this parliament.

This is not the situation, as is demonstrated by the fact that the payment was first made in 1958, just after an election had taken place—and not before one—and again in 1960. I think this is sufficient proof in itself that this type of assistance for western farmers, particularly the smaller farmers, is a matter of help because of a lack of income which has existed on the part of these farmers for many years past. It is not, as the hon. member for Assiniboia is trying to maintain and as certain hon. members of the official opposition are also trying to maintain, a political manoeuvre.

Mr. Argue: Then why did you not pay it last year?

Mr. Harkness: If this were being paid for the first time this year they might have some cause to voice suspicions of that kind but, as I say, the first of these payments was made in 1958, the next in 1960 and the third one will be made under this measure. I think that alone demonstrates the fact that contentions and suspicions of that sort have no foundation in fact.

The hon. member for Assiniboia, on I think three or four occasions now—because as usual he has been very repetitive in this debate—has referred to the exact wording of the paragraph in the speech from the throne which indicated that acreage payments were going to be made. The hon. member has been indulging in a good deal of semantics really, a play on words in connection with that particular paragraph. I think if it was not clear to him, it was clear to practically everybody else what was meant by that paragraph, and that this acreage payment was properly predicted in it and is now before the committee for consideration.

As I stated when I first spoke in introducing this estimate on Friday last, there were several considerations in mind concerning the making of this payment. One of them was the general drought situation in western Canada, which of course caused a general decrease in income as far as farmers as a whole in western Canada are concerned. There is always the odd exception in any case concerning a large number of people or a large volume of goods or large acreages. There were a few people in western Canada who did have good crops.

Mr. Argue: Does the minister know what proportion?

Mr. Harkness: A very small number had good crops last year. The general situation is that as far as the farmers in western Canada as a whole are concerned, they are going to be short of income because of the fact that their crops were about 50 per cent less than they had been on the average in the previous five years. As far as the people who had no crop are concerned, as the hon. member well knows and as I have indicated in this debate on two or three occasions, they are looked after by Prairie Farm Assistance Act payments.

Mr. Argue: That is not enough.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member always says "That is not enough".

Mr. Argue: It is not nearly enough. You have not increased it.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, in the 17 years I have been in this chamber, and the hon. member has been here for the same length of time—as it happens we both came to this house together in 1945—I have never heard any single measure introduced in this chamber with regard to which the hon. member for Assiniboia did not say "That is not enough".

Mr. Argue: That is a compliment.

Mr. Harkness: He has said that, or "peanuts", or something along this line.

Mr. Argue: That is a real compliment.

Mr. Harkness: As a matter of fact you could bring in a measure to make the most impossible sort of payment in the world and the hon. member would still say it was not enough. In other words, that is his constant plea which runs like a groove in a record in his head. No matter what happens, all he can do is put the needle down in that groove and say "It is not enough, it is not enough".

An hon. Member: You cannot turn the record off.

Mr. Argue: Why did you not pay them for the year you missed, instead of all this abuse?

Mr. Harkness: It does not matter what type of measure it is, you will get the same story from the hon. member for Assiniboia. He has now repeated it so often that nobody pays any attention to it.

Mr. Argue: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about you?

Mr. Harkness: It has ceased to have any significance whatever. The Leader of the Opposition intervened in this debate last night and made a great to do about being completely in favour of sales of our food supplies to any country anywhere in the world. Then of course he went on in the general way that is usual with hon. members of the Liberal party and made a lot of gloomy predictions in connection with this program. It was the same old story; "We are completely in favour of this, but, but, but, but".

Mr. Pickersgill: But what?

Mr. Harkness: Previous to that the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo was questioning very considerably whether it was not immoral on our part to be selling wheat to China, and again this afternoon the whip of the Liberal party made similar types of statements, in other words trying by every effort possible to build up in the minds of the people of this country that we are following a very bad practice in selling wheat to China.

Mr. Habel: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the minister has just said, that the whip of the Liberal party made that type of remark this afternoon. That is absolutely contrary to the words I used. If the minister had listened and understood, I was pointing out the difference between what some of today's government members were saying five years ago, compared with what they are saying today.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly.

Mr. Habel: I said we were glad to sell the wheat to those countries, as we are glad to sell it today to the same countries.

Mr. Harkness: I was listening to the hon. member quite carefully and he said exactly the same as his leader said last night. Last night the Leader of the Opposition was raising his hands and saying "We are in favour of selling food supplies to any country any place in the world", and so on and so forth. Then he went on to say but we may not get paid for them; we may not do this, and so on and so forth.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is wrong with that?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, what is wrong with that?

Mr. Harkness: In other words, the members of the Liberal party on one hand, in order not to, as they think, antagonize the farmers, particularly of western Canada, in regard to the sale of grain say "Oh, yes, we are in favour of that". But on the other hand they are casting all kinds of doubts on the transaction and trying to persuade as many people as possible that this was a bad thing to do.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Harkness: In other words, it is the old double headed axe policy.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Harkness: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister said we were casting doubts upon this transaction.

Mr. Harkness: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the minister lay the documents on the table, as we have asked repeatedly, so we can see what the transaction is, as the people have a right to know? Will he do that? Will he answer that question?

Mr. Harkness: Hon. members of this house have already been told in detail what the transaction is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: You have refused to give the date; you have refused to give the figures.

Mr. Harkness: This is another red herring on the part of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. This is practically all he does in this house; he tries to draw a trail of red herrings or put up smokescreens. These two things are his stock in trade. After the long period of debate on this matter and the reiterated assurances on the part of hon. members of the opposition that they are all in favour of this measure, I hope they will now quit raising these objections of different sorts—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Closure.

Mr. Harkness: —and allow the matter to pass.

The Chairman: Shall the item pass?

Mr. Pickersgill: The item shall not pass until the shocking misrepresentations to which we have just listened have been dealt with. Let us start with one. Who was in office when we first sold these exports to communist countries? The Liberal party. That is fact number one. Who objected to it when that was done? The members of the Union Nationale, the friends of the Secretary of State who is now boasting about these things. That is fact number two.

Mr. Pigeon: What have you against the province of Quebec? What have you against French Canadians?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member knows that I am where I always was. I never thought these arguments of the Union Nationale about the sale of wheat to communist countries were sound. I do not think so now. But the hon. member and his friends seem to have been converted.

Mr. Pigeon: You divide the country.

Mr. Pickersgill: The plain fact is that when the sales of wheat to communist countries were first started in Canada the then premier of Quebec, Mr. Duplessis, plastered this country with advertisements saying that this wheat was being given away to strangers.

Mr. Flynn: That is not true.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, my hon. friend the member for Cochrane just read the advertisement—

Mr. Flynn: You are twisting the facts, as usual.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has the floor, and I think it would be appreciated by all if we could hear what he has to say.

Mr. Pickersgill: Some hon. members have suggested that this was not the position taken. The hon. member for Cochrane has already put this on the record, but I will put it on again. Here is what this advertisement of the Union Nationale had to say:

(Translation):

While Duplessis earmarks hundreds of millions for agriculture... Mr. Lapalme and his Liberal friends in Ottawa, who are more concerned about the situation in the Middle and the Far East than about the problems of the Quebec farmers, give $4,198,293,000 to foreigners—

Mr. Fortin: It was not a sale, it was a gift.

Mr. Pickersgill:

—including communist Russia, China and Czechoslovakia and other countries behind the iron curtain.

(Text):

That is the position.

An hon. Member: It was not a sale; it was a gift.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Pickersgill: One hon. member says it was not a sale, it was a gift. Let me read what Mr. Duplessis had to say on this subject, not what the hon. gentleman says he said:

(Translation):

The greater part of that amount in pure gifts and the rest in loans which are seldom repaid—

(Text):

That latter part represents exactly what this government is doing. This government is extending credits, in other words making loans, in order that this wheat may be bought. But the difference between what the St. Laurent government did and what this government is doing is this. The St. Laurent government, when it sold wheat on credit, laid the contracts on the table so that everybody could read them. The Minister of Agriculture, together with those who support him, has refused to have this contract laid on the table. What is so secret about this? Why have so many suspicions been aroused? They exist because they have been created by hon. gentlemen opposite by their furtive, secretive tactics with regard to this contract.

I will tell hon. members the reason the minister and his supporters are so secretive about it. That contract had been signed and that wheat had been sold before the Minister of Agriculture ever went to Hong Kong. The transaction was completed by the wheat board. After it was made the minister went over there to get the credit. They do not want us to know the facts. They do not want those two dates to be compared. That is one reason we cannot see that contract in this parliament. But it is only one reason. There is another. They do not want us to see what the terms are.

Mr. Harkness: What has this to do with the question before us?

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman still says I am misrepresenting the situation, let him put the document on the table and let us see what the facts really are.

This government, whose leader went all over the country talking about government in secret, government by order in council and contempt of parliament, must bear responsibility for what has happened. In the whole history of this country there never has been contempt of parliament comparable with that which we have seen since the right hon. gentleman went over there to the treasury benches. This is a perfect example of the way in which the public business is treated as the private business of the Tory party.

Mr. Slogan: I do not wish to prolong this debate, but I should like to associate myself and my constituents with those hon. members who have thanked the government for its work in this matter of acreage payments.

Just to give the committee an idea of how this will affect some of the small farmers in the west I should like to quote from a letter I have received from Mr. E. J. Otto, a farmer in Glenmoor, Manitoba. He says in part:

> In our own case we are not quite eligible for P.F.A. yet we have had to and must still buy feed, so acreage payments would be most welcome and we would thank the government sincerely if they came through.

That is the attitude, and I may say it is the attitude of the farmers whether they support this party or the opposition. It is also significant that this measure is receiving the unanimous support of the opposition. My only disappointment is that they seem to be giving this support somewhat grudgingly; I do not feel they like to give credit to this government for anything constructive that it ever does.

We have heard speeches from members of the Liberal party which seem to have gone off at a tangent. That is understandable, because that party does not have a single member from the areas to which these payments would apply. There has been a lot of talk about parity prices and so forth. I should merely like to state in this connection that if the government had brought in a measure based on parity prices a most difficult situation would arise with respect to those farmers who had no crop to sell. When a crop fails, that is the time they would need help most, and this is the type of situation that the present measure is designed to remedy. The hon. member for Assiniboia has been saying that these payments should be made only to those who have suffered from drought.

Mr. Argue: On a point of order, I never made any such statement.

Mr. Slogan: It is very hard to understand the hon. member for Assiniboia, because he leads us into such a morass that I took it from his remarks, which I read carefully, that he was trying to suggest that there are farmers who will get the payment and who will not need it.

Mr. Argue: That is true.

Mr. Slogan: My understanding is that P.F.A.A. does cover this situation and that the present measure provides for a supplementary payment which will help those who suffered from the drought. We must remember that those who did reap some harvest or who are in diversified farming also need assistance. In my own area of mixed farms this assistance is most welcome. In Springfield only 52 per cent of the grain produced is sold. The rest is used for feed and seed. Sometimes, indeed, we have to buy feed. Therefore, if we had introduced a measure based on the price of wheat the benefit would not really have been as great as it is under a scheme of acreage payments.

I have the figures here to demonstrate this contention, but the argument is somewhat extraneous and I shall not go into it at this time because, as I said, I do not wish to prolong the debate. I merely wish to compliment the government on ironing out some of the difficulties which were experienced by a number of farmers when the two previous acreage payments were being made. Those of us who represent rural areas should not now be faced with problems from farmers who did not have their wheat permits or were experiencing difficulty in qualifying for these payments. This measure is welcome by all the farmers in the west. Regardless of what the opposition may say, it is a big help and it is coming at a time when the farmers who are preparing for their spring seeding and other spring work will welcome it most heartily.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Carter: Before the item carries I wish to ask two or three brief questions for the purpose of clarification. Last Friday, as reported at page 246 of Hansard—and I am reading from the second paragraph of the first column—the minister stated as follows:

> —and it is estimated that approximately 235,000 payments will be made.

My first question is this. Is it possible for a farmer to receive more than one payment or is the number of payments the same as the number of farmers? My second question is this. How many farmers actually received payment last year, and how many of the farmers expected to receive payment this year will also receive payment under the P.F.R.A.?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No one received them last year.

Mr. Carter: I mean in 1960.

Mr. Argue: The hon. member does not mean P.F.R.A. He means P.F.A.A.

Mr. Carter: Yes, P.F.A.A.

An hon. Member: What is the difference?

Mr. Harkness: In reply to the second question as to the number of people who received payments previously, may I say that in 1958 the number was 234,162. I put these figures on record on Friday. The hon. member will find them given in Hansard. In 1960 the number was 227,710. The present estimate of the department is the one that I gave.

As to the matter of who might receive these payments and whether or not a man might receive more than one, the answer is no.

The maximum payment to any one individual is $200, no matter how much land he has or whether he has two or three parcels of land. In respect of the first payment that was made, there were a few individuals who had a piece of land here and another piece of land somewhere else and who had a permit book for each one. As a result they received two cheques. When the whole thing was checked afterwards they were called upon to return the extra cheque which they had received. The scheme is based on the fact of a man receiving one payment only.

Mr. Carter: So that the number of payments is the same as the number of farmers, is it?

Mr. Harkness: Not necessarily. You might have a considerable number of farmers who do not have permit books. For example, consider the ranchers who have no cultivated acreage. They would not be eligible to get permit books.

Mr. Carter: Did the minister say how many farmers who may receive payment under this acreage grant or under this acreage payment item also receive payment under the P.F.A.A.? Is it possible for a farmer to receive both payments?

Mr. Harkness: Yes. As a matter of fact, a large number of farmers will receive both payments. I have not here the figures as to the number of people who have already been paid and to who it is estimated will receive P.F.A.A. payments this year. I can get those figures for the hon. member and send them to him some time in the future if he is interested in them. However, I have not them here at the moment, as this matter really has nothing to do with the item which is under discussion. Everybody who has received a P.F.A.A. payment will also, I believe, receive one of these payments.

Mr. Carter: I wish to thank the minister for the information he has given. It was the procedure in which I was interested, not the details. There is only one more question I wish to ask and it is this. Is there any sort of means test in connection with this payment, or is it paid to a farmer whether he needs it or not?

Mr. Harkness: No, there is no means test at all in connection with this payment. It is paid to every person who has a permit book.

Mr. Carter: That is the only requirement?

Mr. Harkness: Yes.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall item 611 carry?

Mr. Argue: Just before the vote carries, I wish to say that I am sure western producers will be disappointed that the statement in the speech from the throne will not be more accurately fulfilled by an additional measure which would provide some benefits based on crop failures. The farm organizations have been asking for such a measure. The Acting Minister of Agriculture can say "Oh, no matter what we do, the hon. member for Assiniboia says, 'more'". I intend to keep on saying "more" so long as I think more is justified and so long as there is some support based on good evidence that such is the case.

The farm organizations have asked for supplementary payment based on crop failure. The national farmers' union came out last fall with the demand for a supplemental payment of $5 per acre to all farmers who had a crop failure as defined in the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, namely a yield of 12 bushels an acre or less, and that this $5 per acre payment should be based on half of the farmer's cultivated acreage up to 400 acres. In other words they were asking for a supplementary payment to a maximum of $1,000 in addition to the maximum payment under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. In other words they were asking for a maximum payment of $1,800 in time of crop failure.

The government's crop insurance scheme just is not working in adequate fashion at all. It is working to some extent in Manitoba. It has very limited application in Saskatchewan. The provincial government of Alberta so far has not seen fit to come into the scheme Under these circumstances I call on the government to take action to provide supplementary benefits to farmers who have suffered a crop failure and, by doing so, to fulfil the forecast in the speech from the throne.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 611 carry?

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

Special—

612. Contribution towards a special Newfoundland works program for fishing settlements that experienced income reduction resulting from decreased catches, $300,000.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall item 612 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Yes, Mr. Chairman. I intend to make a short statement in explanation of this vote.

As indicated in the wording of vote 612, this special work program in Newfoundland arose because the traditional method of inshore fishing was not fully effective in the past year. Over a widespread area of the coast, fishermen are dependant on the use of trap nets. This is a very successful method when the cod come close to shore. This year, for some unknown reason, the cod failed to follow their usual habits. Inshore fishermen were not in a position to go far out to sea to follow the fish, so their catch was substantially reduced.

This situation began to be apparent in the statistics for June and July, and in August a formal request for assistance was received from the fishermen's organization, namely the Newfoundland federation of fishermen, emphasizing their desire for a works program.

I think the fishermen's attitude should be commended in that what they were desirous of obtaining was a works program. These fishermen are a self-reliant, industrious group of people, and we were impressed with their request. As soon as the situation became clear, discussions were arranged in St. John's by officials of the federal Department of Fisheries with officials of the fishermen's federation and officials of the provincial government. This was followed by negotiations between the two governments through which agreement was reached to proceed with a twofold program of local work projects based on (1) taking maximum advantage of the municipal winter works incentive program which had been extended to include unorganized settlements for the first time and (2) special work projects in those fishing settlements where the fishermen had been unable to secure their normal production.

The joint federal-provincial program which has been undertaken will result in some $80,000 in additional work in fishing settlements under the regular municipal winter works incentive program and approximately $350,000 of work under the special program, the federal share of which is covered by this particular vote. The figure of $350,000 includes an estimated $50,000 to be contributed by the government of Newfoundland, which agreed to meet 25 per cent of the labour cost of this special program.

Under this program special work projects have been or are being carried out in 415 fishing settlements on the east and southeast coasts of the province and in southern Labrador. Some 12,000 fishermen live in these settlements. The total expenditure of approximately $430,000 makes up for over one third of the decrease in income from fishing compared with 1960.

Responsibility for local administration of the program has been assumed by the provincial government. Reports coming to me indicate that a wide variety of local projects ranging from road extensions to improvements to slipways for small fishing vessels have been going forward.

If the committee is interested, I might give two or three examples. For instance, at Bonavista there is an item of $4,925 for the preparation of a public playground for children and repair of the road to Cape Bonavista lighthouse which is an attraction for tourists. At Grate's Cove there is an amount of $3,150 for the building of roads to the public slipway and the repair and ditching of roads throughout the community. There is an amount of $4,550 at Petty Harbour for the widening and repair of roads throughout the general area and the erection of guard rails and retaining walls along the Yellow river. At Seldom and Little Seldom there is an item of $4,200 for the reconditioning of local roads and the construction of a new road to tie in a number of new settlements. At Fogo there is an item of $5,425 for repairing and widening of local roads and the filling in of a creek near the ocean which has been used as a disposal area for garbage and sewage. The latter project is being done at the suggestion of the medical health officer. At Change Islands there is an amount of $4,270 for brush cutting for a snowmobile road.

I could give other examples, but I do not think it is necessary for me to take up any more of the time of the committee. However, if the debate goes on for several days, as it did on the previous item, I should like to say that I will demand the right to hold forth perhaps at considerable length on several occasions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, just before the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo begins, in view of the geographical distribution of the house I wonder whether the Minister of Fisheries would mind moving somewhere nearer the middle of the house for the benefit of those of us who are slightly hard of hearing.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a few questions to the minister arising out of the statement he has just made. If I understood the minister correctly, he said that the present winter works program which is being carried out, and for which this item is intended to provide the necessary funds, is being carried out at the suggestion of the Newfoundland federation of fishermen. It was not my understanding that the federation of fishermen requested this particular kind of program. I thought what they had in mind was a marine works program. I wish to ask the minister whether any consideration was given to substituting a marine works program for the present roads program, or even including it in the present works program, and for what reason that was not done. Second, is the program that is now being carried out related in any way to the report which the minister received from Mr. Ian McArthur of the Department of Fisheries, who was sent to Newfoundland to make a survey of the particular needs of the fishermen of our province? I should like to know what recommendations, if any, Mr. McArthur made.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): To answer the last question first, if I may, this item and the program are based almost entirely on the suggestions that were made by Mr. McArthur and the officials of the provincial government and others in Newfoundland with whom he had discussions. All things considered, it was felt by the officials and the government that this program would most nearly meet the problem.

There are a number of marine works projects going on under the regular program of the Department of Public Works which are in addition to this provision, of course, but such programs as marine works are fairly large items. The hon. member is far more fully aware than I am of the difficulties involved in trying to make work available to people who are spread along a great coast line, and these larger projects are carried out in isolated places. We were trying to find a program which would have application almost everywhere, because naturally there was little relationship between the catch in any particular area and what works programs could be effectively carried out there. The catch was down in areas where there are already new wharves and in some cases where we have built community stages. It would not be feasible, of course, to build another stage or anything else that was not needed in that area. We were trying to find a plan that would have wide application and would be beneficial.

It has been suggested that wharves and larger projects would be more suitable, but the difficulty is that these large projects would have the effect of providing a very desirable amount of employment in one particular area where they were being built, but they would provide no benefit at all for fishermen who were some distance away from them. We are trying to evolve a program with a much wider application.

Mr. Carter: I think the minister misunderstood the main point of my question. I quite understand that you cannot build wharves everywhere. If a community already has a wharf you do not build another just to make work for somebody. This is not what I had in mind. What I had in mind, and I thought I stated it clearly, was this. Why not include that type of program in this winter works scheme for communities where it can be done? This was the question I had in mind. However, marine works have been excluded even from communities where they are needed and could be usefully carried out. I should like the minister to clarify that if he can.

While I am on my feet I have a couple of more questions which perhaps I should put at this time. Was any consideration given to extending the same principle of payments to the fishermen that was incorporated in the acreage payments to farmers which we have just voted? Was any thought given to using the administrative machinery of the unemployment insurance commission to distribute the funds directly to the fishermen?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Consideration was given to the general idea that the hon. member mentions but it was found not to have practical application, because the situation of farmers and fishermen is entirely different. It is true they have many things in common. They are both primary producers of food. However, when you have said that you have gone about as far as you can go in making a valid comparison between the situation of fishermen and farmers. In the case of fishermen it is more difficult to measure the amount of effort or equipment used in attempting to catch fish than it is in the case of a farmer where the extent of a man's operation and his industry are there for all to see. I might be missing the point the hon. member has, but I must say that this situation was taken into consideration.

I neglected to answer a previous question, but the request from the federation of fishermen was for a work program, and they gave a considerable list of suggested schemes, including the types that are covered by this vote.

Mr. Carter: This principle of extending equal treatment to all Canadians, Mr. Chairman, is to me a sound one. The minister has not said anything as yet to convince me that it is impossible to extend the same principle to distressed fishermen that we have applied to relieve the needs of distressed farmers. We have in front of us today a sheet of further supplementary estimates which contains four items. The first two of these items are allocations to relieve distress. The first item, the one with which we have just dealt, is to relieve the needs of distressed farmers. The one we are discussing now is to relieve the needs of distressed fishermen. This sheet itself bears concrete evidence of the discrimination that is taking place.

I should like to deal with this discrimination under four headings. The first heading is the reason for it. The reason given by the minister on Friday, and on subsequent occasions since, for making acreage payments to farmers was to supplement their income. He did not make any reference at all to the amount of effort they put forth or anything like that. All that was required was a permit book and 200 acres of land and they could get $200. It was purely a measure to compensate for the low income which has resulted from the vagaries of nature over which the farmers had no control whatever.

Perhaps it would be worth-while to put on the record the statement the minister made on Friday in that connection. I am reading now, Mr. Chairman, from page 245 of Hansard for January 26, 1962: The minister had listed the four reasons for making acreage payments to farmers, and then he went on to say this:

> This year there is a very important additional reason why a payment of this kind should be made. It is to be found in the reduced farm income, particularly of people in certain areas of western Canada due to the drought which took place there last year. This drought in the long run did not prove as devastating and serious as at one time was believed would be the case, but nevertheless it did have very serious effects which are particularly apparent in the income position of many farmers in western Canada. How serious that is can be shown by comparing the average wheat yield this year with that of previous years. During the past crop year the average wheat yield is estimated to have been 10.4 bushels per acre, whereas for the previous five years it was 19.7 bushels per acre. In other words, this year's yield was not very much more than half of what had been secured on the average in the previous five years. This gives a good indication of the situation in which many farmers will find themselves, and demonstrates the necessity of assistance in the form proposed.

Well, that is a very clear statement, Mr. Chairman, as to the reason for these payments. The need applies identically in the case of the fishermen. They are suffering from reduced income, just the same as the farmers. They have to live; they have children to feed, families to support. They have the identical needs of the farmers. In addition to that, they have to make some provision in order to be in a position to continue their occupation when the season opens.

There is one important difference in the case of the farmers. The minister stated that their income was down almost half because of the poor crop yield. In other words the crop this year is little better than half what it would be in a average year but, in the case of many fishermen, it is much worse than that because they had no crop yield at all. I know many of them in my own riding whose crop this year is only about 25 per cent of what it was last year, and it must be remembered that last year was a poor year. The percentage would be less than that if we were to compare last year's yield with the average over the past five years, as was done in the case of the farmers.

Fishermen have as great a claim to aid as the farmers and I believe, when distress is to be relieved, compensation for the fishermen should be on exactly the same basis as it is for farmers. To treat fishermen differently is tantamount to discrimination. The sheet I hold in my hand gives evidence of discrimination in the form in which the assistance is to be paid. In the case of the farmers we have a very special measure of assistance, particularly designed for them, and with no strings attached.

When I am speaking on the subject I should like to point out to my hon. friends that this asistance is not the only aid being given to the farmers. It comes on top of other assistance which they can receive by way of Prairie Farm Assistance Act grants and other grants. But, so far as fishermen are concerned, there are no other payments by which their income can be supplemented. This is the only one; but when payments are made to farmers we do not include that aid in an expanded works program. We do not provide it in such a way that it would apply equally to small prairie town merchants and to labourers. The measure is applicable to farmers, and farmers only. On the other hand, in the case of fishermen the aid for them has to be fitted into some sort of winter works program, not specifically designed for fishermen and which cannot be administered in a way that will benefit fishermen alone.

The third discrimination which appears in this sheet is the amount. A farmer may receive up to a maximum of $200, in addition to other payments under other farm legislation. However, while $300,000 is provided for fishermen it is conditional upon the provincial government also making payments. The acreage payments to farmers are not conditional on anything done by the provincial governments in the prairie provinces, and I would like to know why fishermen are singled out for such treatment.

The $300,000 being made available for fishermen is contingent upon a contribution of 25 per cent of the labour content of the program being made by the government of Newfoundland, and that government must also complete the rest of the usual roads maintenance program, which will cost $80,000 from the middle of October. Thus, the federal government is providing $300,000 on condition that the provincial government puts up $80,000 and $50,000. All these conditions are attached before a fisherman can get one cent. But even when these conditions are fulfilled what will he get? Our premier has worked it out at about $20 per fisherman simply because this $300,000 is not all to be spent on labour. It is for roads, bridges and some of the other things the minister mentioned this afternoon. Materials have to be bought out of that sum and so the amount a fisherman will get will perhaps be around $20, to meet the needs of his family for the whole of the winter.

There is a further, additional discrimination because when we look at the first item in the supplementary estimates we see that the government itself takes full responsibility for the administration of the payments to farmers. It states:

> Payments to western grain producers to be distributed on the following basis, namely, $1 per cultivated acre up to a maximum of 200 acres per farm in accordance with regulations of the governor in council.

However, when it comes to relieving distressed fishermen the federal government takes no responsibility for the administration of the fund. It is to be administered in the best way possible. The minister pointed out the difficulties however when he said the $300,000 has to be spent in hundreds of settlements scattered around a 4,000 mile coast line. Since the government takes responsibility for administering aid to distressed farmers why can it not take the same responsibility for administering aid to distressed fishermen? Why has it refused to take that responsibility? I would like the minister to answer that question when he replies.

In his introductory speech I understood him to say that the winter works program is really the suggestion of the fishermen's federation, and that everybody in Newfoundland is in agreement with it. I am sure the government received advice from provincial authorities pointing out that such a type of winter works program is not really suitable because most of the settlements in question cannot carry out that kind of program in the winter months. It just cannot be done, and if equipment has to be used then the labour content is whittled down.

There is no administrative machinery to administer this grant. Some 575 settlements had road work done last year and I presume this item is related to the moneys already expended in those settlements. As I said already, most of these settlements are isolated and are scattered around a 4,000 mile coast line. There is no administrative machinery, yet the federal government expects somebody in the provincial government to take responsibility for administering this aid.

In addition to the difficulties of administration there is the further difficulty of discriminating between one fisherman and another as to which should receive work. In other words, somebody in a settlement has to devise a means test in order to be able to say to one fisherman "you earned enough this summer, your catch was not too bad so you cannot get in on this program", and to another fisherman "your catch was down and you are entitled to participate." In other words, somebody has to select people in the community to work on a winter works program and refuse work to others. Not only that, but there is the difficulty of deciding borderline cases, when the fisherman is perhaps a borderline case and is in need, or perhaps a logger or labourer who has been out of work and not able to meet the needs of his family. These people need this assistance just as much as the fisherman who has had a poor catch. But the government washes its hands completely of any responsibility of administering this fund. It throws the whole problem into the lap of the provincial government, the municipal authorities, the local roads boards or whoever is willing to accept it. It does not lay down any direction for them with regard to the way this money is to be administered.

I wish to say to the minister that I am not against this item of $300,000. It is better than nothing. I suppose even $20 will buy something. However, when you break it down to a family it is only about 13 cents a day per family, or about 3 cents per head per family, and I do not know what they will get out of it. That is what it amounts to. When we contrast that with the way we help farmers, it defies words to describe the comparison.

An hon. Member: Watch yourself.

Mr. Carter: Yes, I will watch myself. My blood pressure is getting up. Certainly the time has come when we should not discriminate between one group of Canadians and another. When we make that kind of discrimination between groups that are in distress, in my opinion it is a most shameful thing to do.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I regret that the item before the committee has no direct application to the fishing industry on the west coast. However, because all of us in this house should concern ourselves as much as possible with matters affecting other sections of the country and the economy I should like to make one or two comments with respect to this item, even though it is far removed from my constituency and British Columbia and is in fact confined to the province of Newfoundland.

During the last couple of days we have been listening to the debate which has just concluded regarding the $1 an acre payment to western grain farmers. In view of that debate I felt sure the Minister of Fisheries would revise his thinking and introduce an additional supplementary estimate based upon, say, $5 per foot per fishing vessel or something of that nature, in order that the assistance given from the public treasury to some of our people in the basics of farming and fishing would bear some equitability.

The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo dealt quite extensively with the theme that the item before us represents, in a number of aspects, an approach to discrimination as between fishermen and farmers. I agree with him in this regard. However, I think we must extend this concept of discrimination to types of fishermen and fishermen in different locales. I say this because certainly the salmon fishermen in British Columbia for two consecutive years, and especially two seasons ago, were disastrously hit by poor salmon runs, a poor catch and the like.

One of the worst salmon fishing seasons in the last 50 or 60 years took place two years ago on the west coast and many of the salmon fishermen there—this industry composes a large section of the economy of the province —went deeply into debt. Many of them went completely bankrupt because they just could not stand the economic situation that resulted from the poor salmon season.

We agreed to pay $1 an acre to western farmers because of drought conditions; but if drought conditions affect the salmon industry, the government tends to disregard the fact, although it is substantially the same sort of condition. Salmon fishermen were hit by drought on the coast when spawning creeks or salmon creeks dried up because of lack of rain. When this occurs the Department of Fisheries steps in and closes the season to allow for the greater escapement of spawning salmon upstream so that two or four years hence on the return we might expect a larger salmon run than would otherwise be the case if we engaged in catching a large number of salmon.

This is a deliberate action on the part of the Department of Fisheries on the west coast as a result of drought conditions that affect the income and the catch of fishermen out there. We do not see any indication of any concern, or of any approach either in the supplementary estimates before us or in any of the main estimates that I can ever recall participating in studying, for any special consideration for fishermen on the west coast of this nation. I think this is also a form of discrimination.

The herring industry on the coast was in the doldrums for a couple of years. In addition to the salmon industry, the whaling fleet has been tied up as a result of several factors, and the income of the people following these particular fisheries of salmon, herring and whaling has not been too good in the past few years. I do not wish to complain too much about this because I realize it is not specifically covered by the item before us. We are concerned with contributions toward a special Newfoundland winter works program. I only mention that similar conditions existed in the province of British Columbia in other fisheries and would plead with the minister to take into account these conditions which exist on the west coast of Canada as well as those which exist on the east coast, in order that some balance and equitability may come into play in considering what assistance and help may be given from the public treasury to these primary producers.

Last session, I believe, we had some discussion about the attitude developing amongst west coast fishermen toward what relatively speaking, is considered to be an inordinately large degree of concern by the government with respect to fishermen on the east coast. We found that in the past the Fisheries Prices Support Act applied almost entirely to east coast fisheries products. To my knowledge it has never applied to the west coast. We found that there was special assistance to the Newfoundland bait service, to the east coast salt fishery, special assistance with respect to the construction of fishing boats, and the like. All this leaves the west coast fisherman, as has been explained to me, with wonderment in his mind as to whether or not he is being discriminated against. He is not complaining about the fact that this help and assistance is being given to his fellow fishermen on the east coast, but merely concerned as to whether or not this represents a form of discrimination.

I say to the minister, as did the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, that if it is considered fair and equitable that the public treasury should assist western grain producers because of drought conditions to the extent of $1 an acre, I think it is a bit of an insult to give the fishermen in Newfoundland an amount of $300,000. It is an even greater insult to disregard entirely the salmon fishermen of the west coast who have been in equal difficulties as a result of a poor harvest of fish.

Mr. Batten: It does seem to me that there is a good deal of disparity between the treatment we have seen accorded to western farmers in the last two days of our debate and the treatment which is now accorded to the fishermen of Newfoundland.

Let me say at once that I am not objecting in any way to the assistance which has been given to western farmers under the first item. I think most people in Canada will recognize that the past summer, as well as other summers of recent date, have been difficult times for farmers living in the three prairie provinces. Since these people are suppliers of food engaged in a primary industry I think it is fair in such circumstances that the federal government should help them on the grounds that their normal way of making a living has been interfered with by difficulties not of their own making. The Acting Minister of Agriculture used the argument the other day that if the western farmer were assisted during a period when his income was below normal, such assistance would eventually spread out to all parts of the country and the country would be better off in consequence of such assistance having been given. I think that is a fair argument. But if that argument is fair as applied to farmers who work in the three prairie provinces it is surely equally fair when applied to the fishermen of Newfoundland. At the moment I cannot understand the difference between the payments accorded to the fishermen of Newfoundland and those which have been accorded to the western farmers. Perhaps the minister will explain to me later where the difference lies.

Let us look at the amount themselves. I recognize that amounts and figures in themselves do not tell the whole story. Nevertheless, they have some significance. In the first place, as the minister told us the other day, about a quarter of a million farmers—not quite as many, according to the figures he used—are to be paid a total of something over $40 million, or an average of $178 per farmer. In Newfoundland, this amount of $300,000 will mean the payment of about $20 per fisherman under the present scheme. If that latter payment were accorded to the western farmers the vote which we have just approved would have amounted to approximately $5 million instead of $40 million. Let me put it in another way. The population of the three prairie provinces is approximately seven times as great as that of Newfoundland. If $300,000 is to be given to Newfoundland on a per capita basis—I am not arguing that it should be done in that way—then that sum would correspond to a little more than $2 million for the western farmer. These are just ordinary figures which do not tell the whole story but they do show the disparity between the treatment of both sides, and it is a disparity which I think the minister ought to explain.

There are other disturbing features about the plan which has been set up to aid the Newfoundland fishermen. In the first place, under the present scheme the Newfoundland fisherman has to go out and earn the amount of money he is intended to receive under this program. I have no objection to that. But as far as the western farmer is concerned, the money will go to him, according to the minister today, whether he is in need of it or not. The farmer concerned will receive the money because he has a permit book and because he has a certain number of acres under cultivation. True it is, according to the minister, that a number of prairie farmers had their crops reduced by 50 per cent during the past year.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): May I just remind the hon. member of this: did the acting minister not say that the total crop was down by nearly 50 per cent? I have it right here.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right. That is what my hon. friend just said.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): It is a very different thing.

Mr. Batten: A different thing from what, may I ask the hon. member for St. John's West?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): A different thing from what you said. The hon. member said some were down by 50 per cent. The minister said yesterday as reported at page 314 of Hansard:

> I said that drought conditions throughout the west as a whole had resulted in little more than a half crop, and that applied all throughout western Canada.

Mr. Batten: The minister's knowledge of statistics amazes me. If the average crop brought in by the western farmer is 50 per cent of the normal crop then obviously some farmers were down more than 50 per cent and some not as much as 50 per cent. When we say that the average crop was down by 50 per cent we are saying that a large number brought in a crop of far less than 50 per cent as compared with the year before. Surely, that is understandable.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): That is not what you said.

Mr. Batten: If the hon. member for St. John's West will sit in his seat and allow me to say what I want to say he would find out exactly what I have in mind and what I intended to say. I am very surprised that the hon. gentleman should be standing up now trying to say something for the fishermen of Newfoundland. I hope he will.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Give me a chance.

Mr. Batten: Another thing is this: The money paid to the western farmer is paid by cheque. The money paid to the Newfoundland fishermen has to be worked for. In addition, the money paid to the western farmer has nothing to do with the provincial government. However, as far as Newfoundland is concerned, the province has to make a contribution, otherwise the federal government does not pay anything. One of the strings attached to the payment made to Newfoundland is that the province must make some contribution. I think this is a significant difference.

One of the most serious differences is the fact that when the money was paid to the western farmer the whole plan was administered by the federal government. I shall not deny that administering this plan with respect to the fishermen of Newfoundland may be difficult. However, it might well be difficult to administer it in respect of the western farmers. I do not understand why the administration of this program in Newfoundland should be placed upon the shoulders of Newfoundland officials.

There are many things which could have been done in some places—not in all places—which would have produced a much greater benefit than is likely to be produced by the present scheme.

When the minister spoke a short while ago he said that much of the plan had been concentrated around the east and southeast coasts. My riding includes the northern section of St. Barbe and there we have many small settlements which even yet have no wharf or breakwater. I think the most sensible assistance which could be given to these people would be to enable them to go into the woods and cut timber so that in the spring they might build their wharf or breakwater. I recognize part of the argument used by the minister, namely that this plan would work only in some places and give work to only a few fishermen. But in many cases these are the very people who are affected by the crop failure among the fishermen of Newfoundland. I believe they could be assisted to a greater extent by some such plan. I can think of many places along the west coast where the fishermen would have benefited greatly if they had been given the opportunity to engage in some public works project rather than the one that is now recommended by the Minister of Fisheries. When the minister replies I hope he will tell us how many fishermen are concerned in this plan, according to the survey which he has made in Newfoundland; where these fishermen live or where these places are; and how the fishermen are going to be assisted as well under the plan he has proposed as they would have been assisted under a plan similar to that which has been proposed for the western farmers.

Mr. Granger: I should like to associate myself with the remarks made by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo and the hon. member for Humber-St. George's. Previously I have contended—and I thought my contention was a reasonable one—that the Canadian fisherman should receive the same treatment as that received by the Canadian farmer. It seems to me to be quite obvious that such is not the case. As a matter of fact, as can be seen from the sheet which is now on our desks, a comparison between what is written under "Agriculture" and what is written under "Fisheries" would seem to point out that a great gulf exists between these two producers; I refer to the farmer who produces grain and the fisherman who produces fish. Nevertheless both are essential to the Canadian economy. Both are engaged in basic industries. Each in his respective area is equally important.

The case for the Newfoundland fisherman, or perhaps I had better say "the Canadian fisherman", in my opinion has never been given the serious consideration it deserves. There may perhaps be on the part of those in government a lack of knowledge of the real needs. Without going into the whys and wherefores, certainly the fact is—and it is more apparent today than ever before—that the Canadian fisherman is not getting the same consideration as the Canadian farmer. His problem is not looked upon in the same light. The whole concept of his needs evidently is different from that of the needs of other producers.

In connection with the works program I should like to say that I am one of those who believe that a program of marine works and a program of supplying material for fishermen, would be better than the one which has been decided upon. The minister pointed out —and quite reasonably, I would say—that large marine works such as community stages would mean a considerable amount of work in one locality and none in others, and that there would not be the same spreading of work. This objection would hardly apply if small marine works were considered and if assistance in the way of material for fishermen to repair their traps, their nets and their stages were to be supplied.

I think the minister also said that it was difficult to assess a fisherman's property compared with a farmer's property. The fisherman's property consists of his boat, his trap, his stages and his flakes. They are all very real and tangible assets which can be seen and appraised. Small works have proven to be valuable to the fisherman. I refer to things such as small wharves, small landing docks or small breakwaters. These things require no argument to support them because it has been amply demonstrated over the years that where these works are supplied fishermen can carry on their vocation much better, that the fishing season is quite frequently lengthened and that the fishermen's activities are facilitated with the result that the income of the individual fisherman is increased.

If I may, I should like to mention community stages here and to say that this argument applies to them to an even greater degree. If there was one program which was wisely conceived, it was the community stage program. It has been a source of bitter disappointment to me that more of these stages are not being built at the present time.

As to fishermen's property may I say that, owing to the fact that their income was low during the past year, many fishermen will face the coming year with traps that are really unfit to use, engines that are not really serviceable and boats that badly need to be repaired, to say nothing of their stages, flakes and so on. It seems to me that if assistance were given to fishermen to purchase materials so that they could put their property in shape, they themselves supplying the labour, so that when the fishing season starts they could more efficiently prosecute the fishing, two extremely worthy objectives would be accomplished at the same time. Relief would be given to the extent that materials which they needed, and which they would not be obliged to buy, would be supplied to them thus saving their meagre cash, and production would be increased as they would face the fishing season with more adequate equipment with which to do their work.

Apart from everything else, it seems to me that a real chance has been missed to accomplish something worth while and at the same time to give relief to people who badly need it. The fact is that there are many fishermen—and I am speaking of my own riding—who this year had a very poor fishery; they suffered a real crop failure. They need the kind of assistance which would permit them to become self-sustaining, independent and, one would hope, prosperous citizens of Canada during the coming year.

I shall not repeat what the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo who spoke earlier said about a different approach or a different method of handling this relief, except to say that I agree entirely with what he said. However, I would say that the time must come when the Canadian fisherman is considered on a basis of equality with the Canadian farmer. His problems must be approached with the same attitude of mind. In the fisheries of Canada we have an industry which, although very old, is still very important and in many respects still shows amazing vitality. It is of benefit not merely to the fishermen themselves but to all of Canada. In the province of Newfoundland alone the industrial areas of Canada have a great captive market. It is to the benefit of Canada as a whole that the fisherman be given the recognition which he deserves. In asking for that I am not asking for special consideration. All I am asking is the ordinary consideration usually accorded to Canadian producers.

[Mr. Granger.]

Mr. Keays: Mr. Chairman, we have been listening to hon. members from Newfoundland plead the case in favour of their fishermen. Frankly, I cannot object to such a plea because the fishermen of my riding are in much the same situation. I believe that the problems of the Magdalen islands are quite similar to those in Newfoundland. The fishermen of Newfoundland catch a good run of salmon at a certain season of the year. When the cod run comes the fishing may be good for a short period of time but during recent years there has been a failure during two months of the fishing season. In my riding lobster fishing is the greatest revenue producer. However, the fishing season lasts only four to six weeks and in 1961 the season was shortened by three or four weeks because of the lateness of the arrival of spring.

However, having heard members from Newfoundland speak about their problems, I should like to refer them to the last report of the Department of Fisheries where I find the following on page 89 with respect to the Atlantic coast fisheries:

> With the exception of Quebec, all Atlantic provinces registered increases in the volume of landings.

On page 90 there are these words:

> Newfoundland small-boat fishermen started the summer season with record landings in May and June but by midsummer the entire situation changed and catches began to dwindle.

Where I differ from them is—

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I wonder whether I could ask the hon. member what year that is?

Mr. Keays: This is 1960.

Mr. Pickersgill: We are talking about 1961.

Mr. Keays: I believe that I heard the same plea from the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in 1961 as in 1960.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, it was in 1958, and I will have something further to say about that.

Mr. Keays: The solutions to the problems which have been advanced by the hon. members we have heard have involved the construction of stages, the construction of ports, wharves and so on. If we are going to have the same situation occur every year, we are soon going to run short of land on which to build wharves and these other projects. In my opinion the solution does not lie in the construction of these projects but rather in the finding of new species of fish and the development of new methods of catching and processing the product and improving its quality.

I remember speaking on this matter last year. At that time I pointed out to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that if the weather was not favourable in Newfoundland for the drying of codfish the fish could be sent to the Gaspe peninsula where the weather was more favourable and the cod could be sold as Gaspe cured cod, which brings the best price on the market.

Mr. Pickersgill: That would not help fishermen much who caught none this year.

Mr. Keays: No, but those who did have some catch would certainly be better off so far as revenue is concerned. On the Magdalen islands there is an investment by the fishermen of approximately $2½ million with a fishing revenue at market prices of approximately 3¼ million resulting in revenue to the fishermen of $1¾ million. Seventy five per cent of that amount is earned by 60 per cent of the fishermen leaving 25 per cent for the other 40 per cent of the fishermen. To put it in another way, 40 per cent of the fishermen of the Magdalen islands have a revenue of approximately $600 per year each. Surely we will not have to move that 40 per cent of the population to some other area of Canada as was suggested in the Gordon report.

In the province of Quebec the activities of the federal Department of Fisheries are limited to consumer matters. In 1959 the inspection services were taken over by the federal government. I have here an item from the Fundy Fisherman reporting the following statement by a bacteriologist of the Icelandic fisheries laboratory:

> There is no doubt but that the system of fish inspection used in Canada has no peer anywhere in the world. In fact, the inspection techniques now being used in Iceland are based primarily on Canadian standards.

This is one contribution that has been made by this government to the fisheries of this country. There are many problems to be dealt with because in the province of Quebec a provincial department administers the fisheries. If they cannot find a solution to the problems, there is no doubt that the federal government, while not taking over the administration of the fisheries, should take the lead in co-operation with the fisheries department of that province in studying ways and means to improve the revenue of the fishermen.

In this regard I should like to point out that in the region of the Magdalen islands there are prolific herring grounds and in the spring of the year tremendous schools of herring gather around the islands. Unfortunately, however, because of weather conditions and other reasons the herring move off shore some 10 or 12 miles or possibly more. During the herring run many boats come from the provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island to pick up herring in the Magdalen islands and during the few weeks of the run the revenue to the fishermen is tremendous. I think there is a wonderful opportunity of being able to increase the revenue of the fishermen by further study with regard to the summer habitat of the herring and the development of additional technical knowledge or by the erection of structures which would give the fishermen of the Magdalen islands the opportunity to know where the herring are, so that those who cannot earn sufficient revenue from the other groundfish might pursue the herring fishery for a longer time.

As hon. members know, in British Columbia herring fishing is an important industry, but in 1960 there was a sharp decline in the market value of the product which practically forced the closure of the industry there. However, the fishermen, the buyers and others got together, examined the situation and decided it was much better to have half a cake than no cake at all. The herring fishery in that region, the stoppage of which had naturally affected the livelihood of many people, was reopened and the fishermen harvested approximately 150,000 tons giving them a revenue of $4.5 million. This $4.5 million was definitely a great help to the west coast fishermen. I am sure that if we gave this problem further study we could improve the income position of the fishermen of the Magdalen islands tremendously.

There are probably many other ways in which these fishermen could be helped. As yet, I have not met anyone who has been able to apply the same system by which the western farmers are helped to the fishermen of this country. If anyone comes along with a proper suggestion, then I would be the first one to support him in the hope that payments such as were made to the farmers could be made available to the fishermen of the east coast, especially those of the Magdalen islands who are so seriously affected by the lack of fish.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. member if that is a promise?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): There is one thing I want to say at the outset and that is I believe every hon. member of this committee would have as his objective complete fairness and justice as between all segments of the economy of this country. Some members of the committee, however, are not willing to concede that this statement applies to members on the government benches. I want to say that a fair comparison of the situation cannot be achieved by comparing things that are not comparable. You cannot arrive at any basis for a just estimate if you compare horses with rabbits and start from that premise.

First, I want to say a word about the situation so far as production is concerned. There have been comparisons made on the basis of these two items in the estimates and it was stated the Newfoundland fishermen were being discriminated against. Statements were made to the effect that this vote is an insult to the fishermen when $42 million is being provided for western farmers. I should like to point out that for the whole area covered by the acreage payments, production is down about 50 per cent. This production has an aggregate value of about $400 million, in very rough figures. The item that has been voted is about 10 per cent of that.

In the case of the Newfoundland fishery, taking it as a whole, the income of fishermen in 1961 as compared with the average for the previous three years is down 1 per cent.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about 1960?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I am talking about 1961 as compared with the average for the previous three years.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit me a factual question on that? He made a comparison of the western farmers' situation between 1960 and 1961. Would he take the same two years for Newfoundland?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I am not sure that I have those statistics.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the comparison.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): This basis would vary the deduction somewhat, but it would only be in degree. I should like to point out that—

Mr. Carter: Would the minister permit another question on that same point?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Yes.

Mr. Carter: When the minister says production—I thought he said it was down by 1 per cent—

Mr. MacLean (Queens): That is the value.

Mr. Carter: It is down 1 per cent in value, but is that the total cash including fish landed by draggers? Does that figure relate only to the shore fishermen?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): It is income per fisherman.

Mr. Carter: That includes all fishermen?

[Mr. MacLean (Queens).]

Mr. MacLean (Queens): That is right.

Mr. Carter: Does the minister not have the figures for the shore fishermen, the ones we are supporting?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I have the figures by areas, these are statistical areas, and area A was down compared with the previous three year average by 16 per cent. I shall name these areas around the coast of Newfoundland clockwise. Area B was down 3 per cent; C was down 10 per cent; D was up 14 per cent; E was down 25 per cent; F was down 5 per cent; G was up 10 per cent; H was up 6 per cent while area I was up 23 per cent. I am now getting into Humber-St. George's, although I may still be in Burin-Burgeo. Area J was up 69 per cent; K was up 21 per cent; L was up 7 per cent; M was up 8 per cent; N was up 11 per cent and area O was down 23 per cent.

Now, in addition to that, although this has very little direct bearing on the situation from which the fishermen suffered last summer, I am happy to report and I think all hon. members would be happy to know, that at the present time fresh fish are bringing the highest price on record along the south coast of Newfoundland. Certainly, it is the highest price since union with Newfoundland. I give hon. members full credit for sticking up for their constituents and for the industry in which those constituents are engaged. I do not object to this. However, when they say, let us treat the fishermen in exactly the same way as we treat the farmers, I should like them to think of some of the things they would be forfeiting as well as some of the things they would be gaining before they take that step.

Mr. Pickersgill: Like P.F.A.A.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Would the hon. gentleman suggest that fishermen should not be entitled to salt assistance, to unemployment insurance, to a subsidized bait service or to a subsidized vessel building program under which this government has increased the rate of assistance from $155 a ton to $250 a ton? There are no comparable things done for farmers. I am willing to admit right away that, on the other hand, there are things that are done for farmers that are not done for fishermen. It is not all one-sided.

I may have misunderstood one hon. gentleman who spoke previously, but I thought he objected to us requiring a contribution from the provincial government. I must say this contribution was not a requirement, it was a voluntary contribution. In this connection, I should like to quote what the premier of Newfoundland said in connection with the circumstances under which this program was evolved.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman quote the messages right from the beginning so we can have the whole sequence of events and ascertain how this came about?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): This would be very involved. I am not sure I have a complete file with me. There is a thick file of correspondence, and it would take at least the rest of this day if I were to read it.

Premier Smallwood had this to say, as reported in the daily News of December 1, and this is a direct quotation:

The discussion—

—referring to the discussion taking place between officials of the federal Department of Fisheries and the government of Newfoundland——was very thorough and exhaustive and was conducted in a spirit of cordial co-operation, all present sharing a strong desire to work out the details as quickly as possible so that the benefits of the scheme may be brought to the fishermen with the least possible delay.

He went on to say:

In connection with this extra amount of $300,000 the government of Canada have accepted the offer of the Newfoundland government, made by me a few weeks ago, to pay 25 per cent of the total labour cost of the winter works projects that are carried out with this money. A considerable number of federal marine works and other public works projects have been carried out around the coast line of Newfoundland, and some are still in course of construction, and it is hardly necessary to say these special winter works will not, for the most part, be carried out in places where these larger jobs have gone ahead or are now going ahead.

The Canadian Department of Fisheries and the Department of Labour and our own Newfoundland department of fisheries and department of highways are working closely together, in the friendliest spirit possible, to get the whole scheme working without delay so that the benefits may be felt as soon as possible.

Now my department, in perfectly good faith and trying to do the best thing possible for the fishermen in Newfoundland, and trying to evolve a program which would be just, as compared to programs that are evolved for other parts of the country, not only for other industries but for other parts of the fishing industry, has evolved this scheme.

In that connection it is interesting to note that the hon. member for Skeena, in his contribution to this debate, helped to point out how very difficult it is to be absolutely fair and to be sure that justice is done to all. He said that the fishermen in his riding consider certain things are done for fishermen on the east coast which are not done for the fishermen on the west coast and he maintained that the government is prejudiced in favour of fishermen on the east coast. I do not think that is so because, comparing fishermen with farmers, when you compare fishermen on the east coast with fishermen on the west coast you have two different situations to consider. There are vast amounts of money spent for fish ladders and that sort of thing for fishermen on the west coast, to make it possible for the salmon harvest there to be continued, while moneys are not spent to the same extent on the east coast.

Having said that, I now turn to the problem of fair administration. It is fair to say that the provincial government through its municipal roads system which is already set up in all of these areas, and which functions every year, was the most reasonable avenue to reach into all these little communities. There is also the problem that there is a great variation between one little area and the next, and even between one fisherman and the next. Therefore the local people who are on the ground would be best able to say where jobs were most needed. Such people located on the coast would know the situation much better than any official from Ottawa.

A scheme was suggested by hon. members whereby needy fishermen could be given grants or material for repairing their boats, equipment, and so on. On the face of it it is a fine idea. It just sounds wonderful; but on studying it we very quickly concluded that it is one which would be absolutely impossible to administer. To arrive at any degree of justice not only would you have to have a means test for a fisherman but you would have to determine what his income was.

Mr. Pickersgill: You did not have a means test for the acreage payments.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I admit that, but I say that if we were trying to be fair—

Mr. Pickersgill: Then you were not with the acreage payments?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Objections were raised in some cases that acreage payments were being made to men with large acreages and good crops, but in the case of the people of Newfoundland we tried the opposite thing. We tried to place the money where it was most needed, make it available to those who needed it most, who would make the best use of it, and who thereby in many cases would qualify for unemployment insurance.

Even if it were possible to arrive at absolute justice in the administration of any scheme one would still be criticized by those who think they should have got more or who think somebody else should have got less, and that is where the problem arises. As I said, the plan suggested by some of the hon.

members from Newfoundland with regard to advancing grants to fishermen is, on the face of it, a good one, but it would have to be carried through in a blanket fashion to cover all fishermen whether they needed it or not.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just as you did for the farmers.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): To which you objected.

Mr. Pickersgill: Why not treat the fishermen as well as the farmers are treated?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Because there are so many other benefits which accrue to fishermen that do not accrue to farmers such as unemployment insurance, assistance under the fishing vessel assistance act, salt assistance, and so on. In carrying out a program of assistance of any sort the picture has to be painted with a wide brush. It is difficult to do it any other way because you would have to go back a thousand years and institute a sort of domesday book to arrive at who was entitled to so much, so that in a mathematical way you could make sure each fellow was getting exactly what he deserved in relation to his effort, his needs, his family, his bad luck, and his luck in the runs of fish and so on. It is for reasons of that sort that the acreage payment is administered on a rather arbitrary basis.

I am the first to admit that the amount involved in the case of the Newfoundland fishermen is small. It is $.3 million, $300,000, and the reason it is small is that it represents 35 per cent of the drop in income.

As has been said, if it were distributed evenly to everybody it only works out at 13 cents a day for the head of every family. The reason it works out at that figure for the head of every family is because the drop in income earned by the head of every family in Newfoundland this year, statistically on the average as compared with last year, would be three times that amount—39 cents. I think it is a week rather than a day, but those statistics do not impress me very much. What you are doing is taking the amount, then dividing it by the number of fishermen and dividing it by the number of days between then and now. In effect you are almost taking the cube root of it if you divide any figure by two other factors. Even if you take the cube root of the speed of light you come up with something that is relatively small.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could ask the minister a question on this point?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the minister think that in making these comparisons and computations, which he says he wants to make fairly, in contrast to those on this side of the chamber which he says have been made unfairly, it is fair to include the landing from draggers with the shore fishery?

No one is suggesting that the dragger fishermen should be included in any scheme at all. It seems to me that if the minister would take the shore fishery, which is the only comparable thing, he would get a very different picture. I think the minister knows that.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Yes, but not such a very different picture, because even in the case of the shore fishery there were large areas in Newfoundland where the catch was up as compared with last year. But I would agree that if you take a small enough unit there are little communities—or if you get down to one boat, one crew—which perhaps caught no fish last year. However, it is difficult to fit them into a program that is supposed to apply to the whole of Newfoundland, unless you try to do it in the very way which has been suggested and which the provincial government agreed to undertake in the first instance.

Apparently this scheme suddenly became very unpopular, with the provincial government after they had agreed to it and had thought it was a fiine idea.

Mr. Pickersgill: On that point, Mr. Chairman, could I ask the minister if he would read the document in which the provincial government agreed to this scheme?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I am not sure that I have that document available, but we can get it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the minister could get it by nine o'clock.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I think so. Probably the cause of the change in attitude is the fact that when it came to applying this it was very difficult to satisfy everybody. That is human nature. No matter what you do, you will not satisfy everybody. It is an easy thing then, as a solution, to say, "Well, the scheme is no good". I think it is a good scheme as far as it goes. I think the amount is relatively comparable to the need, and if it can be administered in such a way that the benefits will go where they are needed, it will meet the requirements of the fishermen for the time being.

I wish to point out that the prospects for the Newfoundland fishermen are not all dark. Improved methods of fishing are being evolved. We are doing a great deal along this line and we have met with some excellent successes in some cases. Success varies, of course. For example, the federal department in co-operation with the provincial department —and the two departments work very closely in these things—achieved some very striking results in making the herring fishery in Newfoundland more effective. I should like to quote briefly from a letter I received from a man in the industry, which reads:

> We are now conducting a very successful herring season and have caught over 5,000 barrels of green herring in the past three weeks . . . This has given a lot of badly needed employment in this immediate area, as we have 140 men employed with a weekly payroll of over $6,000. These facts, together with the great advantage coming from the roads to resources program over the past few years, are all part of the over-all constructive program of this government.

He branched off from fishing there, but this is a statement contained in a letter with regard to something we were able to do for the herring industry. I might say that in connection with the inshore fishermen—this applies only to inshore fishermen—in 1960 their income was $12,324,881.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about the physical quantities? That is what the minister gave us in wheat; he did not give us the income.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I do not happen to have the physical quantities. I understood the hon. member to ask for the income and that is what I obtained.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not I.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): In 1961 the figure was $11,045,656, which represents a change downward of $1,279,225.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is at least 10 per cent.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): That is what I said; it is approximately 10 per cent.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thought the minister said 1 per cent a while ago.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): No. I was speaking in connection with the inshore fishermen. Perhaps I neglected to say that, but I was giving the totals for Newfoundland, which were down 1 per cent and included draggers. I have a copy of a telegram from Leslie R. Curtis, acting premier of Newfoundland. This telegram is dated November 21 and reads:

> Thank you for your telegram—

The telegram is addressed to the Prime Minister:

> —re assistance to fishermen. Newfoundland government will co-operate by contributing 25 per cent of labour cost local public improvement projects as proposed by Premier Smallwood and accepted by you in settlements mutually agreed as requiring assistance. Presume it will be in order now for our nominee to contact your minister of northern affairs and this will be done promptly. Kindest regards.

Mr. Chairman, that is all I wish to say at the present time. I am sorry to have imposed upon the committee for so long and taking up so much of the committee's time.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Chairman, I should like to add my support to that given by hon. members who have spoken in aid of the fishermen of Newfoundland.

It was very noticeable to those who followed the cod fishery early last summer that the catches were very much below those of the previous year and were below an average catch in many settlements in Newfoundland. On August 24, 1961, Mr. P. J. Antle, general secretary and treasurer of the Newfoundland federation of fishermen, wrote the Minister of Fisheries and on October 4, 1961, the Liberal members from Newfoundland wrote the Minister of Fisheries and indicated their general support for the proposals contained in Mr. Antle's letter.

We were unanimous in our opinion that in dealing with the problem which was facing our fishermen, particularly on the east coast of Newfoundland, the government should be guided by the general principle that our fishermen should be treated in the same way as our mainland farmers when they have a crop failure.

We were well aware that those fishermen who had small catches would find it difficult to provide food for their families, let alone make provision for the next year's cod fishery, which always represents quite an outlay for our fishermen. Very often they have not the means to pay cash for the materials required and have to obtain supplies from their dealers or merchants early in the season in order that they may prosecute the cod fishery.

We suggested in our letter to the Minister of Fisheries that materials be supplied to our fishermen to enable them to build or repair boats and to furnish or repair equipment during the winter months, on the understanding that the fishermen themselves would provide the labour. We thought this would be an extremely practical way to assist those fishermen who are really in need to prepare for their voyages next year. We suggested in our letter:

1. That this assistance be made available to all fishermen whose total net earnings fell below a certain income, the amount to vary with the number of dependants.

2. That materials to be supplied include nylon, hemp and cotton twine for knitting of nets and traps; lines and hooks for the making of trawls and bultows; lumber, nails and paint for the building and repairs of boats and dories for use in our inshore fishery, and other materials suitable for making moorings for boats and gear.

3. That the value of such assistance be limited for each fisherman and that the government take a lien on the boats and gear thus provided to ensure that they are used in the fishery for at least one season, after which they would become the property of the fisherman concerned.

The Minister of Fisheries stated that our suggestions had been given full consideration but the committee felt that although assistance in the manner we had proposed would undoubtedly be helpful the problem of dealing with several thousand individual fishermen on an equitable basis would be much less practical than we had suggested. He also said the committee felt that assistance on a community basis directed to those settlements which had been most seriously affected by the catch failure would be more practical and more equitable. With this statement we could not agree. I personally tried to get full details of the assistance which was provided, but I have yet to get it.

On a non-political tour in Newfoundland the Prime Minister announced the response of his government to the appeal of our distressed fishermen. This government was well aware of the catch failure, because the departments concerned were notified by Newfoundland members and, in addition, an official from the Department of Fisheries went to Newfoundland to make an investigation. He obtained the information required and returned to Ottawa.

There seemed to be some confusion as to the number of fishermen affected. If we were to compare the bad fishing of 1961 with the catch in 1960, which was only a fair year, we could conclude that 12,000 fishermen had a bad year in 1961. Anyway, 9,000 fishermen at least and 12,000 fishermen at the most had poor catches. The sum of $300,000 was provided, as announced by the Prime Minister, to aid them. This amount was to be spent on winter works under the same arrangements as those made with regard to all the Canadian provinces from Newfoundland to British Columbia. It meant that if any of our local authorities, municipalities, community councils, local roads boards or any other local organizations carried out public works, half the money spent on labour would be provided by the federal government. In addition, the federal government would match the money provided by the provincial government to the various settlements in respect of road work and so on, since October 15, 1961—a sum which amounted to $80,000. This arrangement meant that the distressed fishermen from Newfoundland received approximately $20 per family by way of assistance from this government as compared with $1 an acre up to 200 acres or a maximum of $200 in the case of the western farmer.

The minister has referred to just terms. In my opinion Canadians are Canadians irrespective of where they live and they should be treated alike. I am not against assistance being given to our farmers but I contend that the same yardstick which is used for our farmers should be used for our fishermen. The money given to our province was not given to or worked for by fishermen only; it was given to all those who participated in the winter works program. This worked out to about $20 per family—less than three cents a day. While we were glad to get the $300,000 we feel it should have been distributed among our distressed fishermen and that the amount available should have been much greater.

The Chairman: Shall this item carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Chairman. I intend when we resume at nine o'clock to say something about the origins of this policy. I asked the minister to do so but he thought it would take too long. It is going to be done, anyway. I just want to take the minute which is at my disposal now to deal with one point. The minister made a great deal about comparing horses and rabbits. It is obvious that this government regards western farmers as horses and the fishermen as rabbits, though I am surprised the minister should have admitted it.

An hon. Member: Headline stuff.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was not my phrase. It was the phrase of the Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): On a point of privilege, I think the hon. member would wish to be fair—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): He should admit, I think, that what he has imputed to me was never intended by me. I said that hon. members were not making a fair comparison when they compared things which were not comparable.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, there is no dispute between us, and I do not think—

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I also said—

Mr. Pickersgill: I have sat silent all the afternoon. The minister is trying to take the one minute I have on a phony question of privilege. He will find I did not impute anything to him at all.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has said—

The Chairman: It is now six o'clock. I therefore regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but pursuant to the special order made today the proceedings of this committee will be interrupted in order to permit the house to proceed to the consideration of private members' business at eight o'clock.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the special order made this day the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills and public bills. There being no business under private bills, the house will consider public bills.

COASTAL FISHERIES PROTECTION ACT

PROVISION FOR EXTENSION OF FISHING ZONE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-3, to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act (12 mile fishing zone).

He said: This particular bill, Mr. Speaker, has two or three general purposes beyond the main one of extending our territorial waters. From what I can gather of at least announced government attitudes, I think these purposes are not inconsistent with the ideas the government has expressed in the past year or so. One of them is to protect our fisheries to the largest possible degree by ensuring (1) that the exploitation and use of our fisheries within the 12 mile area is engaged in by Canadian fishermen and (2) that our conservation practices within that area are not upset by fishermen of other countries coming in and fishing without due regard to the need for conservation as we appreciate it.

A certain aura of government secrecy is involved in this particular question. Since the last Geneva conference on the law of the sea where our efforts were not successful—and just by a small margin, I may say incidentally—no public announcements with any substance to them that I know of have been made by government members with regard to just what has or has not been done by the government itself. In the middle of July last year the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) was asked in the house what action was contemplated by the government with respect to the extension of our territorial waters. The answer he gave at that time hinted—and not too clearly at that—that some talks were perhaps taking place but that the nature of those talks or the wishes and desires of the government were of a confidential nature; hence the house could not be taken into that degree of confidence which is necessary for full understanding of these matters.

Just yesterday a similar question was asked about government activities in this regard and the answer we were given yesterday by the Secretary of State for External Affairs was that it was not beneficial to give an answer. If the government itself would take parliament into its confidence and share some of its ideas with us, perhaps we might not have need to present this particular bill. However, expressing an expectation of the government's taking the house into its confidence in this matter or in most other matters is perhaps asking a little bit too much. None the less, if the government itself would not take this approach of saying in effect, "It is none of your business what we are doing in this field", perhaps we would have slightly better relationships and, as I said, perhaps there would not be any need to introduce a bill of this sort.

However, I suspect that what these announcements made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in fact mean is that the government is doing nothing about this particular item. It is certainly doing nothing with regard to promotional activities within the United Nations where the initial conference and subsequent conferences were ordered and arranged for. No push or effort or anything of that nature is being promoted within the U.N. toward this particular end. When the Secretary of State for External Affairs says that it is not beneficial to answer questions relating to this matter, I submit he is saying that it is not beneficial to the government because it would be embarrassing for the government to be obliged to admit that it has shelved this most important problem after it did not receive the degree of support we all hoped it would receive at the last conference at Geneva on this matter.

Canada now has a three mile limit. The bill, which is an uncomplicated one to that extent, indicates that for fisheries purposes, we want this limit extended, to 12 miles. The bill also contains another important matter of interest (1) to our fishermen and our fisheries and (2) to our relationships with other countries. Some will say that this bill in fact is asking for a unilateral decision on the part of this parliament and therefore is not concerning itself with the necessity for discussions and negotiations with other countries, because other countries are fishing up to our three mile limit. But this is not the case because there is a very important additional principle contained in the bill to the effect that it will come into force on the first day of July, 1964. The period of two and a half years between now and July 1, 1964, would allow for negotiations to take place with other countries directly, bilaterally, through the United Nations or in some other way, and I intend to mention two or three other methods of entering into some sort of negotiations to solve this problem.

I am a great believer in the approach of negotiation. I do not believe we should take abrupt, unilateral action of a type that will dislocate our relationships with other countries and will tend to dislocate the fishing economies of other countries because I believe we can solve the question much more easily through negotiation. But believing in negotiation I also believe that when you are negotiating you need a good lever on your side in order to ensure that your point of view has the greatest possible impact on the person with whom you are negotiating. The use of a lever in this way often takes place in parliament when the house leaders are negotiating with regard to the business of the house. The matter of whether or not agreement will be reached often depends on whose advantage is served.

The bill contains provisions which permit future action by another parliament depending on the course that negotiations take. If, for argument's sake, international negotiations were under way approaching the first day of July, 1964, when this act would come into force, and it was felt that the negotiations were close to being concluded, a future parliament could easily amend the act to provide for an extension of the date when the bill would come into force so as to permit the negotiations then under way to reach fruition.

The act which the bill seeks to amend, the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, contains provision in sections 3 and 4 which, even if this amendment is adopted, provide an opportunity for other countries so to adjust their fisheries operations that there will be a minimum amount of dislocation by reason of the coming into force of this amendment. I am sure that the bill before us is based upon government attitudes and ideas as they were last publicly expressed. I have in my hand a green covered booklet. Perhaps its colour is appropriate because it comes from the office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green). The booklet contains the proposal which Canada made at the first Geneva conference on the law of the sea in 1958 and at the subsequent conference in March, 1960, so far as fishing rights are concerned. I am going to read from this booklet but the words are also reproduced in the explanatory note in the bill. This was Canada's proposal:

> A state has a fishing zone contiguous to its territorial sea extending to a limit 12 nautical miles from the baseline from which the breadth of its territorial sea is measured in which it has the same rights in respect of fishing and the exploitation of the living resources of the sea as it has in its territorial sea.

We took these words at their face value and drafted one of the most important proposed amendments, namely, the definition of what are Canadian territorial waters. We have put these ideas of Canada into legislative form. We regret that the last Geneva conference which dealt with this matter failed by one vote or one third of a vote, as I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs put it, to come to a conclusion with respect to this matter. However, some interesting changes of position were noted at that second conference and I think they afford some area for negotiation by Canada to find a solution for this problem. For instance, we could seek to open negotiations with each or all of the 54 countries who supported our proposal at the second Geneva conference on the law of the sea. At this stage I am not going into the differentiation with regard to the six and six formula that Canada developed. I am confining myself to that part of the formula involving a 12 mile area with regard to fisheries and not the six mile area relating to the territory itself.

We could open negotiations with these 54 countries. We could open negotiations with all the other commonwealth countries who, with the exception of India, supported our proposal at Geneva in 1960. We could negotiate with them to see whether or not an area of agreement might be reached. We could open discussions on the matter with the NATO nations, all of whom except Iceland, and for obvious reasons, I think, agreed with the proposal put forward by Canada in 1960.

With this bill on our statute books I think it would strengthen our hand in any such negotiations. It is most necessary and vital to protect the welfare of our fishing industry and our fishermen. It is most necessary to extend the area of our sovereignty over our own affairs. A former secretary of state for external affairs, the late Sidney Smith, commented on this matter a few years ago and I think it would be appropriate if I were to refer now to what he said. Perhaps at this time we might concern ourselves with putting into effect some of the things which the late Mr. Smith had in mind. As found on page 4353 of Hansard for August 30, 1958, he said:

> . . . Canada does not favour the taking of unilateral action by states in respect of fishing zones so long as there is hope that a new international conference on the law of the sea will be convened in the near future to deal with the question of territorial sea and fishing rights.

With this statement we agree generally. We say that there is no longer hope now, using the words of Mr. Smith, of another international conference on the law of the sea being held in the near future because, first, Canada is not promoting it at the United Nations and, second, so far as I know no other country is promoting it either. In my opinion we should not sacrifice the interests of our fishermen any longer. We should not allow the attitude of the United States in this regard to influence us to the extent that we do nothing about this most important question. This is an all-important matter, and I hope that the house will be kind enough to take one of those rare steps and give second reading to this bill today in order that a humble backbencher may assist the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the government in bringing some relief to citizens of this country.

Mr. L. R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, as the member for Queens-Lunenburg, where many inshore fishermen as well as many deep sea fishermen derive their living from the sea, I am pleased to speak to this bill to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act. It is interesting to note the attention given this international problem by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard).

The explanatory note of the bill states:

This bill's intent is that it be a declaration by the Queen in parliament that Canada within those 12 marine miles seaward of her coasts has, to the sole use and benefit of her nationals, the right to fish exclusive of all others: as well an affirmation of Canada's obligation to protect and conserve the live resources of those seas to that same end.

Notwithstanding the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), this bill implies that unilateral action should be taken by the Canadian government in connection with this matter. This course has never been satisfactory when dealing with problems affecting other nations as well as our own. He states that this difficulty would be solved by referring action until July 1, 1964. This, in effect, sets a deadline when all negotiations must cease. I submit to you, sir, this is not a proper course to take.

This problem which the hon. member raises is not a new one. In fact, it goes back to the very beginning of this century. In the 1928 report of the royal commission on fisheries in the maritime provinces we find this at page 90:

The protests of the shore fishermen against steam-trawlers are not new, nor are they wholly the result of conditions prevailing in recent months. They have been persistently and repeatedly made during practically all the years in which steam-trawlers have operated from Nova Scotia ports. A brief outline of the history of these protests may be of interest, as giving a better understanding of the question at issue.

In 1905, when the Halifax board of trade asked for assistance from the federal government to bring out trawlers from Scotland to operate in Nova Scotia, assistance was promptly refused, as indicated by the following letter written on June 5, 1905, by the minister of marine and fisheries at that time, to the chairman of the fisheries committee of the Halifax board of trade:

"Referring the matter of the introduction of steam-trawlers in Atlantic waters of Canada, I have an official report before me, and I do not see that any encouragement could be held out to steam-trawl firms to operate in our waters. You are no doubt aware that to that destructive method of fishing has been attributed the destruction of valuable fisheries off the shores of Great Britain, and prohibitory laws have been enforced in inshore areas. Outside the three mile limit trawling cannot be prevented, but I am not disposed to favour it in territorial waters or grant assistance to firms adopting that method of fishing."

Vigorous protests were made when foreign steam-trawlers began to fish too near to the Atlantic coast line and to interfere with the operations of the shore fishermen; and on September 9, 1908, an order in council was passed providing that "the use or operation of vessels known as steam-trawlers operating beam, otter or other trawls for the purpose of catching fish is prohibited within the three mile limit and in the bays and harbours of Canada." This was obviously an admission that steam-trawling was injuring the shore fisheries, and that it required regulation and restriction. In 1909, during the imperial defence conference, the Canadian minister of marine and fisheries, and the prime minister of Newfoundland urged upon the British government the desirability of making an international arrangement with France and the United States for the regulating of all fisheries on the banks. But no arrangement was made. Protests against steam-trawling, however, continued to be expressed in the maritime provinces, and as a result, the following resolution was passed unanimously by the House of Commons on February 6, 1911:

"That in the opinion of this house, as the mode of fishing known as steam-trawling prosecuted by ships of different nationalities on the coast of Canada outside of Canadian waters is destructive to fish life, it is expedient in order to conserve the deep sea fisheries, that negotiations be opened with the view of securing an international agreement prohibiting this mode of fishing in such spawning grounds for deep sea fish as the waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the banks of the north Atlantic adjacent to the coast of Canada and Newfoundland.

Now, there is considerably more here, Mr. Speaker, but there is one paragraph that I think is most important. I quote again:

On March 18, 1912, the minister of marine and fisheries said in the House of Commons, "If it is possible to do so, effective steps will be taken to prevent steam-trawling being carried on." During the early summer of 1912, a conference was held in Washington, attended by representatives of the United States, by the Canadian minister of marine and fisheries, and by the prime minister of Newfoundland, with a view to investigating the whole question of steam-trawlers and of making observations on the results of their operations. After considerable negotiation, it was arranged that during the season of 1912 investigations would be carried on by each country independently, the understanding being that on the completion of the work, the British government would be asked to call a conference of representatives of countries interested in steam-trawling with a view to reaching an arrangement for the entire prohibition of steam-trawling on this side of the Atlantic. The investigations took longer to complete than was at first anticipated. Meanwhile the war had come. It was then decided to postpone the request for the projected international conference until after the end of the war; but the proposed conference was not held. In order meanwhile to protect further the shore fishermen, the Canadian government in 1915 enacted a regulation under the Customs Act, whereby, the master of any steam-trawler is required before he is granted a clearance for the fishing grounds to give the customs officer a declaration that he will not fish within at least 12 miles from shore, this regulation to apply to all steam-trawlers clearing from a Canadian port on the Atlantic coast. Since that time no further restrictions have been placed on steam-trawlers operating from ports of the maritime provinces.

From this, Mr. Speaker, it can be ascertained that considerable objection was raised against fishing draggers in any area by the inshore as well as the hook and line fishermen on the schooners of that day. This resulted in the prohibition of large Canadian trawlers fishing within 12 miles of shore. Foreign trawlers, of course, are only required to observe the three mile limit. The problem is still of vital interest to our deep sea fishermen as well as to our inshore fishermen. Some time ago, I received a letter from one of our deep sea captains. I should like to place this on the record also for it explains the situation in so far as his operations are concerned:

As master of a Canadian vessel I am very much concerned for myself and my crew over the situation existing at the present time enabling foreign draggers and fishing vessels to fish within the 12 mile limit off the Nova Scotia coast while we must remain with our draggers outside the 12 mile limit.

The foreign draggers and fishing vessels at certain times of the year are getting the best catches of fish while we are unable to find any satisfactory grounds on which to fish. It is understandable to me that in the interests of international negotiation this situation might be allowed to exist for a very short time but it now already has existed for a long time and in my opinion, and I believe the opinion of most of our fishermen and vessel owners and operators in this area, the time has come when definite action must be taken by our government—

At the present time we are unable to find fish outside the 12 mile limit sufficient to make wages for the crew and the foreign draggers are doing well within the 12 mile limit. On our latest fishing trip we sighted at least 35 foreign ships operating within the 12 mile limit, getting large hauls of codfish and flounders, while our Canadian ships had to stay outside and fish for very small hauls of mostly scrod cod. I would like to point out also that the flounders and grey soles and halibut taken by the foreign ships were thrown back as they are not suitable for salting and it appears to us that the present situation is even more ridiculous as we are saving large quantities of fish for the foreigners who are not interested in all the species and destroying the species they do not want.

The area I mention is on the northwest side of Cape St. Lawrence where there is no shore fishery.

[Mr. Crouse.]

The present law might be understandable if there was a shore fishery to protect and I would suggest that if the law is changed any area with a shore fishery should be protected.

Now, conversely—

Mr. Howard: I should like to know the date of the letter.

Mr. Crouse: I said that letter was received some time ago. It is dated May 12, 1959, but the situation is similar today. Conversely, the inshore fisherman with his long-liner has found fish scarce and of necessity, in an effort to secure profitable catches, must go to the off shore banks where he is overly exposed in times of storm. For example, on March 20 last year, some 17 men were lost in one storm when three long-liners failed to return to the port of Lockeport.

However, this problem is somewhat involved. We are concerned here with fishery conservation, which is a matter perturbing many people. We must look at this from many angles. Total fish landings in the maritime provinces during 1961 amounted to 637 million pounds, with a total landed value to our fisherman of $39 million. While fish landings in 1960 were higher, the dollar value was somewhat lower, but during the past three years the average has been approximately $39 million per annum. That is the amount the fishermen have received for their catch.

When we realize that some 18 million Canadians consume on the average only 13 pounds of fish per person per annum we get some idea of the importance of the United States market to our fishing industry. Approximately three quarters of our entire catch is sold in the United States market, and any unilateral action taken by this government to restrict American trawlers from fishing other than 12 miles from shore, would no doubt meet with strong opposition from the United States.

There is another question that poses itself, the question of enforcing unilateral action on a 12 mile limit, and I submit this is of paramount importance. We remember when Iceland in September, 1958, unilaterally declared a 12 mile fishing limit and British trawlers had to be protected by gunboats while they fished off its coast. We also remember that Iceland maintained a fleet of fully armed ships in an effort to enforce its mandatory regulations. Would this be the policy of the C.C.F. and the New Democratic party if they were in office?

Mr. Howard: It would be our policy to protect our own fishermen.

Mr. Crouse: Certainly it is not the policy of the present administration. However, you may say that Iceland won its dispute with the United Kingdom, but the Icelandic dispute was not simply between a big power and a little power. It was over a principle that concerns all countries, the principle that the right of states in international law depends upon the consent of other states. Iceland won out over the United Kingdom because the United Kingdom recognized that 99 per cent of the Icelandic economy is tied up in the fishing industry. During that crisis the United Kingdom was placed in a most unenviable position because the western world was concerned lest her action drive Iceland into the communist camp.

At the start of the law of the sea conference in 1958, more countries still upheld the three mile limit than any other single alternative. However, times have changed and at the last law of the sea conference the Canadian proposal that a state has the right to fix the breadth of its territorial sea, up to a limit of six nautical miles, with a fishing zone of an additional six miles, almost met with universal acceptance. I believe the hon. member for Skeena mentioned that it was defeated only by the narrow margin of one vote in failing to get the necessary two thirds majority.

This second law of the sea conference did not reach agreement on the breadth of territorial seas, or on fishing limits, although I still believe the Canadian proposal of six plus six is the best compromise between modern security needs, fishing interests and the fundamental freedom of navigation which all countries have an interest in preserving. Canada is again willing to try at Geneva, or anywhere else. I am quite convinced of that. In our proposals at the last conference on the law of the sea we presented our views in good faith and showed a willingness to co-operate.

Nova Scotians and those associated with the fishing industry generally believe that the search for local compromises is the best way to settle hard cases rather than imposing a flat 12 mile rule.

As I stated earlier, part of the problem is due to a desire to conserve the fisheries and give priority to the coastal fishermen who have a natural wish to increase their catches and raise their standard of living. However, I believe the real answer lies in scientific conservation. With our present knowledge of fish habits and movements we have improved our understanding and ability to tackle the problem, and I think that scientific regulations offer a more effective and skilful system of control than proposals for broad fishing limits that may not, in effect, include the areas most in need of conservation.

This trend of thought receives strong support in international quarters and I believe at present more countries are in favour of scientific regulation than ever before. There is a sound reason for this type of thinking. In Canada and the United States alone there is a population of over 200 million people, and as the population of the world increases we must constantly turn to the sea for more of our food supplies. We realize that this is the one untapped source available to us. No nation will intentionally destroy this source of protein; all nations will endeavour to preserve the fishing banks in an effort to secure gradually an increasing share of the available catch.

This bill attempts to change the definition of Canadian territorial waters, which limits foreign vessels to a three mile fishing zone. It proposes to change this to a 12 mile zone. Section 4, paragraph (d) of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act provides that the Governor in Council may make regulations, among other things, designating the territorial waters of Canada for the purpose of the act. In view of this fact it is not necessary to amend it in order to have a 12 mile limit established, as the power is granted to the governor in council to do this at any time.

Present Canadian policy indicates we believe in a clear distinction being made between territorial limits and fishing limits. However, we believe that any change in the fishing limits should be made by universal agreement and must take account of the essential principles of international conduct. The chief of these is the need for international consent prior to any changes being made, because a nation's individual rights are only sustained by general acceptance.

This problem, Mr. Speaker, is still under consideration, but unilateral action as suggested by the bill would only create tensions between Canada and some of its best customers for its fishery products. This would be unacceptable to the Canadian people and I believe undesirable generally to the Canadian fishing industry.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): At the beginning of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) both on the bill and on the very moderate and reasonable presentation he made of it. In saying that I am speaking for my party and I assert that we support the bill without reservation. We support it in large measure for the reasons given by the hon. member, and I shall elaborate on that point in a moment.

I should first like to deal with some of the arguments made in opposition to this bill by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr.

Crouse) who also spoke with great moderation but who did not seem to realize that 1912 was 50 years ago and that the situation has changed a good deal since.

Mr. Crouse: We are selling more fish now to the United States.

Mr. Pickersgill: We are selling more fish to the United States, and of course the United States is a far less important fishing power now than it was 50 years ago, and the mutual arrangements between the two countries are on a much wider scale than they were 50 years ago.

The hon. gentleman deplored the possibility of unilateral action. I do not think anyone wants to have unilateral action. It was the government which preceded the present one which initiated negotiations which were carried on and which almost succeeded, as everyone has pointed out, at Geneva in getting what we wanted by multilateral action. But the fact is that they did not succeed and that so far as we can discover nothing effective has been done since to resume these negotiations.

Yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) in reply to a question from my hon. friend from Trinity-Conception (Mr. Tucker) who asked whether any negotiations were going on in this matter, said that any such announcement would be made in the house in due course. When the minister was asked by me whether active negotiations were going on at the present time he said:

> I think it would not be beneficial to answer that question at this time, Mr. Speaker.

When I was so presumptuous in this free parliament as to ask, "Beneficial to whom?", the minister said, "To Canada. To whom does the hon. member suppose?" The hon. member felt that the minister does not often have a chance to score off anybody any more and the matter could be left there. But the reason for the question was that when this government is not willing to talk about something, I think that is the most conclusive evidence that it is not doing anything, because it spends most of the time talking about things that it is not doing. I think we can fairly assume that the correct answer to, "Beneficial to whom?" was, "To the government", because I cannot believe that, if this government is really seriously carrying on any negotiations, this can be such a deep, dark secret, that those negotiations would be seriously jeopardized if this house were told they were going on.

I would not do what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) did. I would not try to force the government to do what he did—force Mr. Heath to show the British hand in the common market negotiations, thereby weakening their power to negotiate. I think that just to tell us whether or not the negotiations are going on would do the public interest no conceivable harm and I think we are justified in assuming, until we are told otherwise, that they are not and the government does not want to admit it.

The hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg said this problem was not new. It is not new, that is quite sure. I suppose it is one of the oldest problems. It is as old as Canada and it existed before confederation. It is not a new problem at all but it is a problem that is getting very much worse. I do not need to tell the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg, but some hon. members may not be aware of the fact that whereas there were only three or four nations with fishing fleets off the Canadian coast even five or six years ago, ships are coming from all over the world and fishing right off our shores today, and more vested interests—if you like to call them that—more presumptions are being created every year very much to the detriment of the Canadian fishery and Canadian fishermen.

The hon. member also expressed grave concern about the displeasure of the United States. This was very touching coming from a supporter of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and a supporter—I suppose it is still possible to support both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, notwithstanding what has been said by a "servile" press. Assuming that the hon. gentleman supports both of them, and maybe even the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton)—who has just come in—for good measure, these were the men who over here on this side of the house were going to speak in no uncertain terms to the United States five or six years ago and put the Americans in their place. Now the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg cringes for fear—

Mr. Pallett: He never cringed in his life.

Mr. Pickersgill: —the United States might be displeased if we took control of our own country. It is a very different line from the line taken by his leader at Yarmouth on March 25, 1958.

Mr. Fulton: Is that another of Lamontagne's books that you have there?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, no.

Mr. Fulton: I am glad to hear it.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is the gospel according to John written by one of those who followed him in the press.

An hon. Member: Where are you reading from?

Mr. Fulton: What is the book? What is the title of the book?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will tell the hon. gentleman what the book is. This is a Canadian Press report—

Mr. Fulton: What is the book?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman would like to know—

Mr. Fulton: It has a nice red cover.

Mr. Pickersgill: "Diefenbaker's Statements and Promises, 1958".

Mr. Fulton: Published by whom?

Mr. Pickersgill: Promises, I assume, by Diefenbaker.

Mr. Fulton: Published by whom?

An hon. Member: Who is the publisher?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the book has been sufficiently identified.

Mr. Fulton: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. Will the hon. member have the candour to tell us who published the book?

Mr. Pickersgill: I now wish to read from the Canadian Press—

An hon. Member: Who published the book?

Mr. Pickersgill: At the present moment I am publishing what is here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am publishing it in this house, but I am taking it from the Montreal Gazette.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is far too much interruption. The hon. member has a limited time and he is entitled to be heard.

Mr. Fulton: Obviously it is not the gospel—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the last thing they want to hear is what their leader said in 1958, and I do not blame them.

Mr. Fulton: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this is obviously not the gospel according to St. John, but the gospel according to St. Pickersgill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I can only retort, in the words of my very young daughter, "Very funny".

An hon. Member: You are.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is a Canadian Press dispatch which appeared in the Montreal Gazette reporting a statement made by the Prime Minister at Yarmouth on March 25, 1958. The first paragraph reads:

Prime Minister Diefenbaker today promised federal price supports under fish—

Where are they?

—and a firm stand on protection of Canadian inshore fisheries against foreign trawlers.

Where is that? Whether those two promises are among the 12 or among the forgotten, I do not know; but that was the brave attitude in March of 1958, and we now have a pusillanimous attitude expressed on behalf of the government by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg four years later.

Mr. Crouse: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Crouse: Is the hon. gentleman not aware that the price of haddock today is as high as it has ever been in Canada's history?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what this has to do with whether we should have a 12 mile fishing zone or a 3 mile fishing zone. In any event, I listened politely and without interrupting the hon. gentleman's statement. I have a statement to make in a very limited time and I hope he will do me the same courtesy.

Mr. Fulton: Catch fish or cut bait.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not going to leave any doubt about the authority for what I say. I said I was speaking for my party. The position taken by our party was stated in the debate in May last year. It is in Hansard of May 2, 1961, at pages 4226 and 4227, where my hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson)—who is unavoidably absent this evening—had this to say with respect to the failure of the conference on the law of the sea.

Mr. Fulton: Where is your red ribbon?

Mr. Pickersgill: He said:

In any event, the proposal was lost and there seems to be no immediate prospect—

And there evidently is none yet, as far as I know —of a third conference on the law of the sea to deal with this matter; so this first and best way of dealing with it—

That is, by multilateral agreement —has, for the time being at least, had to be discarded. But we do not need to let the matter drop because of that. There are 54 countries which voted for this 12 mile proposal with a 10-year period for the observance of historic rights. So another way of establishing this zone in Canadian law is to get those countries which accept this 12 mile zone to agree among themselves that as far as they are concerned it is international law and that it will be observed and enforced by them.

That is the second best way, and the bill introduced by the hon. member for Skeena

(Mr. Howard) would provide ample opportunity to get that kind of agreement, and, as he has pointed out, some incentive to get it. After all, those words I have quoted were not uttered originally by me. They were uttered by a gentleman whose experience in international negotiation is unparalleled in this country.

Mr. Fulton: Did he ever get a 12 mile limit for us?

Mr. Pickersgill: He began to do it and if he had still been there perhaps he would have got that one extra vote we needed.

Mr. Fulton: He never got close to it.

Mr. Pickersgill: If that kind of agreement were not possible, my hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition indicated:

> The third alternative is for our own government to take unilateral action as other governments have done and decree that there would be a 12 mile fisheries jurisdiction zone laid down in our domestic legislation and that we will exercise jurisdiction in that zone.

That is just what this bill proposes, and that, I may say, is the policy of our party. That is the reason why I have no hesitation in giving support to this bill. I am not very impressed by the dangers which it is suggested might arise from an attempt to enforce this. After all, if Iceland and Norway have been able to do this by unilateral action it is hard to persuade me that the Canadian people, if they had a resolute government which could make up its mind about anything, would have any difficulty in doing the same.

There is plenty of time left to have a vote on this bill and I hope we can have a vote before nine o'clock.

Mr. J. R. Keays (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Once again we have witnessed the spectacle of the great wildcat from Bonavista-Twillingate getting down to petty politics and trying to tell us that this problem could have been solved without difficulty by the Liberal party if his friends had remained in power.

An hon. Member: There he goes.

Mr. Keays: He is going to the Liberal dinner.

He seems to be a man who has done everything in the past. He and his friends look at every effort ever made by this government, every law that has ever been enacted, and they say: we did that in the past; we prepared legislation of that kind, or, in this case: we prepared submissions to Geneva. I can imagine attending the conference on the law of the sea at Geneva. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate walks into the hall brandishing a Canadian ultimatum, and I can see all the representatives of all other countries bowing and saying: yes, we accede to the request of the representative from Canada. I find it hard to understand how either the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) or the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate can tell us that they do not foresee clearly that the result of this bill must be unilateral action. They wish to change paragraph (b) of section 2 of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act so as to read:

> 'Canadian territorial waters' means a fishing zone extending seaward to a limit 12 nautical miles from the baseline from which the breadth of the territorial seas of Canada are measured, and includes inland waters of Canada.

In the explanatory notes it is stated that to allow time for international negotiation which might result in agreement on national fishing limits, the bill is deferred in effect until July 1, 1964. Despite this provision, however, I believe that this measure definitely represents unilateral action and in all circumstances I do not believe anyone would wish that Canada should go to that extent. I agree that it is necessary to protect our fishing zones by the conservation and preservation of the species of fish. There is a special threat on the east coast where we see many ships from foreign countries, including factory ships, taking fish three miles from the Canadian coast. However, is it not best that we should settle this question by negotiation—negotiation, for example, with our neighbour to the south—although the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate seems to be a great enemy of our neighbour to the south?

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh.

Mr. Keays: Some formula has to be found. Norway and Britain found a formula at their meeting in Oslo in 1960; since that period a four mile fishing limit was progressively extended into a 12 mile fishing zone. This is one example of negotiations between two countries successfully reaching a conclusion on this matter. I think the Canadian people would not wish to say that there must be both a 12 mile fishing limit and a 12 mile territorial zone. It might be better to suggest that we should have a three mile territorial zone and a 12 mile fishing zone. If we were to say this, it is possible that negotiations with many of the other countries would be successful and we would attain our objective, not by means of an ultimatum such as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate suggests but through friendly relations. I regret that I cannot endorse this bill as it is presented to us, though if it were amended we could possibly come to some understanding and to better terms.

Mr. Speaker: The hour for the consideration for private members' business having expired, the house will resume the business which was interrupted at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house again in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

Special—

612. Contribution towards a special Newfoundland works program for fishing settlements that experienced income reduction resulting from decreased catches, $300,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: When the committee rose at six o'clock I had just begun to say something about the observation that had been made by the Minister of Fisheries and, particularly his appeal that we should make fair comparisons. I suggested that the kind of comparisons the minister himself was making were not fair comparisons. What I really rose to say first of all was that the minister threw up his hands at the possibility of doing anything for the fishermen comparable to what was done under the acreage payment scheme which we had previously voted for the wheat growers and grain growers of the west. The minister suggested that the problem of the fishermen was far too complicated for a similar solution, and that the difficulties were far too great. I cannot imagine that the minister really meant that. It would be much easier indeed to apply to the fishermen of Newfoundland—and I refer to the inshore fishermen of Newfoundland—a system such as that which we just adopted for the farmers of western Canada than to apply it to the farmers of western Canada. We already have in existence all the required administrative machinery to make that procedure possible and I am going to tell the minister just exactly how it could be done, just as I told the Prime Minister in 1958 how it could be done.

The machinery is there. It is there in the unemployment insurance commission. All the fishermen who would be concerned are insured under the unemployment insurance commission. Their files are there. The number of stamps they have is known to the commission. From its own records already available to it the government would have no difficulty whatsoever in identifying them and segregating those who were bona fide fishermen. They could have made such payments in two simple ways. They could have said, "We are going to give $200 for income maintenance to the western farmers who have had a crop failure, though in fact, crop failure, as the Acting Minister of Agriculture has told us, was taken care of under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act which has no parallel whatever with the fishermen. This income maintenance was provided to the prairie farmers on two occasions when there was not a crop failure. I refer to the year 1958 and the year 1960. One way to have paid the fishermen was to do what was done with the prairie farmers, namely to say that, regardless of what their crop was, everyone of them would get the payment and the payment could have been a flat $200. I am not saying that I would have advocated that method. The minister said it could not be done. I say that it could have been done very easily. There would not have been the slightest difficulty in doing it. It could have been done in a very few weeks without encountering any problem whatsoever in an administrative sense. The minister has fisheries officers who know very well who the fishermen are.

It could be done in another way. It could be done on a graduated basis depending on how many stamps the fishermen had, so that those who had a good catch and had a sufficient number of stamps and therefore did not need any special help would not get it and it would go only to those who, because of their poor catch, were qualified to get it. That would be to apply a limited kind of test of need, something which was not done in the case of the western farmers. However, that is something that could have been done. These are two ways in which payments could have been made and by means of which the fishermen could have been treated in exactly the same way as the farmers were treated.

Why was this not done? I do not know. It would not have cost much money, whichever method had been followed. If anybody thinks that income maintenance is not just as necessary for the fishermen as it is for the farmers, I should just like him to compare their income levels and say that to any fisherman on the east coast.

Mr. Keays: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Keays: I, too, believe in the sincerity of the fishermen but if he proposes to this committee that any fisherman who has not earned sufficient stamps should qualify for unemployment insurance benefits during the winter months, how can be prove that this fisherman tried to fish? Could he not just sit at home?

Mr. Pickersgill: I can answer that question. You could eliminate any fisherman who did not have a reasonable number of stamps the previous year. That would be a fairly good test, if you are so anxious to screw the fishermen down. Nobody heard the hon. member get to his feet and suggest tests like that for the western farmers. Why is there this desperate concern about a few dollars going to the fishermen after we have voted $42 million to the western farmers? That is exactly the question we are asking. We willingly voted this money to the western farmers because we thought they needed it. However, we think the fishermen need it also. It is rather hard to go down and tell the fishermen that the only way in which they can get it is to get jobs and sweat it out on work on the roads in the winter time at $20 when the western farmer gets a cheque for $200 from Alvin's cheque machine. That is what this government is asking the fishermen to accept. That is a perfectly fair and valid comparison. Whether or not it is fair or valid, it is a comparison which the fishermen in every settlement in Newfoundland make. If anyone doubts it, let him go down and ask them. I know the situation. I have heard them make the comparison.

An hon. Member: You want a police state.

Mr. Pickersgill: I want a little bit of fairness and a little bit of equality. The hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine who interrupted me a little while ago, at the conclusion of his speech, said that if we could suggest some simple method by which the fishermen could be aided as the farmers were aided, he would support it. I have suggested two simple methods by which it could be done. I hope he will rise in his place and support them.

Mr. Keays: It is not sensible.

Mr. Pickersgill: Go and tell that to the fishermen. I certainly would not tell the fishermen that it is fair that the western farmers should receive P.F.A.A. cheques if they have complete crop failures and in addition to that get another $200, while the fisherman, if he can get one of these jobs on one of these works projects, gets $20. I would not want to go around and tell them that. If the members of this government want to do so they are perfectly welcome to do it.

Mr. McFarlane: Do you know that the farmers paid in to P.F.A.A.?

An hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Pickersgill: All I am suggesting is this. I admit right away what the minister said. I admit that you cannot have absolute mathematical equality. We did not have it in the acreage payments and the government did not make any such pretension. In no scheme which you have in effect to deal with this problem can you have it either. But in this way you could do something roughly comparable and it would be administratively quite easy to do.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

The minister suggested that this scheme which we now have before us, as envisaged in this $300,000 vote, was what was suggested by the Newfoundland federation of fishermen last August. I think we really ought to look at what the Newfoundland federation of fishermen themselves said and not at the interpretation placed upon it by the minister. I should like to read from a letter sent by them to the minister of which I have a copy.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): What is the date of the letter?

Mr. Pickersgill: The date of the letter is August 24, 1961. There are two or three points about the date that I wish to draw particularly to the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite. The general secretary treasurer of the Newfoundland federation of fishermen, Mr. P. J. Antle, wrote as follows:

> It is now apparent that the inshore fishery in Newfoundland has been a complete failure, due entirely to the scarcity of codfish. This disaster as it can be rightly described applies to fishermen all around the province. In a few areas a small number of fishermen did secure fair catches and obtained sufficient stamps to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits.

Just as a few farmers had bumper crops, but there were not many of them; and there certainly were not many fishermen who in August, at any rate, were in this category, although some of them may have improved their situation later in the year. The letter continues:

> The same general scarcity of fish still prevails and hopes for a successful fall fishery are fading day by day.

This was in August. That is when the government was warned about this problem and I want to emphasize that point. The letter continues:

> Thousands of our fishermen do a little subsistence farming and produce sufficient vegetables for local consumption. In normal years production of vegetables helped to supplement earnings from the fisheries. As a result of the long dry summer those precious crops were stunted or ruined completely. In addition many fishermen due to forest fires are precluded from augmenting their income from fall employment in the woods industry.
>
> The combination of disasters has left the great majority of our fishermen in desperate economic conditions. These conditions will grow worse with the approach of winter.

The letter continues:

> On behalf of our fishermen I am appealing to you, and through you to the federal government for some form of special assistance to help them through the winter.

"Some form".

> I will not attempt to outline the nature or form of such special assistance.

I am not accusing the minister of bad faith; I am just saying that the minister did not correctly interpret this letter. Contrary to what the minister said, Mr. Antle did not say there must be works. He said:

I will not attempt to outline the nature or form of such special assistance. Men in your department more capable and with far more experience than I are best qualified to deal with such matters. However, I would suggest a continuation of community stage development, building or repairing of access roads to fishing communities and an expanded program of public works such as the construction of wharves and breakwaters.

This was just one suggestion, but it was the assistance for which they were appealing.

A further subject for study would be some form of loan program for inshore fishermen to enable them to engage in next year's fishery with adequate fishing equipment.

It was because of that phrase in that letter and the knowledge and experience that my friends from Newfoundland on this side of the house had of this situation that we ventured jointly to write a letter to the minister which was described by two of my colleagues in the course of their speeches and in which we made a very practical suggestion which the minister said looked fine until it was examined. But I cannot believe that the minister's department is so devoid of administrative capacity that if they had really wanted to accept this suggestion it would not have been quite possible to do so. They have fishery officers who during the winter months could very well have supervised this program and could very well have made sure that the materials provided were used for the purpose for which they were provided. The scheme was thoroughly practical, thoroughly simple and bound to help the fishermen. Then Mr. Antle went on to say:

Such program would necessitate a combined effort on the part of the Department of Fisheries, the Department of Public Works and the provincial government of Newfoundland.

That was August 24. There was not a word from the government all through the concluding part of last session. I must say that I fully expected that with that appeal from Mr. Antle and with the knowledge which the ministers in the government had, which I am sure was communicated to them by their distinguished colleague from Newfoundland, some special assistance would be provided in the concluding part of the last session of parliament which was held in September. But not a word did we hear.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Could I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Did he have any request from the premier of Newfoundland or the minister of fisheries of Newfoundland?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, sir, I did not have any request from them. I have read the constitution of Canada a good many times and I know that it is not in section 92 but in section 91 that jurisdiction exists over fisheries, and so does the minister. This is a national problem, something that is under the jurisdiction of parliament, not under the jurisdiction of the provincial government, and it should have been tackled by parliament in the same way that the wheat acreage payments were. There were no requests from provincial governments for acreage payments at all. That was done by the federal government on its own motion and the same treatment should have been accorded to the fishermen.

Agriculture is a joint responsibility of the federal and provincial governments. The fisheries are an exclusive responsibility of the federal government. Yet the minister from Newfoundland gets up and says, "Did you have any request from the premier"? It is not the premier's business; it is the business of the Solicitor General. That is what he is in the cabinet for, to put forward the claims of the people of Newfoundland. I should like to ask him what he did about it when this letter came. I hope that when I have concluded he will tell us about his gallant efforts on behalf of the fishermen, getting $20 a head for the fishermen when his colleague from Saskatchewan was getting $200 a head for the farmers.

Mr. Fulton: How much did you get?

Mr. Pickersgill: If that is the way he is going to fight the next election, I do not mind when it comes.

Mr. Fulton: How much did you get?

Mr. Pickersgill: I could tell the hon. gentleman that but it is not relevant to this debate. I am not going to be put off by any diversion from the hon. gentleman whose knowledge of fishing is, I imagine, greater than mine, but has nothing to do with the kind of fishing about which we are now talking.

Mr. Fulton: You are pretty easily put off.

Mr. Pickersgill: There was not a word about this from the federal government from August 24 until October 19. What was the brilliant way they intended to deal with it then? Did they bring forward a program of their own? I should like to read a message, of which I have a copy, which represents the first action by this government, two months after they were told that this problem was urgent and that it should be dealt with in the fall and not in the winter. On October 19 we have this message to the premier of Newfoundland from the Prime Minister of Canada:

The dominion government has been considering the difficulties of those fishing communities in Newfoundland which have suffered severely from the poor catch this year and we feel there are opportunities for providing needed assistance by taking advantage promptly of opportunities and funds now available under the municipal winter works program which is applicable to the local road boards in unorganized Newfoundland communities. I would suggest your government consider immediately working out with us arrangements to apply this program in outport communities where employment is needed. Please let me hear from you as soon as possible.

I have the reply of the premier of Newfoundland to that message and as I think it expresses the position more simply than I could paraphrase it I will read it. It is dated October 26, 1961 and is addressed to the Prime Minister:

My dear Prime Minister:

Thank you for your telegram of October 19 in which you say your government has been considering the difficulties of those fishing communities in Newfoundland which have suffered severely from the poor catch this year. You suggest taking advantage of opportunities and funds available under the municipal winter works program through local road boards where there are no municipal councils. We have carefully considered this suggestion but there are two almost insuperable difficulties. First, we could not in such winter works possibly discriminate between fishermen and other persons who might be equally in need and second, as your fisheries officers will confirm, the fishermen in question are scattered through some 600 settlements along 4,000 miles of coast and the administrative difficulties of organizing projects on such a scale with the limited facilities available for supervision hardly need any emphasis.

We suggest—

This was a counter suggestion made by the premier.

—as a more feasible alternative that the federal government consider organizing through its fisheries officers and the public works department—

Not through the provincial government and the local road boards. In other words, Mr. Smallwood was simply saying that the federal government should mind its own business and do its own business.

We suggest as a more feasible alternative that the federal government consider organizing through its fisheries officers and public works department, a series of small marine projects such as fishermen's slipways, wharves and small breakwaters of which your public works department already has rough plans available—

I know they have lots of them.

—and that such projects be started and carried on as far as conveniently possible during the winter and early spring. Such a federal program, because of the constitutional responsibility of the federal government of Canada, could be done exclusively for fishermen and supervised jointly by your public works department and fisheries officers As such projects would undoubtedly provide some financial relief to our welfare department we would be prepared to provide 25 per cent of the labour costs—

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

You will see the reason why this provision is made. The premier felt that if nothing was done the welfare costs incurred by the province would be greater and that if some of these projects were undertaken there would be a saving in one respect to the province and they would have this money which they could use to pay part of the labour costs.

The letter continues:

As such projects would undoubtedly provide some financial relief to our welfare department we would be prepared to provide 25 per cent of the labour costs of any such projects undertaken during the winter and spring, notwithstanding the fact that such undertakings would be exclusively in the field of activity as signed by the constitution to the government of Canada.

Now, here was something that was entirely the business of the government of Canada and no business of the provincial government at all. The Prime Minister tried to pass the buck to the province. The premier pointed out, and pointed out very considerately, courteously and respectfully, that it would not work and why it could not possibly work. In order to be constructive he put forward an alternative, something that any self-respecting national government would have done on its own. In order to be as conciliatory as possible the provincial government offered to pay part of the labour costs.

What happened after that? The Prime Minister sent another message, and I think the real story of this vote should be on the record. I am sorry the minister did not see fit to place it on the record. We should know what really did happen. The Prime Minister, on November 3, sent a further message to the premier in which he said:

Reurlet October 26 assistance to fishermen would like to clarify October 19 proposal. I do not believe that there will be any possible discrimination since any settlement incorporated or unincorporated anywhere in the province is eligible under winter works incentive program to secure grant equal to amount provided by your government for labour in annual road building grants. Understand such grants made to five hundred seventy five settlements last year under administration of your department of highways. If plan accepted all settlements can double their work programs at no additional cost to your government. Urgently request you to authorize representative to act during your absence to work out details of this practical program with this government.

I do not know who on earth advised the Prime Minister of Canada to send that message to the premier of Newfoundland. Whoever it was knew nothing about Newfoundland, nothing whatever. In the first place, what are these local road programs? They are programs that are carried on normally in the summer and fall. They are not winter works at all. Most of that money had already been spent long before that telegram was sent. Moreover, these works are works for the whole community and no government would dare to say that only fishermen could be employed on them or that other people who were not fishermen could not be employed, as the premier had already pointed out. As a matter of fact, whoever the Prime Minister may have consulted about this, I may say it was about as foolish a message as could possibly have been sent.

In the meantime, the premier of Newfoundland had gone overseas on provincial business and the acting premier replied to this telegram. In order to make the story complete, sir, I should like to read the reply. It is dated November 8, and reads as follows:

> Retel am wondering whether it is clearly understood by government of Canada that local road grants for present year referred to were made during the spring and summer and that practically all allocations totalling approximately four hundred thousand dollars regular grant and one hundred thousand supplementary grants for special needs have now been expended. Are we to understand from your telegram that government of Canada is prepared to match this amount which has already been expended by our local road boards without further cost to the government of Newfoundland.

Now, that is very important. In the settlements where the money had already been spent, was the federal government going to spend the same amount without cost to the provincial government? That is what the acting premier is asking.

> Would appreciate your confirmation that this is so.

Then, he sent a letter in some detail which I will not weary the committee by reading, incorporating the telegram and, for greater certainty, expanding on this program. I have here a copy of a document prepared by the acting premier who, when he furnished me with a copy of this letter, wrote:

> After the foregoing message was sent to the Prime Minister Honourable W. J. Browne made a statement. The report I heard over the air stated that according to Mr. Browne the federal government had turned down a suggestion by Premier Smallwood. They would, however, be considering at an early date a proposition put forward by the attorney general.
> In order to make it quite clear that my telegram was not to be considered as other than an inquiry I addressed the attached letter to the Prime Minister.

That is the letter to which I refer.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Perhaps you had better read it.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister suggests that I should read it. I am quite prepared to read it if the minister really wants me to do so. I am sure the minister is very familiar with the contents. They bear out completely what was said. It is dated November 10, and the first part of it reads:

> This will confirm my telegram to you dated the 8th inst. with reference to your correspondence with Premier Smallwood re assistance to fishermen.

Then, the telegram is again given verbatim and I will not read it a second time. The letter continues as follows:

> Before Premier Smallwood left for Europe he asked me to handle this matter in his absence; but before authorizing an expenditure of between one quarter and one half a million dollars, I wanted to be quite sure that there would be no misunderstanding between the government of Canada on the one hand and the government of Newfoundland on the other.
>
> Your telegram of the 3rd instant states that any settlement, incorporated or unincorporated anywhere in the province is eligible under winter works incentive program to secure a grant equal to the amount provided by your government for labour in annual road building grants. The amount appropriated by the Newfoundland government to five hundred and twenty-four settlements this year was approximately $400,000, being $2 per capita of the population of each area. In addition, an amount of $100,000 was appropriated for special works, such as local bridges, etc. We have been trying to find out how much of this money was spent in materials and for hire and how much in labour. It would seem from the tabulations already prepared (and many returns are not yet in) that the amount for labour would be about 75 per cent of the various allocations. Of course the amount would vary from settlement to settlement according to the nature of the work done.
> If I interpret your telegram of November 3, correctly it would seem to me that your government is now offering these various road boards approximately 75 per cent of the amount of their annual grant, or roughly $300,000, and I have given instructions to the department of highways to be ready to notify the road boards concerned that this additional money is available as soon as my interpretation is confirmed.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry, but I have to advise the hon. gentleman that his time has expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps for the sake of continuity, the committee might consider permitting me to finish reading the letter.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to the hon. member continuing his quotation?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I continue the quotation:

> The regular practice in allocating road board moneys is for the road boards concerned to call a public meeting of the settlement and to put before that meeting a program of expenditure which must be approved by that meeting before any funds are allocated by the government. In that way the public has some control over expenditure. In view of the lateness of the season it would seem that the various road boards will have to be left on their own to decide how and where these additional moneys, if available, are to be spent.
> I am sure the various settlements will appreciate the expenditure in their areas of these additional moneys, but I doubt very much if the expenditure of $1.50 per capita in any community (and that figure would seem to represent the labour share of our annual road grants), would be of any substantial assistance to fishermen in a small community.

Then, there is the usual appropriate conclusion. Since my time has expired, sir, I will reserve my other remarks until some other hon. gentleman has spoken.

Mr. Nasserden: I had not intended to take part in this debate but the remarks made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate have cast what I consider to be an unfair reflection on some of the people I represent and on some of the policies brought forward by this government, and the former government of which he was a member, to provide assistance for the people in my area.

I am sure the fishermen of Newfoundland would not wish to be associated with any misrepresentation made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. The Prairie Farm Assistance Act is a measure which was introduced to relieve distress caused by drought and crop failure in the wheat growing regions of western Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: By a Liberal government.

Mr. Nasserden: I am proud to acknowledge that fact and to say this government improved on that legislation. It provides that on each bushel of grain delivered to the grain elevators by farmers in western Canada, there is a levy imposed, deducted, and put in a fund and that fund, assisted by the treasury of Canada, is used to pay awards to those farmers who qualify after their crops have been inspected and it has been determined that they have suffered through crop failure.

The acreage payment is, of course, another matter, being in the nature of a subsidy to Canadian consumers of bread. From its introduction in 1958 it was considered in that respect, and it has absolutely no similarity to a drought payment, so far as the farmers of western Canada are concerned. I hope the fishermen in Newfoundland will pardon me for interrupting a debate in which I know they are vitally interested, but I thought that on behalf of my own constituents I should make this correction of the facts that have been placed before us today.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am most grateful to the hon. member for Rosthern and I have no quarrel with one word he has said. I am just as proud of the P.F.A.A. as he is. I am proud of the fact it was introduced by a Liberal government and I only wish something similar existed for the benefit of the fishermen.

Mr. Nasserden: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: I really have a lot of things I want to say about the fishermen, and I deliberately refrained from bringing the fishermen into the debate on the acreage payments.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Nasserden: I should like to ask a question.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. member could ask it when I have concluded. I would prefer to continue my remarks and conclude the account of what actually did happen about this matter. There were one or two more communications and I do not want anyone to say that I have left out any part of the record.

On November 15 the Prime Minister replied to these communications, the letter and the telegram, and he said:

Dear Mr. Curtis:

While I will be absent for a couple of days I wish at once to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 10th instant which just came into my office this afternoon.

I will turn your letter over to the Minister of Northern Affairs for his immediate attention.

I am not quite sure why it was the "Minister of Northern Affairs", but that is what the letter says. Then, on November 21, the Prime Minister sent a telegram to Mr. Curtis, the acting premier, which reads as follows:

With further reference problem certain fishing settlements where fisherman had poor results in fishing season we are prepared through winter works incentive program to match labour content of all local road boards grants eligible under that program and possibly including work done since October 15th.

I direct the attention of members to that. It is very different from the first brave offer, which said they were going to match all of the road grants for the whole season, but when the facts began to trickle slowly down in Ottawa they reneged on that offer and said "Oh, no, we will only match those in the settlements where the money has not been spent, possibly including work done since October 15." In that way a settlement in which the people had energetically got their road work done would not get any benefit. That is part of the history of non-discriminatory, practical policy suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite to deal with the problem. The telegram continues:

Where such expenditure fails to meet need we are prepared to provide additional funds up to $300,000 for local public improvement projects capable of being carried out by March 31st, 1962, in fishing settlements mutually agreed as requiring assistance provided your government will contribute 25 per cent of labour cost as suggested premier's letter October 26th.

In other words, the federal government was not willing to assume its own responsibilities and do the job itself. It insisted on getting the last nickel it could get out of the treasury of Newfoundland, to deal with a national problem that was its responsibility.

I have another message from Mr. Curtis to the Prime Minister. It is the same date, November 21, and is as follows:

Thank you for your telegram re assistance to fishermen. Newfoundland government will co-operate by contributing 25 per cent of labour cost local public improvement projects as proposed by Premier Smallwood—

This was the same scheme as the Solicitor General said they had already turned down.

—and accepted by you in settlements mutually agreed as requiring assistance. Presume it will be in order now for our nominee to contact your Minister of Northern Affairs and this will be done promptly. Kindest regards.

Then there is one other message, from the Prime Minister to Mr. Curtis, dated November 24, 1961. This spanned the period from August to September, one month; September to October two months, and October to November; three months after Mr. Antle brought this urgent matter to the attention of the government. It was three months before anything got off the ground because of the buck passing performance that had been carried on. The message reads as follows:

Thank you for your message of the 21st accepting our proposal re assistance to fishermen. Will advise you Friday names of our officials designated to confer with your nominee.

I would draw attention to the fact that all Mr. Curtis accepted, all he had agreed to was to co-operate by contributing 25 per cent of the labour cost. This was a federal scheme. This $300,000 was federal money and towards that scheme the provincial government said it would contribute 25 per cent of the labour cost.

I have not got any further documentary evidence and I prefer to speak only about those things that I really know, but I have read what took place in the legislature. Indeed, I was present in the house on December 4 when this was first discussed, but the latest statement that has come to my attention is a quite recent one which I should like to put on the record. It is from the St. John's daily News of January 16, 1962. In it there is an article headed:

Federal winter works aid misunderstood—blame lies with Ottawa.

Throughout Newfoundland there seems to be quite a bit of misunderstanding about the federal government's winter works for the distressed fishermen.

In an announcement yesterday, the Premier said that some people do not seem to understand that this whole scheme belongs to the federal government at Ottawa.

"The Newfoundland government do not like it," the premier declared, "and have said so very plainly.

Indeed, some of the things he said in the legislature were not very flattering. However, the article continues:

"I denounced it strongly in the House of Assembly, and so did everyone else in the Newfoundland government."

Another part of the article reports the premier as follows:

"The Canadian government officials came to St. John's from Ottawa and planned out the whole scheme," Mr. Smallwood continued.

"They decided what place along the seacoast should receive anything from the winter works program. They picked out the very settlements where this scheme would be carried out. They decided how much money would be sent to each individual settlement.

The Newfoundland government had nothing whatsoever to do with selecting the bays or settlements, or anything to do with deciding how much money would be sent to each place".

Concerning the money from Ottawa, the premier had this to say: "The Newfoundland government were asked if they would permit the money provided by Ottawa to be sent to the local boards in the various settlements—the town councils, community councils, local road boards, etc. The Newfoundland government agreed that the money could be sent to those organizations but the Newfoundland government refused point blank to decide how the money should be spent".

That is all that is in direct quotation marks and therefore that is all with which I think I should weary the committee. I wish to make a few very brief observations. As my hon. friend from Burin-Burgeo said when he opened the discussion of this estimate, notwithstanding the inequity, notwithstanding the impossibility of deciding whether this aid would go to fishermen or to other persons in the settlements, notwithstanding the difficulties of administration and the inadequacy of the road boards, with the best will in the world, to administer this kind of program, particularly when it was delayed for three unnecessary months from August until November, if this government was prepared to do nothing else, in view of the very serious crop failure of the fishermen this is better than nothing and we are not going to be so foolish as to refuse it.

But when we apply to it the test—and I quote the words of the Minister of Fisheries as I took them down—which we ought to apply, being completely fair, with complete fairness and justice to all—those were the words which I copied down as the minister uttered them—and consider that the whole thing is rubbed in by asking us to vote this money immediately after the acreage payments, the discrepancy is so frightful that it is hard to believe that the government had any notion at all of the kind of problem with which they were dealing.

There was no reason on earth why the federal government should not in August, when that letter came, have sent Mr. McArthur or one of the other capable people they have in the department to Newfoundland and on their own responsibility produced a thoroughly workable scheme for dealing with this problem. It is a national problem which under our constitution belongs to this parliament and not to the legislature. The government should have done this instead of offering winter works. These same winter works were offered the winter before and the winter before that. They were available on exactly the same terms. The original offer of October 19 was absolutely nothing that was not already there for any other province which did not have this crop failure.

It was only when the premier of Newfoundland stirred them up by saying that Newfoundland, though it needs every dollar in its treasury for provincial purposes, would help this great federal government in a scheme if they would get a scheme started and do it themselves, that we got anything at all; and still we got something that is a hit or miss, haphazard arrangement. You cannot tell whether the aid really goes to the fishermen or not.

Perhaps it should not. It is hard to go into one of these communities where a man who is not a fisherman needs a job just as badly as one who is a fisherman, and say to the one who is a fisherman, "You can have a job" and to the one who is not a fisherman, "You cannot". I should not like to do that and I should not like to be part of the government which foisted that kind of policy upon the local authorities and road boards. That was not done to the farmers, as my hon. friend from Burin-Burgeo pointed out. The farmers did not have to go out and work for their $200. They received a cheque. Why should not the fishermen be treated in the same way as the farmers?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Mr. Antle said they did not want a handout.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, the Solicitor General calls what the government has given to the farmers a handout.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I said that was what Mr. Antle said.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister said the fishermen did not want a handout. In other words, he is calling the acreage payments a handout.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I said to the hon. member that Mr. Antle, whom the hon. member quoted, said they did not want handouts. He wrote that himself.

Mr. Jones: Acreage payments are not handouts at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: If acreage payments are not handouts, why would a payment to the fishermen be a handout, because the problem of a deficiency of income was precisely the same in both cases. It was a crop failure in both cases. Why is it not a handout if it is paid to the farmer, and is a handout if it is paid to the fisherman? I cannot understand it, and neither can any reasonable man in Newfoundland or anywhere else.

In any event, Mr. Antle said—unfortunately I sent his letter to Hansard so I cannot quote his sentence verbatim—that it was up to the federal government to decide what was the best method of assistance. He did make a few suggestions, but he was not trying to govern Canada. Do not try to pass the buck to Mr. Antle, as you tried unsuccessfully to pass it to the premier of Newfoundland. It was the responsibility of these hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches who were given a huge majority to govern Canada, and who refuse to deal with any problem that arises, in any constructive fashion. I have been given a copy of Mr. Antle's letter and I think it is worth reading again what he said.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Mr. Chairman, I did not say it was in his letter. I said that he made that statement in the Newfoundland Fisherman, the magazine published by the Newfoundland federation of fishermen.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the Solicitor General knows just as well as I what Mr. Antle meant. He meant that the fishermen did not want to have to go on relief. The Solicitor General's leader promised that no one in Canada would have to go on relief if they voted for him in 1958. I have the promise right here.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is what was meant by a handout. They meant they wanted to be treated like any other Canadian and not driven on to relief. But hon. gentlemen opposite prefer to give them $20 and let them go on relief. That is their policy, and it does not wash. It is not good enough. If that is their conception of complete fairness and justice to all—

An hon. Member: It is a lot better than you did.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman says, "It is a lot better than you did". I also read—

Mr. Monteith (Perth): So right.

Mr. Pickersgill: A short time ago I read the Prime Minister's promise at Yarmouth, that there would be price supports for the fishermen as there are for the farmers, with the price known at the beginning of the season. Has that happened in the last four years since the promise was made? It is all of a piece, sir.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): You have only Newfoundland members in the committee now.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know the hon. gentleman is not very much interested in Newfoundland—that is very evident—and neither are the rest of his colleagues.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): You are monopolizing all the time.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Five members from Newfoundland; nobody else.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, the Solicitor General said I was monopolizing all the time. This debate started before four o'clock this afternoon and I did not rise until two minutes to six o'clock, so that anyone who says I have monopolized all the time is absolutely incorrect. Before I intervened in the debate I waited until every other hon. member who wanted to speak had an opportunity to do so. I represent a very large number of fishermen who had a crop failure last year. I was elected to represent these people and I intend to represent them and support them, and not make excuses for the failure of this government to accept its responsibilities and discharge them seriously and fairly.

Mr. Charlton: Are you going to have a convention this time too?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman is worried about a convention. If he would like to come down and represent his party, which has never had a convention in my constituency, I think his fate would not be different from that of his predecessors. I would not, if I were the hon. gentleman, talk very much about that subject. In any event, like most of the other interventions from the other side of the house, it is altogether irrelevant to the vote before us. If this is all the government will do—if they are not shamed into doing something better—it is still a pittance; it still is something, and nobody is going to refuse it.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): There are a few remarks I should like to make. I do not intend to detain the committee long, because it may feel inclined to pass this item before it rises. I should like to point out, as I have said before, that as far as the income of inshore fishermen in Newfoundland is concerned, in 1961 it was 1 per cent less than the three year average and for 1961 as compared with 1960 it showed a decline of a little more than $1 million—about $1,250,000 in round figures, or approximately 10 per cent as compared with 1960—and 1960 was one of the best income years that the fishermen of Newfoundland had experienced since union, since the time when the federal Department of Fisheries undertook its responsibility toward Newfoundland.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has poured scorn on the negotiations which began very shortly after the first request for assistance was made, and which were carried out by officials of my department. I do not want to name individuals, but some of the groups included Mr. McArthur to whom the hon. member referred. They went down to Newfoundland and conferred with representatives of the industry and of the provincial government. Afterwards they came up with the advice on which this program was based. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has said that anyone who could persuade the Prime Minister to write such a letter was foolish—that it was utter nonsense and he was displaying his ignorance of the situation in Newfoundland. I have advisers in my department who, I believe, are second to none among civil servants who are fisheries experts anywhere in the world. I say that they take second place to no one in the federal service, and on their advice and with the best judgment I could muster I made those recommendations and I take full responsibility for them. I do not say for one moment, nor do I pretend to say that my intimate knowledge of the fisheries of Newfoundland is great, but at least I am a neighbour of Newfoundland and I am an east coaster familiar with the environment in which the fishermen live. Small as my knowledge may be I do not intend that it should be overridden by the vast lack of knowledge displayed by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

I have proposed this item to this committee on the basis of the best advice available, with the cheerful co-operation of the officials and of the government of Newfoundland up to a certain point—about the day the legislature opened. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has admitted he was there on that day. Then the attitude of the provincial government seems to have changed overnight. They have disowned a thing which they agreed was suitable to begin with. I hope that is nothing more than coincidence.

Mr. Pickersgill: Thank you for the compliment.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Never during the course of the negotiations did the Newfoundland government once suggest the amount was too small. I admit it is small, because it is approximately 35 per cent of the total drop of income of the Newfoundland fishermen in 1961 as compared with 1960. The hon. member has contrasted this amount of $300,000 with the $42 million paid as an acreage payment to the western farmers. I say that this $300,000 is 35 per cent of the loss of income in the one year as compared with the other to the Newfoundland fishermen. Well, the $42 million just approved by this committee represents only 10 per cent of the drop in income experienced by the western farmers from one year to the next.

Since I have become minister in charge of this department I have taken a special interest in the fishermen of Newfoundland. It has been suggested by hon. members from the west coast that my interest is too great. I make no apologies, because Newfoundland, as far as government services are concerned, has a great deal of catching up to do. It is my intention to do what I can to improve the situation in which the fishermen of Newfoundland make their living. It is a hard life. Since I have been minister my department has doubled the outlets for subsidized bait to Newfoundland. We have increased the subsidy on long-liners and larger vessels of that sort in order that the fishermen may go out and fish where the fish are to be found rather than be dependant on the fish coming close to shore. There are many other things I could say. My department is most anxious to do what it can for the fishermen of Newfoundland so as to improve their lot, and I am not going to sell them short. I have a great deal of respect for the fishermen of Newfoundland. I know them to be a self-reliant, hardworking, honourable class of people.

Having said that, I want to say, in closing, only this: I do not pretend that this is the whole answer to all the ills of the fishermen of Newfoundland or that in the administration and distribution of this grant there will not be some who will feel they should have got more or that others are getting too much. There are bound to be difficulties and criticisms. Has there ever been anyone who has tried to improve the lot of his fellowmen who has not been criticized? The hon member for Bonavista-Twillingate has taken 50 minutes to express his point of view. I see it is ten o'clock, now, and I am going to sit down, but the hon. member has taken 50 minutes to pour scorn on this item and all I can say is that if I thought an item was as bad as this one is in his opinion I would not want to be associated with it. So I invite the hon. member who, I presume, is speaking for his party, to get up and move that this item be reduced to $1 if he feels that way about it.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 612 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Item agreed to.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Before we adjourn perhaps the house leader could indicate what we will do for the rest of the week. It would be of help if he could do so.

Mr. Churchill: We will continue with the program I outlined yesterday, namely conclude the supplementary estimates and then go on with the resolutions standing in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Pickersgill: If that business is completed tomorrow, can the minister say whether we would resume on Thursday debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne?

Mr. Churchill: The type of question that is offered to me is one that I could answer if the members of the opposition would tell me when we are going to complete the business that I have already outlined.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Production and marketing branch—

611. Payments to western grain producers to be distributed on the following basis, namely, $1 per cultivated acre up to a maximum of 200 acres per farm in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, $42,000,000.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

Special—

612. Contribution towards a special Newfoundland works program for fishing settlements that experienced income reduction resulting from decreased catches, $300,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, January 31, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SURPLUS MANPOWER AREAS

Question No. 25—Mr. Pitman:

1. How many areas have been designated as surplus manpower areas as of December 31, 1961?
2. What areas have been so designated as of December 31, 1961?
3. How many industries have been established in these areas as a result of double depreciation provisions granted in 1961 under the Income Tax Act.
4. What is the total employment given by these industries?
5. How many new industries processing new products and Canadian materials have been established under the provisions of double depreciation as granted in 1961 under the Income Tax Act?
6. What is the total employment of these industries?

Answer by: Mr. Balcer:

1. As of December 31, 1961, 19 areas and localities had been designated.

2. The following areas and localities have been designated: National employment service local office areas—Amherst, N.S., New Glasgow, N.S., Springhill, N.S., Newcastle, N.B., Drummondville, P.Q., Cornwall, Ontario, Elliot Lake, Ontario, Windsor, Ontario; Localities—Louisburg, N.S., Grand Falls-St. Leonard, N.B., Milltown, N.B., Port Elgin, N.B., Sackville, N.B., Campbellton, N.B., Louisville, P.Q., Matane, P.Q., Tracy, P.Q., La Broquerie, Manitoba, Drumheller, Alberta.

3, 4, 5 and 6. To be answered by the Department of Trade and Commerce.

3. To date, 9 new industries are being established in surplus manpower areas as a result of the special capital cost allowance program. In addition, several other applications are under consideration in the department at the present time. These industries will produce 22 new products.

4. The employment effects of the capital cost allowance program have been twofold. In many cases, immediate employment has been given to construction workers in the erection of new or expanded premises. Industries supplying materials, equipment and machinery have also benefited. In many cases, the new plants will not be completed for several months and the full employment-giving impact of these new industries may not be fully realized for some months. In total, we believe that a large number of workers will find jobs in surplus manpower areas because of the program.

5. To date a total of 66 new industries have been established under the program. These industries will be producing close to 100 new products. In addition, the department is examining a considerable number of other applications and these will result in the establishment of more facilities to produce new products.

6. Because many of these industries are in the process of being established, that is, having plants erected, buying machinery, etc., it is not possible to know how many workers they will ultimately employ. At the present time, they are giving employment to substantial numbers of construction workers who are erecting new and expanded plants. Furthermore, employment in machinery and equipment supplying industries has been assisted through the orders placed by these new industries. We believe that the total employment resulting from the program will be substantial.

*MR. ABBÉ BERGERON—SERVICE WITH ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

Question No. 43—Mr. Pigeon:

1. Has Mr. Abbé Bergeron, from Cornwall, Ontario, ever held a position with the St. Lawrence seaway authority and, if so, during what year, and for how many months?
2. What were his duties and working conditions?
3. By whom was he recommended to the president of the St. Lawrence seaway authority?
4. Who was then president of the St. Lawrence seaway authority?

Mr. Martini: The answer to No. 1 is yes; 1957—7 months; 1958—11 months.

The answer to the second part of the question is: soils inspector on construction of dike in Laprairie basin from May 29, 1957, to December 3, 1957; watchman at St. Lambert from December 4, 1957, to April 15, 1958; soils inspector on construction of dike in Laprairie basin from April 16, 1958, to November 28, 1958.

Working conditions as (1) soils inspector—casual employee, 40 hour week; (2) watchman—prevailing rate employee, 48 hour week.

In reply to the third part of the question, there is no record of any recommendation to the president of the authority.

Questions

The answer to the fourth part of the question is: Mr. Charles Gavsie until January 31, 1958; Mr. B. J. Roberts from February 1, 1958.

LINCOLN PARK R.C.A.F. BASE, LETHBRIDGE—IRREGULARITIES

Question No. 56—Mr. Argue:

1. Have any irregularities taken place at the Lincoln park R.C.A.F. base, Lethbridge, involving (a) the R.C.A.F. detachment in Lethbridge (b) Canadian Pacific Airlines (Repair) Ltd.?

2. If so, is an investigation under way, or has one been carried out?

3. If so, what is the result of the investigation?

Answer by: Mr. Chambers:

1. Yes, in the disposal of material from stored aircraft at Lethbridge.

2. An investigation is under way.

3. Results of investigation reported to date are as follows:

Three civilian employees of Canadian Pacific Airlines (Repair) were tried in civil court on December 12, 1961. A total of 15 charges, each involving government property, were preferred by the R.C.M.P. This included 11 charges of theft over $50, three under $50 and one of illegal possession. Each person was given a two year suspended sentence on each offence, as charged, to run concurrently.

The three persons, who were charged, as above, were suspended from duty by C.P.A. (R) on November 20, 1961. They were dismissed from the company on November 27, 1961. Four other civilian employees were temporarily suspended by C.P.A. (R) on November 20, 1961 but were reinstated shortly thereafter. One of the latter was subsequently dismissed by the company. No R.C.A.F. personnel were implicated.

INCREASE IN INFECTIOUS HEPATITIS

Question No. 58—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

Is the Minister of National Health and Welfare in a position to explain the increase in the incidence of infectious hepatitis in Canada in the past year?

Answer by: Mr. Monteith (Perth):

The reason for the increased incidence of infectious hepatitis in Canada last year is not known precisely. However probably the reasons are (1) the tendency for the disease to appear in cycles and (2) better reporting of the disease.

Infectious hepatitis is most common in children and young adults. Many infections are mild, develop no jaundice, and are recognizable only by liver function tests. The mode of spread of infectious hepatitis is similar to that of intestinal infections. The principal mode of spread of this disease is probably through intimate person to person contact.

[Mr. Martini.]

BLIND PERSONS ALLOWANCE—REPRESENTATIONS

Question No. 59—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the government received representations from any organizations, requesting a specific allowance for blind persons of $25 a month free of a means test, to compensate for extra expenses incurred because of blindness?

2. If so, from what organizations have such representations been received, and what answer has the government made?

Answer by: Mr. Monteith (Perth):

1. Yes.

2. Representations were made by a joint deputation of the Canadian Council of the Blind and the Canadian National Institute for the Blind on September 26 last. The Minister of National Health and Welfare in meeting with this group indicated the desire on the part of the government to be helpful to blind persons and that their representations would receive very careful consideration. He mentioned that in any steps taken to improve Canada's social welfare legislation the needs of blind persons would certainly be included and that in this regard it was hoped that further steps would be taken at the next session of parliament.

A number of these steps have already been announced. The increase in the maximum benefit to $65 a month and the provision of a higher income ceiling under the Blind Persons Act will with the co-operation of the provinces bring added income to more than 8,500 blind persons across Canada. The increase in the federal old age security pension to $65 a month will bring higher benefits to between 10,000 and 11,000 blind persons now covered by that program. The proposal for the establishment of a national council of welfare at this time is for the purpose of advising on the federal government's social assistance programs including the Blind Persons Act; the representations made by organizations representing blind persons with respect to the further improvement of legislation affecting the blind are of course especially important in the consideration of this question. The fourth step relates to plans, if the provinces agree to a constitutional amendment, to introduce an old age survivors and disability insurance program which would include social insurance protection against blindness along with other disabilities.

CHRISTMAS POSTAGE STAMP—REPRESENTATIONS

Question No. 60—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the postmaster general received representations from any organizations or individuals for a special Christmas postage stamp?

2. If so, from what organizations or individuals, and what reasons were given for not complying with such requests?

Answer by: Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace):

1. Yes.

2. (a) The following individuals and organizations submitted letters during the past year recommending the issue of a special Christmas postage stamp. This list is representative of requests received during previous years.

Mr. Robert Kingham, 125 Victoria ave. S., Hamilton, Ont., 5th Jan. 1962,

Miss Grace N. Gawley, 17 Lascelles blvd., Toronto 7, Ont., Dec. 1961,

Mr. T. D. Hulbert, 3325 E. 27th ave., Vancouver 12, B.C., 30th Nov. 1961,

Mr. H. Barrett, Richmond, Surrey, England, 19th Aug. 1961,

Hon. Paul Martin, M.P., House of Commons, Ottawa, 8th Sept. 1961,

Sr. Rose-de-la-Trinite, c.s.c., 1295 Basil Moreau, Montreal 9, 31st July 1961,

Mr. Norman M. Easton, Minto st., Regina, Sask., 6th June 1961,

Mr. Laurier Regnier, M.P., House of Commons, Ottawa, 14th April 1961—May 1960,

Mr. J. R. Tucker, M.P., House of Commons, Ottawa, 14th April 1961—29th Dec. 1960,

Mr. C. W. Carter, M.P., House of Commons, Ottawa, 13th April 1961,

Letter referred from the chairman "Christ in Christmas campaign" St. John's, Newfoundland, by Mr. J. A. McGrath, M.P., House of Commons, 20th Dec. 1960; by Hon. W. J. Browne, M.P., Solicitor General, Ottawa, 6th Jan. 1961; by Mr. C. R. Granger, M.P., House of Commons, 27th Jan. 1961.

Master David Carter, 469A LaFontaine st., Montreal, Jan. 1961.

(b) For a great many years it has been the policy to avoid the representation of a religious subject on postage stamps in Canada. This long standing policy was maintained to promote religious tolerance and mutual respect. It is believed that there are a great many conscientious Christians who believe strongly that there should not be a Christmas stamp. In this country where there is such a high degree of tolerance of various points of view, particularly in religious convictions, postage stamps to commemorate the religious character of Christmas might very well have the opposite effect from that intended by those who have advocated it. Until there is a much more uniform opinion on this question, it is thought the issue of a Christmas stamp would be inadvisable.

C.N.R. STATION AGENT, STONEY POINT, ONT.

Question No. 63—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Will the Minister of Transport advise whether the board of transport commissioners has issued an order granting the Canadian National Railways authority to remove the station agent at Stoney Point, Ontario?

2. If so, what is the effective date of this arrangement?

Answer by: Mr. Martini:

The board of transport commissioners for Canada advise as follows:

1. Yes, by order No. 106776 dated January 11, 1962 of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada.

2. As soon as arranged by the Canadian National Railways.

P.E.I. CAUSEWAY SURVEY

Question No. 64—Mr. McWilliam:

Have the studies into the Prince Edward Island causeway been completed to the point where such studies have demonstrated the feasibility of constructing such a causeway?

Answer by: Mr. Walker:

No. The engineers are reasonably certain at this stage that some type of crossing can be constructed. However, studies into the designs for various types of crossings and into some of the engineering problems associated with them, all of which have a bearing on cost and feasibility, are still not completed.

*GRAIN ELEVATOR STORAGE CAPACITY, PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.

Question No. 74—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1958, have any studies been made of the possibility of increasing the storage capacity of the grain elevators at Prince Rupert, B.C., and, if so, what do these studies indicate?

2. Have any steps been taken or are any contemplated with respect to so increasing the storage capacity of the said elevator and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Jorgenson: In reply to the hon. member's question I wish to advise him that an interdepartmental committee has been appointed to study the problems related to the storage and handling of grains in Canada. Its major function will be to prepare an initial assessment of the adequacy of present facilities for the storage and handling of grain in relation to present and future requirements for the storage and the movement of Canadian grains. The situation in Prince Rupert will be examined during the course of the over-all study.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

C. M. DRURY—APPOINTMENTS AND DECORATIONS

Question No. 72—Mr. Matheson:

1. What civilian and military appointments, with dates, have been held by the C. M. Drury referred to by the Prime Minister on January 23, 1962?

2. What decorations, if any, have been conferred upon Drury?

3. Has this government honoured Drury by any appointment?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

UNIVERSITY GRANTS TO QUEBEC

Motion No. 1—Mr. Cardin (for Mr. Chevrier):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence between the Prime Minister of Canada and the premier of the province of Quebec concerning university grants since January 1, 1961.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, subject to the concurrence of the provincial government.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the Prime Minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

METHOD OF AMENDING CONSTITUTION

Motion No. 2—Mr. Cardin (for Mr. Chevrier):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Minister of Justice and the attorneys general or other provincial ministers since July 1, 1960, regarding the method of amending the constitution of Canada.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, in anticipation of a request of this nature I wrote to the provinces, I think on January 9, to ascertain their position with regard to the production of correspondence. I have not as yet heard from all the provinces and would therefore ask that this motion stand.

Motion stands.

ROAD CONNECTION, KITAMAAT INDIAN RESERVE-KITIMAT MUNICIPALITY

Motion No. 3—Mr. Howard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged between the federal government and any other government or person since January 1, 1956, and dealing with a road connection between the Indian reserve of Kitamaat and the municipality of Kitimat.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, this motion can be accepted subject to the co-operation and permission of the provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN HANDICRAFT IMPORTS FROM JAPAN

Motion No. 4—Mr. Howard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged between a Mrs. Bernadette Grey of Fort Fraser, B.C., and the superintendent general of Indian affairs or any official of the Indian affairs branch since January 1, 1960, regarding Indian handicrafts or imitation Indian handicrafts imported from Japan.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, we accept this motion. There may be a short delay in procuring copies of this correspondence because some of it has to come from our field offices.

Motion agreed to.

CONTRACTS FOR SALE OF GRAIN TO CHINA

Motion No. 5—Mr. McIlraith:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all contracts entered into between the Canadian wheat board and the China Resources Company for the sale of grain under the long term agreement between the Canadian wheat board and the China Resources Company.

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister I would ask that this motion stand, and also No. 6.

Mr. Speaker: The parliamentary secretary asks that this motion stand. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion stands.

AGREEMENT FOR SALE OF WHEAT TO CHINA

Motion No. 6—Mr. McIlraith:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of the long term agreement signed by the Canadian wheat board and the China Resources Company covering the period June 1, 1961, to December 1963.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that this motion stand, at the request of the parliamentary secretary?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion stands.

TRADE

CUBA—CANADIAN POLICY FOLLOWING O.A.S. RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the Canadian government intends to reconsider its policies toward the government of Cuba in the light of the resolution passed yesterday at the inter-American conference in Uruguay recommending the exclusion of that country from the organization of American states.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think there was the general agreement on the part of hon. members in all parts of the house that so long as our trade with Cuba was in non-strategic materials there was no reason whatever to interfere with it. I think there were representatives of the official opposition as well as of the N.D.P. who held that view. No consideration has been given to any change in the policy.

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS FOR NEW AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Agriculture. Would the acting minister inform the house as to the general attitude being taken by the Canadian negotiators at Geneva having to do with the establishment of a further international wheat agreement? More particularly, would he comment on a press report in the Winnipeg Free Press that Canada is asking for a ceiling price of $2 to $2.10 a bushel while certain other countries are asking for a ceiling price of $2.35 a bushel?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Agriculture): As usual, Mr. Speaker, I will not comment on assumptions or guesses made by the Winnipeg Free Press. I can tell the hon. member that our delegation at this conference will do its best to have a further wheat agreement arrived at on equitable terms.

Mr. Argue: I wonder whether I might ask the minister if Canada is shooting for a ceiling price of $2.35 a bushel, or $2.10, or somewhere in between.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may ask, as he has done, but I am not going to answer.

URANIUM—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether any progress has been made in bringing to a conclusion the negotiations regarding the uranium contract with the United Kingdom since he last mentioned the matter in the house.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): There is progress being made, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: At the usual speed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BRANTFORD, ONT.—DISMISSAL OF EMPLOYEES OF IMPLEMENT COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. I wonder whether the minister is yet in a position to report, as a result of his discussions, with regard to the lay-offs of employees of the Cockshutt Farm Equipment Limited plant in Brantford. In particular, would the minister comment on the statement by the general manager that 600 employees are about to be laid off and will receive only about one third of the severance pay that they should get.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Assiniboia is following up the question he posed to me yesterday. Since then I have had a long discussion with the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Wratten) who is vitally interested in this matter, and I have contacted the national employment service office in Brantford.

We have received a report from the Brantford national employment service office that a part of the Cockshutt Farm Equipment plant is in process of sale to the White Motor Company and its affiliate the Oliver Farm Equipment Company. It is understood that this sale has been approved by the directors of Cockshutt Farm Equipment Limited and recommended to the shareholders.

Lay-offs have occurred at the plant over the last three weeks while some employees, it is understood, have left of their own accord to accept other employment. The Brantford national employment service office is finding employment within commuting distance of Brantford for some skilled tradesmen, while others are finding employment through personal contacts with other employers. One employer from outside the Brantford area has interviewed skilled tradesmen with a view to their employment elsewhere.

The prospect of alternative employment for the semi-skilled and unskilled workers is less bright at this moment. However, the situation concerning all those laid off is still somewhat uncertain until the sale has been completed and the intention of the new owners concerning the operation of the plant has become known. The national employment service office is keeping in close contact with the situation and will do everything possible to re-establish as quickly as possible the men who are being and will be laid off.

As to severance pay, that is not a matter which comes within federal jurisdiction. The agricultural implement industry is under provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Argue: May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the interest which I am sure the minister has in maintaining as much employment in the country as possible, is the hon. gentleman prepared to discuss with the new foreign owners of what was once a Canadian company the possibility of maintaining the work force and not providing for the dismissal of 600 workers at this time?

Mr. Starr: I am always willing to have discussions at any time with anyone interested in the employment of Canadians.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to address a related question to the Minister of Finance, and ask him whether the acquisition of this historic farm implement company by a foreign corporation and the subsequent unemployment can be attributed to his policy of depreciating the Canadian dollar.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question, as I heard it, appears to be an attempt to express a point of view rather than a search for information.

REPORTED REFUSAL TO TAKE TECHNICAL TRAINING COURSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Does the minister agree with the statement of the government leader in the other place as reported in today's Globe and Mail—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Matheson: —that unemployed Canadians are refusing to take technical training courses—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is asking for an opinion. If he has a question of fact to bring to the attention of the Minister of Labour, it would be in order to do so.

Mr. Matheson: May I ask the Minister of Labour whether it is true that unemployed Canadians are refusing to take technical training courses that would enable them to find jobs?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): This has not been brought to my attention. I am not aware of that situation.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

"PARADE"—ALLEGED CENSORSHIP OF PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. I am sure we are all very pleased to see him in his place and looking so well.

In view of the charges made by the Toronto night club comedienne Jean Templeton—no relation to Charles Templeton—that the C.B.C. ordered deletion of satirical references to the Prime Minister written by her for the television variety program "Parade", would the minister investigate these charges to make certain that political influence is not being exercised to censor humorous or satirical references related to the policy, platitudes or physique of the Prime Minister in violation of our tradition?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I cannot help wishing that the question asked had been more in keeping with the kindly words spoken by the hon. member at the beginning. I do not have to make any inquiries as to whether political influence was used in connection with this matter because neither this government, nor any member of it, either now or in the future, would use political influence over the C.B.C. I have heard suggestions of political influence, but emanating from within toward this government, rather than in the other direction.

If the hon. gentleman had read the article this morning on which he purports to base his question he would have noticed that the monologue was directed not only to the Prime Minister of Canada but to the President of the United States, to members of the royal family, to Mr. Khrushchev and many other distinguished people, and that the producer of the C.B.C. program said these references were deleted because they were in poor taste. Having received complaints at various times in the past from the hon. member for Kootenay West as well as from other hon. members with respect to poor taste alleged to have been exhibited by the C.B.C., I am sure that these references must have been in very poor taste indeed or they would not have been deleted.

MONTREAL—NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Loiselle (St. Ann): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Public Works. Is the minister aware of a statement by the mayor of Montreal to the effect that the city expects to receive a favourable decision before February 12 concerning the C.B.C. project to be built in the east end of Montreal? Has the minister any comment to make on Mayor Drapeau's statement?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): No.

"THE LIMELIGHTERS"—STATEMENT ON WITHDRAWAL OF PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I should have mentioned, while I was on my feet, that yesterday the hon. member for Ottawa West asked me a question with respect to the program called "The Limelighters". At that time I did not know precisely to what the question referred, but in reading the papers this morning I noticed there is some connection between "The Limelighters" and the monologue proposed for broadcasting by Miss Templeton. Perhaps the answer which I gave to the hon. member for Kootenay West could be taken as applying to the question asked yesterday.

PROTESTS AGAINST PROGRAM ON LIFE OF MR. DUPLESSIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Would the minister inquire whether the C.B.C. has received a telegram from Quebec legislative councillor Mr. Gerald Martineau protesting two television programs on the life of Mr. Duplessis. Further, could the hon. gentleman say whether this matter is being investigated?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I can say without inquiry that the C.B.C. has received protests with respect to parts of the programs dealing with the life of the late Hon. Mr. Duplessis. The corporation has also received protests against the portrayal of the life of a former Liberal premier of the province of Ontario.

COMBINES

CANADA PACKERS—INQUIRY AS TO COURT ORDER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like, if I may, to direct a question to the Minister of Justice and ask him what action has been taken with respect to the recommendation of the restrictive trade practices commission to the effect that a court order either for the dissolution of the merger or for preventive action should be sought in relation to the acquisition of Calgary Packers Limited and Wilsil Limited by Canada Packers?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): My recollection is that this matter has been referred to counsel, but with precisely what instructions I do not recall. I shall have to look that up and give a more complete answer tomorrow.

SPORTS

OLYMPIC GAMES—REQUEST FOR SUPPORT OF CENTENNIAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arthur Smith (Calgary South): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport in his capacity as joint chairman of Canada's centennial committee. I should like to ask him whether this committee would consider including in its plans, which I presume are currently under way, support and co-operation for the various agencies attempting to bring the 1968 Olympic games to the Banff-Lake Louise area of Canada.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I am confident that the centennial committee would welcome any opportunity to co-operate with any group or association in order to promote this undertaking, which should prove a great boost for Canada's international prestige.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND—INQUIRY AS TO ACTION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour whether the government proposes to introduce legislation to deal with the rapidly decreasing unemployment insurance fund before the dissolution of parliament or before the end of the present fiscal year?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Finance could best deal with this question, but I may say there will be an item in the further supplementary estimates later this year.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would be happier to have the reply of the Minister of Labour, but since the minister prefers to pass the responsibility to the Minister of Finance, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether he is prepared to reply to the question?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the question has already been replied to, and I am sorry if the hon. member did not hear the reply.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO PROTEST AGAINST DIVIDEND TAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. On February 7, 1961, as reported at page 1796 of Hansard of that date, I asked the minister the following question:

Has the minister received a protest against the 15 per cent dividend tax from the director of the $100 million Anaconda development in northwestern Ontario, on which they have already spent $5 million? If so, have they indicated that they will suspend operations on the property, thereby displacing 100 men employed on the project?

The minister replied as follows—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is undoubtedly very interesting but it is a matter of record in Hansard. Has the hon. member a current question to ask?

Mr. Badanai: Has the minister received indications lately that the company, which employs 100 men, is closing its operations due to the 15 per cent dividend tax? Has the minister received communications or representations in that regard?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): No, sir.

UNITED NATIONS

GHANA—REQUEST FOR TEAM OF CANADIAN ARMY OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the Canadian government received any request from the government of Ghana to supply officers or military officials for the training of the Ghanaian army?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe that same question or a similar one was asked some days ago, and the hon. member will find the answer in Hansard.

Mr. Hellyer: A supplementary question. My question is based on a late report from England which indicated that there had been a further request. Would the minister say if there has been any additional request?

Mr. Green: There has been no change in that situation since the answer which was given the other day.

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN BOND ISSUE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he is in a position to state the attitude of the government of Canada toward participating in the United Nations bond issue designed to deal with the financial situation confronting that organization, along the lines of the recommendation being made by the President of the United States for the purchase of $100 million of these bonds.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government was the first to announce participation in that bond issue. This was some weeks ago, and I am amazed that the hon. member did not hear about it. I did notice one report in the magazine U.S. News and World Report which I am very glad to have the opportunity to correct today. This report said that Canada owed the United Nations the amount which is to be subscribed to this bond issue. That is completely wrong, of course. The facts are just the opposite.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for this information, and I regret that I did not know the government had made up its mind. I can only say that the government propaganda machine apparently was not functioning.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Could the genial minister, who seemed to be a little cross at my question, tell me what amount we are taking up?

Mr. Green: Canada is subscribing for her share of the bond issue. It is about $6¼ million.

BRIDGES

CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO TOLL CHARGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Pit Lessard (St. Henry): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Until a definite date is set for the opening of Champlain bridge, can the minister assure the house that it will not be a toll bridge.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with regard to tolls on the bridges between the island of Montreal and the south shore of the St. Lawrence, I made a statement at the beginning of the session to the effect that we were asking the province and the city of Montreal to discuss with us a plan designed to remove the tolls on Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges.

As far as Champlain bridge is concerned, nothing has been changed in the previous plans of the Department of Transport.

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): I should like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell the house whether he has written to the provincial and municipal authorities in connection with an agreement for the abolition of tolls on the Jacques Cartier bridge and whether he has communicated with the authorities of the C.N.R. with respect to the Victoria bridge?

Mr. Balcer: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL PARKS

TERRA NOVA—SUGGESTED LOCATION FOR SHIP "BOUNTY"

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources if the Metro-Goldwyn-Meyer Corporation—

An hon. Member: Mayer.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I am not very familiar with those things.

Mr. Hees: You do not get to the movies much.

Mr. Pickersgill: —has offered—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. members cannot expect the question to be dealt with if they all endeavour to answer the question before it is asked.

Mr. Pickersgill: —that fine ship the Bounty to the Canadian government and, if so, whether the minister would consider having the ship come to rest in one of the harbours in Terra Nova national park in the province where so many of the finest Nova Scotia ships have found their last home.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, there were several implications in the question that was asked by the hon. member. My reply to the first is that there has been an approach made to the government of Canada by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation. This approach has been made through the Department of National Defence, I believe. As to the second part of the question, whether the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources would give consideration to making the Bounty an integral part of Terra Nova national park, and the hon. member's reference to the ships that lie in the bays there, I shall take that matter under active consideration.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the minister very much for his answer.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

613. Special services branch including the promotion of a program for combating seasonal unemployment, the organization and use of workers for farming and related industries and assistance to the provinces under agreements entered into with the provinces by the Minister of Labour with the approval of the governor in council—further amount required, $90,000.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, this item in the further supplementary estimates for $90,000 is an amount required in connection with our do it now campaign. There has not been a complete statement on the functions of this campaign and the goal that we have in mind, or the participation that is involved in this campaign along with the promotional work undertaken by the federal government. Today I will try to give the members of the committee as full and complete a report on this item as is available.

This money is to provide for additional publicity material in the way of posters, pamphlets and advertising to support the efforts of and fulfil requests from our winter employment committees in towns and cities from coast to coast. This national campaign is designed to encourage individuals, businesses, industries and householders to carry out as much work as possible during the cold months. This program has reached a degree of effectiveness in the last couple of years which has resulted in positive effects on business activity in a wide variety of areas each year, and particularly each winter.

While there is still much to be done, the construction and supply industries have proven beyond any doubt, Mr. Chairman, that construction of all types can be a year round activity. The Canadian Construction Association reported in a bulletin dated November 30, 1961, as follows:

> During the past eight years, increased efforts have been made by government at all levels, by individuals, by communities and by national organizations to stimulate winter employment. These have met with a substantial measure of success. As a matter of fact, the volume of wintertime construction and employment has increased so that now more Canadians are employed in construction operations in mid-winter than were employed during the so-called building season a dozen years ago.

This is the end of the quotation that appeared in this bulletin issued by the Canadian Construction Association on November 30 last. In further support of this statement I should like to quote from the September, 1961 issue of the National Builder, a magazine which is closely associated with the National House Builders Association. I quote:

> The swing to year round operation in building has made faster headway among the general contractors, but now it seems that home builders are catching up fast, encouraged by the easy availability of mortgage loans, the increasing number of pre-sold houses, and the advantages of getting their latest designs on the market for the growing spring market.

Recently the editor of this magazine sent us the following message relating this trend to our do it now campaign. His message read thus:

You will be interested to know the do it now winter work campaign is converting the building industry across Canada to a stabilized year round operation from former spring to fall activities. Winter home building particularly now goes ahead in volume for a newly created winter-spring sales market.

That is the end of his remarks. Another authoritative magazine, the Building Supply Dealer—I might say at this time, Mr. Chairman, this magazine has vigorously supported the do it now campaign and its principle over the past several years—reports an increasing winter business amongst lumber dealers during each of the past few winters. In the December issue of Lumber Merchandising, another trade paper which serves the construction industry, the editor stated as follows, referring to the do it now campaign:

The idea of having work done in the winter months has been promoted consistently for the past few years and every year the accumulated effort helps produce more results for the current season.

Now, Mr. Chairman, during the past winter, from November to March, government sponsored N.H.A. home improvement loans increased over the previous year by 63 per cent and in total dollar value by 115 per cent, reaching almost $16 million. Government backed farm improvement loans increased by 51 per cent and the dollar value by 53 per cent, reaching a total of some $3.5 million.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my hon. friend permit me to make an observation? In view of the related nature of the item now before us and the more important one of $40 million, may we not consider both these items at the same time? The minister is now making a speech that would apply in part at any rate to both these items, and so for convenience of discussion, we would all be in order if we might consider both items together if this is agreeable.

The Chairman: The unanimous consent of the committee would be required, of course.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to items 613 and 614 being considered at the same time?

Mr. Starr: Provided, Mr. Chairman, that the committee would agree that both items would be passed simultaneously.

[Mr. Starr.]

The Chairman: When the discussion has been exhausted, both items will carry.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Starr: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This means that during the winter months almost $19 million more was spent than in the winter previous on home and farm improvements. We hope for similar results this year. One large lending agency specializing in the building supply field reported an increase of 400 per cent in last winter's business over the previous winter, and attributed it largely to the effects of the do it now winter works campaign. They have just reported that during this past December their home improvement loan business equalled their entire winter business of last year, indicating, I submit, a marked increase this year over last year.

Further support of marked increases in winter construction activity is found in reports from 1600 lumber dealers, painting and decorating contractors and plumbers who tied their business promotions in with the do it now campaign we sponsored. The building supply dealers reported an average increase in their sales last winter of 19 per cent as a result of their participation in this campaign. Painting and decorating contractors reported a 21 per cent increase in their business, while plumbing and heating contractors had a 10 per cent increase.

In view of the heavy publicity campaign and advertising being carried out through all media at the present time, I should like to point out that more than 90 per cent of all we see and hear promoting the do it now principle is either contributed as a public service or paid for by business and industry, and this is all done as a result of the promotion that has been carried out in regard to the winter works do it now campaign. We estimate that we receive at least $10 public service support for every dollar we spend on behalf of the do it now campaign, and public support will again exceed $3 million this winter.

I take this opportunity of paying tribute to the hundreds of public spirited business enterprises, as well as to the newspapers, magazines, radio stations, television stations, public spirited companies and others that are so generous in supporting this national campaign. In addition to the paid public service support, it is very encouraging to me, and I am sure to all of us, to note that the direct advertising, whether in news or services by business and industry, has been increasing each winter, resulting in a reversal of old habits and customs of waiting for spring. On the radio last winter there were 37,000 spot announcements, either sponsored or contributed as a public service by 220 radio stations, as well as 400 hours of program time discussing the do it now campaign. Television stations carried almost 80,000 spot announcements, either contributed by themselves, their advertisers or the C.B.C.

Advertising tied in with the do it now theme in newspapers has produced a total sum of 1,500 pages, and in addition newspapers carried more than 4,200 news stories. The poster advertising association of Canada and its member companies contributed 2,000 billboards as a public service across Canada, and thousands of merchants placed our poster material in their shop windows.

Excellent leadership has been provided at the local level by the national employment service and by some 195 winter employment campaign committees in all parts of Canada. The local campaigns which they developed have enlisted the full support of municipal governments, boards of trade, labour unions, women's groups, service clubs, banks, contractors, retail merchants, public utilities, churches and a variety of community groups. I also want to place on record my sincere appreciation of the efforts and support forthcoming from hundreds of private citizens who have helped to organize effective local campaigns in co-operation with the local employment offices.

Doing our best to practice what we preach, all departments within the federal government which are in a position to contribute to winter employment are doing so on an increasing scale. The departments which carry out construction and maintenance projects have set a good example in planning their operations so that a maximum amount of work will be carried out during the winter months.

The value of repair, alteration and maintenance work scheduled for the winter has averaged more than $10 million for the past four years, and will exceed this figure during the present winter. Procurement has also been specifically initiated or rescheduled in order to provide maximum winter work. The provincial governments have also taken effective steps to increase their construction, maintenance and procurement activities during the winter months.

There is not much else I can add to my statement on this particular item, and since the committee has agreed that we should consider both items at the same time I shall now give some idea of what is entailed in the next item of $40 million, known to all of us as the municipal winter works incentive program.

As in previous winters, these payments cover one half the payroll costs on accepted projects from October 15, 1961 to a date to be determined by order in council. This is exactly the same as it was last year. In previous years the closing date was set at April 30 in the first supplemental vote, and this date was extended to May 31 in subsequent supplemental votes. Last year the vote was changed to provide for flexibility, if required at April 30 or close to that date.

The program was first introduced in 1958 as a part of the government's over-all action to create additional winter employment and, through performance, has proven most successful. It is now in its fourth winter and has provided an increased number of jobs each year. These have been mainly in the construction industry, where traditionally in Canada unemployment during the winter months has been high.

During the first winter, 1958-59, the number of men hired for on-site work was estimated at 41,500. That was when the opposition described the program as "peanuts" and "a bagatelle". During the second winter, 1959-60, the number of men hired was 51,600, and this was again described by the opposition in the same terms.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In relation to the total problem.

Mr. Starr: Last winter the number was 121,000 and already this winter the figure has reached 111,200. I might point out, as I have done in the past, that at least as many more persons have received employment or guarantees of employment each winter on off-site work, in the supply of materials used in the various projects.

The program was introduced as something of an experiment in 1958 to help stimulate work during the winter months, and the results achieved prove that it is a most useful method of attacking seasonal unemployment. Proof of that statement is the fact that the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, among others, supported the program from the outset as being a desirable means of providing additional winter employment and, at the same time, enabling municipalities to undertake much needed public services.

However, there were some who felt the program had little chance of success and that it would not appeal to the local governments. Now, to refute that, the increased number of municipalities that have taken advantage of the program each winter clearly indicates that it does appeal to municipalities; and the amount of work undertaken, together with the number of jobs created, are evidence that the program is effectively fulfilling its purpose.

During the first two winters, as an example, the program applied to certain specified categories of projects such as the construction and major improvement of roads, streets and sidewalks, the construction and major improvement of water, sewage and drainage facilities and the construction and development of municipal parks and playgrounds. These categories were then extended under last winter's program to include construction, major reconstruction or renovation of municipal buildings. The program for the current winter has again been broadened to cover any capital undertaking of a municipality, with only a few exceptions. The major exceptions are work on schools and hospitals. The reason for this is that the federal government participates in these fields and grants assistance under other measures.

The present program covers all the categories of projects which qualified in previous years, as well as many additional classes of projects. This year's program has been further broadened to include projects carried out in unorganized settlements, provided the work is sponsored by a community organization and carried out under acceptable community and provincial supervision. The current program also provides for participation by Indian bands, as was the case last winter and the winter before.

Up to the present time this year we have received 6,121 applications under this program, of which 6,048 have been accepted. Of the remainder, some have been rejected and some are pending decision.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): How many have been accepted?

Mr. Starr: The number accepted is 6,048.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And 6,121 have come in?

Mr. Starr: Yes. Some are pending decision. The estimated total cost of those applications which have been accepted to date is $257½ million. Of this amount it is estimated that $200 million will be expended during the period of the program, which commenced on October 15, 1961. The estimated total payroll costs of the projects which have been accepted during the period of the program is $66 million and the estimated federal government share is, of course, $33 million, 50 per cent of the payroll costs.

It is estimated that these undertakings which have been approved to date will provide employment for 111,200 men, for a total of 4,743,000 man days of work. Last winter's program did not reach these proportions until mid-April.

A total of 647 municipalities participated in the program during the winter of 1958-59. That was the first winter in which this program was put into effect. The following year, during the winter of 1959-60 a total of 869 municipalities and Indian bands undertook projects under the program. Therefore there was an increase of over 200 municipalities participating during the second winter of the program.

With the broadening of the program last winter a total of 2,163 municipalities and Indian bands participated. That was three times as many as the winter before. Under this winter's program a total of 2,286 municipalities, Indian bands and unorganized settlements have submitted projects to date. This is an increase over last year of 120 municipalities so far this winter which are participating.

Some provinces, in co-operating with us in order to help in this situation, are granting additional assistance to the municipalities by making a financial contribution toward the payroll costs of projects approved under the program.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Six provinces?

Mr. Starr: I was just coming to that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I just ask the question.

Mr. Starr: How many, did you say?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Six, is it not?

Mr. Starr: It is seven. I should like to list the provinces which are participating in this form of contribution and give their contributions. Prince Edward Island contributes 25 per cent; Quebec contributes 40 per cent; Ontario contributes 25 per cent; Manitoba contributes 25 per cent in respect of persons who are not entitled to unemployment insurance benefits, and 50 per cent in respect of persons who have been in receipt of social welfare assistance for a specified period. Saskatchewan contributes 25 per cent; Alberta contributes 25 per cent; British Columbia contributes 25 per cent plus an additional 25 per cent in respect of persons who have been in receipt of social welfare assistance for a specified period.

Under the laws of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia these provinces carried out work in rural municipalities that is of a nature normally considered to be a municipal function. Projects of this nature are acceptable under the municipal winter works incentive program, and in these instances the provinces contribute 50 per cent of the payroll costs of approved projects and bear the costs of materials and services.

I indicated earlier that in addition to creating jobs the municipal winter works incentive program has been of benefit to municipalities in enabling them to provide much needed public services. In this connection I should like to point out that the program since its inception has contributed to the construction and major improvement of roads, streets and sidewalks having a total value of $167 million; to the construction and improvement of water, sewage and drainage facilities totalling $481 million and parks and playground facilities worth $36 million, while $78 million has been spent on the construction, major reconstruction or renovation of municipal buildings. This represents in all a total of more than $762 million in municipal works since the program began. This is a truly worthwhile program, Mr. Chairman.

Applications covering projects under the program are being received daily. There is an almost hourly change in the program. In my opinion there is no doubt at all that the number of municipalities participating and the volume of work provided this winter will be considerably larger than under last winter's program. We are endeavouring, with success, to interest more and more municipalities to participate in this program. Once they have entered it they want more of it. They are continually participating and being joined by other municipalities. In view of the excellence of this program I am sure the committee will find no difficulty in passing these estimates.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In the light of the fact that as of the last reported period there were 413,000 Canadians out of work, and bearing in mind that this was in the month of December, a period when the seasonal rise normally begins to take on a more acute form in our pattern of unemployment, not too much satisfaction can be derived from the statement made by the minister.

The hon. gentleman says that the do it now campaign for which he is asking a vote of $90,000 is carried out largely by business promotion and promotions generally under the auspices of non-government bodies. Likewise, one has to draw the conclusion from the circumstances surrounding federal participation in the winter works program that the bulk of this program is not carried on by the federal government but by the municipalities and the provinces. Notwithstanding this, the government gives the impression that through this program, of which it seeks to claim authorship, it is embarking on a vigorous measure to correct unemployment.

The fact is that this program, as it is, is not good enough. The fact is that this program neither at the present time nor since it came into being has dealt with the problem of unemployment which faces us in this country. There were 413,000 people out of work in the month of December. We do not know what the figure is as of this date, January 31, 1962. Normally we would have received that figure some time around the 20th of the month, and perhaps before this debate is over the minister might explain why we have not received it as yet. In any event, this program cannot be regarded as satisfying the needs of Canada with regard to unemployment at this time.

Mr. Starr: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he asking about the bureau of statistics figures on employment and unemployment for December?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No; for the last reported period. We should have had them on January 20.

Mr. Starr: On January 20 the hon. member received them for December, and he will not receive the January figures until the middle of February.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I know, but the minister could easily have given us an interim report.

An hon. Member: Give your own figures.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am asked to give my own. Well, I will tell the committee this, and it is something everyone in this country knows. The problem of unemployment in Canada continues to be the major domestic problem facing us, and this government cannot, by a program of this kind, satisfy the Canadian people that it is resolutely and adequately confronting the problem. We welcome any measure taken to mitigate these fluctuations of employment, particularly those due to seasonal causes; but we are acutely aware, as I am sure the country is aware, that solutions of the type now being put forward do not go to the root of the unemployment problem.

It is, of course, characteristic of seasonal unemployment that it is most likely to occur in those very regions which suffer most from chronic unemployment. I have in mind, for example, the Atlantic provinces where unemployment since 1957 has been running at nearly twice the level of unemployment in the country as a whole. The seasonal swing in those provinces is twice as large as it is in Canada as a whole.

This government has not met the problem of unemployment. It certainly is not confronting the question as the President of the United States is. When one examines President Kennedy's state of the union message and the statement he made one week later, and compares the comprehensive measures envisaged by the government of the United States with the haphazard, laissez faire manner in which this government is meeting the problem, even a few months, or a short time before a general election, one will not find it difficult to justify the condemnation which again we level at this government at this time for the way it is handling the problem of unemployment. There can be no doubt that the government has not yet given us any evidence of a program designed to carefully, thoroughly and effectively meet this problem. We say this program is satisfactory as far as it goes.

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question? The hon. gentleman referred to the proposals advanced by the President of the United States. Would the hon. member indicate any suggestions made by President Kennedy that were not already introduced by this government some time ago?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I shall certainly do so before I complete my remarks, Mr. Chairman. The Prime Minister and other hon. gentlemen opposite make continued reference to the fact that the government of the United States is following the government of Canada in its handling of this problem. The Prime Minister, however, is unable to back up that rhetorical observation. The fact is that the government of the United States has confronted this problem vigorously and has given an example to this government. This government's big answer to those who suggest that the problem has not been adequately met is to refer to the winter works program.

Mr. Starr: They are just going to consider this program in the United States.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Labour says that this program has to date provided employment for 111,000 people representing approximately 4 million man days of work. What does that mean? Let us find out from the minister what that statement really means when shorn of its verbiage and extravagance. How many men out of the 413,000 unemployed, according to recent figures—disregarding what the figure is as of this date—have been put to work for more than one week? How many men have been given work lasting throughout the period of the winter season? It is all very well to say that a certain number of men were put to work—

Mr. Starr: I am able to answer that question now if the hon. member wishes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister may speak when I have finished.

Mr. Starr: The hon. gentleman asked a question and I am prepared to answer. If the hon. member will divide 111,000 persons into 4,700,000 days of work he will find it averages out to 45 days per man.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There we have the answer, Mr. Chairman; 45 days per man. This government says it has solved this problem by providing 45 man days of employment to 111,000 people.

Mr. Starr: Nine weeks' work.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Do we require a better illustration of the inadequacy of this program than the reply just given by the Minister of Labour? Last year almost 12 per cent of our work force was unemployed—715,000 people—and less than 200,000 people were put to work for limited periods only under this program; yet the government says that the winter works program must be regarded as having satisfactorily solved the problem.

Let us examine the real facts. Last year the minister said the program cost $200 million. He said the payroll cost was $66 million and that the federal government had agreed to pay $33 million, half the payroll cost. The total federal contribution under a program costing $200 million was the figure mentioned by the minister, half the labour cost or $33 million.

As good as this winter works program is, so far as it goes, it does not really represent on the part of the government a vigorous confrontation of this problem. To the extent that the program is effective the credit should not go to the Minister of Labour or to this government but to the combined endeavours of the provinces and municipalities.

When we last discussed this matter the Minister of Labour said the average labour content of all municipal works was 34.5 per cent, and since the federal government paid only 50 per cent of the direct labour cost the federal share of the cost of such projects last year amounted to only 17 per cent. The conclusion to be drawn, as I have said, is that the municipalities involved bear the major brunt of the expenses incurred under the program.

The minister just reminded us that seven provinces were paying an additional 25 per cent of the payroll costs; that Quebec was paying 40 per cent, and that Manitoba had increased its contribution to 50 per cent with respect to employment provided for persons who had been on social assistance for a continuous period of 90 days. The minister did not, however, announce any substantial improvement in the contribution of the federal government to the operation of the winter works program.

I have already indicated that seasonal swings in unemployment have their greatest impact in distressed areas such as the maritime provinces. Because of this, the distressed communities are the ones least capable of covering the two thirds of the total cost which must be met by the municipalities. That is why we in the Liberal party suggested the establishment of a municipal loan fund which would greatly aid the affected communities in contributing their share of the cost of the projects.

The fact is that more men and women could be put to work under this program if the government either bore a greater share of the burden of the cost of the program or was willing to establish a municipal loan fund which would enable the municipalities to obtain the necessary revenues to carry out certain projects which they are not carrying out under this program now, because of the terms of financing as among the three levels of government, and because, in so many instances the municipalities cannot possibly bear the burden involved.

Lest there be any doubt of this let me make reference to the figures I have before me. I have in my hand figures relating to the winter works program in Toronto, the largest city in Ontario. I find that in the year 1960-61 the city's share of the cost of that program was 61.3 per cent. I ask hon. members to reflect on this. The city of Toronto has had to meet the problem of unemployment to the extent of 61.3 per cent in respect of a program the responsibility of which is shared three ways but mostly, in this case, by the city of Toronto, second by the province of Ontario, and to a much lesser extent by the federal government.

The federal government wishes to accept all the credit for this program. By its advertising and by the implications of the do it now campaign the impression is given that this government which said it was going to see that no one suffered from unemployment is solely responsible for whatever is being accomplished under this wholly inadequate program, one that is not sufficiently vigorous to meet the problem as it should be met.

Mr. Creaghan: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question at this point? Would the hon. gentleman refer to his notes and put on record the extent to which the 61 per cent, the city's share, of the cost of that program is represented by building materials and the extent to which the 61 per cent represents direct payroll costs?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not have those figures.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If my hon. friend has them I have no doubt that they reveal that this represents a very considerable purchase. But I am not thinking of the assistance given to those who sell such materials. I am thinking of whether or not this program as a whole is designed to provide employment to a greater number of men and women than have been put to work or affected by it to date.

That is the problem to which the mayors of Canada address themselves every time they consider this question in relation to the winter works program. The mayors of Canada met the government on November 10 last. While they were grateful for the combined consequences of this program through the three levels of government, they certainly were not satisfied with what had been achieved to date.

In their brief they point out that one of the major obstacles to fuller municipal participation is lack of any provision for financial assistance toward the cost of materials. This is an old demand of the municipalities, repeated again. They say another obstacle is the very real difficulty some municipalities have in obtaining the money needed for capital undertakings, and at reasonable interest rates. That confirms the desirability of the concept and program of the municipal loan fund which the Liberal party has recently put forward. They point out that still another difficulty is that it is not practicable for municipalities, although they are willing to reschedule their work requirements as much as possible to the winter season, to make a sharp division between seasons.

They make certain other proposals which the government to date has given no indication of considering. They propose that federal loans be provided to municipalities for capital work projects at a favourable rate of interest, extending the practice now followed in the financing of sewage facilities. Second, they propose that federal contributions to municipal works be extended throughout the year with the federal government contributing a proportionately greater share of the cost of material involved in such work undertaken during the winter months of the year. If this is not feasible, they urge that the time be extended to permit completion of projects already commenced during the winter season.

Their third proposal is that municipal works for which federal aid is available under other forms of assistance be considered as allowable projects for federally assisted municipal winter works program. I presume that railway grade crossings would be an example under that proposal. The next proposal is that measures be taken to assure prompt interim payment of the federal government's share and early final settlement of all federally assisted municipal programs.

It is clear that there should be an extension of the types of projects now coming under the winter works program. I am sure that the proposals to which I have just referred are not the only suggestions that should be considered. In order that the winter works incentive program may have its major impact upon the communities that need it most, I suggest that federal participation should be on a sliding scale depending on the amount of unemployment in a particular area. At present the program is not having a major impact on the communities that need it most. If my suggestion is not adopted the situation will continue under which the communities that are not in dire need of this type of assistance will postpone work which would normally be done in the summertime, as they are now doing, in order to take advantage of the government's partial coverage of the labour costs incurred during the winter. As a consequence, certain areas with less than the national average of unemployment are receiving a proportionately greater share of the additional employment created by the program.

I ask the Minister of Labour if it is not a fact that some of the areas where unemployment levels are highest are the areas that are least able to take advantage of the assistance under this program. The names of some of the cities in this category were put on Hansard last year and they could be repeated. Right in Ontario areas like Cornwall, Windsor, Oshawa, Peterborough—

Mr. Pitman: We are not a distressed area now.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am not talking of distressed areas. I am talking about areas where there is unemployment and there is great unemployment in Peterborough. These communities do not have as many projects as other communities in Canada where the problem is less severe. If the government was really on its toes, if it really had an unemployment program it would be one that would be addressed particularly to those areas where unemployment is heaviest.

But all that the government does is to go through a demonstration of apparent activity without rationalizing its program or making it applicable in those areas where it would do the most effective job. Why does the government not expand this program if it really wants to bite into the problem of unemployment? Why should it not pay for a portion of the materials used? That, it has been demonstrated by the mayors, would be one way to reach many more unemployed in this country. Why does it not act upon the suggestion that the federal government should pay a substantial portion of the supervision costs? This would assist two municipalities in Ontario that I know of in taking greater advantage of this program.

Why does the federal government not give some consideration to the reduction or elimination of the sales tax on building materials used on projects designed to give work during the winter period? If it really wants to meet this problem of unemployment, why does it not act on the proposal that this might be done as it is being done in the United States, by tax incentives such as increased depreciation allowances based on wintertime construction payrolls applied to industrial and commercial projects?

The minister spoke a while ago of the approval given to this program by the Canadian Construction Association. This association has recommended some of these very things but the minister gives the impression that these organizations that have spoken of the positive aspects of the program are completely satisfied, when such is not the case. Why should the federal government not bear a more substantial share of the cost of construction machinery used on a project such as bulldozers, trench diggers for sewers and the like? If the government really wants to make its contribution more effective, if it really wants to justify the designation which its propaganda machine has sought to achieve for this federal program, why does it not embark upon some of these proposals?

This matter continues to be a serious one in our country, Mr. Chairman. We would have thought that the government in this session prior to an election would have displayed toward this question the fever, agitation and concern that it has in certain other aspects of government activity represented by the program that it has announced in the speech from the throne. This government will be held to account when the next federal election comes, just as it has been held to account in this house for not having embarked upon policies in keeping with its assurance that no one would suffer in this country for want of work. The government has failed to live up to this promise notwithstanding the statement of the Prime Minister that practically all of his promises have been fulfilled. This is one promise that has not been met and no amount of adulation of the government's anaemic program is going to change this picture when, as of the month of December last, 413,000 people were out of work, more proportionately than in any other country in the western world. I ask the minister to tell me what the unemployment figures are in Great Britain, what they are in Germany, what they are in Switzerland, what they are in Belgium—

An hon. Member: Japan?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —what they are in the Scandinavian countries.

Mr. Nowlan: What are they in the United States?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What are they in the United States? I say that in the United States the problem is severe but it is not as bad as it is here.

Mr. Nowlan: That is not so. Look at the record.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): One reason why the situation is not as bad there is that they have in charge of their affairs an imaginative head of government who is trying to fulfil the promises he made to the electorate of that country. This has not happened here.

Mr. Nowlan: Are you speaking of the speech the president made the other day or of legislation which has been enacted by congress? My hon. friend knows there is a great difference.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am speaking of the leadership given in the United States with regard to this problem by the President since he became the President of the United States. I am referring to the state of the union message last year and this year and the way congress has acted upon his recommendations, their program of accelerated depreciation, their examination of the problem in distressed areas and so on. No legislative body in the United States has been refused the opportunity to examine into the unemployment situation. When I think of the fact that during the last four and a half years the present government has denied the House of Commons the right to examine the problem of unemployment in a committee, I say that in the face of that fact alone the government has demonstrated that it has not confronted the problem of unemployment in the manner in which it assured the Canadian people it would.

Mr. Nowlan: May I ask the hon. member a question? What is the proportion of unemployment in the United States?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The other place examined this problem. Members of the other place made a valuable study, a study that should have been made by the Department of Labour, a study that might well have been made by this house where the elected representatives of the people could have called before the committee all kinds of witnesses to ascertain the nature of the problem. In the town of Moncton, for instance, there is a great deal of unemployment. We should have had a parliamentary committee and should have been able to call the heads of the railroads before that committee to find out why their program in that particular community did not allow for the continuation for a particular level of unemployment. It would have been valuable to find out why and offer a solution.

We should have had a parliamentary committee so that we could have called representatives of the automobile industry before it and have found out why unemployment was taking place at particular levels, what was the percentage of automation and what the possibility was of rectifying the problem. We could have gone into the same matter with regard to the town of Peterborough. We could have examined why in the city of Cornwall last year 14,000 people were out of work.

The House of Commons was denied that opportunity because the government was apparently unwilling to allow any committee of this house to examine into the causes of unemployment and propose remedies for the simple reason that the government was not prepared to embark on policies which a committee of that sort would be likely to recommend. That is the situation.

It is all very well for the government to say that there are more men in the work force now. Of course there are more men in the work force. The population is larger. Our birth rate is continuing its normal course. Of course there are more men in the work force. But what does that prove? That does not in any way deal with the problem of unemployment. In the face of the promises made by this government, in the face of the fact that we now have over a quarter of a million men and women out of work, this government cannot hope to escape the indictment that as a government it has not faced up to its responsibilities.

The Deputy Chairman: Order; I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Starr: If the hon. member has not completed his remarks and wishes to continue—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, once again we are called upon to pass an estimate in order to provide this government with its answer to unemployment, the winter works incentive program. The minister ended his remarks by saying it was a worth-while program, that it was a successful program and because of the excellence of this program there would be no difficulty in securing the passage of this item—this in spite of the fact, as the hon. member for Essex East said, there may be 413,000 people unemployed in our nation and probably even more than that at this very moment.

I took the time to look over the remarks made by the minister on this item in other years. According to him this program was a success in 1958-59 when 41,000 men received work. The minister has a penchant for large figures. He assumes that five weeks of work for an individual provides him with work for the winter. According to the minister, in Canada we have five weeks of winter.

Mr. Starr: It was nine weeks work.

Mr. Pitman: Then, surely, we should suggest not 41,000 but 20,000 for 1958-59; 25,000 for 1959-60 and 60,000 for 1960-61. We should be able to place some reliance upon the statistics that are given in connection with this matter of winter works. The program was a success last year when, as we have heard, we had more unemployment in Canada than there was in any other country in the western world and when we failed completely to deal with the program which faced us. If we include those who are dependant upon those who are unemployed, then probably 1.5 million people in this nation are suffering. Unemployment has blighted the hopes of many young people so far as future education is concerned because their parents have no hope of a stable income.

We are told that this program is a success, a worth-while project. Why are we told this? We are told this because the government does not know what success means. There are no goals. They refuse to set goals. They refuse to organize or direct the economy in order to achieve goals. Anything which provides employment is therefore a success. There is no measure of success; there is no measure of failure. All they have to do is add up the figures and tell us there were so many more people in the work force, so many more employed. This becomes therefore success with a capital "S".

Over the last number of months, and over the last number of weeks particularly, there has been considerable glee and rightly so. I am sure all of us are extremely happy to find that the percentage of unemployed has been going down. This does not result from anything this government has done. They have no reason to take any credit for this fact. After all, it was only last winter that this government said you could not do anything about unemployment. When the unemployed marched on Ottawa, the Prime Minister said this was a free enterprise society; this government could do nothing for them. Every few weeks the Minister of Trade and Commerce came forward with a solution. It was his theme song; management and labour must sit down together. Yes, this is like being in favour of motherhood. Indeed, labour and management must sit down together, but who is going to provide the opportunity? Who is going to set the rules? Who is going to give some kind of assurance that when management and labour do sit down together and come to a conclusion there will be someone who is going to provide some direction, some kind of purpose to the economy so that both will have the assurance that neither will be at a disadvantage because they have sat down together.

When this government does get management and labour to sit down together and a report is made to the government, then the government forgets completely what they have said. There is no follow-up. How strange it is that this government is actually now taking credit for lowering the number of unemployed in our society. This action is strange indeed on the part of a government which has refused to plan, refused to give any direction and is only tinkering about and hoping that they do not drop a wrench and completely destroy the machinery.

Well, because of activities in other sectors, notably in the world trade movement, because of the strengthening of the economy of our neighbours to the south, there are fewer unemployed. The minister, therefore, brings before us another winter works incentive program and tries to convince us that this is the kind of dynamic leadership which we should expect from a Conservative government, I could not help but find rather amusing article in the Globe and Mail of October 3. Our Prime Minister was then down in Dunnville speaking to the Haldimand county Progressive Conservative association, and according to this article he remarked upon the fact that the percentage rate of unemployment was going down. Canada had a rate of only 4.8 per cent, said the Prime Minister, and this is not abnormally high when economists regard 3 per cent to 4 per cent as the flexible part of the labour force. Even when we cannot reach minimal levels it is apparently all right.

On the same page in the Globe and Mail we have another article which states that direct relief costs jumped 40.6 per cent. The unemployment insurance offices are not so crowded today nor are the national employment offices because all the unemployed are over in the municipal welfare offices. In my own municipality in the month of September welfare rolls doubled as compared with the past year. We regard with some eagerness the fact there are so few people on unemployment insurance, but the truth is many of these people are dependant entirely upon municipal relief.

What is wrong with this program is the fact, of course, that it is completely and utterly inadequate for the kind of unemployment that Canada is facing and will face. The program just tries to deal with seasonal unemployment. The minister knows very well that this is only one small aspect of the whole unemployment picture of this nation. Indeed, it is one of the lesser aspects of the unemployment problem in the last few years. In the middle of summer last year we were over what could be called a full employment society. But what about technological unemployment? What are we going to do about that? What about cyclical unemployment? We all know that the economy has started to run now; it has started to move slowly. What will happen by 1966? We will be in the same mess again. Now is the time, if ever Canada had the opportunity to take hold of this problem and deal with it. We should deal with it now when we are not so overwhelmed with this tremendous problem of mass unemployment. Now, when the unemployed are starting to move back into employment, we can decide that never again will Canada have to face mass unemployment with 800,000 or 900,000 unemployed people in our nation.

This is the challenge, and what do we get? We get another winter works program. That is all this government can do, just look about three or four months ahead. If they survive that long, then evidently that is success. This is a worth-while project and one which will not need to be defended on the floor of this house. That is the first thing that is wrong with this program. It is completely inadequate to cope with the various complexities of unemployment with which we are going to be faced over the next decade.

Second, of course, and this has already been touched upon by the hon. member for Essex East, this program does not help those who most need help. The federal government pays only one half of the labour cost. As we have seen, this is only a fraction of the total cost, perhaps only one dollar or two dollars out of the ten dollars which the municipality will pay towards these works. I should like to see a breakdown of these projects. I should like to see a number of winter works projects carried out in Amherst and New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, in the province of Quebec, in Lindsay, Ontario, and other areas which this government decided were areas of surplus manpower and required to be given particular attention.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And Hamilton.

Mr. Pitman: In that particular sphere we spent a long enough time trying to find out which areas would be selected. We spent from December to March trying to find out what plan was going to be implemented, and it was months later before any of these areas were designated. Indeed, we can remember being told that once they were designated we would see the opening of the gates of paradise, and that there would be industries scrambling to get into these areas.

How many industries have been brought into the surplus manpower areas?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A total of one.

Mr. Pitman: According to the minister there have been nine—only nine new industries all across the whole of the dominion. He says that these works cut unemployment, but all I can find is that a large number of workers still have to find jobs in surplus manpower areas. This program is the kind of niggling and tinkering which has been going on, and which will completely destroy us should we try to compete with other nations that have decided to do something about the problem of unemployment.

Only last month I was amused to read an article from a publication in Sydney, Australia. It is headed: "Unemployment the key issue in Australian election." My first reaction was that I was going to learn a lot about great unemployment in Australia, and once in a while it is comforting to learn that other countries share the same problem that we have. One feels we are completely out of step when we read of West Germany inviting 70,000 workers into that country, and reading that they have stopped unemployment insurance because of over contribution to the unemployment fund in that country. In Sweden they are absolutely shocked at the level of unemployment here in Canada. Indeed, it has been said that our Department of Immigration might well be called the department of emigration as more people are trying to get out of the country. For these reasons I thought there would be some comfort for me in the article on unemployment in Australia. There was none. It reads:

> There is no denying that unemployment is worrying many Australians. Official government figures place the total unemployed at 96,552 representing 2.3 per cent of an estimated 4,200,000 work force.

Only 2.3 per cent of the labour force in Australia is unemployed, yet last winter we had 10 per cent, 11 per cent, 12 per cent, and in some parts of the country 15 and 18 per cent of our labour force unemployed. It is no wonder I say it was amusing to read that article which said unemployment was a major election issue in Australia.

How far out of step can this country get? I should like to know how much money is really being spent in these areas which need it so desperately. In spite of all the drawbacks of what little they are getting, we would certainly hope for better progress in those areas where it is so desperately needed.

My third point of criticism about the program is that the projects are entirely short term ones. They do not really give any hope of employment. At the most they give five weeks employment—five weeks when the men working do not have to turn to some other source of income.

Last November and December I took the opportunity of going through the nearby armoury to see what was going on in the government's survival program. There were some 200 people taking part in it over there. Whether we agree with survival or not, at least they were looking after their own survival and getting paid by the government of Canada. Who were these people?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The unemployed.

Mr. Pitman: That is right. The hon. member for Essex East says they were the unemployed. They were the people I had seen standing in front of the unemployment insurance office and the welfare office, but when they approached the government last winter the government told them: "We cannot give work. This would be undermining our free enterprise system." Has it come to this that the only way we can use our imagination is by putting men in uniform? Is that the only way we can provide a decent wage for at least a few weeks? Is it not a disgrace that a person would have to say that about a country which has all the opportunities of this nation?

There are no long term projects under the winter works incentive program. Instead of such projects we have a whole group of small —not insignificant but extremely limited— types of projects. Only a year ago my own city tried to get a grant for industrial site clearance work. It was a very sensible plan for a municipality with a large number of unemployed to prepare an area for the incoming industries that might be provided, that might be interested in moving there, but it was not accepted as a winter works program project. In passing I might say I am glad that the program is being widened now, but not sufficiently in my view. This government does not believe in public works. The Minister of Public Works himself has said that. According to him "you cannot expect public works to provide real employment." Can anyone imagine a more completely directionless cabinet where we have one minister standing up telling us how much has been done to provide employment, and another minister standing up and saying they cannot really provide employment? This is another example of the dichotomy of thinking in this particular field.

My fourth criticism, and most serious charge against the winter works program, is that it misleads the people of this nation into believing that this is all that a federal government can do, that this is the sum total of the federal government's duty to deal with the national problem of unemployment.

A few minutes ago I said that in 1962 we would be in a position to do something dynamic about our economy, that we would be coming out of the doldrum, but will we then have had the same kind of directionless, ridiculous growth, unproductive growth at least in terms of national growth and employment. I said that we should have a disciplined, sensible, planned growth in place of municipal works programs. That, I believe, is the only thing that can provide the kind of full employment this nation must have.

I think I heard an hon. member say that we cannot provide full employment. That is an interesting remark to make in terms of what the rest of the world is doing. A winter works program is not the alternative. How can this nation compete on such a basis with the nations of the European common market? How can we compete with Britain and other countries in the commonwealth? How can we compete with the possibility of competition from the communist world when we have 300,000, 400,000 and 500,000 unemployed?

Can we afford to pay for this unemployment? Industry pays for it in unemployment insurance benefits and also pays for it in property taxes. In other words, we have got this expense on our backs while we are trying to compete with other countries in this very competitive world. There is no alternative to full employment. This is not some kind of luxury which we can afford in the twentieth century. Those of us who believe it is are living in a fairy land.

It is fine to set up productivity councils, but how can we get labour and management to sit down together in a productivity council if what they are doing in effect is producing less jobs? The labour force has learned from the plight of the agricultural workers over the last 15 years. They have "produced" themselves down to the point where there are only half as many of them as there were 10 years ago. The agricultural worker has improved his production to the extent that he only gets half of the material rewards for his work that he should get. Instead of 12 per cent of the national income he gets 6 per cent. Unless this government can find something more than a winter works program it is utterly futile to try to suggest that productivity councils have the answers to the economic problems of the nation.

I think we were all somewhat discouraged by the howling that went on over in Europe regarding Great Britain's entry into the European common market. What we fear most is that we cannot compete, with the kind of blundering, purposeless, directionless economy that we have. We are doing a little bit at a time; we are putting a little bit of oil in there with the municipal winter works incentive program.

This is what we should be doing, instead of a little bit of municipal building or reconstruction of parks. We know we are going to have a health plan. Two parties in this house have already said that they are in favour of it and the other party is now looking at the possibility of a royal commission providing the answer.

What will happen when we have a health plan? We will have a run on our hospitals such as we have never seen before, but we will not have the hospitals. What did we do last year? We spent millions and millions of dollars on unemployment insurance while men were standing with their hands at their sides when these hospitals could have been built.

We have set up a sports council and given them $5 million. We hope they will be able to develop some physical fitness in this nation. What are the problems this council will face? They will face a lack of facilities in this nation with its varied climatic conditions. What could we have been doing last year with the millions of dollars we were pouring into unemployment insurance and welfare, with all the money we were losing from taxation? We could have been building recreation centres across this nation into which this new sports council could have fitted this new program which has been spoken of so promisingly during the last few weeks.

This program is simply not enough. Toronto has already been mentioned. Out of a total of 67,000 unemployed in Toronto the winter works incentive program provided work for only 2,000. Two thousand out of 67,000. There is no long term plan; there is no planned development. Of course, the party in office has no interest in planning, no concern over planning and no real faith in planning.

We will vote for this measure. We will see this go through; but it will be with a heavy heart, realizing that there will still be hundreds of thousands of unemployed people in this country, some of whom have been unemployed for, not months but years.

We know that when we pass this measure they will still be unemployed; that countries in the world will still look at Canada and wonder why it is that this nation of all nations, with its tremendous resources, with all its opportunities, cannot solve a problem like unemployment. I am sure these countries will not hear very much about the municipal winter works program. I am sure they will not see headlines about this program in the Financial Post or in the newspapers which circulate in other countries of the world. They will look at us and wonder just what is wrong, if this is the best we can do.

We will watch this go through. We will know it will not be enough. We will know it will provide heartbreak for hundreds of thousands of people in this nation. If this is the measure of activity this government is prepared to take in dealing with this No. 1 national problem, we have little fear about what the electorate will do when the time of accounting comes at the polls.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, there is not very much I can add to what has been said by the two previous speakers. I think they have covered this subject quite thoroughly. However, there are a few things with which I should like to deal, and possibly underline one or two of the matters they raised.

The minister opened his statement on these estimates with a talk about the effectiveness of the great advertising we have seen on the do it now program. It reminded me of one evening a month or so ago when I was sitting with some people in my constituency and one of the favourite propaganda t.v. shots for this do it now program came on the screen. One of the people with whom I was sitting remarked that the thing he liked best in that particular commercial was where the carpenter sawed a hole and dropped the announcer down through the floor into the basement. He said, "That is the treatment that should be given to anyone who broadcasts that kind of poppycock". I will not go so far as to agree wholeheartedly with him. Possibly some good comes from that program, but I would be rather hesitant to estimate just how much.

The minister said something else that disturbed me. He seemed to think that with this increased activity in the winter works program we were going to balance off the employment picture in this country. In other words, many of the jobs that were previously carried out in the summertime would now and in the future be carried out in the wintertime because of this program.

I should like to remind the minister that this would not be a very favourable solution to the problems of this country. If under this government we are going to have from 700,000 to 800,000 unemployed in the wintertime, and from 300,000 to 400,000 unemployed in the summertime, all we will do by shifting the summer work to the winter will be to average it out so that we would have 550,000 unemployed the year round. I certainly do not think this is any solution of which any government should be proud.

The minister also mentioned the past year's figure of $250 million which had been spent on this program. I was rather surprised at the hon. member for Essex East in this connection. I know he has been accused by government members of having a mathematical formula all his own, but I beg to differ with the conclusions at which the hon. member arrived. The minister said that some $250 million have been spent on this program and the federal government contributed $33 million. That works out at about 13.2 per cent. Then of course the government of Ontario contributes 25 per cent of the labour costs, which comes to 6.6 per cent, or a total from the two governments of 19.8 per cent. I think that to properly assess this program we must realize the position which faces the municipalities. First of all they must raise all the money that is to be spent on any of these projects. Then after they have raised it and proceeded with the project they can hope to be reimbursed 13.2 per cent of the cost from the federal government and 6.6 per cent from the provincial government. This still leaves the municipalities having to provide over 80 per cent of the cost of the project from municipal funds.

I have spoken on this item in previous sessions. I admit that the situation has been improved since this program was first started. There have been some changes and progress has been made in this regard. However, the fact remains that the programs subject to approval under this plan are very carefully selected programs. To qualify under this plan it appears that municipalities must have projects that could be more adequately handled by machinery than by manpower in this modern day and age. Of course, as we all know, neither the federal government nor the provincial governments make any contribution toward the cost of machinery or material, so it would seem that the projects which would be approved under this program are of such a nature—almost, one might say, from careful choice—that they cannot be too successful.

I do not wish to cover the field which has been covered by the two previous speakers, but I should like once more to underline some of the objections we have to this program and some of the shortcomings we find in it. I have brought these to the attention of the committee on previous occasions and the reason I am doing so again is because no attempt has apparently been made to remedy those shortcomings. This is called a winter works program and in my opinion that is something of a misnomer. First of all, if we had winter work we should not need this program. In the second place, it will not work in winter; it only works in those parts of Canada where winter conditions are not too severe. In proof of this contention I point to the fact that this is the second year in succession in which, to my knowledge at least, there has not been one single project either in my own riding or in the riding to the north of it under this program. The reason is simple. None of the projects that can be approved under this plan can be carried out with any degree of common sense during the winters we have in the north country.

Another problem we have with regard to this winter works program is that it puts the municipalities in a most unfair position. At the time they strike their budgets they have no assurance that this plan will be in effect the following winter. Then, by the time the announcement comes along, their budgets have been struck and have gone before the municipal board for approval. Consequently, they have no provision made for participation in the program. I feel also, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Peterborough, that there is a great danger that this program is coming to be regarded as a solution to the unemployment problem. I think there is a very great danger in this approach. The unemployment problem is a direct problem and this particular scheme is a very indirect and very expensive way of meeting the problem.

It seems to me that the government should take a look around the world today. The people now responsible for the administration should look at what is being done in Sweden, West Germany, Denmark, Israel and other European countries which have full employment. Surely if this government has not the intelligence and the brains to do at least as well as the governments of those countries, then in heaven's name it is time they admitted it to the public and went back to the public for a decision.

Mr. Creaghan: It is a privilege to say a few words at this time and to congratulate publicly the minister and the federal cabinet upon having had the wisdom to bring forward this additional assistance in the amount of $40 million.

As the previous speaker, the hon. member for Timmins, has said, perhaps the name is a misnomer; it should generally be referred to as the federal-municipal winter works incentive program. My own remarks will be primarily confined to a few situations occurring in the province of New Brunswick. Last May I placed a question on the order paper and as a result it became publicly known that five provinces in Canada were contributing 25 per cent toward direct payroll costs to assist municipalities taking part in this program. The provinces of Quebec and Manitoba provided assistance in excess of that amount.

So far, the province of New Brunswick has not seen fit to extend financial assistance to municipalities in any way in order that the towns and cities in the province may take more advantage of the federal assistance. I strongly doubt whether much of this $40 million will be available to the towns and cities of New Brunswick and I say this because I do not feel the provincial administration is taking enough interest in the plight of unemployed people in the incorporated cities and towns.

Early in October the federal Department of Labour made public the number of projects accepted in New Brunswick up to October 16. I have a list in front of me, and 42 projects are listed. Only four of them would normally qualify as municipal projects but because of a generous amendment to the regulations which was primarily directed to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, highway works in those two provinces now qualify for assistance. Of the 42 projects in New Brunswick as of October 16, 1961, 38 dealt with the construction of bridges, seawalls along highways and work of a similar nature. Consequently, in an indirect manner, the province of New Brunswick is contributing to the payroll costs because it has placed itself, by interpretation, in the position of being a municipality.

I have no complaint to make about the province of New Brunswick taking advantage of federal assistance to rebuild bridges, seawalls and highways. However, I do feel, when I look at the figures and see that out of the first 42 projects only four were undertaken by municipalities, that somebody somewhere is not co-operating with Ottawa.

In addition, I believe that politics or provincial patronage are entering into the scheme. To explain what I have in mind, may I say this: the details outlined by the Minister of Labour to the premiers indicated that the national employment services throughout the country would be used in connection with placements for work provided by the program. If a program originates in a municipality, whether a city, a town, or a rural municipality, it becomes a public project which is submitted first to the provincial capital and then to Ottawa. The people who are unemployed, together with employees in the national employment service local offices know all about the project. However, if the project is a provincial one in its entirety, one that is designed by the provincial government in camera, no one knows about it until Ottawa has given its approval. In the intervening days or weeks, friends, organizers and supporters of the provincial government tell local people that, for example, a bridge in their rural area is to be rebuilt. The same people are advised to apply to the local employment service office if they want work. Those who are supporters of the administration get this advance notice. They are immediately put on the list and referred to the provincial government garage concerned. Therefore, under this program one must, in my opinion, be a supporter of the Liberal administration of New Brunswick in order to get employment on a provincial project. I strongly criticize that practice. This is supposed to be a joint venture. The programs are under the partial administration of the federal government, but in most projects as stated earlier the provincial administration has complete charge.

I also want to point out to the minister that his written instructions of July 25 have not been entirely fulfilled. The letter to the premiers concluded by indicating that this was a federal-provincial-municipal program and that programs are to be advertised with signs making reference to the joint participation. I have yet to see a program in New Brunswick sponsored by the provincial government that in any way gives credit to the federal Department of Labour.

Turning to the subject of education the New Brunswick department of education and the provincial department of labour have brought out a program entitled "Basic Education Training Course" which has been extensively advertised on radio and television throughout the province. The advertisements are designed to attract people to enrol in order that they may improve their skills. These advertisements in no way give credit to the federal government notwithstanding the fact that 75 per cent of the costs of advertising, administration, teachers' salaries and other costs are contributed to the province by the federal government. The same situation may obtain in other provinces across the country. I suggest to the minister through you, Mr. Chairman, that where necessary, employees of the federal Department of Labour should have something to say in the preparation of television, radio and newspaper advertisements where the federal government contributes 75 per cent of the advertising expenditure. If a province will not co-operate, I further suggest that employees of the federal departments should be directed to take a personal interest in the matter at the local level to ensure that some of the bouquets and some of the credit are directed to the proper source.

Those are my basic criticisms. I am pleased to observe the wisdom, effort and interest the federal government is showing in the municipal winter works incentive program. However, I take issue with the fact that the program is not being administered in a fair way in my province.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of dwelling at length on this item, because I had the opportunity in the past of paying particular attention to this program which has been applied for the last four years.

I realize that, during the last three years the government has widened its scope, that is it allowed a larger number of projects; but I think the more important point is that in the four years since this government introduced this program it has failed to realize exactly what should be done.

I believe that I am not the only one to think so, because several hon. members who rose before me mentioned that, after all, this winter works program is not a federal program but a program financed by the provinces and, more particularly, by the municipalities. Nobody will, I think, deny what I just said, since it is also confirmed in the report published by the federal Department of Labour. Indeed, that report indicates that the contribution of the federal government for all those winter work projects comes down to only 15 per cent.

I may be accused of prejudice—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Which would be unfounded.

Mr. Bourget: I should like, at this point, to read an editorial published in the Quebec newspaper Le Soleil of July 27, 1961, under the title "Municipal winter works—A poor way of solving the unemployment problem." I quote:

> Last year, Quebec's contribution was more considerable than that of the other provinces, and almost double that of Ontario, for the good reason that the Lesage government—a Liberal government—decided to contribute up to 40 per cent of the cost of labour.

At this stage, I should like to commend the Liberal provincial government which, since it took over in the province of Quebec, has understood its responsibility as regards the unemployment situation, something which did not exist before June 22, 1960.

[Mr. Creaghan.]

The article goes on to say:

> That was something new, and a greater number of municipalities have developed large scale projects which are far from being all completed. We know something about it in Quebec—

And when reference is made to Quebec, it means Quebec city.

> —where those projects had to be stopped following violent snowstorms.

Here is, in my opinion, the main point raised by the members of the opposition since the introduction of this winter works program. I quote:

> Those works are still costing a lot of money, too much, to municipalities, which are shouldering crushing burdens and which are requesting more sources of income from higher levels of government.

Here, I should like to digress a little in order to remind the house that during the election campaigns of 1957 and 1958, this government had promised to give municipalities—not only the provinces—a share of the national income, in order that they could fulfil their constitutional responsibilities. Well, we know that nothing has come out in this regard. The article goes on to say:

> The inadequacy of their current resources has obliged them to resort to massive loans. Issues of bonds are succeeding one another, and municipal debts are increasing at a rate which cannot last indefinitely. Several municipalities find it impossible to secure new loans. That is why they are requesting greater assistance, without obtaining any satisfaction.

I shall end the quotation here for the moment.

I say once again that, for the past three years, we have asked the government for a greater assistance instead of the mere 15 per cent granted now.

If, at the time of the 1957-1958 elections, municipalities and provinces had been told that they would have to find by themselves a solution to the unemployment problem, I am sure that many of our friends now sitting on the government side would not be here today.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but it being five o'clock—

(Text):

Items stand.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motion and public bills.

POWER

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL GRID

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give immediate consideration to the advisability of taking the appropriate steps necessary for the early establishment of a national power grid which would be utilized to develop Canadian industry and provide employment opportunities through development of all natural power resources. And that the government should consider providing the necessary research and technical study and the calling at the earliest possible date of a dominion-provincial conference to implement the national power grid authority.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it would appear that this idea is not unique within myself. As you know, we introduced this resolution before we were aware of what was in the throne speech. Having heard the speech from the throne, we are now aware that the government and in particular the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) have decided to do something about the matter of a national power grid.

I believe all Canadians are aware of the need to solve the problem that is developing because of the fact that at the extreme ends of Canada there is a great potential of electrical power while in the central part, particularly in the province of Ontario, a shortage of power is rapidly developing. The extent of the shortage is indicated by the fact that in Ontario the arctic watershed and the rivers that flow northward in that area are now being developed for power purposes. This in itself is a strong indication that in Ontario we have about reached the end of our hydroelectric power development.

Saturday Night pointed out on January 6 of this year that installed potential horsepower in Ontario was 7,814,562 and of that amount 7,701,000 was being used. This would indicate that there is less than one million horsepower available in Ontario at the present time. It was recognized a long time ago that the economic problems in developing a country of this nature were going to be tremendous and that there were economic factors which naturally led to a north-south flow of trade. To overcome this situation, the first prime minister of this country promised the people that he would build and did build a railway system to counteract that natural flow and to create an economic flow across Canada from east to west and west to east. We believe that the railway has now to some extent served its purpose of making it possible for us to develop a Canadian economy.

We are now concerned about another very large natural resource with which we are going to have to do something and which again is creating problems similar to those involved in the natural north and south flow of trade in earlier days. This situation has been brought forcibly to the attention of the Canadian people because of the poor handling and mismanagement of the Columbia power development. The Canadian people are faced with the proposal of exporting power to the United States or doing something about supplying that power to Canadian markets. Electric power cannot be held or stored. You cannot put it in a tank and keep it; you have to use it. You also cannot keep the resource that produces the power. The water is going to go over the dam or down the river no matter whether there is an electric power plant there.

So it is essential that when we can develop hydroelectric power we should do so. The people of British Columbia are now in the position of wanting to increase the amount of power in that province and they are going to be faced with the situation of the federal government saying that there shall be no export of power, or no export on such a short term basis that it is not practical, and the provincial government saying that they are going to export that power on their own terms.

In the Globe and Mail of November 26, 1961 there is a report of a speech made by the Prime Minister in Newfoundland and it contains this passage:

A hint that a national power grid plan is in the works was dropped Saturday night by Prime Minister John Diefenbaker. He said it may not be too long before such a grid could be established using new techniques in long haul transmission of power.

I suggest that the Prime Minister was flying a kite to see what the reaction of the Canadian people would be to long transmission lines and the establishment of a national grid. Obviously the results must have been favourable. The matter must have been discussed a good deal between that time and the opening of parliament this year because the speech from the throne contained an indication that something was going to be done to develop a national power grid.

I think the Canadian people should be treated more fairly with regard to the matter of a national power grid. It is a very important step and if the Prime Minister were really serious about doing something he would know that research and development work is necessary to adapt the system that has been developed in other countries of using d.c. power transmitted in heavy concentration over long transmission lines. He should know that this system needs to be adapted to the Canadian scene and that this takes research and work. If he really believes that something should be done about this matter, then this a field that obviously is within federal jurisdiction and he does not need any support from the provinces to make a start on it.

Certainly the implication was left that the government wants to have a line as soon as possible that will take surplus power developed in one place in Canada and transmit it to another area that can use it, and if this is so I think the government must say that it will supply the power grid on a national basis to those provinces that want to join in the implementing of such a plan.

I am quite sure that other speakers will say that we have to take into consideration the British North America Act and the constitutional issues, but what consideration did we give to constitutional issues when we wanted to build a national highway? When we instituted the trans-Canada highway certain provinces did not agree to come into the plan and only recently have they participated in it. I think the government of the day was farsighted enough to realize that they had to take the responsibility of providing the vehicle for developing a Canadian highways system. They did so and the provinces that wished to co-operate did so under that scheme.

I believe this is not a constitutional issue. In my view the government is going to try to blame the province of Quebec and say, "It is not our fault there is not going to be a national power grid". The government will have read in the Gazette today, as everyone else has, the headline: "Power Grid Proposal Gets Answer. It is No."

Mr. MacEwan: Would the hon. member permit a short question? Why has he put these words in his resolution:

> —the government should consider providing the necessary research and technical study and the calling at the earliest possible date of a dominion-provincial conference to implement the national power grid authority?

Mr. Peters: As the hon. member should know, we on this side of the house have great difficulty in introducing resolutions that will avoid reference to the expenditure of money. The resolution must be couched in such terms that the government will be able to manoeuvre. The resolution must simply ask the government to take into consideration rather than referring to the spending of the money that would be necessary to build a grid.

In reading this article, Mr. Speaker, one finds that the premier of Quebec refers to the constitutional issue which I suggest will be the major factor in determining what will be done. However, there are much more important factors to be taken into consideration. The premier of Quebec says, in effect, "This is a field of provincial jurisdiction and I consider that is where we must let the matter rest."

Is it not a fact, Mr. Speaker, that about a year or so ago this house passed a measure to enable the federal government to participate in the establishment of a maritime power grid? It is true that this power grid could not be considered national in scope, but it did extend over several provinces in the maritimes. If we are so interested in protecting the export of power, and I agree we must protect the export of power from Canada, is it not the responsibility of the federal government to make certain at the earliest possible moment there is a substitute method for handling the surplus power that will be developed? If we established a transmission line, you can call it a national transmission line, a national power grid or whatever you want, I believe the Canadian people would want to see a large concentration of secondary industry in Canada in order to use our natural resources.

I have spoken to some of the people in British Columbia and they are not averse to exporting power to the other provinces of Canada if the need is there. What they wish is the right to sell their power and they are certainly willing to give preference to the Canadian market. I am quite sure the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) suggested this plan in all seriousness and that he has been advised as to the feasibility of it. I hope that the government will take a much stronger position in this field and, since there is apparently not going to be unanimous agreement amongst the provinces, establish a national power grid in those provinces that will take advantage of it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this will be a very lengthy and very expensive program. We will be moving millions of kilowatts of electricity across a national power grid. We will not necessarily have to transport this power great distances because our country is so broad the time zones will vary the peak load periods, so surplus power can be transmitted east to west or west to east. There is another factor that should be borne in mind. These transmission lines will be useful not only for the transmission of hydro power, which appears to be the cheapest method of producing electricity at the moment, but these lines will be available to transmit electricity developed by thermal power or by nuclear power. It will be possible for us, through watching developments in other countries, to transmit a large amount of power from those areas now producing it.

One of the problems I have encountered, and this is particularly true of my own area, is that we have continued to export natural resources in the raw state. We have seen the end or close to the end of several of our natural resources without gaining any secondary industry to replace these primary industries. I am sure the same situation exists in the maritimes and in the prairies where many farmers are being displaced by automation. This plan seems to me to present an opportunity for the Canadian people to take advantage of the tremendous resources we now have. Resources can be built upon and increased as the need becomes evident. Secondary industries depend entirely on such things as low cost power and a ready access to markets. I would think, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian people would watch the development of this program very carefully.

It is a fact that a private member cannot introduce all the implications that should be introduced into a resolution of this nature. The government is in a position to do something about this, whereas a private member is not. We are in a position in Canada, I think, where we can offer those provinces willing to take advantage of this national grid, all the beneficial results that will flow from such a plan. I would suggest that although Quebec has turned down this plan, it will be one of the first to take advantage of a program of this type. I can foresee the tremendous potential of some developments in the near future such as the one at Hamilton falls in the Labrador area. This will be an interprovincial development that will bring power to the north shore of Quebec and I am sure some of the surplus would be available to Ontario and the maritime provinces if these transmission lines are established.

I suggest this government will be remiss in its duty if it tells the public, "If it were not for this terrible Liberal in Quebec, we would have a national power grid." I do not believe it is the responsibility of a single Liberal in Quebec to squash this plan. It is up to the Conservative government in Ottawa to take the bull by the horns and develop a national power grid. I believe the Canadian people will respond to this plan with the same eagerness that they responded to the development of the national railway. It is obvious that this plan could result in the establishment of secondary industries. It will provide a blanket of cheap electricity. There will be periods when there will be surplus electricity that could be used by industries.

I hope that members on the government side will indicate that they, too, are interested in the federal government going ahead immediately with the research and development of this national project. Then those provinces that see an advantage in it, as British Columbia obviously does, will be able to start a transmission line to handle the export of power to other provinces. It has been pointed out that this plan will be almost as important to the development of Canada in the next 20 years as was the development of the trans-Canada railway. I believe, knowing the developments that took place as a result of that project, the Canadian government should give immediate consideration to the implementation of a project that will not require the co-operation of all provinces. We should begin immediately with the co-operation of those provinces that wish to join in the establishment of a national power grid.

Mr. H. M. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I am very pleased to have this opportunity to speak to the motion introduced by the hon. member for Timiskaming. It was rather interesting to see how he got around the idea of "following John". The only way he could do it was to attack the sincerity of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker).

As hon. members know, one paragraph inserted in the throne speech had to do with the establishment of a national power grid system. I think it should be put on the record, and I quote:

> The provision of low cost electric power is one of the most important factors in the economic growth and industrial development of Canada. As a further step in the national development policy, my Prime Minister has invited the provincial governments to join with the federal government in early discussions of the steps that might be taken toward the establishment of long distance power transmission to link provinces and eventually the different regions of Canada.

I suggest, sir, that this attack on the sincerity of the Prime Minister by the hon. member for Timiskaming was not only uncalled for but was out of place. If he wishes to use his motion as a political attack then he is doing the country a disservice, he is doing himself a disservice, and is doing a disservice toward his constituents.

Mr. Peters: I am not.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): We have read the report in this morning's Gazette about the response from the province of Quebec. This response, I suggest, is a political one and is not the response of sensible people in that province. To say "no, we won't even discuss it with you," does not seem to be very reasonable. I would suggest to the premier of Quebec, and perhaps to some of the premiers of the other provinces, that the idea they should build, not power grids but political power grids within their provinces, as some of them would like to do, is not in the interests of Canada as a whole. If we as a nation are to progress, then some of the political grids in some of the other provinces will have to accept the fact that co-operation is the only method that can make confederation work.

I have quoted the paragraph in the speech from the throne which deals directly with the problem. In effect the government has said that it intends to establish negotiations and discussions immediately with regard to the long distance transmission of power, and I am sure all Canadians will respond to the suggestion. Equally I am sure that a negative approach from one province will not hinder or stop discussions on a national power grid. Certainly the concensus coming from the resources for tomorrow conference was that the federal government must show the way in the development of Canada's resources, and I feel one of the major first steps in showing the way must be discussions upon and implementation of long distance power transmission.

We in Alberta are keenly interested in this subject because we happen to be in the happy position of having an abundance of energy producing sources. We have our hydroelectric developments that are now taking place, and those that can take place in the future. In my own constituency one of the major hydroelectric developments now being undertaken is on the Brazeau river, in the eastern foothills of the Rocky mountains, and there are plans for other rivers, the Athabasca, the McLeod, and the Pembina. All of these rivers flow down through areas which have tremendous natural resources, areas which are just now coming into their own and the resources of which are being considered for the very first time.

United States Steel is now investigating coke coal immediately north of Hinton and Edson, and there has been a tremendous upsurge in the exploration for and production of natural gas and its by-products. Very soon we shall have one of the first large thermal plants with the Calgary power plant being converted from natural gas back to coal. All of these resources, coal, gas, hydroelectric and petroleum by-products are primary sources from which electric energy can be made.

I do not know if the hon. member has mentioned that hydroelectric power remains the cheapest form of power, but I am sure there will come a time in the not too distant future when thermal plants fired by coal, gas and petroleum by-products will take a strong position in the production of electric energy.

A power grid system does not have to be trans-Canada at the start. Indeed we could have regionalization in the west, connecting the prairie provinces and British Columbia with the primary market in the north and to the east. Certainly the need for power is just now becoming apparent in the northern territories. With the development of our natural resources at Pine Point, beyond Yellowknife, and at the Great Slave lake the power requirements of that area will be tremendous and could be most easily served by a grid connecting Alberta, British Columbia and the northern territories. Other regional transmission grids could be constructed elsewhere particularly in the maritimes, including the one mentioned by the hon. member at Hamilton falls.

It is my belief we should look at the problem of the transmission of power in the same way as we looked at the problem of the transmission of other forms of energy. In this regard I refer to the trans-Canada pipe line relating to gas. These energy sources should first be offered to the Canadian people and then, when we are sure that our own requirements are satisfactorily met and our future assured, we can go on to consider the export of surplus energy.

In this connection I may mention our national oil policy which has worked so well. We suggested to the oil companies that they meet quotas for production in the various oil fields. We exported oil into the western United States and we imported it back in the eastern area, and some consideration should be given to such a plan in regard to the use of electric power.

I am sure that everyone in Canada will look forward with pleasure to the implementation of a national power grid under the dynamic leadership of the present Prime Minister. I believe the power grid will go ahead and, notwithstanding some resistance in certain parts of the country, will become a major plan in the development policy and growth of Canada. I believe it will be brought in by a Conservative government as was the original trans-Canada railway in 1867.

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say a few words in connection with the motion of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) concerning the establishment of a national power grid in Canada.

Obviously, every one of us welcomes developments of some scope in this country, because they always have a deep impact on the expansion and the economy of Canada and, consequently, on the income of the Canadian people.

As the hon. member for Timiskaming said, it was not so long ago when visiting Newfoundland the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker) left the people of that province with the idea that a national power grid might be established. I suppose, as suggested by the hon. member, he wanted to know the views of some Canadians and to receive suggestions. I think that such a line of action was not quite in good taste because, even if people accuse us of playing petty politics, as the hon. member for Jasper-Edson (Mr. Horner) did just now, when speaking of the constitution, I want to say—and those who do not admit it have not read the British North America Act or, if they have read it, they did not understand it—that our natural resources come under the jurisdiction of the provinces.

This does not mean that the provinces may not join in the implementation of national projects, after having met, considered the projects, and come to some agreement respecting the rights of each party, with the national interest in mind.

It has been said that Quebec's answer was of a political nature. Now, all the Quebec government said, was that natural resources come under the jurisdiction of the provinces, and Mr. Lesage added, as reported in the Gazette of January 31:

(Text):

After noting that power transmission is on the agenda of this summer's interprovincial conference of premiers at Victoria, B.C., of which Mr. Lesage is chairman, the letter stated:

"As a matter of fact, I have already opened talks on this subject with the premiers of other provinces".

(Translation):

That is not exactly what was said by hon. members who spoke before me. I do not think his reply can be interpreted as a definite refusal. The premier of Quebec merely states that natural resources come under the jurisdiction of the provinces, but I do not think that he completely closed the door to any future discussion if no obstacle is put in the way of the talks that will take place this summer between the premiers of the different provinces.

In my opinion, it is entirely normal that the premiers should want to discuss such an important question which affects the rights of the provinces and, at the same time, can have great repercussions on the economy and development of the country.

In other words, I strongly support the first proposal put forward by the hon. member for Timiskaming, concerning the field of research related to that great project; I believe it is a very valuable proposal. In fact, the government has everything it requires to put to work a staff which could further research in that field.

Besides, an authority on the subject has already made some studies on the matter. I refer to Mr. H. L. Briggs, of the national energy board. I should like to quote what he has written on the subject, not that I agree with his views, because I cannot express an opinion on such a complex issue, but I should like to have my colleagues understand that such a thing cannot be decided overnight. That question involves complications and complexities, and I have confidence in Mr. Briggs' judgement, although I do not know if everything he says will come about. But it would still be worth while to undertake and further these studies in order to ascertain the soundness of Mr. Briggs' claims, since, as everyone knows, he is an authority on the matter.

He submitted a brief to the annual meeting of the Engineering Insitute of Canada, and at the end of his paper we read the following:

(Text):

That no advantage is clearly apparent to justify the construction of a trans-Canada grid system.

(Translation):

As may be seen on page 22 of the brief, that is his own personal opinion, but precisely because the problem is very complex, it gives even more weight to the proposal made by the hon. member for Timiskaming.

And a little further on, on page 26 of the same brief, we can read the following:

(Text):

A commercial dependable trans-Canada power grid from southern Ontario to British Columbia, integrated with the various local utilities through which it passes, is not a serious consideration in the foreseeable future.

(Translation):

And further down on the same page:

(Text):

A transmission grid system interconnecting major power resources across northern Canada, built with tapoff connections taken southward at intervals for the purpose of supplying large power consuming areas, is for economic reasons of no interest.

(Translation):

Once again if I am informing the house of the ideas held by Mr. Briggs, who is considered as an authority, it does not mean that I feel we should turn down this proposal. However, I feel that we should proceed with caution and make the necessary investigation before we take such an important step. We must also meet with the provincial authorities to discuss the situation.

I was not too happy with the Prime Minister when he expressed that idea without first consulting the provinces. He wrote to them only afterwards. It was said that the Prime Minister was then on a non-political tour but if I am to follow the example set by my hon. friend from Jasper-Edson, I should quote part of the press report which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen, on November 27, 1961, concerning the Prime Minister's visit to Newfoundland:

(Text):

It was a fast moving visit billed as non-political, but with the intensive hand-shaking activity associated with an election campaign.
