Queen Street, Fredericton, N. B. Questions answered without charge. This column is open only to our subscribers.]
KENNICK—My horse stopped eating
the other day and seems to be excited and feverish; holds one foot up; noticed a swelling between the hair and hoof; it has broken and is discharging matter; he has begun to eat; seems better to-day and worse to-morrow.
Ans: Your horse has what is termed a Quittor. The great secret of the treatment of this disease is to make a free
opening from the bottom of the foot.
When this is done you will be greatly surprised to see the swelling go away as quickly as it came, and if the swelling has broken it will soon cease to discharge.
Having effected an opening, get a small syringe and inject into the opening a mixture of sulphate of zinc, two ounces;
rain water, eight ounces, once a day. If the opening has been made from below, drop ten drops of muriatic acid into the opening above once a day for a few days.
Feed Superior Condition Powders.
MICK—Your cow has what is termed foul claw, or foul in the foot, caused by standing in mud and moisture, which swells the part affected and produces lameness. Treatment—Cleanse out with a hair rope, or by some other means, and apply sulphate of zinc, one drachm;
water, half a pint; keep the foot dry and
clean, which will not only assist the cure,
but is a preventive also.
BACKWOODS—From your symptoms I judge that your horse's hind legs have been frost bitten, the result of broken and imperfect shoes on side of hams facing the northern exposure, and behind which stood the horse. Treatment—Rub the parts affected with snow or ice water, then follow gradually with water two or three degrees above freezing,
and when warmth is restored, bath with
weak spirits. When the legs and heels break into sores and ulcers, apply twice daily carbolic acid (in crystals) four drachms; olive oil, four ounces. Mix
water two or three degrees above freezing,
and when warmth is restored, bath with
weak spirits. When the legs and heels

LILIAN, THE HEIRESS.

Now, finding the room empty, and knowing it to be four minutes after ten, she says to herself: "The first!" with a little surprise and much pardonable pride, and sets herself with something of an air before the toilet table. When we are old it is so sweet to us to be just vice versa. Oh, foolish youth!

An elderly butler, who has evidently seen service (in every sense of the word), and who is actually steeped in respectability up to his port-wine nose, hovers around the breakfast, adjusting this dish affectionately, and straightening that, until all is carefully away, when he leaves the room with a sigh of satisfaction.

Perhaps Lady Chetwoode's self-admiration would have grown beyond bounds, but that just at this instant voices in the hall attract her thoughts. The sounds make her face brighten and bring a smile to her lips. "The boys" are coming. She draws the tea-cups a little nearer to her and makes a gentle fuss over the spoons. A light laugh echoes through the hall; it is answered, and then the door once more opens, and her two sons enter, Cyril, being the youngest, naturally coming first.

On seeing his mother he is pleased to make a gesture indicative of the most exaggerated surprise.

"Now, who could have anticipated it?" he says. "Her gracious majesty already assembled, while her faithful subjects—Well, with a sudden change of tone, "for my part I call it down right shabby of people to scramble down-stairs before other people merely for the sake of putting them to the blush."

"Lay boy! no wonder you are ashamed of yourself when you look at the clock," says Lady Chetwoode, smiling fondly as she returns his greeting.

"Ashamed! Why do not misunderstand me. I have arrived at my twenty-sixth year without ever having mastered the meaning of that word. I flatter myself I am a degree beyond that."

"Last night's headache quite gone, mother?" asks Sir Guy, bending over her chair to kiss her: an act he performs tenderly, and as though the doing of it is sweet to him.

"Quite, my dear," replies she; and there is perhaps the faintest, the very faintest, accession of warmth in her tone an almost imperceptible increase of kindness in her smile as she speaks to her eldest son.

"That's right," says he, patting her gently on the shoulder; after which he goes over to his own seat and takes up the letters lying before him.

"Positively I never thought of the post," says Lady Chetwoode. "And here I have been for quite five minutes with nothing to do. I might as well have been digesting my correspondence, if there is any for me."

"One letter for you; five, as usual, for Cyril; one for me," says Guy. "All Cyril's." Examining them critically at arm's length. "Written evidently by very young women."

"Yes, they will write to me," returns Cyril, receiving them with a sigh, and regarding them in turns with careful scrutiny. "It is nothing short of disgusting," he says, presently, singling out one of the letters with his first finger. "This is the fourth she has written me this week, and as yet it is only Friday. I won't be able to bear it much longer. I shall certainly make a stand one of these days."

"I would if I were you," says Guy, laughing.

"I have just heard from Lilian Chesney," suddenly says Lady Chetwoode, speaking as though a bombshell had fallen in their midst. "And she is really coming here next week!"

"No!" says Guy, without meaning contradiction, which at the moment is far from him.

"Yes," replies his mother, somewhat faintly.

"Another!" murmurs Cyril, weakly—he being the only one of the three who finds any amusement in the situation. "Well, at all events she can't write to me as we shall be under the same roof; and I shall dismiss the very first servant who brings me a letter-dox. How pleased you do look, Guy! And now order—a whole live ward, and all to your self. Lucky you!"

"It is hard on you, mother," says Guy, "but it can't be helped. When I promised I made sure her father would have lived for years to come."

"You did what was quite right," says Lady Chetwoode, who, if Guy were to commit a felony, would instantly say it was the only proper course to be pursued. "And it might have been much worse. Her mother's daughter cannot fail to be a lady in the best sense of the word."

"I'm sure I hope she won't, then," says Cyril, who all this time has been carefully laying in an uncommonly good breakfast. "If there is one thing I hate, it is a young lady. Give me a girl!"

"But, my dear, what an extraordinary speech! Surely a girl may be a young lady."

"Yes, but unfortunately a young lady isn't always a girl. My experience of the former class is, that, no matter what their age, they are as old as the hills, and know considerably more than they ought to know."

"And just as we had got rid of one ward so successfully we must needs get another," says Lady Chetwoode, with a plaintive sigh. "Dear Mabel! she was certainly very sweet, and I was excessively fond of her, but I do hope this new comer will not be so troublesome."

"I hope she will be as pleasant to talk to and as good to look at," says Cyril.

confess I missed Mabel awfully. I never felt so down in my life as when she declared her intention of marrying Tom Steyne."

"I never dreamed the marriage would have turned out so well," says Lady Chetwoode, in a pleasant tone. "She was such an unreasonable girl. But it is wonderful how well she gets on with a husband."

"Flirts always make the best wives. You forget that, mother."

"And what a coquette she was! If Lilian Chesney resembles her, I don't know what I shall do. I am getting too old to take care of pretty girls."

"I hope not, my dear," said Lady Chetwoode, with a strong shudder. "Let her be anything but that. I can't bear ugly women. No, her mother was lovely. I used to think—relapsing again into the plaintive style—that one ward in a lifetime would be sufficient, and now we are going to have another."

"It's all Guy's fault," says Cyril. "He does get himself up so like the moral Peckstiff. There is a stern and dignified air about him that would deceive a Machiavelli, and takes the hearts of parents by storm. Poor Mr. Chesney, who never even saw him, took him on hearsay as his only child's guardian. This solitary fact shows how grossly he has taken in society in general. He is every bit as immoral as the rest of us, only—"

"Immoral! My dear Cyril—" interrupts Lady Chetwoode, severely.

"Well, let us say frivolous. It has just the same meaning nowadays, and sounds nicer. But he looks a 'grave and reverend' if ever there was one. Indeed, his whole appearance is enough to make any passer-by stop short and say: 'There goes a good young man.'"

"I'm sure I hope not," says Guy, half offended, wholly disgusted. "I should be inclined to shoot any one who told me I was a 'good young man.' I have no desire to pose as such; my ambition does not go that far."

"I don't believe you know what you are saying, either of you," says Lady Chetwoode, who, though accustomed to them, can never entirely help showing surprise at their sentiment and expressions every now and then. "I should be sorry to think everybody did not know you to be (as I do) good as gold."

"Thank you, Mother. One compliment from you is worth a dozen from any one else," says Cyril. "My new, Guy? You seem shocked. I cannot tell you how I admire any one who takes an undisciplined interest in his correspondence. Now I'm gazing at his five unopened letters, 'cannot get up the feeling to save my life. Guy,' reproachfully—'don't you see your mother is dying of curiosity.'"

"The letter is from Trant," says Guy, looking up from his closely-written letter before him. "He wants to know if we will take a tenant for the 'Cottage.' 'A lady'—reading from the letter—'who has suffered much, and who wishes for quietness and retirement from the world.'"

"I should recommend a convent under the circumstances," says Cyril. "It would be the very thing for her. I don't see why she should come down here to stay and put us all in the dumps, and fill our woods with her sighs and moans."

"Is she young?" asked Lady Chetwoode, anxiously.

"No—I don't know, I'm sure. I should think not, by Trant's way of mentioning her. 'An old friend' he says—though, of course, that might mean anything."

"Married?"

"Yes, a widow."

"Dear me!" says Lady Chetwoode, distastefully. "A most objectionable class of people. Always in the way, and—very designing, and that."

"If she is anything under forty, she will want to marry Guy directly," Cyril puts in, with an air of conviction. "If I were you, Guy, I should pause and consider before I introduced such a dangerous ingredient so near home. Just fancy, mother, seeing Guy married to a woman probably older than you!"

"Yes—I shouldn't wonder," said Lady Chetwoode, nervously. "My dear child, do nothing in a hurry. Tell Colonel Trant you—don't care about letting the Cottage just at present."

"Nonsense, mother! How can you be so absurd? Don't you think I may be considered proof against designing widows at twenty-nine? Never mind Cyril's talk. I dare say he is afraid for himself. Indeed, the one thing that makes me hesitate about obliging Trant is the knowledge of how utterly incapable my poor brother is of taking care of himself."

"It is only too true," says Cyril, resignedly. "I feel sure if the widow is flouted by you she will revenge herself by marrying me. Guy, as you are strong, be merciful."

"After all, the poor creature may be quite old, and we are frightening ourselves unnecessarily," says Lady Chetwoode, in all sincerity.

At this both Guy and Cyril laugh, in spite of themselves.

"Are you really afraid, mother?" asks Cyril, fondly. "What a goose you are about your 'boys.' Are we always to be children in your eyes? Not that I wonder at your horror of widows. Even the immortal Weller shared your sentiments, and warned his 'Samivel' against them. Never mind, mother, console yourself. I for one swear by all that is lovely never to seek this particular 'widow' in marriage."

False oath.

"You see he seems to take it so much for granted, my giving the Cottage and that, I hardly like to refuse."

"It would not be of the least consequence, if it was not situated actually in our own woods, and not two miles from the house. There lies the chief objection," says Lady Chetwoode.

"Yes. Yes what can I do? It is a pretty little place, and it seems a pity to let it sink into decay. This tenant may save it."

"It is a lovely spot. I often fancy Guy," says his mother, somewhat sadly, "I should like to go and live there myself when you get a wife."

"Why should you say that?" says Guy almost roughly. "If my taking a wife necessitates your quitting Chetwoode, I shall never burden myself with that luxury."

"You don't follow out the matter's argument, dear boy," says Cyril, smoothly. "She means that when your sisters widow claims you as her own she must leave, as of course the same roof could not cover both. But you are eating nothing mother; Guy's foolish letter has taken away your appetite. Take some of this broiled ha!"
