LOVE'S BITTERNESS.

Oh perfidy! oh sorrow! Oh weary time mis-spent! Sick longings for the morrow Uneasy discontent. Passion burning madly Within a throbbing heart; Sorrow brooding sadly; Oh the pain,—the smart!

Lost in Love's idolatry; The soul an inward moan; Floating on a dreary sea, Tear-blinded, mad, alone; Seeing but the cruel wave Of that dark flood, Regret; Crying, on its heaving grave, "Lord, teach me to forget!"

Sweeping down the waters; Beneath the dark'ning sky; While courage fainting falters, And God hears not the cry, Drifting to the ocean Of fathomless despair; Quivering with emotion, Breathing its icy air.

Clinging with madden'd grasp To the soul's idol still; Kissing the poison'd asp Causing them this ill; Wearying, hoping, weeping-Every thought a sigh; Dreary vigils keeping -Praying at last to die!

Sleepless amid the slumber Of other, happier eyes, Counting up the number Of Love's perfidies; Crying, that 'tis bitter; Scorning thine own salt toars; Whispering that 'tis fitter He should feel thy fears.

Wearying for the daylight; Weeping when it came; Bearing its jealous despite, Hearing strangers speak his name Longing for the touch Of a hand upon thy brow; Yet knowing it too much To hope and wish for now.

Listening for a voice That hath forget its tone, And of its own free choice Hath left thee here alone; Yearning, heart-sick, for a look, With bow'd and weary head. Reading, as in a book, Every word he'd said.

Knowing they will never-No, never come again And this thirst for ever Must ache, and ashe in vain. Oh, the weary emptiness! Oh the patient woel Oh the barren dreariness Of this world's gauds and show ! F. E. M. N.
