TEN BROECK BEATS MOLLIE MCCARTHY.

A BIG FIZZLE.
 We take the following report of the Ten Broeck-Mollie McCarthy race from the Kentucky Live Stock Record:—
 Mollie McCarthy flew the track, and when the drum tapped she darted away in the lead and was half a length in front at the quarter. Going down the back stretch, Ten Broeck lapped her, and the pair raced head and head past the half mile pole. On the lower turn she again showed a length in front which she held at the three-quarters. Coming up the stretch he made play, the mare carrying him wide on the far turn, and at the stand led Ten Broeck, the latter sticking to his work like a plaster. On the near turn and at the quarter it was the same she appearing to have the speed and he driving. She held her lead down the back stretch past half mile and three-quarter poles. Entering the home stretch he made another run, and she was now fully extended, and led him half a length at the stand. Going into the third mile, and just as they reached the quarter pole he was at her head, and before reaching the half mile had her beat, and led two lengths. Mollie McCarthy from this point was badly beaten. She, who had never known defeat, had at last met her conqueror, and the remainder of the race was nothing but a big gallop for Ten Broeck, she coming to a stand-still when three and three-quarter miles had been run. She was so tired that her jockey never returned to scale until fully half an hour after the termination of the heat. Ten Broeck cramped and showed a congestion after the heat that looked very much as if the horse had a dose of morphine. The symptoms were very characteristic of the drug, and he would have been totally unable to run another heat. The quarter was run in 28, the half 54, three-quarters 1:21, mile 1:49, mile and a quarter 2:19, mile and half 2:47, mile and three-quarters 3:16, two miles 3:45, two miles and a quarter 4:16, two and a half 4:48, two and three-quarters 5:19, three miles 5:53, three miles and a quarter 6:29, three miles and a half 7:00, three and three quarter miles 7:57, four miles 8:19.

THIS TIME TO KNOW THE ANSWER TO CATERPILLAR.

A RACE FOR A WIFE!

CHAPTER I.

THE BELLE OF THE BALL.

Xminster is all alive, simmering, bubbling over with excitement, the magnates or potentates of Xminster are adjusting ribbons, fitting wreaths, scenting pocket handkerchiefs, stretching gloves, tying white neckcloths, and otherwise preparing for the momentous evening. The inferior class of Xminster is all that exhilaration of spirits that gratuitous sight-seeing is wont to produce among the multitude, and while away the time with pipes, flirtation, al fresco jigs, and badinage. It is but a momentary glimpse of some hundred or so of ladies and gentlemen in evening attire that is destined to be the reward of their patience, but then, you see, Xminster is a town in which the stream of life runs sluggishly. Circuses, conjurers, lecturers, monologue entertainers, etc., are rather shy of Xminster, the little town is so thoroughly habituated to retiring to rest at an early hour, that even the visits of some of these talented and adventurous beings have failed to tempt the inhabitants to forego their beds or to expend their silver. Such people speak disparagingly of Xminster as a town with no artistic tastes.

But the dullest village in England recognizes some two or three occasions in the year on which dreary mirth takes the place of melancholy stagnation. It was not, therefore, likely that Xminster, which in a quiet way labored under the impression that it was rather a bright, lively, go-ahead town than otherwise, should be without its carnivals. They were two: the fair, on which occasion the inferior clay and intermediate earthenware got drunk and did business at intervals for the week; and the dispensary ball, at which the porcelain portion of the community danced and enjoyed the inestimable privilege of, for two or three hours, breathing the same heated air as the country families. It is the latter carnival which is at present causing the pulse of Xminster to beat with feverish rapidity, and the population are already waiting to display their critical acumen on the belles of town and country. A noted beauty once said that, though many a compliment has been paid her in her day, none ever equalled that of the murmur which ran through the crowd around "The George" as she descended from her carriage for the Xminster ball, while above it came the shrill exclamation of "What's the use of lamps with such eyes as hers in the carriage?"

The dear old country fiddles are playing their somewhat superannuated dance-music with all the wonted animation and disregard of the niceties of tune which is so much the characteristic of provincial bands. There is no lack of pretty girls, tastefully dressed, doing their devoir in valse and quadrille, in the queer old room with its still queerer attempts at decoration in those gaudy festoons of artificial flowers. But a stately young lady, dressed in white, with green-and-gold trimmings, seems to bear away the palm and utterly eclipse her sister Pleides. More than one murmured tribute to her beauty escapes the lips of the lookers-on as she whirls by in the valse or glides in front of them in the Lancers.

"Who is she?—there's not a girl in the room can hold a candle to her! By Jove, she is handsome! Thorough-bred to the tips of her fingers! She moves like a queen among the rest, and they are good-looking girls too, some of them." And the speaker, a rather coarse-looking, dark man, a little the wrong side of thirty, turned for information to the knot of men he was lounging with at the door.

"Haven't you seen her before, Pearman? No, I suppose you hardly could have done. She goes out but little—that's Maude Denison."

"What!—daughter of old Denison of Glinn?"

"Just so former owner of all those fat estates which have since fallen into your respected progenitor's possession, and a slight collection of voice just italicized the fact, for Gus Braden was of a good old family, and had little to say about it."

back to her chaperone, she certainly thought he was by no means the least agreeable partner she had had that evening. She had just resumed her seat, when a tall, fair man was by her side. His brow was slightly knit, and his eyes sparkled angrily, as he exclaimed, "My dear Maude, how could you dance with that man?"

"Which, Grenville?" inquired Miss Denison, smiling. "I have danced with a good many to-night, including your sweet self, cousin, mine."

"Don't be absurd, Maude; you know very well whom I mean—that dark man—your last partner."

"And wherefore should I not dance with him?" inquired Miss Denison.

"For a hundred reasons. His name alone should have sufficed to prevent it."

"Dear me!" laughed the young lady, merrily. "You have piqued my woman's curiosity. Do tell me who this monster of iniquity is, for, truth to say, I did not catch his name when introduced to me. Is he a noted radical, or murderer, or what? He was rather more amusing than some of the men I have chanced on this evening."

"You didn't know who he was? I thought not. That's young Pearman—the unmitigated cad; and Grenville Rose pulled his long yellow moustache, as some slight solace in his irritation of mind."

"So that was Mr. Pearman, was it?" remarked Maude, musingly. "Well, Grenville, I don't think I should have danced with him had I known who he was; but, you see, I didn't, and I cannot see that it is of much consequence now. One is not obliged to recognize the partner of a quadrille again unless one likes, you know; and, though I'll plead guilty to finding him amusing, I don't think I wish to prosecute the acquaintance. But don't you think it is getting time to leave?—Mrs. Learmont, you are as good as gold," said Maude, turning to her chaperone, "waiting in this resigned manner for me. However, I am quite at your disposal now."

"Pray, don't think of me; I want you to thoroughly enjoy your ball, and I am quite willing to look on at your valising for another hour. I have lots of people to come and talk to me, you know."

"Yes," laughed Maude, "I am quite aware that you have lots of old friends, only too glad to have the chance of a quiet chat with you, and know, also, that you would sit here and pinch yourself to keep awake, sooner than debar your goddaughter of five minutes gratification, but I also have a conscience. Perhaps my motives are interested ones, and I am thinking that you might hesitate next time I demand your kind offices, if I try you too severely now."

"My dear Maude, you don't surely—"

"Yes, your dear Maude does surely think that you and she have had enough of this.—Go and see about the carriage, Grenville—will you, please? And, despite many assaults from young men, who produced cards on which her name was pencilled, and pleaded hard for the fulfillment of the contract, Maude Denison steadily refused to dance any more that evening. Grenville Rose saw them in their carriage, and laughingly declined the honor of the back seat, saying that he should return as he came, in the dog-cart, so that no destruction of flounces could be attributed to him."

It is very curious to watch what trifling affairs influence the tenor of our lives. Maude Denison has deemed it of little consequence that she has danced a quadrille with Samuel Pearman; and yet that dance is fated to draw many a tear from the proud gray eyes—to occasion many a bitter tug at her heartstrings. Grenville Rose has refused the back seat in the roomy old carriage, yet, ere thirty minutes are over, his nerves will be tortured in a way which he is powerless to resist; he will take his seat in a dog-cart, with a prevalent impression of having made a fool of himself, than which nothing, perhaps, is more galling to the vanity of man.

The ball is well nigh over. Men are congratulating about the refreshment-buffet for another sherry-and-seltzer, while their vehicles are getting ready. They are talking over the evening, in the careless way men are apt to on such occasions. More than one beauty is discussed. It was not likely that the belles par excellence should be left out of such converse.

"What a clipper Maude Denison is!" said one young gentleman, somewhat gone in the lady's present; in the second, I think I merely observed that I had the good fortune of dancing with her, and she was an extremely nice girl, and that he would be a fortunate man who should win her. The supposition that a young lady will be some day be married can hardly be deemed insulting."

Grenville bowed, muttered something about thinking it best to announce his kinship ere more should be said, and left the apartment discomfited. Mr. Pearman's modification of his first speech was ingenious though there was nothing really tangible even in that. Grenville's knuckles literally tingled as he descended the staircase, and he thought vindictively how it would have conduced to his night's rest to have knocked Pearman down. A burst of distant laughter, as he lit a huge cabana previous to stopping into the dog-cart, was not calculated to soothe his irritated feelings. He put that laugh down as at his expense, as men will do whether or no under such circumstances. He muttered to himself as he drove off, "Right or wrong, Sam Pearman, I hold myself in your debt, and if I don't pay it religiously, should the time ever come, my name is not Grenville Rose." She was a free goer, that little bay mare. Seldom did driver have to call upon her to quicken her pace; as a rule, she trotted as quick as she honestly knew how, but more than once that evening did Grenville lightly draw the whip across her. She could not, you see, trot away from the reflections just behind her, which was, in truth, what she was being asked to do. Many a good horse has had hard justice meted out to him after this wise. Quick as he came, yet Mrs. Learmont had dropped Maude at Glinn, and the latter had retired to her own room, before Grenville Rose, in a far from genial frame of mind lit his candlestick in the hall. "Shan't see her again," he muttered, "before I start. I must go by that cursed early train, hours before there's a chance of any one being down. Made a fool of myself with that beast Pearman into the bargain;" and closing his door with an angry slam, Grenville prepared to seek his pillow.

It happens to all of us in our turn. There are many chances of doing so. You've neglected to sore your king at escarte—you revoked at whist—have gone too far with Miss Smith—or you have missed an opportunity with pretty Miss Jones, whose father has found out the old alchemist problem, and is transmitting pig-iron into ingots with marvellous celerity; you've quarrelled with your dearest friend—wounded your rich aunt on her tender point—talked rampant Radicalism before the Conservative member, whose interest you were especially anxious to obtain—unwittingly subjugated an unknown gentleman who turns out to be the editor of the magazine or manager of the theatre that you trust will introduce to the public the last spirited effusion of your pen. Ah me it is always so. Rochefoucauld tells us, "There are people fated to be fools; they not only commit follies by choice, but even constrained to do so by fortune." It is a sad moment that, laying the head upon the pillow with a vivid consciousness of having made a fool of one's self.

It behooveth now that I should give some slight description of the Pearmans of Mannersley, the younger of whom we have encountered at the Xminster ball.

The sire of the dark-featured young man who had expressed such admiration for Maude Denison, had begun life as a solicitor's clerk, from which in due course of time he blossomed forth into an attorney, and sat himself down in the little town of Bury St. Edmunds, with a view to the persecution of mankind or the redressing of his fellow-men's grievances, as circumstances and the presentation of six and-eight pence might direct. But it need hardly be observed that the ancient town was already adorned with two or three of the fraternity, and the older practitioners found no more business going on that they were perfectly competent to cope with. Consequently, Pearman senior found himself in possession of a business very much of the "Sawyer late Nockemorf" type, the annual receipts of which, it may be remembered, could be placed in a wineglass and covered up with a gooseberry leaf—a balancing of the ledger which represents more portability than profit.

I shall not say, "it may be remembered by the reader, because the faculty for ignorance" that we will display with reference to any lack of supply regarding the article. Gradually members of 'the upper ten,' whom more sanguine than prudent speculations had reduced to this category, consulted the attorney anent their necessities. They found him the treasure he had been described. He could not always prevent the user claiming his bond, it is true, but he always managed to temporize; and when the pill had to be swallowed, it was nicely gilt outside, after the manner of the economists of St. James'.

Now, as in the whole of all this business, Mr. Pearman never for one moment lost sight of the main point—that whether the transaction might be small or great, whether in hundreds or thousands, the first interest it was his particular duty to attend to was that of Samuel Pearman—I need scarcely say that he gradually waxed rich. Those mercenary money-lenders he took good care should let him have very fair pickings off the foolish bones they so often stripped clean between them; and finally, he achieved the proud position of being such a necessity, that no magnate of the London world whom 'plunging' or reckless expenditure had brought to grief, deemed it was possible he could be straight with the intervention of Sam Pearman.

In due course Harold Denison, Maude's father, had passed through his hands. Denison had started in life with a fine property; but burning the candle, not only at both ends, but a little in the middle besides, he had soon done away with that. Pearman was every thing he should be on the occasion; but when his client emerged from his sea of troubles, two-thirds of the Glinn estate were in the hands of the solicitor. Still, every one said Denison's had been a very bad break-up; that the property had been sold at a fair valuation; and that, but for Pearman, Harold Denison would not have been able to keep Glinn and such acres as were still left to him. By this time Pearman was an owner of race-horses, and kept a stud of his own. He had married a lady in some way connected with usury, and, having altogether acquired a considerable fortune made the first mistake in his career, and set up for a country gentleman.

He built a big house on the estate so recently lopped off the Glinn property; he built large stables; he laid down a tan-gallop; he filled his cellars with choice wines, and gave Gregory carte blanche as to furnishing. He named his house Mannersley, after the manor it stood upon. He established a crest and coat-of-arms; he had his cards engraved "Mr. and Mrs. Pearman, Mannersley;" he sat himself down to wait—but nobody called.

Money will do and does do a good deal, but here and there blood respects its rights. The county were not going to welcome what they designated as 'a money-grubbing attorney, who was fattening on the necessities of Harold Denison of Glinn.' The Master of the Hounds, it was true, called upon him; but even Pearman could regard that in no other light but that of a business transaction. He asked and obtained leave to draw the covers, gave the solicitor a capital luncheon on his return visit, but had steadily refused all invitations to dinner.

In due course of time Mrs. Pearman died. Whether, chagrined at her position not being properly recognized in this world, she hurried her departure to another, I cannot say; but some few years after their establishment in Mannersley she was laid in her grave. Her death but one son, who at the period of her death was an undergraduate at Cambridge, but who, now many years older, is the gentleman who danced that quadrille with handsome Maude Denison.

Young Pearman has succeeded far better than his progenitor in making his way in the county. A generation, you see, makes a vast difference. We hob and nob with the son, though we turned our supercilious noses up at the horny hand of the father. It don't do to know Giles the weaver who made the money, and does not the least know what to do with it; but young Giles, without an idea in his skull beyond the dissipation of the hard-won gear—ah! that is very different. We sip his claret at six guineas the dozen with infinite gusto. I suppose it is a reflex law of Nature that the accumulators of wealth should be generally succeeded by the distributors thereof—a piece of physiological study that might go far to quiet the apprehensions of the secretary of the Board of Trade anent the acquisition of large landed properties in

CHAPTER II.

THE DENISONS OF GLINN.

A fine old place was Glinn, although it had no pretensions to any very great antiquity: a large pile of brickwork, in the form of a longish parallelogram, relieved at the entrance side by one of those massive pillared porches under which carriages drive and deposit their freight at the low doorway in luxurious comfort, or the eastern gate of an English spring or the fierce howling of an autumnal equinox are prevalent in the land. At those times one appreciates the great porch on emerging from one's chamber as much as a good fire in frosty weather. There is nothing remarkable in the house internally, beyond the open gallery that runs round the inner hall, much after the manner that some hundred years ago galleries were wont to run round the court-yards of the great coaching inns—a description of hostelry now so scarce that we know them, one may say, only in pictures. But, externally, the place boasted some beautiful timber. Long stately avenues of lime, elm, and hornbeam diverged to three points of the compass. On the western side, looking over the wire-fence that bounded the garden, the eye fell upon a perfect sea of laurels, studded with forest trees. Through this wilderness of evergreen had been cut in days long since broad vistas, now perfectly tarried over, and on which countless rabbits grazed with the immunity of cherished pets. And yet it was not altogether so; for at the fall of the leaf, stalwart beaters crasped through those laurels, deadly breachloaders swept these grassy rides, and fur and feathers had a bad time of it for a day or two.

In these days of narrowness of means a good bit of the house was shut up. The drawing-room was rarely opened, except for sanitary purposes regarding the furniture. Harold Denison, his wife, and daughter, lived in the morning-room, the billiard-room—now, alas! denuded of the green-cloth table—and the dining-room. Denison was an embittered, disappointed man—far too clever not to see how he had thrown his game of life away by the turf-follies and extravagances of his early days; far too proud to take a reduced status in the county in which he had been at one time a leading magnate; far too selfish to sacrifice an iota of that pride to enhance the pleasure of either his wife or his daughter. He had married early in life a lady of good family in his own county—a sweet, lovable girl, who had yielded to his smallest caprice. It had been better for Harold Denison had she been constituted of sterner stuff. She never crossed her husband in word or deed. She wept at tears in the solitude of her own chamber when the reverses came. She sacrificed her own fortune as far as she could. She would have immolated herself if that would have tended to the furtherance of the interests of the man she still loved with all her girl's adoration. That being impossible, after the manner of such women, she sat down and wept again. No word of reproach ever escaped her lips. She gave up her season in London; she murmured not when the poor phæton was put down. She reduced her milliner's bills to the minimum power, and maddled her poor head in vain attempts to control the expenditure of an arbitrary house-keeper. She was one of those women who seem born to suffer. There are many such, and a brutal husband is usually their destiny. In this respect she was fortunate, for Harold Denison, making all allowance for his selfish nature, sincerely loved his wife. It grieved him much to curtail the luxuries she had been accustomed to; but it would never have entered his head to commence rigid economy on his side of the ledger.

... which ran through the crowd around The George' as she descended from her carriage for the Ximster ball, while above it came the shrill exclamation of 'What's the use of lamps with such eyes as her'n in the carriage ?

The dear old country fiddles are playing their somewhat superannuated dance-music with all the wonted animation and disregard of the niceties of tune which is so much the characteristic of provincial bands. There is a lack of pretty girls, tastefully dressed, doing their devoir in valse and quadrille, in the queer old room with its still queer attempts at decoration in those gaudy festoons of artificial flowers. But a stately young lady, dressed in white, with green-and-gold trimmings, seems to bear away the palm and utterly eclipse her sister Pleides. More than one murmured tribute to her beauty escapes
the lips of the lookers-on as she whirls by in the valse or glides in front of them in the Lancers.

'Who is she?—there's not a girl in the room can hold a candle to her! By Jove, she is handsome! Thorough-bred to the tips of her fingers! She moves like a queen among the rest, and they are good-looking girls too, some of them.' And the speaker, a rather coarse-looking, dark man, a little
the wrong side of thirty, turned for information to the knot of men he was lounging with at the door.

'Haven't you seen her before, Pearman?
No, I suppose you hardly could have done.
She goes out but little—that's Maude Denison.'

'What!—daughter of old Denison of Glinn?'

'Just so—former owner of all those fat fat acres which have since fallen into your respected progenitor's possession; and a slight inflection of voice just italicized the epithet, for Gas Brisden was of a good old country family, and had little reverence for the Pearmans or Mannersleys.

Yes, very handsome was Maude Denison.
She was a beauty of the regal order, and her stately carriage alone would have sufficed to make men ask 'Who is she?' even without the rich brown tresses, proud gray eyes, and regular features. She fully warranted the rather coarse encomium of 'thorough-bred to the tips of her fingers.'

'By Jove, I must know her!' said Pear-
man. 'Can you introduce me, Brisden?'

'No; I barely know her myself; by no means well enough to take such a liberty,' replied Gas.

It was hardly the truth, for he did know
her, if not intimately, at all events tolerably well; but Brisden had no great opinion of Mr Samuel Pearman, and still less idea of treating as his sponsor to handsome Maude Denison.

'Gad, I must go and find somebody who can; and Pearman hurried away.

Apparently he was successful, for shortly afterward he led out Miss Denison for a quadrille, during which Mr. Pearman did his utmost to make himself agreeable. He was a very earthy piece of clay, by nature coarse and sensual in his habits; but he had enjoyed the advantage of a good education, and was by no means deficient in ability. He had achieved a certain amount of success undergoing the friction of such society as he had encountered, and procured himself an apt pupil in worldly wisdom. This stood him in good stead, just now. He insidiously subdued his natural self-assured, boisterous manner, as he talked deferentially to his partner. He had seen much of the world;
his remarks on men and manners were amusing; and when he led Maude Denison

Perhaps my motives are interested ones, and I am thinking that you might hesitate next time I demand your kind offices, if I try you too severely now.'

My dear Maude, you don't surely—
'Yes, your dear Maude does surely think that you and she have had enough of this.— Go and see about the carriage, Grenville—will you, please?' And, despite many assaults from young men, who produced cards
on which her name was pencilled, and pleaded hard for the fulfillment of the contract, Maude Denison steadily refused to dance any more that evening. Grenville Rose saw them in their carriage, and laughingly declined the honor of the back seat, saying that he should return as he came, in the dog-cart, so that no destruction of flounces could be attributed to him.

It is very curious to watch what trifling
affairs influence the tenor of our lives.
Maude Denison has deemed it of little consequence that she has danced a quadrille with Samuel Pearman; and yet that dance is fated to draw many a tear from the proud gray eyes—to occasion many a bitter tug at her heartstrings. Grenville Rose has refused the back seat in the roomy old carriage,
yet, ere thirty minutes are over, his nerves
will be tortured in a way which he is powerless to resist; he will take his seat in a dog-cart, with a prevalent impression of having made a fool of himself, than which nothing, perhaps, is more galling to the vanity of man.

The ball is well nigh over. Men are congregating about the refreshment-buffet for another sherry-and-seltzer, while their vehicles are getting ready. They are talking over the evening, in the careless way men are apt to on such occasions. More than one beauty is discussed. It was not likely that the belle par excellence should be left out of such converse.

'What a clipper Maude Denison is! said
one young gentleman, somewhat gone in sherry-and-seltzer, and who had achieved
nothing but distant adoration of the beauty
the whole evening.

'Yes, she is,' rejoined another. 'I never saw such eyes; and can't she valse, just!
He was also indebted to observation for his critical commendation of Maude's dancing.
'Ha! here comes Pearman. You can tell us all about her. Lucky dog! I saw you got a dance out of her.'

What evil genius put it into Grenville
Rose's head to follow Pearman up to the refreshment table I know not; but so it was.
'Got a dance out of whom?' inquired the last-mentioned gentleman.

'Why, Maude Denison, the belle of the ball, of course.'

'Yes, I was so far lucky. She's a nice girl.—Worth a fellow's while to go in for.
Can't have any money though, I take it.' Grenville Rose ground his teeth hard. What right had these—cads, I fear, would have been his word—to breathe Maude Denison's name?

For once temper got the better of discretion, albeit he was not addicted to foolish actions. 'I don't know whether you are aware, sir,' he exclaimed addressing himself to Pearman, 'that the lady you are discussing with such freedom happens to be my cousin?'

'I can only congratulate you on such a charming relative,' was the unembarrassed reply.

The blood rushed to Grenville's temples,
and a fierce impulse to strike the speaker to the ground possessed him; but he felt there was nothing tangible to resent. With a great effort he replied, 'I will merely thank you to speak of her with a little more deference in my presence.'

'In the first place,' responded Pearman,
'I was unaware that there was a relative of

with your dearest friend—you've quarrelled and coat-of-arms; he had his cards engraved
'Mr. and Mrs. Pearman, Mannersley';
he sat himself down to wait—but nobody called.

Money will do and does do a good deal,
but here and there blood respects its rights.
The county were not going to welcome what they designated as 'a money-grubbing attorney, who was fattening on the necessities of Harold Denison of Glinn.' The Master of the Hounds, it was true, called upon him;
but even Pearman could regard that in no
other light but that of a business transaction.
He asked and obtained leave to draw the covers, gave the solicitor a capital luncheon
on his return visit, but had steadily refused all invitations to dinner.

In due course of time Mrs. Pearman died.
Whether, chagrined at her position not being properly recognized in this world, she hurried her departure to another, I cannot say;
but some few years after their establishment
in Mannersley she was laid in her grave.
She left but one son, who at the period of her death was an undergraduate at Cambridge, but who, now many years older, is the gentleman who danced that quadrille with handsome Maude Denison.

Young Pearman has succeeded far better than his progenitor in making his way in the county. A generation, you see, makes a vast difference. We hob and nob with the son, though we turned our supercilious noses up at the horny hand of the father. It don't do to know Giles the weaver who made the money, and does not the least know what to do with it; but young Giles, without an idea in his skull beyond the dissipation of the hard-won gear—ah! that is very different.
We sip his claret at six guineas the dozen with infinite gusto. I suppose it is a reflex law of Nature that the accumulators of wealth
should be generally succeeded by the distributors thereof—a piece of physiological study that might go far to quiet the apprehensions of the secretary of the Board of Trade anent
the acquisition of large landed properties in this country.

Samuel the younger, it is almost needless to observe, considering what we know of his progenitors, took to the 'turf,' as kindly as young duckling to water. Under his father's guidance, he soon became a valuable coadjutor. He was early indoctrinated into all the mysterious of 'milking,' 'roping,' etc.—
villainous technicalities with which I will not attempt to bore uninitiated readers further than explaining that they are but so many conjurations of the verb 'to rob.' As the father advanced both in years and infirmities, the whole management of the racing-stud gradually fell into the son's hands. Though the old man still took an interest in it, he confined himself pretty much now to the management of his estate, and arranging the affairs of the still numerous 'gentlemen in difficulties' that sought his beneficent assistance. Lat-terly, indeed, on account of his failing health
he had been entered and run principally in the junior Pearman's name, though the old gentleman's counsel was still sought on what should be the tactics of the stable.

'Still, although the younger Pearman
had insinuated himself to a certain extent into the county society, there were many of the county families who utterly ignored the solicitor's son. The men of the family might know him in the hunting field; the younger sons might go even so far as to drop in at Mannersley for lunch, when the hounds or ought else took them that way. But the woman tabooed him—they would none of him; and bitterly did Sam Pearman feel that haughty ostracism. All men have their ambitions; Pearman had his father's, intensified, to be acknowledged as within the pale of 'the upper ten.' He quite understood that the recognition of the race-course and hunting-field was far from constituting such.

his wife or his daughter. He had married early in life a lady of good family in his own county—a sweet, lovable girl, who had ever yielded to his smallest caprice. It had been better for Harold Denison had she been constituted of sterner stuff. She never crossed her husband in word or deed. She wept and tears in the solitude of her own chamber when the reverses came. She sacrificed her own fortune as far as she could. She would have immolated herself if that would have tended to the furtherance of the interests of the man she still loved with all her gush adoration. That being impossible, after the manner of such women, she sat down and wrote again. No word of reproach ever escaped her lips. She gave up her season in London; she murmured not when the pony phæton was put down. She reduced her milliner's bills to the minimum power, and managed her poor head in vain attempts to control the expenditure of an arbitrary housekeeper. She was one of those women who seem born to suffer. There are many such,
and a brutal husband is usually their destiny.
In this respect she was fortunate, for Harold Denison, making all allowances for his selfish nature, sincerely loved his wife. It grieved him much to curtail the luxuries she had been accustomed to; but it would never have entered his head to commence rigid economy
on his side of the ledger.

Maude was their only child, and this perhaps still more fostered the intense selfishness of Mr. Denison's disposition. A girl was of course, sure to marry. There would perhaps, be some little difficulty about the dot; but that was all. He had none of his stock to come after him; and though he little relished the idea of the Denison's of Glinn being blotted out of the county record, he could not be expected to feel such interest for that boyish nephew he had barely seen. On one point only did poor Mr.
Denison ever venture to contradict her lord's wishes; that was about Maude. The girl was all in all to her mother. Maude's woman's wit had early made her understand that her father dealt but hard justice in that quarter, and she was ever ready to flash forth as her mother's champion. Otherwise she loved her father very dearly, and was quite imbued with the family doctrine of self-sacrifice where he should be concerned.

By the light of a candle, in the solitude of his chamber, Grenville Rose was tasting all the sweets of dressing to catch an early train on a dark February morning. He had been together a great deal with his cousin Maude, being, indeed, a ward of Mr.
Denison's. They had romped together as children, and been fast comely friends since they had grown bigger. No love-making had ever taken place between the pair, yet Grenville was conscious of being very fond of that gray-eyed damsel. If you had asked him, 'What, in a comely way?' he would have answered, 'Yes, of course.' If you had suggested, 'in a sisterly manner?' he would have hesitated, and said, 'Well, not just that; cousins are different, you know.' Well, they are, as the old sang says:

"Sisters I have by the dozen, Tom,
But a cousin's a different thing."

Though you and I reader, might have a suspicion on the subject, it had not yet dawned upon Grenville's mind that he was falling in love with Maude. He couldn't bear her dancing with that beast Pearman, he said to himself, but he did not admit that there were several eligible partners whom Miss Denison had honored with her hand at the Ximster ball that he had taken almost equal exception to. In fact, as a rule, he had only thoroughly approved such as were married or elderly. Rose was certainly in no position at present to bethink himself of a wife.

HENLEY, ENG., REGATTA.

LEE, THE AMERICAN SCULLER, BEATEN FOR THE DIAMOND SCULLS—THE SHOEWACCAEMETTES WIN A HEAT, ETC.

LONDON, July 4.—The weather at Henley today was fine. The meadows on both sides of the course were filled with people. The race for the diamond sculls, between George W. Lee, of the Tinton Club, and Edwards-Moss, the present holder of the prize, was the first in which the Americans were interested. Both men started well. Lee, soon took a slight lead which he gradually increased. On nearing Poplar Point, he had a clear length ahead. It was an exciting race, Lee had the best of it, when suddenly within twenty feet of the finish he stopped still half a length ahead and at the same time his right oar struck the shore. He thought he had passed the winning post, and would not believe at first that he had not won the race. Two more strokes would have landed him a winner, but Moss, continuing his course, won by less than a quarter of a length. Both men were in great distress. Lee was ill before and after the race; time 9 min. 8 sec.

The next event was the first trial heat for the Steward's challenge cup. The Columbia college crew took the inside position near the Berks shore. The Dublin and University boat was in the middle and the Shoewaccaemettes on the Backs side of the river. The Shoewaccaemettes misunderstood the starting signal and got off badly, while the Dublins made a fine start and soon led both the American boats by two lengths. The Shoewaccaemettes were far over on the Backs side, while the other crews were close to the Berks shore, the Dublin crew crowding the Columbia boat intent on getting her water. Columbia rowed a good course in grand form, overtaking Dublin hand over hand. As they rounded the point Dublin steered in shore, crashing into Columbia just as the latter was beginning to head the Irish crew, and this in spite of the shouts of the umpire "Dublin take your right course." The two boats disentangled themselves, and when they did so Columbia was leading Dublin. Long before this the Shoewaccaemettes had taken a decided lead, having made up what they lost at first by a uniform stroke of 46 from the start. At the time of the foul which occurred at the end of a mile, they were a length and a quarter ahead of the fouling crews. Upon witnessing the foul, the Shoewaccaemettes' bow gave the order to "ease all" and dropping their stroke to forty the crew proceeded easily, the Nadeau brothers pulling with one hand several lengths, and waving their red caps in answer to the cheers on shore. Opposite the grand stand the Shoewaccaemettes raised their stroke to 48 to afford the spectators an exhibition of their powers, and passed the line many lengths ahead in 8 minutes and 21 seconds. The Columbias were very fresh on leaving their boat and made a claim to be allowed to row again in the final heat. This was disallowed.

The second trial heat for the Steward's Cup was won by the London Rowing Club in 8 min. 23 sec.

The event of the day turned out to be the second heat for the Visitors' Challenge cup. For this the University College crew of Oxford had the inside position, the Columbia crew second, and the Jesus College crew, of Cambridge, the outside place. The crews got off in fine style. Columbia in the second, making it best of all. Leading a little at a quarter of a mile, the Columbias kept forging ahead, steering a beautiful course. At half a mile, the University and Jesus boats were about a length behind. This advantage the Columbias continued to increase, until, at the three-quarter of a mile, they were seen to shoot over to the Berks shore, taking University water without trouble. University crew was out of the race, but the Jesus College men now spurted magnificently. The last quarter of a mile was intensely exciting, the friends of both crews urging them on, and above the yelling could be distinguished the peculiar cry of the Columbias. The Columbia passed the post two lengths ahead in 8 min. 17 sec., with the Oxford boat a bad third.

The second trial heat for the Visitors' Challenge cup was won by the Hertford College crew of Oxford in 9 min. 12 sec., the first Trinity crew of Cambridge being scratched.

SECOND DAY—THE COLUMBIAS WIN THE VISITORS' CUP—THE SHOEWACCAEMETTES BEATEN BY THE LONDON CLUB.

LONDON, July 5.—The Columbias have won the only boat race ever gained by an American crew in England and are the heroes of Henley. The heat of the Visitors' Challenge cup, in short, apparently used up. After pausing a few seconds, the Shoewaccaemettes went on slowly, Moses Nadeau and Durell pulling the boat alone. Joseph Nadeau was completely doubled up. The cause of their defeat was soon explained. Joseph Nadeau had been seized with a violent attack of diarrhoea early in the morning, and after the practice pull his condition became worse, but, he being plucky, refused to listen to a proposition to withdraw from the race. At the conclusion of the heat, the other three men came in, not at all distressed by their terrible struggle. What there was of the race, was the hardest ever rowed at Henley. The London time was 8 minutes 26 seconds. The Shoewaccaemettes at first accepted their defeat with nonchalance, but, once at their quarters, they fairly cried at their bitter disappointment. The Shoewaccaemettes will probably go to London on Tuesday, and sail on the steamer Utopia for home on the 17th. Geo. W. Lee, of Newark, contemplates remaining to compete at the Metropolitan regatta, for the Wingfield sculls now held by Playford. Lord Camoys, in presenting the prizes, complimented the Columbias on their pluck in coming over, and hoped they would come again.

THE TRUE ACTION OF A HORSE IN TROTTING DETERMINED

(San Francisco Chronicle, June 16.)

One of the most interesting and successful experiments ever made in connection with electro-photography was witnessed yesterday, at the race track at ex-Governor Stanford's ranch, at Palo Alto. For years past it has been a matter of grave discussion, not only among turfmen, but also with those who take an interest in trotting and running, and the question was never satisfactorily settled until Mr. Muybridge, under the auspices of ex-Governor Stanford, instituted a series of costly experiments, that have culminated in a grand success, that will open up a new era to the photographic art. The apparatus is very simple, but yet shows an immense deal of study, ingenuity, and foresight. On one side of the track is a rough shed, in which are the lenses and cameras, twelve in number, and on the opposite side is a huge screen of white canvas, stretched over a scantling fence, some thirty feet long and eight feet high, with a backward declination of some sixty degrees. On the upward edge of this canvas are shown the figures one to twenty consecutively, severed by vertical cords at twenty-one inches distant, and at the bottom of this canvas was a board showing horizontal lines, that represented four, eight and twelve inches above the level of the track. About two feet from the same canvas, but on the track, was a slight wooded ledge, and between the two, at every number between four and sixteen, was stretched a galvanic wire, at about an inch from the ground, each one connecting with its numbered lens on the opposite side, the wires being taken underneath the track. The investigation thus far was very simple, as it was apparent that the inner wheel would pass over the projecting wires, and by a simple arrangement on the other side would close the circuit. But, then, arose the question as to how this could be utilized to take a picture in the estimated incredible fraction of time of the two thousandth part of a second—in which period the lenses had to be exposed and closed. This was effected by a very ingenious contrivance in the shutters of the camera, to the upper and lower parts of which were adjusted very powerful springs, and when the electric current was perfected they were released, and in crossing they exposed a space of about two inches, and in this space of time, that represented but a flash of lightning, the passing figure is fixed on the highly sensitized glass, even to the minutest details. The ground over which the experiment was to be made being covered with slack lime, so as to catch even each footstep of the stride, all was duly prepared, and Abe Edgerton, with Charles Marvin holding the reins, appeared on the track to show by twelve almost instantaneous photographs the true story of the stride of the horse. Down the track came the gallant gray at about a 2:20 gait, and never wavering an inch, despite the glare of the lime, that glistened in the sun like a sheet of placid water, he dashed across the line, the inner wheel touching each of the twelve wires and causing a regular and indistinguishable clatter, and within those twelve cameras each part of his stride was fixed, that would conclusively show that the preconceived ideas of artists and horsemen were all wrong when based on the supposition that in that same stride two feet were never on the ground together. The negatives, as afterwards shown, are far clearer than can possibly be reproduced on paper. In the first picture the horse's head is under No. 8 on the board, of twenty-one inches showing the horse getting forward, until the fifth, when he almost exactly reproduces with a change of legs the previous movements, completing the stride in about 18 feet 4 1/2 inches. The first and to whom were addressed the heartiest congratulations—to ex-Governor Stanford for initiating the possibility of achieving this unexampled feat, and for the liberality with which he furnished the means for such costly experiments, or to Mr. Muybridge for the patience, skill, and perseverance with which he brought the affair to so happy a consummation.

THE COST OF RACE-HORSES.

The interest of the money sunk in racing-stock is the least part of the cost which is incidental to keeping race-horses. It has been calculated—indeed, it is known from experience, and by means of figures which cannot be doubted—that the expense of keeping a race-horse (in England) is not less than £250 per annum; indeed it has been set down by men well versed in the expenditure of the turf at £300, but we shall adopt the former figure. In this amount we include the trainers' and veterinary surgeons' accounts, all the travelling and miscellaneous expenses incurred on behalf of the animal, and a moderate allowance for entries to races. That sum (£250) would, in the case of many highly bred youngsters, be ridiculously insufficient, as such animals are entered, while still yearlings, in a large number of races, the entry moneys to which would more than absorb the whole of the sum we have named, but when dealing with so many horses, an average of £250 will just about hit the mark, and it is better, if possible, to keep a little within the expenditure than to overrate it. Taking first the horses in training, the annual cost of keeping these will amount, at £250 each, to £2513,500. We shall not count in this estimate the keep of the brood mares and sires, because horse-breeding, as a speculation, is rewarded by the money obtained for the yearlings, and for the board, lodging and training of the seven hundred youngsters which we have brought into this account, we shall allow for their first year £100 for each, or a total sum for the year's expenses of £70,000, which, added to the sum paid for the keep of the horses in training, as explained above, will amount to a total of £2813,500 per annum, to which, as representing the annual cost of the racing studs, must be added the interest on the capital sunk in the business, so that the yearly account will stand as follows: Interest on capital expended on race horses, £90,450; annual keep of the horses, £242,500; the total yearly expenditure being £673,950.

FUNERAL OF CARNEY.

The body of Ambrose Carney, the heavy-weight soldier-boxer, who was drowned by falling overboard from the steamer Quebec while proceeding with a party of excursionists to spend the Queen's birthday in Montreal, was recovered June 20, having been in the water nearly a month. His funeral took place on the 21st at Quebec, and is thus noticed by a local journal: "The remains were interred in the afternoon with military honors and the most genuine expression of sympathy on the part of the general public, with whom deceased was a great favorite. The funeral cortege was one of the largest and most imposing seen here in many years. As an old member of B Battery, the commandant of the garrison and the officers and men of that body, as well as the officers of the military staff and Lt.-Col. Allyn and the officers and men of the Eighth Battalion, to which deceased formerly belonged, with a detachment of Canadian Hussars, turned out in uniform to pay the last tribute of respect to their lamented comrade-in-arms. The body was drawn on a gun-carriage, the coffin being draped with the Union Jack, and the pall bearers were old associates of the deceased since his boyhood. The firing party was composed of men of the eighth Battalion, and the cortege proceeded to St. Patrick's Church, the band of the Eighth Battalion playing the Dead March. THE GRAND PRIZE OF PARIS.

Lucy Hooper, who always knows what she is talking about, writes as follows to the Graphic, describing some of the personages who were present at the great races—the Prix de Paris. It was a very "swell" affair. One thousand two hundred and twenty-five carriages entered the ground on that day, 500 more than on the Grand Prix of last year, and the receipts from entrance fees amounted to nearly $50,000. It is computed that 200,000 persons were present, the attendance on ordinary years being some 120,000. Think of that 200,000 people at a base ball match as an immense audience.

Mons. de MacMahon was all in pale gray, and her royal guest for the day—the Queen of Spain—wore a very simple suit of blue and white striped batiste, which was very ordinary looking and very unbecoming. In the matter of dress, both the lady occupants of the official box were outshone by the Shah of Persia, very magnificent, in a tunic composed of Cashmere shawls and glittering with diamonds. It is said that he treated himself to a new set of diamonds expressly for the occasion, as a woman might buy for herself a new bonnet. The Countess d'Eu (the Crown Princess Isabel of Brazil) was with her father-in-law, the Duke de Nemours, her Royal and Imperial Highness, looking very well in a toilet of garnet colored silk, with a vest of white and garnet pekin and hat decorated with an Alsatian bow in white and garnet. The Baroness de Rothschild was in gray silk, the border of the dress skirt being ornamented with a full ruche, lined with brown satin; the over-dress was of silver gray brocade, with revers of brown satin and trimmed with a broad gray and brown fringe. Miss Emilie Schoumburg, the Philadelphia belle, wore an elegant dress of black silk gauze, trimmed with black marabout feathers and a pale yellow bonnet, shaded by a long ostrich feather of the same hue. Many of the elegantes wore costumes entirely composed of one material. Thus there was one lady present all in dark blue satin, even to her bonnet and parasol, and another in black and white silk.

LEAN CATTLE FOR EUROPE.

Good news for American stock-breeders is the demand for live cattle by German and English farmers. Recently a ship load of Western cattle were landed in Tanning, to be fattened on the rich pastures of Schleswig-Holstein. Relative prices of young stock there and in this country warrant the importation of these young lean cattle for the purpose. This cargo, numbering 822 head, 15 horses, and 46 swine, beside some fat cattle, horses, and swine for England, were purchased at Chicago, and were so well received by the German farmers that the vessel was at once sent back for another lot. "The ship arrived in harbor under salutes of cannon and a display of flags, and hundreds of people lined the quay." There is also quite a demand in England for lean cattle and hogs for fattening; and in the embargo against the importation of live cattle at English ports, an exception is made in favor of those from America. This, together with the increasing call for finely bred stock from this country from Europe, argues well for our agricultural interests. The more our attention is paid to stock farming, instead of such exclusive grain, and other production, the better will it be for our farming. English agriculture dates its present advanced position from the beginning of heavy stocking of its farms and generous feeding, which added largely to the fertility of the soil, and causing a consequent increase in the yield of crops.

BEAR STORY.

"J. M." of Port Vernon, Muskoka sends the Hamilton Times the following bear story, for which he vouches, as well he may. A brave man, who was not a Robin Hood out a mild eyed inhabitant of the forest, while going through the bush to a neighbor's house, the other day, chanced to cross the path of three bears—Mrs. Brain and her two children. The forester was armed with a gun charged with buckshot, but thinking

BEANS FOR HORSES.

The secretary of the American Institute Farmers Club, speaking of beans for horses, said that they form a strong illustration of the principle that the nourishing or strengthening effects of the different articles of food depend more on some peculiar property which they possess, or some combination which they form, than on the actual quantity of nutritive matter. Beans contain but 373 parts of 1,000 of nutritive matter, yet they add materially to the vigor of the horse. There are many horses that will not stand hard work without being mixed with bran. One of our travellers has noticed the difference of spirit and continuance of their animals in proportion as they saw or deny beans on their journey. They are of great assistance to the hard-worked coach horse, which horses could not get through this work without them, and old horses would do under the task imposed upon them. Beans not merely afford a temporary stimulus, but they may be used daily without losing their power or producing exhaustion. They should not be used whole nor split but crushed. Some persons use chaff with beans, instead of oats. With hard-worked horses this might be allowed, but in general beans without oats are too stimulating and stimulating. Beans should be at least twelve months old before they are given to the horse, and care should be taken not to let them get damp and mouldy, which will at least disgust the animal if they do not harm him. Then, too, mouldy beans harbor an insect which destroys the inner part of the bean. When converted into meal beans are good for fattening hogs.

A HOMESICK HORSE'S JOURNEY.

The Manchester, N. H. Mirror tells the following story of a homesick horse that ran away from his new master and made the journey alone to his old home, a distance we believe of some thirty miles. Eighteen months ago a bay horse was purchased in this city by Mr. Nathaniel Wiggin of Greenland, and driven down to his farm. The horse was well fed and well treated, and he waxed fat and seemed as happy as it is given for the most fortunate horse to be. One night recently he escaped from his pasture, and was nowhere to be found when he was wanted next day. Harnessing another horse, Mr. Wiggin set forth to capture the deserter, and traced him from place to place until he reached Newmarket Bridge. Here he was informed by the toll gatherer that the horse had been there and evidently wanted to pass through, but was driven back and the gate closed, but even then he would not go away and the first time after his arrival that a team went through he made a dash squeezed through alongside of the other horse, and clattered away up the road, snorting triumphant as he went. Mr. Wiggin having no longer any doubt as to where the runaway had gone, drove on to Manchester as directly as he could go, arriving from the horse occasionally all the way, and arriving at Manchester there was, sure enough in his old stall in the stable which he had left eighteen months before.

THE MODERN PACIFIC MINER.

Riot, dissipation, wild and coarse revelry lavish waste of gold-dust poured recklessly from buckskin sacks, murder, lynching, and general devilry, fill the Bret Harte picture. Eureka is a mining town of the genuine stamp. The boys go slow on flowing boards and red silks. Modest gray flannel is the prevailing style of the honest miner, and he is devilish particular about the cut of his moustache. It is true that the average Eureka has a fen line for fare, ken and poker, but the idea of blowing his brains out because he has lost a game of chance never entered the noddle of a base rager. Large quantities of whisky are consumed, and there is at occasional row and a black eye, but a shooting scrape is a rarity, for the bearded miner, with all his picturesque recklessness, doesn't hanker any more after bullets in his carcass than the rest of mankind. During the past four weeks there has not been as many arrests on criminal charges as those for disturbing the peace merely. This, by a population of 6,000, is a pretty good record, and will stand a comparison with any town in the country—with even the most pastoral village in New England. In fact, Eureka is a busy, bustling place, full of business and enterprise, but it is in the matter of crime one of the cleanest and safest holes that a reporter could stir clear of. This is disgraceful, but it is true.

PEDESTRIANISM UNDER WATER.

mile, they were a length and a quarter ahead of the fouling crews. Upon witnessing the foul, the Shoewaccamettes' bow gave the order to ease all and dropping their stroke to forty the crew proceeded easily, the Nodden brothers pulling with one hand several lengths, and waving their red caps in answer to the cheers on shore. Opposite the grand stand the Shoewaccamettes raised their stroke to 48 to afford the spectators an exhibition of their powers, and passed the line many lengths ahead in 8 minutes and 21 seconds. The Columbias were very fresh on leaving their boat and made a claim to be allowed to row again in the final heat. This was disallowed.

The second trial heat for the Stewards' Cup was won by the London Rowing Club in 8 min. 23 sec.

The event of the day turned out to be the second heat for the Visitors' Challenge cup. For this the University College crew of Oxford had the inside position, the Columbia crew second, and the Jesus College crew, of Cambridge, the outside place. The crews got off in fine style, Columbia in the second, making it best of all. Lading a little at a quarter of a mile, the Columbias kept firing ahead, steering a beautiful course. At half a mile, the University and Jesus boats were about a length behind. This advantage the Columbias continued to increase, until, at the three-quarter of a mile, they were seen to shoot over to the Berks shore, taking University water without trouble. University crew was out of the race, but the Jesus College men now spurted magnificently. The last quarter of a mile was intensely exciting, the friends of both crews urging them on, and above the yelling could be distinguished the peculiar cry of the Columbias. The Columbia passed the post two lengths ahead in 8 min. 17 sec., with the Oxford boat a bad third.

The second trial heat for the Visitors' Challenge cup was won by the Hertford College crew of Oxford in 9 min. 12 sec., the first Trinity crew of Cambridge being scratched.

SECOND DAY—THE COLUMBIAS WIN THE VISITORS' CUP—THE SHOEWACCAMETTES BEATEN BY THE LONDON CLUB.

LONDON, July 5.—The Columbias have won the only boat race ever gained by an American crew in England and are the heroes of Henley. The heat of the Visitors' Challenge cup, in which they rowed yesterday, was the most interesting and exciting of the regatta, and it was almost a foregone conclusion that they would defeat the Hertford College crew to-day. The latter, however, made a plucky race. At the start for the final heat of the Visitors' cup to-day, the Columbia crew dipped oars first, and took the lead, rowing a tremendous stroke, and at Fawley Court boat house they were a length ahead of the Hertford boat. Nearing Renham the Hertford spurted and reduced the Columbias' lead to half a length, but exactly at Renham farm house Columbia increased her speed again, improved her position and was soon so clear as to be able to take the Hertfords' water in the same skillful way as the day before, notwithstanding the Hertfords' frantic efforts to prevent it. The Hertfords' only hope now was to catch the Columbia boat by touching her and thus causing a foul, Columbia being out of her own water. Goodwin perceived the danger and called on his men for a further spurt and they answered with a tremendous burst of speed which sent them ahead fully two lengths and a half. The pace was so hot that it completely exhausted the Hertfords, whose bow dropped his oar, almost fainting. The others were also completely pumped, and the boat, not being steered, ran ashore. The Columbias continued, finishing amid ringing cheers from the shore in 8 min. 41 sec.

In the final race for the Stewards' Cup there was some delay caused by the Shoewaccamettes' over eagerness to get away, but when the signal was given the London Rowing Club men, who got off well, made for the Berks shore getting into still water, the wind to-day being favorable for boats on the Berks side. The Shoewaccamettes went straight down the middle, getting an advantage in the first hundred yards and leading London half a length. The latter crew rowed grandly, without a fault, and at Fawley Court had outpaced the Shoewaccamettes by a spurt, leading them by a quarter of a length. Thus challenged the Shoewaccamettes, who had been rowing 44, increased the number to 48. Both crews approached Poplar Point at a terrific pace on almost even terms. Suddenly London shot ahead a length in an astonishing manner, and it was soon seen that something was the matter in the Shoewaccamettes' boat, but no one was prepared to see the latter crew stop inches above the level of the track. About two feet from the same canvas, but on the track, was a slight wooded ledge, and between the two, at every number between four and sixteen, was stretched a galvanic wire, at about an inch from the ground, each one connecting with its numbered lens on the opposite side, the wires being taken underneath the track. The investigation thus far was very simple, as it was apparent that the inner wheel would pass over the projecting wires, and by a simple arrangement on the other side would close the circuit. But, then, arose the question as to how this could be utilized to take a picture in the estimated incredible fraction of time of the two thousandth part of a second—in which period the lenses had to be exposed and closed. This was effected by a very ingenious contrivance in the shutters of the camera, to the upper and lower parts of which were adjusted very powerful springs, and when the electric current was perfected they were released, and in crossing they exposed a space of about two inches, and in this space of time, that represented but a flash of lightning, the passing figure is fixed on the highly sensitized glass, even to the minutest details. The ground over which the experiment was to be made being covered with slack lime, so as to catch even each footstep of the stride, all was duly prepared, and Abe Edgerton, with Charles Martin holding the reins, appeared on the track to show by twelve almost instantaneous photographs the true story of the stride of the horse. Down the track came the gallant gray at about a 2.20 gait, and never swerving an inch, despite the glare of the lime, that glistened in the sun like a sea of placid water, he dashed across the lines, the inner wheel touching each of the twelve wires and causing a regular and indistinguishable clatter, and within those twelve cameras each part of his stride was fixed, that would conclusively show that the preconceived ideas of artists and horsemen were all wrong when based on the supposition that in that same stride two feet were never on the ground together. The negatives, as afterwards shown, are far clearer than can possibly be reproduced on paper. In the first picture the horse's head is under No. 8 on the board, of twenty-one inches showing the horse getting forward, until the fifth, when he almost exactly reproduces with a change of legs the previous movements, completing the stride in about 18 feet 1/2 inches. The first and second positions are pretty natural, one hind foot being on the ground; in the third he had one fore foot planted square in front, while the other is doubled up like the crossing of a letter T, in the fourth position the same leg assumes the form of the loop of the letter P, while the other fore foot and a hind foot are planted straight and square on the ground, producing a most musical if not absurd effect, and at the fifth position the half stride is made, and the remainder is but a repetition. Each of the twelve pictures is about half an inch in height and three-quarters in length, and so minutely is each delicate line shown that not only are the spokes of the wheel distinct in form and shape, but even the whip in the driver's hand takes shape, and the horse's mane changes also at each part of the trial. On examining carefully the footprints, it was shown that the fore legs are used mainly as props, the imprint being clearly defined, while those of the hind legs, both at the front and rear of the foot, were so vague and enlarged as to show clearly where the propulsive power mostly lay. It is impossible to state the astonishment that this most successful experiment caused in the minds of the spectators; but there was yet another surprise for them in the shape of photographing a horse at full gallop. To compass this there was necessarily a change in the proceedings, thread being stretched across the track connecting with each lens, through an ingenious contrivance that prevented any strain on the instruments. Then the noted mare Sallie Gardner was sent at full gallop against the frail obstructions, but dazed by the glare of the white lines, she hesitated a moment, then dashed on and made a bound again at the finish, thus presenting far from a perfect stride. But still she went fast, and her stride, 18 1/2 feet, was but little beneath her normal action. The negatives, however, presented the most incongruous attitudes that ever could be conceived by a disjointed imagination, and they are as unlike that fine flowing stride we usually so depicted in our racehorses as are the movements of a dilapidated marionette. And here again are the preconceived ideas at fault that the horse bounded, landing his feet in regular succession. But it will be well to reserve an opinion on this subject until further experiments are made. In any case the result was most successful, and it is difficult to state

The body of Ambrose Carney, the heavy-weight soldier-boxer, who was drowned by falling overboard from the steamer Quebec while proceeding with a party of excursionists to spend the Queen's birthday in Montreal, was recovered June 20, having been in the water nearly a month. His funeral took place on the 21st at Quebec, and is thus noticed by a local journal. The remains were interred in the afternoon with military honors and the most genuine expression of sympathy on the part of the general public, with whom deceased was a great favorite. The funeral cortege was one of the largest and most imposing seen here in many years. As an old member of B Battery, the commandant of the garrison and the officers and men of that body, as well as the officers of the military staff and Lt.-Col. Allyn and the officers and men of the Eighth Battalion, to which deceased formerly belonged, with a detachment of Canadian Hussars, turned out in uniform to pay the last tribute of respect to their lamented comrade-in-arms. The body was drawn on a gun-carrage, the coffin being draped with the Union Jack, and the pall-bearers were old associates of the deceased since his boyhood. The firing party was composed of men of the eighth Battalion, and the cortege proceeded to St. Patrick's Church, the band of the Eighth Battalion playing the Dead March. After a solemn funeral service in the church the procession reformed and accompanied the remains to St. Patrick's Cemetery, where the final military and religious duties were paid to them and they were interred.

AN UNEXPECTED DEBUT.

Here is a little story Sol Smith told. He was in Cincinnati, and the play "Othello." There was a crowded house, and among them a girl whom Sol called Peggy.

Peggy had never before seen the inside of a theatre. She entered at the time Othello was making his defence before the Duke and Senators. The audience were unusually attentive to the play, and Peggy was permitted to walk in the lobby until she arrived at the door of the stage-box, when a gentleman handed her in, and her beau, a country boy, was obliged to wait in the lobby. Miss Peggy stared about her for a moment, as if doubting whether she was in her proper place, till, casting her eyes on the stage, she observed several chairs unoccupied. It is probable this circumstance alone would not have induced her to take the step she did, but she observed the people on the stage appeared more at their ease than those upon whom she was standing, and much more sociable, and as fate would have it, just at that moment, Othello looked nearly towards the place where she was situated, exclaimed:

"Here comes the lady!" The senators half rose in the expectation of seeing the gentle Desdemona, when lo! the maiden from the country stepped from the box plump on the stage, and advanced towards the expecting Moor. The audience clapped and cheered, the duke and senators forgot their dignity, the girl was ready to sink with consternation, even Cooper himself could not help joining in the general mirth.

It was agreed by all present that a lady never made her debut on the stage with more eclat than Miss Peggy.

LANGUAGE OF THE GLOVE

Following is the new language of glove flirtation as devised in England:

Drop a glove—Yes
Crumple the glove in the right hand—No.
Half unglove the left hand—Indifference.
Tap the left shoulder with the gloves—Follow me.

Tap the chin with the gloves—I love you no longer.

Turn the gloves inside out—I hate you
Fold the glove neatly—I should like to be with you.

Put on the left glove leaving the thumb un-covered—Do you love me?

Drop both gloves—I love you.
Twirl the gloves around the fingers—Be careful; we are watched.

Slap the back of the hand with the gloves—I am vexed.

Take a glove in each hand and separate the hands—I am furious.

THE DEMAND FOR CATTLE

Good news for American stock breeders—the demand for live cattle by German and English farmers. Recently a ship load of Western cattle were landed in Teunburg, to be fattened on the rich pastures of Schleswig-Holstein. Relative prices of young stock there and in the country warrant the importation of these young lean cattle for the purpose. The more our attention is paid to stock farming, instead of such exclusive grain, and other production, the better will it be for farming. BEAR STORY.

"J. M." of Port Vernon, Muskoka sends the Hamilton Times the following bear story, for which he vouches, as well he may.

A brave man, who was not a Robin Hood but a mild-eyed inhabitant of the forest, while going through the bush to a neighbor's house, the other day, chanced to cross the path of three bears—Mrs. Brown and her two children. The forester was armed with a gun charged with buckshot, but thinking he had not ordnance enough for a pitched battle he ran to a neighbor's and got another weapon of larger calibre, also a ferocious looking bowie knife. He then marched back to the field of battle and found the two babes up in a tree, the old bear standing guard and confronting him about twenty five feet off. Victory shone upon him like a big sun flower, blood was in his eye, and with gun in each hand and the bowie knife between his teeth, his courage did not fail him. Oh, no. But his sympathy was suddenly excited for the poor mother, and the thought of his becoming a murderer and leaving two orphans to perish in the wilderness became too much for him, so he "ramosed"—taking care, however, to do so in double quick time.

HOW SHE HANDLED THE RATTLE SNAKE.

One day last week Miss Mary Fleishman, daughter of Perry Fleishman, living two miles east of Platte City, had a thrilling adventure with a rattlesnake. She was riding on horse back alone through the woods, when she dropped her glove. She dismounted to secure it, and as she was stooping to pick it up, she discovered a large rattlesnake, at least six feet long, coiled up and in the act of striking. It did strike, but failed to reach her, and fell at her feet. She sprang back with a cry of horror, but almost instantly the snake recoiled and struck again. This time the venomous fangs stuck in the front part of her bonnet, and the hold tearing out with the force of the blow and the weight of the snake, it fell on the ground at her feet. Instantly it reared up in front of her, its venomous breath right in her face. Scarcely knowing what she did, she seized the snake just below the head with both hands, and holding it for a moment, with desperate energy she slung it from her and fled. It was a narrow escape, but we are rejoiced to say that Miss Fleishman sustained no other injuries than those which result from violent excitement and nervous prostration.

But even then he would not give up and the first time after his arrival that a team went through he made a dash and passed alongside of the other horse, and plattered away up the real suvving triumphantly as he went. Mr. Wiggin having no longer any doubt as to where the runaway had gone drove on to Manchester as directly as he could go having from the horse occasionally all the way and arriving at Manchester there was, sure enough, in his old stall in the stable which he had left eighteen months before.

THE MODERN FACILE MINER

With dissipation will and a carelessness which waste of gold just passed off as a buckskin sack, under "yuck" and general devilry fill the Bret Harte picture. Eureka is a mining town of the genuine stamp. The boys go slow on flowing beards and red silk. Modern gray flannel is the prevailing style of the honest miner, and he is devilish particular about the cut of his moustache. It is true that the average Eurokian has a fine nose for fare, hence a poker, but the idea of blowing his brains out because he has lost a game of chance never entered the noddle of a base raider. Large quantities of whisky are consumed, and there is an occasional row and a black eye but a shooting scrape is a rarity, for the bearded miner, with all his picturesque recklessness, doesn't hanker any more after bullets in his carcass than the rest of mankind. During the past four weeks there has not been as many arrests on criminal charges as those for disturbing the peace merely. This, by a population of 6,000, is a pretty good record, and will stand a comparison with any town in the country—with even the most paternal village in New-England. PEDESTRIANISM UNDER WATER.

Perhaps the most remarkable pedestrian challenge ever made is that of Captain John T. Guire, a submarine diver of Cincinnati, who has proposed on a wager of $10,000, to walk under water on the bottom of the Ohio River, from Cincinnati to Cairo in the space of twenty five days. The distance is something over 200 hundred miles requiring him to walk over twenty miles a day. He stipulates that he is to have a flat accompany him, with an air pump to supply him with air, and moreover, to be allowed to come up as often as he likes, but the boat is to be stopped whenever he comes up so that he shall walk every foot of the way. Captain Guire achieved a good deal of reputation as a diver when the St. Louis Bridge was built, working unusual lengths of time in water seventy-five feet deep, and he has backers who will see that the money is put up.

A Bangor, Me., woman is thoroughly non-plussed. She had a little cherry rum refuse, which she threw into the yard. Her flock of turkeys devoured the stuff, and apparently died from its effects. She plucked the flock and threw the bodies into a heap on the grass. The following morning she found them walking about the yard in undress. It would be difficult to tell which was the most surprised, the woman or the turkeys.

It is stated by Dr. Cones, of the U. S. Survey, that a breed of solid hoofed pigs has apparently been established in Texas. The terminal phalanges of the toes are united to form a single broad phalanx, above this however, the other two phalanges of each of the two principal digits remain perfectly distinct. The hoof is perfectly solid, and on its sole there is a broad angular elevation of horny substance, which is curiously like the frog of the horse's hoof. The breed is so firmly established that no tendency to revert to the original and normal form is observable.

be the early bird that will catch the proverbial worm. By an early declaration of intentions, mutual benefits are likely to arise, and if no arrangements for circuits are entered into, the timely announcement of dates selected will have a tendency to prevent annoying, unseemly and disastrous clashing. Usually September is too prolific of events, and we would strongly urge on some clubs to occupy the vacant weeks in August. The horses at that time are usually idle, and their owners would be but too glad to commence the campaign a month sooner than has been the custom in Ontario.

THE AQUATIC FEVER.

The wonderful stimulus that one man can give to a popular sport is plainly seen in the case of Ed. Hanlan, the champion oarsman. A year ago single scull racing was, so far as the general public in Canada was concerned, a sport without an existence or habitation. True, local feelings had been excited by our young oarsman's victory at Philadelphia in 1876, but in July, 1877, the excitement had become almost dormant. The Hanlan-Ross Race of October last awakened the sympathy, and the Plaisted and Morris contests with our Canadian waterman aroused our people to enthusiasm. The second Ross race is still an incentive to this reviving action, and the contemplated trial of strength and skill between the sturdy Canadian and the Union Springs hero will still further excite the interest in aquatic matters. After Hanlan winning three fine events in about two weeks, finishing up at Cape Vincent, he crossed over to Kingston, and after taking in the sights and enjoying the hospitalities of that city, left for St. John, N.B., to get in shape to meet Wallace Ross on the 25th inst. He arrived at the "burned city" on Tuesday last, and immediately commenced preparations. Several regattas are spoken of in August and September, notably Montreal, Pembroke, Toronto, and Barrie, in which our champion will have a chance to show himself and increase his too limited bank account. Numerous minor matches are spoken of, but general interest is centered in the Hanlan-Courtney affair. A despatch from Auburn of the 9th, says that the American's backers have failed to bring about a match with Hanlan, and that Courtney will go to England. We have reason to think this intimation is premature, and that the men will come together this Fall. To show what value is attached to having this race take place in certain localities, we have understood there are two cities in Ontario who have each offered $2,000 if the affair would take place on its waters, and it is almost needless to say Toronto is not one of them. It may be as well right here to disabuse the public mind of the impression that Hanlan, and his friends, row his races just for the fun of the thing and the public's amusement. They, in common with all other people similarly engaged, look upon his matches as business affairs—matters of dollars and cents. This being the case it is doubtful if the Hanlan-Courtney race will take place in Canada at all, owing principally to the absence of pool-selling in this country, which would make investments not only small, but difficult in their accomplishment. Of course we would like to see the race on Toronto Bay, but the disability of no pools will be a great objection to its taking place here.

An American writer, in rather a one-sided manner, figures out that Hanlan is over two men who had never any particular connection with the running turf in the whole term of their existence—Messrs. Couley and Doble. They had the horses under their pay, leased the track, controlled the pool-selling, and pocketed the surplus, after managing the whole affair, it is presumable, to their personal satisfaction. If they could not make money out of it in this way, the attribute of cleverness which has been attached to them has been sadly misplaced. We venture to say there are a dozen horses in Canada that would have made a better showing with the Kentucky horse than did the Californian mare. It is now one of the things that are past, and the honest and conscientious turfman in future years will view with regret the indelible blot on this page of our racing chronicles. There is plenty of room to moralize on the injury that this race may do, but it is too self-evident.

As it said there are wheels within wheels; this event does not prove an exception to the rule. Late advices state that the horse was "dosed" with morphine, with the evident intention of giving Conley, Doble & Co, a grand double cross, but from some cause or other the narcotic did not take sufficient effect. The evil one is said to be good to his own, but in this instance he neglected the perpetrators of the poisoning act. It is possible the other party had stronger claims on his consideration, and his influence was felt on their side of the scale. And to make a suitable finish to the miserable farce, it is announced that Doble has purchased the mare at a consideration not made public, and that neither she nor the horse will take part in any future racing contests. It is more than likely that Doble owned or controlled the mare when the mock match was made, and 'tis well that the turf is no more to be disgraced by the appearance of either of the horses. It is too bad that the brigat escutcheon of Mollie McCarthy should be soiled by Kentucky mud; and it is to be regretted that the name of the great Kentucky "time-killer" should be disgraced with the record of such a race. A fraud like this has a tendency to destroy faith in racing, and the "great" four mile heat race for $10,000(?) has inflicted an injury on the Western turf for some time to come. It is hoped this is the last race of that character that ever will be forced on the good feeling of the American people.

RARUS—THE COMING HORSE.

If anything were required to show that Goldsmith Maid had a worthy successor, the evidence could be found in the recent performances of Rarus at Saginaw and Cincinnati. At the former place on June 26, he was started to beat 2:16, and trotted three heats in 2:17½, 2:16, 2:16½, three astonishing heats when it is considered that a gale was blowing up the homestretch. On Friday 28th ult., he gave an exhibition of speed and trotted a mile in 2:14½; going to the quarter in 34½ sec., and to the half in 1:07½. This does not form a record for him as there was no consideration at stake, but it goes to show the wonderful speed this horse possesses. It is a strong notice that the excelsior mark of the peerless queen, 2:14, will soon be rubbed out, and that by a horse of very uncertain lineage. At Cincinnati on July 4, he trotted a mile in 2:17, the second heat. When it is remembered that cases, and would help to raise the waning fortune of the turf in Ontario. There are plenty of good men in the Ambitious City from whom an exemplary list of Stewards could be selected. We wish Mr. Waddel much success in his new departure, and trust we may have the pleasure of announcing the dates of the Fall Meeting under the new regime in a short time.

A BACK-DOWN (?)

The Spirit of the Times, in speaking of Hanlan's refusal to row at Brockville if Courtney was nominated, says:—"Hanlan positively refused to row unless Courtney was barred, and the only apology offered by his friends for this square back-down is that he does not wish to row for $500, but is waiting to catch him for $20,000 or $30,000. A poor excuse is better than none." This is all very well, but we think if Hanlan and Courtney had both been entered at Brockville, neither of them would have started. $500 would not be an inducement for either of them to show up against the other. It was purely a matter for the Brockville Regatta Committee to consider. It was never thought for a moment that they would both put in an appearance. Hanlan did not wish Courtney barred, but simply stated if Courtney rowed he would not. The Committee then in their wisdom decided that Hanlan would be the greater attraction, and they consequently informed the American crack that he was not expected to take part in the contest. If there is a back-down in this we fail to see where it is.

Gray Cloud and Passion will go to the Saratoga summer meeting.

Mr. R. James, jr., is now located at Lachine, P. Q. He has six horses in his string—Winfield Scott, jr., Mozart, Matt. Whitbeck, Red Hot, John A., and Ida Lewis. He is working at the Fashion Course, Blue Bonnets.

The Chicago Times can see into the philosophy of things amazingly. Hear it: "Yale's rowing crew was badly defeated, and parents anxious to secure a careful and thorough education, their sons will see the importance of sending them elsewhere than to Yale."

The attempt of the New York Legislature to drive the great horse breeding interest of southern New York into New Jersey is succeeding admirably, and to the satisfaction of the intelligent Jerseyites. The late meeting at Long Branch was very successful, and in striking contract to the Jerome Park gathering. The difference was all caused by pool selling at Monmouth Park and its absence at Jerome.

Mayo Boy, owned by Mr. F. Gauhan, of Guelph, beat Mr. Bearish's Lady Price in a mile heat trotting race, at Norval, last week.

The attention of tourists is called to the Metropolitan Hotel, Pembroke, Ont., under the management of Col. Jones & Co. The house is not only metropolitan in name, but in all the word implies. Good fishing and shooting can be had at Pembroke all the year around, and the Metropolitan offers superior advantages to holiday seekers in these respects.

D. McNaught, V.S., of Seaforth, returned on the morning of the 27th ult., from Manitoba. He likes the country well, and as a proof of it he has taken up 320 acres of land, besides 1,200 acres which he had previously bought.

In the 2:45 race at Saginaw, Samp. Wilson, the driver of Kate Hall was taken out of his seat and Pat Davey (our Pat) put up. Pat handled her very well, but she had not speed enough to get to the front. The Spirit's correspondent calls him "a local Jehu."

Pools were sold openly at Montreal at the Summer meeting on the Fashion Course, Blue Bonnets. This early disregard of Mr. Blake's bill is strong evidence that its provisions do not agree with the public sentiment on racing affairs.

There are three running races at the Newark, N.Y., meeting, August 21, 22, 23. The first day half-mile heats, 3 in 5, $50; second day, mile heats, $75; third day, two-mile dash, $300. All catch weights.

TRAMP'S GOSSIP.

To Editor of Sporting Times.

SIR,—It appears that we have good jumpers in Canada. In your last is an account of three men jumping 6 ft. 4 in., at Belleville, which is rather too much to swallow.

I have not as yet seen any particulars of Mollie McCarthy's defeat, or any explanation of her being distanced in 8m. 19½ sec. She must either have broken down, been in season or overmatched, as she was in trouble long before the finish.

Our friend Courtney has (mirabile dictu) at length won a race without an accident of some sort. I suppose now Higgins, Hanlan and Trickett will all get "Hail Columbia." Elliott's friends have not forgotten him. He is to try Higgins again two matches for $1,000 a side, one race for one mile and the other for 1½ miles. $7,500 a side is also bet on the two races.

The 10-mile champion foot race was won by Smith, of Paisley, in 53m. 42 sec.

The total value of the Stakes run for at Ascot this year was $144,500 (exclusive of the Queen's Gold Vase), the most valuable stake being the Prince of Wales' Stakes, value $18,125; the lowest a plate of $700. There were 29 races in the 4 days. On the Thursday 7 races were run of the total value of $83,925. Fred Archer had 24 mounts and won 12. The Grand Prize of Paris seems to have been a very close thing—a case of heads among three; distance, 1 mile 7 furlongs; time, 8m. 22 sec.; weight, 12½ lbs. each.

Amongst the long list of horses for sale in the English papers, I notice a bay colt by Fervacques, dam by Maccaroni, bred in Spain.

The London correspondent of the Mail makes a sad mistake about the Prince of Wales' Stakes at Ascot. He calls it a handicap and says it is never won by horses of any fame or character. It is a race for three-year-olds, with penalties and allowances, and in the list of winners I find such names

NEWSPAPER DECISIONS.

1. Any person or persons who takes a paper regularly from a Post Office, whether directed in his name or another's, or whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for payment.
2. If a person orders his paper discontinued, he must pay all arrears, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and then collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.
3. The Courts have decided, that refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the Post Office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

AUTUMN AND FALL MEETINGS.

Although racing as a general thing has been very dull in Canada this spring, there are hopes that affairs will take a better turn in the Fall. To the absence of pool-selling may be attributed much of the dullness in racing circles, three or four of the leading associations in Ontario refusing to give meetings on account of the withdrawal of this support. The smaller clubs have not felt the result of this sumptuary law to any great extent, as their receipts from this source were never of much moment. Even the meetings that have been given have not had their programmes graced with any very magnificent prizes. The premium money as a rule has been light. Indications point to a number of meetings this Fall, and although it is not to be anticipated that the amount of money hung up will equal that of past years, still it is hoped that associations will be as liberal as circumstances will permit. The number of horses of different classes in the country is quite large, and the tree with the richest plums will have the greatest number of customers. Associations proposing to give meetings this Autumn and Fall should at once declare their dates. It will be found in many instances that it will graced by the appearance of either of the horses. It is too bad that the great escutcheon of Mollie McCarthy should be soiled by Kentucky mud; and it is to be regretted that the name of the great Kentucky "time-killer" should be disgraced with the record of such a race. A fraud like this has a tendency to destroy faith in racing, and the "great" four mile heat race for $10,000(?) has inflicted an injury on the Western turf for some time to come. At Cincinnati on July 4, he trotted a mile in 2:17, the second heat. When it is remembered that Chester Park, Cincinnati, where this trial took place, is a half-mile track, and is materially slower than a mile track for a long-gaited horse like Rarus, the merit of the performance will not be under estimated. There can be no doubt, even with a moderate degree of luck, that Rarus before the season closes will mark the lowest figures on the escutcheon of time with which it has yet been graced.

HAMILTON FALL MEETING.

Some time ago we published a report to the effect that the proprietor of the Hamilton Driving Park was about to dispose of that property for the purpose of agriculture. Since then we are pleased to learn that it is his intention to improve the track and grounds, and to throw them open to subscribers. It is also proposed to have a Fall Meeting in the latter part of September or early in October, and it will be conducted in the same popular manner as were the races during the earlier years of the Park. The plan adopted then was to select the Stewards from amongst the subscribers to the Park—gentlemen who had no object to serve other than to carry on the sport in an honorable and popular manner. The buildings and fences are to be thoroughly repaired, and the driving track placed in tip-top order and kept in that condition. The grand stand will be partitioned off, the best portion being set apart for the exclusive use of subscribers and their families. A portion of the enclosure will also be fenced off for the use of such of the subscribers as may prefer to remain in their carriages to taking seats in the stand. If this system should be carried out, the Fall Meeting would be an assured succession. Several regattas are spoken of in August and September, notably Montreal, Pembroke, Toronto, and Barrie, in which our champion will have a chance to show himself and increase his too limited bank account. Numerous minor matches are spoken of, but general interest is centered in the Hanlan-Courtney affair. A despatch from Auburn of the 9th, says that the American's backers have failed to bring about a match with Hanlan, and that Courtney will go to England. THE FOUR-MILE HEAT RACE.

The race between Ten Broeck and Mollie McCarthy is over, and the horse is credited with the victory—an empty one so far as reputation is concerned. It would have been much better for Harper and Winters in their characters as racing men if the race had never taken place. The interests of the turf would have been better conserved if the four-mile heat race between Ten Broeck and Mollie McCarthy had no claim to be indited on its registers. The result and later information go to show that the whole affair was a hippodrome affair for the sole purpose of realizing the gate money. The race was conceived and the business manipulated by

The Port Perry mare, Jessie Hoitt, won the 3:00 race at Batavia, N. Y., last week, from a field of eight starters. Three straight heats did the business, 2:34, 2:34, 2:39½. On Thursday she captured the 2:50 class at the same place from a field of seven. The winning money was $250 in each case.

At the races at Chester Park, Cincinnati, on July 4, Rarus trotted a second heat in 2:17.

The Ottawa, Ont., Citizen, in a big heading over the telegraph report of the Ten Broeck and Mollie McCarthy Race, describes it as the great four mile trot. Well, it was not so far wrong if it formed its opinion of the character of the race from the time.

By order of the Watertown, N. Y., River Park Association, the following horses have been suspended for non-payment of entrance money: Thos. Love, Montreal, P. Q., and the bay mare Fanny L.; P. T. Collett, Ogdensburg, N. Y., and the brown horse Claret (runner).

At the Batavia, N. Y., races last week, Mr. W. Slack, of Oshawa, who was there with Jessie Hoitt and Frank Ross, was put up behind the Blue Mare in the 2:28 class. Her chances were thought to be infinitesimal before Slack got up, but he landed her a win-

Sec'y., Exeter.—1. Warrior, upon your statement, had no right to start in the second heat; Prince Edward is entitled to third money. 2. Rule 24 says, "Horses not bringing out the weight shown before the race or within one pound of it, shall be disqualified from winning the race;" and Rule 46 says, "In running the best of heats, horses disqualified for winning are to be held as distanced." These rules govern the case in question, and it is clear she could be distanced. 3. RACING AT ORANGEVILLE.

ORANGEVILLE, July 1, '78.
 Below I give the entry list and result of our races on Dominion Day, which were the most satisfactory that have ever taken place here, having the best horses in the district and being the most closely contested. The absence of pools caused a marked quietness on the grounds, and the attendance was comparatively small on that account as well as the hot weather. The track was in splendid condition and the horses were all in fine trim. Capt. Boston had an easy victory in the first race, having never once been beaten in either heat; the others kept tolerably well together. Boston has just finished his season's services, and has had no training, but with proper tuition would make it hot for the 3:00 fellows. In the running Mary W. was the favorite of the day, and would have won in straight heats, but for a "bolt" in the second; as it was she was only half a neck behind. The event of the day was the 2:40 trot, which was red hot. Gen. Beamish had the pole, with Honest Billy in third place. The latter trotted the three heats with scarcely a skip and won easily; he was never headed in either heat. In the second heat he was fully a distance ahead coming to the three quarter pole. It was a close race between the others.

the following tone.—"May we be permitted to suggest that no man, poor or rich, who bets on races can be 'robbed?' The man who bets is trying to obtain somebody else's money without earning it. If, instead of obtaining somebody else's money in that way, the somebody else obtains his money, so much the worse for him; but it is no more robbery if he loses than if he wins."

AMATEURS AT THE OAR.

RACE AT HANLAN'S POINT.

The second race for the gold medal (the silver and bronze medals having been won on the 29th ult.), took place at Hanlan's Point on Saturday last. The attendance was quite large. There were eight entries. Messrs. Johnny Landon and Tom Tinning acted as starter and judge. E. Dyer won easily; Robt. Rennardson, the winner of the last race, second; and Ramsay third. Dyer will have to win the medal again before it becomes his individual property.

After the usual race, Samuel Couch and Thomas Carr rowed a half-mile race on Block-house bay for a small stake. The first attempt, after a game struggle, resulted in a dead heat. On rowing over again, Carr won by a short length, owing mainly to Couch's peculiar steering.

THE BOSTON REGATTA.

FRENCH JOHNSTON BEATS MORRIS.

Fully 20,000 people witnessed the regatta on July 4, under the auspices of the city of Boston, Mass., on the Charles River. In the single sculls, three miles, Franchy Johnston, the colored oarsman, beat Evan Morris with ease, Lynch third, Lane fourth, Driscoll fifth; time, 21:42. In the double scull race, three miles, Rutley and Butler won, McTatney and Hosmer second; time, 22:06 and 22:09. In the pair oared race, three miles, Ellis and Gilbert Ward made the racing with John Biglin and Mahoney, Conwell and O Erin, of Portland, and Casey Brothers. The Wards won, the Portland pair second; time, 20:35 and 20:59. The working boat race, four miles, after half a mile struggle, settled down to the Chelsea crew, Lakeman No. 1, and the West End Four. Evan Morris was in the Lakeman boat, and Gil Ward in the West End. Lakeman won in 27:15, Chelsea second, 27:24, West End third, 27:25. The Faulkner-Regan, Mahoney-Biglin, and Longshore crews started in the four oared shell race, four miles. Faulkner's crew won in 27:18. Mahoney-Biglin 27:32, the Portland four distanced.

THE CAPE VINCENT REGATTA.

HANLAN AGAIN TO THE FRONT.

The citizens of Cape Vincent celebrated Independence Day, July 4, by a single scull regatta in which Hanlan and McKen of Toronto, Plaisted of Boston, and Kennedy of Portland took part, for purses of $200, $100 and $50 to the first, second and third respectively. The course was very good in the St. Lawrence river and was two miles in length. The attendance was about 6,000. About 5:30 the steam yacht Carlton, of Kingston, which was placed at the disposal of the officers of the race by Col. Hanco, left the wharf with the judges and reporters on board, and proceeded to the starting point. The course was from a buoy off Buckley's dock to a buoy two miles down the river and return. At 6:15 the word "Go" was given. Hanlan's position was next shore, Kennedy second, McKen next and Plaisted on the outside. They got off well together. Hanlan soon drew ahead, followed closely by Plaisted, McKen and Kennedy, keeping close to each other. Hanlan turned the buoy first, followed about ten seconds later by Plaisted, McKen and Kennedy following close and turning almost simultaneously. Hanlan in the early part of the home stretch opened a long gap, and then appeared to be taking it easy. Plaisted was leading McKen and Kennedy a considerable distance, but slackened his speed, and waited for McKen and Kennedy to come up. There was a hard struggle between the two latter for third position. The winning buoy was

RILEY, LUTHER AND MCKEN.

The following letter from the referee in the late Regatta at Brockville has been placed in our hands for publication. It is difficult, from the contents of the communication, to learn on what grounds the decision was arrived at. However, we give it pure and simple:

BROCKVILLE, July 5, 1878.
 MR. MACPHERSON—Sir—All bets were declared off on the last three men, Riley, Luther and McKen.
 Yours truly,
 Geo. Reid.

SPASHES.

It is proposed to give a single scull race open to all at Pembroke Ont., in August or September. The preliminary arrangements, we have understood, are in the hands of Col. Jones and Mr. A. B. Macdonald, of the Metropolitan Hotel.

The backers of Warren Smith, of Halifax, have received a reply from Wallace Ross to the effect that, pending his race with Hanlan on the 25th, Smith's challenge will have to lay over for a short time.

At Brockville, Mr. Meeker, of Boston, offered to arrange a match on behalf of Courtney with Hanlan for $5,000 a side. Mr. D. S. Booth was prepared to put up a $1,000 forfeit on Hanlan's part, but the Courtney representative wished to name the course and the time of rowing as well as conditioning how the deposits should be made. Under these circumstances the match ended in wind, which termination was probably anticipated by Mr Meeker when he made the proposal.

A match between Billy McKen, of Toronto, and Davis, of Portland, Me. (who was here with Plaisted), is talked about. McKen wants to make it for $500 a side.

Ross is working steadily for his race with Hanlan on the 25th, and is said to be in much better condition than when he met Hanlan before. The betting is 3 to 1 and 4 to 1 on Hanlan, at which rate very little business will be done.

Hencky, of Wolfe Island, near Kingston, is said to be negotiating a match with Elliott, of Toronto, for two hundred dollars a side. Hencky is looked upon as a promising novice.

At a meeting of the Halifax Rowing Association, held on July 3, it was decided to challenge Plaisted, of Boston, to row a scull race with Warren Smith on Bedford Basin within a month, for $500 a side, distance three miles.

Hamilton has made a proposal to give $2,000 if the Hanlan-Courtney race was rowed on Burlington Bay.

Amusements.

This is the last week of the season of the Lyceum Theatre. Business has been so far good, but the heated term and outside attractions have had a rather depressing effect. The house will remain closed till some time in September, when the regular winter season will be commenced. In the meantime various improvements will be made in the auditorium and on the stage. The matinee and evening entertainments to-morrow will be the final ones of the present season—the success of which has been up to the anticipations of the proprietors of this temple of Momus.

Next Monday and Tuesday Mr. W. C. Coup's "Bran New" Show—the Equocarriculum—will exhibit on the Grenville street lot. This is not a circus, but a senate of trained animals and a galaxy of popular specialty stars. The leading attractions are the wonderful Broncho Horses and the monster Octopus—Victor Hugo's Devil Fish. The whole entertainment is novel and pleasing in the extreme, and is totally void of any objectionable or dangerous features. Every body should see the extraordinary training of the wonderful Bronchos. No such exhibition of equine intelligence has ever been witnessed before.

GENERAL.

MONTREAL.—Count Patrizio, the famous conjurer, commenced a short season at neck behind. The event of the day was the 240 trot, which was red hot. Gen. Beamish had the pole, with Honest Billy in third place. The latter trotted the three heats with scarcely a skip and won easily; he was never headed in either heat. In the second heat he was fully a distance ahead coming to the three quarter pole. It was a close race between the others.

HANLAN AND ROSS.

The St. John, N.B., News, in speaking of this match, which will be rowed on the Kennebecasis on the 25th inst., says:—"A correspondent condemns in strong language the course of Ross' backers in making a race between Wallace and Hanlan to be rowed here. He claims that their conduct will rob poor people who will bet on Ross, who, he says, 'has proved himself unable to row one side of Hanlan.' The News has more than once explained the position of Ross' backers. They made the race only for the purpose of satisfying Ross as to which is the better oarsman. They ask no one to bet a dollar on Ross against Hanlan, Ross' own opinion is that he will have no difficulty in showing the people of St. John that he was not beaten on his merits at Toronto, and that he will win a magnificent victory over Hanlan on the 25th of July."

To which the Hamilton Times replies in making a race with a man on the side. Hanley is looked upon as a promising novice.

At a meeting of the Halifax Rowing Association, held on July 3, it was decided to challenge Plaisted, of Boston, to row a scull race with Warren Smith on Bedford Basin within a month, for $500 a side, distance three miles.

Hamilton has made a proposal to give $2,000 if the Hanlan Courtney race will be rowed on Burlington Bay.

The citizens of Cape Vincent celebrated Independence Day, July 4, by a single scull regatta in which Hanlan and McKen of Toronto, Plaisted of Boston, and Kennedy of Portland took part, for purses of $200, $100 and $50 to the first, second and third respectively. At 6:15 the word "Go" was given. Hanlan's position was next shore, Kennedy second, McKen next and Plaisted on the outside. They got off well together. Hanlan soon drew ahead, followed closely by Plaisted, McKen and Kennedy, keeping close to each other. Hanlan tacked the buoy first, followed about ten seconds later by Plaisted, McKen and Kennedy following close and turning almost simultaneously. Hanlan in the early part of the home stretch opened a long gap, and then appeared to be taking it easy. Plaisted was leading McKen and Kennedy a considerable distance, but slacked his speed, and waited for McKen and Kennedy to come up. There was a hard struggle between the two latter for third position. The winning buoy was passed as follows:—Hanlan first, by about three lengths; Plaisted second, by about the same distance, Kennedy third, by a little over a length; McKen last. Winner's time about 33 minutes. Mr. Scholtes, of Toronto, acted as judge for Hanlan and McKen; Mr. Meeker, of Boston, for Kennedy and Plaisted; A Elliott, of Toronto, judge at the turning.

PROPOSED REGATTA AT MONTREAL.

The Montreal Gazette says:—The Lachine Regatta, and that which was subsequently held at Longueuil, can hardly be dim in the memory of our city, and why not inaugurate another of the same, say for the first week in October, by offering a prize of $1,500 for an all comers' sculling race, in which Courtney of Saratoga, Hanlan of Toronto, Trickett of Australia, and Higgins and others of London, might compete? A race for collegians might also be had, in which might be induced to compete some of the American Collegiate oarsmen, while a prize for green oarsmen would induce some of our local men to enter, and certainly would give rowing an impetus that might before long find in Montreal first-class men.

THE WORLD'S CHAMPIONSHIP.

Mr. Spofforth, bowler of the Australian cricket team, at present in England, has delivered a message to Mr. Bush from Trickett the present Champion of the World, and Mr. Punch, his chief supporter. It is to the effect that Trickett is willing to make the journey to England to row anybody for the Championship of the World and $500 a side, provided that he is allowed £150 as expenses. Mr. Bush has informed us that he will accept the challenge, and will back Higgins to row Trickett a the understanding that the race shall come off not later than the summer of 1879. We hope shortly to have to announce the ratification of the match. Sporting Life.

At a meeting of the Halifax Rowing Association, held on July 3, it was decided to challenge Plaisted, of Boston, to row a scull race with Warren Smith on Bedford Basin within a month, for $500 a side, distance three miles.

Hamilton has made a proposal to give $2,000 if the Hanlan Courtney race will be rowed on Burlington Bay.

This is the last week of the season of the Lyceum Theatre. Business has been so far good, but the heated term and outside attractions have had a rather depressing effect. The house will remain closed till some time in September, when the regular winter season will be commenced. In the meantime various improvements will be made in the auditorium and on the stage. The matinee and evening entertainments to-morrow will be the final ones of the present season—the success of which has been up to the anticipations of the proprietors of this temple of Momus.

Next Monday and Tuesday Mr. W. C. Coup's "Bran New" Show—the Equescurriculum—will exhibit on the Grenville street lot. This is not a circus, but a senate of trained animals and a galaxy of popular specialty stars. The leading attractions are the wonderful Broncho Horses and the monster Octopus—Victor Hugo's Devil Fish. The whole entertainment is novel and pleasing in the extreme, and is totally void of any objectionable or dangerous features. Every body should see the extraordinary training of the wonderful Bronchos. No such exhibition of equine intelligence has ever been witnessed before.

Poetry.

Written for the Sporting Times.
TO "ROSE."

The spark that thou didst kindle in my breast
Has burst into a sweet and joyous flame,
And in a breath more precious than the rest,
I love to breathe thy pure and holy name;
The tender light that shines from out thine eye,
Brighter than before, each day it seems,
And as the hours of slumber draw to nigh,
I close mine eyes to see thee in my dreams.

And whilst I linger near, thy sunny smile,
Doth serve to aid the fire within my heart;
Among the beautiful flowers beside the Nile
Grows none as pure or guiltless as thou art.
The summer of thy life is in its bloom,
Its balmy air doth softly waft thy cheek,
Thine heart within its mortal tomb,
Its language in thy loving smiles doth speak.

That breath as sweet as opening flowers,
That oft so gently fanned my brow,
Those whispered words in lovers' bowers,
In fancy's mind returneth now.

Oh life would be a worthless word
If thou couldst not be always near,
If thy sweet voice could not be heard,
Thy loving smiles my pathway cheer.

THE GAME OF LIFE—A HOMILY.

BY JOHN G. SAKE.

There's a game much liked in fashion—I think It's called Euchre, (Though I never have played it, for pleasure or lucre),
In which, when the cards are in certain conditions,
The players appear to have changed their positions,
And one of them cries, in a confident tone—
"I think I may venture to go it alone!"

While watching the game, 'tis a whim of the bard's,
A moral to draw from that skirmish of cards,
And a fancy he finds in the trivial strife
Some excellent hints for the battle of Life,
Where—whether the prize be a ribbon or throne,
The winner is he who can "go it alone!"

When great Galileo proclaimed that the world,
In a regular orbit was ceaselessly whirled,
And got—not a convert—for all of his pains,
But only derision and prison and chains,
"It moves, for all that!" was his answering tone,
For he knew, like the earth, he could "go it alone!"

When Kepler, with intellect piercing afar,
Discovered the laws of each planet and star,
And doctors, who ought to have lauded his name,
Derided his learning and blackened his fame,
"I can wait!" he replied, "till the truth you shall own!"
For he felt in his heart he could "go it alone."

Alas! for the player who idly depends,
In the struggle for life, upon kindred or friends;
Whatever the value of blessings like these,
They never atone for inglorious ease,
Nor comfort the coward who finds; with a groan,
That his crutches have left him to "go it
alone!"

There's something, no doubt, in the hand you may hold—
Health, family, culture, wit, beauty and gold;
The fortunate owner may fairly regard
As each in its way, a most excellent card;
Yet the game may be lost, with all these for your own,
Unless you've the courage to "go it alone!"

In battle or business, what ever the game,
In law or in love, it is ever the same:
In the struggle for power, or the scramble for pelf,
Let this be your motto—"Rely on yourself!"
For whether the prize be a ribbon or throne,

It is a singular coincidence that whenever there is a pigeon-shoot or a horse-trot in the vicinity, the notices on the doors indicate that all the lawyers are out of town trying cases, or else in the Superior Court Library.

Mr. Thomas McBurney, publican, has the credit of wearing the handsomest beard in New York. It is three feet long, two feet wide, and very soft and silky. Upon being interviewed on the subject of beards Mr. McB. said he thought his beard would have been six feet long by this time if he had kept it "tucked under his shirt."

Mary Belle Loy, a Kansas girl fourteen years old, who was watching sheep, discovered a very large coyote wolf sneaking up towards her flock. She gave chase, ran him down, and disabled him. Then armed with a very dull knife, she and another girl killed him and took his scalp, for which the county paid them a royalty. That kind of girl is worth writing about.

While a man named William Joseph, of Ackley, La., was drying his head with a towel, the other day, he rubbed off every particle of hair. Then his eyebrows fell out, his moustache followed, and finally his beard dropped off. In an hour his head and face were as hairless as an egg, and no cause for his affliction can be discovered.

A large dead shark was washed ashore at San Francisco, in whose stomach was discovered a man's leg, the foot of which was enclosed in a heavy shoe with a copper toe. This copper toe had cut the lining of the fish's stomach and resulted in its death. The Prevention of Cruelty Society have a warrant out for the arrest of the man. It is time this putting up of jobs on inoffensive sharks was stopped.

The four gamblers who ran a swindling game in Cincinnati were no good judges of men. Otherwise they would not have tried to intimidate Capt. Whitten, who is six feet in height, broad shouldered, and with a face expressive of a constant desire to fight. They told him that he had lost sixty dollars more than he had put on the bunko board, and that he could not quit the room until he had paid the money. "Oh, can't I, indeed!" he said, knocking one gambler down and banging two others' heads together so violently that they were stunned. The fourth prudently refrained from any attempt to hinder the Captain's departure.

SAMUEL KEARNEY was physically the best man in Mendota, Illinois. His strength and endurance were remarkable, and his powers gained for him the office of constable. Mrs. Sheehan, a young widow, was almost equally famous as an athlete. These two were coupled in courtship and the appropriateness of their pairing seemed clear; yet it led to a fearful tragedy. Kearney was overbearing in his conduct, and one day he attempted, playfully at first, to compel Mrs. Sheehan to sit in a chair. She resisted, and the athletic lovers were soon engaged in an angry struggle. Kearney was unable to overcome the powerful woman by fair means and, in a frenzy of rage, he shot at her, chased her out of the house, and killed her with a knife. Then he committed suicide.

A CURIOSITY.—A Port Sarnia reporter was shown, one day last week, a fine specimen of the Silver Eel, the only one yet taken that side of the Niagara Falls. It measures about three feet in length and five inches around. Mr. Walter Slocum, of Sarnia, captured the stranger, which was done in a seine on the morning of Thursday last. Mr. S. in fishing on the lake shore about two miles above Point Edward, and he, with his crew, was at a loss to discover the tribe to which his prisoner belonged; in fact, they handled his eelship with great caution, until they arrived at Port Huron, where they found out what it really was. Mr. Knill, of Krill & Co., Druggists, Port Huron, has the eel in his aquarium, and it is visited by large crowds daily.

CATTLE DISEASE IN MANITOBA.—A serious local outbreak of a peculiar cattle disease has taken place at St. Andrews. The Winnipeg Free Press says:—It is estimated that cows and oxen to the value of $700 have already been lost. An animal attacked succumbs within twenty-four hours, and there have been no cases of recovery as yet. A Referees at a boxing exhibition notice the fall of a sparrer.

Mr. Harrison Stephens has offered to give the City of Montreal a herd of deer for the mountain park.

George IV. used to travel from London to Brighton, a distance of fifty-six miles, by a coach-and-four, in four hours and a half.

Mr. A. P. Miller, of Norwich, recently caught a speckled trout in a neighboring stream, 28 inches long, weighing four pounds.

A large bald eagle, which has made its home on Lockhart's Island, Lake Shore, Malden, for 20 years, has now a nest of two young ones.

It is asserted by narrow-minded critics that after a policeman has been sworn about 15,000 times, he begins to forget the difference between a Bible and a city directory.

A New York Star reporter has made the alarming discovery that ladies of the highest society in that city put thick veils over their faces and play desperately at taro in the gambling hells.

The tallest baby story yet is this Cairo (Ill.) special to the Cincinnati Commercial: "There is a lady living at Fort Jefferson who recently gave birth to triplets. Two of them are as white as the mother, and one is as black as any negro."

Many anecdotes are told of the late John Morrissey, ex-prize fighter, Senator, etc. He was on board an excursion boat last summer when a woman lost or was robbed of seventy-three dollars. As soon as the circumstances were known, Morrissey took out a $20 bill and turning to his companions said, "Chip in gentlemen," and in five minutes the woman had her purse refilled.

The Winnipeg Free Press says:—It is estimated that cows and oxen to the value of $700 have already been lost. An animal attacked succumbs within twenty-four hours, and there have been no cases of recovery as yet. A post mortem examination shows the chest all bloodshot, and the heart, lungs, pericardium, and epiphragm in the same condition, the latter having a coating of gelatinous matter. The animal, when stricken, droops its head, and appears stiff in the fore legs. It is supposed the disease has been introduced by imported stock.

A NEW DEADHEAD DEVICE.—In Paris, France, during the summer, theatres are deserted in fair weather, and only fill up when the rain drives the people in from the Boulevards. A Parisian journalist has an original notion for filling a house with deadheads. There is a kind of chemically prepared paper, which changes color with damp. When it is fine weather this paper blue, when wet it turns to pink. He prints free admission on this paper, and put at the foot this notice: "This ticket is only available if the paper is blue. If it be pink, it will be refused." A funny story is told of a party of expectant theatre-goers, who, dressed in their evening best, have the ticket on the table, watching it as it gradually changes from blue to pink.
