Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is reconstruction of cribwork 1,800 cubic yards to be done by contract. The estimated cost is $13,900. It serves a community on the St. Lawrence with a population of five hundred or six hundred inhabitants, and with quite a large tourist travel in the summer.

Item agreed to.

Cap de la Madeleine—wharf extension and improvement, $65,600.

Mr. ROGERS: There is a very large increase, something like $3,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Cap de la Madeleine is an important point and this expenditure is required to provide for contract with Trepanier, for the construction of a freight shed 120 feet long by 60 feet wide, amounting to $9,000. This amount will clear up this part of the work undertaken under the vote of last year.

Mr. ROGERS: Has it been all completed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not yet. It is under contract.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think this was in the supplementary estimates of last year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think so.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Who is the contractor?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is no contract now. Tenders have been invited again The work was not gone on with last year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is that not sad, because I understood the minister to say a moment ago that it took $9,000 to complete the contract with regard to the freight shed.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is what I said. That was the freight shed. The repairs to the wharf not having beeen made, we could not proceed with the freight shed.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Who has the contract for the freight shed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is no contract at the present time. We could not proceed with the freight shed and the contractor has been relieved of his contract.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There was a contract and it has been abandoned because it was unworkable?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What money has been spent under this vote?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The money spent was $4,191.77.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: At what time was that work commenced last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In August.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: And stopped when?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the date of the stopping of the work. I know there was a conflict between the contractors for the improvements and the contractor for the freight shed, and the latter found he would have to abandon it and did abandon it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was the date of the abandonment?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the information here.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: At any rate, this work for which authority was given in the supplementary estimates, was a matter of urgency; something had to be done and it was started last August. Did the work stop until after October? Was the work going on in October? I think the emergency is over now. I do not think there is any work going on at the present time, but I was wondering when the work was stopped. Was it the 2nd of November?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It would not be stopped as sharply as the 29th of October. I think it went on to the week after, probably till November 5.

Mr. ROGERS: Guy Fawkes day.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As I explained to my hon. friend a few minutes ago, the only expenditure last year was $4,191.77. There was a contract entered into for a shed construction, but it was not found convenient for the contractor to proceed with that work, and the contract has been cancelled and new tenders are being asked for. It is proposed not only to build a shed but to extend the wharf. It is a very important structure.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Can my hon. friend tell me who got the $4,000 odd?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It went largely for labour, I think. O. and J. Poliquin were the contractors for the wharf improvements.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When did they start and when did they stop working? That is what I particularly want to find out. I think the work was kept up until the 5th of November.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They completed the work they had in hand, and the contract was closed out.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What work could they have had in hand?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The repairs to the wharf.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Repairs are always in order, Mr. Chairman, whether they are political repairs or wharf repairs or anything else. I congratulate my hon. friend on the happy way in which these things synchronized.

Item agreed to.

Chandler—wharf reconstruction and extension, $90,000.

Mr. ROGERS: When did this item first appear?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Last year in the supplementaries. There is a contract with Messrs. Farley and Grant, for the replacement of a section of the wharf carried away by a storm in 1920, by an extension 367 feet long, the first 105 feet to be 22 feet wide, the next 62 feet widening out to 40 feet, and the headblock 200 feet long by 40 feet wide. Chandler is a point on the St. Lawrence where there has been a large expenditure and much development in the pulp and paper industry. Once this structure is repaired and put into shape, the industry will be in a position to ship by water, an advantage which has been denied to it to date.

Mr. ROGERS: What amount was spent last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Practically nothing was spent last year. The contract was let in November.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There must have been an oversight that time. Is my hon. friend sure that this contract was not let till November?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is not a political department, but the Public Works department.

Mr. ROGERS: It was let rather late in the season.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was the date it was advertised in the local papers?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I suppose it would probably be in the latter part of October. The advertising usually takes three or four weeks.

Sir HENRYL DRAYTON: Just how many weeks was this large work advertised?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The order in council was passed on November 13, 1925.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How many weeks was this large contract advertised?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): About three weeks.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Am I right when I say it was advertised in October?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It might have been the latter part of October.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does not my hon. friend know it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the date.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will not my hon. friend agree with me that it was advertised at a very, very convenient season? If he cannot agree with me, I am afraid I shall have to ask him for the facts, and I think I have them. When does my hon. friend say the advertisement took place?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the date of the advertisement, but the advertising would take about three weeks, which would bring it to the latter part of October when this work was advertised. The order in council was passed on November 13, and the contract entered into on December 15, 1925.

Item agreed to.

Father Point—wharf repairs and improvements, $17,000.

Mr. ROGERS: This is a large sum. I would like some information on this item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to complete the contract with Messrs. Cloutier and Gaudreau for repairs and improvements to wharf. There was spent last year $17,432.94. The order in council was passed on August 20, 1925.

Item agreed to.

Grosse Isle—wharf repairs, $9,900.

Mr. ROGERS: What about this?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to reconstruct the upper 5 feet of 180 feet of the approach, to repair and support the inner end on the west side by the construction of a concrete wharf 100 feet long, and to repair the stairway and effect minor repairs to the headblock. As my hon. friend knows, this is the quarantine station in the mouth of the St. Lawrence, which is largely used by the departments of Health and Immigration.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers generally—repairs and improvements, $75,000.

Mr. ROGERS: I hope the minister will give us a complete statement as to this item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount of $75,000 is required for general repairs and improvements to harbour and river works in the province of Quebec, which are under the control of this department. This vote is for unforeseen or small expenses that are not placed in the estimates as separate items. They are works recommended by the engineers, varying in cost from $125 to $800. Last year there was spent under this vote $74,496.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend will not require so much this year; there is no election in sight.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is a certain amount of work that will have to be done.

Mr. ROGERS: We would like a detailed statement.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I could not give a list of all the items, because that will not be known until the end of the year, but the expenditures proposed at the present time are as follows:

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will the minister tell us how he managed to apportion the payments under that item last year? What works were commenced in August, what works were commenced in September, what works were commenced in October, and what works were abandoned in November?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the date of the commencement of the work or the date of completion. These small matters are entirely in the hands of the engineering branch, and the work is done from time to time as occasion arises.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, but my hon. friend surely knows what the department is paying out. These things are generally kept paid up pretty well, or were things so much mixed up at the time of the election that we cannot get any particulars at all?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am prepared to give my hon. friend a detailed statement. If he wants that detailed statement placed on Hansard I have no objection to it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have not asked for such a lot of information. What work did he give instructions for in September and October—we will drop off the August work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend is familiar with the practice of the department and the practice generally. We secured our money about July 1st last year, I think, and recommendations were made from time to time by the engineering department as to expenditures in different localities. Certain moneys were apportioned and expenditures made. I have not the dates but I imagine that most of the work was done in August, September, October and November; the other months would not be suitable.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose my hon. friend cannot do any better. I am sorry that he cannot, but we will have to let it go.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think that is fair.

Mr. JACOBS: Surely my hon. friend does not suggest that there was any relation between the expenditures for public works and the elections?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend will have observed that I am merely eliciting facts and that the facts synchronize, that is all.

Mr. JACOBS: A happy coincidence.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Of course it would be a happy coincidence. I entirely agree with the hon. gentleman that all these things are happy coincidences; the significant thing is that they all coincided with a certain event. Of course the ending was not quite as happy as my hon. friend thinks. It is rather melancholy sometimes in its operation against the Conservative party and also in its operation against the interests of the Canadian rate payers.

Item agreed to.

Malbaie—wharf repairs, $8,000.

Mr. ROGERS: What is this expenditure for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): To repair the damage done to the wharf by storms in November, 1925, by enlarging the approach with a reinforcing addition 210 feet long by 10 feet wide of round timber openfaced cribwork and by replacing 500 cubic yards of ballast. The work is under contract. Last year the expenditure was $1,492.35.

Mr. ROGERS: When was this contract let?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The contract has not been let as yet.

Item agreed to.

Maria—wharf reconstruction, $11,500.

Mr. ROGERS: There was $9,000 voted for this work last year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, part of this is a re-vote.

Mr. ROGERS: Give us the particulars of the proposed expenditure.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is intended to complete the contract with P. Nadeau & Sons for the removal and reconstruction upon a height of 4 feet 10 inches of a portion of the superstructure of the wharf. The amount of the contract is $12,885.12.

Mr. ROGERS: When was the contract let?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): On November 21, 1925.

Mr. ROGERS: There has been great delay in carrying it out.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): You cannot do very much work after the 1st of November.

Mr. ROGERS: You had the whole of last year.

Item agreed to.

Matane—to complete harbour improvements, Hammermill Paper Co., Erie, Penn., contributing, $100,000 $55,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Here is an old friend. Is work still being taken from our artisans in that district?

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The work will be completed this year. There is a re-vote of $55,000 which will carry on the construction and complete the work. In regard to the development there the House has been advised before that the Hammermill Paper Co. are contributing $100,000 towards this development.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is for their own development.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Difficulties have been encountered in carrying out the work, but it is hoped to clean it up this year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is true that the Hammermill Company are contributing $100,000, but the work is absolutely for their own benefit and not for the benefit of anybody else. How much is the government contributing in order to round out the plans of the Hammermill Paper Co. and furnish facilities for them?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The estimated cost according to the department will be $165,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Even accepting that figure the expenditure is going up. We were told last year that this was an emergency vote and that is why it appeared in the supplementaries. Let us see whether I am right or not. If I am wrong I will apologize to the minister.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The matter has been before the House on previous occasions.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does my hon. friend say this was a supplementary vote last year or not?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think it was in the main estimates. I have not last year's estimates before me but that is my recollection.

Mr. ROGERS: What amount did you spend on this work last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The amount spent last year was $84,997.

Mr. MANION: What did the whole vote of last year amount to?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It amounted to $140,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have got last year's estimates and I cannot find this item there. The minister has the deputy in front of him and the deputy should know a great deal more about this than any other member of the House. I want to know whether this was an emergency vote in the supplementaries last year, or whether it came under the general vote?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am not sure but I know this, and my hon. friend knows it too: The Matane proposals have been before parliament for some two or three years. There was no emergency vote last year because we were committed to this expenditure and parliament voted $140,000. Whether the item appeared in the main estimates or in the supplementaries I am not sure.

Mr. ROGERS: And the sum of $84,000 has been spent.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The sum of $84,997 has been spent.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The usual explanation of a supplementary vote is that it is to cover something which has turned up after the main estimates have been brought down. The minister does not know whether this item was in the supplementary estimates last year or not. I think it was considered an emergency matter having regard to the estimates of last year. On what date was the contract let?

4 p.m.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There were two contracts. The St. John Dry Dock Company had a dredging contract last year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the date?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): November 3, 1924. Then there is a contract for wharf reconstruction entered into on November 13, 1925. There was a construction contract under date of August 27, 1923.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Of course the minister knows we are asking him for contracts given under the emergency vote of last year, not for past history.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There was no emergency vote. A contract was let on April 4, 1923 to Messrs. Dussault and Company of Quebec for dredging. That contract was continued until that fall when the contract was cancelled and a new one entered into with the St. John Dry Dock Company.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Another contract with the St. John Dry Dock Company?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No; they took over the other contract.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was the idea of the vote of $140,000 because apparently we have no contract under it at all.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Apparently I have not made myself plain. We entered into this contract with the St. John Dry Dock Company on the surrender of the other contract in the fall of 1923 and they worked in 1924 and 1925. Then the contract for the pier was on August 1, 1923. In the winter of 1924 or the following spring an ice shove disturbed a portion of the work undertaken and we asked last year for a further sum. Probably that is the explanation why it came up in the supplementaries.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Let me see if I have this tale of anguish aright. I will not give the contracts in the order in which my hon. friend gives them; I will give them in the order of date. The first contract my hon. friend mentioned is that of April 4, 1923. The second is dated August 27, 1923. The third contract he gives is in the autumn of 1923 which is really a substitution for the contract of April 4, 1923. This is with the St. John Dry Dock Company. The next he gives is November 3, 1924 and the next November 13, 1925. There was one that seemed to be loose, running around unconnected, dated August 1, 1923.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That was on August 27, 1923. A contract was awarded to Boulanger and Boulanger of Montmagny.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is that the contract of August 1?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am giving the date of the order in council authorising the contract.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is that in the list already given?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then we have the ice storm which interferes with all these numerous activities and contractors. That ice storm comes in the winter of 1924, does it not?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The winter of 1924-25.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then my hon. friend brings down a vote of $140,000 in the supplementary estimates of last year. Is that right?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The contract of November 13, 1925 would be under that vote. Were any other contracts entered into under that vote?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Probably this will give some light to my hon. friend. We had $100,000 from the Hammermill people. That was in the hands of the Finance department, but the Auditor General insisted, and properly so, that parliament should vote the money required for this work, and we asked for $140,000 last year, making available their money which had been paid.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is that right, or is the vote right? As it reads, the vote is to supplement a contribution of $100,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is wrong, is it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We had to vote the contribution as well as what we spent ourselves. I gave the amount the department spent last year. The total expenditure is to be $160,000 odd.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: $165,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I believe so.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is the work finished yet?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No; it is hoped to finish it this year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: And we have already spent $165,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No; that is the estimated cost.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I wonder whether the minister's recollection is good enough to enable him to tell us whether in the first instance we were not told that the whole thing would be covered by $100,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Oh, no.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister says definitely that is not so.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Absolutely.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then he would contradict Hansard?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, I would not contradict Hansard; I could not very well. But I know that when the matter was discussed in 1923 or 1924 the House was fully advised that the Hammermill people were going to make a contribution of $100,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is not the question. Is the minister's memory sufficiently good to enable him to tell us whether or not it was represented to the House in the first place that the whole of the cost would be $100,000 at most?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Anyway, how is my hon. friend getting on with the governmental policy of shipping all of our raw resources out as quickly and as cheaply as possible? Will this American firm that came from Erie, Pennsylvania, be helped to export our raw materials, which they have been able to collect, in the chepaest way possible and over the wharf we built? When will they be able to complete that programme?

Sir EUGENE FISET: My hon. friend knows that Price Brothers are operating there now, cutting 15,000,000 feet of lumber a year and shipping it directly from the port. It would be only fair for him to make that statement.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is labouring under a strange delusion if he thinks that there is any analogy between an American manufacturer operating in Canada and one operating in the United States. He seems to think it is immaterial whether the workmen employed in manufacturing our own raw material are engaged in the United States or in Canada. The mills of Price Brothers are here and they manufacture here, but I understand that the Hammermill plant is in the United States. I was asking the minister a simple question. I want to know what progress the government has made in its policy of making easy the demolition of our natural resources and the shipment of them to facilitate the work of American manufacturers?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The hon. gentleman has not put the matter fairly. Matane is one of the harbours on the north shore—

An hon. MEMBER: The south shore.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The south shore.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If the minister's story is no more correct than his geography—

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is no mistake about the story. Price Brothers have been carrying on business for years and they were anxious for the purposes of development to have this work done. It is true that we were requested to provide the facilities but we considered it only fair that the people who were so largely interested should do something in the way of co-operation. This is the first time the Public Works department has got $100,000 from any firm to build any structure.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know about that, but it is the first time certainly that the government has ever put up $165,000 to help an American firm take business from our own railway and ship our own raw material out of the country to be manufactured in the United States. This enterprise takes all the belts, cups, records and everything else as a precedent. It is a political wharf from the beginning, but it is one of the most insane political ventures I know of. The American firm came over to get our pulpwood, desiring to have it manufactured in Erie. Of course they did not want to pay freight so they persuaded the government to dig into the treasury and build a wharf to enable them to ship the material by water, thus avoiding freight charges. And they are enabled to get our raw material out all the faster and cheaper as a result of accommodation afforded them by the government, out of the money of the Canadian people. Of course there were other objects that were served incidentally. I understand that the son of the late member for the district was made inspector. I do not know what the government is doing now for the late member himself, I have not heard. Has he received a job on the wharf since he lost the nomination or the election? He lost something, I do not know what it was, but I should not be surprised if the wharf lost him the nomination. Anyway, has the government taken care of him, or will it put him on the Indian service like Mr. Sexsmith? What is to be done about Pelletier?

Mr. JACOBS: He is not provided for in the Public Works estimate.

Mr. DIONNE: As the representative for Matane I know this wharf very well, and I can assure the committee that it serves not only the Hammermill Company and Price Brothers but various schooners that ply between Matane and Quebec and Gaspe. It also accommodates the people on the north shore; the Ontario Pulp and Paper Company and other concerns operating timber limits make use of it, and it provides a shelter for vessels coming from Quebec or going up from Gaspe in stormy weather. Most of the money has been spent and this vote is necessary to complete the work. It is one of the most important public works which the department has carried out in my constituency, and I have no doubt that the public will approve of the expenditure.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I congratulate the hon. member (Mr. Dionne) on what, so far as I can recall, is his maiden speech in the House. Certainly it was couched in splendid English. I am sorry, however, that the hon. gentleman could not exhibit his powers in a nobler cause. It is true that any wharf, wherever it may be built, will serve purposes subsidiary to the main object for which it was built. I do not doubt some boats sail across the river but, as everybody knows, they could not be in any real sense commercial boats. These boats make use of the wharf, and I suppose boats could be found to make use of any wharf in the world. And if a boat were caught in a storm it would naturally pull in to the wharf. But that would be true no matter where you built a wharf. I suppose also this wharf serves as a shelter and shade for the fishes in the district. All these things can be said of this particular wharf. But the great central fact remains that it was built to help the Hammermill Paper Company take our raw material out of Canada to their mill in Erie. That was the purpose for which it was built, as everyone knows, and because on the completion of it other people made use of it is no justification for spending such a large sum of money on a structure the main purpose of which is injurious to the country and even to the district from which the hon. member comes. The main purpose served by that wharf is harmful to the district, even though certain people for whom the wharf was not originally intended are accommodated. If we are bound to have our pulpwood shipped out of the country, if we are bound to furnish material for American workmen, for goodness' sake let the people who want to profit thereby provide their own facilities. After they do put them up there will be shelter all right for all sorts of men and animals in that district; it will serve the purpose just as well. But there is no reason why we ought to put up money to help get our pulpwood out and reduce the revenues of the National Railways. I have not got an answer yet to what was done about young Pelletier. Is he still on the job?

Mr. DIONNE: He has got no job.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My right hon. friend is hardly fair. He would lead the House to believe that the Hammermill company alone will receive the benefit of this construction. That is not so. There are some 3,500 inhabitants at Matane who will participate. There has been a harbour there for years.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This vote is to provide proper facilities.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where is it built in relation to the Hammermill company? Right at the company's plant?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is not for the Hammermill company alone. Price Brothers manufacture fifteen million feet of lumber there. Outside of the two large concerns there are five or six lumber mills with a total output of 10,000,000 feet. That is an industry in itself. These smaller mills may not count in the mind of my right hon. friend, but they are there and they require better facilities. The Hammermill company have put up $100,000 and we have put up $165,000. The whole community will have better facilities. The Hammermill company are operating as other people are in this country who own their own lands. If leasehold they could not export, but they have bought these lands, and therefore have the right to export. There is undoubtedly necessity for this development, and personally I think we have made a pretty good arrangement in getting $100,000 from the Hammermill company for the benefits they will receive.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister has dodged the question as to whether this wharf is not right beside the Hammermill company's plant.

Mr. JACOBS: Assuming it is, and the public are using it, what difference does it make, particularly when the Hammermill company are putting up $100,000?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The use the public will make of it is trifling. The public got on all right before.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This work is not tributary to the Hammermill company any more than it is to Price Brothers; as a matter of fact it is nearer Price Brothers' plant.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I had a deputation come to me about it. They told me the work is right beside the Hammermill plant. The harbour was allowed to go to pieces. I suppose it was put in shape before the election?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As I explained to the House, an ice shove disturbed the works, which I believe have been repaired.

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When is the work going to be finished?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend's expectation is that export can go on this year?

Mr. ROGERS: The minister has not yet made it clear to me. He says the cost of the work is $165,000 and that we spent $84,000 last year. If that is the case, the $55,000 now requested will not pay the bill.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I advised the House that the total estimated expenditure was $265,000—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh no. $165,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): —of which the Hammermill company will pay $100,000. It is necessary for us to vote the $265,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where are we voting the $265,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We vote it from year to year. This item has been before the House for the last three years.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then all I can say is my hon. friend is getting light as he goes along.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am trying to give light.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, he is getting light. I am quite sure he did not intend to mislead us when he said $165,,000 had to be voted. Now we are told the whole cost is $265,000, and instead of the company putting up the major part of it the country is doing so in order to enable the Hammermill people to export.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Mr. Chairman, there was no misunderstanding because I read the statement which I have before me. Perhaps my hon. friend did not hear me correctly. The estimated total cost is $265,000. There is a contribution from the Hammermill company of $100,000, and the estimated cost to the department is $165,000. That is the information I conveyed.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am very glad to hear that. I really do my best to follow what my hon. friend says, but he has an uncomfortable way of admiring his toes when he is talking, and I confess I did not get all he said.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am sorry.

Item agreed to.

Nicolet—repairs to jetty, $17,400.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is for repairs. The work is under contract to Messrs. Page & Page.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the total cost?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The amount of the contract is $15,750. We had tenders from four competing firms, the lowest was that of Page & Page, $15,750, and the highest $19,016.

Mr. ROGERS: There was a vote of $13,300 last year. You did not go on with it, did you?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, it is a revote. Only $412.64 was spent last year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was the contract let?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The order in council was passed January 21, 1926.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was the contract advertised?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): November or December—it would be late.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I doubt that very much. Does my hon. friend say he issued any advertisements after the election until that time? The country understood the government was not functioning. The government pretended it was not functioning.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am advised that tenders were due October 21 last. No contract was let until January.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That sounds very much more reasonable. I was quite sure those advertisements were issued before the election; we know it now.

Item agreed to.

Norton Creek—dredging, $5,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the idea of dredging a creek?

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): To make it deeper.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to continue certain excavations that were started in 1912 and 1913. They were suspended during the war. About 17,000 cubic yards will be removed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where is it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In the district of Chateauguay-Huntingdon.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is it by contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, day labour.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the member for the riding prefer the day labour method?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am not so sure.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would point out to my hon. friend that this is a case where there ought to be a contract, the amount being $5,000. Or was it considered more convenient before the election to have a lot of people employed by day labour? Would that be it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This construction was undertaken away back in 1912-13. I find that at that time the work done by day labour amounted to $4,470. In 1913-14, 4,200 cubic yards were excavated at a cost of $4,491.78, done by day labour. In 1914-15, 5,972 cubic yards were excavated at a cost of $4,987.42, the total expenditure being $13,949.49. It was considered advisable at that time that the work should be done by day labour, and the same plan is followed this year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: You take it by vote, so much a year. I do not observe that we got up to $5,000 any time during that period. Am I right?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the estimates for all the period, but we find that in the year 1914 it was $4,987.42, pretty near the mark. The chances are that we will not spend the full $5,000 this year, but that is the amount asked.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was asking as to what we did with it last year. How much dredging was done last year, and how many men were employed last September and October?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend is wrong about that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend delights in ancient history to-day, telling us what happened in 1912-13, but he fails to give details of what happened in the year 1925, under his administration. What did he do in September and October last year under this vote?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think the best justification for this expenditure in the minds of my hon. friends would be that they undertook the work when they were in office. I think that would satisfy them, and that is why I referred to it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh no.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): And the fact that it was done by day labour would indicate that the government were following the practice which the engineers thought was good practice. There was no expenditure last year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Nothing was done last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Are you sure about that?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What an awful oversight. How did that happen? I do not think you have been properly advised? Are you sure you did not get a lot of good work in under the general vote?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, we did not.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Do you think that because we dredged one year we must always go on dredging? How is it necessary that dredging done one year must be done the next year? My hon. friend goes back to 1912—

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The work was not completed.

Mr. JACOBS: Perhaps silting takes place all the time.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this a silting stream?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. JACOBS: You know that in every doubtful county there is dredging during an election.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is right.

Mr. JACOBS: You ought to know, as well as the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers).

Item agreed to.

Notre Dame de Pierreville—wharf, $13,500.

Mr. ROGERS: This is a revote. It was in the estimates last year and nothing was done. Can the minister give us any explanation why nothing was done last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is one of those items that we have from year to year. Plans were prepared and tenders were called for, but the season had passed and it went over till the next year, and we are revoting the money.

Mr. ROGERS: What are the details?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): An order in council was passed on the 21st October 1925, accepting the tender of J. J. Collins of Trois Rivieres. There were seven tenders and the figures vary from $9,385 to $18,080.53.

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This was also in the supplementaries of last year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It would be.

Mr. ROGERS: You are asking for $500 more this year than last year. Have you an estimate of the cost of the work down as fine as that?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is the estimated cost, $13,500.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Here is another illustration of how things can be done. This item stands out as a startling corroboration of the statement of the hon. member for Cartier. He shows that he is not only frank but veracious—not voracious but veracious. We have a beautiful illustration of what happened in connection with the matter last year. We have this vote brought down in the supplementaries, and this matter is arranged carefully, properly and regularly. They are pretty clever in the Public Works department, and in the ordinary course it is dangled before the electors that this project is going on, and the contract let, and when the campaign is roaring the fiercest, and the war with Turkey is imminent, we see in all the local papers the statement that this work is to be given out and labourers will be employed. We have the contract let on the 21st of October, and then of course it takes a little time before anything can be done. All the good political work, if my hon. friend will look at it, is accomplished, and we have the vote again this year.

Mr. JACOBS: Do you suggest that during election no work could be done at all? You know the maxim that the King's government must go on.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: You miss the point: You say the work must go on, but the King's government was at a standstill for some period. It has been resuscitated I admit, but we will not go into the operation of resuscitation. There was, however, a time of suspended animation. You will notice that while everything was done to favourably impress the voters as to what was going to be done, not one single thing was done. Contracts were advertised and let but nothing else was done.

Item agreed to.

Paspebiac—wharf repairs, $5,500.

Mr. ROGERS: This is a new item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, wharf repairs. This is to rebuild the superstructure of the landing wharf, estimated cost $5,500.

Mr. ROGERS: Has any work been done?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. ROGERS: The minister did not give us the necessity for it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is an important village in the county of Bonaventure, with a population of 5,000, employed largely in farming and fishing. The tonnage using this wharf last year was 4,643 tons of sea going vessels and 21,247 of coastwise and inland vessels.

Item agreed to.

Petite Riviere Romaine—to recoup the Paint River Oxide Company for repairing public wharf, $7,525.08.

Mr. ROGERS: Would the minister explain this item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is required to reimburse the Paint River Oxide Company who performed urgent repairs to a public wharf under the instructions and supervision of this department. The vouchers and the work have been duly certified by the district engineer.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What riding is this in?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It was found that there had been settlement of the ballast and that the wharf was not usable. The company that was using the wharf suggested that they do the repairing.

Mr. MANION: This has nothing to do with the peroxide people we hear so much about.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, this is a red mixture. It was necessary to make these repairs in order that the company could carry on their work. The work was done under our direction, and this is to recoup them.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds) When was this work done?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In the latter part of the summer, about August.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): When was it completed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the date here, but I imagine within a few weeks.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I wonder if the minister has an order in council dealing with this matter? Is this a new precedent altogether? Personally, I cannot ever recollect this course of action having been followed before. Is this making history, and if it is making history, in what riding were we making history?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is in the riding of Charlevoix-Saguenay.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is the chief whip's riding.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I never asked for this work, and I know nothing about it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How impossible! I wonder how on earth it was that the chief whip had nothing to do with this. If this has taken place under the chief whip's nose without his knowing anything about it, I think we ought to strike the item out. I am sure the chief whip is against it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Anything that has been done in this matter, was done before I came to be the member for the district. I have not had an opportunity even to see the place yet. I have never seen this wharf at all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Apparently the chief whip can plead a successful alibi, and we will accept it. Who was the sitting member that got this new history made?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Representations were made to us that the wharf had settled, and that they could not make shipments over it. It was essential that the work should be done, and the company did the work, and we are now proposing to recoup them. The work was done under our supervision. There is nothing very unusual about it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think my hon. friend is doing himself justice when he says there is nothing unusual in this. We have hundreds of items in these estimates, Mr. Chairman, but you will search in vain to find another one like this, and if you go through the estimates of last year you will not find another one like it. Will my hon. friend tell me, on sober reflection, that this is being done in the usual way? If he will, I am content to take his answer, but I do not think he had better.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I did not say it was usual. This work was unexpected.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend said that this was the usual course.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I said that there was nothing very unusual about it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is only partly unusual?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It was a work of necessity.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will my hon. friend tell me now who the happy member is that gets this new departure?

Mr. CASGRAIN: As I said before, I have not asked for this, and I do not know anything about it. It is in what was known as the riding of Chicoutimi-Saguenay and the sitting member for that riding was Doctor Savard. The riding is now Charlevoix-Saguenay.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would not seek to charge my hon. friend with any complicity in this at all. I am very glad to know that he is clear this time. Is this our property or the property of the company?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is our property.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was the date of this order in council which permitted this company to make repairs upon our property, and under what terms were they allowed to do that work? Will my hon. friend read the order in council? It would not be long.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I understand that there is no order in council regarding these repairs. It was reported to us that in order that they could make their shipments, repairs to the wharf were necessary, and the company undertook to make the repairs and take their chance of having parliament pass an appropriation.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Now we are getting at the real situation. There was no order in council. There is no authority for this work. The simple position is that a company that wanted this work done for the purpose of looking after its business spends this money, and my hon. friend now proposes to recoup them. It is a very nice way, Mr. Chairman, for the department to spend money without any permission of parliament. It is a very serious back-door method of carrying on the country's business. If that were done generally, we could make up all our estimates ex post facto, and all we would need to do then would be to vote the money to cover expenditures on works that the ministry had permitted their friends to do, work done by favoured companies of the ministry, who were allowed to make improvements or repairs to public property, and then come around afterwards, without the slightest prior justification from this House authorizing the expenditure, and expect this House to repay them. This is done so irregularly, Mr. Chairman, that there is not even an order in council. I wonder if there is any correspondence in connection with this matter? The very least we can have is the production of all the correspondence which has anything whatever to do with this very extraordinary item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is nothing very extraordinary about it. I have tried to give a review of the facts very simply and very plainly. Owing to the fact that the ballast had considerably settled and that the earth surface had been partly washed by the waves, the wharf had become impassable, and in order to render it useful it was necessary to add some ballast stone, about 1,000 cubic yards, and to replace the earth surface by a wooden flooring.

Regarding the commercial necessity for this work, it is reported to me that the farmers and lumbermen of the locality were waiting for these repairs to the wharf to be effected to load and ship about 5,000 cords of pulpwood, and the Paint River Oxide Company were ready to ship, as soon as the wharf was made passable, from 5,000 to 6,000 tons of their ore in crude state. There was no appropriation for this work, and as the amount was too large to charge against the general appropriation the engineering department recommended that the Paint River Oxide Company be requested to make repairs under the supervision of the district engineer, provided they were willing to wait until a vote to recoup them was passed by parliament. The company have taken that chance, but if parliament does not see fit to recoup them for the expenditure which they properly made in order that they might carry on their business on property owned by the government, there is no objection to cutting the item out; but to say that there have been any backdoor methods whatever in bringing this vote before parliament is unfair. The item is here for discussion. As I have already stated it was too large a sum to take from our general vote; we do not spend large sums from that vote. Here was a company proposing to get their products to the market. They were informed that we had no item in our estimates for the facilities required. It was only natural for the company then to say: It is your property and we will do the work under your supervision if you will pass a vote in parliament to recoup us for the expenditure. That is all there is in the transaction.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Has my hon. friend anything showing the undertaking of the government to do this? How did the government come to undertake it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): On the advice of the chief engineer.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was the form of the undertaking in connection with this expenditure?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The department agreed with the company that if they would carry out the work under our supervision and control we would submit a vote to parliament in the belief that parliament would vote the money.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Has my hon. friend the agreement with him?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps we can get the agreement.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is no formal agreement.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Was there correspondence in which the matter is set out and which will show us what the situation is?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I imagine there would be correspondence but I have not got it here.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think we should have that correspondence before we establish this new precedent.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It was done on the chief engineer's recommendation.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: As there is no formal agreement we cannot assign a date to the undertaking?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When did the work commence?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The date of the engineer's report is August, 1925.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will my hon. friend produce the correspondence?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, I will bring it down.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then we will leave this item over.

Mr. MEIGHEN: When was the work finished?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I really do not know. I imagine it was within a few weeks.

Mr. MANION: May I ask the minister how long previous to that there had been any expenditure of money on this wharf?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The government took this wharf over in November, 1924.

Mr. MANION: Up to that time whose wharf was it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It belonged to the paint company at that time.

Mr. ROGERS: The same company?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the date of the transfer by the company?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The order in council was passed on November 17th, 1924.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend will withdraw the item surely?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. MANION: Does anybody else use that wharf besides this paint company?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MANION: Who?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is used by the inhabitants there.

Mr. MANION: Who are the inhabitants?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I read that a moment ago.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There cannot be very many; the member never saw them.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): When these repairs are effected farmers and others will draw about 5,000 cords of pulpwood to this point. The Paint River Oxide Company will also ship from five to six thousand tons of ore when the wharf is completed.

Mr. MANION: What kind of agreement did the government make in taking over this wharf in 1924?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We took over the wharf in November, purchasing it from the company.

Mr. MANION: For how much?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): For $18,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Good Lord!

Mr. MANION: When was that estimate passed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It was passed in 1924.

Mr. MANION: You say you took it over in November, 1924. In that case it may have been passed in 1925?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am not sure. It would be in 1925, I imagine.

Mr. ROGERS: When was the payment of $18,000 made?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I should think it appeared in the estimates of 1925 but I do not have them here. The order authorizing the purchase was passed in November, 1924.

Mr. MANION: Has the minister the history of this wharf, can he say when it was built by this company?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That information would be in the department. I have not got it here. I would be very glad to bring down all the papers.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have the estimates for 1925 and I do not see the item there.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will be glad to look the matter up and furnish the desired information. In the meantime we will let the item stand.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think the minister will agree that the committee should get full particulars of this item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Let it stand.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend will really be wiser if he drops it now, I think.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When I hear "no, no" I have no doubt that there are some gentlemen behind the minister that are particularly interested in this. I cannot understand anyone who is not particularly interested being desirous of putting through a vote of this character.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will be glad to have the item stand until I get full information. I think the House will be fully informed with respect to this item.

Item stands.

Pointe au Pic (Murray Bay)—wharf repairs, $9,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What county is this in?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Charlevoix-Saguenay.

Mr. ROGERS: This is for a wharf down in Murray Bay?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. It is to repair the damage done to the west side of the wharf by storm in 1924. This is an important port in Murray Bay.

Mr. ROGERS: You had $15,000 in the estimates last year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. We spent $14,986.

Mr. ROGERS: When was that spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It was spent last year, in 1925-26.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): Will the $9,000 complete the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. There is a re-vote of $1,000.

Mr. ROGERS: What was the original estimate of the cost of this work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The structure is a large one and repairs have been made to it from year to year; it is one of the largest wharves on the St. Lawrence. The total expenditure on it up to March, 1925, was $139,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN: This expenditure is amply justified. This is one of the largest ports below Quebec. I think the leader of the opposition has been there and has seen the place. I remember one occasion when he happened to be there and observed the activities which were going on. There will be a good return for every dollar spent. The government receives wharfage dues, and there is a considerable export of pulpwood and other products. The vessels of the Canada Steamship line call at the port daily.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was not disputing the necessity of keeping up the wharf there. I just marvelled though that the government would buy another wharf for $18,000 in the hon. member's county, especially one that is no good, and then pay the people from whom they bought it seven thousand more to put it in shape for their own use.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I do not know anything about it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is what I marvel at. I hope the hon. member has not neglected the rest of his riding in the same way.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I am not neglecting my riding. I am talking about the part with which I am more familiar. I do not happen to know this part as well.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We accept my hon. friend's alibi in connection with that, but he scented the trouble at once and he was taking to cover.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Hon. members should not put into my mouth things I did not say. I am not taking to cover, but I do not want to be held responsible before the House and the country for recommending something I do not know anything about.

Item agreed to.

Point Basse—wharf improvements, $2,500.

Mr. ROGERS: This is a new item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is required to drive protection pile work along the inside face of the wharf for a length of 150 feet. The estimated cost is $2,500.

Item agreed to.

Rimouski—wharf repairs, $5,100.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would this not be a good opportunity for the hon. member for the riding (Sir Eugene Fiset) to make a speech?

Item agreed to.

Rivière du Loup (en haut)—dredging, $54,000.

Mr. ROGERS: This is a new item and a large expenditure. Will the minister explain it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is required to complete the dredging of a channel in Rivière du Loup commenced in 1925-26 under contract with the National Dock and Dredging Corporation from deep water in lake St. Peter to the government wharf at Louiseville or Rivière du Loup en haut. It is proposed to remove 76,484 cubic yards at 35 cents per yard.

Mr. ROGERS: When was the contract let?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): An order in council was passed last year in August and this is to complete the work. A new contract is being let for this work.

Mr. ROGERS: Was any money spent last year and if so, how much?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am sorry I have not the information of the amount of work done last year.

Mr. ROGERS: Did the minister have a vote for similar work last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ROGERS: How much was the vote?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I understand from my deputy that the money that was expended was from the general vote last year.

Mr. ROGERS: What general vote?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The dredging vote for Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. MEIGHEN: A general vote was used to start a work which now requires a special vote of $54,000? The order in council I understand was passed in the month of August of last year. Was this order in council, under which the government without any authority from parliament commenced at that point work which is committing the country to an expenditure for which we have an item of $54,000, passed about the same date as that of the Richmond Hill speech?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My right hon. friend is entirely mistaken. It is just as well to forget the election of last year. This had nothing to do with it. This is an important point on the St. Lawrence river and it is very necessary that this work should be done. It is an important lumbering point. The exports consist of about 15,000,000 feet B.M. of lumber, 9,000 cords of pulpwood, 8,000 cords of slab and 3,000,000 feet of laths. The total tonnage of general merchandise of all kinds exported is about 20,000 tons, consisting of hay, cheese, butter, honey, raw hides, meat, cattle, maple sugar, manufactured products, etc. The St. Lawrence Paper Mills are operating at that point. As regards taking money from the general vote for this work, there is nothing unusual in that.

Mr. ROGERS: Just a moment ago the minister told us that he had an order in council covering the work of last year. Will he give us the date?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The order in council of last year was passed on the 20th August, 1925, granting authority to accept the tender of the National Dock and Dredging Company of Quebec. They did not finish their contract. I have not the amount of work they did. They were in there until November.

Mr. MANION: What date was the contract let?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The order in council was passed in August.

Mr. MANION: That was taking up the contract.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That was the order in council authorizing the contract. I have not the date of the contract before me.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was the amount of the contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $26,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And nothing voted?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There was the general vote.

Mr. ROGERS: What were the reasons given in the order in council for the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The necessary dredging for navigation purposes.

Mr. ROGERS: Would the minister be good enough to read the order in council?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not have it with me.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We shall have to ask for the order in council to be brought down.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have no objection.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am not speaking about the merits of the work because I do not know anything about it; but this is another case where we have an extraordinary departure from ordinary principles and it is absolutely necessary to have the order in council produced. This is a departure from ordinary principles because the memory of this committee is not so short as not to recollect the statement of the minister in connection with a paint company; it was to be left to look after repairs amounting to $7,000 in connection with a public wharf because the item was too big. At the same time we have the statement made that the same vote, the general vote, is made use of for the purpose of supporting a liability of $26,000. This is new. The minister shakes his head. There is no question about the facts. Unless my hon. friend is entirely mistaken in what he has told the committee, the usual rule which is well known is that a new contract cannot and ought not to be entered into until this House has first supplied funds for the purpose of carrying out that contract. One of the first things the Auditor General has to see is the certificate of the vote and all that sort of thing. All that is forgotten for some reason which perhaps we shall be able to get from the order in council. In connection with this contract it was necessary to disregard all the usual safeguards with which the public treasury is surrounded. The minister ought to bring down not only the order in council but all other papers having regard to this particular transaction, correspondence and so on, particulars as to when the work started, how much was paid last year and the like.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is no objection at all to bringing down the order in council and other information. This is a natural transaction in the department. Rivière du Loup is an important point. In order that navigation might be proceeded with at that point the department entered into a contract for certain dredging. It is hoped to complete the work this year and we are asking parliament for a certain sum.

Mr. MANION: I know something about the locality having visited it. Where is the dredging being done? The wharf at Rivière du Loup is a very fine one extending away out into the St. Lawrence. Is the dredging at the wharf or up the river?

Mr. GERVAIS: Last year a contract was let for the dredging of about 50,000 cubic yards but the contractor did not complete the work. On October 15, I believe, the Tourville Lumber Company was sold to the St. Lawrence Lumber Company and I ascertained in an interview with one of the proprietors of the Tourville concern that the St. Lawrence company had asked for more dredging to be done because they intended operating on a larger scale. I suppose the contract has been increased owing to the demand of the company for greater accommodation. There is regular steamship communication between Montreal, Berthier and Louiseville twice a week and all the traffic, which is considerable, is carried by water. I have received correspondence in connection with the subject and I can assure the committee that the dredging is necessary.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The committee will be grateful for the information the hon. member has volunteered. I observe his activity in the matter and he is no doubt gratified at the success of his efforts. I have no doubt he will produce this evening the correspondence to which he has referred.

Mr. GERVAIS: The company asked for further dredging in view of the fact that they intended operating on a larger scale the business taken over from the Tourville Lumber Company, and the facts are all set out in the correspondence that passed between the business men interested in the matter, the St. Lawrence and the Tourville Companies, and myself. I know nothing about the order in council, but I will allow the hon. gentleman to look into this private correspondence if he cares to do so. The option was accepted on October 15 last and the dredging was begun during the month of November.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think the hon. gentleman is a bit ashamed of the correspondence, but I can see that some of his friends are afraid of it They do not want it produced; they regard it as something in the nature of gunpowder.

Some hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Hon. gentlemen roar at the suggestion that the correspondence be produced, but surely there is nothing private about public business, and any representations made to the minister should be open to parliament. The house has a right to know on what grounds the member for the district was able to arrange this matter. If the hon. member (Mr. Gervais) does not want to produce the correspondence dealing with the subject—it is not private correspondence—that is a matter for himself, and I shall be content to accept his refusal. However, I think he has a better appreciation of his position and of the duty he owes the public than have some of his friends.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, the item is not carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Notwithstanding insistent shouts of "carried" from hon. gentlemen from Quebec, the item is not going through at present. We can discuss it all over again if hon. gentlemen are so ignorant of the proper, legal, honest way of carrying on the business of the country as to rush through an item of this kind before the committee has been given adequate information regarding it. It seems to me the course of action in this case has been extraordinary. I need hardly observe that it is one of the principles of our form of government that no public funds shall be spent, nor shall any credit be extended, except by a vote of the House. I am sure hon. gentlemen, bearing that in mind, will refrain from shouts of "carried" when they discover that a contract for $26,000 was let without the attention of parliament being called to the matter. This is something that calls for an explanation. Surely hon. gentlemen opposite will demand that explanation. Or are they so convinced that the whole thing has been improperly carried out that it will not stand ventilation? If that is their fear they will again call "carried", but if they think that parliament has a right to get at the facts they will demand that an explanation be given.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I take exception to that statement. It is all right for my hon. friend to fill Hansard with that kind of material, but nothing has been done in this matter contrary to the usual practice that has always obtained in the department.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: You are wrong.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We vote certain sums of money every year for dredging in the Maritime provinces. in Quebec, in Ontario and elsewhere and contracts are let for certain work. These contracts are advertised in the public press and tenders are received; the matter then goes before council and the contract is awarded. Why make any mystery out of it?

Mr. MANION: Is the contract let before parliament passes upon it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No; we vote so much money for dredging in the different provinces and the work is carried on in this way.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister knows that usually the dredging is done by the government's own fleet.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Some of it; not all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh no, not all. But the minister also knows that all contracts of over $5,000 are submitted to parliament; that is, if the proper and the usual procedure is followed. My hon. friend shakes his head. If my hon. friend would only be consistent I at least would be able to understand him a great deal better. Take the example we have had already this afternoon. We have the statement made by the hon. minister that the general vote which the department has to look after small matters would not justify the expenditure on the paint company's wharf of $7,000, and yet at the same time we have the same minister saying it is perfectly proper and usual to take the general vote to support a contract of $26,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend is trying to confuse two votes that are treated entirely different in practice, and he well knows it. The general dredging vote running into hundreds of thousands of dollars is used by the department to do dredging where necessary, and it must act within the vote and by order in council. There is no mystery about this; my hon. friend can have all the correspondence relating to it. It is not unusual, it is done from year to year, and the two items are not to be confused.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Chairman, the only reason I am challenging the minister is that his supporters want to carry this vote now.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am in no hurry about carrying it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Very well, let it stand.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend referred to the construction of the paint company's wharf. We did not take the amount from the general vote, thinking it would be fairer and better to bring it before parliament and make the explanation here. That is why the item is in the estimates. So far as the dredging vote is concerned, if my hon. friend wants it to stand over it can. I am sure he will be satisfied when he sees the correspondence.

Mr. MANION: My recollection is, but I am subject to correction, that in previous discussions of this sort it has been understood that the general vote is supposed to be for amounts up to $2,500, that is, for small repairs. I think the minister said that a year or two ago.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. MANION: Then how high can the minister go? Could he spend the whole general vote for Ontario and Quebec on one job without the authority of this parliament?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The practice has been to let contracts from time to time under that vote. It is true the vote is primarily for the maintenance of our own dredging fleet, but in addition to that contracts have for many years been let from that vote. The authority is by order in council, after calling for tenders in the regular and usual way.

Mr. MANION: Supposing in that way a contract was let for $75,000 or $100,000, and the House subsequently turned it down, what would happen? Are such contracts let subject to approval by parliament?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The vote is passed before the contract is let, and was in this case.

Mr. MANION: The general vote was?

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes; and that is where it is paid from.

Mr. ROGERS: What was voted for dredging for Quebec and Ontario last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Last year we voted $652,000.

Mr. ROGERS: What is the amount this year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): An estimate of $600,000.

Mr. GERVAIS: Mr. Chairman, the channel at Rivière du Loup leading to the main channel has not been dredged for several years and the silt brought down by the river has made the channel so shallow that navigation is impeded. I received letters from the officials of the Tourville Lumber Company, which has sold its interests to another company. I know none of the officials of this new company, nor have they asked me to intervene. Three years ago the proprietor of the steamboat plying between Montreal, Berthierville and Louiseville asked me to have this dredging done, as did those interested in the Soulanges steamboats. Last fall they repeated their request because during August and September the boat service could not be maintained owing to the shallowness of the channel. I think the dredging is quite necessary.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would hasten to assure the hon. member that I am quite certain of his good faith in this matter. I am not challenging at the moment the necessity for the work, as I said in the first instance, I am trying to find out why we have departed from the usual practice.

Mr. ROGERS: Is the minister prepared to let the item stand until we get more information?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have no objection.

Mr. GERVAIS: Mr. Chairman, I shall have to tell my electors that the dredging was blocked by the other side simply because of a legal distinction. I will tell them exactly what has happened.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Chairman, I would tell my hon. friend that despite his terrible threat we are only trying to see that the right thing is done by the people of the country generally; that is, that the public funds are properly conserved, irrespective of what may happen to anyone. I am sure that when my hon. friend considers what he has said he will temper the wind to the shorn lamb and not be unduly severe.

Item stands.

St. Antoine de Tilly—wharf reconstruction, $3,000.

Mr. ROGERS: Was the $20,000 voted last year all spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There was an expenditure last year of $16,019. This item is to complete the contract for the reconstruction of the headblock.

Item agreed to.

St. Gédéon (Lac St. Jean)—wharf reconstruction, $13,500.

Mr. ROGERS: This seems to be a new item. What is the necessity for this expenditure?

Mr. SYLVESTRE: I wish to say with reference to this item, that a large dam was built on Isle Maligne, so that the level of the water could be kept high, in order that people would be able to navigate around the lake. Formerly during summer time the water was rather low, but now, on account of that huge dam that has been built, the water will be kept high, ensuring navigation during the season. The Price Company has a large paper mill built at River Bend and they have to use two large tugs to bring their pulpwood from the Mistassini river down to River Bend, I think they built some kind of dry dock, especially for the repair of their tugs, and this wharf will be very convenient for them. It is absolutely necessary.

Item agreed to.

Ste. Pétronille (I.O.)—wharf repairs and improvements, $12,200.

Mr. ROGERS: This seems rather a large item at a point like that.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to repair the damage done in the fall of 1924 to the wharf expropriated in 1923-24.

Mr. ROGERS: What was the cost?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Mr. Justice Audette gave judgment awarding compensation of $29,604.56 for repairs and for replacing stone ballast which was washed away.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): What was the reason for expropriating this wharf?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The department had no wharf at that point. The island is below Quebec. The district is not thickly settled, and it was thought advisable by the department that we should have a wharf there. The property was purchased through expropriation proceedings, and these repairs are being made to put the wharf into condition to handle the traffic.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): Will this complete the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Sorel—harbour improvements, $20,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is a familiar name, and we had a long discussion last year about it, as I recollect. We had a very big vote, I think $75,000, and an eloquent speech from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in connection with it. My recollection is that that vote was going to finish it. We really thought, under all the circumstances, that that was a deserving point and well worth the expenditure, but I thought the idea was that $75,000 was going to finish it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We spent $73,312.05 last year, and this is to complete the work, $20,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this going to be the really final expenditure?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As far as this work is concerned, yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the work? My understanding certainly was, rightly or wrongly, that $75,000 was to complete something we had on hand. Is this for something new?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think my hon. friend is mistaken. The amount of money voted last year for specific purposes has been expended. Now it is proposed to build 311 feet more.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is new work.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the report of the engineer as to the necessity of the new work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): He reports that the cost will be as follows:

|---|---|
| (1) Reconstruction in concrete of remaining 311.4 feet of high level wharf along the Richelieu river.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $18,000 |
| (2) Repairs to breakwater.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 1,300 |
| Inspection and contingencies.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 700 |
| | $20,000 |

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the necessity for the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My memorandum states that the part to be rebuilt—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is rebuilding?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Carried.

Item agreed to.

Tadoussac (Anse Tadoussac)—wharf repairs and improvements, $8,900.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think this is the place for the local member to make a speech. I wonder if we cannot get a speech from him.

The CHAIRMAN: He is not here.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think he should be here in connection with this item. In his absence I am going to make a plea that this vote be carried. I know Tadoussac. I know the district of the chief whip of the Liberal party, and I hasten to do all I can to keep this vote out of danger. The district requires this accommodation, and it is going to get it. There are other things which it requires which it may not get as soon as it ought to. I am not going to dilate upon the complexion of the riding; I am not going to say that its fiscal policy should be given voice in this House, but I recollect there were difficulties in connection with the telephone communication and difficulties in getting across the river, and on behalf of the chief whip of the Liberal party, who now has more important business to look after, and acting for him, I desire to draw this matter to the attention of the minister. The establishment of communication with the north side of the river is something which ought to be accomplished in order to put the people in touch with civilization in winter, and proper telephonic communication.

Item agreed to.

Tadoussac (Anse à l'Eau)—wharf repairs, $6,000.

Mr. ROGERS: This is a new item. I am afraid my colleague has spoken a little too soon. This is in the chief whip's constituency. I would like some explanation of the item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is for general repairs to the wharf structure, as follows: renewal of movable slip and hinges, $1,000; renewal of hoisting blocks, $600; renewal of flooring of wharf, $3,200; painting of sheds, $300; repairs to approach, $500; contingencies, $400.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Trois-Rivières—repairs to coal dock, $4,950.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I wonder why that comes in here, Mr. Chairman. We passed an act last year, or the year before, transferring these properties to the harbour commission. We understood that the harbour commission was going to run all these properties, and that the department would be out of it. I understand that the harbour commission is functioning at Three Rivers.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is a structure owned by the people of Canada. The work consists of repairing with concrete the inclined ice breaker situated along the upstream side of the wharf, and most urgent repairs to the wooden sheeting of the wharf. The engineer reports that the ice breaker is all rotten and decayed, and if not repaired a part of the structure may be carried away and the coal elevators put in danger. There is a considerable traffic on this coal wharf. In 1925, up to November, 27 steamers loaded with coal, pig iron, rails, angle bars, fish plates, and so forth, landed at this wharf with cargoes representing 145,543 tons. It is true that the harbour commission had a bill passed last year, but there was no money granted by that bill, and we have transferred none of our property to the harbour commission. The Marine department are in control of this wharf, and are charging fees for its use. This appropriation is required to maintain the wharf.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is an extraordinary thing, because we were told in this House during this session in connection with the Chicoutimi harbour commission that the Three Rivers harbour commision was functioning very well, with no trouble. My hon. friend now says that it is not functioning at all, that the Marine department are looking after the harbour, and that there is no money for the harbour commission to carry on with. Who is collecting the fees?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This wharf is administered by the Marine department. It is our property, not the property of the harbour commission. There has been no transfer of property, and we are maintaining a public wharf there. I do not think there has been any suggestion that we should turn this wharf over to the harbour commission. It is true that the harbour commission is functioning and collecting revenue, but not from this structure.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What property has been transfered to the commission?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): None to my knowledge.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is the office of harbour commissioner of Three Rivers merely honorary? Have the commissioners no property to administer at all?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They have some property, I understand, and they are collecting certain revenues but they have nothing to do with this wharf.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Who transferred that property to them? I understood the minister to say just now that there had been no transfer of property.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think they have some property there, but I do not know of any transfers of property recently.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: They could only get the property if it was transferred to them by this government; they could not get it in any other way. Why is it that this wharf has not been transferred to them? Is the act of last year to be looked upon merely as giving honorary titles to certain gentlemen in connection with the harbour of Three Rivers, or will this property be transferred to the commission? Is not this property part of the harbour of Three Rivers? If it is, why should not the commissioners get the revenue from it and look after its repairs?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is an important pier in the harbour of Three Rivers. The harbour commissioners at Three Rivers are in a different position from the commissioners at Montreal and Vancouver. Their position, I would say, is very much like that of the harbour commissioners at New Westminster, who receive no salary but do administer the port, collecting certain dues. I notice that in the calendar year 1924 the Three Rivers harbour commission collected revenue as follows:

| Shed rentals | $ 1,220 00 |
| Harbour dues | 6,887 29 |
| Wharfages | 27,331 18 |
| Rentals of wharves | 3,870 00 |
| Sundry receipts | 160 24 |
| Total | $39,468 71 |

That was collected, I imagine, through the Marine department. It is not collected through the Public Works department.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is my hon. friend sure that this was collected by the Marine department, and not by the harbour commissioners, because certainly if the Marine department collected $39,000 at Three Rivers, the commissioners are not functioning.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would have to inquire of the Marine department whether they are collecting these rentals or allowing the commission to collect them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If the department are collecting them, this is a perfectly proper item, but if the commissioners are collecting them, the minister will agree that it would not be a proper item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We maintain various structures at New Westminster and other places. These local commissioners are acting without salary, and the harbour commission of Three Rivers has not come to parliament asking for a loan.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What were the rentals from this particular wharf last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the individual items.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not want to delay the vote. Of course, it is irregular if these properties are being run by the harbour commission, but we are getting accustomed to irregularities, so let it go.

Item agreed to.

Valleyfield—dredging, $50,000.

Mr. ROGERS: I would like a complete statement from the minister in regard to this item. I particularly would like to know how many orders in council were passed in regard to work carried on just previous to the election last year in this particular constituency. I see by the estimates that there was an item for this work last year of $32,000. The minister is now asking for $50,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was in hopes of getting a speech from the Minister of Finance on this item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to complete payments to the contractors, "Les Chantiers Manseau," for continuation of dredging a channel 100 feet wide to a depth of 14 feet. The order in council was passed on August 29, 1925, and this appropriation is required to complete the contract that was entered into at that time.

Mr. ROGERS: What was the estimate made for the work last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Our appropriation last year was $32,000, and there was an expenditure of $31,993.

Mr. ROGERS: But that did not complete the contract.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No. That was the appropriation we asked for last year, and the contract was let for that amount.

Mr. ROGERS: Can the minister explain why the contract was let for $32,000, and why he is now asking for $50,000 to complete it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is a continuation of the work carried on last year, and new tenders are being called for.

Mr. ROGERS: We will have to call upon the Minister of Finance to give some explanation of this. It is a very serious thing.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): What is serious about it?

Mr. ROGERS: It is quite serious to let a contract for $32,000 and then find that you have to spend $50,000 more to complete it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is nothing serious about it at all. There is a certain amount of work to be done. We might vote $80,000 or $100,000, and spread the expenditure over two or three years, voting a certain amount each year. That is what has been done here, and the present vote is to continue the dredging at that point.

Mr. ROGERS: When did you say the order in council was passed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In August, last year.

Mr. ROBB: I do not represent the county of Beauharnois but I happen to live in Valleyfield. I recall that some years ago I came to Ottawa along with the mayor of that town when my genial friend opposite was Minister of Public Works. We represented to him the needs of the harbour, the necessity of constructing a retaining wall along the dam, and for dredging to allow coal vessels carrying cargoes for the Montreal Cotton Company to come in. I recall also that after the interview the delegation said they thought the late lamented Minister of Railways and the then Minister of Public Works were two of the ablest men in Canada because the deputation got what they wanted.

Mr. ROGERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend admitted the justice of this work at that time and placed an appropriation in the estimates for it. Part of the work was carried out. Then the war came on and everything was stopped. The Montreal Cotton Company have been pressing for the deepening of the channel so as to get their boats in. My hon. friend knows that with the lowering of the water in the lakes, vessels that were able to enter the harbour a few years ago are not now able to come in, and that the movement of ice blocks the channel. These are the reasons for the work. My hon. friend who sits beside me at the present moment (Mr. Raymond) represents the county.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: There are two items left over from the Quebec item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would have those items stand for the present.

Ontario harbours and rivers—Blind River dredging, $27,700.

Mr. ROGERS: How was the $47,000 voted last year disposed of?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): A contract was entered into with Messrs. McLean and Sons for redredging a channel 9,260 feet long by 150 feet wide to a depth of 16 feet. The amount of $27,000, which includes $21.000 of a revote, is to complete the contract.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Was a new contract given?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Nothing new.

Item agreed to.

Burlington breakwater extension, $8,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was the contract let?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to provide for a contract entered into with Messrs. Randolph MacDonald Company, Limited, to extend the breakwater constructed in 1914-15. The amount of the contract is $8,000. The order in council was passed in October, 1925. It is very necessary work.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh, yes.

Item agreed to.

Burlington channel piers—repairs and reconstruction, $36,000.

Mr. ROGERS: What is the explanation of this item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to complete the reconstruction of the south pier. My hon. friend knows the entrance to the Hamilton harbour. It is reconstruction of those piers.

Item agreed to.

Byng Inlet—dredging, $11,900.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is required to complete the contract entered into last year. Of this $9,800 is a revote. It is for dredging at Rabbit island narrows.

Mr. ROGERS: Will the $11,900 be sufficient to complete it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Did this not come in the supplementaries too?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As my hon. friend knows, the only opportunity a member has of having his views considered is in the supplementaries. The main estimates are usually made up before the House meets. I believe this item came in the supplementaries last year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was the date of the contract—October, 1925?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): August 31, 1925.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That was got in hand even earlier. When did the work start?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not know when the contractor started work.

Mr. ROGERS: Who was pressing for this work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Byng Inlet is an important coal point. The Canadian Pacific ship a great deal of coal in there for their supplies and it is distributed from there.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where is Byng Inlet?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In the Parry Sound district. The hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. Arthurs) would understand the necessity for the work.

Item agreed to.

Chute à Blondeau—wharf reconstruction, $1,500.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where is Chute à Blondeau?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In Prescott county.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I cannot find this item in the regular estimates of last year. I am afraid my hon. friend has to say that it was in the supplementaries too.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It probably was.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was the date of the contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The order in council was passed on October 26.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Three days in time—rather close.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister explain how it is that whereas last year was a year of falling revenues and depression generally, and this year we are having a fine crop and the government claims that things are far better than they were then, the estimates of this department both in Quebec and in Ontario are half what they were a year ago. How does that come about?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The government is very desirous of economizing.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why did they not economize last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): So we did.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think so.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think we did.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Your estimates were twice what they are this year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes; if the minister will compare the two he will find that last year they were almost double what they are this year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is about a million dollars less in the main estimates this year than we voted last year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am referring to the patronage estimates.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): These are the regular estimates.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Pshaw!

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They are all for repairs.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister should not try to make fun of us. Why, look at the estimates in Ontario: the votes distributed among the various constituencies are half this year what they were last year. That is the case in Quebec as well as in Ontario. Last year was a hard year, while this year, according to the government, everything is prosperous. Yet in that hard year the estimates were double what they are now. Strange, is it not?

Mr. ROGERS: The leader of the opposition apparently forgets that last year there was an election.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Item agreed to.

Goderich—Harbour repairs and improvements, $150,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is the major item of the whole Ontario estimates. It is a very large sum, and the same amount was spent last year. What riding is this in?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): North Huron.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I see. How many ships come into that harbour?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): A great many; it is probably one of the most important lake ports, as my hon. friend knows.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, it is better than others.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We are asking for $150,000, $25,000 of which is a revote. The vote is to complete a contract entered into with Mr. Forrest for widening the entrance to the channel of 400 feet and enlarging the turning basin to a depth of twenty-three feet. It is not necessary for me to dilate on the importance of the harbour, for it is well known, not only to members from Ontario, but to business people throughout the country. It is well that the committee should be advised that the falling of the water in lake Erie has thrown on the department a burden which previously did not enter into our calculations. A number of important harbours have to be dredged to-day on account of the lowering of the lakes, and a large expenditure will have to be made.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It will have to be kept up?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ROGERS: Will the amount of this vote be sufficient to keep up that work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It will complete the present programme. To show the importance of the harbour I may say that whereas in 1915, 7,500,000 bushels of grain were handled, the quantity passing through the harbour in 1924 was 23,500,000. It is one of the largest of our lake ports.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The largest on lake Huron.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers generally—repairs and improvements, $50,000.

Mr. ROGERS: What is to be done under this vote?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is required for general repairs and improvements to harbour and river works in Ontario. Seven items have been noted by the engineering department for expenditures this year and, as I have explained before, this amount is to meet unforeseen conditions. The expenditures vary from a few dollars up to eight or nine hundred dollars. Last year we spent $31,363.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where was that money spent, in what counties, and with what results?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It might save time if I were to file the details with Hansard. There are probably seventy-five or eighty items in all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Send them across.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The items range all the way up to $1,700 odd.

Mr. ROBINSON: Will any part of this $50,000 be allotted to Belle River? I understand that since the breakwater has been put in it has almost completely filled in with silt. The harbour is supposed to be important.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have no allotment for Belle River.

Mr. ROGERS: There is at Kenora an important wharf that requires limited but very necessary improvement, particularly at this season of the year. There is going to be an international regatta there for one thing, and more than that, a good deal of shipping passes over the wharf. It was built some years ago, but it stands in need of considerable improvement to-day. I would ask the minister to look into the matter with a view to making such improvements as are found necessary.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I shall be glad to consider the matter.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The committee will be pained to hear the minister's reply to my hon. friend (Mr. Robinson) who has called attention to the sad state of affairs at Belle River. Some time ago the great importance of that harbour was impressed upon us: a large sum of money had to be spent at Belle River; we had to have a wharf there and it was absolutely imperative to do dredging and more dredging and still more dredging. Now, what has happened to Belle River? We are told to-night that although the wharf is finished the channel is now silted up and yet nothing is to be done about it. I am told by an hon. gentleman that it is partly broken down. Is nothing to be done for it? Or has the department now joined the "dry" forces as against the "wet" forces? I think the House knew very well that this wharf was very convenient for a particular traffic that certain gentlemen were supposed to be interested in. My hon. friend remembers that immortal bit of poetry, how Tim needed King and King needed Tim? Now that Tim is no longer with us, has the usefulness of this port entirely ceased? Are we to say "amen" to all further expenditures at Belle River? Silted up—partly broken down—nothing for it in the estimates—Tim gone. Is that the trouble?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not at all. We undertook certain developments at Belle River on the advice of the engineering department. It was suggested that another revetment wall should be built to confine the waters and prevent the silting up of the channel. I have not consented to that additional expenditure, and that is why there is no item for it in the estimates.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend finds himself suddenly filled with righteous resolution in connection with this matter.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Oh no.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: He has got his back to the wall, he is going to stop any further expenditure at Belle River. Will he go further and tell us—as the fact is—that he looks upon the money already spent there as thrown away? We have spent now well over $100,000 there, according to my recollection, with which I think the minister will agree. The channel has silted up just as we said it would. I do not know whether the wharf is used now or not. I want to go into a little bit of history in that connection. I am not suggesting for one minute that the minister knew where he was going to be led, but I recall on the first vote—and we debated it a good deal—my hon. friend's information was that $30,000 would be the whole bill. It was not going to take very much the first year, but the expenditure went up and up until it was well over $100,000. Now, is that all to be abandoned, or is the channel again to be dredged? If so, for what?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend is entirely mistaken. It is true that for many years money has been spent at Belle River for dredging, not only by this administration but by its predecessors. When my hon. friend says $100,000, he means the expenditure by his government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We spent a certain sum of money to try to correct the silted condition of the channel.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How much?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $20,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister stand up and say that he spent only $20,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am speaking for this government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, his own government has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars there.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No. Before the Public Accounts committee last session the evidence was not by any means what my hon. friends desired to bring out. The expenditure at Belle River was undertaken on the recommendation of the department—

Mr. STEVENS: Of Tim Healy.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): —it being suggested that once we built a retaining wall probably it would be necessary to build a second retaining wall. From the information I have received, if the work is to be effective probably another retaining wall will have to be built, but I am not satisfied that conditions warrant this further expenditure.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We will get the details shortly. The hon. minister knows his government has spent hugely larger sums than he states.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes he has, and we will be able to demonstrate it. The government did it in pursuance of a fraudulent election pledge.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, nothing else. I was in the contest and I know—I saw the pledge.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Mr. Chairman, there was no fraudulent election pledge at all.

An hon. MEMBER: King does not need Tim.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Not now.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The late Mr. Kennedy was elected in 1921, and as a member of this House and a minister of the crown he recommended to the government that this work be done. It was under consideration and being developed when he died.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Being developed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not at all. I would do more honour to the memory of the late Mr. Kennedy than to say of him what the minister says. It is true the late Mr. Kennedy had it under consideration, which means that some constituents were pressing it upon him, but never did it come to any maturity until the by-election in the month of March, 1923. Then in order to elect the government candidate, although at the general election they had a seven thousand majority, this government, through their agents, scattered throughout the riding handbills promising all sorts of public works. Those handbills were scattered up and down the riding by the thousand promising to bribe the electors with the money of the people of Canada. One of those handbills was produced in this House, and I have it yet. It ran something like this:

King needs Tim; so do you.
Tim and King—that is the thing.

King and Tim were to be paid for out of the treasury, and the new Minister of Public Works was to be made the agent for the purpose. He made himself the agent, he put a vote in the estimates the first year in the neighbourhood of $30,000, and he built something at Belle River. But from the hour he started to build until now there has never been anything come to that wharf save a few gasoline launches to bootleg whisky into the United States. There never was any other purpose for it. The minister poured money by the tens of thousands of dollars into that wharf, and he would not be a whit more guilty to-day if he had stood with his friend Tim Healy at Belle River and thrown it dollar by dollar into the water.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I take exception to my right hon. friend's statement. The undertakings of the government were properly undertaken. It is not so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is not so?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That we threw away tens of thousands of dollars.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly. The minister himself says he spent $20,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Will my hon. friend say his government did not spend any money at Belle River?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly, we spent money everywhere, but never for the purpose of—

Mr. KING (Kootenay): For the purpose of shipping in and out of Belle River.

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: The money spent before 1923—

Mr. KAY: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. What item are we discussing?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The general estimates. Let me tell the hon. member for Missisquoi that I am glad he has had some sleep; he worked so hard that he was entitled to it. The money spent in Belle River prior to 1923 was a bagatelle, amounting to nothing; but this government has thrown money away there by the tens of thousands of dollars, and stands to-day convicted of having squandered it on a worthless enterprise for nothing but political purpose, as a bribe to the voters—an enterprise that the government now abandons. The minister stands up and says that to make it any good they have to spend more money on it but he is not going to consent to any further expenditure. The fact of the matter is that expenditure served its purpose. Now the money the people have paid out of their earnings, the taxes, the whole thing is wasted, and the government is convicted of a fraud.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Mr. Chairman, it would be well for the members of the House to read the reports of the Public Accounts committee which investigated this matter last session. The evidence then presented showed that due to the work that had been carried on by this government there had been stimulated in that district a brick plant and other developments. Money has been spent at Belle River for the last fifty years.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What are the "other developments"?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the particulars before me.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Was the minister ever there?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I should think not.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): Would the minister give us the amount spent at Belle River last year, the year before and the year before that again?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Belle River is not under discussion. If my hon. friend wishes the information I shall be very glad to have the question asked and reply to it.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend is not fair to the committee in that statement. When estimates of this kind are before the House the minister invariably has his deputy with him, as is the case to-night, and it is quite customary for the deputy to bring with him all the figures affecting matters of this kind. We have discussed this subject every session. It is a matter upon which hon. members on this side have taken a very strong stand, warning the minister as to the inadvisability of this work right from its very inception; and it is a subject that the minister must have expected or known would arise. I submit that it is not fair to ask that members place the question on the order paper and then await the chance of an answer. We are entitled to an answer now.

Mr. POWER: There is no item for Belle River this year, and we can hardly expect the minister to furnish information as to amounts spent in the last three or four or five years, or an item which does not exist so far as this year is concerned. We might as well bring down information as to money spent twenty years ago. The minister could not be expected to bring down everything spent in the department for twenty years.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend has not grasped the point. We are considering item 147, which involves an expenditure of $773,000. It may be that no specific detail is mentioned regarding this, but it is reasonable to expect the minister to have it. If the minister has not the information under his hand, he can let the item stand and bring it down.

Mr. POWER: But there is no item to stand.

Mr. STEVENS: The whole item can stand.

Mr. POWER: The whole of the Ontario item?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The theory of the hon. member (Mr. Power) is that if the government abandons a worthless project it never can be criticized for what it did in reference to it.

Mr. POWER: No, my hon. friend is wrong. I do not think my hon. friend (Mr. Stevens) is serious when he criticizes the minister for not having before him estimates with regard to Belle River when no question regarding Belle River is before the House.

Mr. STEVENS: No, I am not criticizing him for that. But I criticize him for saying "Put the question on the order paper and I will answer it." When the minister is asked for reasonable information in regard to the works in this or any other part of the country, the House is entitled to that information.

Mr. POWER: The hon. member thinks the minister should have it with him.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The hon. member for Vancouver Centre must have misunderstood me. I said that the item for Belle River was not in the estimates, and that I had not the information here. I shall be glad to supply that information to the committee.

Mr. STEVENS: That is all right.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Or I shall be glad to answer questions on the order paper. Many questions have been put to the government, but there was no question about Belle River. Belle River was investigated by the Public Accounts committee last year. I shall see that the information is furnished.

Mr. STEVENS: To the committee?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I can furnish a little information now that will perhaps help the minister. He said that this government spent $20,000 in all. I may say that he spent $29,000 odd in 1924 alone. I have the item before me. It appears in the Public Accounts for 1924 at page part V-106:

Belle River, harbour improvements, protection wall: Detroit River Construction Company, contract complete, $32,360.25, less $3,530 paid in 1923-24, V-142; painting, $500; inspection of contract work, $545, $29,875.25.

That is in 1924 alone. Has not the minister before him the amount for last year. If so we could then see how accurate this information is about Belle River.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We will see how accurate the member's statement is that we spent $120,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I said $100,000 for all the years of this government. This is only one year.

Mr. BOYS: I understand the minister made the statement that $20,000 had been spent. I have just taken the trouble to go upstairs and look up the record, and I hold in my hand the evidence given by the engineer, Mr. Hugo Craig, before the Public Accounts committee on May 7, 1925. I had not the time to go through it completely, but I may direct the minister's attention to the evidence at page 5, where, in connection with the first item 147, his evidence appears. The estimate on that alone, as given by the engineer on that occasion, was $27,663.26. The next item he gave evidence in regard to was an expenditure of $3,604.23, making a total, the report shows, of $32,360. We had passed the item for dredging which of course came out of the general vote disguised in that way, and the original estimate for the dredging was $11,000. I will read now what the engineer had to say as to that, on page 6 of the evidence:

Q. How long?—A. For the length of the channel, which I figured out to be ten feet.

Q. That was the estimate? Can you tell me how much has been spent for dredging to date?—A. I only have this here; $40,000 last year.

Q. These are the round figures?—A. Yes.

Q. $40,000?—A. Yes.

Q. Has $40,000 completed the work contemplated by the estimate of $11,000?—A. No.

Q. How much more will it take to do it?—A. About $10,000.

That contemplated the dredging of a channel 10 feet deep and 50 feet wide plus one foot sub grade allowance.

Add $40,000 to $10,000, then add $32,000, and you get $82,000. I am sure the deputy minister will recall that we were told that to complete that work it would cost $125,000. I do not suppose the minister will dispute these figures. If he said $20,000 he was absolutely in error. I do not know where he gets the figures. He said that money had been spent by the previous government. He is quite correct. I do not know whether he has the figures before him, but if he has he will see that they were trifling compared with these. I think if we go to Belle River we will find that the dredging which was done, which was to cost $11,000, comes to over $40,000.

Mr. STANSELL: In this vote which we are now discussing for harbours and rivers, is provision being made for dredging at Port Dover? I notice that nothing appears in the estimates.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is not a dredging vote. It is for repairs and upkeep of wharves and piers.

Mr. STANSELL: The dredging is not in it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. MORAND: I would like to get some information about work done on Pike's Creek, ten miles west of Belle River. What was spent there and what was it spent for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have no record of any expenditure there. I shall be glad to look into the matter and advise my hon. friend.

[Mr. Boys.]

Mr. MORAND: I think if the minister looks up the expenditures for the last part of September or October of last year he will find the contractors did some work there. I do not know how much.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have no knowledge of an expenditure on Pike's Creek. Is it known by any other name? I do not find it in the list.

Mr. MORAND: That is the only name by which it is known. It runs out of the township of Maidstone in the county of Essex, and runs into lake St. Clair about ten miles west of Belle river.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have no knowledge of any expenditure there, but I shall be glad to have inquiries made.

Mr. STANSELL: Naturally I do not want to criticise, but when I interviewed the minister and his deputy I was told that the necessary amount for dredging at Port Dover could be supplied from the general vote. Where would that item appear?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is on page 39.

Item agreed to.

Holland river—wharf repairs, $7,200.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That seems to be a new item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is for wharf repairs, renewing the stringers and capping for the full length and width of the structure, 75 feet by 14 feet.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Has anything been spent yet?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No. The engineer reports that this work is essential to maintain the structure.

Item agreed to.

Honey Harbour—dredging, $7,200.

Mr. ROGERS: We spent last year $15,000, and we are asked this year to vote $7,200. Would the minister give some explanation?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There was a contract entered into last year, and this item of $7,200, of which $5,300 is a revote is to complete the contract.

Mr. McGIBBON: Who is the contractor?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Mr. Light is the contractor. The contract was entered into on October 27, 1924.

Item agreed to.

Kincardine—repairs to piers, $13,000.

Mr. ROGERS: What is the explanation of this? I see that $25,000 was voted last year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is required to complete the contract with Messrs. Keys Brothers for the rebuilding of a portion of the east and river revetment walls in the inner harbour for a length of 362 feet; also the reconstruction of 160 feet of the south pier.

Mr. ROGERS: When was this contract let?

Mr KING (Kootenay): On July 17, 1925.

Mr. ROGERS: A very good time.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was that contract advertised?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): About the 1st of July, I imagine.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The hon. member had it well in hand. I understand the hon. member for North Bruce has a very eloquent speech ready in favour of this item, and that he knows exactly how many boats come into the harbour, and exactly why the House should vote this item. I think he should favour us with that speech.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If he would produce a photograph or a moving picture of the argosy of ships that daily come into that harbour it would be illuminating and inspiring.

Mr. MALCOLM: The only thing I can contribute is that it is true that none of the harbours on lake Huron are served with a passenger service, but it is equally true that there is some shipping in connection with these ports, and it is equally true that all these harbours are fishing harbours. Kincardine harbour would probably not justify dredging except for one reason: There is a salt industry there that uses from 6,000 to 8,000 tons of coal, which would have to discontinue operations if it could not get waterborne coal. I am free to say this to my right hon. friend, that in conference with the minister I insisted this year that these people guarantee a given amount of tonnage of coal before I favoured any further dredging. The leader of the opposition is quite right in saying that it is questionable whether these harbours should be dredged or not, but there does arise the question of refuge for vessels in distress during storms at Southampton, Kincardine and other points. I am not particularly desirous of any heavy expenditure, but it is hard to let the property go into disrepair. The fishing rigs have to have seven or eight feet of water. The salt company has to bring coal in, and the other industries also are getting their coal by water. There is also a good deal of wood and lumber shipped in.

Mr. MEIGHEN: About what tonnage would come in last year? It will all be in the reports.

Mr. MALCOLM: The tonnage was light last year, due to the fact that the dredging was done late. The Glenelg, that was bringing coal for the Valley Camp Coal Company, could not get in till the dredging was finished, and as the dredging was late it was October before the boat managed to make its first trip with a cargo of 2,500 tons of coal. A return trip was not made on account of the bad weather conditions. There were also a few cargoes of wood. This year the salt company agrees to import a greater tonnage of coal. I am simply placing this item before the House in its true light. These harbours have to be maintained to some extent. While it is hard to justify a large expenditure on any of them, it is equally hard to allow the works that the government have to go into a state of entire disrepair.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is overlooking one item there. I really am disappointed with him. I thought he was going to give us a real speech in favour of fishing, and I wanted to help him. This is a place where there is first rate fishing, and lots of it. They require some harbours of refuge down there, and as there is only $2,000 more to be raised, I think we should raise it.

Mr. ROGERS: Has the minister in mind anything further in the supplementary estimates to assist this harbour?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am not sure. The amount asked for here will complete the work we have in mind so far as the harbour is concerned this year. It is very difficult to know what to do in some of these cases. I find that the people of Canada have spent $499,000 on the harbour at Kincardine since confederation, and on construction since 1912, $162,000, showing that there is business passing in and out of this harbour. A fishing business is conducted there, and also the salt business that my hon. friend has spoken of. This is a revote, and the additional $2,000 is to complete the contract entered into last year, which is to reconstruct several public works that are in existence there to-day.

Item agreed to.

Meaford—towards reconstruction of revetment wall, $10,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was that contract let?

Mr. ROGERS: Would the minister explain this item? We spent $9,000 there last year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is required towards the reconstruction of a revetment wall on the east side of the harbour. It is proposed to spread this work over a period of three years. The work will consist of new steel anchorage piles with concrete face behind these piles 18 inches wide, tied back to concrete anchor blocks. The total estimated cost is $27,300, and the amount asked for this year is $10,000.

Mr. McGIBBON: What is the total amount of tonnage that goes to Meaford harbour?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The tonnage of coastwise and inland vessels going in and out of the harbour is 1,541.

Mr. LENNOX: I see that in vote 147 provision is made to the amount of $2,600 for repairs to the Holland river wharf. Unfortunately I was not here when the item went through. I do not object to spending money in my riding, but there is no wharf on the Holland river. The waterway there is known as the Aylesworth canal, which has no wharf. I should like to know where the wharf is.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Cut it out.

Mr. LENNOX: I think you should cut it out.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This wharf is situated right at the bridge over the Holland river. The plan I have shows a wharf and stone and gravel bridge with the county road approaching it. My hon. friend with his local knowledge, would better understand the conditions than I would. The place is used extensively by the tourist trade of lake Simcoe, and some 20 tons of fish and 2,400 tons of marsh hay are shipped annually. This is merely a matter of recontruction and maintenance. If the government have no property of that kind there we will check the matter up and see that the money is not spent.

Item agreed to.

Midland—wharf and dredging, $75,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There are two items for Midland, Midland wharf and Midland dredging. Will the minister give an explanation?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The item is $75,000 of which $40,000 is a revote. This is to complete the contract with the MacDonald Engineering Company Limited, for the construction of a wharf and dredging at the wharf. The next item is for dredging within the harbour. These are two separate and distinct contracts.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will my hon friend say when those contracts were awarded?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The date of the contract is December, 1925.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Which one is that?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The one covered by the first item.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was it advertised?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Oh, for probably two or three weeks.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend has no informatoin as to when it was advertised?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The order in council granting authority to accept the tender of the MacDonald Engineering Company was passed on November 23, 1925.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: As a matter of fact were not these tenders put in in September?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Or October?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The bids were due on November 10th.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Do not calls for tenders have to be advertised for three weeks?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Two or three weeks.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: So if the bids were due on November 10, the advertisements appeared prior to the elections?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Surely some work had to go on prior to the elections.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We understand.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Cut it out.

Mr. ROGERS: I point out to the minister that Midland is a very important port. Perhaps he could give us some information on the quantity of grain pasing through that port. I am sure that any money required to develop Midland will be money well spent. I have no objection to the item but we would like to have some information concerning it. I recognize the importance of the port, which should receive the assistance of the government at any time.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Midland, in the township of Tay, county of Simcoe, is a thriving port, situated at the southeasterly extremity of the Georgian bay, and has a population of 8,400. The town is a terminus of the Canadian National railway, distant 102 miles from Toronto, and is 9 miles by water from the Georgian bay port of the Canadian Pacific railway, namely, Port McNichol. The town is primarily a marine centre and its chief business water-borne commerce. Its industries are as follows: Grain elevators—five houses in operation having a total 9 p.m. capacity of 8,500,000 bushels, and a sixth house under construction, 1,500,000 bushels capacity. There are two saw mills and three flour mills with a capacity of 1,200 barrels per day, and coal docks. The Midland Shipbuilding Company is located there. The largest ship constructed to date is the Glenifer, 560 feet long. Other concerns are the Georgian Bay Shipbuilding and Wrecking Company, the International Fibre Board Company, the Midland Wood products Company, the Midland Boat Works, Machine and Foundry Shop, and others. It is quite an extensive industrial town and the port is considered one of the best on the upper lakes.

Mr. ROGERS: I am indebted to the minister for the information he has given; I am very glad to have it. We in the west are very much interested in the port of Midland, and I hope the minister will continue to give it any legitimate assistance it may require. The port is of great value to western Canada.

Item agreed to.

Oshawa—harbour improvements, $30,000.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Cut it out.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Yes, of course, cut it out.

Mr. McPHEE: The vote for harbours and rivers in Saskatchewan and Alberta only amounts to $15,000, and yet it is proposed to vote $30,000 for Oshawa harbour.

Mr. KAISER: I point out to the minister that there was an item of $100,000 in the estimates last year for Oshawa harbour improvements, but it has been reduced this year to $30,000. I did not anticipate that we should get quite as much as last year, but a reduction to $30,000 is a very sharp drop. So far as I can figure it out, with such a method of procedure the harbour will not be ready for operations within fifteen years; it will take that time to complete at the rate now proposed. That is too slow a rate of progress. The harbour is badly needed in Oshawa.

An hon. MEMBER: What do you want a harbour for?

Mr. KAISER: Why do we need a harbour? If you close Oshawa harbour you might just as well close all the harbours along the lake. I wish to say to hon. members that at Oshawa we take in more tonnage than all the ports between Montreal and Toronto put together, and we should like to be able to use that harbour to a still greater extent. Some of our manufacturers have already secured sites along the Lachine canal in Montreal for the storage of their goods. It has been anticipated for some time that they will be able to use the Oshawa harbour to ship goods in that way. We started out to have a harbour there. The old harbour was destroyed. They went to work to reconstruct and rebuild it and we had hopes that in five years' time we would have our harbour, but with this tremendously reduced appropriation the period of its completion will be postponed almost indefinitely. The reduction means that the work will go on a little too slowly. We do not wish the full amount voted at once, but we think that within four or five years we are entitled to have a harbour at Oshawa, and the government should give the matter a little more consideration.

Mr. ROGERS: There was $100,000 in the estimates last year. How much was spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $94,670.

Mr. ROGERS: The minister is asking for only $30,000 this year. Does he think that will be sufficient to take care of the requirements of such an important harbour as Oshawa?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It will complete the contract and repair the existing works that are there. It will not complete the harbour.

Item agreed to.

Owen Sound—dredging, $20,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this a new contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No; it is under contract.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was that contract awarded?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): 29th June, 1925.

Mr. ROGERS: How much was spent last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $82,992.

Mr. ROGERS: Only $20,000 is required this year for this important harbour?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This work was done in conjunction with the municipality who guaranteed the bonds for the construction of an elevator at that point. It is becoming a grain point and we did certain dredging and harbour improvements in order that they might carry on this elevator in the municipality.

Item agreed to.

Port Findlay—wharf repairs, $2,500.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is that contract let?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is no contract; this is just repairs by day labour.

Item agreed to.

Port Burwell—reconstruction of and repairs to pier, $45,800.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. This is to complete the contract with Wm. Birmingham and Son for the construction of a rubble wall connecting the outer end of the west pier with the inner end of the west breakwater. Of this, $12,000 is a revote. There was expended last year $82,840.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was the contract entered into?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): December 15, 1925.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: And the advertisements were issued when?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Possibly in November.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Were the tenders not due on the same fatal 10th day of November? Was the job work not advertised in October?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ROGERS: This is a very important harbour and we are glad to know some money is being spent on it. Could the minister give us some information as to the tonnage?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Port Burwell is a point of landing of much coal that comes into Ontario. There were 5,499 cars of coal having a tonnage of 316,279 tons. Of other merchandise there were 383 cars with a tonnage of 11,287 tons. The south bound traffic in merchandise amounted to 331 cars or 8,310 tons. This makes a total of 6,658 cars, or 335,876 tons. There was a collection in duties of $128,000.

Mr. ROGERS: This is evidently a very important port. It is very important to western Canada as well because much of our grain passes through it. We are always pleased to find it being properly developed. I hope the minister will continue the work.

Item agreed to.

Port Colborne—Repairs to breakwater, $15,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this all old work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is a contract to rebuild in concrete 134 lineal feet of superstructure of the west breakwater and to place riprap along unprotected portions of the breakwater for a distance of 420 feet. The estimated cost is as follows:

|---|---|
| Reconstruction of breakwater.. .. .. | $ 8,897 60 |
| Inspection and contingencies.. .. .. | 1,102 40 |
| Facing of riprap to protect breakwater, 1,000 tons at $5 a ton.. .. | 5,000 00 |
| Total.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $15,000 00 |

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not yet.

Item agreed to.

Port Maitland—Repairs to pier, $18,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this entirely a revote?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is under contract and it is a revote to complete. It is to widen the entrance channel, construct a new outer arm of all concrete caissons and to reconstruct the inner arm with concrete superstructure.

Mr. ROGERS: Will this complete the contract in full?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Port Stanley—Harbour improvements and repairs, $118,000.

Mr. SANDERSON: What was the tonnage at Port Stanley last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The tonnage is as follows:

| Cars | Tonnage |
|---|---|
| 2,859.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 124,967 |
| 6,211 collier in bulk.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 343,724 |
| Total.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 468,691 |

Mr. ROGERS: This is a very important harbour. Is the minister sure that the amount in the estimate will be sufficient to complete the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This will complete the present undertaking.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was it entered into?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): July 16, 1925—well in advance.

Item agreed to.

Rondeau—Dredging, $32,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is a revote. Why has this been carried so long without anything being done?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The company who handle coal at this point had certain construction work to do, and until they had completed it we could not profitably go on with the dredging. The work will now be proceeded with.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Tenders will be called for.

Mr. ROGERS: And the work will go on immediately?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As soon as the contract is let.

Item agreed to.

Southampton—repairs to breakwaters, $6,400.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is that under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No; this is to continue repairs and renewals to the existing harbour works commenced in 1924-25. The repairs to the east breakwater amount to $1,020; to the west breakwater, consisting of 400 feet of superstructure, $5,355; and contingencies, $25, making a total of $6,400.

Item agreed to.

Thessalon—to complete breakwater extension, $14,000.

Mr. ROGERS: The original vote was $16,000, of which the present estimate is a revote. Only $2,000 has been spent. Why has not the work been more expeditiously carried out?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is almost complete now.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the date of the contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): December 15, 1923.

Mr. ROGERS: This vote will complete it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ROGERS: The contractor is still active?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes; the work has been practically completed, and this amount will close it.

Item agreed to.

Thornbury—repairs to revetment wall, $1,400.

Mr. ROGERS: This is a new item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is just for repairs.

Item agreed to.

Windsor—wharf repairs, $2,000.

Mr. ROBINSON: Is there any revenue from the public dock in Windsor?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The dock is under the control of the Marine department and certain revenues are collected from shipping. I have not the amount.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps the minister will give to Hansard the appropriations not required?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They are as follows:

Appropriations not required for 1926-27

| | Appropriation 1925-26 |

Item agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item as a whole carry?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Looking over the itemized statement of expenditures for 1925-26 up to March 31, I find that the minister did not quite steel his heart against Belle River improvements. He spent $290 in connection with that harbour out of the general vote. That would bring the expenditures up to $82,560, and apparently he will not use the balance of the $125,000.

Mr. HAY: I have no objection to these items passing, but I must say a word or two in connection with some of the votes which are included. First of all I would call the attention of the minister to the condition existing along the river bank from the city of Winnipeg north of St. Andrew's locks for a distance of eighteen or twenty miles. I have here a resolution which throws some light on the situation. This resolution I received the other day from the secretary-treasurer of the municipality of East St. Paul's, which is north of Winnipeg. The conditions complained of in the resolution are also to be found at many points along the Red river between Winnipeg and St. Andrew's locks on both banks, and matters are getting gradually worse. I have directed the attention of the department to this state of affairs on several occasions, but so far little has been done. Some work has been performed in the shape of riprap in connection with St. Andrew's locks, and I have no doubt that the department fully realize that the construction of those locks has been responsible for the erosion along the banks of Red river even further south than Winnipeg. The resolution in question is accompanied by a letter which reads:

At the last meeting of council—

That is, the council of St. Paul's:

—a delegation of ratepayers waited on the council re the erosion of the banks of the Red river especially as it affects lots 88, 89 and 90 and the following resolution was passed.

The resolution is to the effect that a letter be written to the chief engineer at Winnipeg and to the members representing the different constituencies, bringing the matter to their attention. The letter then states:

The ratepayers living on these banks report that the situation is becoming serious not only to their property but also to the main highway which comes very close to the banks of the Red river at lots 88 and 89.

I can endorse this resolution because I know that what it states is quite correct. I am familiar with almost every foot of the beach from Winnipeg to lake Winnipeg and I know just what the conditions are like along the river. Before the construction of St. Andrew's locks the beach along the river to Winnipeg on both sides was stony, and there was absolutely no danger of erosion or of washout while the river was at normal height. But since the raising of the water by the construction of the locks the level has gone beyond the stony beach and consequently the banks along the river, particularly at certain points, are being rapidly washed away, so that the road on each side of the river is being damaged to a considerable extent. I wish to give the minister timely warning, because if this condition is allowed to continue the Dominion government will be responsible for a large sum of money in the shape of damages by the construction of St. Andrew's locks. I should like to see the government take action. This is a question of very great importance to the people of that district, but I do not wish to take up any further time of the House discussing it; on the contrary, I wish to do all I can to expedite the business of the House, because like many other western members I feel we have been a very long time here and so far as I can see we have accomplished very little in the interests of the country. I repeat, I am anxious to expedite the business of the House so that we may be able to get home as soon as possible. I do not mean to say that we should overlook any questions of importance, but during the six months we have been here we have wasted far too much time, and I certainly want to see the remaining business disposed of without further delay.

I want to ask the hon. minister another question. We have been working on the harbour at Big George's island, lake Winnipeg, for about six years. Will any portion of the item we are now voting or of the general item under dredging be devoted towards the completion of this harbour?

Mr. ROGERS: I should like to associate myself with those who have pointed out the necessity for the item in the estimates for the province of Manitoba. My only regret is that they are too small to meet the requirements. For example, I am sure that the $2,000 to be expended on the wharf at Dauphin will not be at all sufficient. The same remark applies to Gimli. The latter is a new vote. There is a great deal of traffic to and from Gimli, and it is necessary to provide for more improvements than those suggested in the vote. Then again the vote of $10,000 for harbours and rivers generally is far below what is necessary to meet our requirements. We have a harbour commission at Winnipeg, and as a result of the development of St. Andrew's locks a few years ago there is a good deal of tonnage coming up and down the river, necessitating a harbour of some kind. The absence of proper accommodation is a very great handicap to the development of Winnipeg, a city of 250,000 people. I am sure if the minister looks into the matter he will have no hesitation in making provision for improving the semblance of a wharf that we have there now. I hope when the supplementary estimates come down we shall find he has inserted at least $50,000 for this purpose. I am confident I can convince the minister of the pressing necessity for improving the wharf to such an extent that it will meet the requirements of the traffic that has developed there. I am glad to see an item for Victoria Beach, but it is too small. Last year the vote was $24,000. Has that been spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The $3,550 is required to complete the contract for the breakwater extension at Victoria Beach.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend will notice that the appropriations not required for 1926-27 amount to $71,000 odd. Has that all been expended?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Practically all. I will give my hon. friend the particulars:

| | Voted | Expended |
|---|---|---|
| Delto—protection work.. .. .. .. | $33,000 | $31,703 16 |
| Gimli harbour—jetty.. .. .. .. .. | 10,200 | 7,962 16 |
| Netley Cut—closing channel.. .. | 3,500 | 2,714 77 |
| Portage la Prairie—sewer extension.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7,200 | 7,188 06 |
| Red River—protection work.. .. | 18,000 | 11,105 59 |
| | $71,900 | |

Mr. ROGERS: There is nothing in the estimates this year for the protection of the Red river. That is most important.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No. We are advised that what takes place is due to natural causes, not to any work the government has put in the river.

Mr. ROGERS: Quite right; still the government has to take care of these difficulties as they arise.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If you attempt to take care of natural erosion you have a very large contract on your hands.

Mr. ROGERS: I should be glad if the minister would give us something to improve our landing in the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is quite necessary.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In corroboration of what was said by the right hon. leader of the opposition as to the difference between the votes before and after the general election, I would point out that this year the vote for Manitoba is only $21,150, while last year it was $112,500.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We are merely completing work undertaken last year or the year before.

Mr. MULLINS: What is the minister doing in regard to the Assiniboine river between Winnipeg and Portage la Prairie? Does he intend to use this $10,000 for the purpose?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Two years ago a large deputation from that area suggested the government should dyke and protect these lands. An investigation was made, and it was found the work would cost a very large sum of money, so much so that I think everybody was content to keep away from it. Last year surveys were made, and within the last few weeks it has been suggested that by the construction of certain drainage canals, I think three in all, we would give opportunity for the water to run off at an earlier date and thus relieve the situation Representations have been made to us by hon. members from Manitoba. I am not asking parliament anything for the work at the present time. I promised to have the matter checked up by the engineering department, and if the municipality and the provincial government are of the opinion that this work would give relief to the community, I think I can recommend the federal government to co-operate. But I do not think the whole burden should be cast upon the federal government. There should be co-operation.

Mr. ROGERS: I agree with the minister that the whole burden should not be placed upon the Department of Public Works, and I assure him now that he can depend upon the co-operation both of the local government and of the municipalities. Dyking is very much required in that district, because owing to the lack of it a great deal of damage is being done to the land. There is a strong feeling in the matter, and there is good reason why some work should be done. I am quite sure the minister will get the support of the municipality for any estimate he brings down.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have suggested that the local authorities should be not only a party to the expenditure but should co-operate in it. We will try and work out something which will bring relief.

Mr. MULLINS: Is there no item in the estimates for dredging at Port Nelson?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. MULLINS: Is this the amount the minister intends for Port Nelson?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Port Nelson is under the Railway department. Whatever is being done is being done by that department.

Mr. HAY: Before the item carries I want to impress upon the minister that the erosion that has taken place along the bank of the Red river is not due to natural causes. In proof of that I may say that no money has been spent on account of any erosion of banks taking place north of St. Andrew's locks, between St. Andrew's locks and lake Winnipeg, a distance of something like thirty miles. When the water is at its normal height all the year round no erosion takes place; the banks are protected by the natural stony beach. But when the water has been raised by reason of construction to twenty feet above normal you can readily understand that there is no protection afforded by the stony beach, because the water is lapping on the shore above. That is why the erosions take place. I do not know what the report of the engineer is, and I do not care. The matter is becoming serious, and the government must do something to protect certain points along the river. They have done so to some extent already. When the government built the St. Andrew's locks they realized that erosion would take place along the river and they made provision to protect the bank at many points by riprapping the stone. These points therefore are guarded, but there is erosion at other points not protected. The condition is getting worse every year; as much as thirty feet of roadway have been washed out through the parish of St. Andrew's north of Winnipeg. I hope the government will put something in the supplementary estimates to prevent the erosion taking place along the river.

Mr. MULLINS: I cannot understand why only $21,500 out of $120,000 was expended under that item. Was it because there was an election on the 29th of October that there was a reduction in the appropriation for Manitoba? There is an amount of $300,000 provided for Quebec, and in other places large amounts. In Manitoba we have only $21,500 spent. I cannot understand it, and the people of Manitoba will not understand it when it is brought to their attention. The minister should give a little consideration to that.

Mr. HOWDEN: In reference to dyking and draining, up to the present it has been impossible to get the government of Manitoba to undertake anything at all in the matter of dyking the Assiniboine river.

Mr. MANION: Why not put in a good government?

Mr. HOWDEN: Perhaps we will. Up to the last three weeks the government of Manitoba has been approached with regard to dyking the Assiniboine river and draining certain low areas. but not only have they not seen their way clear to take any action in the matter, but they have not agreed to join hands in relieving these conditions.

Mr. MULLINS: It is not part of my constituency, but I know it very well. There are two or three little islands in the Assiniboine river that block the river and hold the ice back A large number of settlers are practically ruined by the overflow of water from the Assiniboine river, and the minister should in fairness to that province do something to give these settlers redress.

Mr. HAY: With respect to the completion of the harbour on Big George island in lake Winnipeg, is there any appropriation made?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is nothing in the estimates for that work. I understand there has been some dredging going on for the last year. I have no information, but there is nothing in the estimates for it. We have later on an amount for dredging in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. I imagine that in that item we will find an estimate there taking care of the works in Manitoba. My hon. friend will realize there are not a great many public works or wharves; probably they are not as pressing as they may be later on as the country settles. Last year we undertook a considerable amount of work, as we did the year before. The estimates this year will largely clear up the work undertaken during the last two or three years.

Mr. HAY: Big George harbour is very important.

Item agreed to.

British Columbia—Beaver Point—Wharf repairs, $2,500.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Any existing contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Item agreed to.

Blubber bay—Wharf, $3,300.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Where are these wharves?

Mr. KING (Kootenay:) In the constituency of Alberni, on Vancouver island.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Comox-Alberni?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How much has Comox-Alberni got in this vote?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not know. I have not checked it that way.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Would not that be a wise thing to do? I should think after the efforts of the hon. member he should get suitable recognition, both he and Moses and Jeremiah. That trio I think should get real recognition. This is the first recognition. Is there an existing contract for the work at Blubber bay?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was that contract let?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In October, 1925.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Who is the contractor?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): R. Bumstead, of Vancouver. His tender was for $5,849, and the highest tender was $10,924.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: He seems to be much more reasonable than the other chap.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I do not know that I can qualify as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni can to obtain support from the government, but on the ground of justice and fair play I am sure that I can. I just want to say this on this item of repairs. Speaking in a general way, and that is the only way in which I can speak, I think the fact has been established that in the last six or seven years the water level of lake Ontario has fallen pretty nearly 4 feet, and in consequence of that lower level difficulties are met with in several of the small harbours. It is up to this government or to any government to meet the conditions which have been brought about by this lowering of the water level. The government will have many appeals made to them for dredging at these places, which appeals should receive most careful and favourable consideration, because the conditions have been changed by this lowering of the water level. At many places that are dependent, for instance, on coal the vessels cannot get into the wharf without lightering a considerable portion of their cargo on account of the low water. I merely want to put myself on record from this side of the House as saying that in my judgment the government should make generous provision in the supplementary estimates to meet these conditions which have been brought about by the lowering of the water levels on the lakes. They are not responsible for that lowering of the water level. To what extent the Chicago diversion is responsible I am not prepared to say, but it is the duty of this government or of any other government to meet the situation fairly, and so far as I am concerned, speaking from this side of the House, I am prepared to give very generous consideration to supplementary estimates brought in with the intention of meeting those changed conditions.

Mr. MALCOLM: I am very glad indeed to hear the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington speak on this subject. From the main estimates there have been excluded a great many small requests for grants at small ports on the Georgian bay and lake Huron, the point on the Great Lakes most affected by this lowering of the water level. In many of these small harbours the people have only one way of getting their products out. At several points on the west side of the Georgian bay where there used to be 10 feet of water—and in some cases 12 feet of water was arranged for by governments in days gone by—the water is now down to 6 or 7 feet, and it is absolutely impossible to get even a small boat in. I want to join with the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington in impressing on the minister the necessity of meeting these several requests made by different places on the Georgian bay. The votes that are requested are not large in total, but they mean a great deal to the individual settlements. I hope these requests will be looked after.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): We are getting very close to the end of the session, and surely the supplementary estimates must be almost, if not quite, complete. Would it not be better if we had some idea of what is going to be brought down in the supplementary estimates when we are passing the main estimates? I have heard of certain cases where votes have already been promised in the supplementary estimates. There is nothing in these estimates to indicate what is coming down later, and consequently they do not give one a fair idea as to what is really being done, or as to the expenditure that may be expected during the coming year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I can assure my hon. friend that the supplementary estimates are being developed, and, indeed, they are now before the government for consideration. I am hopeful that they will be brought down at a very early date, so far as the estimates of this department are concerned, and I believe that is true of all the departments.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): It would save a good deal of time and be much more satisfactory, now that we are nearing, as we hope at least, the close of the session, if we knew what was really in the mind of the government with regard to these various estimates.

Mr. HAY: I trust that provision will be made in the supplementary estimates for the safeguarding of the banks of the Red river at points which I have already brought to the notice of the government. The fact that the government have already done some work in connection with those banks, on the advice of their engineers, shows that they appreciate that they are responsible for the erosion that is taking place. It is a matter of the utmost importance to the settlers along the Red river, as well as to the municipal councils on both sides of the river, because the councils will be called upon to replace the roads that are washed away, and that is not their business. It is because the government has not taken action to safeguard those roads and property along the river that the water rose to 20 feet south of the locks.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would hesitate to commit the government or to recommend to the House that we should place any large sum in our estimates for river bank protection. Every individual case must be considered on its merits. You have first the owner of the property; he is primarily interested, and if protection is necessary he should do something himself. Then there are the local authorities, then the provincial government, and lastly the Dominion government, and if there is a case that should be considered it should come up through these channels to the Dominion government rather than go down from the Dominion government through those channels.

Mr. HAY: If the work was done in the near future it would cost very little, because the rock is easily obtainable near Selkirk.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I shall be glad to have inquiries made.

Mr. MURPHY: Can the minister tell us the total amount that will be in the supplementary estimates for harbours and rivers?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not that here, nor in my mind. The supplementaries have been running from three to four or five million dollars per year; I am speaking only of the time we have been in office, because we have been keeping them down pretty well, as my hon. friend from West York, I know will agree.

Mr. MURPHY: Would the minister say it would be about the same amount this year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I could not say, but the expenditures have been pretty well controlled. In 1924-25 the total estimate was $18,639,000; 1925-26, $17,754,000; in 1912-13, $18,880,000. In 1913-14 some forty-eight millions was voted for public works, and so on. The amount varies from year to year.

Item agreed to.

Columbia river, below Burton—bank protection, $4,000.

Columbia river at Revelstoke—bank protection, $7,000.

Mr. FRASER: The minister made a statement in regard to the protection of the banks of rivers. I should like to know what is the policy of the department or the government in that regard. It was stated a few moments ago that the owner had a certain responsibility in the matter of protecting a river bank, and also the municipality. In the cases I have in mind there is no municipality; the only parties concerned are the owner and the Dominion government.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I tried to make clear to my hon. friend a few moments ago that in the matter of river bank protection I thought the local owner who was primarily interested should move first, then the municipality or the provincial government, and finally the Dominion government. The vote for Columbia river protection is asked because we find it more profitable to protect the river bank at that point rather than allow the bank to fall in and have to dredge the material out. That is why we are expending this money at Burton. In the case of the work at Revelstoke, it was entered into years ago when there was navigation, and I think we are renewing some old works there. Generally speaking we are co-operating with the province, and there is a distinct advantage in so doing.

Mr. FRASER: Would the minister lay this down as a general principle: Provided the owner was willing to do a certain amount of work he would supplement that by a Dominion grant?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, each individual case must be reviewed and considered on its merits.

Mr. ESLING: Is not the work of dredging on the Columbia river south of Revelstoke a continuous matter? There is a very swift current there, and therefore I imagine the work must be practically continuous.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend will know that Revelstoke and Golden are in what is known as the railway belt. Years ago the government did spend money at Revelstoke. We asked for an appropriation last year, but we did not disburse it. During the season our engineer reported that he thought the river would go so far and then change its course again. He thought that perhaps the danger point had been reached and we might avoid the expenditure. But we are carrying the vote again this year. The question whether this money will be expended will depend upon the conditions found to exist next spring. Burton is on the Arrow lakes. My hon. friend, who is thoroughly familiar with the district, will know that at that point the channel narrows, and with the continued falling in of the banks we have a lot of material to dredge from year to year. It is in the hope of preventing this material from going into the river and not having to carry on the more expensive sort of dredging that this protection is being given.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): Are the rivers upon which this expenditure is being made all navigable rivers?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, to a great extent. As no doubt my hon. friend knows, Arrow lakes is a wonderful waterway in the mountains, and boats travel up and down it day by day. At Revelstoke the navigation of the river is possible; it certainly was carried on years ago. I do not believe the river is being navigated at the present time, but there will probably be a revival of navigation on it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): My reason for asking the question is that there are rivers in the district in which I live that are called navigable rivers and a little expenditure would protect the properties on them. Is the minister making large expenditures on rivers like the river above Winnipeg where navigation is not carried on?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, it is.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, to a very great extent.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): I did not mean that particular river.

Mr. ROGERS: You are thinking of Belle river.

Mr. ARMSTRONG: But there are other rivers which the minister has been providing money for which I do not think are navigable. However, if he says so that is all right.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was that contract let?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): For the one at Burton?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The contract was let in October, 1925, to Mr. Green, of Nelson.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh, I see, that is another repeat, is it not? The same date. Is there any contract for the other Columbia river item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, we have not let the contract. No work has been done there.

Item agreed to.

Comox—Wharf repairs, $1,100.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is that in the same constituency?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is in the constituency of Comox-Alberni.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That goes with Blubber bay?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was that contract let, or has any contract been entered into?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to provide for repairs. The work has not yet been contracted for.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will it be done by day work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We shall probably call for tenders.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The money has been spent in the meantime; it was spent in 1925?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Oh, no.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No work done in 1925? What was the hon. gentleman doing?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The vote we are asking for here is for wharf repairs at Comox. The details are as follows:

|---|---|
| Six untreated approach bearing piles at $30 | $180 00 |
| Decking approach | 588 00 |
| Repairing lower portion of sway bracings | 213 28 |
| Contingencies | 110 72 |

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I notice there was a vote last year of $2,800. Has that money been preserved carefully, or was it spent last year during the elections on day labour? I shrewdly suspect it was.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): A contract for the renewal of piling was awarded last year to Mr. Greenlees, Vancouver, the contract price being $1,910.78.

10 p.m.

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was that contract let?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In May, 1925.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That was earlier?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Those are two bull's eyes for the hon. gentleman who represents the constituency?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Courtenay river—dredging, $25,500.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The member representing the constituency was after larger game that time, was he not? Is not this in the same constituency?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is in the constituency of Comox-Alberni, a very wonderful constituency.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It must be.

Mr. ROBB: Well represented.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh, yes, it seems to be too well represented. Is there an existing contract for that? What is the last contract there?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There was a contract made last year with the Arnett Dredging Towing and Salvage Company for the removal of 37,932 cubic yards, at a cost of $6,448. It is proposed to extend the work up the river. The expenditure under the new contract was $16,408. This is to provide for the deepening of the channel of Courtenay river from its mouth to the town of Courtenay, a distance of some 5,300 feet. In discussing this item last year I endeavoured to show the House that Courtenay is one of the principal farming districts on Vancouver Island. The Courtenay river runs through the town, and I found when visiting there in 1924 a desire on the part of the citizens to have the river channel so improved that they could have a boat which was being used by their association for the transportation more particularly of their farm products to the larger markets of Powell River and Vancouver at any stage of the water. It is to improve the channel from the mouth of Courtenay river to the town of Courtenay that this appropriation is being made.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Was $6,000 spent last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, at the mouth of the river.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How does it appear as if there were $17,500 spent last year? The vote last year was $35,500 and there is a revote of $18,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I did not go far enough; I was diverted from what I was saying. I was speaking of the dredging contract of the Arnett company of $6,400.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was that contract entered into?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): June 25, 1925. In addition to that $4,950 was spent for 45 days by the dredging company for other work.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In extension of their contract.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When did they get that little extension?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Late in the season.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I wonder about when they got the extra $5,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the date, but I imagine it would be on in the season.

Mr. NEILL: After the election.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How does that statement compare with the records of the department?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There was further dredging involving the removal of 9,000 cubic yards of sand and gravel authorized on the 9th January, 1926.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is the hon. gentleman quite sure of that?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I had an idea that the government at that time said that they were not functioning. That was before that vote came along.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, they were.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: So the government were functioning all the time?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What about existing contracts?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They are all cleaned up.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: So we are going to have a new contract for $25,500?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Esquimalt—old dry dock—to provide for payment of repairs performed by Messrs. P. Lyall and Sons Construction Company, Limited, with interest thereon at 5 per cent, $5,262.84.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the idea of the interest there?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount had been earned on October 1, 1924. The cost of the work was $4,895.67. The interest from October 1, 1924 to March 31, 1926 is $367.17 making a total of $5,262.84.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was the reason for the delay in payment? As a general rule interest is never allowed on government payments, as my hon. friend knows.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think what happened was this: A ship was being built in the old dry dock in Victoria. She came into contact with the walls and there was certain damage. An arrangement was made with the P. Lyall Company to repair this damage, and this is an adjustment of that account.

Item agreed to.

Edgewood wharf—repairs, $4,200.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where is Edgewood?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is on the Arrow lakes in the constituency of West Kootenay. This is to renew the superstructure of the wharf.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That will be a new contract.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): New work.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It has not been let yet.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Item agreed to.

False creek—dredging, $50,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is for the removal of 121,790 cubic yards of sand, silt, debris and gravel in False creek. False creek, as my hon. friend knows, is in the centre of the city of Vancouver and many industries are located on its banks. It is proposed by means of this dredging to give access to those manufacturing properties in order that there may be protection in case of fire and also that they may have ingress or egress from or to the harbour.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Have we still the title, or is it in the hands of the provincial government?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The harbour commission are in control, but I think there has been certain litigation that would indicate that the ownership is in the provincial government. The hon. member for Burrard, who is in his seat, would probably be more familiar with recent litigation and the decision of the court than I.

Mr. CLARK: I do not think there is any litigation. I believe the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) could throw more light on the matter if he were in his seat. I think there has been a settlement as between the federal and provincial governments and the right to the harbour as regards False creek has been handed over to the province in return for other concessions.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not handed over to the province.

Mr. CLARK: The industrial island is certainly handed over to the province.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They are not collecting any rentals; those are collected by the harbour board and under their administration, I understand.

Mr. CLARK: The minister should certainly know the present position of the matter, but an agreement was announced by the Minister of Justice, I think, two years ago in this House. The harbour board may still be administering it on behalf of the provincial authorities.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think we have an arrangement with the provincial government whereby they continue to be in control and administer it and collect the rentals. The provincial government are not asserting their right.

Mr. CLARK: But the title is in the provincial government?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. CLARK: And it is administered by the harbour board on their behalf?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Fraser river—improvements, $50,000.

Mr. BARBER: Has the minister included in this item $3,000 for protection work south of the ferry landing at Rosedale? This matter was taken up by the late member in 1924, and the federal government promised the expenditure, the provincial and municipal authorities to provide a similar amount. Is that provided for in this estimate?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not in this estimate. There has been co-operation between the provincial government and the municipality, and I hope that parliament will later on supplement the Dominion contribution to the work.

Mr. BARBER: The work is completed. The provincial government have paid their portion and the municipality has borne its share of the cost as well as that of the Dominion government. There is a matter of $1,000 for a wing dam across the river at Agassiz, and I have a letter from the municipality of the district of Kent in which it is stated that the provincial government has agreed to grant $1,000 and the municipality another $1,000. They have appealed to the Dominion government for its contribution of an equal amount for the work across the river.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is no commitment on the part of the Dominion government, but we shall be glad to look into the matter and decide whether we are involved and how much we should contribute.

Mr. BARBER: I understand that the attention of the department has been called to the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway has dumped several trainloads of rock into the bed of the Fraser at Mission to strengthen a bridge at that point. This intereferes with navigation at certain seasons. What will be done to rectify it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I cannot recall having had the matter brought to my attention. I shall be glad to make inquiries.

Mr. BARBER: The suggestion was made that it might be better, instead of compelling the Canadian Pacific to remove the rocks, to negotiate with them with a view to having the bridge used for general traffic as well as for the purposes of the railway.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That suggestion has been considered, but there is not much likelihood of the company agreeing to the proposal. They state that the bridge is not capable of bearing the added traffic.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What is being done with regard to Woodward slough?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The money is required to carry out the work which was under construction last year at Woodward slough to control the river at that point, and also to deepen the channel.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What is the minimum depth of the channel at high tide between New Westminster and the gulf?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Between twenty-seven and twenty-nine feet.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Is twenty-seven the minimum?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: At what point?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): At Woodward slough and near the entrance to the Fraser.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What depth will be attained as a result of operations?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is difficult to say, but we hope to improve the channel so that there will be a depth of twenty-nine or thirty feet. It might go more than that, but that is what we hope to reach at any rate.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Your objective is thirty feet?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Will there be a depth of thirty feet to the gulf?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, if some other spot does not fill up.

Mr. McQUARRIE: But assuming that the other points remain as they are now?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There will be thirty feet.

Mr. McQUARRIE: These are the only places where you do not reach that depth?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are two important points, one at the mouth of the river, which has been under control in the last two or three years, although there has been some difficulty this winter, and the other at King Edward cut. There is also a section near New Westminster where a wing-dam has been put in and where some money will have to be spent. At present there is no serious difficulty there, but that part of the river is also under observation. There are these three points to be taken care of.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Is the department doing anything in connection with these three places?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: They are not provided for in this vote.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This vote will continue the work undertaken last year at Woodward slough, which is of importance, but other sections of the river are also under consideration.

Mr. McQUARRIE: But it is not included in this vote?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Is the department considering an extension to the jetty at the mouth of the Fraser river out to deep water?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Will that be attended to this year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I could not say.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I believe the minister has received representations from the harbour board and others in New Westminster, pointing out the necessity for immediate action in this connection. Are those representations receiving consideration?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The minister knows, of course, that there has been a very considerable increase in deep sea shipping at the port of New Westminster in recent years, and he knows also that great industrial development is taking place along the Fraser river.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Has he any details in regard to the shipping on the Fraser river, in the last year, say?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There has been an appreciable increase in the shipping from New Westminster down the Fraser river. Last year 150 seagoing vessels took cargo from Westminster. There was a large shipment of lumber from the town as well as an export of ores. In addition to that there was a movement of unfinished lumber products, box shooks, and other more or less manufactured lumber. There has been a marked increase over the last few years.

Mr. McQUARRIE: In those 150 vessels there were included a number of Canadian merchant marine boats?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The minister and the department might show a little more expedition in connection with the work in the Fraser river channel. I appreciate the fact that the minister and his deputy and the chief engineer realize that the business already being done and in prospect warrants substantial expenditures in order to provide a proper channel from New Westminster to the gulf. The minister knows that the improvement of this channel does not in any way operate against any other port in British Columbia. There are many miles of industrial sites available along the Fraser river which will have to be used in the very near future, and will be if the channel is made deep enough. At the present time the ships that come into New Westminster are not able to load to full capacity, and this of course prejudices the port to a certain extent. The minister is also aware that the Fraser river has been investigated by those interested in the shipment of grain through Pacific ports. The Saskatchewan Co-operative Company, the Grain Growers' Company, and other large elevator concerns have investigated the Fraser river with a view to locating elevators at or near New Westminster. This would effect a very important saving by the Canadian National Railways, amounting to about $13 a car, as against Burrard inlet at Vancouver. The people of New Westminster are asking that this work be taken up and handled efficiently and speedily so that the opportunities which are now presenting themselves for the development of the port may be taken advantage of. I do wish to impress upon the minister the necessity of speeding up the work on the Fraser river and finishing the improvement at the mouth of the river, which all authorities agree will tend to increase the depth of water in the harbour and the channel.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Everyone who is familiar with shipping on the Fraser river realizes the advantage of the route. We have been advancing the project under the advice of the technical men of the department, and I am satisfied my hon. friend will agree that a marked improvement has taken place in the river, so much so that the shipping has quadrupled in the last three or four years. The Fraser river needs to be carefully studied before we undertake to control it. If we advance step by step and let the river assist in correcting the channel, I think we shall accomplish more than if we rush in and attempt extensive works involving large expenditures. I heartily endorse the policy of the engineering branch to proceed cautiously.

Mr. FRASER: Is any part of that vote for the upper Fraser river?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No. Any requirements for the upper Fraser river, unless mentioned especially, would come out of the general vote for harbours and rivers.

[Mr. McQuarrie.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What about contracts there?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This work will be done under a new contract. The old contract has been closed out. The date of the old contract was October 25 last.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That was nicely before the election.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It would not have any effect on the election.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Of course not!

Item agreed to.

Fraser river—Lower—operation of snag boat, $30,000.

Mr. BARBER: The snag boat on the lower Fraser river operates as far as Chiliwack. I would point out to the minister the importance of keeping the river clear of snags and constructing wing dams. These dams do away with considerable dredging, and that is the reason I have urged in connection with the operation of the snag boat the construction also of a wing dam on the Agassiz side. There are already three on the Rosedale side, and another wing dam on the other side will tend to keep the river in the centre, and thus save the considerable dredging expenses of previous years.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This vote will be entirely for operating the snag boat. Wing dams would be another item.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Is there anything on the government programme for the north arm of the Fraser river?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think we have in mind some dredging of the north arm by the departmental dredge. We will come to that shortly.

Item agreed to.

Fulford Harbour—Wharf repairs, $2,500.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is a new vote, is it not?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is in the Nanaimo constituency. This is to renew a portion of the wharf approach, the superstructure and the freight shed. It is in the island district between Vancouver and Victoria.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is any work going on now?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers generally—repairs and improvements, $65,000.

Mr. STIRLING: Does this include any work on the Okanagan river?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The only work we have on the Okanagan river is the maintenance of the dam at Penticton. We spent some money there two years ago, and I do not think there is necessity for further expenditure this year, but if there is it will come out of this vote.

Mr. STIRLING: There is an item included in the estimates for the control dam?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think not.

Mr. STIRLING: Is the minister quite satisfied that the control dam is in a stable condition?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I understand so.

Mr. FRASER: Is anything included there for the clearing of the river north of Stuart lake, connecting Stuart lake with Tacla lake? There was some money spent on that.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think two years ago.

Mr. FRASER: Is there not a recommendation as to that?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think there is a recommendation asking for further expenditures. There is no provision here.

Mr. FRASER: What about Stuart lake wharf?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think that was completed last year.

Mr. FRASER: That was Fraser lake. I am speaking of Stuart lake wharf.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, there is no item after that.

Mr. FRASER: You have a requisition for that.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I was thinking of Fraser lake. I think that was completed last year.

Mr. FRASER: Fraser lake wharf was completed and this is for a similar wharf at Stuart lake further north.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will make inquiry.

Mr. TOLMIE: Is a portion of this money to be expended in Victoria harbour?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, I think some work is to be done in Victoria harbour from our dredging vote or special vote.

Mr. TOLMIE: Nothing about any work on Hospital Rock?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have it under consideration. It is not in the main estimates.

Mr. TOLMIE: I might call attention to the fact that during a foggy day last year one of the big steamers got stuck on that rock.

Mr. BARBER: Is there anything in the vote in reference to the Coquitlam river? You will remember that this was taken up with the department by the board of trade of Coquitlam in February, 1925. I have a resolution from the board of trade which reads as follows:

Copy of a resolution passed by the Port Coquitlam Board of Trade at a meeting held on February 27, 1925.

Whereas the Coquitlam river is a very grave menace in its present state, and whereas the said river has washed away the homes and property of some of our citizens, and whereas the said river is constantly overflowing its banks and spreading over our city, and whereas numerous log jams and bars have formed in the river bed causing the river to keep changing its course;

Be it resolved that this Board of Trade earnestly request the Dominion Government to take such measures as may be necessary to confine the said river to its own channel.

This is a matter I would like to press, and I hope the department has it under consideration.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am familiar with the Coquitlam river. In 1923-24, in cooperation with the provincial government, we did some work there. I have not been convinced that the Dominion government should spend further money at that point. True, they had bad floods and overflowing of the river some years ago, but I understand the work done in 1923 and 1924 has given great relief, and there has not been any serious damage since.

Mr. FRASER: I understand you have a vote of $25,000 for the upper Peace river, from Hudson Hope up Peace river. I think the engineer reported that there was to be a vote of that amount included in the estimate.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not find it here.

Mr. FRASER: What is the situation there in regard to the improvement of the Peace river?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That country is being opened up. Pioneers are going in, and there have been suggestions that we should provide accommodation that they may be able to get in and out of the district. But there is nothing in these estimates relating to that.

Mr. FRASER: The minister is aware that there is a coal mine operating in there and shipping coal down the river. The capacity of the mine at the present time is 100 tons per day, and during the season of navigation the market is entirely down the river. The river is open for navigation for some 300 miles, except for 15 miles, and I think there are only a few points where work will be required to make the river navigable for the whole distance. A substantial quantity of coal is used by the inhabitants in the district along the river. I understand the matter has been under consideration for the last three years, and promises have been made that attention would be given to it. The people there are anticipating a vote, an appropriation, which I thought would be included in this item. Will the minister put it in the supplementaries, or at least give it further consideration?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I shall be glad to give it consideration. When the hon. member spoke of it first I did not think he was referring to Hudson Hope. I am not sure that we have had any direct representations regarding the matter.

Mr. FRASER: The minister has had a report from Mr. Doncaster.

Mr. BARBER: Another matter taken up with the department some time ago, in regard to which I do not see provision in the estimate, is in relation to the Minnekahda wharf on the Pitt river. This wharf was constructed by the Dominion government and has been repaired from time to time by the municipality. The reason given by the government for not repairing it now is that the municipality during each season unloaded a certain amount of road material there. I believe the department will reconsider their decision not to repair. The wharf is used by a large number of farmers and people of the other districts who do not pay taxes in that municipality, therefore it is unfair to ask the municipality to bear the full cost. This is only a very small amount. It requires some caps and joists in the centre of the wharf where they have been broken. I appeal to the minister to consider this and place an amount in supplementary estimates. As I have said, only a few hundred dollars would be required. Considering the fact that the municipality have from year to year repaired the planking and other parts of the wharf, they thought it would not be out of the way to ask the Dominion government to replace the piles and make the necessary repairs.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think the matter is receiving attention. There is no doubt that the municipality, in the use of the wharf, has overloaded it and done certain damage. The suggestion has been made, I believe, that if the wharf was repaired there should be certain co-operation in the matter.

Item agreed to.

Port Clements—wharf repairs, $3,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Did we not do work there last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, there was a vote there last year of $6,600 and $6,655 was expended.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was the contract made?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): August 20, 1925.

Item agreed to.

Saanichton—renewal of float and wharf repairs, $2,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In connection with all the items on the rest of the page, no work was done?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think so. There may have been at Saanichton.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The estimate does not show anything.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, there was nothing.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Nothing in connection with the others, except a report and a speech by the hon. member.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It was reported on.

Item agreed to.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What about the appropriations not required for 1926-27?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will hand them to Hansard for insertion:

The CHAIRMAN: The next item is:

Harbours and rivers generally, $30,000.

Mr. FRASER: Would the minister give a list of the items under harbours and rivers generally?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is not known yet. These are small items that come up from time to time. This is the item we discussed this afternoon. It is to take care of unforeseen expenditures arising during the present year, ranging from two or three hundred dollars up to two thousand dollars. During the season the engineer may report that a work at Ladner, for instance, requires an expenditure of five or six thousand dollars. That would be met out of this vote.

Mr. FRASER: There is a situation at the city of Prince George in connection with the Nechacco river in regard to which I think the minister has a certain amount of information. Is he in a position to say whether favourable consideration will be given to an expenditure at that point?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In connection with the flooding of the river banks at Prince George, there have been requests made to the Public Works department, but I think if my hon. friend will investigate he will find that this is largely a railway matter. Railway lands are involved as well as private property, and as yet we have not seen our way clear to undertake work at that point.

Mr. McGIBBON: There has been a request made by the navigation companies on the Muskoka lakes for repair of the breakwater at Bracebridge, which has got badly out of repair. Can the minister say whether those repairs will be made this year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think that is being considered.

Item agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS: It is getting late, and I think the minister is tired, as we all are. I am sure the Minister of Finance is very anxious to get home, he looks so tired. We have done a good day's work, and I think we can promise the minister that we will do a better day's work to-morrow if he would consent to the committee rising now.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If it is the desire of the committee, I will move that we rise and report progress.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I was not present when the items for Prince Edward Island were being passed a few nights ago, and I would like to ask the minister now with respect to the wharf at Georgetown in that province. Strong representations have been made by the Potato Growers' Association at Georgetown with regard to the necessity of frost proofing the warehouse there. This is not an ordinary expenditure. It is an expenditure that would appeal to the people of Prince Edward Island as a whole. Georgetown is the one late port for Prince Edward Island; it is more valuable than any other port for late shipping. The warehouse has been rebuilt at considerable expense during the past two or three years, but it is of very little value, comparatively speaking, unless it is frost proofed. The reason for that is that the growing of seed potatoes is becoming quite a large industry in Prince Edward Island, and a great many of these potatoes go by steamer to the southern United States, where they are required about the month of January. If we had that warehouse frost proofed it would be possible to load the potatoes on the steamers at Georgetown from two to four weeks later than at any other port in the province. They could go late in December to the southern states and be distributed direct to the growers for seed, thereby saving a great deal of money in the handling. This is a matter of very great importance to the province, and I would ask the minister if he has considered it, and whether there will be an item in the supplementary estimates this year for that purpose.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am familiar with the situation at Georgetown. The government have reconditioned and renewed a very good wharf at that point, and have improved the shed accommodation. It is true that we have not made that shed frost proof, as I think it should be, for the accommodation of the farmers in the handling of their potatoes, but I would point out that at the present time the railway is on the narrow gauge. We understand that the railway is changing to the broad gauge, and once that is accomplished I think we will be justified in spending some money on a potato warehouse at Georgetown. But until that is done I do not think we would.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): That standardization work is going on, and the information we have now is that it will be completed by about September this year. So that if the warehouse is to be made available for shipping this season it would be necessary to have an item in the supplementary estimates this year so that the work could be gone on with now.

There is just one other matter to which I wish to refer, and that is what is known as Lewis point pier at Cardigan. It is the only public wharf in that harbour. Nothing has been done to it for eight or ten years and it has got now into such a state that it is of no value for shipping. There are three private wharves there, but their owners are not keeping them up to any great extent. It is important that the government should consider wharf improvement at that point. This wharf has got into such a bad state of disrepair that it would cost a lot of money to repair it, and my suggestion would be that one of the other private wharves, which are better situated, could be bought very cheaply, and the Lewis point pier might be removed. One of these other wharves could be obtained for about four or five thousand dollars, possibly less, and it would give all the accommodation required. I have no doubt that the minister has a report from his engineer on this matter, and I would urge that if at all possible some item be put in the estimates for repairing the present wharf or acquiring one of the others.

[Mr. Macdonald (Kings).]

AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION COMMITTEE

CATTLE INDUSTRY

Mr. W. F. KAY (Brome-Missisquoi) presented the fourth report of the select standing committee on Agriculture and Colonization as follows:

Your committee has had under consideration the order of reference respecting the cattle industry, with power to examine into the whole situation, and to recommend such measures as would, in the opinion of this committee, be beneficial to the further development of that industry, and after consideration of this matter, recommend to the House the following resolutions as passed separately by this committee at a meeting held this day, namely:

(1) That this committee recommend that a Canadian representative at Washington should be appointed at once.

(2) That this committee recommend that the government enter into negotiations with the United States looking toward the entry of Canadian cattle into the United States market on more favourable terms than at present.

(3) That this committee recommend that the Canadian customs tariff against the United States cattle should be placed on the same rate and same specific basis as the United States tariff against Canadian cattle, with a provision that if the United States tariff duties be removed or reduced, the Canadian duties would thereupon be removed or reduced to the same extent.

CUSTOMS INQUIRY

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (St. Henri) presented the third and final report of the special committee appointed to investigate the administration of the Department of Customs and Excise as follows:

The Special Committee appointed to investigate the administration of the Department of Customs and Excise, beg leave to present the following as their Third and Final Report:

1. On the 5th February 1926 the House of Commons adopted the following resolution:

That a Special Committee of this House, consisting of nine members, be appointed forthwith to investigate the administration of the Department of Customs and Excise and alleged serious losses to the public treasury because of inefficiency or corruption on the part of officers of the Department and others, and that such investigation extend back over such period of time as the Committee may decide and have regard to all matters affecting the prevention of smuggling, the prosecution of offenders, the seizure, storage and disposal of smuggled goods, or goods seized for purposes of excise or other taxes, the appraisal of goods for revenue purposes, the collection of customs and excise duties, the knowledge of ministers or officials of offences or irregularities affecting the public service in said department, the efficiency of the administration thereof, and the necessity of safeguarding the public revenue and the public treasury, and that such Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to adjourn from place to place, to print the evidence taken before the Committee, and to report from time to time.

2. By a subsequent resolution the Committee was constituted as follows:

Messrs. C. W. Bell, K.C. (Hamilton West), Hon. R. B. Bennett, K.C., D. Donaghy, K.C., A. J. Doucet, J. C. Elliott, K.C., D. M. Kennedy, P. Mercier, K.C. (St. Henri), E. C. St. Pere, Hon. H. H. Stevens.

Mr. Paul Mercier, K.C. was elected Chairman. Mr. Elliott having been appointed a Minister of the Crown and by resolution of the House of Commons Mr. William T. Goodison was appointed to the vacancy so created, on March 15th 1926.

3. Your Committee sat from 9th February to 11th June, held 115 sittings, and heard 224 witnesses. Mr. R. L. Calder, K.C. was appointed Counsel to the Committee and Mr. R. D. Tighe, Assistant Counsel, both appointments being ratified by the House. Certain interested parties were represented by Counsel on a number of the hearings, by leave of the Committee.

4. Notwithstanding the time devoted by the Committee to the taking of evidence the matters referred to it by the order of reference could not be completely reviewed. Much evidence was taken in connection with the Port of Montreal: the situation at Beebe and Rock Island, Quebec: and the operation of distilleries. The committee have also with some detail examined into liquor smuggling in the Maritime Provinces. The committee have examined in a general way the conduct of business at certain customs ports of Ontario. The committee have not dealt, except incidentially, with the Middle West and the Pacific Coast. To a degree, therefore, this report is incomplete and suggestive rather than final. Full audit and extra-departmental investigation would be profitable in improving the service and recovering a large amount of revenue.

5. Since 1897 the Customs Department has been under the control of a responsible Minister. In 1918 the Department of Excise, which had been a separate department of the Public Service since the year 1868 was amalgamated with the Customs Department and in 1920 and 1924 respectively the amalgamated departments were charged with the collection of sales and Income Taxes. The administration of these amalgamated departments is a serious task. The Customs frontier between the United States and Canada is a very long one and the position and number of bridges and highways crossing the boundary together with the extended line of sea coast rendered the suppression of smuggling difficult. The adoption by the United States of the Eighteenth Amendment has increased the difficulty, because it has made the incentive to illegally convey intoxicating liquor to the United States very great, and with the mass production of many products in that country there is a correspondingly great incentive to illegally import such products into Canada. In the year 1925 smuggling assumed such large proportions that a number of business men made representations to the Government, in consequence of which an Act, Chapter 39 of the Statutes of 1925, was passed making smuggling an indictable offence, where the goods were of the value of more than $200 and the penalties incurred by such smuggling increased.

6. The evidence submitted to the Committee leads to the general conclusion that for a long time the Department of Customs and Excise had been slowly degenerating in efficiency and that the process was greatly accelerated in the last few years. Apparently the Hon. Jacques Bureau, then Minister of Customs, failed to appreciate and properly discharge the responsibilities of his office and as a result there was a lack of efficient, continuous and vigorous control of subordinates by the Headquarters Staff at Ottawa.

7. The procedure provided by the Customs Act in the matter of Customs seizures is as follows: Upon making a seizure the Collector or Seizing Officer forthwith reports the circumstances of the case to the Commissioner of Customs (Section 174). Thereupon the Commissioner notifies the owner or claimant of the thing seized, stating the reasons for the seizure, and calls upon such owner or claimant to furnish within thirty days any evidence he may desire to submit. (Section 175). After the expiration of thirty days or sooner, if evidence is forthcoming on the part of the owner or claimant, "the Commissioner may consider and weigh the circumstances of the case and report his opinion and recommendation thereon to the Minister." (Section 176). The Minister thereupon either gives his decision and states the terms upon which the thing seized or detained may be released or the penalty or forfeiture remitted or refers the decision to the Court (Section 177). The Committee finds that this procedure was not followed. Although, as a rule, the facts are correctly recited in the summary submitted to the Minister, the opinion is not infrequently at variance with such facts, and the recommendation is so drawn as to elicit a decision to which such facts are repugnant. This discrepancy is accounted for by the fact that the report upon the evidence was in many instances preceded by a conference, and the recommendation was dictated by an intelligent anticipation of the Minister's wishes in the premises.

8. The Committee is of opinion that the administrative duties of the Department of Customs and Excise should be left to the Executive Officers of the Department. Where the value of the goods or the amount in question is $200 or more the procedure should be automatic and not subject to Ministerial interference or control. Where the goods in question are under $200 the case would fall under the heading of "Petty Offences" and the Minister's discretion might there find a proper field for its exercise.

9. The Committee finds that theft of motor vehicles has frequently been associated with smuggling on the Quebec Customs frontier. The procedure followed by the Department in dealing with cars stolen and smuggled has resulted in an advantage to the thief and receiver as against the owner of the car.

In the opinion of the Committee the procedure might be modified so as to provide that when the owner has established his title to the satisfaction of the department the car should be forthwith released to him, under bonds to re-export it, and upon payment of charges for storage, etc., such release to be made at a time and place of which notice should be given to the person in whose possession it was at time of seizure in order that he may take such legal proceedings as are competent to him to assert any claim thereto or lien thereupon.

10. The Committee find that it is the common practice of the Department to grant clearances to vessels wholly or partly laden with liquor for the United States, or allegedly bound for a foreign port, but admittedly sailing to "rum rows," and that false landing certificates have been produced to obtain cancellation of bonds given for foreign export of cargoes so cleared.

The Committee further finds that a strong presumption is raised that some proportion of the liquor so shipped and cleared finds its way back into Canada for consumption. The Committee, therefore, recommend that excise and sales tax be levied on all Canadian made intoxicating liquors released from bond, no matter where they are carried and consumed, and that duty and sales tax be levied on all alcoholic liquors entering Canada, whether in bond or otherwise, irrespective of their ultimate destination.

Doubts have been cast upon the sufficiency of existing legislation to prohibit or authorize regulations prohibiting the illegal export of intoxicating liquors to the United States. To the extent to which such legislation may be insufficient the Committee recommends that it be amended. The Committee further recommends that, as soon as possible, regulations be made to prohibit clearances being granted to vessels carrying liquor as cargo, sailing from a Canadian Port to a United States Port, such regulations to make an exception in favour of liquor being imported into the United States in accordance with the laws of that Country.

11. Subsection 4 of Section 171 of the "Excise Act" provides that "no spirits subject to excise which have not been warehoused for at least two years shall be entered for consumption". By reason of special circumstances arising out of the War, Parliament on the 1st day of July, 1920, Chapter 52, 10-11 George Fifth, Section 4, amended the section by adding thereto a proviso empowering the Governor General to suspend the operations of the said subsection during such period or periods as he may deem necessary. From sessional paper No. 84, 1926, it appears that by Order in Council the following distilleries have been permitted to enter for consumption the spirits manufactured during the period of nine months or less from the date of distillation:

Gooderham & Worts, P.C. 641, April 17th, 1924.

Distillery Corporation Limited, P.C. 1646, September 14th, 1925.

Manitoba Refinery Company (Ltd), P.C. 1903, October 20th, 1925.

Consolidated Distilleries of Manitoba, P.C. 29, January 7th, 1926.

In the opinion of the committee such unmatured spirits are unfit for human consumption and their release is injurious to the public health. The committee therefore recommends that Section 4 of Chapter 52, 10-11 George Fifth, be repealed at the present session of parliament and that the orders in council issued thereunder be, thereupon forthwith, cancelled. The committee further recommends that the technical regulations now governing the denaturing of alcohol be revised by competent experts so as to render all classes of denatured alcohol non-potable, and that where the Regulations under Section 171 of the Excise Act provide for the warehousing of potable liquors they shall provide for the maturing of such liquor in wood for a period of at least two years.

12. The committee recommends that the following firms and companies should be proceeded against in the proper forum to recover the sums, if any, now owing by them to the Crown:

John Gaunt Company.

Dominion Distillery Products and Associated enterprises.

B. B. Glove Co.

Jas. A. Gilmore Co.

Globe Suspender Co.

Perfecto Garment Co.

Peerless Overall Co.

R. & G. Manufacturing Co.

Reliable Garment Co.

Stanstead Manufacturing Co.

W. M. Pike & Sons.

Standard Manufacturing Co.

Telford Bros. Garment Co.

Telford & Chapman.

Jenkins Overall Co. Ltd.

Snag Proof Limited.

Rock Island Overall Co.

Alco Dress Co.

O. B. Earle Co.

Royal Cloak Co.

Miracle Dress Co.

Hollinger & Packer.

Klover Dress Co.

Poyaner Group of Companies.

Woollens Limited.

With reference to the distilleries, the committee has not had time to investigate them all. The committee recommends that a thorough audit and examination be made of the records and accounts of all the distilleries in respect of all matters relating to a loss of customs, excise and sales tax revenue.

13. The committee finds that the following officers have been delinquent in their duties and recommends that their services be dispensed with:

1. R. P. Clerk, Inspector of the port of Montreal.

2. A. E. Giroux, Superintendent of Customs and Excise, Montreal.

3. W Duval, Preventive Officer at Montreal.

4. John Landy, Customs Officer, Montreal.

5. Collector E. Brownlee, of Beebe, Quebec.

6. Marvin A. Sawyer, Customs Officer at Rock Island, and that in the interest of the public service arrangements should be made for the retirement of the following persons:

1. R. R. Farrow, Deputy Minister.

2. W. S. Weldon, Collector of Customs at Montreal.

3. Henry McLaughlin, Surveyor of Customs at the port of Montreal.

14. The committee recommends that the conduct of the officers at the port of Windsor, Ontario, and other important ports, should be further investigated and that the services of such of them as are found guilty of evasion of duty should be dispensed with.

15. The committee recommends that the evidence of J. A. E. Bisaillon given before this committee with reference to his bank account for the amount of $69,000 be transmitted to the Attorney-General for Quebec, for the purpose of comparison with the evidence given by him on the same point at preliminary inquiry at Quebec, P.Q., in the case of Rex vs Symons et al, and for such action by the said Attorney-General as the evidence may warrant; and further that the evidence in connection with the Morris Delage Motor Car case be transmitted to the said Attorney-General for such further action as the said evidence may warrant.

16. The committee recommends that for reasons of sound economy and increased efficiency there should be a reduction made in the number of ports of entry into Canada.

In support of this recommendation the committee would call attention to the following facts:

The United States has 270 customs ports of entry. The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland has 80 ports of entry. On the other hand, Canada has a total of 681 places at which customs revenue is collected.

17. For the prevention of smuggling and of other frauds a strong preventive force under a capable administrator is necessary, and the committee, therefore, recommends:

1. That the Preventive Service be re-organized under a Chief, possessed with the highest qualifications for such office, clothed with wide powers of initiative, direction and control.

2. That such Chief Preventive Officer be authorized to select his staff in consultation with the Civil Service Commission.

3. That the Chief Preventive Officer be authorized to organize within the Preventive Service a secret service force, with special training in criminal investigation work, which force shall be under the general executive direction of the Chief of the Preventive Service.

4. That Preventive Officers and persons authorized to act as Customs and Excise Officers be given power to arrest without a warrant persons found committing any act declared by the Customs and Excise Acts to be an indictable offence.

5. That in connection with Preventive Service work the R.C.M.P. services be used for Patrol Work on the border, and while so engaged they be given full powers as Customs Officers. Pending the reorganization of the Preventive Service the R.C.M.P. should be immediately detailed for Patrol Service on all important points on the Border.

18. The evidence adduced before the Committee disclosed two outstanding facts, namely—

First, the methods of appraisal are exceedingly careless and fail to safeguard the interests of the importer or the revenues of the Country from being defrauded by undervaluation, and

Secondly, persons appointed as appraisers are in many instances untrained in the branch to which they are appointed.

The Committee recommend that the appraisal branch be re-organized and that all appraisers be chosen because of their competency to estimate the values of the class of goods they are appointed to appraise.

19. The Committee recommends that in future the provisions of Sections 213 and 213a of the Customs Act, which provide for the removal of buildings within a hundred yards of the boundary which are made use of in smuggling operations, be strictly enforced.

The situation created by the location of Derby Line, Vermont, and Rock Island, Quebec, as brought to the attention of the Committee is of a grave nature, and they recommend that a bond be established in each factory in which bond goods imported from the United States shall be placed until released for manufacturing purposes, and that an officer be appointed to look after such bond at the owner's expense.

20. The Committee recommends that Schedule "C" Prohibited Goods, of the Customs Act, be amended to include merchandise which is marked in contravention of the Gold and Silver Marking Act. That Act provides for prohibition of the importation of articles improperly marked, but Customs Officers ordinarily are not acquainted with the provisions of the Act, and for this reason the Committee recommends the inclusion of the prohibition in schedule "C" of the Customs Act.

21. Where articles containing precious metals are seized and forfeited the Committee recommends that they be not sold in the open market, as at present, but should be melted down and disposed of as bullion.

22. The Committee recommends that the regulations governing the distribution of the proceeds of fines and forfeitures be revised and that more liberal treatment be accorded informers and seizing officers. The moieties granted seizing officers in respect of seizures made by them should not however, be distributed to such officers as each seizure is made. Such moieties should be paid into a special fund and periodically distributed to all the members of the Customs and Preventive Services.

23. The Committee recommends that in cases of commercial smuggling or under-valuation, where the offenders are known, they should at once be arrested and brought to trial with the utmost promptness. The Committee further recommends that the Department of Justice be requested to select at once capable and experienced Counsel in important centres, and retain them to act for the Department of Customs and Excise in all future cases.

24. The real solution of the difficulties at such points as Windsor, Niagara Falls, where traffic is heavy, and where a thorough examination of vessels and vehicles cannot be carried out, will be found in the discovery in advance by investigators of the secret service of the persons who make a practice of smuggling at these points, and their arrest when passing the Customs barrier. The Committee recommends that at bridges, ferries and main highways, where traffic enters Canada, in addition to the regular Customs supervision, vessels and vehicles should be searched at frequent, irregular and uncertain times. The uncertainty as to what vehicles will be examined, and as to when such examinations will be made, should operate as a strong deterrent of smuggling.

Your Committee recommend that such of the account books and other books and papers belonging to the firms mentioned in Clause Twelve of this Report, as may be necessary for use in any action that may be taken against the said firms, be retained by the House in order that they may be available if required.

Your Committee submit herewith for the information of the House, their Minutes of Proceedings and the Evidence taken by them.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask if we can depend upon action being taken on Monday with respect to this report, by way of motion to adopt or otherwise? So far as we are concerned we are prepared to go on to-day, but I recognize that we have not the right under the rules.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is only right, in connection with a matter of such importance, that we should know.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The reply first made by the chairman of the committee presents the position of the government at the moment. We are prepared to proceed on Monday if possible, but otherwise definitely on Tuesday. I have on the order paper a resolution with respect to external affairs which I have assured different members of the House would be taken up first thing on Monday. When that matter is concluded we are prepared to go on with this report. Before I knew when this report would be presented, I gave the assurance that this resolution would be the first order of business on Monday, but I can assure my right hon. friend definitely that we will at the latest go on with the report on Tuesday.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why not go on with the resolution this afternoon?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This afternoon will be taken up by supply. I might say to my right hon. friend that I think hon. members of this House will wish to read the report before beginning to debate it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I for one wish to consider it carefully, and I believe the House will be in a better position to debate it after having had ample opportunity of considering it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not even commenced to insist that we go on with the motion this afternoon, but this is a matter in which this side of the House is just as much interested as are hon. members opposite, and which indeed is as much under the control of this side of the House as it is under the control of my hon. friends opposite. The report itself is not a government presentation, and consequently we are entitled to know when it will come up.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my right hon. friend wants a definite time fixed without possibility of change I will say Tuesday, but if it will help to accommodate him to have the debate Monday evening, provided we finish this resolution, I am prepared to say we will be prepared to go on then.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is, we may go on Monday after the resolution is debated.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then I will let the Prime Minister know which day we prefer.

PEACE RIVER ELECTION

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE BY MR. KENNEDY

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. During the debate on the petition of J. A. Collins I considered that the ordinary proprieties demanded that I should absent myself from the chamber. To-day when reading Hansard I found the following statement by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) which appears in the second column of page 4630 of Hansard for June 16, 1926:

> I have heard rumours that the hon. gentleman will get the Chiltern Hundreds; that after he has served his day and generation through this section and done his full share to keep this government in office, he will get some nominal job in order that the seat may be vacated.

In view of that statement, and in view of the fact that I have been impressed by some of the arguments made in both debates, I think I ought to explain my position with regard to this contentious affair.

I deny absolutely the truth of any such rumour on which the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) may have based his statement. I have not been promised directly or indirectly anything, and I would consider it an insult to have any such proposition made to me. I would not accept anything if it were offered to me.

The petition under the Controverted Elections Act was duly filed by one Page, in the Supreme Court of Alberta. The charges in that petition are both serious and comprehensive, so serious that they appear to embrace every crime which it would be possible to commit under our election laws, so comprehensive that they include every method by which those crimes could be perpetrated. I naturally felt that I owed it to myself, to my constituents, and to this House of which I am a member, to disprove those charges, that is, the personal charges, and that is all I am interested in so far as the petition is concerned, and I considered that the proper place to do so was upon the trial of that petition.

A rumour was circulated some time ago that the petitioner was likely to withdraw his petition, but this could not be done without leave of the court, and even if the petitioner remained inactive, another person could be substituted for him. Immediately the rumour reached me, I instructed my solicitors that it was my intention to press the petition myself to trial, which attitude I had already indicated in my previous statement to this House.

It has been stated that by virtue of the provisions of section 91 of the Dominion Elections Act, no evidence could be given upon the hearing of the petition by voters as to whom they voted for. It is conceded that such is an accurate statement of the law. Such evidence was receivable and given in the criminal prosecution of Robb, when 110 parties testified that they voted at one poll for Collins, who actually received only 21 votes at that poll, so that if the evidence of each of them were true, Mr. Collins was deprived of 89 votes at that poll. It should, however, be borne in mind that the jury's verdict of guilty does not necessarily mean such to be the case. Robb was not accused of switching 89 votes, but merely of switching votes, no number naturally being mentioned, and if the jury had believed only one of these 110 witnesses, it would have been sufficient to justify their verdict.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. In my opinion the hon. member has gone far beyond his right already, but inasmuch as he conceives it to be his privilege to conduct a debate all alone by himself, when nobody has an opportunity to reply, I think it is my duty to intervene. Undoubtedly he has exceeded his privilege, and he reached the end of it when he denied the rumour which I stated here.

Mr. SPEAKER: On a question of privilege, when an hon. member rises in the House to give his personal explanation, he must confine himself to the question of privilege, and not go beyond the limits which are permissible under the rules. I would ask the hon. gentleman to state briefly what he has to say in denial but not to reopen this whole debate.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I ought to direct your attention to the circumstance that the hon. member who is now speaking absented himself from the House during the course of the debate which took place, and had no opportunity whatever of denying the statement made concerning himself at that time. I think my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) took full latitude when he was debating the motion before the House the other day, and I think he should now be prepared to allow the fullest latitude to the hon. member to state his position.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member absented himself, it is true, and rightly so, but his absenting himself from the debate was because of the same reason which even if there were no other, would prevent him speaking now. If he could absent himself from the debate when the matter ought to be discussed in order to debate it alone when it cannot be discussed, then, of course, the logic of the Prime Minister is right. I do not object at all to his denying anything which was said against him if he believes that anything said against him was untrue as a matter of fact, but beyond that he has absolutely no right to go. What is more it is so manifest he has no right that he knows it himself.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have been thirty years in parliament, and I will take my own experience on matters of privilege in connection with similar cases to the one which now occupies the attention of the House.

If the seat attributed to a member is put in question the member has to withdraw, under the rules of the House, when the matter is being discussed. That is the law of parliament. I was in a similar situation myself, five years ago, because the petitioner not having proceeded with his petition I had failed to resign within the legal delays from one seat after having been elected for two. When the question came before the House, under the rules I had to withdraw after I had made my statement.

In this case, the debate arose the day before yesterday on the petition of Collins. The hon. gentleman withdrew, as it was his duty to do; he also withdrew a few weeks ago when the first petition was under discussion. I now gather from the remarks made by the hon. gentleman that he complains of a certain statement made during his absence from the House by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen), namely, that there was a rumour to the effect that the hon. gentleman would take the Chiltern Hundreds. We all know what that means under the British parliamentary system. It is a fiction of the law by which a member wishing to resign accepts an insignificant position under the crown to disqualify him from sitting any longer as a member of the House of Commons. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) complains of that statement, and rightly so if it is not true, and his privilege to rise today to contradict that statement must be confined to that point. If he has any other matter to complain of affecting his honour, let him make that other point, but he cannot reopen the debate. He would be going beyond his privilege by reopening the debate. I have not the paragraph under my hand in Bourinot, but it is well known that no member can reopen a past debate by referring to Hansard and giving explanations about matters that came up when he was not in the House. Briefly the hon. gentleman is perfectly right in rising to a question of privilege, and denying any rumour or accusation affecting his honour, but beyond that he is not in order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I only wish to correct one sentence, Mr. Speaker. The statement of mine which he referred to did not affect his honour. The rumour may have been unfounded but even if it was true it does not affect the honour of the hon. member.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. gentleman will proceed, I will hear what he has to state further. Has he anything to state further affecting his honour in connection with the speech delivered by the right hon. leader of the opposition?

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I just wish to say that it is my intention to resign as soon as the petition is disposed of and I can legally do so.

I wish to rise to another question of privilege, if I may, in connection with a statement which appears in the Ottawa Morning Journal. On the front page of that paper appears the heading:

D. M. Kennedy switches to break probe deadlock.

Then in another column there are other statements made with respect to myself. I wish to say that these references to myself on the front page of this morning's Journal are not correct.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT—POSSESSION OF WEAPONS

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General) moved the first reading of Bill No. 203 (from the Senate) to amend certain provisions of the Criminal Code respecting the possession of weapons.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read a second time?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have no objection at all to the bill being read a second time now on account of the lateness of the session, but I think the Solicitor General should explain its general purport. We had not expected the bill to be read a second time now.

Mr. CANNON: This bill was introduced into the Senate by Senator Belcourt. The principal feature of the measure is the licensing of the importation, manufacture and sale of weapons. I wish to inform the House that I am not quite familiar with all the details of the bill, but I will furnish all necessary information and particulars when we are in committee.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We are not going into committee to-day.

Mr. CANNON: Not to-day.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

[Mr. Speaker.]

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. G. H. BOIVIN (Minister of Customs and Excise, for the Minister of Justice) moved the first reading of Bill No. 205 (from the Senate) to amend the Canada Evidence Act as respects bank books and records.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would the minister explain briefly the purpose of this bill?

Mr. BOIVIN: Its purpose is merely to grant a privilege to the banks which they have not hitherto enjoyed under the Canada Evidence Act. In other words, in certain cases banks have been compelled to appear before the court and produce their entire books and documents containing the accounts of certain persons. The object of the bill is to enable the bank to produce extracts of these which are sworn to and certified in a proper manner.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read a second time?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Now.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. SPEAKER: To what committee shall this bill be referred?

Mr. BOIVIN: The bill is a very simple one and I move that it be referred to a committee of the whole House at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. SPEAKER: Now, as regards the other bill introduced by the Solicitor General.

Mr. CANNON: I move that Bill No. 203 be referred to the committee of the Whole at the next sittting.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not object to the intention at all; I think the intention is right if these two motions be struck out.

The Clerk: Then they go to a standing committee.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They cannot go to a standing committee without a reference. If these two motions are struck out then it can be moved, when the proper time comes, that they go to the right committee.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand the desire of the promoters is that the two bills should be considered by committee of the Whole instead of going in the one case to the select standing committee on Banking and Commerce, and in the other case to the select standing committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then this last bill will appear on the order paper on Monday in the form "House in committee on bill so-and-so"?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And the other one will appear in the same way?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. The purpose is to have something on record which will disclose on the orders of the day the stage of the proceedings.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION

EXTENSION OF THE TIME FOR APPLICATION TO COME UNDER ACT

On the Orders of the Day.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): I desire once more to ask the Prime Minister if there is any possibility of the government reconsidering their position and introducing a measure this session to postpone for some period of time—I have asked that it be postponed for a year—the closing—shall I say?—of the date for making application to come under the Superannuation Act, calling attention again to the fact that several groups of civil servants have not availed themselves of the privilege? I direct the attention of the Prime Minister to his very courteous reply to me of June 7 in which he intimated that the government might consider a term of three months. I again respectfully suggest a postponement for a year, but in case that time is not acceptable to the government that the period be three months.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): In reply to my hon. friend I might say that the delay has been occasioned by the government's desire to have the opinion of the officers of the Department of Finance, and on Monday a statement will be made as to the decision reached. I think I can say to my hon. friend that we will be prepared to consider favourably a postponement for three months, but it is doubtful if we shall be able to consider a longer time.

ATHABASCA ELECTION INQUIRY

On the Orders of the Day.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): I desire to ask the government a question based on the following telegram which I received from Edmonton to-day re the Athabasca inquiry:

> Judge Beck has some doubt as to competency of Alberta supreme court judge to swear him in as commissioner and wrote Biggar yesterday. Further he does not wish to proceed until placed in funds to cover current expenses of commission.

I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether he will take immediate action to cover the current expenses of the commission; also whether he will take any action that may be necessary to have the judge sworn in as commissioner?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): My hon. friend gave an intimation that he was going to ask this question this afternoon, and I have obtained from the Justice department an opinion in reference to the first part of the inquiry. So far as the government is informed there appears to be no doubt that a judge of the Supreme Court of Alberta has power under section 10 of the Corrupt Practices Inquiries Act to administer the oath required under the provisions of section 9 thereof. With respect to making provision for the inquiry I would say to my hon. friend that it is the intention of the government to have an amount placed in the supplementary estimates for that purpose, and as soon as it is appropriated by parliament it will be available.

VANCOUVER HARBOUR FIRE TUG

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. L. J. LADNER (Vancouver South): I desire to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries a question based upon a telegram I received from the Native Sons of British Columbia. A number of public bodies in Vancouver and other places are interested in the question of a fire tug being bought by the Harbour Board of Vancouver,—as to whether it should be bought in Vancouver and built there, or whether it should be purchased in the Old Country. The telegram reads:

> Announcement harbour board's fire tug bought in the Old Country. Please ask in the House the reason why.

In view of the communications between various public bodies on the coast and other bodies, will the minister inform us why this step has been taken?

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): This matter is within the province of the harbour board. We have no direct control of the decision of the harbour commission in a matter of this kind. Speaking from memory I may say that certain representations have been made in regard to this matter, but I would not like to give a definite answer just now. I will assure my hon. friend that I will make a definite statement shortly.

MOTOR CARS

DANGEROUS SPEEDING ON PARLIAMENT HILL AND WELLINGTON STREET

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): I understand the precincts of the parliament buildings are in certain respects under the jurisdiction of Your Honour. I should like to ask you, Mr. Speaker, if you will take into consideration the making of some rules or regulations governing the speed at which motor cars use the approaches to the main entrance of this building.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CAHAN: I am large enough in person, I think, to be seen, but twice during the present week, on leaving this House, I have with difficulty escaped collision with motor cars which, after passing the police at the gates, have assumed a speed that would not be allowed in any city such as Montreal, and I think some rule or regulation should be made limiting that speed, so that members leaving after the House closes may be free from accidents of that character.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am glad the hon. member has called my attention to this vital question. I have received several remonstrances with regard to the speed of motor cars coming to the buildings, and I have also received letters, even from hon. members, stating that round this building where dwell a number of honest men, motor parts have been stolen, and various other articles have been taken away. Whilst the Speaker and the Sergeant at Arms look after the interior of the building, the exterior is under the surveillance of the superintendent of the Dominion Police Force. I have to-day written about these petty thefts which have been committed at the expense of one of the hon. members. I will draw his attention to this very serious state of affairs. I will have a conference with him as regards the speed of motors. At the present time some of the Dominion policemen have been stationed at different points on the plaza in front of the building. The remarks of the hon. member are quite pertinent and I will see that they are given effect to.

Mr. R. B. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think we ought to make a clean-up of this whole matter. I desire to call attention of the proper authorities of the government, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the speed of motor vehicles on Wellington street. On more than one occasion I have had narrow escapes from a serious accident, and I think the attention of the proper authorities in Ottawa ought to be drawn to the fact that the speed of motor vehicles on Wellington street is beyond all reason. It is a very congested street for motor traffic, and I know gentlemen in the other chamber have had narrow escapes from serious accidents.

EXCESSIVE SPEED OF RAILROAD TRAINS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. H. C. McKILLOP (West Elgin): Has the Minister of Railways had any complaint from any employees of the various railways throughout the country as to the excessive speed of the trains which they are called upon to operate?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I have had no such complaints.

TRANSFER OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (West Calgary): I intimated to the Prime Minister that I desired to ask him two questions framed upon a resolution a copy of which has been brought to my attention, from which it appears that the present Postmaster at Calgary who was formerly employed in the Vancouver postal district, was promoted to the vacancy in the Calgary office some time ago, and that Mr. Conlay who was employed in the Vancouver postal district has been appointed to the position of district superintendent of postal services at Calgary. When these vacancies occurred the Civil Service Commission advertised for applications to fill the vacant positions, but they qualified the applications by limiting them in the case of Vancouver to that district only; so that those who resided in Edmonton or Calgary or other places in Alberta or in Saskatchewan were not in a position to apply for the position in the postal service in the Vancouver district, vacated by the appointment of Vancouver men to the Calgary vacancies. Recently a district office has been opened at Edmonton, and the same condition apparently for some reason arises, and those who reside in the Calgary district, are not able to apply to fill the newly created positions in the Edmonton district. I bring this resolution to the attention of the Prime Minister and ask, first, has his attention been directed to the resolution, and secondly, will remedial action be taken by the government in the premises?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): My hon. friend mentioned his intention of asking the question, but unfortunately it was since the House opened, and I have not had an opportunity to make inquiry as to the particular regulation referred to. The matter would appear to be one over which the Civil Service Commission has full control. I will make inquiries from them and ascertain why the regulations are drafted in the form they appear to be in. Of course there should be nothing in the way of discrimination, and I hope anything of the kind will be avoided.

CUSTOMS REGULATIONS—AUTOMOBILES

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. A. de WITT FOSTER (Hants-Kings): I desire to draw the attention of the Minister of Customs to his remarks of yesterday, in answer to a question relative to the person who had a car in warehouse storage during the winter under seal, and who had made application to his department, accompanied by the proper bond, for the privilege of taking the car to the garage and getting it repaired, prior to leaving for the United States. Has the minister given consideration to the matter since yesterday. The matter has been before the department for some time, and various officers of the department are acquainted with the circumstances.

Hon. GEORGE H. BOIVIN (Minister of Customs and Excise): The hon. member did not give me the name, but I communicated his remarks as they appear on Hansard this morning to the officers in my department. The matter is being looked into, and I am sure I will have a favourable reply during the course of the day.

TARIFF ADVISORY BOARD

RECORD OF EVIDENCE FOR INFORMATION OF MEMBERS OF HOUSE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): On the 15th of this month the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) asked the government a question as to whether it was their intention to have the evidence taken before the tariff board transcribed and made available for the use of members. Perhaps the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) will now answer that question.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): I think I answered that question yesterday. The hon. member will find the answer on Hansard.

SUPPLY

TRADE AND COMMERCE

The House in committee of Supply, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Trade and Commerce—The Canada Grain Act, administration of, $1,430,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the total income under this item?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): The total income last year was $1,641,811.70.

Mr. CAMPBELL: What is the total capital cost of each of the terminal elevators?

Mr. ROBB: The following statement shows the original cost of construction together with the total cost including maintenance up to March 31, 1926, of each of the elevators enumerated:

| Elevator | Original cost | Total to March 31, 1926 |
|---|---|---|
| Port Arthur | $1,403,028 67 | $1,456,479 30 |
| Moose Jaw | 1,288,885 16 | 1,336,715 35 |
| Saskatoon | 1,141,184 14 | 1,152,430 49 |
| Calgary | 877,626 29 | 897,334 78 |
| Edmonton | 1,521,526 64 | 1,533,457 84 |
| Halifax | 649,633 09 | 650,953 77 |
| Prince Rupert | 1,243,936 81 | 1,244,903 99 |
| Vancouver | 783,264 39 | 854,530 43 |

These are capital charges and do not include interest.

Mr. CAMPBELL: What are the net receipts from each of these elevators for the past five years, including, if possible, 1925-26?

Mr. ROBB: I have a statement for the years 1923-24, 1924-25, and 1925-26. This statement shows receipts, expenditures, and so forth for the year 1923-24:

|---|---|
| Receipts | $658,747 21 |
| Expenditures: Management, operation and maintenance | 417,016 96 |
| Equipment | 9,457 31 |
| Carrying charges, for which no interest payments made, interest on capital invested in elevators, 5 per cent at time of construction | 259,196 59 |
| Depreciation on elevators, 5 per cent including machinery | 259,196 59 |
| Insurance on grain other than at Port Arthur | 7,500 00 |
| Insurance on elevators | 17,000 00 |
| Taxes on elevators Port Arthur, Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Calgary and Edmonton | 259,000 00 |

The insurance and taxes are also estimated on the basis upon which they would be paid if the elevators were privately owned. On that basis there is a shortage for the year I have given of $569,620.24. For the year 1924-25 the shortage was $325,939.64 and for 1925-26, $341,177.85.

Mr. ROGERS: The minister has mentioned a number of elevators and it would be well to have a statement showing the earning power of each one.

Mr. BENNETT: I want to join with my hon. friend in that request. I had an urgent inquiry with reference to the Prince Rupert elevator: the total moneys expended there to-day, the revenue to-day and the expenditures to-day. I am sure the public will be interested in view of the fact that it has been rented for $100, representing interest at 6 per cent on something like $1,600.

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Chairman, I think I can give hon. gentlemen the information they desire. We should keep in mind that we are now discussing the Canada Grain Act, not elevators. I have the information respecting the latter further along in my list.

Mr. HANSON: Will the minister explain why there is such a large increase in this vote this year? I am rather astonished to learn the country is paying annually a million and a half dollars for the administration of the Grain Act, which has to do very largely with the marketing of Canada's premier crop—a crop that last year ran to nearly $500,000,000. I know of no other line of business where the government pays such high administration expenses without loading any portion of it upon the trade itself. Take the insurance business; when the salary of the superintendent of insurance was increased from $5,000 to $10,000, one-half of the increase was loaded upon the insurance companies notwithstanding their protests. I do not see why the grain trade should not bear the expense of administering this act. Why should a taxpayer in the province of New Brunswick have to pay any portion of it? It does not seem to me to be fair or justifiable. At all events, the cost should be kept within limits, and if there is to be any increase in the service rendered I do not see why the cost should not be paid for by the trade itself. I am not making this statement merely for the purpose of hearing myself talk, I should like to know why the country is called upon to pay a million and a half dollars a year for the administration of this act when the expense could be imposed upon the trade itself, and ought to be.

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Chairman, that is a fair question, but my hon. friend is quite in error when he believes—sincerely I have no doubt—that there is a shortage. This particular business carries itself and shows a considerable surplus.

Mr. HANSON: What was the income?

Mr. ROBB: We got a little ahead a moment ago when discussing grain elevators. If we charge up interest on the capital invested, insurance and the taxes they might have paid, we do not show a surplus, but the business has been showing a surplus, and our friends in the west claim it has been rather profitable to the government.

Mr. HANSON: That is a perfectly good explanation. But, as I understand, it does not pay interest or depreciation.

Mr. ROBB: We have never been charging interest or depreciation, but it is not a losing business. True, there is an increase in the vote this year of $280,000, but, as my hon. friend has just pointed out, the crop last year was considerably larger, and naturally this necessitated more men for inspection and weighing.

Mr. HANSON: Then let the business carry itself.

Mr. ROBB: And there was another reason. As we got along in the season the board asked for more money; climatic conditions having made it more expensive to handle the crop. For instance, we had to put a lot of grain into the elevators, dry it and put it back on the cars because the elevators were full to the roof.

Mr. HANSON: That would be a charge on the grain.

Mr. ROBB: Then we were short the previous year some $65,000. The memorandum I have from the board is that the increases were due to the following causes: the changes that were made in the Canada Grain Act when it was revised at the last session of parliament, which added expense to the operation; a shortage of $65,000 on the inspection and weighing branch of the board the year previously, which had been approved by the Governor in Council; climatic conditions—to which I have just referred—and the establishment of additional inspections for points west and of appeal boards at Edmonton and Vancouver.

Mr. ROGERS: Are we to understand from the minister's statement that the cost of administration is covered by collections made from the grain trade of western Canada?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, if you do not take into account interest and depreciation.

Mr. ROGERS: The minister did not tell us the amount of the surplus.

Mr. ROBB: I will give my hon. friend a record of the business from 1910-11 to 1925-26:

| | 1910-11 | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Receipts | Expenditures | Surplus | Deficit |
| $178,476 57 | $198,644 32 | | $20,167 75 |
| | 1911-12 | | |
| 230,173 87 | 221,852 24 | $ 8,321 63 | |
| | 1912-13 | | |
| 330,430 49 | 337,312 06 | | 6,881 57 |
| | 1913-14 | | |
| 402,689 87 | 409,951 97 | | 7,262 10 |
| | 1914-15 | | |
| 276,711 45 | 413,120 21 | | 136,408 76 |

That is, for that period there was a surplus, not counting interest or depreciation, of $1-619,654.95.

Mr. CHURCH: This item is going up by leaps and bounds every year, and I fail to see why the grain industry should not pay the cost of administration of the act.

An hon. MEMBER: There is a surplus.

Mr. CHURCH: That may be, but I want to point out how other industries are treated. In the case of a public utility, an electric light, gas or power company, the Department of Trade and Commerce charges a large sum for inspection, and I think the time has come when we should call a halt regarding this particular industry; it has enough protection. Hon. gentlemen to my left, the grain growers, are in favour of a free trade policy for the people of this country, yet this industry is hemmed in by all kinds of protection. Why should this particular industry be singled out for special treatment when an ordinary public utility has to pay the cost of administration and inspection?

Mr. MILLAR: Might I ask when the Toronto harbour board is going to start paying interest on the money they owe?

Mr. CHURCH: There should be one law for all.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CHURCH: I might say to hon. members to my left that the loud laugh bespeaks the vacant mind, and all they have done this session is laugh. I respect the man who grows the grain on the farm, but I have no respect for the profiteer who makes his money out of the hard work of other men. I contend that this industry should pay the cost of administration of the Grain Act. If you read the Turgeon report you will see some recommendations which have not been carried out, and I fail to see why the cost of the administration of this act should be a direct tax on the other industries of the country. This industry has been singled out for special treatment all along the line, and the same is true of the agricultural industry; these are the two most highly protected industries in Canada.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend forgets that while the expenditure is going up the receipts are also increasing.

Mr. ROGERS: I would like to say a word in respect of the matter referred to by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church). I would not like a false impression to go out against western Canada, because the receipts and expenditures show clearly that western Canada is paying not only its full toll but is also providing a surplus for the treasury. That is largely due in the last few years to the fact that we have elevators at Vancouver which are doing a very large business and bringing in a very large return, which accounts for the large figures during the past few years as quoted by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb). I would not like any member of this House to think that the people of western Canada are not paying their way in this regard.

Mr. CHURCH: In answer to the remark of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr.

Millar) I would say that Toronto pays all its debt. The money spent on the Toronto harbour since confederation has only amounted to $8,000,000, and it was never intended that interest should be paid. The city of Toronto contributes $96,000,000 a year in direct taxation to take care of this Grain Act and many other forms of protection accorded hon. gentlemen to my left, and Toronto only gets pin money. The rest has all gone to build the Hudson Bay railway, and other works of that kind. Would the hon. member tell me how much money was spent on branch lines in his riding, and what returns they are making? I think we need a ginger group in Ontario, in order that we may do something more than simply pay taxes all the time.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The public utilities to which the hon. member referred are fortunate indeed if they pay only the actual cost of administration. In the administration of the Grain Act we pay not only the actual cost but also contribute a large amount of money to the consolidated revenue. In addition we are called upon to pay for a good many of these political elevators which never should have been built, but the cost of which is levied against the farmers of western Canada. When the hon. member can show that some of the industries in eastern Canada are taxed to that extent, we will admit his point.

Mr. HANSON: I think perhaps I started this discussion under a false impression, and I want to make the amende honorable. So far as I am concerned I should have known that the Canada Grain Act carries itself.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this figure divided up so that we can get the details as to the success of the elevators referred to by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) a moment ago? We might start with the Prince Rupert elevator.

Mr. ROBB: We are not on that item yet.

Mr. CLARK: I would like to ask the minister if he can give the cost of administration by provinces.

Mr. ROBB: No, I cannot give it by provinces.

Mr. CLARK: Can the minister state what assets are administered in the province of British Columbia? What have you to administer in British Columbia?

Mr. ROBB: Prince Rupert has an elevator, but British Columbia has not much grain and if it were not for the grain from the prairies the elevators in British Columbia would not be of much use.

[Mr. Church.]

Mr. CLARK: What elevators are administered in British Columbia?

Mr. ROBB: The Prince Rupert elevator. Previously we had the elevators in Vancouver, but they have been turned over to the harbour commission.

Mr. CLARK: There is now nothing administered in British Columbia under this act with the exception of the Prince Rupert elevator. Is that correct?

Mr. ROBB: All the elevators are administered. We have an inspection staff in Montreal where we have no elevator. This is for the administration of the Canada Grain Act. We have inspectors and weighmen in all the elevators that come under the act.

Mr. CLARK: This covers the inspectors and weighmen in Canada and nothing else? Are there any elevators administered under this vote?

Mr. ROBB: It covers the inspectors, the weighmen, the grain commissioners and their office staff, and the superintendent of the elevators who travels about.

Mr. CLARK: Are there any elevators administered by the grain board under this act?

Mr. ROBB: Certainly. I have just given them, and my hon. friend will find them on Hansard. They are at Fort William, Edmonton, Saskatoon, Moose Jaw and Calgary.

Mr. CLARK: There are none in Vancouver, but there is one in Prince Rupert. The elevators in Vancouver are administered by the harbour commission, are they not?

Mr. ROBB: So far as the mechanical operation is concerned, but we have our staffs of weighmen and inspectors.

Mr. CLARK: Are any elevators, so far as mechanical operation is concerned, administered by the grain board under this act?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. HANSON: Does the commission maintain a staff in the Atlantic terminals, at St. John, for instance, where there are three elevators, or at Halifax, where there is one elevator, which is not used very much?

Mr. ROBB: I think the Montreal staff are moved there in the winter time.

Mr. NICHOLSON: As a matter of information—I am not asking because I am personally interested in the grain business —would the minister say what has transpired to increase the cost so rapidly from say 1915 or 1916 up to the present time? From the figures he read it would appear that the cost has doubled, that it costs twice as much now to administer the Grain Act as it did in 1915 for a crop of the same size.

Mr. ROBB: One difference is that there has been an increase in salaries all along the line. My hon. friend knows that it costs him more to run his sawmills now than it did in 1915. My hon. friend also brings up the question of 1915. The total expenditure in 1915-1916 was $476,000 odd, and the total revenue $469,000. Then coming down to the present time the total revenue was $1,641,000 odd, and the total expenditure $1,149,000 odd. It makes very little difference what your expenses are, if you have a surplus over expenditure; but there is all the difference between a surplus and a deficit.

Mr. NICHOLSON: If when you handle the same amount of grain you get a revenue of half a million dollars in one year, and one million in another year, you must be charging the traffic just twice as much in that year.

Mr. ROBB: No, they had more grain.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Does this vote provide for continuing the research laboratory at Winnipeg?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, and we propose placing an additional amount in the supplementaries for that work.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Then we can rest assured that the work of the research laboratory at Winnipeg will be carried on this year?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: There seems to be some question in the minds of the committee as to the grain business of this country carrying its own charges, particularly among the eastern members who do not understand the grain business as fully as the members from the west. I would call the committee's attention to the report of the Board of Grain Commissioners, which shows that they have a surplus over expenditure in the last five years of $1,843,847.01. What have our friends in the east to complain of when the business produces a surplus that goes into the federal treasury and helps to reduce taxation in this country? Even if the expenditure should go higher, so long as there is a surplus, I do not think there is any reason for complaint. As long as the business pays for itself and gives a profit to the treasury, I think it should be satisfactory to hon. gentlemen. I should like to place the following figures on Hansard:

BOARD OF GRAIN COMMISSIONERS

Revenue, Expenditure, Surplus, as shown in annual reports of the board for years 1921 to 1925 inclusive.

| | Revenue | Expenditure | Surplus |
|---|---|---|---|
| | $ cts. | $ cts. | $ cts. |
| 1921 | 960,228 60 | 723,310 02 | 236,918 58 |
| 1922 | 1,116,668 28 | 827,209 02 | 339,459 26 |
| 1923 | 1,369,244 55 | 950,222 19 | 419,022 36 |
| 1924 | 1,787,658 17 | 1,099,183 95 | 688,474 22 |
| 1925 | 1,201,714 97 | 1,041,742 38 | 159,972 59 |
| Total surplus | | | 1,843,847 01 |

Mr. HANSON: How can the hon. member say that the business carries itself when it never pays a cent for interest on capital expenditure, or for depreciation on capital account?

Mr. ROBB: You might say the same thing in regard to St. John harbour.

Mr. HANSON: Very true, and there is a good deal more I could say if I wanted to.

Mr. GARDINER: The return I have placed on Hansard deals with the operations of the Board of Grain Commissioners under the Canada Grain Act. The hon. member for York-Sunbury has asked a very pertinent question relating to the elevators owned by the people of Canada. I would like to call his attention and that of the committee to the fact that during the last four years farmer members from the west in this House have protested against the building of terminal elevators in certain parts of this country. Take the Prince Rupert elevator, for instance. Hon. gentlemen will remember the debate we had on that. It was stated that the elevator could not be a success until such time as there was an outlet for the Peace River country and the grain could go through that elevator. We protested against the Halifax elevator, not because we did not want to see the grain go that way, but because we said the grain could not go by that route at the present railway rates, and we asked the government at that time to see that the rate was brought down so that our grain could go not only to Quebec, but to Halifax and St. John. We protested against that elevator on that ground, but nothing has been done so far as rates are concerned. Yet our friends here say that this country is carrying the charges. These are political elevators, and if the country indulges in that kind of politics, it will have to pay for it.

Mr. BENNETT: I deprecate more than I can say the introduction of regional discussions when a matter of this kind is before the committee. In the first place, the grain business is the backbone of prosperity in this country. The value of the crop raised in western Canada last year is reflected in the present appearance of prosperity in the east. That is clear. Do not have any doubt about it. My friends may not agree, but I can tell them that that is so.

The grain business in western Canada has been free from many of the difficulties that were encountered in connection with the development of the grain business of the United States. Why? Because we had a federal grain act; we had a law of universal application to all the provinces in the west, and in 1912-1913 we passed it, as the Canada Grain Act so that its application was universal throughout the Dominion and not only in that part of the Dominion which was west of the Great Lakes.

I recall not long ago being in England and being asked by a group of business men to explain to them the operations of the Canada Grain Act, and when they found that the farmer who carries his grain to the elevator, if he is dissatisfied with the grade that is given by the purchaser of his grain, has the opportunity of having that grade determined through means that are provided by the government and paid for out of the revenues of this country, and subsequently recouped by the trade itself, they thought it was a wonderful system in so far as the grain trade is concerned. It is true that increased knowledge has taught us much with respect to it, and the establishment of a laboratory at Winnipeg to determine the moisture content of grain is of the utmost importance. In England, where they are purchasers mostly of supplies of grain from which they can produce their flour and bread, they have found it necessary to determine by the most scientific methods the moisture content of wheat, and matters of that kind. Now the reason, I would say to my friends from the east on this side of the House, for all this machinery with respect to the Grain Act is not because we desire to encourage expenditure by this country, for the grain itself pays the tolls that are necessary to enable these safeguards to be maintained. The object of all this machinery is to protect the producer of grain, to protect his product right from the time it leaves his farm. In every instance the sums that are paid are recouped by the tolls that are taken by the officials for the service rendered, so that at the end of the year instead of it being a charge upon the public revenues it means that we have received a surplus. That is the position with respect to that feature.

Now this charge with respect to internal elevators arises out of the fact that in the years preceding the war and during the regime of the Conservative government, although many people opposed the plan at the time, my hon. friend who sits to my left was responsible for the construction of three internal storage elevators—one at Saskatoon, one at Moose Jaw, and one at Calgary. Since then one has been constructed at Edmonton and, between the time of the construction of the elevators at Edmonton and Calgary, an elevator has been constructed at Vancouver and has been taken over by the harbour board. The one at St. John, I think, is now in the hands of the harbour board. It is operated, I believe, in connection with the railways and by the department directly. Then there was an elevator erected at Halifax which stores very little grain. Next, the political elevator that my hon. friend who has just spoken referred to was erected at Prince Rupert at a cost of $1,000,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, $1,600,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Very well, $1,600,000. From this elevator, so far as I have been able to ascertain, not one single dollar of revenue has been received up to this date; the minister was good enough to tell me a moment ago that the records do not indicate any revenue.

Mr. ROBB: If my hon. friend will allow me, it is just as well to have the record correct. The cost was $1,028,242.54.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If my hon. friend takes the estimates he will find the amount is more than that, it is $1,600,000.

Mr. ROBB: That is the actual cost of it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think my hon. friend will find that that amount does not include the cost of the foundations which alone was very heavy.

Mr. BENNETT: I have here return No. 116—

Mr. ROBB: The deputy tells me I have given the wrong figures. The cost up to March 31, 1926, of the Prince Rupert elevator was $1,244,903.99.

Mr. HANSON: Does that include the conveyor?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does it include the cost of the foundations?

Mr. ROBB: It includes the cost of the foundation and engineering services, water main, dock, elevator superstructure, advertising and sundries. The sundries amount to only $7.45.

Mr. BENNETT: So we have a property at Prince Rupert that cost $1,200,000, and by a return that has been placed on the table of the House I find that we are paying a superintendent $3,800 per annum, an electrician $2,100, an engineer $1,920, a millwright $1,800, an accountant $1,800, a weighman $1,680, a watchman $1,200, and an acting foreman 70 cents per hour. That elevator is under the operation of the Board of Grain Commissioners, and the property is now rented for $100 a year. That is the difference between the elevators that produce revenue—the elevators that were constructed under the direction of the then Minister of Public Works at Calgary, Moose Jaw and Saskatoon—and the elevator constructed by my hon. friend and his government at Prince Rupert. One serves the grain trade, the other serves for votes. One produces revenue, the other a deficit. One enable an appeal to be made for political support, and it is that very thing—as the hon. gentlman who has just taken his seat says—that makes western Canada suffer. It is because there are men in western Canada who, for the temporary advantage of furthering their own personal interests, will advocate the expenditure of public money, expenditure the government is too weak to resist, that the whole trade in western Canada is suffering. That is the position. The cost of this structure at Prince Rupert up to last year was $1,200,000. At five per cent that is $60,000 per annum and the expense of the staff I enumerated a moment ago is over $9,000. And yet not one cent of revenue as far as the records show has come from that elevator and it is rented for $100. That is the position of affairs. Is it any wonder that western Canada suffers from the attacks of eastern Canada under these circumstances in connection with matters of this kind? The grain business itself, the product of the farms, pays every single cent that is necessary for the administration of the Grain Act and has yielded a handsome surplus during recent years. I direct attention to that because it has seemed to me that at times there is not perhaps in the east a clear appreciation of the fact that the determination of the quality of grain and the moisture content, the supervision of the shipping, the weighing, and the general exercise by the grain commissioners of judicial functions—if I may use that term because they are judicial functions—have enabled the farmer to have a sense of quality and of certainty with respect to the marketing of his product that has not been apparent in the United States of America, where a condition was brought about that culminated in the efforts made in the state of Dakota, of which perhaps hon. members are aware. I think that my friends who come from cities in eastern Canada should realize that this service is maintained at a high state of efficiency. Now and then there have been weaknesses in it such as you will find in every business, but in the main that system has been administered with an eye to the public service and that only.

I regret to say that in my judgment in many instances, and I direct this to the attention of the minister, the men are not sufficiently well paid. When you go to Winnipeg or to Calgary during the grain movement and see the way in which millions of bushels of grain amounting in the aggregate to hundreds of millions of dollars in value are being sampled, you will realize the vast responsibility that is placed upon men who are too ill-paid for the services they render; and I am heartily in sympathy with any proposals that will increase the compensation paid to these men in the discharge of the responsibilities placed upon them. I hope that my hon. friends will not take serious umbrage at the observations I make as one who has in times past—perhaps unhappily no more—been interested in the grain business, and I have been interested in it very largely for many years. Now I have no longer any interest in it but at one time I had the interest of one who had money invested in the trade and was receiving very profitable returns therefrom. I have been greatly interested not only in the development of the business but also in the operations of the act. Now that I am no more interested in it I feel that I owe a duty, at least to those who produced the grain from which profits have been abundantly made in times past—I am very frank about it—to do everything I can to maintain the high efficiency of the elevator service under the act. I think that high efficiency will be, to some extent, bettered if the minister recognizes the responsibility of those who have duties to discharge under the Grain Act and sees that they are adequately and handsomely rewarded for the services they render.

Mr. ROBB: I quite agree with the observations of my hon. friend regarding the efficiency of the staff, their devotion to their duties, and the necessity of providing adequately for them so that they will remain in office. Because, as my hon. friend knows, a new man might very seriously prejudice the interests of the producer as well as the purchaser of the grain. The House will be glad to know that quite recently we have provided that certain permanent members of the staff shall come in under the Superannuation Act.

Mr. BENNETT: Are the provisions of the Superannuation Act available?

Mr. ROBB: In the case of certain of the officials who have been on the staff for a number of years—

Mr. BENNETT: You should take care of these men.

Mr. ROBB: —we have made provision for them quite recently. As to their compensation, that is adjusted upon the recommendation of the Board of Grain Commissioners. That is all I have to say in that regard. I am sorry that we have again been dragged into a discussion of the question of elevators because the elevators are not now under consideration.

Mr. BENNETT: I apologize.

Mr. ROBB: I did not stop my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) when he was discussing the elevators because I understood he was leaving and wanted to get some information in advance.

As to the Prince Rupert elevator I have these observations to make. What my hon. friend has said as to the cost of that elevator and as to the revenue from it is quite correct. But the statement was equally true in regard to the Vancouver elevator. At one time people said "What are you going to build an elevator at Vancouver for; not a bushel of grain will ever go through there," and it was years before the operations of that elevator began to amount to anything. I recall on one occasion that I was in Vancouver and the houses at Fort William were becoming congested. The people from Alberta wanted to ship their grain through Vancouver because they could get a cheaper rate to Europe through the Panama canal, and the grain men in charge of the Vancouver elevator said "We cannot get any more grain through here because it will result in congestion; we cannot move it along." I also recall very well having communicated with the Board of Grain Commissioners, and instructed them to use the Calgary house to take care of grain required for Vancouver, so that the grain would be near at hand when the congestion at Vancouver was relieved. The elevator in Vancouver put through more grain in the year 1922-23 than it did in all the previous years since it had been built. I think last year a great quantity of grain went through, and who knows what the Prince Rupert elevator may do? I am not defending the Prince Rupert elevator, but I say that that elevator to-day is exactly in the same position, so far as handling grain is concerned, as the Vancouver elevator was in its first year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh no.

Mr. ROBB: I have the figures.

Mr. CLARK: The minister states that there was a period when no grain went through the Vancouver elevator. That is quite true, but it was known when the elevator was constructed that there was a field, or there would be a field in the future, for export through that port, because it was the logical route for grain going westward.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Why is that?

Mr. CLARK: Because there was no other Canadian port to compete with it in regard to facilities for shipping. I do not want to be drawn into a controversy as to the relative merits of Vancouver and Prince Rupert. The facts are well known as to the length of the rail haul and the ships available for export purposes and as to the future possibility of securing ships. My purpose in rising is to point out to the minister that it was well known when the Vancouver elevator was constructed that the Panama canal would be available for the export of grain through Vancouver in the course of time. It is true that the elevator was actually constructed some years before the the Panama canal was ready for use. Had it not been for the war, however, the export of grain through the port of Vancouver would have materialized some years earlier. Throughout the period of the war there were no ships available for trade through Vancouver and she suffered in consequence more than any other city in Canada, because of the fact that her trade was hampered to a very large extent by reason of the lack of ships.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Would the same argument not apply to Victoria and the Fraser river ports?

Mr. CLARK: They never came into question regarding shipment of grain.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): No chance of their becoming ports?

Mr. CLARK: I am not discussing the relative merits of the ports, but a visit to the coast by my hon. friend would show that, as far as Victoria is concerned, it would require the handling of grain oftener than would be required when shipping through the port of Vancouver. So far as the Fraser river is concerned, it may be an ideal port for the export of grain. It has ideal factors, but at the present moment it has no facilities. I am not desiring to advocate extension of facilities at the moment or the curtailment of facilities. I am simply answering an observation that there was a long period when no grain was going through the Vancouver elevator. My point is that owing to the war there were no ships available, and owing to the fact that the Panama canal was not completed for many years after it was expected to be completed, the shipment of grain through Vancouver was delayed, and it was not until about 1920 that there was any possibility of shipments through the Panama canal. Then the development progressed and in the year referred to by the minister 1922-23, owing to a very large crop additional outlet had to be found and fortunately for Vancouver the grain in that year was forced to a western outlet; had it not been for the bumper crop in that year, Vancouver probably would not have been the great grain port it is to-day, because we were forced to handle the grain that year. It had to find an outlet, and the size of the crop that year brought about a very rapid development in the export of grain through that port, and it has progressed since.

But what I want to point out to the minister—and I know the minister sees it—is that the facts and circumstances as between these two ports, as between Vancouver and any other Pacific port are entirely different, and the reasons for the long delay in shipment through the Vancouver elevator are perfectly clear; first, the war, second the long delay in the completion of the Panama canal, and the securing of boats for the use of that trade.

Mr. ROBB: We might come back to the administration of the Canada Grain Act.

Mr. JOHN MILLAR (Qu'Appelle): I desire to occupy a little of the time of the committee in discussing a matter which is of vital importance to my constituents and to the constituents of other hon. members in this House. There is great need 4 p.m. of a grain research laboratory, which, if it can bring about a change in the standards governing the inspection of our grain, will render a great service to grain producers and the grain trade generally. The time is ripe for it; I think it is due.

We have heard during the last twenty years a great deal regarding the selling of wheat on a better basis than that of colour and weight; that is selling it on its strength and on its protein content, and I wish to say that a research laboratory can render very great service in that direction. Look at the manner in which our grain is graded at the present moment. I read to the House the definition of our grades of grain, as follows:

No. 1 Manitoba northern wheat shall include all varieties of hard red spring wheat equal in value to "Marquis" wheat; shall be well matured and well cleaned, weighing not less than 60 pounds to the bushel and practically free of damaged kernels and foreign grains; shall contain 60 per cent of hard red vitreous kernels.

Throughout that definition there is very little to indicate that strength forms a factor in grading our wheat. The number of pounds has nothing to do with it. The variety of wheat has something to do with it. Some varieties are stronger than others. The expression "red vitreous kernels" have been relied on to indicate the strength of the wheat. I wish to show that it is only in a general way that those words indicate the strength of the wheat. Before I come to that, it is recognized by all who are selling wheat, handling it, importing it or having anything to do with it, that Canadian wheat is very much desired in the markets of the world because of its strength and milling qualities. It is the wheat that is very strong in nitrogen and in protein that is desired by the millers of the world for the purpose of mixing with softer wheats and wheats that are lacking in those elements. Before dealing with that I wish to refer for a moment to another service that can be rendered by a research laboratory. There is a complaint for many years that bleached wheat which has been subject to a slight rain and discoloured only is not receiving its value at the present time according to our own inspection, and here is a service that the research laboratory can render. Referring to the evidence submitted by Dr. Birchard, who is now in charge of the research laboratory at Winnipeg, he makes two suggestions in regard to bleached wheat. He points out that his researches have shown clearly that this wheat has not been damaged for milling purposes. The same results have been obtained from researches carried on in other laboratories. It is found that the wheat has been slightly discoloured, that is all. Let us see what he says:

The first suggestion made was that wheat which has been slightly bleached on the outside should be regarded as sound and should not be considered as damaged wheat on account of bleaching only.

That is to say, slightly bleached wheat is to be considered sound provided it is not mouldy or sprouted or obviously inferior in some other respects. Experiments show that wheat which is only bleached on the outside and in such a way as to reduce its grade from No. 1 northern to No. 3 northern does not lose its actual milling or baking value. It is true that sometimes there is a slight decrease in the test weight per bushel, but this authority points out that if that were serious it would be degraded on that account also. Further he says:

It is not contended that slightly bleached wheat weighing sixty-two pounds per bushel will give the same yield of flour as wheat yielding sixty-four and a half pounds per bushel but it is contended that slightly bleached wheat will give the same amount of flour and of as good quality as that produced from No. 1 northern having the same test weight per bushel.

Summing up he says:

Slightly bleached wheat is as good in every respect as wheat of the same test weight per bushel and of the same kind and variety which has not been slightly bleached.

During all the years I have been growing and selling grain—and I have been doing so for the last thirty years—grain that has been slightly bleached has been consistently degraded one or two grades, consequently falling in value seven and sometimes eight cents per bushel. Yet here we find one chemist who tells us that such grain has not been damaged for milling purposes although it has slightly decreased in weight per bushel. I am discussing the question at this length to-day in order to show the difficulties that exist in the present system. In bulletin 37 of the laboratory of Minneapolis there appears on page six a paragraph dealing with the different percentages of protein in various grades of wheat. I quote the following:

This illustrates the difficulty of classifying wheats on the basis of their texture—or the percentage of dark, hard and vitreous kernel. . . . . as is attempted in assigning samples of dark northern and dark spring sub-classes; the presumption is that the dark northern wheats will yield flour higher in percentage of crude protein than will the northern spring wheats. This has not proven to be the case in the samples examined of the last two crops. The average low volume follows the average protein content in both of these crops, when No. 1 dark northern and No. 1 northern spring wheat flour are contrasted; the advantage being in favour of the No. 1 northern flours in both seasons.

That is to say, those which were lightest in colour gave the best results.

This suggests that careful consideration should be given to the possibility of classifying wheat on the basis of protein content rather than on the basis of the less tangible factor of the percentage of dark, hard and vitreous kernels, since the true protein is determined with far greater precision and is probably more definitely related to baking strength than is the kernel texture.

At page 25 the same writer says:

No. 1 northern spring wheat flour contained a slightly higher percentage of protein than flour milled from No. 1 dark northern spring wheat.

In other words, the lighter wheat contained the stronger flour.

This suggests the inadequacy of the present system of classifying spring wheats on the basis of their density or the relative proportion of vitreous kernels present. A determination of the percentage of crude protein in the wheat would probably afford a more satisfactory and accurate basis of classification in the several sub-classes of northern spring wheat.

In the paper Miller, printed in Liverpool, I find the following in the copy of February 20, 1926:

Manitoba wheat is not at present graded on a crude protein basis and as a result the grades overlap especially No. 2 and No. 3. The range of protein found in a somewhat limited number of samples for the last three years in No. 2 Manitoba was 12.4 to 13.2 per cent, while that of No. 3 Manitoba was 12 per cent to 13 per cent. Frequent cases have arisen where Nos. 4 and 5 Manitoba have proven superior in protein content to No. 3.

That means that the grade of grain which the farmer delivers as No. 4 at several cents per bushel less than No. 3 has proved on test to be a superior grain to the higher grade.

It is hoped that sufficient has been written to arouse the interest of millers in this subject of protein content in the hope that they will also adopt some system of scientifically purchasing wheat.

This is from a British writer in a British journal, and it shows that the purchaser in the British market, where a great deal of our grain is sold, is taking a keen interest in that method of handling and buying and selling wheat. The same writer says:

With due regard for ther characteristics of wheat and for the limitations of protein figure the quantity of protein is a most useful index to the milling value of the wheat.

Some years ago two samples of wheat were taken from fields in western Canada, one before a shower of rain and the other after, so that the only difference between the two was that one was slightly bleached after the rainfall. The result of a test in the Howard wheat testing laboratory of Minneapolis is summed up as follows:

The results of this test are somewhat surprising to us and should be very gratifying to you that we can assure you of their correctness. You will note that the comparative yield values show the No. 2 and No. 4—

These were the samples that were slightly bleached.

—to be more desirable, even though the qualities of the flours in all cases were the same. But No. 2 and No. 4 are better flours.

J. E. Rahm, chairman of the Protein committee of the Board of Trade of Kansas, Missouri, says:

The protein runs from 10 to 15 per cent on the different samples and in this market the colour or quality of the grain is no indication of the protein content.

This is what I wish to direct the attention of the committee to particularly:

The colour or quality of the grain is no indication of protein content.

I hold in my hand a record of some tests that were made of western Canadian wheat in a private testing laboratory at Winnipeg. I am selecting the tests under letter C, not to give strength to my argument, but simply taking them as they come. These tests show protein content of 13.4; 13.7; 14.8; 11.8; 13.8; 13.2; 12; 12.2; and so on. Let me draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that in those tests of No. 1, appear samples that differ 3 per cent in protein content, the extremes being 14.8 and 11.8. What difference does that make in the price of the grain? Well, judging from the premiums that are paid on the American market it means a difference in price of at least 12 cents, or on the higher premium 25 cents a bushel. We have not such a system in Canada, but in the United States the common system is to pay a premium of from one to two and a half cents for each quarter of one per cent protein content. Yet according to our system these two samples of wheat are placed in the same grade, the farmer knows nothing about how strong or how weak his wheat is, and he receives the same price.

Let me point out that in the handling of all other products of the farm, cattle, hogs, eggs, and so on, the desire is to have them classified as nearly as possible according to their value, to have the choice steers, for example, put together, selecting as far as possible those of the same type and value, and naturally they bring better prices. Now, why should we be selling our grain in such a haphazard way that a man who is growing grain worth $1.60 a bushel gets the same price as the man who is growing grain worth only $1.50 a bushel? There is frequently that difference. This is a very distinct loss, as I will point out a little later, and it is no encouragement to farmers to grow the better types of grain.

What is protein? It is simply nitrogen that is stored up in the ground, finds its way into the leaves and stock of the wheat plant, and at the proper time reaches the kernel, where with starch, sugar and mineral matter it forms the grain. Now, a part of this nitrogen content is under the control of the grain grower himself. In order to have a good supply of nitrogen, or protein, which is practically the same thing, in the kernel, it is necessary to have a good supply in the land. An experiment was carried on in Reno county, Kansas, some years ago, along these lines: Grain was taken that had been grown on a piece of land from which grain crops had been continuously taken for years, as we are now doing in western Canada. By the side of it was a sample taken from land that until five years previously had for several years—I do not know how many —been growing alfalfa. Alfalfa, sweet clover and other leguminous crops gather nitrogen from the air and store it up in the soil, where it is available for the grain. What were the results? The grain grown after alfalfa proved to have 14.36 per cent protein, while the grain grown a few rods away on land where there had been continuously growing grain had only 11.72 per cent protein. In addition to that, the alfalfa land gave a much heavier crop. So it is apparent that farmers can to a large extent control the amount of strength or protein in their grain.

Under our present system there is no encouragement to the grower to improve the quality of his grain. One party may be growing grain of a weak and soft variety that is lowering the general average of our grain on the markets of the world; the other may be doing those things that are necessary to produce a strong grain, such as growing it on high land, cultivating his land early in the season, using a stronger variety of seed and growing the crop in rotation, so that he has always a plentiful supply of nitrogen in the soil. Yet under the present system there is no inducement offered the farmer who does this. It is found in western Canada, and also in Dakota and other parts of the United States, that land that has been growing grain continuously year after year is now producing much poorer samples and the grain is bringing a lower price in the markets of the world. Notwithstanding this fact we have a system that does not in any way encourage the growing of better grain.

Perhaps members of the committee would be a little surprised to find that at times a sample of grain that is low in test weight per bushel is of more value to the miller, and he will pay more money for it, than a sample that is of high weight per bushel. A few months ago there was a convention of grain growers and pool members held in the city of St. Paul, at which one of the delegates gave this information:

Our high protein wheat in Kansas brings a very high premium over and above low grade wheat. We have—

Let hon. members take notice of these words.

We have sold 48-pound wheat during the average price of the year for more money than we have sold 62-pound wheat, as much as 4 cents and 5 cents a bushel more on the average, accounted for by the protein.

I know western members will think that is a remarkable statement. That wheat, under our grading system, cannot go into No. 1, No. 2 or No. 3, and I am not sure that it can go into No. 4, because according to the qualification for No. 3 it must weigh 58 pounds to a bushel. Now, this weighs only 48 pounds. There is a wheat that brings a premium of four or five cents a bushel over the 62-pound wheat, and yet under our present system it could not be classed higher than No. 4, and I am not sure that it might not have to go into No. 5. He was asked this question:

That is a particular case, not the average; that was only one particular sale?

The answer was:

That is more or less true all the way through. These spreads on protein vary from the beginning of the year to the last. The spread is not the same all the time.

I follow that up by pointing out why it is that frequently the shrunken wheat, the wheat that is low in weight per bushel, is of more value. The protein is the first element that goes into the kernel; later on comes the starch. Now, if anything occurs to impede or stop the growth or filling of the kernel the protein is already in the kernel, but the starch does not get there; that is, the last element that goes into the kernel is the starch. Every day near the end of the ripening season when the kernels are bulging and becoming larger it is because of the starch finding its way into the kernels. Accordingly if you check the maturing of grain several days before it is finished you have a higher percentage of protein and a lower percentage of starch. That is the quality the millers want; when they buy a bushel of wheat not fully matured they are getting a larger percentage of the valuable protein, and yet under our system that wheat is classed away down and has to take a very low price.

Some have taken objection to this system of handling grain because they say it will take a long time to make the tests and will tie up the grain at the inspection points. Let me point out that there are different systems under which this principle is adopted. In Kansas they have perhaps the most perfect system of handling grain on protein content of any place on the continent. Kansas has its own system; Dakota has its own system; Nebraska has another system, but the system in Kansas seems to be the best. I am speaking now of the pool in Kansas. The system there is to draw a sample of grain at the elevator when the load is delivered. That sample is drawn by the farmer and the elevator operator and sent to their own laboratory in the city. A test is made and the results are then sent to the head office, where each individual shipper has his own account; his name is attached to the sample and the results of the test are transferred to his account. You can see how they have created a system which gives each individual grower the full value of his wheat. If he sends in a 16 per cent protein sample that result is transferred to his account in the head office, and in this case he receives returns in the course of eight or ten days according to the protein content of his wheat.

Then there is the question of premiums; they are paid a premium of from one to two and one half cents for every quarter of one per cent. That means at least four cents for every additional percentage of protein. Is that worth while? Following that, I might state that the systems adopted in Dokota and in Montana are somewhat similar. They frequently buy individual cars, and pay a premium. The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) a short time ago instanced a case where two samples of grain were sent from Canada to the Minneapolis mills. Although according to our Canadian system the two samples graded the same, and the farmer received the same price, on the Minneapolis market one sample received twenty-six cents per bushel more than the other. They handle the grain in that way; they pay premiums for individual cars, but they also have a system of paying premiums to stations. A certain station in Montana is found to produce wheat high in protein content, say fifteen per cent. In that case they pay a premium of fifteen cents or sixteen cents for all the grain coming from that station. Recently a friend of mine had a letter from his brother in Montana, in which he said that on all his grain he had received a premium of sixteen cents per bushel. In Nebraska we find a somewhat similar system; they are classified in stations. Here is a shipping station handling grain of twelve per cent protein content; another ships grain of thirteen per cent protein, and they are spoken of in that way. The premium is also paid in that way; all the grain from the thirteen per cent station will receive a higher premium than that from a station with an average of only twelve per cent.

I mention these points to show that in the United States it has not been found impossible to overcome these difficulties. They have faced these obstacles that have been raised in Canada year after year as a reason why we should not adopt this system of grading and selling grain, and they have been overcome. I might read a paragraph from the same delegate quoted a few moments ago, Mr. Cox of Kansas. He is speaking now of the pool which handles grain in this way, and says:

> Our growers never knew much about that,—
> Speaking of the protein.
> —until the pool started. The fact is that the 10,000 growers in the Kansas pool are the only farmers in Kansas who can receive the benefit of their actual protein up to the present time, through their own association. It is impossible for a grain man to give exactly what it is, when in the country, because he has no way of testing it. We own our own laboratory and our growers take a sample with the elevator man of every lot of wheat, and it is sent to our own laboratory. We run the protein and send that test to the head office, there we have an individual account with every grower and put down exactly the protein he is entitled to. Then we get grades from him and the elevator man at the time of delivery, from the wheat ticket. The sample goes to the laboratory and back to the office and in that way he gets credit for the protein and at the end of the year he is settled with according to grade and protein.

I am not suggesting for a moment that we should do away with our present grading system, but I do think that protein should be a factor as well as weight and colour, neither of which indicate the actual strength of the wheat. You can see that under our Canadian system it would not be necessary to hold up cars at Winnipeg; samples could be drawn at the country elevator and sent to the laboratory at Winnipeg, and the results could be recorded in the head office.

The question was asked as to how the pool protects itself against fake samples being sent in. The delegate pointed out that the pool has a contract with the elevator men to supply the same grade of wheat and wheat of the same strength as he receives. Therefore they are bound in self-protection to see that a fair sample is drawn and submitted to the laboratory.

Another objection has been made to this system of handling grain, and that is that when you get the quantity of protein, it does not indicate the quality. In a letter that came to me a few days ago, a British writer pointed out that this is not very important. In the case of grain that is damaged, once a buyer would see damaged grain, or grain that was frosted, or with green kernels or anything of that sort, he would not ask for the protein test, because it would be of little or no value, but it is of value in the higher grades. In a very large measure it indicates the value of the wheat in the higher grades. If that is the case, why would it not be wise to assist the pool? I believe that the time has come when this is a problem, not for the government, but for the pool, and I discuss it at this time because when the pool undertakes to handle the grain in this way, the support and assistance of the government will be necessary, and changes will be necessary in the Grain Act providing for the handling of grain.

We find that in the States the custom of handling the grain in the elevators is to classify the grades having about the same protein content, and put those grades in the same bin. It may be that it will be found wise to take No. 2 grain and mix it in some cases with No. 1. That is a matter for the elevator men and the grain handlers to work out. They have worked it out in the United States, and there seems to be no reason why we could not work out such a system here. But it will necessary to have considerable changes made in our handling system. That has been one of our difficulties in adopting this method of handling grain because, as has been pointed out, after the test was made, if it was found that certain grain was high in protein strength, it would be difficult to maintain the identity; it would take too much space. I am not sure that that is the case; in fact, it would seem from the information that comes to me from the states of the union, they store wheat of the same protein strength in the same bins. It would seem that it is not found expensive; it is satisfactory; they are adopting the system, and their officials state quite freely that it has come there to stay. Here is the reason why it has come to stay.

The large millers have been forced in past years, both in Canada and the United States, to sell flour from grain that has been brought up to a standard of about 12 per cent protein. It was pointed out by one of the delegates attending the convention of which I spoke that three carloads of grain, one of 14 per cent protein, one of 12 per cent, and another of 10 per cent, ground separately, produced flour of a different quality from three carloads of grain all of about the same strength, and the bakers have demanded of the millers that they supply them constantly with a blend or patent of flour that is of about the same strength, and the millers are doing that. In some cases, in fact, the millers have made long contracts for months ahead for large quantities of flour, guaranteeing its protein strength. That has forced them to search for the high protein wheat.

Another objection raised to this method of handling grain in Canada is that we have not a market for it, that there is not the demand for it, that we could not get any considerable premium. It does not seem to me that that objection is well taken. At the present time the American buyers are buying our high protein wheat in very large quantities, and taking it to the United States to grind for export. In this way they do not require to pay any duty on it. They pick out our choice cars of grain at Winnipeg and other points, and ship them to the United States, and our grain is there mixed with their soft wheat and with wheat low in protein content. If they desire our wheat now, as their land is becoming poorer with the constant cropping of grain, is it not reasonable to believe that in future they will require our grain to a greater degree, and that they will become keen competitors for our strong wheat? It is not necessary for them to pay the 42 cents duty. They can take our wheat in without that duty, and they are doing it now.

In the report of Dean Rutherford, a member of the Turgeon commission, who visited England a couple of years ago, he states that certain millers there have said to him: We will pay a premium for this strong wheat if you can deliver it to us, that is, if it is worth your while to go to the expense of retaining the identity of the wheat and classifying all the strong wheat together. As is well known the large millers of Canada at the present time through their line elevators and also through picking out cars at Winnipeg, after inspection, are securing the very best of our wheat. They have samples sent in from different shipping points in Canada in the early part of the season, and they find out at what points the strong wheat is being grown. It is not always at the same points. A point that grows strong wheat this year may not do so next year. Now if our millers are taking these measures for securing our strong wheat, is there any reason to believe that if our government would establish a laboratory to take care of the samples that are sent there, and would make protein tests and deliver to the grower a certificate, the same as they do now with respect to grades, the system would not be a success? I have in my possession the inspection cards that are used in Kansas by the laboratory making the tests. If our government would make tests and deliver to the grower a certificate showing the protein strength of his wheat, it would be about as far as they could go. It would then be left to the trade and to the pool to establish a system whereby the farmer would be able to receive a premium for his grain that was strong in protein content. I have here the price card issued by the Hall-Baker Grain Company, of Kansas City, Missouri, showing the premiums they pay from time to time on wheat of high protein strength, and with the permission of the House I will put this on Hansard:

E. & O. E. HALL-BAKER GRAIN CO.

I shall not detain the committee any longer. While it is uphill work to get the people convinced that this is a proper method of handling grain, the only way to get what you want is to keep pounding away, and I have studied this matter sufficiently to be convinced that it would be an advanced step. I do not expect, after we have discussed the matter in this way, that we shall immediately have the system of grading grain changed, but I am in hopes that the government will see that its laboratory at Winnipeg is enlarged and made capable of making all the tests that are required. Some may ask, how long does it take to make a test? It requires from one hour to one hour and a half. What is the cost? In the United States and in the laboratory at Winnipeg the cost varies from 40 cents to one dollar, so the cost is not excessive. Those who find that their wheat is low in protein, low in strength after having had a test made of one car probably would not care to have tests made on other cars. But it gives an opportunity to the man who is doing his best to keep his land up, to keep up the nitrogen strength, of his wheat, to produce wheat from the strongest varieties—in a word to grow wheat of the very highest type. That gives him an opportunity to earn a premium on that wheat that will pay him for his effort, and that is the least I believe that can be done. As I pointed out before, it is not encouraging to devote one's efforts to producing the best wheat, wheat that is worth in extreme cases 50 cents a bushel more than the wheat of the same grade of one's neighbour, when it fails of recognition. The premium mentioned is probably the maximum when you take the premiums that are sometimes paid on the American market. It is not likely that we shall reach the same premium on the Canadian market, for a time at least. But in extreme cases a premium of 50 cents a bushel has been paid; in other cases it would amount to 10, 15 or 20 cents. That figure would be common. It is therefore not encouraging to a man not to be rewarded by this premium after all the efforts he has put forth. It is all very well for some people to say: You believe in pooling; why not pool? I believe in pooling where it is necessary, but we do not usually think it is wise to go so far in the case of horses as to pool a horse that is worth $200 with a scrub that is only worth $50. On the same principle we do not believe it is in the interest of the grain trade nor in the interest of the farmer himself to deprive him of the premium to which he should be entitled when he enhances the value of his grain.

Mr. TOBIN (Wetaskiwin): I know the minister is anxious to get his estimates through and I shall occupy only a few minutes in what I have to say. First of all let me state that I concur in the speech which has just been made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle

(Mr. Millar). I was not in my seat when he began to speak, but I presume his remarks were to the effect that he wishes the laboratory at Winnipeg to be enlarged in order to carry on to a much greater extent the testing of grain. It may not be a convenient opportunity to occupy the time of the House but I am impressed by the fact that the people in western Canada, possibly the people in Canada as a whole, are interested in the production of good grain, especially wheat. That is why the question at issue should continue to be agitated until some action is taken to improve our system of grading wheat. We have often heard the statement "Pigs is pigs" and many people when they think of wheat entertain the idea that "Wheat is wheat"—that whether you have a 60 pound sample or a 48 pound sample of wheat the quality is very much the same, and that it is merely a matter of pounds. But that does not necessarily follow. Even in the case of one field of wheat part summer fallow and part spring ploughing, both may grade the same, but there may be a great difference in quality since part of it may have a greater protein content and so be worth more money. Just as in the case of every other line of business, the farmer who is engaged in growing wheat should be encouraged to produce better wheat and to compete with others in doing so. If he is not given the necessary encouragement it all comes back to a question of looking at wheat simply as wheat without regard to the difference in value. Sometimes wheat is discoloured and yet it is possible that nothwithstanding that discolouration its quality has not been injured in the least. I had not expected that a discussion on this question would have arisen to-day, otherwise I would have equipped myself with certain data which I do not happen to have with me owing to the question having arisen so unexpectedly. I point out, however, that baking tests have been made by the government of different varieties of wheat, some of them discoloured to different degrees. In the case of the discoloured varieties it was found that when ground into flour it had not lost in any way its breadmaking or protein value. I believe in the results of these tests because they were carried out in a scientific way. The trouble with the present system of grading is that in too many cases it is unscientific. A man will come along, pick up a handful of wheat, and say that the grade is so-an-so. We all know that there is a difference in value even in the same grade of wheat, when graded under our present system. When the grading of wheat is carried out in a scientific manner the best grades realize a premium varying in amount. I believe we should do our utmost to encourage the wheat grower to earn a premium by producing the best varieties. There should be joint action by business men, millers, and agriculturists to continue the agitation for a better method of grading until success finally rewards their efforts. The objection is often heard that you cannot have a scientific system of grading owing to the volume of wheat grown. This is only an argument to set aside the case. We do not know whether any plan is feasible or not until we have tried it. I hope the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, who has studied wheat all his lifetime, will continue his efforts until he succeeds in having a better system of grading adopted. He will always have my support. Grading is being improved in the case of eggs, butter, cattle and hogs; why should improvements not also be made in wheat? The present system of grading is obsolete and there should be no let-up in the agitation to improve it.

Mr. McQUARRIE: There has been some discussion as to the different ports on the Pacific coast in relation to grain elevators. I wish to say a few words with respect to the Fraser river in this connection but possibly I should defer my remarks until the next item is reached.

Mr. ROBB: Before the item passes I wish to make some observations in reply to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the hon. member for Wetaskiwin. They have brought up a subject of great interest not only to the grower of wheat but also to the purchasers, particularly to the milling industry of Canada. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle knows quite well that the milling value of the crop varies from year to year. Climatic conditions have something to do with it, and while a few years ago particular parts of the country were noted for the wheat of excellent milling value they produced, my hon. friend knows that within recent years the Canadian millers, who have trained chemists who conduct scientific tests into the value of grains grown in different localities, have practically boycotted some of these districts. I am glad that my hon. friend has brought this question up. It will direct the attention of the grain grower to the importance of selecting wheat of high protein value and of keeping away from those grades of wheat that are practically boycotted by the Canadian miller although they are used in some foreign countries. I am glad my hon. friend has emphasized the importance of careful cultivation and of following a rotation of crops so as to preserve the protein value of the wheat in the highest degree. But even that may be impossible under certain climatic conditions. I recall that a couple of years ago I was shown confidentially a chart of certain sections of the country where it was pointed out that the wheat was of a very inferior milling quality, showing that there was very little protein value in the wheats of certain sections. I have before me a record of the conditions in Kansas, so much referred to by my hon. friend. The average protein value of Canadian wheat is higher than the average protein value of Kansas wheat. There are certain wheats grown in Kansas of higher protein value than others. I am not proposing to tell the growers of wheat what grain they should grow but my hon. friend knows that within recent years in some sections of the country they have put in Durum wheat. The number of bushels have been considerably more to the acre, but they have not convinced the man who uses it that the Durum wheat is of the same value as the other wheat, and you must not run away with the idea that the man who grows wheat of good protein value does not get the benefit, or that the quality is not recognized by the Canadian millers, because they always pay a premium for that kind of wheat. They have buyers out spotting, and they pay a higher price for it. I have nothing to say against the point urged by my hon. friend. I am quite in sympathy with the idea of keeping up the highest possible protein value of our Canadian wheat, and I go a step further and say that there should be a system of enabling the grower of the wheat to get, without much cost, a record as to the protein value of his wheat. I do not think it is under any state inspection in the United States, but my hon. friend knows that in Kansas they get that protein value. The protein value is established through machinery in the agricultural college of Kansas where the testing is carried on.

Mr. MILLAR: There is one state where they have state inspection for protein.

Mr. ROBB: They may have it in some of the states, but in the agricultural college they keep a record of it, and that is what I am alluding to. I understand that in the Research Council, of which Dr. Tory is the chairman, they have made arrangements with the Board of Grain Commissioners to appoint a committee specially to advise with the Board of Grain Commissioners with reference to an improved method of establishing the protein value of Canadian wheat, and if there is not sufficient in the main estimates we propose to put something in the supplementaries to provide for this undertaking.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I should like to say a word about the grading of wheat. I recall a portion of an article written by the late Goldwin Smith a good many years ago, and I think what he said would apply to the situation. He said, "I know books because I am able to test them as a cheese monger can test cheese". The cheese mongers used to have a little auger and they bored into the cheese, then they took the auger out and smelled
5 p.m. it, and they were able to say, "that is so and so, such a grade". I think the cheese monger's test applies to our wheat. I think the minister rather outlined it when he said the conditions were changing every day in regard to the grading of wheat. It may be a climatic or other change. There are a lot of contributing causes which vary every year apparently in the growing of wheat, and in some way the men who buy the wheat have the same method of testing as the cheese monger. A buyer can tell in a second what the grade is. But the grade is not permanent as to content, protein or anything else. It is subject to change according to the climate. Something happens in connection with the seed; it varies with the years, and a product such as wheat is never permanent, but is influenced by the change of climate. There is some kind of internal development, so far as I can gather, in connection with the products of all kinds of growth and the process changes. It is all right to have experts in the schools of agriculture and to employ chemical analysis to ascertain the real qualities for the purpose of grading wheat. I do not know where it is going to end, I think every credit should be given to Dr. Tory and those who are trying to solve the problem, but the outstanding feature is that the ordinary buyer has the ability to grade the wheat in a moment. We ought to be able, in connection with our agricultural and other schools, to produce men who instinctively possess the faculty of being able to grade wheat, to fix its value and to say whether it will meet the demand of the foreign market. That market knows what it wants. They are always on the look out and they have the nose for buying. I am not a farmer, but I have heard a lot of this discussion. Perhaps I am not contributing anything to it, but the outstanding feature is the gift of the grain buyers, and these are the men who will make the greatest contribution to the problem of grading our wheat.

Mr. ROGERS: I do not think the minister fully explained the increase of $280,000. Why is it necessary? Is Dr. Tory engaged in it?

Mr. ROBB: No, he has nothing to do with this. I explained all that. My hon. friend could not have followed me. The sum of $65,000 has been included to provide for increased expenses in connection with the weighing branches of the board, if such increases are approved by the Governor in Council. I have here a memorandum by Mr. Leslie Boyd:

You will note there is a large increase over last year's figures, but as you are aware, several changes were made when the Canada Grain Act was revised at the last session of parliament, for the operation of which the board has had to make provisions in these estimates.

Then there is the $65,000 just referred to.

It must also be borne in mind that, owing to unsatisfactory climatic conditions, the movement of the present crop will be seriously delayed.

The movement of the present crop will be delayed and this will necessitate the retention of a considerably larger staff. Then the creation of an inspection office with appeal boards at Edmonton and Vancouver will require additional help.

Mr. ROGERS: Have you anything in the estimates to meet the change in Moose Jaw?

Mr. ROBB: No.

Mr. ROGERS: That will be in the supplementaries?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the real significance in the change in climatic conditions? Is it working against the movement of the crop?

Mr. ROBB: It delays the movement. We have our staff ready in September to handle the crop, but if the weather is bad and the grain does not come along in any volume until the middle or the end of October it cannot be got out, with the result that it keeps piling up and we have to retain the staff until the summer.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is, to move the last year's crop?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Management, operation and maintenance of elevators, $585,000.

Mr. ROGERS: I presume the minister can give us a statement of the proposed increase of $60,000, and tell us the cost of operating each elevator?

Mr. ROBB: This increase is offset by a decrease of $30,400 in item 359 which we shall consider later. The two votes for elevators this year show a net increase of $29,600 over the figures of last year. The cost of maintenance formerly included equipment, which is now shown under another vote as it is considered desirable to keep operating expenses separate from capital expenditure. This item covers all expenses in connection with the management, operation and maintenance of elevators at Port Arthur, Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Calgary, Edmonton, Prince Rupert and Halifax.

Mr. ROGERS: Have you a separate statement showing the cost of each?

Mr. ROBB: What elevators does my hon. friend refer to?

Mr. ROGERS: I want to know about Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver.

Mr. ROBB: The following are the surpluses and deficits in connection with Moose Jaw from 1914 to date:

| | Surplus | Deficit |
|---|---|---|
| 1914-15 | | $17,199 93 |
| 1915-16 | $56,432 37 | |
| 1916-17 | 59,829 26 | |
| 1917-18 | 73,482 32 | |
| 1918-19 | 45,164 84 | |
| 1919-20 | 22,814 38 | |
| 1920-21 | 13,945 85 | |
| 1921-22 | | 9,237 17 |
| 1922-23 | | 16,103 49 |
| 1923-24 | | 33,017 73 |
| 1924-25 | 1,820 34 | |
| 1925-26 | | 15,726 07 |

The last mentioned deficit is for a period of eleven months. Then, Saskatoon and Calgary, in round figures:

Saskatoon

| | Surplus | Deficit |
|---|---|---|
| 1914-15 | | $11,000 |
| 1915-16 | $ 57,000 | |
| 1916-17 | 124,000 | |
| 1917-18 | 79,000 | |
| 1918-19 | 75,000 | |
| 1919-20 | 49,000 | |
| 1920-21 | 44,000 | |
| 1921-22 | 18,000 | |
| 1922-23 | | 20,000 |
| 1923-24 | | 21,000 |
| 1924-25 | 35,000 | |
| 1925-26 (11 months) | | 868 |

Calgary

| | Surplus | Deficit |
|---|---|---|
| 1915-16 | | $9,000 |
| 1916-17 | $ 6,000 | |
| 1917-18 | 36,000 | |
| 1918-19 | 28,000 | |
| 1919-20 | 79,000 | |
| 1920-21 | 72,000 | |
| 1921-22 | 57,000 | |
| 1922-23 | 83,000 | |
| 1923-24 | 27,000 | |
| 1924-25 | 93,000 | |
| 1925-26 (11 months) | 142,000 | |

Mr. ROGERS: That is a profitable elevator.

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. ROGERS: What about Vancouver?

Mr. ROBB: The figures for Vancouver are as follows:

| | Surplus | Deficit |
|---|---|---|
| 1916-17 (January-March) | | $8,000 |
| 1917-18 | | 7,000 |
| 1918-19 | $ 8,000 | |
| 1919-20 | 5,000 | |
| 1920-21 | 909 | |
| 1921-22 | 21,000 | |
| 1922-23 | 116,000 | |
| 1923-24 (to September 30) | 81,000 | |
| 1924-25 | 33,000 | |
| 1925-26 (to February 28) | 5,000 | |

Mr. ROGERS: Has that elevator been transferred to the harbour commission?

Mr. ROBB: Yes. We had no expenditures in 1924-25 or in 1925-26.

Mr. COOTE: Will the minister give us the figures for Port Arthur?

Mr. ROBB: The Port Arthur house has shown a surplus each year. Here are the figures:

|---|---|
| 1913-14 | $ 66,000 |
| 1914-15 | 154,000 |
| 1915-16 | 162,000 |
| 1916-17 | 395,000 |
| 1917-18 | 399,000 |
| 1918-19 | 267,000 |
| 1919-20 | 253,000 |
| 1920-21 | 156,000 |
| 1921-22 | 354,000 |
| 1922-23 | 268,000 |
| 1923-24 | 246,000 |
| 1924-25 | 401,000 |

This was the peak.

|---|---|
| 1925-26 | $325,000 |

Mr. COOTE: Will the minister give us Halifax?

Mr. MacLAREN: And St. John?

Mr. ROBB: Halifax does not show a surplus. The total revenue for 1925-26 was $4,474.01, with an expenditure of $14,169.04, leaving an operating deficit of $9,695.03.

Mr. ROGERS: I noticed in some return the other day that only 500 bushels of wheat were shipped to the Halifax elevator last year. Surely that cannot be correct?

Mr. ROBB: I should not think so.

Mr. MacLAREN: There is an elevator in St. John owned by the government—the Canadian National Railways elevator. I am afraid business has not been given to it very extensively according to that memorandum.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend is in error. The government has no elevator in St. John.

Mr. MacLAREN: The National Railway have.

Mr. ROBB: It is not operated by the grain commission.

Mr. MacLAREN: It is operated by the Canadian National Railways. There are two Canadian Pacific elevators and also the Canadian National elevator.

Mr. ROBB: I will try to get the information for my hon. friend.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Mr. Chairman, under the previous item we had some discussion about the elevator at Prince Rupert. In my constituency we feel we were discriminated against when that elevator was not built on the Fraser river at or near New Westminster. The case for the Fraser river has been presented on many occasions. I remember a number of years ago when it was a matter of choosing between Vancouver and New Westminster for the construction of the first elevator, the Board of Grain Commissioners held a meeting at Winnipeg where the relative advantages of the two ports were presented to them. There were of course merits on both sides, and after a long discussion it was decided that the first elevator should be built at Vancouver. It was regarded more or less as an experiment. At that time I am informed a promise was made—not by the Board of Grain Commissioners of course—to the people of New Westminster that the next grain elevator on the Pacific coast would be constructed on the Fraser river.

Mr. ROBB: What year was that promise made?

Mr. McQUARRIE: I think in 1912. A Conservative government was then in power. At that time the heads of the two great transcontinental railways, the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian Northern, favoured the location of elevators on the Fraser river. As a matter of fact, about that time the Canadian Pacific company purchased a large tract of land at Port Coquitlam on the Pitt river, a tributary of the Fraser river, for the purpose we were told of constructing, among other things, grain elevators. Subsequently the Canadian Pacific Company changed their policy and I think to-day they are practically out of the elevator business altogether. The Canadian Northern acquired Port Mann on the Fraser river just above New Westminster, it being their intention to build grain elevators there. As I have said, both railway companies favoured the Fraser river for that purpose. Why? Well, the minister has been out to the Pacific coast a number of times, and I remember on one occasion he visited New Westminster and met a number of the leading people there, who presented to him the advantages of the Fraser river in regard to elevator sites. The minister, I think, was quite impressed—at least he told us so at the time, and I believe he is always sincere.

Mr. ROBB: Did he promise an elevator?

Mr. McQUARRIE: As a matter of fact I think he did promise them an elevator some time; he would not tie himself down to the exact time when that elevator would be built. But the Fraser river, as the minister very well knows, possesses certain advantages for this purpose. I have no doubt he appreciates the fact that the Fraser river at or near New Westminster is the closest point at which grain from the prairie provinces can be transferred to ocean-going vessels. He also knows that all the grain that comes over the Canadian National Railways must first come to Port Mann and New Westminster. The minister has been told a number of times, and I think must realize, that there would be a saving to the Canadian National Railways of $13 a car on all grain coming over that line if it was taken off the cars at Port Mann instead of being carried over to Vancouver. The distance is not great, it is true, but those cars have to go across the bridge at New Westminster and pay a toll to the provincial government, and as the Canadian National tracks stop at that bridge, their cars have to be transferred to the Great Northern tracks to be taken over to Vancouver, where they have again to be transferred to the Canadian Pacific tracks and switched to the elevator. That means of course that those cars have to await the pleasure of the Canadian Pacific, to a certain extent, and it is only human nature, and so works out in practice, that the Canadian Pacific handle the Canadian National cars after they have attended to their own. Consequently there is a good deal of congestion in Vancouver owing to the limited trackage which is available there. That limited trackage was one of the principal reasons why the Canadian Pacific Railway Company desired to have grain elevators located on the Fraser river. All that switching means money; there is a saving of $13 per car to the Canadian National Railways on all grain sent to Port Mann instead of carried on to Vancouver. There is the element of time to be considered also, and I am told it takes as long to get these cars from Port Mann to Vancouver, because of all this switching, as to bring them from Edmonton to Port Mann.

There is another question, that of sites. I suppose in Prince Rupert it was necessary to buy a site. I do not know whether the cost of the site is included in the $1,200,000, but on the Fraser river it is not necessary to buy sites; the government already have four miles of sites at Port Mann. They have quite a large piece of property at New Westminster; altogether in New Westminster they have properties which cost the Canadian Northern Railway over $1,000,000. They also have another site half a mile in length at Woodward's landing, lower down the river near the gulf, so the sites are already there and will cost nothing. Then the question arises as to whether these sites are desirable, and if they are suitable for the construction of elevators. The minister has probably seen the Howe report; if he has not seen it, I will furnish him with a copy. The city of New Westminster secured Mr. Howe, one of the best elevator engineers in America, to report on the sites on the Pacific coast near Vancouver, including Burrard Inlet and the Fraser river. Mr. Howe reported that three sites on the Fraser river were suitable in every way for elevator construction, so there can be no question as to the suitability of these sites.

The next point is the channel. Have we a channel at New Westminster sufficiently deep to enable ships to come to that port? If the minister had been in the House last night when the Public Works estimates were being reviewed he would have heard the Minister of Public Works (Mr. King) say that we now have in the Fraser river at the shallowest point a channel twenty-seven feet deep. This minimum depth only exists at two places, Woodward's slough and at the mouth of the river. The minister said that certain work is proceeding now which he is satisfied will, in a comparatively short time, result in the deepening of the channel at these two points to thirty feet, which will give a thirty foot channel from Port Mann to the gulf. That channel, even at twenty-seven feet, is sufficiently deep to handle almost any of the vessels carrying grain in those waters. As a matter of fact last year, as the Minister of Public Works told us, 150 deep sea vessels entered and left that port safely. We are shipping out large quantities of lumber to all parts of the world; we are accommodating all the ships carrying lumber from British Columbia ports, including a great many of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine boats. We have a number of these ships calling there regularly, so this would mean an increase in the business of that line.

Another advantage is the cost of construction. It is well known that the cost of construction on fresh water is much less than on salt water, due to the fact that in fresh water there are no teredos. The minister and hon. members of this committee know what teredos do to wooden construction, and as a result of that damage it is necessary in salt water to put in concrete construction, which is very expensive. In the Fraser river we have no teredos, however, and pile construction will last almost indefinitely, so the cost will be much less.

The remaining point is, would the grain come there; would there be business for an elevator if one were constructed on the Fraser river? I think it is admitted that grain has just started to flow out through Pacific ports, and the time will come when the present elevators in Vancouver cannot expeditiously handle the grain coming there; perhaps that time has already arrived. There is a necessity now for the construction of another elevator, and that elevator should be built on the Fraser river. At one time, as I have mentioned, there was a contest between Vancouver and New Westminster in regard to elevators; there was a time when the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) championed the cause of Vancouver as against the Fraser river. He succeeded on that occasion but last year in this House he advocated Port Mann and the Fraser river for the construction of elevators.

Mr. STEVENS: Hear, hear.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The hon. member is in his seat now and says "hear, hear," so you will see that the feeling which at one time existed is no longer in evidence, and the people on the Pacific coast in the vicinity of Vancouver and New Westminster are all agreed that the Fraser river is the suitable and logical place for the location of further elevators.

I do not wish to say anything against any other part of British Columbia or any other part of Canada, but I do think there is no reason at all why the Fraser river should be longer overlooked. I believe I voice the sentiments of my constituents, altogether irrespective of their political tendencies, when I say that New Westminster has not been fairly treated in regard to elevators. The question may well be asked as to why private elevators have not been constructed on the Fraser river. That is a reasonable question and one which must be answered. In Vancouver it was necessary first to have a government elevator; no private elevators were constructed there at all until after the Dominion elevator was constructed and proved to be a success. The same is true of the Fraser river; there is no elevator there yet. Let the government construct an elevator on the Fraser river, and I have no doubt that it will be successful and others will follow. If the minister has any doubt about that, I would refer him to the Minister of Public Works who will tell him that he is firmly convinced that an elevator on the Fraser river will be successful from the start. I say this, that if that elevator which was constructed at Prince Rupert had been constructed at Port Mann instead, it would have been used to its fullest capacity right from the start, and there would not have been the condition which prevails in reference to Prince Rupert. The House was told about the Fraser river before that elevator was constructed, and many of my friends to my left stood up in their places and told the government that the elevator should be constructed at Port Mann instead of Prince Rupert. They said then, and I repeat it now, that an elevator built at Port Mann would be used to its fullest capacity all the time. There is need for it, and it would be successful. There is not an argument that can be adduced on the other side that has anything in it at all. I am not going to worry about this elevator at Prince Rupert. The fact that the government had to lease it to the pool for $100 a year, after having advertised for grain which did not come to it, is sufficient to prove that it would have been better to have had that elevator on the Fraser river. If the minister wishes to help the Canadian National Railway, if he wishes to help the grain trade, if he wishes to avoid a situation such as at present exists at Prince Rupert, he will see to it that the next grain elevator is constructed on the Fraser river, on one of the sites which the government already have there.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member for New Westminster touched on one point which I should like to mention. I do not see any reason why my hon. friend should not have his elevator, or two or three elevators for that matter, because this government builds elevators in various places and leases them for a nominal figure afterwards. I have here the lease which was made for the use of this Prince Rupert elevator by the wheat pool. The elevator was built at a cost of $1,350,000, in round figures, and this elevator the government have leased to the pool for $100 a year. I have no quarrel with the pool; I have nothing to say against it; I think it showed good business instincts in getting the elevator at that figure, but it is an extraordinary proceeding for a government to go out of its way to build an elevator at Prince Rupert, which is 250 miles farther from the grain fields than is Vancouver, and then, having built it, never use it—not one bushel has gone through that elevator, except one carload just to test the scales—and then turn it over to the pool for $100 a year. The interest on $1,350,000 at 5 per cent would amount to about $70,000 a year, so there is a straight gift to the pool of the interest charge of between $60,000 and $70,000 a year. I find by the lease that the government have not only rented this elevator to the pool at $100 a year, but they practically guarantee to keep it in repair. I do not know that it takes in all repairs, but here is one clause:

> The lessor will turn the said demised premises over to the lessee, together with all buildings, erections, machinery and fixtures in good and substantial repair, working order and condition, and that if it be found later that any expensive or major repairs—

Apparently the pool is to be permitted to make the minor repairs:

> —are required owing to faulty erection or construction of the said elevator, the lessor hereby agrees to repair for the proper and successful operation of the said elevator, but nevertheless the minister shall be the sole judge of the lessor's liability hereunder.

Then I notice another clause protects the pool in regard to fire. If the elevator should be touched by fire, lightning, tempest, flood or any other act of God the government agrees to return to the pool the balance of the $100.

There are a number of other interesting clauses. I do not wish to take up the time of the House discussing this further except to say that I think it is a most extraordinary proceeding for the government to build an elevator out of the line of the wheat trade altogether at a cost of almost $1,350,000, and then lease it for $100 a year. I do not wish to criticise my hon. friend from Prince Rupert; he naturally is looking after the interests of his constituency. But I am criticising a government that is so careless of the interests of this country that it will take such a course as that. Everybody knows what it was done for. That elevator was built for no other purpose than to bribe the people of that constituency to vote for my hon. friend. Again I repeat, I am not criticising my hon. friend. He, like my good friends to my left and myself, is anxious to look after his constituents, but I certainly think such a course by the government is open to condemnation by this House. I would also point out that this lease provides that the elevator may be operated as a private or public elevator, whichever the pool desires. They may make it a mixing house, or do anything they like with it. This is just an illustration, and there are many of them, of the unnecessary extravagance of this government, and it is just another reason why the people are compelled to pay such high taxation today. I believe in helping the pool in every way, if it is a good thing, and the farmers think it is, but I do not think they should ask or should get a bonus of this kind to carry on the grain business at Prince Rupert or at any other place in this country.

Mr. COOTE: The hon. member said that only one carload of grain went through that elevator at Prince Rupert. Then does he think it fair to say that the government made a gift of $75,000 to the pool?

Mr. MANION: I am not criticising the pool at all. I think they made a good business deal. They apparently wanted the elevator, or they would not have leased it.

Mr. COOTE: I am sure my hon. friend wishes to be fair to the pool—

Mr. MANION: And to the government too.

Mr. COOTE: This is the question I wanted to put to him: Does he not think it will cost the pool something to use that elevator? Would the elevator have been used at all if it had not been leased to the pool?

Mr. MANION: Probably not, but the pool evidently wants an elevator there, or it would not have leased it, and if it wanted one it would have cost about a million and a half to build it. So that the people of Canada are practically bonusing the pool to the amount of sixty or seventy thousand dollars, which represents the interest on that amount.

Mr. COOTE: My hon. friend does not suggest that the pool would build an elevator there.

Mr. MANION: I would not. I am not criticising the pool at all.

Mr. COOTE: Is it not a question whether the pool will be able to make much use of it?

Mr. MANION: I should think so.

Mr. COOTE: If they cannot use it, they are not getting any gift of $70,000.

Mr. MANION: I agree with that, and it probably will not be used much, because to send wheat through the Prince Rupert elevator you have to send it 250 miles farther by rail that it would have to go via Vancouver.

Mr. STORK: It is not 250 miles it is 167 miles.

Mr. MANION: I thought the distance was 250 miles.

Mr. STORK: You are wrong again.

Mr. MANION: There is no "again" to it. The elevator was built so that my hon. friend would get votes, and he got them.

Mr. STORK: I got them in 1917 too, without the elevator.

Mr. MANION: When this elevator has been standing there another year or two and does not handle any grain, my hon. friend may not get the votes next time.

Mr. STORK: We will see.

Mr. MANION: I agree with my hon. friend from Macleod that the wheat will not go over this route, and that is all the more reason for criticising the government for making this expenditure of nearly $1,500,000.

Mr. COOTE: I wanted to suggest that the wheat would not go there unless the pool got the elevator.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is backing up my criticism of the government and I thank him for it.

Mr. COOTE: I want my hon. friend to be fair. I ask him not to suggest that the government is making a straight present to the pool of $70,000.

Mr. MANION: I was not trying to be unfair to the pool. I was simply bringing to the attention of the people the facts with respect to the government's action. But I think they know most of these facts, and it is time the government realized they should not spend the people's money on hair-brained schemes of this kind.

Mr. ROBB: When hon. gentlemen opposite, and particularly the hon. member for Fort William, criticize us for spending public money in the development of ports or in building elevators, I point out to them that they are paying a very poor compliment to the people of Fort William and Port Arthur because there are few places in Canada where the government have spent more money than they have at the places named. I would prefer to think that the people of Port Arthur and Fort William could not be influenced by the spending of public money. I submit there is money in the estimates this year for expenditures at the port of Fort William.

Mr. MANION: There is none for Fort William.

Mr. ROBB: Does my hon. friend claim that when we are spending money at Fort William we are bribing the people?

Mr. MANION: No, but I do claim that three-quarters of the grain of western Canada is handled at Fort William and Port Arthur whereas at Prince Rupert none is handled.

Mr. ROBB: When my hon. friend puts up that argument—

Mr. MANION: I did not put up that argument as to elevators generally; I said it was applicable to this particular case.

Mr. ROBB: We have heard the argument frequently that these expenditures are intended as bribes to the people of the constituency. In the case of the elevator at Prince Rupert we have leased it to the Alberta wheat pool at a rental of $100 for a period of three years.

Mr. MANION: Two years.

Mr. ROBB: For a period of two years, and the pool have relieved the government from all expenditure of whatever kind excepting expenditure the necessity for which may develop in the course of the construction of the elevator. As to that, however, we have a guarantee from the contractor. The pool have taken over the elevator and by arrangement there is to be no taxation upon the property, so that the government will receive $100 net.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ROBB: Wait a minute. The pool have taken over the elevator for a period of two years while the route as a grain-moving proposition will be tried out. The representations made to us are that the elevator will be filled before the end of that period. The development of the adjacent country, the grain from which will not go down to Vancouver, will require elevator capacity. The conditions at Prince Rupert may be compared to the conditions when the previous government in which my genial friend opposite (Mr. Rogers) was Minister of Public Works, and Sir George Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce, put in an elevator at Vancouver and tried it out. What were the conditions in Vancouver? The government of that time did not receive even $100 in revenue. Each year the government of that period experienced a loss, it was $8,690.86 the first year, and $7,335.54 the second year.

Mr. MANION: Vancouver is a natural place to have an elevator.

Mr. ROBB: That is only a matter of opinion. The people of Prince Rupert have a high opinion of their own port. It is only a case of a difference of opinion.

Mr. MANION: No, it is a case of freight rates.

Mr. ROBB: I admit that the freight rates have to be considered. My hon. friend spoke of a difference of 160 miles.

Mr. MANION: I said 250 miles.

Mr. ROBB: That applies to the movement of grain eastward from Edmonton, but what about the possible traffic that will be developed along the Grand Trunk Pacific line, and along a line running northward from it, when people are settled in that territory? My hon. friend knows also that the trade with the Orient is increasing each year, and he will not say that Prince Rupert is farther away from the Orient than Vancouver is? Prince Rupert is nearer the Orient than Vancouver, and in view of all the conditions, the people of the district think there will be no great difficulty in filling the elevator.

Mr. MANION: I am glad to hear that.

Mr. ROBB: The consent of the Minister of Finance is sought in the case of all these projects and he has to exercise extreme care. I admit that I tried to cut down some expenditure in which my hon. friend was interested.

Mr. MANION: What was that?

Mr. ROBB: Some work going on around the harbour.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is a little bit too quick in throwing out insinuations that he does not back up. He says I was interested in certain work. I ask him to state what I was interested in.

Mr. ROBB: Who is making this speech?

Mr. MANION: I do not know who is making it; but I object to my hon. friend's insinuations, that is all.

Mr. ROBB: The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie) advocated the spending of money on elevators at Port Mann, pointing out that it costs $13 a car more to move grain up to the present elevator, and reminding me of what the Minister of Public Works said last night in connection with the depth of water in the harbour. My hon. friend says that he is supported by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens). Well, I shall direct the hon. gentleman's remarks to the attention of my colleagues, the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Public Works, and if what the hon. gentleman has said is true I am sure the government will not be allowed to forget the advantages of that great port.

Mr. ROGERS: I rather resent the reflection indulged in by the Minister of Finance in a comparison he made between the elevator at Vancouver and the one at Prince Rupert.

Mr. ROBB: The Vancouver elevator had to be tried out.

Mr. ROGERS: When I agreed to undertake the building of the elevator at Vancouver, the Panama canal was to be finished in a very short time. The elevator was undertaken and constructed in a very creditable manner. Then the war came on and delayed the transportation of wheat through the Pacific port.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There were slides into the canal which delayed its operation.

Mr. ROGERS: Everything militated against that route for a few years, but the statement read to-day by my hon. friend with respect to returns showed the justification for the building of that elevator. If the elevator is making half a million dollars a year it is a very creditable showing, and justifies the course pursued in erecting it at Vancouver.

Mr. TOBIN (Wetaskiwin): Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the elevator was built before the Panama canal was finished?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. TOBIN (Wetaskiwin): In what year was it built?

Mr. ROGERS: It was built in 1914-15, I think. In any event the Orient was always there.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: And then my hon. friend will remember the slides into the canal.

Mr. ROGERS: Of course the war conditions prevented shipments through the port of Vancouver at first, but I tell the Minister of Finance to-day that Vancouver would be doing a great deal more business were it not for the fact that, through the government of which he is a member, a statutory freight rate has been fixed that militates against the port to a very serious extent. Take the people of Calgary. If they want to ship grain to Fort William, a distance of about 1,280 miles, they can do it for 15 cents a bushel. On the other hand if they want to ship to Vancouver, a distance of 600 odd miles, just about half the distance, they are charged 13 cents a bushel when they should only be charged 8 cents. If we are to have a legitimate statutory rate it should apply to all parts of the country similarly situated in equal degree; and if the Vancouver elevator has not earned more than half a milion dollars a year it is due to the manner in which it is discriminated against by the statutory rate fixed by the railway commission under the direction of this government.

Mr. STORK: The Prince Rupert elevator never was a political elevator. Hon. gentlemen opposite always insist that this elevator was built for the purpose of influencing the elections and winning the seat. Let me repeat what I have said several times already in this House, that we never required any such subsidy in order to carry the elections in 1917 when the War Time Elections Act was in effect and was used for the benefit of hon gentlemen opposite. On the contrary, the people of Skeena stood solidly behind Sir Wilfrid Laurier's policy of developing the country to be served by the Grand Trunk Pacific railway. And in 1917, without the subsidy on that elevator, they cast their votes in favour of the Liberal candidate, and again in 1921 and in 1925. In connection with the construction of this elevator at the end of the Grand Trunk Pacific line, I may point out that the people of Canada have a tremendous investment in that railway. When it was taken over and administered by the Mackenzie and Mann people, who were the natural enemies of the Grand Trunk Pacific, it was natural that it should fall into disuse, and unless the people of Canada are prepared to spend a little more money at the end of the Grand Trunk Pacific and develop some traffic over that line, it will always show a great deficit. This government decided that that piece of railway was worth salvaging, that it was worth spending more money on, and in order to induce traffic over the line they decided to construct an elevator in Prince Rupert. The construction of that elevator will bring this fall a tremendous tonnage over that line. The trade with the Orient is developing and increasing all the time, and Prince Rupert is the logical port. Stress is laid upon the ill-treatment of Vancouver by the placing of the elevator in Prince Rupert. For the last two years there has been congestion in the port of Vancouver when the wheat movement was on. Hundreds of thousands of cars, sprinkled all along the way from the prairie to Vancouver have been held up because of congestion at Vancouver; because at that port they could not handle the traffic offered. Surely it is a dog in the manger policy for Vancouver and the Vancouver supporters who sit on the other side of the House to claim that even though Vancouver is congested with wheat, even though they are unable to take care of the wheat that is routed there no other port should get the traffic. There is room on the Pacific coast for two ports. Prince Rupert has many natural advantages as a port and we have great aspirations for its future in that regard. Indeed it is bound to be a great port. Adjacent as it is to the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, it will meet the needs of a vast wheat growing area which could only be served by the construction of this elevator. Last year I was up on the shores of François lake and I saw growing there a crop of wheat the equal of any wheat grown in Canada. There are over a million acres of wheat land adjacent to the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway which could use this elevator. Its construction is designed to create traffic over the Grand Trunk Pacific line of railway and to open up and develop a wheat country which otherwise would not be developed.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

QUEBEC, MONTREAL AND SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. RENE MORIN (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville) moved the second reading of Bill No. 173, respecting the Quebec, Montreal and Southern Railway Company.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Duff in the chair.

On section 1—Extension of time for construction.

Mr. ROGERS: We should have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand that this bill is to complete a line from a point in the county of Lotbiniere to Quebec city. It is subsidiary to the Delaware and Hudson Railway, operating from Montreal to Sorel-Nicolet, and serving a large territory until it reaches a certain point in Lotbiniere. It is intended to extend the line to the city of Quebec via the Quebec Railway. I can assure the committee that the company is quite substantial; and the bill merely asks for an extension of time.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 175, for the relief of Alice Victoria McGibbon (without amendment).—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 176, for the relief of Samuel Paveling.—Mr. Geary.

Bill No. 177, for the relief of John Jones.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 178, for the relief of Benjamin Rapp.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto).

Bill No. 179, for the relief of Bernard Thomas Graham.—Mr. Baker.

Bill No. 180, for the relief of Robert Edward Greig.—Mr. Baker.

Bill No. 181, for the relief of Daisie Hawkey.—Mr. Speakman.

Bill No. 182, for the relief of Annie Sophia Gordonsmith.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 183, for the relief of Bertha Amelia Bertelet.—Mr. Mewburn.

Bill No. 184, for the relief of Olive Mary Mead.—Mr. Bell (Hamilton).

Bill No. 185, for the relief of Alice Elizabeth Blakely.—Mr. Geary.

Bill No. 186, for the relief of Ethel Maud Hargraft.—Mr. McClanaghan.

Bill No. 187, for the relief of Frédéric Vinet.—Mr. Geary.

Bill No. 190, respecting certain patents of James McCutcheon Coleman.—Mr. Jacobs.

GATINEAU TRANSMISSION COMPANY

The House in committee on Bill No. 191 to incorporate Gatineau Transmission Company—Mr. Fontaine—Mr. Duff in the chair.

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. CHURCH: Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this bill on legal grounds and as a matter of public policy.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Louder.

Mr. CHURCH: In dealing with the question of disposing of the water powers of the country "we have a trust", as Mussolini said. "A country does not belong to the people who live in it to-day. It is an inheritance from the past, a possession for the present, and a trust for the future." I am very much disappointed with the action of the government of Ontario. They claim they are making an agreement with the company based on this bill. I fear that the Hydro is through except as operating as a filling station for the International Paper Company and other branches of the United States trust. They are going to ask Ontario to build this plant and give it to them at the end of thirty years free of cost, paying the $15 rate to build this plant for the United States trust, instead of as in Chippawa paying rates to build a power plant for Ontario itself to own forever. I would remind you, Mr. Chairman, that the Privy Council recently decided that this parliament cannot declare a work to be for the general advantage of Canada unless it affects the body politic of the whole country. This company should have gone to the province of Quebec for incorporation, for the bill does not affect the federal body politic at all. It might as well be contended that a candy store on Sparks street is for the general advantage of Canada. We are trustees for the people of the whole Dominion, and I protest against this bill because, as I say, it is not for the general advantage of Canada. As a matter of policy we are just at the parting of the ways. In the election of 1921 the Liberal party charged that the Conservative party was the creature of the big interests. Well, who are behind the Gatineau Power Company which is seeking incorporation by this bill? The United States superpower trust.

Mr. SANDERSON: Mr. Chairman, I would request that the hon. member either speak louder or come down to the centre of the chamber so we can hear what he is talking about. It may interest us, and if so we would like to know what he is saying. We can hear nothing at all while he remains in his present position.

Mr. CHURCH: I am discussing the principle of the bill at present, and I believe I am voicing the opinion of a large number of the people of Ontario and of the municipalities who have invested money in the Hydro system. Now, without their consent and without a vote of the people these Niagara contracts which have been entered into are to be treated as scraps of paper and they are to be compelled to take power from a privately-owned plant. I am not at all surprised at what has been done, because the late Sir Adam Beck had to put up a fight to save the water power of Ontario for the people, and I am not surprised at Mr. Ferguson's act. I know of nothing he has ever done for the hydro-electric system, so it does not surprise me to see him linked up with this bill, compelling the Niagara municipalities to part with their power and give it to western Ontario and take in lieu thereof power from this American trust, privately-owned and operated.

This House should protect the municipalities of eastern Ontario, which have been stagnant for a great many years because of the lack of cheap light and power. It has been suggested that Hydro power be developed at Morrisburg, but this government will not pass the plans and allow the work to proceed. In my opinion this undertaking will not work to the general good of Canada, but will be harmful instead. Under clause 3 provision is made for the organization meetings and so on. This is simply a holding company, because it will be seen that under clause 4 the capital only amounts to $500,000, divided into shares of $100 each. The idea is that this company is simply a holding company for the American power trust; if they only spend half a million dollars how will they provide for the generation and distribution of this power? As I see it, the money will come from the American superpower trust across the border. Under section 5 the location of the head office is named, and under the next section the purposes and powers of the company are defined as follows:

The company may—

(b) purchase or otherwise acquire, sell or otherwise dispose of, transmit for hire, and otherwise contract with respect to the acquisition, disposition or transmission of electrical power or energy.

The company is allowed to acquire property and to construct telegraph and telephone lines in connection with this undertaking. Under section 9 its borrowing powers are set out, and further on we see the agreements they are authorized to make.

Now I would like to come to section 10, which gives this company the power of expropriation under the Railway Act. I cannot find that power given in any other bill passed by this House, and I think it is a mistake. I wish to protest against the passing of this bill; I think it a sorry day for the province of Ontario and its hydro municipalities if this bill is passed.

Mr. McGIBBON: What is the particular objection to this bill, when the province of Ontario can obtain power for less than they can develop it at Chippawa?

Mr. CHURCH: My objection is that the municipalities have contracts to take power from the Chippawa development, the capital cost of which was about $65,000,000. Toronto had to put up most of that capital; they would not go on with the work until the city of Toronto guaranteed the bonds. Toronto has contracted to take power from this publicly-owned plant and I protest against that contract being interfered with by this legislation, and the city made to take power from a privately-owned American trust.

Mr. McGIBBON: If we did not get power in this way where would eastern Ontario get the power?

Mr. CHURCH: They can get lots of power from the St. Lawrence and the Ottawa themselves if they want it. The city of Toronto applied for permission to build a steam plant to cost $10,000,000 which would have developed 75,000 to 100,000 horse power, but permission was refused. Thirty years hence after taking Gatineau, Ontario will own nothing and when they seek a renewal will have to pay $75 per horse power as the town of Cochrane have had to pay the Abitibi Power Company.

Mr. McGIBBON: That would not serve eastern Ontario.

Mr. CHURCH: I do not want to take up all the time discussing this bill. The Hydro-Electric Power Commission had to redeem the Muskoka district from slavery years ago.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I tell the hon. member that the district of Muskoka and the town of Bracebridge developed power before the Hydro-Electric Power Commission was in existence?

Mr. CHURCH: I have read the fifteen Hydro systems. The Hydro took over the Muskoka, Severn and Wasdell systems. I may say further that in my opinion the government of Ontario has no power to treat these Niagara contracts as scraps of paper, and transfer these towns over to the Gatineau. Are we going to treat these contracts as scraps of paper, and take the power away and transfer it to western Ontario, and say to the municipalities: You will have to pay for power generated by private interests on the Gatineau. I doubt if the Privy Council would allow that. It is a sorry day for the municipalities of Ontario if, after the lifetime of work of Sir Adam Beck, all these things are to be treated as a scrap of paper. If parliament passes this bill, by the end of thirty years the people will have paid enough to have purchased the whole plant, and they will not own one thing. Furthermore there are no terms for renewal in this contract, and on renewal thirty years hence, rates may be quoted of from $60 to $75 per horse power just as the town of Cochrane under the Cochrane-Ferguson policy is trying to get it from the Abitibi Pulp and Paper Company who are asking $75 per horse power.

It is not in the public interest that this bill should go through. It is not for the general advantage of Canada, and I protest against the passing of this bill. Under the Chippawa agreement the Hydro owns the plant at the end of thirty years, debt free. Under the Gatineau agreement we own nothing at the end of thirty years, and have built the plant free for this American company.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 to 16 inclusive agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

RED LAKE AND NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY

The House resumed from June 15 consideration in committee of Bill No. 95, to incorporate the Red Lake and Northwestern Railway Company—Mr. Heenan—Mr. Duff in the chair.

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. HEAPS: When this bill was up before, Mr. Chairman, we were told that certain amendments had been made to it in the Private Bills committee. I would like to see a copy of those amendments if at all possible.

The CHAIRMAN: Certain clauses were struck out. There is just one addition to clause 16, which I will read when we come to the clause.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Has the bill been reprinted, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN: I presume so.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I want to speak about the principle involved in the franchise to build the road to Red Lake, because I think all that mining country, and it is the most promising mining country in the world, ought to be connected up with the Canadian National railways. At present a new thing is happening. There is a great mining country in the township of Rouyn, in the province of Quebec, where great discoveries have been made and the township is desirous of getting railway service. Apparently they could not get railway service by going direct to the Canadian National Railways, so a local company was incorporated to build a line from Amos southeasterly to Rouyn. That road is being built by an independent company, and a big bond issue is to be floated in connection with it. This is a new development in the way of building branch lines from the Canadian National railway, that is, first to incorporate a local company for the purpose of building the road, and then issuing a large block of securities, and then later on unloading them on to the Canadian National. My contention is that this road ought to be taken care of absolutely as a branch line of the Canadian National railway.

Then when we come to this Red lake proposition, which is an extension probably of one hundred miles of railway to be built by a private company, we notice that there is a great rush to incorporate this company. We are having promoters come here from all over to build railways into that mining country. I do not know how many more of these companies will come along, but I do know that the richest mining country in the world to-day is in the province of Quebec, in Ontario, and probably in Manitoba, and all of these mines will want to connect up with the Canadian National railway. The stand I want to take here to-night, and I am sure I shall be backed up by public opinion in Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba, is that the Canadian National Railway ought to build all these lines if they are worth being built at all. They ought to be owned directly by the people, and my suggestion is this, instead of giving a franchise to these private companies, the Canadian National ought to build this line direct themselves from Amos to Rouyn, and then southwesterly to Cheminis on the boundary between Quebec and Ontario, where they would join up with the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway, and once on the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway they could go north and west, via Kirkland lake and on west to a station called Westree on the Canadian National, on the Sudbury main line. In that way we will have the National Railway serving all that mining country in Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba instead of a lot of local companies. Here is the second company coming forward for a franchise, and I make the prediction that there will be at least ten of them coming along later. Now that ought to stop. The greatest mines in Canada recently were discovered, first of all, when nickel was found near Sudbury, and next the Cobalt silver camp. The Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway was built—it is wholly owned by the province of Ontario—and then came the discoveries in Porcupine. That territory also is served by the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario.

Mr. McGIBBON: Does the hon. member think this country is justified in going ahead and building railways on the prospect of something being discovered along the route?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I say that if others are prepared to build these railways, at least the Canadian National ought to be given the preference in the matter. Does my hon. friend object to what the province of Ontario did in connection with the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway?

Mr. McGIBBON: My hon. friend has not answered my question. It was this: Does he think we would be justified in building railways in the hope that along the right of way something might be discovered?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Oh no, I am not.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is what you are doing.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I am objecting to exploiters getting ahead of the National Railway in the matter of all these possibilities; and they are more than possibilities, they are actualities. It is in the interests of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and it is in the interests of the National Railways that there shall be a great main line through this mining country.

Mr. McGIBBON: But the National Railways said they did not want it and would not touch it.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Yes, because the exploiters want it, and they, perhaps, would put a little silence round the National Railways. The point I want to make is that this is the greatest mining country in the world. Part of it is in Quebec, part in Ontario, and part in Manitoba. The province of Ontario has 200 miles of this country, and what the Canadian National ought to do is not only to build these lines but take over the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario line which is practically a paying proposition now. Then the people of Canada would own the railways in the greatest mining country in the world. All I say is in the meantime let these profiteers whoever they are, these exploiters, wait. There is no reason why we should give them this charter if the road is not needed. It was not intended to serve the mining country, it was to serve the exploiters.

Mr. O'NEILL: What about the Gowganda camp, in which I understand my hon. friend is interested?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I am not interested in Gowganda at all.

Mr. O'NEILL: What you are saying has to do with its welfare.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): No, what I am anxious for is to see the greatest mining country in the world preserved for the National Railways. When the National line is up there it ought to have the opportunity to secure the traffic. Let me tell my hon. friend something. The National Railways get out a magazine every month which is distributed among their employees. In this is a little card asking the reader—who of course is an employee of the company—if he knows of any traffic that it is possible to get in his district, and if he does, to send to the head office a post card containing the information. That shows how anxious they are to get freight. They should be equally anxious to secure the railways that are going to develop the northern country. My contention is that the Canadian National should own the line from Amos right through Rouyn to Cheminis on the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario at the interprovincial line, through the Kirkland Lake gold field to Swastika, then north to Earlton Junction. Then west to the present terminal at Elk Lake, then on via Gowganda and Shining Tree to Westree on the Sudbury line, opening up the richest area in Quebec and Ontario of copper, gold, silver and gold again. That is the greatest series of lines through a mining country that I know of, and they can all be combined in one. That would be a profitable route and would give the Canadian National complete control of the territory. We have got the whole northern country now practically outside of the Canadian Pacific, that is at all profitable. I do not want to see any unnecessary rush in building railways. I do not know why parliament should let these other people go ahead before the National Railways have a chance at it. Of course the Minister of Railways says the Canadian National Railways have no present interest in the matter. Certainly not if the method is continued which has been followed in connection with the development of the Rouyn field, that is, to allow a local company to get a charter, issue securities to build a road, and then sell out at a great advance to the Canadian National Railways. The principle I have indicated is the general principle I have laid down here. If you grant the present request it will not be long before other people will be asking for charters for the construction of small lines to serve the mining country in Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I ask the hon. member piloting this bill through the House, who is responsible for the clauses respecting the water powers it is hoped to acquire?

Mr. ROGERS: They are all taken out.

Mr. McGIBBON: Not in the bill as presented to me.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Before we attempt to pass sections in this way, I think we ought to have the bill printed as it came from the committee. It is rather significant, in view of our railway experience, that the Minister of Railways is not in his seat when this bill is going through, to inform us what the policy of the government is in connection with branch lines. I protest against going on with the bill until it has been printed with the amendments in it so that we shall know what we are doing.

Mr. HEAPS: I quite agree with the hon. member for South Oxford that we ought to have an exact copy of the amendments made to the bill before us before we proceed with the measure. It is establishing a bad precedent if we undertake to discuss a bill that has been changed when we have not the bill in its amended form before us. The province of Manitoba is very much interested in this particular bill. At the last session of the legislature a measure was passed guaranteeing $25,000 per mile to a company that would build a line from in or near the city of Winnipeg to the Red lake district. I tried to get a copy of that bill from the parliamentary library, but they did not happen to have one there. I did not know what attitude the province of Manitoba had taken towards this measure, but I consulted a newspaper record and found that the provincial legislature did pass such a bill as I have stated. Now we ought to have some definite idea as to what the views of the Manitoba government may be before we pass this legislation. In the next place I think the Minister of Railways ought to be in his seat, because the bill now before us has some bearing upon the Canadian National Railways. According to the provisions of the bill this railway is intended to go into the town of The Pas in the northern Manitoba area. As a matter of fact this government is interested in a railway which will pass through The Pas into the Hudson bay district. If it is impossible, as stated by some hon. members, for one railway going into that district to pay, it will be altogether out of the question for two railways to operate in that country at a profit. One of the things we are complaining about at the present time is the fact that there are too many duplications of railways, and I protest strongly against any railway duplication in the northern Manitoba area. Why is Manitoba interested in this matter? I find that in clause 12—I know nothing of any other amendment—power is given to the railway company to build a railway—

The CHAIRMAN: Clause 12 has been struck out.

Mr. HEAPS: That is all the more reason why the bill should be allowed to stand over until such time as we can have its exact form before us.

The CHAIRMAN: If the hon. gentleman says he wishes the bill to stand over I will get the sense of the committee upon it. If the committee concurs in the idea it will not be necessary to discuss the matter any further.

Mr. O'NEILL: The bill has been allowed to stand half a dozen times, and the objections now urged are only technical objections. Unless it is held that the bill should be reprinted there is no reason for any further delay.

Mr. McGIBBON: We are not all members of the Railway committee, and we do not know everything that goes on there. The Minister of Railways is supposed to be a kind of superman sent from heaven to guide this country in solving its railway problems, and he is not in the House to direct us. What do we know about this bill?

The CHAIRMAN: I will read the clauses as we go along if the committee so desire.

Mr. McGIBBON: But we have not the bill in its amended form before us.

Mr. HEAPS: I move that the bill stand.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the sense of the committee that Bill No. 95 should stand?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

The CHAIRMAN: Then we will continue with the consideration of the bill. We are now at clause 2—provisional directors.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): We ought to have copies of the bill in its amended form in our hands before we proceed with it. We are told that a certain clause is not in the bill, and also that there is another clause to go in which has not been printed. It is quite irregular to pass a bill which has been before the House three or four times and sent back. There is something peculiar about a company attempting to get a charter under such circumstances. There is no such company in existence. The old practice of issuing charters to companies which simply proceed to dispose of their charters has been in effect in this country too long. We are paying the penalty for our mad folly in issuing railway charters in Canada for so many years; and if the rumours are true I think we should be very careful about issuing charters to this company, which has apparently been already endeavouring to dispose of its charter, in the hope that the country affected will develop into a rich mining district. The company have nothing at stake. If the country does not develop as we hope it will, the charter will lapse, and I suppose if they spend $5,000 during the coming year on the road all they will have to do will be to come back next session and ask for an extension. We should have a statement from the Minister of Railways in regard to charters of this kind. We have witnessed the spectacle of the government by order in council issuing a charter for a spur line similar to this to connect with the Transcontinental in Quebec. Surely parliament has some policy in regard to such cases. This is not the original bill we are asked to pass; the chairman says several sections have been struck out and others added. It is a most unusual thing to do.

Mr. ROBB: I think the request that the bill should be printed, or at least that it should stand until the Minister of Railways is in his seat is not unreasonable. He is engaged in other work, and if there is no objection by the promoters I think that it should stand.

9 p.m.

Section stands.

SUPPLY

TRADE AND COMMERCE

The House in committee of Supply, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Management, operation and maintenance of elevators, $585,000.

Mr. STORK: When the committee rose at six o'clock I was replying, by way of defence of the Prince Rupert elevator, to the remarks that had been made by the hon. member (Mr. Manion) in which particular emphasis was laid on the fact that this elevator had been leased to the wheat pool at a nominal rental of $100 per annum. The hon. gentleman indulged in considerable criticism of the government on this account. Certainly $100 is a modest sum; but, as the minister pointed out, the wheat pool in taking over the elevator takes over at the same time the payroll and all expenditures connected with its operation. When we recall the disastrous experience of the Vancouver elevator during the first two years it operated this rental of $100 a year for the one at Prince Rupert will bear scrutiny. One of the last acts of the government of which my hon. friend from Fort William was a member for a few fleeting weeks was to provide for the construction in the city of Victoria of a dry dock at a cost of some $6,000,000, and I venture to say that if the Minister of Public Works (Mr. King), to-day wanted to lease that dry dock, which will be completed this fall, he would not receive a bid of $100 if the contracting company had to assume all obligations in connection with its operation. I am in no way criticising the Victoria dry dock, for I am very grateful to the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie) for the assistance he gave us when the Prince Rupert elevator was under consideration in the House. The hon. member for Fort William would do well to observe, as I have always tried to observe, the old adage that bids us live and let live. The Victoria dry dock is just as liable to censure as is the Prince Rupert elevator, but I have noticed that those who are most ready to criticise the Prince Rupert expenditure know least about it. The hon. member for Fort William had a good deal to say about this matter in the last campaign, although he has never yet been interested enough to visit the country of the Grand Trunk Pacific, nor has he ever set eyes on Prince Rupert.

Mr. MANION: That may be true, but I have visited the Grand Trunk Pacific country. I have not seen Prince Rupert, but that is not the whole of the western country.

Mr. STORK: It is an important part of it.

Mr. MANION: In my hon. friend's opinion.

Mr. STORK: I should be glad to have all the opponents of the Prince Rupert elevator come out there and learn a little about their own country.

Mr. McGIBBON: Where would you put them?

Mr. STORK: Some hon. gentlemen, at least, we might put in the elevator.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is the only place you have.

Mr. STORK: If hon. gentlemen opposite would display a little more constructive ability and do a little less knocking, it would be better for the country. I am glad to have heard the remarks of the hon. member for Fort William and of the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) if only for the reason that when the people of that new and growing country learn of the attitude of these gentlemen, bearing in mind at the same time the criticisms on former occasions of the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton), they will realize what kind of ride they will get should the Tory party ever come into power.

Mr. McGIBBON: I can understand the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Stork), and I am bound to commend the government upon the steadfastness with which they pursue their policy. The policy of the present government is a simple one—to the victor belongs the spoils. This policy they have practised ever since coming into power and the Prince Rupert elevator is a good example. The hon. member advises us to live and let live. For myself I think that is a good rule, but I object to any party living off the public treasury, and that is what the party opposite is doing in connection with this elevator. Now I have been in Prince Rupert. I was there one foggy morning and for an hour or two I could not tell whether I was in it or out of it.

Mr. STORK: Is must have been Vancouver you were in.

Mr. McGIBBON: No, it was Prince Rupert, all right; and when the hon. gentleman invites parliament to visit that city he forgets that there are only two places in which they can be accommodated—the elevator and the sea.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is a big warehouse there.

Mr. McGIBBON: I appreciate the way this government look after their friends. They look after them first, last and always; it is the first thing in the morning, it is the noontime meal and it is the evening meal. Then they try to justify it before parliament. I admire the astuteness and ability of the Minister of Finance for the defence he put up this afternoon, but when you boil it down to the last analysis it is simply this: We have spent $1,300,000 of the people's money to put an elevator at Prince Rupert in order that the hon. member who has just spoken (Mr. Stork) may retain his seat in this House. That is only one of the 245 constituencies represented in this House where the government has tried to debauch the electors in order that candidates supporting the government might be returned. Negotiations took place to debauch the constituency that I now represent and seduce the former member to desert the party to my left, which he was elected to support, and go over to the government. But I need not delve into further history of this kind. The people know all about it, they know this government in order to retain office is ready to secure support by any means within their power. The Prince Rupert elevator is an instance. They have used it to good advantage, I admit. The best evidence is that the hon. gentleman from Skeena is a member of this parliament.

Mr. ROGERS: Mr. Chairman, in reply to what the hon. member for Skeena has said respecting the dry dock at Victoria, I would point out to him the well-known fact that in 1917 there appeared to be imminent danger of a German squadron attacking the Pacific coast, there was considerable excitement, and as a precautionary measure the provincial government purchased a couple of submarines. I happened to be in England when the matter came before the admiralty, and was sent for to discuss conditions on the Pacific coast, with the result that the admiralty refused to send a warship in there because there was no dry dock. The late Mr. Bonar Law, then a member of the British war cabinet, supported the request by the naval authorities that we undertake the construction of a dry dock at Victoria as rapidly as possible. The work was started and, as I understand, is now completed. As hon. gentlemen are aware, shortly after I came back to Canada I resigned, and since then I have not been in touch with conditions at the coast. I want my hon. friends to have no misgivings about the dry dock at Victoria. If it is not serving any useful purpose at the moment, it must not be forgotten that it was built at the direct request of the British government solely for military purposes.

Mr. STORK: I should like my hon. friend to understand that I was in no way criticizing the Victoria dry dock.

Mr. TOBIN (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Chairman, I want to get the committee away from this political discussion if I possibly can. It seems to me that the government should have under consideration the providing of additional drying facilities at our western terminals. We find in Alberta especially, for our grain feeds most of the terminal elevators on the Pacific coast, that we generally have different grades of wheat;—not always, but it happens very frequently—frosted, at other times damp. Last year much of the wheat was damp, and when in that condition it gives the transportation companies an excuse, sometimes necessarily so, when drying facilities are really inadequate, to put in effect what is known as the permit system, which means that grain intended for the Pacific coast must go eastward, where there are drying facilities. When the farmer ships his carload of wheat to the elevators he may not know whether it is damp or not; therefore the transportation companies take no chance, but say: This may be damp wheat, consequently you will have to get a permit. This system interferes very materially with the westward flow of wheat. Last year it was invoked and prevented the flow of our grain to the western terminals. I am not one who wishes or expects to see all our wheat go westward; I know it will go easward or westward, according to supply and demand. I think there is now fairly ample storage room at the terminal elevators, but the drying facilities are inadequate, and the government should see that these facilities measure up to the other accommodations. This is a very important item. All western men connected with the grain trade know that ample drying facilities must be furnished to take care of the regular flow of grain westward.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: At what points?

Mr. TOBIN (Wetaskiwin): At Vancouver or wherever the elevators may be. I should like to see elevators along the Fraser river. I wonder a private company does not invest capital there. The grain trade to-day is in a different position from what it was when the government built the elevator at Vancouver; it is now an established fact that a very considerable proportion of our grain goes westward, and will continue to go in increasing quantities, with proper elevator accommodation. I have no doubt that with elevator accommodation the Fraser river would get a lot of the grain before it reached Vancouver. Therefore I should like to see private elevators built there, and I would not object to the government giving assistance to this end. There certainly seems to be an inviting investment at that point as nearly as I can find out. But I do wish to urge upon the minister this one fact—I think he is aware of it already, for no doubt complaints have come to him—that we want some additional drying facilities on the west coast. I do not know what it would cost to provide these facilities, probably the capital outlay would be considerable, but if we provide the storage accommodation we must also provide corresponding drying facilities.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. gentleman is probably correct as to the field for private investment in elevators along the Fraser river, for that is the place where there is a demand for the grain. He is perfectly right when he says the grain will go where the demand for it is. My hon. friend from Skeena gives us a reason to-day for the building of the Prince Rupert elevator—congestion at Vancouver. I think he said—if my recollection is wrong he will correct me—that some 100,000 cars of grain were held up at Vancouver. Is that right?

Mr. STORK: Yes, many hundreds of cars were on the road between the prairies and Vancouver.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I thought my hon. friend said 100,000.

Mr. STORK: No, I said many hundreds.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Therefore the reason we build at Prince Rupert is that there is congestion at Vancouver. We knew what the real reason was, always, but this is the first time we have got an avowed reason—this elevator is built at Prince Rupert because there is congestion at Vancouver. I should like to apply to that reasoning the common sense statement of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Tobin). Grain moves where it is wanted. That is the ordinary way about everything. But the real justification of this government for building an elevator at Prince Rupert, according to the member for Skeena, is: Because there is congestion at Vancouver, where facilities are required, we will build an elevator at Prince Rupert, where there is no grain going. That is the pitiful excuse we get to-day, but the one interesting thing is that this is the first time a real attempt has been made to present an excuse; the thing was so absolutely inexcusable. The hon. member was saying that the Tories were calling this a political elevator. Two gentlemen who have been voting with the government all through this session stood up this afternoon and said that one of the shackles placed upon the grain trade of western Canada by this government was the building of political elevators, and this elevator at Prince Rupert was described as such by these two hon. members. They certainly did not idly so charge the action of the government they support; they said it because they know it to be true. Everyone knows it to be true, but some will not admit it.

I am also going to agree with a further remark made by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote). In reply to the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) he pointed out that under the circumstances he did not think the hon. gentleman was quite fair to the pool when he suggested that the pool were getting a whole lot for nothing. I do not think they are. Mind you, Mr. Chairman, in one sense they are getting a great deal more than they should get, because usually the last thing a government should do is give one concern an advantage over others; they should treat them all alike. For example, this government has elevators at other points in the system, and business elevators as contrasted with political elevators are rented for a return of 7 per cent of the investment. Here we have an elevator rented for $100, as against others rented on that basis of a return of 7 per cent. I will illustrate some of these cases, so there can be no doubt about it. Let us consider the big elevator at Port Arthur, acquired by the government when the Canadian Northern system was taken over; that elevator is rented now to the Saskatchewan Co-operative. The Saskatchewan Co-operative is a first rate concern; it is operated similarly to the pool, by and for the farmers, and there is no reason why we should turn round and penalize the Saskatchewan Co-operative on the one hand and give property for nothing to the pool on the other hand. Nevertheless, we charge for that elevator a rental of 7 per cent of the value, and on the other hand we charge $100. Why? As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I agree with the hon. member for Macleod; the pool are not getting anything; they are trying a great experiment. They are now engaging in the task of trying to create a demand for grain where there is no demand; they are going to all the expense and trouble of trying to work up a grain business at a centre where no such business exists. There is no use rubbing it in; we all know that is what the pool is trying to do. The grain commissioners have been running advertisements in an attempt to get people to ship their grain where there is no demand for grain, and now the pool is going to try to do what the government has been unable to do. I only give this as an illustration. The other elevators are just the same, and I will say for the government that they have the same rate for everyone who wants business elevators. For instance, for elevator D, which is leased to a private company, 5 per cent of the whole capital investment is received.

Mr. DONNELLY: Will the hon. member tell me who built the external storage elevators at Moose Jaw and Saskatoon, and what return the government is getting from them?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I will have much pleasure in answering that question at once. These elevators were built by a former Conservative administration; they are still maintained and operated by the government; they are not rented, but are some of the elevators which showed a profit.

Mr. DONNELLY: What return are they making?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: They are among the elevators which showed a profit of something like $1,500,000 this year. They were put up for the purpose of this hon. gentleman who was speaking not very long ago about dry storage; they are for the purpose of looking after the crop at a time when elevators are necessary, and according to the records they are very often necessary. Does my hon. friend suggest that these elevators are rented for $100 a year? If so he is wrong; they are not rented at all. They were put up for the western farmers and they are so operated.

Mr. DONNELLY: Are you getting your interest on the money?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: You had better ask the minister, who gave the figures this afternoon. This government thinks so much of the Moose Jaw elevator that at the request of the grain commissioners and on the motion of a gentleman from the district who knows something about it, Moose Jaw has been made an inspection point. Well, Mr. Chairman, I hope—and I trust the hope is not entirely vain—that we will not have any more experiments like this. Of course the hon. member will still go on talking in Prince Rupert; he says he wants it knocked here so he can go there and just tell the people what the wicked Tories would do. He can do a little more; he can go and tell them what two supporters of this government who know the business say of that elevator. He can go and say that the hon. member for Macleod and his friend describe it as a purely political elevator, but he will have to get another tune. After all, vacant and idle elevators are not good assets; there are lots of honest ways of spending money profitably, and the sooner the hon. gentleman knows it is a bad thing not only for the country but for his own constituents to have money spent improperly, it will be better both for him and for his constituents.

Mr. TOLMIE: We have heard northern British Columbia spoken of in a rather disparaging way by some hon. members to-night, and I would like to point out that there is a tremendous undeveloped empire in that northern country. It is well fitted for agriculture of a diversified nature and for the raising of cattle, and particularly dairying. I have never believed that we can develop 800 miles of our Pacific coast by putting all the development into one harbour; I have always believed that we should divide it and give any place where there is an opportunity for development a chance to have some money spent in that direction. Whether or not this elevator at Prince Rupert will be a success is something that will be settled in the future. I remember quite well that when the elevators were built at Vancouver they were idle for some time. I remember that when it was proposed to build the Esquimalt dry dock we were faced with the same kind of criticism we have heard to-night. Why was that dock built? A dock was built there in the seventies with a capacity of I think 434 feet; that is, no ship could be entered for repairs if it were longer than about 400 feet. During the war it was necessary for us to beg the United States government to permit us to send some of the British war vessels over to Bremerton, Washington, for repairs. Our Canadian mechanics had to follow to the United States to secure work on the British ships. The new dry dock at Esquimalt which will be ready this fall for the accommodation of vessels is the second largest dock in the world. It will handle easily the largest ship in the world. It will take in the Hood without any difficulty whatever, and with from one to two hundred feet to spare. It will take in at one time two large merchant vessels, or three smaller vessels. It is strictly up to date in every possible respect.

What have our American friends been doing in making provision for the quick repair of ships on the Pacific coast? Before this Esquimalt proposition was undertaken in Canada, we had a little short dock in Esquimalt, and one other dock contemplated in the city of Vancouver, and at that very time the Americans had no less than sixteen docks scattered from the southern coast of California up to Puget Sound in the state of Washington, making every provision for the care of ships. With the development on the Pacific coast, the greater volume of commerce passing through the Panama canal, and the development generally of western Canada, this dry dock at Esquimalt will be an asset of the very greatest value to our shipping interests. We shall be prepared to handle any ship there, and handle it quickly. In looking over the whole of the Pacific coast for a spot at which to locate, Yarrow's Limited, the great shipbuilding firm of Glasgow, Scotland, decided to locate at Esquimalt. They are carrying on a large ship repairing business there, and also some shipbuilding. In one year alone they handled over 110 vessels in the small dry dock and on their slips, and they had to turn away many vessels because they were too large to be accommodated in the Esquimalt dry dock. I am quite sure that if the Minister of Public Works, who has charge of this branch of the government work, undertook to negotiate with any ship repairing firm, he could come to an agreement at once for the lease of that dock, but that would not be desirable because in connection with a government dock every ship repairing firm should stand on an equal footing and all be given an equal chance to secure the dock for that purpose. So the Esquimalt dry dock has a great future before it. It will only be a matter of a few years before the business of ship repairing will have increased to a very great extent on the Pacific coast. The building of that dock has been justified long ago, and the project will be endorsed by the development that will take place in the future. It is a very difficult thing to say at the present time, with the great development that is going to take place on the Pacific coast, just how an expenditure on any particular work is going to turn out until we have had a chance to see things develop, but we expect that Canada's great development in the future will take place on the Pacific rather than on the Atlantic for some years to come.

Mr. ROBB: Before the item carries, may I say that provision has been made for additional driers at the Moose Jaw, Saskatoon and Calgary houses? Vancouver is fairly well equipped, I think. I recall that in 1922 either myself or my predecessor, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, gave a contract in connection with that house. It is fairly well equipped with driers, and they have been added to this year.

Mr. FOSTER: I would like to add a word to what the hon. member for Victoria has said with regard to that great north country extending down to Prince Rupert. It seems a shocking thing when one is reminded of an expenditure of $1,250,000 at Prince Rupert for an elevator, to think that practically nothing has been done to develop that great stretch of northern country in British Columbia. Some years ago I had the opportunity of traversing that section of British Columbia, and when one remembers that after you pass through the mountain pass you have practically 500 miles of country with hardly a mountain to be seen, and that nothing has been done to develop it, but that $1,250,000 has been thrown away on an elevator at tidewater at Prince Rupert, it seems to me it is only another evidence of the lack of business ability and acumen on the part of this government in failing to assist in the development of the natural resources of Canada. Why a half or a quarter of that money devoted to the assistance of a pulp mill, for instance, near Prince George would have provided employment there and enabled a settlement to have started. Another quarter of the money specifically set aside for settlement in that territory would have provided a great deal of traffic for the Canadian National lines. It does seem to me that in the expenditure of the capital funds of this country we ought to begin on a business basis and set aside certain areas in the nine provinces of the Dominion and work in co-operation with the provinces to develop traffic along the line of the Canadian National railway instead of spending money on useless projects such as this elevator at Prince Rupert.

Item agreed to.

Commercial Intelligence Service, including miscellaneous expenditure in connection with the development and extension of Canadian trade, $375,000.

Mr. ROGERS: This item calls for the expenditure of a very large sum of money, and I would like some explanation from the minister as to what it is for. I find by the Auditor General's report that the amount expended last year was less than is asked for this year. I think there is room for a great saving in the expenses incident to this Commercial Intelligence Service, and that the expenses of our agents are far beyond anything that can be considered reasonable or fair.

[Mr. Robb.]

Mr. ROBB: There is some difference of opinion, but not very much, as to this service. My hon. friend who has just spoken finds some fault with the vote. The only complaint I have received is that it is too small. Business men from all over Canada have come into the office and said that we should enlarge upon this service. I recall when I was Minister of Trade and Commerce having a gentleman come in to see me who had just returned from a trip around the world. I will not give his name, but to show his standing I will say that he was, and still is, a director of the Bank of Montreal, and he thought that we were not treating our trade commissioners around the world fairly, that they were not in a position to meet the public as were the commissioners from the United States and other countries. We looked into the matter and did make some additional provision in the way of living allowance and other incidental expenses. The vote this year is $33,250 more than was voted last year. The vote includes salaries, travelling expenses, living allowances for the trade commissioners, assistant trade commissioners, junior trade commissioners and commercial agents; the salaries of clerks in trade commissioners' offices, travelling expenses of officials at Ottawa—that is, the junior trade commissioners who go out and get some training in the different industries; salaries of temporary clerks, miscellaneous expenses in connection with the development and extension of Canadian trade. The staff, as of March 31, 1926, consisted of: one inspector of trade commissioners' offices; 22 trade commissioners, three in grade 3, three in grade 2 and sixteen in grade 1; one vacancy, three assistant trade commissioners; five junior trade commissioners, one commercial agent. The figures I have quoted relate to the outside staff. Does my hon. friend want to know where they are stationed?

Mr. ROGERS: I am not objecting to these appointments, but some of them run as high as $10,000 and $15,000, and yet no explanation has been given with respect to them.

Mr. ROBB: That has reference to the maintenance of the office, I imagine—the rent of the office and the travelling expenses in the country where the agents are stationed, and the salary of an assistant clerk. For instance we have only one representative in Australia, a country larger than the United States and almost as large as Canada. In that country the representative or his assistant travels from coast to coast. The same is true of Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Aires in South America. Our representatives there also cover a very large territory.

Mr. ROGERS: I see the agent there had an expense account of $15,000 odd. That is a good deal for expenses.

Mr. ROBB: What office is that?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The office at Buenos Aires.

Mr. ROBB: The expenses for that office amounted to $11,822.63.

Mr. ROGERS: I am speaking of Melbourne.

Mr. ROBB: The office at Buenos Aires is a very large office, and as my hon. friend knows, it is one of the most expensive cities in the world to live in. Our agent at Buenos Aires pays for rent and taxes, $1,087.23; salaries, that is his own salary and the salaries of the staff, $9,460.66; newspapers and periodicals $40.34; sundries, $1,234.60.

Mr. FOSTER: What is his salary?

Mr. ROBB: It is $5,900. In Calcutta, India, considerable travelling is involved.

Mr. ROGERS: Are you giving the figures for last year or the year before?

Mr. ROBB: They are the details of expenditures for 1924-25. I imagine there would not be much difference last year.

Mr. ROGERS: What have you for Mr. Ross, the agent at Melbourne?

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Ross had travelling expenses to the amount of $2,970.88. In that connection I may say that was Mr. Ross's year to come home and travel through Canada, visiting the different exporters. I think he was also sent to England on a mission, and he travelled to the West Indies prior to our making a trade agreement with those islands. His rent and taxes amounted to $811.10; salaries $10,836.64; newspapers, $51,48; and sundries $792.19.

Mr. ROGERS: What about Mr. Ross of Shanghai.

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Ross of Shanghai is now on the retired list. The new man is Mr. Cosgrove. My hon. friend can get after Mr. Ross of Shanghai as much as he likes.

Mr. ROGERS: I have nothing to say about him; I do not know anything about the man. What results did you get from the expenditure in Shanghai?

Mr. ROBB: The trade in that country has increased considerably. I am not prepared to say that it was altogether due to the efforts of Mr. Ross. In 1921 the exports of Canadian products to China amounted to $4,906,570, and in 1924 to $12,998,248. In 1925 it dropped to $7,838,187. My hon. friend knows there has been some disturbance over there and some restrictions on British trade. I am told, however, that the trade has now increased and that for 1926 it will be more than double the amount mentioned.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the minister be good enough to tell us what are the principal articles of trade?

Mr. ROBB: That we export from Canada? I have not that list before me. My hon. friend will get that information in the trade figures, but speaking from memory I recall that we export to China considerable quantities of flour, wheat, condensed milk, butter put up in tins, considerable lumber, and I think some fish.

Mr. McGIBBON: What I had in mind was the proportion of increase for instance, in the case of flour which is one of our main commodities.

Mr. ROBB: I have not that information before me, but I am told by some mills that they are running altogether on that business. The trade statistics show that our exports for China increased from twelve millions in 1924 to over twenty-four millions in 1926. This great increase is wholly due to exports of wheat, wheat-flour, silver bullion, and pig lead. We have no special information which would indicate that the trade commissioners have been responsible in any way for this large increase.

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the minister be good enough to tell us what particular grade of flour is used?

Mr. ROBB: I could not tell my hon. friend that. I would imagine they are not yet buying the highest grades.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is no doubt about one thing, and that is that the foreign trade of Canada has increased very much. I tell my hon. friend frankly that the tremendous increase we have had in our foreign sales is due to business which has been thrown at this country. I think my hon. friend will agree with that.

Mr. ROBB: I will agree with that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is thrown at this country because other countries that formerly would have been competitors with Canada in the foreign market are not now in a condition to compete. Therefore, as my hon. friend agrees, there is a very large increase in our foreign trade due to business which has been absolutely thrown at us. Our foreign trade is large and we are becoming more and more dependent upon it. Not only are we becoming more and more dependent upon the foreign trade having regard to our agricultural products, but we are also becoming more dependent upon that trade with respect to our industrial efforts. I have in mind a factory—I would not mind giving my hon. friend the particulars of it if he desires—that is very busy, and has been very busy for the last two or three years, possibly one of the few factories in Canada in that happy position. That is because it is in the export business. But the ordinary output of that factory was 80 per cent domestic and 20 per cent export. I may say that in the United States, which produces so many goods similar to what we do, and whose methods of life are so similar to our own, when their exports exceed 8 to 9 per cent of the total production it spells bad times because their best market being their home market, the higher price is easily got at. But when the condition is the one I have mentioned, it means that the purchasing power is falling off, and they look upon it as an indication of bad times. We have always exported more than they have. We have never been able to absorb as much of our own production as they have, our purchasing power not being nearly as great as theirs. But in connection with this factory the normal was 80 per cent absorbed by the purchasing power at home and 20 per cent exported. To-day only 40 per cent of that production is sold at home and 60 per cent is exported, not because we have gone into the business but simply because the competition we formerly had is non-existent. The business has been thrown at us, and we have fortunately been able to get it.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Is the total business of that factory more than it formerly was?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It certainly is. The hon. member will see the percentages. It would have to be bigger, or else they would be doing nothing in Canada at all, and while the Canadian business has shrunk, the total output is greater.

[Mr. Robb.]

Mr. ROBB: What goods are they manufacturing?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Rubber tires. The reason is perfectly plain; before that the continental rubber tires had that market. They are not now in a position to finance raw material, the cost of which represents a large proportion of the finished article; so that we are doing very well in that business, as the hon. minister knows. I would much rather the government would spend money in connection with this vote than in connection with some others. I am now referring particularly to what they spent in connection with the arrangements made for treaties. The only place where we have been crimped in our export business is where we make trade treaties. I will stick to that same firm and give an illustration. Before we had our treaty with France that same firm had an office in France and was selling a certain amount of tires in France. As a result of the treaty we have to-day the ministers go over to the continent and negotiate for us, but this firm have had to close their office in France and cannot sell any tires there. Therefore I am anxious that any further effort for trade should be made upon business principles rather than upon the line of trade treaties brought about by very amiable gentlemen who have not very much knowledge of trade or business. The effect of that treaty with France is not confined to tires, because the result of the treaty is that last year we cut in two our exports to France, which were ascending before the treaty was made, and she doubled her sales here. This business is becoming vital to this country, and therefore we have to do something to hold this business which was thrown at us, or which we got as an accident. I hope my hon. friend will give the close attention which he at one time gave to this particular service. I will tell him that the service lately has not been satisfactory. He had a interregnum in his office as Minister of Trade and Commerce. I think when he was in office he took a fatherly interest in this particular branch of the service, and was interested in it, and I know that he had some good men; I ran across some very good trade representatives outside. But it has not been as it might have been for the last few years, and I hope my hon. friend will take a real keen interest in it.

Mr. ROBB: Replying to the observations of my hon. friend as to the trade with France, we must not lose sight of the fact that the purchasing power of France has been somewhat lessened, in so far as trading with Canada is concerned, on account of the depreciated value of the franc. I rise more particularly to point out some of the work that the trade commissioners are doing. I have a note here from Mr. Clarke, who was formerly the trade commissioner at Milan, and a very excellent officer. He has recently been promoted to be director of commercial intelligence. We had some considerable complaints in regard to our trade with Spain. Our Canadian trade was at a disadvantage in Spain; some of our Canadian banks which had connections there were at a disadvantage, and Mr. Clarke was sent to Spain and negotiated an arrangement with that country whereby we were temporarily given the second column in the Spanish tariff. That would come in under a treaty which Great Britain had, in which the dominions were entitled to participate.

An hon. MEMBER: What year was that?

Mr. ROBB: That was in 1925. As a result, the Canadian exports to Spain have been increased from $110,136 in the eleven months ending February, 1925, to $771,377 in the corresponding period of the fiscal year, and the trade is growing. In the matter of flour, the Canadian trade has been practically shut out of the market in Greece. They had enacted some economical restrictions which applied to flour imported into that country. Mr. Clarke was sent down there in August, 1925, and succeeded in inducing the Greek government to remove the restrictions on patent flour, and during January, 1926, the restrictions on other grades of flour were removed entirely, and that was a very great advantage to Canadian trade.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): The hon. member was dealing with Spain a moment ago. How is it that the trade returns in agricultural and vegetable products show that our exports to Spain, which in 1921 were $339,900, had decreased to $177,000 in 1925?

Mr. ROBB: Because of those disadvantages we suffered under the revised tariff rates of Spain. Mr. Clarke went over there and placed us in a better position, and the trade has since been increasing. We are now negotiating with Spain to place Canadian exports on a more favourable basis—to get them on the same basis as the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): The effect of these treaties and arrangements is, so far as agricultural products are concerned, that we suffer in every instance. Why is it? How does it come that these trade arrangements reflect adversely on agriculture? In this particular case the decrease in agricultural exports to Spain is practically shutting us out.

Mr. ROBB: The hon. member quoted a decrease from 1921 to 1925, and I have just explained to him that in 1922 or 1923 Spain made some readjustments of tariff that practically closed our business in that country. It was for that purpose that Mr. Clarke was sent there to have it placed on a more favourable basis, and the business is now improving. In regard to agricultural products, my hon. friend is quite mistaken. While I have no figures, I notice here that Mr. Harrison Watson had succeeded in getting into Great Britain the following articles:

10 p.m.

Spelter.
Filing cabinets.
Birch veneer.
Handles.
Railway sleepers.
Box shooks.
Wall paper.
Cobalt nickel ore.
Alfalfa meal.
Alfalfa hay.
Boxes.
Malleable fittings.

As a result of the work in the Liverpool office, this direct business was obtained, and it was the means of obtaining other business. The details of results in the Liverpool office show trade in these commodities: apples, gloves, potatoes, alfalfa meal, handles, hay, flooring, talc. In the Bristol office: sugar, rubber footwear, concentrated apple juice, tobacco, pianos and parts, newsprint, potatoes, fruit punnets, broom handle squares, alfalfa meal, box shooks, lumber, broom handles, steel tubes, hand shoe tacks. In the Glasgow office: flax, rubber footwear, flour, eggs, handles, canned goods, cheese, cascara bark, calico rollers, silos.

Mr. ROGERS: Perhaps the minister would explain the expenditures incident to Mr. C. N. Wilde, of Mexico City, which last year amounted to $10,000.

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Wilde's salary is $3,540, and his living allowance $2,000.

Mr. ROGERS: What is the expenditure this year?

Mr. ROBB: It comprises:

|---|---|
| Travelling | $ 124 75 |
| Rentals and taxes | 2,088 46 |
| Salaries including staff | 7,313 44 |
| Newspapers and periodicals | 23 50 |
| Sundries | 794 95 |
| Total | $10,345 10 |

Mr. ROGERS: What benefit is derived from the agency there?

Mr. ROBB: The Mexican trade over the past few years has been:

|---|---|
| 1921 | $1,086,197 |
| 1922 | 1,197,597 |
| 1923 | 3,291,096 |
| 1924 | 3,510,397 |

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): The trade returns show that in 1921 our exports of agricultural and vegetable products to China amounted to $58,895 and by the year 1925 they had increased to $4,103,000. This is a very substantial increase in trade with a country with whom we have no trade agreement. Now let us look at the trade with some of the other places that have entered into trade treaties with Canada. For example, our exports of agricultural commodities to Italy in 1921 amounted to $56,579,751, whereas last year, after the treaty had come into effect, it dropped right down to $11,200,000. Surely the minister cannot contend that a trade treaty of that kind is in the interests of this country. What a contrast there is between that slump in trade with Italy and the increase in our business with China, with whom we have no treaty. Again, our exports of similar commodities to France amounted in 1921 to $12,871,679 and last year they had fallen to $4,175,000. These are the facts that we pointed out when the treaties were being put through the House, and we have striking evidence that so far as agriculture is concerned these treaties in every instance have proved disastrous to Canada. That is why we devoted so much attention to the recent trade agreement with Australia and New Zealand. Agriculture has been sacrificed by this government in the case of every treaty they have entered into with a foreign country.

Mr. TOLMIE: I am informed that there are no less than one billion acres of timber land in the British Empire. Is it not surprising, therefore, to find that in one single year the British Empire purchased from foreign sources £97,000,000 worth of timber of which £5,000,000 worth was used in the making of props for mines. Great Britain purchases only about one-tenth of her requirements within the empire. About 80 per cent of the timber consumed in the British Empire and in other countries is soft coniferous wood comprising fir, pine, spruce, hemlock and so forth, and we produce in British Columbia huge quantities of this timber. We have in the province very considerable areas of heavily timbered land such as one cannot find anywhere else in Canada. With these vast possibilities what efforts have been made to secure for British Columbia and for the Dominion generally, a larger share of the British market? Why is it that Great Britain purchases timber from other countries rather than from Canada? Is it because of cheaper freight rates that she gets her material from Scandinavia? I should like to know what results we have had from the splendid exhibits of Canadian timber at the Wembley exhibition.

Mr. ROBB: I cannot quote any statistics, but I agree with the hon. gentleman as to the quality and quantity of Canadian timber available. It will interest hon. members from British Columbia and elsewhere to know that when the Wembley buildings were under construction the Canadian High Commissioner in London made very strong representations to the committe in charge, even carrying his appeal to members of the British government, to have Canadian timber used in the work. He pointed out that the exhibition had been advertised as an inter-imperial affair and he discovered that they were starting construction with Scandinavian and other materials. I am glad to say that Mr. Larkin was successful in having a change made in the plans so that our own timber was used. I myself saw at Wembley beautiful exhibits of British Columbia timber in doors and panels. I also came across some excellent exhibits of Australian hardwoods. While I am not advertising Australian timber I am bound to say that Canadians make a mistake if they run away with the idea that we in this country produce the best hardwood in the world. There is very good hardwood in Australia as well. They are short of the softer woods, for which they have to look to the Washington territory, but more particularly to Canada, to meet their requirements for the shipping of fruit.

Mr. ROGERS: Was Australian timber used in our building at Wembley?

Mr. ROBB: No, they had an exhibition building too. The hardwoods of Australia are not suitable for shipping fruit. It carries better apparently in our softer woods, and I think we could develop a very profitable exchange of timber with that country. They say the Australia wood is not so susceptible to the teredos as our own timber. I think some of their wood is used in British Columbia on that account.

Mr. ROGERS: Has the minister at hand the total cost of our exhibit?

Mr. ROBB: That will come in the estimates of the Immigration department.

Mr. MacLAREN: How many trade agents are there in the West Indies?

Mr. ROBB: We have Mr. P. W. Cook at Jamaica and Mr. J. Cormack at Trinidad. They travel about the islands.

Mr. MacLAREN: Have we any trade agent in Havana, Cuba?

Mr. ROBB: Not permanently. We send men there occasionally to look into trade matters. We have under consideration the appointment of a resident agent.

Mr. MacLAREN: There is a general impression abroad that we have an insufficient number of trade agents in the West Indies, including Cuba, especially as the trade agreement with the West Indies will no doubt lead to a considerable increase of trade. Am I correct in thinking that the minister is considering making an increase in the number of trade agents?

Mr. ROBB: We are always training them. As I said a moment ago, representations have been made to us to appoint more trade agents. Of course, we can only appoint them as we have a supply of trained men. Regarding Cuba, as my hon. friend knows, in that market there is a 20 per cent preference against Canada in favour of the United States. It is a market of considerable value, particularly for products of the Maritimes, such as potatoes and fish. A considerable trade could be developed down there.

Mr. FLEMMING: I would impress upon the minister the importance of encouraging our trade with Cuba. There is a large and valuable trade at the present time between the Maritime provinces and that country. In talking with men who are familiar with the trade possibilities, I have always been impressed with their view that a real, well directed effort would bring substantial results. Our present trade has incidentally made it easier, it seems to me, to develop trade in other lines, and I think it is highly desirable that every effort should be made to this end not only in Cuba but in the British West Indies. It seems to me the trade between ourselves and the people down there should be most valuable because naturally we are producing what they require, and they are producing what we require. Therefore I view with a great deal of favour the treaty with the British West Indies, and I hope it will result in substantially increasing our trade. From the knowledge I secured several years back, I believe that efforts to increase our trade with Cuba will bring splendid results.

Mr. TOLMIE: What is the trade name of Douglas fir as sold in the Old Country? Is it not sold there as Oregon pine?

Mr. ROBB: I recall Mr. Larkin told us he did not think the British people were giving our timber proper credit.

Mr. TOLMIE: I think every possible effort should be made to induce our British friends to buy from us. I remember in the early years of the war some 53 or 54 shiploads of timber left the Pacific coast consigned to points in Great Britain, and 50 of those cargoes left United States ports, although we had plenty of timber in British Columbia to fill the Old Country demand.

Mr. ROGERS: Have we any agents in Copenhagen and Hamburg?

Mr. ROBB: We have a very good agent at Hamburg, Mr. L. D. Wilgress. He speaks German and Russian, and travels all through that part of Europe.

Mr. ESLING: Mr. Chairman, I have a letter bearing on this vote which I think will interest both the minister and the committee. Either some of these trade commissioners are very, very busy or else there are not enough of them, judging by what I am about to bring to the attention of hon. members. An industry was established in Nelson for the manufacture of clothes pegs, and while not operating on a very large scale, its output for one year amounted to $25,000. Established in 1922, it prospered to such an extent that in 1923 new machinery was installed, but just as they were getting under way the market was flooded with a similar product from Sweden, and they were obliged to shut down. A similar situation occurred in connection with a clothespin factory established in a small community in Quebec. The matter was brought to the attention of the department and has been under investigation apparently since 1922, with a view to ascertain if the Swedish article was being sold on the Canadian market at a lower price than in Sweden. As nothing resulted we appealed to the department again, and were advised that there was some difficulty in having an investigation made in Sweden by a Canadian trade commissioner, and that a representative in Rotterdam would have to be absent from his post for at least a week in order to make this investigation. I wonder how close to Sweden we have a trade commissioner. Here is an industry closed for a couple of years, the local men have practically lost their investment, the payroll has ceased, and yet our trade commissioner cannot go there to investigate conditions because it would take him a whole week. In other words, for the sake of saving a week's work on the part of this man a promising industry is obliged to close down, and its employees lose their jobs. They could not get this investigator to go; then they tried to have a special investigator go from England, and it was impossible for him to make the trip. Then the appointment of an investigator with headquarters at Paris was considered, but that apparently has not been done and then we get down to June, when the department finally decided that it was almost impossible to arrange to have one of the officers in Denmark or Germany make this investigation in Sweden. It seems most regrettable that an industry has to cease and a payroll vanish because an investigator cannot take a week to ascertain the conditions. I ask the minister if he will not endeavour to remedy this state of affairs.

Mr. ROBB: I think my hon. friend must be quoting from the records of some other department; we have no record of that kind in my department. I recall this question of clothes pins being brought up by a manufacturer in Quebec; we looked up the matter and discovered that the importation of clothes pins was practically nil. Then the complaint was altered, and it was said that while the importations were very small the Canadian manufacturers were compelled to reduce the price because of competition from these foreign countries. I do think they met with some competition and reduced their price in consequence, but I forget whether the competition came from Sweden or Norway.

Mr. ESLING: It seems as though the government has abandoned the idea now.

Mr. ROBB: I will have it looked into.

Item agreed to.

Trade and Commerce—Dominion Bureau of Statistics (including 1925 census), $625,000.

Mr. ROGERS: This is an increase of $500,000; I suppose that is due to the census?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, the five year census in the prairie provinces.

Mr. ROGERS: Will the minister say when the census enumerators were appointed?

Mr. ROBB: I think they must have been appointed some time ago, because I believe the work is over. I remember signing the order a long time ago.

Mr. ROGERS: You have no information there?

Mr. ROBB: No.

Mr. ROGERS: Have you the names of the enumerators?

Mr. ROBB: I have not got them here.

Mr. ROGERS: How were they appointed?

Mr. ROBB: In the same way they were appointed in previous years, I think; on the recommendation of some person in that county who knew conditions. The identical method followed by my hon. friends was adopted in this case.

Mr. ROGERS: I think my hon. friend is all wrong, because I understand that in the appointment of these census enumerators certain Progressive members were honoured with the selection of the enumerators, while certain others were not so honoured. That never happened in the Conservative regime. I think my hon. friend is doing us a great injustice in making that statement, and some explanation should be forthcoming.

Mr. ROBB: I have none to make.

Mr. NICHOLSON: When this question was up before I raised the point of co-ordination of the different statistical branches of the service, and I understood that the minister was going to have the matter looked into and see what could be accomplished along that line. I would like to ask him if anything has so far been done.

Mr. ROBB: Yes. I was a bit surprised myself to find that there was a little overlapping in that regard, and I think the officers are now working towards the elimination of duplication. I believe that was what my hon. friend was complaining of.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Yes. Since the matter was discussed at that time I have personally investigated a specific class of statistics, and I find that they are duplicated in toto; the statistics furnished to the Statistical branch are in the regular form, while the statistics furnished the Income Tax branch are almost identical in relation to such matters as salaries paid the employees of a manufacturing establishment and all that sort of thing.

Mr. ROBB: The Income Tax branch?

Mr. NICHOLSON: Yes, the Income Tax branch. They receive statistics which are practically identical with those sent to the Statistical branch having to do with the census of industries. This involves a tremendous amount of work in connection with the industry and it must necessarily involve a lot of work in connection with the two branches, because the compilation of these records cannot be done without some considerable expense. While the analogy is not so complete in the Department of Labour, a tremendous amount of work is done in connection with the statistics for the Department of Labour which is also done in connection with the Statistical branch, and my suggestion is that this work should all be co-ordinated in the Statistical branch, or in one particular branch at any rate. I do not know of any branch which can handle the work better; the information we get from this branch is very satisfactory. Then any department requiring information of that character could get it from the statistician. I can assure my hon. friend that it will mean a tremendous saving.

Mr. ROBB: I quite agree.

Mr. CLARK: I wonder if the minister can tell us the change in the amount of the subsidies paid to the western provinces as a result of that census?

Mr. ROBB: We have not that information yet. As my hon. friend knows, they are based on the population altogether, under the act.

Mr. ROGERS: The return is not complete as yet?

Mr. ROBB: No.

Mr. ROGERS: Would the minister let us know if it cost $500,000 to conduct the last census?

Mr. ROBB: The 1921 census of the prairie provinces cost $415,000, and we added 15 per cent for the additional population this year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Of course there was a little more work done in 1921.

Mr. ROGERS: Was that increase of 15 per cent due in any way to the fact that the Progressives had the patronage?

Mr. ROBB: I would not think so.

Item agreed to.

Trade and Commerce—Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act, administration of (export of electrical energy) $1,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I take it that this item is put in as a result of the order in council passed last year?

Mr. ROBB: I think so.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Last year we had an experiment in connection with budgeting; we rasied public revenues not by resolution of this House in the ordinary way but by order in council, and it is due to that order in council that this $1,000 is in the estimates. This $1,000 is to collect the tax on the horse power which is being exported. It is not a heavy tax; it is a small tax, though it works very hardly against the municipalities that had contracts which have to run for many years. I would like to know what the collections have been under that, what representations have been made to the government in connection with that tax and its legality by the municipalities and the provinces.

Mr. ROBB: I do not know that that has been questioned, but my hon. friend is quite right as to why the amount was put in. I observe that it was put in here in view of the discussion which took place last session. The expenditure up to March 31, 1926, has been $424.18; license fees, $600; export duty, $288,-392.41.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How much of that latter amount has been paid, and by whom?

Mr. ROBB: Payments have been made as follows:

| | Kilowatts: | License Fees: | Export Duty to March 31/26 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario, Toronto, Ontario.. | 80,000 | $50 | |
| Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario, Toronto, Ontario, (off-peak or interruptible power).. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 45,000 | 50 | $ 65,272 47 |

Some representations have been made to us, I might say in reply to my hon. friend. There was a question as to whether we had a right to charge an export duty on certain contracts that were made prior to the Export Act becoming law many years ago. We did not want to go into the courts with the case, and I have recently instructed the deputy not to press for payment on account of those contracts. They were contracts made prior to this becoming law.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Old contracts of the Hydro Electric Company.

Mr. ROBB: One, yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That was the contract they fell heir to as the subsequent purchasers of the Ontario Power Company.

Mr. ROBB: I think that is right.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am very glad to hear the minister's explanation.

Item agreed to.

Honorary Advisory Council for scientific and industrial research, $150,000.

Mr. ROGERS: Who are the officers of this council?

Mr. ROBB: I think there has been no change for some years. The officers are as follows: President, H. M. Tory, president University of Alberta; secretary, S. P. Eagleson, Ottawa. The members are: Frank D Adams, McGill University; Charles Camsell, Deputy Minister of Mines; A. L. Clark, Queen's University, Kingston; Hume Cronyn, London; A. Frigon, Dean, Ecole Polytechnique, Montreal; Sir George Garneau, Quebec; J. H. Grisdale, Deputy Minister of Agriculture; A. B. Macallum, McGill University; A. S. Mackenzie, Dalhousie University; J. M. McArthur, of Price Brothers, Quebec; J. C. McLennan, Toronto University; J. A. McClelland, Montreal, vice-president of International Association of Machinists; W. C. Murray, Saskatchewan University; R. F. Ruttan, McGill University.

Mr. ROGERS: Would the minister tell us what services they are rendering for this amount of money?

Mr. McGIBBON: While the minister is looking up the information I think this is an appropriate time to ask the government to give us some survey of the work of this organization. To my mind it is potentially one of the greatest organizations that could be created in this country, especially when we think of what has been accomplished in the United States by such scientific institutions as the Mellon Institute, for example, or the Bureau of Standards at Washington. With our vast natural resources, the possibilities of a scientific organization of this character are unlimited, as they are also in the way of industrial research. I think this body is the finest we can produce in the way of an organization in this country. We should have from the government some account of what they have accomplished. I would also ask why the late president of the council is not in office to-day.

Mr. ROBB: Who is that?

Mr. McGIBBON: Professor A. B. Macallum.

Mr. ROBB: I have just read the names of the council, and Doctor Macallum is on the board. My hon. friend was not listening.

Mr. McGIBBON: I was listening. Doctor Macallum was head of the council before, but to-day he is practically a nonentity on the board. He was the directing force for a good many years. He is the most eminent scientific man that this country has ever produced. He has held professorships in two universities in Canada, and has refused the presidency of five universities; he has a world-wide reputation and is looked upon as one of the greatest of living scientists. He has been honoured by the Royal College of Great Britain and yet has been relegated to-day to the practically unimportant position of a member of this council. However, that is of secondary importance. The main thing is that the possibilities of this body practically cannot be recounted. Therefore I ask the minister what the government has been doing and what they propose to do in order to facilitate the council's work.

Mr. ROBB: I shall direct the observations of my hon. friend to the attention of the board. The government have nothing whatever to do with the naming of the chairman of the board. The government have never interfered with the personnel of the board; I think the membership is practically the same as when we assumed office, with the exception of certain gentlemen whose appointment was unanimously desired by the board itself. The members themselves select their president; I do not know why Dr. Macallum was not appointed president. I do not know whether my hon. friend is speaking for Dr. Macallum—

Mr. McGIBBON: No, I am not.

Mr. ROBB: —or simply expressing his own point of view. The hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) asked a moment ago what the board were doing. I observe there is an increase of $15,000 in this vote. I think they have asked for more, and I am not sure that we shall not have to provide more for the work they are carrying on; they are certainly doing very excellent work.

The increase in this vote is required to enable the council to carry out a definite programme for research on both the human and bovine phases of tuberculosis. All existing agencies in Canada, including the federal departments of Agriculture and Health, university and sanataria laboratories have been enlisted in this work, which will insure co-ordinated and concentrated attack on the problems of this disease. This work, which has been definitely organized, calls for an expenditure on the part of the council during the year 1926-27 of $33,000, in addition to considerable sums which are being contributed by co-operating laboratories. It is impossible for the council to provide for this work without an increased vote. I was looking for one of the hon. members for Hamilton, who wanted to speak on this question, but I observe he is not in the House at present. At this point may I be permitted to give credit for what it has done to one of the great insurance organizations of Canada, as the chairman of the council sends me the following letter:

Hon. JAMES A. ROBB,
Acting Chairman,
Sub-committee of the Privy Council for Scientific and Industrial Research,
Ottawa.

DEAR MR. ROBB:

In view of the fact that the estimates of the National Research Council this year contain provision for an increased vote of $15,000, which is necessitated mainly by the work recently undertaken in connection with tuberculosis research in Canada, you will be interested to know that, in connection with this research, I have just received official confirmation from the Sun Life Assurance Company that they have granted to this council for the extension of this research the sum of $10,000 per year for a period of from three to five years, depending on the period of the investigation. Since the National Research Council estimates are to be considered in the near future, I have not made public announcement of this, thinking that you might wish to make the announcement regarding it at the time when the estimates are being considered.

Yours truly,

H. M. TORY,
President.

Mr. McGIBBON: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. ROBB: Permit me to finish the review of what the council are doing. The National Research Council is charged with the functions and duties detailed in sections 6 to 10 of the Research Council Act. I think it was Sir George Foster, the then minister, who introduced that legislation. Now, let me outline some of the work the council has been doing. For instance, take the following:

Cereal Grain Rust

It has been estimated that Canada suffers an average annual loss of not less than $25,000,000 through cereal grain rust. No important effort was made in Canada to solve this appalling economic problem until the National Research Council, acting in close co-operation with the federal Department of Agriculture, enlisted the co-operation of the universities situated in the three prairie provinces in the organization of a co-ordinated and concentrated attack on the many problems of this disease.

An associate committee on cereal grain rust, on which each of the above bodies is represented, has been appointed by the council and through this committee, the membership of which comprises the foremost grain rust experts in Canada, a definite programme of researches on cereal grain rust to be carried out in Canada has been established. The committee has also been charged with th rsponsibility of putting that programme into effective operation and with the wholehearted co-operation of the Federal Department of Agriculture and the universities of the prairie provinces, has, during the past year, been actively engaged in the actual prosecution of a comprehensive and thoroughly co-ordinated programme of researches on grain rust. This work is being carried on in the three prairie provinces and all facilities available in these provinces as to man power and equipment, are being utilized to the fullest possible extent.

Tuberculosis

Apart altogether from the untold suffering and misery directly attributable to the ravages of tuberculosis among humans, there is each year an appalling economic loss arising from the illness of those suffering from this disease and through the premature death of thousands of the most desirable type of citizens. In adidtion to this, it is obvious that bovine and avian tuberculosis are responsible for an enormous annual loss in the live stock and dairy industries.

Recognizing the importance of this problem, the National Research Council enlisted the co-operation of the federal Department of Agriculture in a plan for the co-ordination and stimulation of research work in Canada on this subject.

An associate committee on tuberculosis research has been appointed by the Council, representative of all the principal agencies now carrying on research work on this disease throughout Canada, and an executive committee comprised of the most eminent authorities in Canada on tuberculosis has been appointed to take charge of all work which the committee may decide it is advisable to undertake. A detailed programme of tuberculosis researches to be carried out in Canada has been established by the committee and arrangements have been made for the active and effective prosecution of that programme.

At the present time researches are being carried out by groups of workers centered at the University of Montreal, at the University of Toronto, at the University of Alberta, and at the research station of the federal Department of Agriculture, Hull, Que. Certain phases of the research programme are also being investigated at Queen's University, and at Queen Alexandra and Fort Qu'Appelle sanatoria.

The council have made a study of the discolouration of canned lobster. They have also conducted a research on rock crushing.

For the benefit of hon. gentlemen who are interested in mining, I will read what they say as to that:

> The outcome of an investigation on the above subject, carried out by the National Research Council in the department of Mining Engineering of the University of Toronto, was of such value to the mining industry that as a result the Hollinger Mining Company gave a fellowship of $1,200 to assist in continuing this work and the Nipissing Mining Company donated the sum of $20,000 for the founding of a permanent fellowship for research work in the department of Mining Engineering at the University of Toronto.

The council have investigated the subjects of reforestation, engineering standardization, and Canadian magnesite. As to the last named matter they say:

> The Canadian magnesite industry was developed chiefly during the war, but on the cessation of hostilities the renewed competition of Austrian magnesite almost destroyed Canadian export trade in this commodity. As a result the producing companies in Canada asked for assistance in solving various technical problems of their industry. This question was referred to the National Research Council. On investigation of the question and after consultation with the Mines department, the council recommended that research work on this subject should be undertaken. This recommendation was accepted and the council immediately appointed a special committee representative of both the council and the federal Department of Mines and assigned to this committee the duty of discovering, if possible, more economical methods of producing magnesite from the Canadian deposits and of developing new uses for the material. This work was begun in the summer of 1925 and is now being actively prosecuted with satisfactory results.

Other subjects dealt with are the following: Wireworms, winter hardiness in crop plants, radio inductive interference, bacteriology of haddock, red discolouration of cured codfish, chemistry of fish-curing, saving domestic fuel, briquetting of low-grade lignites, increasing nitrogen in the soil, acidity and lime requirements studies upon Quebec soils, the origin and control of false wild oats, best methods for obtaining acurate results in testing the yield of varieties and strains of grain, cultivation of drug-yielding plants in British Columbia, destruction of marine piling by wood-boring animals, utilization of Canadian low grade iron ores, disintegration of concrete in the alkali soils of western Canada, reduction of complex ores of British Columbia, disintegration of iron and steel in alkaline soils, the senses of vision, touch and taste, researches in the field of low temperatures, and a number of additional investigations.

Mr. McGIBBON: I do not wish the hon. minister to think I am criticizing this item, except in this respect: that the $150,000 in the estimates for a project of this kind is nothing at all. For example, in the United States we have the Mellon institute, which is expending about $2,000,000 a year in this work. We have the Dupont institute expending about another $2,000,000, the Kodak company and the Rockefeller Company all spending millions, so that $150,000 for this project is practically a bagatelle.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Hear, hear.

Mr. McGIBBON: The Minister of Interior says, "hear, hear" in a sarcastic jocular way.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, I am really in earnest.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am glad to hear it. This institution if properly manned has a potential value of hundreds of millions to the country. I could cite a company in the United States which saved over $500,000 in one year in one discovery for making yeast for baking bread. We know that the success of companies like the Kodak company and the Dupont company are due to the fact that they have scientific laboratories which have made discoveries which put them in the forefront and ahead of every other competitor. We know that the government of Canada has no equipped laboratory and no place in Ottawa, or any place else in the Dominion, to carry out this work. I am not blaming the government for that. I sat on a committee for three years which gathered evidence on this subject. We brought men from all over the continent of America. We got through this House an appropriation of about $600,000 to erect a building, which appropriation was kicked out in the home for incurables.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am speaking in earnest, Mr. Chairman. This Scientific and Industrial Research council, if it has efficient men and proper facilities, offers possibilities to this country that no other organization or institution in this country can possibly offer. For example, I carried a problem to them some years ago for solution. That is what this institution is for, and that is what the Mellon Institute does in the United States. If a business man has a problem in connection with his business that he cannot solve he takes it to the institute. Maybe they solve it and maybe they do not, but in many cases they do. I submitted two or three proposals to the council myself. One was the possibility of extracting the tanning powers from tanbark which is located, as many hon. members know ten, twenty, thirty, forty or fifty miles back from the railway, where it is a commercial impossibility to bring it out; yet the properties are of great value to the country. Then there is the possibility of converting hides into leather. It takes about six months with the present process, and it is quite possible that it could be done in two or three weeks or a month; and just consider what a saving that would be to the country. I have made the statement in this House, and I repeat it to-night, that Canada is living off the commercial brains of the American republic to the south. Any manufacturer will tell you that. In this country we are working second-hand, so to speak. We are living off the scientific brains of the American republic, and they are far ahead of us in industrial works. I am not blaming this government; the previous government which I supported was just as bad.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is awful, that is terrible.

Mr. McGIBBON: Well, I will take it back.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. McGIBBON: The government of which my hon. friend was a member passed a vote of $600,000 through this House; it was kicked out in the other chamber and never restored. No properly equipped laboratory for this class of work exists in Canada. This proposition offers the greatest possibilities to this country. All you have to do, Mr. Chairman, is to read the evidence which we obtained in committee of this House for three years in succession, showing how institutions in the United States and other organizations had profited by the tens and hundreds of thousands of dollars through scientific discoveries made by institutions of this kind. For instance we know that the government of the United States buy all their material for government contracts on the recommendation of the Bureau of Standards at Washington. And why? Simply because they give a report on a scientific basis, after analyzing the product. That report is the basis on which all purchases are made by the United States government.

Mr. MANION: How does this government do?

Mr. McGIBBON: I do not know. I ask the minister to take this seriously into consideration. He has admitted that two companies have volunteered to give him $50,000 towards it. I do not say they should not. I think they should. I think other industrial corporations should do more, but the fact is that the Dominion of Canada to-day has no proper organization to devolop this scientific industrial council. In a country like Canada, with our vast natural resources, our coal, our pulpwood and timber, and all the other problems that are confronting this country, it is up to the government, whatever party is in power, to give an organization such as this proper support in order that commercial organizations and corporations in this country may be afforded the proper facilities to put Canada at least on a par with other countries of the world. This remark has reference to agriculture as well, everything is included. We know —and the Minister of Agriculture will confirm it—that one reason why the American republic to-day can pay higher wages than any other country is that the production per man per day in the United States is not equalled anywhere else. They have that value largely on account of the scientific methods which have been developed, and I submit that an appropriation of $150,000 for this organization in Canada is absurd. We have not facilities here for educating brilliant scientific graduates of universities, in order that we may take hold of the subject and develop it. Until we have these institutions this country will lag behind other countries which possess these facilities. The minister has told us about the appropriation for the study of tuberculosis, but I do not see why that should be brought up now. This is an industrial organization. The other appropriation comes under the Department of Health, and when we come to that department I am going to say something about the dry bones in that organization. It has been sterile ever since its birth; in fact, it may be said to be stillborn. This is a scientific age, and neither the professional man nor the corporation nor the country that neglects scientific methods can keep up with competitors. This work costs money and we cannot expect individual firms to undertake it. As a matter of fact it is impossible in many cases, just as it is impossible for individuals to discover cures in medicine. True, this has been done, as for instance in the case of Doctor Banting. But experimentation is expensive and should not be left to the enterprise of individuals or of corporations. It is the duty of the government in the interests of the country to pay more attention to scientific research. I go so far as to say that the only salvation for Canada, with her tremendous national debt and the other problems she has to cope with, is to be found in new and improved scientific methods which will enable her to compete with the rest of the world and get ahead of her competitors. If not this country will surely fall behind. I am not speaking in any partisan spirit to-night. In my opinion the Senate is responsible for the present condition of the organization, and I urge the minister in the interests of the country to get his government to take hold of this matter in earnest. Give our manufacturers and our business men the necessary leadership by providing proper facilities in Ottawa or anywhere else as may be deemed best, so that our problems may be scientifically investigated. I am quite serious about this because I have not the slightest doubt that if we do not engage in an intensive programme of scientific research we shall not be able to hold our own.

Mr. ROBB: As Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce I appreciate the remarks of the hon. gentleman, and my only fear is that the persuasive eloquence of the hon. gentleman is going to cause my colleague, the Minister of Finance, some trouble.

Mr. CANTLEY: If I mistake not, the council arose out of work undertaken in the first place by the Munition Resources Commission of Canada, appointed towards the close of 1915 for the purpose of inquiring into the supply and sufficiency of raw materials in Canada required for the production of munitions of war. Among the subjects which the commission investigated was that of a supply of magnesite, referred to by the minister. Prior to that time we had had, so far as was then generally known in Canada, no refractory material suitable for use as open hearth furnace linings. That subject was thoroughly investigated and solved. Other matters taken up were the supply of molybdenum, tungsten, and bauxite. These matters were brought to a successful conclusion and at the close of the war, when the commission disbanded, one of the suggestions then made had reference to the formation of such an institution as this council.

One of the difficulties in connection with a matter of this kind is, in the first place, lack of money; and in the second place, in this particular instance, we made the mistake of vetoing a proposal for the erection of a building in this city or elsewhere, which would be devoted entirely to scientific research generally and particularly to analytical work. A million dollars could very well be spent on such a building and its equipment, and if we are to keep pace with our neighbours to the south it is absolutely necessary for us to go into this thing wholeheartedly. In the United States there are dozens, nay, scores of large corporations which spend sums of money ranging from half a million to two million dollars annually in scientific research and they incur this expenditure in the belief that they will get satisfactory returns. That belief is justified; they do get returns. We have in this country few corporations who have the like requisite facilities. Our manufactories are not so extensive, nor have they the capacity or capital. The result is that as manufacturers, both individually and collectively as a nation, we are falling behind the United States and other countries as well. Consider what Germany has been doing during the past quarter of a century. In chemical research she led the world and although that is not quite true to-day the fact remains that had it not been for her scientific research work Germany would not have been able to put up the fight which she did, and upon her scientific policy and achievement was founded to a large extent the German philosophy and hope of world domination.

We must make serious efforts along scientific lines if we hope to keep abreast of the times. The trouble I see with the present organization is the fact that we have such a large number of professors engaged in the work. I do not find fault for a moment with the fact in itself that so many professors as such are on the council, but they have to devote their energies largely if not exclusively to their professional work in the colleges to which they are attached, so that they are able to give only secondary and fragmentary consideration and effort and but a very general oversight to the work of the council, meeting as they do three or four times a year, the addition of some practical men would help. What is needed is a permanent organization headed by the best man available, with several departments dealing with the various branches of trade and industry. I do not think we should bring health research within the orbit of such an institution. This should be a matter of industrial and agricultural investigation exclusively. I do not say anything against the need for investigation along the lines of health and sanitation, but that is entirely a different department, and the two branches of research should not be merged, for they have little in common. Unless this country is prepared to take a broad view and have the courage to spend money we shall make but little or no progress. We have voted $3,000,000 for the Hudson Bay railway. Give us $3,000,000 for industrial scientific research and within three years results of far reaching importance will ensue.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I could not allow this opportunity to pass without saying a word or two in connection with this matter, because I want to endorse heartily everything that has been said by both my hon. friends opposite. This is something which unquestion-ably must be taken up earnestly. In the department of Mines and allied branches, in seventeen small disjointed buildings in the city, research work is going on under the direction of men who are doing the best they can under the circumstances. But this is not enough. Let me say however, in defence of the research council, that they are working along lines which in my opinion will ultimately bring results if only we give them the backing they require. They are making use of the universities of Canada and are trying to correlate the work. The investigations that are in progress in Ontario and elsewhere are certainly laudable and are laying the foundations for what I hope will be something substantial in the future. I most cordially support the suggestion of hon. gentlemen opposite that we should select a piece of ground in Ottawa and begin the construction of buildings which will be fit to house the men engaged in scientific research. We only need to point to one investigation to show the incalculable benefit of systematic, scientific research: I refer to the discovery under the Department of Agriculture of Marquis wheat. Who can estimate what it has meant to the people of Canada to have produced this new wheat which to-day is grown so extensively in the west? That is only one thing. To-day research is going on in connection with the rust evil, and if it is successful it will result in a saving to the farmers of the west and to the people generally of at least forty or fifty million dollars annually. Once more I voice my support, in the strongest possible terms, of the suggestion to construct buildings in Ottawa to provide facilities for thorough scientific research and to make this the centre from which will radiate all subsidiary activity. I do think the universities entering into this field will have a beneficial effect upon the student body, and although they are costing us a larger amount of money, we will get the benefit of the investment in the ultimate advantage that will accrue to the people of Canada.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Mr. Chairman, I should like to endorse what has been said and go a step further. During the five sessions I sat in this parliament every session we had a discussion somewhat similar to this, but we are now just where we were then, simply because no positive step has been taken. If the minister will include in the supplementary estimates a vote necessary to do all that can be done this year to provide at least a building, which is the first requisite in connection with this work, I am confident the House will support him. By virtue of the manner in which the money is being spent, we are not getting $150,000 worth of results. The research council is scattered all over the country, and it is impossible for its members to get together except at very infrequent intervals. My hon. friend refers to what is being done by the universities, but these are teaching institutions, and we should not mix up research work with the teaching of science, for example. I happen to know a young man who has been endeavouring to do some research work in one of our universities. He got a small grant from the research council, but it was so inadequate that he had to appeal to private individuals to pay the transportation costs on the materials he required. We ought to make a positive beginning which will ultimately grow into a research institute right here in charge of the best man we can secure for the job. It will be found that most of the men who are doing the best research work in the large institutions of the United States graduated from our own universities, but had no opportlunities to do such work here. During the war we were mining ores in northern Ontario that contained 27 per cent sulphur solely for the purpose of getting the sulphuric content. At the same time a few miles away we were transporting other ores to roasting beds, although they had just the same amount of sulphur, but we had no other means of extracting the baser metals.

Mr. ROGERS: I am almost converted to the view that the research council has some value. What remuneration does its members receive?

Mr. ROBB: They got only their travelling expenses.

Mr. ROGERS: It is now getting late, does not the minister think we ought to adjourn?

Mr. ROBB: There are only a few more items to be dealt with.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Chairman, as a representative of the agricultural industry, I can assure the minister that we will be very glad indeed to see a very substantal item in the estimates for research work so far as it affects industry.

Mr. McGIBBON: And agriculture?

Mr. GARDINER: And agriculture as well. We are willing to accept our share. But I rose to call attention to the fact that this session we have had two or three very long debates and on each occasion have been told that the only thing that can save our industry is higher protection; to-night, however, our high tariff friends say it is research work that is needed. They tell us our industries are so far behind our American competitors that unless more money is spent in research work we must have higher protection. Then for heaven's sake let us have some research work.

Item agreed to.

Printing of parliamentary and departmental publications, including the Canada Year Book, $100,000.

Mr. MANION: Why the $10,000 increase?

Mr. ROBB: The greater number of publications.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have some recollection that at one time a question arose as to mixing parliamentary publications with the Department of Trade and Commerce. What do we really do for parliament in this vote, because I think no parliamentary publications should appear in the Trade and Commerce vote.

Mr. ROBB: Yes, parliament is responsible for the number of copies of publications that it receives, and Trade and Commerce pays for the balance. My hon. friend will remember that by order in council in 1920 all departments of the public service are obliged to pay for all publications they receive. In 1921-1922 the cost was $89,000; 1922-1923, $103,000; 1923-1924, $114,000; 1924-1925, $87,000; 1925-1926, to February 28, $86,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I quite understand the printing of departmental publications, but what are you printing for parliament?

Mr. ROBB: I will give my friend the list.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: But for parliament?

Mr. ROBB: The Bureau of Statistics; sixth census of Canada, Canada Grain Act; commercial intelligence service; Canada Year Book; electricity and gas inspection; weights and measures and miscellaneous.

Item agreed to.

Trade and Commerce—Weights and measures inspection, including International Bureau of Weights and Measures, $310,000.

Mr. ROGERS: This simply covers the wages incident to the employees?

Mr. ROBB: Yes. The estimates for salaries of the staff is $205,475; contingencies, including rent, travelling expenses of the director, his staff at Ottawa, district inspectors and inspectors; postage, stationery, et cetera, $104,125; International Bureau of Weights and Measures, $400. This department showed a deficit in 1920-21 of $803.73; in 1921-22 it was $14,028.53; in 1922-23 it amounted to $1,596.21; in 1923-24 the deficit was $3,265.76. In 1924-25 it showed a surplus amounting to $9,065.18, and for the year ending March 31 last the surplus amounted to $22,460.49. Apparently it is now on a profitable basis.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The fees were increased some time ago.

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. McCLENAGHAN: Before this item passes I would like to say a few words on behalf of the grocers and small traders who have complained many times of the charges made for examination and inspection of weights and measures. They claim that this inspection is for the benefit of the public, and that the public should pay for it. We passed a large item to-night to cover the expenses of grain inspection, because it benefits the grain growers and enables them to get more for their grain, but the grocers and small merchants are charged for the benefit of the public. The Department of Agriculture sends out inspectors, and the department pays the whole cost. One of the nuisance items in connection with the inspection of weights and measures is the fact that when your inspector goes into a store he charges $1 for the transportation or cartage of the weights. The average store on Bank street has a frontage of about twenty feet; the blocks are about 200 feet long, which means ten stores to a block. That means the cartage people will get $10 for lifting a few weights from one door to another. At every convention of the retail merchants a great many complaints are heard regarding this fee; they feel they are paying too much to have the weights carried fifteen or twenty feet in the same block. I have in my hand the record of one of the inspections conducted at a store on Rideau street. The inspection and adjustment fees amounted to $8.35, and the cartage to $1, or a total of $9.35. Every year they have to pay this amount and the merchants claim it is not for their benefit. The great majority of people receive the benefit of this work and the merchants feel that the government should pay for that inspection because it is for the protection of the people; and particularly do they complain about this $1 charge for cartage. I think the department would be well advised to look into that matter and see why a block of ten small stores should have to pay $10 for the cartage of these few weights. I hope this will receive very serious consideration and that this charge may be done away with.

Mr. ROBB: If my hon. friend would give the officers of the department the name of the inspector who made that charge it will be very carefully looked into, because that is not the method followed in cities.

Mr. McCLENAGHAN: This was done at a store on Rideau street.

Mr. ROBB: The inspection of grain is a charge on the business.

Mr. McCLENAGHAN: But the grain grower gets a better price for his grain because it is inspected. In the inspection of weights, however, the benefit is to the public.

Mr. ROBB: I think my hon. friend is wrong. He might be giving out correct weight while his neighbour might have a scale not quite correct. This inspection is for his benefit as well as for the benefit of his customers.

Mr. McCLENAGHAN: In the year ending March 31, 1924 there were 570,764 inspections, of which 561,022 were verified and 9,742 rejected, which is a small percentage of incorrect measures compared to the number of inspections.

Mr. ROBB: But these shops were in competition with the men who had correct scales.

Mr. McCLENAGHAN: It is for the benefit of the public, and we claim that the people who get the benefit should pay for it.

Item agreed to.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think that winds up the business for to-night.

Mr. ROBB: Unless my hon. friends, who have been very good would allow me to put through the civil government estimates in one block; I will not insist upon it, but there is only one increase in the whole business.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Progress reported.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier) moved:

That the Auditor General's report for the past fiscal year be referred to the committee on Public Accounts.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): For the fiscal year ending March 31 last?

Mr. SPEAKER: "For the past fiscal year."

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the Auditor General's report down for the year ending March 31 last?

Mr. JACOBS: The current Auditor General's report whatever that is—the one that is before the House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That has been referred.

Mr. JACOBS: No, I understand it has not been referred; that is why I make the formal motion to-day.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall I say the "current fiscal year'" or the "past fiscal year?"

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is the second last past.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SUMAS LAKE DRAINAGE PROJECT

Mr. BARBER:

1. With respect to the Sumas lake drainage project: Did the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia enter into an agreement dated 8th August, 1923, providing for the transfer of lake bottom lands from the Dominion to the province, upon the conditions, amongst others, that (a) "The province of British Columbia assumes complete responsibility for the manner and method of the reclamation." and (b) "for the fair and equitable treatment of prospective and actual settlers" upon the whole lands to be reclaimed?

2. Was this agreement signed on behalf of British Columbia by "John Oliver, Acting Minister of Agriculture"?

3. Did the government of British Columbia, by "E. D. Barrow, Minister of Agriculture," make application on April 2nd, 1925, for formal transfer of the lake bottom lands, in a letter stating that "all the provisions of said agreement have been fulfilled"?

4. Have a body of land-owners, about 125 in number, under date of 6th February, 1926, petitioned the government of Canada inviting attention to alleged breaches of the terms of the contract, on the part of the government of British Columbia, and particularly to the allegation that the provincial government through their commissioners carried out the works recklessly and without regard to cost, so that the petitioners have been subjected to charges represented as ruinous and confiscatory; and also that the provincial government have denied to petitioners the fair and equitable treatment stipulated in the contract, and by contrast that government has caused the passage of legislation forbidding appeal to the courts against alleged unjust assessments?

5. (a) Have the representations of these petitioners been communicated to the government of British Columbia, and (b) has that government made a reply?

6. Did the Hon. John Oliver in this reply assert that "the diking commissioners who had charge and did carry out the work were the agents of the landowners and not of the government"; and (b) if he did so, whether or not this position is considered to be in compliance with the stipulation of the contract that "the province of British Columbia assumes complete responsibility for the manner and method of the reclamation"?

7. Was the reply by Mr. Oliver communicated to the petitioners?

8. In view of the allegation of breach of contract and contradictory statements as to other material facts, in the petition and reply respectively, does the government contemplate effective inquiry, at which petitioners may be heard, before giving decision on the petition for disallowance of the legislation complained of as against sound public policy?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. (a) Yes., (b) Under section "g" of the agreement dated August 8th, 1923, the province of British Columbia assumed complete responsibility for the fair and equitable treatment of prospective and actual settlers upon the crown lands sold to the province.

2. Yes.

3. Yes.

4. Yes.

5. (a) Yes, (b) Yes.

6. (a) Yes, (b) The matter is receiving consideration.

7. No.

8. Any interested parties are at liberty to make representations to the Minister of Justice upon the question of disallowance.

LOUISEVILLE POST OFFICE—CARETAKER

Mr. DOUCET:

1. Was the Hon. H. S. Béland, who recommended Freddy Régnier as caretaker of the Louiseville post office, at the time Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment?

2. Is Doctor Legris who has given similar recommendation in favour of Régnier the same person as Captain Legris of the medical corps of the Canadian army in France?

[Mr. Barber.]

3. Among the recommendations given in favour of Régnier, a veteran, was there one given to the Public Works department or to the Civil Service Commission by one Thomas Vanasse, contractor of the town of Louiseville?

4. Has another recommendation in favour of the same veteran soldier been received by the Civil Service Commission or the Public Works department from J. A. Barrette, a notary public?

5. Has a petition signed by more than 140 citizens of Louiseville, protesting against the nomination of Victor Héroux and praying for the appointment of a returned man, been received by the Civil Service Commission? If not, has such request been received by the Department of Public Works?

6. Is the Department of Public Works aware of the fact that its representative, Mr. Gingras, when sent down to Louiseville to examine the applicants, has said to several persons, that Victor Héroux could not be appointed to the position, as he was over age?

Hon. Mr LAPOINTE:

1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. No.

4. No.

5. A copy of the petition sent to the Department of Public Works was received in the commission.

6. No information. Mr. Gingras recommended the appointment of Mr. Victor Héroux.

MR. J. A. DONALDSON

Mr. GOTT:

1. Is Mr. J. A. Donaldson of the town of Kingsville, Ontario, engaged in any capacity by any department of the Canadian government?

2. If so, what is his official position?

3. What salary, wages, or fees, are paid in connection with this position?

4. Was an application received for the same position from Mr. Ernest Harris of the town of Kingsville, Ontario?

5. What qualifications are required for this position?

6. Were any examinations required in connection with this appointment?

7. Is the department aware that Mr. Donaldson failed in examination for a Customs position at Kingsville during the year 1925?

8. Has the government any record of inefficient service on the part of Mr. Donaldson in the capacity of returning officer for the south riding of Essex county during the federal election of October, 1925?

9. When was Mr. Donaldson appointed?

10. Under whose recommendation was Mr. Donaldson appointed?

11. How many applications were received for the position?

12. What consideration was given to the other applicants?

13. Could applications have been made to those interested in Mr. Donaldson without same reaching the department?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1 and 2. Mr. J. A. Donaldson is not in the employ of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, but a Mr. John E. Donaldson is both wharfinger of the government wharf and temporary lightkeeper at Kingsville, Ontario.

3. His remuneration as wharfinger is 50 per cent of his collections and as temporary lightkeeper $210 per annum.

4. No.

5. As wharfinger—to supervise the government wharf and enforce the wharfage regulations; to collect and make returns of whafage.

As temporary lightkeeper—to look after and be responsible for the care and proper exhibition of the light.

6, 7 and 8. No information.

9. As temporary lightkeeper—1st April, 1926. As wharfinger—26th March, 1926.

10. On the recommendation of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

11. For wharfinger—one; for lightkeeper, one.

12. Careful consideration.

13. Presumably yes.

EXPERIMENTAL SHIPMENT OF HORSES

Mr. DAVIS:

1. In connection with the experimental shipment of horses from the province of Saskatchewan in 1925; on what date were these horses shipped?

2. What amount of freight was paid from point of shipment to port of Montreal or whatever sea port to which said horses were sent for shipment by boat, giving total weight and rate per hundred?

3. What railway in Canada were said horses shipped over?

4. What insurance company insured said horses?

5. What were the names of persons to whom salaries were paid, for what service, and the amounts to each person, in this connection?

6. What were the names of persons to whom living and travelling expenses were paid, and the amount to each person?

7. What were the names of persons who purchased the said horses, number purchased by each, and amount paid each person for buying the said horses?

8. What was the cost of the horse sold in Canada, the amount pair for said horse and to whom was it sold?

9. Where any of these horses sold to be slaughtered and sold for horse meat?

Hon. Mr. MOTHERWELL:

| Montana Earl, horseman | 187 50 | 21 20 |
| Joe Orr, horseman | 187 50 | 21 20 |

Expenses not yet finally adjusted.

7. The horses were purchased by Mr. Jack Byers and Mr. R. E. Wilson, district live stock promoters of the department assisted by Dr. McLellan of the Saskatchewan Department of Agriculture and Dr. Talbot of the Alberta Department of Agriculture.

They received no additional remuneration for this.

8. Cost price, $70; selling price, $80; experimental farm, Indian Head.

9. Two horses each broke a leg and were sold to a butcher.

FREE RAILWAY TRANSPORTATION—CLERGY

Mr. ESLING:

1. Are the clergy of Canada entitled to free transportation on Canadian railways?

2. Are the clergy in the employ of the Immigration and Colonization Department receiving free transportation on Canadian railways?

Hon. Mr. DUNNING:

1. No.

2. Yes, when requests are received therefor from the Minister or Deputy Minister Canadian Immigration department.

POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANKS

Mr. SPENCER:

1. How many post office savings banks were there in operation on the 1st of January in each year since 1920?

2. What was the total amount of deposit in these banks on the 1st of January in each of these years?

3. Is there a limit to the amount a person can deposit annually? If so, how much, and why?

4. Is there a limit to the amount on which any person can draw interest? If so, what is it, and what is the reason for such limitation?

5. What is the average rate of interest paid on these deposits?

6. To what use does the government put these moneys?

7. Is there anything being done by the government to increase the use of the post office savings banks?

INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS AND TREATIES

PROCEDURE GOVERNING NEGOTIATION, SIGNATURE AND RATIFICATION

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

Whereas the Imperial conference of 1923 recommended for the acceptance of the governments of the empire represented that the following procedure should be observed in the negotiation, signature and ratification of international agreements:

The word "treaty" is used in the sense of an agreement which, in accordance with the normal practice of diplomacy, would take the form of a treaty between heads of states, signed by plenipotentiaries provided with full powers issued by the heads of the states, and authorizing the holders to conclude a treaty.

I.

1. Negotiation.

(a) It is desirable that no treaty should be negotiated by any of the governments of the empire without due consideration of its possible effect on other parts of the empire, or, if circumstances so demand, on the empire as a whole.

(b) Before negotiations are opened with the intention of concluding a treaty, steps should be taken to ensure that any of the other governments of the empire likely to be interested are informed, so that, if any such government considers that its interests would be affected it may have an opportunity of expressing its views, or, when its interests are intimately involved, of participating in the negotiations.

(c) In all cases where more than one of the governments of the empire participates in the negotiations, there should be the fullest possible exchange of views between those governments before and during the negotiations. In the case of treaties negotiated at international conferences, where there is a British Empire delegation, on which, in accordance with the now established practice the dominions and India are separately represented, such representation should also be utilized to attain this object.

(d) Steps should be taken to ensure that those governments of the empire whose representatives are not participating in the negotiations should, during their progress, be kept informed in regard to any points arising in which they may be interested.

2. Signature.

(a) Bilateral treaties imposing obligations on one part of the empire only should be signed by a representative of the government of that part of the empire in respect of which the obligations are to be undertaken, and the preamble and text of the treaty should be worded as to make its scope clear.

(b) Where a bilateral treaty imposes obligations on more than one part of the empire, the treaty should be signed by one or more plenipotentiaries on behalf of all the governments concerned.

(c) As regards treaties negotiated at international conferences, the existing practice of signature by plenipotentiaries on behalf of all the governments of the empire represented at the conference should be continued, and the full powers should be in the form employed at Paris and Washington.

3. Ratification.

The existing practice in connection with the ratification of treaties should be maintained.

II.

Apart from treaties made between heads of states it is not unusual for agreements to be made between governments. Such agreements, which are usually of a technical or administrative character, are made in the names of the signatory governments, and signed by representatives of those governments, who do not act under full powers issued by the heads of the states: they are not ratified by the heads of the states, though in some cases some form of acceptance or confirmation by the governments concerned is employed. As regards agreements of this nature the existing practice should be continued, but before entering on negotiations the governments of the empire should consider whether the interests of any other part of the empire may be affected, and, if so, steps should be taken to ensure that the government of such part is informed of the proposed negotiations, in order that it may have an opportunity of expressing its views.

And whereas it was further agreed that the existing procedure in relation to ratification of treaties was as follows:

(a) The ratification of treaties imposing obligations on one part of the empire is effected at the instance of the government of that part:

(b) The ratification of treaties imposing obligations on more than one part of the empire is effected after consultation between the governments of those parts of the empire concerned. It is for each government to decide whether parliamentary approval or legislation is required before desire for, or concurrence in, ratification is intimated by that government.

This House approves of the procedure proposed for the negotiation, signature and ratification of treaties and conventions, and considers further that before His Majesty's Canadian ministers advise ratification of a treaty or convention affecting Canada, or signify acceptance of any treaty convention or agreement involving military or economic sanctions, the approval of the parliament of Canada should be secured.

He said: The resolution which you have just read, Mr. Speaker, relates to the all important question of the negotiation, signature and ratification of treaties involving military or economic sanctions. The resolution will be found to divide itself into two parts, the first part asking formal approval by parliament of the resolution respecting the negotiation, signature and ratification of treaties which was adopted at the Imperial conference of 1923; the second part asking the approval by parliament of the procedure to be adopted with respect to the ratification of treaties only upon the prior approval by parliament which, under the resolution of the Imperial conference, was left optional with the different governments and parliaments of the empire concerned. My reason for bringing this resolution forward at this time is that another Imperial conference has been called to assemble in London in October of this year. It is, I think, desirable that representatives of the government attending that conference should be in a position to state that the parliament of Canada has approved the resolution respecting the negotiation, signature and ratification of treaties which was adopted at the previous conference. I think it desirable also that the House and the Imperial conference should know the attitude which the representatives of the government will be expected to take in stating the position of this country on the all important matter of procedure with respect to the ratification of treaties.

In connection with the first part of this resolution I assume there will be very little if any question as to the attitude of parliament. Indeed, I hope the entire resolution will meet with the unanimous approval of this House, and if I refrain from going into matters of possible controversy it is because of a desire to have agreement between all parties in this House as far as possible in connection with these questions which relate to our inter-imperial and international relations. The resolution considered in a broad way is one which should commend itself to all groups in this parliament; at any rate it is my hope that the discussion will so resolve itself.

In connection with the first part of the resolution requesting approval by parliament of the resolution adopted at the Imperial conference of 1923 respecting the negotiation, signature and ratification of treaties, I would say that at the Imperial conference this resolution was unanimously approved by the governments represented there. It was approved by the government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and by the representatives of the governments of Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Newfoundland and the Irish Free State and Canada, as well as by the representatives of India. In the circumstances, therefore, I think there will be little difficulty in finding general acceptance of the resolution in this parliament. It may, however, be advisable to put on record the reference made in the report of the Imperial conference itself as to the manner in which a decision was reached with respect to this particular resolution.

I might anticipate the reading of that particular paragraph by recalling to the House the discussion which we had in this parliament in a previous session with respect to the negotiation of a treaty with the United States having to do with the conservation of the halibut resources on the Pacific coast. Hon. members present at that time will recall that the government of the day, the present administration, took the view that as that treaty affected only this part of the empire and related to a matter of mutual concern to the great republic to the south and ourselves, it was right and proper that the negotiations should be conducted by ministers of the crown representing the government of Canada, and that the ministers so conducting the negotiations should be given full powers by His Majesty, and that the same rights which existed with respect to the negotiation of the treaty should also exist with respect to its signature and with respect also to its ratification. In other words, that as it was a treaty which concerned only one part of the empire, the part of the empire alone concerned was the part which should undertake and carry through the negotiations and advise ratification.

The consideration of the Halibut treaty gave rise, as I have said, to some discussion in parliament and to a difference in the point of view as between the parties as to whether the government in thus asserting Canada's position was perhaps not going too far in placing upon the shoulders of its ministers obligations which theretofore had been exercised by either ambassadors or ministers of the home government. There was a considerable discussion here, considerable discussion in the press of this country and in the Old Country as to the whole position, the significance being as to whether or not it marked a departure in the negotiation of treaties. That was how the matter came to come before the Imperial conference.

I shall not go into the discussions which took place at the Imperial conference with respect to that matter. All I wish to say to the House at the moment is that the Canadian position as taken was maintained absolutely by the Imperial conference as a whole. Not only did the ministers of the other self-governing dominions take the position, in giving their assent to the resolution, that what Canada had done with respect to that particular treaty was done in a right and proper way, but the conference went further and said that with respect to similar classes of treaties in the future the procedure there adopted should be the one to be followed.

In considering the question of the negotiation, signature and ratification of treaties, a special committee of the conference was appointed to give the matter detailed study. That special committee was presided over by the late Lord Curzon, who at the time was Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and it had the advice and assistance of the able counsel of the Foreign Office, Sir Cecil Hurst. The record of the proceedings of the conference will be found on page 13 of the Summary of Proceedings presented to His Majesty's parliament in November, 1923, as follows:

> The principles governing the relations of the various parts of the empire in connection with the negotiation, signature and ratification of treaties seemed to the conference to be of the greatest importance. Accordingly it was arranged that the subject should be fully examined by a committee, of which the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs was chairman. The Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Prime Ministers of Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia, New Zealand, the Union of South Africa and Newfoundland, the Minister of External Affairs of the Irish Free State, and the Secretary of State for India as head of the Indian Delegation, served on this committee. With the assistance of the legal adviser to the Foreign Office, Sir C. J. B. Hurst, K.C.B., K.C., the following resolution was drawn up and agreed to:

Then follows the resolution, which is exactly as cited in the notice which appears on the order paper, but for the purposes of record, Mr. Speaker, I think I had better place it in full on Hansard. The resolution reads:

> "The word 'treaty' is used in the sense of an agreement which, in accordance with the normal practice of diplomacy, would take the form of a treaty between heads of states, signed by plenipotentiaries provided with full powers issued by the heads of the states, and authorizing the holders to conclude a treaty."

> "The existing practice in connection with the ratification of treaties should be maintained."

That is part I of the resolution. Hon. members will notice that the House is asked to approve of the procedure proposed for the negotiation, signature and ratification of treaties and conventions as set forth in that resolution. As I say, I think there can be no possibility of the House in any way taking exception to the form of procedure as therein outlined. I would only add this, that since this resolution of the Imperial conference was adopted, the government has proceeded in the negotiation of other treaties upon the basis therein laid down. In the report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, for the year ending March 1, 1925, which was tabled in the House at the beginning of this session, will be found a list of the treaties that have been negotiated, signed and ratified since this resolution went into effect.

I have already spoken of the Halibut treaty, which has been signed and ratified prior to the meeting of the Imperial conference. The next treaty to be negotiated, signed and ratified in accordance with the proceedings therein set forth was the commercial treaty with Belgium. I might say, in passing, with respect to the signature of that treaty that it was the first treaty in the history of the Dominion to be signed in Canada by Canadian ministers of the crown holding full powers from His Majesty to sign in his name. The first treaty of the kind to be signed in Canada; the Halibut treaty, had been signed by ministers of the crown of Canada holding full power from his Majesty to sign in his name, but it was signed at Washington, and not at Ottawa. The commercial treaty with Belgium has the historic significance of being the first treaty approved by this parliament, negotiated and signed in Canada, with the full powers given by His Majesty to Canadian ministers to act on his behalf.

The other treaties with the United States which were signed since the resolution of the Imperial conference are the convention for the purposes of suppressing smuggling operations along the international boundary, and preventing the violation of the laws regarding narcotics, which was signed at Washington on June 6, 1924, and ratifications exchanged at the same place on July 17, 1925. A supplementary convention to provide for extradition on account of crimes against the laws for the suppression of traffic in narcotics was signed at Washington on January 8, 1925, and ratifications were exchanged on July 17, 1925. On February 24, 1925, a convention between Canada and the United States was signed at Washington providing for the regulation of the levels of the lake of the Woods, ratifications being duly exchanged at Washington on July 17, 1925.

At Washington on the same day a treaty was signed to define more accurately the international boundary between the two countries, and ratifications were exchanged at Washington on July 17, 1925.

Hon. members will find in this report references to other conventions and treaties, some of them of a commercial character and some relating more particularly to negotiations between different parts of the British Empire. But the treaties which I have just mentioned are treaties with foreign countries, treaties which were negotiated by Canadan ministers holding full power from His Majesty for the purpose and signed by them in the name of His Majesty, and the ratification of which was effected after this parliament had approved of the treaties. So, Mr. Speaker, I submit that with respect to the first part of the resolution which sets forth the procedure to be followed in regard to negotiation, signature and ratification, this parliament may be assumed by its repeated actions to have endorsed the resolution in full, and there should therefore be no difficulty at the present time in obtaining formal approval of the course of procedure there outlined.

The second part of the resolution asks the approval of parliament to one particular form of procedure with respect to the ratification of the treaties. May I pause here to remind hon. members that ratification of a treaty is an executive act—it is an act of the sovereign. Sometimes in the discussion of these international questions we use terminology with a freedom that is perhaps hardly permissible if we wish to be exact, and not infrequently one hears mention of a treaty being ratified by parliament. The act of ratification is an executive act, an act performed by the sovereign. It is performed by the sovereign, however, on the advice of his ministers, that may be regarded as sufficient, or there may be a limitation placed upon ministers before advising ratification—such a limitation as is suggested in the present resolution, namely of approval by the parliament of the country in the first instance. In the resolution of the Imperial conference it was stated that the procedure with respect to ratification was to remain as it had existed theretofore. That meant that it was optional with the parliaments or the governments of the different countries concerned to decide whether or not ratification should be on the advice of the ministry solely, or whether it should be upon the approval of parliament in the first instance. The present government, in the case of Canada, believes that it will help to avoid embarrassments and dissensions, that it will make for greater unity and for greater security within the empire in the long run, if the general practice is adopted with respect to important treaties such as involve military and economic sanctions of approval by parliament of such treaties in the first instance preceding advice on the part of the ministry favourable to ratification.

Mr. McGIBBON: Does the Prime Minister not think that it is the duty of the government to advise parliament as to what the policy of the government is?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will come to that in a moment. I think it is more important that parliament should feel assured in regard to all these great obligations of an international character which involve military and economic sanctions that a government should not have the opportunity of binding parliament in advance of its own knowledge to the obligations incurred thereby. That is the principle that is being laid down at the moment.

Mr. McGIBBON: Are they really binding parliament? Is it not really a case of having parliament back up the government?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wish to play upon words. I assume that when a government makes a contract with another government to all intents and purposes it is assumed by the parties thereto that it is a binding contract. I should not wish to be a member of a government that did not take that view of its obligations.

To continue with the resolution, Part II begins:

> Apart from treaties made between heads of states, it is not unusual for agreements to be made between governments. Such agreements, which are usually of a technical or administrative character, are made in the names of the signatory governments, and signed by representatives of those governments, who do not act under full powers issued by the heads of the states: they are not ratified by the heads of the states, though in some cases some form of acceptance or confirmation by the governments concerned is employed. As regards agreements of this nature the existing practice should be continued, but before entering on negotiations the governments of the empire should consider whether the interests of any other part of the empire may be affected, and, if so, steps should be taken to ensure that the government of such part is informed of the proposed negotiations, in order that it may have an opportunity of expressing its views.

This particular paragraph, hon. members will observe, relates more especially to agreements which are of a technical or administrative character. Agreements of that character are not primarily being considered in this resolution. This resolution has been drafted so as to relate specifically to those treaties which involve military and economic sanctions. However, the House is asked to approve of the resolution of the Imperial conference with respect to treaties of a technical or administrative character, in so far as the resolution places the same obligation upon the governments concerned to inform other governments interested as the preceding part does. The resolution was submitted to the full conference and unanimously approved.

It was thought that it would be of assistance to add a short explanatory statement in connection with parts I and II setting out the existing procedure in relation to the ratification of treaties. The clauses in the Imperial conference resolution in this connection are as follows:

> (b) The ratification of treaties imposing obligations on more than one part of the empire is effected after consultation between the governments of those parts of the empire concerned. It is for each government to decide whether parliamentary approval or legislation is required before desire for, or concurrence in, ratification is intimated by that government.

The concluding sentence which I have just read is the important one for the House to consider in relation to the last part of the resolution before it. The Imperial conference resolution states it is for the government to decide whether parliamentary approval of legislation is to be required before a desire for or concurrence in ratification is intimated. In other words the Imperial conference, composed as it was of representatives of all parts of the empire, took the view that it was not only proper but right that each part of the empire should decide for itself with respect to the ratification of treaties whether or not it desired to have in the first instance the approval of parliament. The present government by this resolution is asking parliament to approve of a course of procedure which will involve with respect to treaties, involving military and economic sanctions, the approval of parliament before the government of the day agrees to any obligation implied in the treaty being undertaken in the name of the country.

There are one or two reasons which I might cite as to why it appears to be desirable at this time that this parliament should give its approval to the course of procedure set forth and which is being recommended. One is that at the proceedings of the forthcoming Imperial conference matters may come up with respect to existing agreements or treaties in which the representatives of the Dominion of Canada will be asked to express their views, and may possibly be asked as to commitments which it may be thought desirable to have made in the name of the country. One case in point is that of the so-called Locarno agreement. The British government has intimated that it is intended that at the Imperial conference all phases of these agreements and their significance with respect to the empire as a whole and to the different parts of the empire shall be discussed. It is important therefore that this House of Commons should say now whether or not it desires that before any binding agreement is entered into on the part of Canada with respect to the Locarno pact, parliament shall be consulted and shall be given an opportunity of approving before action is taken by the government in this regard.

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, this afternoon to go into the question of the Locarno agreements at any length. I wish merely in connection with this particular resolution to draw the attention of the House to what these agrements are, and the present position of our country in relation thereto. We speak of the Locarno pact as though it was one agreement. As a matter of fact, I think there are nine distinct agreements which the countries represented at Locarno became parties to. The one which is of concern primarily to this Dominion is the treaty of mutual guarantee between Germany, Belgium, France, Great Britain and Italy, known as the Rhine security pact, an agreement which makes provision for a recognition of the existing frontiers between France and Germany on the one side, and between Belgium and Germany on the other, which frontiers are to be recognized in future by the parties who are signatories to the agreement, with the further undertaking that any difficulty arising in respect thereto shall be made the subject of arbitration in the first instance. Article 9, of the treaty of mutual guarantee contains the following clause:

> The present treaty shall impose no obligation upon any of the British dominions, or upon India, unless the government of such dominion, or of India, signifies its acceptance thereof.

In other words, at present Canada is not bound by any of the obligations set forth in the agreements which were negotiated at the time, and Canada does not become bound by these agreements, unless the government of this country signifies its desire to become a party thereto. Up to the present the government has seen no reason why it should at this time assume obligations which it is not obliged to assume under the Locarno pact, more particularly as the British government itself has expressed the desire that a final decision in this matter be not reached until after the whole question has been fully discussed at the Imperial conference. The British government has proceeded on the assumption that no obligation under article 9 of the treaty would in any event be undertaken by any dominion government, unless the whole position had been laid before its parliament and approval of parliament obtained. It has also been felt by the British government that before arriving at any final judgment the governments of the dominions would desire the fullest possible information as to the situation created by the treaty in relation to the whole field of foreign policy and defence. It has been suggested that there should be a general examination of the whole situation, and that such examination should be deferred until there has first been an opportunity of discussion between ministers of Great Britain and the representatives of the dominions and of India, such as would be afforded at the Imperial conference which has now been fixed for the month of October. So I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that up to the present time the government has not signified its acceptance of the Locarno agreement, and the government does not propose to reach a final decision in the matter until after the Imperial conference which will be held this fall. The point that I wish to bring out very clearly in this regard is that this government, if representing Canada at the Imperial conference, will take the position with respect to the Locarno agreement, regardless of what decision may be reached, that parliament will be asked to approve of the acceptance of the Locarno pact before the Dominion of Canada becomes a party thereto. That is the point that I want to make clear in connection with the present resolution, in so far as it has a bearing upon the Locarno pact.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I ask the Prime Minister a question?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is it not a fact that practically all the obligations we might be subject to by the Locarno treaty were contracted by the Peace treaty of Versailles?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wish to go into a discussion of the Locarno agreement at the present time. That is a big subject. The particular question my hon. friend has raised is one which no doubt will come up at the Imperial conference, and I would like to be in a position, should it be my privilege to present to parliament matters connected with the Locarno agreement, to give all those phases careful study and investigation before pronouncing too definitely upon them. But what I wish to direct the attention of the House to at the moment is that clause 9 of the treaty of mutual guarantee as it stands at present reads:

> The present treaty shall impose no obligation upon any of the British dominions, or upon India, unless the government of such dominion, or of India, signifies its acceptance thereof.

Some critics who have examined the treaty have been inclined to be suspicious of the use of the word "government", rather than the use of the word "parliament", as it appeared in a previous treaty of guarantee relating more particularly to France, which was proposed a couple of years ago, but which did not become effective. In that treaty, a treaty of guarantee, to which the United States, France and Britain were named as parties, and which contained provision similar to the one now found in the Locarno treaty, it was stated that the treaty would impose no obligation upon the dominion unless the parliament of such dominion signified its acceptance thereof. The use of the word "government" in the present Locarno agreement would seem to suggest that in the minds of those who had to do with the drafting of the treaty there was a reason why the word "parliament" should be dropped and the word "government" substituted therefor. May I say that, after knowing, as I do from the correspondence, what was in the mind, of the British government, I have no hesitation in saying that the British government had no ulterior object in view, so far as the change of the word "parliament" to "government" was concerned. This clause, as hon. members will notice, speaks of India as well as the dominions. India has not a parliament in a position to express approval on matters of this kind, and I believe that was the consideration which governed in the use of the word "government" in this clause rather than the word "parliament." But what the British government itself has anticipated, what it expects at the present time, is that before Canada becomes a party to the Locarno agreement, this parliament will be asked to express its approval. It is not anticipated that the government regardless of parliament will be expected to give approval on the part of Canada. That, I think, is sufficient with respect to the Locarno agreement.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What additional information is it hoped to secure at the time of the Imperial conference bearing upon the Locarno treaty that will enable the government to decide any more fully than it now can with regard to the policy of Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I really cannot tell what additional information there may be. I have already told my hon. friend our position up to the present moment, namely, that we are prepared and I am sure the House will be prepared to wait for any additional information which other members of the Imperial conference may wish to place at our disposal. I simply accept in good faith the expression of opinion of the British government that it is desirable an opportunity should be given to have all information before us before a decision is reached and I am prepared to act upon it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Am I not right that we shall be dealing with a definite treaty and certain documents and that Canada ought to have her own policy with regard to that treaty just as much now as at any later time?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have already said that Canada has her policy. Canada knows her mind in this matter; but if a request comes from one part of the empire to another to defer a final word until there has been opportunity of conference, I for my part do not see why a request of that kind should not be met. It is altogether desirable that in these matters affecting the empire as a whole, the fullest opportunity for conference and discussion should be given. Certainly if Canada were asking another part of the empire to defer its final judgment on a matter which affected Canada, I would hope that other part would be willing to meet us in like spirit.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Has such a request been passed on to the other dominions?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It has been passed on to all the dominions.

Mr. McGIBBON: The Prime Minister has said that the government has a definite policy on this matter. Will he be good enough to tell the House what it is?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend could not have been listening. I did tell the House. I said that up to the present time the government had not seen any reason why it should assume obligations under this particular clause which leaves it optional for the dominions to say whether or not they will assume these obligations.

In conclusion I have just one other word to say bearing directly on this matter. Hon. members will have noticed that I have drawn a distinction between an obligation placed upon a government and an obligation placed upon parliament. In this instance I direct my present remarks more in the form of a question to the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) than of any observations with respect to certain declarations which he has made on the subject of Canada's participation in foreign wars which, of course, arises out of obligations assumed through agreements, treaties or conventions.

In a speech made at Hamilton in the fall of last year my right hon. friend is reported as making a very significant statement, I hope he will correct me if in any particular I fail to give the quotation aright. I am taking the following quotation from my right hon. friend's speech as it is found reported in the Mail and Empire of Toronto, of November 17, special to the Mail and Empire from the staff reporter at Hamilton under date of November 16. I will not attempt to read the whole of the speech, but I will deal with the point that is pertinent to my present remarks. My right hon. friend is reported as saying:

> If ever the time should come when the spectre of 1914 should again appear I believe it would be best not only that parliament should be called, but that the decision of the government which, of course, would have to be given promptly, should be submitted to the judgment of the people at a general election before troops should leave our shores. This would contribute to the unity of our country in the months to come and would enable us best to do our duty. It would not mean delay. Under the stress of war delay would be fatal. Let me make clear what I mean. The government would have to decide and decide quickly what was best in the interests of Canada. The government would have to act on its judgment, but before there was anything in the way of participation involving the despatch of troops the will of the people of Canada should first be obtained.

The question I wish to ask my right hon. friend is this—and I hope he will explain it when he gets up to speak—whether by that declaration he means that it shall rest solely with the government to make the decision whether or not Canada shall participate in wars or whether it shall be parliament which must approve before the further reference is made to the people as a whole in a general election.

3 p.m.

As I read my right hon. friend's remarks they are capable of two interpretations. One is that if Canada is asked to participate in a war parliament will be summoned, but there is no obligation to place before parliament for its approval the decision taken with respect to sending troops overseas. I think my right hon. friend's remarks may be read to mean that the government itself, irrespective of parliament, will have the determination of whether or not troops are to go overseas; what the government would do would be to call parliament together very quickly and as soon as parliament is called together there will be an appeal from parliament to the people in a general election after the government has reached a decision but before it has submitted its decision to parliament for approval.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I can answer that now. I never for a moment contemplated that the government would make the decision irrespective of parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does my right hon. friend say his policy is that parliament should in the first instance approve the decision of the government?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not said anything about the order. I simply say in answer to the direct question put to me: I never contemplated the government acting in the way of sending troops without the approval of parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That does not answer my question. I think it is due to the House that my right hon. friend should make his position clear. Let us assume for a moment that the government has reached a decision to participate in a foreign war. Will he first obtain parliamentary approval of that decision before appealing to the people in a general election?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the people have to be appealed to, it is perfectly worthless to appeal to parliament first. The people will decide and parliament, when elected, will approve.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Now we see exactly what my right hon. friend means. He does not mean to ask the approval of parliament, the representatives of the people, with respect to our participation in foreign wars.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I beg his pardon. His answer is not capable of any other interpretation. He will call parliament together but he will not say that he will submit to the approval of parliament the decision that the government has reached with respect to participation in foreign wars.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say that at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I ask my right hon. friend again. Will he answer the specific question? I will put a concrete case to him. Under the Locarno agreement let us assume that the government has decided that troops are to be sent to France or Germany. Will my right hon. friend say that if he has decided that troops are to go, when he calls parliament together he will submit that question to parliament and abide by the decision of parliament before he makes his appeal to the electorate?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have answered the question already, but my answer is only being misinterpreted and the Prime Minister had better finish his speech.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend has not answered the question.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, I have.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, Mr. Speaker, I direct the attention of the House and the country to the tactics of my right hon. friend at the present moment. I will read the language again so that hon. members will see his position exactly. He said:

> Let me make clear what I mean. The government would have to decide, and decide quickly, what was best in the interests of Canada. The government would have to act on its judgment—

Not parliament, but the government—my right hon. friend and his executive—would have to act on their judgment.

> —but before there was anything in the way of participation involving the despatch of troops the will of the people of Canada should first be obtained.

In other words, my right hon. friend is declaring in this speech that should there be war in any part of the world, he will take good care to see that this parliament the representatives of the people assembled in parliament, do not have to approve the action of the government before it makes an appeal to the electorate, but he will precipitate a khaki election after the government has reached its decision, and allow a condition of affairs to arise at a time of war abroad which might be equivalent to civil war itself in parts of the Dominion at a moment when the nation should be united and view the matter with the greatest care and the greatest caution. I say, Mr. Speaker, that my right hon. friend owes it to this House to make the position of the great party which he leads a little plainer to the people of Canada than he has made it this afternoon. The resolution which the House is being asked to pass will make it clear, no matter what may be in the mind of my right hon. friend, that before this country participates in a foreign war parliament must be assembled and its approval obtained to the sending abroad of troops to take part in the war.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that in this policy we are asserting the supremacy of parliament. Two or three years ago my right hon. friend took the position that we should not even wait for parliament if a call came to us to participate in a war overseas, but that we should say, "Ready, aye, ready"—get right into the fight.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker the Prime Minister is not only misrepresenting me, but he is doing so intentionally.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not doing anything of the kind.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then I will leave it to my right hon. friend to tell us whether when he said, "Ready, aye ready" he meant we should be "Ready, aye, ready." I am quite prepared that in that extreme as in the other his position shall remain in the doubtful category in which he has placed it himself.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We are not children.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have no desire to get into a controversy in this matter. As I said at the beginning, I only wish to state the position in the clearest, possible way. I asked my right hon. friend for an explanation of the words which he used, but I have not yet been able to get from him an explanation which the country will regard as satisfactory. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the position of the present administration and of the Liberal party, that whatever may be the position of my right hon. friend and of those who surround him, on this grave question of the obligation of the country to participate in foreign wars, we declare that in regard to the ratification of treaties, conventions or agreements involving military or economic sanctions we stand first, last and always for approval in the first instance by the parliament of Canada. We do not take the extreme of ignoring parliament in one way or the other. We believe that parliament stands as the one body representative of the nation as a whole, and we believe that by having it understood in advance that on all these great questions parliament will be consulted and its approval obtained, we will be helping to maintain without possibility of division or difference the relations between the different parts of this great empire, and that in the most effective way we will be able to further unity within our own country and unity within the British Empire as well.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN: (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, the resolution which the Prime Minister has placed before the House embodies, as I understand it, the existing practice with regard to the ratification of treaties in so far as they are ratified, or in so far as signification is given of their ratification, on behalf of the Canadian dominion. The resolution in itself consists of two parts. First, it approves of certain procedure proposed for the negotiation, signature and ratification of treaties and conventions affecting Canada. I do not understand that there is anything new in this procedure. Secondly, it affirms as a rule of public policy that before the government of Canada shall advise ratification of a treaty or convention affecting Canada, or signify acceptance of any treaty, convention or agreement, involving military or economic sanctions, the approval of the parliament of Canada should first be obtained.

Now, dealing with the first part of this resolution, I understand that the duly authorized representatives of the Canadian government may, in accordance with its terms, properly sign treaties or conventions on behalf of Canada without having received the prior authority of the parliament of Canada to do so, but that no such treaty or convention or agreement so signed shall be binding upon Canada until it has been formally approved by the parliament of Canada. The preamble to the resolution also affirms that no treaty shall be signed on behalf of one part of the empire which shall affect any other part, without affording to any and every other part, which is likely to be interested, full opportunity to be heard, and when the interests of that other part are intimately involved, opportunity to participate in the negotiations. Such provisions are reasonable and I think undoubtedly in accordance with the existing practice. As to the ratification of such treaties or conventions, the preamble to the resolution affirms that the said practice or procedure should be maintained, and the existing procedure is declared to be as follows:

(a) the ratification of treaties imposing obligations on one part of the empire is effected at the instance of the government of that part.

(b) the ratification of treaties imposing obligations on more than one part of the empire is effected after consultation between the governments of those parts of the empire concerned.

But I call the attention of the Prime Minister particularly to this fact, that neither the preamble to the resolution nor the resolution itself declares that no such treaty or convention shall be binding on a self-governing dominion of the empire except it be accepted by the government of that dominion. In other words, in the treaty of Locarno, as the Prime Minister stated, under article 9 it is provided that the present treaty shall impose no obligation upon any of the British dominions or upon India unless the government of such dominion or of India shall signify its acceptance thereof. First, I would ask the Prime Minister was it the clear understanding at the Imperial conference of 1923 that hereafter no treaty or convention negotiated by the crown should be binding upon the Dominion of Canada or the other dominions unless its ratification were assented to or signified by the government, subject of course in the case of Canada to the approval of the Canadian parliament? Are we not to understand that up to this date there have been many treaties entered into by the crown which undoubtedly bind Canada, even although the Canadian government has not intimated its assent or acceptance and even although the Canadian parliament has not been called upon to approve the same? Is this a new departure? Is it clearly understood that hereafter the crown,—because it is the crown alone that can negotiate treaties—shall not negotiate any treaty or convention which shall apply to or bind Canada or which, in the words of the resolution, shall affect Canada without such treaty being assented to by the government based in the case of Canada, if this resolution is in force and the prior practice prevails, upon the authority of this parliament? Would the hon. gentleman answer now, or shall I wait until later?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot see that there is any occasion for the resolution at all unless the language means that where one part of the empire is affected, that part in order to be bound must be kept advised of the negotiations, and must be a signatory and agree to ratification of the treaty in question.

Mr. CAHAN: Then I understand that this is a new departure.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would not say that; I am rather inclined to believe that what has been set out in the resolution is what has been assumed in the past despite such different views as others may have held. Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and all the Prime Ministers of this country have I believe taken the view that Canada is not necessarily bound by treaties signed without her knowledge and without her consent.

Mr. CAHAN: Then I understand that the resolution makes it clear that the understanding approved by the representatives at the Imperial conference is, then, that hereafter the crown will refrain from making any treaty applicable to and binding on any one of the dominions unless with the assent of the government of that dominion, leaving it to that government and its parliament to decide as to whether prior to the consent of the government being given, there shall be express approval by the parliament of that dominion.

There is another point as to the ratification of any treaty or convention by the government of Canada. The resolution provides generally that the approval of the Canadian parliament must first be obtained, but the terms of the resolution seem to me to discriminate between a treaty or convention affecting Canada which may be ratified on notification by the Canadian government, and a treaty, convention or agreement involving military or economic sanctions to which the government of Canada may signify its acceptance. I would like to ask the Prime Minister if this is a mere matter of a little irregular drafting, or whether by the use of the different words, a treaty or convention affecting Canada in the one place, and, in the other, a treaty, convention or agreement involving military or economic sanction, the one term is intended to be exclusive of the other.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am very glad my hon. friend has asked that question. As the resolution was originally drafted and placed on the order paper it read, I think, "Any treaty or convention affecting Canada." As I studied that language it appeared to me to be broad enough to include treaties of a purely technical and administrative character. I did not wish the resolution to go that far; I did not wish to ask that all treaties of a purely technical or administrative character should necessarily come before parliament for approval. What I wished to make clear however, was that all treaties or conventions involving military or economic sanctions must come before parliament, and where military or economic sanctions were involved I wished to make the terms broad enough to include agreements, so that in referring to treaties or agreements of any kind we would not have a difference over the mere use of words.

Mr. CAHAN: I would suggest that the resolution might be made clearer if it stated, "any treaty affecting Canada and particularly any treaty involving military or economic sanctions." It also strikes me that there is some discrepancy in the last few words of the resolution:

—or signify acceptance of any treaty, convention or agreement involving military or economic sanctions, the approval of the parliament of Canada should be secured.

I can well understand that the approval of parliament might be "secured" by a majority of the members sitting behind the Prime Minister agreeing in terms to support a particular treaty upon the calling of parliament. In that way it would be secured within the meaning of that word, but I would suggest that a better word would be "obtained". That is a far better word, but I do not wish to be technical.

Although this resolution may and probably does, as the Prime Minister says, embody only the existing procedure, as far back as I can remember, over thirty or forty years, no treaty has been negotiated by or on behalf of Canada which has not been subject to the approval of parliament before it became effective. In that respect I am entirely at one with the Prime Minister in upholding the supremacy of the Canadian parliament in dealing with matters directly affecting Canada and the Canadian people. In reading again Lord Durham's report of 1839, I chanced to come upon the vivid and inspiring message which he sent to the British colonies of North America:

If in the hidden decrees of that wisdom by which this world is ruled, it is written that these countries are not forever to remain portions of the empire, we owe it to our honour to take good care that, when they separate from us, they should not be the only countries on the American continent in which the Anglo-Saxon race shall be found unfit to govern itself.

I think in dealing with all these matters of inter-imperial and external affairs the sooner is is clearly recognized, not only by the people but by members of this parliament as well, that the future destiny of this country rests in the hands of the men who sit in parliament representing the people, the sooner will we have a clear consciousness of the grave responsibilities which rest upon parliament in dealing with all matters of this character. I remember well in my native province of Nova Scotia when every boy of my age was taught to read at college the discussions from 1839 to 1846 in our own provincial parliament, during that memorable contest for responsible self-government in Nova Scotia in which the late Hon. Joseph Howe took such an important lead. I remember hearing him speak once myself, though but a lad, on these matters, and in the whole eastern part of Canada there was left an indelible impression upon the minds of the electorate, which exists even to this day, that in all matters of domestic and internal policy the parliament of Canada must be supreme. Since that time there has grown up a strong, a seriously strong, impression that in all matters of external or inter-imperial policy affecting Canada, the parliament of Canada must have the decisive word, and therefore it is that I regard this expression of the procedure that has gradually developed during the last thirty or forty years, embodied in a resolution of this kind, as being somewhat impressive, although it does not incorporate any new principle of public policy.

But I suggest that so long ago as the discussion of the confederation resolutions, Sir John A. Macdonald anticipated some such possibility as this. I notice that in his oration upon the Quebec resolutions in 1865, he declared at great length that with respect to the future destiny of Canada, its political destiny, even if it be independence of the British Empire, the people and parliament of Canada must have the supreme and final decision, even in regard to independence, because I wish to impress the view that, if this country desires independence of the British Empire, parliament at the present time is perfectly free to declare what our political future shall be, and that decision will be supreme and binding and final so far as the British government is concerned. I have at my hand a dozen or more statements of that view from the most responsible statesmen of the British Empire, down through all the years from 1839 to the present. But the very fact that we have this power, the very fact that we have this authority, the very fact that the supreme decision rests with us as the representatives of the people in the House of Commons, places upon the government and places upon parliament a grave responsibility with regard to the exercise of these powers, even indirectly, and with regard sometimes to very trivial affairs. Sir John A. Macdonald said:

> One argument, but not a strong one, has been urged against this confederation, that it is an advance towards independence. Some are apprehensive that the very fact of our forming this union will hasten the time when we shall be severed from the Mother Country. I have no apprehension of that kind. I believe it will have the contrary effect. I believe that as we grow stronger, that as it is felt in England we have become a people, able from our union, our strength, our population, and the development of our resources, to take our position among the nations, she will be less willing to part with us than she would be now, when we are broken up into a number of insignificant colonies, subject to attack piece-meal without any concerted action or common organization of defence.
> I am strongly of opinion that year by year, as we grow in population and strength, England will more and more see the advantages of maintaining the alliance between British North America and herself. Does any one imagine that, when our population, instead of three and a half, will be seven millions, as it will be ere many years pass, we will be one whit more willing than now to sever the connection with England? Would not these seven millions be just as anxious to maintain their allegiance to the queen and their connection with the Mother Country, as we are now? . . . .
> And when by means of this rapid increase we become a nation of eight or nine millions of inhabitants, our alliance will be worthy of being sought by the great nations of the earth. I am proud to believe that our desire for a permanent alliance will be reciprocated in England. . . . .
> The colonies are now in a transition state. Gradually a different colonial system is being developed—and it will become, year by year, less a case of dependence on our part, and of over-ruling protection on the part of the Mother Country, and more a case of healthy and cordial alliance.

For myself, although I pray God may forbid that in this generation or in succeeding generations we shall be separated from the British crown or sever our allegiance to the British crown as it at present exists, I believe that it is absolutely necessary that the people of this country should thoroughly appreciate and understand that the political future of Canada that the destiny of this country is in their hands, and that we may have whatever future political career the great body of the people of Canada, as represented in this House of Commons, may decide to have for Canada. I believe in the necessity of maintaining the supremacy of the Canadian parliament in respect of all matters affecting the peace, progress and prosperity of Canada, but I believe also in the supreme necessity of creating in all sections of the Canadian people complete confidence in the efficiency and in the efficacy of our parliamentary institutions. If we fail in this Dominion of Canada to create and maintain such a confidence, all our institutions, which we have developed year after year and year after year during the last century, will fall to pieces of their own weight. It is only by maintaining the confidence of the people of Canada in the good faith, in the efficiency, and in the efficacy of parliament, that we can maintain parliamentary institutions in this country. For parliamentary institutions, it seems to me there are only two alternatives—either communistic or autocratic despotism. There remain to-day in the whole wide world exercising the rights, the duties, and the responsibilities of democratic government those countries alone which have adopted and maintain English parliamentary institutions.

With regard to the matter to which the Prime Minister has alluded, I wish to say that it seems to me that when grave international crises arise, if they do arise, in the future history of this country, in which the political security of the country is menaced, the parliament of Canada must take full responsibility for such immediate action as may be necessary to safeguard the public interest. I do not remember that in this country the principle of parliamentary responsibility in this respect has ever been directly questioned, and may we not, Mr. Speaker, have implicit confidence that in the future, as in the past, the representatives of the people sitting in this House of Commons will have sufficient courage and sufficient confidence to act up to the full measure of their responsibilities?

In case of such a crisis arising under exceptional circumstances when the House of Commons is more or less equally divided and when public opinion is doubtful, in order that the action or decision of parliament might not be rendered nugatory and ineffective a dissolution of parliament might be necessary, even for instance in such a great international crisis as that with which we were confronted in 1914. That may be possible, but as we know there is a discretion as to the dissolution of parliament vested in His Excellency the Governor General, and we have never yet had occasion to complain very much of the exercise of that discretion by the representatives of the crown who have held that high office in this country. But in the exercise of that discretion I personally hope that at no time will any representative of the crown precipitate an election when there are grave differences of opinion in this country, an election which would engender social disunion and civil strife, and possibly rioting and bloodshed in our midst, over a question of external or inter-imperial policy. The great safety of the empire lies in the fact that the crown, as represented by the British government, has left in the control and disposition of the governments and parliaments of each dominion the power to decide in all these matters of inter-imperial and external policy; and I think that we of this older generation, who have lived through times of crises and have lived nearer to the events of the period from 1835 to 1846, must have full confidence that the younger members in this House, who will be here long after we are gone, and others who are their successors, will be so imbued with a deep sense of the responsibility of the high offices they hold and of the grave trust which is confided to them as members of this House that in deciding upon these matters of inter-imperial or international importance they will so exercise their discretion and so render their decision as to compel the almost unanimous approval and support of every section of this vast and important Dominion.

It seems to me that the great danger at the present time in connection with our domestic affairs is the tendency in this country—I do not wish to be more specific—to separate in respect of inter-imperial and international affairs, and to create divisions of opinion with respect to those matters of external policy, which also serve to create dissensions in respect to the domestic policies of this country and prevent that unanimity and solidarity of opinion being realized in Canada which is absolutely necessary for the efficient and efficacious solution of the grave domestic problems with which we are now face to face. And therefore in regard to the Locarno treaty, or in regard to other treaties or conventions which may be submitted to this parliament, I hope that we may reasonably anticipate that this House of Commons, laying aside all merely party prejudices, all merely personal ambitions, may act in a spirit of unity and with the supreme desire to maintain a solidarity of public opinion in Canada with respect to inter-imperial and international matters. In the exercise of that discretion may we not reasonably hope that those who succeed us in filling the highest offices in the gifts of the people of Canada shall only undertake such inter-imperial and international responsibilities as may be undertaken with the general approval of all sections of the country, and so insure that the action of parliament, and of the government which this parliament maintains and sustains, shall have the approval not only of a majority of the electoral constituencies throughout Canada, but also have the substantial support and co-operation of the constituencies in every important section, district or province of the Dominion? I am confident, Mr. Speaker—and my sole excuse for speaking is that I feel so strongly about this matter—that it is only by restricting all our external commitments and obligations within such limits as to merit and obtain the general approval, as I said, of each and every section of Canada, that we can ever hope to have such cordial co-operation between the peoples who compose the Canadian electorate as will enable us to solve our domestic problems in such a manner and so successfully as to maintain the continued solidarity and unity of the great Canadian nation, and thereby promote for all time the peace, progress and prosperity of this country, in which we were born, in which we will die and which will be the home of our children and our children's children for all future time.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): It is much to be deplored that a subject of this magnitude should be brought before parliament in the dying hours of the session. For many years, due I suppose to a desire to take a rest from the exciting conditions of the war, there seems to have been a disposition to avoid full and ample discussion of our outside affairs, whether they relate to inter-imperial relations or to external affairs generally. Perhaps that is due also to the fact that the people of Canada, their parliament and their government, have practically never exercised their full responsibility as a free nation in these matters, and have inherited from generation to generation the old colonial and childish attitude of relying upon somebody else to shape their foreign policy.

As regards this resolution, worded as it is, there ought to be no exception taken. It is, first, a ratification of the decisions taken unanimously by the last Imperial conference, as the proper policy and the proper procedure to be followed in order to establish inter-imperial relations upon a certain logical basis, —inasmuch as logic can apply to the extraordinary system of government under which we live.

But the latter part of the resolution is much more important. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), in that magnificent oration to which I am sorry so few members listened, has suggested to the government that there is a discrepancy between the former part, dealing with the ratification of treaties and conventions affecting Canada, and the acceptance of any treaty, convention, or agreement involving military or economic sanctions, without reference to Canada. I do not know what was in the minds of the framers of this resolution; but, I take it to be this. The former part of this paragraph applies to treaties and conventions in which Canadian interests are specifically dealt with; and therefore such treaties and conventions ought to be governed by the procedure which we are called upon to ratify to-day. But, in addition, the government invites the co-operation of parliament and a declaration by parliament that no treaty, convention or agreement, whether Canada is mentioned or not, but involving military or economic sanctions, shall be accepted by the government of Canada without the approval of parliament. This is indeed much broader, and much more to the point. It means that the British government, answerable as it is to only one parliament in the empire, will be now warned in advance that it cannot count upon the support of Canada, in any matter of external policy, unless the parliament of Canada has signified its acceptance and approval of such policy.

The first concrete application of this principle will undoubtedly be to the Locarno treaty. Unfortunately, Sir, we find ourselves in the strange position that we have not at hand the correspondence exchanged between the British government and the various dominion governments. The very spirit of this resolution has been violated in advance by withholding from the parliament of Canada and the other dominion parliaments all those exchanges of views which have passed between the British government and the various dominion governments with regard to the Locarno treaty. The Prime Minister has invited the attention of the House to and its approval of this resolution for two reasons. One object is that he, or any representative of Canada at the next Imperial conference, may be enabled to say that the parliament of Canada has approved what was done at the last conference, and the other to direct future policy. But, as regards the future, the government has no opinion to express. Are the representatives of Canada to go to London without any expression of opinion on the part of this parliament, on Locarno, for example? We are told that the situation here is the same as it is elsewhere. No, Sir, Locarno has been discussed in almost every dominion parliament. In India, a resolution has been introduced, though disallowed by the government, to disapprove of Locarno. In Australia, the leader of the opposition, Mr. Charlton, has attacked Locarno and the Prime Minister, Mr. Bruce, has not defended it. In Ireland, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Fitzgerald, and the leader of the opposition, Mr. Johnson, have made it quite clear that the Free State will not be bound by the treaty of Locarno and will not endorse it. In South Africa, Mr. Hertzog made it equally clear that he did not favour it, and when he challenged his opponent, General Smuts, to contradict him, Mr. Smuts stood up and practically endorsed the attitude of Mr. Hertzog. It is not going too far to say that the consensus of opinion, in all the parliaments of the empire, except the British parliament, has been against Locarno: not against what has been called the "spirit of Locarno," inasmuch as it means a move for peace, but as against the terms under which the "spirit" has expressed itself in those various agreements, and more specifically against the undertaking by any of the free dominions of the empire to endorse the treaty and to assume its obligations. Now let us see what we have on hand.

It has been stated—the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. McGibbon) had it on his mind when he questioned the Prime Minister this afternoon—that the Locarno pact imposed no obligation, or would impose no obligation on the dominions, beyond what we have already assumed under the treaty of Versailles. Let us examine the documents as they stand. Take, first, the preamble of the main treaty, passing over the recitation of the powers of the plenipotentiaries. Germany, Belgium and France on the one hand, and Great Britain and Italy on the other hand agree to make a treaty. For what purpose? Let the treaty speak:

> Anxious to satisfy the desire for security and protection which animates the peoples upon whom fell the scourge of the war of 1914-18;
> Taking note of the abrogation of the treaties for the neutralization of Belgium, and conscious of the necessity of ensuring peace in the area which has so frequently been the scene of European conflicts;
> Animated also with the sincere desire of giving to all the signatory Powers concerned supplementary guarantees within the framework of the Covenant of the League of Nations and the treaties in force between them;—
> Have determined to conclude a treaty, etc.

Therefore, the very object of the treaty is to give "supplementary" guarantees. In the correspondence exchanged between the French and the English governments upon the proposal drafted by the Germans, Mr. Briand made this quite clear. Here is what he wrote to Mr. Chamberlain, through the French ambassador in London, on May 22, 1925:

> By the words "within the framework of the Treaty of Versailles," the French government meant to specify that the pact proposed by Germany cannot in any way contradict, infringe or weaken the Treaty of Versailles, and represents an offer of complementary guarantees—

In other words, the treaty of Locarno means that over and above the "guarantees" given under the treaty of Versailles, the signatories to this new treaty are called upon to offer supplementary or complementary guarantees to Belgium and France—and to Germany, under certain conditions. With regard to Belgium, this is meant to replace the neutrality guaranteed to her by the treaties of 1831 and 1839, broken by the invasion of Germany in 1914, and abrogated since by the common consent of all parties to these treaties. With regard to France, those supplementary or complementary guarantees are to take the place of the treaties signed at Versailles, June 28, 1919, by the British and the American governments. Those two treaties have been thrown overboard, first, by the refusal of the American Senate to ratify the engagements taken by President Wilson; second, by the condition expressly stipulated by England, that her engagements were subordinated to the ratification of the American treaty of guarantee.

As far as we are concerned was the idea ever entertained that we were a party to the treaty guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium? Has it ever been contemplated that we should be a party to the treaty of 1919 regarding France? As regards the treaty guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium nobody would entertain that idea. As regards the treaty with France, Sir Robert Borden exacted and obtained a specific article which made the Dominions absolutely immune in that respect. Therefore if the Canadian government undertook at the next Imperial conference to recommend to this parliament adherence to the treaty of Locarno, that would mean that we would be assuming engagements, subject of course to ratification by the Canadian parliament, over and beyond what was contemplated by any preceding governhent; and very material additional obligations would be assumed by Canada as well as by any other dominion that would adhere to that treaty.

But it may be said, it has been said: Are we not already tied up by Article 10 of the Versailles treaty? We hear frequently of article 10, but I do not think many people have pondered over its terms. Let us read it now:

> The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve, as against external aggression, the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the League. In case of any such aggression or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

Later on, it is provided that such decision of the council must be unanimous. Moreover this very broad and vague obligation was discarded in practice, on the part of the dominions, first by the protest made by Sir Robert Borden immediately after he signed it, second by the protest made before the assembly of the League of Nations, by Mr. Doherty, representative of the late Conservative government, then by Sir Lomer Gouin, then by the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe); and finally in Geneva a vote was passed upon and carried unanimously, but for the one opposing vote of Persia, which practically frees us from all responsibilities arising from article 10. How can it be said now that the application of article 10 of the treaty of Versailles entails any such obligation as can be compared with the very concrete obligation we would undertake if we adhered to the Locarno treaty?

But it is said further: "After all, this is a move for peace; should we not help morally and politically the British government in any move that they may make for peace?" Is it a move for peace? Has it been received by the thoughful opinion of Europe and America as an instrument of peace? Let us look into the matter for a moment. Supposing it does advance the cause of peace as between Germany on the one hand and France and Belgium on the other, this is a very small and limited spot on the continent of Europe and the one where there is the least danger of a new war arising. It still leaves open the whole of the Balkan problem, the relations between Poland and Russia, the relations betwen the various European nations interested in the spoils of the old Turkish empire. The whole of the Near East question is left open. Therefore it cannot be defined as a move for the establishment of peace in Europe. But as far as is goes, does it make for peace between France and Germany? Let us look for a moment in the treaty itself. Article 1 reads:

4 p.m.

The high contracting parties collectively and severally guarantee, in the manner provided in the following articles, the maintenance of the territorial status quo resulting from the frontiers between Germany and Belgium and between Germany and France and the inviolability of the said frontiers as fixed by or in pursuance of the Treaty of Peace signed at Versailles on the 28th June, 1919—

Nothing bad in that. But it goes on:—

—and also the observance of the stipulations of articles 42 and 43 of the said treaty concerning the demilitarized zone.

In other words one of the basic conditions of the treaty is that Germany will remain disarmed on the right bank of the Rhine, but that France will remain free to arm herself to the teeth up to the limit of her frontiers on the left bank of the Rhine. As long as those clauses exist in the treaty of Versailles there is no certainty of peace as between France and Germany, because it is essentially an unjust disposition which was adopted in the turmoil of passions still boiling after the war, but which every thoughtful person realizes is a false basis of peace. Article 2 specifically provides:

Germany and Belgium, and also Germany and France, mutually undertake that they will in no case attack or invade each other or resort to war against each other.

So far, so good; but immediately the article goes on to say that this stipulation, or in other words this mutual engagement not to resort to war or to attack or to invade each other, shall not apply in the following cases:

1. The exercise of the right of legitimate defence, that is to say, resistance to a violation of the undertaking contained in the previous paragraph, or to a flagrant breach of articles 42 or 43 of the said treaty of Versailles, if such breach constitutes an unprovoked act of aggression and by reason of the assembly of armed forces in the demilitarized zone immediate action is necessary.

We shall see in a moment how this is to be interpreted in the light of the other conventions signed on the same date. Again the undertaking not to make war against each other does not apply in the case of:

2. Action in pursuance of article 16 of the covenant of the League of Nations.

In other words, if France passes over the territory of Germany to enforce a decision of the council of the League of Nations, this is not an act of aggression on her part. But if Germany undertakes to protect her territory against that invasion by a French army going for example to the rescue of Poland, this is an act of aggression under the terms of article 16 of the treaty of Versailles Under that treaty, to invade your neighbour's territory under certain circumstances constitutes no aggression, but to defend your country against invasion constitutes aggression. That is the Versailles spirit. But the worst is contained in paragraph 3. Again the stipulation not to resort to war shall not apply in the case of:

3. Action as the result of a decision taken by the assembly or by the council of the League of Nations or in pursuance of article 15, paragraph 7, of the covenant of the League of Nations, provided that in the last event the action is directed against a State which was the first to attack.

What is this? Paragraph 7 of article 15 is precisely that disposition of the treaty of Versailles under which Mr. Poincaré, against the advice of the council of the League of Nations, against the advice of his allies, the British and the Italians, invaded the Ruhr in conjunction with the Belgian army and maintained occupation there with a negro army, for nearly a year—increasing by an immense amount the debt of Germany, without reducing by one iota the claims of France as against Germany, and bringing the whole of Europe again to the brink of war. Well, under this treaty, both France and Germany reserve to themselves the right to act exactly as Mr. Poincaré did in the invasion of the Ruhr. Will anybody tell us that this is a sure guarantee for peace, and that if we adhere to it we are enabling the British government to establish peace between France and Germany?

Article 3 stipulates that:

In view of the undertakings entered into in article 2 of the present treaty, Germany and Belgium and Germany and France undertake to settle by peaceful means and in the manner laid down herein all questions of every kind——and so forth. This is the engagement to resort to arbitration, but always reserving to themselves the right to attack without resorting to arbitration in the cases that I have just mentioned.

But there is worse than that. If you go through those four arbitration treaties which follow—one between Germany and France, one between Germany and Belgium; one between Germany and Poland, and one between Germany and Czecho-Slovakia —you will find that in the very first article it is said most positively that:

This provision—

—the undertaking to resort to arbitration,—

—does not apply to disputes arising out of events prior to the present convention and belonging to the past.

Now I ask, viewing the surface of things as they have been and as they are still in Europe, what possible cause of conflict, what possible cause of bickering, can be imagined for the next twenty-five years to come between any of those nations, which a government desirous of making war could not tie up with some cause anterior to the signature of the treaty, whether it relates to frontiers, to economic sanctions, to rights of way—to any of those multitudinous questions which have been dealt with or mentioned in the treaty of Versailles? Those are precisely the causes that will keep Europe in a turmoil and in a state of unrest so long as the diplomats and the governments of Europe have not made up their minds to tear down that monument of folly and iniquity, the treaty of Versailles, and rebuild a real treaty of peace in Europe.

Now, under article 6 of the treaty of Locarno, it is stipulated that the whole of the Versailles treaty remains untouched. This in itself is an untruth. The treaty of Locarno is an amendment of the treaty of Versailles. Besides, anybody who has followed the trend of events for the last seven years, knows that in fact at least, if not in law, the treaty of Versailles has been amended or disregarded in many respects by every country in Europe. Therefore to profess that the object of the treaty of Locarno is to maintain the treaty of Versailles is at the outset to nullify the moral effect of the spirit of Locarno, and. secondly, to establish this so-called movement for peace on a basis of deceit—deceit against public opinion the world over, but especially against those unfortunate peoples in Europe who are in such sore need of real political direction towards peace. Need I say that this declaration would mean, if we adhere to it, that we approve of all the dispositions of Versailles? That after seven years of experience, notwithstanding the happy moves made by Sir Robert Borden, by Sir Lomer Gouin, by Mr. Doherty and by the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) to disengage us from that clap-trap, we would again undertake, by the simple acceptance of this one short section of the treaty of Locarno. to revive the corpse of Versailles? It would mean that we approve of the regime of the French in the Saar, that we approve of the disposition relating to the future of Austria, of article 80 under which—violating the basic principles upon which the United States entered the war, violating the professions of faith uttered by Mr. Asquith and other British statesmen—we have forbidden a crushed nation, deprived of nine-tenths of its possessions, ever to decide its future according to its needs. It would mean we make ourselves the guarantors of the system established in Upper Silesia against all the principles of public policy, against the most solemn promises of good faith that were given by the council of the League of Nations, that the status of those populations would be decided under the principle of self-determination. It would mean that we still maintain those provisions by which the German nation has been deprived of all her colonies, thereby making us a party to this absurd policy of saying: That whilst we, British, occupy one-fourth of the surface of the earth, that whilst France is in possession of one-half of the continent of Africa—France a nation with no surplus population—we keep as a basis of policy the inhibition to a great nation of eighty million people to find expansion for her population and for her merchandise. And you think peace can be established upon that basis? It would mean the maintenance of these absurd articles declaring that Germany is the sole responsible party for the war, that the former rulers of the German empire are culprits before public opinion and should be brought before the tribunals, not of disinterested nations, but before tribunals instituted by their victors. Now, Sir, it may be that in colonial and savage countries where what is now known about the war has not penetrated, this notion is still sincerely entertained; but there is not one right-thinking man in Europe today, whether he be French, English, German, Dutch or Italian, who still believes that. I have in my hand protests that are being signed by hundreds of the best-thinking men and women in England and France against those ridiculous articles; not through any high sense of generosity, but because they realize, being on the spot, knowing the condition of affairs, that so long as such nonsense remain in a public document supposed to contain the wisdom of the diplomacy of the world, there can be no moral peace in Europe; and as long as there is no moral peace there will always be danger to material peace.

Fortunately, the British government realized that they should not commit the governments of the dominions, either directly or indirectly, to such a piece of doubtful policy, and they made the reservation which the Prime Minister read this afternoon. To show how little these matters are followed in this country, when the text of the Locarno treaty appeared, one of the best-informed newspapers of Canada usually, the Montreal Gazette, expressed great surprise at this "new departure", forgetting that the same principle had been laid down, in almost the same words, in the treaty of guarantee signed on June 28, 1919; that a few years later, when Mr. Lloyd George was endeavouring with Mr. Briand to reach some terms of agreement as between England and France and to substitute something else for the discarded treaty of guarantee, the same reservations were introduced into the draft treaty of Cannes of 1922. So in England, much more than in Canada, do they realize that it is not only proper, but that it has become a fixed principle of imperial policy, that the British government has not the right to commit the action of any of the free dominions associated with England without the full consent of the responsible governments and parliaments of those dominions. The only difference is that in the first instance, at the particular request of Sir Robert Borden, the action of parliament was reserved. I have not the text here, but it can easily be found. In article 5 of the treaty of guarantee, it is stated in exactly the same terms as in the treaty of Locarno that the present treaty shall impose no obligation upon any of the British dominions unless the "parliament" of such dominion signify its acceptance thereof. That is so under the treaty of 1919. Under the terms proposed by Mr. Lloyd George to Mr. Briand, there was a slight modification. I quote from memory, but I feel sure it is correct:

> The present treaty shall impose no obligation upon any of the dominions unless and until it is approved by the dominion concerned.

There was no mention of either parliament or government; but it was the same disposition, the same principle. In this later treaty, reference is made to "governments", no doubt, as the Prime Minister stated this afternoon, because India was then added to the dominions, marking a new step in the emancipation of the various portions of the British Empire. But so far as Canada is concerned, and so far as all self-governing dominions are concerned, is it not quite proper and according to the spirit of our constitution and of the principles of British government, that this parliament should assert that it is supreme in such matters and that no government, whatever its majority or whatever the principles of its individual members, will have the right to commit Canada, not only by adhering to a written treaty, but by giving its moral adherence to an unwritten agreement which may carry military or economic sanctions?

Anyone familiar with the trend of diplomacy knows that the great art of diplomats, and not only the last but the most frequent resort of governments, is the undertaking of unwritten engagements. Public opinion is then prepared to accept them and finally, when everything is practically agreed upon, parliament is asked to ratify them. Therefore I think it was proper for the government to enlarge the scope of this motion and to invite an expression of opinion by parliament, not only upon Locarno, not only upon the ratification by parliament of any written agreement of which everyone knows, but also to declare that no government has the right to commit the action of the country, either economic or military, without previous approval by parliament.

It may be said that the days when the British government would think of including the dominions in the purview of its diplomatic action or political undertakings is long past. It is not so long past. In the correspondence exchanged between the British and Canadian governments, previous to the ratification of the Versailles treaty, I find over the signature of Lord Milner, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, the following words:

> The king, by a single act, would bind the whole empire, as it is right that he should so [do], but that act would represent the considered judgment of his constitutional advisers in all self-governing states of the empire, because it would be merely giving effect to an international pact which they had all agreed to.

In other words, Lord Milner held that because we had been represented at Versailles —in what manner everyone knows or should know,—the simple fact that the treaty was ratified by the king, or by the English representatives of the king, should bind all the dominions. Fortunately, the Prime Minister of Canada, Sir Robert Borden, protested most clearly against this, and replied to Lord Milner as follows:

> Your secret telegram of July 23 has been carefully considered by cabinet, and it seems to us that there is considerable doubt whether under modern constitutional practice the king should ratify without first obtaining the approval of parliament. We think that in accordance with recent practice and authority such approval should be obtained in the case of treaties imposing any burden on the people, or involving any change in the law of the land, or requiring legislative action to make them effective or affecting the free exercise of the legislative power, or affecting territorial rights.

I fail to find any reply by Lord Milner, but nevertheless it shows that it was quite proper in those days—even since the last war; even after the great sacrifices made by the British dominions to carry on a war in which they had no direct interest and which they carried on simply because of secret and unwritten engagements entered into by five ministers of the British government, which resulted, so far as Canada was concerned, in the loss of hundreds of thousands of lives and the expenditure of billions of dollars,—and I think it is now the proper time, with the good move taken at the last conference and before the next conference, when great questions of international concern will be discussed, to make it quite clear that the doctrine and practice of the absolute liberty of any dominion to decide its policy, external or internal, the doctrine which was upheld by the great leading statesmen of this country, to whatever party they belonged, still holds for the present and for the future. So far as that is concerned I think the great mass of the people of Canada will be behind any prime minister who will go to London and make it clear that this is our policy.

With regard to Locarno and the attitude which the Prime Minister will take upon it at the next Imperial conference, I venture to express, and to give him for what it is worth, the opinion that many people hold. We believe that Canada should not adhere to that treaty, first, because it is not a real move for peace. It is at best a hornets' nest out of which we had far better keep. Secondly, because it does entail new obligations over and beyond those vague and undetermined obligations of the treaty of Versailles from which we are free for all practical purposes since the declarations made by our various representatives in Geneva. This applies to all the dominions, and it explains why, so far, none of the governments of the dominions has expressed any desire to uphold and adhere to that treaty. But with regard to Canada, there is something more—we may just as well face the situation now while the atmosphere is peaceful, while we can discuss those possible situations in a free manner and, if we do it in a reasonable spirit, without any risk of arousing dangerous passions—so far as Canada is concerned, suppose the Locarno treaty did not go beyond the treaty of Versailles, or to put it in another way, suppose the obligations under the Versailles treaty entailed no more and no less obligations, generally speaking, than those involved in the treaty of Locarno: there is at least this difference. Under the Versailles treaty, there was no obligation to go to the rescue of Germany. Under the Locarno treaty, there is a specific obligation to go to the rescue of Germany as against France in certain given cases.

I have been in Europe several times. I was in Europe for a good while four years ago, and I kept in very close touch with people who were present at the Genoa conference and who knew something of the situation in Europe. I keep in touch by correspondence with men informed on affairs in Europe; and there is not one of them, either French or German, Italian or English, who—I will not say in public, but in private intercourse—will not admit that if any difficulty arises out of the Locarno treaty and its obligations, it is nine chances out of ten that it will mean the intervention of England on Germany's side as against France. And no wonder. It is the natural evolution of the whole foreign policy of England, as imposed upon her by her situation in Europe and in the world. It is the logical consequence of the policy that has always been pursued by England since she has been expelled from the continent of Europe and has become the greatest maritime and colonial empire in the world. The English think, and quite rightly from a certain point of view, that they are bound to see no domineering power on the continent, that they are bound to crush any nation which appears or will tend or be forced by circumstances to dominate the continent. England's policy was anti-Spain as long as Spain dominated the continent and the seas. England's policy was anti-French and pro-German as long as France was a threatening power. All the sympathy of the English was on the side of Germany so long as Germany had not the pretensions of becoming in her turn a maritime and a colonial power. But the moment that time came. the moment England realized Germany's ambition to rival old France and old Spain, and modern England as well as modern United States, England went to her old enemies, France and Russia, and taking advantage of their defensive alliance, turned it into an offensive alliance in order to get rid of the dangerous competition of a maritime Germany. But now that Germany is deprived of her fleet and of her colonies, now that France, according to the words of the late General Mangin, has at her disposal possibly three million negroes to dominate the continent of Europe, England is bound to be anti-French. It may be a longer or a shorter time; the occasion may not arise tomorrow or next week, but it is bound to come, just as it was bound to come sixty years ago during the first feast of love between the France of Louis Philippe and the England of Victoria; it was bound to come the moment France decided to acquire the colony of Algeria, and to recuperate her maritime and colonial forces; it was bound to come that England would turn against France. She did not do it herself. As Lloyd George once said, England has usually fought with her ships and her money, rather than with her armies, and when she has had any amount of money she has always been able to find somebody on the continent to fight her battles. Therefore in England, every thoughtful man considered the victory of Prussia over France in 1870 just as much an English victory as a German victory. Likewise England has considered that in the crushing of Germany in the last war, the taking away of her fleet and of her colonies was her share in the victory. But now she does not want to see any other nation change the balance of things and become the dominating power.

With that situation we in Canada are not concerned. I for one am not prepared to pass judgment upon the policy of the present or of any past government of England with regard to the relations of that great country with the continental nations of Europe; but I think we are bound in conscience and honour to declare here that in the event of England finding it necessary for the maintenance of her power to fight with Germany against France, the responsible leader of a government in power in Canada who would propose to enlist troops to wage war against France in such a contingency, and then launch the country upon a general election to get the people of Canada to agree to that—that man would take the responsibility of dealing to the heart and the life of Canada the deadliest blow that ever could be given to it. We should have the courage now to face these things as they may come, and not wait until they do come. Let us think in advance of such a situation as may present itself between England and this nation, that or the other. Why not go back to the old commonsense policy of our forefathers and think of the situation of Canada—Canada first and last. It has been said that that was a parochial policy. Perhaps it was; but it had at least this advantage, that it permitted all Canadians of various races and provinces, of different political parties, to agree at least upon certain things, although they disagreed upon many things; and one of those basic things upon which they agreed, and which was never disputed, was that Canada had no moral or political duty to perform towards the Empire, beyond making the necessary preparations to defend her own territory as against any possible attacks from the enemies either of Canada or of England.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask the hon. gentleman whether the more recent commercial and financial relations in which Canada finds herself involved do not make it very difficult to maintain the older isolationist's policy?

Mr. BOURASSA: I do not call it an isolationist's policy, Mr. Speaker. I call it the exercise of our responsibility according to our situation, political, geographical and economic. In the second place, I call it the necessary reaction against the absolutely false theory that there must be one imperial policy, that we must act on the principle: "United we stand, divided we fall." How can it be explained that the empire was never so united as when it lived to the opposite principle? Not long after the American rebellion, the British statesmen made up their minds that it was useless for them to dictate a policy to their colonists in America, and later on in Oceania and in Africa. It was recognized that the only policy for the empire, in view of its geographical composition, was that of unity upon matters in which there could be a common view as between the various component parts of the empire, but absolute liberty in all matters in which local interests must prevail over imperial interests. But once that man of, in a sense, genius, but evil genius, once Mr. Chamberlain had made up his mind that the British Empire must be established on a basis copied from the old Roman empire or more servilely copied from the modern German empire, the moment British imperialists attempted to turn the British Empire, with all its principles of local autonomy and freedom, into a mere replica of the Roman and Prussian empires, from that moment you had disputes, from that moment you had quarrels in Canada as between the imperialists and the nationalists. From that moment I, for one, began to think that a great number of my English-speaking fellow citizens were disloyal to Canada, and they no doubt thought that I was disloyal to the empire. Why? Because we had abandoned the only safe basis upon which you can make one country of this great Dominion. upon which you can maintain peace and harmony between the various British communities: That is, where we can agree, very well, let us agree; but where we cannot agree let us agree to disagree.

One imperial policy! I ask any hon. member in this House: Have we the same interests in Irak or Mosul that the oil-hunters of England have? Are hon. members prepared to demonstrate to their constituents that we have the same duty to perform that Great Britain has in the maintenance of all these small treaties which have been negotiated by her with other countries? Have we the same interests in the coloured races question that they have in South Africa? Are we obliged to take the same colonial, or national, or imperial view on the relations between South Africa and India which General Smuts, or General Hertzog, is bound to take? One imperial policy! Those gentlemen from British Columbia who boast of their imperial devotion, are they prepared, for the sake of the interests of England, to allow Hindus and Japs to come to that province and settle there? No they are not. That is one point upon which their imperial feelings must be subordinated to their local, provincial and economic interests. Likewise, when they feel the urge of British blood and British pride, do they not realize that the Irish-Canadian, and the French-Canadian and the Canadians of various origins that come from other countries than Britain, cannot respond to that feeling of pride? Suppose Canada had been first settled by English settlers, but after a period of long warring, it had become a French colony; that after many bickerings with the French government, certain terms of agreement had been arrived at, one of which being that there would be no predominant race in Canada, and that Canada would not be obliged to share in France's wars in Europe and Africa? How would you respond then to the appeal of blood, especially in a case where France would be engaged in war against England? What would you think if we, the French speaking majority, would say "This is a French country, we are all one under the French flag, and you English speaking Canadians must be prepared to fight for France against the country of your origin, England or Scotland, as the case may be, with the same feeling of devotion that we are prepared to do"? Do you think there would be justice or political sense in that? Do you think you could build up a united nation upon such a policy? No, you could not. Likewise in South Africa you cannot adopt a purely English or purely Dutch policy; it must be a policy which will take in both nationalities. Neither can you have an English policy in India; the policy pursued must be a broad British policy. And the duty of the British government is to endeavour to make the Australian and the New Zealander understand that great responsibilities having regard to British power—not to the extent, of course, of causing the suicide of Australia and New Zealand—enter into the question and that consideration must be paid to the point of view of trying to help Great Britain herself. That is my conception of inter-imperial relations. Do you think such a view is wrong? I think a policy of that kind is safer than the one imperial policy idea.

Now let us take the particular situation of Canada. Canada at the present time forms, politically speaking, a portion of the British Empire. It has been so for one hundred and fifty years. For one hundred and fifty years before that, it was a colony of France. I have said frequently, and I am not ashamed to repeat it here, that humiliating as the English conquest was, followed as it was by many acts of misrule, there was one redeeming feature as far as we were concerned: It rid us of the French colonial government. Why do I say that? Because even before the English conquest the sense of Canadian nationhood had already taken birth in the breasts and minds of the handful of poor peasants that had fought for one hundred and fifty years for France without any other result than being made bankrupt by the French government before it left. But we accepted the English conquest and we became reconciled to the British government for two or three reasons, the most important being that at last we had got rid of colonial wars. At last our people could till the soil and work in the forest quietly without fear of being called from year to year to go and fight against the English colonials. Why? Because, forsooth, upon a certain occasion William of Orange refused to marry the bastard daughter of Louis XIV, or because Louis XIV refused to expel from his dominions the father-in-law of William III, whom the said William had dethroned. I am not passing judgment upon the Stewarts, or William of Orange, or the House of Hanover, or their successors; I am not passing judgment upon the policy of Louis XIV, but I am asking English speaking members of parliament this question: Was there any sense in the idea that poor settlers who had left France, or England, or Scotland, or Ireland to come here and live at peace, who had encountered so much trouble and displayed such endurance in clearing the soil and in preserving their little fields, should find that every four, or five, or ten years, their efforts were squandered to the winds, and they were threatened with death and perdition because of a quarrel between two kings on the other side of the ocean?

And later on, because one king of Spain died without any male issue, and there was a squabble between the French king and the Austrian emperor as to who was to succeed Charles II of Spain, there was bound to be war between the English settlers of New England and the poor devils of New France who were endeavouring to resist the attacks of the Indian tribes. It was not even enough that those European quarrels should be transferred over here; but the governors and military officers on both sides began paying the savages to obtain their services as French scouts or English scouts and pay for scalps taken from each other. That was the growth of imperial power. That was the result of imperial policy, French on the one side and English on the other. And because forsooth later on there was a dispute, this time about the succession of Austria, England and France were induced to take a hand in the matter. Then all the poor Acadian settlers were taken away, thrown into vessels, and scattered along the banks of New England, some perishing and others being transferred to France. Was it because there was no room in America for French and English settlers? Was it because the English of Boston were bound to get the Acadians out of the way? No, it was because the French governor of Quebec intrigued to entice the Acadians in his part of the game and the English governor thought that French settlers should not remain on British territory so long as England was at war with France. Thus one of the most abominable acts of imperialism occurred, not because the English of America hated the French, but because of the quarrel in Europe over the Austrian succession in which the French and English kings were concerned. If we take the whole history of colonization in this country, can it not be said that the curse of America has been the pursuits of imperial policies in Europe? French and English settlers suffered immensely because military men and calculating politicians, the instruments of imperialism, either among the French at Quebec or the English at Boston, thought it necessary to mar the destinies of those populations by the one imperial idea.

That Europe should be reaping the results of a policy of national hatreds, of economic rivalries, which perhaps is unavoidable under such conditions as prevail there, is no wonder. But why impose upon this country the consequences of that policy? It is quite clear, from the declarations of all our statesment, from the admissions of all the leading spirits of Europe, that we were not obliged to participate in it. We were caught in it. Why? Because of the propaganda that was engendered by those in the United States and in Europe, who had an interest in enlarging the scope of the battle. By giving way to them we marred the future of our country and laid a burden on the people that will oppress many generations to come. I will not throw the blame on anyone. I do not go before my fellow citizens and tell them, "Let us throw the blame on this government or that government and declare secession from Great Britain and have nothing to do with European affairs." No, and here I agree with my hon. friend to my right, that economic conditions have grown and other conditions have developed that force us to take an interest and pay attention to foreign affairs, imperial and other. But I say, let us make a new start, and put ourselves on the only sound basis. Just as the Englishman, the Frenchman and the German, when dealing with representatives of other nations, thinks of himself and his country first, let us say: "Canada first." The Englishman thinks of England ten times before he thinks of Canada, and he does well. It is his duty. He frames his foreign policy to suit the situation of his country. Of course, he has an eye to the concerns of Canada and Australia; but Sir, if we do not approach any of these subjects with the idea that the Englishman thinks of himself first, and the empire second, we will never be in a position to deal on a par with England. The Englishman is English first and imperialistic second. Since we have endeavoured to put in action one imperial policy we must go at it in the right way. When we go back to the humble and sensible policy of Sir John A. Macdonald and Edward Blake, we will say, "We are Canadian first, last and forever." The Englishman thinks of himself, therefore let us think of ourselves. When we approach those great issues of peace, war and foreign affairs in that spirit, we will realize that Canada is British by accident but American, geographically, forever.

Friendly relations with England may last a long time or may be short. Revolution may produce certain issues. As far as I am concerned, none of the issues would frighten me. I would be just as much prepared for close partnership within the empire as for independence; of course I would rather have independence. But if it were a question of annexation with the United States or British imperialism, I would rather have British imperialism, though I think it would be a mistake. Time will always work against treaties and constitutions enacted against the laws of nature. Canada is and always will be a country on the continent of North America, and the time is coming, sooner or later, when the people of Canada will realize the truth of that fact. When that times comes, treaties and constitutions will not stand five minutes.

From a Canadian point of view or from a British point of view, let us serve notice to the world at large, not in any spirit of animosity towards Great Britain, but in full consciousness of what we owe to our people, that Canada is prepared to uphold morally any real move for peace which may be taken in Europe or anywhere, but that Canada is not prepared to arm her youth and to spend her millions for the sake of any foreign policy with which we are not connected by necessity and from which Canada is disconnected by all the exigencies of her natural situation. That is the policy that Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Alexander Campbell made clear to the British government in 1865 and 1870, when they discussed the terms upon which the country would stand in the future in regard to England and military matters. They represented that, being situated as she was, by organizing quietly and reasonably the defence of her own country, Canada was accomplishing her full imperial duty. They demonstrated that it would be against the interest of England if Canada handicapped her progress in population, in wealth, in economic development, under the pretence of going to the rescue of another part of the empire differently situated. This fact is imposing itself upon us in spite of all our professions of imperialism. Due credit must be given to the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) when in considering in London, some years ago, the question of the Anglo-Japanese treaty, he took sides practically with the United States against Great Britain, because he realized that Canada being situated as she is, that problem was affecting Canada primarily as an American nation. Likewise, when this government was asked by the British government to adhere to the Geneva protocol, I think it was the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) himself who wrote to London:

> We do not consider it in the interests of Canada, of the British Empire or of the League itself to recommend to parliament adherence to the protocol and particularly to its rigid provisions for application of economic and military sanctions in every future war. Among the grounds for this conclusion is the consideration of the effect of the non-participation of the United States upon attempts to enforce the sanctions and particularly so in the case of a contiguous country like Canada.

Of course that was common sense. Not so very long ago, an authoritative representative of the British government, one whom I have never heard accused of lacking loyalty to the British government or British institutions, the English Ambassador at Washington, Sir Esme Howard, stated most positively that the imperial duty of Canada consisted in interpreting England to the United States and the United States to England. What does that mean? It means that our primary duty, national or imperial, is to remain at peace with the United States and to make it as easy as possible for England to carry on her imperial policy in coincidence with that of the United States. That is our modest, but very effective role, which we cannot fulfil if we take a hand in all the quarrels which England may have elsewhere, because the time will surely come when the United States will ask us to choose as between our situation as a nation in America and our new so-called obligations towards the British Empire elsewhere.

One thing which I have never been able to understand, from a British point of view, is how it is that so few Canadians of note have endeavoured to realize that the basis of our foreign policy is and must be the Monroe doctrine. I know many people will jump at that; but surely men of English blood should not be scandalized. As was so aptly stated once by Mr. Ewart, the Monroe doctrine is a misnomer; it should be called the Canning policy, although once in a while it is called the Monroe doctrine. To my mind, the framing of that policy is one of the greatest examples of the imperial genius of England. The moment England found out that Spain had lost all her colonies in America, that the empire of Brazil, after a civil war, was separated from Portugal, and that she remained alone with vast possessions on the continent of America, she imagined that policy of making the United States the policeman holding guard over the rest of European possessions in America, which meant Canada. It is sufficient to follow the correspondence, both public and secret,—most of it was secret then —to realize with what patience and insight the British government succeeded in having a president of the United States, in the midst of that period where twisting the lion's tail was the basis of all American politics, declare in favour of a policy which permitted England to breathe at last and to have no more cause to fear for trouble in America.

Of course there was a little difficulty once in a while with the United States, but it was all settled by diplomacy. What has remained in fact is that from George Canning down to the present Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Austen Chamberlain, the Monroe doctrine has been the one axiom of policy upon which no government, no party, no foreign minister, has ever gone back. It was just a few months, if I remember rightly, before the war, when Sir Edward Grey declared that the Monroe doctrine remained the axis of English policy in America just as solid and untouched in our day as it was when it was invented. I reminded the House some time ago of what I was told in London by Lord Fisher on military preparations. He said that it was absolutely foolish for Canada to embark upon any policy of external defence by applying to London for direction, but it must be to Washington, in connection with the United States authorities, that Canada should look for a basis of external defence "if," as he added, "you need any such thing; because no country on earth will think of attacking Canada on the soil of America. Only one country, the United States, can do that, and as against the United States we cannot and will never defend you." That is another basis of English policy which has never changed.

In the old House, I have heard Sir Charles Tupper declare in the most energetic terms that the result of all his relations with the British government, from the time he was a member of the Canadian government down to his resignation as High Commissioner in London, was to find out that on no consideration whatever would any English government undertake the risk of any difficulty with the United States on account of Canada. The great advantage of exercising full national responsibility is the comprehension of realities which naturally result. We are like big boys who always count upon papa and mamma to help them out if they do nasty things. They will throw snowballs right and left, and if some angry passerby runs after them they will fly home and say: "Mother, mother, come to my rescue." We have been so used to that sort of thing that we feel we have the British Empire at our back. We are the British Empire, we often think; but the Englishmen at home who have built up that empire, stone by stone, know the materials of which it is composed. They know it is a tremendous fabric; but they also know that it could crumble very easily, because of its abnormal configuration, because of its being dispersed over all lands, because of the impossibility of having one imperial policy. When they talk of one imperial policy in England, what do they mean by that? They mean an English policy which the dominions will accept blindly. That is the one imperial policy, the only one possible. Mr. Asquith made that quite clear and there has never been any change from that position. When at the conference of 1911, pressed by Sir Joseph Ward, the representative of New Zealand, for the establishment of a constitutional system under which the imperial authority would be shared equally by the dominions and England, Mr. Asquith replied: "That authority cannot be shared." Of course, since, they have given us a little more hearing, they have admitted somewhat more frequently representatives of the various dominions to the antechambers of empire. They have treated them well there, given them good tea, and champagne occasionally. They have made them cognizant of what is going on in the political world and of the decisions taken by the British government for the good of the empire—and I think on the whole their decisions are good. But when they endeavour to make us believe that we rule the empire—well, Sir, let us have a little more consideration for the common sense and appreciation of responsibility of British statesmen. They know they cannot share that authority. I remember one day, in a very intimate gathering, an apostle of empire was present, and for my sake—I was the only colonial there—he began speaking of the great future there was before us Canadians, especially before us French-Canadians, in ruling the empire. It was a little like the story of that young scapegrace of Toronto who happened to be the son of an Anglican bishop, and one day gleefully boasted: I rule the English church; I rule mother, mother rules father, and father rules the church; therefore I rule the church. Well, that is something like the way in which we participate in ruling the empire. I admit the imperial authorities keep us informed. It is a good thing. Let us take advantage of that information to broaden our views, to realize the complexity of the government of this empire, to understand the tremendous responsibility of the English government; but let us not ask from the English government what it cannot give us.

As one other gentleman said in that conversation: "Why deceive those poor people in the colonies? You know, so-and-so, that we have too much at stake in the world to run the risk of letting any Canadian or Australian butt in!"

But what has been possible, and what is still possible, is for us to frame our policy as it suits us and to take that share of responsibility in imperial affairs which does not bring us into conflict with our duty towards our own people. By that, I am not speaking only of our duty towards the present generation, but towards future generations. If we can hope—and I admit, so far as I am concerned, that that hope is diminishing from day to day—to resist first the economic, then the moral, and then the political absorption of Canada by the United States, it will not be by impoverishing Canada for the sake of England or Australia, it will not be by directing the attention or the conscience of our people towards foreign engagements which have nothing to do with our country and over which we have not, and cannot have, effective control. On the contrary, it will be by trying to develop in the minds of all Canadians, French, English, Irish and Scotch, or of any other descent, a strong sense of duty towards this country—the only country for which we have responsibility, the only country in which our children will live as our fathers have lived, in the eloquent words of the member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan)—the only part of the British Empire for which we are responsible, morally, politically, socially and economically. If we do that, if we do all we can for Canada, and by Canada, if we keep Canada free from the entanglements of a situation in Europe which heaven may solve—how, I do not know—but surely which we cannot solve, if we do not distract the mind of the nation towards problems which the mass of our people cannot comprehend because they are not home problems for them, we shall be doing our duty as Canadians. Go to Belgium, go to Holland, go to Switzerland, to those small countries that, thank heaven, are not engaged in the turmoil of imperial policy which has been the curse of the world, but which nevertheless live in close contact with those ambitious and rapacious nations, have to understand foreign affairs—talk for example, to a dog-driver in the streets of any Belgian town, and he will speak to you of German policy, of French policy, of English policy, not of course with the same knowledge as Sir Edward Grey or Sir Austen Chamberlain possess, but with a degree of understanding which very few Canadian statesmen have shown so far in regard to foreign affairs. Why? Because those problems are home problems to him, because the fate of his nation is at stake in the event of a quarrel between France and Germany.

Is it the case with us? For one century previous to the Great war England had many wars. Did we think we had to have one imperial policy at the time of the Crimean war? Fortunately we did not; we had sensible statesmen then who kept us out of the fray. Did we think we had to go to the rescue of England because she wanted to paint half the area of Africa red? Did we think we were bound to go and bombard Peking in order to compel the Chinese to absorb opium to enrich some poppy planters in India who wanted to make more money? That was one of those great "civilizing wars" which fortunately we did not have to share in. Did we have to share in about thirty wars that Great Britain has been engaged in since the downfall of Napoleon up to the last war, extending over just one century? Not in one of them except the South African war. There the one imperial policy began to make itself felt, there we began to be clap-trapped by the same kind of propaganda which caught us in the last war. But surely after that experience of the one imperial policy, is it not time that we come back upon our own soil and appeal to the conscience of our people and ask them to have one national policy? You can never have one national policy if at the same time you run such risks as the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St George has so very delicately pointed to this afternoon.

But I repeat, Mr. Speaker, though perhaps it may hurt the feelings of some hon. members here, I think it is just as well to go to the root of the thing now, it is just as well to realize that if at any one of these future conferences such undertakings and engagements as were taken by Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1897, in 1899 and in 1909 are still resorted to in vague terms, moral or verbal engagements will be forced upon us later by an appeal to us that they are engagements of honour and all that, then it will be too late to settle the issue and avoid the consequences. Although I may have a very different conception of empire from that entertained by several hon. members, I do not think there is one here who has more love for this country than I have. Perhaps my heart is small, but when I think of the sacrifices that have been made by eight generations of my forefathers to make something of Canada, when I think of my seven children who will be Canadian citizens and will have to make such sacrifices, if they are to be true to their country, I think it is enough. I do not see why I or any other Canadian should have a different standard of patriotism or national duty from that which the Englishman, the Irishman or the Scotchman has. I do not see why we should have two countries to serve. We have one, and only one. It is the country that you can make one only if you appeal to all Canadians to be Canadian first, and to think of the empire when the people who are responsible for the empire have no time to think about it. That is the manner in which I think the problem should be considered.

It may be that my language has been a little too forceful; if I have hurt anyone I sincerely apologize, because I have approached this subject not with the idea of attacking anyone whose ideas are different from mine, but because after thirty years of study and political experience in Canada, and after a good deal of study of European problems I am convinced more deeply than ever that if we are to save the future of this country; if we are to save Canada from internal dissension, from external absorption, from the turmoil of European politics or from American absorption, it will be by bending all our energies, by devoting all our talent, by doing all we can to make the different sections of this country one united people for Canada. So far as England and the empire go, I am not in a hurry to lose that connection. As I have often said before, I appreciate our connection with England; but our best manner of appreciation is to show the rulers, the business men and diplomats of England that we are just as intelligent as they are; that we realize our situation just as they realize theirs, that we have a duty to perform to Canada just as they have a duty to their own country. If imperial association can last and if an imperial policy can be fruitful of results, it will be through each portion of the empire thinking of itself first, not through any selfish spirit of absolute disinterest, but in order to start on a sound basis of internal and external policy and join hands with England every time her rulers make a move for real peace in the world, but also to resist any attempt to drag us once more in foreign wars. We should join hands, I repeat, every time England may associate with any group of nations in the interest of peace, when her own interest lies in peace; every time she makes for justice, because her interests lie in the preservation of justice; every time she prevents or endeavours to prevent any nation from dominating, because it is to her interest that no nation should dominate. Then, I say as a Canadian and a British subject, I approve of that move, and I give it my moral support. But to subscribe to undefined and unlimited engagements, or even defined and limited engagements which go beyond the sphere of our action, which go beyond the natural laws which should govern our policy just as they govern the policies of other nations, is wrong. There I say British, yes, but Canadian first; if necessary, secession from Britain rather than the sacrifice of Canada; Canada in partnership with Britain so long as it is possible, but Canada first and forever.

Mr. RENE MORIN (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville): It is difficult for a modest, silent member of this House to be called upon to speak after the eloquent and forceful oration which we have just heard. It is my intention, Mr. Speaker, to accept the conclusions which the hon. member has drawn in respect of the resolution now before us, but if I agree with him on many of the grounds which he has brought forth in support of his resolution I must state that with some of his contentions I am quite unable to agree. It is very well and very easy to condemn the policies of the statesmen who have governed the European states for the past two or three centuries, and to find that everything they did was wrong, but I am not in a position to say that if we had been in their places we would have done better. There may have been reasons which would explain, if not justify, their actions. Man is only human, and liable to make mistakes.

The purpose of this resolution is to approve the procedure proposed at the Imperial conference of 1923 for the negotiation, signature and ratification of treaties affecting Canada, and, before the ratification of any treaty can be made, to require the formality of its approval by parliament. It may be in some ways a cumbersome procedure, but it is also a great and necessary safeguard. Legislation has to be passed by parliament, but if it does not work properly, parliament may repeal it. Treaties, once entered into, cannot so easily be put aside; they may bind our successors in office and our country to momentous undertakings, and it is only reasonable that these undertakings be entered into after full discussion and under the sole responsibility of the representatives of the people.

It is not my intention to discuss the merits of this proposition, but to consider a case actually pending and then to draw conclusions in support of this resolution. The treaty of Locarno is a typical instance of a treaty subject to ratification by Canada, and an examination of it, in its relation to our country, will show the great importance of undertakings of that nature. The Locarno treaties, to be properly understood, must be studied in the light of the treaties and covenants which, since the war, have been proposed or passed with a view to preventing future wars and securing a peaceful and amicable or judicial settlement of all difficulties which may arise between nations.

It is unnecessary to recall that the war, on the side of the allies, was fought as a war to finish wars, with the set purpose of creating after it conditions which would absolutely prevent the recurrence of such brutal, bloody and stupid conflicts, and the League of Nations was constituted mainly for that purpose. The covenant contains provisions whereby states are obliged to endeavour by peaceful methods to settle their differences, but it does not enforce an obligatory peaceful settlement of a conflict. Later, the protocol for the pacific settlement of international disputes was submitted to the consideration of the different countries, members of the league. Under the covenant the decision to submit a dispute to arbitration or judical settlement was to be arrived at through an understanding between both litigants. The main purpose of the protocol was to provide that arbitration, or submission to judicial settlement, could be resorted to at the instance of one party alone. Arbitration of all international differences or their submission to the Permanent Court of International Justice was made compulsory; all wars of aggression were prohibited and all wars, resorted to in violation of the undertakings contained in the covenant or in the protocol, were branded as wars of aggression. The protocol was rejected by the British Empire; some other way to settle the situation had to be found and the Locarno agreements were negotiated and signed on the 16th of October, 1925. So far Germany had been left out of the League of Nations, and she was not invited to be a party to the Geneva protocol. The obligations imposed upon her by the treaty of Peace, though apparently voluntarily agreed to, had really been forced upon her, as she was not in a position to refuse to submit to them; these obligations were liable to be repudiated as contracted under duress.

The peculiar feature of this new attempt to promote peace was that Germany, acting of her own free will, was a party to the Locarno agreements. By these agreements, Germany, Belgium, France, Poland and Czecho-Slovakia agreed to submit to arbitration all difficulties arising between them; and Germany, Belgium, France, Great Britain and Italy agreed that Great Britain and Italy would guarantee the observance of these agreements, entered into between Germany and France and Germany and Belgium, to the extent of resorting to war against any of the parties which would violate them. Treaties of mutual guarantee between France and Poland and France and Czecho-Slovakia were also entered into, though Great Britain was not a party to them. Great Britain is bound by this treaty to maintain the present western frontier of Germany and to guarantee the peaceful settlement of conflicts between Germany and France and Belgium.

Article 9 of the treaty provides:

> That the present treaty shall impose no obligation upon any of the British dominions or upon India, unless the government of such dominion or of India signifies its acceptance thereof.

The question is now: Should Canada adhere to this treaty and submit herself to the obligations which it involves? But for the fact that Germany was not a party to it, the Geneva protocol was a much more effective weapon to promote international peace than the Locarno agreements. The purpose of the Geneva protocol was to make compulsory arbitration, or judicial settlement of international disputes, the law of the world, and if it had been adopted by the principal nations of Europe it might have been reasonably hoped that Germany and the other countries would ultimately have agreed to it. All wars under it could only take place in the name of the general international interest. The Locarno agreements are more local in character. They perpetuate the system of alliances of certain countries against others, and recourses to wars, for local and private reasons, under certain conditions are allowed to subsist. As the Geneva protocol was to apply to a greater number of countries, conflicts arising out of it might have been more frequent, but normally all the signatory countries would have united, in the name of law and order, against the infringer, and the application of economic sanctions should have been sufficient to bring a settlement. A conflict arising out of the Locarno treaty, being more local in character, might again create a situation which would strain all the resources of our country. Yet, Canada refused to adhere to the Geneva protocol because she did not want to accept its rigid provisions of economic and military sanctions in practically every future war. Surely there is no more reason why we should assume greater risks under the Locarno agreement.

At the time the treaty of Versailles was signed, treaties of guarantee were entered into between France and Great Britain, and France and the United States. These treaties were not ratified, but the treaty of guarantee by Great Britain in favour of France against German aggression contained a clause that it would not be binding upon the dominions or upon India unless ratified by the governments of the dominions or of India. It was well understood by Great Britain and the dominions that these would not be submitted to the obligations contracted under this treaty, and the government of the day in this country, if I am well aware, made it clear that it did not intend to be a party to it. The purpose of the treaty was the same as the one signed at Locarno; the principle underlying this agreement was the same as at Locarno, and there is to-day no more reason for ratifying the Locarno agreement than there was in the first case.

The first thing to notice in respect of this treaty is that Great Britain and Italy are parties to it, not for the direct safeguarding of their respective frontiers or of their peculiar direct interests; they are parties to it only indirectly, as sureties, to guarantee that both Germany and France or Germany and Belgium will carry out the terms of the treaties of arbitration negotiated between them at Locarno. If Great Britain was to declare war under this treaty, it would be a war of police, resorted to in order to compel one country to abide by the terms of a convention with another. There is a vast difference between a war of that kind and a war of defence in which the life of the empire would be at stake. The duties which are imposed upon us by our association in the Britannic commonwealth cannot go so far as to involve us in a war of aggression or in a war of intervention between foreign nations.

The casus foederis may be controvertible; it may not be understood by nations living thousands of miles from the scene of the conflict as it would be by peoples living near it; it may give rise to different interpretations amongst our own population, and promote disunion and discord. It is not a case where we can bind ourselves so long in advance. We must let the parliament of the day decide the issue when it arises, and we would be failing in our duty towards future generations if we were to bind them, hand and foot, to all wars which may result from the engagements of Great Britain at Locarno.

To assume obligations which may lead to war, our country must have something at stake. This stake must be something which directly affects us, and must be of sufficient importance to be commensurate with the risks which such an undertaking involves. We have a great interest in the maintenance of peace in Europe, but we have this interest in common with the other countries, and our responsibilities incurred to reach this aim should not be greater than those of the other countries. With that end in view we have assumed obligations under the covenant of the League of Nations, and we will fulfil them to the best of our ability, but our moral duties should not go further.

I am not a pessimist, and I have great hopes that the democracies will succeed in preventing a recurrence of the unfortunate events of the past decade, that common sense will prevail and find ways and means, other than war, to effect a peaceful settlement of the conflicts as they arise between states, that civilization has reached a stage where arbitration and judicial settlement will decide these issues; but we must all admit that, as a result of the war, the situation in Europe is not yet perfectly adjusted, that the peoples of Europe are not all yet reconciled to the alterations and modifications brought about by the war; that resentments, envy and fear still prevail, and that time alone can cure all that. I quite understand that Great Britain, being part of the European continent, should have felt bound to intervene in order to promote a readjustment along peaceful lines, but I fail to see how a country two thousand miles away can undertake to act forcibly as arbitrator between European states, or how she can feel any legal or moral obligation to intervene on one side or on the other in order to impose its solution on unwilling populations. To ratify such a treaty would be to assume a role which does not befit our country, and which is unnatural.

There is the solidarity of the empire to be considered, but it is, to my mind, a solidarity in defence; it is not one which can extend to wars of encroachments, or wars of police to restore peace between foreign countries, or to punish certain foreign countries for their misdeeds. Our country has the advantage of a geographical situation which reduces to a minimum the risks of encroachments on the part of its neighbours. She is from that standpoint in a most enviable position. On the other hand, climatic conditions and the configuration of her inhabited territory create difficulties which are not of easy solution; her transportation problems constitute a burden which is heavy to carry; she has immeasurable natural resources, but they are as yet mainly undeveloped. All her energies are required if she wants to overcome these difficulties and secure her full development. Under these conditions, even looking at it from the standpoint of the interest of the empire as a whole, would it be wise for Canada to divert her energies from these problems, to sacrifice her own interests in order to assume heavy obligations for the purpose of contributing by force to the restoration of order on the European continent? I sincerely believe that our obligations to ourselves and our obligations to the empire may be fulfilled in a way to yield better profit, for all parties concerned, by limiting as much as possible our external undertakings and applying ourselves to the development of our country.

The constitutional development of Canada is based to a large extent on precedents, and since confederation our rights and our powers in matters of international intercourse have been increased and widened on the sole authority of precedents and common sense. Since the war it has been the practice for Canada to be represented at all international conferences where obligations were to be assumed in the name of the British Empire, and to be a party to the treaties which embodied the decisions of the conferences. Certain rules were laid down at the Imperial conference of 1923 to govern the procedure to be followed for the negotiation and signature of these treaties when they were to bind the empire as a whole. They provided that the full powers should be in the form employed at Paris and Washington. This rule was not adhered to at Lausanne and at Locarno and the dominions were left out of the negotiations. The dominions were not invited, their participation was not looked for and as there was no wish on the part of the other contracting parties to bind the dominions, these cannot be expected to involve themselves in military undertakings to enforce the provisions of the treaties mentioned. Our claims to an international status corresponding with the status which we occupy in the League of Nations have been constantly pressed since the Versailles treaty by all parties in Canada, and they are well known. To assume responsibilities under treaties contracted without our participation would be to impair or sacrifice this status. It is true the Locarno treaty provides that the dominions shall be bound by this treaty only if they ratify it, but to adhere to it would be to sanction a practice which is not in harmony with our present status.

Some will say that to refuse to ratify such a treaty would be to impair the diplomatic unity of the empire. But we are an autonomous country, with the right to govern ourselves as we see fit. Has the foreign policy of Great Britain since the war or before, always been such as to warrant our unequivocal endorsation? At the khaki election of 1918 the policy of the British government was to maintain firmly the entente with France, to make Germany pay, if necessary by searching their pockets, and to bring to trial and punish the kaiser and the other war criminals. A little later, without change of government, there was a complete reversal of British policy. Germany was encouraged not to fulfil her engagements, she was induced to resist the attempts of France to extract partial reparation, and the whole British policy became permeated to saturation with a francophobia which delayed the restoration of normal conditions and increased the dissatisfaction and the resentments which already existed. That policy was a failure and there was another reversal of policy. All these policies were determined without our participation, without our consultation. They never represented the concerted opinion of the governments of the autonomous dominions. Diplomatic unity, without consultation and without co-operation, means diplomatic servility, and as presently constituted it cannot be acknowledged as a factor in the shaping of the policies of Canada.

There is no doubt that when Great Britain is at war the dominions are also at war, but they are merely in a state of passive belligerency; active belligerency or actual participation in the war does not necessarily follow; it is a matter which is left at the discretion of their respective governments. In this case, the ratification of the treaty of Locarno means necessarily active belligerency, whilst non-ratification means only passive belligerency. It is not for us to bind ourselves and to bind our children to active belligerency in a future war between France and Germany arising out of this treaty. We have no direct interest in such a war. Our association in the Britannic commonwealth is not such as to involve the taking of such risks in order to increase the importance, the power, the strength and the prestige of the political leaders of one of the associated nations of this commonwealth, or to enforce policies decided and determined without our participation. We have no business to interfere, in the name of law, order or civilization, in conflicts which may arise under this treaty, as we hold no mandate for that purpose.

There is therefore, in my humble opinion, no reason whatever why we should ratify the treaty entered into by Great Britain at Locarno, and in the best interest of our country parliament should refuse to adhere to it. To vest in the government of Great Britain or in the government of Canada the right to embroil our country in adventures of that nature without the participation of parliament, would be a policy pregnant with the most dire results, and undermining the whole democratic structure of our country.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): I represent a soldier and British-born constituency. This is the fourth time the present matter has come before the House this session and very little has been said with respect to it by hon. gentlemen on this side. Sir John A. Macdonald was satisfied with the status of this country. He did not ask the British government to increase the status of Canada. Five hundred thousand soldiers who went to the front and fought for civilization in France and Flanders were satisfied with Canada's status. Fifty thousand of those gallant men lie buried in those countries; they were content to fight even unto death under Canada's status. They fought for Canada's status but did not ask that any change should be made in it; they did not ask for any increased status for Canada. Such being the case I think the civilians who stayed at home should also be satisfied with the status of this Dominion.

Of the links that used to bind Canada to the Motherland what links remain to-day? First there is our allegiance to the British crown; secondly there is the right of appeal to the Privy Council; thirdly any treaties into which we enter must have the sanction of the mother of parliaments. We are not an independent nation, or a nation at all; we are a link in a chain of free commonwealths within and making up the British Empire. We never were a nation. Talk about annexation with the United States! There is no feeling at all in Canada in favour of it, nor for independence either. Talk about Canada being independent, a country of nine million souls, competing with or withstanding a nation of 110,000,000 people! Why if we were independent a foreign fleet might sail up the St. Lawrence and we would not have as much as a rowboat to oppose it with because our toy navy is locked up in a garage at Halifax.

I invite consideration of the question of what our duty is as a member of the empire. We are shortly to have an Imperial conference. Where is the agenda; what will Canada bring up, and what is the government's policy? The late Sir Wilfrid Laurier used to sit down at such a conference with the representatives of the sister dominions, Australia, New Zealand and others, with the object of seeing what could be done to better the conditions of the component parts of the empire and foster inter-imperial trade and relations. The time has come for Canada to stop whining about our status, to stop complaining, to stop shouting from the housetops about our lack of status, which is a mere technicality, a mere academic question. The time has come for Canada to keep step with Australia and New Zealand; to sit in at a table with these sister dominions and discuss in a friendly, amicable and peaceful manner, in the interest of the good of the empire, the inter-imperial trade and economic problems and other inter-imperial problems and questions in a big, brotherly, united way; to consider our relations with the Motherland and try to assist the Mother Country to solve her economic problems and get some imperial results instead of attending these colonial conferences and adopting benevolent aloofness policies and whining and complaining about our status.

I am opposed to this resolution and intend to vote against it. My reason for that is that the whole resolution is based on the doctrine and principles of separatism. That is what it is, and nothing else. There was a colonial conference in 1922 or 1923, and what position did Canada take over there? The representatives of this country sat back and said: We are satisfied; we will not help; we will pursue a policy of drift and benevolent aloofness. Australia and New Zealand had a policy but we did not have any at all. We were satisfied to hold aloof and whine, like Ireland and South Africa, instead of being satisfied with the Motherland and with the happy conditions in which she has placed us and appreciate the debt of gratitude we owe her for maritime freedom. We should have unity of policy within the empire. We should be in law and fact, all parts of the empire, an international unit working all in unison and complete accord for the good of the empire and each and every part thereof. Instead of Canada's present position of shirking all empire responsibility, Australia's vigorous participation prejudices Canada in England, and Canada's aloofness hurts our country. We who in the darkest hours of the war were prepared to accept the protection of the British fleet and all the privileges we enjoy as part of the British Empire should now be prepared to accept some of the responsibility which that incurs; yet, on the other hand, we give nothing in return, except that we whine and complain about our status within the empire.

The status idea of Sir John A. Macdonald and other great statesmen of Canada was expressed in the statement, "A British subject I was born; a British subject I will die." Sir John was satisfied with the status of the country within the empire and made no demand for a change. We have been in session six months and a resolution is now presented to the House in its dying hours, when there is no adequate opportunity to discuss it. It is all very well for the hon. member for Labelle, to give his views on the subject. This is the fourth occasion on which he has spoken for two hours and a half on the same subject of Canada's status and independence. If Canada is to be talked out of the British Empire the hon. member for Labelle would have accomplished that many years ago. But Canada is not going to be either talked or written out of the British Empire. Canada will have to be fought out of the British Empire. There is no demand for any change in the status of Canada to-day, so far as the city I represent is concerned. Before the session closes I hope the Prime Minister will lay on the table the agenda of the coming conference and let this House instruct him on the country's policy. I hope he will not follow in the footsteps of Ireland and South Africa, but will adopt the policy of Australia and New Zealand and try to help solve with all Canada's power the inter-imperial and difficult economic problems which confront the empire to-day. If an united effort is made, great benefit will accrue in the extension of the empire through all its parts. As Mussolini said the other day, "You who live in an empire have a sacred trust to perform." What he said of Italy is true of our great British Empire. He said, "A country does not belong to the people who live in it to-day. It is an inheritance from the past, a possession for the present, and a trust for the future." Canada's status was good enough for Sir John A. Macdonald and his successors and the soldiers who fought in the South African and the late Great war. The war did not change Canada's status. I am utterly opposed to any change in Canada's status. I am opposed to separatism autonomy and further changing of our status. We are proud that Canada is an integral part of the greatest empire the world has even known. The war left us our status as it was. What Canada has done the past thirty-five years she has done of her own volition, and voluntarily, and she would do the same thing over again, namely, come to the Mother Country's aid in her hour of peril. So the people of this country are satisfied with our present status.

[Mr. Church.]

Speaking of treaties, Canada sent gentlemen down to Washington in 1911 and made a treaty with reference to reciprocity. You all know what happened to them and their government. Where do we stand with regard to the Chicago diversion of waters? Not one line has been written to the British government regarding that particular matter, owing to our desire to deal with Washington ourselves. I asked a question of the government in regard to water diversion, and I received the answer that there had been no correspondence whatever with reference to that particular matter directly with the British government. We have allowed this question of diversion of water at Chicago to remain in abeyance, and where has it landed us? Nowhere, because of our failure to place our case with the British government.

Regarding the other treaties that have been made by Canada, where are we? The French, Australian, Belgian, West Indies—all failures. Speaking of the position of this country, I say that I do not believe in separatism. If we were to accept the Independent separatist views of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) the quicker Canada gets out of the British Empire the better for the rest of the empire. There are some links which bind Canada inseparably to the Motherland. But there are people who would abolish appeals to the Privy Council, who would alter the British North America Act, who would abolish the office of Governor General and of Lieutenant Governor, and who would have an Ambassador at Washington—an ambassador who would have no functions but be a figure head. Two ambassadors went down there in 1911 and almost landed Canada in economic annexation through reciprocity with the United States. When Canada sends delegates to the Imperial conference the House of Commons should instruct those delegates to eliminate the spirit of separatism entirely and instruct them to co-operate and not hold aloof. I hope the Prime Minister will lay on the table of the House the agenda for the coming conference and the policy of the government. The Premiers of Australia and New Zealand have already taken their parliaments into their confidence, and I see no reason why the head of this government should not follow suit and lay down a solid British Imperial policy, and a forward one.

I would urge a closer policy of trade union between the Mother Country and the various dominions; that they should sit round a table and try to solve our problems, instead of adopting a spirit of aloofness. Premier Ferguson in a speech dealt with the subject, and was in favour of closer trade union within the empire. The people of New Zealand and Australia are in favour of it, and I think we should favour it also. We are accepting all the privileges of citizenship within the empire, and should not be afraid to shoulder some of the burdens. By adopting this motion we are declaring for separatism all along the line. I am opposed to the doctrine set out in the motion, and the people of Canada are I believe also opposed to it. If this proposition had been placed by the government before the country the last general election, I believe we would have a membership of a different complexion. The time has come to stop whining and complaining. The facts should be placed before the country. I represent a city which has British ideals which favours British institutions and is entirely British imperial.

I am opposed to the appointment of a Canadian representative at Washington. I believe it will cause Canada a good deal of trouble and do a lot of harm to our empire at Washington, as it did in 1911, and I have no use for it. If the British authorities recommend the Locarno treaty as necessary for the defence of the empire, I think Canada should sign it. If Britain tells us our safety depends upon it, that settles it; let us adopt it unanimously. After accepting the rights, privileges and prerogatives of British protection, Canada should be prepared to accept some of the responsibilities and burdens. We should show our self-respect in that way and no longer permit the British taxpayer to provide for our Maritime protection. Instead of Canada taking the same position identically as South Africa and Ireland did as to their status within the empire, we should take our cue from New Zealand and Australia and be satisfied with our present status within the empire. What is that status? It is a status which was good enough for Sir John A. Macdonald, for the soldiers who fought the battles of the empire in the South African war and in the last war.

Why is this change proposed? There has been no demand so far as I can see for a change. This appointment of a Canadian representative at Washington is in my opinion another foolish example of the separatist idea. How long this will continue in Canada I do not know; but I believe if a vote of the people was taken as to the status of this country within the empire, they would be satisfied with the present status of allegiance to the British crown, of appeals to the Privy Council, of ambassadors and in regard to many other matters that occurred during and after the war; they would side with our dear sister dominions of Australia and New Zealand. The policy of 1914 that parliament should be summoned and asked to sanction a matter of war is the right policy, but in minor matters and all other matters the government must take the responsibility as long as they are the government.

As regards sitting round the table with the sister dominions on constitutional and economical questions, I believe the government of the day should assume the responsibility, and on the government of the day so far as they are the government is the responsibility of seeing that when they go to the colonial conference they will represent the views of the people of Canada impartially and not hold aloof as they did at the last conference.

There is no demand for this resolution; in my opinion it is only an academic one and one which will not do any good. If these are the views expressed by the government in the House of Commons, and the Prime Minister and his government are for separatism and benevolent aloofness, it would be far better if Canada had no delegate at the coming conference and sent no one to wrongly express Canada's views. If we were to take the same position which New Zealand and Australia took at the last Imperial conference that would be the right view.

If the Canadian parliament will not say what are our rights in regard to constitutional matters, and stand by the empire and oversea dominions, I see no necessity for sending a delegate to the colonial conference. If the views of the hon. member for Labelle are the views of the people of this country, the quicker Canada gets out of the British Empire the better.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock one of the hon. members from Toronto (Mr. Church) had just taken his seat. It has not been my practice in this House to attack any hon. gentleman because of his personality, and

I do not propose to do so on this occasion. I wish however, to refer to some of the remarks of the hon. member, because I really do not think that the dignity of this House in debate, nor the serious and due consideration we should give to questions as important as this, is going to be helped by references to "the 50,000 soldiers that died overseas not being in favour of this form of resolution." The hon. gentleman makes many general allegations without substantiating them by one tittle of evidence. He charged the Prime Minister with having introduced this resolution as a separatist, as a man who is anxious for the separation of Canada from the Mother Country. He charged others who supported the Prime Minister from these benches, the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), as being secessionists or separatists. I wish to dissociate myself from such statements especially as in this particular instance they were utterly unsupported.

The same hon. gentleman says: We are not a nation. Why are we not? We are a nation in the eyes of all those who signed the treaty of Versailles. We are a nation to the full extent that we desire to assert our nationhood. That is all that remains. He says he has had no chance to discuss this important question because it was introduced in the dying days of the session. I wonder how long the hon. gentleman would like to discuss the question, all the evening? He had all the evening if he wanted to take it. He could have had all to-morrow too if he wanted to debate it at still greater length. I wonder how long the hon. gentleman requires to discuss a question of this kind.

Then he said in closing that the colonial status was good enough for Sir John A. Macdonald, therefore it was good enough for him. I disagree with the hon. member's statement in the first place because I do not think Sir John A. Macdonald ever was satisfied with the colonial status. Many of his speeches in Hansard and many of his addresses in the country would indicate the contrary to be the fact. But even supposing Sir John A. Macdonald did believe in the colonial status, and so stated, I should like to ask the hon. gentleman: would he be satisfied to be back in the same position as Sir John A. Macdonald was; would be be satisfied to do without the great inventions of modern science, to do exactly as they did in those pioneering days in Canada? Or would he prefer the present time with its involved nationhood and stand up with his fellow-Canadians to urge forward the status of this country until we achieve that independence within the commonwealth which all true Canadians desire?

In opening up the material portion of this discussion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Prime Minister on introducing the resolution. I do not think it is fraught with any great terrors either for this country or for Great Britain or for any other country. It is a very moderate resolution indeed. But I congratulate him because in introducing it, and indeed I hope subsequently when the House shall have endorsed it, he will have succeeded in consolidating the position to which we have attained by recognition, if not by actual declaration. I have in my hand an article which appeared in the Fortnightly Review of March, 1925, written by a famous English publicist, who signs himself Augur. It reads as follows:

> In 1914 Great Britain went to war with Germany without consulting the view of the dominions. The dominions were not consulted before the war began, neither was their approval of the declaration of war asked for afterwards officially. But now the situation has undergone a complete change. The great dominions by their effort in the war, and with our consent, have acquired national status, not only within the empire itself but also among the states of the world. The confirmation of this is in the fact that the self-governing dominions of the empire have been admitted, with our approval, to full individual membership of the League of Nations. Thus, for better or for worse, the constitution of the empire has changed.

I refer these statements by an Englishmen to the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church).

> But it is yet in the making. The principle of consultation has been imposed, but the method of its practical application has not been discovered yet. The situation needs careful and delicate handling. The time is not ripe when we can go into imperial consultation with a complicated, far-reaching problem. For a long time we shall be obliged to restrict ourselves to elementary, straightforward issues.
> Even of it were fair, we could not consult the empire about a French or a Belgium interest. With the best will in the world the dominions would not be able to understand us, and certainly would refuse to follow us in assuming a binding obligation towards peoples which do not belong to the British commonwealth of nations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is an entrancing study to follow the slow evolution of a nation from almost a primary condition. I have done it in a meagre way. I should like to have had time and opportunity in my early years to have studied it thoroughly. When we study the political evolution of Canada we find it has passed from the day of fiscal domination to the day of fiscal freedom—that is, as free of fiscal domination as my hon. friends to the right will permit us to be; we have passed from economic enslavement to economic freedom; we have passed from a war slavery, or almost that, to a war freedom. In the last instance it has been of recent consummation. It is interesting to know that Sir Robert Borden, the great leader of the Conservative party who preceded my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen), insisted that there be inserted in one of the treaties which he assisted in drawing up, the tripartite treaty of 1919, a clause providing that none of the dominions should be bound unless its parliament consented thereto. That was the first really definite break in our war unity. It is interesting in passing to note that by article 49 of the constitution of the Irish Free State agreed to by the British government, and of course by the Irish Free State, it is provided as follows:

> Save in the case of acutal invasion, the Irish Free State shall not be committed to active participation in any war without the consent of the Dail Eirrean.

That is the Irish parliament. So I say the war unity of the empire itself has gone. Diplomatic unity is going.

Let not hon. members, Mr. Speaker, be disturbed at this steady evolution of a child into manhood. It is really not a disturbing thing, because after we have reached that condition where we are assuming our own responsibilities and undertaking all that is implied in our complete nationhood, we still are bound more firmly, more definitely and more completely to the Mother Country by ties of honour, of justice, of loyalty and of love, than any tie of a colonial or subject condition can ever bind us. I say it with all the strength I have, that I am satisfied Canada will remain more definitely a friendly part of the British commonwealth of nations as an independent nation within that commonwealth than she ever will as a state under conditions which compel her inevitable participation in all those complications in which England herself may be involved.

Let us advance another step. During the discussion this afternoon the Locarno treaty was mentioned, and that is the second point upon which I wish to congratulate the Prime Minister; we are now to have an opportunity through this resolution of discussing that treaty. I am sorry, however, that in his remarks he did not pronounce more definitely his own opinion or that of his government upon this matter. It is true that he intimated that with what he at present understood of the treaty he did not think he would be willing to commit himself to sign it but that he preferred to leave any definite statement until after the Imperial conference in October.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Because the British government so requested.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If I were to attempt to analyze that answer I would first, in fairness to myself, require to study the correspondence in connection with that request; there may be a good deal more behind it than at present appears. Nevertheless other so-called colonies, or others of our self-governing dominions, have come out as definitely in respect of this treaty as it is possible for governments to do. Hertzog in South Africa, for example, is in no uncertain position in that regard. I would like then, to ask a question and to endeavour in my feeble way to answer it: Why do some of the imperial authorities appear to be so extremely anxious for Canada and her sister dominions to tie themselves to this treaty?

In order to answer that question thoroughly it will be necessary to examine the treaty itself and its antecedents. In so doing I would like the House to recall the struggle which took place in 1919 between Clemenceau and Wilson and Lloyd George. At that time Clemenceau, answering the dire fears of the French populace, had determined to insist not only upon a treaty of guarantee of assistance by England and the United States, but also to insist on the occupation of the left bank of the Rhine. Wilson and Lloyd George were not at all agreeable to this proposal and Tardieu, Clemenceau's right hand man and one of the most brilliant young men in France at that time, who has since written a very excellent story of the whole transaction, has this to say about the situation:

> It was on March 14, 1919, that Mr. Lloyd George and President Wilson proposed to M. Clemenceau, in place of the inter-allied occupation of an independent Rhineland, the undertaking by Great Britain and the United States to come immediately to the assistance of France in case the latter should be the object of an unprovoked aggression by Germany.

This proposal if accepted by England, would have been an unprecedented thing. Tardieu himself acknowledges this fact in his book:

> I have said "unprecedented"; on that I would lay stress. England in the course of her history has entered into specific and temporary agreements with various continental countries but has never subscribed to any general and permanent obligation. She has at times lent her aid; she has never bound herself in advance to give it.

Yet we are asked in this instance to bind ourselves in advance. It so happened at that time that Lloyd George and Wilson did not agree with Clemenceau's views. Further meetings were held, and at page 178 Tardieu describes what took place:

> Mr. Clemenceau's mind is made up on the evening of the sixteenth and his decision expressed in a note handed to the heads of the allied governments on the morning of the seventeenth. A proposal is made to us, which substitutes one guarantee for another. We refuse this substitution. We gratefully note, with the fullest appreciation of its value, the pledge offered and desire to accept it but only on the express condition that it be supplemented by most of the other guarantees demanded by us. . . . .

Clemenceau at that time exerted a most extraordinary pressure upon those with whom he was associated, and so successful was he that on the 22nd of the month Lloyd George capitulated; Wilson had done so a few days previously. Tardieu records the incident at page 186 as follows:

> Mr. Clemenceau holds his ground unmoved. We send note upon note (March 19, 20, 22, 28 and 31, and April 4, 5, 15, 16 and 19). We show that no matter how important the results attained it remains indispensible to give the treaty a guarantee of execution, to give to France a material safeguard against a Germany which because of the war will have millions of trained soldiers for years to come. We show that occupation alone meets this double need. Days pass.
> At last Mr. Clemenceau's indomitable will wins its end. Light begins to break. Slowly, prudently and patiently, he widens the opening and on April 20 at six oclock in the evening he secures—first of all—from President Wilson his approval of the provisions of chapter 14. On the morning of April 22, Mr. Lloyd George gives his approval also, but not without again renewing his objections. Mr. Clemenceau, who for two days has been in agreement with President Wilson, maintains all his points—duration of the occupation, its possible extension; participation by the Allies. Mr. Lloyd George ends the discussion:
> "Very well, I accept."

What had he accepted? Mr. Lloyd George on behalf of England and Mr. Wilson on behalf of the United States had agreed not only to give assistance to France in the event of an aggression by Germany, but had in addition assented to the inter-allied occupation of the Rhineland. That occupation was condemned by the radical elements in all countries; it was laughed at and ridiculed by the moderates everywhere, who looked upon it as a hopeless and stupid piece of Prussianism on the part of the allies. However, Lloyd George and Wilson committed themselves to it. They were to occupy the territory west of Essen and Cologne for five years; the territory immediately south of that, the central zone, for ten years and the territory still further south, close to the Saar basin, for fifteen years. In the event of Germany's failure to live up to the complete terms of the treaty—since moderated, as hon. gentlemen know—the inter-allied occupation of the Rhineland could have continued indefinitely. So we had this extraordinary situation arise.

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

Then, Mr. Speaker, the inter-allied occupation of the Rhine commenced; the terms of that occupation were so involved and so far-reaching that a very definite occurrence took place at a meeting of the war cabinet held later. But before coming to that I would like hon. members to realize exactly to what we have been committed in this particular treaty. The inter-allied occupation of the left bank of the Rhine was fixed for fifteen years; evacuation was to be by zones and so on. Then Tardieu states:

> If faithful compliance is lacking, there is to be no evacuation at five-year intervals. Even at the end of fifteen years, we retain in any event, a safeguard; if the guarantees against an unprovoked German aggression are deemed insufficient, there is to be no evacuation.

There was, of course, the moral obligation at that time admitted by Lloyd George on behalf of England to come to France's assistance in the event of aggression by Germany. However, Clemenceau was a very cute and shrewd old Tiger; he realized that both England and the United States had to depend on other sources than themselves for their inspiration and support, and so at page 209 he recounts what took place a little later:

> It was, on April 25th, that face to face as was his wont Mr. Clemenceau boldly confronted the difficulty in an interview with President Wilson by saying:
> "The treaty, as it stands, satisfies me on the score of guarantees; but the future belongs neither to you nor to me. You have a senate and I have a parliament. We cannot be sure of what they will do ten years hence, or even of what they will do to-morrow. If, for example, the treaties with the United States and Great Britain were not ratified, what would be France's situation? What alternative guarantee would she have at her disposal?"
> President Wilson answered: "Your observation is perfectly just. But it raises a delicate question. Let us seek a solution."

So the discussion continued for some time, seeking the solution for which Clemenceau was so anxious. Both England and the United States had then, as I have said, departed from the generally recognized practice of not committing themselves permanently in advance to any very involved obligations. It is now to be noted that the United Kingdom had pledged herself morally to come to the support of France in the event of any aggression by Germany. The Locarno treaty carries that out. It failed in the first place, the previous treaty having broken down. This particular treaty is in my opinion based on the acknowledgment given by Lloyd George to Clemenceau at that time. Secondly, there was unquestionably the laudable desire on the part of England to encourage a more favourable condition of affairs in Europe.

Let us ask now what is our position with respect to this. Sir Robert Borden was a member of the war cabinet when the matter came up, and at page 196 of Tardieu, the same right hand man of Clemenceau, he relates what Lloyd George told Clemenceau later as having occurred at that war cabinet meeting:

"I fear," said Mr. Lloyd George, "that we rallied too quickly to the idea of a prolonged occupation. In my opinion, the whole scheme should be reconsidered. I accepted the occupation, it is true. But since then I have held four meetings of the imperial war cabinet and our delegates to the Peace conference. They were unanimous in their belief that I did wrong.

The Dominion of Canada, through Sir Robert Borden, was complete in agreement with the other dominion representatives in the war cabinet that Lloyd George had done wrong in undertaking the commitments involved.

One hon. gentleman this afternoon suggested that we were committed under clause 10 of the treaty of Versailles. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any clause in the whole treaty that is so utterly misunderstood and so completely confused as is clause 10. I doubt if any nation definitely knows what its commitments are under it, nor do I think any nation would regard itself as bound in any event to carry out clause 10. In any case clause 10 is relatively insignificant when compared with the commitments under the Locarno treaty, and even now the interpretation of it is completely confused. Again, we see the reason for Locarno. Locarno was Great Britain's attempt to meet the obligations entered into with Clemenceau. It was her attempt to meet those obligations in the form of a new treaty that might be acceptable to the world as a whole, and in particular to those who were participating in it. At page 72 of the Independence Papers, by Mr. John S. Ewart, we find an illustration of just how confused the understanding is with regard to clause 10. The Hon. Mr. Doherty and the Hon. N. W. Rowell, both members of the Conservative party at that time and delegates from the Conservative government—

Mr. RYCKMAN: The Union government.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): A number of hon. gentlemen have great difficulty in determining the difference between the Union government and the Conservative government, but we will let that go. At page 72, Mr. Ewart describes what took place in the House of Commons:

To placate Canada Mr. Doherty and Mr. Rowell, in the course of the debate, gave such an interpretation of the covenant of the League of Nations as renders it not only valueless but positively mischievous. Instead of being a real covenant for united action against disturbers of the peace, the ministers declare it to be, in effect, nothing more than an agreement that if, under any future set of circumstances, the members of the league are willing to take action, they will proceed to do it. The argument is that although it is true that under Article X, it is the council of the league which is to "advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled," yet that if the council, as ordinarily constituted (that is of nine members) proposes to make a call upon members of the league for action, those members must first be invited to become members of the council; and inasmuch as decisions of the council must be unanimous, the invited members must assent to the proposal before it can become obligatory. To Mr. Fielding's interruption: "Under that interpretation, the whole assembly would become members of the council," Mr. Doherty replied: "If the council chose, at one and the same meeting, to consider the duties and obligations of all the members of the council, they would."

When Mr. Rowell was enunciating the same doctrine, Mr. Lapointe said: "That means that Canada shall never be compelled to take action unless she agrees to it. Is that the answer of my hon. friend?"

Mr. Rowell: She cannot be compelled to take action unless she agrees to it, so far as action under that clause is concerned.

Mr. Laponite: It is interesting to have that on Hansard.

Then Mr. Ewart comments:

What a perfect farce! Germany or Russia, for example, becomes aggressive; the council of nine proposes to institute a commercial, financial and contractional boycott, and to organize a military campaign to which all the members are to contribute; representatives of the thirty-two members are therefore summoned to meet at Geneva; after the lapse of several weeks the representatives assemble; they listen, and disagree; and they go home again. Thirty-one can make no decision. The covenant, if this be its meaning, is a scrap of paper smirched with stupidities.

So I do not think any hon. member who studies the treaty and the comments made thereon by Mr. Rowell and Mr. Doherty will be of the impression that we stand to-day committed under clause 10.

We can go even further than that. In 1922 Canada herself through her delegates tried her best to have clause 10 amended, and it is reported at page 505-506 of the Round Table Papers, as follows:

That the American senate was not alone in sensitiveness upon the point of moral obligation under Article 10 of the Covenant has since been shown by the attitude of Canada towards that Article. At the meeting of the League Assembly in 1922, Canada tabled an amendment to Article 10 adding at the end of the sentence empowering the council to advise members as to the means by which their obligation should be fulfilled the words, "taking into account the political and geographical circumstances of each state."

I wish hon. members would note that this is the first attempt that has been made to determine the geographical principle in treaties; I shall deal with that a little further later on. It goes on:

The opinion given by the council in such cases shall be regarded as a matter of the highest importance, and shall be taken into consideration by all members of the league which shall use their utmost endeavours to conform to the conclusions of the council, but no member shall be under the obligation to engage in any act of war without the consent of its parliament, legislature or other representative body.

It so happens, Mr. Speaker, that unfortunately the Persians on the council at that time defeated the Canadian objective, and we subsequently ratified clause 10. Our position has since been understood to be an interpretive position, and has been regarded by all nations as having a powerful bearing on the clause itself and the commitments of the nations thereunder.

Not only did Sir Robert Borden object, as I have stated, but Lord Balfour expressed himself in no uncertain terms as to the ambiguous and doubtful character of clause 10. Then again at pages 656-7 of the Round Table of September last we can find some further references to that in the following, and I would recommend this to the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. McGibbon):

As has been repeatedly pointed out, however, in the Round Table, the meaning of the covenant itself needs to be defined. At present its wording is dangerously ambiguous, and different nations put widely different interpretation upon it. Nothing will be more conducive to the destruction of that confidence and good faith between nations, which is the very essence of progress towards peace, than that there should be any confusion or misunderstanding between members as to what their mutual obligations under the covenant are, when the time for fulfiilling them arrives.

Hon gentlemen will note that this confusion is clearly acknowledged and discussed no later than September last in this imperialistic journal Round Table, which reports, on non-partisan basis, the political happenings of interest to the empire. It goes on to say:

Some day it may be possible to overhaul the covenant so as to remove any possible obscurity. Meanwhile we accept Lord Balfour's recent plea that to attempt at present any general revision of a document signed by more than sixty nations would do more harm than good. But we think it imperative that the British nations should make it clear to the other signatories that neither article 10 nor article 16 mean that they are under any obligation "automatically" to take sanctions against any other power.

No words could be more definite than these so far as the commitments of Canada under article 10 are concerned. We are not committed morally or geographically.

Mr. McGIBBON: Does the hon. member take this statement as an official interpretation?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes.

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

Mr. McGIBBON: On what authority?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The Round Table is recognized as an official interpreter of the position taken by the various nations in the commonwealth in matters political or matters international. Lord Balfour has also commented upon the matter and he takes much the same position.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I say that there has been no such pronouncement made by the nations involved?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member is missing the point.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am not missing the point.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The nations involved signed the covenant in which article 10 occurs. Now, there is complete confusion in regard to it. There has been all along utter confusion as to the commitments under article 10, a confusion which needs clarification if article 10 is going to be in any way beneficial. As a matter of fact under the position formally taken by the Canadian delegates in this matter, I think article 10 should either be drastically amended or completely eliminated. Canada should not be obligated under article 10 to any commitments that are not undertaken with full recognition of the geographical situation involved.

So far as the geographical situation is concerned we have the position taken by Mr. Chamberlain. Discussing the Locarno treaty in the House of Commons in England he indicated, in answer to a question as to whether he did not consider the treaty applied to the eastern frontiers as well as to the western frontiers of Germany, that he was unwilling to do so because of the geographical situation of those boundaries. They were away from his personal interest, they were away from the deep and natural interest of England herself, and therefore he realized the difficulty of guaranteeing definitely in any treaty any status quo as respects the eastern boundaries of Germany. However, that is another question and I will come to that later on.

Article 5 of the treaty of Mutual Assistance was the first treaty in my recollection in which there occurs definite recognition of the principle of geographical limitations and responsibilities. Article 5, subsection (b) reads as follows:

The high contracting parties undertake to furnish one another mutually with assistance in the case referred to in article 2—

And so on.

Invoke by name the high contracting parties whose assistance it requires. No high contracting party situated in a continent other than that in which operations will take place shall, in principle be required to co-operate in military, naval or air operations.

Mr. MacDonald, who was Prime Minister of Great Britain at that time, has quoted Canada's opinion on this subject, as embodied in a letter from Canada to be found at page 277 of the Accounts and Papers (State Papers). This is a letter to the Secretary General of the League from the government of Canada, dated June 19, 1923, and reads in part as follows:

It is intended that the obligation to render assistance shall be limited in principle to those countries situated in the same part of the globe. While Canada is situated in the North American continent, she is a nation forming part of the British Empire, and it seems difficult to devise a scheme which would give due effect to those conflicting considerations. In any case, it seems very unlikely that the Canadian people in the present circumstances would be prepared to consent to any agreement binding Canada to give assistance as proposed to other nations, and the government therefore does not see its way to a participation in the treaty of Mutual Guarantee.

Canada has definitely stated her position with respect to commitments outside of the North American continent.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the treaty of Locarno involves, as the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) indicated this afternoon, commitments with respect to the western boundaries of Germany, commitments tremendously far-reaching in themselves—how far-reaching hon. gentlemen can only really understand when they study the history of the whole situation since the war. For example—and this is just one little difficulty that has occurred to me—there is the famous and wealthy Saar basin. It is under the control of France, the coal deposits there being of tremendous value. But under the treaty the understanding is that within 15 years—that is from the time of the making of the treaty—a plebiscite is to be taken in the Saar basin and the nations concerned are to agree to the determination of the people in that basin. We have already had an illustration in the case of another country of what happened with respect to a determination of that kind. But in this particular case if the people of the Saar basin vote to return to Germany there will inevitably be a conflict with France, bad feeling will at once be stirred up, and I doubt if France will consent. That is just one little illustration. Further than that, as the hon. member for Labelle indicated this afternoon, the treaty itself obligates Canada, if we should sign it—which I sincerely hope and believe we will not do—to come to the assistance of Germany if Germany should be invaded by France. Now let me give you just one little illustration of how this might work out. At the present time France and Poland are very close together and are assisting each other in every possible way. France is particularly interested in Poland. Indeed so is England at the moment but that is another question. Poland may determine to attack Germany. Or if Poland were attacked France might undertake to come and help her. In that case we would be compelled to go over there and assist France under this treaty. On the other hand, if Germany should invade either France or Poland, and then be invaded by France in return, we would then be committed under the terms of this treaty—this treaty which Mr. Chamberlain himself in the House of Commons in England stated did not commit England to any other undertakings than those contained in the covenant itself with respect to the eastern boundaries of Germany, yet inevitably compels her take an interest in it and may involve us in future wars.

We all know that a treaty has just been concluded between Germany and Russia which undoubtedly imperils the Locarno treaty. Personally I doubt very much whether the larger nations involved will agree that they could carry out the provisions of the Locarno treaty in view of the Russian-German treaty which has been negotiated. In addition to this, at this very moment Russia and Poland are struggling for supremacy in the Baltic states of Esthonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. Poland has been successful in Lithuania but has not made any progress with the others. Russia is struggling hard to get control there. These three states are almost powerless alone. They must enter into treaties for mutual assistance with either Russia or Poland. Again difficulty is going to arise. Russia is going to insist on German assistance in the event of Poland being too aggressive in the Baltic states, and we might get involved again in the Baltic mess of Europe if we entered into the treaty. As a Canadian I would hesitate to urge any hon. member to do anything which was not fair, so far as Europe was concerned. No one is more anxious than I am to see Europe settle down and endeavour to effect an economic adjustment. But no treaty of this kind will be of any assistance to Canada, in helping the Old Country in her complications in Europe. No treaty of this kind can bring us any closer to a solution of the terrible inter-state quarrels on that continent.

An hon. MEMBER: What makes you think so?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I should like to ask the hon. member, what contribution Canada can make to maintain proper conditions, for instance, in the little Danzig corridor that runs up separating two parts of Germany? The hon. member no doubt would like this House to compel us to have matters remain in the present situation, which might work out a complete injustice. I will touch on that question later on and I will bring it out clearly. In the Sevres treaty we took no part; we did not sign it. In the Lausanne treaty, on account of the terrific commitments which Canada dared not undertake, we took no part, and speaking of article XVIII of the Lausanne treaty Lord Curzon, dealing with the general guarantee of the League of Nations under articles X and XVI, is quoted at page 510 of the Round Table on June 1924 as follows:

> The general guarantee of the League of Nations under articles X and XVI not proving satisfactory to them, they were further offered the special four-power guarantee contained in article XVIII, the effect of which Lord Curzon described as follows:
> Finally, in order to remove all possible apprehension that the regime which we propose to establish will be abused to the disadvantage of Turkey, we have added a specific guarantee under which the security of Turkish territory and the Turkish capital is abundantly assured. Not only will Turkey be left with her own means of defence for her Asiatic shores; not only will substantial Turkish forces be stationed at Constantinople; not only will Turkey, so soon as she enters the League of Nations, share in the general guarantee provided by article X of the covenant; but under the additional guarantee which we propose to attach to the Straits convention she will be given an absolute assurance regarding her future security and be able to devote her undivided attention to the economic reconstruction and progress of her own dominions.

Those commitments, though vividly pointed out by Lord Curzon in connection with the Lausanne treaty, are far outweighed by the provisions in this treaty which we have before us. Canada should be left free to act as she desires, to act as the occasion arises. We were free to act in 1914 and we acted. Some hon. members in this House were tempted, and indeed yielded to the temptation, to condemn and assail in terms which are, to say the least of it, uncomplimentary, hon. members who simply ask that we be left to the faithfulness, to the trust and the love which the people of Canada have for the Old Country. Hon. members need not be afraid. The people of Canada do not need to be shackled by any bonds of treaty or be tied down to commitments in the future. When England needs and it is our need, we will support her. Is there an hon. member anywhere in this House who will urge that we send troops into Mosul, or troops into northern India, or who will urge that we should send troops anywhere on the globe because England has a conflict there? I know that no hon. member is so foolish as to make that suggestion. Yet that is the argument when we are asked to ratify treaties of this kind. Let us stay where we were in 1914, I am satisfied the good judgment of the Canadian people will rise to the occasion and that the bonds of love and affection which are stronger than any treaty, will stand us in good stead when England requires assistance, and that those bonds will bind us as one.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): The question of the future status of Canada in the British Empire is one of extreme importance and one that I think demands the earnest consideration of this House. The British Empire is a new experiment in the world's history. In the past great empires have been built upon force, and the component parts of the empire have been held together by military force. I think we can say that such methods have been utterly discarded by Great Britain herself, and if this new experiment is to succeed, as we believe it can succeed, we must fix our attention upon the essential principles that bind the empire together. I thoroughly concur in what the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) has said, that the bonds of love and affection are infinitely stronger than any rigid bonds or any binding treaties can possibly be, and those bonds are strong just because they are elastic.

I shall not undertake, Mr. Speaker, nor is it my intention, to enter at any great length into a discussion of these questions. I shall not deal with the various treaties which have been brought before us from time to time for our consideration, but there are two or three essential principles that seem to my mind important. I should like to lay down this principle; that Canada's destiny must be determined by the people of Canada themselves, as expressed through the will of this parliament. It is inconceivable to me at this time that we should think of entrusting our destiny and the determination of the part we should play in any crisis that might arise to those who live on the other side of the ocean, strongly as we may be bound to them by ties of love and affection and strongly as we may sympathize with them in their position in world affairs. It seems to me inconceivable that we at this stage in our history should allow our course to be determined by people other than ourselves. In times past men have fought for their rights, for individual liberty and for freedom. Sometimes it has been for religious freedom, for the right to think for themselves, for the right to determine their own creeds and beliefs. To-day I think we need to urge upon men not only their right to these things, but their duties and responsibilities to determine these things for themselves. As it is true in all matters of faith that men are under the duty and obligation to determine them for themselves, so it is true in regard to our political destiny. We must determine for ourselves the part that we are going to play in world history and what will be our place in any world crisis that may arise. It is to me inconceivable that we should bind ourselves to a course of action in the future without reserving to ourselves the right to determine whether the circumstances justify this action or that, or that we should bind ourselves to follow at some time in the future a course that would be determined for us by others.

I am convinced that in the great experiment in which we are engaged—a new thing, as I have said, in the history of the world—namely, that of building up an empire bound together not by military force but by ties of common sympathy, common ideals and common history, each component part of that great empire must maintain its individual freedom of action. Especially is that true of those dominions which like ourselves have for years now enjoyed the privileges of self-government and the right to manage their own internal affairs. There was a time when British statesmen thought that if Canada were given the right to manage her own internal affairs, that would mean separation from the empire. Whenever some new step has been suggested these fears have been expressed: Oh, if you do that it will mean separation from the empire. Just as those fears have been belied in the past, so I believe they will belied in the future when we undertake to determine for ourselves just what part we shall take in external affairs. While I cannot always justify some of the things which Great Britain has done, I glory in her traditions and the part she has played in the history of mankind, and I have no fear that any injury will come to the British Empire if the self-governing dominions like ourselves reserve for themselves freedom of action when any crisis may arise.

I have sometimes said in the past, although perhaps I have been wrong—and I have almost come to the conclusion that I have been wrong—that if we recognize that the British Empire is an anomaly and that many anomalous situations arise, the greatest danger lies in attempting too positive a definition of our status. In view of a decision given by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council regarding the right of Canada to determine just what subjects shall be allowed to be appealed to the Privy Council it may seem that the time has arrived when in some of these matters we should have a clearer definition of the position we intend to take and of the rights we propose to assume. On this general question I am strongly of opinion that our destiny must be decided for ourselves by ourselves. I have no fear that the acceptance of that responsibility will in any measure tend to the disruption of the British Empire; I believe rather that it will bind us closer together than would be possible if we attempted to build upon the other foundation that is sometimes urged upon us.

There is another question that has been brought to our notice, and I cannot allow it to pass without expressing some opinion upon it. I am greatly disappointed that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) has not up to this point taken any part in the debate. I would have preferred not to discuss the particular question to which I am now going to refer until I had heard from the right hon. gentleman his statement of his position.

Mr. SPENCE: Then would the hon. gentleman believe it?

Mr. BROWN: I would at least have an opportunity of judging, and at present I have no opportunity of judging except from the reports. When I hear him denying that a certain statement—that is the "ready, aye, ready" statement—has been made, and offering some explanation in regard to a statement made at Hamilton, I would have much preferred before forming a judgment to listen to the right hon. gentleman himself. Unfortunately, however, I have not had that privilege and therefore I must deal with the matter as I see it myself. There is no question in my mind that the people of Canada as represented in this parliament should decide what part they will play in any crisis that may arise. If some such circumstance should again prevail as prevailed in 1914, if a crisis of that kind should arise, it is only fitting that the government of the day, whatever government that happens to be, should take such immediate steps as in their judgment seem justified. But following upon that, the proper step would be an immediate summoning of parliament. That government might place its views before parliament and it would receive the endorsation of parliament or otherwise.

As regards an election appeal, it seems to me that is the most illogical proposition that has ever been offered to the Canadian people. Why should we be asked to say at this time that under circumstances of which we are and must be ignorant until they arise, we shall commit ourselves to a certain course? I can imagine that circumstances might arise when an election would be necessary, but let us go back to the situation that prevailed in 1914. When the great war broke out in 1914, from end to end of Canada the opinion was expressed that Canada could do nothing but commit all her resources to winning the war for the allies. On that matter there was practically little difference of opinion, and the government of the day received practically the unanimous support of the people of Canada. Should such a situation again arise, would it not be absurd to say immediately: We must have a general election? We would be plunged into an election on which perhaps there was no issue, on which the people were not divided. One of the most discreditable things that ever happened in Canada was the attempt of some members of the government of the day, some of whom now sit in this House—

An hon. MEMBER: Name them.

Mr. BROWN: The hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) for one—to plunge Canada into a general election. I may have been wrong, but I felt at the time that the severest criticism which could be made against the premier of that day, Sir Robert Borden, was that he allowed a year and a half to pass before it was definitely stated that we would not have an election until the end of the parliamentary term. Many, many times when our whole energies should have been devoted to the winning of the war we were on tenterhooks, not knowing whether we were going to have an election or not. In the constituency that I now represent the bills for a convention of the Conservative party were actually posted, and then the convention was called off. That is the position in which we found ourselves—jockeying for an election when we should have been devoting our energies to other purposes.

Therefore it would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, a most absurd proposition that we should declare here and now, or before the circumstances arise, that the question will be submitted to the judgment of the people in an election, when there might be no issue between the parties at all. What would be the situation then? Whichever party might be in control at the time would be appealing to the people and securing support perhaps for policies other than those immediately involved, and of which the country entirely disapproved. That was the situation which to some extent confronted us between 1914 and 1917. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that we have not had the privilege of listening to the right hon. leader of the opposition propound his views on this question. Perhaps I have misinterpreted them, perhaps I have misrepresented them, but I am firmly of the opinion that this parliament, representing the people of Canada, must assume responsibility. I believe it would be the duty of the government of the day to call parliament together and place the question before it. Unless there was reason to believe that any wide difference of opinion existed among the people, there should be no election. We should not be plunged into civil strife, fighting one against another, when we ought to be devoting all our energies to meet the crisis that was confronting us.

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): Mr. Speaker, I feel some hesitation in taking part in the debate on this very important subject after listening to the eloquent and instructive addresses which have been delivered this afternoon, but it is so important that I must place myself on record with respect to it. The British North America Act, with the various precedents that have been established since its enactment, may be called the constitution of Canada. Those precedents have been created by this parliament and have been sanctioned by the common consent of the country, and it may be taken for granted that they now form part of the constitutional privileges and liberties which this country enjoys as a nation. Those precedents involved progressive changes, and they were not challenged. Someone said this afternoon that we have just drifted into our present position. I do not think that is a correct statement of the case. I think we have carefully considered step by step the moves that have been taken from confederation up to the present time, and whatever advances have been made have been the result of that careful consideration by all concerned.

Sometimes we talk of Canada as a nation free and independent. I do not think that is a correct description of our status. We have freedom, we have liberty, but we are not in full control of our national destinies. We have large powers in internal government, but at the same time those powers are not unlimited; for instance, the federal and provincial jurisdictions respectively are fixed, and this parliament cannot change them. In regard to certain reforms that we would like to make with respect to another legislative body we find ourselves powerless to move. But, Mr. Speaker, I believe that when the people of Canada make up their minds to effect that reform, they will find a means of doing so. That is one of the difficulties we are up against at the present time and bears out my statement that our legislative powers are to a certain extent limited.

This afternoon frequent references have been made to Canada's place within the empire. It is pretty hard to define our position in relation to the commonwealth, and although I have listened very carefully to the debate I have not heard any hon. member clearly define our position as one of the sister nations of the empire. On one occasion Sir Wilfrid Laurier when speaking on this question said, in effect:

> Our barque is upon the ocean and is making for harbour, but I do not very well know what that harbour will be. It is not exactly the same harbour I expected the ship of state would make twenty-five years ago, but I am well satisfied that it will be a safe harbour at last.

I think we can confidently accept that statement. I believe we are going in the right direction and shall arrive in a safe harbour at last.

As to getting in closer touch with Great Britain in the matter of conferences to decide foreign policy, I think Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Wilfrid Laurier were very careful not to commit the country too far on imperial matters. If I recollect aright, I think the present leader of the opposition in 1921 attended an imperial conference. I do not know what was discussed at that conference, I do not know if any commitments on behalf of this country were made, but I trust the right hon. gentleman sufficiently to believe that nothing detrimental to the interests of Canada was agreed to by him. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) has referred to certain statements made by the right hon. leader of the opposition, as to Canada's position in relation to imperial policy. I am not going to dwell on them, but I also should have been pleased if the right hon. gentleman had told us this afternoon just exactly where he stands in this matter. Canada has certainly travelled quite a piece since the days of confederation. Canada signed the Peace treaty as a free nation, and many of our acts since were not anticipated in the early days of confederation. On the whole I think we can feel quite satisfied that we are travelling in the right direction.

At the Imperial conference of 1921 Premier Hughes of Australia and Premier Massey of New Zealand were present and expressed their anxiety to link their parliaments up more closely with the imperial parliament. We can understand their position to some extent. We have been told this afternoon, as on other occasions, about our geographical position, and there can be no doubt that her interests as one of the two great countries occupying the North American continent will for all time to come be to a very large extent bound up with that of the United States. Australia and New Zealand lie away out in the Pacific ocean in a much different position from Canada, and I can well understand how they look to their own safety first. While I believe they are also bound to the Old Country with bonds of love, yet in matters of self interest I believe it will be perhaps more to their good to be closely bound up in imperial matters. This whole question of tying ourselves up with the imperial parliament and with imperial matters is fraught with a good deal of danger. I will not attempt to go into the matter to-night after the eloquent address of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) who has covered the ground completely, but I am sure that the people of Canada will best serve the interests of the whole British Empire by developing their own country and attending to their own affairs, all the while looking across the wide Atlantic with feelings of affection and appreciation. Should the time ever come when danger again threatens the Old Country I am certain that the sons and daughters of Canada will be willing to make sacrifices as they did in the years gone by. Canada has always been ready in the past to do her share, but I think we should consider well the situation before we bind ourselves and get embroiled in the entanglements of European affairs as we know them to exist to-day.

One might ask what Canada's responsibilities are, and what is likely to cause the trouble in which we may find ourselves. I do not think there is much danger on this North American continent; I do not think we will ever see war here, but if we look across the Atlantic to the continent of Europe and realize the conditions existing there we must always feel that there still remains a danger and that some day the spectre of war may arise again. When we look to Italy and Poland we find that responsible and parliamentary government has fallen down, and the countries are in the hands of dictators. Some remarks of the Italian dictator do not lend themselves very well to the peaceful solution of the difficulties of Europe, but perhaps it is beside the question to discuss this matter at present. It does seem to me, however that so long as there is so much jealousy, hatred and bad feelings between the nations of Europe there will be trouble.

It might be asked as to what is going to cause war, and what has been the cause of war. I heard a statement made the other day which is perhaps partly true; a professor of history said that all the wars of the nineteenth century were basically economic. I do not suppose the people realize this fact. I think sentiment has played a large part in the history of warfare, but I believe a close study of what took place in the nineteenth century will show that most of the wars were caused through economic problems. So perhaps one of the great factors entering into permanent peace would be a proper solution of the economic questions as they affect the different countries of Europe at present. However, I am not going to spend any time on that matter.

The world wants peace to-day; I think people generally in every nation are seeking and longing for peace, for the time when man shall go to war no more. Then why should war come upon us almost accidentally, it seems, or without due notice? I believe that the days of secret diplomacy should pass and that the negotiations between nations should be made in the open in order that the common people, those who must suffer, should have an opportunity of knowing what is going on. Perhaps this is not the proper time to discuss some of the negotiations which took place before the Great war broke out. Half a dozen men, perhaps, have the decision as between peace and war, yet the great majority of the people who must suffer have nothing whatever to do with those causes responsible for war. Military people say that the way to prevent war is to be always ready for war, and I have a great deal of sympathy with their viewpoint; it seems natural that the proper way to preserve peace is to get ready for war, but what has been the experience of the past? You will find everywhere in history that when nations prepared for war they were immediately at war; the one inevitably followed the other. So if the nations go on arming and preparing for war we will have another war. The only way to get peace is to prepare for peace in the same way.

[Mr. Forke.]

Just a word in regard to the consolidation of our empire. Some people ask how Canada is to protect herself in time of war, and where she would be if it were not for the protection of the British army and navy; sometimes we are called selfish and narrow because we are not prepared to maintain a large standing army and navy to protect our shores. Perhaps a good deal could be said along this line in regard to a navy; I do not know that I would complain if we were just a little better equipped in that regard than at present. At the same time, however, where is the danger coming from? I was born in the Old Country and perhaps my heart beats as warmly for Old England as any in this House, but I think the only danger likely to come to Canada will come from our connection with the imperial parliament. Switzerland lies in the centre of Europe, but she seems to be quite safe; Canada would also be safe so long as she did not become embroiled in the European squabbles which are so frequent. If we keep out of those troubles and attend to our own business we will have no war, unless it should be through the call of blood to help our Mother Country in distress.

I might say a few words in regard to the actions which took place in the Dominion parliament in regard to treaty-making, but that matter was so well discussed this afternoon that I do not think it necessary to take up any more time. I hope some way may be found whereby the free nations of the British Empire may find some tie which will bind them together, but I agree with the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) that if you bind that tie too closely and make it a fixed thing you will be taking the best means to destroy the unity of the British Empire. I believe in the strong bonds of affection and love which bind us to the Motherland; Canada should go on her way step by step, perhaps drawing near the time when she shall be a free nation entirely independent, and capable of directing both her internal and external affairs.

I believe great things are in store for this country of ours; I believe Canada has something to give the nations of the world that will work to the betterment of all mankind, and I for one look into the distant future for the day when Canada will become one of the great nations of the earth, making for the peace and welfare of not only her own people but of the rest of the world as well.

Motion agreed to.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $12,000,000 FOR TERMINAL FACILITIES

The House resumed from June 14 consideration in committee of Bill No. 189, to provide for a loan to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.—Mr. Cardin—Mr. Duff in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: Clauses from 1 to 5 inclusive have been passed. We are now on the preamble.

On the preamble.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think, Mr. Chairman when the committee reported progress, the minister had thought it would be quite all right to adopt the suggestion of the opposition that there should be some check on these expenditures, and that the accounts of the Montreal Harbour Commission should be referred to the committee on Public Accounts. He was going to consider the form of an amendment to bring in, and I have no doubt he has it.

Mr. CARDIN: Representations were made, as my hon. friend has just said, with regard to referring the accounts of the harbour commission to the Public Accounts committee, but on looking into the matter I find that this point is already covered by the law as it at present exists. I do not intend to say that the accounts of the harbour commission can be submitted to the Public Accounts committee, but a check is provided for in the existing legislation. By the Audit Act of 1923 power was given by parliament to the audit board to investigate and inquire into all the expenses and matters of administration of the harbour commission. It was mentioned the other night that this board had been practically abolished, or that the law had been changed. I find that under the law as it was amended in 1925, there is a section which covers this case exactly. Section 4 provides:

> It shall be the duty of the board to act in an advisory capacity to the treasury board and under its direction to inquire into and report with regard to any matters entrusted to it by the treasury board including the following:—
> (d) the financial affairs of any commission or other public body the operations of which are carried on by appropriations from the treasury of Canada, or which are aided by grants or loans from the said treasury.

This audit is made by the new audit board. Each member of the board is empowered with the same authority as any commissioner appointed by virtue of the Inquiries Act, and by clause 7 of the Board of Audit Act it is provided that:

> Each report of the board shall be laid before both houses of parliament within twenty-one days of the date of its receipt by the minister, or if parliament be not then in session, within the first twenty-one days of the session then next following.

That is the law as it stands at present.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where is the report?

Mr. CARDIN: This law came into effect on the 2nd day of July, 1925. An investigation has been made by the Auditor General, and a report has been made to the Minister of Finance.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend now says that a report has been made by the Board of Audit to the Minister of Finance on the Montreal harbour.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That still leaves us where we were before. There was not only a suggestion, but the direct statement was made by the hon. member for West Calgary that things were not as they ought to be in connection with this harbour board. He made that charge, and the minister said that so far as he was concerned he saw no reason why the matter should not go to the Public Accounts committee, for he was quite sure that everything was all right. If everything is all right I admit at once that there is no reason why the matter should not go to the committee, and the minister believing that everything was all right said that he had no objection whatever to the matter going to the Public Accounts committee. The minister will see that the report he speaks of is merely a report made to the government. It does not come to the House.

Mr. CARDIN: This report can be laid on the table of the House.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What good is that if we cannot inquire into it?

Mr. CARDIN: The House has power to inquire into any document laid on the table.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Before the Public Accounts committee?

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Not a bit of it. The opposition would have to move as a matter of grace to go into it, and the government, if it had any right to carry on, if it was strong enough to vote it down, undoubtedly could and would. A government that would say that this can only be done on a motion of the House, and not as a matter of law, if strong enough would undoubtedly vote down that motion. I am more interested, though, in wondering what has accounted for my hon. friend's change of heart. My hon. friend was all keen for investigation before. What has happened since? What has he learned?

Mr. CARDIN: I am still; and if my hon. friend moves, I will support him.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am moving for it now in connection with this bill. My hon. friend agreed to it the other day, but the trouble is he does not stay put. We had exactly this same act quoted to us last session. The Prime Minister produced and read it. It was pointed out then that there had been some changes in it; it was changed again in 1925, but the effect of it has not been changed at all. As my hon. friend has departed from the understanding we had, I think he should give us plainly the reasons for his change of heart.

Mr. CARDIN: I cannot agree with my hon. friend that I committed myself to giving power to the Public Accounts committee to deal with these matters. I stated that I should be glad to look into the matter, and that I was not opposed to any check being made on the affairs of the Montreal Harbour Commission. I think the most serious suggestion of the hon. member for West Calgary was that he wanted to have an audit made by the Auditor General. His contention was twofold. He wanted to have an investigation by the Auditor General, and to have the accounts submitted to the Public Accounts committee. Well, as the law stands at present, this power is already in the hands of the members of this House. An investigation can be made by the Auditor General under the law now; in fact, one has been made already, and when the report is made to the House any hon. member may move that the matter be referred to the Public Accounts committee. But if we amended the bill, which provides only for the granting of a certain sum of money to the Montreal harbour commission, to provide that its accounts shall be investigated by the Public Accounts committee, that would be the first time we had stated any such thing in any such legislation we have in Canada. It would be the first law of that kind. There is no law on our statute books which states that the affairs of any commission or organization of any sort shall be submitted to the Public Accounts committee. The Public Accounts committee draws its power, not from any legislation, but from the powers of the House of Commons itself. It is an institution of the House of Commons, and the Public Accounts committee has never been empowered by any legislation that we have passed in parliament; in fact, that is not exactly the duty of the Public Accounts committee. I have taken care to look into the matter and to consult some authoritieis, and I find that it is not the duty of the Public Accounts committee to deal with matters of that kind. But what is more important is this: Why make an exception of the port of Montreal? If we amended the bill in the way that has been suggested, Montreal harbour would be the only one to have its affairs investigated by the Public Accounts committee. From such an investigation Vancouver harbour commission would be free Quebec harbour commission would be free, and all the other harbour commissions that we have. If we were dealing with the powers of the harbour commission it would be quite proper to have a disposition of that kind; but we are only dealing with a proposed grant of money to be made to an organization which exists already and which appears to have been established long ago. It is not the proper time for an amendment of such a kind. Let us go on with the bill as it is, let us grant this loan if it is agreeable to parliament, and later on the matter can be studied. Then if it is necessary that the accounts of any harbour commission should be submitted to the Public Accounts committee, let us pass legislation at the ensuing session placing all the harbour commissions on the same footing. But I say it is not fair or reasonable at this time, when we are only asking to be permitted to make a grant to the harbour commission, to say that the accounts of that commission should be submitted to the Public Accounts committee. As I said the other night, I have no objection, nor has the government, to the accounts of the harbour commission being investigated, but in such a matter as that let us take the logical and reasonable course of applying the investigation to all the harbour commissions and not confine it simply to the harbour commission in Montreal. In view of these circumstances I think the bill should be allowed to pass, because the last time the measure was under consideration all its clauses were agreed to, and it was only postponed in order to afford me an opportunity of inquiring into the purchase of certain properties which were needed for the bridge.

The other night the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) raised some objections in regard to the buying of certain properties. I have now the information with respect to that matter in front of me. The complaint of the hon. gentleman was that certain properties had been bought along the line of what has been called during the debate "the old line" or "the old proposed site". The hon. gentleman gave a list of the properties which, according to the information in his possession, were on the old line. Well, I have inquired into the matter and I am in a position to say that all the properties which were mentioned by my hon. friend the other night are on the line which has been definitely chosen for the building of the approaches to the bridge in Montreal. In the case of one of the properties mentioned by the hon. gentleman the civic numbers are 1150 to 1176 Delorimier avenue. This property has not been purchased, although there had been negotiations with respect to it. But it is on the line which has been accepted definitely for the building of the approaches to the bridge. One single property among those mentioned by my hon. friend the other night is on the line which has been chosen definitely, but it is not on the old project. It is a property which has been bought in the vicinity of certain other properties which were required for the bridge, and it has been acquired in order to establish the value of property in that vicinity. All the other properties which have been mentioned are on the line which has been definitely fixed for the building of the approaches of the bridge. And this property which will not be required is bringing in an annual revenue at the present time of $1,400 a year. It was bought with the sole object of determining the value of the surrounding properties which were needed for the construction of the approaches to the bridge, and can be very easily disposed of.

Mr. CAHAN: Will the hon. gentleman tell us what price was paid for that property?

Mr. CARDIN: The price paid was $11,000.

Mr. ROGERS: What is the number of it?

Mr. CARDIN: The civic numbers are 1125 to 1129 De Montigny street. I think these explanations should be satisfactory and that the bill should be allowed to pass.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Of course we always like to agree with my hon. friend in any way—

Mr. CARDIN: Thank you.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: —but after all, pleasing him is a secondary consideration, I think he will agree to that.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is sad, it is really sad, to see the change of heart my hon. friend has had. I do not want to delay the House at this period of the session but I would say to him that these reports which have been made must be laid on the table and become the property of parliament; at present they are not. I am going to ask my hon. friend to see that the reports of the auditors of the harbour commissions of Montreal and Quebec shall be tabled. Then we can discuss this matter further, perhaps, when the estimates are up.

Mr. ROGERS: Has not the bill which passed parliament a year and a half ago granting Montreal harbour commission $6,000,000 been taken advantage of by them?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. ROGERS: That money was voted distinctly for the building of this bridge. What has it been used for?

Mr. CARDIN: No money has been voted by parliament for the construction of this. The money which has been advanced to the harbour commission in the past has been for the development of the facilities of the harbour. The bill passed in regard to the building of the bridge provides only for the guarantee of the bonds or debentures which will be issued by the corporation. We did not advance a single cent for the construction of the bridge; we only authorized the harbour commissioners to proceed with the construction of the bridge and we undertook to guarantee their debentures.

Mr. ROGERS: If my memory serves me rightly I think I read in Hansard a statement by the minister to the House at the time that this $6,000,000 was for the purpose of constructing this bridge.

Mr. CARDIN: Oh no. If I said that I was absolutely mistaken. That was not the purpose of the law passed at that time.

Mr. ROGERS: My opinion is that there is a lack of information with respect to this matter and the minister would be wise in refusing to go on with the bill until we have more information. There are very many reasons why this measure should not be passed at the present time. First of all the minister made the clear and distinct statement that there was no right of way required for the bridge. A few days afterwards he admitted the fact that there were purchases to the amount of $750,000 for right of way and that money had been obtained from last year's vote, or some such source, to make the payment. He made various other statements which do not seem to be in accordance with the facts. The minister has not informed himself very clearly as to the conditions with respect to Montreal harbour. I do not think it is possible for the minister or anybody else to justify the expenditure of this huge sum of money under present conditions. There is really no immediate or pressing need for the construction of this bridge. If you go into this venture and borrow the money from the treasury of this Dominion you are going to build a bridge that enters into competition with a bridge that the Canadian people already own. As my hon. friend well knows, the bridge already there was purchased by the Canadian people from the Grand Trunk Railway and is owned by the Canadian people, and the earning power of that bridge has been given as something like $250,000.

Mr. CAHAN: Is any part of this appropriation which is now before the House to be expended on the bridge?

Mr. ROGERS: What bridge?

Mr. CAHAN: On any bridge.

Mr. ROGERS: It is to be expended on the bridge.

Mr. CAHAN: No.

Mr. CARDIN: Not a cent.

Mr. ROGERS: What is the minister going to spend it on?

Mr. CARDIN: The bridge is not mentioned in the list I gave. I referred to elevator No. 3, for instance, with conveyors and jetty.

Mr. ROGERS: The minister told us the other night the money was used already, out of the fund of $15,000,000.

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. ROGERS: The minister is on record to that effect.

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. ROGERS: What is the minister going to do with this?

Mr. CARDIN: I stated the other night when the bill was introduced.

Mr. ROGERS: I want information.

Mr. CARDIN: I gave it the other day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The information was given when the bill was up the other day.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Mr. CARDIN: The total amount authorized during the past four years was $15,000,000, and I went on to show how it had been expended—$3,000,000 for elevators, $2,000,000 for grain elevator "B" Windmill Point—I have no objection to reading what I stated the other night.

Mr. ROGERS: I am taking it from Hansard.

Mr. CARDIN: It was given to Hansard. The proposed expenditure of the money we are asking for will be under the following heads:

|---|---|
| Habour dredging | $ 800,000 |
| Wharves, piers and basins | 5,400,000 |
| Plants | 155,000 |
| Shops and building | 322,000 |
| Railways and electrification | 1,342,000 |
| Permanent sheds | 300,000 |
| Grain elevators | 3,155,000 |
| Sundries | 142,000 |
| Total | $11,616,000 |

These are the expenditures that will be covered by the loan we are now asking parliament for.

Mr. ROGERS: Where are you going to get the money to build the bridge?

Mr. CARDIN: The bridge is going to be built by money borrowed by the harbour commission themselves, upon debentures of their own guaranteed by the federal government.

Mr. ROGERS: Does the minister mean to say he has already spent $44,000,000, and has added $15,000,000 to that and is going to add $15,000,000 more for another bridge? How does the minister answer that? That is according to his own statement. He says he wants this $12,000,000 to do something else, different from his statement the other night. He said it was to build a bridge.

Mr. CARDIN: I refer the hon. member to Hansard.

Mr. ROGERS: I have read Hansard. The minister said:

> The total amount authorized during the past four years is $15,000,000.

The minister gave a detailed statement of that expenditure; then he spoke about the south shore bridge, and he went on to speak of the amount of $15,000,000 already advanced in connection with the bridge. He said:

> We have not advanced any money; we have merely guaranteed the debentures which are to be issued by the harbour commission.

Then I asked the question, "You bought a lot of right of way and that sort of thing in connection with the bridge?" The minister answered "Yes". I asked, "Where did you get the money?" The minister explained that he got it from a former vote for the purchase of the right of way. The minister told us at a later period that he had bought $750,000 worth of right of way for the bridge, and told us also that that would be very nearly the amount necessary to complete the purchase of the right of way, whereas I find it would take nearly a million and a half more to purchase the right of way necessary for that bridge. The minister is so mixed in his figures that it is very difficult for members of the House to understand what he is really asking for. But apart from all that, apart from the question of the bridge, and apart from everything else in connection with the harbour commission, I have another matter I want to deal with. But before doing so I would like to refer the committee to an act passed by the Quebec legislature during the past few weeks or months. It proceeds to deal with this question and the matter of the building of the bridge, and it says:

Whereas the corporation of the harbour commissioners of Montreal has declared itself ready to build such bridge;

Whereas in order to secure the erection of the said bridge it is necessary to have the concurrence of the province, of the city of Montreal and of the corporation of the Montreal harbour commissioners;

Whereas the city of Montreal and the corporation of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal are each prepared to contribute a third towards the erection and maintenance of such bridge, provided that the province itself contributes the other third;

Whereas the probable cost of the said bridge will be about ten millions dollars and the annual charges would be as follows:

|---|---|
| Interest at four and a half per cent on $10,000,000 | $450,000 |
| Sinking fund of one per cent for forty years. | 100,000 |
| Maintenance | 50,000 |
| Making a total of | $600,000 |

Now if you take the cost of $19,000,000 as the Quebec legislature suggested for the building of this bridge, you have a liability at once of $600,000 according to their own figures. Then the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec each undertake to pay $150,000 a year, or $300,000; so that instead of the harbour commission having a third interest in this work they are going to have saddled upon them at once a liability of double the liability of the city and double the liability of the province of Quebec in connection with this matter. Then it goes on to say:

Whereas the bridge will be a toll bridge, and the estimated yearly revenue will be about two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, leaving a balance of three hundred and fifty thousand dollars to be provided by the province, the city of Montreal and the corporation of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, one-third by each, that is to say one hundred and sixteen thousand six hundred and sixty-six dollars and sixty-six cents;

Whereas, however, with the development of Montreal and of the region, the yearly revenues must increase, but, at the start, it is necessary to provide for the unforeseen, and an amount of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars per annum, payable respectively by the province, the city of Montreal and the corporation of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal may be necessary;

Whereas it is expedient to grant to the corporation of the harbour commissioners of Montreal the requisite authorization and powers for the erection and maintenance of the bridge; and

Whereas it is expedient to provide for the payment of the share of the government of this province;

Therefore, His Majesty, with the advice and consent of the legislative council and the legislative assembly of Quebec, enact as follows:

1. The authorization granted to the corporation of the harbour commissioners of Montreal to erect, possess, maintain, manage, operate and use a bridge between the city of Montreal and the town of Longueuil, as well as the other rights and powers given to this end by the act of the parliament of Canada, 14-15 George V, chapter 58 are, in so far as the rights of the province and the jurisdiction of the legislature are concerned, confirmed and ratified, provded that such of the rights and powers is appertain to the legislative authority of this province be exercised in conformity with its laws and according to the procedure prescribed thereby.

2. The Lieutenant-Governor in Council may authorize the Minister of Public Works and Labour to enter into, for and in the name of the government of this province, a contract with the corporation of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal and the city of Montreal, to provide for the erection, maintenance and operation of a bridge over the river St. Lawrence between the city of Montreal and town of Longueuil.

And so on. Then it goes on to say:

5. It shall be stipulated in the above-mentioned contract that the province shall not be bound for the payment of the said annual sum, except in so far as the bridge shall remain a toll-bridge throughout the full duration of the contract, that the tariff of tolls shall be approved by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council and that it shall not be amended without his authorization.

Therefore we are now undertaking the construction of a bridge and the Quebec government very properly are going to regulate the tolls while this government will have nothing to say about the matter. It goes on:

The Lieutenant-Governor in Council may order the insertion in the said contract of any other conditions, not inconsistent with this act, which may assure the erection of the bridge, its maintenance and operation, and at the same time better protect and secure the province for the obligations assumed by it under this act.

If my hon. friend undertakes to go on with this bridge on the basis, as he told us the other night, of $15,000,000—and I am sure he will not deny that because Hansard will show that he made that statement—what is the position that this parliament and the people of Canada will be in? According to this bill the interest on the loan will be 5 per cent per annum. On his own figure of $15,000,000 that will amount to $750,000 for interest, $100,000 for depreciation and $50,000 for maintenance of the bridge, or a total of $900,000. Deduct from that the estimate as presented by the minister the other night of the earning power of the bridge, namely, $250,000, and you have $650,000 left. The city of Montreal and the province of Quebec agree to pay $300,000 between them, so that this parliament and the country will be called upon to contribute $350,000, on the government's own estimate, and before they get through the amount will be very much more than that.

What I wish principally to point out to the government is this: Last year the harbour commission—and I have their statement of their earning power as published in the Gazette three days ago—came through with a total surplus of $82,000. The harbour commission are in no position to undertake greater obligations than those which they already possess. It will be impossible for them to pay interest on any further loans borrowed from this parliament or anywhere else. I am confident no business concern in Canada or anywhere else would lend money to a counterfeit corporation in the city of Montreal if they applied to-day for the construction of any great work runing into millions and millions of dollars, but that is what the government are doing if they go on with this expenditure. They will find this commission in Montreal defaulting the same as the Quebec harbour commission is doing. I am confident the minister would not like to see such a serious condition arise.

There is something worse still in respect to the harbour in Montreal. During last year the harbour commission have undertaken to operate and have actually operated without the consent and approval of the government of the day the mixing of United States grain of all kinds with our Canadian grain. If there is one thing more than another that the western farmers have laboured for during the past quarter of a century and more, it is to produce a high standard of grain. They have gone to endless expense in order to produce a high grade of wheat, oats, barley and so on. Now we find that this government and the Montreal harbour commission are undertaking to mix that grain with United States grain, thereby destroying the labours of twenty-five years on the part of the farmers of western Canada.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Upon what authority does the hon. member make the statement that the wheat is being mixed?

[Mr. Rogers.]

Mr. ROGERS: On the authority of the Department of Trade and Commerce, who are issuing certificates for that mixture. The minister can go to the Department of Trade and Commerce and he will find that such is the case.

Mr. CAHAN: Is that charge to go unchallenged? It is a very serious charge and I would like to have the statement of the authority with the day and date.

Mr. ROGERS: It is a very serious charge, and it is serious by reason of the fact that not only are they doing that but they are doing it in violation of the law of this country.

Mr. CAHAN: I should like to have some evidence of it.

Mr. ROGERS: The hon. gentleman should go to the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. CAHAN: That statement is denied by the Montreal harbour commission, and I believe them.

Mr. ROGERS: That statement stands, and hon. members will find that certificates have been filed by the Department of Trade and Commerce showing that they are mixing grain at the harbour commission in Montreal. There is no doubt about that at all. They are doing it in violation of the Canada Grain Act, which provides:

> Inspecting officers shall, when required, inspect grain of United States production passing through Canada in transit to the United Kingdom or to a foreign country, and shall grant certificates therefor based on standard sample of such grain established as hereinafter provided.

I want the minister to look into this matter and ascertain the facts of the case. This information was given to me by the most reliable men in the grain trade in this country and I am satisfied that it is correct. All the minister will have to do is to go to the Department of Trade and Commerce and get a copy of the certificate which they give to the harbour commission to issue. This is all being done in violation of the law which is on our statute book to-day.

10 p.m.

If the mixed manner in which they handle their affairs as shown in a report presented to parliament through the minister is a sample of their management, it is not surprising that they would be guilty of doing what is stated and what I state on the best of authority. I am not opposed to any development that is necessary, but I am opposed to spending $15,000,000 to build a bridge that will enter into competition with a bridge that already exists there and that is sufficient to carry all the traffic for some time. My hon. friend told us the other day that only on Sundays was it rather congested. That is a very poor justification for spending $15,000,000.

Mr. RINFRET: Two years ago it was decided to build that bridge.

Mr. ROGERS: But nothing has been done.

Mr. RINFRET: The right hon. leader of the opposition clearly stated himself in favour of the project.

Mr. ROGERS: Why should the country undertake to lend $15,000,000 for a bridge to be built to compete with the bridge already there? Will anybody answer me that?

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. gentleman has laboured for the last half hour under the misapprehension that there is money to be voted in this bill for a bridge.

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: It has nothing to do with a bridge. When the estimates were brought down it was clearly stated by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that not a dollar was included for a bridge. If we are to discuss the bridge to-night there may be differences of opinion, but if we are to discuss the object of this particular appropriation we should keep in mind that it has no reference to the bridge whatever.

Mr. ROGERS: Certainly the minister told us the other night it would take $15,000,000 to build this bridge.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Not with this money.

Mr. ROGERS: That makes it all the worse. The harbour commissioners will not be able to meet their interest on any such expenditure, and they will come back to this parliament for relief, or they will add to the cost of handling our western grain sufficiently to enable them to make good the interest on the loan so made.

Mr. MILLAR: Will the hon. gentleman say what document can be found to prove the mixing of grain at Montreal? The statement that it can be had in the Trade and Commerce department is rather broad.

Mr. ROGERS: You can get the inspection certificates there. I will endeavour to get one to-morrow for my hon. friend.

Mr. MILLAR: That is not very good proof.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. ROGERS: If the House wants to carry this vote, it is for hon. members to decide, and I have nothing more to say, having fulfilled my duty in respect to western conditions. This harbour cannot continue to pay interest on any $15,000,000 loan, no matter for what purpose it is going to be used; there is not the earning power there to produce the interest. The result is there will be default, and the liability will come back on this country, or on the farmers of western Canada in the handling charges on their grain.

Mr. CARDIN: My hon. friend is not fair in his criticism, particularly in regard to the financial soundness of the harbour at Montreal. This institution is one of the great assets of Canada, and the development there during the last four or five years justifies the harbour commissioners in making new developments to take care of the increase in traffic that is now confronting them. In 1921 the revenue of the harbour was only $2,891,274, but in 1925 it had jumped to $4,749,100. This gives an idea of the rapid progress of the port, and my hon. friend is not justified in trying to destroy to a certain extent the credit which the port now enjoys. This is too big an institution to be lightly criticized. I am ready to admit that I cannot give from memory all the figures contained in the books of the harbour commission or in the documents prepared by the engineers who are working on the bridge; but if we have been mixed up to a certain extent in this discussion it is due probably to my hon. friend, because when we were discussing the bill to provide for the development of facilities in the port of Montreal, he spent all his time discussing the bridge, although it was decided upon two years ago. Not a single cent of this money is to be placed in the bridge.

Mr. ROGERS: That makes it all the worse.

Mr. CARDIN: There may have been differences of opinion in regard to the site which should be chosen for this bridge, but in so far as the bridge itself is concerned all those in Montreal who know anything about the traffic conditions are unanimous in the opinion that there is a pressing necessity for a new bridge. My hon. friend is speaking about the bridge which is now the property of the Canadian National. Well, I think he has never crossed that bridge in recent years.

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, thousands of times.

Mr. CARDIN: I used to cross it every Saturday and Sunday in the year, and I may tell my hon. friend that the congestion there is very severe, and people crossing the bridge are in danger on account of the narrowness of the roadway and the heavy vehicular traffic. A new bridge is absolutely necessary.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is there not another bridge, though, to be built shortly, not very far away from that bridge?

Mr. CARDIN: No. There is the Canadian Pacific railway bridge at Lachine, about ten miles away from the present Victoria bridge.

Mr. MEIGHEN: About seven I have been told. Is that to be a traffic bridge?

Mr. CARDIN: No, a railway bridge only.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would it not have been better to provide for road traffic as well there? That would greatly relieve the Victoria bridge.

Mr. CARDIN: It would have cost a large sum of money to change the bridge.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Nothing like $15,000,000.

Mr. CARDIN: Besides, that bridge is several miles from Victoria bridge and there is no connection between the two shores of the St. Lawrence where the heavy traffic is.

Mr. LANCTOT: We heard a great deal about that bridge in 1913 during a certain by-election.

Mr. CARDIN: As to the mixing of grain, last year the Turgeon commission, which investigated the grain trade very thoroughly, visited the harbour of Montreal, and I do not think they found there anything of the kind which has been mentioned by the hon. member for South Winnipeg.

Mr. ROGERS: I would advise the minister to make inquiry of the Trade and Commerce department. With respect to the increased earning power of the harbour board of Montreal, I find in the annual report of the harbour board for 1925 there is shown an increase of income and revenue account of $4,749,100, an increase of $366,985.44 over the previous year, due mainly to the increased income from the grain elevator system. The main increase comes from the grain trade, largely originated in western Canada. From that point of view alone do I take an interest in the matter. The report shows that the interest charges, which amounted to $1,161,000, showed an increase last year of $113,000. Now then, you are going to add another $350,000 to those interest charges if you put through this loan, and the harbour board will not be able to maintain payment of their interest charges. It will be impossible for them to do it, no matter how anxious they are.

Mr. CAHAN: As I have already said, I do not intend to enter upon a discussion of the bridge. There may be differences of opinion as to whether or not the bridge should have been constructed under the supervision of the harbour commission, but this bill deals with an appropriation for the purpose of increasing the capacity of the harbour for the handling of grain, and that is a national undertaking. The hon. gentleman suggests that a great deal of American grain goes through the port of Montreal but the fact is, Sir, that every ton of American grain going through the port of Montreal brings down the unit cost of handling that grain, whether it be Canadian or American. It is a great advantage to the port that its elevators should be used to their full capacity and that we should have new elevators with a greater capacity, because the larger volume of grain going through Montreal—the mass trans-shipment, as it were—enables the harbour commission to transfer that grain at a less unit cost than would otherwise be the case. On that account I think these appropriations which are to increase the capacity of the harbour for handling grain will not only yield an income sufficiently large to pay interest and provide something in the way of sinking fund on the appropriation we are now making, but will, if the harbour board is managed as well and as economically in the future as it has been managed in the past, enable it to cut down the unit cost of handling Canadian grain. Therefore I think this appropriation is entirely justified, and I think it should be passed because it is a great national undertaking and in the interests of the whole country. But it seems quite unnecessary to enter upon a discussion of the bridge at this late hour; it was authorized by parliament over a year ago and has nothing whatever to do with this appropriation.

Mr. ROBB: I do not wish to delay the passing of this bill but I would not like to let the statement just made by the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) in regard to the mixing of grain at Montreal go unchallenged. I am not going to be drawn into a discussion of the bridge, which as the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) just said was provided for two years ago and which has nothing whatever to do with the subject under consideration. I have nothing to say in regard to the bridge, except that I am rather surprised to hear my hon. friend oppose the construction of another bridge. Rightly or wrongly he received credit for winning a by-election in 1913 on the promise to build a bridge across the St. Lawrence, and we have had many bad half hours when people have urged us to carry out the promise made by the Hon. Mr. Rogers in 1913.

Mr. DUNNING: Is it the same Mr. Rogers?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, the same genial Mr. Rogers. The mixing of grain is an old story; we heard it first with regard to Canadian grain being mixed in New York, Baltimore, Newport News and other ports. It is a fight between Canadian and United States transportation lines to get the business, and I know an effort has been made to say that grain was not going through the port of Montreal correctly. That statement was made to offset the proof brought home by us that there was mixing of grain in the elevators at Baltimore. As has already been stated, the Turgeon commission investigated that matter and found the report ill-founded, and I submit that it is not in the interests of Canadian transportation lines or Canadian trade for a member of this parliament to advertise that there is mixing of grain in Montreal, when it has been established by a royal commission that there is no such mixing.

Mr. ROGERS: The mixing has probably been carried on since that commission was appointed; it is of a very recent date, and my hon. friend will find the certificate in his own office.

Mr. CAHAN: Only a few weeks ago, when we were visiting the harbour of Montreal, we called the attention of the harbour commissioners to an allegation which had been made to the effect that mixing was carried on in the elevators. The harbour commissioners, in the presence of myself and other hon. members of this House, gave a complete denial to that statement and pledged their honour that there was nothing like that done in the elevators of Montreal. If it is done it is contrary to law; it is a breach of faith between these commisioners and parliament and the country, and before any hon. gentleman undertakes to spread that allegation throughout the country he should produce the facts and make a charge, in order that a thorough investigation may be made. We all know that the royal commission which investigated that subject two years ago found the harbour commission absolutely clean in that respect.

Mr. BELL (St. John): I would like to ask the minister if he would be good enough to furnish the information I requested previously in regard to the salaries of the officials of the harbour boards of Montreal and Quebec other than the commissioners.

Mr. CARDIN: Unfortunately I have not the list for Quebec; I have asked for it and expect to receive it shortly. I have the list for Montreal, however, and I wil give it now:

| | Per Annum |
|---|---|
| Thos. W. Harvie, general manager.. .. .. | $9,000 |
| Thos. F. Trihey, secretary.. .. .. .. .. .. | 7,000 |
| George E. Smart, comptroller.. .. .. .. .. | 7,000 |
| M. P. Fennell, Jr., director of trade and transportation.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 9,000 |
| Paul Leclaire, chief engineer.. .. .. .. .. | 7,000 |
| F. W. Cowie, consulting engineer.. .. .. .. | 5,000 |
| Captain J. F. Symons, harbour master.. .. | 6,000 |
| John Vaughan, superintenedent of railway terminals.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6,000 |

Mr. MacLAREN: Is there any difficulty in getting the details concerning the Quebec harbour commission officials?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. MacLAREN: They have been asked for several times, and the minister has assured the House he would get them.

Mr. CARDIN: There is no difficulty in getting this information, but I have to ask the harbour commission to supply it.

Mr. MacLAREN: When will the minister give the committee these details?

Mr. CARDIN: I think I will be in a position to give them in a day or two; I will undertake to give them within that time.

Mr. MacLAREN: Will the minister have the information on Wednesday?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, I will have it on Wednesday.

Mr. MULLINS: It seems to me this is a sink-hole for Canada's millions; we now grant $12,000,000 more to a harbour commission which already owes $44,000,000. I had the opportunity once of travelling around the harbour with some other hon. members; we passed through a huge cold storage plant which had only one corner occupied—the rest all empty. If we lend millions to the harbour commission in Montreal, what will be left for western Canada with which to develop a harbour in Hudson bay? The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) made a vicious attack on the $3,000,000 in the estimates for the Hudson Bay railway, but I notice now that he is in favour of this item of $12,000,000. In the Public Works estimates only $21,000 was provided for the province of Manitoba. They take millions from the federal treasury and lend it without any provision being made for reserve or sinking fund. I think that is unfair to Canada. Canada has wonderful resources, and I could hardly understand how those resources could be devoured, but I am finding out where they are going and how they are being used up. I think this legislation is absolutely unfair.

Mr. GARDINER: A few minutes ago the minister gave us the income of the Montreal harbour commissioners for 1921 and 1925. Will he give us the tonnage for the same years in order that we may determine how the tonnage is growing in comparison with the income?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: May I quote an extract from the Turgeon Grain Commission, which is considered the most authentic authority on the grain trade that Canada has ever had? This is supplementing what has been said by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and by the Minister of Finance:

> No complaints are made touching grain shipped through Canadian channels and out of Canadian ports.

My hon. friend may have better authority, but this is the latest recognized authority on the grain trade of Canada including the port of Montreal.

Mr. CARDIN: In reply to the hon. member for Acadia, the total tonnage last year was 9,137,281 tons. I regret I have not the figures here for 1921, but I shall be pleased to supply that information to my hon. friend.

Mr. GARDINER: Very well. I wanted the tonnage for the same years as those for which the minister gave the income, so that we can see how the charges are increasing in comparison with the tonnage.

Mr. MILLAR: Who fixes the salaries of the harbour commissioners?

Mr. CARDIN: The commissioners themselves.

Mr. MILLAR: The government have no control whatever?

Mr. CARDIN: No control.

Mr. RINFRET: I am surprised at the attitude taken by some hon. members on this bill, and I must thank the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George for the support he has given to it. I would think that his opinion, coming as he does from the city of Montreal, but representing the opposing party in that city, would carry some weight with hon. members on the opposition side. We hear that money is being squandered all over the country, and this is given as an instance of the squandering of money. On the contrary Mr. Chairman, if there is an expenditure we should support it is this one, because we are really not spending any money here at all; we are merely lending the money to the harbour commission of Montreal, and I do not think I am wrong when I say that that is the only harbour commission in the whole country which pays back interest on the money that we lend to it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): And Vancouver.

Mr. RINFRET: I like to see Vancouver joining the select circle. I hope the hon. member for Vancouver Centre will support this bill.

Mr. STEVENS: Why not let it go through? Why stop it?

Mr. RINFRET: If my hon. friends want to carry the vote, certainly I shall not object, but I do not want to let my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George stand alone on the other side in supporting this bill, which some of my friends opposite have been unwise enough to oppose.

Mr. STEVENS: Do not obstruct it.

Mr. RINFRET: We have the hon. member for South Winnipeg talking about the mixing of grain. I believe he is rather willing to mix things up a little in connection with this bill. We could not tell whether he was talking about the present bill or about a bill concerning a bridge projected two years ago. I remember that at that time when we said the leader of the opposition was not very favourable to the project, we were taxed with creating prejudice over that fact. We were told that we did not want to have the leader of the opposition presented in his proper colours before the people of Montreal. Tonight we find not only members from the back benches of the party opposite but even one of the leaders of it taking direct objection to the construction of this bridge in Montreal, pretending that the other bridge would be sufficient to carry all the traffic and that the new bridge is not needed at all. Then the leader of the opposition got up and wanted to know what bridge we were talking of, and my hon. friend from Laprairie-Napierville very properly remarked that at all events we were not discussing the bridge that was promised by my hon. friends on the other side in the Chateauguay by-election, but which was never built, although they carried the seat on that promise at that time.

Coming back to this bill, Mr. Chairman, I am rather surprised when I hear some of our western friends objecting to the lending of money to the harbour of Montreal, a loan on which good interest will be paid. It was only the other day that it was proposed to spend $3,000,000 for the Hudson Bay railway, and my hon. friend from South Winnipeg then rose, and not only did he think we should spend that amount of money, but he said that that was not enough, that we should spend more this very year. Then the vote for the Welland canal was called, amounting to $14,000,000, and he stood there silent, like a statue of alabaster and had nothing to say against that at all. But when it comes to lending money to the harbour of Montreal, on which we will reap good interest every year, he finds all kinds of difficulties. He says we are mixing Canadian grain with American grain, and he mixes this bridge with the other bridge. The bridge has absolutely nothing to do with this loan from the Montreal harbour.

Mr. ROGERS: You are buying right of way for the bridge all over. You have spent an enormous sum of money.

Mr. ST. PERE: The bridge has to land somewhere.

Mr. RINFRET: This parliament has decided to build a bridge, and my hon. friend's party were so strongly in favour of it that when we suggested they were really objecting to it, they took very strong issue with us on that point, and said that they did not want us to believe that they had the least objection to it at all. But the bridge, Mr. Chairman, is a separate project altogether from the Montreal harbour works. I would also remind my hon. friend that tolls will be collected on that bridge that will help a great deal to meet the interest on the capital investment. But the project we are here considering is the harbour itself, not the bridge. Again, I express my surprise when we from the eastern part of the country are so willing to support votes of money for works in the west, that hon. gentlemen from the west oppose legislation that proposes, not to spend money, but simply to lend a certain sum, not on an untried experiment, but on a tried harbour—and a loan on which we shall reap interest for every cent spent.

Preamble agreed to.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. G. H. BOIVIN: (for the Minister of Justice) moved that the House go into committee on Bill No. 205, to amend the Canada Evidence Act as respects bank books and records.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was just rising, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of pointing out before we enter upon this order that it is not covered by a notice. We were to take up the two matters that have been dealt with to-day, and then we were to go into committee of Supply, according to what the Prime Minister told me. I was just rising for the purpose of finding out why we are to have no motion to go into committee of Supply.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think we ought to be prepared to take up any legislation that is on the order paper at this hour of the session. These are two small bills, No. 203 and No. 205, and I think we might get through with them to-night.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: On Friday night I asked what would come on to-day and my hon. friend made this reply:

> The motion standing in the name of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and there is also the legislation in respect to the Montreal harbour board which will probably come up. If we go into Supply we will take the estimates of the Department of External Affairs and Soldiers Civil Re-establishment.

I was just wondering whether the idea is, apart from the question of notice, that there are to be no more motions to go into committee of Supply except on Thursdays and Fridays. If that is not the idea the proper programme should certainly be carried out, and the motion made to go into committee of Supply.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Considering the importance of the matter that is to come up for discussion to-morrow I thought it would be as well for the House to adjourn at 11 o'clock, by which hour we could possibly get through the two pieces of legislation in question. I do not propose that the House shall go into committee of Supply to-night.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Has this bill been distributed?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, it is on your file of Senate bills.

Mr. BOIVIN: The bill is Bill X6 from the Senate. It received its third reading and was passed by the Senate on June 16th. It was introduced, explained, and given its first reading in this House on Friday last. When we come to the second section of the bill I can repeat the explanation already given, if hon. members so desire.

Mr. MEWBURN: The bill is practically the same as the English act.

Mr. BOIVIN: Absolutely the same, except for one word.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—copies of entries.

Mr. BOIVIN: The entire bill is embodied in clause 2. It is copied from the English act, which is known in England as the Bankers' Books Evidence Act. The law in Canada has been that in all cases, especially in all criminal cases, the best possible proof available had to be produced, which meant that in all cases where bank books or bank records were required to be produced before the court the original books had to be brought, which caused a great deal of inconvenience to the banks. The bill is being passed at the request of the Canadian Bankers' Association with the object of enabling the bankers to produce duly certified extracts. The bill provides that the extracts shall either be certified to by the oath of the manager or accountant given in open court, or by an affidavit of these officials taken in the usual way. Hon. gentlemen will notice that there is a proviso guaranteeing all the rights of litigants and other parties concerned; subsection 3 provides that in any case where, for special cause, the court desires to order the production of the book itself the book shall be produced.

Mr. CAHAN: Is the bill a fair transcript of the English act?

Mr. BOIVIN: It is an absolute transcript except on two points; we have added the words "books or records." Banks sometimes keep their accounts in loose-leaf ledgers and in index cards, and the word "records" has been added to cover these two documents. No provision is made for costs as in the English act, because as my hon. friend knows the Canada Evidence Act applies to the administration of the Criminal Code and costs are not adjudged in criminal matters. Apart from that, this bill and the English act are identical.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

[Mr. Boivin.]

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT—POSSESSION OF WEAPONS

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General) moved that the House go into committee on Bill No. 203, to amend certain provisions of the Criminal Code respecting the possession of weapons.

On section 1—dangerous weapons.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Who will explain this bill? It certainly does not look like the short bill described by the Prime Minister.

Mr. CANNON: The measure looks rather bulky, but it includes both the bill and also the provisions of the Criminal Code which are being amended. The main object of the bill is to replace section 118 of the Criminal Code as it exists to-day. If the section is enacted as provided by this bill it will require a permit for the sale of weapons, the sale of ammunition, the importation of weapons and ammunition, and also the possession of weapons, firearms and ammunition. Secondly, the bill provides for the issuance of the permits by the Department of Justice or by officials designated by that department. Thirdly, it provides for an increase in the penalties imposed for infractions of the act. Certain objections were raised to the original bill as introduced, on the ground that considerable harm might result to that trade from the section covering or including the sporting rifle or arms used for sporting purposes. The act has been amended so that none of these are touched.

Mr. MANION: Is this bill now satisfactory to the dealers in sporting rifles and that sort of thing? I have received a lot of protests from them, although I am not familiar with the question.

Mr. CANNON: I think these objections have now been withdrawn in view of the amendment introduced. This afternoon I was put in touch with one gentleman who had certain objections to the definition of the word "ammunition," but I suggested an amendment which apparently met his wishes. When we come to that part of the bill I intend to move that amendment.

Mr. MANION: So far as the minister understands, the objections raised by the hardware dealers and those who deal in the sale of weapons are met in the bill as it will be amended?

Mr. CANNON: Yes.

Mr. McCLENAGHAN: This bill was objected to by the Hardware Merchants' Association of Canada. Their secretary appeared before the committee and had the clause relating to shot-guns removed. That took away a great deal of the objection that had been raised by the dealers. They do not object to the placing of restrictions upon the carrying of concealed weapons, but they showed the committee that Canada was a great sporting country, and to put any restrictions on the dealers and on the men using firearms and rifles would injure our tourist trade. But after this amendment had been made the original bill was introduced here, though I think it should have gone to the Private Bills committee in order that the matter might be thoroughly discussed. We have a provision with reference to ammunition which puts it back in its original shape, because when you buy ammunition for a rifle the same ammunition can be used in a revolver. The ammunition for a 22-calibre rifle can be used in a 22-calibre revolver, and the same with rifles and revolvers of other calibres; the ammunition is interchangeable. We claim you cannot make any amendment to that ammunition clause; the only thing is to withdraw it. Then you have your restriction against your firearms such as revolvers and pistols, but say nothing about ammunition, which, as I say, is interchangeable. A dealer is liable to a fine of $1,000 and two years' imprisonment if he violates the provisions of a certain clause in the bill. There is also a clause under which a man who obtained a permit in Ottawa and went down to Rockland with the ammunition would be fined because he would be in the county of Russell. It is all mixed up. In the interests of sport in this country we should remove this restriction. The bill should have gone to the Private Bills committee where it could be discussed with more freedom.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have not heard a good reason why an innocent man can be sent to gaol for two years.

Mr. CANNON: He cannot.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Why not?

Mr. CANNON: The hon. member for Ottawa has just explained that in the original bill arms used for sporting purposes were apparently included, but the bill as drafted now, as my hon. friend will read—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Your hon. friend has had no chance to read it.

Mr. CANNON: In paragraph 2 of clause 1, under the subparagraphs (a), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv) and (v), the different kinds of firearms covered by the bill are enumerated. If my hon. friend reads these clauses I think he will come to the conclusion that the sporting community is in no way affected. In answer to the objection raised by my hon. friend from Ottawa concerning ammunition, I intended, in order to meet the objection raised, to amend the bill. The word "ammunition" is defined in paragraph (c) at the top of page 2 as follows:

"Ammunition" means all ammunition that can be used with a weapon.

And the word "weapon" would be interpreted in accordance with its definition under paragraph (b). But as the hon. member for Ottawa mentioned, the same ammunition might be used both for sporting arms and for arms which are enumerated and prohibited under this act. So that I intended amending the definition of ammunition by saying that ammunition would mean ammunition for use exclusively with any weapon to which subsection 2 of this section applies. If the bill is amended in that way the objection raised by my hon. friend would be met.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I understand the bill was introduced in the Senate?

Mr. CANNON: Yes.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Would this not be the time to reciprocate and throw out some of the Senate measures?

Mr. BROWN: I do not think any good purpose can be served by worrying over that word "ammunition." So far as the bill refers to revolvers and pistols I am in hearty agreement. Long ago before I came to parliament, I thought that if ever I came here I would introduce a measure dealing with revolvers and pistols. In the main the revolver is a useless weapon for any law-abiding person. I do not think this bill should trouble itself about ammunition at all. I do not care what definition you give to ammunition, you cannot meet the needs of the case because ammunition which is used in revolvers can also be used in smaller rifles and some of the larger ones as well. Therefore I do not think any definition you can give to ammunition will get you over the difficulty. Why should we not fix our attention entirely on the weapon and then the ammunition will take care of itself? As regards the other things in this bill that are spoken of as dangerous weapons, I fully appreciate the dangers that might arise from carrying concealed weapons; but the difficulty of guarding against them seems to me so vast that I hesitate to approach it. It is distinctly stated that the weapons which a person must not have in his possession are:

Any sword, sword-blade, bayonet, pike, pike-head, spear, spear-head, dirk, dagger, stiletto, or any similar device or contrivance.

These are dangerous looking weapons, but I usually carry in my pocket a big jack-knife that on occasion could be just as dangerous a weapon as one of these. I have lying around at home an old bayonet which according to this bill I would be forbidden to keep. Nevertheless, while I might have to discard that particular weapon, if I wanted to make a weapon for murderous purposes I could go into blacksmith's shop and in half an hour I could turn out just as dangerous a weapon as this bayonet or any of the weapons referred to in the bill. I mention that simply as an illustration of the difficulty that confronts us in dealing with the question in this way. A good big butcher-knife that every farmer has around his farm might be just as dangerous a weapon in the hands of a man who is murderously inclined as any one of the weapons mentioned in the bill. I am inclined to think that in this particular matter of dealing with dangerous weapons we had better make haste very slowly, deal with the revolvers and let the ammunition take care of itself. While the other weapons may be dangerous, the difficulty of meeting the situation seems to be so great that if we pass this measure as it now stands we shall only land ourselves in trouble and possibly subject honest people, people who are not murderously disposed at all, to a great deal of annoyance by an over-zealous official.

Mr. CANNON: I may assure my hon. friend that he can still keep possession of the arms that he has mentioned, because his case is provided for in subsection (3) paragraph (g).

Mr. BROWN: I saw that.

Mr. CANNON: I should be very sorry if we had to remove any arms from my hon. friend.

Mr. FORKE: I had no idea my desk-mate carried such dangerous weapons around with him. I am going to keep an eye on him from now on.

Mr. POWER: I remember some years ago a bill similar to this came up in the House when the Hon. Mr. Doherty was Minister of Justice. At that time the present Solicitor General, if I remember rightly, took exception to some of the weapons named in this bill. He asked, if I remember aright, who wanted to barter with a cannon or who would go around concealing a cannon. I remember on that same occasion asking the then Prime Minister if it was his intention to have children go to the Minister of Justice for a permit to have a child's air-gun. I thought at the time it was a ridiculous provision and I think so to-day.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is getting worse now.

Mr. POWER: There is another feature of this. We have really omitted weapons which are possibly far more dangerous than these obsolete swords, bayonets, spear-heads, dirks and daggers. There is such a thing, if I remember reading the history of our criminal activities, as a sawed-off shot-gun. This is far more dangerous in a riot or a hold-up than any of the weapons mentioned in this bill and we seem to have omitted it altogether. I agree a good deal with the hon. member for Lisgar. Let us, if we wish to restrict the use of these weapons, confine ourselves to those which we can restrict and not endeavour to give a long enumeration making crimes which we shall never be able to detect.

Mr. McGIBBON: I rise to protest as I have many times in this House against this eternal restriction of the liberties of the Canadian people. I remember quite well the incident referred to by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) concerning the Solicitor General's attitude at that time. I would like also to impress upon him that there are in this country thousands and tens of thousands of war souvenirs which have been brought home by the returned soldiers and which I think come under the restrictive clauses of this bill. At least I would like to ask him if they do or do not. It is time this parliament stopped placing restrictions upon the liberties of the Canadian people. We are not a band of outlaws and we should be trusted to some extent.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I should think the Solicitor General would like to revert to that former position which he took so strongly and so well. Does he not feel like doing so? If he does not want to revert to that former position which has been so highly praised in both quarters of the House, why does he not at least make this bill something that is going to work? Let him cover the sawed-off shot-gun which is certainly much more dangerous than any of these old pikes, or bayonets, or dirks, or other things described in the bill. The sawed-off shot-gun and the revolver are the two things which are really dangerous. Cannot we get this bill down to something which everybody will understand at once and which any police officer can enforce?

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the Solicitor General be good enough to answer my question?

Mr. CANNON: I would like to explain first that with myself as well as with others, responsibility of office always gives maturity of thought. I am sure the hon. member for Quebec South will realize that quite soon himself. As to the returned men having arms in their possession, I do not think this bill would prevent them from having them. I would refer my hon. friend who has raised that question to subsection (3) paragraph (g) of the bill which I think will cover the case.

Mr. CAHAN: If the weapons are not obsolete it does not cover them. I have in my possession a sword which happened to belong to one of my ancestors. It is not obsolete in any way. It is really an excellent sword and it probably could not be manufactured now.

Mr. PARENT: Has it ever been used?

Mr. CAHAN: Yes, in service. It is not obsolete; I would have to put it in the melting pot if this bill goes through. I have some other war souvenirs that would also have to go into the melting pot. It does not help me by way of defence to say they are not usable, because they are.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. McGIBBON: No, Mr. Chairman. While I am not a lawyer, I do not think these cases are covered by the sections the Solicitor General quoted.

Mr. CANNON: This bill was introduced in the Senate by the Hon. Mr. Belcourt, and careful attention was there given to it. I see by the discussion there is apparently quite a division of opinion among hon. members. The hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. McClenaghan) suggested that the bill should be referred to the committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, and I think it might be well to adopt his suggestion, as the bill can then be studied by that committee and the interested parties can be heard.

Progress reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the committee sit again?

Mr. CANNON: Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be referred to the committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This proceeding may be right, Mr. Speaker, but I never heard of it before. The bill is still in committee of the Whole, and I do not see how it can be referred to another committee.

Mr. SPEAKER: The committee has reported progress on the bill, and I have received the report. The House should now give such an order as will take the bill from committee of the Whole to be referred to the committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then should not the order read, that the bill be withdrawn from committee of the Whole?

Mr. CANNON: When the Speaker said, "When shall the committee sit again?" I moved that the bill be referred to the Private Bills committee.

Mr. SPEAKER: The point made by the right hon. leader of the opposition seems to be well taken. The bill must be taken from the committee of the Whole to be referred to the committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills. Shall the motion be adopted with that amendment?

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

PRESENTATION OF COMMITTEE'S FINAL REPORT

Mr. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo) presented the fourth and final report of the select standing committee on National Railways and Shipping, as follows:

Your committee to which was referred for consideration and for report to the House the estimates of the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited, held fourteen meetings, in the course of which it examined sundry witnesses, including:—

Sir Henry Thornton, K.B.E., President and Chairman of the Board, Canadian National Railways.

Major Graham A. Bell, C.M.G., Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals.

Gerard Ruel, K.C., Vice-President of Legal Affairs, Canadian National Railways.

D. J. McDougald, Director, Canadian National Railways.

S. J. Hungerford, Vice-President, Operation and Construction Departments, Canadian National Railways.

J. E. Dalrymple, Vice-President, Traffic and Express Departments, Canadian National Railways.

R. C. Vaughan, Vice-President, Purchases and Stores Departments, Canadian National Railways.

A. E. Warren, General Manager, Central Region, Canadian National Railways.

R. A. C. Henry, Director, Bureau of Economics, Canadian National Railways.

R. B. Teakle, General Manager, Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited.

C. B. Drown, Chief Engineer, Operation Department, Canadian National Railways.

T. H. Cooper, General Auditor, Canadian National Railways.

Dr. W. J. Black, Director of Colonization, Agriculture, and Natural Resources, Canadian National Railways.

J. P. Doherty, Traffic Manager, Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited.

R. L. Fairbairn, Manager, Passenger Service Bureau, Canadian National Railways.

D. O. Wood, Traffic Manager, Foreign Freight Department, Canadian National Railways.

C. Manning, Assistant to Vice-President, Colonization, Telegraph, Lands and Insurance Departments, Canadian National Railways.

F. Davidson, Auditor, Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited.

R. H. Fraser, Right of Way Agent, Department of Railways and Canals.

H. A. Palmer, Regional Right of Way Agent, Canadian National Railways.

Bert Grant of Toronto, Ontario, Builder.

Canadian Government Merchant Marine

Your committee has had under consideration item 373 of the estimates which provides for a loan of $600,000 to the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited, and has in the course of its deliberations examined the operating statements of the company for the year ending December 31st, 1925. Your committee notes that the net results from operations have improved to the extent of $492,826 during 1925, as compared with 1924; and it is recalled that the improvement in 1924, in comparison with 1923, was $423,412.

Your committee is also impressed with the conviction expressed by the president of the Canadian National Railways that during the year 1926 the position of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine will be still further improved, and is also gratified to learn that the net result of the operations for the first five months of the present year is an operating profit of $62,000 as compared with an operating deficit for the same period last year of $593,000.

From the evidence adduced it is interesting to note that the improvement in the results of the operations during the year, due to the re-arrangement of services, amounted to $207,000.

Your committee reviewed in considerable detail the negotiations leading up to the sale of fifteen vessels comprising part of the fleet of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, which were not suitable for any of the services being operated, and is of the opinion that every reasonable precaution was taken to obtain the best possible prices for such vessels.

Your committee is accordingly unanimously of the opinion that the amount asked for for the coming year, namely, $600,000 should be passed by the House.

Canadian National Railways

Your committee has also had under consideration item 372 of the estimates which provides for loans or guarantees of $31,000,000 to the Canadian National Railways for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1927, and has in the course of its deliberations examined the operating statements of the company for the year ending December 31st, 1925.

The committee notes that by reason of an improvement in the operating results for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1926, over that contemplated when the estimate of $50,000,000 for last year was under consideration, the financial requirements of the railway were reduced from $50,000,000 to $25,722,101.80 and that such requirements, with the exception of $10,000,000 advanced by the government in cash during the year, were met by the railway partly through a reduction in materials and supplies on hand and partly from working capital and by improved operating methods, resulting in marked economies.

Considerable evidence was adduced relating to the activities of the Canadian National Railways in regard to immigration and colonization and your committee is pleased to note that during the past year an arrangement has been effected between the government and the Canadian National Railways in conjunction with the Canadian Pacific Railway to eliminate over-lapping in immigration activities.

Your committee calls attention to the fact that expenditures on equipment during the past year have continued at a moderate figure and to the statement of the president that only moderate outlays for freight and passenger equipment are expected for some time.

Your committee also draws attention to the fact that during the past year the company has been carefully investigating the growing competition of the motor bus and the motor truck and expects shortly to develop some means of effectively meeting the conditions arising in connection with this competition.

Your committee in its previous report referred to the question of taxation and is pleased to note from the evidence adduced that considerable progress has been made towards the development of a basis of taxation in conjunction with the various provincial governments throughout the Dominion which will remove the discrimination referred to in the committee's final report last year.

From the evidence given, your committee is of the opinion that the amount of $31,000,000 is necessary for the purposes of the company during the coming year and should be passed by the House.

Your committee notes with satisfaction that the Canadian National Railways continue to hold the confidence and goodwill of the public through the excellence of the services rendered and the courtesy extended to patrons.

Your committee further desires to express its appreciation of the manner in which the president of the Canadian National Railways and the officers assisting him gave their evidence to the committee.

A copy is attached hereto of the minutes of the proceedings and evidence, with certain statements requested of the attending officers, which have been printed with the evidence.

Your committee further recommends that its proceedings and the evidence adduced before the committee be printed as an appendix to the Journals of the House and that Rule 74 in respect hereto be suspended.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

CANADIAN FUEL SUPPLY

Third and final report of the committee appointed to inquire into the coal resources of Canada.—Mr. Lapierre.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

Fifth report of the select standing committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph lines.—Mr. Cahill.

CUSTOMS INQUIRY

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE AND AMENDMENT THERETO.

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (St. Henri) moved:

That the third and final report of the special committee appointed to investigate the administration of the Department of Customs and Excise be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the special committee investigating the administration of the Department of Customs and Excise laid its report upon the table of the House last Friday. We are convinced that this House will find in that report the material necessary to reorganize certain branches of this department, and particularly the preventive service, in order to assure the collection of the duties imposed upon goods of foreign origin which enter our country. A preventive service, well organized, is the biggest help to the administration charged with the collection of customs duties, not only on account of the very considerable amounts which it brings into the public treasury, but also as a means of contributing to our national wealth by the adequate safeguarding of our trade and commerce.

When we prepared this report we were indeed aware that the Canadian customs must be regarded with reference to two separate aspects: as a means of revenue, and as an instrument of protection. This investigation has shown that many of the large countries of the world draw considerable gain from their customs dues. A large portion of the revenue of the United States, our neighbours, has no other source.

It is admitted that our participation in the last war has given our finances a bad blow. We will find in the scrupulous and strict collection of duties one of the most efficient ways of rebuilding the national wealth, and one which will enable us to pay the enormous debts willed to us by the late war.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, and no doubt my colleagues who have read the voluminous evidence which accompanies the report laid upon the table of this House will share this conviction, that the Department of Customs and Excise is a most difficult one to administer; the duties, including the supervision of thousands of employees, are onerous and the responsibility immense.

The minister in charge needs to be continually on the alert. He is bound according to certain critics, not to err in the performance of his duties and the exercise of the discretionary powers which are vested in him by the Customs and Excise acts. Furthermore, according to the evidence and the several public documents produced at the investigation, the minister must take into consideration that the procedure of his department is governed not only by statutes passed by this House and the Senate, but also by decisions of the cabinet, orders in council, rulings and regulations, under the authority and powers vested in the administration, and in accordance with the different laws of Canada. Regard must be paid to all these in order to properly apply the rules and regulations of the department or to extend their principles by way of interpretation.

The evidence and the examination of the different files submitted to us have demonstrated also that the minister is exposed to numerous and varied influences, and is the recipent of requests of all sorts. They come from his colleagues, from members of his own party, even from members of the opposite party, but mostly from the public in general, represented in this chamber by their elected members. These hon. members in accordance with the popular belief and under our democratic system, have not only to enact legislation, but are sometimes placed under the painful obligation of obtaining, from ministers of the crown, and, in this case, from Ministers of Customs, past and present, on behalf of offending electors, private and lenient settlements, and if possible the minimum fine provided by law. They insist even upon the reconsideration of findings, or the suspension for a certain period of the proceedings and the penalties incurred in cases already referred to the jurisdiction of the courts of this country.

I would ask my colleagues in this House, to whatever political party they may belong, to remember, before passing final judgment on the facts disclosed by the evidence that, as members of parliament they must be fair to themselves and to their fellow citizens, and I would also counsel them not to lose sight of the fact that a minister, or a member of parliament, is a public man, and as the word clearly implies, a man who belongs to and is representative of the people of Canada.

The public man does not exercise a profession; he fulfils a mission. Is it not true, Mr. Speaker, that the public demands from him what is not expected from others? Moreover, he is continually subjected to strict and severe censure. Public opinion, as he perceives it, stands for a multiplicity of opinions, says Louis Barthou of l'Académie Française, and such multiplicity is sufficient to show the variety of judgments always contradictory and often irreconcilable, to which his actions expose him. He is responsible not merely for what he says or does; his abstentions or the services he renders bind him as much as his actions or words. He stands alone in the community. In the situation there is for him danger and contrast. When a physician has given his advice or a lawyer has ended his address, he has no more to do with his client and has no account to render to anybody. The public man always has accounts to render, and, as a matter of fact, the public is his client. And if a member of the House of Commons becomes a minister of the crown, how, Mr. Speaker, can you expect him to commit no error, even of a temporary nature, if sometimes compassion, or the intention to oblige or to please a representative of the people, takes control for a moment of his heart, or of his mind?

Before this House insists on blaming a member, a minister, because a demand has been made to him and he has granted it, let it first re-educate the people of this country. Let those amongst us, who may extol such a narrow doctrine, tell the people of Canada that in future they can no longer depend on the devotion and benevolence of their representatives and on the humanity of ministers. Let them also make use of this opportunity to inform these same people, that Canadian members of parliament, followers of a government which they themselves have chosen, will no longer be allowed to write or telegraph to a minister in charge of a department, in order to redress alleged grievances or to submit varying claims from their electors, without incurring the risk of being called or mentioned before an investigating committee and reported to this House. If there are such hon. gentlemen, and I do not believe there are any who will be parties to the ruin of some of the best talents of this House of Commons, let them remember that those talents are necessary to the community in order efficiently to help Canada to continue its actual course into the path of prosperity.

Impressed with the ideas and sincere convictions we have tried to express, impressed with the facts that the evidence adduced during this investigation has in our judgment confirmed, we beg of you to consider and to adopt in a spirit of fairness and justice, the recommendations contained in the report submitted to this House, in accordance with the order of reference to our committee, dated February 5, 1925.

The committee, Mr. Speaker, has done everything in its power to discover the existence of smuggling in Canada and its causes. It is hoped that the reorganization of the department in accordance with the recommendation submitted, and the amendments to the Customs and Excise acts suggested, will repress smuggling in a large measure, and will show, little by little, to every vigilant observer the real cause of this evil which we wish to banish from our Dominion.

Our manufacturers and traders will no doubt be thankful to us for the efforts we have all made in the performance of our duties on this parliamentary committee. We have, by all the legal means at our disposal, endeavoured to avoid party politics, aiming, for once at least in the parliamentary annals of this land, at bringing about immediately a new era for the traders and the dealers, who have often suffered unfair competition, an improved condition towards which they may look with confidence and faith. Have we been successful? Mr. Speaker, the debate which is to follow will tell.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the brevity of my hon. friend's address. As I followed him closely I think one might say that he was conscious that there had been serious dereliction of duty on the part of public men, and he entered a plea, coming, I am sure, from the kindness of his heart, that the House and the public should deal leniently with those who may have been guilty of some offence. As to the goodness of his heart I am sure we all agree. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I think at times we have a duty to perform when it is wise not to consult so much the heart as it is to consult what is right and what is fair to the country.

On February 2, last, I addressed the House charging maladministration of the Customs and Excise department, whereupon the House appointed a special committee to hold an investigation, or rather more correctly speaking to investigate the administration of the Customs and Excise department. For over four months, that investigation has been carried on and the report now offered to the House for its consideration represents the findings and recommendations of the committee. I feel, Sir, that for the stand I then took I am now warranted in claiming absolute vindication; the charges have been amply justified and a state of affairs has been revealed which demands the stern attention of this House.

Before proceeding, I wish to pay tribute to Mr. R. P. Sparks and his associates whose untiring efforts during the two years preceding the opening of the investigation contributed so largely to bringing to the attention of the government these serious abuses. Canada owes much to Mr. Sparks for his devotion to the task and his great public service. He and his associates for eighteen months acted with impartiality and without political bias. It was only when it became abundantly clear that the government did not intend to act that Mr. Sparks appealed to me to secure for him a public inquiry. The task was not a simple one, and entailed much anxiety and labour. I had hoped that with the presentation of the report my work would have been finished. However, such is not the case, and I have one other duty to perform, which I cannot allow to remain undone. It is never a pleasant task to attack those with whom one is in constant contact. One's motives will no doubt be misjudged and attacked. Nevertheless, as the one responsible for the launching of this inquiry, it is my duty to finish it to the last detail.

During the opening weeks of the investigation, there were some clashes of opinion, but latterly the members of the committee worked in comparative harmony, and, as the report indicates, sought earnestly to produce to the House some constructive and remedial measures.

The chairman the hon. member for St. Henri (Mr. Paul Mercier), one of the younger members of the House, had a difficult and onerous duty to perform. He presided over each and all of the 115 sittings of the committee, and I trust that the experience he has had and the knowledge he has gained will do much to equip him for larger fields of service and usefulness to the state.

With the report I am in accord with one reservation, namely, the failure of the committee to report a finding on the evidence referring to the conduct of the ministry. Its neglect to do so, if not now corrected by the House, indicates a likely continuance of those practices which so largely contributed to the collapse of the department. It is but fair to the committee to say that this failure is not due to absence of evidence, but to inability to agree to a formula which would adequately meet the case. This discrepancy I propose to remedy by offering to the House an amendment to the motion for the adoption of the report.

The vital part of the report may be apportioned into two main divisions:—That which refers to "findings", and that which makes "recommendations". A brief outline under the heading of "findings" would be as follows:—

1. That the Customs and Excise department had been degenerating in efficiency for some time, and during recent years at an accelerated rate, and that the Hon. Jacques Bureau had been derelict in his duties as a minister.

That is one of the findings and the one I shall deal with first. As to the ex-minister, I have this to say. He perverted his opportunities of service to the state to the distribution of indulgences to his favourites. The vast revenues of the country collected by this department and amounting to over $300,000,000 annually, which he ought to have jealously guarded, were left unprotected the easy prey of mendacious individuals. High officials with a long career of faithful service to the country were debauched by him and must now pass out of the picture under a cloud more or less of shame.

His conduct and the conduct of these officials influenced, debased, I might say, by him as the responsible head, were well known to the Prime Minister and his associates. Yet he was allowed to resign his seat and his position as minister and he was rewarded with a seat in the Senate while his puppets have been driven out of the service in shame.

I pause here to emphasize this point of the knowledge of the Prime Minister and his associates of the general condition of the department for many months, indeed I think I am safe in saying for a year before this investigation started. I will read certain extracts from the evidence. For instance I have under my hand a letter written by Mr. Sparks to the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Prime Minister of Canada, under date of February 4, 1925, just a year lacking two days before I made my statement in the House and more than a year before the investigation started. I will not read the whole letter, but I will read a couple of extracts:

Dear Sir:

Some months ago—

That is some months prior to the date of the letter.

—a large representative deputation waited upon you and members of your cabinet pointing out that smuggling and under-valuation for duty purposes were causing an immense loss of revenue and serious interference with the business of legitimate traders and manufacturers.

Then there is a long recital of certain specific instances. The letter concludes with this paragraph:

It is respectfully submitted that the conditions herein set forth are sufficiently well known to the government and to its departmental officers and the requested forms of relief so necessary and reasonable as to justify the government to take immediate action by instituting the required departmental changes and submitting to parliament bills providing for necessary legislative enactment. . . . It is respectfully submitted that a parliamentary committee should be appointed immediately to inquire into the necessity of departmental and legislative changes.

On the 21st February this was followed by another letter dealing with the acquittal of the notorious Bisaillon in Quebec. This letter is addressed by Mr. Sparks, as chairman of this businessmen's organization, to the Prime Minister:

The acquittal by the Quebec courts of J. E. A. Bisaillon, the chief preventive officer at Montreal, who was charged with conspiracy, creates a new situation in reference to the prevention of smuggling. I think you should be in possession of certain information which we have in reference to this matter, as he is the key to the whole smuggling situation. . .

Might I again repeat what I think I have said to you before that, from the standpoint of loss of revenue, I think the smuggling business is second only to the loss occasioned from the operation of the Canadian National railways.

Warning the Prime Minister, urging him in conference, confirmed by letter, of the necessity of changes and remedial measures. On February 26, there is a letter stating:

After four months' investigation by a staff of trained criminal investigators, we are convinced that at least half of the smuggling now going on could be prevented within a month by an energetic policy on behalf of the department, and further that, with necessary amendments to the act—

Which were given by this House, endorsed by this side.

—90 per cent of the smuggling could ultimately be prevented. Might I further express the opinion that smuggling is increasing at an alarming rate, rather than decreasing, as the minister states.

Thus even in February it was brought to the attention of the minister and his colleagues that these were the facts and it was pointed out that the responsible minister at the time was neglecting his duties in that respect. The letter goes on:

I took up with the Minister of Customs the question of the continuation of Mr. Bisaillon as chief preventive officer at Montreal. I pointed out that the business community had lost confidence in Mr. Bisaillon. I had with me at that time a number of reports on this man, one of which I read to the minister.

And so forth. On March 20, 1925, there was a letter reviewing the situation at length and supplying the Prime Minister with a tabulated list of offences of this individual. The reason I mention this is because around him at the time as chief preventive officer at Montreal, which was the pivotal point then, centred the weakness of the department. This letter addressed to the Prime Minister on March 20, 1925, reads:

In reference to the case of Bisaillon, there are certain facts, some of which are set out below which form a part of the public records and which, if they are not already known to the Minister of Customs and Excise, confirmation of them can easily be obtained. In our opinion these facts of themselves furnish sufficient evidence to warrant the immediate dismissal of Bisaillon.

Then it recites the case of Rex vs. Lortie, the Tremblay barge case and a number of others. Then we have the following paragraph:

We would respectfully submit that the facts as above set out, together with information conveyed to you in a confidential memorandum, are sufficient of themselves to call for this man's dismissal, and, over and above all this, is the fact that this man has lost the confidence of the business community of Montreal and, as a consequence, his usefulness is at an end.

This was acknowledged by a letter dated April 16, 1925, and addressed to Mr. Sparks, from Mr. E. J. Lemaire, Clerk of the Privy Council, in the following words:

Dear Sir:

I am, by direction of the Right Hon. the Prime Minister, to acknowledge your letter of the 20th instant with reference to Mr. J. A. E. Bisaillon, and to say that the same will receive due consideration.

I repeat what I said a moment ago that the conduct of the minister of the department, the laxity of his administration and his countenancing of evil-doers were well known to the Prime Minister and his colleagues long ago.

The second finding of the committee to which I desire to refer is in somewhat the following terms:

The committee also found that not infrequently important decisions have been made which were repugnant to the facts, resulting in serious losses to the revenues, as well as placing a premium on dishonest practices.

The chairman of the committee (Mr. Mercier, St. Henri) who took his seat a moment ago, as I intimated, made a plea for toleration of public men who were derelict in their duty. Here we have the finding of the committee in these terms, that the minister, or officers of the department under the influence of the minister, under pressure from the minister, made findings, made decisions affecting the public revenue, affecting the treasury of this country, which were repugnant to the facts, to use the words of the report itself. Under this heading would come a discussion of "political expediency." I do not intend to enter into that this afternoon as I understand the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Doucet) and the hon. member for West

Hamilton (Mr. Bell) will deal at length with this phase of the question. But losses and discrepancies as disclosed by the investigation could have been effectively controlled if the existing statutes had been properly enforced by conscientious officers uninfluenced by ministerial interference. I pause to emphasize that. In other words it was not the legislation that was wrong; it was the administration that was at fault.

Another decision deduced from the evidence is that motor thefts and smuggling are intimately associated. Case after case was submitted which showed that professional auto thieves found in the Customs department a haven of refuge wherein to cover up their nefarious traffic. Of that, Sir, there can be no question. Scores of such cases were brought to light until the public grew weary of the monotony with which they were unearthed, and the question was asked, when will the end of these auto cases be reached? The purpose in bringing them forward was to try if possible to drive home to the ministry and to the members of the House on what a wholesale scale this business was being carried on. It was a thoroughly organized traffic, and the officers of the department, as well as the department itself, by its actions and by its rulings, connived at or participated in it.

In the fourth place, it was demonstrated that wholesale commercial smuggling was being practised on an extensive scale and that customs and excise duties and sales taxes were being systematically evaded. The audits, admittedly very incomplete, disclosed losses subject to possible recovery of a sum approximating $1,750,000. This is in respect of cases regarding which there is now to hand, and available to the House, such evidence as would warrant immediate action being taken for the recovery of the amount stated. I would point out here that the ground covered by these audits was undoubtedly but a fragment of the area which ought to be covered and which in my opinion must be covered if justice is to be done. The ex-Minister of Customs, the Minister of Marine while acting minister (Mr. Cardin), and the present minister (Mr. Boivin) have all displayed a callous indifference to the rights of the public treasury, but a touching solicitude for the liberty and well-being of defrauding offenders.

I come now to the fifth point: I refer to a practice which has reached tremendous proportions, namely, the smuggling of liquor into the United States. It was found that liquor smuggling from Canada into the United States was a serious incentive to return smuggling of other goods into Canada, and that this Dominion has become a mere conduit through which a constant stream of liquor flows into the United States. Much of this liquor pays no revenue into the treasury of either country and is admittedly unfit for human consumption. At this point I wish to refer briefly to the treaty between Canada and the United States. On February 2 last when discussing this phase of the question I gave expression to a sentiment similar to that which I shall now voice. With the laws of the United States I have nothing to do; they are not my business, nor is it my duty to criticize or to approve of them. But, Sir, when the Dominion of Canada enters into a solemn obligation with the United States, then I submit, altogether irrespective of any opinion I may hold of the laws of that country, that it is the duty of the administration of this country to see to it that the terms of that treaty as well as the spirit of it are honoured. I will not read the treaty in toto; I will quote merely the opening paragraph or a portion of it. It declares that this Dominion and the United States—

3 p.m.

—being desirous of suppressing smuggling operations along the boundary between the Dominion of Canada and the United States of America, and of assisting in the arrest and prosecution of persons violating the narcotic laws of either government, and of providing as to the omission of penalties and forfeitures in respect to the carriage of alcoholic liquors through Alaska into the Yukon Territory—

—have agreed to certain things. In other words, the three subjects of agreement in this treaty are first, the suppression of smuggling; secondly, the prevention of, and the prosecution of those engaged in, the narcotic traffic; and, thirdly, the carriage of liquor into the Yukon Territory. The treaty is dated June 6, 1924. There is in it a clause which I know some will contend is ineffective and renders the treaty not binding on either country in so far as the smuggling of liquor is concerned. I had better read this clause inasmuch as it will probably be advanced as an excuse for the failure of the government to observe the spirit of the agreement. Article II provides:

The high contracting parties agree that clearance from Canada or from the United States shall be denied to any vessel carrying cargo consisting of articles the importation of which into the territory of Canada or of the United States, as the case may be, is prohibited—

As properly pointed out by my hon. friend from Vancouver North (Mr. Donaghy) in the committee, had the article stopped there it would have been effective. But it goes on:

—when it is evident from the tonnage, size and genera character of the vessel, or the length of the voyag and the perils or conditions of navigation attendant upon it, that the vessel will be unable to carry its cargo to the destination proposed in the application for clearance.

It is argued that in view of that qualification Canada is justified in giving clearance to vessels known to be carrying contrabrand cargoes into the United States. My submission, however, is that Canada as a country, and this parliament as well, both understood and do understand now that this treaty was intended for the suppression of the smuggling of prohibited goods from one country into the other. That is the gist of the treaty, shorn of verbiage; and I believe that this administration, and the officials under the administration, ought to be condemned without any measure of consideration for deliberately conniving at the violation of the general terms of that treaty.

I should like now to illustrate the manner in which this traffic is carried on. Vessels laden with liquor would clear for some foreign port, such as Nassau or St. Pierre-Miquelon, but before such clearance the exporter, under the Canadian regulations, would have to deposit a bond equal in value to double the duty assessable on the cargo. That bond is not to be released unless the goods so exported shall have been duly landed and entered for consumption or for warehouse at the point named in the bond. This has been one of the most prolific sources of evasion of the law. I cannot speak too strongly on this point. In my opinion the administration—and in this I include the officers of the department as well as the heads—are either too simple to hold office or else they are deliberately conniving at this traffic, which is contrabrand so far as our friendly neighbour to the south is concerned. And it is beneath the honour and dignity of this country to be engaged in, or to connive with others who are engaged in, such a pursuit. One would expect that when the government exacted such a bond it would demand that it be respected. In practice, however, it is consistently evaded. False landing certificates are tendered and accepted and the bonds are released. Not only is it a fact that liquor, instead of reaching its ultimate point of destination, is diverted to the United States, but there is a strong presumption that a substantial portion or at least some portion of this liquor, upon which no customs or excise duty has been paid, finds its way back into Canada. This, I think, is the conviction of every member of the committee so far as this traffic is concerned, both on the Atlantic and on the Pacific. These vessels secure from the department a clearance for Nassau or Mexico; they leave the Canadian port and when they get outside they either produce an absolutely false landing certificate or, in the case of St. Pierre-Miquelon, it may be genuine. Then the liquor is bootlegged back into Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick on the Atlantic and into British Columbia on the Pacific. All of it does not come back, because the great market is Rum Row or Liquor Lane, as they call it on the Pacific, but a portion finds its way back into Canada and pays no revenue to the country. To effectively investigate the possible losses from such cases will require a searching examination of the books and records of the firms concerned as well as some clever police work to check up the documents tendered, as to whether or not they are genuine. In other words this inquiry, while it uncovered certain facts, has not by any means succeeded in discovering the magnitude of the losses to the revenue of this country through this traffic as well as other branches of a different character.

There was another method disclosed by the evidence as followed by the notorious Cooper, Hushion and George gang of bootleggers, by shipment on the Bernard M. and Frank H. as well as other vessels; these, however, were the two vessels most frequently mentioned. In this case cargoes of liquor would be billed from a foreign port via the St. Lawrence and Great Lakes to Port Arthur, and thence by rail and ship to Japan. That sounds like a decent traffic, simply passing through Canada; that was the pretence, but what are the facts? The facts are that such cargoes would be passed through the Lachine canal and there given a clearance for Port Arthur, but the vessels did not reach Port Arthur. These goods were landed somewhere on lake Ontario or lake Erie east of Windsor, and not a dollar of revenue came into the public treasury from the admission of these goods. I find, Mr. Speaker, that the evidence discloses at least four vessels carrying from six thousand to ten thousand cases in this way; there were many more but we had before us definitely these four. Had these vessels been compelled to pay duty on their cargoes it would have meant from $450,000 to $720,000 in revenue to the public treasury.

What guarantee did the minister or the department have that the exchequer was properly guarded? They only had the word of a bootlegger, a man called Harbert, and absolutely nothing more. I ask this House to consider this question for a moment, and we will put it in a little different way. Let us suppose some business man, some merchant, sought to bring in a cargo of hardware, or furniture, of groceries or drygoods, or any other class of goods legitimately handled, in bond for transhipment through Canada to Japan. These goods are brought down the Lachine canal and given a clearance for Port Arthur, but they do not arrive there; they are landed at some unknown point on the lakes, possibly in the province of Ontario, with no payment of duty. Would the department permit that merchant to carry on in that way? The answer is obvious. Then I ask the House why it is that those engaged in the liquor traffic should have a privilege which would not be granted or countenanced for one moment in the handling of other classes of goods. Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that the duty of the minister in the protection of the revenue of this country was satisfied with the word of the bootlegger who brought in the cargo? These are serious matters, and these are the things the House must face in connection with this inquiry.

Before going to another point I want to say that these few incidents I have mentioned are only a modicum of what one might bring forward to illustrate the magnitude of this traffic, but they do show a serious condition in connection with that class of business. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is high time for this unholy partnership between the government of Canada and a gang of bootleggers to be dissolved. And I have a word to say to the old established distilleries of Canada. We have here five or six old, well-established institutions which in the past, and I believe at present, claim that they carry on their business legitimately and within the law. Indeed, they pride themselves on it, but to those old-established distilleries as distinct from others of the mushroom type which have recently come into existence I say that it is high time they ceased to sin by proxy, because that is virtually what they are doing. It is time these well-established firms recognized that they must keep genuinely and sincerely within the law and must not, by feeding their products out to law violators, enrich their coffers. I say this with all earnestness and sincerity; if they persist in dealing with such people they must expect to receive a measure of the public indignation which will be aroused.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the hon. member permit a question? Did the committee trace this liquor back to its source?

Mr. STEVENS: Oh, very frequently; that is really what I am referring to at the moment. I do not want to go into too much detail, but to answer my hon. friend, this is the situation. There are perhaps two general classes of liquor, with one of which I will deal at some length almost immediately. There is the class known as matured, decent spirits; to those who like liquor it is known as good liquor. Then there is another class composed of almost pure alcohol, not matured; still with the fusel oils in it, merely coloured with prune juice or something like that. That liquor is assuming tremendous proportions to-day; I believe there is more of that kind handled by the bootleggers to-day than of the good liquor. The matured liquor largely came from the Old Country or from old Canadian distilleries, who sold it to these people who traffic it in the way I have mentioned.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. gentleman has referred to the old, well-established distilleries. Does not the evidence show that at least one of these old firms was guilty of giving subscriptions to the old political parties?

Mr. STEVENS: No, the evidence does not show that. My hon. friend knows, and the House is well aware, that political parties old and new receive subscriptions from various sources, and I have no doubt that subscriptions have been received from that source. I say to my hon. friend, however, that so far as I know I have never seen or known of a dollar subscribed by that source in any campaign in which I participated. I am not denying that it was done, but I will say that there is no evidence before the committee that such subscriptions were made. The only evidence was that there were certain sums which the auditors said were unaccounted for by any other means, and my hon. friend can take what he likes from that.

Mr. MILLAR: Might I ask what "new" party my hon. friend referred to?

Mr. STEVENS: There are lots of parties. I would not for a moment criticise my hon. friend's party for the sources of their campaign funds; they get them anyway. I do not know which party my hon. friend is in at present, but I can say he is now in unholy company. The party with which he is now identified has been the recipient of plenty of such contributions.

I now turn to the question of denatured alcohol, or unmatured spirits. The committee found that unmatured spirits, unfit for human consumption, have been released under four orders in council, and as a matter of record

I am going to put on Hansard the details regarding these orders in council:

Gooderham and Worts, P.C. 641, April 17, 1924.
Manitoba Refinery, Limited, P.C. 1903, October 2, 1925.
Distillers Corporation, Limited, P.C. 1646, September 14, 1925.
Consolidated Distillers of Manitoba, P.C. 29, January 7, 1926.

These four orders in council were brought to the notice of the House by the minister in a return which he filed in reply to an order of the House. These four orders in council synchronize with a sudden increase in the production and sale of raw alcohol, allegedly for denatured purposes, but in reality for the vilest type of bootlegging.

The evidence shows that the Dominion Distillers, better known as the Cooper-Hushion, George aggregation, sold between December 7, 1925, and January 19, 1926, no less than 82,500 proof gallons of this alcohol, denominated No. 1 F. Special alcohol, and that they secured for it from $7 to $10 per gallon.

Now that this alcohol was intended for human consumption was proven beyond all question by the evidence at page 2416 of Leo George, in answer to a question by Mr. Bennett. I will give the question and answer:

Mr. Bennett: Do you know anything about abstraction of the denaturing substance from this alcohol after it gets to the States?
Answer: I understand that they can abstract it.

Now I want to say a word in explanation of this type of liquor. I have the act under my hand, but I do not wish to weary the House by reading from it too minutely, but the act declares that this class of liquor, No. 1 F. Special, shall be used only for hospitals and institutions for the care of the infirm, and for certain purposes of that kind. It is a rubbing alcohol, a medicinal alcohol. It is not for internal use at all, my hon. friend from Fort William (Mr. Manion) reminds me. The sale of it is very jealously guarded by the regulations. This is important because it bears vitally on what I am going to say in a few minutes, and I want to make this point clear. According to the law, according to the Excise Act, and according to the regulations the minister is empowered to make under the law, this alcohol cannot be used indiscriminately. It must be sold only to certain specific limited classes of persons such as I have mentioned, but as a matter of fact the minister exceeded his power in allowing these 82,500 gallons of alcohol to be sold by the Dominion Distillers. It was not only contrary to the law in Canada, but as this class of alcohol, denatured alcohol, is not admitted to the United States at all under their law, it might have been classified as potable spirits, which it was intended to be. It was intended for, and it was sold to the United States by the Dominion Distillers as potable alcohol for beverage purposes, and it was sold only under cover of a special permit granted by the minister, in the granting of which permit, I contend, the minister exceeded his powers.

Now I want to give three illustrations regarding the export. The minister will answer me that this alcohol is exported, and that therefore he had the right to give them this special permit. I answer, in the first place, that the law gives him no such right. In the second place, I want to show that some of it at least apparently never reached the point of export or was never properly exported. I have under my hand the record of three cars. I have duplicates here of the history of these three cars. I have summarized them, and I shall not read the whole story, but briefly it is as follows.

G. T. car No. 6995, containing this denatured alcohol, was billed at Montreal on December 5, 1925, to Louis Evans, Toronto, for export to Mexico. I have the bills of lading and the freight bills under my hand, showing the facts that I am reciting. This liquor was billed for export to Mexico by a boat called the Idle Hour. I would suggest, by the way, that the name of the boat is quite in keeping with the line of business. The record shows that this shipment—and this is the significant part—reached its destination at Toronto on December 6, but the car was not unloaded there. On December 13, it was reported at Welland, still with the same load, and was finally reported "empty" at Fort Erie, although it was billed, and had the guarantee from the Dominion Distillers written upon the face of the billing, to Toronto for export by this boat.

C.N. car No. 346083, containing the same class of liquor, was billed out of Montreal on December 9, 1925, to the same man, Louis Evans, Toronto, for export to Mexico, by the same boat, the Idle Hour. I pause here to draw attention to this, that this Idle Hour was supposed to have unloaded a car for Mexico on December 6, and the boat apparently got to Mexico and back and took on another load on December 9, in spite of all the difficulties of navigation of the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence, and the distance. One would almost think it was some new type of airship, but it was not; she is a little lake boat. This was shipped on December 9, and in this case the car was unloaded at London, Ontario, on December 20, and according to my records this vessel was shown "empty" at London. Now London is not an export point; it is not even a lake or river point.

The next is C. N. car No. 409254, containing the same class of liquor. This was billed out of Montreal on December 13, 1925, consigned to the same man, Louis Evans, Toronto, for export to Mexico by the boat the Idle Hour. This car was not unloaded at Toronto, but arrived at Sarnia on December 18, and the contents were described as lumber when the car got to Sarnia for diversion to Port Huron.

I cite these three cases, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of showing that in the export of this liquor by the Dominion Distillers, who were acting under a special permit from the minister, a permit, I contend, that was granted contrary to the law and in an enlargement of his powers—these three cars never reached the shipping point at all, or they passed the shipping point to which they were directed, and were unloaded at other points in Ontario. These various findings that I have cited I will leave at this point, and now I turn for a moment to the recommendations of the committee.

Many of these recommendations, Mr. Speaker, are clearly routine. I am not going to deal with them, because I think the House is in general agreement with regard to them. I do not think there is any question as to their desirability; I think they will be accepted without question. The recommendations, however, regarding further investigation and the prosecution of those already shown to have violated the law, are of paramount importance to the House. It is equally necessary that the House should be certain that those who are entrusted with this duty are untrammelled by any previous entanglements with those who are to be prosecuted. I pause, Mr. Speaker, to emphasize that point. I say to the House there are two things of paramount importance: First, that further investigation and prosecutions should be vigorously followed up; and secondly, this House ought to be certain that those to whom it entrusts this important task are untrammelled by previous entanglements with those whom they are called upon to prosecute.

Extensive and startling as the disclosures have been, it is well for the House to realize that neither the audit nor the investigation covered more than a small portion of the area that ought to be examined. I want that point to be borne in on the minds of hon. gentlemen. The way the committee proceeded it would have taken us probably two years to have covered the ground necessary and then it could not have been done thoroughly. The careful examination of other sections of the Dominion will call for a sensitive appreciation of what is due to the state, as well as a fearless and impartial application of the law.

There are three major prosecutions to be undertaken. First, the Gaunt case; second, the Dominion Distillers, and third, the group of companies at Rock Island. There are others, many others, but these three cases ought to be and must be taken very seriously. Now regarding the Gaunt case, already this government, through the action of the present Minister of Marine, while acting as Minister of Customs last fall, has committeed itself to a settlement of the Gaunt case for $3,400, covering a claim which with penalties should produce $58,000. I am not saying, Mr. Speaker, that the $58,000 can be recovered. But I am within my right in saying this—that most eminent counsel, one who had given the subject most intimate study as a lawyer, advised me that he thought there was a very excellent case for prosecution. As a layman, and one who also gave the matter intimate study, I claim that as a matter of right and equity the $58,000 is due to the state and the case ought to be prosecuted. But what chance is there for success from a government whose Acting Minister of Customs and Excise now the Minister of Marine made an adjustment and settlement, which was supposed to have been final until this investigation reopened the matter, of $3,400 for this $58,000 claim?

Now, I turn to the Rock Island cases. In regard to the Rock Island companies,—and I may say there are probably about fifteen companies involved in this group—we know that the present Minister of Customs and Excise (Mr. Boivin) represents a constituency in that neighborhood, and is the intimate associate of some of the chief offenders. Now this is where some of my hon. friends will, perhaps, feel a little touchy. They may suggest, as my good friend the chairman so strongly pleaded a moment ago, that a minister should not be chided unduly for giving away to the importunities of his constituents. That is a kindly spirit, but I want to say to the House that in the face of these disclosures it is a spirit that will ruin Canada, it is a spirit that will degrade the public life of this Dominion; and I say further that it was just that buccaneering spirit of the ex-minister which largely contributed to the ghastly mess we have in that department at the present time. Now my hon. friend the present minister, in his speech of February

2, describes one of these gentlemen in the following terms, I am quoting from Hansard, page 702:

> Mr. Bissonette of Stanstead, a very good fellow, an intimate friend of mine, and a young gentleman whom I have met on several occasions both politically and socially—

And yet, Mr. Speaker, this same Bissonette destroyed his books and records, and ignored the summons of the committee. The auditors reported:

> This company has produced no books, except for the year 1926, which books were written up from another set of books which were destroyed.

Then again the auditors report:

> The amount of duty recoverable might be determined by the department to be very substantial.

They could not determine it. They could not determine the amount because the records were destroyed and the man would not come before the committee. Is the minister to be entrusted with the prosecution of this "intimate friend", this "young gentleman", this "very good fellow" as he describes him?

Now let us turn our thoughts for a moment to the Dominion Distillers case. In regard to this case I hold very strong views not only in connection with the denatured alcohol which was shipped out of the country contrary to law, not only in connection with the large sum, the sum of $700,000 odd, which ought to be paid into the treasury, but also because in connection with the shipments that this company brought in and landed somewhere on the Great Lakes, this government excused them and allowed them to come in because a bootlegger said he had landed his goods in Buffalo, and there was never a shade of evidence to support his word. In that case which involved over half a million dollars this company must be prosecuted. These multi-millionaires, these unscrupulous bootleggers, who encouraged poorer men to do the dirty work of their business and then posed before the public of their respective cities as benefactors with money of which the public treasury of this country had been defrauded, must be prosecuted.

I propose now, Mr. Speaker, to examine the chances of a vigorous prosecution of this gang by my hon. friend. This group consists of several intimately associated concerns with interlocking directorates. All of these concerns practise brazen-faced bootlegging of liquor into the United States as their chief business. That is their business and nothing else, and as the report indicates there is "a strong presumption that some portion of the liquor so shipped and cleared finds its way back into Canada for consumption" and pays no excise or customs duty. The concerns are: Dominion Distillers Products Co. Ltd.; W. George Limited; W. J. Hushion; the George Import and Export Co. Ltd.; the St. George Import and Export Co., together with certain other entanglements in the way of steamship companies and so on. They carried on operations and then let the company go bankrupt when its usefulness was done.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. gentleman is describing certain practices. Are these practices limited to Rock Island and the Great Lakes, or was there any evidence to show that they were prevalent in other parts of the Dominion as well?

Mr. STEVENS: I have tried at least three times to explain, and I am most unfortunate in my expression if my hon. friend has not grasped the point, that this investigation has only touched the fringe of the ground to be covered. I also said to my hon. friend a moment ago, if he will recall, that the practice regarding this liquor which we are talking of now was prevalent on the Atlantic, on the Pacific and on the Great Lakes. There is no question about it. It is general throughout the whole length of the country, but the investigation of four months and a half, an experience that I do not think any member of the committee wants to repeat, uncovered only certain limited areas. And regarding Rock Island, I want to say in justice to the Rock Island people I think it is perhaps there more pronounced than anywhere I know of. It exists also at Windsor and Niagara, and perhaps at other places, but at these two points I suspect the condition is not very much better.

Now then I want to proceed. Gregory George seems to be the chief executive head of this group of companies. He appeared before the committee during the early days of the investigation, and after perjuring himself left for Europe taking with him all the vital records of this group of companies. In spite of his evasion and of the loss of vital records, the auditors have uncovered ample evidence to warrant a prosecution of these people for the return to the treasury of a million dollars of revenue.

This man Cooper, who is reported to be a multimillionaire, and his wealthy associates, have made most of their wealth by defrauding the governments of Canada and the United States of revenue and by evading the laws of a friendly neighbour. I ask the question, is the minister likely to prosecute these people?

Will he prosecute them? Can we entrust to him, in the light of the evidence of his intimacy with them, the serious task of prosecution? Who was it, Mr. Speaker, who bought from the minister,—who must now prosecute him—the alcohol seized from the barge Tremblay? None other than W. J. Hushion, the political genius of the group, he of the "missionary" spirit, who came to Ottawa as a missionary for this gang. Will the minister dare to prosecute Hushion for selling this alcohol without having paid any excise? He will not, or, if he entered action at all it would be doomed to failure before its inception. Their defence will rest in acts of the minister himself.

Allow me, Sir, to review the facts and let the House judge for itself: In the late autumn of 1924 the barge Tremblay was apprehended by officers of the Quebec Liquor Commission while in the act of landing liquor contrary to the laws of Quebec. A few hours after this action, a customs officer, Duval, a mere tool of Bisaillon, appeared on the scene and seized the vessel and the liquor in the name of the customs of Canada.

The alcohol, some 16,000 gallons originally 24,000 gallons, was then placed in the king's bond at Montreal and remained there until December 1925. During the autumn of 1925, Mr. Wilson, the chief preventive officer, wrote to a number of firms for bids for this alcohol. He received some offers which were unsatisfactory and continued his efforts to make a sale in a regular and proper manner, as was his duty and he carried that duty out faithfully and well. During December 1925 the minister opened private negotiations with W. J. Hushion, ex M.P., who, according to his own evidence, was acting as a "missionary" for the notorious Cooper-George gang. During December, the minister closed a private sale of the alcohol to the Dominion Distillers for 36 cents a gallon. The customs law declares that all seized goods should be sold at not less than duty paid value, which in this instance would equal $10.50 per gallon, instead of 36 cents per gallon, otherwise it would be condemned to be destroyed.

That there is a large market for this alcohol within the law, is evidenced by the reports of the Quebec Liquor Commission, which showed that they handled at a price of $14.85 per gallon, 382,000 gallons in 1923, 359,000 gallons in 1924, 315,000 gallons in 1925; also it is in evidence that the department, when untrammelled by ministerial interference, had on a previous occasion sold approximately 7,000 gallons at $15.60 per gallon.

An hon. MEMBER: Duty paid?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, duty paid. I am coming to that point. I will deal with the duty paid phase at once.

I have under my hand a copy of Hansard of February 2, last, which contains, at page 702, what the minister had to say on that occasion regarding this alcohol. The minister twitted me about my "Holier than Thou" stand on that occasion, and I hope he will change his description this time a little. He said:

> It is true I sold about 14,500 gallons of alcohol to the Dominion Distilleries Corporation in Montreal at 36 cents a gallon. I may tell my hon. friend that that corporation could have manufactcred alcohol of the same quality for about 32 cents a gallon, but they were in a hurry for this alcohol because they required it for blending purposes.

I want hon. members to remember this point that they were in a hurry for this alcohol because they required it for blending purposes. On the next page he had this to say:

> When the alcohol was sold to the Dominion Distillers Corporation it was sold to go into a bonded warehouse and not one ounce, one bottle or one gallon of that alcohol can leave that bonded warehouse without the excise duty being paid on it.

I recall, Mr. Speaker, that when the minister made that statement there was thunderous applause on the other side of the House, and it was accepted as a complete answer to my charge on that occasion. The minister's defence rests on two grounds, first, that it was an urgent case, the alcohol was needed at once for blending purposes; and, secondly, that not an ounce, not one bottle, not one gallon would be released from bond until the last cent of duty was paid. Let us examine that defence. Was it urgent? The date of this sale was the end of December, the negotiations I think were carried on slowly. I have discovered in the files that the deal was consummated about the 24th or the 28th, of December, 1925, and delivery, I think was made about the 1st January. Was it urgent? The Dominion Distillers secured over 60,000 gallons in addition to this 16,000 gallons of precisely the same class of goods, during the month of December, which effectively disposes of the plea of "urgency."

Now I turn to the next point. Mark you, it was urgently required according to the minister for blending purposes. I pause here to say that that institution, in all its history from 1923 I think, down to the present time has only produced 600 gallons of liquor, and that 600 gallons is lying in its warehouses to-day, unfit for human consumption, even unfit to be bootlegged out, and therefore it must be pretty bad. As far as the evidence shows they produced nothing else, but they were simply a medium through which other institutions have bootlegged liquor wholesale to the public as they have bootlegged this stuff.

Now I come to another point. Was it required for blending purposes? Not an ounce was so used, and 82,500 gallons was sold and shipped by the Dominion Distillers within a period of weeks, and in fact within three weeks of the delivery of the alcohol sold by the minister. Furthermore, in the letter fixing the conditions of sale no mention is made of blending. I have here an extract from the letter setting forth the conditions under which this alcohol was sold to the Dominion Distillers under the order of the minister. This letter was written before he made his speech, and all this liquor, 82,000 gallons, including the 16,000 gallons, had been sold weeks before the minister made his speech in which he said that not one ounce would leave the bond until the excise was paid. That was sold between December 5 and January 18. The amount of 82,000 gallons was bootlegged into the United States. Three carloads did not go to their proper destination in Ontario. I have the letter of February 4, before me. These are the terms of the minister himself and of the department as to the conditions of the sale of the liquor. The conditions are:

I. To Dominion Distilleries at 36 cents per proof gallon.

II. Officer to accompany each load.

III. To be weighed on receipt at distillery.

IV. Such alcohol was not to be used for any purpose whatsoever except for the manufacture of specially denatured alcohol, grade No. 1-F in accordance with departmental specifications and under supervision of two officers.

V. For export only—removal in bond "and that a separate export bond for $5,000 was to be given by the Distilleries in connection with each export entry."

VI. To be an excise transaction and dealt with as by "Excise Warehousing Regulations Circular 327-C, page 3."

That refers to export. Let me go back for a moment. It was to be sold as grade No. 1-F in accordance with the departmental specifications. It was so denatured; that is true or at least the records show that it was. I have personal doubts about it, but I am not going to make the assertion. According to the evidence and what was generally known, it is a simple thing to extract these denaturants from this class of alcohol. That is, you put in certain denaturants, Diethylphthalate and Brucine sulphate. These may be extracted and the alcohol becomes potable. That was done with this alcohol. It was wittingly sold by these people as potable alcohol, and when the minister sold it to them, by the very fact of saying that it was for export, he demonstrated that it was for beverage purposes. Furthermore, the denatured No. 1-F alcohol is worth about eighty cents a gallon on the Canadian market to those who are at liberty to buy it. They sold this alcohol for $7 to $10 a gallon and not a cent of excise came into the public treasury in regard to it. As to the pious declaration of the minister to the House on February 2 last, that "not an ounce, not a bottle, not a gallon" would be released without duty being paid, I remember, as I said a moment ago, how my hon. friends cheered that as a final and absolute answer to that charge. But what are the facts? Not one ounce, not one bottle, not one gallon returned one cent of duty to the public revenue.

I call the attention of the House to the situation. On February 2, the minister made these statements, and prior to these statements having been made this stuff had been illegally distributed in the United States and in Canada. I pause to ask once again: Can this House entrust the present minister with the prosecution of these people for the recovery of revenue of which we have been defrauded. That is the question to decide here. It is not a question, as my hon. friend suggested out of the kindness of his heart, of whether we are going to condemn the minister because he responded to the importunities of friends. The question is whether we are going to continue to trust the minister who has allowed the public treasury to be defrauded out of these huge sums.

I come to another case. I hesitate a little in bringing this matter to the attention of the House, but I feel it is due to the House to do so. The Prime Minister has already received from me a letter and I have received his letter in reply. I will place them on Hansard if he so desires. I do not know whether he intended his letter to be in any way confidential. If he does, I will send it across to him.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does the hon. member refer to a letter that I received from him yesterday?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would suggest that he read all the correspondence, his letter to me and my reply to him.

Mr. STEVENS: I will read it only I wanted my right hon. friend's permission. I do not see how the House can ignore this case. About four or five weeks ago there was given to me certain information dealing with the condition at Regina as it relates to the illegal distribution of liquors, particularly alcohol, without paying excise and the tampering with government bonds. This was a rather serious charge. As a matter of fact a case was up in court about two years ago and this is the aftermath of it. I might just as well state here that the famous Harry Bronfman, now of Montreal, is I think at the bottom of the whole business. He is a prominent citizen of Canada so far as magnitude of business goes. When I say he is of Montreal, I do not want my hon. friends to think I am stabbing at Montreal, because he was then directing this business in Regina.

The facts are as follows: Information came into my hands of serious frauds on the excise at Regina. It was then too late to prepare the case for the committee because the information was not complete and furthermore it was of a character that required police control or direction. That is, it was a clear case, if placed in the hands of the police, that gave an opportunity of cleaning up a very serious mess. I felt that if we brought it before the committee in an unprepared and unfinished condition this would give publicity to the matter and those who were guilty would merely get away without being brought to justice. Therefore I took up the matter with Mr. Taylor, Assistant Deputy Minister of the department. I want to pause here to say that in my estimation Mr. Taylor and Commissioner Starnes have acted in absolutely and unqualifiedly good faith.

I gave Mr. Taylor all my information and I exacted from him only one condition, namely, that certain names mentioned should not be used publicly. He enlisted the assistance of the mounted police and a special operative was despatched to Regina. This operative set to work and within a week succeeded in unearthing quite a fraud, actually caught certain persons with the goods in their possession and put them under arrest. He retained Mr. J. F. Bryant, K.C., a prominent lawyer of Regina who worked with him on the case. They worked up the case and it was to come up in the police court a few days ago. The local Liberals got wind of it; they got busy with Ottawa and so far as my information goes, they insisted that Mr. Anderson, secretary of the Liberal Association of Regina, should be given the job of prosecuting the case. So instructions went out to put Mr. Bryant, K.C., off the case and to put Mr. Anderson, secretary of the Liberal Association, in charge. The operative was recalled to Montreal as a witness in a case there.

I am going to read the letter that I sent to the Prime Minister on Saturday. When this matter came to my attention I realized that it was just on a par with the practice that had been followed for years in this department, that when earnest, conscientious officers get a case where they can do something of a definite character, political influence comes in and the thing is stopped. So I ask the House to bear with me while I read two letters, one that I addressed to the Prime Minister on June 19, and his reply. This is my letter to the Prime Minister:

OTTAWA, June 19, 1926.

The Right Honourable
W. L. MACKENZIE KING, M.P.,
Prime Minister,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

DEAR MR. PRIME MINISTER:

In connection with the exposures made regarding wholesale smuggling in Canada, I attacked the government in my speech on February 2nd, and it is likely that I shall further do so when the report of the committee is under debate.

On the other hand, I desire to bring to your attention certain facts, first of which is this, that in some instances which seemed to me to be of a character which called for co-operation with the department, I have endeavoured to give the department my best assistance.

I have now before me information regarding two cases, a recital of the facts concerning which would indicate that, in spite of the disclosures of the last four months, there still remains within the ranks of the government those who are willing to submit to outside influence in order to prevent the ultimate result of illegal and criminal practices being arrived at through the regular courts of justice.

Cohen Case

This case has been dragging through the courts ever since last October, and recently with the connivance of the crown was traversed over until the fall assizes. Cohen is a rich, influential citizen of Montreal, and a notorious smuggler of silk goods on a wholesale scale, and officers of the crown had secured incontrovertible evidence against him, and he was faced with a jail sentence. Hence the furious efforts to postpone and delay his case. At the very time when his trial was to have been heard recently, it would appear that a "frame-up" was arranged between certain other officers of the crown and Cohen in connection with other smuggling operations, in return for which Cohen was to be relieved of the charges pending against him, for which the inevitable results would have been a jail sentence.

That is, under the amended act of last year.

A perusal of the files discloses that the chief preventive officer, Wilson, knew nothing whatever of this "frame-up."

Liquor Excise Frauds at Regina

Some weeks ago there came into my possession certain very damaging evidence of extensive excise frauds, forgeries of bogus labels, possession of customs seals, etc., on the part of certain notorious individuals in that city. I at once realized that, if these were exposed before the committee, it would probably result in the destruction of evidence that would bring about a conviction, and I realized it was more of a "police case," than one for investigation before the committee. I took the matter up with Mr.

Taylor, now acting chief of the Department of Customs and Excise. At this point I wish to state that in my estimation Mr. Taylor has been and is dong his best in the case. It appears, however, that certain influences in the government ranks are exercised to prevent this case from being successfully handled. The facts are as follows:

1. I handed all my confidential information to Mr. Taylor in confidence only in so far as names were concerned.

2. The information was placed in the hands of the mounted police, who arranged for a very competent operative to deal with the case, which operative had full liberty to approach my confidential informants.

3. He proceeded to Regina, and in co-operation with parties referred to, actually brought about the arrest of two men for the stealing of alcohol from bond. These men were apprehended, I am informed, with the goods in their possession and much valuable evidence was also secured, including the finding of customs seals, bogus labels, dies, etc., in the warehouse.

4. The R.C.M.P. operative retained Mr. Bryant, K.C., of Regina, to handle the case, made this choice so far as I know on his own initiative. Between them a very definite case was made ready for prosecution, when suddenly Cahill the police operative, is recalled on the excuse that he is required to give evidence on a case in Montreal, and Bryant is removed and one Anderson, secretary of the Liberal Association of Regina, is retained.

I submit to you, Sir, that in this instance where it was a vital "police case," political preference should not have interfered in the bringing of these men to justice. My information is that the frauds affecting the excise revenue in the city of Regina and the surrounding district over a period of years would amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The facts as disclosed to me reveal a continuance of a practice of political interference, which cannot now be justified, and which would seem to indicate a continuance of the very practices which brought about the breakdown in the Customs department.

I bring these facts to your attention, and respectfully, but firmly, request that immediate instructions be issued that in the ordinary processes of prosecution of criminals against Canadian law, capable officers of the department should not be interfered with by political traffickers.

Yours sincerely,

In reply to that I received this afternoon the following communication from the Prime Minister:

DEAR MR. STEVENS:

Immediately upon receipt of your letter relating to alleged liquor excise frauds at Regina and the Cohen case, I referred its representations to Commissioner Starnes, of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, for a report, which I have just received and enclose herewith.

These are the memoranda:

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE,

OTTAWA, ONT., June 21, 1926.

Memorandum for the Hon. the Minister in Control of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

With regard to the attached letter addressed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister, the undersigned begs to report as follows:

Cohen Case

The original charge against Cohen is still pending, and is in the hands of the Department of Customs and Excise, it having been investigated, it is believed, by Messrs. Duncan and Knox, of the Customs Preventive service. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police have had nothing to do with this original charge.

On the 19th of April, 1926 the Hon. the Minister of Customs and Excise handed the undersigned certain affidavits made by Benjamin J. Cohen, regarding smuggling, with the request that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police investigate.

The affidavit of Mr. Cohen was handed over to the officer commanding the mounted police in Montreal, with instructions to take action. Eventually with Cohen's co-operation, four men were arrested by the mounted police for smuggling, their names being Charles Bibaud; A. Prevost; Rene Prevost and Onel Bessette.

To make a success of the plan of operation, it was essential to have Benjamin J. Cohen participate in smuggling operations, and because he furnished the information which was the result of making charges against the other four already named, no charges are being laid against Cohen in this particular case, but this is the second or supplementary case, and has nothing whatever to do with the original charge against Cohen, which has been pending since last October. No promises of clemency or of any other kind were made by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police were given certain information, which was investigated, and with Cohen's assistance, the four men mentioned above appeared before Judge Decarie recently, and their cases are still pending before the Montreal courts. They come up for voluntary statement on the 22nd instant, in Montreal.

It is true that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police requested an adjournment of the original case against Cohen, so that he might be used by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the investigation of the statements made by him in his affidavit to the Hon. the Minister of Customs and Excise, but beyond this, no request or promises have been made. This action was taken with the full knowledge and understanding of the Acting Deputy Minister of Customs and Excise, although it is quite possible that the chief preventive officer knew nothing of the transaction.

Respectfully submitted,

CORTLANDT STARNES,

Commissioner.

Liquor Excise Frauds at Regina

The facts of this case, up to the end of paragraph 3 of Mr. Steven's letter are substantially correct.

With regard to the retention of Mr. Bryant, K.C., of Regina, to handle this case, and the alleged excuse for the removal of Secret Agent Cahill from Regina, the undersigned begs to report as follows:

It is always customary to apply to the Department of Justice for the appointment of counsel. The police agent had without authority, engaged Mr. Bryant, and he was instructed that Mr. P. Meudell Anderson, of Regina, had been appointed to conduct the case by the Department of Justice.

Secret Agent Cahill has not been removed from Regina; his absence is only temporary and merely to enable him to give evidence in a very important case in Montreal on which he worked for over six months, involving the forgery of certificates for the release of liquor from American bonded warehouses. Secret Agent Cahill is the principal witness in the latter case which comes up on the 22nd instant and in connection with which a large number of witnesses have been brought from different parts of the United States. He will be returned to Regina as soon as his evidence has been given in Montreal.

There has been no interference whatever in connection with Secret Agent Cahill's work. He knew before to went to Regina that he would have to appear in Montreal on the 22nd.

Arrests in the liquor excise frauds at Regina were made on the 17th of June; the courts fixed the 23rd instant for the hearing of the case and Assistant Commissioner Knight of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Regina, was instructed to ask for a remand of seven days in order to give Cahill sufficient time to return.

Respectfully sumbitted,

CORTLANDT STARNES,

Commissioner.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps the hon. member will allow me at this point to read the following communication from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe):

To supplement the accompanying memorandum from the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, I wish to say that Mr. Anderson is acting usually as legal agent for the government at Regina. He has always done so satisfactorily and there was no reason or justification to remove the legal work from his hands.

Mr. STEVENS: The point of the whole matter is this—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps my hon. friend will allow me one question so that the record may be complete. He has referred to Mr. Bryant, K.C., and he has also mentioned another gentleman as holding a particular office. Is it not true that Mr. Bryant is the president of the Conservative Association of Regina and was a Conservative candidate in the last provincial election?

4 p.m.

Mr. STEVENS: That may be true. I do not know but we will assume it is; I have no idea.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not see the reason for the hilarious roar from hon. gentlemen opposite. When has it been an offence for a citizen to be a member of a Conservative association, and a great virtue for a man to be secretary of a Liberal association. My point to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, is that a case involving the most intimate and intricate police investigation was given in good faith to the department with all the confidential information; the mounted police went about their duty properly; they had to keep the thing secret. Mr. Bryant happened to be the one who knew something about it, and the operative retained Mr. Bryant to guide him in the prosecution of that case. When they succeeded in apprehending some of the offenders suddenly action was stayed and there was a change in the counsel. Why? It was for purely political purposes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I submit that the statement of Commissioner Starnes is emphatically in contradiction with what my hon. friend has just said.

Mr. STEVENS: Commissioner Starnes knew nothing about the retention of Mr. Anderson until he was instructed by his minister to make the change. The point is that all through these investigations one thing has been constantly brought to the attention of the people of Canada, and to put it mildly they are exceedingly impatient with the practice. Wherever responsible officers of the department seemed to be doing their duty there would appear on the scene, through some subterranean method, individuals with influence who would interfere with the proper prosecution of those duties.

Take the Cohen case which I have already cited. Cohen was under surveillance for a considerable time; Officers Knox and Duncan, who have been carrying on investigations in different parts of the country but perhaps particularly in the great centre of Montreal, caught Cohen red-handed in four or five seizures. There are still three or four cases out against him and yet this case has been fiddled along through the courts, and there is ample evidence to show that it was political influence from members of the House which prevented the case from going forward. What happened? The case was set for hearing a few days ago, before the close of the spring assizes. Then this frame-up occurred, absolutely without the knowledge of departmental officials; they were not consulted at all. In the evidence before the House at the present moment is a statement or a precis showing clearly that this same man, Benjamin Cohen, sought to have this delay brought about by the excuse that he could give information regarding others. And why did he do this? He did it simply because the ablest lawyers in Montreal realized that they could not keep him out of gaol. The stay in proceedings, forsooth, is made because this notorious silk smuggler, Cohen, must not go to gaol; there is no other reason for the sudden interference, towards the end of the assizes, when they had exhausted every measure of chicanery to defeat the courts. There is no other excuse than that the present Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin) arranged through the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) for the mounted police to step in and interfere with the procedure in this case.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Absolutely untrue.

Mr. STEVENS: My only answer to the Minister of Justice is that three times during the course of my speech of February 2 he rose in his place and absolutely denied all knowledge of the matters which later came before the committee, and there is ample evidence on the files and records to show that the minister knew all about it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Still untrue.

Mr. STEVENS: I attach to the minister's statement to-day exactly the same weight which the evidence shows to be merited in the previous case.

Some one asks me about the Aziz case; I will not deal with that. The hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell) will take up that case, and I do not intend to trespass on his time.

Mr. POWER: Before the hon. gentleman passes to another point, will he tell me whether these two cases which he has just mentioned were brought to the attention of the committee?

Mr. STEVENS: The Cohen case was set out in full before the committee; the precis is on file. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the pages, but there are probably almost twenty pages of evidence in connection with that case. It was not brought before the committee for trial because it was then in the courts, and that is one of the reasons, Mr. Speaker, why I feel so intensely about this interference. Just as I said a short time ago, it presages that in the future the same influences and the same practices which have brought about the debauchery and collapse of this department will be carried on.

Mr. POWER: Will the hon. gentleman tell me whether the Regina case was brought before the committee?

Mr. STEVENS: No. I told the House a moment ago, and I also stated in my letter to the Prime Minister, that inasmuch as it required intimate and secret police work in order to be successful I thought it unwise to bring the matter before the committee. I gave it in confidence to the officers of the department and again I say that Mr. Taylor, now in charge of the department, acted in this matter in a most exemplary way; I have no fault to find whatever. It was not until from the Justice department political influence interfered that anything went wrong in connection with that case.

In the preparation of this report consideration was given to the responsibility of the present minister and his colleagues in regard to certain cases in the direction of which he allowed himself to be influenced by political pressure and political expediency involving serious violation of the principles of the inviolability of the courts. Consideration was also given to the conduct of several members whose alleged importunity influenced the minister to give partial attention to particular cases. Upon these points, Mr. Speaker, the committee could not agree. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) refused to support a motion to report censure of the minister, and in a substitute motion restricted the action of the committee to a mere reference of the evidence to the House. As the hon. member had the deciding vote, and the Liberal members rejected both motions, it prevented the incorporation of either motion in the report. I merely make this statement in explanation of the absence of any such reference in the report.

I hope the House appreciates the fact that this report is an intensely important document; it contains a great deal of valuable constructive matter, and it also lays upon the administration certain grave duties. The question before the House is not so much if you approve of the general terms of the report, but rather if this report is a good one —as it is generally admitted to be—can this administration be entrusted with the duty of carrying out the terms of the report? And now I have an amendment to move, Mr. Speaker, which I will read, but before doing so, Mr. Speaker, I might say that it is really a composite amendment made up of the two that were proposed to the committee. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Doucet):

That the report be not now adopted, but that it be referred back to the special committee with instructions to add thereto the following clauses as sub-clauses to paragraph six:

"The evidence further discloses that ministerial action has been influenced by the improper pressure of political associates and friends of the minister, or acting minister, administering the department, resulting in the suspension and in some instances the abandonment of prosecutions against those charged with violation of the statutes, and in the loss of revenue to the country. Moreover, successful appeals have been made to the minister and acting minister administering the department to improperly interfere with the course of justice between the conviction of the offenders and the execution of judgment thereon. The Prime Minister and the government had knowledge for some considerable time of the rapid degeneration of the Department of Customs and Excise, and their failure to take prompt and effective remedial action is wholly indefensible. The conduct of the present minister of the department, the Hon. George H. Boivin, in the case of Moses Aziz, is utterly unjustifiable.

"Your committee deplores the practice, as revealed by the evidence, of certain men influential in public life to direct appeals, to the minister to relax and depart from the proper administration of his department for reasons of political expediency.

"Your committee is of the opinion that this practice is detrimental to the best interests of the country and prejudicial to the administration of the department.

"And that the committee for such purpose be revived."

Hon. GEORGE H. BOIVIN (Minister of Customs and Excise): Mr. Speaker, upon one ground at least I am in perfect accord with the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), and that is in expressing my thanks, the thanks of this House of Commons and, I am sure, of the people of Canada to the members of the Customs committee, without distinction of political party, for the strenuous labours that they have performed, for the close attention that they have given to their duties, and for the fairly comprehensive report which they have presented to this House this afternoon. I agree still more heartily with him in his remarks concerning the work performed upon that committee by the chairman of the committee, our good friend from St. Henri (Mr. Mercier), who presided over all of its sessions, and who certainly displayed a spirit of fairness and impartiality which had a great deal to do, I am sure, with removing the political passion and prejudice that may have been apparent during the first few meetings of the committee.

I am not prepared to go quite the same distance with my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre in saying that I agree entirely with every word that the report contains, but speaking as a member of the government, and also speaking personally as Minister of Customs and Excise, I will say that every recommendation contained in that report if it is approved and adopted will be carried out to the letter so far as it is possible to do so. I regret, for instance, to see in the report among those who are recommended for retirement the name of Mr. Henry McLaughlin, surveyor of customs and excise for the port of Montreal. It is not my duty to defend Mr. McLaughlin before this House, I do not propose to do so, but as I have received a letter from him to-day, I merely ask to place it on record in order that if by any chance the amendment is carried and the report is referred back to the committee that they may consider the contents of this letter during their special session. The letter reads as follows:

Hon. GEORGE H. BOIVIN,
Minister of Customs and Excise,
Ottawa.

I hate very much to trouble you at this time, but I feel very keenly the manner in which they propose to retire me. I have not been called before the committee to answer any charge, consequently I am unaware of having done anything that would call for a decision such as the committee has rendered.

As regards the liquor samples referred to in Mr. Duncan's report, I wish to state positively that I have not received a single liquor sample during the past six years. Before that Mr. Cote and Mr. Corbeil were in the habit of distributing before Christmas a few liquor samples to the employees.

Any orders issued by me to the officers at distilleries and other plants were always authorized by the department, otherwise I would not have issued them.

I feel that I have your entire sympathy and would like very much to retire under different circumstances, as I certainly have no objections to retiring but would like to do so of my own volition.

Yours very truly,

HENRY MCLAUGHLIN,
Surveyor of Customs-Excise.

I merely place the letter on Hansard in order, as I said before, that it may be considered by the committee if by any chance they re-convene to discuss the amendment which has been submitted to the House by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre to-day.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre prided himself on placing me in contradiction with some of the remarks I made on the second day of February last in answer to his unexpected charges. He has built up a very vociferous case against me by saying that I had misled the House when I pretended that the alcohol sold to the Dominion Distillery Products Limited was for blending purposes instead of denaturing purposes. That, apparently, is the only contradiction which he has so far found in my remarks. That is the only falsehood I addressed to the House of Commons when I spoke on that famous night of February 2, 1926. My hon. friend, I think, will do me the justice of saying that on that occasion I spoke without preparation, without notes, without investigation. My hon. friend took the trouble on two different occasions since the opening of this House to rise and make a special request to you, Mr. Speaker, to pass to the order of motions, to withdraw two or three motions standing in his name on the order paper, but it was without any notice that he withdrew his original motion from the order paper in order to take this party by surprise on that famous night. My hon. friend may shake his head, but I defy him to rise in his place and say that it was not to the Clerk rather than to the House that he addressed himself in order to have his original motion withdrawn from the order paper, knowing well that while that motion was on the order paper he could not take this party by surprise, and that would have to be withdrawn before he could bring in his amendment to the motion made by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. STEVENS: That is nonsense.

Mr. BOIVIN: That night I did say that I had sold to a personal friend, W. J. Hushion, fifteen thousand and some odd gallons of alcohol which had been stored on the barge Tremblay. Let me tell my hon. friend, and he knows it very well, that one of the reasons why the attack was made upon W. J. Hushion was because he was a former Liberal member of the House of Commons. That is where I formed my friendship with that gentleman; and I assert now, as I asserted then, that when Mr. Hushion spoke to me for the first time about purchasing alcohol, it was a revelation to me to know that he was interested in any way in the Dominion Distillers Products Limited. I ascertained it then for the first time. I went to an officer of the department to whom my good friend the hon. member for Vancouver Centre has just paid such a high tribute of praise, Mr. G. W. Taylor. He is acting deputy minister now but at that time was assistant deputy minister and chief of the Excise branch in the Department of Customs and Excise. I asked Mr. Taylor if we had a right to sell the alcohol. He told me that we had and he has so sworn before the committee. I asked him what would be a reasonable rate for the alcohol. He told me that he would look up and ascertain the highest rate at which alcohol was ever sold to a distillery. He examined the records. We had an offer of 35 cents, an offer made by the same corporation, in the office of Mr. Wilson in the department, but which had not been reported to the deputy minister, which had not been reported to the chief of the Excise branch, and which had not been reported to the minister. It was ascertained that on one occasion alcohol of that kind had been sold for 35⅛ cents, and it was for that reason that I told Mr. Hushion by long distance telephone that he could not get the alcohol for less than 36 cents a gallon. I said that he was in a hurry to get it but my hon. friend pretends that could not be because he had bought 60,000 gallons elsewhere. My hon. friend admits that the Dominion Distillers had bought 60,000 gallons elsewhere for 38 cents a gallon, or two cents more per gallon than the alcohol sold by the government. My hon. friend and his papers throughout Canada have tried to make out that this government lost over $800,000 by the sale of that alcohol when he admits himself that there was a difference of two cents a gallon between the price paid to the government and the price that would have to be paid to other distillers in order to buy it from them. My hon. friend knows well that this alcohol could not have been sold with excise duty unless it was sold for potable purposes.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. STEVENS: Which it was.

Mr. BOIVIN: My hon. friend now says "which it was." My hon. friend just said a few minutes ago, and I defy him to deny it, that this alcohol was No. 1 F denatured alcohol exported from Canada under bond, with the exception of three cars which were possibly not exported from this country. If there were three cars of alcohol not exported from Canada I want to say that the Minister of Customs and Excise or the Department of Customs and Excise at that time knew nothing about it. I want to say that every carload was shipped from the distillery under a bond that it would be exported from Canada and that not one of these bonds was released until the B-13 or the export entries signed by the officer at the border were returned to the department. That is the precaution which was used to make sure that No. 1-F denatured alcohol would not be sold here in Canada. My hon. friend knows that no distillery would pay excise on alcohol when it goes into the distillery. The excise on alcohol is paid when the alcohol comes out, and I stated the other night, and I repeat now, that not one ounce, not one bottle, not one gallon of that alcohol could have left that distillery for potable purposes without the payment of excise duty on it, and when it did leave the distillery without the payment of excise, it left in tin cans labelled "poison" on its way to the United States, not for potable purposes, but as No. 1-F denatured alcohol, as the hon. member says himself, for rubbing and medicinal purposes.

Mr. STEVENS: Contrary to the regulations.

Mr. BOIVIN: My hon. friend says, "but once before alcohol was sold at fifteen dollars and some cents a gallon." Alcohol was once sold to the Quebec Liquor Commission, good alcohol which had been seized.

Mr. STEVENS: Precisely the same as this.

Mr. BOIVIN: How can my hon. friend make that assertion?

Mr. STEVENS: Because it is in evidence.

Mr. BOIVIN: I thought my hon. friend would make that statement, and that is why I want to read a letter from the Quebec Liquor Commission. Why, all through this inquiry it has been said that the minister was not trying to do his duty, that he was trying to favour a political friend, that if this liquor had only been sold to the Quebec Liquor Commission we could have got our excise upon it. I hold in my hand a letter signed by the deputy chairman of the Quebec Liquor Commission, written to my much despised predecessor on the 29th January, 1925, stating that they would not buy that alcohol because it was not fit for human consumption.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister explain why that letter was not put in evidence and the witness produced for examination?

Mr. BOIVIN: Yes, I shall be glad to explain why it was not produced.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister's deputy swore it was fit for use.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. STEVENS: The Prime Minister and other hon. members interrupted. Take your medicine.

Mr. BOIVIN: I think the question asked by the right hon. leader of the opposition is a fair one. He wishes to know why this letter was not produced before the committee. Because the hon. member who received this letter was not called before the committee and also because the letter was never addressed to the department. If it had been addressed to the department it would undoubtedly be on the departmental files, but it was addressed to the Hon. Jacques Bureau when he was at home at Trois-Rivières, undoubtedly detained there through illness. My hon. friends smile, sneer and laugh—the same hon. members who allowed Hon. Jacques Bureau to put through his estimates year after year without a single dissenting voice; the same hon. gentlemen who were willing then and there to accept his favours. All of them are not here but many of them are present, and they are going to sneer because I said that during the past year the hon. senator had been ill and unable to attend to his departmental duties. It was a secret from no one.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Nobody sneered at that.

Mr. BOYS: I think the minister is quite out of order; nobody sneered. The minister should calm himself.

Mr. BOIVIN: Perhaps my good friend the right hon. leader of the opposition will tell us what the hon. members sneered at?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will tell him what I smiled at. It was the suggestion of the minister that because the letter was received by Mr. Bureau it could not go into evidence.

Mr. BOIVIN: The letter would undoubtedly have gone into evidence if it had been in my possession at the time the barge Tremblay matter was before the committee. It was reported to me in the department that this alcohol had been offered to the Quebec Liquor Commission and that the Quebec Liquor Commission had refused to buy it, but I had no documentary evidence to that effect. I asked the Hon. Mr. Bureau if he could not look through his files at home and ascertain whether he had received a letter from the Quebec Liquor Commission to that effect. He told me he remembered the incident very well. He looked up the letter and he handed it to me a day or two after the evidence before the committee had been closed. I did not think it worth while to re-open the matter, because I did not think my friends on the other side who know very well that denatured alcohol is not subject to excise duty, who know very well that in selling the alcohol we saved $5,000 for the federal treasury, who know that if the alcohol could not be sold for its duty paid value, it would have to be thrown into the St. Lawrence river, would stoop to such petty picayune political methods, and bring this up as one of the accusations against a minister who has been attempting to do his duty since he has been honoured by the Prime Minister with an appointment to that office. The letter is written in French, dated 29th January, 1925, and I will first read it in that language in order that any mistake of my own in translation will not be attributed to the writer. The letter reads:

Commission des liqueurs de Québec.—The Quebec Liquor Commission

Québec, Canada, le 29 janvier 1925.

Honorable JACQUES BUREAU,
Ministre des Douanes,
Trois-Rivières, Qué.

Mon cher ministre,

La Commission, après avoir fait analyser et déguster l'alcool saisi sur la barge Tremblay, en est arrivé à la conclusion de ne pas acheter cet alcool.

Cet alcool de contrebande ne peut en aucune façon être comparé à l'alcool que nous achetons des distilleries canadiennes; il ne peut être mêlé à notre alcool ordinaire qu'en proportion de dix pour cent, et comme nous ne vendons que cent mille gallons par année, il nous faudrait un an pour écouler dix mille gallons de la barge Tremblay. Dans les circonstances, il faudrait que le prix fut bien bas pour que la Commission y trouve son profit. Il est de plus prouvé par nos chimistes que cet alcool n'a pas l'âge de nos alcools canadiens, d'après la loi.

La Commission a donc décidé de ne plus acheter ces alcools, à moins qu'ils ne nous soient vendus à très bas prix. Le département dont vous êtes le ministre pourra donc disposer de cet alcool lorsqu'il le jugera à propos.

Veuillez me croire, mon cher ministre,
Votre tout dévoué,
H. G. CARROLL.

The English translation would read about as follows:

My dear minister:

The commission, after having caused the alcohol seized on the barge Tremblay to be analyzed and examined, has come to the conclusion that it cannot buy this alcohol. This alcohol, which was smuggled into the country, cannot be compared in any way with the alcohol which we buy from our Canadian distilleries. It cannot be mixed with our ordinary alcohol, except in a proportion of 10 per cent, and as we do not sell more than 100,000 gallons per year it would be necessary for us to take at least a year to dispose of 10,000 gallons of the barge Tremblay liquor. Under the circumstances it would be necessary that the price be very low for the commission to find any profit whatever in the transaction. It is moreover proved by our chemist that this alcohol has not the age of our Canadian alcohol as required by law.

The commissioners therefore decided to not buy this alcohol, unless it can be sold to us at a very very low price. The department of which you are the minister can therefore dispose of it whenever it finds it advisable to do so.

Believe me, my dear minister,
Yours devotedly,
H. G. CARROLL.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the date?

Mr. BOIVIN: January 29, 1925. That I think disposes of at least one accusation—the accusation levelled against the minister of trying to favour a political friend and endeavouring to divert revenue from the public treasury.

Referring to the statement of my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre, I would like to disprove at once the claims that a great deal of the alcohol thus denatured was not shipped out of the country. He has read a letter, for which he says I am responsible, written by the acting deputy minister, the existence of which letter, he says, the minister well knew on the second February. I never saw the letter and my hon. friend knows that I never saw it. It was written by the chief of the Excise department to the Dominion Distillers giving them the same specific instructions concerning the shipment of denatured alcohol as have always been given to every distillery in the country including some of those old reliable distilleries who happen to have Conservative owners whom my hon. friend does not wish to blame or to hold up to censure. The instructions given to the distilleries are absolutely the same, and the letter sent to the Dominion Distillers on this occasion was exactly the same as the others.

If it is true that the Dominion Distillers succeeded in evading the law; if it is true that two or three carloads of that denatured alcohol did not reach the United States; if it is true that it was sold in Canada and that is not proven, it is due to one of two things. Either the bond for export has not been released and the export entry has not been returned, or some dishonest official on the border has signed a false export entry and returned it to the department without exporting the liquor. One or the other is the case. Is the minister to be held responsible for that? When I find employees on the border not living up to the liquor regulations of this country, not living up to the rules prescribed for the export of liquor from this country, those employees will be punished and dismissed. One of those employees from a port not far from Windsor is now under suspension for having acted as a distiller's agent, and there is a member sitting on the other side of the House, who will vote in favour of this amendment, who has come to my office in this building twice asking me to reinstate this man.

Mr. STEVENS: Does the minister not know that this alcohol No. 1-F special is not admissible to the United States?

Mr. BOIVIN: I will say to my hon. friend that no alcoholic liquor of any kind is admissible to the United States.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend has missed the point of my question. He argues that this alcohol was sold as denatured alcohol for export, not as potable alcohol. Denatured alcohol of certain classes is not prohibited in the United States, but this class of denatured alcohol is prohibited because it can easily be converted into potable alcohol, according to the evidence and according to the United States regulations.

Mr. BOIVIN: I agree with my hon. friend to a certain extent. I do not know why he rose the second time to interrupt me. In answer to his question whether I knew that this alcohol No. 1-F special is not admissible to the United States, I said that all alcoholic liquor is contraband in the United States.

Mr. STEVENS: That is not my point.

Mr. BOIVIN: I say that rye, Scotch, gin and beer are contraband in the United States, and still they are being sent there by the boat load every day to the knowledge of my hon. friends opposite, of hon. members on this side of the House, of the Department of Customs and of the United States government, who are advised of every shipload that leaves Windsor for any point in the United States. Every boatload of liquor that is loaded at any one of the border points is given a clearance only when notice of that clearance has been given to a United States officer on the other side of the boundary line. It is true that those boats may never go to the ports to which they are destined. It is impossible for us to follow them or to determine exactly where they are going.

I agree entirely with my hon. friend and with the recommendations of the report that closer and more stringent regulations must be made concerning the export of liquor from Canada to the nation termed by my hon. friend, "a friendly nation to the south of us." But what I want my hon. friend to admit—and I know he will be fair enough to admit it—that up to the present time and especially since I took charge of the department, we have been living up to the rules and regulations of the treaty made between Canada and the United States of America. My hon. friend may well shake his head, but since I entered the department instructions have been given that there will be no camouflage bills of lading. For five or six days the export of liquor was practically paralyzed by a ruling given by the department that shipments of liquor would not be given clearance to Mexico or other points that could not be reached by the Great Lakes; that those camouflaged bills of lading would no longer be accepted; that it is absolutely necessary to show at the inland point from which the liquor was being shipped that it was being shipped from Windsor or some other point for export from Canada and that it must be accompanied by the export entry showing its destination in the United States. We have lived up in every respect to the treaty made between this country and the United States.

What I say—and I have been led away, by the question asked by my hon. friend—is that this No. 1-F denatured alcohol is in absolutely the same position as other alcohol shipped from Canada to the United States. It was shipped with an export entry; the bond given for its shipment was released only when the export entry was returned to the department, and therefore I say that not one dollar of revenue has been lost in favouritism to the Dominion Distillery Products Company Limited, or any other distiller in Canada.

There is one other point I want to make. My hon. friend says that I am not qualified to collect the accounts that may be due to the Department of Customs and Excise by some of the people who are brought before the committee, because I live in and represent a constituency not far from Rock Island, Que. My hon. friend will at least, I hope, admit that my constituency is not contiguous to that of Stanstead. But even if it were, even if I represented the constituency of Stanstead itself and even although the task might be a disagreeable one, I think I would be still qualified to order a competent attorney to take the necessary legal proceedings against any persons who have defrauded the Dominion government.

The hon. member says that the minister admitted in his speech some months ago that he was a friend of Mr. Alfred Bissonnette I admitted it some months ago. I was his friend; I have been his friend for several years. He represents the county of Stanstead in the Quebec legislature; I represent the county of Shefford in the Dominion parliament. We have been out on many a political campaign together. But it was not until after this inquiry started that I knew that he had any interest whatever in the Peerless Overall Company or that I even knew that he was interested in the sale of overalls. I knew him as a politician and as a friend. The statement I made the other night I repeat, and I have nothing to retract in that connection.

There is, it is true, one more charge against me, a charge of such grave consequence that by it not only myself but the entire government of which I am a member must totter and fall. What is that charge? My hon. friend has left to a special pleader the task of arraigning me upon it before this jury of the House of Commons. That charge is that I consented to listen to the representations of a member of parliament before I would order the issue of a warrant of commitment against a man who had been accused and convicted of having smuggled liquor in his possession. That is the charge; but I ask the House to be good enough to go into the details of it and see to what extent I am guilty. To read the newspapers published under the direction of hon. gentlemen opposite one would almost conclude that I had gone to the province of New Brunswick and argued and pleaded with a judge not to incarcerate this man, Moses Aziz. Let me however tell the House what actually happened.

Moses Aziz was found guilty on the 18th day of August, 1925, three weeks before I even surmised that I would ever be appointed Minister of Customs. At the time that sentence was rendered I had no idea whatever that I might be Minister of Customs on September 5 following. No request had come to me, and I had no knowledge either of the case itself or even of the existence of Aziz until the second day I was in my office. Sitting at my desk in Ottawa, on or about September 28, I was approached by my secretary who had several hundred letters to dispose of,—the accumulation of a month. He was trying as rapidly as possible to deal with them, and reading this one to me he remarked, "This is a request from Mr. Robichaud, the member for Gloucester, asking you to withhold a warrant of commitment against a man who was arrested down there for having smuggled goods in his possession." Having absolutely no experience and no knowledge of the laws of New Brunswick my first step was to call in the deputy minister and inquire of him whether we had the power to withhold execution of the sentence until such time as the member could make whatever representations he had to offer. I was in a hurry to return home, having attended a meeting of council that day. It was during the election campaign and I had been in the Eastern Townships for several days. I had come to Ottawa on a hurried visit and was endeavouring as far as possible to relieve the burdens of my colleague sitting to my left who had continued to act as Minister of Customs and Excise. Because of that desire to relieve him so far as I could, I went to the department and looked into the correspondence with my secretary. When Mr. Farrow, the deputy minister, was called in, he not only declared that we had the right to do as requested but, he added,

5 p.m.

"There is a letter on the file from the chief of the Remission branch in the Department of Justice in which the statement is made that the Department of Justice cannot deal with the case, but that the Minister of Customs has a perfect right to dispose of it as he sees fit." That letter, signed by Mr. Gallagher, will be found on the files, having been produced in evidence before the committee.

Now what are the facts? Why did the minister, even at that late date, consider it advisable to hear the member representing the constituency before this man was sent to gaol? There were several reasons. A letter from Mr. Stewart, the customs preventive officer at that point, which unfortunately was not filed, but which I have here, shows that Moses Aziz had turned King's evidence and had convicted his own brother and another person of smuggling. That evidence was given in a New Brunswick court on the same day as Aziz himself was convicted, and there was a promise from this Mr. Stewart, a veiled promise, an uncertain promise, if you like, that instead of being prosecuted for an indictable offence under section 219, Aziz would be prosecuted summarily. And that conveyed to him the impression that he would be relieved of a gaol sentence. That is one point. The next point is this: there is an assertion in the record, it is read into the record in a letter from Mr. Veniot, that the smuggling operation complained of took place before the twenty-seventh day of June, 1925, the date upon which the new law was adopted. Previous to that date no gaol punishment was obligatory, and the smuggling in this case had actually taken place before the new law went into force. But it was because Aziz happened still to have the goods in his possession, not having disposed of them in the interval, that he was sentenced to imprisonment. The law, however, provides for imprisonment for a term of one year, and he was sentenced to three months' imprisonment only. The judge therefore must himself have made a mistake; evidently he had doubts about his right to send the man to prison, because he sentenced him to a period of three months. There was a promise, in the form of a telegram from my predecessor to Mr. Veniot, to the effect that a revaluation of the liquor would be made, which revaluation had not taken place. These were the facts I had before me and I had no knowledge whatever of the practice in New Brunswick. I have since ascertained that the custom in New Brunswick is that after a man is condemned and after sentence has been passed upon him, it is incumbent upon the private prosecutor to go to the court and solicit the issue of a warrant of commitment which he hands to the gaoler in order that the convicted person may be apprehended and lodged in gaol. That is not the custom in my province but, I am informed that is the practice followed in New Brunswick. Now, the Minister of Customs, who in this instance was acting in the capacity of prosecutor, did not make any request of the judge to withhold sentence. He did not make any request of the sheriff to stay the execution of his writ. The Minister of Customs merely carried out his duties as he had a right to do, giving notice to his own officer in the province of New Brunswick that this man was not to be incarcerated until Mr. Robichaud, the member representing the constituency, could come to Ottawa and confer with the minister. Was there any intent on the part of the minister to keep the man out of gaol? Do my hon. friends believe that was the intent? Some smile now, although some do not. Some of them are going to vote against the Minister of Customs in this case with a great deal of regret. More than one of them will rise in his place and vote through party allegiance.

Mr. MEIGHEN: So far as the first statement is concerned, all who vote against the minister will vote with regret.

Mr. BOIVIN: I thank my right hon. friend for that statement, and I believe it. I believe the right hon. gentleman would crucify his own brother with regret but he would do it in order to serve the Conservative party. I would that it were possible for every hon. member to vote according to his own wish and his own opinion; I am quite willing to leave my case in the hands of this honourable House if hon. members are not obliged to follow party ties. Is it a crime for a minister of the crown to say to a member of parliament, "I will wait until I hear you."

Mr. RYCKMAN: Precious help in election.

Mr. BOIVIN: I told my hon. friend five minutes ago that I had not seen the letter at the time the request was granted; the request was transmitted to me in a very hurried way by my secretary, sitting on the other side of the desk. But I say now that if I had seen the request and been cognizant of all the other circumstances my conduct would have been the same; I will say further that if this request had come to me from a Conservative member of parliament, my conduct and my reply would have been absolutely the same.

As I said a moment ago, I had no intention of keeping this man out of gaol if he were guilty; on the other hand, I had no intention of letting him go to gaol if I could help it if, on the merits of the case, he did not deserve to go to gaol. That will be made very clear by reference to page 1324 of the evidence, where you will find the letter written by the minister to Mr. Robichaud on November 18, 1925, two weeks after I took possession of my desk. I said:

I have before me a memorandum concerning the case of Mr. Moses Aziz, who was condemned by the court to a fine of $150 and to three months' imprisonment for having had liquor in his possession.

The fine of $150 was paid, but the execution of the warrant of commitment was temporarily suspended.

I have examined the case with care, and I can find no reason for which the imposed sentence should not be executed, but I will keep the matter in suspense until I get a reply from you, in the event of your having other representations to make to me.

The officers of the department contend that the efforts made to prevent smuggling of liquors will be much lessened if this man is let go without further punishment.

Yours very devotedly,

Geo. H. Boivin.

I think it only fair to the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) to say that he immediately answered this letter, and under date of November 25, wrote as follows:

Honourable and Dear Sir,

Referring to your favour of November 18, on the subject of penalties imposed on Mr. Moses Aziz, for having had liquors in his possession, will you please do your best to suspend all proceedings until I see you when I return to Ottawa.

With an expression of my best sentiments,

Yours truly,

(Signed) J. G. Robichaud,
Member for Gloucester.

Hon. members should remember that it was then pretty well decided that the House should meet on December 10, so the delay asked for was not long. It was after this date that the papers throughout the length and breadth of Canada carried a notice that my good friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) intended to demand a parliamentary inquiry to probe into the most hidden recesses of the administration of the Department of Customs and Excise. This case was on my desk awaiting consideration. It is true that after this notice had been given I could have called Mr. Robichaud and said, "I am scared; here is a parliamentary inquiry coming on. This man Aziz must get into gaol before they are able to reach his case, so we will be able to save ourselves from criticism." But that is not the conduct I wanted to follow; I wanted to place the record before the committee in the same condition as it was at the time notice was given that such a committee would be constituted, in order that the Department of Customs and Excise might be judged upon its merits and that the minister might be judged according to the crime he had committed.

I think I gave all the extenuating circumstances in connection with the matter when I referred to the fact that the liquor had been imported before the new law came into force; that under the new law, the sentence could not have been for three months; that a revaluation of the liquor had been promised, but had not been made, and hon. members should not forget that Mr. Moses Aziz was not entirely unpunished. He had already paid a fine of $150 and costs of $38, and his liquor had been confiscated. The Minister of Customs had not withdrawn the warrant of commitment, nor had it been annulled; the minister had not given a pardon to Mr. Moses Aziz, but was merely awaiting the further representations of Mr. Robichaud. The proof of that statement lies in the fact that Mr. Moses Aziz is now in gaol, serving his sentence. After the matter had been considered by the committee, after I had given my evidence before the committee and the facts were made known, then and only then did I carry out the suggestion of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, that Moses Aziz be sent to gaol at once. Then I gave instructions through Mr. Wilson, the chief preventive officer, to send Moses Aziz to gaol.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): When did you see Mr. Robichaud?

Mr. BOIVIN: On the morning following my evidence before the Customs committee I met Mr. Robichaud and talked with him in the rotunda opposite this door. I asked him for his additional reasons, if he had any to give me, and Mr. Robichaud said that unfortunately he had no reasons other than those which were already on file, but that he thought those were sufficient. He had given several other reasons concerning the condition of the man's family and the necessity that he be free to provide for them. I spoke with him the morning after I gave my evidence before the committee, twelve hours before I gave instructions to Mr. Wilson to have Mr. Aziz incarcerated.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Before the minister passes on, in order that we may be absolutely clear, do I understand that the minister had not himself actually read the text of Mr. Robichaud's letter when he came to his decision in the matter?

Mr. BOIVIN: When I came to my first decision, when the telegram was sent to the officer under my instructions, and when the first letter was written to Mr. Robichaud the letter had not been read to me and I had not read the letter. I want to explain to my hon. friend who asked the question how it happened that I answered a letter which I had not read. I will explain very briefly, and any man who has been through a minister's office knows how these things happen. I returned to Ottawa for the second meeting of council after I had been sworn in as a minister; I came to the department and found on the desk a pile of at least 150 letters. A great many of the letters had already been answered by my secretary; the replies were awaiting my signature, all ready to be sent out, but he wanted first to submit them to me before they were signed and despatched. This letter was among them. I cannot remember whether the reply had already been dictated by my secretary or whether he did that after I had authorized him to do so, but going rapidly through the correspondence he said, "This is a request from Mr. Robichaud that the warrant of commitment against Mr. Moses Aziz be not executed at once." I said, "When was Mr. Aziz convicted?" He said, "A long time ago, on August 18." I said, "He is not in gaol yet?" "No." "Why was it held up?" "Well, there was to be a revaluation of the liquor." "Was the revaluation made?" "No, not yet." "Have I the right to hold up this matter?" "Yes, you have." "Well, then, hold it up." That is the case, and that is the reason why our Conservative friends claim that the government is going to be thrown out of office. I want to say that if there is any responsibility it does not rest upon my colleagues; that responsibility is upon my own shoulders, and it is due to my inexperience at the time the order was given. But I have ascertained that Mr. Gallagher made no mistake when he wrote to the minister, or rather to the Department of Customs, because it was just previous to my entry, on the 29th of August, 1925, as follows:

Dear Sir,—Representations have been made to the honourable, the Minister of Justice, by the Premier of New Brunswick on the case of Moses A. M. Aziz, convicted at Bathurst on August 18th, of illegal possession of illicitly imported liquor. A fine of $150 was imposed, together with a jail sentence of three months, and the fine has been paid.

The Premier of New Brunswick suggests that the imprisonment be suspended, as the offender is a married man, in business for himself, and the term of imprisonment will occasion him much harship. Moreover, it is stated that Aziz was not aware that the mere possession of smuggled liquor was in itself an offence, and further that the possession dated long before the Act was amended.

As this man is not imprisoned, the Minister of Justice cannot order his release; it therefore, is a matter for your Department to decide whether or not the magistrate should be asked to issue a warrant of commitment.

Yours truly,

M. F. GALLAGHER,
Chief of Remissions Branch.

It was up to my department, it depended on me to decide whether or not the magistrate would be asked to issue a warrant against the accused, and still the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) in committee said on many an occasion: Oh, but our friend the Minister of Customs interfered with the administration of justice; he intervened between the imposition of the sentence and its execution; he had no right to do this; it was contravening his authority. In order to make sure that that letter signed by Mr. Gallagher contained a true statement of fact, I asked the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) to get an opinion from his department on the question, and here is the memorandum prepared for the minister by the Deputy Minister of Justice:

Referring to your inquiry as to the practice in the handling of customs and excise prosecutions, I may say that there is a custom of long standing whereby the instructions to legal agents of this department or to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in certain classes of cases are given direct by the department whose minister is charged with the administration of the particular statute under which the proceedings are being taken. The classes of cases referred to are principally prosecutions under the Customs and Excise Act, the Income War Tax Act, the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, the Food and Drugs Act and other statutes relating to health and agriculture. The reason for this practice, which has had the approval of successive ministers of justice, is that in the large majority of cases belonging to any particular one of these classes the points of law and the other considerations which arise are similar, and do not require to be specially considered by this department in each case. In order to keep the business in connection with these prosecutions running smoothly it is essential that the procedure should be so far as possible free from red tape. The practice referred to eliminates a great deal of unnecessary correspondence between the departments concerned, resulting in a saving of time, labour and expense in the handling of this work.

So far as the customs and excise cases are concerned, the practice seems to be not inconsistent with the desires of parliament for at least two reasons, first, because the administration of the Customs and Excise Act is given to the Minister of Customs, and secondly, because it is provided by section 266 of the Customs Act that:

"All penalties and forfeitures imposed by this Act, or by any other act relating to the customs or to trade or navigation shall, unless other provisions are made for the recovery thereof, be sued for, prosecuted and recovered with costs by His Majesty's Attorney General of Canada, or in the name or names of the Commissioner of Customs, or any officer or officers of the customs, or other person or persons thereunto authorized by the Governor in Council either expressly or by general regulation or order, and by no other person."

Under the practice the proceedings are taken in the name of the Attorney General of Canada, but they are instituted upon instructions from the Department of Customs and Excise, and are carried on, adjourned, discontinued, abandoned or pressed to a conclusion as that department may direct.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): What is the date of that?

Mr. BOIVIN: June 7, 1926. That is the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice, based upon the law which I have just cited, which is section 266 of the Customs Act; so it is plain, I think, that the minister had the right to act.

Whether it was expedient for the minister to do what he did may be open to question. It may be that owing to the terms of that letter, written by an hon. member and for which I am not responsible—I think the greatest mistake I ever committed in connection with the whole matter was the placing of this letter on the file and bringing it before the committee, when it was marked "private and confidential," but it was done merely for the purpose of showing to the committee that we had nothing to hide, that every document and every letter in connection with the entire case would be placed before them and be entirely at their disposal—it was inexpedient to grant the request, but there is one fact that must be remembered, and that is that the mistake, if any, consists in having delayed the execution of a three months' sentence. There was no pardon granted. Execution was delayed at the request of a member of parliament who had certain representations to make. I have stated before, and I state again, that if that request had come from a Conservative member of parliament it would have been granted in absolutely the same way. That member would have been heard and the case would have been judged on its merits, in so far as the minister has the right to judge, in so far as the minister has the authority to intervene.

I am informed by the best authorities in the Department of Justice that I only exercised the authority which I had, and after having given the case consideration, after having kept it in absolutely the same position in which it was, to submit it to the Customs inquiry, the case has now been carried to a conclusion and the warrant of commitment has been issued.

Those are the two charges levelled against the minister. I hope that when hon. members come to cast their vote, be it late to-night or some time to-morrow, they will bear in mind the explanation that I have frankly and clearly given, and that they will not be misled by the statement that perhaps will be made by the hon. member who I know, very reluctantly, will bring this case before parliament, and who will endeavour to base his case possibly on the evidence given by the minister himself before the committee. It is true that I said when I was called before that committee, "I may have been wrong in doing this." I had not gone into the details of the case. I had not got this opinion from the Deputy Minister of Justice. I had not gone thoroughly through the record, as I have done since. I placed the case in its true position before the committee, and the hon. member for West Calgary, who has the reputation at least of being a very eminent barrister and counsel, stated that I had done wrong. When he was asking me the different questions, and I was volunteering my evidence, I said, "Yes, perhaps I have, but if I have, those are the facts and that is the extent of my crime."

There is one point right here I wish to bring before the public in the galleries and the people of Canada, and I hope it will be mentioned in the press: In spite of all that this inquiry has delved into and worked over for a period of four and a half months in an endeavour to find something with which they could blacken this government, with which they could blacken the reputation not only of my predecessor but of the acting minister, and even of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice, there is one thing which shines out above all others, and that is that there is not one important official in the Department of Customs, and there is not one minister or acting minister, past or present, who can be accused of having accepted any bribe to interfere with the proper execution of his duties. You may accuse the Hon. Jacques Bureau of having had a great big generous heart; you may accuse him of having been kind and good to his political friends and to his political foes, you may accuse him of having erred on the side of leniency in connection with the punishment of offenders, you may accuse him of having had a little too much confidence in some of his officials in the port of Montreal or elsewhere, but you cannot point a finger to where Jacques Bureau accepted a dollar as a bribe. Neither can you level such an accusation against the Acting Minister of Customs nor at the minister who is now in charge of that department. My opinion of the mentality of the people of Canada is that when a minister gives to the service of his country the best that is in him, when that minister is free from graft and free from corruption, when it is proven that neither he nor his subordinates have been influenced by paltry contributions or gifts of any kind, when it is proven that they have attempted to carry out their duties honestly, and that the only accusation that can be brought against them is that of having been a little too lenient and too generous the offence will be easily forgiven.

The inquiry has consumed four and a half months. I do not want the hon. member for Vancouver Centre or the hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell)) to think for a moment that in my opinion it has not been of any use whatever to Canada. I did say on a public platform in the early days of the inquiry, when there was a great deal of political squabbling, that I feared it would cost an enormous amount of money, and that the money would be entirely wasted. But I am ready and willing to admit that when I made that statement I made it conditional upon the fact that it would be carried on as it was then. I want to make the statement now and give credit to the members of the committee—and I want my hon. friend the member for Vancouver Centre to appropriate whatever credit he desires for himself—that I think the Customs inquiry has done a great good to this Dominion and to the Department of Customs and Excise. It has been of great assistance to the present minister and will be helpful to the minister who will succeed me in carrying on these duties and in preventing smuggling. I want also to pay a tribute to Mr. Sparks of the Commercial Protective Association, with whom I had some misunderstanding at the beginning of the inquiry. In my original speech in this House I blamed Mr. Sparks, and I blame him still for the fact that having got information from employees of my own department, he carried it to Mr. Stevens instead of bringing it to the Minister of Customs and Excise. I blamed him for it at that time and I blame him for it to-day; but I will say that the most instructive part of the entire evidence is undoubtedly the recommendations made by that same Commercial Protective Association. I want to give the association due credit for that. I have read these recommendations very carefully. Many of them are very valuable. In my humble judgment they are the most valuable representations made before the committee; and I want to say if I remain in the department as minister I will not only endeavour to carry out the recommendations of the report itself but I will also read in conjunction with it the suggestions made to the committee by the Commercial Protective Association.

There are many other things which I think my hon. friend will admit. One of the things I would like to have him admit is that for the first two and a half months of this inquiry every jot and tittle of evidence adduced before the committee was taken from a report which had already been prepared at the request of the Minister of Customs and Excise by an employee of the government and laid upon the table for the information of members of the committee.

My hon. friends may say: "It is because notice of a motion for an inquiry was given in the press that you gentlemen of the Liberal party hurried to have this investigation made." Now, it is stated clearly in the evidence by no less a personage than Inspector Duncan himself that the arrangements were all made with the Minister of Customs and Excise, that he was on his way to Montreal on November 27, 1925 to start his investigation, and that it was not until the 1st December, or four days later, that we received the first intimation in the press that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre had any idea of moving for a committee of investigation. As soon as I took over the department, after the elections, acting with the consent of the Prime Minister, acting in close co-operation with my good friend the Minister of Finance, who had unlimited confidence in the private investigator of that department, we secured the services of Mr. Duncan. He was sent to Montreal and on December 10th, long before this inquiry ever started, Mr. Bisaillon, who is the man against whom the hon. member for Vancouver Centre directed most of his thunder in his speech on February 2, had been dismissed from the service. I think for at least three weeks the committee probed and investigated to determine for their own satisfaction that the Department of Customs and Excise was perfectly justified in dismissing Mr. Bisaillon. I may say that Mr. Bisaillon was a very able witness, and the committee came very near not being able to prove that the department was justified, but ultimately they succeeded in doing so.

Other matters brought before the committee of inquiry, in the majority of cases, were taken from the Duncan report. There was no secret about the investigation that was under way at the instance of the department, and if the investigating committee had not been constituted, the process of cleaning up the department would have gone on and would have proceeded, perhaps, more rapidly. I do not say this in any way to disparage the work of the committee; but I do say that from the moment that committee began its sittings I have dismissed no employee we could possibly retain in the service or engaged no persons we could possibly get along without. I do not think there have been more than three dismissals and possibly not more than that number of appointments since the investigation started. I wanted to turn the whole thing over to the committee in order that they might direct the operations of the department as they thought best and carry out the authority with which they were vested by the House in the most effective way. My hon. friend the hon. member for Vancouver Centre attempted to exercise authority during that period as Minister of Customs and Excise. He went over to the department and gave his own personal instructions to the acting deputy minister, Mr. Taylor, and told him how to carry on and who to engage in connection with a certain case in the city of Regina.

Mr. STEVENS: That is absolutely wrong.

Mr. BOIVIN: I am not blaming my hon. friend for that. I do not know what is wrong about it. That is what my hon. friend admitted himself in his own correspondence.

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. BOIVIN: My hon. friend went over to see Mr. Taylor, who is a very efficient employee, and gave him instructions.

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. BOIVIN: He gave him facts in confidence.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister permit me?

Mr. BOIVIN: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: I gave Mr. Taylor no instructions whatever. I handed him all the information and left the matter with him. I did not know who they were retaining; I knew nothing whatever about it. I gave him no instructions and gave him no recommendations other than this one thing: I asked that the case be prosecuted to the limit—that is all.

Mr. BOIVIN: The letter reads:

Some weeks ago there came into my possession certain very damaging evidence of extensive excise frauds, forgeries of bogus labels, possession of customs seals, etc., on the part of certain notorious individuals in that city. I at once realized that, if these were exposed before the committee, it would probably result in the destruction of evidence that would bring about a conviction, and I realized it was more of a police case, than one for investigation before the committee. I took the matter up with Mr. Taylor, now acting chief of the Department of Customs and Excise. At this point I wish to state that in my estimation Mr. Taylor has been and is doing his best in the case. It appears, however, that certain influences in the government ranks are exercised to prevent this case from being successfully handled. The facts are as follows:

1. I handed all my confidential information to Mr. Taylor in confidence.

Mr. STEVENS: In confidence so far as names were concerned.

Mr. BOIVIN: Yes.

I handed all my confidential information to Mr. Taylor in confidence.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not much in that.

Mr. BOIVIN: No, certainly not. My hon. friend will go to Mr. Taylor and he will say, "I will allow you to tell the minister that I place the case in your hands, but I ask you to retain in confidence the information I gave you and not to tell the minister the names of the people against whom action is to be taken."

Mr. STEVENS: No, that is not it.

Mr. BOIVIN: "In confidence so far as names are concerned?"

Mr. STEVENS: Confidence in so far as certain names mentioned being published and nothing else—no other reservations.

Mr. BOIVIN: That is not what the letter says.

Mr. STEVENS: Oh yes.

Mr. BOIVIN: My hon. friend's interpretation may be that, it means in confidence only so far as the publication of names is concerned; I do not know what Mr. Taylor's understanding was, but I know the confidence was so well kept that the minister did not know anything about it.

Mr. STEVENS: It was stopped very shortly after he had learned the facts.

Mr. BOIVIN: The minister did not know until he received a copy of this letter yesterday anything whatever concerning the case. I ask my hon. friend to accept that as a true statement. Yesterday the Prime Minister was kind enough to give me a copy of the letter written to him by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, and that was the first time I learned that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were working upon this particular case at Regina, the first time I ever knew that any man named Bryant had represented the department, and the first time I ever knew that a man named Anderson ever conducted any case for the government in Regina.

Mr. STEVENS: The Minister of Justice knew about it.

Mr. BOIVIN: That may be. The attorneys were always appointed by the Minister of Justice. Then there is the Cohen case. The letter says it has been dragging through the courts since last October, that Cohen is a rich, influential citizen of Montreal and a notorious smuggler, and that the chief of the preventive service did not know anything whatever of the frame-up. Referring to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, my hon. friend from Vancouver, when he made his speech on the 2nd February, stated that there was no better body of men in the world.

Mr. STEVENS: I agree with it now. My hon. friend need not bother about that. Take it as read.

Mr. BOIVIN: I will take the statement as read. I thank the hon. member for his confirmation.

Mr. STEVENS: Leave them alone and they will do their duty.

Mr. BOIVIN: The Cohen case was confided to them for the very same reason that the hon. member for Centre Vancouver did not want to confide the Regina case to the chief preventive officer in whom he had no confidence.

Mr. STEVENS: No my hon. friend is wrong.

Mr. BOIVIN: The chief of the preventive service was at the beck and call of my hon. friend for Vancouver Centre from the beginning of the inquiry to the end, part of the time authorized by resolution, and part of the time not authorized. The chief of the preventive service placed in the hands of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre copies of certain documents that the hon. member moved for after he had the copies in his possession.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not recall what they are.

Mr. BOIVIN: I could give the hon. member a list of them. They are in connection with the correspondence and the files from Bisaillon's office in Montreal.

Mr. STEVENS: In justice to that officer, whatever blame the minister wants to attach to me, I wish to say that he did not hand me that correspondence, and as far as I know he has never handed me any correspondence except the files of the department. The minister is exceedingly unfair to him when he says that Wilson was at my beck and call; that is entirely wrong. He never acted, as far as I know in any instance, except under orders and direction of the committee—never.

Mr. BOIVIN: Before the applause subsides, I would like to ask the hon. member if it is not true that in connection with eight, nine or more of the cases brought before the committee, Wilson was not asked to take the files and prepare a precis and hand it to the committee, so that they would have a better case presented to them next day.

Mr. STEVENS: Never so far as I know, did Mr. Wilson under any circumstances, except under an open order of the committee, prepare any precis. I do not remember a single instance of that kind, and certainly Wilson would have been derelict in his duty had he not obeyed the orders of the committee.

Mr. BOIVIN: If Mr. Wilson was such an able officer—and that is the admission I wanted to get from the lips of my hon. friend—if he was under the orders of the committtee, if he was in close communion with my hon. friend for a period of four and a half months—

Mr. STEVENS: That is wrong.

Mr. BOIVIN: —if my hon. friend has such great confidence in Mr. Wilson, why did he not confide to him, as the chief of the preventive service, the Regina case that he took over to the acting deputy minister of the department and asked him not to mention it?

Mr. STEVENS: I will tell my hon. friend why; the acting head of the department was

Mr. Taylor, the assistant deputy minister, the proper official with whom the matter ought to have been taken up.

Mr. BOIVIN: I thank my hon. friend for the reason he has given. The acting head was the deputy minister.

Mr. STEVENS: I did not say that. The acting deputy minister—the assistant.

Mr. BOIVIN: The hon. member went to the acting deputy minister and asked him to confide in these two special officers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. STEVENS: No, I made no suggestion, but he suggested it, and I heartily concurred, and had the mounted police been left alone the case would have gone on merrily.

Mr. BOIVIN: There was no request from my hon. friend that the matter be referred to the chief preventive officer.

Mr. STEVENS: Why should I make the suggestion?

Mr. BOIVIN: Because you wish to make it a crime now that another case was conducted without it being referred to the same officer. In the Cohen case the matter was confided to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. WHITE (Mount Royal): Does the hon. minister suggest that the chief preventive officer conspired in any way with members of the committee? I ask the question in fairness to Mr. Wilson, who is a personal friend of mine.

Mr. BOIVIN: I am very glad that Mr. Wilson has such an influential friend as the hon. member for Mount Royal, but I do say that a man who, like Mr. Wilson, has always obeyed the orders of the committee and frequently disobeyed the orders of his minister certainly does not deserve all this commendation. I will say that a man who receives and transports liquor from one province to another for other officials until he receives a certain appointment and who ceases doing it after that appointment has been given to him, is not one of those officers who deserve the highest commendation and praise even from my hon. friend.

Mr. WHITE (Mount Royal): The minister forgets that Mr. Wilson was chief preventive officer long before the question of the transportation of liquor came up.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister is absolutely wrong.

Mr. BOIVIN: My hon. friend says that I am absolutely wrong. I may be unduly severe, but I am not absolutely wrong?

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister allow me to interject?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. BOIVIN: My hon. friend spoke for over two hours and a half.

Mr. STEVENS: Only an hour and a half.

Mr. BOIVIN: I think he should at least let me reply.

Mr. STEVENS: He is absolutely unfair to a man who cannot defend himself.

Mr. BOIVIN: I want to point out that in the Cohen matter certain information that had been brought to our attention was confided to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police because the preventive officers had informed me some time previously that while Mr. Cohen had been arrested by Mr. Knox, they were not in a position to find any of the other conspirators in the smuggling of the goods. One of these men who is now under arrest and before the courts in Montreal had made the statement that he had influence with not Mr. Wilson—I do not want to accuse Mr. Wilson of anything of that nature—but with Mr. Knox. That statement was reported to me. It may have been a misleading statement; it may not have been true; but it was for that reason that instead of confiding the case to Mr. Wilson or Mr. Knox, I instructed that it be given to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. If I have been unjust to Mr. Wilson—

Mr. STEVENS: Grossly unjust.

Mr. BOIVIN: —I may have been somewhat severe in some of my strictures on him, but I will say this, that in many cases to my personal knowledge confidences given to Mr. Wilson have not been respected. Information was given by Mr. Wilson to members of the committee before it was given to the minister himself during the conduct of the committee. That is an absolutely fair and true statement. I regret having interjected the other matter in reply to the hon. member for Mount Royal.

Mr. WHITE (Mount Royal): If that be so, I withdraw my remarks.

Mr. BOIVIN: I do not pretend to deserve special consideration in the administration of the department, but will my hon. friends allow me to say at least what I have done since I took possession of the office? The very first act was to start this investigation in the city of Montreal. The moment Inspector Duncan made his first report I had no hesitation in asking council to dismiss Mr. Bisaillon, in suspending some of the employees who were near to him in that office and in removing from the preventive service to the port many of the officers who had given faithful service for many years to the preventive service but who had been closely associated with Mr. Bisaillon. They have remained there ever since. Many of them have been found absolutely blameless by the committee. I hope they will return to their former positions in the immediate future.

As regards the regulations concerning automobiles not only am I prepared to follow out the recommendations contained in the report, but we started months ago putting similar regulations into effect. The instructions now given in the Department of Customs are that every time it is possible for a United States automobile to be returned to that country that procedure shall be followed, and the penalty imposed on Americans who come into Canada without reporting at the border shall be made as low as possible in order that all United States cars may be returned and not placed as a glut on the Canadian market in competition with our Canadian cars.

We have given instructions to do away with the practice, which was becoming prevalent in the department, of customs officers using smuggled and seized cars which had been confiscated and placed at their disposal, of their riding around in cars that had been seized but not confiscated or not sold. In two or three instances the cars were later claimed by the United States owner and they were returned. Instructions have been given to our officers now never to take over or use a seized car except where it is necessary to bring it from the point of seizure to the garage. Every car that cannot be returned to the United States must be sold and officers in the department entitled to cars will be supplied with Canadian cars for their use.

We have endeavoured to get new boats to place on the coast of the Maritime Provinces to prevent smuggling there, but unfortunately matters have been delayed by the fact that our supply has not yet been voted. Hon. members preferred to have us wait until the committee made its report before voting us the supply required for the preventive service and I did not desire to increase the service until the supply is voted.

There are in the report many recommendations which we shall be in a position to carry out this year. There are some recommendations which I fear it will be impossible to embody in legislation until the next session of parliament. But I can assure my hon. friend once again, speaking for myself as minister of the department, that the regulations required will be made at the earliest possible opportunity and that every honest effort will be made to carry out the recommendations of the report, as it is finally adopted and approved by this House of Commons.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

DETROIT AND WINDSOR SUBWAY COMPANY

Mr. FRANK S. CAHILL (Pontiac) moved:

That owing to the late period of the session Bill No. 174, being Bill H5 of the Senate, to incorporate the Detroit and Windsor Subway Company, be placed on the order paper amongst private bills for consideration in committee of the Whole this day.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: This motion can be entertained only by unanimous leave of the House. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member has been good enough to consult me about this bill, of which I know nothing at all. He informs me that the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) desires to have it proceeded with, and under the circumstances I agree.

Motion agreed to.

RED LAKE AND NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY

The House resumed, from June 18, consideration in committee of Bill No. 95, to incorporate the Red Lake and Northwestern Railway Company—Mr. Heenan—Mr. Duff in the chair.

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): When this bill was before the House on Friday last objection was taken that it had not been reprinted as amended and, further, that we had no statement from the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) as to the policy of the government with regard to the granting of charters for railways such as the one here contemplated. This is an independent company asking for a charter and, as I pointed out the other evening, as a result of the indiscriminate granting of railway charters in Canada, without regard to public convenience and the absence of any well defined system controlling rivalry, we find ourselves in Canada with two competitive lines of railway, the government having been forced to assume responsibility for upwards of 22,000 miles. There can be no question that the Canadian people have paid dearly for their railway experience, and it passes my understanding how the government can sit quietly by and allow such a bill as this to come up repeatedly without offering some explanation of its policy in regard to the issuing of charters. This particular bill has been under consideration in different forms during the present session; yet the Minister of Railways sits here without volunteering any information to assist the House in coming to a conclusion in the matter. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) himself on Friday last agreed that we were entitled to some definite statement regarding the policy of the Department of Railways on the granting of charters.

We have seen for years now private companies applying for charters with no intention whatever of building any railways, and always coming back for an extension of time, so that in the long run many of these charters have had to be cancelled entirely. In other cases roads have been constructed without regard to convenience or economy, with the result that the country has suffered. In the present instance we do not know whether the proposed railway will be built, the only information we have being that a blanket charter is asked for to enable a company to construct a line from somewhere near Hudsan bay down to the Canadian National system. The House ought to know just what the company will do, and whether it sincerely intends to build the road. I do not believe the people mentioned in this charter have any intention of going on with this road themselves. They may represent someone else, but it is quite evident that if this road is operated successfully it will have to be operated by the Canadian National Railway System, and if that is the case by all means let the Canadian National Railway System ask for a charter and go on with the construction of this road, and see that the road is built where it should go and not where it will suit the convenience of some promoters who may possibly intend to dispose of their charter after having secured it.

I know it will be argued that there is provision in this bill that unless the company does a certain amount of work during the coming year the charter will lapse. That provision has been in bills before, and we have seen the companies coming back time after time, after having spent a little money, and have their charters renewed. This renewal of charters has been a common practice for years, and I think we should have a clear and definite statement from the minister as to what the government propose doing. We recently had the experience of this government granting a charter for the construction of a road adjacent to the Transcontinental and Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railways; bonds were guaranteed to the extent of $5,000,000, while an injunction was taken out against the province of Ontario, who did not ask for a dollar, in order to prevent them from building a road there. The people interested were more anxious for a connection with the mining centres tributary to the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway than for a road from O'Brien into that territory. I do think the minister should make a clear and definite statement as to what the government intend doing in this connection so that parliament may have a proper idea of what the passing of this bill may mean.

Mr. DUNNING: I regret not having had an opportunity to discuss this matter on a former occasion. I think at one time the bill was talked out, and although many of the members speaking on that occasion asked for a statement from the minister he was not given an opportunity to make one, the time passes so quickly. On another occasion I regret to say that I was not in the House.

The position to-day is the same as it has been for many years. Those who desire to incorporate railway companies in Canada come before parliament with a private bill; that bill is referred to the Railway committee and there examined. The contents of such bills are communicated to the Minister of Railways, who examines them from the point of view of their relationship to other railways now existing or projected. In this case I had the bill examined from the point of view of its relationship to or effect on the Canadian National Railway system, and I was assured that the Canadian National did not propose itself to build into the territory affected at present. That territory is not regarded by the management as being proven from a branch line traffic point of view, and they therefore do not intend to ask the Minister of Railways to request the necessary money from parliament for the construction of a Canadian National branch. That being the case, the Department of Railways made no objection before the committee to the granting of a private charter.

But I would like the committee to remember that the right to grant charters of this kind is inherent in parliament itself. It is true that we might have a government policy of refusal of all private charters. If we had complete government ownership of railways from one end of Canada to the other; if we had no private ownership of railways at all, then manifestly the policy of the government would be to ask parliament to refuse to grant charters for new lines. Inasmuch, however, as we have in Canada at present both government owned railways and privately owned railways, the position is as it always has been, that parliament itself on the advice of the railway committee, which presumably examines the merits of each case, decides whether or not additional private charters shall be granted. In this case I am informed that the line opens up entirely new territory, connecting at one end with the Canadian National main line and at the other with the Hudson Bay railway. Let me repeat that the management of the Canadian National Railways are not prepared at present to recommend to parliament the expenditure of public money necessary to build a branch line into this area. That being the case the Canadian National Railway leaves the matter entirely in the hands of the Railway committee of this House to determine whether, in all the circumstances, private parties should be permitted so to do.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not given particular attention to this measure, and I am free to admit that there may be some special considerations appertaining to it, but on the general subject of policy with respect to private charters I am far from satisfied with the statement made by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning). He says that we have a government owned system which is not itself a monopoly; we have as well a great privately owned system and consequently, under these circumstances, the government simply examines any application from the point of view of the desirability of reserving the territory to the National system. If the government come to the conclusion that the territory is not such as the National system now desires to enter they simply leave it to the Railway committee of parliament to decide whether or not a private company shall get a charter.

I would like to suggest to the minister that the time has passed when any administration in this country should content itself with such an attitude. It is true that we have not a government monopoly; it is equally true that we have no competitive system with a variety of railway companies such as other countries enjoy, the United States for example. We have proceeded in the evolution of our railway policy far beyond the point reached in most other countries, and having reached the stage where we have one great publicly owned system and another great privately owned system we certainly have reached the point where we must consider whether we will grant any more charters to heterogeneous companies here, there and everywhere, for the construction of little one hundred or two hundred mile railways. These railways, when they are constructed, are certain either to be failures, thus bringing discredit upon Canadian finance, or if they are successful they are bound on the one hand to detract from the earning capacity of the great private system and thereby hold up railway rates, or to detract from the earning capacity of the great publicly owned system and therefore injure the country as a whole. One of these two results must ensue from the creation of privately owned railway companies anywhere, in competition with the two great systems we already have. I cannot see how any result beneficial to the people generally can ensue which could not have been attained much better by another route. Let me repeat: If the railway proves a failure as a commercial venture then there is the repercussion back on Canadian credit, which is injurious to the country as a whole. If it proves a success it simply means that the new railway has invaded territory which in the general interest should have been conceded either to the private company on the one hand or reserved for the public company on the other. I do not think this reasoning can be very well challenged.

If these are the only consequences, all of them are injurious to the country, and for my part it would take a very powerful array of special circumstances to convince me that there should be an exception made in respect of a road either to Red lake or to any other territory. I would think the government should very carefully consider whether or not we have reached the time when the granting of private railway charters to third companies, new organizations, should be done away with once and for all.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a great deal of force in what my right hon. friend says in this connection. He recognizes, of course, that the adoption of that attitude absolutely would be an entirely new departure, and one which therefore should be given very careful consideration. May I also point out for his consideration—and in this connection I am not discussing the merits of the present bill or of the proposed railway—that the provinces also have the power to grant railway charters; they can and do, and in the last sessions of many of the provincial legislatures charters have been granted to private parties for the construction of railroads entirely, of course, within the borders of the province. So the object sought by my right hon. friend cannot be wholly attained merely by this parliament refusing the granting of such charters. Also I am informed—I should say this in fairness to the present proposal—that the proposed line will in any event be a feeder to the Canadian National system and will connect only with Canadian National lines.

We are in this awkward position in considering the matter. Parliament from time to time gives consideration to branch lines proposals put forward by the Canadian National and by the Canadian Pacific railway. It may very well be that for reasons which seem good to the government or to parliament for the time being, it is not advisable to extend into an area such as the one now under discussion, and the important and difficult question which prevents me agreeing altogether with my right hon. friend is this: Shall we say, because parliament cannot see its way clear to vote public moneys for the construction of a line that therefore that particular area of country shall be left without railway transportation? That is a difficult question, and it is rendered still more difficult in its relation to general policy by the other fact which I mentioned, that every provincial legislature in Canada has the power to grant railway charters within its own borders.

In connection with the present case, inquiry was made of the government of the province of Ontario, and I understand that the premier of that province indicated that the government of Ontario had no objection to the granting of this charter.

Mr. HEAPS: Were similar inquiries made of the province of Manitoba?

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot say whether the committee made any inquiries of Manitoba, but I can say this: At the last session of the Manitoba legislature, I believe I am correct in saying, a number of charters—at least two—were granted to private parties for the building of railways. Therefore I presume that so far as the province of Manitoba is concerned it would have no objection to the granting of private charters as a matter of principle; and it is the matter of principle that I am discussing.

Mr. HEAPS: Is the minister aware that Manitoba intends to guarantee the sum of $25,000 per mile for the building of a railway from Winnipeg into the Red lake area?

Mr. DUNNING: I am not aware of that fact. That would be a consideration, of course, which, if it is correct, would affect this committee in arriving at its decision in respect to this particular charter. But I do submit to my hon. friend that that is not a question which affects the principle of the whole matter that we are now discussing. If anything, it lends force to the principle and illustrates the difficulty of deciding now, once for all, whether we shall have no more private charters granted in Canada. I am personally doubtful if we have yet reached the point where we can definitely say that no more private charters shall be granted. With regard to this particular application, the committee can give consideration to it as it sees fit. The minister and the Department of Railways do not recommend. We merely say, having examined the proposal from the point of view of the nationally owned system, that we cannot urge any objection from that point of view, for the reason that the nationally owned system is not presently prepared to propose the expenditure of public money for the construction of a branch line into the district affected.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Has the government of Ontario or the premier of Ontario had any communication with the Department of Railways with respect to this road? If so, why not place the matter before the committee?

Mr. DUNNING: I am informed by the railway committee that no communication with the department was had, but I am also informed that there was communication from the premier of Ontario to the committee on railways.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I have listened to what the Minister of Railways has said. He is trying to get away from a decision that was practically reached by parliament and this country that we are over-railroaded in this country. It is the present over-railroading that is one of the causes of the great railway problem we have upon our hands, and the Minister of Railways ought to be on guard to prevent a further aggravation of that condition by the frequent granting of charters to private companies. It is something we must stop.

There is no hurry for this road. As a matter of fact Red lake is being supplied to-day by communication from the air, and a good service is being provided, with people and supplies getting in and out of that area with little trouble. If there is anything in this Red lake proposition it will show itself during this summer; then the Canadian National Railway may be prepared to build into that territory and Manitoba would be in a position to decide whether or not it would do so. There is no hurry for this proposition at all, except on the part of certain gentlemen who want to follow the example that was set in this House by the government a very short time ago in connection with the building of a line into the Rouyn gold field in the province of Quebec. A local company was incorporated in that case to build from Amos into the Rouyn gold field; that private road is now being built; the company is issuing bonds and will get the benefit that comes to such a company in the exploitation of such an entreprise. We want to stop that. The minister has not yet explained why it was necessary to employ a second company to build an extension from Amos into Rouyn. To-day the whole mining belt of northern Ontario and this new mining belt in Rouyn is being supplied by one or other of two great public owned roads. The Canadian National is serving the Rouyn territory, and the province of Ontario, by its enterprise, has covered the whole gold and silver fields of Ontario with the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway, which has a dozen branches through all that territory.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is forgetting the Algoma Central.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I know, but the mining country of northern Ontario is being absolutely served now by public owned railroads, either the Canadian National which goes through Sudbury and all that mining district, or the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway, which goes through Cobalt, Kirkland lake, up to Timmins, and through all the great gold fields in the province. We are only beginning to develop the mining camps in Ontario; they are growing every day. Gowganda is coming back, and all we want to do is to keep that country for the two publicly owned lines. I believe these two lines will eventually co-operate in some way to cover the whole of that country. If we have made a success of the Canadian National covering the whole continent, cannot we do better by building our own railway into this territory, into the mining fields of Ontario and Quebec, of Manitoba and the whole west? We are supplying these fields to-day either by the National lines or the provincially owned lines of Ontario, and the people are getting extensions just as fast as they are warranted. I am convinced the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario will build this summer from a terminal called Elk Lake into the Gowganda mining camp, on to Leonard and Shining Tree, and from there to Westree, where they will connect up with the Transcontinental. We do not want any more of these private companies. We have had enough of them. We have had to take up the mess they left, and pay for it. We have got far more miles of railway than we want in this country, simply because we have been over-railroaded and over-exploited by private individuals who came to parliament and got charters. So I intend to move, Mr. Chairman, that this bill be sent back to the committee and in that way taken off the order paper. We shall then see what the developments will be in the Red Lake district. If it is shown that there is necessity for this railway it will be built; I have no doubt the Canadian National will build it if the occasion arises. In the meantime the aeroplane service will supply the necessities of that camp in every way. It is already giving a mail and express service, and taking in passengers. They can go in very quickly by aeroplane, whereas the journey now takes from two to three days by railway and waterways. I am also told that the Ontario government now have before them plans for the building of a roadway from Hudson right into Red lake. In the meantime let us stop this over-exploitation of railway charters by private individuals. Accordingly I move that we refer this bill back to the committee for further consideration, and that will end the matter for this session.

Mr. HEAPS: I second the motion.

Mr. HEENAN: The hon. member (Mr. Maclean) said the Ontario government has a plan before it at the present time to build from Hudson into the Red lake district. That is not a fact. Let us stay with the facts at any rate, even if we do refuse to pass the bill. One of the reasons the bill was referred back from the Railway committee was to ascertain whether the Premier of Ontario had any objection to this railway, and he has written a letter stating that he has not. I could not conceive of his writing such a letter if the Ontario government had any such intention as my hon. friend stated. The initial point of the proposed line of railway is over three or four hundred miles away from the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway, so that there is no doubt that that railway is not going to extend to the territory in question for quite a number of years, if ever.

One would think from the discussion which has taken place this evening that private investors ought to be debarred from developing this district. I notice, however, that only applies where the district is unorganized and without boards of trade or councils that could make representations to this House. For instance, in the Railway committee this morning we had under consideration a private undertaking for the tunnelling of the Detroit river. No one in that committee ever suggested that such a tunnel would take away traffic from the Canadian National Railways, and yet as a matter of fact it would. However, no objection was raised to it. Then, too, there seems to be no objection as to private concerns operating in Winnipeg, Toronto or Montreal; but when it comes to a remote district, where the population is scarce, and where the proposition is one that everybody can block and make a political football of, private investors seem to be debarred. What we want is a railway in the Red lake district, and we care not whether it is built by the Canadian National, the Canadian Pacific, or a private corporation. The Canadian National Railways have already announced, through the minister or his deputy, that they have no intention of building immediately into that country.

Now what is the worst that can happen if this bill carries? A private corporation can invest their own money in the building of a railroad that will be a feeder to the Canadian National railway if it is a success. If the enterprise is not a success, it is the investors that will be out; they will have lost their money. I have received twenty-one telegrams from clubs, municipalities, and development boards in the northern part of the country asking that this railway charter be granted, and I hope the House will see to it that that part of the country is not held back from development. So far as the Ontario government is concerned, they granted a charter the session before last to a private concern for a railway right north of the twin cities of Port Arthur and Fort William. Evidently therefore the Ontario government are not blocking avenues to private investors. The hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) stated that the Manitoba government have granted a charter to some private concern to build into the Red lake district, and are backing the enterprise to the extent of $25,000 a mile. Let me point out to my hon. friend that it is impossible for the Manitoba government to do that; they cannot grant a charter for a railway to build into Ontario, they can only charter a railway to the Manitoba boundary. What we need in that part of the country is transportation for carrying supplies and people into the Red lake territory, to which hundreds of people are flocking daily. The hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) advises people to go in by aeroplane. Well, the aeroplane may be a quick method of transportation, but there are a lot of people who prefer travelling by railway to travelling in the air. On behalf of the people in that part of the country I appeal to the House to grant this charter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Before the hon. member sits down, would he inform the committee as to the mileage covered by the charter asked for in this bill, that is to say from a point at or near the village of Quibell to a point on the Hudson Bay division of the Canadian National railway at or near The Pas?

Mr. HEENAN: It is about 125 miles from Quibell to Red lake, and I think it is 450 or 500 miles from the point on the Canadian National Railway at Quibell to the junction with the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. NICHOLSON: To me there seems to be some little misunderstanding with regard to the application that is before the House in reference to this Red lake charter. In the first place such a branch line cannot be a competitor of the Canadian National railways. Whatever else it may become, it cannot compete with that system. The only line to which it can deliver any traffic it may gather is the Canadian National Railways. It is running at right angles hundreds of miles away from any other branch line whatsoever. When this bill was first before the committee I asked that it be held up until we got further information with respect to those who were promoting it, and the reasons why the charter was being asked for. Having inquired into the matter I came to the conclusion that parliament could safeguard itself and still allow this charter to be granted, it being clearly understood that people putting any money into the enterprise are doing so with their eyes wide open and will lose that money if the line is unsuccessful. My understanding, after making inquiries, is that in the first instance the people who are going in there in an effort to develop the country are desirous of building a light railway or tramway in order to get in the machinery and equipment necessary for development purposes. If the country proves to be what those who are interested hope and believe it will, the promoters, having built a light railway or tramway, would have a vested right and could go ahead and build a line that would serve as a feeder to the Canadian National railways. Or the road itself might be taken over by the Canadian National Railways if they so desired; but that system would be under no obligation whatever to take the line off the hands of the promoters. If this charter is refused it simply means, unless the Canadian National Railways are prepared to go ahead and build the line, that the men who are in that district endeavouring to develop the country have no means by which they can get their equipment in. It is all very well to talk about bringing in supplies by aeroplane. Some people and mail matter can go in by aeroplane; but you cannot take diamond drilling outfits and hoisting machinery, with all the things that go to equip a mine, by areoplane. There is provision in connection with this charter by which the line can ultimately be extended, but they must do everything they are going to do this year, as I understand it. If the country did so develop that they could go right straight across from the line of the Canadian National to the Hudson bay, they would then be serving the Canadian National as feeders at both points. If the proposition is examined I do not think there can be any real objection to allowing the charter to pass and permitting these people to build the line this year as they desire to do.

The CHAIRMAN: The member for South York (Mr. Maclean) has moved that the bill be referred back to the committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines. I have to rule that that motion is not in order, as the only time such a motion can be put is when the chairman of the committee rises to report progress.

Mr. O'NEILL: Before the hour passes and the usual burlesque with reference to this road is repeated, I desire to put myself on record as being in favour of this project, in view of the fact that there are some three or four thousand prospectors in that district, ninety per cent of whom are from my constituency. To my mind the statement that Canada has been over-railroaded will not bear investigation. The main problem before the statesmen of to-day is to deepen the country. This road runs at right angles to the Canadian National, and any contention based on the dog-in-the-manger attitude on the part of either of the two large railroads in the country is no argument against the granting of a charter for the construction of this road. I know the people behind the project; I know that they have large commitments in that district, and it is in their interests and in the interests of the people in my constituency that the road should be constructed. I am in favour of the undertaking and I appreciate the remarks of the Minister of Railways in this connection. I did not have an opportunity to discuss the matter personally with him, particularly because I was not connected with the introduction of the bill, but I am much interested in it; a great number from my riding now have holdings in that country.

The statement has been made that the Backus interests are behind this project. I have absolute knowledge to the contrary. The statement of the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) to the effect that Manitoba is backing up a project to build a road into Red lake was refuted by the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Heenan) who stated that that was merely a provincial charter. The province of Ontario has always been anxious to keep its mining country alive. If we have recourse to the same process that they have adopted in Manitoba our mining fields will be at a standstill and in the same position as they are in Manitoba. I might go further into the details of the matter, but at present I simply put myself on record as being very much in favour of the bill.

Mr. EVANS: On former occasions I have opposed this project for well defined reasons, and I have had no cause to change my mind. I believe this project to construct a railway into the Red lake district is not in the interests of either that part of the country or the country at large, and it cannot but prove detrimental to the welfare of the Canadian National Railway. The Red lake district can certainly be more efficiently served by a branch line from the Canadian National than by having a separate company owning and operating a short line of railway. One point that strikes me is that no one from that district has asked for a line of railway into Red lake. A few prospectors, it is true, are behind the project.

Mr. HEENAN: I stated that I had received twenty-one telegrams from the people of that country.

Mr. EVANS: The hon. gentleman, if he wishes, can speak again when I am through. These people ask for a charter. As soon as they obtain it they will have something for sale, and for sale it will be sooner or later, when either the Canadian National or the Canadian Pacific will have to take it over. When the need for a railway is made known in that district I shall be one of the first to advocate its construction by the Canadian National Railway. This country is commited to government ownership, and since we have over fifty per cent of our railways under government ownership and operation, the reasonable thing to do is to go forward and develop a complete system of government ownership and operation of our railway services. These roads must be operated and controlled by the people in the interest of all the people. It is a public utility and therefore should never pass out of the hands of the people. If we grant a charter in this case it will be a precedent for granting further charters for like branches, and in the future we shall have a railway problem even greater than that which is on our hands at the present time. Why should Canada take a step backward and create a precedent in this instance? Out of sixty-five countries of the world, fifty-one own and operate their railways. It is interesting to note that of all the countries Belgium is the only one that has owned and operated her railways from the beginning. It has often been said that government ownership is not a success when applied to public utilities, but I do not think there is even one advocate of private ownership who will say that our postal service should go back into private hands. The greatest argument for government ownership of railways is the fact that out of all the countries of the world fifty nations have found private ownership a failure. I am giving the House this information on the authority of one Mr. E. B. Biggar, who wrote some articles on this subject some years ago. All the great dominions, apart from Canada and India, operate their railways through government ownership and control. In addition to that, out of seventeen crown colonies and protectorates in the British Empire, twelve have government ownership of railways. Surely therefore the reasonable thing for Canada to do is to go forward with government-owned and operated systems of railways. These countries and colonies are among the most highly developed and civilized in the whole world. They have adopted government ownership, and not through lack of private enterprise either. I think it can very well be said, particularly since the war, that the people of all countries are coming to realize that public utilities should be owned and operated by the people in the interests of the whole people, and not as a source of private gain for private companies. Indeed it would be just as reasonable, in my view, to have our highway system owned and operated by private concerns as to place our railways in private hands with the one idea only of private gain. Shall Canada now take a step backward and grant a charter to a company which has no other idea than to exploit the public and our natural resources for private gain? Surely we have done with that policy regarding our railways. Since we have more than fifty per cent of our railways under government ownership and control, I say again it is the reasonable thing to go forward towards a complete system. It does not take much imagination to see the immense unearned increment that will in the future, through growth of population and industrial development, accrue to our private railway companies. All this must be appropriated from now on for the use of the state and not given away for the enrichment of a particular class in the community or a particular company which has no other idea than to exploit the people for its own private gain.

The whole sum of life is no doubt composed of trifles, and it is of such trifles as this charter represents that the great sum of over $2,000,000,000 is made up which represents our railway debt. This little charter, according to one of the promoters, represents just the beginning of another transcontinental railway. It is only part of a scheme to tap the tremendous resources of our hinterland and to exploit the people by so doing, to exploit the public in railway service and deplete our natural resources for private gain. Mr. Biggar, to whom I have already referred, has laid down a few well-defined rules regarding the public utilities of a country. Of the railways he has this to say:

1. The railways of a country are its main highways and therefore should not pass out of the control of the people.

2. There is no source of revenue for a railway other than the rates imposed for carrying persons and goods.

3. This revenue is raised, not from any hidden fountain of wealth within the railway itself, but from the proceeds derived from the economic activities of the entire people.

4. By the division of labour in the modern state everyone who earns and spends money contributes to the cost of railway service, and this cost enters into practically every article used by the people.

5. The maintenance of a nation's means of communication is a function of sovereignty, which should not be permitted to be exercised by private individuals for their own benefit.

6. Since all the people contribute to the cost of railway service, railway rates become essentially a national tax. And in all highly developed countries, railway rates make up the largest element in taxation. It is of fundamental importance that the people should retain control of the machinery through which they are subject to taxation.

The people of Canada have only the satisfaction by taxing themselves of making good the yearly deficit on the railways that we have at present. It seems unreasonable to add to our burden by projects of this kind. The granting of this charter will mark the beginning of a system calculated to cripple the National system. Efforts have already been made to create in the minds of the public an attitude that will prepare the way for complete private control of our railway service. The privately-owned system is often pointed to as such a wonderful success in comparison with the nationally-owned system, which certainly from the very beginning consisted of just so many mistakes from a utility standpoint. The Canadian Pacific to-day is held up as an illustration that private ownership is the only successful way of operating a railway. That is not just the way to look at it. We are all supposed to jubilate when this great private company makes known its annual earnings and dividends and the great surplus earnings that are yearly carried over to its reserve. But the fact is that the public should come to realize—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

The hour for private bills having expired, the Speaker resumed the chair.

CUSTOMS INQUIRY

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE AND AMENDMENT THERETO.

The House resumed consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Mercier (St. Henri) for the adoption of the third and final report of the special committee appointed to investigate the administration of the Department of Customs and Excise, and the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. Mr. Stevens.

Mr. BOIVIN: Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock I had almost concluded my remarks. I had, I think, refuted, in a manner that would convince any hon. member or any citizen of Canada, the charges and allegations made against me personally in connection with the two matters mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens). It was at that time my intention to reply to the allegation contained in the amendment to this effect:

The Prime Minister and the government had knowledge for some considerable time of the rapid degeneration of the Department of Customs and Excise, and their failure to take prompt and effective remedial action is wholly indefensible.

I intended to reply to that, but I will not take the time to cite the correspondence exchanged between Mr. Sparks, president of the Commercial Protective Association, and the Prime Minister. It is all of record; it speaks for itself. It will show that from the very moment that the Commercial Protective Association was organized, they received the most hearty co-operation from the different members of the government with whom they communicated. It will show that both from the Prime Minister and from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) they received the utmost aid and assistance. The preventive officers that they chose themselves as being the best available men to prevent the nefarious offence of smuggling were engaged and paid by the government. They were later placed upon the staff of the preventive service, but still left at the disposal of the Commercial Protective Association. These officers, while they were paid by the government, remained practically in the employ of the association until late in the autumn of 1925, when the political situation changed matters considerably and when one of the officers of the Commercial Protective Association deemed it advisable—and I have no complaint as to that—to stump the country on the same platform with the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen). He devoted his talents and his energies to the interests of the Conservative party and did his utmost to defeat the government now in power; and not only did he exert his efforts during the campaign, but as results will show he pursued them more or less successfully thereafter, from the very moment the votes had been counted until the present occasion. As I observed this afternoon, however, I desire to pay tribute to Mr. Sparks to the extent that the report which was submitted to the committee in printed pamphlet form by himself on behalf of his associates is well worthy of note is free from political considerations and will receive careful consideration at the hands of the government.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) will be shown in this correspondence, and especially in the evidence of Mr. Sparks before the committee, as having done all he possibly could to meet the situation at that time, and I wish to assure the House emphatically that there is no reason for hon. gentlemen opposite to attempt to place responsibility for the conduct of the Department of Customs and Excise upon the Prime Minister or any other member of the government since my entry into the cabinet. Neither the Prime Minister nor any of my colleagues have at any time attempted to interfere with the discharge of my duties. For that reason, if the words "political associates" embodied in the amendment are intended to include my right hon. leader and my colleagues in the proposed motion of censure, I wish to dissociate them from the amendment and bear alone the censure it implies.

I wish to make one observation for the benefit of hon. gentlemen opposite who shortly will be called upon to support this amendment:

> Your committee deplores the practice, as revealed by the evidence, of certain men influential in public life to direct appeals to the minister to relax and depart from the proper administration of his department for reasons of political expediency.
> Your committee is of the opinion that this practice is detrimental to the best interests of the country and prejudicial to the administration of the department.

I trust that hon. gentlemen opposite will bear in mind this fact, that since the commencement of this session members of parliament have come to me with the request to intercede in behalf of some of their electors in cases which in some respects were similar to that of Moses Aziz. Only the other day certain hon. gentlemen were in my office asking that I refrain from imposing a fine on a dealer who unfortunately had exposed his tobacco on his shelves without having revenue stamps affixed to the box; while others have approached me in the interest of civil servants who have been short in their accounts but who have subsequently made amends. I hope that those hon. gentlemen on the opposite side, before voting on the proposed amendment, will reflect for a moment, that the life of the Minister of Customs is perhaps, to use a popular expression, not all that it is cracked up to be. I do not pretend to be at the head of one of the most important departments of government; far from it. I do however claim to be at the head of the department which is probably the most difficult to administer. I would remind hon. gentlemen opposite that when men are obeying the customs and excise laws of the country they never appeal to the Minister of Customs; there is no necessity for so doing. They deal directly with the officials of the department and their way is made easy. But the moment any member finds that an elector has transgressed the law, though sometimes unwittingly, sometimes unwillingly, the tendency inevitably is to come to the minister with a request for clemency. Occasionally the offender is a doctor who is called across the line in his automobile to attend a patient and who is obliged to cross at a point where there is no customs office, so that he is unable to report. Or, it may be, he finds it imperative to cross the line after nightfall. Sometimes it is an American citizen who does not know that he has crossed the boundary and is therefore on Canadian territory without having reported his car. There are various cases of a technical nature in which a judge, applying the strict letter of the law, would in all probability impose the entire penalty; and such cases are submitted to the minister by members of parliament day after day. One case was laid before me the day before yesterday in which possibly it might be a hardship to exact the fine. A young girl who had recently been employed in a certain store, while the person in charge was absent through illness, failed to open a box of tobacco in the proper manner and so exposed the article on the shelves without having put the excise stamps upon it. If I had granted the request which was made in that case, and had refrained from imposing the fine, I would have been accused, in the event of the matter having been brought before the committee, and if the member of parliament applying to me for consideration had been a Liberal member, of having acted with a view to obtaining political party advantage.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that I shall be believed by hon. members on both sides of the House when I declare that, if it is my privilege to remain in charge of the department, members not only of the Conservative party but of the Liberal party as well, and my Progressive friends and the Independent members of this House will all be treated alike and that whatever discretion may be left to me will be exercised on the merits of the case. I do say, however, that if this House of Commons were to remove that discretion it would be rendering the greatest service possible to the Minister of Customs. If it were possible for the minister to direct the general policy of the department, without any power to exercise discretion in any instance, the charge in the Moses Aziz case, which will be launched against me in a few moments by my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Bell), would not be before the House to-night. But I submit that if discretion is to be left to the minister, then the circumstances surrounding any case must be taken into consideration. If it is felt that he should not exercise any discretion at all, then let that discretion be removed. But when that discretion is removed, do not hold him responsible for his inability to settle cases nor convey to the people of Canada the impression that cabinet ministers in Ottawa are all-powerful and that they are clothed with the functions of a judge.

I do not want to detain the House a moment longer, but again I wish to dissociate my colleagues from the motion of censure contained in the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre. As I tried to explain this afternoon that since the moment I became a member of the government I have renounced my private affairs and abandoned my family life. I have devoted sixteen hours every day, and an occasional Sunday, to the service of this country; and if as a reward I am to be voted out of office to-night, either alone or with my colleagues, I am willing to attribute the action of parliament to the payment of the debt of service that I owe the country I love most, our own country, Canada.

Mr. C. W. BELL (West Hamilton): I do not know when there has come to me as a member of, shall I say, the late Customs committee, a moment filled with quite so much gratification as that which I experienced this afternoon when my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) rose to his feet and was greeted as he was by this House. I could conceive of nothing more fitting, more reasonable and more just than that he who has shown such great courage, such great loyalty and such great devotion to the affairs of this country and to all whose responsibility he has undertaken to see through, should render to the House an account of his stewardship. I am glad to be able to add to the remarks that he has made, as well as to those of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Boivin), the expression of our appreciation of the loyal, kindly, splendid service that has been rendered in this inquiry by the chairman of the committee. I can only say of the chairman, not having had the privilege of his acquaintance until coming here this term, that I feel the experience gained in my association with him has been such as to command a lasting friendship which, for my part, I shall be very proud to hold.

And, Sir, there is one other of those who laboured in connection with the work of this committee who, I think in simple, common justice, should be mentioned to this House to-night; I refer to Mr. R. L. Calder, K.C., who acted as committee counsel. The Conservative members of this committee were severely criticized in certain quarters when they readily agreed to the selection of Mr. Calder as counsel for the committee, because it was felt that he who had been the political opponent of the present member for Mount Royal (Mr. White) in the last election would perhaps have such a coloured viewpoint in the inquiry to be conducted that there would be a large measure of partisanship in his work. It is justice and not generosity to Mr. Calder to say that the element of partisanship was, from beginning to end, totally lacking. Therefore I deem it all the more unfortunate that this afternoon the Minister of Customs should have said that there was an effort made extending over some four months to attack and blacken the Department of Customs. If such an effort was made, with that loyal counsel exercising his functions and performing his duties in the most impartial way, I should like to know from what source it came. Unhappily the evidence adduced before the committee leads to but one conclusion, that the department has been blackened by those in charge, and not by this party.

The minister spoke truly when he told the House this afternoon that I, to whom has been delegated the task of saying something to the House dealing with the minister's conduct in connection with the Aziz case, would engage in that task most reluctantly; he has never spoken a truer word. It is with the greatest reluctance that I begin my task now, and I will go further and say that it is with a feeling of deep regret that I lay before the House certain facts and circumstances, unhappily both many and important, which go to show that the minister, however ready he may be to assume responsibility for the delinquencies of his party, is not one whit behind the leading members of the cabinet, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) himself.

As one might well believe, Mr. Speaker, I listened with the greatest of interest to the defence made by the minister this afternoon of his colleagues and of his own conduct in office, and I am bound to say that, with my familiarity with these facts of which he was speaking, if I had any doubt before of the delinquencies which had occurred, the minister's own defence resolved those doubts for me. That is why I feel that we on this side of the House approach and deal with the facts as they stand by themselves without any spirit of partisanship or prejudice. Unhappily these facts, considered even in the most favourable light, are such as to render it impossible for any self-respecting government and any self-respecting minister to remain longer in office.

The minister is surely master of his own method of procedure in this case, and he found it necessary to begin his argument by reading a letter which he had received from a man who was named as having been delinquent in his duty. This man was unanimously so named by the committee, because the evidence permitted of no other conclusion. If I am wrong in saying that the minister had the opportunity, if he so desired, of placing that man's position more favourably before the committee than it actually was placed, I know the minister will correct me. The minister approached the matter in such a way as to indicate some sympathy on his part for this man who, according to the unanimous decision of the committee, had utterly failed in his duty.

The minister has told us that during his term of office he at least had the advantage of enjoying the confidence of the Prime Minister of Canada. Let me say, Sir, that it is fair comment after listening to the evidence given before the committee that some do not apparently find it very difficult to enjoy that confidence.

The report brought in by the committee, as the House already knows, dealt with a number of ways in which the department has been degenerating for the past three or four years, and made a formal finding to the effect that the degeneration, through the lack of appreciation of responsibility on the part of the preceding minister, Mr. Bureau, had been greatly accelerated. Perhaps it is worthy of comment here that the majority of those who sat on that committee, although this degeneration had been continuing for some time and had recently been accelerated to a very large degree, refused to find that this degeneration had continued under the regime of the present minister. If there was any effort made before the committee to show that in the regime of the present minister anything was done to bring the department back to its former high estate, I would be glad to have that evidence pointed out to me. I think the facts point undoubtedly to the conclusion that so far from in any way rehabilitating the department, under the present minister it has sunk to a depth never touched before.

A considerable issue has been raised in this House as to whether or not the Minister of Customs, as he wishes to put it himself, stood alone in any delinquencies with which he has been connected. I want to say that the facts show irresistibly—as I propose to demonstrate to the House by reference to these facts—that long before the present minister took up the reins of office the degeneration of that department and of the whole cabinet had set in. When the Minister of Customs took office he simply fitted into a place already prepared for him by those whose one creed had been to protect and encourage smugglers as against the interests of honest people.

The first official reference in the evidence given before the committee came when Mr. Sparks, who has been already referred to for his earnest work in endeavouring to remedy these bad conditions, sought an opportunity of laying before the Prime Minister the facts connected with the smuggling operations which were being conducted to the great detriment and loss of honest Canadian merchants. Referring to the first positive statement that occurs in the evidence taken before the committee, may I point out that on June 23, 1924, Sparks, not acting alone but as representing a very large number of associations of merchants, manufacturers and importers who were being robbed and plundered by the conditions that existed through the smuggling that was then rampant in Canada, sought an opportunity of getting the assistance of the government in some effort that might be made to put down that smuggling. On June 23, 1924, Sparks wrote to the Prime Minister, on behalf of the Businessmen's Association asking for a meeting and pointing out that smuggling had reached such appalling proportions in the Dominion of Canada that in the Rock Island district alone the sum of over $10,000,000 was annually being lost in revenue to the Canadian people. On the 6th of August they got their meeting, and according to the evidence that was given before the committee there were present at that meeting, representing the government: the Right Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King, Hon. Jacques Bureau, Hon. Mr. Lapointe, Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Hon. Mr. Graham and Hon. J. H. King, Minister of Public Works. On the side of those who came to protest against these conditions that had grown so intolerable, were the representatives of thirteen associations of businessmen in this country, and a large number of men who did not represent any particular association but who had decided that their only course was to come before the government and beg for assistance in order that the conditions might be remedied and, if possible, that their livelihood might be saved. They saw those members of the cabinet, and on that very day they asked for a parliamentary committee to investigate those conditions and to endeavour to find a remedy. What did they get? They got nothing at all except the indifference of the government, because this government from that day on, as is shown by the record, never exerted itself on behalf of anybody but the thieves and smugglers who were pestering the businessmen of Canada. But these businessmen persisted in their entreaties and in their efforts, and finally, on the 1st of October, Walter Duncan was loaned to them to investigate conditions particularly in the Rock Island district, and to assist them in putting down this smuggling.

It is said that Walter Duncan was told by the Prime Minister: Pursue the smugglers closely; do not allow them to continue their operations if you can help it; put them in gaol. Duncan went out, and he ran down some of the notorious silk smugglers, a number of people operating in and out of Montreal. Then what happened? As soon as he began, as a result of his investigations, to lay facts before this government which would justify, nay, which would demand, that prosecutions should take place, the friends of the smugglers came up to Ottawa, as they had been doing consistently from time to time, and saw the ministers of the crown, and they called off every prosecution that was suggested as a result of Duncan's investigation. But these manufacturers and businessmen had no other remedy. They had been defrauded and plundered; they had no other source than the government to which to turn for relief, so again on December 12, 1924, Sparks wrote to the Hon. Jacques Bureau, again stressing conditions at Rock Island. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) referred to that letter this afternoon, but I wish briefly to direct the attention of the House to it. At page 120 of the evidence appears the letter that was written by R. P. Sparks to the Hon. Jacques Bureau, dated December 12, 1924, in which Mr. Sparks, on behalf of all these associations of businessmen whom he represented, said this:

> Another matter to which reference was made was the situation at Rock Island, Quebec.

Sparks was at this time endeavouring to recall to the Prime Minister and the members of his cabinet the promises and expectations that had been held out to the merchants at the time they approached the government in the August previous. The letter continues:

> It is generally known in the trade that vigorous action was taken by your department, and that your officers found evidence of smuggling on a large scale. It is further well known that the smugglers who were detected came to Ottawa, interviewed members of the government, with the result that no prosecution was made. The information to this effect has come direct from Rock island. These people have always claimed to have influence at Ottawa, and, in the minds of those who are affected by this illegal traffic, the events of the past few weeks demonstrate the truth of their boasts.

Did that bring any favourable result? It did not. There was not even any response that was put on the record, no more than there was any response to the earlier correspondence. But these people still kept on trying to get some relief, and again through Mr. Sparks they wrote to the Prime Minister on the 4th of February, 1925, six months after they had first appealed to him, six months after they had begged him, without result, for a parliamentary committee, six months after they had laid before the government their distress and wretchedness and the fact that their businesses were being pounded into the ground by the illegal competition which they had to face, during all which time the conditions, Mr. Sparks pointed out, instead of in any sense improving had steadily grown worse. Mr. Sparks writes to the Prime Minister—I am referring now to page 122 of the evidence:

> It is respectfully submitted that the conditions herein set forth are sufficiently well known to the government and to its departmental officers and the requested forms of relief so necessary and reasonable as to justify the government to take immediate action by instituting the required departmental changes and submitting to parliament bills providing for necessary legislative enactment, or, if the government is not satisfied as to the necesity of action and the action which should be taken, it is respectfully submitted that a parliamentary committee should be appointed immediately to inquire into the necessity of departmental and legislative changes.

Once again they laid in vain their plea before the government of this country. Who were the people who made this latter plea? The business men who appealed to the Prime Minister of Canada six months before had had their ranks augmented by the most influential associations of merchants and manufacturers in this whole country, including, I notice by the last paragraph of Mr. Sparks' letter the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Wholesale Drygoods Association, and the boards of trade of Montreal and Toronto.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend says that these persons whose names he mentions made their plea in vain. I would ask my hon. friend if their representations were not followed up by legislation introduced into this parliament and framed on the basis that they themselves laid down.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): My answer to that—and I shall proceed to demonstrate it in a moment, I think, to the satisfaction of the House—is that it was followed by legislation such as the Prime Minister speaks of, but the system of corruption which prevailed in the department, and in the government and in the cabinet itself, was such that the legislation was valueless.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend is using words rather freely. He talks about corruption in the cabinet. I will ask him when he makes statements of that kind to substantiate them by evidence.

Mr. PARENT: Put your seat at stake.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I will say this to the Prime Minister: In a few minutes, when I come to the circumstances which had to do with the activities of Bisaillon and the then Minister of Customs, the Hon. Jacques Bureau, it will be abundantly evident, to most members of this House at least, that there was corruption in the cabinet. But, Sir, the difficulties that were existing then, the difficulties that were crying out for remedy, were still unnoticed and still without action on the part of the Prime Minister; and following what had occurred before it was found that when smugglers were detected in their work, when the miserable, dishonest scheme had been disclosed in a number of quarters, another agency intervened to nullify and render useless any efforts that were being made by the honest men of the country to get justice.

The Prime Minister has himself put to me the query that leads to the introduction of the most sinister figure in the whole history of these affairs. That is the figure of the notorious Bisaillon, at that time chief preventive officer at the port of Montreal and, as it subsequently developed, a crook, blackmailer and swindler such as has never been heard of in the recent annals of this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on February 21, the Commercial Protective Association, again through Mr. Sparks, wrote to the Prime Minister, and in that letter, appearing at page 124 of the evidence, to which reference has already been made by my hon. friend the member for Vancouver Centre this afternoon, the very direct attention of the Prime Minister was drawn to the fact that Bisaillon being the centre of the keystone to the whole smuggling system, set at naught any efforts that could possibly be made to remedy the situation. Let me, with the indulgence of the House, repeat that paragraph in the letter of February 21, 1925, which begins:

> The acquittal by the Quebec courts of J. E. A. Bisaillon, the Chief Preventive Officer at Montreal, who was charged with conspiracy, creates a new situation in reference to the prevention of smuggling. I think you should be in possession of certain information which we have in reference to this matter, as he is the key to the whole smuggling situation.

Moreover, may we not reasonably say that there was but one course open to the Prime Minister? When it was thus directly put up to him that there in the employ of the government as chief preventive officer was the man who was making those smuggling operations so enormously profitable, so enormously successful, was it not the least he could do to institute then and there an inquiry into the activities of that man?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Did he not do that very thing? May I ask my hon. friend if the stand I took at that time was not this: That if Mr. Sparks, or any member of the Protective Association, would lay any charge of any kind against Bisaillon or anybody else—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING—I would appoint a royal commission—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Wait a moment —I would appoint a royal commission to go into the whole question?

Mr. MANION: Appoint a royal commission!

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is indeed right. He who had appointed Duncan to investigate as the official investigator of the government, who had sent Duncan down to that district to discover what the conditions really were and lay them bare to the cabinet and to this parliament, when he discovered that Duncan had learned the details of so many of the smuggling operations went to Sparks—as the Prime Minister has just stated to the House —and said: "You make definite charges and we will appoint a royal commission to investigate them."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend is just a little wrong there. Duncan did not come into this matter until months after the part to which he is now referring. When Mr. Sparks drew my attention to these allegations against Bisaillon I had not had any conversation with Duncan. I had Duncan go into this work some time later, and as soon as he went into it the government acted on his report.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Does the Prime Minister wish so to mislead and deceive this House as to say that he did not know Duncan was operating at that time? Is the Prime Minister unaware of the fact that Duncan began his investigation on the first October, 1924.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I said and I repeat that Duncan did not come into this matter for the government—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, for the government—until on toward the fall, and as soon as Duncan made his report and gave us any evidence we acted on it immediately. I knew that Duncan was retained by the Commercial Protective Association and I said to Mr. Sparks: "Let Mr. Duncan or anybody else make this charge and I will give you a royal commission."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Will the Prime Minister now rise and assure this House that Duncan did not come to him within a few weeks after his appointment on October 1st, 1924, to aid these people, and complain that under the law as it then stood he could not get any assistance?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, Duncan came to me and said—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Duncan came to me and said that he had to make a report before he could make an arrest, and that that was impeding his endeavours in the matter of the investigation. I said to him: "You make your arrests and do not make any report. I will assume the responsibility for the action you take," and Duncan so stated in his evidence.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Yes, and the Prime Minister having said "Make your arrests and I will take the responsibility" put that responsibility so fully that instead of acting through his proper officers when Duncan made his report he said to Sparks, "You will get no action at all unless you lay specific charges."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I did not say anything of the kind. I made no statement that he would get no action at all. My hon. friend will not find that anywhere in any letters of mine.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Mr. Speaker, one thing that is perhaps very helpful to the Prime Minister is that from the time when these efforts were being made by the decent people of this country in August, 1923, no statements of that kind appear in his letters, because he was too prudent to write any letters. But, Sir, these details may be adduced from the correspondence which took place with the Prime Minister; they may be adduced from a letter which Sparks wrote to the Prime Minister on February 26th, 1925, in which he says:

I took the liberty of writing you on Saturday last suggesting an appointment at which I could lay before you certain information in reference to J. E. A. Bisaillon and other matters in connection with smuggling in which I thought you would be interested. However, if the statement of the Minister of Customs in the House of Commons on Tuesday last is to be accepted as an indication of the government's policy, I think perhaps, there is no use taking up your time in this regard.

A Canadian Press despatch reads as follows: "In speaking of smuggling Mr. Bureau said: I don't believe any human power can stop it", although his department had done a great deal to decrease smuggling at the border.

Might I take the opportunity of stating that, after four months investigation by a staff of trained criminal investigators, we are convinced that at least half of the smuggling now going on could be prevented within a month by an energetic policy on behalf of the department, and further that, with necessary amendments to the act, ninety per cent of the smuggling could ultimately be prevented.

Might I further express the opinion that smuggling is increasing at an alarming rate rather, than decreasing, as the minister states.

He goes on from that point to refer to the report the officers had turned in, and he says:

I might point out that last August a large representative deputation put the whole matter of smuggling before yourself and members of your cabinet. It has been kept constantly before the government since that time, and the statement made by the Minister of Customs in the House on Tuesday is the first public statement of any character as to the government's attitude.

Again there was no response, and finally these people, driven to desperation, took up what they never were obligated to take up, the challenge of the Prime Minister that they should lay charges against these criminals, which the government itself should have laid. On the 20th of March, 1925, Mr. Sparks again, on behalf of those whom he represented, wrote to the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King as follows:

In reference to my conversation with you on Monday last my understanding was:

That if this association or any individual was prepared to make definite charges against the above customs officer, you would appoint a royal commission to investigate such charges.

And then he goes on and makes charges, although he was under no obligation to do it. He sets out here four different charges, the case of Rex vs. Lortie, in which it was stated by the presiding judge that Bisaillon had committed perjury; the case of the arrest of certain parties in connection with the seizure of the barge Tremblay, in which it was charged that Bisaillon had himself been responsible for the escape of two prisoners from custody, and in connection with the barge Tremblay case that Bisaillon had deposited at Farnham in his own private account $69,000 belonging to the government; and a fourth charge to the effect that he, Bisaillon, the chief preventive officer of the government in his own district, maintained boundary properties between Canada and the United States where he not only connived at the efforts of those who desired to smuggle property into Canada, but was himself a smuggler to a very considerable extent.

Mr. DONAGHY: Is the hon. member not aware that it was conclusively proved in the evidence before the committee that not one cent of government money went into the private account of Bisaillon?

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): The only answer I think that might be given to that is this; that Bisaillon having sworn to four different accounts of what became of that money, no one of them was established.

Mr. DONAGHY: Does the hon. member not recollect evidence brought before the committee that the chief accountant of the Customs department of Ottawa was sent down to investigate and to find out whether any moneys belonging to the government had gone into Bisaillon's private account? Does he not recollect that the chief accountant certified that all the moneys collected by Bisaillon had gone into the government account at Farnham and not one cent into his private account?

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I do not recollect that, but whether I recollect it or not, does the hon. member for North Vancouver not know that we are not dealing with what actually became of the money, whether Bisaillon took some money from the government or not, but the fact that Sparks was told, "You must get a royal commission to investigate charges. If you will go out of your way and make charges which you never were obligated to make, you will get that royal commission and the government will find out the truth." The point I am making is that Sparks took upon himself that unnecessary burden, that he did definitely make those charges, and that the royal commission promised by the Prime Minister has never been granted.

But Sparks and those associated with him, Mr. Speaker, still tried to be of good heart. Sparks wrote a letter on the 13th March, 1925, and I think I passed over that letter without intending to do so. In that letter he enclosed some reports which showed there had been some activity and some investigation; and, Sir, I say to this House that the more the matter was investigated and the more the rottenness and corruption that existed at Rock Island was disclosed, the greater became the obligation of the government to take action in respect to it, and, as my hon. friend says, the less they did. I am at a loss to understand, when Sparks and those associated with him had complied with every requirement laid upon them for action on the part of the government, why it was that all their efforts were disregarded and set at naught. I am at a loss to know why the Prime Minister felt that he must still take the statement of his then Minister of Customs, the Hon. Jacques Bureau, that it did not amount to anything, that there was a lot of fuss being made for nothing, and ignore it all.

As the Prime Minister himself has pointed out, all these matters went by with no response, no letters, nothing to put on record in any way, and Sparks and his associates were without any encouragement, without any hope or prospect of their being granted those investigations that were sorely needed. Twice they had asked for a parliamentary committee and did not get it. Once they asked for a royal commission. and it had been promised but was not given. At last, on the 16th April, 1925, the miracle happened. Sparks got a reply from the government to all these long protests and pleadings for help and assistance. The government actually gave him a reply, and that reply was the one set forth by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre, this afternoon. The government rose to the occasion and met the importunities and troubles of these people by replying to Mr. Sparks in a letter of the 16th April, 1925, as follows:

DEAR SIR:

I am, by direction of the right hon. the Prime Minister, to acknowledge your letter on the 20th instant, with reference to Mr. J. A. E. Bisaillon; and to say that the same will receive due consideration.

"Hope deferred maketh the heart sick," nevertheless there was no other avenue open, and all Sparks could do was to keep on pressing for action. On April 5 he wrote to the Prime Minister again along the same line, and that time he did not even get a promise of due consideration. But that was not the situation in which all the people of Canada found themselves. Oh, no. It was all right for the Board of Trade of Montreal to apply and get no answer. It was all right for the Board of Trade of Toronto, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and other reputable associations of prominent men to ask help from the government and never even get a response. But there were some who found the government's response ready at the time of trouble. On March 31, 1925, a letter was written by Mr. Baldwin to Hon. Jacques Bureau. The letter was signed M. W. Baldwin—well, the initials are in doubt. It has been suggested that this letter was written by one of the hon.

members opposite. If I suggest that the wrong initials have crept into the record and that he did not actually write the letter, perhaps he will be good enough to rise and inform the House of the fact, otherwise we may be reasonably justified in assuming that this was his letter:

OTTAWA, March 31, 1925.

The Hon. J. BUREAU,
Three Rivers, Que.

My DEAR SIR,—You may remember that I spoke to you in regard to removing the specials along the border in my county. It is now six months since they went there, and many of them representing people who are not smugglers and never were, are wondering why these specials are chasing every boy and girl, old and young, for a bunch of celery or a loaf of bread, and making it frightful for people, as we were elected for economy and efficiency. The electors who have not been touched are asking me who is paying the bills? We think that we are being very overburdened by taxation, and that the officers are trying to frighten the above-mentioned people.

If you remember, I spoke to you with regard to removing these specials, and really hope you will do it, and I want to tell you that the propaganda of two Montreal lawyers who formerly lived in my county, and Senator Pope, to upset the county and to bring it back into the Tory fold, and it would take very long to tell you the propaganda.

It is true that we carried the county by a large majority, but that they might possibly outdo us.

Does the House realize who those "specials" referred to in that letter were? They were the men put on the border line between Canada and the United States by the government to prevent smuggling into this country, the only safeguard that we had to prevent that nefarious traffic from being carried on. This suggestion that even they should be taken away in order to advance the future interests of the Liberal party in the election was being made by the hon. gentlemen opposite to the then minister of the crown. Perhaps it is a matter of congratulation to feel that there are some people at least who can get some response from this government, who can get not only some correspondence in reply, but actually action. At all events, instead of being embalmed as the correspondence, Sparks to King, seems to have been for so many months, we find the letter hurried over to Springfield, Massachusetts, where the Hon. Jacques Bureau was, and we find him writing to Bisaillon on the 7th April for advice as to the situation.

Will the House bear in mind the dates when Sparks had already placed in the possession of the government information to the effect that Bisaillon was himself a smuggler and a crook, and at this time the Minister of Customs—will the House pause to appreciate this?—refers to that man, himself a crook and smuggler, the question whether or not the special contables appointed and delegated to protect the boundary of this country shall be taken off, leaving the boundary bare in order to help the Liberal party in an election? The suggestions were not without their ready response. On the 16th April, 1925, the same day when the Prime Minister of Canada was assuring Sparks and boards of trade of the various cities that their representations would receive due consideration the preventive officer Bisaillon writes thus to the Hon. Jacques Bureau:

Montreal, April 16, 1925.

Hon. Mr. Jacques Bureau,
Minister of Customs and Excise,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Bureau,—I have the honour to accuse reception of your letter dated 7th instant, accompanied by that of Mr. Baldwin, relative to the officers who work the frontier at Rock Island.

Mr. Baldwin exaggerates; the officers have received instructions, at the beginning, to keep busy with important things only and not with bread, celery, etc. . . . .and I do not believe that the people of Rock Island have become so fearful as wishes to say Mr. Baldwin; only he is pushed by Jenkins and Wilkinson who are the greatest smugglers of Rock Island, but the latter are his friends.

I also believe that, in the interest of the party, it would be preferable to discontinue to watch the frontier, but one must also think of the revenues of the department, for you know that the organization on the Merchants' Association awaits the occasion of the return of my officers to place some of their own people. The famous Knox and Sparks are trying to discredit all the department does; it is also said, right and left, that they have no instructions to receive from you nor from Mr. Farrow. Mr. Bureau, this question is very delicate; but if you prefer that I recall those officers or else that I talk the matter over with Hon. Mr. Cardin, I shall do so with pleasure. A new advice on the matter will oblige me greatly.

Not only could they get response in regard to the correspondence, but unlike the decent merchants, importers and business men of this country, they got action. The Prime Minister a little while ago asked me what it was that indicated corruption on the part of any member of the cabinet. I say this, that following that correspondence, some of those specials, and one in particular, were removed from the border and not sent back until after the election. If the Prime Minister does not call that corruption I do not know by what term he would prefer to call it. There was a man named Paul Jensen and another man named Brosseau; but Jensen I refer to particularly because he was assigned to duty later on in April of the same year, and as shown at page 2849 of the evidence, the official report as to the movement of the officers at Rock Island indicated that Jensen had been doing duty at Rock Island and that he was called back to Montreal by former inspector Bisaillon on August 31, 1925. What happened then? Mr. William F. Wilson, chief preventive officer at Ottawa, an honest official, asked when Jensen was going to go back to his duty, and the reply of Bisaillon was:

That Jensen was doing special work in Montreal and that he would be returned to duty at Rock Island after the 29th October, 1925.

Mr. MANION: What was the date?

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): It seems to me an election was on then. I suggest this, that when the only action that could be got was by people of such personalities as those who had such interests to serve, the charges that Sparks made with respect to the administration of justice in this country, and particularly the administration of the preventive service of the Department of Customs and Excise, were amply borne out. I suggest that long before the present Minister of Customs came into his position this pernicious practice of deferring to and looking after smugglers and crooks as against decent and honest business men of the country had become well established and was being practised by hon. gentlemen opposite.

10 p.m.

With no royal commission, no parliamentary committee, nothing that ever would have been appointed at any time, but by the efforts of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), the present Minister came upon the scene. There was, I believe, something in the nature of an interregnum during which the duties of Minister of Customs and Excise were looked after by an acting minister, the Hon. P. J. A. Cardin, who has been referred to before. But I think this is undoubted—and I am prepared to listen to any contradiction hon. gentlemen may feel disposed to make—that all the events which relate to the active part taken by the Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin) in connection with the Moses Aziz case took place after that minister had assumed the active conduct of that case, regardless of whether or not he was handling other matters in the department.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Before the hon. gentleman passes to the actions of the present minister, I should like to ask whether the committee made an effort to secure a statement from the late minister, and if not, why not.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I do not know whether Mr. Bureau was invited to appear before the committee or not. Personally I made no effort to have him appear, but I would suggest that the one best qualified to explain the failure of Mr. Bureau to appear before the committee would be the chairman of the committee and not myself.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Would my hon. friend allow me to answer that statement?

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I wish you would.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): The only procedure that could have been adopted would have been for one of the members of the committee to request me to make an interim report to the House asking that a message be sent to the Senate begging for leave to have Mr. Bureau appear before the committee. As one of the members of the committee the hon. gentleman must share the responsibility for any failure to take that course.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): If the hon. gentleman suggests that any responsibility was made known by himself to me, I should be glad to know what it was. I think the answer he has just given the House probably explains the situation to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth).

The Aziz case came into the files of the Customs department first with a reference to the events of May 14, 1925, when the seizure of liquor was made on the premises of one Moses Aziz of Caraquet, New Brunswick. This man Aziz was an Assyrian smuggler and bootlegger. He had been for some time notorious in that locality, having dealt with a particular vile and poisonous brand of moonshine whiskey, and he had been convicted and punished some time prior to the spring of 1925 for an infraction of the provincial liquor laws of New Brunswick. A record of that did not appear in the material that went to the Department of Customs at Ottawa, but the raid made upon Aziz on May 14, 1925, is recorded, and it is set forth in the documents. Perhaps the House will bear with me a moment while I point out what it amounted to, as it may be of importance presently.

The report sent in on May 14, 1925, was forwarded by the preventive officer down in New Brunswick, and it indicated that Moses Aziz had been in the smuggling and bootlegging business on a large scale, having been previously apprehended. I direct the attention of the House to the fact that this was one of the documents that came before the present Minister of Customs, or at any rate one which should have come before him. I prefer to believe that it did come to him at the time he began the consideration of this case. I invite the attention of hon. members to the fact that on May 14, 1925, as the record shows, the Dominion officers raided Aziz and cleaned out his stock of liquor so that he had no more on the premises. Then two months later, on July 14, there was a further seizure of liquor on the premises of Aziz, which liquor was valued at something like $650. In consequence of this seizure the man was charged with a breach of the Dominion liquor laws. Then, Sir, very shortly after that there came to the front again the same old influence of which Sparks had complained in vain. Before the case of Aziz was tried, a letter was written to the Hon. Jacques Bureau on August 1, 1925, by the Hon. P. J. Veniot, leader of the Liberal party in the province and at that time Premier of New Brunswick. I shall not read the whole of the letter, but I desire to call attention particularly to two or three paragraphs:

Officer Perley Stewart of the preventive service made a seizure on July 14th, and in laying his charge he fixed a valuation of about $600 on the goods so seized.

The Minister of Customs this afternoon said that the question of valuation was vital, and upon that point I shall have something to say later on.

If, however, the goods are fairly highly valued they would exceed the amount of $200 and therefore fall under the provision of the amended act, and make it an offence of from one to seven years imprisonment.

I call the attention of the House particularly to this:

These goods were in the possession of Mr. Aziz before the act was amended, and Aziz claims that after the amendment was enacted he was placed in such a position that he could not very well conform himself to the law, as he did not know what to do with these liquors.

Will the House bear in mind that on May 14 Aziz had been raided and cleaned out; every bit of liquor he had in stock was seized. And when they raid him in July, when he has a fresh stock in supply, the Premier of New Brunswick writes to the Hon. Mr. Bureau and declares that Aziz had not known what to do with the liquor!

Kindly note that he is not charged with having imported these liquors but simply having had same in his possession, and he can establish that they were in his possession before the act was amended. . . . Mr. Aziz is a very well known man in the country and has a wide circle of friends, and he has been a strong worker for the common cause, and I honestly believe he has acted honestly throughout this affair, and that if he will be sufficiently punished if the matter is brought within that section of the act which makes this offence punishable by fine. This case is to be heard on August 6.

[Mr. C. W. Bell.]

Of course it was but the merest coincidence that there was to be an election in New Brunswick on August 10.

Trusting that this case will receive your immediate attention, and thanking you, I beg to remain.

Was the Hon. Mr. Veniot, intervening for this Assyrian smuggler and bootlegger, in the unhappy position of those whom Mr. Sparks represented? He was not. A telegram was sent from Ottawa on August 7 to the Hon. Mr. Veniot:

Hon. P. J. VENIOT,
Bathurst, New Brunswick.

Revalue being made. Attention has been given as stated in your message.

And then an odd thing happened. William F. Wilson, chief preventive officer, and an honest official if ever there was one, must have been out of touch with the real powers moving in this matter, because he was so ill advised as to wire on August 7, the same day, to proceed with the prosecution under a more stringent section. That was done, and as a result, on the eighteenth day of August, Aziz came before Magistrate Sutton and was convicted of unlawfully smuggling liquors into the country and keeping them in his possession, for which offence he was adjudged to forfeit the liquors and pay the sum of $150 by way of fine and to serve a term of three months in the common goal of Bathurst in the township of Gloucester. Did they then despair? Not while there were still politicians to make representations to Ottawa. There was a letter written on August 29, to which the minister referred this afternoon, by Mr. M. F. Gallagher, chief of the Remissions branch. I would ask the House to note the date and purport of this letter:

Representations have been made to the hon. the Minister of Justice by the Premier of New Brunswick on the case of Moses A. M. Aziz, convicted at Bathurst on August 18 of illegal possession of illicitly imported liquor.

The House will see that Moses was determined to have justice.

A fine of $150 was imposed, together with a jail sentence of three months, and the fine has been paid.

The Premier of New Brunswick suggests that the imprisonment be suspended as the offender is a married man, in business for himself, and the term of imprisonment will occasion him much hardship. Moreover, it is stated that Aziz was not aware that the mere possession of smuggled liquor was in itself an offence, and further that the possession dated long before the act was amended.

Then following August 29 there was a letter which appears to have been sent to the Hon. Jacques Bureau, but which a correction afterwards showed actually went to the present Minister of Customs. It is that letter and the way the minister dealt with it that I would like to consider next. The minister appealed to the House this afternoon and said, "I am being charged because I did not take proceedings to have a warrant of commitment issued." I do not remember the exact words, but that was the effect of his remarks. Is it not abundantly clear that the cause of complaint never was that the minister had anything to do with issuing a warrant of commitment; the complaint is that he stopped its issue.

And when we consider the course of the minister in this respect I would like to pause for a moment in order to place before the House a short record of the man who fell into this error. If we could find that an error had been committed in all sincerity he should get the better construction placed upon it. According to the Canadian Parliamentary Guide, the Hon. George H. Boivin was a successful and brilliant student of law from a very early date in his career. He was president of the Liberal Law Students' Association of Laval; he was called to the bar in 1907; he was crown prosecutor for the district of Bedford in the same year and continued in that capacity for some years thereafter. He entered this House in 1911 and was subsequently returned as a member in 1917, 1921 and in 1925. He was Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons in 1918. The House will plainly see that it was no novice, no young man who could not be expected to realize his obligations, who came into the department early in September and took up this Aziz case. On September 21 Mr. Robichaud, the member for Gloucester, wrote the minister to the following effect:

> Will you please consult Hon. Mr. Lapointe about the proceedings instituted against Mr. A. M. Aziz, Caraquet, for violation of the Revenue Act. I attach the greatest importance to this affair, since in the actual circumstances I need the help of all my friends.
> The Hon. Mr. Lapointe will give you all the necessary information. Mr. Aziz is of the highest help for us during this campaign, and we cannot do without his services.

If there ever was a straighter bid to keep a man out of jail, and to help win an election with the assistance of a crook, a smuggler and a bootlegger, I have failed to come in contact with it. Then in answer to that letter we find another letter written on September 29, as follows:

> J. G. ROBICHAUD, Esq.,
> Shippigan, N.B.
> DEAR MR. ROBICHAUD,—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 21st instant, on the subject of proceedings instituted against Moses Aziz of Caraquet for violation of the law.
> Considering your strong recommendation instructions have been given not to execute the warrant of imprisonment until a new inquiry has been made.

And on that same date Mr. W. F. Wilson, chief preventive officer, wired to Mr. Stewart, customs officer at Chatham, New Brunswick, as follows:

> Am directed to request you to stay execution of warrant of commitment against Moses Aziz, pending further investigation. Arrange with magistrate accordingly.

I may say that that letter was stated by the minister on a subsequent occasion to have been dictated by himself. But apparently this did not suit Mr. Robichaud, and he wired back:

> Please refer my recent communications re Aziz. Most important that matter be settled according to my wishes. Preventive service has demanded commitment to be effective at once. Rush action and wire me.

There the matter rested until November 18, 1925, when the minister wrote Mr. Robichaud again:

> I have before me a memorandum concerning the case of Mr. Moses Aziz, who was condemned by the court to a fine of $150 and to three months imprisonment for having had liquor in his possession. . . .
> I have examined the case with care, and I can find no reason for which the imposed sentence should not be executed, but I will keep the matter in suspense until I get a reply from you, in the event of your having other representations to make to me.

According to the minister's own statement, he could find no reason—after the election—why the warrant should not be executed, but Robichaud knew of a reason, whatever that reason was, because he wrote right back on November 25:

> Referring to your favour of November 18 on the subject of penalties imposed on Mr. Moses Aziz for having had liquors in his possession, will you please do your best to suspend all proceedings until I see you when I return to Ottawa.

The proceedings continued in a state of suspension from that time until, in the course of the investigation conducted by the Stevens committee, the matter was brought up and became too notorious to await further action, and the man was at last imprisoned.

Now, Sir, what I have to say is this. It must be sufficiently evident to this House that after these various steps had been taken, after these recommendations were made and had proved so successful, there never would have been any imprisonment of Moses Aziz but for the fact that the whole wretched business was exposed before the Customs committee. Mr. Robichaud asked in his letter of November 25 that the matter be further suspended until he had an opportunity of seeing the minister.. November passed; December and January came and went; the House assembled and Robichaud as a member, was here. January passed, then February and March, and on April 21, 1926, when the whole of these facts came out before the committee, Aziz was still at liberty walking the streets of Bathurst. As I have said before, had it not been for the investigation that was instituted Aziz would be walking the streets still.

Now in connection with this case, why did they not take the regular ordinary course that is properly taken, the only course that may be properly taken in respect to the administration of the courts of justice? Why, in the letter that Gallagher wrote he referred to the fact that the Minister of Justice could do nothing. He referred to the fact that until that man had surrendered himself to the officers of the law, nothing could be done by the Minister of Justice in the way of pardon or parole. He drew attention to the fact, which none knew better than the Minister of Customs himself, that there was no way to keep that man from at least going to gaol overnight except an improper and a corrupt way, and, Sir, that way was taken for the reason which is set out in two, three, four and five letters that were written to the minister—keep this man out of gaol, because we have an election coming on and we cannot afford to have him incarcerated. I suggest, Sir, that although the evidence of the fact is not before us, the conclusion is irresistible that that man was not willing to do what almost any other man in his circumstances would have been glad to do, that is, surrender himself and receive a pardon. He was so important, he was such a precious help, he was such a great worker for the common cause that he considered he should not have his dignity invaded by even being shut up overnight. He must indeed have had something which gave him a hold on this cabinet and on the members of this government that they did not dare take the usual course in regard to him.

Mr. CAHILL: That is all rot.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is why he is condemning it.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: Does the hon. member wish to imply that Aziz had a hold on the present member for Gloucester?

Mr. BELL: (Hamilton): I would not be so unkind as to except the hon. member for Gloucester from the hold that Aziz has on the whole of that party.

I do not wish to be misunderstood, Mr. Speaker, in the position that I am taking in regard to the conduct of the minister in this respect. Everybody knows, even the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) knows, that it is a matter of common occurrence for solicitors or for those who are not solicitors, who have friends or clients or people whom they desire to benefit and who are incarcerated as a result of some misdeed, and the case having passed through the proper channels of the court, to go to the Minister of Justice or to the provincial Attorney General and to the parole board and intercede for a man legally incarcerated. Nobody contends for one moment that there is anything wrong with that process; in common with almost every other lawyer I have done the same thing myself. But, Sir, it is new to my experience at least that a minister should be asked to interfere with the process of the courts which we have endeavoured to keep inviolate, and that he should do so for a corrupt and degrading reason.

The hon. Minister of Customs stated to the House to-day that he came into the matter suddenly. He has a most unfortunate faculty for dropping into things unexpectedly. That is the unfortunate position in which he found himself on the night when the hon. member for Vancouver Centre made his charges in this House, when the minister announced that he had no idea that they were coming up, and he was taken so unawares. The position in which the innocent minister found himself in the Aziz case he described to be this: He just walked into his office in the Customs department here one night, and his private secretary told him that there was a letter from Mr. Robichaud about the Aziz case, and in a casual way the minister just dashed off a little telegram and the thing was done. But let me again draw the attention of the House to this fact, that the minister had before him, if he had access to the file at all—and if he had not access to it I do not know who had or would have—the statement of the seizure made on May 14, 1925, when the entire stock of liquor of Aziz was taken away, so he knew that those statements made in the letter of the Hon. Mr. Veniot were false statements, whether they were false to that gentleman's knowledge or not. He knew perfectly well the grounds upon which Mr. Veniot sought for clemency and the intervention of his executive authority.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is it not a fact that Aziz was convicted under a statute which was in vogue long before the act of last year, and not under last year's statute at all?

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I believe that to be the case, because the section which was insisted upon for the prosecution in the wire to Wilson changed the original intention to have the prosecution altered

Mr. MEIGHEN: So it did not matter how long he had the goods.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): No. The Minister of Customs had before him the report that Aziz had been for a great many years a notorious smuggler and bootlegger. He had before him the fact that this was not an application for a pardon, because Gallagher's letter particularly called attention to that circumstance. So I say that having all those records before him at that time, the minister was fully seized of facts which made his action at that time a scandal and an outrage upon the people of Canada.

But, Sir, I think he said this afternoon that he did not have full information at that time. I think he said that at that time he saw his private secretary, and in a casual way suggested to his private secretary that the action that was taken should be taken. Strange, is it not, that if the Robichaud letter was the only information the minister had before him at the time he directed the sending of his letter and telegram stopping the warrant of commitment—strange, is it not, that his own letter dealt with facts which were not contained or suggested at all in the letter which Robichaud had written? Because in the Robichaud letter the writer stated to the minister, "Mr. Lapointe will give you information about this case," and Mr. Lapointe, according to the sworn evidence of the Minister of Customs before the Customs investigating committee, was then out of town and he never saw him at all. So through some mysterious means, having seen that letter telling him simply: There is a man named Moses Aziz, and he is in trouble, but without saying why, and Mr. Lapointe being unable to tell him about it as he was out of town, the minister immediately sent off a letter and a telegram which stopped the issue of the warrant of commitment of which he has never heard.

But there is more than that. The minister came before the Customs committee, and he made his own statement to the committee of the circumstances surrounding that transaction. I think the fairest thing to do in dealing with this case is to look at the minister's own statement and see to what it deposes. The minister went before the committee and he told them, not once but twice, "At the time I signed that letter, at the time I directed that telegram to be sent, I did not think it was worth the paper it was written on." Then the minister comes into the House this afternoon—and this is why I asked him to give us the date on which he got that ex post facto opinion from the Department of Justice that he was entitled to do what he did—and produces an opinion which he gets in June, 1926, and which he wishes the House to accept as authority for his doing what he did in 1925. He told us before the Customs committee—let me give his exact words, because it is surely important that the House should know them:

> I did not think it was within the power of the minister to stay proceedings on a warrant of commitment.

He went on to say:

> I still state that I do not think that the telegram sent in my name or at my request to the officer of the court was worth the paper it was written on.

What I should like the House to consider is this: Did the minister when he wrote that letter to Robichaud, and when he had that telegram sent, expect that it would be effective in stopping the warrant of commitment, or did he not? If he did not expect it would stop the warrant of commitment, then what a despicable trick he was playing on his friend. What almost unspeakably wretched treatment to accord to his own friend in whom he trusted and who trusted in him! If, Sir, on the contrary, the minister, in spite of the statement to which he has sworn, did expect and did think that the statement would be acted upon, then what is his position when he comes before the committee and swears: "I had a letter written stopping a warrant of commitment. I had a telegram sent stopping a warrant of commitment. I believe I had no power to do it, I believe it is not worth the paper it is written on." Is it not clear and perfectly plain that if that was his belief and he expected it to be acted upon, he was perpetrating a gross fraud upon the courts of this country?

Then the minister comes to us this afternoon and says: There is something I believe somewhere in the laws of the province of New Brunswick that would prevent that commitment in any event being put into operation unless the private prosecutor asked for it. Since when, may one inquire, did the province of New Brunswick pass provincial laws that override the statutes of this Dominion? But, Sir, it is sometimes interesting to realize how people get the same idea about the same possibilities that may arise. I was much interested when the minister said this afternoon that he expected "that my friend the member for Vancouver Centre would say in the House that the liquor that was sold in the Tremblay case was potable liquor," and so he had got a letter that covered the case. Oddly enough my hon. friend the member for Kent, N.B., (Mr. Doucet) and I had an idea that the minister would say something like that, and so with respect to this case in New Brunswick we have a letter for him. In answer to a letter written by the hon. member for Kent, N.B., Mr. J. L. Ryan, Clerk of the Peace at Bathurst, N.B., writes under date of June 9, 1926, as follows:

DEAR MR. DOUCET,—With reference to your letter of the 4th instant in connection with the Moses Aziz case I have looked up the court records at the magistrate's office and find that the conviction is attached to the order itself which is dated 18th day of August, 1925. There is also a minute of the same date stating the penalty was $150 and $38 costs and that sentence was imposed of three months imprisonment. . . . . This conviction has been examined by several lawyers on behalf of Aziz and if it contained any irregularities they must surely have found them, long before this time.

Mr. BOIVIN: Will the hon. gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Yes.

Mr. BOIVIN: Was the warrant of commitment issued by the judge on the same date that the conviction which my hon. friend has just read was entered?

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): There never was any warrant of commitment, because my hon friend stopped it.

Mr. BOIVIN: There never was any warrant of commitment? There certainly was a warrant of commitment, because Moses Aziz is in gaol at the present time, and he could not be there without a warrant of commitment. I would like to know when that warrant was issued and upon whose request.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): If there had never been a member for Vancouver Centre, Moses Aziz would never have gone to gaol.

Mr. BOIVIN: I explained this afternoon why that warrant of commitment had not been issued, and I think my hon. friend should accept my explanation. He is bound to accept it, and he has no right to insinuate, whether he sat on the committee or not, that the warrant would not have been issued if there had not been a member for Vancouver Centre sitting on the Customs committee. I ask him to take back that statement; I insist upon its withdrawal.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I do not consider that there is anything that I should be called upon to withdraw, and I decline to withdraw anything I have said in that respect. I am at a loss to understand how the hon. member can make any such suggestion for one moment. He knows perfectly well that the only explanation he sought to give before the committee was the explanation given or

April 26th when he said that he had not seen Mr. Robichaud excepting on the one occasion on January 26, in this building, when Robichaud came to him and discussed another matter in which he desired the assistance of the minister, and the minister stated he was so tender-hearted that he would not take up the Aziz matter with Robichaud because he did not want to refuse him two things on the one occasion. But, Sir, the minister has never told the committee, he has never told the House, he has not told the House right down to this moment, why it was that although he met Robichaud in January in this House and that matter was discussed, he allowed January to go by, he allowed February, March and April to go by, without any further explanation until at our meeting of April 26th he admitted that the man was still at large.

Mr. BOIVIN: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The statement the hon. gentleman has just made, that I never told the committee and never told the House why Moses Aziz was still at large on that date, is, as my hon. friend knows, not according to facts. This afternoon I stated that the reason why Moses Aziz was still at large when that case came before the committee was because I wanted to submit all the documents, submit the entire record which had remained upon my desk, absolutely in the way in which they were on the day the committee was formed, that I did not want to take any action in the matter until it had been submitted to the committee. I must again ask and insist that the hon. member withdraw his statement that if it had not been for the hon. member for Vancouver Centre Moses Aziz would not be in gaol.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BOIVIN: I made a statement this aftenoon giving information to the contrary, and I ask that my statement be accepted.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If in the discussion of the conduct of the Minister of Customs and Excise his statement or reason must be accepted why of course, this debate should close. The question in this debate is this: Is the minister's statement or reason to be accepted on the evidence or not? If his say-so ends it, why there should be no debate.

Mr. SPEAKER: I was just about to state that this is a very involved case, and the question is one of appreciation of the evidence which was given in the committee. I do not find that the hon. member for West Hamilton has transgressed the rule. He does not accept the explanation given by the hon. Minister of Customs and Excise. I repeat that it is a question of appreciating the evidence, and I do not know that any point of order is involved.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Now that the Minister of Customs and Excise has introduced the question of what took place on his appearance before the Customs committee, I am going to turn up the evidence, Mr. Speaker, and I invite his further contradiction if he feels disposed to make it. I want, and I know he realizes the fact, to be fair to him in regard to the matter. Let me first call the attention of the House to the fact that the Aziz case came before the Customs committee on the 21st day of April, 1926, and it was not until five days had elapsed that the minister appeared before the committee, made his own statement and was subjected to cross-examination on it. His statement is very short and I would like to read it to the House. I wish to draw the attention of the House to it for another reason, namely, that in spite of the fact that the minister then told us that he did not believe his letter or his telegram were worth the paper they were written on, he gave us this afternoon a somewhat elaborate statement purporting to show why on that occasion he did believe he had the very power he now says he knows he did not possess. The minister on the 26th April, 1926, having had five full days for reflection and recollection as to what had taken place, came before the committee and made the following statement:

> As I happen to be before the committee, if Mr. Bennett will allow me, I might perhaps clear up the question of who signed these letters. At least I would be very glad to do so. If I may be allowed, Mr. Chairman, I saw in the evidence that was given when this Moses Aziz case was first before the committee that a reference was made to a statement of mine at the beginning of the inquiry, that I had been appointed on the 4th September, sworn in on the fifth and had taken over the complete administration of the department on the 31st October. If the committee will look two pages further down in the same evidence they will find that I took good care to say, before leaving the box, that I did not want to mislead the committee, that I had been in Ottawa on two or three occasions to attend council meetings, and when here, had gone to the office and attended to some routine matters. The 29th September, or 28th and 29th September was evidently one of those occasions. I remember very well having seen a telegram, or a letter of the 21st September which was on my desk when I arrived. I might say I was at the office only in the evening. My private secretary, Mr. Ide, was there with me assisting me to clean up correspondence, and when I saw the letter of September 21st, without taking the time to go through the file I was informed by Mr. Ide in a previous message sent by the—I cannot remember.

I will not take up the time of the House by reading further from that statement, but I am going to refer again to page 1407, on which it appears, and draw the attention of the House to the fact that this afternoon the minister gave us a long detailed account of how he had sent for Mr. Farrow, the deputy minister, and had asked Mr. Farrow, whether he, the minister, had the right to intervene to stop the issue of the warrant of commitment or not, and of how Mr. Farrow had assured him that it would be all right to go ahead. I draw the attention of the House to this fact; that if that were so it had completely passed from the mind of the minister when he made that detailed explanation on April 26 of what had occurred, because there is not the slightest reference to Mr. Farrow or anybody else being present. It passes my understanding, even if the minister could have conferred with Mr. Farrow on that point, why he, the crown prosecutor for years, the star legal man in his own division, should have consulted Mr. Farrow, who was not a lawyer, to know whether or not he, the keen legal mind, had a right to intervene.

Hon. members will note that here and there throughout the evidence taken before the Customs committee the same sort of thing kept cropping up. I do not refer to the appeals for clemency, but to this sort of political interference which prevented the laws of the country being enforced. I refer to the case of Byron Brown in October, 1923, when Hon. Jacques Bureau was still Minister of Customs. Brown was convicted of transporting liquor illegally, fined, and given a month in jail. Was the fine ever collected? It was not. Was the time ever served? It was not. Hon. J. E. Sinclair and Hon. B. C. Prowse came to Ottawa, and they were the men responsible for the fine not being collected and the imprisonment not being carried out to this day.

There was also the case of Gelfard Harnish, against whom a seizure was levied on 11th June, 1925. The report shows that Harnish was one of the biggest smugglers in Nova Scotia, and when apprehended he offered to plead guilty. But with this tenderhearted government in office they would not let him plead guilty, they hung the matter up to the 4th of December, and then this minister sent word that proceedings were to be withheld. Did he just walk in, look at this file, and go out again without making inquiry? The Minister of Customs stated that proceedings in that case were to be withheld; they were withheld and have been withheld until this day. It was suggested in the course of the committee investigation—and I think it has been suggested outside this House—that there were others who had applied for ministerial clemency in the case of persons convicted, and if there were other cases such as this—and I have not heard of them—would the House for one moment tolerate the plea of a man or three men who came before us and said, "Yes we were guilty, but you have got to declare us innocent because there are half a dozen others who are just as guilty as we are." That is the only argument advanced in extenuation of the conduct of the minister and his associates.

With this situation before us, what is this parliament going to do? When there is a settled course of conduct persisted in month after month, year after year, and when conditions are getting worse instead of better, are we going to say that we are so lost to all idea of decent obligation that we will pass it over because the minister is a good fellow and we would like to see him keep office, whether he has done these things or not? Is that to be the argument by which the decision of parliament is to be governed? Let me point out to this House that every member who votes against the present amendment subscribes to this creed: "I believe in the protection of smugglers and crooks against all honest merchants. I believe that high office may be prostituted to low purposes, to serve political ends. I believe that we may violate every obligation and every tradition of the courts in order to advance ourselves and win elections." If that is going to be the decision of parliament to-night or to-morrow, let us know it, for just as much as the minister himself, just as much as the Prime Minister who ignored the honest man and responded to the appeals of the crook, this house of parliament is itself on trial in this matter. The whole country will watch to see whether this matter is disposed of as it should be, and some of the keenest of the watchers will be the crooks down at Rock Island, namely, Gilmore, Telford, Pike, Jenkins, Wilkinson and all the rest of the miserable gang. They want to know what the House is going to do. Bisaillon wants to know, and every man who hopes to carry on in future that course of crookedness that has disgraced this country will want to know whether or not he is to be free to pursue it in future.

I often think, Sir, as I come up to this House, either by those winding paths that skirt its grounds on both sides, or by the broad avenue that leads to the front door, that this House stands here as symbolical of all that is best and most dignified in our national life.

[Mr. C. W. Bell.]

I think too that here, where we have set up the high court of parliament, above all places must right, honesty and justice sit enthroned, and with that thought there comes this in addition, that better far we had seen this splendid building levelled to the ground till not one stone remained upon another than to endure the infamy of subscribing to those things of which we have read and heard. The results of this vote will extend far beyond our own time into the time of generations yet to come. When the vote is recorded on this amendment every man within this chamber will be confronted by his own personal and individual responsibility, for, say what any hon. member may like about the matter, it is not a question of fiscal policy; it is not a question of political expediency; it is the old, old question of right against wrong, the question of straightforwardness as opposed to disgraceful intrigue, the question of national honour as against national dishonour. That is the question upon which each one of us must take his stand.

There is no alternative. I say to this House that in the fulness of time when this building in the natural course shall have crumbled away and everyone here is dust again with the ages, there will be indelibly engraven on the records of this country the stand taken by every man, whether he stood in favour of condonation of those things that have thrown down and defiled our altars of justice in this land, or whether he remained steadfast for those traditions and those high ideals which alone can make Canada great.

Mr. DUGALD DONAGHY (Vancouver North): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the address delivered by the hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell). He is one of the few members of this House whom I have known for many years. I have a great respect for his skill and ability as a pleader, and I think that from the standpoint of hon. gentlemen on the other side he has put forward as strong a special plea as any lawyer in the House could. I am not going to follow his example; I propose to take a somewhat different course. I intend to discuss intelligently if I can what was brought before the Customs committee, the evidence which we considered, the report which we made and the grounds upon which we made it. I do this because I think what the country is interested in is not so much personal recriminations or an attempt, in the slang phraseologly, to "get" a political opponent, but in knowing what this House and this parliament are going to do to remedy conditions that have existed for some years with regard to the smuggling of goods into the Dominion of Canada.

The Department of Customs and Excise has grown to be a somewhat important department in the last few years. Originally the minister had under his control merely the administration of customs. Later on the Department of Excise was amalgamated with the Department of Customs and he was charged with that responsibility as well. In 1920 further work was thrown upon the minister of this department when he was charged with the collection of the sales tax, and in 1924 the collection of income taxes for the Dominion of Canada was placed under the Department of Customs and Excise.

From the evidence brought before the committee it was quite apparent that there were many difficulties in the way of preventing smuggling. There is the long boundary line thousands of miles in extent between Canada and the United States. This boundary line is crossed in numerous places by roadways, arteries of various kinds, some of them in obscure districts. There are also the bridges, ferries, rivers and lakes. The difficulty was great originally, but it has been increased within the last two years to a remarkable extent by reason of the adoption of the 18th amendment to the constitution of the United States and the legislation following that for the purpose of enforcing prohibition in that country.

The enactment of the prohibitory law in the United States resulted in the building up of large liquor smuggling organizations. Such organizations are to be found in the Old Country and in other countries of Europe, all bent upon smuggling liquor into the United States and reaping the huge profits of that operation. Those organizations were also formed in Canada, and they carry on operations on a huge scale. The committee had every reason not to doubt that United States customs officials were susceptible to corrupt influences on the part of those liquor smugglers. The Canadian customs officials saw what was going on when liquor was being smuggled from Canada into the United States. The fact of their seeing their brother officers of the United States, under undue influence and possibly corruption, admitting liquor into that country and perhaps getting rich by giving way to the bribes of the smugglers would naturally have a bad moral effect upon our own officials. I have no doubt that that large trade in smuggling liquor from Canada into the United States has had a reflex action; it has a tendency at the present time and has had for some two or three years to increase smuggling from the United States into Canada of those articles of commerce and manufacture which we purchase in that country for use in Canada.

The advent of automobile transportation in recent years has also greatly added to the difficulty of the customs enforcement officers. At those various roadways which cross the boundary fast travelling automobiles loaded with merchandise quite often easily evade the watchful eye of customs officers. So that after all the work of the enforcement officers in the Customs department is not a bed of roses by any means. From the evidence brought before the committee we were rather inclined to the opinion that the three worst points at which smuggling was carried on were Rock Island, Quebec, the Niagara bridge, Ontario, and Windsor, Ontario. We made no investigation whatever into smuggling operations in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, and we inquired very little into the state of affairs in Ontario. Our investigations were directed largely against the province of Quebec.

I have mentioned Rock Island in Quebec because the conditions there are interesting. Rock Island is a small village, straddling the international boundary line, half in Canada and half in the United States. It is a small, rather unimportant looking country place and the people of the village wander indiscriminately back and fro across the border line without knowing that they are doing so. The housewife in Canada walks across the street into the United States, buys a pound of butter and brings it back into Canada, thinking nothing of it. Many years ago some gentlemen, having an eye to the profit to be made by smuggling merchandise from the United States into Canada, went to this obscure village and built there factories for the manufacture of clothing such as shirts and overalls, and others for the manufacture of bolts, nuts and things of that sort. Some of these factories are built straddling the boundary line so that half the building is in one country and half in the other. A bale of goods on the south side of the building would be in the United States, and the owner would need to roll it only twenty feet across the floor and it would be in Canada. That condition has existed for years. Stores in that small village are built in the same way upon the boundary line. You could enter a store on the south side of the building and purchase goods in the United States, and stepping across the floor to the other counter you could buy goods in Canada. The people of that village were not averse to smuggling; at any rate, they were not opposed to it. The customs collector had been there for about fifteen years and we brought him before the committee to get his views on the subject and to ascertain what he had been doing there all that time. We found that he had borrowed a few thousands of dollars from one of the factory proprietors engaged in smuggling, and we wondered how he could watch the owners of factories and prevent them from smuggling under such conditions. We found one of our customs officers there doing a large insurance business with these same factory proprietors who were engaged in the smuggling traffic. In other words, there was a sort of family compact in this little village and there was no attempt, so far as we could see, rigorously to enforce the law. I may observe, by the way, that in our report we have recommended that the customs collector who has been asleep there for fifteen years be discharged. That is one of the recommendations which the House will be asked to consider.

In 1914 the conditions were as I have described, and three officers were sent by the government of that day to clean things up. They made many seizures, in those factories of goods which they thought had been smuggled. Several of these seizures resulted in forfeiture of the goods themselves and the imposition of penalties. That had the effect of putting the place in semi-order for a short period. Then there was a lapse of ten years during which nothing was done. From 1914 to 1924 there was no preventive service patrol along the border in Rock Island. Things were allowed to remain stagnant. The only time anything was done was on such occasions as complaint was made. If someone was smuggling in Rock Island and a complaint was submitted, a man was sent from Montreal to look into the matter. But that was not effective. In 1924, one J. E. Bisaillon, concerning whom I shall have something to say later on, sent eight or ten of his preventive force down to Rock Island to stop the smuggling, but like many other efforts of that gentleman this did not prove highly successful, and later on this force was withdrawn. However, as a result of the expedition which he sent to that place, several consignments of smuggled goods were seized and forfeited and some heavy penalties imposed. He has that at least to his credit. When the committee began its sittings, or rather after we had got well under way, we sent for some of these manufacturers.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Was it not 1924 that Bisaillon sent his force down there?

Mr. DONAGHY: I said that in 1914 the government of that day sent three men to Rock Island to make a clean-up—

[Mr. Donaghy.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: I thought the hon. member said Bisaillon did.

Mr. DONAGHY: —and the government left things stagnant from 1914 until 1924, when Bisaillon went there with his small contingent. As I say, we were rather interested to see the gentlemen who were carrying on this very lucrative trade of smuggling cottons from the United States for manufacture in these factories that straddled the boundary. As you may suppose, some of them were not anxious to appear. Some bucked rather strenuously when we put the halter on them and tried to lead them, and others refused to obey summonses. We asked them to produce their books, and by this time they had become somewhat alarmed, so that some of them mutilated their books or hid or destroyed them. This rendered very difficult the work of our auditors in checking up the quantity of goods these men had smuggled. There was one firm in particular whose members came forward to the committee with the allegation that the books had disappeared. They swore they did not know what had happened to them; they had no idea. Apparently the books had taken it into their heads one night to walk out. We had able counsel assisting us, but Mr. Calder, K.C., found these gentlemen rather hard nuts to crack. They fought him off for two days, but in the afternoon of the second day, much to the surprise of the whole committee, one of them broke down and made a complete confession. He admitted that he had destroyed the books and he promised to give every assistance he could to the auditors and to our counsel in making a full disclosure of the sins of which he had been guilty. I do not know whether the auditors have succeeded in extracting very much information from him since then, but I am inclined to think that fear of contradicting the evidence he gave on oath before the committee will be a rather strong inducement to him to tell the truth in future.

Another manufacturer who appeared before us refused point blank to give authority to our officers to look into a warehouse he had on the American side of the line a few yards over the border. We wanted to look into that warehouse, because we suspected that he had it filled with merchandise and that in the night time he slipped the goods across the boundary. He placed himself in contempt of the committee and his case seemed hopeless. However, he was arrested about two o'clock in the morning, taken out of his room in the hotel here and placed in gaol on a charge of smuggling. He appeared before the committee in custody the next day, a somewhat repentant sinner I may say, looking very much the worse for wear after his night's incarceration in gaol. This had a very good effect upon him; he gave in and agreed to take the officers down, open his warehouse on the United States line and show what was there. The officers went with him and saw the warehouse, which they discovered to consist of two compartments, one of which was filled with prison-made shirts with the labels torn off, together with cotton goods of various kinds. These were stored within a few feet of the boundary line ready to be smuggled into Canada in the dark or at any favourable opportunity.

These conditions were all revealed to the committee, and after considering them carefully the committee recommended that the law as set forth in the Customs Act be enforced. That law provides that where smuggled goods are found in any building within one hundred yards of the boundary, the authorities may demolish that building. We recommend that that be done in order to get rid of these buildings which straddle the line. We also recommend that an effective patrol be put in force there, where some six or seven country roads all lead to the United States, making it impossible for one customs house to guard them all. This is going to cost some money, but it will protect the revenue of the country if an effective preventive patrol is inaugurated there.

The committee spent a great deal of time, some weeks in fact, investigating the very large question of cars stolen in the United States, smuggled into Canada and sold here by the thieves. Apparently there was a considerable trade in that line carried on in the city of Montreal. If hon. members will read our report they will find a recommendation suggested there to cover that situation.

Mr. Speaker, I observe that it is after eleven o'clock, and if it is the pleasure of the House I would be glad to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Lapointe the House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

DETROIT AND WINDSOR SUBWAY COMPANY

Mr. FRANK S. CAHILL (Pontiac) moved:

That in accordance with the recommendation contained in the fifth report of the select standing committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraphs Lines, the sum of seven hundred dollars be collected from the promoters by the Clerk of the House as the fee chargeable on the capital stock of the Detroit and Windsor Subway Company, as fixed by section 7 of Bill No. 174, incorporating the said company.

Motion agreed to.

CUSTOMS INQUIRY

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE AND AMENDMENTS THERETO

The House resumed from Tuesday, June 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mercier (St. Henri) for concurrence in the report of the special committee appointed to investigate the Department of Customs and Excise, and the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. Mr. Stevens.

Mr. DUGALD DONAGHY (North Vancouver): A great deal of time was consumed by the committee and by the auditors engaged by the committee in checking up the books and records of some of the Canadian distilleries. Two questions of considerable importance were brought to our attention in that connection. The first question was as to the liability of these distilleries for sales tax on liquor exported to the United States, and the second question was as to the liability of these distilleries for excise duty on exports presumably made under somewhat peculiar circumstances to foreign lands, such as Cuba and Mexico.

With regard to the payment of sales tax on the shipment of liquor from Canada to the United States, as a general rule the distilleries have not paid this tax. It is quite true that the law and regulations as they now stand covering exports of liquor or manufactured articles of any kind, from Canada to foreign countries do not call for the payment of sales tax. We may always entertain a doubt as to these liquors actually reaching the United States; they are shipped and smuggled into that country by such secret methods that the exporters are probably unable to produce proof to the government that this liquor ever reached the United States. In the absence of proof of the liquor having reached the foreign country it may well be and probably is the law that they will be liable for this sales tax.

In regard to their liability for excise duty on shipments fictitiously billed to Cuba and Mexico it is a matter of common knowledge that boat loads of whiskey will clear from Vancouver, British Columbia, for Ensenada, Mexico. The cargo of liquor is released from bond with no excise duty being paid, and it is placed on board this ship. As security for payment of this excise duty the exporter gives a bond to the government that he will prove that this liquor reached Ensenada, Mexico. If he is unable to prove that, the bond calls for a penalty of double the amount of the excise duty. If, however, he then proves that the liquor has reached Ensenada, Mexico, the bond is cancelled and under our law there is no excise duty paid, our law providing that in the case of liquor manufactured in Canada and shipped to a foreign port the payment of excise is not required on proof of landing being furnished. Now, the question arises as to whether or not these exporters have furnished sufficient proof of the landing of this liquor in Ensenada, Mexico. In many cases they have brought back and left with the collector of customs at Vancouver certificates signed by the Mexican government official at Ensenada to the effect that this liquor was landed there. There is not much doubt in my mind that these certificates are false. I am quite satisfied that practically all of this liquor was unloaded off "rum row" opposite San Francisco, and found its way into the United States; I think a checking up of the records in Ensenada will prove that fact. The same circumstances are to be found on the Atlantic coast where shipments of liquor were cleared, presumably and on the face of the documents, for Nassau and Havana but never reached those ports. The excise duty will not be payable on these shipments if it can be proved the liquor reached the ports in question. The question is whether satisfactory proof has been furnished to that effect, and as to what the real facts are. The committee realized that this question is extremely important because it runs into hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars of revenue. After giving the matter as careful consideration as we are able in the time allotted to us, we brought in a recommendation. It is to be found in paragraph 10 of our report, the first part of which reads as follows:

> The committee finds that it is the common practice of the department to grant clearances to vessels wholly or partly laden with liquor for the United States, or allegedly bound for a foreign port, but admittedly sailing to "rum rows," and that false landing certificates have been produced to obtain cancellation of bonds given for foreign export of cargoes so cleared.
> The committee further find that a strong presumption is raised that some proportion of the liquor so shipped and cleared finds its way back into Canada for consumption. The committee, therefore, recommend that excise and sales tax be levied on all Canadian made intoxicating liquors released from bond, no matter where they are carried and consumed, and that duty and sales tax be levied on all alcoholic liquors entering Canada, whether in bond or otherwise, irrespective of their ultimate destination.

Allied with the question which I have just been discussing is the treaty made between the United States and this country for the prevention of smuggling. A treaty for that purpose was also negotiated between Great Britain and the United States. The treaties are not alike; the principles are quite different. But Canada is bound by the British treaty, its vessels being British ships. Shortly put, the British treaty provides that the American government shall have authority to board any British vessel suspected of an attempt to smuggle liquor into the United States, and to examine that vessel provided the ship is within one hour's sailing distance of the American coast. Further, if, on examination of the ship, evidence is found of an attempt to smuggle liquor into the United States, the treaty provides that the American authorities may seize the vessel and bring it into an American port to be dealt with according to American law. Now, Canadian ships being under the British flag are British ships; they are all bound by that British treaty. However, a separate treaty for the prevention of smuggling was negotiated between the Dominion of Canada and the United States in June, 1924. That treaty provides for two things. It does not go as far as is popularly believed to be the case. The first thing it provides is that each government shall notify the other government of all clearances and transportation of goods starting from one country into the other where such goods are dutiable. In the second place it provides that clearances shall not be given to boats containing a cargo of liquor clearing for a distant or foreign country where it is evident from the size of the boat that it would not be able to make the voyage or weather the seas. The latter provision would prohibit our government from granting a clearance to a gasoline launch, loaded with whiskey, sailing from Windsor, Ontario, to Mexico. Obviously such a launch could not reach its destination. But let me point this out to you: The treaty does not deal with nor prohibit the granting of a clearance to a gasoline launch loaded with whiskey clearing from Windsor, Ontario, for Detroit, Michigan. I know the popular conception is to the contrary. That fact, when it was ascertained from an examination of the treaty, caused some surprise to a few members on the committee. Nevertheless it is the case, and those exporters of liquor who are smuggling it to-day into the United States are acting within the law and the statutes of this country when they get a clearance for a gasoline boat, loaded with whiskey, to sail from Windsor, Ontario, to Detroit, Michigan. The only thing the treaty provides in regard to that is, that our government shall notify an official of the American government that the boat has sailed. The United States having that warning are then given the opportunity, by policing the lakes and rivers, of intercepting and capturing the craft. Now in the judgment of the committee that state of the law is not satisfactory, and we have brought in a recommendation dealing with it. That recommendation, which is part of paragraph 10, reads as follows:

> The committee further recommends that, as soon as possible, regulations be made to prohibit clearances being granted to vessels carrying liquor as cargo, sailing from a Canadian port to a United States port, such regulations to make an exception in favour of liquor being imported into the United States in accordance with the laws of that country.

The last clause deserves some explanation. We are told that under the American law provision is made for importing into the United States liquor to be used for medicinal and sacramental purposes, under a permit issued by the government of that country. That is why the saving clause is at the end of the recommendation.

In our investigation of Canadian distilleries the most of our time was directed to a small distillery in Montreal named the Dominion Distilleries. Very little of our time was directed against the large distilleries of Canada; in fact in the majority of the largest combination of distilleries in this country known as the Consolidated Distilleries our examination amounted to nothing. The Dominion Distilleries was incorporated two or three years ago and opened a distillery in Montreal. The brains of the concern appeared to be Mr. James Cooper, Walkerville, Ontario. Mr. Cooper for fifteen years had been the selling agent of Walker's whiskey manufactured by Hiram Walker & Sons, Limited. When the prohibition laws came into force in the United States, and when it became an offence in the United States for any one to import liquor into that country, Mr. Hiram Walker, who lives in Michigan, had some fears that he might be prosecuted in that country for conspiracy to violate its laws if he were a party to his distillery in Walkerville, Ontario, smuggling whiskey from Canada into the United States. We find the Dominion Distilleries was incorporated and that all the whiskey manufactured by Hiram Walker & Sons, Limited, and destined to be smuggled into the United States, was sold by Hiram Walker's distillery to the Dominion Distilleries of Montreal. There is some doubt as to whether those sales were bona fide or merely paper sales. The suspicion is that they were paper sales for the reason that the Dominion Distilleries' profit was fixed at a commission of $1 a case. That would indicate that the Dominion Distilleries was the selling agent. However the sales were put through on paper as genuine sales to all appearance. Hon. members have heard of the mysterious method by which liquor was shipped from Walkerville, Ontario, to the Dominon Distilleries at Montreal, Quebec, in carloads, and how these cars without unloading were returned over the same track, back along the same line through Walkerville to Ford and Windsor, Ontario. The public was curious as to the cause of this unexplainable expense in railway freight. The matter was very simple when it was explained to us before the committee by Mr. Cooper. He told us that Walker's distillery decided that it would not be a party to the smuggling of its liquor from the distillery into the United States. Accordingly the Dominion Distilleries was formed for the purpose of doing that work, and it did that work, and would appear to be a selling agency of Hiram Walker. Although that may strike the public as being somewhat mysterious, permit me to say that it was not against the law of this country, and further that on these sales from Hiram Walker and Sons of their liquor shipped to Montreal the sales tax was paid in every instance. As to whether the law fully provides for what the people of Canada think the law should provide is another question, but I want that fact distinctly emphasized, that in this transaction which I have just outlined the law gave full authority for these transactions.

Allied with this subject comes up the question of denatured alcohol. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) referred to this subject. I intend to make a few remarks to explain and make fully clear just what the law is in regard to this matter. First let me say that alcohol in bond in a distillery when mixed with drugs and chemicals under the supervision of a customs officer, such drugs being of a kind, quantity and proportion prescribed by our law, pays no excise duty. It is called denatured alcohol. There are two principal kinds of denatured alcohol; one kind is mixed with poison and drugs of such characteristics that the mixture cannot subsequently be separated into its original ingredients. The alcohol cannot subsequently be extracted from the mixture so as to be safely consumed by human beings. There is a second kind of denatured alcohol called specially denatured alcohol. It is generally used for medicinal purposes, largely used for rubbing in case of sickness. It has this striking peculiarity, so far as its chemical composition is concerned, that chemists can separate the ingredients of this mixture into their original elements, placing the pure alcohol in one vessel and the drugs in another. The alcohol thus redeemed is like first hand distilled liquor, and may be used for human consumption.

Dominion Distilleries manufactures a great deal of this specially denatured alcohol. We examined very carefully witnesses, government officials and records, to ascertain whether or not Dominion Distilleries complied with the law and regulations in that respect. It was abundantly proved by the customs officers who superintended the denaturing of this alcohol that it was done in accordance with the regulations. That being the case, this alcohol no longer remained subject to payment of excise duty. Most of this alcohol was then exported by Dominion Distilleries to the United States. It was as lawful to export denatured alcohol as it was to export whiskey to the United States. It was not contrary to the laws of Canada as they stand to-day to export either or both to the United States. I mention these things because, as I said in the beginning, a great deal of time was consumed by the committee in investigating Dominion Distilleries. We have not given them a clean sheet; we have recommended in our report that a suit be brought against them for the purpose of ascertaining what sums, if any, are owing by that concern and if any are found owing, for the recovery thereof. What that may be, the result of the litigation will prove.

Let me further say at this point in regard to the dispute between Canadian distilleries generally and the government of Canada concerning the liability of distilleries for sales tax on liquor exported to the United States, that the government has instituted actions at law in Toronto against two or three of those distilleries for the purpose of making a test case as to the law and the liability of those distilleries to pay sales tax on liquor so exported. Those lawsuits have been instituted and the cases will come up for trial in due course, so that that subject is being safely taken care of.

In my remarks last night I had occasion to mention the name of Mr. J. E. Bisaillon and I said that I should have something further to say regarding him later on. We spent days and weeks investigating this man, investigating transactions with which we suspected he was connected. He was on the witness stand dozens of times. He was subjected to the most severe and gruelling cross-examination that I have ever heard giver a witness in any court of law. He was cross-examined by an able counsel who had previous knowledge of many matters that came before the committee and who was well armed to perform his task. I think we were all satisfied Mr. Bisaillon was probably one of the cleverest witnesses at side-stepping and evasion that we had ever heard. There is a large volume of evidence given by him. Whether or not the attempt to catch him in the web has been successful would be improper for me to say at this stage, for this reason. We have recommended that the evidence given by this gentleman should be forwarded to the proper authority, the proper authority under our constitution being the Attorney General of Quebec who is charged with the administration of criminal law in that province. I take it that if this recommendation is adopted by this House, that evidence will in due course reach the hands of the Attorney General of Quebec; that it will be considered by him and his officers, and that if the evidence warrants a prosecution against this man, such prosecution will be duly instituted and he will be tried. It is for that reason I say that it is quite improper at this stage for any man to express an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of this man as he may be tried later on.

But we are quite free to examine his career as a public servant. He was appointed a customs officer about fifteen years ago. He has been a long time in the service of Canada. In 1920 while acting as customs officer he carried on a side line, namely, that of a dealer in liquor. His business ran into a turnover of a million and a half dollars, as was brought out during the inquiry held by our committee. I take it that the government in power in 1920 did not know that this servant of the people, enforcing the customs laws of this country, was carrying on as a side line a large business as a liquor dealer, otherwise they should have disciplined him. As a matter of fact this did not come out until the matter came up before the committee. There are many things concerning this gentleman that came out for the first time before our committee.

In 1924 the Civil Service Commission of Canada appointed this man, as lay in their power and jurisdiction, to the office of chief preventive officer of the district of Montreal. This gave him charge of the customs officers whose duty it was to prevent smuggling in that area. He entertained at his home in Montreal a member of the Civil Service Commission who has since resigned. During our investigations, which by the way were very thorough, regarding this man some remarkable cases were ventilated before the committee and I am going to mention one or two of them by way of illustration.

One of the most notorious is known as the Lortie-St. George case and deals with the smuggling of narcotics. This case was mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) in his speech in this House on February 2 last when he made his charges against the present government. As a matter of fact this smuggling took place in 1919 and it is one of the worst cases that we have to deal with. The facts are simple. In 1919 a boy drove up to the station of the Canada Steamship Company in Montreal with a wagon drawn by one horse. He had two trunks which he unloaded. He produced to the baggageman two first-class tickets to Cornwall, Ont., and he asked to have the two trunks checked on those tickets. The baggageman checked the trunks and gave the boy the checks. As he rolled over the trunks he noticed something was shaking inside them and he asked the boy what the trunks contained. The boy said, "Personal effects." The boy went away. The baggageman was suspicious and called the customs officer who subsequently procured a key and opened the trunks which he found full of narcotics. In a short time two ladies arrived. They were looking after the baggage and they inquired as to the checking of the trunks. The customs officer asked them if they had the key for the trunks, and they said they had not and he opened them in their presence. The women declared that the trunks did not belong to them, being the property of a Doctor Lortie in France. This doctor had requested them to have the trunks forwarded to Cornwall and, according to their story, they were checking them. The trunks were seized and confiscated, but unfortunately the two women were not arrested. This was a somewhat remarkable circumstance. Mr. Bisaillon was present when the two women were being interrogated—he was customs officer at that time—and they were allowed to go. After a considerable search, however, they were arrested and brought to trial, and it was necessary at the trial to establish their identity with the two women who had been at the station when the trunks were opened. Bisaillon was called as a witness and was asked whether these were the two women who had been at the station some weeks previously. His memory failed him, and he was unable to say anything about it. The two women, however, were fined $500 each, and the two trunks of narcotics worth $35,000 were ordered by the judge to be confiscated. They were placed in the custody of the court, and that night the custody of the court was violated and the two trunks were stolen. They have not since been found.

The other case of some interest which I desire to mention is that of the barge Tremblay. In November, 1924, word was sent to the officers of the Quebec Liquor Commission that a certain barge was sailing up the St. Lawrence river. It was watched and it was seen to sail past the port of Quebec without entering. The officers of the Quebec Liquor Commission endeavoured to keep track of it, and at midnight of the following day they found the barge in a secluded spot along the banks of the St. Lawrence at a place called St. Sulpice. There were eight motor trucks at this place unloading the barge, which contained about 16,000 gallons of alcohol, brought from a foreign country, on which no duty had been paid and which it was sought to smuggle into the country. The officers of the Quebec Liquor Commission compelled the men to restore to the vessel that portion of the cargo that had been removed. They took charge of the barge, arrested the captain and the entire crew, and proceeded with the barge to the port of Montreal. There were on board two Americans who professed to be the owners of the cargo, and they too were placed under arrest. Before the barge left St. Sulpice a customs officer named Duval arrived on the scene. This officer in his evidence informed us that he had been sent by Bisaillon to watch the vessel, and he arrived in a Ford car with his wife. This struck the committee as a rather small contingent to send out to seize a barge of this size containing a cargo of such considerable value. We doubted the bona fides of Officer Duval and consequently we have recommended his dismissal from the service. On the arrival of the barge at Montreal one of the first men to appear at the wharf was Bisaillon who claimed, by virtue of his authority as an officer of the Dominion, to have the right to supersede the officers of the Quebec Liquor Commission. Accordingly he drove them off after they had informed him that the captain, the crew and the two Americans were under arrest. Bisaillon proceeded to unload the barge and he took the cargo to the bonded warehouse of His Majesty. The two Americans were allowed to escape and we have been unable to find out who they are. They have never been prosecuted for this attempt to violate the laws of this country.

Following this rather singular incident Mr. Bisaillon was arrested for conspiring to violate the laws of the country in connection with the barge Tremblay, and some others were apprehended along with him. In due course he appeared for hearing before the courts, but at the preliminary trial it was found that there was no evidence against him. He was travelling in very good luck. He was released At that trial his bank account was produced and it appeared that over a period of three years his turnover in the bank had amounted to $69,000. He did not have $69,000 actually in the bank, but his turnover during that period had totalled that sum. He was asked to account for these moneys, and in a very rambling way, not at all clear, he intimated that he had deposited some money belonging to the government, moneys which he had collected as a part of the revenues of Canada, in his personal account from time to time overnight, pending an opportunity to transfer them to government account. That of course would be a singular thing to do, and when the Customs department read in the press this statement of Bisaillon's, they proceeded to hold an investigation to ascertain whether the revenues of the country were being deposited by any of the collectors of customs in their private banks. Now the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) in his speech on February 2 emphasized as one of the main charges against this administration the allegation that the administration had allowed customs collectors to take tens of thousands of dollars of the revenue of the country and deposit it in their private banks.

Mr. STEVENS: I know my hon. friend does not want to be unjust and he will allow me to correct him. I said on that occasion that Bisaillon had either deposited the money in his own bank or he had perjured himself in his testimony in Quebec. My hon. friend will admit that the evidence now shows that in all probability Bisaillon did perjure himself. I said that one or the other was the case.

Mr. DONAGHY: I am sure the hon. gentleman will not object to my reading from Hansard at page 687, just what he said:

[Mr. Donaghy.]

I purpose to show that this man Bisaillon the chief customs preventive officer, raised to that position after the government had knowledge of his rascality and his criminality, received moneys of the crown, some $69,000, discovered in several cases, including $14,000 referred to in this examination which I shall read in a moment; that he received moneys of the crown to the extent of tens of thousands of dollars, deposited them to his own account, and this examination will disclose that he never remitted those moneys to the account of the Receiver General.

Mr. STEVENS: That was according to his own evidence.

Mr. DONAGHY: I pause to hear my hon. friend read that part of his speech wherein he says he declared the other alternative. I cannot find it in his speech. What are the facts in regard to that? As soon as an account of that came out in the press, the day after Bisaillon's trial, the government proceeded to investigate, and no charge can be laid against this administration in connection with that matter, notwithstanding the vehemence and the force with which the hon. member from Vancouver Centre rang out that accusation on February 2 last.

I am now going to refer to page 179 of the evidence taken before the committee, where I find the following letter:

February 19, 1925.

To Collector of Customs and Excise,
St. Johns, Province of Quebec.

Sir,—During the period April 1, 1922, to July 31, 1922, revenue collected at the outport of Farnham in your survey was reported to the Department of Revenue on revenue returns K-10, numbers 9, 14, 18, 24, 33, 39, 43, 52, 56, 61, 69, 75, 94, 95, 96 and 99. A report is required from you showing the manner in which these collections were remitted to you by the acting sub-collector during that period. Were they covered by cheques? If so, were the cheques marked "Department of Customs and Excise Official"? Or were they personal cheques? On what bank were they drawn or to be presented for payment? Also state if you have information as to where these collections were on deposit up until the time the cheques covering them were presented. A reply is requested as early as possible.

Deputy Minister of Customs and Excise.

Here is the reply to that letter:

Customs and Excise, Canada
Port of St. Johns, Que.,
February 24, 1925.

R. R. FARROW, Esq.,
Deputy Minister,
Customs and Excise,
Ottawa.

Sir,—In reference to your letter of the 19th inst., asking to report to the department on revenue returns K-10, Nos. 9, 14, 18, 24, 33, 39, 43, 52, 56, 61, 69, 75, 94, 95, 96 and 99, in which were included the revenues collected at the outport of Farnham, Que., during the period April 1, 1922, to July 31, 1922.

In reply I have the honour to report that yesterday afternoon, the 23rd, I went to Farnham; there I found the cheques that were issued to remit the collections made at that outport to the chief port of St. Johns

P.Q., during said period; the cheques are all properly marked, "Department of Customs and Excise—Official", and all are drawn on the Canadian Bank of Commerce, Farnham, where the various collections are deposited, and same are all signed by J. E. Bisaillon, with the exception of the two first ones dated 5th and 12th of April, 1922, that were signed by officer J. L. Sevigny, as officer in charge. I brought the cheques with me, in order to enable me to submit them to your examination; a receipt for same was given by me to the said collector.

The following is a list of said cheques enclosed herewith:

April 8, 1922, $935.44; April 15, 1922, $1,533.86; April 22, 1922, $1,676.26; April 29, 1922, $1,146.98; May 8, 1922, $3,565.60; May 15, 1922, $988.63; May 22, 1922, $2,232.32; May 31, 1922, $2,951.18; June 8, 1922, $1,676.82; June 15, 1922, $1,747.10; June 22, 1922, $2,146.39; June 30, 1922, $1,650.48; July 8, 1922, $1,363.01; July 15, 1922, $1,874.45; July 22, 1922, $1,898.85; July 31, 1922, $2,076.61.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. A. LATOUR,
Collector of Customs and Excise.

We had those cheques produced before the committee and found they were for the account of the government of Canada in the bank at Farnham, and were signed, "Department of Customs and Excise, official, per J. E. Bisaillon." His authority to sign was then limited to cheques made payable to the government of Canada. That is the common and safe practice as followed by the department for years and years.

Mr. STEVENS: Will my hon. friend permit me at that point? Will he not admit that the cheques to which he now refers were paid into the account in the Canadian Bank of Commerce? The deposits referred to by Bisaillon in his sworn evidence before the Quebec courts amounted to $69,000, and were placed in his own bank, the Bank of Hochelaga.

Mr. DONAGHY: My hon. friend is quite wrong in that. These are the cheques which were under discussion at the time.

Mr. STEVENS: The cheques paid into his own bank.

Mr. DONAGHY: My hon. friend is quite wrong. The department was not quite satisfied even with that report, and the chief accountant of Customs and Excise at Ottawa was requested to investigate the matter. On March 2 he wrote to the deputy minister as follows:

Referring to the attached newspaper clipping—

That is the newspaper clipping of Bisaillon's evidence.

—and to your request for information pertaining to the manner of depositing and remitting collections at the outport of Farnham during the period for which auditor J. E. Bisaillon—

That should be officer.

—acted as sub-collector there.

I find that under date of October 28, 1921 (File 95809) the Department of Finance approved use of the Canadian Bank of Commerce at that point; for the purpose of making deposits and collections, that the collections taken at that outport appear to have been deposited in the Canadian Bank of Commerce at Farnham as the regular sub-collector, as well as officer Bisaillon during his period on relief duty, have remitted their collections by cheque on the Farnham branch of the Canadian Bank of Commerce. These in turn were deposited by the collector at the chief port of St. Johns paid at Farnham, and the amount included in the collector's draft and deposit receipts covering remittance for each period concerned. The collections thus deposited and remitted by officer Bisaillon during the period he served Farnham total $29,463.97. I attach hereto the returns K-10A from the outport, the covering K-10's received from the chief port, the relative deposit receipts from the chief port, and cheques from the outport. Will you kindly return those to me when they have served your purpose in order that they may be redistributed to their respective files.

3 p.m.

(Sgd.) F. A. RORKE,
Chief Accountant of Customs and Excise.

Now, whatever may have been the crimes, if we may so describe them, of Bisaillon, there was one thing he was careful not to do—to steal the money of the Dominion of Canada. You have now, Sir, a very fair outline of this gentleman's characteristics, and you may be curious to know how he eventually met his Waterloo—how we got rid of him. It is a very simple narrative. I read from page 83 of the evidence. The present Minister of Customs has been sworn and is in the witness box. The examination is as follows:

Q. Mr. Boivin, you are the Minister of Customs and Excise?

A. Yes.

Q. When did you assume that office, Mr. Boivin?

A. Speaking from memory, I was appointed on the 4th day of September, 1925, sworn on the 5th of September, 1925, and took over the administration of the department from the then acting minister, the Hon. Mr. Cardin, on the 31st day October, 1925.

Q. It was about the end of October when you assumed active duty?

A. Yes.

Q. We have had produced by you here a large volume apparently of evidence, being the examination of a great number of witnesses on an investigation held by Inspector Duncan?

A. Yes.

Q. How did Inspector Duncan come to examine those witnesses?

A. Very shortly after my arrival at Ottawa on the 31st of October, 1925, I repeated to the Hon. Mr. Robb, the then Minister of Finance, some of the rumours which had reached my ears in the city of Montreal during the general election campaign, concerning inefficiency and maladministration on the part of the preventive service, in the city and district of Montreal. I remember that I mentioned Mr. Bisaillon's name, but I cannot remember the other names of the officers who were complained of in those rumours. Mr. Robb immediately said that the proper thing to do would be to have an investigation. I told him that that was my idea too, but that I did not know exactly to whom I could turn to secure a competent investigating officer. He told me that he had in the employ of the Department of Finance as investigation agent Inspector Walter Duncan, who had been with them for several years and who had always given them complete satisfaction. If I remember correctly, he told me that Inspector Duncan was engaged upon some particular work for the Department of Finance, but that he would send him to my office in a day or two, in order that I might arrange with him to make this investigation. As near as I can remember, it was about ten days later.

Q. Later than what?

A. Later than this conversation, which took place about two or three days after my arrival at Ottawa, and therefore it would be about the 15th of November when Inspector Duncan came to my office and spent several hours in consultation with me.

Let me pause here to say that within two or three days after the present Minister of Customs arrived in Ottawa to take over the duties of his office he called upon the Minister of Finance, told him of the rumours he had heard in connection with the preventive service in Montreal, mentioned Mr. Bisaillon's name, and asked Mr. Robb if he could suggest a competent investigating officer. Now we will see what follows; the examination continues:

Q. That is the middle of November, you mean?

A. About the 15th of November. I asked him if he would undertake to investigate the administration of the preventive service office or staff at Montreal; he said that he would, but unfortunately he could not go at once because he had some work to terminate for the Department of Finance, but that he would go just as soon as it was possible for him to do so. He reported later, but I cannot remember whether it was personally or through my secretary, that he would proceed to Montreal and commence his investigation on the 1st of December. A few days after the 1st of December he was in Ottawa; he came to my office, and I asked him if he had yet discovered anything worth while.

Q. By the way—pardon me for interrupting you—in this evidence which Inspector Duncan took of the various witnesses, I see that the 1st of December is the date upon which he examined the first witness?

A. Yes.

Q. Go ahead?

A. A few days after the 1st of December he was in Ottawa; I asked him if he had discovered anything worth while, and he told me that the only convincing and absolute proof he had at that time was that Mr. Bisaillon had been guilty of inefficiency and maladministration to such an extent that he should be dismissed. I asked him for an interim report, and told him that I could not go before the council with nothing but a verbal statement from an investigator, and explained to him that while I did not want to delay matters long enough to have him transcribe the evidence and prepare a formal report, I would be very glad if he would give me an interim report. An interim report was handed to me either on the 10th or 11th of December.

Q. Is this the interim report?

A. That is the interim report, which I have already produced.

Q. The report we have on file here is dated December 10th?

A. Yes.

Q. That is his report to you?

A. That is his report to me.

Q. The report is dated the 10th, but you may have got it on the 11th?

A. I may have got it on the 11th. I would like to point out, however, that the report, as I understand it, is produced but not filed.

Q. On receiving this report on the work of some of the officers of the department, what did you do?

A. I immediately communicated with the Prime Minister, and asked him if he would be kind enough to call a special meeting of council, for the purpose of considering a recommendation to council from my department for the dismissal of Mr. Bisaillon.

I shall revert to this a little later on, when I intend to make some references to the present Minister of Customs. I turn now to paragraph 6 of the report, which is as follows:

The evidence submitted to the committee leads to the general conclusion that for a long time the Department of Customs and Excise had been slowly degenerating in efficiency and that the process was greatly accelerated in the last few years. Apparently the Hon. Jacques Bureau, then Minister of Customs, failed to appreciate and properly discharge the responsibilities of his office and as a result there was a lack of efficient, continuous and vigorous control of subordinates by the headquarters staff at Ottawa.

Let me pause to say that there was not one dissenting voice raised in the committee against the adoption of that paragraph, to every word of which I heartily subscribe. I am also going to read paragraph 13 of the report, which some people may call drastic but which, in the discharge of their duties, the committee felt bound to insert. It is as follows:

The committee finds that the following officers have been delinquent in their duties and recommends that their services be dispensed with:—

1. R. P. Clerk, Inspector of the port of Montreal;
2. A. E. Giroux, Superintendent of Customs and Excise, Montreal;
3. W. Duval, Preventive Officer at Montreal;
4. John Landy, Customs Officer, Montreal;
5. Collector E. Brownlee, of Beebe, Quebec;
6. Marvin A. Sawyer, Customs Officer at Rock Island; and that in the interest of the public service arrangements should be made for the retirement of the following persons:—

1. R. R. Farrow, Deputy Minister;
2. W. S. Weldon, Collector of Customs at Montreal;
3. Henry McLaughlin, Surveyor of Customs at the port of Montreal.

Some of these officers are more blameworthy than are others. Bisaillon is not mentioned in that list because he was discharged in the middle of last December by the present Minister of Customs through an order in council. Inspector R. P. Clerk of the port of Montreal is mentioned; it was he who debauched several servants of the government and caused the resignation of two of the most important officials in this country. I do not know that anything useful would be served by making bitter comment upon any of these men whose services we hope will be dispensed with immediately after the adoption of this report by the House.

The system of appraisal or valuation of goods imported into this country was given long and serious consideration by your committee. If the system of valuation, the fixing of the amount upon which the assessment of duties is to be paid, is not done properly, great losses to the revenue may occur. Many devices are resorted to for the purpose of deceiving the officials of the customs department in matters of this kind. I regret to say that many of the appraisers appointed by the Civil Service Commission would probably fail in a practical test if goods were placed before them and they were asked to assess their value. You will easily appreciate how that might happen. Take for instance the importations of silks, one of the many valuable articles that are brought in here and pay a high duty. There are many grades of silk, and it is only a silk expert that could tell their value. Our appraisers in that department are not silk experts; they may have been grocers, they may have been anything. The committee has made a recommendation on that matter. It is contained in paragraph 18 of the report which reads as follows:

> The evidence adduced before the committee disclosed two outstanding facts, namely,—
> First, the methods of appraisal are exceedingly careless and fail to safeguard the interests of the importer or the revenues of the country from being defrauded by undervaluation, and
> Secondly, persons appointed as appraisers are in many instances untrained in the branch to which they are appointed.
> The committee recommends that the appraisal branch be reorganized and that all appraisers be chosen because of their competency to estimate the values of the class of goods they are appointed to appraise.

I am going to mention two instances of the devices used to deceive the officers. One is known as the Keith-Vaughan-Harrison case. There arrived in the port of Montreal by steamship from Europe six packing cases invoiced as cocoa. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who were acting for the Customs department at that time, were suspicious of these packing cases and examined them. They found that three of the packing cases had a blue cross marked on them; the other three had not. They opened the cases and they found that the three with the blue cross marked on them did contain cocoa; the three cases that had no blue cross marked on them were filled with narcotic drugs. The scheme which the smuggler had devised was very simple He intended to so manipulate it that when the customs examiner came to examine these boxes he would examine one with the blue cross mark. The one he would examine would be a case with the blue cross marked on it and it would be a case of cocoa. He would then pass the whole six cases and collect duty on cocoa; and three cases of narcotic drugs would enter this country surreptitiously. This seizure of drugs was worth about $160,000. Of course no blame attaches to the customs administration in connection with that; but the efforts of the committee in bringing out devices of this kind are not only enlightening to the public but, no doubt, will be useful to the enforcement officers of the Customs department in future.

Another very interesting case is known as the John W. Gaunt case. John W. Gaunt was an importer of German toys; he imported tens of thousands of dollars worth of these toys. For some years he was in business by himself. In 1923 he committed an offence against the Customs Act. He brought into Canada and had in his office at Montreal invoices from Germany without any list of goods written on them. They were blank invoices, but they contained the signature of the German manufacturer certifying to the fair market value of the goods. But the invoices were blank; they were to be filled in later on. That was an offence against the laws of this country, and for that offence John W. Gaunt, upon being prosecuted, was fined $500. A suspicion arose that this man had been defrauding the customs, and officers of the department went to his warehouse and made a seizure. Right here we should bear this fact in mind; before the customs officers had made any seizure on this man he had induced a very estimable gentleman named Colonel Porteous, a returned officer and a man of unimpeachable honour, to buy half an interest in his business. Colonel Porteous had paid, I think, about $20,000 for the half interest. Then they incorporated a company and the company owned the stock of goods. Right after that the customs officers seized this stock of goods, and professed to hold them for some offences or defaults of Gaunt of the year before. That, of course, is not justice. There is no reason why the goods of an honest man like Colonel Porteous should be seized and forfeited to the people of Canada for any fraud which had been committed by another man the year previous, before Colonel Porteous had any interest in the business. The matter came before the Minister of Customs for consideration. As I say, Gaunt was fined. He was also compelled to put up a cheque for $3,200 odd, pending investigation as to whether or not he had defrauded the government in the days when he had carried on business alone. I think the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) said in his speech yesterday that "the minister had made a settlement with this man, Gaunt." The evidence is not to that effect. The committee had before it the receipt for the $3,200 and the receipt read "Received from John W. Gaunt & Company the sum of $3,200 on account." Gaunt was before us as a witness and we asked him if he had a full settlement and release from the government, and he said "Not by any means." I should not have mentioned this feature of the case had it not been for the implied criticism directed by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre against what to my mind is a proper action on the part of the Minister of Customs in connection with that case.

We proceeded to have our auditors go over the books of this man Gaunt for the purpose of ascertaing whether or not he had defrauded the customs. Our examination revealed one of the cleverest manipulations I have ever heard of. The manipulation had to do with the falling value of the German mark. We found that in Germany, on January 1, say, Gaunt would buy toys of a value of 100,000 marks. He would get an invoice made out showing the price and value of 100,000 marks, and to buy the marks would cost him so many dollars, varying according to rate of exchange. His goods would not arrive in Canada for three months. He would pass these goods through the customs office as having been bought for 100.000 marks, but during that interval of three months the mark had fallen in value perhaps 35 or 40 per cent, and the value of his goods depreciated accordingly, but were entered in the customs at the reduced value. The customs duty is calculated on a percentage basis. He bought at one value for the dollar, but at the time the goods arrived three months later the mark had depreciated, and it was worth very much less to the dollar, and he entered it at the low value. He took advantage of what is known as the process of the tobogganing of the mark, and he got by with it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is it not a very common practice that we are paying interest on bonds that were issued at a time when money was worth an altogether different amount from its value to-day?

Mr. DONAGHY: I think the hon. member is quite correct in that observation. The reason I have given these details is that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre made a charge against the Minister of Customs that he had allowed this man Gaunt to defraud the government of Canada out of $58,000 of revenue. The charge is refuted by the evidence adduced before the committee, and I think the lawyers on that committee, on both sides of politics, had very grave doubts as to whether a civil action at law would succeed against Gaunt, except for one thing; the wooden packing cases in which these dolls were shipped into Canada were not entered by him for customs. He neglected to put them on his customs invoice and he had not paid any duty on the wooden boxes. I think that amounted to $200 or $300.

Mr. STEVENS: Would the hon. member justify the action of Gaunt in bringing in somewhere about 1,000 certified blank German invoices?

Mr. DONAGHY: I think I have already stated that Gaunt had in his office, brought from Germany, blank certified invoices. I cleared that up to start with. It was an offence. He was punished for it. I do not know how we are going to punish him again for the same offence.

Mr. STEVENS: He was only fined for having them in possession. He was never fined on the other charge. The charge against him of using these blanks was never brought to trial.

Mr. DONAGHY: The offence with which he was charged was that he did bring into Canada and have in his possession blank certified invoices, contrary to the laws of the country.

Mr. STEVENS: The minor charge.

Mr. DONAGHY: If there is any other charge in connection with this man which can be proved in the criminal courts, no one will stand up and say that proceedings should not be taken against him. Nobody has any sympathy with Gaunt or his manipulations. I am not addressing myself to the question for the purpose of justifying any action of this man Gaunt. It is for an entirely different purpose that I have presented the true details of this transaction. It is to refute the accusation made by the hon. member for Centre Vancouver that the government had improvidently made a settlement with a man who, he alleged, owed this country $58,000 in duty.

Mr. STEVENS: Hear, hear—duty and penalty.

Mr. DONAGHY: The evidence refutes that charge.

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. DONAGHY: My hon. friend says no.

Mr. STEVENS: Absolutely no.

Mr. DONAGHY: My hon. friend cannot follow the intricacies of the delicate manipulations of this man Gaunt—manipulations which I do not attempt to defend, but which apparently were within the four corners of the letter of the law.

Mr. STEVENS: Perhaps I cannot follow the intricate circumlocutions of the legal mind.

Mr. DONAGHY: Unfortunately for my hon. friend, however, the greatest court in the world is composed of legal minds. I wonder if the hon. member will suggest that men with legal minds should not sit in the courts to interpret the law.

Mr. STEVENS: No, not at all, but they should be free from political bias.

Mr. DONAGHY: Does the hon. member suggest our courts are afflicted with legal bias?

Mr. STEVENS: No. I say they should be free from political bias.

Mr. DONAGHY: We all believe our courts are free from political bias. That suggestion is gratuitous and unwarranted.

I now come to the consideration of conditions in regard to the Customs department which have existed from the time of confederation up to a year ago. The Customs Act as it has stood for years and years is based on this principle; that when an offender is caught smuggling goods into this country it shall not be the policy to prosecute him in the courts. That may seem rather singular. However singular as it may be, it has been the policy ever since the time of confederation. The standard policy of that department in cases of offences for smuggling has been to bring the matter up before the Minister of Customs and the Deputy Minister of Customs for consideration. That is in the statute which has stood for years. It was then left for the Minister of Customs to decide what punishment was to be meted out. To my mind that policy was wrong. Offences against the statute known as the Customs Act should be punished in the same way as offences against any other statute of Canada, namely by information in the court and a trial in court. The practice established by that statute and carried on since confederation, which sent this matter up for consideration before the Minister of Customs, was unwise. It resulted in the minister being importuned, perhaps, to minimize and ameliorate offences. Out of that statute and that practice which has existed since confederation has grown the abuse concerning which we have heard so much in the last four or five months. The granting of favours by the minister on the importunities of members of parliament on both sides of the House, on the importunities of influential men in the country, on the importunities of friends and relatives of those caught in the toils, was a great strain upon any Minister of Customs. It is a strain that it is unwise that he should be subjected to. It is out of that practice that these evils have grown as the accumulation of years whereby favours have been granted by one Minister of Customs after another on the importunities of members of the House of Commons, members of the Senate and other influential men in this country. In saying that I am not putting forward any excuse for any weaknesses that Ministers of Customs may have shown in the past, but it is quite proper that I should call the attention of the country to the causes in order that we may seek the remedy.

That being the case, we find that in 1924 a large and influential group of business men from various cities of this country were brought together and formed into an association called the Commercial Protective Association, Limited. Their object was to establish a clearing house for procuring information regarding smuggling. They approached the government. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) lent them his best investigator, Inspector Walter Duncan. Within a year they had accumulated a vast amount of useful information. In the session of 1925 they came before this government and informed them that as a result of the investigations they had made and the information they had acquired, it was desirable that the law, as I have indicated it stood since confederation, should be repealed and that an amendment should be introduced during that session to force the trial of offenders into the courts of justice instead of sending them up to entreat the Minister of Customs. The government gladly accepted the suggestions of that group of business men. That legislation was introduced last session and it became the law of Canada on the 27th June, 1925.

Under that law a dividing line is drawn making two classes of offences. First of all if a man is caught coming back from New York with a new hat of the value of ten dollars, he is not ordinarily arrested under this act. That is a case which may be settled by the department. He may be made to pay double duty on the hat or something like that. If a very severe penalty were provided by law for an offence of that kind the people would defeat the law. If a man is importing an article under the value of $200 he is not necessarily arrested and sent to gaol; but if goods amounting to $200 or over in value are being brought into this country by a man, he commits an indictable offence, a criminal offence, for which he must be prosecuted, for which he is liable to arrest and imprisonment. He receives a preliminary hearing before a police magistrate. If the evidence is sufficient he is sent up for trial before the assize courts of this country, and he has the option of being tried by a jury if he so desires. The consideration of cases of that kind no longer rests in the discretion of a Minister of Customs; they go where they belong—before the judges and the courts of this land. To that enactment this government lent its full support last session.

I am going to give the House a little of the history leading up to that. On April 8, 1925, the Commercial Protective Association wrote to the Prime Minister of this country. This was at the time when this bill was before the House. The letter contains this extract referring to the amendment to the law making it an indictable offence to smuggle anything over $200 in value:

> While these suggested amendments may appear drastic, I would like to point out that legislators have never before been called upon to deal with such a situation. The condition exhibited by the United States, a nation with about 16,000 miles of border or coast line, along practically all of which smugglers (commonly called bootleggers) by the hundreds of thousands are endeavouring to evade the laws of the country, created a situation entirely unprecedented in the history of the world. Smuggling on this continent has become a huge industry. Along the international border between Canada and the United States thousands of men are making their living by illicit trade.

This is signed by the Secretary of the Commercial Protective Association, Limited. Those were strong representations that were made to the government and the government gladly accepted them in its desire to increase the efficiency of the revenue collecting department of this country. That act became law at the end of June, 1925. The Toronto Board of Trade wrote the following letter to the Prime Minister on the 13th July, 1925:

> Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
> Prime Minister, of Canada,
> Ottawa, Ont.
> Sir,—On behalf of the executive and council of the Toronto Board of Trade, I desire to express appreciation of the action of the government in introducing legislation at the recent session increasing the penalties for the smuggling of goods into Canada and including in the estimates a substantial sum to enable the preventive service to be so strengthened and improved as to be able to cope with this illegitimate traffic.
> [Mr. Donaghy.]
>
> We are also gratified that the House of Commons and Senate have accepted the government's recommendations and that the new law is now in force.
>
> You will remember that a deputation from this board waited upon you and your colleagues in the cabinet last fall and discussed the seriousness of the smuggling situation with you. You then expressed the desire of the government to do everything in its power to combat the inroads which the smugglers were making into the legitimate trade and revenues of the country and you welcomed the co-operation to this end of an organization of business interests which it was then proposed to form. Acting on this assurance, the members of this board comprising the delegation organized the Toronto branch of the Commercial Protective Association. We were very pleased to note from your remarks in the House with respect to the proposed new legislation that you appreciated the vast proportions of this traffic and the need for drastic action. We have been in close touch with the association's work and it has been a great pleasure for this board to learn that the government has co-operated to the fullest extent with the result that adequate machinery to deal with the smuggling menace will, we undersand, shortly be in operation. We are informed the fact that the new penalties are already in force has had a very deterrent effect upon the traffic and we sincerely hope that in connection with the reorganization of the preventive service which is now under way, the dominant note will be the strict enforcement of the law in the interests of the lawful commerce of the Dominion and an increased national revenue which in turn will be reflected in an improvement in economic conditions generally.
> We congratulate and thank you for your efforts in the solution of this problem and assure you of the continued co-operation and support of this board in curtailing the smuggling traffic with the aid of the new powers now available, I am,
>
> Yours very truly,
> (Sgd.) S. B. Gundy,
> President."

Now I come to a very interesting question: Did the new Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin) who was appointed last fall, following that letter of congratulation from the president of the Toronto Board of Trade, immediately set about making a cleanup of smugglers and crooked officials in the Customs department? That is the pertinent question under consideration to-day, and I shall consider the answer to that question. I will give you dates and facts. On September 5, 1925, the new Minister of Customs was sworn in. He did not take over the active duties of his office until October 31, and inside of fifteen days he had an interview with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb). Was he acting quickly enough? The Minister of Finance was told by him that he had heard alarming rumours regarding the preventive service in Montreal, and the Minister of Customs mentioned the name of Bisaillon. He said, "I want an investigator but I am at a loss where to turn to get one." The Minister of Finance replied: "I have an excellent man who has been in the service of the Finance department for many years. I will lend him to you." The offer was accepted and Inspector Duncan was directed to report to the new Minister of Customs. At that time Inspector Duncan was finishing some work he had been doing for the Department of Finance and it was ten days or a week before he was able to complete it and undertake the investigation which the Minister of Customs was anxious to have him carry out. On November 27 Inspector Duncan was in the office of the Minister of Customs where he received instructions to begin immediately with an investigation for the purpose of cleaning up all smugglers and crooked officials in the Department of Customs. Three days after that he left for Montreal and the day following his departure he was examining witnesses under oath. In his possession he had a writ issued by the Exchequer Court of Canada empowering him not only to compel witnesses to give evidence but also to break open doors, locks, safes and to seize books, records and documents—the most extensive powers that could be delegated to anyone in this Dominion. This is what the Minister of Customs armed his investigation officer with. Was that action prompt enough? Was it efficient enough? Inspector Duncan was told by the minister to secure evidence against Bisaillon, and in ten days the inspector was back with that evidence. Is that expeditious enough? The minister then observed, "I cannot go before the cabinet with a verbal statement. You must set down your findings in writing." The inspector did so; he committed his report to writing. The Minister of Customs then asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to call a meeting of the cabinet and this was done immediately. An order in council was then passed for the dismissal of Bisaillon. This was necessary inasmuch as no civil servant may be dismissed otherwise. That order in council was passed on December 15. Again I ask, was that action quick enough to suit hon. gentlemen? After Bisaillon was dismissed Mr. Duncan was called in again, and given this order by the Minister of Customs: "Proceed with your work of investigation. Spare no one, no matter how high his rank." That is sworn to by Inspector Duncan in his evidence given before the committee and, as well, by the Minister of Customs in his testimony: "Spare no one, no matter how high his rank." In face of that will any hon. gentleman rise in this House and impugn the honour, the integrity or the efficiency of the new Minister of Customs?

Was the order of the new Minister of Customs obeyed? By the eighth day of February, after two months of consecutive work, the minister's investigator had examined over forty witnesses under oath and had seized various documents and records. He had an expose of fraudulent and corrupt officials of the government which was simply bewildering. I shall show you some of the things that were exposed by the Minister of Customs through his agent. They comprise practically everything that was brought out before the Customs committee. Before that committee ever met, before it heard a word of evidence, practically all of these charges of corruption, maladministration and defrauding of the revenues had been brought out by the order of the new Minister of Customs and were in writing, sworn to. Let me point out some of the things that were exposed. It was upon the record of the evidence which the inspector had secured under the direction of the Minister of Customs that we proceeded, and we called forty or more witnesses who had already been examined in his investigation. We went on repeating the same story, getting it all told the second time, for weeks and weeks.

Now what was exposed by the new Minister of Customs through his investigator? It will startle some of you to discover how wonderfully extensive the list is: (1) Bisaillon; (2) Officer Duval; (3) smuggled and stolen cars from the United States; (4) Officer Giroux; (5) The Lortie—St. George case; (6) Inspector R. P. Clerk, of gauger's whiskey fame; (7) The civil service commissioners who resigned under the circumstances disclosed in their evidence—the carrying of whiskey from the gauger's office to the Deputy Minister of Customs, to the Hon. Jacques Bureau, Minister of Customs, and to the two civil service commissioners. That was all brought out under the investigation ordered and carried on by the direct authority and instructions of the Minister of Customs whose conduct is now a matter of inquiry before this House. Further, there was brought out in the investigation ordered by the minister the Gaunt case, the barge Tremblay case, the theft of goods from customs bond and the Dominion Distilleries affair. Is not that enough to occupy our attention for some time?

Now, while this investigation was proceeding there was no beating of drums, the minister was not proclaiming from the housetops what he was doing, and the country did not know the service he was rendering. The members of this House, Mr. Speaker, with one or two exceptions, were ignorant of it on the 2nd day of February when the hon. member for Vancouver Centre made a very remarkable speech in this House, concerning which I have something to say. What was the result of that speech? The arm of the new Minister of Customs, through his investigator, was paralyzed—Duncan was superseded by a committee appointed by this House. I repeat, Sir, that the arm of the minister, which had been so powerful in smiting the enemy, was paralyzed by the action of the hon. gentleman. We did not know that we were paralyzing the very efficient arm of the law when we voted on that resolution, and I am quite satisfied that many hon. members are aware of this now for the first time. Further, I say this, and I say it deliberately, that the statements and charges made by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre on February 2, last, were based on information which had already been gathered by the agent of the new Minister of Customs in that investigation, and before I sit down I think I shall be able to convince this House that a great deal of that information was revealed to the hon. member to enable him to make his speech, the facts which he then submitted as grounds for ordering an investigation being the facts that had been brought out by inspector Duncan under the order of the new Minister of Customs. I should not mind that at all if in his address and in the debate that followed the truth had been exposed and this House had been told candidly, as it had a right to know, that for two months the new Minister of Customs had been conducting a most vigorous campaign against corruption in customs matters, and that he had brought out all the evidence upon which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre had based his speech. But this information was concealed from the House on that occasion. Very few hon. members outside of the minister and the hon. gentleman from Vancouver Centre knew those things. Now that the motion of criticism of the actions of the new minister is before the House the opportunity should not be let pass to give him credit, even though it is somewhat late.

I say there is reasonably strong ground to suspect that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre was furnished with the information which Inspector Duncan was getting for his minister, and I am going to read some documents in proof of what I say, and then leave it to the judgment of hon. members as to whether or not I have convinced them. I now turn to the motion placed on the order paper by the hon. member on January 20 last.

4 p.m.

Mr. STEVENS: May I interrupt my hon. friend a moment? I can save him a lot of trouble by telling the House that I had a good deal of the information, but I did not get it from Inspector Duncan. Certainly I had information, masses of it, or I would not have presented it to the House as I did on February 2.

Mr. DONAGHY: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for his admission. I now ask him, why did he not take this House into his confidence on February 2 when he launched those charges against the new Minister of Customs, why did he not give him credit for the work he was proceeding with and the good he was doing?

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend asks me a question; I will answer him very frankly. Simply because the minister was not carrying out what the hon. member insinuates. As to the dismissal of Bisaillon, it was just simply a little stage play because the minister knew my resolution was about to be placed on the order paper. That is why.

Mr. DONAGHY: Mr. Speaker, I am more than surprised at the extreme partisanship shown in that answer. Nothing the new minister could do, no matter how useful in cleaning up his department, can be construed as good by the hon. gentleman from Vancouver Centre. I now proceed with my proof. On January 20 the hon. member for Vancouver Centre put this motion on the order paper:

> For a copy of report of Walter Duncan on the administration of the customs service at the port of Montreal made during the month of December, 1925, together with a copy of all testimony and documents in evidence received by the said Mr. Duncan—

And hon. members will note these words:

> —also interim report covering eleven definite charges.

Mr. STEVENS: That was before I made my speech, by the way.

Mr. DONAGHY: At that time the interim report was made confidentially to the minister by his confidential investigator respecting Bisaillon for the purpose of having him discharged. It had not been published yet, although action had been taken. Now I propose to show that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre secured secret information which should not have been given out beyond the minister himself. I turn to the report itself to show that, strange to say, this confidential document contains exactly eleven definite charges. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre either knew what was in the report or he is the best guesser in this whole Dominion. Now I turn to the report itself at page 1453 of our evidence, and I will be very glad indeed to pass it to any hon. member who doubts my statement. It is here, numbered from 1 to 11; anyone can see the record.

Mr. STEVENS: No one doubts it; why all the excitement?

Mr. DONAGHY: The hon. member does not yet see my point. I am charging him with lack of candour in his failure to tell the truth to this House, the whole truth, as to what the new Minister of Customs had been doing to clean up the officials of the Customs department who were guilty of corruption.

Mr. STEVENS: If my hon. friend would permit me, on January 20 by his own recital I placed on the order paper of this House a resolution calling for all this information with which he is now dealing. That was two full weeks before I made the speech in which he accuses me of not being frank. All this information was requested and could have been laid on the table by the minister two weeks before my speech was delivered.

Mr. DONAGHY: I regret to say, Mr. Speaker, that that statement is not strictly accurate. The report which the hon. gentleman called for, the only report existing on January 20,—because the complete report was not made until February 8—was this hurried interim report suggesting that Bisaillon should be discharged. It did not relate to these other matters which Duncan had investigated and heard evidence on. No credit whatever was given to the new minister while under fire and being charged, on that occasion, when in fairness to him, the whole truth should have been told and credit given where it was due for his actions, which showed that he was alive to the duties of his office and was energetically and efficiently carrying them out without fear or favour, with orders to spare none no matter how high his rank.

I am not through with this thing yet. We were really quite interested to know whether our confidential agent, Mr. Duncan, was a traitor. He was a man who had been many years in secret service work for corporations, cities and governments. He was held in high esteem by the Minister of Finance; he fully appreciated the confidence reposed in him, and was quite alive to the enormity of violating that trust. So I say we were somewhat astonished to find that there had been a leak, and we asked Inspector Duncan when he was under oath before the committee in regard to this matter. I am going to read what he said as further proof of my allegation. At page 508 Mr. Elliott, then a member of the committee, introduced this very interesting subject while Mr. Duncan was on the stand. The particular part is as follows:

Q. Can you give me any information of why Mr. Stevens had the contents of your interim report before anybody else but the minister?

Mr. Bell: Presuming that he did.

The Witness: I don't know that Mr. Stevens had it.

Q. I did not ask you whether you knew he had it or not. Can you give any explanation of how he got it?

A. I did not give it; somebody working for me may have given it.

Q. Who was working for you who could give it?

A. There was one person in a position to know very well what would be in that report.

Shall I read further?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes, go on.

Mr. DONAGHY: The evidence continues:

Q. Inspector Duncan, I want to ask you this question. With your experience as an investigator, do you not know how your report got to Mr. Stevens?

Hon. Mr. Stevens: I never saw the report until it was produced here.

Q. Or the contents of it?

A. No; only what I believe.

How about the eleven definite charges; where did that knowledge come from?

Q. Let us have what you believe.

A. My belief is—

He names a man then, but I do not think I shall read the name because it was denied, and I want to be fair.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend might read in addition the later evidence which was given in correction.

Mr. DONAGHY: To do that I will have to expose the name of a man who presumably did not give the hon. gentleman the information. I want to be fair to everyone; I do not want to bring in the name of any man who probably had nothing to do with this leak. I am only interested in doing what I feel I have now accomplished, that is to establish the fact that there was a leak and that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre was in receipt of the information coming through that leak; that he used this information to build up a speech in this House of Commons dealing with transactions in the Department of Customs which had been exposed through the action of the new minister and his officer Duncan. That information was secretly obtained, and the hon. member built up a terrific and vitriolic speech in this House in which he tried to unhorse this government by an onslaught brought on without notice. I leave it to hon. members if those are fair tactics; I leave it to hon. members if that treatment was fair play to the new minister, having regard to what he was accomplishing then.

I have said that the attack on February 2 was made suddenly, without due notice, without candour, with a suppression of the truth of very essential and material matters, and for the simple purpose of unhorsing the government. It was more for that purpose than an attempt to do good to the Customs department. When the hon. member made that speech he knew that investigations were then being carried on by a strong and powerful man. He knew the interests of the country were being taken care of by the new minister; the hon. member for Vancouver Centre was not alarmed for the safety of the country having had knowledge of what the new minister was doing. But there was one object he had in view in that speech, and that was to surprise the members of this House by charges of the gravest character, to get a snap verdict and to unbalance the government.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, it is not very often I rise to a point of order but I feel it necessary, in justice to myself, to do so now. The hon. gentleman has stated that I deliberately suppressed the truth in my speech of February 2. He also states that the speech was altogether lacking in candour. Both these terms, I submit to Your Honour, are entirely out of order, under the rules of the House, and I ask Your Honour's consent, before you give your ruling, to make by way of privilege, a very brief statement in connection with this matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: You are out of order.

An hon. MEMBER: Take your medicine.

Mr. STEVENS: I presume the Speaker is in the chair.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Vancouver Centre has raised a point of order. While the hon. gentleman was speaking I was looking up the rules and practices of the House on that very point. I have already ruled that the expression "lack of candour" applied to an hon. member is not parliamentary. Hon. members will find in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and forms, rule 19, paragraph 240, the following:

> Bourinot (page 361) gives the following examples of unparliamentary phrases:
> No member will be permitted to say of another: That he could expect no candour from him.

As to the other statement of the hon. member for North Vancouver that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre had suppressed the truth it goes without saying that such an expression is unparliamentary and should be withdrawn.

[Mr. Donaghy.]

Mr. DONAGHY: I bow very gladly to your ruling, Mr. Speaker. No doubt the hon. member for Vancouver Centre is subject to lapses of memory.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I am not very touchy about these matters, as Your Honour knows very well, because I have been a member of this House for fifteen years, but I again submit to you that regard for the dignity of the House compels my hon. friend to accept your ruling without reserve.

Mr. SPEAKER: According to my understanding the hon. member for Vancouver North has always accepted the ruling of the chair. I do not regard the latest phrase referred to as unparliamentary, or as reflecting upon the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. However, I wish to say this: So far the debate has been maintained on a high plane. I ask hon. gentlemen to continue to adhere to that high standard, and not give occasion to invoke the rules of the House against expressions which are not parliamentary.

Mr. DONAGHY: I now ask the hon member for Vancouver Centre why he did not on the 20th day of January take the House into his confidence and make known to hon. members that the new Minister of Customs against whom he was preferring charges had investigated and uncovered at that time the following matters:

1. Bisaillon and his record and doings.
2. Duval and his record and doing.
3. The stealing of autos in the United States and the smuggling of them into Canada and their sale in Canada, particularly in Montreal.
4. Giroux.
5. The Lortie-St. George narcotic case.
6. R. P. Clerk, who handled the gaugers' whiskey and corrupted officials low and high.
7. The connection of two civil service commissioners with liquor received from Clerk.
8. The John W. Gaunt case.
9. The barge Tremblay case.
10. The theft of goods from government bonded warehouses.
11. The Dominion Distilleries case.

Nearly all these were mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre as the ground and meat of his charges against the new minister.

Now I come to another very interesting matter. That speech of February 2 will go down in history. It was full of fire. It exploded bomb after bomb and threw this House, figuratively speaking, into a state of consternation. Was it followed up by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre in regard to some of the fiercest things charged in it?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He never mentioned them.

Mr. DONAGHY: I am going to mention one or two things and I will leave it to the judgment of the House to say if the hon. member in a bona fide way followed them up in every particular. I am going to read to you what he said about files that were stolen. The hon. member on that point said this:

> I wish to say right now that already nine filing cabinets filled with records containing damaging evidence have been removed from the custody and the care of that institution known as the government, taken away down to the home of an ex-minister and there destroyed.

That is a high criminal offence. Again the hon. member said:

> I made the statement that documents had been destroyed, that nine of the filing cabinets had been taken away and the documents destroyed; I said further that I would not disclose the source of my information and one of the reasons was that I feared the destruction of further evidence now in the custody of the government.

That was the strongest criminal charge that was brought in that speech. If the hon. gentleman had any ground for making the charge he should never have stopped short of investigating it before the committee. If he did so without any reasonable ground he failed to take this House fully into his confidence, and his conduct is deserving of some very caustic comment to say the least.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend sought for nearly five months to disprove a lot of these charges but he has failed to do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DONAGHY: I am sorry for the distorted view the hon. member for Vancouver Centre takes of a very important matter. It cannot be passed off with any trifling remark such as he has addressed to us. I do not intend to leave the matter there; I am going to follow it through. If the hon. member had not had an opportunity to call evidence on that point I should say he would be honourably excused from doing so. If he did have an opportunity to call evidence on that point, and deliberately refused and neglected to do so, I say again that his conduct is open to very severe comment by members of this House. Did he have the opportunity? Perhaps it will be said that the Hon. Jacques Bureau, being a member of the Senate, could not be compelled to appear before the committee. That is not the truth in its full sense. There is a method by which even a member of this House, with all his privileges or a member of the Senate, with all the ancient rights and privileges of that body, can be compelled to appear and testify before a committee. The action the committee takes in that matter and which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre could well have taken before that committee, would be to make a motion that the Hon. Jacques Bureau be first invited to appear. Was that done No. Was there any challenge thrown out to the committee by any member of the public to do that? Yes. I have not the page of the report but hon. members will remember the incident to which I now refer. It caused considerable comment at the time. Hon. members may possibly remember when the editor of the Citizen newspaper was summoned to appear before the Customs committee. Apparently he had written an editorial which implied that some members of the committee were not bona fide trying to bring out all the evidence, and he was brought before the committee; he was examined by the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) and asked to say who were the witnesses that the committee was neglecting to call. He replied, "Well, it is not for me to say this publicly. You know as well as I do." But upon being repeatedly pressed he said, "I suggest to you that you invite the Hon. Jacques Bureau to appear before you." The suggestion was never acted upon or entertained for a moment. Perhaps the hon. member for Vancouver Centre will say the onus was on me of performing that duty, and not upon himself. I should not be surprised if he attempted to do that. It was not my duty to do it.

An hon. MEMBER: Why?

Mr. DONAGHY: To start with, I did not believe the statement which he made in his speech on February 2, that nine filing cabinets had been stolen and taken by the minister to his home and destroyed. I did not credit that. But on whom did the onus to support that charge rest? It rested on the man who made it, and he failed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He took to the woods.

Mr. DONAGHY: Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, why he failed. Perhaps the hon. member will say that Senator Bureau would not accept the invitation to appear before the committee. That is not an answer.

Mr. STEVENS: Does the hon. member want an answer?

Mr. DONAGHY: Wait until I get through.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member challenged me to answer and I will answer

Mr. DONAGHY: Wait until I get through

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. DONAGHY: The hon. member will have ample time to answer.

An hon. MEMBER: Do not back down.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member may not interrupt without permission of the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. STEVENS: You appreciate the position, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member asked me a question and challenged me to answer. I offer now to answer. Do I make my position clear?

Mr. DONAGHY: I have not finished, and when I have finished the hon. member may answer.

An hon. MEMBER: Swallow the challenge.

An hon. MEMBER: Crawfish.

Mr. DONAGHY: I do not fear the hon. member's answer. I have not finished making my point. When I have done so, I will welcome the hon. member's answer. Perhaps the hon. member will say that Senator Bureau might not accept the invitation of the committee. That is not a complete answer. As the hon. member for Vancouver Centre well knows, there is a process by which a member of the Senate may be brought before the committee, namely upon a request being made by this House, asking the Senate to take action in the matter and to grant permission for the committee to examine an hon. senator. In that way he may be brought before the committee. But neither by invitation, which should have been tried first, nor by procedure provided by law, was any attempt made to bring the hon. senator before us. Further than this, even if we could not have brought the hon. senator before us, there was another method of investigating the matter. Why did the hon. member for Vancouver Centre not ask to have the Hon. Jacques Bureau's secretary summoned before the committee? Now I pause for an answer.

Mr. STEVENS: The answer is a very simple and a very plain one—yes, very simple. The answer is this, that the Duncan report, to which my hon. friend refers, and upon which he bases his question, was for a long time suppressed. Later on, on the insistence of certain members of the committee and the public press, it was finally read before the committee, but during the reading of that report and the evidence certain portions of it were deliberately suppressed and not read. These portions were of an intimate and most unfortunate personal character. They were of a character, together with the evidence adduced thereupon by Mr. Duncan, that would cast most serious reflection upon the personal character, the actions and activities of the ex-minister. There was a unanimity of opinion in the committee that it was undesirable to drag out what might be termed matters of low type, that it was thought better to confine the public exposé to matters affecting the public, and not introduce matters of intimate personal character. It was for that reason that the Hon. Jacques Bureau was not called before the committee, because it would have entailed the dragging of that whole business before the committee and the public.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Very considerate. Tell that to the marines.

Mr. STEVENS: I challenge now the production of that report on the table of the House.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): Is the hon. gentleman not sorry he spoke?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. DONAGHY: I again express my great disappointment at the failure of the hon. member to understand or to appreciate the point. Let me make this plain beyond peradventure. The Duncan report was published.

Mr. STEVENS: No, it was not.

Mr. DONAGHY: It is printed in this book.

Mr. STEVENS: In part only.

Mr. DONAGHY: It is the hon. member's fault as well as anybody else's if the dirty part is not in it.

Mr. STEVENS: It was unanimously agreed by the committee to omit it. Put it all on the table.

Mr. DONAGHY: I am quite agreeable to that. It was through no desire on my part that any part of it was not put on the table.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member consented to its suppression.

Mr. DONAGHY: As my hon. friend knows the part that was omitted has nothing to do with the stealing and destruction of nine government files. It relates to some matter of an indecent nature, unconnected with those files. For that reason I said when I rose to reply to the hon. gentleman a moment ago that I am sorry that he fails or is unable to understand the point I am making. It is the destruction of these files that we are speaking about. I asked the hon. member for Vancouver Centre if he could explain why he did not move in the committee that we invite the Hon. Jacques Bureau to appear for examination before the committee in regard to that.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member has his answer.

Mr. DONAGHY: Or why, failing that, he did not move in the committee that the secretary of the former minister be made to appear and be examined in regard to that.

An hon. MEMBER: Why did the hon. member not make the motion?

Mr. DONAGHY: The hon. member opposite suggests that the onus is on me. Are they going to take refuge in that theory so as to shirk the responsibility which lay upon the man who said that he had the knowledge? I repeat that the charge of stealing files, the property of the government of Canada, taking them to the province of Quebec and destroying them, is the most serious charge that was made in that speech of the 2nd February. It was so grave that the hon. member reiterated it and added that he was afraid that if he told the source of his information more files would be stolen and destroyed. What was the source of his information? Let him tell the source of his information. Why did he not bring that witness, document, or whatever it was before the committee?

I am now going to pass from that very sensational day, the 2nd February last, to yesterday when the hon. member for Vancouver Centre threw another bomb into this House. Fortunately the documentary evidence is in the House and I am going to base my statements on written documents when I address myself to the charge which the hon. gentleman brought against this government in connection with the prosecution of a smuggling case in Regina, Sask. In the letter which the hon. gentleman wrote to the Prime Minister on the 19th of this month he made these accusations. I am going to read them and then I am going to answer them. He said first:

> I submit to you, Sir, that in this instance where it was a vital "police case", political preference should not have interfered in the bringing of these men to justice.

By the way, it is the smugglers to whom he refers.

> My information is that the frauds affecting the excise revenue in the city of Regina and the surrounding district over a period of years would amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars.
> The facts as disclosed to me reveal a continuance of a practice of political interference, which cannot now be justified, and which would seem to indicate a continuance of the very practices which brought about the breakdown in the Customs department.

Let me proceed to analyze the truth and the facts after hearing these generalities. I turn now to the report of a gentleman of unquestioned honour and integrity who occupies the high position of Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Colonel Cortlandt Starnes. This is his written memorandum under his signature dated the 21st of this month. He says:

> With regard to the retention of Mr. Bryant, K.C., of Regina, to handle this case, and the alleged excuse for the removal of Secret Agent Cahill from Regina, the undersigned begs to report as follows:
> It is always customary to apply to the Department of Justice for the appointment of counsel.

I ask if the hon. member for Vancouver Centre thinks that is a bad practice.

> The police agent had without authority, engaged Mr. Bryant—

I pause here to ask: On whose suggestion was the president of the Conservative Association engaged by this police agent? I pause here to ask another question. What explanation can be given why the regular solicitor of the department in Regina was not continued in this service? Let me read:

> The police agent had without authority, engaged Mr. Bryant, and he was instructed that Mr. P. Meudell Anderson, of Regina, had been appointed to conduct the case by the Department of Justice.

At this point I want to read to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre a recommendation which he cordially endorsed in the report of this committee and which deals with the question of the appointment of counsel to prosecute cases. We find this in paragraph 23, and I want to make an observation as to why we made this statement in our report. We were rather favourably impressed in our investigation with objections brought before us against inexperienced counsel being engaged to prosecute smugglers. John Jones who had never before prosecuted a case might be employed to-day to prosecute one and next month Sam Smith who had also never before prosecuted a case might be employed to prosecute one in the same locality. We realized that picking a lot of novices to do specialized work was not good for the service and sometimes enabled smugglers to escape on technicalities. For that reason we endorsed this recommendation which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre heartily approved:

> The committee further recommends that the Department of Justice—

the same department.

> —be requested to select at once capable and experienced counsel in important centres, and retain them to act for the Department of Customs and Excise in all future cases.

Continuity of retainer whereby experience and skill are gained. What are the facts? Mr. Anderson is the regular solicitor who has been doing the work of the department for years now, and our recommendation was that the practice should be observed of retaining lawyers already in the service and not changing them for purposes of political patronage. In every case that comes up we should have the benefit of experience. Who is the first to break the rule? Who is the first to object to its being carried out? I leave that to the judgment of the House.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Will the hon. gentleman permit me to add that the name of Mr. Anderson was sent to the mounted police by officers of my department without my knowledge, for the reason that he is the regular legal agent of the department.

Mr. DONAGHY: I come now to the next charge which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre made yesterday in connection with the Regina case—I leave to the judgment of hon. members the one relating to the solicitor. That charge is that by political interference this government, to use a slang expression, pulled off the mounted police detective who had been sent to Regina to prosecute, and despatched him to Montreal in order that the prosecution might be abortive, so that this supposed smuggler would go free. Let us look at the facts. I again turn to the report of the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police:

> Secret Agent Cahill has not been removed from Regina; his absence is only temporary and merely to enable him to give evidence in a very important case in Montreal on which he worked for over six months, involving the forgery of certificates for the release of liquor from American bonded warehouses. Secret Agent Cahill is the principal witness in the latter case which comes up on the 22nd instant and in connection with which a large number of witnesses have been brought from different parts of the United States. He will be returned to Regina as soon as his evidence has been given in Montreal.
> There has been no interference whatever in connection with Secret Agent Cahill's work. He knew before he went to Regina that he would have to appear in Montreal on the 22nd.
> Arrests in the liquor excise frauds at Regina were made on the 17th of June; the courts fixed the 23rd instant for the hearing of the case and Assistant Commissioner Knight of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Regina, was instructed to ask for a remand of seven days in order to give Cahill sufficient time to return.

Has any member of this House ever heard a more ridiculous charge than the one advanced by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre in this particular? Has it not all fallen to pieces? Why, it is exposed by the incontrovertible evidence of the documents.

[Mr. Donaghy.]

Why therefore should attempts be made to alarm the House with charges of that kind dramatically sprung upon parliament without notice?—sprung with all the ability, all the eloquence, all the condemnatory tone and gesture for which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre is so well known.

I shall now develop another line. There were brought before the committee a couple of cases which I feel it my duty to mention to the House. First of all I refer to the case of Daivey Waisberg which relates to the smuggling of silk into the town of Barrie, Ontario. The facts of this case are very simple. In the year 1922 a gentleman of the Jewish faith named Waisberg—

Mr. JACOBS: Is this gentleman's religion in question? And was Mr. Bisaillon's religion brought up in the committee?

Mr. DONAGHY: This man's religion was mentioned in the committee; otherwise I should not refer to it, for I do not think it is relevant. Waisberg returned in 1922 to the town of Barrie where he had previously been engaged in business, having failed to pay his creditors. He had been the client of a well known firm of lawyers during his first residence in that place and he returned to Barrie hoping to re-establish himself. Hopping off the train he looked around the town and, after sizing things up, approached a young man named Charles Kendall, who held a subordinate position under the collector of customs at Barrie. Kendall was the man who examined baggage coming in on the railway. He was married and his wife was sick, having been in ill health for a considerable time. He was poor, he was having a hard time, and luck was against him. Daivey Waisberg had ascertained all these facts regarding Kendall before approaching the young man. He then met him and said, "I know you are poor and your wife is sick. You don't get much here from the government. You can, however, make $2,000 a year extra if you wish. I will pay it to you and no one will be any the wiser. I will give you $50 a week if you will pass one trunk a week as baggage coming in here." Let me pause for a moment to observe that Mr. Sparks of the Commercial Protective Association when giving evidence before the committee said, "The professional smuggler generally tries to select a small town so as to get by more easily. Evasion of the law is more easy in such a place than it is in large cities." That was his evidence. That Waisberg was a professional smuggler and a confederate of professional smugglers there can, I think, be no doubt.

Mr. BOYS: Can the hon. member refer to any evidence that establishes that fact?

Mr. DONAGHY: I have not got it here, but I will refer to what has been said, and the hon. gentleman can check me up at his leisure. The evidence shows that this man Waisberg said to Kendall, "This is being done regularly." It is therefore a fair inference that he was associated with professional smugglers, for that is how such knowledge is acquired. In addition to this, Daivey Waisberg had a drygoods store at 184 Queen street, west, Toronto. During the customs probe we have all heard of Queen street, Toronto, in connection with the smuggling of silks at various establishments there. After this attempt at bribery had been made by this professional smuggler from Queen street, Toronto, the young man Kendall resisted, notwithstanding the strong temptation to which he was subjected by reason of his sick wife and family and lack of funds. He said to Waisberg, "I cannot do that, Waisberg." Waisberg replied, "Oh, I will be in next week with a trunk." Kendall said, "No, Waisberg. I will have to arrest you if you do that. Don't do it." However, he does not seem to have convinced Waisberg. The young man went to his superior officer, Collector Young, and reported what had happened, and he also sent a full report to the Deputy Minister of Customs at Ottawa. I have a copy of the report, which is so interesting that I will read it for the benefit of hon. members:

SIR,—While attending a meeting last night, October 16, I was called out by a person who stated he wished to speak to me on business and alone. I told him I could not leave the meeting, and he asked that I talk with him in a side room. I took him into a committee room, where he suggested I should permit him to receive baggage without examination, and for thus neglecting my duties he would give me $50, and that I could make $2,000 per year this way if I wished. I warned him that he was asking something foolish, and he stated it was being done all over—

That is what I said before.

—and that he would come here with a trunk, adding that he always carried certified invoices anyway. I have every reason to believe that he will bring baggage here and that he will again offer the bribe before producing invoices. On questioning him, I found out he intended to bring silks into this country in this way. He would not give information as to whether he had obtained merchandise or not in this way before, other than it was being done all over the country. He is a Jew, and gave his name as Daivey Waisberg, living at 184 Queen street west, Toronto. He also suggested he would get his goods this way in Toronto, but he could not "get next to the officers there," in answering my question as to why he came to Barrie for this specific purpose. I realize the danger of this practice and report the matter to you as it happened.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
CHARLES R. KENDALL.

An honest boy. A few days later Mr. Waisberg hopped off the train again at Barrie, and this time he had a trunk with him. He saw the examiner of baggage again, told him what he had, and tried to press the money on him. I think he raised it to $100, as a matter of fact. The officer stood firm. He placed Daivey Waisberg under arrest, taking him to the collector's office and placing him in charge of the collector. Kendall then left the office. In a few minutes Waisberg walked out and laughed in Kendall's face. Shortly after this incident, according to the evidence, Mr. W. A. Boys, K.C., M.P., of the firm of Boys & Murchison, barristers and solicitors of Barrie, called at the customs office and saw Collector Young. In the meantime Kendall had sent a report of this likewise to the deputy minister at Ottawa. It is an illuminating document, and I am going to read it:

Barrie, October 23, 1922.

R. R. FARROW, Esq.,
Commissioner of Customs and Excise,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Sir,—I am instructed by Mr. Young to report further regarding A. Waisberg, who made an attempt to bribe me as per letter of October 17. Waisberg arrived in Barrie with a trunk on the evening of October 20 at 8 p.m., and immediately tried to get in touch with me, but did not find me at home.

Waisberg went to Kendall's house.

When he again offered me the bribe, on the following morning, I asked him to come to the customs office and talk the matter over.

The boy was leading him along.

Mr. Young, who was working in the back office, unbeknown to Mr. Waisberg heard the conversation. I asked Waisberg if he was not afraid of being caught, and he replied that he was not, that it was being done regularly, and if I was wise I could soon make lots of money because this was going to be a regular thing, not just once.

In answer to my question as to why he chose Barrie to defeat the customs, he replied, that it is quiet here, that I did all the examining, and no one could possibly be aware of what was in the trunk, and that he knew I had had hard luck with sickness in my home, and this would more than set me up. I asked him if this had been done before, and he replied, "no," that others were doing it, and he could not make things go unless he did.

Mr. BOYS: Does not that show that the man was not a confirmed smuggler?

Mr. DONAGHY: If the hon. gentleman is credulous enough to believe what that smuggler said, I am not.

Mr. BOYS: I am taking the statement the hon. gentleman is reading from Mr. Kendall's report.

Mr. DONAGHY: Mr. Kendall does not say the statement is true, but that Daivey Waisberg said this to him. I do not for a moment suppose that Waisberg would feel 5 p.m. himself under any obligation to disclose to Kendall anything except his own version of what would suit his interest, and I hope my hon. friend is not more credulous than I am in regard to the workings of smugglers of his type. I proceed with the letter:

The following are some of the questions and answers:

This was a smart boy, and when the conversation was over he apparently wrote down the questions and answers from memory:

Q. Are you aware of the penalty you are liable to?
A. Yes, but you are white, you would not let it out.
Q. There has been a lot of this going on? It seems to me there is a gang working, and you are most likely one of them?
A. No, I am working myself.
Q. You have in this trunk some valuable merchandise, what is it worth?
A. $1,140.60.
Q. If I would accept your bribe I would be liable to imprisonment.
A. Here, take this $50, I have it all counted ready, and nobody will be the wiser. Barrie is the easiest place because you are alone in examining.
Q. Why did you not go to Mr. Young?
A. I knew he would not let it through. You need the money, he does not. It would be no use asking him.
Q. Do you think I have no conscience, and hold my oath of office as a joke?
A. Oaths are nothing. You need the money. Here it is. It is easy for you and easy for me. You are white, and can be well off in a few months. Remember this is a steady thing.

The letter then proceeds:

I seized the trunk, and had it locked in the bond room after resealing it. When I told Waisberg that I was not here all the time, but was out relieving sometimes, he replied that it would be easy for me to go away if I wished, or he would wait until I came back to Barrie.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
C. R. KENDALL,
Customs Clerk-Examiner.

I want to emphasize this point. These two original communications were received by the Deputy Minister of Customs and apparently later brought to the attention of the Hon. Jacques Bureau. I said that Mr. W. A. Boys, K.C., M.P., appeared at the Customs office and saw Collector young. The following letter was then written by Mr. Boys to the deputy minister at Ottawa, under date of October 25, 1922:

R. R. FARROW, Esq.,
Commissioner of Customs,
Ottawa.

MY DEAR MR. FARROW:

Re D. Waisberg

I would like to see you herein. Kindly delay proceedings—

[Mr. Donaghy.]

This reminds me of another case of which we have heard. Shall we make the welkin ring with condemnation of that phrase? Perhaps not now.

Kindly delay proceedings until Friday morning, the 27th, when I will be in Ottawa, and I will call and see you at 10.30.

Sincerely,
W. A. BOYS.

P.S.—I presume you are familiar with the matter, if not, I think Mr. Taylor is.

Now we will see what happened next, and you will have to read between the lines of the next letter. On November 7, 1922, the Hon. Jacques Bureau, Minister of Customs, wrote the following letter to Mr. Boys:

Re Waisberg

W. A. BOYS, Esquire, M.P.,
Barrie.

MY DEAR BOYS,—After your visit to my office with reference to the above, I sent for the file and went through it very carefully. I presume that Mr. Waisberg did not represent to you the facts as they were, so that you might judge for yourself.

I am sending you a copy of part of the file which will explain itself.

If he sent for the file he would read these two letters from C. Kendall:

Under the circumstances I do not think I would be justified in exercising any special leniency towards Mr. Waisberg.

That is the considered opinion of the minister, and we will see later on if the minister was persuaded:

You will see by this part of the file which I enclose herewith that the case is more serious than you thought or than you represented it to me. If Mr. Waisberg has been the man you represented him to be, I am afraid he is not now of the same calibre and that it will be dangerous to in any way condone or show leniency before further action is taken.

I will wait till I hear from you.

Yours very truly,
Minister of Customs and Excise.

Then on November 13, Mr. Boys wrote the Hon. Mr. Bureau as follows:

Hon. JACQUES BUREAU,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

MY DEAR MR. BUREAU,—I have to be in Ottawa on Friday and will call and see you re Waisberg, so kindly let the matter stand till then.

Sincerely yours,
W. A. BOYS.

Mr. BOYS: I believe my hon. friend wants to be fair, so why does he pass over the letter which I wrote before that Mr. DONAGHY: I will be very glad to read it; it would be only fair to read all the letters.

Mr. BOYS: I do not want you to do that but I would like this previous letter to be put in.

Mr. DONAGHY: I will be very glad to read this letter; it is undated.

Mr. BOYS: It is not undated.

Mr. DONAGHY: Mr. Bell asked the question:

The date is what?

Mr. Calder, K.C.: It is undated, but it follows immediately upon the letter dated November 27th, and it precedes the letter dated November 13th.

Mr. Bell: I am trying to get the year.

Mr. Calder, K.C.: 1922.

The letter is not dated, but I will read it:

Re Waisberg

Hon. JACQUES BUREAU,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

DEAR MR. BUREAU,—I have just received your letter and naturally regret that you feel disinclined to adopt the suggestion you made during our interview. I note you think the case more serious than presented by me. I really do not think this conclusion is justified.

As far as I know, I told you Waisberg had attempted to bribe a customs officer and I intimated he had been persistent, and I also told you he had pulled out $50 in money and offered it.

I d d say I was of the opinion he was not making it a business and his crude effort in my opinion warrants that conclusion.

Mr. BOYS: Do not be too dramatic.

Mr. DONAGHY: Mr. Speaker, the simplicity of mind displayed in this letter is really amusing:

Aftr all, the offence of which Waisberg was guilty was exactly as I stated.

As you know, I did not ask that he should go scot-free and I felt now, having to pay double duty and sales tax, he is being severely penalized, and unless you think he is a confirmed smuggler or one of a gang, I am still of the opinion that for this, his first offence, the penalty suggested is very severe.

I reported the result of my trip to him and to his wife, and it will certainly come as a serious blow if criminal proceedings are now taken, and I trust, upon further consideration, you will see your way clear to carry out the arrangement made when I was with you.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: Would the hon. member please explain the joke?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DONAGHY: I did not catch my hon. friend's remark.

Mr. MANION: I asked if the hon. member would be pleased to explain the joke.

Mr. DONAGHY: I have a very high opinion of the perspicacity of the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) when he wants to see the point.

I do not think you should lay too much stress upon the question and answer portion of the interview. No stenographer was present, and it is purely from memory.

It is true, it seems very impressive, but after all it it a case of attempted bribery and I definitely presented it as such, and I would be sorry to have you think I did not represent it according to the facts.

In view of the incident alleged and in view of Mr. Young's letter requesting you to deal leniently, and in view of the fact that it is his first offence, I think justice will be done by carrying out the arrangement made, and if you do not feel free to so dispose of it, I would be glad if you would let it stand until I again see you.

I think I will be in Ottawa next week on other business and at the very worst, will be there on the 27th or 28th, at which time I am to interview the Acting Minister of Railways, and in the meantime the only person suffering is Waisberg, for his goods are under seizure.

Yours sincerely,

W. A. BOYS.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): Tell us what happened to Waisberg.

An hon. MEMBER: Ask your own whip.

Mr. DONAGHY: I will now proceed with the reading of a letter that I was requested to read. On November 13th Mr. Boys wrote to Mr. Bureau as follows:

My dear Mr. BUREAU,

I have to be in Ottawa on Friday and will call and se you re Waisberg so kindly let the matter stand till then.

On December 13th Mr. Boys again wrote Mr. Bureau as follows:

Hon. JACQUES BUREAU,
Minister of Customs,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. BUREAU,

Re Waisberg

I have had no word herein as yet, and unfortunately the silk in question is still being held. I saw Mr. Young, customs officer, and he told me he had received no word. I would be excedingly obliged if you would give the necessary instructions to the local officer to release the silk on receipt of the amount payable.

Sincerely yours,

W. A. BOYS.

The Hon. Jacques Bureau was eventually pursuaded and he did order the release of the silk.

Mr. BOYS: On payment of how much?

Mr. DONAGHY: Wait a moment until I find the amount.

Mr. BOYS: The amount was $813.60.

Mr. DONAGHY: Now I have it here. This trunk of silk was returned to Waisberg on the order of the Hon. Jacques Bureau—

Mr. BOYS: Two years afterwards.

Mr. DONAGHY: Yes, two years afterwards on payment of $813.60. I am now going to read to you the evidence of Mr. Blair, departmental solicitor and assistant to the deputy, as to how that came about. Mr. Blair's evidence is set out at page 1666 of the evidence and will be found very interesting reading. I quote as follows:

Q. Mr. Blair, at that moment, you knew this attempt at bribery could be proven?

A. Yes. I would like to explain with regard to that. You will see the date—

Q. Yes, 7/3/24.

A. Away in the fall of 1924. The matter had stood all that time. I know from conversations with the deputy minister concerning it, that he was very anxious Waisberg should be prosecuted on both charges, and that the goods should be forfeited, and there is no question but that is what should have been done. It dragged along, as you will see. The goods were lying there, and depreciating, and he finally called me into his office, and said "You had better prepare a report."

This is one of those "instructed" reports which members of the committee have severely condemned. Instead of departmental officers being allowed to prepare their own reports, they are instructed from those higher up as to what to put into their recommendations. That is what happened in this Waisberg case I continue to quote:

Q. Who told you that?

A. The commissioner. He said "Because it is the intention of the minister to release these goods upon payment of double duty," according to a promise he had given Mr. Boys. I should never have signed that. You will see that is a carbon copy. That is not my recommendation.

That is the report as to release on payment of double duty. I continue quoting:

Q. But the recommendation was prepared by you at Mr. Farrow's request?

A. His instructions.

Q. But Mr. Farrow, at that time, was very strongly disinclined to abandon prosecution?

A. Yes, that was the cause of all the delay.

Here were these poor subordinate officers in the department trying to get a prosecution for bribery under the Criminal Code against this man and they could not get it, they were held back.

Mr. BOYS: That is not a fair statement.

Mr. DONAGHY: I will read the quotation again, and the hon. gentleman will judge if it is not a fair statement:

Q. But Mr. Farrow at that time was very strongly disinclined to abandon prosecution?

A. Yes, that was the cause of all the delay.

I hope I have satisfied the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BOYS: The hon. gentleman will admit the evidence shows there was not the slightest effort in any way to settle the attempt at bribery?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

[Mr. Donaghy.]

Mr. BOYS: I suppose hon. gentlemen want to be fair?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, they do not.

Mr. DONAGHY: The whole circumstance will have to speak for itself. In this case there was no prosecution for bribery or no prosecution for smuggling or attempted smuggling as there should have been. All that was done was that the Minister of Customs at the request of, and as the result of an agreement made with, Mr. Boys, prevented the law from being carried into effect as it should have been and in the most flagrant case that was brought before the whole committee—this most outstanding case of criminality, of an attempt to take advantage of a poor boy with sickness in his family—punishment was thwarted. Under these circumstances the facts will have to speak for themselves; I make no comment upon them.

An hon. MEMBER: What about Moses?

An hon. MEMBER: Moses is all right.

Mr. DONAGHY: I continue quoting from Mr. Blair's evidence:

Q. And it was against his recommendation, and his desire to prosecute, that the goods were released on payment of double duty and sales tax?

A. Yes. He was very anxious for the man to be prosecuted from the start.

And he was thwarted in trying to discharge his duty.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Have you any condemnation for the minister?

Mr. DONAGHY: I am now going to deal with another very interesting case.

Mr. BOYS: Will you permit me one question?

Mr. DONAGHY: Undoubtedly.

Mr. BOYS: I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend but if he is through with the Waisberg case I should like to ask him this question: Does he suggest to the House that there was anything in my conduct which warranted the reporting of the evidence to the House. and if so why he did not vote in favour of it in the committee?

Mr. DONAGHY: In order to answer that question, I have to give the reasons why we brought in a report without condemning members of parliament. If the hon. member wants that explanation I am prepared to give it now.

Mr. BOYS: My hon. friend knows that I appeared before the committee without any summons and made my statement. I invited the committee—and he was present at the time—to make any charge they thought fit against me and to report it to the House if they saw fit, and they did not do so.

Mr. DONAGHY: The hon. member has not answered my question as to what he desired me to do, and I am going to exercise my own discretion in the matter now.

Mr. BOYS: I will invite the hon. member to go as far as he likes.

Mr. DONAGHY: I propose to tell this House why, in that report, we omitted to bring in any condemnation of members of parliament or to mention their names. Personally I felt that in the interests of this country a report should be brought in that would have the support of both sides of the House in reference to all its recommendations for improving conditions in this country. I felt that the people were more interested in the welfare of the country and the revenue of this country than they were in a discussion in that committee of party politics and personal differences.

An hon. MEMBER: When did the hon. member change his mind?

Mr. DONAGHY: The remark of the hon. member discloses amazing ignorance. I fancy he has not read the report. The report is as I have stated and I have not changed my mind; but I had in view the bringing in of a unanimous report in the interest of the country and to satisfy the demands of the House; and the evidence having been reported to the House, it was then open to discuss, in connection with that evidence, any matter reflecting upon ministers, members, or whoever it might be. I have not made any charge against the hon. member, as he well knows. I have refrained from doing so, and I have taken this position: I have stated the facts, and if these facts do not carry conviction it is not my fault. It is my duty to give the facts. These facts and circumstances speak for themselves.

Now I turn to the case of Moses Aziz, which I am sure will bring smiles of joy to the countenances of my hon. friends opposite. We find that Moses Aziz, of the province of New Brunswick, was charged with importing into Canada and having in his possession some kegs of liquor. He was convicted on the 18th August last. This all occurred before the new Minister of Customs had any idea that he was ever going to be Minister of Customs. Some question was raised last night as to whether or not the charge laid against Moses Aziz was as severe a charge as should have been laid. I do know that the present Minister of Customs had nothing to do with it and is not responsible for it. On the 29th of August, 1925, Mr. Gallagher, the solicitor in charge of the Remission branch which deals with clemency and pardon for offences, wrote a letter to the Customs department regarding the Moses Aziz case. I point out to hon. members that that was in August, prior to the new Minister of Customs having been sworn in or appointed. The letter is from M. F. Gallagher, Chief of the Remission branch. It does not say to what officer it is addressed, but presumably it is to some official in the Customs department. The letter reads:

DEAR SIR,—Representations have been made to the hon. the Minister of Justice, by the Premier of New Brunswick on the case of Moses A. M. Aziz, convicted at Bathurst on August 18, of illegal possession of illicitly imported liquor. A fine of $150 was imposed, together with a jail sentence of three months, and the fine has been paid. The Premier of New Brunswick suggests that the imprisonment be suspended—

I do not know whether or not that has been called to the attention of hon. members.

Mr. NICHOLSON: It was read last night.

Mr. DONAGHY: The suggestion originated with the Premier of New Brunswick, and under our constitution the administration and enforcement of laws of a criminal character are in the hands of provincial governments. The letter proceeds:

The Premier of New Brunswick suggests that the imprisonment be suspended, as the offender is a married man, in business for himself, and the term of imprisonment will occasion him much hardship.

From my experience as a lawyer I can safely say that that plea is very frequently advanced as a ground for exercising clemency, namely, the hardship the sentence will impose upon a man's family. It has often been advanced in cases of liquor conviction, and often acceded to. The letter proceeds.

Moreover, it is stated that Aziz was not aware that the mere possession of smuggled liquor was in itself an offence, and further that the possession dated long before the act was amended.

As this man is not imprisoned, the Minister of Justice cannot order his release; it therefore, is a matter for your department to decide whether or not the magistrate should be asked to issue a warrant of commitment.

Yours truly,

M. F. GALLAGHER.

The suggestion came from Mr. Gallagher that it was a matter for the Department of Customs to decide.

Mr. ARTHURS: Read the remainder of the letter.

Mr. DONAGHY: I have read it all. The only thing I did not read was the words, "Chief of Remission branch" below the signature. I could not go any further down, much as I would like to oblige my hon. friend.

Mr. ARTHURS: The letter I refer to was the one from the Premier of New Brunswick.

Mr. DONAGHY: I was not reading that. If my hon. friend wants me to read two letters at the same time he will be sadly disappointed. At the time that letter was written the new Minister of Customs had not been appointed. He is not responsible for that letter in any shape or form and he is not responsible for the recommendation of the Premier of New Brunswick, nor is he responsible for the suggestion made by Mr. Gallagher, the chief of the Remission branch. He does not come into the scene until away on in September; he was sworn in on the fifth of that month. He did not assume the active discharge of the duties of his office until the end of October. As the House will remember, many ministers were absent from Ottawa during those two months. The minister, however, attended a cabinet meeting about the 21st September, 1925, a long time after this man had been convicted. He went from that cabinet meeting to his office in the Customs department and he was there for a very short time. The accumulation of months of work and files was on his desk, neglected. Those of us who have had to do with large offices will appreciate what that means. During the short time he was there and knowing that he would be staying there only a few hours, he dealt with what matters he could as presented to him by the officials under him, his deputy and others. The Aziz file was presented and it was explained to him that this man had been convicted a month ago; that he had not been imprisoned, and that apparently the Premier of New Brunswick had asked that the case be held up in the meantime.

What did the new Minister of Customs decide then? If this man was convicted over a month ago and some steps had been taken to hold up his imprisonment in the meantime at the request of the Premier of New Brunswick, any man would feel satisfied that that step must have been taken legally. We know how these things are handled in Ontario. I know how they are handled in British Columbia. When a man is convicted and he stands in the dock and sentence is imposed for three months' imprisonment, one officer hangs on to one arm and another on to the other and he is taken down below to the cells. If the next day you find him on the street you would never suspect that he had escaped. You would suppose, as any lawyer would suppose, that his solicitor had taken the necessary legal proceedings either by way of appeal and getting the man out on bail pending appeal, or in some other manner. Had I gone into the office of the Minister of Customs in the middle of September last and been informed by officials there in a hurried interview that this man had been convicted a month ago and that his imprisonment had been held up in the meantime, I say frankly as a lawyer that I would assume, without further question, that the usual procedure had been gone through to have that man released pending appeal or whatever proceedings had been taken, or pending certiorari proceedings which might also be taken. There were two ways in which he might have been out. The minister told us that while this was called to his attention he did not take the time to read the letter which had been written to the Hon. Jacques Bureau by Mr. Robichaud. He said: "I gave this matter what consideration I could. I said: If representations are being made and there are some circumstances connected with the case, my order is to let them stand as they are until they can be investigated." It was an exercise of judgment.

The minister appeared before the committee. He told us: "I do not want to shield myself in any manner, shape or form. I want to tell you the worst about myself in connection with this case." That statement carried to me at least an air of conviction, of sincerity, of proof of his high sense of honour. The sting in the whole thing is contained in the letter which Mr. Robichaud wrote. We cannot hold anybody responsible for writing a letter like that other than the man who writes it. Nobody with any sense of public honour would attempt to justify the expressions used by Mr. Robichaud in that letter and I am not going to attempt to justify them. My self-respect will not permit it. The sting, I say, is in that letter and it is contained in these words in the letter which Robichaud wrote to Mr. Bureau, not to Mr. Boivin:

> Mr. Aziz is of the highest help for us during this campaign, and we cannot do without his services.

That is the sting. I think there is another letter with a similar sting. Mr. Speaker, I ask you and I ask parliament as the highest court in this country, if it can, in the fairness which parliament will exercise, condemn the new Minister of Customs because an expression of that kind was contained in a letter written by a gentleman who, to speak charitably, was most indiscreet, and addressed to the Hon. Jacques Bureau. Parliament, I say, will be fair in exercising its judicial function as the highest court in the land. As a result of that hurried consideration which the minister gave to the Aziz case the deputy minister or Mr. Wilson, the chief preventive officer, sent a telegram to the lawyer acting for the department in New Brunswick asking him to hold the case up in the meantime.

The new Minister of Customs did not return to take over his duties until the end of October, and I now proceed to inquire: What did he do in regard to this case when he got it under his hand? Let me read from page 1324 of the inquiry, and I crave the careful attention of members while I read the judgment of the minister. The new Minister of Customs writes this letter:

Ottawa, November 18, 1925.

Mr. J. G. ROBICHAUD, M.P.,
Shippigan, N.B.

Dear Sir:—

I have before me a memorandum concerning the case of Mr. Moses Aziz, who was condemned by the court to a fine of $150 and to three months' imprisonment for having had liquor in his possession.

The fine of $150 was paid, but the execution of the warrant of commitment was temporarily suspended.

I have examined the case with care, and I can find no reason for which the imposed sentence should not be executed.

That is the judgment of the minister when he had time to bring his mind to bear upon the case.

I have examined the case with care, and I can find no reason for which the imposed sentence should not be executed, but I will keep the matter in suspense until I get a reply from you, in the event of your having other representations to make to me.

The officers of the department contend that the efforts made to prevent smuggling of liquors will be much lessened if this man is let go without further punishment.

That is the judgment of the minister, exercising a high sense of duty in the performance of his office.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DONAGHY: Hon. gentlemen laugh at that, but I fail to see the reason. Now what happened following that? Remember, that was November 18 and parliament was summoned for December 10. It is not necessary for me to picture to the House with what matters members of the cabinet were concerned immediately succeeding that date, nor is it necessary for me to tell you what crisis faced the government. It was well known in the country at the time and I have no doubt that frequent, probably daily meetings of the cabinet were being held. Apart from that I need hardly say that hundreds of other cases calling for decision by the minister awaited consideration in the office of the Department of Customs. Can parliament regard this Moses Aziz case as the only matter that was before the Minister of Customs at that time? It is suggested that he should have disposed of it promptly; he should have brought Mr. Robichaud here the next day if possible after pronouncing that judgment. But let us look at the circumstances as they existed at the time. The Aziz case did not fill the whole picture in the country's eye, for more serious matters demanded the attention of the government. Parliament, although summoned for December 10, did not meet until January 7, and in the interval we can readily conceive what matters the members of the cabinet were called upon to consider. And when the House did meet on January 7, according to hon. gentlemen opposite, the Minister of Customs should have sent immediately for Mr. Robichaud, who had come up from New Brunswick. Why, it is asked, did not the Minister of Customs get into touch with Mr. Robichaud immediately and deal with the case? Have we, Mr. Speaker, no just sense of proportion regarding the importance of matters of public concern? When parliament met on January 7 there were other and graver and more vital interests occupying the attention of ministers, as they had occupied their attention for weeks. We all know the debate which followed for a month, and the uncertainty as to whether this government would remain in power or be voted out any day of the week. We know with what unremitting attendance members of the House were obliged to be here. They dared not leave the building, and pairs for most of the time were refused. When every member was in attendance day and night in this chamber, do hon. gentlemen insist that the Minister of Customs could have disposed of the Aziz case more expeditiously than he did? Let us be reasonable in these things. Let us as the high court of parliament sitting in judgment in this case be fair in the treatment we mete out to the minister against whom this charge is made. Shall we, for any political advantage, sitting here as the highest court in the land commit an injustice on a British subject? The eyes of all Canada are on parliament to-day. The people are wondering what the House will do with the Customs report, a report which has met with the universal approval of the business element of Canada. The business men of this country are wondering whether we are going to proceed with business and carry out the recommendations of the report or sit back in this House and play politics and try to "get" one another.

A great deal of fuss has been made about the Aziz case. Now, in the province of Ontario last year 252 remissions of sentence were granted bootleggers and violators of the Ontario Temperance Act. I am not criticising that. These applications for clemency had no doubt been supported by persons influential in the community. Offenders generally call upon the local member to help them out when their familes are in distress and when they want to get out of gaol. These things are not new in Canada, but the Moses Aziz case is now brought out and an attempt is made to create a great political issue upon it. Smuggling has been going on for years; it has been going on under the administrations of both parties. The condition in which we found the administration of the customs, in the investigation we made, was the result of years of accumulated neglect. It is not a sudden growth, as everyone knows. Had time permitted, and had the Liberal members of the committee so desired, we might have made efforts to delve back into the administration of the Customs department during the past ten years, and I have no doubt some things could have been unearthed. For my part, these tactics do not appeal to me. If the administration of the Customs department under the Liberal party had not been properly carried out it would, to my mind, be no excuse to say, "Neither was it properly carried out under the Conservative government." I do not want to take that stand. No attempt was made to go back into the Conservative regime.

The press of the country has been free in its criticism of the display made by the two political parties during the present session. There is a strong suspicion in the mind of the public that political parties are wearing a mask of hypocrisy, and that behind many of these attacks and manoeuvres there is simply the design to play the game of beating the other side.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVILEGE—MR. FORKE

ALLEGED INTIMIDATION OF MEMBERS

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege I wish to read part of a letter which has come to my hand, and which is headed "House of Commons. The Press Gallery." I will not weary the House by reading the entire letter, which deals largely with the actions of a certain gentleman in regard to past affairs of the Progressive group in the House of Commons, what he had done and the results obtained. I intend to read the part dealing with myself personally, which is as follows:

> In common with many others who have wished you well, I have ceased to accept at their face value your professions of disinterested independence but I have clung to the belief and hope that on a real issue of political morality you would lay aside partisan prejudices inherited from earlier political associations and exercise a fair and honest judgment and vote. But if you disappoint my expectations, I warn you that you will have to alter certain habits of life recently acquired, or expose yourself to mirthful ridicule. You will have to cease lecturing the older parties upon their imperfections and delinquencies; you will have to stop addressing Canadian clubs on the need for higher political ethics, you will have to spare Rotary organizations further expositions of your theoretical ideas of political morality and you will also have to pick and choose carefully what rural audiences you address, or at least be prepared to answer pointed inquiries and reconcile your part in degrading political and administrative standards with your persistent professions of a zeal to improve them. The Canadian public is long-suffering but its patience with humbug and hypocrisy can be exhausted.
> In the history of our native land there is a roll of noble names beginning with William Wallace and coming down as the centuries rolled on through John Knox, Patrick Hamilton and the reformers Muir and Palmer, to Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman in our own time who did not hesitate, in some cases at the dire peril of their lives, to take a valiant stand by word and deed for the right and their reward is imperishable fame. You to-day are not even required to brave popular obloquy; you are merely required to exercise an honest trusteeship for the voters who put you in a place of influence and distinction and cast an honest vote on the evidence available.
> If you do otherwise, then a vast and unbridgeable gulf will forever yawn between you and the finer spirits of your race and Scotsmen will never be able to think of Robert Forke as faithful to the best traditions of his blood.
> I shall await your speech and vote with interest and if they are in accord with the information conveyed to me, I propose to send copies of this letter to the Ottawa Journal, the Winnipeg Tribune and the Brandon Sun immediately thereafter.

I wonder if members of this House must sit in their places and be intimidated by members of the press gallery in any vote they are likely to cast. I have great admiration for the press gallery; I believe in their fairness and honesty, but I do claim, Mr. Speaker, that a member of that gallery who has undertaken to make any such statements as those contained in this letter, in which he warns me and dares me that under certain conditions he is going to do so and so, has exceeded his position and privilege as a member of the press gallery. This letter is signed by J. A. Stevenson, and written from the press gallery. I want to know exactly what is to be done under the circumstances, as I do not intend to lie down under it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the letter be tabled. I think this is a serious matter involving certainly the freedom of members of parliament, and the members of the House should have an opportunity at an appropriate time to decide what action should be taken in this connection.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is a well known procedure in connection with cases such as this where the honour of a member is attacked, and when he is subjected to threats as a member such procedure should be followed in this case when the letter is tabled.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I shall be interested indeed to follow the procedure the Prime Minister proposes with relation to a letter sent by a citizen to a member of parliament.

Mr. FORKE: Mr. Speaker, I suppose the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) wants to be fair. This letter is written from the press gallery and signed by a member of that gallery in his position as such.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very well; is he not a citizen?

Mr. DUNNING: Has he a right to intimidate a member of this House because he is a member of the press gallery?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If it is illegal intimidation to send a reasonable letter to a member of this House I shall be interested indeed in following the procedure of the government. I shall wait to see what they will do.

Mr. SPEAKER: The letter will be tabled.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I would suggest that the government follow the same procedure as they have followed in regard to Senate reform.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I would like to ask the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) if he approves of a letter of that kind.

CUSTOMS INQUIRY

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE AND AMENDMENTS THERETO

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mercier (St. Henri) for concurrence in the report of the special committee appointed to investigate the Department of Customs and Excise, and the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. Mr. Stevens.

Mr. DONAGHY: I have only a word or two to say in conclusion. Why does the amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre conceal all reference to those concerned in the notorious and scandalous Daivey Waisberg case? Is it true that the reference to the Moses Aziz case, to the exclusion of the case of Daivey Waisberg, is proof that hon. gentlemen opposite are actuated and moved very strongly by loyalty to the party with which they are affiliated and nothing else? This may deceive those who wish to be deceived, but it will not deceive the public of Canada. The only name mentioned in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre is the new Minister of Customs who set out to clean up that department. In conclusion I desire to commend to the careful and serious meditation of hon. gentlemen opposite an extract from that well-known sermon on the subject of hypocrisy which says:

> Or those eighteen, upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and slew them, think ye that they were sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem?

Mr. A. J. DOUCET (Kent, N.B.): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. EVANTUREL: Before the hon. member for Kent proceeds with his speech I should like to know from him what his nationality is?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DOUCET: The question asked by the hon. member for Prescott is very interesting indeed. When the House rose last evening and the hon. member who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Donaghy) had adjourned the debate, I asked him, knowing I had to follow, about how much time the remainder of his speech would occupy? He said "Friend, about half an hour." You can well realize, Mr. Speaker, that one who was prepared to deliver a speech at two o'clock and was waiting for such a length of time has had time to forget it. Why the hon. member for Vancouver North consumed about five hours in saying what could have been uttered in about one-fifth of the time, no one can conceive, but later revelations will, I have no doubt, disclose the reason.

The hon. gentleman occupied the greater part of the afternoon in defending the noted J. E. A. Bisaillon of Montreal, the man who was dismissed by the present Minister of Customs, the man who has been condemned by public opinion throughout Canada. My hon. friend spent some time also in stating that the ex-Minister of Customs had debauched the public service of this Dominion; but he forgot to tell the House that for so debauching the public service the Prime Minister, desirous of reforming the Senate, had appointed the gentleman in question to the upper House. I do not intend to dwell at length upon the speech of the hon. member for Vancouver North. I had come to the conclusion that I should occupy but a very short time in this debate.

An hon. MEMBER: So much the better.

Mr. MEIGHEN: So much the better for you.

Mr. DOUCET: I know it will be pleasant to hon. gentlemen opposite if I do not dwell too long upon the various questions that arose during the customs inquiry which lasted some four and a half months. When the Minister of Customs and Excise (Mr. Boivin) spoke at Sherbrooke on March 21 last and said that this inquiry would cost the country something like a half a million dollars, with no good results, it was the opinion of the members of the committee that the hon. minister had erred somewhat. He admitted that yesterday, and for his admission we are grateful. He said yesterday, Mr. Speaker, that politics had crept into the inquiry during the first few weeks. If politics were brought in I ask who was responsible? The first clash that came in the committee was when we asked on March 3 that the Duncan report be placed in evidence, and that Inspector Duncan himself be called into the witness box to testify as to the accuracy of that report. The first division in the committee occurred then, and had it not been for the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett), the hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell), the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) and myself voting together to have the Duncan report placed in evidence, thus securing a majority, that report would not have been produced. Listening to the arguments of the hon. member for North Vancouver this afternoon one would imagine his party were entitled to all the credit for conducting this inquiry because forsooth they had produced the Duncan report. Do hon. members of this House realize that on April 21 we made a motion to have the Duncan report included in the evidence? The chairman of the committee then invoked, as he had a right to do, a rule which had not been invoked during a period of six or eight weeks. He asked that notice of motion be given and that the question be deferred for decision until the following Tuesday. It was not until the hon. member for Peace River supported our motion that the supporters of the government yielded to our wishes.

Now, Sir, I turn to other phases of the question Certain rumours are afloat, and in view of that fact I am not surprised at the question that was directed to me before I had even begun my speech. I can foresee by the rumours to-day that if the questions of conscription, the war with Turkey, and all the other familiar election cries of the past cannot be resorted to, one issue that will be raised at the next election will be that this committee focussed its searchlight only upon the port of Montreal in the province of Quebec. Let me say that if the committee focussed its searchlight upon the port of Montreal there are very many reasons for that First of all, Montreal is the largest port in this Dominion. In the next place it is the second largest port on the North American continent. Furthermore, Montreal is the fifth largest city on the continent; it is the metropolis of the Dominion, it is the chief manufacturing centre, and owing to its geographical position it serves approximately seventy-five per cent of the country's population.

Mr. RINFRET: I would ask my hon. friend to impress those facts upon the mind of the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers).

Mr. DOUCET: I am convinced, although I am not boasting about it, that my remarks this evening will make much more impression on my friends on this side than if the hon. member had himself spoken.

With reference to the conditions in the port of Montreal and the province of Quebec since 1922, the attention of the commercial interests of the country was focussed upon that section. On the 13th of January, 1922, the ex-Minister of Customs caused the detachment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police stationed at Lacolle to be removed from there, thus making easy the way of the transgressor in defrauding the public revenue. On the 25th of March, 1922, the same Minister had the Royal Canadian Mounted Police detachment removed from Philipsburg, Quebec, thereby opening the highway crossing the international boundary, providing an opportunity for the smuggler to import contraband goods into this country. On the 6th of May, 1924, the same Minister of Customs instructed the Royal Canadian Mounted Police force in Montreal to do nothing but report to Bisaillon. On the 24th of October, 1924, the same gentleman, occupying the position of Minister of Customs and Excise, removed all authority as customs and excise officers from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police force at Montreal. Do you know, Sir, that the removal of Chief Inspector Busby from his inspectorship of the division of Montreal and the substitution of an inefficient and incapable successor, made the way much easier for wholesale corruption of the public service? Notorious cases arose in this district. Let me cite the Keith-Vaughan-Harrison case, referred to by my hon. friend from Vancouver North (Mr. Donaghy) this afternoon; the famous S. S. "Borden" drug case, the famous barge "Tremblay" case, and again the Denise Larde silk smuggling case into the port of Quebec. There were very many cases of this kind, and the commercial interests of the Dominion were affected. They centralized on the Commercial Protective Association, and they asked that special men be sent to Montreal to investigate. And let me say that the steps taken by the Finance department in sending men to inspect the port of Montreal, and the information gathered thereby, were the basis upon which this inquiry was conducted. The fact, again, that the counsel chosen for the committee had intimate knowledge of the way smugglers were carrying on their nefarious traffic in this section gave him first-hand knowledge as to how to proceed with the inquiry. That he was a clever gentleman and that his work was done in an efficient manner no one will deny, and that he was likewise appointed by this government is admitted by all. Then I ask, Mr. Speaker, how is it that the inquiry was focussed at first on Montreal, to the detriment of that city? Respectable citizens of Montreal and respectable citizens of the whole province of Quebec have welcomed this inquiry, and the facts revealed by it will be the means of cleaning out the smuggling gang operating in that section, will give a fair chance to the legitimate business interests of the province to conduct business, and will also bring additional revenue to the treasury of this Dominion.

During the first addresses made on the charges preferred by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) on the 2nd of February last, and referred to, it is true in a very small degree, by the hon. member for Vancouver North this afternoon, the Civil Service Commission was practically accused of having made a poor selection of the Customs officers in that section. I hold no brief for the Civil Service Commission, but the revelations made by that committee were such that two of the commissioners were asked by the Prime Minister to tender their resignations.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I beg pardon; I did not ask them to tender their resignations. I suggested that they should ask to be relieved from their duties pending the time that the committee made its report to this House. That is a very different thing from asking for their resignations.

Mr. DOUCET: I accept the explanation of the right hon. gentleman. It is satisfactory to me. It meant the same thing, and in fact it was the same thing. I hold no brief for that commission, but I want to say that the files and the evidence produced before the committee clearly show that every man who was neglectful in his duties was appointed to the force before the Civil Service Commission appointed men to the outside service. Furthermore, every promotion made by the Civil Service Commission was recommended by the department itself before the promotion went through. The inspector of the port of Montreal was recommended as 100 per cent efficient, 100 per cent capable, and by whom? By officers of the department; and if he did not get a reclassification last year, was it the fault of the department? We have in evidence, Mr. Speaker, that the deputy minister harassed the commission for six months to give this man Clerk a reclassification, and the reclassification would have gone through if it had not been objected to by the chairman of that commission. It is useless to try to blame the Civil Service Commission for the negligence in the customs service. Do hon. gentlemen want any further proof? You remember, Mr. Speaker, when the vote for $350,000 passed this House last session, the plea was made by the Prime Minister himself. If we refer to page 3778 of last year's Hansard, we will see that he said that it is most important that steps should be taken to protect the revenue of this country. There was a loss in revenue of possibly fifty to a hundred million dollars per year owing to the conditions that existed, and the Minister of Customs himself said, "You cannot get efficient officers by applying to the Civil Service Commission. These men must be appointed outside of that commission altogether." With what result? The records of sixty-seven special men were placed before the committee, and I am going to quote a few of them this evening for the purpose of showing that they got poorer results than they would have obtained if they had asked the commission to make the appointments.

In the fall of 1924 there were some 123 cans of alcohol seized at St. Leonard in the county of Madawaska, New Brunswick. That alcohol was placed in the customs house for safe keeping. The man in charge of that warehouse left the place about thirty minutes after midnight on the 21st of December and went to a pool room where he played cards until about six o'clock in the morning. When he returned he found that the place had been broken open, the alcohol was gone and he had no excuse to offer. That is in substance the report given by the inspector of customs stationed at Woodstock, New Brunswick. The man, as would be expected, was retired; but when it came to the appointment of a special preventive officer in October last, the same man was appointed at a salary of $1,200 a year.

I come to the case of a man at Chester, Nova Scotia, a man who was fined in October 1922 for having sixteen gallons of smuggled rum in his possession. The files of the department show that he was appointed as a special preventive officer on the recommendation of the member for the constituency, and when the chief of the preventive service said: "Why, this man is a noted smuggler," this member, (Mr. Duff), wired back, "collect" as per usual, stating: "He is a good man."

I come to the case of three men appointed in the county of Gloucester in the month of October. One of them is eighty-four years of age.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: Would the hon. member name the man who is eighty-four years of age?

Mr. DOUCET: I do not think it can serve any good purpose to name those gentlemen in this House. I have the files of the department before me.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: What is the point of order?

Mr. ROBICHAUD: My point of order is this: I recommended the three men appointed in Gloucester and I state before this House that no man above fifty years of age was appointed.

Mr. SPEAKER: That is not a point of order.

Mr. DOUCET: His name is on the list certified by the department and produced before the Customs inquiry committee.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: Produce it.

Mr. DOUCET: My hon. friend can deny it if he wishes. Either my statement is correct or the files produced by the department are incorrect. But one thing I do know—and in passing let me say that a man eighty-four years of age would hardly be a reasonable preventive officer to send after smugglers after dark in the months of October to December—

Mr. ROBICHAUD: I rise again to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: Will the hon. member state his question of privilege?

Mr. ROBICHAUD: My hon. friend stated that in my constituency a special preventive officer whose age was about eighty years had been appointed on the recommendation of the then member for the county of Gloucester. The fact is—

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no question of privilege and no point of order. I may say that no interruptions may take place except with the permission of the hon. member who has the floor. The hon. member will be at liberty to speak afterwards.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DOUCET: I have no objection to having questions put to me, but I wish the hon. gentleman when rising to a point of order would have something to talk on. I can give him my assurance now that I do not propose to treat him as badly as the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Donaghy) treated him this afternoon. I did not intend to use any harsh language in this connection and I do not intend to do so now.

I wish to finish my point with this observation. When the three men were appointed to the force of Gloucester in October last, the man who took them to the magistrate to have them sworn in was the famous Moses Aziz who had been convicted. On the files of the department produced before the committee there are letters to the department from officers in good standing down there who claim that Moses Aziz had been the medium through whom those three officers were reporting to the Customs department. Why, this question of going outside the Civil Service Commission to appoint preventive officers is considered in the Maritime provinces to be a huge joke. No later than three weeks ago a customs officer had to be appointed to the outport of Chartierville in the county of Compton, Quebec. Who was appointed? A man who has violated the customs law and has been fined therefor, a man who is a noted smuggler in that part of the country.

Need I say anything in connection with the appointment of Captain Zinck of Lunenburg? I do not wish to say anything detrimental to him because he has passed to the great beyond, although he had not when the inquiry was being held. But when in 1924 the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) put on Hansard a question asking what salary Captain Zinck was getting, the hon. member was told that Captain Zinck did not receive any salary. Can hon. members imagine a man such as Captain Zinck working day and night surveying the liquor-laden vessels coming into the port of Lunenburg, without salary? He did not. When it was found by an inspector of the department that he had to refund over $2,600 of the moneys of this Dominion, then the department gave him a salary of $100 a month. In connection with the special preventive service, one Mr. Trask was appointed on October 1, 1925, to the position of customs preventive officer, and on the 14th of that month he made two seizures of liquors and of one schooner. That man was discharged on October 19. In fairness to the member for the constituency it must be said that a charge was made against this officer, but I would point out that the information on the files shows that an affidavit or a declaration made by a well known smuggler was taken in preference to his. And by the way, these seizures which Mr. Trask had made were abandoned and no prosecution was pursued by the department.

I come now to the appointment at Mahone bay on September 1, 1925, of an officer whose selection was made upon recommendation by collect telegram despatched by the representative of the constituency, the member for Lunenburg, (Mr. Duff). This officer took his instructions from the member of the riding and reported to Captain Zinck, and when questioned by the preventive service in the month of January, 1926, as to why he had done no work, he replied, "Why, gentlemen, in September and October I was occupied with the election."

To show how sincere the government were in their desire to appoint proper officers I would refer to inspector G. H. Barbour of Charlottetown. This man, a provincial prohibition officer, was appointed without salary on April 23, 1923, and during his short tenure of office he had more seizures to his credit than all the other men on the whole island. That is to say, he had made six seizures within the space of six months. But because he was too efficient he was dismissed on December 15, 1923, for which dismissal no reasons have so far been advanced.

There is in the waters of the gulf of St. Lawrence to-day a motor boat known as the Bernice which is costing the department $664 per month. That boat is supposed to be engaged in the work of surveying the shore. And who are on board her? One man on board has been for years rum-running to St. Pierre-Miquelon, and he abandoned that enterprise only when he lost his schooners on the rocky shores of Cape Breton in a storm. Thereupon he proceeded to sell liquor contrary to law and shortly after the new government of Nova Scotia came into power, finding no doubt that it was a rather dangerous business to carry on, he transferred it to his son. He is now working on this motor boat which is, as I say, ostensibly engaged in survey work, and it is common talk in that section of the country that the motor boat conveys liquor from vessels beyond the three-mile limit to this man's son on shore for him to sell by the glass.

Can this government claim that they have made reasonable efforts to enforce the customs laws? Why, that vote of $350,000 last year was nothing more than political camouflage: some men had to be rewarded prior to the election and they got their reward.

I turn now to another phase of the subject. I was sorry indeed that the Minister of Customs should attempt, as he did yesterday afternoon, to excuse everybody else and take the whole blame upon himself. I do not think he is doing himself justice. I did intend to say that we regret personally having been obliged to take the present step, but I fear the hon. gentleman might give me the same reply he was good enough to make to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) yesterday. And as I have no wish to crucify anyone I shall not express that regret. No, Mr. Speaker, the minister need not take the whole blame. The blame for the neglect of properly enforcing the customs laws of this Dominion must rest with the entire cabinet. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) was himself on the 22nd day of January, 1925, aware of the situation so far as it relates to liquor activities in the Maritime provinces. I have under my hand a copy of a letter addressed to him by the Social Service Council of Nova Scotia, which letter, by the way, is among the files produced by the department for the information of the inquiry. The Social Service Council of Nova Scotia represents all the churches of that province, and other organizations, as follows: Church of England

Synod, Roman Catholic Church, Presbyterian Synod, Methodist Conference, United Baptist Convention, Lutheran Synod, Congregational Union, Disciples of Christ, Salvation Army, Young Men's Christian Association, Women's Christian Temperance Union, Society for Prevention of Cruelty, League of the Cross, Nova Scotia Temperance Alliance, Grand Division Sons of Temperance, International Order of Good Templars, Young Women's Christian Association. Owing to the increasing activities of rum runners in the Maritime provinces, the general president and the general secretary of the council wrote to the Prime Minister on January 22, 1925, asking that conditions in that province be looked into They brought to the attention of the government the fact that Halifax was being used as a port of clearance for the export of contraband liquor from Canada. Liquor being cleared from the port of Halifax for foreign ports was apparently coming back into Nova Scotia, as I intend to prove before I get through. That letter was replied to by the Prime Minister's secretary on January 28 and on the 4th day of April the Prime Minister wrote to the Reverend Mr. Grant, the general secretary, to the effect that the matter was being attended to. What means were adopted I know not, but I do know that on August 18, 1925, the Reverend Mr. Grant inquired of the Prime Minister what had been done in the matter. On September 2 in the same year the Prime Minister replied that they had made inquiries as to the bona fides of the landing certificates and that some of them were in doubt. The correspondence practically ended there between the Prime Minister and the representative of the Social Service Council of Nova Scotia.

Now, hon. members may ask, why did the Rev. H R. Grant bring the question of liquor smuggling in the Maritime provinces to the attention of members of the government. It was because in 1923 thirty-six vessels were granted clearance from the port of Halifax and sixteen from the port of St. John for foreign ports, a total of 530,032 gallons of intoxicating liquor being so cleared. In 1924 ninety-six vessels cleared from Halifax and twenty-nine from St. John with a total of 1,913,796 gallons of intoxicating liquor. The Social Service Council of Nova Scotia, realizing in January, 1925, that this increase was abnormal and that something should be done to stem this enormous traffic in liquor from Canadian ports ostensibly to foreign ports, but which liquor really came back into the Dominion without paying excise or duty, took action. But nothing was done by the government. In 1925, 261 vessels left those ports with a total of 3,387,432 gallons of liquor. In three years, Mr. Speaker, no less than 5,831,260 gallons were cleared in bond from those two ports, ostensibly for foreign ports, but, as I intend to show, Sir, not a gallon of it left the shores of the Maritimes. And because it did not, at the rate of $9 a gallon excise on that liquor, the treasury lost $52,481,340.

I may be asked, how do I know that those vessels never reached a foreign port. I do not intend to weary the House by quoting at length the statements under my hand taken from the schedules published in No. 63 of the minutes of proceedings of the Customs inquiry. I shall take only a few examples illustrative of the facts that I have been giving the House. The schooner Dorin cleared from Halifax on September 17, 1925, destined to Lima, Peru, with 3,110 cases and 500 kegs of liquor. Lima, Peru, as is known to every hon. member, is on the west coast of South America, and I am safe in saying—and no marine man would contend otherwise—that no vessel can make the round trip in less than four months. But, lo! Sir, on September 21—four days later—she returned to Halifax and cleared again for Lima, Peru, with 4,110 cases and 500 kegs of liquor for Havana.

Now I take the schooner Ena A. Moulton; she cleared from Halifax on October 5 for Nassau in the Bahamas, roughly speaking about 1,500 miles from Halifax with a cargo of 7,940 cases. I doubt if anyone would claim that she could make the trip in less than sixteen or eighteen days. But she was back in the port of Halifax on the 7th—two days later—and cleared the second time with a similar cargo for the same destination. Five days later, on the 12th, she cleared again for Nassau with 2,400 cases of liquor. She made her fourth clearance on the 16th, within four days, for Havana, with 1,401 cases of liquor. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and I ask this House, with that information before the department and the government, contained in a letter dated January 22, 1925, from the Social Service Council of Nova Scotia to the Prime Minister, why were not steps taken to stop this camouflage of shipping liquors in bond from Halifax and St. John ostensibly to foreign ports but really to be landed on the shores of the Maritime provinces. The schooner Ellice B., whose port of registry is Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, cleared from Halifax on September 5, 1925, with 11,665 cases of liquor for Nassau She was back in Halifax on September 16 and cleared again with 12,265 cases of liquor for Nassau. Then on October 9 she cleared again with 10,465 cases for Havana. In six days she was back for an additional cargo of 6,965 cases for Havana, and on October 22 she was back again and cleared for Havana with 7,643 cases.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Was excise paid on that?

Mr. DOUCET: No excise, customs duty or sales tax was paid on any of those cargoes. I need not weary the House any more in that connection, Sir.

Mr. ARTHURS: Read them all.

Mr. DOUCET: I might quote the Maria A. Howes, which cleared from Halifax on October 5, 1925, with 17,300 cases of liquor for Lima, Peru. She was back two days later and cleared again with 17,000 cases for the same destination. Then the schooner Catherine M. Moulton cleared from Halifax for Havana on August 11, 1925, with 6,607 cases and 4 kegs of liquor. Four days later she cleared again for the same destination with 6,507 cases and 104 kegs. Not even an airoplane could make the trip from Halifax to Havana and be back in four days. That must have been known to the Customs officers.

Now I come to the schooner Morso, with registry at Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, which left Halifax for St. Pierre, Miquelon on August 13 with 2,652 cases and 185 kegs of liquor. In two days she cleared Halifax again; she must have made the round trip of 1,000 miles in 48 hours, allowing no time for unloading and loading. Then she cleared for Guanaija with 300 kegs of liquor in addition to her first shipment. Where did she get the liquor? Through the 260 odd vessels which cleared Halifax and St. John in 1925 you have the whole story.

Before I leave the question of liquor smuggling in Nova Scotia and the Maritime provinces generally I wish to say that there is conclusive evidence on file that these vessels never reached Nassau, Havana, the Azores, Lima, Peru, Porto Coles, Venezuela or Nicaragua, to which places they cleared. They inevitably found sale for their goods on the shores of the Maritimes or in "rum row" off the United States coast. I want to emphasize the point, Mr. Speaker, that no excise, customs or sales tax was paid on over 5,750,000 gallons of liquor shipped in the course of three years from these two Canadian ports and there are, at least, seven other ports in Canada where this is practised.

I asked a moment ago why the present Minister of Customs assumed all the responsibility in connection with the administration of customs laws; there is such a thing as adopting an heroic attitude at an uncalled for time. Members of the government were aware of the fact that smuggling of liquor had been going on. Members of this House will remember that in the spring of 1925 there was a coal strike in Cape Breton, and that in response to a plea for help the militia were sent to Glace Bay. In June, 1925, a seizure of liquor was made in the quarters of the Royal Canadian Dragoons at Glace Bay. That liquor was transported there in two motor cars from the motor boat Kiora, which boat had landed the liquor from a vessel outside the three mile limit. The House may ask if a prosecution was made then, and my answer is no. Why? Because the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) intervened and said, "You cannot prosecute these men."

Mr. EVANTUREL: What about August of that year?

Mr. DOUCET: If my hon. friend has anything to say about August of that year he can say it.

Mr. EVANTUREL: I am asking you.

Mr. DOUCET: I expect the hon. member to ask a sensible question. This liquor was unloaded from the vessel operating in "rum row"; landed by one of the fastest motor boats in that district and transported to the barracks, and neither the owners of the motor boat, the motor cars or the officers connected with the landing of that liquor were prosecuted, because a minister of the crown, a member of this present government, intervened and prevented prosecution.

I come now, Mr. Speaker, to a motor boat known as the Cozy, of 10 tons, not registered. She left St. Pierre, Miquelon, on July 22, 1925, with 250 cases of whiskey; she arrived at Main-a-dieu, Cape Breton, on the morning of the 25th with nothing on board. There was no report inward and no report outward; she remained in Main-a-dieu until July 30, and was seized in Halifax on August 5, the date to which my hon. friend was referring. She was seized for having unloaded liquor on the shores of Cape Breton without making a report inward or outward. One of the friends of the government in Halifax wired the department and the present Minister of Customs released the boat, or authorized a refund of the fine which had been paid on August 28th, and the fine was thereupon returned.

Now I come to the schooner Rising Sun, which left Canso on September 23, 1925, with a clearance for Nassau. I hope hon. members know the direction which would be taken in going from Canso to Nassau, but this schooner was in Charlottetown on September 26 and cleared again from Charlottetown for Nasau with 770 cases of liquor. She was hovering around the shores of the Northumberland strait, making no report to the customs and arrived at the out port of Canso on October 1 in ballast, empty. This schooner was seized and one of the sailors made an affidavit confirming every suspicion of the officers in that territory, but would you be surprised to learn that while the officers of the preventive service were making a close scrutiny of the district to get additional evidence the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) wired the department to release the vessel, and she was released before the officers of the department working on the ground had a chance to report to their chief.

Now, Mr. Speaker, during the whole of the inquiry when we discussed this question of ocean going vessels the question of territorial waters was always to the fore. That was brought about because for at least thirty-five years to the knowledge of the officers of the department who testified at that inquiry, what is known as the strait of Northumberland, the Baie des Chaleurs, and the gulf of St. Lawrence, inside of Cabot strait, were known to be Canadian waters and recognized as such, and every seizure made inside Cabot strait was recognized by the department who were sustained in that position by the courts in every case of appeal. In the month of June, 1923, we find that the schooner W. C. Kennedy, owned by the W. C. Kennedy Company of Lunenburg—which by the way was not known by the postmaster of Lunenburg when a registered letter was sent there by the department after the seizure, but whose secretary, apparently, is one Mr. Adams, who is also secretary for the Lunenburg Outfitting Company—left St. Pierre et Miquelon with 994 cases of liquor. She reached Halifax and remained there ten days waiting for orders. She cleared from Halifax on June 18, 1923, and took a clearance for Nassau in the Bahamas. She was next reported in the strait of Northumberland, seven miles off Pictou island, on June 26. That, as hon. gentlemen know, is in the opposite direction to the course for Nassau. The vessel was seized by the customs cruiser Margaret, and before the master had a chance to communicate with his fellows on shore, he replied to questions by Captain Alfred Lacouvee, of the Margaret. He stated it was true that he had a clearance for Nassau, but he had been told by the supercargo to lie off Pictou and there take orders from the supercargo who had gone by land to make the necessary arrangements for the landing of the cargo. He further testified that when the seizure took place he had only 806 cases of liquor on board. He said that after leaving Halifax he had unloaded 188 cases of liquor in open motorboats outside of the three-mile limit on the Dartmouth shore. The schooner was seized, the cargo transferred to the steamer Margaret, and taken to Quebec. But, Sir, the hon member for the constitutency of Lunenburg, (Mr. Duff), realized that there was a possibility that by invoking the territorial water question he might have his schooner released.

An hon. MEMBER: His schooner.

Mr. DOUCET: I said "his schooner," because if you look at Lloyd's register you will see that the W. C. Kennedy was registered in the hon. gentleman's name. Furthermore the captain of the vessel said that he was hired and his wages were paid by the hon member; but he had to take orders from the supercargo. Now the cargo was valued at $35,000 and the vessel at $20,000, and it was in the hands of the customs officers. The question may be asked now: What steps were taken to secure that seizure in the interests of the department? The answer is no steps whatsoever. The master of the schooner made three different affidavits to suit the needs of the occasion. These three affidavits, varying with each other in quite a degree, are to be found on the file. Counsel for the owners of the cargo and the schooner made a claim that the strait of Northumberland were not territorial waters, consequently the department would not hold the seizure and did not think of getting the opinion of the Department of Justice. Furthermore although the Department of Marine and Fisheries maintained that under the treaties that had been entered into those waters were considered as Canadian waters, they submitted to the claim advanced by counsel for the defendant without asking for an opinion from the Department of Justice. They ignored the affidavit made by the master of the ship before he had been in touch with his fellows on shore; they ignored the report made by the captain of their own cruiser; they released the vessel on the payment of $400; they returned the cargo of liquor which had been sent to Quebec back to Halifax to be loaded on another rum-running schooner going out of Halifax; and they refunded the sum of $400 which had been made as a deposit in the first instance. I understand the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is to speak in this debate, and I want him to answer this question for the benefit of myself and my constituents: if the waters of the strait of Northumberland are considered territorial waters for the purpose of deep sea fishing, how can they be anything else but Canadian waters for the purpose of preventing the smuggling of goods into Canada? The men whom I represent in this House claim, and rightly so, that if the waters of the strait of Northumberland, outside of the three-mile limit, are to be considered as international waters for the rum-running schooners of the Lunenburg crowd they can also be considered international waters in the interests of the lobster fishermen.

Now I come to the motorboat Jeanne d'Arc. This was an open boat 40 feet long and unregistered. She left St. Pierre et Miquelon and took a clearance for Nassau in the Bahamas, a distance of at least 2,000 miles, in the fall of 1923. On September 19 she was seized within three miles of the shores of Prince Edward Island. Her cargo of contraband liquors was transferred to the schooner Margaret, taken to the port of Quebec, and placed in the custom house there. On December 17, 1923, a telegram was sent by the department to put the Jeanne d'Arc in winter quarters. A copy of that telegram is on the file. On December 19 an additional telegram was sent arranging for a release and not to proceed with the order of placing the vessel in winter quarters. There is absolutely nothing on the files to show why the department changed its mind between December 17 and December 19. There is a memorandum on the file stating that a letter from the Hon. A. B. Copp for the Minister of Customs and Excise was attached, but that letter is not to be found on the file. At that time there was a by-election on in the county of Kent, the boat being owned in Buctouche. The owners of that boat, who ordinarily are very active partisans, refrained from taking part in the election. There were two members of the government in that county and a gentleman who became a minister of the crown later on. Shortly after these men had made a pilgrimage throughout the country, the owners of the boat Jeanne d'Arc became enthusiastic supporters of the government, and the question is how could they change their minds overnight? The telegram of the 19th December shows the reason why. The vessel and the cargo being released, some excuse must be found. What excuse did they invoke to release the vessel three miles from the shore? They asked the captain of the cruiser a question, and they found the vessel was 5,770 yards from shore. If they had used a nautical mile in their calculations, it would have meant more than 6,000 yards. But someone acquainted with mathematical problems in the department used the land mile and they found that 5,770 yards would be sufficient to get her outside the three land mile limit. Just as though you would proceed to measure molasses by a yardstick instead of measuring by the gallon measure, they used the land mile instead of the nautical mile; on that basis they found she was outside the three-mile limit, and they released the vessel. The question now is, how is it that they do not enforce the customs laws of this country?

I believe I have discussed at sufficient length the activities of the liquor fleet of Nova Scotia and the Maritime provinces, aided by the government in every respect. They granted clearances for the foreign ports when they knew the boat would never reach there. They granted a clearance to a port in South America where the trip would take about four months, but the boat was back in forty-eight hours and the liquor was landed on Canadian shores by motor boats. The ministers of the crown intervened and no prosecution resulted. The people of the Social Service Council of Canada asked the Prime Minister and the government to provide swift running motor boats for the purpose of watching the bays and inlets of Nova Scotia, and when the boat called the Rambler was seized in the fall of 1924, the speediest motor boat to be found on that shore, the preventive service wanted to get it for its own service. But because one rum-runner of Sydney wanted the boat for his own purposes in rum-running, and because his request was supported by the chief Liberal whip at that time, Mr. Kyte, representing Richmond, Cape Breton, the minister, in the month of January, 1926, said, "We can not handle the Rambler; sell it at once to the man in Sydney; make a sale without any loss of time."

The hon. member for Vancouver North this afternoon cited a number of cases. He failed to cite or forgot to cite the case of the famous Denise Larde case in which a seizure took place in the port of Quebec, but the goods were subsequently released without penalty, by the Department on a payment of $1,500, when the duty and sales tax amounted to $2,567.29. Why my hon. friend never referred to it, I know not. Is it because the man who was instrumental in bringing this revenue into the treasury was subsequently dismissed? And was it because he had arrested this party that an order issued from Ottawa a few days later that no arrests were to be made before reporting the cases to Ottawa?

I ask you, Sir, how can smuggling be prevented in this Dominion? When you find a notorious smuggler you cannot hold him, you cannot arrest him, you cannot stop him from going on his way until such time as you telephone to Ottawa or send a letter and wait three days for a reply. The facts brought out in the inquiry have shown conclusively to the public that there has been a lack of supervision in safeguarding the interests of this Dominion and the public treasury. The fact that all this violation of the law was known to every member of the cabinet, that this was going on aided and abetted and helped in some instances by members of the government, is shown conclusively by the evidence given in that inquiry. When appeals were made by responsible and even by distinguished persons of this Dominion asking for relief, the appeals fell on deaf ears. The Social Service Council of Nova Scotia asked the Department of Customs, and on the 22nd January, 1925, asked the Prime Minister of this Dominion, to remedy the situation which had such a demoralizing effect on that section of the country, which was ruining the population, and was making it impossible to enforce the prohibition laws of the provinces in question, with the result that the public revenues were being cheated out of millions of dollars annually. That, Sir, was eighteen months ago, and were it not for the inquiry proposed as a result of the charges made in this house by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) on the 2nd of February last, no steps would yet have been taken by the department to clean up this state of affairs.

In the month of September a distinguished member of the clergy of the diocese of Gaspé wrote to the Minister of Justice complaining of the illegal importation of liquor into that section of the province. The minister referred that letter to the Acting Minister of Customs and Excise, but with what effect I do not know because the same conditions continued.

I have throughout this debate endeavoured not to resort to cases such as those referred to by the hon. member for Vancouver North He would refuse to vote to bring names up in this House and then he would refer to those names after refusing to vote for the motion. He violated a gentleman's agreement with members of the committee not to expose certain information mentioned in the Duncan report. In the evidence and exhibits certain matters were referred to which had nothing to do with the customs and members of the committee decided, and I believe wisely and well, not to make them public. The hon. member, however, violated a gentleman's agreement in bringing that matter before the House and challenging the hon. member for Vancouver Centre to say why the Hon. Jacques Bureau had not been brought before the inquiry. Did I wish to resort to citing case after case, I could do so I submit to the intelligence of members of the House that the case of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Boys) is on a par with that of the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain), chief whip of the Liberal party, who appeared before the department on behalf of the owner of the barge Tremblay.

Mr. EVANTUREL: Would the hon. gentleman repeat that statement? I did not catch it?

Mr. DOUCET: The hon. member appeared before the department in defence of his client. He wanted a minimum fine imposed upon the owner of the barge Tremblay. He appeared not as a member of parliament, I believe, but as a professional man. and in the same way as a lawyer the hon. member for North Simcoe also appeared before the department to have his client's case settled. No favours were granted to the hon. member for North Simcoe because his client paid double duty and sales tax, and he stated he did. But if you read the evidence you will find that the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay received consideration, because the man who was guilty of violating the customs laws of the Dominion, whose vessel valued at that time at $20,000 had been seized by the authorities, who was making $5,000 by transporting contraband goods from St. Pocras in the lower St. Lawrence to Montreal, paid the sum of $1,700 and placed $3,300 clear money in his pocket on the one trip.

When responsible people of this Dominion, when members of the Social Service Council of Nova Scotia, representing every church and fraternal organization of that province, when prominent clergymen of the lower St. Lawrence appeal to this government for redress against that army of liquor smugglers who are invading our shores, demoralizing our population, and striking consternation into the hearts of the people, I believe there is sufficient political honour and decency on the part of members of this parliament to rise and say: A stop must be put to this. Why, Sir, if this motion is lost on the division you will be penalizing the smaller fry, the men getting the lower salaries, and the men higher up will go scot-free. The complaint that is being made throughout the country to-day that the man higher up, holding a title of some kind or away up in society, can do anything he likes and get off scot-free while the man who steals a loaf of bread goes to jail, will be true. If those who were debauched, if those who failed in their duty because the department was wrongly administered with the knowledge and connivance of ministers of this government are to be penalized to the extent of losing their positions and their pension money, I say that this government deserves the condemnation of this House because, with the knowledge of the facts in their possession, they should have months ago, aye, years ago, taken precautionary measures so that these things could not happen in this fair land of ours.

Mr. J. J. DENIS (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, since this debate has originated, we have heard a number of speeches delivered that are really political speeches. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Doucet) has delivered a political speech and I do not intend to follow him along that line. The times are momentous enough, the people of this country are eager enough in the administration of public affairs to warrant hon. members in pausing for one moment, forgetting political speeches, and addressing themselves to the reason, intelligence and integrity of their fellow-members as well as to the country at large.

The question now before parliament is not one of small importance; it is a most important issue because without doubt on the decision that will be rendered on the issue now before parliament serious consequences must arise. May I be permitted in opening my remarks to examine the amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens)? His amendment is in part at least in direct contradiction of the speech which he made in this House yesterday. Speaking on June 22, at page 4819 of Hansard, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) said:

> With the report I am in accord, with one reservation, namely, the failure of the committee to report a finding on the evidence referring to the conduct of the ministry,

This amendment goes very much further, containing as it does reproaches which are not voiced in the speech itself of the hon. gentleman. For the sake of brevity I shall refrain from analyzing these reproaches and shall confine myself instead to the general issue and try to demonstrate to the House that the case at present before parliament is not that which hon. gentlemen opposite have seen fit to argue. There are two aspects to this case, the political and the administrative, and hon. gentlemen opposite have devoted their entire attention to the former. Hardly any practical suggestions have they vouchsafed from the administrative standpoint. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is too important an issue to be made a political football on either side of the House. In the course of my few remarks to-night I shall endeavour as best I can to show that if abuses have occurred the responsibility rests not with the present Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin), nor with the minister who acted in the department, nor even with the ex-minister. Rather the trouble lies with the very system itself and the conditions which have grown up of late years under that system.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have been arguing for hours to establish the fact that smuggling has been going on in Canada on a large scale. To this no one takes exception; we all know perfectly well that of late years there has been a good deal of smuggling in this country. But I submit that in all countries where there is a tariff smuggling follows as a natural consequence. In the United States, during the past few years particularly, millions and tens of millions of dollars have been spent to prevent smuggling and in spite of these precautions enormous quantities of liquor have been smuggled into that country. In Canada also there has always been smuggling to a large extent. True, smuggling during the last few years may have increased, but I respectfully suggest that if it has increased the fault is not with any minister of customs either past or present. As we all know, in 1917—I think it was in that year—the government of the United States by the eighteenth amendment brought prohibition into force, and this law has been in existence in that country since that time. And ever since that amendment to the constitution of the United States that country has expended tens of millions of dollars to prevent liquor coming within its borders. Yet liquor has gone there in enormous quantities. Is not this enough to prove that it is by no means an easy task to prevent smuggling? Does it not show that not only has smuggling occurred in the past, as it is occuring to-day, but that it will prevail in the future as well? It is true that it is the duty of the minister to do his best to prevent it; towards this end he must adopt the best possible means at his disposal. But let us examine, before we condemn him, just what means he has at his disposal.

The report declares that there has been degeneracy in efficiency. That seems to be true, but if there is degeneracy in efficiency does the responsibility rest with the minister or with the system? I submit that it is a consequence of new conditions which have arisen since 1918. I go further: I say that whether the minister be active or inactive, efficient or inefficient, such action as he may take does not amount to more than 5 per cent of the whole force that should be brought to bear upon the operations of smugglers. Now, what are the conditions? Until 1918, as we know, we had in Canada a Civil Service Act in relation to what is known as the inside service, and that service alone. In other words, the Civil Service Commission could appoint civil servants in the city of Ottawa, but outside of that, in Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver, and in all ports where customs revenues are collected, the Minister of Customs had the right and the duty to select his employees in the various offices. If, therefore, the employees were inefficient the fault was the minister's; he having chosen them, he alone was responsible. By the Civil Service Act of 1918, however, this condition was changed. Now it is not my purpose at the moment to discuss the merits or the demerits of the Civil Service Act; I do not propose to argue the question whether that act ought or ought not to have been passed. The merits of the act, generally speaking, I leave aside. I contend, however, that mistakes so flagrant might never have been made had the appointment of detectives been left outside the scope of the Civil Service Commission. The Customs department comprises two distinct branches, one of administration and the other the preventive service. But even in the administrative branch officials may be dishonest; even in that branch they may be bought. So that if dishonest officials are bought, the minister cannot be held responsible inasmuch as they are not his appointees. They are the appointees of the Civil Service Commission.

Now, Sir, think of it, an institution that collects something like two or three hundred million dollars a year whose minister has not the privilege of appointing its employees. The most important of our chartered banks is the Bank of Montreal. What would you think, Sir, if to-morrow the president should be told that henceforth all the employees of the institution would be chosen by a board independent of his board of directors—the Civil Service Commission? Do you think for one moment that the bank could carry on satisfactorily under such circumstances?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is it not a fact that even in a corporation like the Bank of Montreal only certain of its officials have the right to choose the employees, as in this case the Civil Service Commission has the right to choose employees for the government? Is there very much differnce?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): In the case of the Bank of Montreal the high officials—the president, the board of directors and the managers—choose the employees, and those high officials are directly responsible to the shareholders. In a word, they are part of the organization of the bank. But in this case the Civil Service Commission is not a part of the government, it is not a part of any department in the government, but is altogether independent of it.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Surely my hon. friend would not state that the Civil Service Commission is not a part of the government? It was created by the government for that specific purpose.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): The Civil Service Commission is not a part of the government inasmuch as it is absolutely independent of the government; while the directors of the Bank of Montreal are under the direct control of the shareholders and can be replaced by the shareholders at the annual general meeting. The directors of the bank are directly responsible to its shareholders; the Civil Service Commission is responsible to no one. What I have said of the Bank of Montreal will apply as well to the Canadian Pacific railway. Surely anyone who would propose to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that their employees should be chosen by a commission would be treated with contempt. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company's employees are responsible to their superiors, and those superiors in turn are responsible to the board of directors, which in turn is responsible to the shareholders; in short, it is one organization.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Might I ask the hon. gentleman if in this case the employees of the government service are not responsible to the government? The minister of each department has the right to dispense with any employees whose services are not satisfactory.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I do not agree with my hon. friend. Technically the minister has the right, but in practice he cannot dispense with the services of any employee without cause or without reason.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Why should he desire to dispense with the services of any employee without cause or without reason?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): My hon. friend's objection only makes my case so much stronger. This is my answer to him. During the course of the inquiry of the Customs committee, extending over four or five months, certain officials have been found delinquent in the discharge of their duty and it is recommended that their services be dispensed with. Now I ask my hon. friend, does he not think in view of the wholesale smuggling that has been going on for several yeears that there are not many other officials equally blameworthy, but whose delinquencies could not be brought home to them by the committee within the time at their disposal? Undoubtedly—and unfortunately—there are. If it took four months for the committee to discover six delinquent officers, how can the minister, without continuing the investigation, bring to book those other guilty men? It is impossible. Very seldom indeed are departmental officials found guilty of wrongdoing, and it is only when this is amply proved that the minister dispenses with their services. The minister is not independent of his officials, and as long as that unsatisfactory condition continues you cannot expect his department to be thoroughly efficient. I go further; not only so, but you cannot hold him responsible for that inefficiency without doing him grave injustice. This is only by way of illustration in matters of administration.

But more is involved in this case. The preventive service is also under the control of the Civil Service Commission. It is recommended in the report that the preventive service should be reorganized and 10 p.m. strengthened, that in reality it should become a detective agency. Now, imagine a detective agency having to go to an independent body—the Civil Service Commission—for its men. Think of the Pinkerton detective agency, the Field detective agency, Scotland Yard or La Sureté, having to resort to an independent body to provide them with detectives. Could anything be more ridiculous?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Was that part of the service appointed directly by the minister under the patronage system as efficient as that appointed by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): We can only judge of the efficacy of any measure from the results obtained, and we know that since the system was changed in 1918 the department has been steadily degenerating.

An hon. MEMBER: Who is responsible?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): It is all very well to blame the minister. The minister may have had something to do with it—I will come to that in a moment—but I contend that one of the main reasons why this service has been degenerating is that we declared in the Civil Service Act that an organization of detectives must go to a foreign body for their recruits. That is absolutely impracticable and, I submit, absurd. Therefore the first reason why there has been degeneration and inefficiency is the fact that these men are chosen by the Civil Service Commission; they are independent of the minister and he cannot control them. Had the minister control of these men I would say he was responsible for them, but when he has no control he cannot have responsibility.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Will the hon. gentleman allow a question?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): With pleasure.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Is it not a fact that any of these officials may be dismissed without consulting the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): Yes. The minister can dismiss but he cannot appoint, so what is the use of dismissing a man if you cannot appoint another whom you choose in his place?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Every time he gets an inefficient official he can be dismissed.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): Yes, he has the right to dismiss him but it is well known that the civil service is pretty well filled up in some quarters with inefficient men. I am not attacking anyone when I say this; we know that they remain where they are because the ministers dare not dismiss them. They are in the service to stay and they stay.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Allow me another question. Is it not a fact, as was stated by the hon. member who spoke just before the hon. gentleman who now has the floor, that the officers found most inefficient in this investigation were those who had been appointed not by the Civil Service Commission but by the department?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): No official has been appointed by the department. Who was so appointed; was it Bisaillon? Bisaillon was appointed by the Civil Service Commission like the rest. I would like my hon. friend to name one official who was appointed by the department. I do not say this for the sake of discussion, but we must be plain about these things. Not one official in that department is appointed other than by the Civil Service Commission, and not one promotion can be made except through the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Then I ask the hon. member whether or not the statement is true that the most inefficient officials were those appointed before the Civil Service Commission had control of the outside service?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): Does my hon. friend mean before 1918, when the Civil Service Act was passed?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): That is a very broad statement, and I do not know that the inquiry has proven that; I do not think the report says anything in that regard. It is a very broad statement to say that officials appointed before 1918 are less efficient than those who have been appointed since. I would not undertake to give an opinion in that regard, and I think the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Doucet) went a little too far and assumed a little too much when he made that statement.

Conditions have changed, secondly, due to the fact that the United States adopted prohibition in 1918. Can anyone ignore the fact that the adoption of prohibition by the United States, with a boundary line over 3,000 miles in length between the two countries, had the effect of rendering very much more difficult the administration of the Department of Customs. I think any reasonable man will admit that. The difficulties have been so great that the United States, after spending millions of dollars, have been unable to protect their own citizens against smugglers and bootleggers. Since the United States adopted prohibition there has been an incentive to the manufacturers of Canada and other countries to send their products to that country, particularly liquor and what is the result? Once you have an army of bootleggers in a country, in both the United States and Canada if you like, they will not stop at the smuggling of liquor. That fact has been well demonstrated in the course of this inquiry; smugglers or bootleggers take liquor from Canada to the United States and bring back other material from the United States to Canada, and it is only natural that they should do so. Once they are in the smuggling business they are in it for all it is worth; they smuggle from Canada into the United States, then turn around and smuggle from the United States into Canada. Therefore this amendment to the American constitution has had the effect of producing an army of smugglers which did not exist before. There were, of course, some smugglers previously, but their number was greatly increased by this amendment. I ask any reasonable gentleman if it is not true that these conditions have rendered the administration of this department very much more difficult.

We have also a difference in the tariffs of the two countries; on many articles the tariff in Canada is higher than the tariff in the United States, whether it be customs or excise. Let us consider cigarettes; the duty on cigarettes is still considerably higher in Canada than in the United States, and therein lies an incentive to the smugglers to bring cigarettes from the United States to Canada. The same could be said of silks, and of a great many other articles. So, Mr. Speaker, with these new conditions the law became insufficient and inadequate, but these things cannot be discovered in a day. As the army of smugglers increased in size month by month and year by year it came out that more goods were smuggled this year than were smuggled last year, and probably more goods were smuggled last year than in the year previous, but that is a condition absolutely outside the control of the minister or of the government.

I have said that the law has come to be insufficient and inadequate. It was amended last year, and what do we see? I will take no other authority than that of the Commercial Protective Association, which has been mentioned so frequently in the course of this debate. This association published a pamphlet which was distributed to members of parliament, entitled, "Recommendations Made to Special Committee of the House of Commons Investigating the Administration of the Department of Customs and Excise." In this booklet these gentlemen recommend that the law should be amended in twenty-one sections; in some cases the existing law is to be amended and in other cases new sections are to be added in order to render the law efficient. One might say that that is the duty of the government. Perhaps it is the duty of the government; perhaps it is the duty of the minister, but I repeat that these conditions cannot be coped with in a month or even in a year. It takes longer than that when fundamental conditions change, and I submit that in this case fundamental conditions have changed. Then it takes a long time to remedy them. The government had already begun to apply remedies. They caused the law to be amended last year and had it not been for this inquiry, doubtless other amendments would have been made this year. The government were considering the matter, and the Minister of Customs and Excise had declared his intention to make the law as effective as possible.

Then there is the organization of the department to be considered. The fact that conditions have changed since 1918 necessitates a reorganization of the department. If the present organization is defective the Liberal party is no more responsible for it than is the Conservative party because that organization has been in effect for a great many years. The report of the committee deals with that matter; practically half the report is taken up with recommendations for the reorganization of the department. What do we find in that report? We find some facts of a very startling nature. For instance it is said that in Canada, with a population of 9,000,000 there are 681 ports of entry; that in the United States with a population of 115,000,000 there are 270 ports of entry; and that in Great Britain, with a population of 45,000,000 there are only 80 ports of entry. Now, Sir, it appears perfectly ridiculous to the layman that in this country, with less than one-tenth the population of the United States, we should have almost three times as many ports of entry as they have. Is it surprising that there are abuses, or that there is smuggling? It is not surprising, but again I say why place the responsibility on the shoulders of the Liberal party or on the shoulders of the present Minister of Customs and Excise when these conditions have been in existence for a great many years? The conditions prevailed from 1911 till 1921 when the Conservative party was in power. But they were not accompanied by the same abuses. Why? Because at that time the constitution of the United States had not been changed by the eighteenth amendment; Because at that time we had not the same difference in out ports as between Canada and the United States that we now have; because at that time the existing law was adequate to cope with the prevailing situation; in short the conditions were very different from what they are now. Therefore, if there has been so much smuggling into Canada it is not because of any shortcomings on the part of the minister but because of the conditions I have referred to. It is quite true that the minister is identified with the administration, but when he is tied up by the Civil Service Act he cannot do very much. It is not fair to give the minister a staff that he does not choose himself and say to him, "You will be responsible for that staff." Of course the minister has the power of dismissal, but what minister is going to exercise that power in the case of any official unless it is proved that he has been guilty of dishonesty? And we all know how difficult it is to find an official guilty of dishonesty in the Department of Customs. It is easy for a group of officials to conspire together to defraud the revenue and conspiracy is always difficult to discover. That is the reason why there has been so much smuggling in Canada.

I do not want to throw any undue aspersions on the officials of the department, but no reasonable man can think for one moment that the half dozen delinquents brought to the attention of the House represent anything like the actual number of delinquents that are in the department. The temptation to wander from the path of rectitude is great. When an official can make double, treble or even four times the amount of his salary by dishonest methods, the temptation is very powerful. It is all the more potent when the official is independent of the minister and knows that his job is safe as long as he is not found guilty of dishonesty. We talk of the efficiency or inefficiency of public servants. It is a very difficult question to determine in the case of the civil service. In the case of this department they are placed in certain positions to receive and examine goods, to value them, to collect duties and so on. If dishonesty exists among them it is very difficult to detect; and until the minister has made that discovery he cannot dispense with their services. In theory he can do so, but in practice it is a different matter.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Take the case of the Bank of Montreal. Surely that institution can dismiss an official when found to be dishonest. Is there any difference in the two cases?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): The Bank of Montreal can appoint their employees on their own volition, without consulting anyone, and can dismiss them without cause. The manager can tell any of his clerks tomorrow, "Your services are dispensed with" and he is not required to give any explanation to them. He has complete freedom of action, and the employees know it. When an employee has been discharged from the bank the manager can replace him by whomever he likes, and should the new appointee be inefficient or dishonest, the manager himself is responsible. A member of the government cannot do that.

I have no brief for Hon. Jacques Bureau, but it is a little strange to hear hon. gentlemen opposite attacking him so strongly when, to my knowledge, year after year they allowed Mr. Bureau's estimates to pass with the greatest leniency and the greatest facility. I do not contend that the responsibility of checking up the estimates of the Minister of Customs and Excise is confined to one side; both sides must share the responsibility. But it is the duty most particularly of the opposition, and if the conditions complained of in this case have existed for several years past, how is it that not more than a year ago the Hon. Jacques Bureau was able to get his estimates through without any reproach on the part of the opposition? Was it or was it not known then that there was something wrong with the Department of Customs? If it was known to hon. gentlemen opposite that there was something wrong, why did they allow the estimates of the department to pass practically without any opposition? If they did not know of the existence of wrongdoing they should have known it. It is the duty of the opposition to check up the doings of the department and if they did not do so then, speaking technically, they failed in their duty. We all know that Hon. Jacques Bureau was very popular with members of the House, most particularly with hon. gentlemen opposite. They were satisfied with it, and the thing was going on for years. The opposition never saw it, never knew it and never objected; but all of a sudden they discovered it. They say that this procedure was going on for years under Jacques Bureau. It is very strange they have only discovered it now.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Does the hon. member say that any of the estimates of Mr. Bureau were cooked, fraudulent, or unjust?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): No, that is not the point at all. But if there was something wrong in the Department of Customs there were many opportunities for hon. members to bring it to the attention of the House, and one of the most favourable opportunities would be when Mr. Bureau was presenting his estimates. But the opposition never did call attention to it.

I come now more directly to the case of the Hon. George H. Boivin, Minister of Customs. I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, the House might be doing a very great injustice and one that would be long remembered if we condemned the hon. Minister of Customs for his actions in the now famous Moses Aziz case. I have tried to examine the circumstances of this case from an unbiased point of view. I will not repeat the evidence, because it has been explained so well by the minister himself and by the member who spoke at length this afternoon, who was a member of the committee. But there are outstanding facts in this case which no man can deny, which should appeal to the reason and justice of hon. members. One outstanding fact is that Mr. Boivin has been guilty of no misdemeanour, of no breach of the law whatever directly or indirectly, and of no act of dishonesty. The law permitted him under certain conditions to exercise his discretion; he did exercise it, and in doing so he did not remit anything and he did not forget anything. He simply left one matter suspended for a time. It is all very well to acclaim for purity of politics, but let us be just to ourselves. If the law permitted Mr. Boivin to use his discretion in certain matters, and if he did use that discretion, even though, in the opinion of a few or in the opinion of many, he might have used that discretion in an indiscreet manner, that would not constitute a crime for which the hon. member should be arraigned before this House.

The hon. member who spoke at length this afternoon said that in the province of Ontario, in the last year alone, 252 remissions had been granted in the case of contravention of the Ontario Temperance Act. I do not know that the figures are correct, but they have not so far been disproved. I do not know what is going on in that province, but I know that in the province of Quebec, where there is no temperance act but where there is a body known as the Quebec Liquor Commission, remissions are quite frequent, and I do not know that that commission was ever blamed for granting them. I have no objection to telling the House now that if Mr. Boivin is guilty, not of a remission, but of a suspension, I for one would be very much more guilty than he is, because on more than one occasion—and I have no shame in saying it—I got from the Quebec Liquor Commission, or, more directly, from the attorney general of the province of Quebec, remission of penalties for offences. When? When the attorney general thought, under the discretion that the law granted to him, it was right and proper that such remission should be granted. Remission has been given in the case of women, and in the case of men who were poor and had to support their families. These things are matters of public knowledge in the province of Quebec, and no one thought there was a scandal in them. I must confess that more than once I applied to the attorney general for remission in cases worthy of that remission, and more than once my application was granted. I did not get those remissions because I might have been a friend of the party concerned. Remissions have been given in deserving cases irrespective of politics.

This is not a political issue. But in this case, because the minister suspended the sentence upon information furnished to him, no matter whether the information is right or wrong, we are asked to raise our hands in holy horror and have the hon. member disqualified and censured by the House. We all know that if he is censured his position as minister of the crown will become very critical. It is suggested that we should disqualify the hon. gentleman because he has exercised the discretion which the law allowed him to exercise. Whether this exercise of discretion is right or wrong does not matter; he has the right to exercise it. He did it to the best of his ability and did it honestly, and should not be blamed for it.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I think that is a plain misstatement of the case. It is not a question of discretion or a question of the scope of the minister's authority; it is a question of interference with the course of justice after judgment has been pronounced.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): My hon. friend is entirely wrong. It is not that at all. After judgment was pronounced Moses Aziz might have been sent to jail on commitment, and the commitment must be issued under the order of the minister.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the hon. member read the minister's evidence on oath, stating that that is absolutely untrue, that he had no authority to interfere at all?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): Yes, I read it very carefully. He might have made a mistake. I am speaking seriously to the right hon. leader of the opposition. The minister gave his evidence under oath. He said, "To the best of my knowledge it might be true that I had no authority at all to do it."

Mr. MEIGHEN: He did not say that at all.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): What did he say?

Mr. MEIGHEN: He said that he knew all the time he had no authority.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I will not quibble as to that, but I do not think he said it in that way.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He said it three or four times.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I read his evidence casually and I am not ready to repeat from memory what he said. At all events that does not change the law, the conditions. What he said or what he did not say does not change the conditions which are these, that the minister consented—whether he had the right to do it or not does not matter—that action should be suspended in that case until he should receive more information or meet the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud). I fail to find a crime in that, as I have just stated. It might be reprehensible in a very light degree, but even that I do not admit, because the law permitted the minister to act within his discretion and he so acted.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. member contend that after judgment is given and sentence rendered, the minister still has a discretion?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I understand it in that way.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where does the hon. member get that?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I understand it in that way.

Mr. MEIGHEN: From what?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): In the Customs Act.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the hon. member will produce that I will apologize to the minister.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I am not ready to quote the section offhand. That is my understanding of it. If I am wrong, I am wrong. I have not the act before me and I cannot refer to it now. I do not admit that I am wrong. My right hon. friend says "yes" and I say "no," so that we have to stand pat on that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member says that there is something in the customs law. I say there is not. If there is, he can produce it. If there is not, I cannot produce it.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I know exactly what the right hon. member means. He says: Bring out the act and show me the section. This I am not ready to do now. I have not the act before me, and further I will not take the time of the House now to go through the act.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is wise.

Mr. BURY: Has the hon. member seen such a provision in the act himself?

Mr. RYCKMAN: Has he seen anybody who has seen it?

Mr. BURY: Unless the hon. member has seen that and knows for himself it is a fact, he has no right to state it as a fact in this House.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I have a right to express an opinion just as the hon. member has. I have read the act and that is the construction I have given to it, as I have just said, rightly or wrongly. If I have given a wrong construction, so much the worse for me. But that is the construction I have given and that is the construction which many others have also given. I am not going now to plead the point of law between myself and my hon. friend. The time is too precious for that. But it is my impression and my opinion that under the statute he had the right to do what he did.

Mr. STEVENS: I know from long experience the member desires to be fair and I do not think he wishes to mislead the House. I will say to him, as the one who has perhaps atacked the minister's stand more strongly than others, that if he will produce the section in the Customs Act to which he refers, which authorizes the minister as a matter of his discretion, to intervene or to interfere with a sentence after it has been passed by the courts, I will apologize to the minister and I think I can say for others around me that they will do so also.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I think it is agreed that the minister can interfere before sentence is rendered. Does my hon. friend agree to that?

Mr. STEVENS: If the hon. member will permit me, we are speaking about what the minister can do in the way of interference after sentence has been pronounced.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): The minister was asking simply that the sentence be not now executed but that it be suspended until he should receive further information. That is what he did. The letter written by the Deputy Minister of Justice stated in part:

> All penalties and forfeitures imposed by this act, or by any other act relating to the customs or to trade or navigation shall, unless other provisions are made for the recovery thereof, be sued for, prosecuted and recovered with costs by His Majesty's Attorney General of Canada, or in the name or names of the Commissioner of Customs, or any officer or officers of the customs ,or other person or persons thereunto authorized by the Governor in Council either expressly or by general regulation or order, and by no other person.

I have just read the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice.

[Mr. Bury.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member will admit that that does not refer in any way whatever to authority after sentence.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): The minister has authority before sentence. That is admitted.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is not the question at all.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): Let us start from that point. He has authority before sentence. The sentence is rendered but it is not executed.

Mr. ARTHURS: Why not?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): It is not executed because it is not executed.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Because the minister interfered to prevent the execution.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): That is the state of procedure. The sentence is rendered but it is not executed. Why not? Because it is not executed. The minister says that this sentence be not now executed. Hon. members say: You are interfering in the execution of the sentence. I say that he is not interfering in the execution of the sentence because the sentence has not yet been executed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the sentence was executed, how could he interfere with the execution?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I should have said: If the sentence was under execution. If the sentence was under execution the Minister of Justice might interfere and the matter would be entirely out of the hands of the Minister of Customs. I did not think I was exposing myself to quibbles. At all events what I meant to say was this, that the sentence was not under execution or in the course of execution.

Mr. MANION: May be the hon. member means: If the prisoner was executed.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I will let my hon. friend go with that. Such is the charge against the Minister of Customs. My hon. friends opposite say that it is a charge which should disqualify him and for which he should be censured by the House. If hon. members would divest themselves for one instant of all political tendencies, all political affiliations, and consider this matter clearly and reasonably, I believe very few of them would come to the conclusion that for this particular action the Minister of Customs should be so judged. A man is not to be judged for a single action in his life. If that were so I know that a few members of this House would possibly regret some of their past actions. But I do not look at things in that way. It is human and only fair to judge a man by his conduct as a whole and not by any one particular act which, though regarded as reprehensible by some, may be considered in a different light by others. I would rather take the conduct of the Minister of Customs as a whole and judge him on the sum total of his achievements, his activities, and his talents. Let me remind hon. gentlemen that the reputation of a public man is precious, and before it is impugned we ought to weigh the circumstances very carefully. This country has need on both sides of politics of men of the class of the Hon. George H. Boivin. The Minister of Customs has shown in this House a character, an ability and an intelligence second to those of no other hon. member. He is a man of courage, a man of energy; and I believe that in the interests of Canada, in the interests of the department itself, he should remain Minister of Customs. If that department is to be saved no man is better able than he, with his youth, his courage, and his activity, to restore it to the position it should have held long ago.

It is the duty of members of parliament, representing the Canadian people, always to help and encourage and to promote the request of the people for our public men. The responsibilities of public life are not so easy. It is not so easy to spend months in the city of Ottawa, beautiful though it be, to the exclusion of one's personal affairs. And after the Minister of Customs has devoted his energies to the service of his country in work involving sacrifice, is he now to be cited before this House on mere piffle, a matter of insignificance? Are we to condemn him, forgetting the services he has rendered, simply because he is alleged to have done something which although represensible in the opinion of others is not so, in my opinion at any rate?

Numerous recommendations are made in the report, and what in my view is of prime importance is that the Minister of Customs, and he alone, should be responsible for the officials of his department. I am not asking that the Civil Service Act be done away with, but I do say that it should be amended to give the minister the opportunity of choosing his own personnel, so far at least as the preventive service is concerned. Indeed, I would include the officials of the department; I do not refer to ordinary clerks, but to all officials of responsibility. I would allow the minister to make his own appointments and if, then, these officials did not perform their duties satisfactorily, the minister would be responsible to parliament. The minister should also have the right to control his department and its employees. I would suggest that a permanent committee of the House be appointed in relation to customs affairs. We have a Public Accounts committee; why not have a committee on customs so that the department might from session to session be subject to investigation? If such a committee existed those who had charges to make against the department might lay them before that committee instead of waiting for years, as has happened in this case, before bringing up the matter. With the minister solely responsible for the personnel of his department, and with a free hand to manage the affairs of the department as he saw fit, if he failed to discharge his office efficiently, whoever the minister might be, then he should be censured by parliament. But only under such circumstances would the minister be fully responsible for the acts of his officials and be in consequence subject to such criticism as is proposed in this amendment.

Whatever the decision may be, I hope that hon. gentlemen will very seriously review the excellent work of the Minister of Customs before returning the verdict sought by the amendment.

Mr. W. T. LUCAS (Camrose): As we shall shortly be called upon to decide upon the question before the House, and as I shall be required to register what will be the most important vote in my whole parliamentary career, I feel it my duty to state my view of the situation. I want to make it clear at the outset that however I may vote, or whatever remarks I may make, on this occasion, I am moved by no spirit of personal antagonism to any member of the government. During the last four years and in the course of the present session, in any business I have had to transact with members of the cabinet, I have always been treated with the utmost courtesy and consideration. But I should be untrue to the trust reposed in me if I were to let personal friendships come between me and the duty which I feel I owe to the people whom I represent. I was born and brought up in the good old province of Ontario and one of the things I was taught from my youth was to look up to our parliamentary institutions, the highest representative bodies, of our country.

The question before the House to-night is one that transcends personalities or parties. It is a question that strikes at the very fundamentals of our public life. It is therefore incumbent upon every hon. member to subordinate party considerations to public duty and as a true Canadian to cut out this cancer which is gnawing at the heart of our body politic. I am not going to condemn in any way the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin). He is a man of outstanding ability, but in my opinion the greater his ability the greater his sin. But, Mr. Speaker, not only is one minister involved; censure falls equally on every member of the government. When you read the evidence—and I have followed it very closely throughout the sittings of the committee—and on pages 120 to 132 you peruse the correspondence between the Commercial Protective Association and the Prime Minister, it seems to me you can come to no other conclusion than that the Prime Minister at least was conversant with conditions in the Customs department. What strikes me more forcibly than anything else is the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), being conversant with those conditions, subsequently appointed to the Senate of Canada a man who is certainly not entitled to that high position. When I reflect that the Prime Minister toured this country during the last campaign and told the people how he was going to reform the Senate, and afterwards appointed a gentleman who had debauched the very life of Canada by encouraging bootlegging, with its slimy trail over the whole land, I am grievously disappointed, and nothing short of a censure of this government will satisfy the people of Canada on this point.

There are those who think that to-night the fate of the Liberal party is at stake. Mr. Speaker, I am not concerned with the fate of the Liberal party or of the Conservative party, but I am vitally concerned with the fate of the Progressive movement, a movement that many of our people are looking forward to as the one hope of cleaning up our public life and bringing about a better condition of affairs in this fair Canada of ours. I do not think there is an hon. member in this corner of the House that would be in his seat to-night but for that movement which we represent. When I think of those people back in Alberta from whom I come, who had got almost to the point of despair, feeling they could not trust to the party machine-picked candidates to carry out their pledges and their promises, and who said, "We must pick out men from among ourselves, and we will make sacrifices to pay their campaign expenses so they will not be bound to any political party," and when I recall the sacrifices that some of those men and women have made during the past few years to foster this movement, I would certainly be recreant to my trust if I did not stand up for the principles they sent me to maintain and uphold in parliament.

The Prime Minister stated in a recent debate that if the government should be defeated we would be faced with a general election. I want to say, Sir, that I feel I would be unworthy of my position as a member of this House if I allowed any threat of that kind to prevent me from doing my duty. I feel that I have been sent here for a certain purpose, and I intend to try to carry out that purpose. If a general election should come and I go down in the fight, then I shall feel proud that I have gone down fighting for the principles which I was sent here to uphold. I appeal to every member in this corner of the House, to every member of this Progressive party, to stand up to-night for those principles which they have been sent to this House to uphold. I would appeal particularly to the only lady member of this House. All the people of Canada are watching what will take place when the vote is registered. When I think of the misery and suffering which this bootlegging traffic has caused the women and children throughout Canada, I am proud that we have one woman representative, and I feel sure that she will deal justly with their cause. Sir George Etienne Cartier once said: If all the women could be banded together simply and solely for the good of humanity, they would exert an influence such as has never been felt before.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I could have dealt with a number of the cases which have been disclosed in the evidence, but I feel that as they have already been placed before the House anything further on my part would be simply superfluous. I want to say again, Sir, that I feel this is the most important vote that has come before this House this session, and I trust every member will do his duty.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there are occasions on which I presume most of us would prefer not to have the responsibilities of membership in this House, and undoubtedly this is such an occasion. The more I study this question the more complicated it becomes, and yet as we are all called upon to cast a vote one way or the other, and we cannot very well shirk that vote, it seems to me it is not right to give a silent vote, but rather as far as possible to set before the House and the country the considerations which move one in coming to a decision on an important question of this character.

I would call the attention of hon. members to the fact that this House of Commons, which is primarily a legislative body, is these days turned into a court; but I would add that under existing circumstances impartial justice seems to me to be impossible in this court. Let us look at the situation. We have prosecutors and defendants, and these also are the jury and the judge, for if we really look at this situation frankly we must acknowledge that one party is very largely playing the role of prosecutor to-night, and has been for the last few days, while to a very considerable extent the other party is playing the role of defendant, and yet we are all called upon to act as jury in this case and even as judge. Now, there is not much doubt that in a case of this character hon. members are influenced by partisan bias or partisan consideration. I made a similar statement a few days ago in connection with Peace River election case, and I think my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) then interjected, "No, no." And yet the vote which was subsequently taken absolutely corroborated my statement, because it was almost entirely along party lines. I cannot conceive that the judgment of the people would again and again in legal matters split along purely party lines. So let us be frank and say that in a case of this character it is extremely difficult for the most honest and honourable men—and I take it that despite some cheap sneers hurled across the floor the large majority of this House are honest and honourable men—I say it is very difficult in such a case for us not to be biased by partisan considerations. We have here a most phenomenal situation. The last vote on a want of confidence motion was in connection with the Kennedy case and yet Mr. Kennedy was the key man, shall I say, in the special committee investigating this matter. We have this situation, that the man who is presumably the most impartial, or in a position to be the most impartial, member will be accused in his vote on such an occasion as this of either inclining towards the government or, as I heard someone who knows Mr. Kennedy put it, of leaning backward in order to be straight.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, is not that the situation? Here is a man whose own case recently was before the House, and yet he is perhaps the most important man in connection with the situation we have in review to-night.

In a court there is at least a certain measure of protection against outside influence, but here our newspapers are permitted to make unsubstantiated charges and to resort to all kinds of specious arguments and even to threats. A day or so ago I read the editorials appearing in the two Ottawa morning papers; I think everyone did so. I should like to read a few extracts from the Ottawa Journal. I was tremendously impressed by the statements of the early part of the editorial, but later the writer went on to say:

> Mr. Kennedy may consider that he owes something to Mr. King. He may consider that protection of such an outrage as his sitting for Peace River represents, is deserving of a price.

And later:

> When the Conservatives move their amendment Mr. Kennedy will move his anaemic whitewashing amendment to the amendment.

And later:

> The Progressive party came into being as the champion of political morality. Here, surely, is opportunity for those who have not mocked every vestige of its creed to cast a vote for its principles. Here is the acid test of the sincerity and probity of every genuine Progressive.

That is the plea made to-night by the hon. member who preceded me. Again I quote:

> Pressure, we know, will be brought to bear upon them. They will be subjected, as they have been subjected all session, to cajolery, to false appeals and to dishonest promises, and in the end they will be threatened with an election.

Just fancy that sort of thing, that kind of veiled threat or reference to veiled threats, appearing in our newspapers with regard to any criminal case in our courts. Now I turn to the other paper, the Ottawa Citizen, and here again I may say that I felt greatly impressed by the statements first advanced. But when I came to read the arguments I almost felt as though the Journal must be right. Let me read a short extract:

> Many Pots will rise up on the left of Mr. Speaker to denounce the blackness of the Kettles. On numerous occasions in the past, the similarity of colour on both sides of the House has been proven to the satisfaction of independent observers. But whether the non-partisan members can preserve sufficient humour in the melee to see through it again is doubtful. Some are quite liable to be convinced that the Kettles are blacker than the Pots.

And later:

> Whether this year is the most propitious time to plunge the country into another general election, however, may merit some thought on the part of non-partisan members. Defeat of the government would without doubt mean an election.

I do not think it necessary to go any further in the reading of these editorials to suggest that in the general outside atmosphere as well as in the political conditions which prevail in this House we cannot hope to secure that impartiality and independence of view which will give us real justice.

I would say also that whilst the defendants if I may use a term of the courts, are materially interested in the verdict, there is no doubt that on the other hand the prosecution, themselves a part of the jury, would directly benefit by a verdict of guilty. The professions of disinterestedness on the part of those who quite legitimately are intent on dislodging the government in order to occupy their seats must necessarily be discounted. I suggest that it is not altogether an edifying spectacle when charges of moral turpitude are advanced against members of the government that there should be such vociferous applause. It seems strange that we should rejoice not in truth but in iniquity; that in this House we are not permitted under the rules of the party game to give very much indulgence or credit to those politically opposed to us.

There is an old saying that those who live in glass houses should not throw stones, yet it seems an exceedingly strange thing that often the people whose houses contain the most glass are the most confirmed stone-throwers. I think perhaps a good many of us feel that after having been in the midst of a mud bath in this House for a while we want to get away into another kind of bath to get cleaned up. There has often been such wholesale condemnation, again I say not arising because the members really believed all these hard things concerning one another but rather through the exigencies of the party game. In this connection I would like to read a paragraph from Burke, which suggests that possibly we should not generally condemn those about us. Burke says:

> Never expecting to find perfection in men, and not looking for divine attributes in created beings, in my commerce with my contemporaries I have found much human virtue. The age unquestionably produces daring profligates and insidious hypocrites. What then? Am I not to avail myself of whatever good is to be found in the world, because of the mixture of evil that is in it?. . . . Those who raise suspicions of the good, on account of the behaviour of evil men, are of the party of the latter. . . . A conscientious person would rather doubt his own judgment than condemn his species. He that accuses all mankind of corruption ought to remember that he is sure to convict only one. In truth, I should much rather admit those whom at any time I have disrelished the most, to be patterns of perfection, than seek a consolation to my own unworthiness in a general communion of depravity with all about me.

Mr. STEVENS: Would my hon. friend permit me? Was it not Edmund Burke who impeached Warren Hastings?

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It was, but nevertheless Edmund Burke wrote those lines which I have quoted.

We are asked to judge, Mr. Speaker, concerning the guilt of certain members of this House, but before passing to that I would like to say that there is one party which according to the evidence, stands convicted. I think I am voicing the sentiments of hon. members on both sides of the House when I say that the one party which we can all unite in saying is guilty is that one which we commonly call the liquor interests in this country, which, as an hon. gentleman opposite said the other day, made their money by defrauding the governments of Canada and of the United States. They demoralized this department and attempted to influence parliament itself by contributing to the campaign funds of both parties. I think perhaps the hon. member for Vancouver Centre was putting it a little bit mildly when he answered me the other day. If I read the evidence aright, and I wish he would correct me if I am wrong because he was a member of the committee the auditor, Mr. Nash, swore that Hiram Walker admitted that the Walker Distillery had contributed to the campaign fund of both parties. Now when this condition exists I say that we have in our midst an organized form of debauchery that ought to be pilloried before the people of this country; and I would join with my friend who preceded me in saying that we cannot too strongly denounce the demoralization that has come through this business.

Again we have brought before us the conduct of the former minister, Mr. Jacques Bureau, and let me say, as far as I am concerned, that the worst thing the present government has done in connection with the whole matter was to put that gentleman in the Senate. I cannot let this opportunity pass without protesting against the unequal justice that prevails in connection with our laws. Petty thieves, even young boys, are sometimes given months or years in jail. I had occasion the other day, in looking into the law books in connection with some amendments which were being proposed, to notice the penalties enacted for several different kinds of crime; they happened to be on one page of the statutes. This legislation, I may say, was all passed at the same time in 1919, and there was one law to this effect: that any person who is suffering from venereal disease in communicable form who knowingly or by culpable negligence communicates such disease is subject to a fine not exceeding $500, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months. There are very full safeguards with regard to what are "reasonable grounds," and there must not be conviction on the evidence of one witness. Another law on the same page provides that for stealing an automobile the punishment is two years and not less than one year without the option of a fine. Then we come to the legislation with regard to sedition—which by the way has been thrown out by the second chamber—and we find that there the penalty at present for what is practically criticizing the authorities is twenty years. For ruining a life, six months with the option of a fine; for stealing an automobile, two years; for criticizing a government, twenty years, a pretty fair indication, let me say, of the relative values according to the standards which now exist. I have given these penalties. What is the penalty for debauching a government department? A senatorship. And the only extenuating circumstance, if it can be called that, is that when the Old Age Pension bill was up the other day, the former minister did not vote against it.

Mr. FONTAINE: That is something.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, that is something.

Mr. CAHAN: Perhaps he was looking to his future.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We are asked to condemn the action of certain officials of the department. I notice by reference to the report on page 3066 that the employees are divided into two groups. In the first the committee finds that "the following officers" have been delinquent in their duties and recommend that their services be dispensed with. The penalty is a severe one—that their services be dispensed with. In the second group—and these are doubtless the higher-ups —the recommendation is that arrangements should be made for the retirement of "the following persons". I do not know just what "retirement" means. I presume it means retirement on a pension, and in this case you have a very decided discrimination in the way in which the men are treated. It may be that the higher officials have greater responsibility; it may be that they are not directly cognizant of all the illegal acts of the people beneath them. On the other hand, I would submit that under-officials, subordinate officials, soon get to know what the attitude of their superiors is, and they know that they dare not take any action which is opposed to the opinions and policies of their superiors under pain of dismissal. It does not seem to me that there should be discrimination of this kind, especially when we are told, with regard to the deputy minister at least, that there has been very considerable complicity and that he is very deeply involved. I would not say that no provision whatever should be made for any of these employees. It may be, as in any private business, that if a man has gone wrong after years of service he should have a compassionate grant allowed him. That is not done in the case of the ordinary criminal, and these men are in some ways worse than ordinary criminals in that they have betrayed a public trust. However, I hope that a time will come when ordinary criminals will receive a little bit more consideration than they have been receiving, and that we shall judge crime not so much in view of one particular act but rather in view of the whole course of action and in connection with the motives that apparently have led to that action.

Again we are asked to judge some of our fellow members in this House. There it seems to me is the point at which we begin to feel our duties a great deal more keenly, because most of us find it difficult enough to steer a straight course ourselves without having to turn aside to condemn other people round about us. But I think most of the members here would agree with me that action such as Mr. Robichaud took in writing a letter asking for leniency on the ground that a certain man who was convicted was useful to the party is absolutely inexcusable, and in the interest of establishing what I believe to be a higher standard of political morality in this country I think we are bound to say so. There are others who are mentioned in this report; there are a number of names to whom reference is made, the most prominent among them being, perhaps, Mr. Boivin, Mr. Duff and Mr. Boys. I do not intend to go into any great detail with regard to any of these matters but let me mention the case of Mr. Boys, the Conservative whip. Personally, I am inclined to think, one of the most honourable men in this House. He contends that he acted in his professional capacity in pleading for leniency, but I would ask, "Can a man divide himself in this way and at one moment speak as a member of the House and at another moment speak as a lawyer?"

Mr. BOYS: Has the hon. member read the provisions of the Customs Act dealing with this matter?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have not.

Mr. BOYS: I would ask my hon. friend to read those provisions, and if he does he will find that absolutely the only course open to Waisberg or his agent was to approach the Minister of Customs. He had no other forum to go to under that act. I was simply there as solicitor, and pleaded his case. I did not ask for special leniency, but argued the case before the minister, and upon that the minister gave his decision. We could have appealed from the decision if we had wanted to. If my hon. friend has not read the act I would advise him to do so. I believe he wants to reach a proper conclusion, and I think after reading the act he will come to the conclusion that that case is somewhat different from some of the others.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not going into the relative merits of the various cases to-night, and I have no desire to discount any hon. member. But I was pointing out that the hon. member has placed his defence largely on two grounds. The first ground was that he acted in his professional capacity. Suppose some labouring man who could not afford to pay a lawyer asked me to use any influence. Am I guilty because I cannot plead professional standing?

Mr. BOYS: I understand the accusation is not that I did it as a lawyer, but that I did it as a member of parliament; so that if that is correct my hon. friend would be quite right in doing it as a member.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite right. I know I am on dangerous ground, because there are about seventy lawyers in this House, and I may have a general attack from both sides of the House. As I understand it, the hon. member pleads he was quite within his rights in acting as a lawyer for this man. I put the case in this way; suppose a man who cannot afford to pay a lawyer asks me to use my influence, am I guilty because I cannot plead professional standing, and, I might add, because I do not accept the fee?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not heard all the speakers from both sides, but if the hon. member will permit me to answer, I will quickly do so. He certainly would not. He has an absolute right to argue anything before a minister sitting as a judge, or a quasi-judge, as long as what he is arguing is worthy of argument and is not based on a political motive.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I leave the statement of the right hon. member. I suppose it is an arguable point.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. CANNON: Very much so.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: And I would point out further that, as I read what the hon. member said, he claimed that as a Conservative he had not any particular influence with the Liberal administration. I would ask this question, is a Liberal then to be debarred from appealing to a Liberal administration?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It depends on what he says.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Undoubtedly responsible officials should not yield to partisan interference.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. leader of the opposition says, "hear, hear." I think we in all quarters of the House will agree with a general statement of that kind, and yet may I ask, is the practice not a common one?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Hear, hear.

Mr. CAHAN: It should not be.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It should not be, but if we are honest with ourselves, is the practice not a common one? I would say we are in the midst of a system which has grown up through the years and has certain traditions; these traditions and systems are essentially vicious, and individual members are largely victims of the system. I am personally far more interested in reforming the system than in punishing particular individuals.

We are asked to-night to judge of the record in office of the present Minister of Customs. I think the hon. member for West Hamilton, or perhaps it was the hon. member for Vancouver Centre was quite right in pointing out that the minister undoubtedly has heavier responsibilities than an ordinary member. If I may make a frank confession —although I do not know that it may be regarded as worth anything—I may tell the House that at the beginning of the debate I was of the opinion that I should have to join in the vote of censure against the Minister of Customs. I could not get around Mr. Robichaud's letter. It seemed to me that if the minister had yielded to its importunity he was performing an act which was altogether unjustifiable. But I listened yesterday to the statement made by the hon. minister, and I must say that I was greatly impressed by it. Members may laugh, but I am just stating how it impressed me. I again would remind hon. members of this House that we are not organized as a court is organized. We have not the same opportunity of cross-examining the witness as we have in a court. I did venture to interject a question, and received of course what was apparently a satisfactory reply, but we have not the same opportunity that they have in a court room of arriving at the real situation. It seemed to me that I could almost visualize —perhaps that was because of the skill with which the case was presented—the situation which confronted the minister when he took office, and from what little I know of administrative affairs, I can understand that it is very easy for a man placed in that position to take the opinion and even the statements of those about him. Let me remind hon. members that there is hardly a man in this House who is not constantly in receipt of letters asking him to do this, that and the other thing, for reasons which perhaps would not commend themselves to hon. members.

Mr. CAHAN: Would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: What would the hon. member say to the statement of the hon. Minister of Customs which reads:

> But I say now that if I had seen the request—

That is the request of Robichaud.

> —and been cognizant of all the other circumstances my conduct would have been the same.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I noticed that statement at the time. In my judgment I took it to be one of two things; either a little bit of bravado, which was very unpolitic to say the least at that time, or else a frank statement of his feeling that he would not be influenced this way or that way by such a consideration.

Mr. CAHAN: Would the hon. member allow me?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would say, Mr. Speaker, that I am not being examined just now.

Mr. CAHAN: May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. CAHAN: Did the hon. member not regard it as the most serious statement that a man could make upon his honour when defending himself before the House?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I cannot say that I did. I was listening intently, trying to size it up, and I am just stating how I felt about it.

Mr. CAHAN: It affected me most seriously.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: For example, I received a letter the other day asking that I take up a certain case. The writer stated that the man in whose interest he was appealing was identified with the Independent Labour party in the Old Country and has always given the labour movement support. He asked me on that ground to take up his case. I proceeded to take it up not because he was identified with the Independent Labour party in the Old Country, not because he had ever given the Labour movement support, but because according to the man's own statement, which was more or less endorsed by the man who appealed to me, it appeared to me that he was suffering an injustice that should be looked into. I simply handed over the case and asked that it be investigated. I appeal to hon. members and ask if we have not all had communications of this kind.

Will you let me give a more serious case? It is the only one of the kind which I have had since I have been in parliament, and I looked it up the other day to make sure of the facts. A certain group of people, men that I did not know, asking something from this administration, appealed to me. It was stated:

> They have helped us substantially in the past in election campaigns. In fact they have gone so far as to offer to contribute $1,000 to your next election campaign if you will procure these permits for them.

This does not come from my constituency; as a matter of fact it comes from somewhere down east. Needless to say I wrote back objecting to that kind of importunity; but supposing that letter was discovered on my files and supposing I had taken any action in furthering the interests of this particular group, where would I be if I were charged with a matter of this kind?

Mr. CAHAN: Would the hon. member take any action in the face of such a proposition as that?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I did not.

Mr. CAHAN: But would he, as an honest and honourable man?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If these men were appealing for permits that were within their rights as citizens, I might show them how they could obtain their rights, at the same time absolutely repudiating the suggestion contained in the letter. I am not trying to condone anything.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, no.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is all right for hon. gentlemen to say: "Oh, no," but one of the first lessons that I had in at least trying to be a little bit generous in interpretation was when I was a boy of fifteen. A murder had been committed in our town and it had startled the whole community. I remember my father coming home one day and recounting a conversation which he had with the judge concerning the matter. I am not sure whether my father or the judge first made use of a phrase by an old French writer but my father used it. It was to this effect that "To know all is to forgive all." Whilst I will not say that in public life there should be full forgiveness of everything, an intimate knowledge of what takes place is absolutely essential to a correct estimation of what a man's conduct really is. I am quite sure the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) agrees with that. I will just reiterate what I said at the beginning of my remarks, that unforunately it seems to me that this House of Commons, with the heated atmosphere that here prevails, is not the most suitable place in which to secure impartial justice.

Let me go further. I recognize perfectly well that in a case of this kind the public demands a sacrifice, but I am not so sure that the public is right. Lloyd George won his election on the slogan: "Hang the kaiser." Lloyd George is to-day a very discredited man. The kaiser is still alive. Strangely enough a number of our property patriots are opposed to the republic of Germany confiscating the kaiser's estates, to say nothing of hanging him. In this matter the business men are right. What we need to do is to clean up the mess. What we need to do is to put in more competent and courageous men to administer our laws.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am glad that is endorsed. It would seem to me that if we have discovered any honest officials in the investigation which has been proceeding for the last four or five months, it will be the part of wisdom to put those men in positions of greater responsibility. The difficulty is that we are trying to deal with the evils of an economic system that is essentially outgrown, inadequate and vicious. We are dealing with the outer symptoms of a disease which is bound to produce evils of this character. I do not want to get into a controversy over the question of free trade and protection, but it sometimes seems to me that if we would do away with those customs barriers we would save a great deal of trouble.

Mr. CAHAN: Would the hon. member allow all foreign rum in free under those conditions?

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As regards allowing foreign rum in free, if I understand the situation aright, it is that we are shipping rum into other countries.

Mr. CAHAN: It is coming into this country as well.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As I have tried to see daylight through this problem and I think many men have been worrying a great deal—

Miss MACPHAIL: And one woman.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: And one woman, the hon. member for Southeast Grey suggests. Many men and one woman have been worrying a great deal as to what is the right course of action to take at this time. The trouble is that we do not and I think I may say we cannot vote on this motion apart from other considerations. I think that is true not merely of the older parties; I think it is true of the Progressives and also of our Labour group. We cannot vote on this question absolutely on its merits.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Hon. members laugh at that and some of them are inclined to be cynical about it. Let us get down to realities about it and face the facts as they exist. If the amendment carries, presumably the Liberals go out of office.

An hon. MEMBER: Why should they not?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not discussing that. If the amendment carries, presumably the Liberals go out of office and the Conservatives come into office.

Mr. TOBIN (Wetaskiwin): And that would be hell.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: An hon. member suggests that that would be a very bad situation. His expression was unparliamentary, so I will not repeat it. It is a very good thing sometimes that the Speaker is at the other end of the room and he does not hear all that goes on. Let me repeat that because I would like to make that point clear. If the amendment carries, presumably the Liberals go out of office and the Conservatives come into office. Does anyone say that under those circumstances either Liberals or Conservatives can vote dispassionately on such a question as this?

This question which looms so largely to-day and which undoubtedly is one of great importance, need not and should not decide what group is best fitted to administer the affairs of Canada.

That is a point I should like to emphasize. I may be wrong in this; I confess that I have not seen my way to take this position before now, and to be perfectly frank I am only feeling my way through to this. But as I see the situation to-day, and I want to express it frankly, that one particular question such as this ought not necessarily to decide what group is best fitted to administer the affairs of Canada. Some of us have protested during the past five years against the evils of the party system. We are so strongly opposed to the old two-party system that at least two new groups are in this House as a protest against it. We have not hesitated so to interfere with the ordinary working of that old two-party system as to bring about what is very little less than chaos in this House. We have come in and it is our right as elected representatives to play the game as we think fit.

I think I said somewhere, I am not sure whether in this House or outside, that the situation this session was comparable to a football game. There are two teams opposed; there is a goal at one end and a goal at the other; and all of a sudden, into the midst of this game, a third group of individuals makes their appearance and proceed to participate in the fun. Their presence is resented by both the old football teams, because they are constantly in the way and interfere with the established rules. But the trouble is that we, the third group, are on the ground and are determined to do something, and either the two old parties must revise their rules or we will defeat them both at their own game.

An hon. MEMBER: No danger.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Perhaps not; that remains to be seen. But he is a bold man who predicts what is going to be done in the future.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If, as the hon. gentleman says, each of the old parties has sinned in throwing stones at the other, what is to be thought of the man who throws stones at both?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not know that I have thrown very many stones to-night.

Mr. CAHAN: They were not all bouquets.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: They may not all be bouquets, but I have not said anything very derogatory of the good name of any hon. member of this House. I have been trying as far as possible to discuss general principles and have brought in only such names as were definitely introduced in the report. and of necessity had to be mentioned.

We in this section of the House, Progressives and Labour, have during the past few years again and again protested against certain rules and traditions. For example, we have said that the defeat of a government measure ought not to be taken necessarily as a vote of lack of confidence. Members who were present in the old House will recall that my colleague, Mr. Irvine, then representing East Calgary, introduced this principle in a motion which he submitted to the House, and it was voted down by the combined strength of Liberals and Conservatives because they wished to protect the old party system. But from our point of view—and it is our point of view I desire to give to-night —we believe that the time has come for modifying many of these old traditions and practices of parliament, and among these is the rule that makes the defeat of a government measure the occasion for the resignation of the government. We hold that such a defeat ought not necessarily to be taken as an indication of want of confidence. And it is only going one step further to say that we should insist upon being free to condemn certain actions of the government without of necessity replacing the government by another particular group. I do not know whether that is correct or not.

Miss MACPHAIL: It is.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: My hon. friend from Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) says it is correct. Well, I am glad to hear her say so, because I had not discussed the matter with her and I was afraid of her criticism. Let me repeat it; I have written it down because I want to be clearly understood. We must insist upon being free to condemn certain actions of the government without necessarily replacing the government by another party or group in the House. I recognize that this may be stigmatized as dangerous doctrine, Sometimes I have been called an impossible idealist, but I like to think that occasionally I am a bit of a realist. Perhaps some people may say that I am too much so to-night, but I want to get behind legal forms and constitutional procedure and try to reach the ends for which these forms and this procedure are supposed to exist and to conserve.

Now government has to do with a great variety of subjects; government policy covers a very wide field indeed. We have been spending, I suppose, almost half the time of the House this session discussing the question of lower or higher tariffs. As I have said before, I do not believe that either free trade or protection or higher protection will solve the economic problems that face this country. But I would ask hon. members whether a great question such as free trade or protection, or higher or lower protection, is to be set aside without consideration merely because a certain individual named Moses Aziz did something that was wrong, or because a minister in dealing with that case took an action which some do not regard as justifiable. If we begin along that line where shall we stop? On the other hand, someone may ask, if I begin along my line where shall I stop? I frankly admit that I am open to criticism; I am placing myself in a vulnerable position. But I shall state nevertheless what appears to me to be the real difficulty in our deciding such a case as this. I have heard a lot of talk around the corridors about the Alberta resources. I have heard it said that this question could be settled if certain votes were given in this House. I heard a little earlier about the Hudson Bay railway and I heard the suggestion made that if certain votes were given in a certain way that railway would be built. I have also heard something about the Crowsnest pass agreement. I heard it suggested that if, as in the other cases, votes were cast in a particular way there would be no chance for the west having that agreement. I presume there is something in these suggestions. There are all sorts of questions to be considered. For example, I have heard the statement made around the corridors that action in this House was more or less dependent upon action in the other chamber, and vice versa. These statements are heard freely around the corridors, and the undoubted fact is that they influence our decisions. And I do not see that we can avoid being so influenced. Now, among other things in which I am interested is old age pensions. Apparently many hon. gentlemen opposite are not very sympathetic, and certainly the party to which they belong in the Senate refuses to give its sanction to that legislation. Do you suppose I could vote on any question in this House without recognizing the possibility of placing in the seats of power men who defeat legislation of this nature?

I am not quite sure that the action of the minister in this particular instance, which action has been debated pro and con for some considerable time now, is the all-important question which some seem to imagine. Let me read two telegrams that have come to me within the last forty-eight hours. I think I can show how closely related they are to this question. The first is addressed to me from Halifax.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Government as represented by King, Elliott and Dunning absolutely refuses to pay labourers in Halifax more than $2.38½ as per wires from them to trades council. Under those circumstances we see no reason why you should not line up with any opposition on any motion to defeat them in the House.

This is signed by Hugh Pynn, president of the Halifax Trades and Labour Council. Here is a direct incitation to line up in opposition to the government. Why? Simply because it is considered that the government is more or less directly responsible for the payment of certain charges to a group of men in Halifax in connection, I presume, with the Canadian National Railways. More or less directly the government is held responsible for the payment of certain wages of a group of men down in Halifax, and because of that those men are going to have me take my share in deciding what the fate of the government of Canada is to be. Could anything be more preposterous? Or again, a telegram was received only to-day from Winnipeg:

Winnipeg motormen and conductors are up in arms owing to delay in appointing chairman. Men threaten to override executive and walk out on strike. The immediate appointment of chairman the only solution. They feel you should compel government—

They have got a big opinion of my power.

—to act within twenty-four hours or vote against them on Customs issue. Men feel government stalling until the House prorogues. Demands for mass meeting to determine strike actions are insistent. Wire reply.

H. JONES.
Secretary.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Read the reply, please.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Personally I did not reply, but I think the answer sent was that at noon to-day announcement had been made that the chairman had been appointed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: They were right, then.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am glad hon. gentlemen have had their laugh. I read this telegram to drive home, if I could, the very point which they seek to emphasize by their laughter and applause. As I say, I recognize that in regard to this I am putting myself in a vulnerable position, but the point I am trying to make is that hon. members are constantly subject to pressure of this kind, all over the House, and I say it is absolutely absurd that the government's decision as to the appointment of a chairman of a board in Winnipeg is to decide, as far as it can be decided, what the fate of the government is to be. It is ridiculous to think of such a thing as that, and even although some of my labour friends may think it is strong language.

I cannot refrain from so expressing myself. It is simply because they do not realize the larger issues that are at stake.

I would say further, Mr. Speaker, that undoubtedly governments have to deal with great international problems. For example, we had a debate the other day as to the procedure which should be adopted in ratifying treaties, and an important decision was reached by this House in the form of the resolution which was then put forward by the government. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) although requested to do so, absolutely refused to express himself on this question.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The leader of the opposition had expressed himself many times at the beginning of the session—

An hon. MEMBER: Order.

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down.

Mr. MEIGHEN: —and does not propose to join the time-killers in this House.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: On important matters such as our foreign relations, matters that may involve this country in a war as important as the last, which meant that hundreds of thousands of our men were sent abroad and tens of thousands of them laid down their lives, and we have such a huge debt that we can hardly struggle beneath it —on important matters of this kind, I say it is highly desirable that we should know where both parties stand. My point is that matters of international relations, matters of war and peace—matters on which parties have definitely recognized policies—are equally important with the question of the conduct of the Minister of Customs in this case.

Mr. McGIBBON: Might I ask the hon. gentleman if he disapproves of what Canada did in the last war?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not think it is necessary to answer that question.

Mr. McGIBBON: Pluck up your courage. and answer it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In answer to the hon. member's question in regard to the last war, I think it is only necessary to say that every one of the bright promises with regard to what that war would accomplish absolutely failed of fulfilment.

Mr. MANION: Except the defeat of Germany.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not so much concerned to-night about the last war—I think these days we may well forget a great deal that transpired during the last war—but I am tremendously concerned in preventing a recurrence of war.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Do you think with the Solicitor General that the next war will be with Turkey?

Mr. CANNON: Will my hon. friend allow me? So far as my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Ryckman) is concerned, I will speak—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Let the hon. gentleman take his seat.

Mr. CANNON: The hon. member mentioned my name.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. CANNON: I am getting up on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask hon. gentlemen to let the hon. member state his question of privilege.

Mr. CANNON: I wish to tell my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) that he need not yell himself to death. My hon. friend from East Toronto—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CANNON: Let me tell my hon. friend from East Toronto that I will speak in this debate and conform to his own custom; I am not going to declare myself until I speak.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Let the hon. gentleman state his point of order.

Mr. CAHAN: I ask, Mr. Speaker, if a member sitting in his seat, doing nothing and saying nothing, is to be insulted in this way without redress?

Mr. CANNON: The House can judge.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not know what has been the cause of the statement that the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George was yelling. I did not hear him yelling.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, when I was interrupted by this uproar I was going to say one final word with regard to the war question which was injected—that the hon. gentleman should remember that it is only a few months since the Great war

Veterans' Association met in this city and considered a very strong resolution to the effect that it was incumbent upon the returned men to do everything in their power to see that there was no recurrence of war during our time.

Let me come back to my argument for a moment, if I may. I was trying to emphasize the fact that we are called upon tonight, or whenever the vote is taken, to decide the fate of a government. We must not only decide on the question whether or not this or that member of parliament did the right thing, or whether or not the Minister of Customs was justified in taking a certain action; behind that and more than that and as the result of that decision, according to the existing rules and practices of this House we are called upon to say who will carry on the administration of this country, and that is a point, which, very frankly, makes us pause at this time.

A few moments ago the right hon. leader of the opposition was denouncing, as his followers have very bitterly denounced, the Minister of Customs for his leniency with regard to a convicted smuggler. At the moment I am not going to discuss that case; in fact I think it has been discussed pro and con long enough, but the right hon. gentleman and his followers were condemning that action. I want to remind the hon. gentleman—and this is one reason why I am in this House—that a few years ago legislation was passed which still remains on the statute books and which, among other things, had the effect of depriving of the right of trial by jury all persons born outside of Canada.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not rising to a point of order because this is the opening of the breach of order by the hon. member, but there surely must be a limit to the privilege or license extended him to debate everything between the sun and the earth on a question quite outside that before the House.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I submit that I am quite in order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I ask for a ruling as to whether the hon. gentleman is in order in discussing a subject which has no relation to the matter before the House, and which this House has already decided.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman must speak to the point of order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am speaking to the point of order. I have been trying since the beginning of my address tonight to show that this parliament by this discussion has been turned into a court, and that it is impossible under existing circumstances and with the heat which exists to secure an impartial verdict. I have been showing that behind that there is still another difficulty, that owing to the rules and practices of this House it is simply impossible for members to vote solely on the question now before the House, because if the amendment carried it would mean the resignation of the government and the assumption of office by the opposition.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. gentleman agrees that I am right; he says, "hear, hear." Since that would be the effect and since this is the momentous decision we are required to give, I would suggest that we have to consider whether or not we wish to have a change of government. I was pointing out—

Mr. MEIGHEN: I rise again, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think I am in order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman is perfectly in order; he is explaining the point of order. I will give my ruling immediately he takes his seat.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am speaking to the point of order. I have said that I am simply giving certain considerations which must occur to me and to other members of the House in deciding how our vote is to be given. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that I have a perfect right to recite these considerations.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has already spoken on the point of order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: All I want to say is that this reasoning would allow the discussion of anything.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have followed very closely the address of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), and in my humble judgment I think he has, from his point of view, tried to be very logical on the attitude he intends to take in this matter. I cannot repeat the ipsissima verba, but the hon. member says that he is in a quandary; if the amendment carries it means the defeat of the government and the victory of the other party, and he said he was not ready to support the other party. I gathered from his remarks that he wanted to lead to another sphere, the judgment to be rendered on the case occupying this House at present. But I would like to point out to the hon. gentleman that whilst this is perfectly in order the branch of his argument must not become the trunk; there must be some limits to those considerations which would prevent him from supporting this or that party, according to the fate of the amendment and main motion.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This is a mere branch, Mr. Speaker, and I think it is one of the top branches. When I was interrupted I was trying to suggest that hon. members opposite were very severely condemning the Minister of Customs because of his leniency to a convicted smuggler. I must remind the House that there was read only the other day in this House a telegram relating to those troubled times of 1919. On June 17, Mr. Meighen wired to Mr. Andrews:

> Notwithstanding any doubt I have as to the technical legality of the arrest and the detention at Stony Mountain I feel that rapid deportation is the best course now that the arrests are made, and later we can consider ratification.

It may be a serious thing, Mr. Speaker, to show leniency to a convicted criminal but I submit that it is a great deal more serious to deny to an innocent man the right of trial. The right hon. leader of the opposition admitted, inferentially at least, that he had doubts as to the legality of the arrests; he admitted that he had doubts as to the legality of the detention at Stony Mountain penitentiary but he said, "Now that this action has been taken, an irregular action, I think the thing we should do is to have quick deportation, and then, if there is any further trouble, we can regularize"—what were the exact words used?—"later we can consider ratification." If there is danger on the one hand, do you mean to say there is no danger on the other?

I just want to say in closing my reference to that incident that one of the reasons I was sent to parliament was to endeavour to secure the repeal of that vicious legislation of 1919.

An hon. MEMBER: You got it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: An hon. gentleman says "You got it". It passed this House but it has been again rejected by the Senate where the majority of the members belong to the Conservative party.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I rise to a point of order. The point of order is that the hon. member has characterized legislation which has been passed by this House, and which is now in effect, as "vicious legislation".

Mr. SPEAKER: I cannot see in what respect the expression, applied in the way in which it has been, is unparliamentary.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am glad to be sustained by the Speaker. I should have found myself in a very difficult position had the expression in question been held to be unparliamentary because really I do not know how else to characterize legislation which deprives men in this country of what we thought was guaranteed to every man by Magna Charta and the Bill of Rights.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the government and their followers have no proper respect for the rules of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): I rise to a point of order. The right hon. leader of the opposition has no right to make the statement he did and I ask that he be compelled to withdraw it.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not see why there should be so much heat in debate. This is one of the finest debates we have heard for some time, and I fail to see any reason for disorder. I hope the right hon. leader of the opposition on thinking the matter over will withdraw the expression he used with respect to hon. gentlemen to my right to the effect that they have scant respect for the rules of the House. All members have a great deal of respect for the rules of the House. I am glad to acknowledge that at a time when I am celebrating the thirtieth anniversary of my first appearance in this House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Whenever I rise to a point of order there invariably arises from the other side a chorus of boos. My retort is very mild indeed.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must ask the right hon. gentleman to withdraw the first expression used, that hon. gentlemen on the government side have scant respect for the rules of the House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was unaware that there was any rule requiring me to withdraw it.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is unparliamentary to say that certain hon. members have scant respect for the rules of the House.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): The right hon. gentleman also said "members of the government."

Mr. SPEAKER: All the members of the House are supposed to have respect for its rules, and as a matter of fact are imbued with that sentiment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hon. members are supposed to obey the rules on all occasions. I stated that they do not do so.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am obliged reluctantly to insist that the right hon. gentleman withdraw the expression. In my humble judgment he has no right to say that hon. members have but scant respect for the rules of the House. I say that all members are obliged to respect the rules of the House, and to say they have scant respect, you offend them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker, out of deference to your authority as Speaker of this House I obey your ruling, but I hope you will permit me to say that because I ask that hon. gentlemen shall not do what they have no right to do I do not necessarily offend them. My reason for rising to the point of order was this: It was to repeat what I had urged before, and I insist on doing it, that no hon. member has a right in any way to debate in this House a question which already has been decided in the same session. I do not know of any rule more firmly established or more clear. I was overruled by Your Honour then; I hope I shall not be overruled again.

Mr. SPEAKER: I fail to see where the hon. member (Mr. Woodsworth) is infringing the rules. I again ask that hon. members so conduct themselves as to obviate any necessity for a ruling by the Chair.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. SPEAKER: I must ask hon. gentlemen to remain within reasonable limits.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I cannot hear you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am telling the right hon. gentleman not to dilate too much on branches of the main subject.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am glad to know that I am and have been in order. I shall try not to say anything that is out of order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: You cannot.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell) for whom I have a very great respect, said the other day, in his eloquent presentation of his case that the vote was a vote for national honour or national dishonour. The implication is that those who vote one way are voting for national dishonour and that those who vote the other way are voting for national honour. A further claim on the part of some of these gentlemen opposite would be that those who vote for honour are the Conservatives only—

Mr. MANION: The vote has not been taken yet.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —and that all those who do not vote their way are voting for national dishonour. Well that is a very simple line of conduct. Personally I have often wished, at least in my off times, that I had that view of life that enabled me always to divide the world into black and white, into the absolutely good and the absolutely bad, into perfect saints and hopeless sinners, and to say that one particular group is always right and the other group is always wrong. It is a very simple way of looking at life. It helps out in a great many ways, if in this building a man can go into a lobby or up into his room and do almost anything he pleases and then come down to this chamber and cast his vote in the right way. But I submit the question before us to-night is not quite so simple as that. It is not so easy to know just how to vote right; and I do say sincerely that men jealous for the national honour are sitting on both sides of this House. I think it is rather a dangerous practice that perhaps is growing on us, to claim that we and we only have such a policy and are true to our convictions and to our country. I am quite well assured that before this vote is taken some of my hon. friends with whom I have most closely associated during the last four or five years will vote the opposite way to which I will vote, but I want to assure them that although we can not see eye to eye in some matters, I do not for one moment doubt the sincerity of their convictions, I do not for one moment doubt the fact that they are exercising their best judgment. Nor do I doubt for a moment that they have our national honour at heart, and I would respectfully suggest that they ought if possible to extend some such consideration to those who are opposed to them in votes of this character. I feel this particularly because I know that a great many of us are finding it extremely difficult to come to a conclusion how to vote on a question of this kind. Let me repeat what I said in the early part of my remarks, that to me, as I have tried to consider the question, the vote is inseparable from the question of who shall be entrusted to administer our affairs. The parties must be judged by their policies, and by the records of those who are pledged to carry them out. I am not going into the question of records to-night. A good many people on both sides of the House have gone into the records of members on both sides, and perhaps enough has been said; but in making up our minds we judge in accordance with the policies of these men, and in accordance with their records.

Having in view the entire situation, I would say that I have not seen my way clear on this occasion to cast a vote which would automatically put the Conservatives into the place now occupied by the Liberals in this House. I am free to say that I think the conduct of the Customs department, has been, as the reports clearly state, anything but satisfactory.

Paragraph 6 of the report states:

The evidence submitted to the committee leads to the general conclusion that for a long time the Department of Customs and Excise had been slowly degenerating in efficiency and that the process was greatly accelerated in the last few years. Apparently the Hon. Jacques Bureau, then Minister of Customs, failed to appreciate and properly discharge the responsibilities of his office and as a result there was a lack of efficient, continuous and vigorous control of subordinates by the Headquarters staff at Ottawa.

That is a very, very sweeping condemnation of the conduct of that department. How far the cabinet as a whole is responsible I am not prepared to say. How far the present minister is responsible I do not know that we have sufficient evidence to determine. We have had one or two cases, and with regard to these cases it does seem to me that there has been absolutely unjustifiable action taken, and that notwithstanding all the defence which was presented by the minister yesterday, and which, as I say, impressed me very strongly. Under these circumstances, as we have only the amendment to vote on, it seems to me that I cannot do better than to try to express, in the form of an amendment to the amendment, some of the views which I hold with regard to this situation. I beg to move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps):

That all the words after the word "instructions" in the third line of the amendment be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

1. To add to clause 4 the following; Since the enquiry indicates that the smuggling evils are so extensive and their ramifications so far-reaching that only a portion of the illegal practices have been brought to light, your committee recommends the appointment of a judicial commission with full powers to continue and complete investigating the administration of the department of Customs and Excise and to prosecute all offenders.

2. That the following be added to clause 6: Your committee deplores the common practice, as revealed by the evidence, of members of parliament and others appealing to the minister to relax the regulations of the department for personal advantage or political expediency.

3. That in clause 8 all the words after the word "department" in the third line be struck out.

4. That in clause 13 the name of R. R. Farrow, deputy minister of Customs and Excise, be added to the list of those who are recommended that their services be dispensed with.

And that the committee for such purposes be revived.

Just briefly I will give the effect of this amendment to the amendment. The first clause suggests that the inquiry has been very incomplete. I think in that I am simply stating what the committee itself has stated. The committee has examined in a general way the conduct of business at certain points in Ontario. In clause 4 the committee states:

The committee have not dealt, except incidentially, with the middle west and the Pacific coast. To a degree, therefore, this report is incomplete and suggestive rather than final. Full audit and extra-departmental investigation would be profitable in improving the service and recovering a large amount of revenue.

Now in order to complete the investigation, and further because of the impossibility of obtaining justice in a parliamentary committee organized as a parliamentary committee necessarily must be with representatives of opposing parties on it, it seems to me we could not do better than complete the work which has been begun and carried forward for four and a half months, by the appointment of a commission which would be able to go out and survey the whole field of which we have investigated only a part. Further, I hope it may be quite possible to give the commission such powers as will enable them to initiate prosecutions and be definitely charged with carrying on work of that character. I am not very familiar with the appointment of royal commissions, and have not had a chance to consult with legal gentlemen to find out whether it is possible to invest such powers in them. I think it is, and it seems to me this would be the best means of completing the work which has been so well begun by the parliamentary committee. At this point I should like—and I do it sincerely—to pay tribute to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) who has so earnestly worked on this investigation, without whom the investigation would not have been held, and who, I am informed by more or less independent observers who have attended the committee more closely than I have, has been very definite and earnest in pressing forward the work of the committee which his action initiated. So I would suggest that we complete the work in this fashion:

2. That the following be added to clause 6—

This is I think the proper place in which to insert the clause, since this is the place where a similar clause is inserted in the amendment.

Your committee deplores the common practice as revealed by the evidence, of members of parliament and others appealing to the minister to relax the regulations of the department for personal advantage or political expediency.

This is more or less of the same character as two of the clauses of the present amendment, but it leaves out the specific censure of the government and the specific censure of the minister.

3. That in clause 8 all the words after the word "department" in the third line be struck out.

That is, that the Minister of Customs be granted no discretion whatever. According to the report he will be given discretion in cases under $200. The clause as amended would read:

The committee is of opinion that the administrative duties of the Department of Customs and Excise should be left to the executive officers of the department.

No. 4 would add the name of Mr. Farrow, Deputy Minister, to those whose services are to be dispensed with. I have not attended many of the sessions of the committee and I have not read all the evidence; but those who have been in closest attendance on the committee have assured me that there is a great deal more evidence against the deputy minister than there is against other officers on that list and that justice would seem to demand that punishment of a more severe type should be administered to him.

In closing I would hope that in his case as in some of the others, while full pension may not be granted, we carry out our ideals of justice in a generous way and that those men who have perhaps done wrong under great temptation should not be too harshly dealt with, but that in some way a grant might be made—especially for those who have been long in the service—so that they will not be thrown out on the street because of their actions in recent years.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker, I rise only to a point of order again. I contend that this is not an amendment to the amendment. The same relativity which must obtain between an amendment and a motion is not the relativity which must obtain between an amendment to an amendment and the amendment. An amendment to an amendment must deal with nothing but the subject matter of the amendment. An amendment to a motion does not require necessarily to deal only with the subject matter of the motion. This is only too plainly a mere device for getting rid of any decision on the amendment. If this is brought before the House, the House might decide on the merits of it; but if it decided in its favour, that would prevent the House from deciding on the merits of the amendment, which is something wholly different from this.

Although I have not had time to go into the rules thoroughly, the rule is that an amendment to an amendment must necessarily be an amendment to that amendment and not a different amendment. This is a different amendment altogether. This could be moved after the amendment is defeated, but it cannot be moved as an amendment to that amendment. The effect would be, as is indeed evidently the intention, to bring something in to which there is no special objection, get a vote upon it and thereby get rid of the amendment that is before the House. Against that course I protest and in that protest I believe I am supported by the best authorities. It is certainly unfair to have this matter decided adversely now in any case. I am confident this cannot be considered an amend- to an amendment.

Mr. HEAPS: Mr. Speaker, speaking to the point of order, I do not think the point is well taken. I contend that this amendment to the amendment is quite in order because it does deal with the subject matter contained in the amendment. The subject matter contained in the amendment deals particularly with two matters. The first is to refer the question back to the committee, and the second is to give instructions to that committee. I contend that in the amendment to the amendment we are referring the question back to the committee; we are also referring it back to the committee with certain instructions. The difference is that our instructions are not the same as those moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens). I claim therefore that the House has the right to refer the matter back to the committee, and consequently the amendment to the amendment is in order.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The point of order is not well taken. As the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) has said, the subamendment is in order. The amendment proposes to refer back the report to the committee for the purpose of modifying it in some way, and the subamendment is, in effect, to refer the report back to the committee, changing the modifications which are proposed in the amendment itself. It certainly is in order. I refer Your Honour to May, 12th edition, at page 264:

> Another proceeding may also be resorted to, by which an amendment is intercepted, as it were, before it is offered to the House in its original form, by moving to amend the first proposed amendment. In such cases the questions put by the Speaker deal with the first amendment as if it were a distinct question, and with the second as if it were an ordinary amendment. The original question is, indeed, for a time laid aside; and the amendment becomes, as it were, a substantive question itself. Unless this were done, there would be three points under consideration at once, viz. the question, the proposed amendment and the amendment of that amendment: but when the question for adopting the words of an amendment is put forward distinctly and apart from the original question, no confusion arises from moving amendments to it before its ultimate adoption is proposed.

In other words, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr Stevens) becomes the main motion and to that motion there is an amendment modifying it, but derived from the amendment itself. There is no doubt; the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. CAHAN: The Minister of Justice has quoted from page 264 of May. If he had read the concluding paragraph on page 266 he might possibly have modified his opinion. On that page, subsequent to the observations which the minister has quoted, this rule is laid down:

> An amendment to a proposed amendment can not be moved, if it proposes to leave out all the words of such proposed amendment. In such a case the first amendment must first be negatived before the second can be operative.

I submit that the amendment to the amendment leaves out the substantive portion of the first amendment, and therefore cannot be moved until the first amendment is put to the House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CAHILL: I rise to a point of order. The leader of the opposition has already spoken to the point of order, and should not be permitted to speak again.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is true the right hon. member has already spoken, but as a general rule some regard is had for the leaders on both sides. The right hon. member stated his objection, but as he said himself, he had not had an opportunity to consult the authorities, and undoubtedly he will have the indulgence of the House.

Mr. CAHILL: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the indulgence of the House; but he is not entitled to speak as of right.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not depend upon the indulgence of the House but I do depend upon the indulgence of the Speaker. The Speaker controls all discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am ready to listen to the right hon. member.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What I contend is this. In the case of an amendment to a motion to adopt a report, with one exception and one only over a long period of years, the practice has always been to move that it be referred back with instructions. There is no other method of procedure if the regular line of practice is to be followed. Then the substantive part of the amendment consists in the instructions only and nothing else, the first portion being merely formal like the word "that." The Minister of Justice argues that because in the subamendment there is the instruction to refer the report back, therefore the subamendment has something in common with the amendment. As a matter of fact it has nothing whatever of substance in common with the amendment. It has nothing in common with the amendment apart from what is embodied in every amendment appertaining to a motion to adopt a report. It is therefore but the purest fiction —it is worse than that, it is a technicality which I hope will be repudiated very promptly —to contend that because that mere formal part is of necessity retained in the subamendment, therefore the subamendment embraces some part of the subject matter of the amendment. It does not. The instructions are wholly different; they are along a different line entirely. The object is just a device to prevent the House having an opportunity of passing upon the amendment.

Mr. CANNON: One word in answer to the right hon. gentleman. There might be some foundation for his contention if the only way of moving an amendment to a report were the one adopted by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. But that is not the case. The right hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that two courses might have been followed in dealing with the report by way of amendment. The first was taken by the mover of the amendment, proposing that the report be referred back to the committee. The amendment seeks to revive the committee in order that it be instructed to insert a new clause in the report. That is one method of disposing of the report by way of amendment, and such an amendment must contain two fundamental elements, first the reference, and secondly, the instructions to the committee to which the motion is referred back and for which purpose the committee is revived. Let us now consider the second way of moving an amendment to the report. That method, which any member of the House might have adopted, would be to move an amendment directly to the motion made by the chairman of the committee for concurrence in the report, by adding to that motion words expressing the opinion of the House on the subject matter. I refer Your Honour to a precedent to be found in the journals of the House of the year 1880 in connection with a report of the committee on Printing of that date. If the leader of the opposition will read that report he will see that his contention is altogether erroneous. I argue therefore that inasmuch as the amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre must embody two fundamentals, first the reference, and secondly, the instructions, the subamendment does not invalidate the amendment, retaining as it does the reference and merely modifying the instructions given to the committee.

Mr. STEVENS: It is with a good deal of pleasure that I find my original idea quite in harmony with what the Solicitor General has said. The motion which I submitted to the House by way of amendment followed precisely the procedure he has stated. Being desirous of conforming to the rules with exactitude, I submitted my amendment as then drafted to the officers of the House who, I understand, had consulted the Speaker, and I was informed that the form in which the amendment was drawn up was not in accordance with the practice and the rules and that it would have to follow the form in which it now appears. So I changed the drafting of my amendment to conform with the practice and the rules of the House as officially given to me by the officers of the House after consultation with His Honour the Speaker.

Mr. CANNON: If my hon. friend will allow me? There is a distinction. I never contended that my hon. friend's amendment was not in order, but I say it is not the only amendment that could be brought in.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not quarrelling with my hon. friend at all. In fact, I am most happy to find that our minds flow in the same channel.

Mr. CANNON: Let them continue to do so.

Mr. STEVENS: I am pointing out precisely the course that was followed. It is scarcely —shall I say?—playing cricket to tell me now that my amendment is in such a form that it permits another hon. gentleman to move the subamendment which has just been read, thus virtually denying to the House consideration of the main amendment which has been under debate for a couple of days. I feel great confidence, Sir, in submitting to your judgment this contention. For the sake of argument we will assume that there is some ambiguity in the rules, and that hon. gentlemen might be able to argue from those rules that this amendment to the amendment is in order. Then I submit to you, Sir, an argument which I think will appeal to you and indeed to the House: that it is never intended by the rules of parliament to prevent the House giving an expression of opinion on a subject matter that is placed before it in the form of an amendment to a main motion. In other words, the rules of the House are so designed, or at least intended to be so applied, that the House can give a fair expression of opinion upon the subject matter that may be placed before it for its consideration and debate. Therefore, I beg to impress upon Your Honour the thought that inasmuch as the subamendment will effectively and definitely prevent the House giving any expression of opinion upon the original amendment, it should stand and the will of the House be secured on the original amendment. If this amendment is lost, then the subamendment may properly be moved as an amendment to the original motion.

Mr. MARCIL: Mr. Speaker, any member of the House who objects to the subamendment has an easy way of registering his objections—by voting against it. The moment the subamendment is disposed of the original amendment can be voted on.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Supposing a member has no objection to the subamendment, why should he be asked to vote against it?

Mr. STEVENS: Will my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) permit me? I know that he has had a wide parliamentary experience. Following up what my right hon. leader has just said, with some of the terms of the subamendment I am in accord, indeed I have already voted in the committee in favour of part of it; but if I vote for the subamendment now, I effectively do away with the main amendment which I myself have moved, and thus prevent any expression of opinion upon it. This I think is not intended by any of the rules of the House.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Speaker, before you give your ruling may I emphasize again what has already probably been stated pretty fully? At page 266 of the twelfth edition of May, speaking of an amendment to an amendment, the rule is distinctly set forth:

An amendment to a proposed amendment cannot be moved, if it proposes to leave out all the words of such proposed amendment: but in such a case the first amendment must be negatived before the second can be offered.

Now the only words left in this amendment are the introductory words, that is,

That all the words after the word "instructions" in the third line of the amendment be struck out and the following be substituted therefor;

These are the words up to "instructions":

That the report be not now adopted, but that it be referred back to the special committee with instructions—

That is the ordinary form which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre was forced to take by the rules of the House. All the rest of the subamendment as proposed is absolutely different from the original amendment. I think it is absolutely without question that the subamendment is a complete reversal of the original amendment, and certainly is not in accord with the rule laid down by May which I have just quoted.

Mr. LAPOINTE: May I also crave the indulgence of the House for another word in answer to my hon. friend? It is exactly the purpose of a subamendment to do what he has just mentioned—to give to those members who object to vote either for or against the motions that are before the House, and who prefer some alteration to those motions, the right to move a subamendment. I quote again from the twelfth edition of May at page 258:

The object of an amendment may be to effect such an alteration in a question as will obtain the support of those who, without such alteration, must either vote against it or abstain from voting thereon, or to present to the House an alternative proposition either wholly or partially opposed to the original question.

Mr. MEIGHEN: May I interrupt my hon. friend?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Really I do not wish to have a discussion with my right hon. friend at this point. I am closing my remarks.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Go ahead.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is merely for the purpose of entitling my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre in the present instance, he not being satisfied to vote either for the main motion without any addition to it or for the amendment of my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre, to offer an alternative—an alteration of the main amendment that will express what he has in mind.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend the Minister of Justice has put forward a case which on reconsideration I am sure he will agree with me will not hold water. The effect of this subamendment is of the greatest importance. The question is: are we entitled to have the opinion of this House upon a definite matter moved by a member in this House? Those hon. members who are opposed to the motion as moved by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre are in no way prejudiced; they can vote against it if it does not meet with their approval; then it is open to any hon. member to move another amendment that does. But the object of the proposed amendment now—

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): That is no argument.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Will my hon. friend allow me? The effect of the present motion is to deprive the member who has moved the main amendment of any decision on the question which we have debated for two days. Only the framework of the original amendment is left by the proposed subamendment.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): Not at all.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The substance is entirely removed. Take the case of hon. members who are in favour of the subamendment, who agree with almost all it contains, but it does not go far enough; they say: shall we vote for it, and thus deny ourselves the opportunity of voting upon the main motion?

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): You are arguing as to the effect, not as to the rule.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am arguing as to the rule. The rule is for the purpose of allowing a definite question properly framed and laid before this House to be definitely decided. I submit that the rule is well established; it is in accordance with all parliamentary practice and usage, and no one should be allowed to circumvent it by merely allowing the framework to remain while the substance vanishes.

Mr. CAHAN: Might I be allowed just one observation? The statements of the hon. member are valid in so far as they apply to a sub-amendment which alters the amendment, which makes some addition to the amendment or subtracts something from it, but which does not substitute an entirely new clause. This is not an alteration; it is a substitution pure and simple, and comes under the rule which I quoted.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): Hon. gentlemen have been discussing the effect of this amendment as though they had read it with the greatest possible care. I might point out that I heard it read by the hon. gentleman who moved it and by Your Honour, and if I have any sense of what the proposal is it makes several distinct amendments to the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) instead of being an absolute substitution.

Mr. CAHAN: It is a complete substitution.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): Not at all; my hon. friend speaks with a great deal of positiveness, but I do not know where he gets his information.

Mr. CAHAN: I have read it; my hon. friend has not.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): If the hon. member makes amendments to several clauses of the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre—

Mr. MANION: But it is proposed to alter the report, not the amendment.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): If the amendment proposes to change in different respects the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre it is clear to me that under the citations already given it is well within the rules.

An hon. MEMBER: Who prepared it?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Someone asks who prepared it. I may say that it was prepared with the help of my colleague and was submitted to the officers of the House before being presented here, so it will be seen that we took reasonable precautions to make sure it was in order. On the point of order I would like to say that it seems to me there must be some reasonable opportunity given others than one group to decide as to what should be changed in a report of this character. Otherwise it would simply mean that an alteration could be made in one particular clause only, and the rest of the report could not be touched. This follows closely portions of the amendment. For example, the amendment itself says in one of its clauses:

> Your committee deplores the practice, as revealed by the evidence, of certain men influential in public life to direct appeals, to the minister to relax and depart from the proper administration of his department for reasons of political expediency.

The clause as we propose it is as follows:

> Your committee deplores the common practice as revealed by the evidence of members of parliament and others appealing to the minister to relax the regulations of the department for personal advantage or political expediency.

Our amendment seems to follow the lines of the original clause very closely, only in my humble judgment it is worded a little better than is the original.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is absolutely no difficulty; all the groups in the House have no difficulty in getting their motions brought forward. The hon. gentleman is in no difficulty, and as his argument was based upon such a difficulty I no longer refer to it. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) again is under no difficulty. He wants a chance to vote on this question; he can do it very well and legitimately by allowing the amendment to stand as it is and add this subamendment to it. There is no necessity to strike out the one thing which we have been debating for two days.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): You are not talking of the rules now.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend says I am not talking of the rules; I am trying to answer arguments which, possibly by some error, may have been thought to have something to do with the question. That argument was made by the minister and I am trying to answer it. That question can be voted on; this amendment to the amendment could be made an addition to the amendment. But, Mr. Speaker, apart from the fact that possibly the rules are so badly drawn, and possibly because they have been so badly administered sometimes, there is a danger that everything we have been doing for the past two or three days may be thrown away, and I want to pause for a moment or two. I submit to you, Sir, with much deference that the real governing idea of rules is to see that the House gets an opportunity of passing upon questions regularly submitted to it. This question has been submitted regularly and the House has the right to have the opportunity, as I submit, of passing upon the merits of the question which we all know—coming to realities and getting away from shams—to be the real question before the House. We submit that we have followed the practices of the past in this regard. It would indeed be unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, if by reason of the fact that the form adopted here is the form advised by the officials of the House, the plain right of the House to vote upon this question should be taken away; that is really what this whole argument amounts to. It is perfectly clear that if the subamendment had been put in the regular form followed by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre it would be entirely and absolutely out of order. If it had been put in that way all that would be left would be the word "that," but the advice of the officials of the House, fortified by your decision, Sir, and your direction, means that we put in the words "that the report be not now adopted but that it be referred back to the subcommittee with instructions"—technical words, having nothing to do with the real merits of the case. If the result be that by following that form the right which we would otherwise have is taken away, all I submit is that that result would be extremely unfortunate.

Mr. SPEAKER: Do any other hon. gentlemen desire to speak on the point of order? I have been in the chair since two o'clock yesterday afternoon, and I feel that I would not render justice to the case if I were to give my decision immediately. I would ask, as it is my right to ask, to postpone my decision until this afternoon at two o'clock. I want to give justice to all parties; the arguments on both sides have been very elaborate, and I would not feel justified in giving a ruling to-night.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) said that he had consulted officers of the House in drafting his amendment, and I said that the amendment was drafted in the proper form. I was not consulted with regard to the amendment to the amendment. I wish to say this because otherwise some hon. members might think that I had expressed an opinion on matters which are being debated by the House. It is the duty of the officers of the House to give information to all members—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. SPEAKER: —who come to them. I may say that I endorse absolutely the view taken by the officers of the House in regard to the drafting of this amendment. But I certainly would not like to have it thought that I had expressed any opinion on the merits of the question before the House. Of course I know the hon. member for Vancouver Centre had no sinister motive in making the statement he did.

Mr. STEVENS: I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I appreciate always the courtesy of being allowed to consult the officers of the House and it was in that connection I made the observation I did.

Mr. SPEAKER: Certainly, and the officers of the House are there for that particular purpose. I hope hon. gentlemen will not be disappointed if I do not give a ruling on this question to-night. After having been in the chair all day, and the present sitting having been extended to such a late hour, there is not sufficient time to consult the necessary precedents, authorities, and practice. Therefore I ask the indulgence of the House and the courtesy of being granted sufficient time to enable me to consider the question from every point of view and give a ruling which I hope will be satisfactory to all parties.

On motion of Mr. Rheaume the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 1.14 a.m. (Thursday).

The House met at two o'clock.

CUSTOMS INQUIRY

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE AND AMENDMENTS THERETO

The House resumed from Wednesday, June 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mercier (St. Henri) for concurrence in the report of the special committee appointed to investigate the Department of Customs and Excise, the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. Mr. Stevens, and the proposed amendment to the amendment of Mr. Woodsworth.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am now in a position to give a ruling on the point of order raised last night.

On the motion of Mr. Mercier (St. Henri) for concurrence in the final report of the special committee appointed to investigate the Department of Customs and Excise, Mr. Stevens moved that said report be referred back with instructions to add thereto certain clauses purporting that ministerial action had been influenced by improper pressure, with the knowledge of the Prime Minister and government, and that the conduct of the Hon. George H. Boivin in the case of Moses Aziz is entirely unjustifiable; and also deploring the practice of certain public men to direct appeals to the minister to relax and depart from the proper administration of his department for reasons of political expediency; and concluding that such a practice is detrimental to the best interests of the country and prejudicial to the administration of the department.

To this amendment a sub-amendment is moved proposing that certain words be struck out and replaced by others providing for the appointment of a judicial commission with full powers to continue and complete investigating the administration of the Department of Customs and Excise and to prosecute all offenders; stating that the practice of members of parliament and others appealing to the minister to relax departmental regulations was done also for personal advantage;

Suggesting that the administrative duties of the department be wholly entrusted to the executive officers;

And finally, recommending that R. R. Farrow's services should be dispensed with.

A point of order was raised by the Right Hon. Mr. Meighen on the ground that an amendment to an amendment must deal with nothing but the subject matter of the amendment. It was also argued that the adoption of the sub-amendment would prevent the House from pronouncing on the proposal contained in the amendment.

There can be no doubt in my mind as to the relevancy of the sub-amendment.

According to Bourinot (page 321) the law on the relevancy of amendments is that if they are on the same subject matter with the original motion, they are admissible, but not when foreign thereto.

The only exception to this practice, as the House is aware, is on the question of going into supply or ways and means.

The object of an amendment is to effect such an alteration in a question as will obtain the support of those who, without such alteration, must either vote against it or abstain from voting thereon, or (vide May 13th edition, page 283) to present to the House an alternative proposition either wholly or partially opposed to the original question.

The effect of making an amendment is for the time being to link the amendment with the main motion so that the subject matter of both is thereby placed under the consideration of the House.

Bearing this principle in mind, there can be little question in this instance that both the amendment and the sub-amendment refer to the inefficiency of administration in the Department of Customs and Excise. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre proposes a general censure of the ministerial conduct, and of the failure of the government to take prompt and effective remedial action. The proposal of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would eliminate that censure for the time being at any rate, and while appreciating all the existing evils as to smuggling, he asserts that only a portion of the illegal practices have been brought to light, and therefore recommends the appointment of a judicial commission to continue and complete the investigation. This is an amendment to an amendment, which affords the House the opportunity of voting upon an alternative proposition. There is no reason why such an amendment should be pronounced to be out of order.

It has been represented in the course of the debate on the point of order, that the possible elimination of the amendment would result in depriving hon. members supporting it from the right of directly recording their views by a vote in the House.

This is contradicted by long practice which is inherent to the British parliamentary system. May, page 254, 13th edition, says that it can not be contended that such a practice is unfair. After all, in the last analysis, the decision of the House is supreme. As long as Mr. Stevens has asserted his right to express his views by making his amendment he suffers no prejudice if Mr. Woodsworth using the same right, submits a sub-amendment asking the House to accept an alternative proposition.

My ruling, therefore, is that the sub-amendment is in order.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): During the past five months an important committee of this House has been inquiring into the administration of the Department of Customs and Excise, and has made a report to the House which contains a number of far-reaching recommendations looking to the improvement of methods for securing the revenues of the country and for the suppression of the evil of smuggling, which has come to be one of the great evils of modern times, and one of the greatest problems with which this country is faced. The House has before it the report of that committee, with a motion on the part of the chairman (Mr. Mercier, St. Henri) that the report be concurred in. May I say at once that, with respect to every recommendation in that report, the government is in entire accord. The government is prepared to give to the recommendations in the report as made the full force and effect which it was hoped by the members of the committee they would have. We accept the report as it comes, believing that it creates what, in the opinion of the members of the committee of this House, is most necessary in the interests of our country at the present time.

In addition to the report before the House there are two amendments, one an amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), which I think I might at once classify as a political amendment, as a partisan amendment and as a destructive amendment, and another—a sub-amendment—which you Mr. Speaker, have just ruled is regular in every particular and which I might classify as a constructive amendment, as a non-partisan amendment, as an amendment intended to further the work of the investigation which the House committee has been engaged upon and designed to make more effective the smuggling and revenue laws of our country. The House is called upon at this time to consider to which of these two amendments it will give adherence.

Before I go in any detail into the amendment, may I direct the attention of the House to the nature of the problem with which the committee has been dealing as well as its scope and magnitude? The problem in its essence is one created largely by a new condition that has developed on this continent within the last few years, grown, I think hon. members will agree, out of legal enactments in the country to the south of us and in our own country, which have made extremely difficult, particularly in relation to liquor and narcotics, the matter of protecting effectively the revenue laws of the country and preventing smuggling. May I remind the House that this problem is not peculiar to Canada? The United States of America has had to face this problem, and those of us who have any knowledge of the difficulty which the United States has had to contend with in facing it will be able to appreciate the great difficulty which confronts this country in relation to the same problem. May I draw the attention of the House to this fact: the boundary line between this country and the United States extends over a distance of something like 4,000 miles. We have in addition, as they have, a large boundary line contiguous to the ocean, and part of the boundary line between our two countries is in the nature of lakes and rivers, and part of it is simply coterminus territory; mountains, forest, prairie, and all other phases of physical geography go to make up this boundary line extending, as I say, 4,000 miles across the continent. To enforce the customs laws in this country that entire boundary has to be properly protected. If it is a difficult thing for the United States government to protect its boundary line against Canada, how much more difficult is it for our country to protect its boundary line against the United States? We are a people of nine or ten million sparsely settled and the United States a people of one hundred and ten million, with an infinitely larger production and denser population in their country. Our nine or ten million have to find officials, and have to form an administration which can protect this country against smuggling across that boundary of the Dominion from the larger number of people and the larger production on the other side. The Americans on their part, having a larger number of people, are in a position to afford a much more liberal and extensive preventive service than this country is able to afford, though they have not against their border the same pressure as we have from the other side. I mention this in order that the House may get a correct perspective of the magnitude of the problem.

The United States have found, that in order to cope with the question of smuggling, it has to increase its preventive service enormously. It has had to take measures of a class and character never hitherto contemplated by any other country. When it was my privilege to be present at the Imperial conference in England three years ago, one question that came before the conference was a request from the United States that for the purposes of the suppression of smuggling operations the right of search on ships should be extended to a distance of twelve miles, that the marine league should be extended so to speak, the distance of twelve miles, for the purpose of permitting vessels that were likely to be engaged in the rum-running business to be searched or apprehended by craft of the United States. There was a very important departure from anything which the British government had ever countenanced theretofore. England above all others has prided herself on her control of the seas and on the freedom of the seas, and the demand from another country that England should give up that right, even for any purpose, to extend the marine league from three to twelve miles, to permit vessels to be searched when under suspicion of rum running and the like, shows how considerable in extent and importance the governments of the two countries regarded this problem. I think I am not wrong when I say that the representatives of Canada at that Imperial conference appreciating the magnitude of this problem, helped not a little to bring about the decision which was ultimately reached, whereby the British Empire, with respect to vessels of British register, agreed to allow the American authorities that extension of the marine league from three to twelve miles, so that the abuse of smuggling might be more effectively combatted. The United States in the effort to combat that abuse and to stamp out the evil have found it necessary to employ part of their great navy and vastly to increase their preventive service on the high seas as well as on land. If the United States, as I have said, having a larger population than we have, have found it necessary to go to the extremes to which they have gone in the matter of seeking to prevent the evil of smuggling, this House will, I hope, appreciate the problem which the Department of Customs and Excise of Canada has had before it within the last few years in seeking to deal effectively with that problem. The number of officials in the Customs department is, I believe, something like 5,000. According to our theory of government the Minister of Customs is responsible for the administration of the affairs of that department, and if we are to judge from what has been said in the course of this debate his responsibility extends to the behaviour of every one of those many officials. I just put this before the House in order that hon. members may see for themselves something of the scope of the problem with which the government is faced.

May I add this further feature? From the days of confederation down to within the last couple of years our customs laws have not been materially changed; they have remained practically the same. Owing to the new conditions that have grown up there have sprung into being new evils which never existed before. When the United States as a great country declared for prohibition it created immediately on this continent a new problem with respect to the smuggling of liquor. That problem never existed in the same manner before; it fell to the lot of the present administration to cope for the first time, may I say, with all the evils that arose out of that situation because hon. gentlemen opposite while they were in office made no change in the laws in any particular; they kept the laws just as they were from the days of confederation down to the present time. This government undertook to face that problem and to seek to meet it. Therefore I contend that instead of being criticised for lack of ministerial attention to this matter, when the facts are known this House will discover reasons for congratulation that the government has been more than vigilant in coping with this menace.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

May I invite the attention of the House for a moment to evidence in support of what I have just said? Our attention was first directed to this question of smuggling between the two countries in connection with an effort to negotiate between the United States and ourselves a treaty which would be helpful to both countries in suppressing smuggling across the international frontier. I will not go into the details of the negotiations that were conducted; but I hold in my hand a treaty for the suppression of smuggling operations along the international boundary between the Dominion of Canada and the United States and assisting in the arrest and prosecution of persons violating the narcotic laws of either country and for kindred purposes.

That treaty was negotiated during 1923; it was signed at Washington on the 6th day of June, 1924. That treaty of itself and the convention which supplemented it between His Britannic Majesty in respect of the Dominion of Canada and the United States for the extradition of offenders against the laws for the suppression of traffic in narcotics—those two international agreements are evidence irrefutable of the fact that the government of this country was seeking to deal with this problem of smuggling across the borders in the manner in which it could be most effectively dealt with, namely, by agreement between the two governments as to steps that were to be taken to secure the enforcement of revenue laws.

After the negotiation of those international agreements the attention of the government as a government was drawn for the first time to the growth of the smuggling evil as it affected commercial interests in this country by a group of gentlemen who came to Ottawa to interview the administration with reference to the growth of smuggling in Canada. Mr. Sparks was chairman of the group who came to interview the government. My recollection is that this was in the fall of 1924; it may have been and possibly it was earlier in 1924 that this delegation representative largely of the manufacturing interests of the country, came to Ottawa and drew the attention of the government to the circumstance that owing to the smuggling of liquor coming to be the problem it was, numerous persons had become engaged in that traffic in an illicit way. Having become engaged in it, to all intents and purposes they had become professional smugglers and, while seeking to export liquor in one direction, they were seeking to bring back in the other direction, namely, to Canada, other commodities. Silks, automobiles, tobacco, narcotics were, I think, the items that were specially mentioned.

The point that was developed in the course of the meeting with that body of gentlemen was this: That in their opinion the matter could be effectively met only if the government were prepared to co-operate with a voluntary association which they were ready to bring into being if that was agreeable to the government. I wish the House to keep this clearly in mind because it lies at the basis of all that has since developed. The government was asked by this association, representative mostly of large manufacturing interests in this country, whether it would be agreeable to having a voluntary association formed to work in co-operation with the government for the apprehension of offenders against the revenue laws, for the suppression of smuggling, and for bringing about more effective legislation to meet that evil.

What was the attitude of the government towards that delegation? Did the government say: No, we have our own preventive service, our own Customs department, our own officers. We ourselves will look after the suppression of smuggling and the protection of the revenue laws. The government did not take that position. It took the position that it would welcome any and every co-operation that could be given in helping to suppress this evil and finding more effective means of preventing it. The government took the position that those gentlemen were all financially interested in seeking to suppress smuggling, and that being financially interested, they were the ones most likely to be able to make suggestions that would most effectively help to deal with the situation.

How did the government show its bona fides in this matter? The association had its own officers. First the government agreed to co-operate and then to assist financially and in other ways. They asked the government if it would place other officers at their disposal. They wanted secret service men. The government undertook to give to them the one secret service man in the Department of Finance, Inspector Duncan, a detective who is known throughout the length and breadth of this country as one who has been for many years inspector of police forces in Ontario. I need not enlarge on Inspector Duncan's standing as a detective in this country. The government said: We will turn over to you Inspector Duncan if he is the one you want. We will lend him to you; we will give him authority to engage other detectives to assist him, and we will co-operate in every way with you and him in seeking to find out where this evil of smuggling is latent, to suppress it in every way and to enact better legislation.

The Commercial Protective Association went to work with Detective Duncan and two or three others whom he employed. They brought criminal experts from different parts of the continent and had them working as a body on this problem day and night. The point I wish to call to the attention of the House is this: Inspector Duncan and his co-operators were to report to the Commercial Protective Association and in this the government did not seek to restrain them. On the contrary, the government strove to give to the association the freest hand to make out its case, and to facilitate the placing at the disposal of the Commercial Protective Association all the information that could possibly be secured, knowing that the association would come to the government again with measures which in their judgment it was essential to have enacted. That was the form of co-operation adopted. One of the first requests made after the detective forces had begun to work in the manner I have described was that power to arrest should be given to these detectives similar to those of the regular preventive officers in the customs service. It was deemed necessary to empower the detectives to make arrests on the spot whenever they found anyone guilty of violating the laws. That power was granted to enable the detective organization co-operating with the Commercial Protective Association to cope with the situation under the most advantageous conditions.

What was the next step? Members of the Commercial Protective Association then waited upon the government in a body, and afterwards, through Mr. Sparks its representative, communicated with the government in writing regarding the need of special legislation. I desire to direct the attention of the House particularly to that point. After the matter had been investigated by detectives and trained criminal experts throughout the course of a number of months, the Commercial Protective Association came to the government and represented that what was most needed was legislation to make punishable, by imprisonment rather than merely by fine, infractions of the customs and revenue laws. Indeed, they went further; they declared that until the law was so amended it was impossible effectively to meet the situation. They stated that 90 per cent of the entire evil could be met provided the laws were amended in accordance with suggestions which they were prepared to submit to the government. How was that request received? I shall give in a few minutes from the correspondence proof of what I am now saying. The government met that request by asking the Commercial Protective Association to draft such legislation as its officers thought would be most effective. Now I ask, could the government possibly have taken a more effective way of dealing with the problem than by requesting those most concerned to draft the legislation themselves? I was asked by the chairman of the association whether the government would be agreeable to having the association's legal adviser undertake the work of drafting the legislation, and this request was also acceded to. As a matter of fact, every single request made in that regard was met to the full. And not only did the government concede to the protective association and its legal advisers the drafting of the law, but we came to this parliament with the law so drafted, the only intervention on the part of the government being this: that the legislation was submitted to the Department of Customs in the first instance for any criticism of a technical character and then transferred to the Department of Justice to be put into proper shape for presentation to the House. In every respect the law brought down in this House at the last session was the law which the Commercial Protective Association suggested would meet 90 per cent of the evil.

I need not recall to those who were in the House during the last session that I stood up in parliament myself and strongly advocated the enactment of that law. I called the attention of the House to the fact that the country was face to face with a condition in relation to smuggling of a magnitude such as few could comprehend, and I urged from my place here that that legislation should be immediately passed. When the legislation was before the House it was opposed by some hon. gentlemen opposite as being too drastic, as going too far. One has only to refer to the debates to find that more than one hon. gentleman opposite complained that it was too drastic and was going altogether too far. But the position which the government took in that regard was that all along they had promised co-operation with the Commercial Protective Association, having indeed asked that association to draft the legislation. The government was therefore prepared to give the proposed legislation a fair trial and if it was too drastic it could be amended.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. MANION: I do not remember anyone on this side opposing the legislation at the time. I may be mistaken and perhaps the Prime Minister will mention an instance.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Possibly I could give my hon. friend the pages of Hansard at which hon. gentlemen opposite are reported.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I do not think the minister made it plain whether or not the association accepted his offer of co-operation. If there is any document to that effect it might be well to have it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The association accepted the proposal and thanked the government very much for it.

The hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) was one of the members of the House who objected to the legislation. I find in Hansard, page 3775, the following:

> Mr. Hanson: What is the reason for doing away with the power of remission? I presume it is intended to make it a little more stringent, but I can suggest cases in which it might be out of proportion. Suppose it were a trifling article which might have a certain value of affection; to take away from the minister the power of remission might result in hardship. I presume the object is to prevent the minister being harrassed to death by friends of the smugglers. After all, the minister can use a wise discretion in matters of this kind. I think it is perhaps going too far to provide that there shall be no power of remission. I think it is misplaced and I object to it on that ground.

What was the reply of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) then Acting Minister of Customs?

> Mr. Cardin: I quite agree it is very severe, but it has been prepared with a view to meet representations made by people interested in legitimate trade. Complaints coming from the trade are very numerous, and they are very insistent in this matter. These amendments have been practically suggested by persons who have been in the trade, and we thought that doing away with the powers of remission would act as a sort of deterrent.

Elsewhere the hon. member for York-Sunbury is reported as saying:

> It developed in the course of the next few days that the American vendor had undervalued the machines. He had got his cheque and passed out of the country and the machines were seized. They were released on the deposit of a large sum of money. I think the Commissioner of Customs demanded $30,000. After a good deal of negotiation we got that sum reduced to about $10,000, which was about double duty, if I recollect rightly.

He cites a case of which he had special knowledge as evidence that the power should not be taken away.

Then I have before me the words of Mr. Baxter, the then member for St. John and Albert the present Premier of New Brunswick.

Mr. STEVENS: Surely the Prime Minister does not suggest that this inquiry by the hon. member for York-Sunbury as to the nature of the legislation could be looked upon as opposition to its enactment? I would remind the right hon. gentleman that this legislation was offered to the House without publicity, shall I say, and we were requested as a whole to give support which my right hon. leader and others of us cheerfully accorded. The inquiry of the hon. member for York-Sunbury was an intelligent one as to the possible working of the act.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The words in Hansard speak for themselves. This government brought down legislation proposing to do away with the power of remission. The report at present before the House allows the power of remission up to a certain amount. There is now submitted an amendment suggesting that the power should be done away with altogether. That amendment was moved by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and I for one shall support it. In that particular it proposes what this government wished to have enacted before. The concluding part of Mr. Hanson's remarks are as follows:

> The rules of the department, the Customs Act, and the regulations under which they work are very rigourous at present, but this seems to me to be going the limit, and in the case I suggest it would create a great hardship.

Then Mr. Baxter, now the Premier of New Brunswick, and who was formerly Minister of Customs in the administration of my right hon. friend, says:

> I want to urge him—

That is, the minister.

> —to strike out the words which deprive the minister of the power of remission. I do not think it is likely to happen that we shall have a minister of the crown who would use the power of remission unfairly.

Then he goes on to say:

> During the very short experience I had in the department which the minister is now administering I came across one or two cases in which, without the slightest representation from the parties themselves, but merely on reading the evidence that accompanied the papers for formal signature to confirm the forfeitures, I felt that it was morally unjust to impose the whole penalty.

That is the former Minister of Customs in the administration of my right hon. friend. Let me repeat his words:

> I felt that it was morally unjust to impose the whole penalty.

He continues:

> In one case I felt it was unjust to impose the penalty at all, while in the other I did not think it should be imposed to the full.

There we have the Minister of Customs in the administration of my right hon. friend very clearly stating that he felt that where penalties had been imposed he should exercise certain discretionary power, and he admits that he exercised it in part in one case and to the full in the other. We were suggesting at that time that this discretionary power should be taken away from the minister. We were prepared to enact that, and the only reason it did not become law was due partly to the opposition of hon. gentlemen in this House, which was not wholly successful, and partly to the bill being amended in the upper chamber so as to exclude the more rigorous clauses that we had introduced.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I ask the Prime Minister if he has been careful to look that up. My recollection is that an amendment was moved by Senator Belcourt and seconded by Senator Beique, and pressed for considerable time. Neither of those gentlemen are Conservative senators. Finally the amendment was withdrawn under pressure from the Commercial Protective Association, and the bill went through.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think if my right hon. friend will look at the legislation as it came back from the Senate he will find it was amended in the particulars I have mentioned.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What particulars?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That the bill when it came back was not as drastic as when it went through this House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In what particular?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: With respect to remission.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Prime Minister is wrong.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend can speak later. I would refer hon. members to the bill as it passed this House and to the act as it is now in force. They will, I think, find the result is as I have indicated.

Mr. STEVENS: The Prime Minister is mistaken there.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not mistaken, Mr. Speaker, in the language I have read from Hansard with respect to the debate that took place in this House. The point I want to make perfectly clear is that this government was seeking in the fullest way to meet the requests and the demands of the Commercial Protective Association, with which it had been co-operating, for the purpose of making as effective as possible the law with respect to smuggling and the prevention of offences against the revenue law.

What I have just told the House, Mr. Speaker, is confirmed by the correspondence, some of which has been read, in part, by hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) read this extract from a letter dated Ottawa, February 4, 1925, addressed to me by Mr. Sparks:

Some months ago a large representative deputation waited upon you and members of your cabinet pointing out that smuggling and under-valuation for duty purposes were causing an immense loss of revenue and seriously interfering with the business of legitimate traders and manufacturers.

On that and similar statements he tries in his amendment which is now before the House to have it appear that the ministry had full knowledge of what was going on in the way of violation of the smuggling laws, and that it ought now to be subject to censure because it did not meet the whole situation. Assuredly the protective association brought to the attention of the government the evils of smuggling as they have described them. I have not to go further than my speech in this House when we were putting through the law, and which has been repeatedly referred to in the course of this debate, to make it clear to hon. members that I accepted everything the protective association said to me with regard to smuggling and sought to meet their wishes in having the law made as nearly in full accord with them as possible. But my hon. friend did not read the next paragraph of the letter from which he quoted:

Subsequent to that time this association was organized—

In other words, a group of men came to the government and asked if we would be agreeable to have an association formed and to work in co-operation with that association. We said yes, and that was the agreement we then made. The association was formed, and the Minister of Customs and Excise undertook to co-operate with its officers in the work they had in hand.

Subsequent to that time this association was organized for the purpose of assisting the Department of Customs and Excise in the prevention of smuggling and under-valuation and to make certain investigations of their own into this problem. In this regard—

This is what my hon. friend did not read.

In this regard we are pleased to say that both the Minister and Deputy Minister of Customs have welcomed our co-operation and have facilitated in every possible way the investigations we have made into the smuggling problem.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Now when hon. gentlemen attack the government and say we were aware of a great deal of degeneracy in the administration of the Customs department, I wish to tell them that on February 4, 1925, the date of this letter, the Commercial Protective Association, which knew more about the situation than any other body, said to the government—let me repeat the passage:

In this regard we are pleased to say that both the Minister and Deputy Minister of Customs have welcomed our co-operation and have facilitated in every possible way the investigations we have made into the smuggling problem.

Then they say:

These investigations have even more strongly impressed the business men who have given close attention to this work with the magnitude of this traffic and the necessity of prompt and drastic action.

Under the present law smuggling is not an indictable offence, although the minister has the right to take cases of smuggling into the civil courts. It has, however, been the practice ever since confederation to settle departmentally practically all seizures for smuggling or under-valuation.

I ask hon. members to notice that phrase, "ever since confederation."

We believe that this practice has had the general effect of what might not be improperly described as contempt for the law in this regard.

There is a practice that has existed from the time of confederation, and it was the practice which we sought to change, and did change, and as a result of our efforts we improved the law governing the Department of Customs and Excise. The letter continues:

We respectfully submit that, in order to maintain respect for the law and to correct the abuse of its infraction, all cases of fraud whether by way of smuggling or under-valuation under the Customs Act should be dealt with by the civil courts, and, in the case of what might be described as commercial smuggling, that is smuggling of goods for resale of a substantial value, say $100 or over, the offence should be made punishable by imprisonment without the option of a fine. The various penalties as set out in the act at present are entirely inadequate. The preventive service as at present constituted is quite unable to cope with the situation, handicapped as they are by existing laws and regulations which interfere with effective preventive work.

Now I ask hon. members, is the government to be blamed for that system which has been in existence ever since confederation? Is the government to be blamed for the fact that, as this letter states:

The preventive service as at present constituted is quite unable to cope with the situation, handicapped as they are by existing laws and regulations which interfere with effective preventive work.

Those are the laws we were working to change, those are the laws we have changed, and we welcomed the co-operation of this association towards that end. Now may I read another sentence in this same letter:

We believe the only solution of the problem will be found in drastic punishment for smugglers when caught.

That was the one note continually emphasized by this association. Now, to make the position clear, may I say this. If the government had turned a deaf ear to these representations we might well stand here subject to censure by an amendment of hon. gentlemen opposite, but instead of turning a deaf ear we did the very opposite. We co-operated to the full; I do not say we promised to co-operate, we have on the statutes legislation passed last session the evidence of the effectiveness of that co-operation. Let me read one more paragraph:

It is respectfully submitted that the conditions herein set forth are sufficiently well known to the government and to its departmental officers and the requested forms of relief so necessary and reasonable as to justify the government to take immediate action, by instituting the required departmental changes and submitting to parliament bills providing for necessary legislative enactment, or, if the government is not satisfied as to the necessity of action and the action which should be taken, it is respectfully submitted that a parliamentary committee should be appointed immediately to inquire into the necessity of departmental and legislative changes.

The government was satisfied from the representations of the association that legislation was necessary; the government being satisfied introduced legislation and had it passed through this House.

Other passages have been referred to and quoted. Here let me pause to say that while the enactment of legislation was the main objective of this association there was one additional factor brought to the attention of the government by Mr. Sparks. He contended that the preventive officer at Montreal, Mr. Bisaillon, was not discharging his duties properly and should be dismissed. So far as I am aware this was the only official named by Mr. Sparks or the association in any communication to the government either written or verbal, and the correspondence, while it relates to this officer, relates also to the larger question of legislation. I will deal in a moment with the case of Mr. Bisaillon, but I mention it now so hon. members may see that when the government was being interviewed by Mr. Sparks the two questions were put to the fore, and the one to which the greatest prominence was attached was the matter of legislation.

3 p.m.

On February 26 Mr. Sparks wrote to me as follows; this was also quoted by my hon. friend opposite:

Might I take the opportunity of stating that, after four months investigation by a staff of trained criminal investigators, we are convinced that at least half of the smuggling now going on could be prevented within a month by an energetic policy on behalf of the department, and further that, with necessary amendments to the act, ninety per cent of the smuggling could ultimately be prevented. Might I further express the opinion that smuggling is increasing at an alarming rate, rather than decreasing, as the minister states.

The reason for the comment on the minister is that one afternoon in this House the Minister of Customs and Excise spoke of the difficulty of coping with the situation, and made the remark that he believed it to be impossible effectively to combat the evil, but he believed it to be lessening. That comment was taken up by Mr. Sparks in the manner here mentioned. The meaning of the minister's words was subsequently explained to the House by the Hon. Mr. Graham. I am directing the attention of the House to the fact that what the association was anxious to secure, and what they stated would remedy 90 per cent of the evil, was the necessary amendments to the law.

I will not take the time of the House in attempting to go through the correspondence, but I submit that the correspondence as a whole discloses that in every particular the government was seeking to meet Mr. Sparks and the protective association in the proposals which they made. One hon. member opposite drew attention to the fact that some of these letters were not fully acknowledged. May I say, and I think hon. members will appreciate the fact, that these letters were written and received while parliament was in session. Anyone who appreciates the position I am holding at the moment will realize that it is not possible for a prime minister with the many other matters he has in hand, to keep up correspondence day by day, particularly correspondence as voluminous as this. Especially is this not necessary if a more effective means of dealing with the situation is at hand. During the period of this correspondence, as is shown by the correspondence itself, not on every occasion, but I think on most cases when I received a communication from Mr. Sparks I had my secretary call Mr. Sparks over to my office. He would meet me and we would discuss the matter in my office, and I would make verbal answer to his communications. Of this there is ample evidence in the correspondence. For example, when Mr. Sparks spoke about the necessity of amendments to the law I told him that we would welcome suggestions from the association. Take the letter of March 13:

In further reference to your suggestion that we should put before the committee of the cabinet concrete suggestions as to the amendments to the Customs Act dealing with the matter of smuggling, I beg to say that we are now prepared to do this at any time that suits your convenience.

If agreeable to you, I would be glad to have Mr. H. D. McCormick accompany me as a technical adviser.

And then he goes on:

I am taking the liberty of enclosing a copy of a resolution passed at the annual meeting of the Canadian Association of Garment Manufacturers, which you will note expressess appreciation of the efforts already made by the government to prevent this traffic and urges further action.

I understand Mr. Sparks at the time was president of the Canadian Association of Garment Manufacturers. Here is a resolution passed at the annual meeting of that association held at the Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, on March 11 and 12, 1925. Let me read the concluding words, in order to show how, from the point of view of Mr. Sparks and his association, the matter stood in March of last year:

This association further desires to put on record its opinion that the only satisfactory method by which this illegal traffic can be lessened and prevented is such changes in the Customs Act as will increase the penalties against those convicted of smuggling or undervaluation, and that, in the case of wholesale smuggling of merchandise for resale, the penalty should be a sentence to jail without the option of a fine.

This association desires to go on record as expressing appreciation of such action as has already been taken by the federal government to lessen this evil, and endorses the suggestion made to the government by the Commercial Protective Association for further action in reference to amendments to the Customs Act and strengthening of the preventive service.

I ask the House to consider whether that resolution indicates that in the mind of Mr. Sparks himself at that date the government was remiss in the administration of the Department of Customs and Excise or in what it was seeking to do to improve the revenue laws of this country. I venture to say that that resolution was drafted by Mr. Sparks himself. The truth of the matter is that the protective association did believe and were right in believing that the government was doing its utmost and was co-operating with them to the fullest possible extent.

Mr. CAHAN: May I ask the date of that resolution?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This resolution was passed at a meeting of the Canadian Association of Garment Manufacturers held at the Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, on March 11 and 12, 1925.

I just want to interject a word here, which I will amplify later. Up to that time Hon. Mr. Bureau was actively administering the affairs of the department. His health broke down in the early part of last year, thereafter he was largely absent from the department on the advice of his medical adviser, and the department was administered by an acting minister. I just interject that point at the moment to make clear the relationship, as it was understood by the government, that existed at that time between the Commercial Protective Association and the then Minister of Customs and Excise. A resolution of thanks was passed by the association of which Mr. Sparks was the head, for the co-operation that its officers and members were getting from the department and from the minister.

I will not read at the moment but will quote one passage from a letter of April 8, 1925. In this letter Mr. Sparks says:

I beg to enclose herewith a memorandum covering proposed amendments to the Customs Act, as recently discussed with you—

Showing that while these letters were not answered he was coming to me as Prime Minister. I had suggested to him to get his amendments drafted and that I would see that the government would put through the legislation that was requested and I was expediting and facilitating the move in every possible way. In the same letter Mr. Sparks goes on to say:

These suggested amendments have been submitted to the officers of the department, and, while they do not feel it their duty to express an opinion as to their desirability, they do state that they present no administrative difficulties. The object of nearly all of these amendments is to increase the penalties against those proven guilty of infractions of the Customs Act.

Hon. gentlemen may ask why these amendments were discussed with me? I have just given the reason. The minister of the department was away, and I took the responsibility as Prime Minister to see that the evils complained of were as far as might be possible effectively remedied. I was determined that this parliament should go just as far as it could possibly go in the matter of prosecuting those guilty of smuggling and infractions of the customs law. The letter says elsewhere:

While these suggested amendments may appear drastic, I would like to point out that legislators have never before been called upon to deal with such a situation. The condition exhibited by the United States, a nation with about sixteen thousand miles of border or coastline, along practically all of which smugglers (commonly called bootleggers) by the hundreds of thousands are endeavouring to evade the laws of the country, creates a situation entirely unprecedented in the history of the world.

That is the view Mr. Sparks took of the problem the government had in hand—"a situation entirely unprecedented in the history of the world."

Smuggling on this continent has become a huge industry. Along the international border between Canada and the United States thousands of men are making their living by illicit trade. The step between smuggling from Canada into the United States and from the United States into Canada is a short one, and a large part of the smuggling of commodities into Canada is directly due to the fact that smuggling has become a profession in which there are many adepts.

After months of investigation by trained investigators we have no hesitation in saying that this traffic constitutes a national problem of the very first importance. Our investigations have proved to our complete satisfaction that the only successful way in which this traffic can be discouraged is by the imposition of the most severe penalties. Along a border of nearly four thousand miles the physical act of bringing goods from the United States into Canada will never be difficult. To-day it is neither difficult nor dangerous, owing to the insufficiency of the penalties. We believe that no legislation will add much to the difficulties, but the legislation which we propose certainly will make it dangerous for those who are caught.

We believe there are certain matters of administration in the matter of enforcement which could be greatly improved. However, until the act is amended along the lines suggested the departmental officials, no matter how efficient, will be unable to cope with the situation.

Now there is the note which the Commercial Protective Association, as I said before, was sounding continually. It was impossible for the officials of the government to deal with the matter until the legislation itself was changed, and the legislation, as I have said, was changed in accordance with the methods which this association thought were most advisable. The correspondence goes on to show that the draft bill was submitted first of all to the Department of Customs and Excise for their approval or rather for their comment. I had undertaken to see that the bill would be put through but there were some technical considerations of administration and drafting that had to be met. After a reference to the Department of Justice the bill was drafted and full approval was given to it by Mr. Sparks on behalf of the Commercial Protective Association before it was brought into the House.

Now may I quote in support of this statement a letter, dated April 17, which was addressed to Mr. Farrow and signed by Mr. Lemaire, Clerk of the Privy Council:

Dear Mr. Farrow,

I am directed by the Right Hon. the Prime Minister to forward you the enclosed communication which he has received from Mr. R. P. Sparks, chairman of the executive committee of the Commercial Protective Association, and to which is attached a memorandum covering certain proposed amendments to the Customs Act.

It is the desire of the Prime Minister that you should go carefully into this matter at the earliest moment and forward it with any comment which you may deem necessary to the Honourable the Minister of Justice by whose department as agreed by council the necessary legislation will be drafted.

Yours sincerely,

E. J. Lemaire,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

That course was taken and the bill was brought into the House. I desire to read one other communication which will indicate how Mr. Sparks felt with respect to my own attitude towards the association. This is a letter which was written to the Premier of Quebec, in which Mr. Sparks sets out his view of the manner in which the government at Ottawa was co-operating with him. This letter is dated March 5, 1925 and reads as follows:

Hon. L. A. Taschereau,
Prime Minister and Attorney General of Quebec,
Quebec, P.Q.

Dear Sir,—I am taking the liberty of writing you on behalf of the executive committee of this association in reference to the prosecution of smugglers in the courts of the province of Quebec and with special reference to the case of Abraham and Israel Lenetsky, arrested on March 2nd.

I shall omit the next paragraph but the following is pertinent:

You expressed the view that the most satisfactory solution of the difficulty would be an amendment to the Customs Act making a jail sentence compulsory in cases in which wholesale smuggling had been proven. This recommendation has been put before the federal government, and the whole matter of amendments to the Customs Act is being dealt with by a committee of the cabinet, of which the Prime Minister is a member. Mr. King is taking an active interest in this matter, and I am taking the liberty of suggesting that, if you felt disposed to write him expressing the opinions which you expressed to the delegation in reference to this matter, he would appreciate it. I can assure you it would be greatly appreciated by the whole business community.

I was taking an interest in the matter because in the first place the minister was absent much of the time, but primarily because I regarded this as probably the greatest problem which the country has before it at the present time.

In his speech the other day the member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell) said that the Commercial Protective Association, together with the boards of trade of Montreal and Toronto, had appealed to this government but had appealed in vain. The hon. member was speaking in support of the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Stevens) which says that the Prime Minister and his colleagues have been indifferent in this matter. Well, I happen to have a communication from the Toronto Board of Trade. It is not dated April or May but bears the much later date of July 13, 1925. I will read this communication, which is signed by the president of the Toronto Board of Trade.

Mr. STEVENS: Who is a Liberal.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say that the delegation that waited on the government was composed in large part of representative business men of the city of Toronto, members of the board of trade and other bodies, who were watching the actions of this government in every detail in dealing with this matter. So convinced were they of the splendid manner —I use the term advisedly,—in which the government had sought to meet them and carry through their desires that the expression I am about to read came unsolicited from the Board of Trade's president. The communication reads as follows:

On behalf of the executive and council of the Toronto Board of Trade, I desire to express appreciation of the action of the government in introducing legislation at the recent session increasing the penalties for the smuggling of goods into Canada and including in the estimates a substantial sum to enable the preventive service to be so strengthened and improved as to be able to cope with this illegitimate traffic. We are also gratified that the House of Commons and Senate have accepted the government's recommendations and that the new law is now in force.

You will remember that a deputation from this board waited upon you and your colleagues in the cabinet last fall and discussed the seriousness of the smuggling situation with you. You then expressed the desire of the government to do everything in its power to combat the inroads which the smugglers were making into the legitimate trade and revenues of the country and you welcomed the co-operation to this end of an organization of business interests which it was then proposed to form. Acting on this assurance, the members of this board comprising the delegation organized the Toronto branch of the Commercial Protective Association. We were very pleased to note from your remarks in the House with respect to the proposed new legislation that you appreciated the vast proportions of this traffic and the need for drastic action. We have been in close touch with the association's work and it has been a great pleasure for this board to learn that the government has co-operated to the fullest extent with the result that adequate machinery to deal with the smuggling menace will, we understand, shortly be in operation. We are informed of the fact that the new penalties are already in force has had a very deterrent effect upon the traffic and we sincerely hope that in connection with the reorganization of the preventive service which is now under way, the dominant note will be the strict enforcement of the law in the interests of the lawful commerce of the Dominion and an increased national revenue which in turn will be reflected in an improvement in economic conditions generally.

We congratulate and thank you for your efforts in the solution of this problem and assure you of the continued co-operation and support of this board in curtailing the smuggling traffic with the aid of the new powers now available, I am,

Yours very truly,

S. B. GUNDY,
President.

That letter is dated July 13, of last year. I have other communications here, but I will not take up time reading them.

Mr. CAHAN: Is that the Toronto Board of Trade?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. I say that if in July of that year the Commercial Protective Association, composed largely of members of the Toronto Board of Trade, had any doubt as to the genuineness of what the government were doing and seeking to do, they never would have permitted a communication of that kind to be sent, but they realized, as I believe the public is prepared to realize, that where a government attempts to cope with a great problem of this kind, if the national interest is to be served, it is better to strengthen the arm of the government than to seek to impair it and destroy it, as hon. members opposite are trying to do by the amendment they have proposed.

I think I have covered all that I need to say with regard to the major effort of the association, namely that of procuring the enactment of laws that would effectively cope with the situation. As I have said, another matter came up in the course of my interviews with Mr. Sparks and members of the association, and that was the advisability of dismissing the preventive officer at Montreal, Mr. Bisaillon. Mr. Sparks mentioned to me that in his opinion this officer was not doing his duty as it should be done and that he should be dismissed. I said to Mr. Sparks, "This is a departmental matter. Have you spoken to the minister about it?" He intimated to me that he had, and that the minister took the position that the officer was performing his duties, that there was no charge made against him of any kind, and if there was a charge he would have it investigated. In regard to that I asked Mr. Sparks if he did not feel that the position the minister was taking with respect to discharging the man was a reasonable position. I have forgotten the answer he gave, but it was to the effect, at any rate, that this one officer should be dismissed, and that if he were dismissed, as far as he, Mr. Sparks, was concerned he would be perfectly satisfied with all the rest. Now I pause here for a moment to ask the House to consider the position of a minister of the crown and the Prime Minister in dealing with officials of the public service. May I say—and I do it without fear of contradiction—that with respect to the different departments of the public service, there is not a department where a man is holding a public position in which sooner or later he does not come in conflict with certain parties. There is scarcely a man holding an important position in the civil service of the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific who does not sooner or later come to have his personal enemies. Hardly a week passes that someone does not come to me personally with respect to some individual in some department and say, "That man should be dismissed." Let us forget for a moment this particular case. Take the position of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance who is sitting near me. He has in his department officials who are doing their duties I believe honestly and well, but against whom men are levelling charges day in and day out.

Mr. ROBB: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENIZE KING: Men sitting in this House have come to me making charges against the officials in the department of which the Minister of Finance is or was the head demanding that certain officials should be dismissed for some reason or another. Is it my duty to say to the Minister of Finance, "You must dismiss this man because you have been told he is a crook?" Or, is it my duty to say to him, "You must dismiss this man because there are all kinds of suspicions concerning him?" Is that the position of the Prime Minister toward his colleague and members of the civil service? So far as the head of the department is concerned I have taken a position that the head of a department is the prime minister of that department, so far as the administration of its affairs is concerned, until there is reason to believe that trust cannot be reposed in him. I believe that is the only way to conduct public business. Turn to the Department of Railways and Canals; we receive communications every few days about officials connected with the Canadian National. I am told these men are favouring this man or that man, or favouring a certain group, or that a lot of them belong to the same political party as hon. members opposite, and that they should be dismissed, that certain officials are restoring favours in one direction and refusing them in another. Is it the business of the Prime Minister to say to his colleagues, "You must dismiss these men?" I venture to repeat, there is not a department of the government in which some man at the head of some branch has not incurred the hostility of some individual or group, and if the public service of the country is to be carried on in any way that the civil service of this country would demand that it should be carried on, I say that the ministers of the departments must protect their officials against general charges and until there are specific charges levelled against them which demand investigation. May I say this, so that the House will understand my position and the position of the government when mention was made of Bisaillon as a preventive officer. There may be at this moment in one or two of the departments that have been mentioned to me officials who, a year from now or perhaps a couple of months from the present time, will be found guilty of offences which they are committing at this moment. Do hon. members of the House say that I should assume that these men are guilty and have them dismissed now before any specific charge is preferred and investigated? That is exactly the position the government was in with respect to Bisaillon. Mr. Sparks said to me, "You have a preventive officer, there are suspicions surrounding him; I believe he is a crook, and I think he should be dismissed." I said, "Mr. Sparks I entirely agree with you that if the man is a crook, if he is not doing his duty he should be dismissed," But the government has a responsibility in dismissals as well as in everything else, and if the government is going to dismiss members of the civil service they have to be mighty careful not to be placed in the position of making martyrs of these men or in the position of dismissing a man without cause. We cannot dismiss men on general grounds.

May I pause here for a moment to say something else. When the government lent Inspector Duncan to the Commercial Protective Association, we asked that association to have these detectives centre their energies on men of whom they were suspicious. We were not trying to defend anyone; we were trying to discover the men in this country who are criminals or derelict in the discharge of their duty. We gave the association government detectives; we paid for those detectives; we said to them: Use those detectives; let them report to you, and if there are in the service men that are corrupt and dishonest, bring your specific charges here and we will speedily get rid of offenders.

One day Mr. Duncan came into my office when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) and I were discussing other matters. Hon. members will realize that with a great public service extending as it does over half a continent there are many problems with which a government has to deal. The government was concerned at that time with some very serious counterfeiting cases which required on the part of the Minister of Finance and myself interviews from day to day with some of the detectives in the public service. In the course of one of those interviews Mr. Duncan said to me that in his work as a detective trying to land certain people whom he thought guilty of offences he was handicapped by the requirement that a report be made to the minister or the deputy minister of the department before making an arrest. He pointed out that it was impossible to prevent criminals from escaping unless power were given to the detective to make the arrest on the spot without waiting for any report to the government or any word in return.

What attitude did I take towards him? What attitude did the Minister of Finance take? We said to him: This business that you are on is a serious one for the country; we give you full latitude to do anything and everything you want to do or think ought to be done; in the matter of making arrests or landing criminals, we will stand behind you and we will take consequences of your action whether it conforms or not with what is the custom or regulations of the department.

Mr. LUCAS: At what date did that interview take place?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Fortunately I have under my hand Detective Duncan's evidence and I believe he gives the date himself. Inspector Duncan was lent by the Department of Finance to the Commercial Protective Association on the 3rd November, 1924; he acted with them until the 30th June, 1925, making his reports to them. It was during that period that he had this interview with me and he gives the date himself. This is the evidence of Detective Duncan before the committee as it will be found on page 496 of the proceedings. The examination was by Mr. Bell:

Mr. Duncan, what was the first time that you had anything to do with the matters now under investigation before this committee?

A. The 27th of November was the first interview with the Hon. the Minister of Customs.

Q. What year?

A. 1925.

Q. What minister, would you say, this was?

A. The Hon. Mr. Boivin.

Q. What instructions or first suggestion did you receive from the minister at that time?

A. I received instructions from the minister to proceed to Montreal, for the purpose of conducting an investigation into the conduct of J. E. Bisaillon.

Q. Now, let me stop you there just for one moment. I do not know that I have made myself entirely clear. Did you not have some investigating to do on behalf of the Protective Association before that?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. The Commercial?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. And when did that take place and under what circumstances?

A. On the 3rd of November, 1924, I commenced discussing matters with Mr. Sparks, re smuggling.

Q. What position did you hold in November, 1924?

A. I was the special investigating officer for the Department of Finance.

Q. In Ottawa, here?

A. In Ottawa.

Q. Yes. And under what circumstances did you begin to discuss any of these matters with Mr. Sparks?

A. Well, I was loaned by the Department of Finance, to assist Mr. Sparks, and the organization which he represented, in getting a look in as to smuggling operations in Canada.

Q. In what way did the information come to you that you were being loaned to that association? Who told you about it?

A. The Minister of Finance.

Q. The Minister of Finance?

A. The Hon. Mr. Robb.

Q. Mr. Robb, himself?

A. Yes, also his deputy, Mr. Saunders.

Q. He told you that you were being loaned to the Commercial Protective Association to undertake an investigation for them?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you proceed immediately to enter on that investigation?

A. Yes. I took the matter up with Mr. Sparks; I attended some meetings; I think one in the Montreal Board of Trade, when the matter was discussed, as to the best methods to find out what was going on in connection with smuggling.

Q. Yes. And did you adopt any particular method thereafter in investigating?

A. Yes.

Q. What was that?

A. On the 17th of November I selected James Knox and George Sloan, engaged them at a salary of $2,500 a year. I got Knox from the C.P.R.; they loaned Mr. Knox, and I got Sloan in Montreal, and on the 15th of December I selected Alexander as another officer.

Q. And then the investigation was pursued where? Any particular place, or did you go from place to place?

A. It was principally Montreal and Toronto.

Q. And you reported to them, did you?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Those reports were made how?

A. May I say, after we received powers as customs officers, I had some discussion with the Prime Minister and also with Mr. Robb, in connection with a memorandum that was sent along with our appointments, and I drew their attention to the fact that we might as well not try to go into anything with the instructions given us. We were so tied up at the time that we could not operate.

I want to draw the attention of the House to the significance of that statement:

After we received powers as customs officers.

Not only did the government lend these detectives to the Commercial Protective Association, but the association came to us and said: Will you make these detectives preventive officers so that they can go right into the preventive service and sit down alongside of the other members? We gave them that power; we made them preventive officers, and we gave them the power of arrest that preventive officers have. Then Mr. Duncan discovered that there was a certain ruling with regard to preventive officers that had to be observed, a regulation existing in the department evidently in accordance with some general rule there:

Q. What instructions did you tell the minister you wanted?

A. I think that memorandum is dated 1922, signed by W. F. Wilson, and it is headed general directions re Customs Act: When cases are taken to court, have the information laid in the name of the King. However, in seizures under the Customs Act no proceedings in court are to be taken until instructions have been received from me, after receipt here of a full report from you.

That was the instruction from the chief preventive officer to the other preventive officers:

Q. Was the memorandum dated?
A. Yes. It is dated November 23, 1922.

Evidently instructions had been sent out year after year in that form.

By Hon. Mr. Stevens:
Q. 1922?
A. 1922. This is the original memorandum that I got at the time.
By Mr. Bell:
Q. Yes, but this investigation was being undertaken in 1924?
A. Yes, exactly.
Q. This came to you under what circumstances?
A. Just as soon as we received our appointment as customs officers this memorandum came along. I then took the matter up with the Prime Minister and Mr. Robb and pointed out to them the fact that if we were waching at the roads, when loads came from the American side, and we got a smuggler with a load of silk, what were we going to do about it if we had to wait and receive instructions from Ottawa.
Q. You are now referring to the memorandum?
A. I said the thing was ridiculous. Were we to hold them up on the highway until we could communicate with Ottawa or what were we going to do. After a good deal of discussion the Prime Minister said: "Ignore the whole thing; put them in jail. Any smugglers you get put them in jail." I said, "All right, Sir," so we started out with that intention.
By Mr. St-Père:
Q. The Prime Minister told you that, to put them in jail?
A. The Prime Minister told us to put them in jail and we were asked to make a weekly report to the department, but I drew their attention to the fact that the half of our time would be taken up in making reports, so, I think, Mr. Robb said, "After you make the seizure and have them in jail, then make a report to the department." That is what we did for about six or eight months.

Mr. LUCAS: Can the Prime Minister give the date of that interview in his office when Inspector Duncan referred to his inability to make arrests?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I thought it was given in his evidence. It must have been very early in the year, because he says that "just as soon as we received our appointment as customs officers, this memorandum came along." They received their appointments either at the end of 1924 or at the beginning of 1925, and he says that as soon as that occurred the memorandum came along. He goes on to say that he had taken the matter up with the Prime minister and Mr. Robb asking what they would do if they had to wait while they were watching at the roads, and so on. The Minister of Finance reminds me that it must have been before the opening of navigation in view of the fact that some of the counterfeit bills we were concerned about at the time were landed at St. John, vessels not being able to go up the river. It is difficult to recall the exact date but it would be in January, February or March.

Mr. LUCAS: Was Mr. Bureau Minister of Customs at that time?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. The Hon. Mr. Bureau was Minister of Customs then and he was co-operating with the Commercial Protective Association. He knew that these detectives were working with the association and he volunteered the co-operation of the officers of his department. I am glad the hon. gentleman has asked that question because I want the House to understand the situation exactly; and it will never be understood so long as it is approached in the spirit of party animosity and personal bias. The only way by which we can clearly understand the whole matter is to forget for the moment any one particular department and assume that we have an identical situation in some other department of government.

I think I have shown conclusively that the government met the association in every request it made. We lent them the services of detectives, gave the detectives ample powers, took them into the preventive service, and endeavoured to apprehend everyone who was guilty of any offence. What position did the government take in relation to Bisaillon? We said that if he was a crook we wanted to arrest, not only himself but all those who were working in conjunction with him. No one man can go very far in this illicit traffic; he is bound to have associates and accomplices. And we were out not for the purpose merely of dismissing one employee, but with the determination to obtain all possible evidence to enable us to stamp out the smuggling business by the most effective means possible. To this end we rendered the association and detectives every conceivable aid the government could afford. That is the point I want to bring home.

Mr. STEVENS: If that is the case, why was it that later on in the autumn of 1925, synchronizing with the date of the arrest of the notorious smuggler Cohen, the power of arrest was taken away from officer Knox and other officers while Inspector Duncan retained that power as a member of the government staff? Why was that power which had previously been given taken away from these other men?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot answer that question inasmuch as I never knew that the power was taken away.

Mr. STEVENS: It is a fact.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I could surmise a reason for it if I were called upon to give one, but I do not wish to venture conjectures at this stage. I desire to make the facts clear so that the House will understand the situation regarding the secret service work which was going on at that time. At that time the Commercial Protective Association had three or four detectives working around Bisaillon's office in Montreal—because that is where the investigation was being carried out, according to Inspector Duncan's own statement—and Mr. Sparks came to the government with the suggestion that Bisaillon should be dismissed. I agreed absolutely with him on the basis of his representations but I said, "What we are after, as you know, is evidence upon which we may act with confidence. You have detectives and every assistance you require, and our desire with respect to anyone to be dismissed is to apprehend him in such a manner as will enable us to take definite action which we can justify by clear proof." I repeatedly pointed out that we could not dismiss Bisaillon on mere hearsay or general allegations, for if we did so we should only be making a martyr of him in the public mind and putting ourselves in a false position. We could not act on general statements. My hon. friend (Mr. Stevens) endeavoured to have it appear that there were charges, one of these was that because of the acquittal of Bisaillon in a certain case we should dismiss him at once. Surely the House will see that the government could not dismiss the man without grounds which it could maintain. Another general charge was that Bisaillon had a house on one side of the border line and another house on the other side, and that these two places were being used by smugglers. In this connection I pointed out to Mr. Sparks that, with his criminal investigators, he could surely ascertain whether any smuggling was going on between the two places and could secure substantial evidence. I said that the government wanted to be perfectly sure of its ground before making an arrest or dismissing this man. We wanted to be in a position to defend our position in parliament. The Hon. Mr. Bureau was Minister of Customs at the time, he took the position with Mr. Sparks—it will not be denied—that if Mr. Sparks could make a charge against Bisaillon the man would be dismissed. But I went a step further. As Prime Minister, when I saw that there was suspicion in regard to Bisaillon and that a situation might develop in Montreal in consequence, I stated over and over again to Mr. Sparks in my office that all the government wanted was sufficient evidence to justify it in so doing, and I would appoint a royal commission to inquire into the affairs of the Montreal office and smuggling generally.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hon. gentlemen laugh, but I cannot see the point of their laughter. I said, "Give me a chance to start an inquiry against Bisaillon and I will appoint a royal commission to look into the whole situation and anyone can come before that commission and make any charge regarding customs frauds in Canada." Mr. Sparks himself admits that I offered the appointment of a royal commission. Perhaps I had better read his letter written on March 20:

> In reference to my conversation with you on Monday last my understanding was: That, if this association or any individual was prepared to make definite charges against the above customs officer, you would appoint a royal commission to investigate such charges. My further understanding was that lacking such definite charges no action would be taken.

What reply did I make? I had Mr. Sparks come to my office and I pointed out to him that it was not necessary for him personally to lay any charge. He represented a responsible association and either the association through any of its officers or members or their solicitor could lay a charge. If none of them wished to do so then any one of the three or four detectives which the government had lent to the association could come and lay a charge. I said, "You have three or four detectives lent you by the government—Mr. Duncan, Mr. Sloan and other men. Let any one of them lay the charge. Mr. Duncan is accustomed to laying such charges."

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is this in evidence? Did the Prime Minister go and give this evidence?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, but I am giving the facts to parliament and to the country. If my right hon. friend doubts my word, I am prepared to give it in evidence at any time and at any place he desires.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Here and now.

An hon. MEMBER: In a court?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, in any court. I challenge hon. gentlemen to say that what I am saying is not true. I repeat once more, I said to Sparks: Not only can one of these detectives lay the information, but you talk of having had a body of criminal investigators at work for months; those criminal investigators have nothing at stake so far as their reputation is concerned in laying a charge; therefore if you have any specific charge let one of them lay it, and I will see that this whole business is investigated by a royal commission. But I told him that as Prime Minister I could not lightly go over the head of the department unless a definite charge was laid. It is not permissible to disclose what takes place in the cabinet, but I think I am justified in going this far: The position of the government with respect to appointing a royal commission to investigate this whole business if a charge of any kind was laid was a matter of government policy agreed to by Mr. Bureau himself. He said he would take no exception, if a specific charge were made against Bisaillon, to the appointment of a royal commission to investigate everything in connection with his office or other matters at the port of Montreal.

Now, I ask the House, what position was the government in, with respect to launching a royal commission when the protective association working with criminal investigators and with detectives for months were yet not prepared to make a single charge against that officer? Just let us forget for the moment the Customs department. Suppose an identical situation in the Justice department. Someone comes to me and says: We have a matter with the Justice department in regard to the conduct of certain of the mounted police. People have come to me and said: We believe some of the men in the mounted police are crooks; they are betraying you, they are playing into the hands of the Tory party, they are furnishing information to your opponents; they are dishonest; they should be fired. I tell the House I have had many requests of that kind, requests to dismiss this and that member of the mounted police because he is said to be a crook, because he has done this or that. What course do I take? I speak to the Minister of Justice, who is head of the mounted police, and I put the matter before him. What is his reply? I will dismiss the man? No. His answer is: Let someone bring a charge against the man and I shall see it is investigated; if he is found guilty, I will dismiss him, but I want something specific to go on. The minister has to defend his action in parliament. What would be thought of me as Prime Minister if, when the Minister of Justice takes that position as head of his department, I should turn around and dismiss the man or order his dismissal?

Mr. CAHAN: Would the Prime Minister allow a question? In such a case would the Minister of Justice be wholly deprived of any initiative on his part to ascertain the real facts with respect to the accusation?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Certainly not. He would have to exert his initiative. When you come to the case of the Customs department, what was the position? You had detectives working on this man, you had trained criminal investigators, in fact you had a whole network of investigation surrounding him. I think the House will see the wisdom of the course we adopted. If out of that network of investigation it was not possible to find a single investigator or anybody else to lay a charge against the man, does my hon. friend say the government ought then to have dismissed him?

Mr. CAHAN: Would you allow me to answer the question?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: I should certainly think that in such a case the Prime Minister should not denude himself and his colleagues of all responsibility and place that responsibility in an irresponsible body such as this protective association.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We were not denuding ourselves or responsibility; we were taking full responsibility, but we wanted something definite to act on. I say in regard to the officials of the public service generally, that not a day passes when charges of some kind are not made against some official. This man apparently was not doing his duty, apparently he was guilty of some of the charges made against him, but at the time the government could get no evidence of that, although we were determined to keep on until we got evidence if any were to be secured.

Now I ask this House, was Bisaillon dismissed? How was he dismissed? Who dismissed him? The hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin) who sits here in his seat was the man who dismissed Bisaillon. How was he apprehended? It was by this very process the government was adopting of giving to the detectives a free hand until they landed him. May I go a step further to show what the government had in mind and how it proceeded? The evidence shows that the present Minister of Customs told Mr. Duncan to work on Bisaillon until he got him. The minute the minister had evidence sufficient to justify Bisaillon's dismissal he came into council and said he was dismissing the man. What was the next step we took? We said: We will not publicly dismiss this man and let him carry everything away with him; we want to get at the inside of this smuggling business, and we are going to find out all we can about it. It was a Saturday afternoon, a special meeting of the cabinet was called to put the order through. It was sent down by special messenger to His Excellency for signature. Then Detective Duncan proceeded to Montreal and took possession of the office, so that when Bisaillon might come in to clear off his files he could be told, "You are no longer a member of the public service of Canada; I am here representing the government of Canada, I have taken possession." That is how the information was obtained on which most of this inquiry was based. There is how the material was obtained that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre comes before this parliament and seeks to indict this government on—the material that this government itself secured in dismissing the official complained of and in its effort to put an end to this smuggling business.

My hon. friend asked me why Inspector Knox had some powers taken away from him. I do not know, but I do know this that Knox was working in collaboration with Mr. Duncan, and that when Mr. Duncan got all this information he gave it to Mr. Knox, and Mr. Knox gave it to the hon. gentleman opposite.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege, and in justice to a party who is not in the House at all. I never met Mr. Knox until after the inquiry started. I never saw the gentleman. As to the withdrawal of his powers, this took place in October 1925. Furthermore, in evidence Mr. Sparks has stated, in fairness to all concerned, that he, Mr. Sparks, gave me certain information—that is without question—and that he had worked with the Prime Minister—as he has laboured for over an hour to demonstrate—with Mr. Duncan, with Mr. Knox, with Mr. Sloan and others through a long period of time, and certainly this information was legitimately in his possession.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If it makes any difference to use the word "through" instead of the word "by" I am very glad to make the change. It was through Inspector Knox that the information came into the hands of my hon. friend.

Mr. STEVENS: I want no excuses and I make none, but I wish to be fair to a man who cannot defend himself.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think the House sees pretty clearly that Inspector Duncan after he had been working with the protective association, when he had all the information he could have collected by them and through them, was retained by the government expressly to try to get Bisaillon where we could dismiss him—not only dismiss him, but along with his dismissal secure such a mass of material that we could clean up this business in the fashion in which it should be properly cleaned up. There is the position and, as I say, the information Mr. Duncan got he got in that way, secured through this government directing him to secure it, and it was secured wholly and solely for the purpose of enabling the government to proceed further in its deliberate purpose to clean up this smuggling business as completely as we possibly could. My hon. friend would never have been in a position to make the charges he did if the very information which our own officers gathered for us had not been put in his possession. But here, in the midst of a great effort on the part of the government to grapple with an evil such as smuggling is, my hon. friend for the sake of party politics comes along and makes charges in this House against the government on matters of which it had knowledge, not one of which he could have had knowledge of apart from the information obtained by officers of this government and given to him before much of it was known to the government itself.

Mr. STEVENS: Apparently the Prime Minister is very sorry that I did get it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not at all sorry that my hon. friend secured the information, but I am sorry that in the public service there are apparently men who are prepared to betray those by whom they are employed, because I regard as a base betrayal the transference of this information. My hon. friend says he got the information from Mr. Sparks; I wonder if that was a noble act on the part of Mr. Sparks.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Too bad they said anything at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Just a moment Mr. Sparks' change of mind and heart is not difficult to see. In September, after a general election was declared, Mr. Sparks was tendered a banquet in the Chateau Laurier here; he was given no end of praise for having secured the reforms which had been brought about, and I am told that as an additional recognition he was given an honorarium of $1,000.

Mr. STEVENS: That is too small for a prime minister—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It was too small; they should have given him $10,000. My point is—

Mr. STEVENS: —reflecting on a citizen who cannot defend himself.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The point I am bringing out is that Mr. Sparks at that late date was allowing it to be believed that he had achieved a great purpose, that he had done a great service to the association and to the country. That was in September, just at the time a general election had been declared. And then what took place? Mr. Sparks began to associate with my right hon. friend opposite, just as he is doing from the gallery at the moment. They worked together back and forth during the campaign and when the election was over, just before parliament was summoned, in order to make things difficult and complicated for the government, he supplied the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) with the information brought out in this way.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the Prime Minister be good enough to explain what he meant by saying that Mr. Sparks was in association with me from the gallery at the moment?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have not been blind to my hon. friend's eyes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Cheap!

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes; if my hon. friend wishes to follow these methods I will admit that they are cheap. The whole business is pretty cheap when you get to the bottom of it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have shown to the House pretty conclusively that the government was determined by legislation, by regulation, by dismissal of officials and in other ways, to do all it possibly could do to put an end to this smuggling business. The question naturally arises as to whether the government is to have the opportunity of continuing this work and carrying out the reforms recommended by this committee, or whether that opportunity is to be taken away altogether.

Before I touch on that point, however, I want to say a further word in regard to the former Minister of Customs whose name has been especially mentioned in this report and of whom the House will naturally expect me to say a word. Here again I ask hon. members to be fair and to recall the situation as it existed at that time. I will take for the moment the three years 1922, 1923 and 1924, the first three of this government in office. I ask hon. members if there is a single one of their number in this House who had not the highest respect for the integrity, the ability and the honesty of Hon. Jacques Bureau. If there is one such member I ask him to reply.

4 p.m.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We will see how brave some men are. I say that all the time that Mr. Bureau was in the ministry I never knew of an act on his part with respect to the administration of the Department of Customs which was dishonourable or dishonest in any way. What has come out in this present inquiry is as surprising and painful to me as it can be to any human being on this earth. I am not prepared yet to believe the charges made against Mr. Bureau, charges so fully developed by hon. gentlemen opposite.

As hon. members know, Mr. Bureau's health broke down in the early part of the year 1925; he left on a leave of absence and the department was carried on by an acting minister. I want to ask hon. members who have been in this House for some years how in their opinion a prime minister should treat his colleagues if perchance they happen to be absent on sick leave. Hon. gentlemen opposite have had members of their party and ministers of the crown absent; I think even the prime minister of the day was absent for the greater part of a year through sickness. His position was not taken from him; an acting prime minister carried on. When a minister, under the strain of work or from any other cause, breaks down, I venture to say that every prime minister with any sense of loyalty to his colleagues will see to it that someone else takes his place and carries on for him in the meantime. That is what was done with respect to Mr. Bureau; I asked the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) to take over the department for the time being.

Now may I say that the fact of Mr. Bureau's absence through illness made it additionally difficult on my part to go over his head and institute an inquiry by a royal commission into the affairs of his department, but I was nevertheless prepared to do so, and that with Mr. Bureau's consent, in the event of any charge being made which would provide grounds for so doing.

Some hon. members will ask why Mr. Bureau was appointed to the Senate; they say that it was his reward. Reward? When Mr. Bureau came back I saw that his health was such that he was not in a position to carry on longer as minister of a department; I told him so and asked him to give me back his portfolio. But I said that in recognition of his twenty-five years of public service to this country I would ask him to accept an appointment to the Senate. Mr. Bureau came into this House in 1900; he was re-elected in 1904, in 1908, in 1911, in 1917 and in 1921; he served as Solicitor General in the cabinet of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and as Minister of Customs and Excise in the present administration. I say without fear of contradiction that no member of parliament sitting on this side of the House was more respected and more liked by hon. gentlemen opposite than Hon. Jacques Bureau. I wish to pay a tribute to my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton); in a chivalrous way, he nods his head in approval; I know he is always ready to be chivalrous in a case of this kind. I will put the question of chivalry up to other hon. gentlemen opposite; if there is anyone who will deny the esteem in which Mr. Bureau was held at the time he was appointed to the Senate, let him stand up in his seat and say so. Not one! That reveals better than words could do the regard in which Mr. Bureau was held at the time of his appointment to the Senate.

Mr. WHITE (Mount Royal): May I ask the Prime Minister to be good enough to say whether Mr. Bureau, whom I never met but for whom from his reputation I have the highest regard, was a capable and proper administrator of the Department of Customs?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will say this to my hon. friend: I believe that right up until the last year of his administration it was generally conceded throughout this country that a more capable minister had not held the portfolio of Customs in years past. It was generally admitted I think throughout this country that Mr. Bureau was a most efficient and industrious Minister of Customs and Excise. He was at his office from early morning to late at night, day in and day out, and until he broke down in health the affairs of the department were conducted—so far as I was able to learn, and I heard from many sources—in a more efficient manner than had characterized the administration of any previous minister. When his health gave way conditions, I am frank to say, were different. If there is one limitation in the action of the committee that has been investigating this matter, if the committee has fallen short in any particular, I think it is that its members did not ask Mr. Bureau to appear before them. Why was Mr. Bureau not asked to appear before that committee? If hon. gentlemen opposite were going to attack him, why did they not invite him to appear before them? There is a well known procedure which hon. gentlemen opposite could have availed themselves of. All that was necessary was for any member of the committee to request the chairman to ask the Speaker of this House to send a message to Their Honours of the Senate asking their permission for a particular member of the upper house to appear before the Commons committee.

Mr. CAHAN: May I ask the Prime Minister a question?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: Did the Prime Minister, knowing all the facts that were being brought out in evidence, ever suggest to his former respected and venerated colleague that he should appear before that committee and make a statement?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I may say that I have not talked with Mr. Bureau from some time before the day the investigation began until this very morning; I deliberately refrained from so doing, but I would like the House to know that I did have a talk with him this morning and of what was said by Mr. Bureau to me in conversation. Mr. Bureau expressed surprise that he had never been asked to go before the committee. He wished me to say when I spoke this afternoon, that if a judicial body properly constituted, were appointed, a responsible judicial body, not only would he wish to go before that body or any properly constituted tribunal, but he would welcome the opportunity of so doing, and he asks this parliament to grant him that opportunity. I ask my hon. friends, particularly hon. gentlemen opposite who are fond of the use of the word "British," who like to talk about British fair play and British justice: Are you now going to deny to a member of this parliament before final judgment is passed the opportunity of appearing before a judicial tribunal to answer any questions that may be put to him with respect to his administration of the affairs of a department over which he presided and which has been reflected upon in a committtee of this House and in this House?

Mr. CAHAN: May I ask the Prime Minister another question?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: Is it not entirely within the discretion of the Prime Minister and his colleagues to appoint at any time a royal commission to inquire into the Department of Customs, or any other department, without any action on the part of parliament?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, it is, and that discretion will be exercised if the government is given the opportunity. But if hon. gentlemen opposite succeed in their amendment, which is designed for purely political purposes, the government will be deprived of that opportunity. I stand here and say that if the government is retained in office it will appoint a judicial tribunal to continue the investigation which has already taken place, and in particular will ask that tribunal to have Mr. Bureau appear before it and answer questions with respect to any charges, reflections or allegations that may be made concerning him. Further I will say this: Unless Mr. Bureau gets a clean slate from a judicial tribunal of the kind, if constituted, I will ask him to give up his position in the Senate and retire therefrom. But I am not going to be numbered among those who seek to destroy a man's life and the lives of those that are near and dear to him, and his reputation as well, without affording him an opportunity to be heard in any and every particular before a properly constituted tribunal. If there is one thing more than another which men have to watch in politics it is to see that party persecution is not carried to the point where it ruins human lives and homes; and every hon. member in this chamber owes it to himself and to the position he occupies to see that men who enter public life are not slaughtered for the sake of party ends and party gain.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I conclude with what I started out to say. There are before this House at the present time two amendments to the motion that the House concur in the report which has been presented. I think the report should be concurred in. I think every recommendation in it should be carried out: I think they should be carried out expeditiously. But I say this much further: I do not think the work of that committee should be allowed to cease just at a point that suits hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. STEVENS: The committee itself calls for a continuance.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The report states that the work has not been completed, that the committee have not reviewed all the matters that were referred to it—

Mr. STEVENS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —and mention was made of some particular matters that were not concluded. Now I do not say that the action of my hon. friends opposite was designed to prevent inquiry elsewhere, but there is a certain chivalrous attitude that needs consideration in this regard. It so happened that hon. gentlemen opposite sought to focus this whole inquiry on the province of Quebec.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They did not go much beyond that province.

An hon. MEMBER: Shame!

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The facts speak for themselves.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shame! shame!

An hon. MEMBER: Too small!

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The port of Vancouver has not been investigated.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am told there is more smuggling going on in the port of Vancouver than in any other port in this Dominion. I do not know whether that is the case or not, but I should like to be certain on that point. I should like it to be investigated. The port of Winnipeg has not been investigated.

An hon. MEMBER: What about Lunenburg?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The port of Toronto has not been investigated, the port of St. John has not been investigated, the port of Halifax has not been investigated.

An hon. MEMBER: Why not?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Because this committee did not take time to do it. They concentrated on the port of Montreal.

An hon. MEMBER: Now you are getting under their skin.

An hon. MEMBER: What about Lunenburg?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I add this point. There are certain distilleries that have not been investigated as yet.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Who appointed the committee?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I say that every one of these distilleries should be investigated—

Mr. STEVENS: So does the report.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —and will be investigated if the government is sustained. I say that if this House and this country is in earnest about cleaning up the smuggling evil they will stop at nothing until they get it cleaned up.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say that is the reason why I am prepared to support the amendment which was moved last night by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. It is a constructive amendment which proposes that this investigation should be carried on between now and the next session of parliament so that when parliament reassembles it will have before it the evidence and the findings of a judical tribunal, taking in all the ports I have mentioned, and in regard to the smuggling evil taking account of representations no matter from what quarter they may come. There are other recommendations made in that amendment and in the report which I believe should be carried out. But I do say that these recommendations cannot be made effective if the amendment of hon. gentlemen opposite were to be accepted, designed as it is, and as they well know, to be not constructive but destructive, designed not to enable the government to carry out the great national service it has undertaken—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —but to destroy if possible the power of the government to deal with the very serious problem with which the country is still confronted. What is the object of hon. gentlemen opposite? It is that they and their friends may again control the policies of this country; it is another device whereby those who favour higher and higher protection—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hon. gentlemen may laugh but they know it. From the beginning to the close of this session hon. members opposite have sought in one way or another to get possession of the seals of office, in order that they might put their own policies into effect. But, Mr. Speaker, I come back to this point, that what this country is interested in at the present time is not party politics. The country is not interested in the game of party politics with respect to this great problem of reform.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hon. members shout. Evidently they do not agree with that statement, but the people will. What the people of this country want is some reform, carried out in a manner which will worthily supplement the legislation which this government put through this parliament last session, and which may rightly be described as one of the most important reforms accomplished since confederation. The people want that class of work carried on. That is admitted, and I believe it is also what the vast majority of the members of this House want.

One word in conclusion; I have made no reference, up to the moment, to my colleague the present Minister of Customs and Excise (Mr. Boivin). He has made his own statement in this House. I do not think he requires anyone to supplement on his behalf what he has already said, and I do not intend to attempt anything of the kind, but I do wish to say this: of all the men that I have had the privilege of being associated with in the administration of this country, I cannot recall one who ever took up the work of his department with the same zeal, the same energy or the same industry as my friend Mr. Boivin. I want to say that my hon. friend came into a very difficult position, he was called upon to deal with one of the greatest problems ever dealt with and under most embarassing and distressing circumstances, and I say that until three or four days ago, when his name was mentioned in the amendment proposed by the member for Vancouver Centre and there began to be talk about it, there was not a man in or out of this parliament who was prepared to point a finger at him and to say he should be censured by this parliament—not a man. If Mr. Boivin was to be singled out for censure, why was that censure not brought on weeks ago or months ago, at the time his evidence was given? If he was not fit to be a minister of the crown and carry on business as a minister, why has he been allowed to continue in a position to do so since the time his evidence was given before the committee?

Mr. STEVENS: Because the majority of the committee voted down a resolution to report it to the House.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think I can say to my hon. friend that I believe the majority of the committee voted it down for the same reason as I believe the majority in this House will vote down that censure. I say, Mr. Speaker, the majority of hon. members opposite, whatever their proposed views may be, in their heart of hearts, do not condemn the present Minister of Customs. If parliament stands for anything, it surely stands for fair play and justice, and I ask hon. members, when they are recording their votes on one or other of the amendments or on the main motion, to remember that every man who goes into public life sooner or later is certain to be subjected to the kind of thing to which my hon. friend is being subjected to-day. I say to hon. members, judge by the judgment wherewith you expect to be judged, "for with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friends may laugh. They laugh at Scripture. They laugh at anything and everything, but they will find the truth of the words I have just uttered, because those words have stood through many centuries and will stand for many centuries to come.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): The House is nearing the close of a debate which is certain to become historic, and nearing decision on a great work and a great problem, perhaps the most important in its bearing upon the future of our country with which parliament has dealt for the last twenty years. By reason of the vastness of the subject and the wide scope of the investigation, it is almost impossible for members even to read the evidence adduced, to say nothing of being in such command of it as to bring to decision upon all its features that full information which the occasion demands. The Prime Minister has just concluded a very laboured defence of the administration and his minister; and I will deal with his remarks with the respect which his office demands, with the respect which I owe to him and have always felt for him. But I commence with this promise, that it will be my endeavour through every sentence which I utter, to keep just as far as I can from his method and his style.

I join with many hon. members who have spoken in a word of recognition of the very great toil which has been given to this work by the committee. I doubt if any committee of parliament in a generation ever had a subject to cover which involved so much real work, so much patience, so much concentration, as the subject to which this committee has given its energies for something over four months. Having read practically all the evidence, and having read part of it many times, while I cannot agree in all the judgments given by the chairman, I believe he yielded to a minimum of party proclivity, and on the whole was fair. I say most unreservedly that he devoted himself with an assiduity to the great task which deserves the commendation of all. The last thing which would occur to me to do would be to allow my speech to be charged with that censure of the committee which characterized the last sentences of the Prime Minister's address. The Prime Minister is very laudatory of the recommendations of the committee, so long as one does not read them or go into the real meaning of the findings and the recommendations, but for the conduct of the committee in general he has nothing but abuse. It has been unfair, he says—unfair especially to his late colleague! That committee, he says, allowed evidence to be adduced against him and never called him to defend himself. He upbraids the unfairness especially, he says, of the Conservative members of the committee for not calling the Hon. Jacques Bureau in his own defence. I have practised law for some years; hon. members have also acquaintance with the jurisprudence of our country, and I never learned of the doctrine that those who are said to be of the prosecution should see to it that the defence is called. Were there no doctrine to the contrary, which is so plain that a child would understand it, were there none at all, those of us who know the Hon. Jacques Bureau know this, that he does not need any instance from us, any summons or suggestion, to come and defend himself at a trial if he feels it is in his interest to come. Whatever may be said of him, no one will challenge his intelligence or his capacity to look after himself.

I wonder what is in the mind now of the five members of the committee who were not Conservatives, the four hon. gentlemen opposite and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) the majority of the committee; I wonder what they are thinking of now after the castigation they have received from the Prime Minister. If there was onus on anybody to see that Mr. Bureau was called, surely it was on those who were of the same party faith as he, four of them completely so and one of them so close that I will not attempt to draw the distinction as it is practically negligible. What is to be thought of the present minister (Mr. Boivin) whose department was on trial, the friend and associate of Mr. Bureau, that he did not see that Mr. Bureau appeared before the committee?

The whole thing is humbug. It is such transparent, unspeakable nonsense that it is incapable of discussion. Senator Bureau would have come there if he had felt there was anything in his interests to be served by coming. Senator Bureau would stay away—if he felt it was in his interest to stay away. But to charge those who are not serving Senator Bureau, whose interests are not his but the interests of Canada, with being under an obligation to summon him, and especially to charge those of the opposite party—well it so shocks the intelligence that the sooner the subject is dismissed the better.

I am not here to make any attack on Senator Bureau. The Prime Minister, with great declamation, called across this way to know if we did not respect him, if we did not recognize his ability while he sat as a member of this House, and because no one rose to impugn or to slander him, the Prime Minister felt that he had achieved a great victory. Certainly we respected him, certainly we admired his ability, and I venture to say that very few of us were even under a suspicion that this department was being conducted under him in the way it is found by this report to have been conducted.

The reason I am making no special attack upon him is chiefly this. He is found guilty by the report; the report itself of the committee finds him guilty, the very report which the Prime Minister stands up in this House and says is right. Every sentence of it, he says, is true and sound and we intend to carry it through. Let us look at what those sentences are. Let us see what the findings, not of four Conservatives alone, but of four Liberals, one Progressive and four Conservatives, are in this regard, unanimous findings. Hon. gentlemen know by heart clause 6 of the report which reads:

> The evidence submitted to the committee leads to the general conclusion that for a long time the Department of Customs and Excise had been slowly degenerating in efficiency and that the process was greatly accelerated in the last few years.

I ask hon. members to note the words "the last few years."

> Apparently the Hon. Jacques Bureau, then Minister of Customs, failed to appreciate and properly discharge the responsibilities of his office and as a result there was a lack of efficient, continuous and vigorous control of subordinates by the headquarters staff at Ottawa.

I ask the Prime Minister: If he believes what he said of the Hon. Jacques Bureau this afternoon, of his record in that department, of his devotion to the public service, of his capacity, if he believes that all the Hon. Jacques Bureau was guilty of was being sick, is he honest to-day with Jacques Bureau; is he standing by Jacques Bureau as a friend, as a citizen, in allowing this report to be adopted? I put it to hon. gentlemen behind him, those who agree with the words of the Prime Minister this afternoon, those who applauded his words that all that was the matter with Jacques Bureau was his illness. Do they consider that clause 6 fair to the Hon. Jacques Bureau? Will anybody reply? If I believed as the Prime Minister says he believes, I would be a member of no government that would submit to the adoption of that report. If what the Prime Minister expects the House to believe this afternoon is true, that report is a calumny on the administration of the Hon. Jacques Bureau and on Jacques Bureau himself. Let me read further. The Prime Minister sought very vigorously to convince the House that the government had done everything in its power; that it was alacrity itself in response to every appeal to purge and purify the service; that Hon. Jacques Bureau especially had been unreserved in his co-operation with the Commercial Protective Association and only too anxious to run down those in the service who were not doing their full duty.

The Prime Minister who gave utterance to those assertions this afternoon wants a report adopted which contains also the following words:

> 7. The procedure provided by the Customs Act in the matter of customs seizures is as follows:—Upon making a seizure the collector or seizing officer forthwith reports the circumstances of the case to the Commissioner of Customs (section 174). Thereupon the commissioner notifies the owner or claimant of the thing seized, stating the reasons for the seizures, and calls upon such owner or claimant to furnish within thirty days any evidence he may desire to submit (section 175). After the expiration of thirty days or sooner, if evidence is forthcoming on the part of the owner or claimant, "the commissioner may consider and weigh the circumstances of the case and report his opinion and recommendation thereon to the minister" (section 176). The minister thereupon either gives his decision and states the terms upon which the thing seized or detained may be released or the penalty or forfeiture remitted or refers the decision to the court (section 177). The committee finds that this procedure was not followed. Although as a rule, the facts are correctly recited in the summary submitted to the minister, the opinion is not infrequently at variance with such facts, and the recommendation is so drawn as to elicit a decision to which such facts are repugnant.

But why?

This discrepancy is accounted for by the fact that the report upon the evidence was in many instances preceded by a conference, and the recommendation was dictated by an intelligent anticipation of the minister's wishes in the premises.

Mr. DONAGHY: Does the right hon. gentleman not think that the statement is justified by the facts in the Daivey Waisberg case?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I presume it is and by many other facts. I am not challenging the statement. The statement is justified by page after page of evidence and the minister is found guilty of having induced officers of the department, after reciting the facts, to add a recommendation repugnant to those facts because he the minister wanted that recommendation. This is found to be true by the very government of which the Prime Minister is head, and having asked this House to approve of that finding he stands up and declares that Jacques Bureau's record as a minister is immaculate.

There is one comment of a general character which I desire to make. When a case has been tried and the evidence has been adduced; when every opportunity has been given, as is given in our courts and before our committees, for all parties concerned to come forward and state what they have to say either in support of prosecution or by way of defence; when all this has transpired then the case is decided upon the evidence so adduced. And if any party affected, having failed to take advantage of the opportunities afforded in the course of the trial, comes forward afterwards and seeks to address the court and establish facts or to correct evidence, which fact he might have established and which evidence he might have corrected when the case was being heard, it is not very likely that he will be heard. If he came forward after the evidence was closed and said to the judge, "All this is wrong. I had a conversation with Mr. Sparks or Mr. So-and-So in my office, which conversation wholly contradicts what is clearly in the evidence, and I want you to find upon what I say now": what would happen? He would be told to sit down or the sheriff would take him by the shoulder and throw him out. It does not become an hon. member of this House to ask for a verdict on the faith of testimony which he seeks to give to parliament now but which he failed to adduce when he might have been subject to cross-examination and contradiction. I say, it does not become any member of this House to make that attempt, and when this intrusion is committed by the Prime Minister of our country, when this is the example he sets, how does he expect other members to act creditably and intelligently in respect of investigations and reports to parliament thereon? The duty of this parliament is to take the reports as submitted and, on faith of the evidence upon which that report is based to render judgment deciding whether the report is right or wrong. If we feel that the report is not right, then it is our duty to have it amended by proper steps in the manner we desire. But parliament should not be influenced, no man carries out his oath of service to his country as a member of parliament who is influenced in the faintest degree, by anything stated in this House by anyone whether it be the Prime Minister or any other hon. member.

Oh! how brave the Prime Minister is now: "I say here and now in parliament this and that and I am prepared to go before a court and repeat it"—when he knows that the court is closed. The Prime Minister supports a motion for one purpose and one purpose only, namely, to amend the report in accordance with the instructions of this House, when he knows perfectly well that there is no possibility of the report ever going before the committee again. He knows that there is no possibility of its being subject to examination so as to affect our finding. But he bravely thunders now the information that he had certain conversations. private conversations, with Mr. Sparks, and he relates these conversations at a time when the other party to them cannot by any possible means be heard.

One would have thought that this government had quite redeemed itself from the maladministration of which it was found guilty in this report by having passed an amending statute last session. I venture to say that two-thirds of the time taken up by the Prime Minister was devoted to an historical account of the great services rendered the country by this government, leading up to the introduction into and the passage through this House of a statute amending the smuggling provisions of the Customs Act. For this he takes great credit to himself and to his government. Well, I am going to review some of the facts connected therewith, but first of all I want to refer to the attempt he made to convey to the House the impression that the government had had a hard time getting that statute through against the opposition of the Tories. The legislation had a perilous passage through this House by reason of the opposition of this party, and it was almost beaten in the Senate where the Tories were against it. So says the Prime Minister. This is in keeping with the tactics of the Prime Minister in respect of all subjects with which he deals wherever he happens to go from one end of this country to the other. He knew when he uttered that statement that when the bill was before the House I as leader of the Conservative party spoke in support of it in every particular, and that I not only supported it but approved without any qualification whatsoever of the immense appropriation of $350,000 which was asked for the purpose of enforcing the customs provisions of the country. The Prime Minister knows, as well, or he ought to know, that when the bill was before the Banking and Commerce committee of the Senate, an amendment to remove the clause which took away the power of remission was moved in that committee by one of his strongest supporters, Senator Belcourt, and seconded by one of the strongest, if not the strongest, representing him there, Senator Beique. The bill was in danger because of that amendment and the evidence—for I speak by the evidence—shows that in view of that danger Mr. Sparks came to the Minister of Marine (Mr. Cardin) and urged upon him that he go back and try his best to get the bill through. That minister offered to make an amendment which in the judgment of Mr. Sparks would have denuded the bill of any effectiveness, and for that reason he refused to accept it. Accordingly he went back to the Senate and by his own efforts, with the co-operation of his association, he got the bill through. I refer hon. gentlemen to the evidence which is to be found in this respect, in pages 229 and 231, of the testimony. But after all, is the passing of this legislation, even with the approval of this side of the House, an approval with which I know the Prime Minister is not satisfied merely because there were certain inquiries as to its character in the course of its consideration in parliament—nothing but blind approval, three cheers and a tiger seems to suit the Prime Minister—is the passing of that legislation, I ask, an achievement worthy of an hour and a half of boasting? When all is said and done, is legislation any more than paper and parchment until it is enforced? And has the Prime Minister looked at the evidence to see what it discloses as to the work of his government in effecting that enforcement? I have that evidence. At pages 229 and 230 I find the following:

Q. How many prosecutions have been had under the amended act—A. The Minister of Customs the other day said six. I am inclined to think he was wrong; I think up to the first of the year only three. I say that because one of the cases the minister mentioned was not under section 219. I think only three.

Q. So far as you have been able to discover, only three?—A. Yes.

Q. You welcomed that amendment last year, Mr. Sparks, and your associates also, according to the rather eulogistic letters that have been written?—A. We certainly did.

These are the letters which the Prime Minister read.

Q. Have you experienced since that was passed, or have you observed the results, the beneficial results from that legislation which you expected?

A. The immediate results were very good. Smuggling stopped, and the deputy minister showed me figures showing an increase in customs receipts at border points, but that improvement did not last.

Q. How long did it last?

A. I wouldn't like to fix the time.

Q. Just approximately will do.

A. I would say it was effective for a month.

Q. That would be up to say the first of August or the middle of August, or around there?

A. I wouldn't like to specify.

Q. Do you infer that there has been a lapse since then back to former conditions?

A. I do not infer it; I state it because I know it.

Mr. DONAGHY: Will the right hon. gentleman permit a question? Has he read the testimony of chief inspector Wilson, where he swore there were 69 prosecutions under the amended act?

Mr. MEIGHEN: There may have been since this investigation was on.

Mr. DONAGHY: Is the right hon. gentleman aware that those prosecutions extended over a period from the time the act came into force?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know that. Three of them were up to the first of the year—the rest since the investigation.

Mr. DONAGHY: Will the right hon. gentleman be good enough to read Mr. Wilson's evidence to substantiate his last statement?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman spoke for four hours and a half, and one would have thought he might have read it. The hon. gentleman will not be able to contradict what I have said this afternoon, no matter what evidence he may quote.

Mr. DONAGHY: Read the evidence.

Mr. MEIGHEN: A childish request. I want to make some comment, though, upon this pretension that a tremendous achievement is to the credit of the government in the passing of this legislation. One would think from the Prime Minister's speech that the poor government stood helpless without any legislative arm; that there was a law, doubtless passed by the Tories long ago, and it was worthless, the government could not stop smuggling under it; but they co-operated with this association, and as a result of that great co-operation—for which he has a letter of thanks from a prominent Liberal of Toronto—we have got this magnificent legislation. What about the Commercial Protective Association—of whose praise he was so proud because at first they approached this matter with confidence in the government, believing they had a pledge that something would be done, and they wrote the letters which the Prime Minister has read—what did this association say after a few months' experience of this administration, what did they say in their recommendations read to the committee? I quote the following:

> In submitting recommendations to the committee urging that the Customs Act be amended, we wish to place ourselves on record by stating that in our opinion the Customs Act, even prior to the amendments of 1925, was sufficiently drastic in its provisions respecting penalties to have enabled the Department of Customs and Excise to cope with the evil of smuggling, and other forms of fraud, if the department had availed itself of the provisions of the act and had prosecuted offenders to the full extent of the law.

If the Prime Minister will look at the evidence of Mr. Sparks—which he did not go into the box to contradict—he will find Mr. Sparks declared—I will not vouch for the exact percentage from memory, but he said something to this exact effect, save the percentage,—that 90 per cent of all the smuggling which was going on could be prevented by a proper application of the law of the land.

A great deal of time was also occupied by the Prime Minister in his attempt to justify the government in respect of Bisaillon. The Prime Minister stated that he was moved by a desire to be fair to this official and to be able to defend himself in parliament. The correspondence is all that is on record, all that was before the committee, and all that is before this House now, and we are bound in justice to that committee and in justice to all concerned to decide on the faith of the evidence alone. It shows that the Prime Minister demanded specific charges should be laid on the responsibility of Mr. Sparks or his associates before he would so much as appoint a royal commission to investigate the conduct of a civil servant. When he was told that this was utterly unreasonable, that the responsibility was not at all on any outsider to make these charges, that their responsibility was discharged when they brought certain facts to the notice of the department sufficient to justify inquiry, and when he was asked definitely if he adhered to the proposal that only specific charges on the responsibility of Mr. Sparks would be considered, his reply to the letter, written almost a month after the letter was received, was merely that it would receive "due consideration". This is the record as shown in the evidence.

Who ever heard before of the doctrine that a civil servant cannot be removed except after specific charges are laid before a royal commission? Who ever heard of any procedure such as the Prime Minister insisted on in relation to Mr. Bisaillon? I ask how many members of the government sitting in front of me this afternoon ever appointed a royal commission before dismissing a civil servant. Not one. I put the question especially to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell). Will he name the party who laid the charges, will he name the royal commission whom he appointed to investigate specific charges before dismissing Dr. Torrance? I ask, why such solicitude for Mr. Bisaillon, and why such brutality for Dr. Torrance? The Prime Minister said, Oh, we had to have a defence in parliament, we could not dismiss Bisaillon without a proper investigation. I ask again, why was the investigation delayed until the end of November, 1925, why was it they could not get any evidence till then? Is any hon. member able to answer? Mr. Walter Duncan had been in their employ for years, he had been loaned to the Customs department from the Finance department, or rather he had been loaned to the protective association and by them loaned to the Customs department, and was a Customs official for over a year before that. Now, I wonder how it was they could not get any evidence till the end of November. Were Bisaillon's offences only shortly prior to the end of November, 1925? The offences upon which he has been dismissed, were they of recent date? Why, they extend back for years. The Prime Minister said: Oh, we are the people, we got Bisaillon, we kept at him until we got him, and only because we caught him and because we had the Duncan report a little later were these charges laid. Has he read the evidence of Mr. Walter Duncan? If he has, he will find Mr. Walter Duncan swore that on the very occasion when the present Minister of Customs sent him to Montreal to get evidence against Bisaillon he told him about Mr. Stevens' resolution to be moved in the House of Commons. Will the hon. member look at page 499 of the evidence? On the last third of the page he will find the following:

> The Witness: I do not recall all that was said at the time—

That is the time of the conversation when he was sent down to Montreal.

—but I know that before I started out there was talk of his dismissal.

An hon. MEMBER: This is Duncan speaking?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Q. For what reason?
A. I presume complaints that had reached the minister.
Q. Was anything more than that said to you?
A. Not that I can recollect.
Q. Before you commenced to execute your commission?
A. Well, there was something said about the Hon. Mr. Stevens' resolution.
Q. Who said that?
A. I talked about it, and I think the minister talked about it.
Q. Hon. Mr. Boivin talked to you about that?
A. Yes.
Q. About the Stevens' resolution?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you remember the purport of that conversation?
A. No, only that I was to proceed to Montreal, and as soon as I had sufficient evidence, to report to the minister, which I did.
Q. Was the reference to Mr. Stevens' investigation made on the same occasion when you were told to proceed to Montreal and proceed to investigate Mr. Bisaillon?
A. Yes.
Q. It was?
A. Yes.

I wonder what hon. members now think of the promptitude of the government in this respect. Let me make this remark in passing. It is quite true that Mr. Duncan was sent to Montreal a day or two days before Mr. Stevens' resolution came out in this House, or before notice of it was given in the press. But it was known to those associated with Mr. Duncan, and indirectly to the minister, that this resolution was coming; it must have been so known or the minister never could have spoken of the resolution at the time he sent Mr. Duncan to Montreal. I wonder why the assiduous minister who was only too anxious, if Mr. Bisaillon were guilty, to have him arrested and punished; that assiduous minister of the immaculate record, Mr. Bureau, was never able to get any evidence on Bisaillon. If hon. gentlemen will read the evidence taken before this committee regarding Bisaillon they will find whole series of pages taken up with it. Then ask yourselves how it is that all this was unknown to the minister and unknown to the government until news of the resolution came out and Mr. Duncan hied himself to Montreal at the request of the Minister of Customs.

One would think, to hear the Prime Minister this afternoon, that all Mr. Sparks had done was to say, "I have suspicions of Mr. Bisaillon; I want you to dismiss him." I ask hon. gentlemen to read the letters which Mr. Sparks wrote the Prime Minister on February 4 and again on March 20, 1925. I speak now from memory, but my memory is good; it is not very long since I read the letters, and I speak in the hearing of those who may correct me. In that letter allegation after allegation was recited against Mr. Bisaillon; in that letter the attention of the government was directed to his evidence given at the city of Quebec, together with facts showing that evidence to be false. It is shown that a man with a salary of $2,300 a year had $69,000 on deposit at a certain town, and that the evidence he gave at Quebec to show how that money came to be there was so ridiculous as to be ludicrous; that he had added his debits and his credits together in order to make up the deposit of $69,000. This is all shown in the letter; many other things are adduced and then Mr. Sparks says, "If this it not enough to warrant Mr. Bisaillon being dealt with, then tell me if you still insist that I must make specific charges." That letter was never answered save by an acknowledgement written by the clerk of the Privy Council a month less four days after the letter was despatched, and that reply merely said that it would receive "due consideration."

5 p.m.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, but it was answered verbally as well.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes; now we are again getting "parliamentary" evidence which was not given before the committee. I am informed by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre—and this will be in the evidence without a doubt, although I cannot recall it myself—that Mr. Sparks was asked in the committee to disclose these conversations with the Prime Minister, and was refused the privilege of doing so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not know why the privilege should have been refused.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I made a mistake; he was not refused the privilege but he declined to do so because he felt these conversations to be confidential. But Mr. Sparks gave this evidence; if the Prime Minister felt that the evidence was not a fair representation of the whole truth it was his duty to go before that committee and so correct and modify that evidence by his own that the truth would be faithfully revealed. When he has failed to do that he cannot be heard in parliament; he cannot in a speech to this House say, "No, the evidence is not right; it is not a just reflection of the facts, I will tell the facts now when I cannot be cross-examined and when Mr. Sparks cannot contradict me." I leave this point, as to the knowledge of the government, merely with a request to hon. members of this House who want to deal with this subject on the evidence and on the facts to read the various communications which passed between the government and the Commercial Protective Association. They will find there, it is true, commendation of the early course of the government; they will find a friendly disposition on the part of the association and its president, Mr. Sparks, towards the government; they will be convinced without doubt that Mr. Sparks and his association approached this task in the friendliest spirit to the administration. But they will soon be convinced also that Mr. Sparks and the association came to the conclusion that the ministry was either powerless or wanted to be powerless, and would do absolutely nothing to enforce the law and so purge the service of those who were engaged in its prostitution. The Prime Minister says Mr. Sparks was against the government in the last election. So he was, and I venture to suggest that if any hon. member of this House, be he as strong a Liberal as Mr. Sparks has been all his life, had the same experience with this government as Mr. Sparks had, he would probably turn against the administration also.

Now I wish to proceed to a discussion of the evidence which peculiarly affects an hon. gentleman who is in this House, and who has already made his defence and may do so again. I am going to speak on this matter not without kindness, I hope, and certainly with no personal animosity; I am also going to speak with all the frankness in my power. When I sought to assure the minister of the good opinion personally which hon. gentlemen on this side of the House have always held of him he was pleased to hurl back what I thought a rather coarse gibe, but in what I have to say I shall not be influenced at all by any recollection of that incident. The minister is in the House, and one always feels more free to speak of hon. gentlemen who are in the House and able to defend themselves.

May I first make a few personal references to the minister. He entered this House some fifteen years ago after a brilliant record at the bar, a record which maintained its brilliancy in parliament. So highly was he regarded that under the late administration, there being unfortunately no French speaking member on our side of the House, he was entrusted with the honour and charged with the duties of the position of Deputy Speaker. I recall this by way of tribute, because my purpose is to give the House some idea of his ability. I doubt if the chair was ever filled with as great capacity as respects to complete command of the rules of parliament as was the case with the minister; certainly in the efficiency of his discharge of that work he never was exceeded. He is a man of extraordinary ability; on that score no stone can be cast against him, and no excuse can be made of his conduct on the ground of simplicity or inexperience. If he has done wrong he has done so knowing the right as perhaps very few hon. members of this House would know it; if he has sinned against the light it is not because he did not see the light. There is none more capable and none of a clearer mind.

Now, what is alleged against the minister which, in our judgment, it is the duty of parliament to pass upon? There is much but chiefly—and I dwell on those which are chief only—his conduct in connection with the barge Tremblay liquor and his conduct in connection with Moses Aziz. These have been most to the front, but I do not want the House to come to the conclusion that the evidence of the degeneration of the department in so far as the present minister is affected is confined to the barge Tremblay and the Moses Aziz case. The evidence is multitudinous. There is not a sign of reform upon the accession of the minister so far as the evidence discloses. But I want to take what the minister has said in his two addresses in this House, and in the evidence, as respects these cases. I will deal first with the barge Tremblay case. I am not going to deal with it from the aspect of the treatment of Captain Tremblay, the appeal made by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) the light fine imposed, and the fact that the captain was allowed to get away with a gross offence against the laws of this country at a profit of something over $3,000—this feature is bad enough—but I am going to come to the feature which deals with the disposal of the alcohol seized.

Mr. DONAGHY: Will the right hon. gentleman permit another question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. DONAGHY: Will the right hon. gentleman be fair enough to state at what time the barge Tremblay was seized and when that offence was committed, and whether it was before or after the new Minister of Customs and Excise was appointed?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is true the barge Tremblay seizure was made before the minister was appointed, and a very considerable time before, and that the guilt of this does not attach to the present minister; but the guilt of which I am going to speak does attach to the minister. I was wondering when the hon. member interjected his question why he had not thought of the appropriateness of putting that question when the Prime Minister was on his feet; when such a high eulogy was passed upon Mr. Bureau and upon his associates, and the House was being regaled with the fairness with which the department was administered. I wondered why he did not think then that it was at this particular time that Captain Tremblay was allowed to get away with a crime at a profit? Would that not have been an appropriate interruption to the Prime Minister rather than to me?

I come now to the disposal of this liquor. Some 16,000 gallons, I believe, of what is known as special denatured F alcohol was seized and remained for some considerable time in the possession of the government on some wharves in Montreal. But not long after the accession of the minister he sold that liquor without getting in touch with the officer who, at the time, had charge of its disposition. Indeed, without the knowledge of that officer, it may be said behind the officer's back he came to a bargain with a political associate—only about a month or two or three months before a member of this House—to dispose of that at some 36 cents a gallon. He made the sale, that political associate and his friends got the liquor, and the contract apparently was embalmed in some sort of a document, on a regular form of the department which stipulated certain conditions. On February 2 last allegations respecting this matter were levelled by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens). The minister was charged with having failed to safeguard the public interests in his disposal of this seized liquor. By way of defence the minister stated that he had got a good price for it; that he had got 36 cents a gallon although it could have been manufactured by the purchasers for 32 cents; but inasmuch as they were in a hurry and needed the alcohol for blending purposes they paid 36 cents a gallon and thereby he made some money for the treasury of Canada. The minister went on to say that that liquor was sold under such conditions that not a gallon, not an ounce of it could be used by the purchasers save upon the payment of an excise duty of $10 a gallon. Ten dollars a gallon would amount to $160,000 in addition to the sale price of the liquor. The minister admits now that his representations to parliament at that time were not correct, but in his speech the day before yesterday he said: "I was taken by surprise. I did not know that speech was to be delivered by Mr. Stevens, and I was not ready." Hon. gentlemen will remember that we had offered to adjourn the debate and the offer had been refused by the other side. They could have had time had they wanted it. That is not very pertinent now but what I want to emphasize is this: The resolution of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre had been on the order paper for weeks. The Department of Customs knew of the charges, knew of the action the hon. member intended to take, with respect to the Department of Customs, and the minister, as hon. gentlemen will remember came into this House with quite a number of papers whatever they were. From these papers, evidently departmental, he read, and sought to have the matter all settled with the assertion that this liquor was for blending purposes and that $160,000 was to come to the treasury, the statement invoking immense applause from his followers. It transpired in the evidence that the liquor was not sold for blending purposes at all and that not a dollar was collected, and that the time had gone by when one dollar of excise could be collected into the treasury of Canada out of the disposal of the liquor for 36 cents a gallon; that the stage had been passed when collection of duty could be made and the matter had gone out of the control of the government altogether. Well, we have reached that point. But the minister now says: "This was denatured alcohol; it was not fit for potable purposes."

Mr. STEVENS: Denatured after it went to Dominion Distilleries.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Denatured after it went to Dominion Distilleries, and that it was sold for export to the United States. Is not that the minister's assertion? I read his speech very carefully and I ask him now if he did not intend that inference to be given to this House by his statements? If I am wrong I want to be corrected.

Mr. BOIVIN: I shall be very glad to repeat the statement for my right hon. friend so there will be no misunderstanding. What I said on February 2 was that I was under the impression that this alcohol was purchased by the Dominion Distilleries for blending purposes, and that not one gallon, not one bottle, not one ounce of that liquor could leave its distillery without the payment of excise duty upon it. That is exactly my statement on February 2nd. Speaking in the House the day before yesterday, I said that I was mistaken in one respect—that the liquor which had been purchased by Dominion Distilleries was used not for blending purposes but for denaturing purposes, and that when it left the distillery it left as denatured alcohol. My hon. friend knows, and every hon. member in this House knows, that denatured alcohol leaves the distilleries without the payment of any excise tax—that there is no excise tax upon it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That may be all very true, but it is not an answer to the question. I am asking the minister if he did not give this House to understand that this alcohol was sold for denaturing purposes to be exported to the United States?

Mr. BOIVIN: At the time the alcohol was sent to the Dominion Distilleries the minister did not know. The proof that I did not know was that I made the mistake of saying that the alcohol was for blending purposes. I did not know what purpose it was purchased for. It was purchased by the Dominion Distilleries Limited, at 36 cents a gallon, brought into their distillery at that price and it could not leave their distillery without paying $9 a gallon, unless it was sent out as denatured alcohol, when it had no duty to pay.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister stated the other day:

> If it is true that the Dominion Distillers succeeded in evading the law; if it is true that two or three carloads of that denatured alcohol did not reach the United States—

Mr. BOIVIN: I said that, it is quite true.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It being an evasion of the law.

Mr. BOIVIN: The hon. member for Vancouver Centre stated that three carloads of that alcohol did not reach the United States, and he also said that it might have been used for potable purposes in this country, although it was marked poison and denatured.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The breach of the law, according to the ministers' statement, was failure to export it to the United States. He said so. He said three carloads were kept in Canada. The purpose of the purchasers, as known, was to export it to the United States, and the minister knew that for denaturing purposes this class of alcohol could not be sold, under the regulations of his own department, in Canada except to very limited licensed purchasers. I want to ask in what position is the government of Canada, selling liquor for export to the United States? Because this liquor cannot be imported into the United States under the laws of that country, as known to the Customs department and to the minister. I am not one of those who contend that it is the duty of the government of Canada, or the duty of the people of Canada specially, to go to the extent of making themselves responsible for the enforcement of the revenue laws or any other laws of the United States. The United States will attend to that themselves, but I do say that the government of Canada should not itself become a party to a breach of the American law, and when liquor was sold under conditions that it could be used for no other purpose than to be sent to the United States, against the laws of that country, sold by the government of Canada, that is making the government of Canada a party to the breach of the law of the United States.

Mr. BOIVIN: I rise to a point of order. I absolutely deny the statement that when the liquor was sold to the Dominion Distilleries Corporation Limited, it was sold for the purpose of export to the United States, or that there was any such condition attached to the sale.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister's speech is strictly in conformity with that inference and nothing else, because he said the breach of the law consisted in not sending it to the United States. He said that in his last speech.

Mr. BOIVIN: I said no such thing. I was answering the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre who made the assertion without having any proof in the evidence to support it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister said:

> If it is true that the Dominion Distilleries succeeded in evading the law—

Mr. BOIVIN: If it is true that—

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is true that three or four carloads of that denatured alcohol did not reach the United States—

Mr. BOIVIN: If it is true.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is there any other inference in that than that the evasion of the law consisted in the liquor being sent to the United States? And the minister knows that liquor could not have been sold in Canada, save to licensed purchasers, and for specific and restricted purposes. They would not think of purchasing it for such specific purposes. He knows it could not be exported anywhere else. You could not export that liquor to reach any other country save in violation of the revenue laws of that country. How could we manufacture the liquor here, send it to another country and pay the revenue charges of that country? No legitimate use, therefore could be made of it for denaturing purposes.

Mr. CANNON: Is it not a fact that the minister at that time was discussing with the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, who had assumed that the distilleries were exporting it to the United States—

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. CANNON: And the minister said, "If such is the case—

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. CANNON: I may be wrong.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The member for Vancouver Centre will answer this very thoroughly. There is no escape; but the department must have known the purposes, unless it was to be used for potable purposes, and the evidence shows this liquor was used for potable purposes, not only in Canada, but what went to other places was used for potable purposes, and this country was defrauded out of a revenue of $160,000. Is the government to be able to stand in this House and say "That $160,000 was lost but we are not responsible; what could we have done to collect that money?" If we have a government that cannot look after the collection of the revenue is it not worth while suggesting to them that another government take their place? What did the minister of the department do, after selling that liquor, to see to it that it was used for the purposes for which it should have been used? The answer is, nothing at all. Every hon. gentleman knows that liquor was purchased in order that a fortune might be made out of it by the friends of the ministry, and a fortune was made out of it by the friends of the minister.

Mr. BOIVIN: Is it not a fact stated in evidence that the Dominion Distillery Products, Limited, could have bought the same liquor from other distilleries and did buy 60,000 gallons of it at 38 cents a gallon, two cents a gallon more than we sold the barge Tremblay alcohol for. Is it not true that the only fortune, therefore, they could possibly have been made by this purchase was two cents a gallon on the 16,000 gallons? Is it not true that if any fortune was made, it was $320 and no more.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And on the liquor they bought from others as denatured liquor this government should have collected the excise, because it was used for potable purposes, and the government knew it.

Mr. BOIVIN: When it is proved by my hon. friend from the evidence taken before that committee, that the liquor was used for potable purposes, this government will take the responsibility and not before.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This government has the responsibility now. We have the evidence of Mr. George.

Mr. CANNON: Not a word of evidence.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We can easily adduce the evidence. Now the minister says, "This was not good liquor". And he produces a letter from the Quebec Liquor Commission addressed to Mr. Bureau written sometime in January, 1925. I listened in this House yesterday to the hon. member for North Vancouver seeking to upbraid the member for Vancouver Centre for not having proved explicitly that a certain number of files were taken from the department and destroyed. I remember the hon. member for Vancouver Centre making a statement to that effect in his speech on February 2, and I remember the minister saying that what was referred to was just the personal correspondence of Mr. Bureau and that he took such correspondence away. I think it was eight wooden boxes that he took to his home in Three Rivers. It was stated they were his personal property, not public property at all, that they were not destroyed, that they were at his home in Three Rivers, and that he was able to get whatever he had asked for up to that date. The first evidence we have of what is in that correspondence which Mr. Bureau took and still has is this letter of January 25. Will hon. members look at the letter and tell me if they see anything personal about it. If it is "personal" and "private", why is it introduced in the debate? Why, may I ask, was it not adduced in evidence? The first evidence we have of the contents is that these papers constitute documents which are the property of the people of Canada. The former minister takes the position: I will keep these eight wooden boxes here. If I can find in them anything that will help me or the government I will give that to the Minister of Customs, but the rest I will keep as my property and nobody will know anything about it. That is the position of the eight wooden boxes. If that does not amount to destruction as regards the people of Canada,

I would like to know what it is. It is worse than destruction; it enables the party who suppresses them, to use what he likes out of them and to refuse to the country the right to use the rest or any part.

I would not refer to the eight wooden boxes any more if I were a friend of the Hon. Jacques Bureau so far as this investigation goes. This letter says that the Quebec Liquor Commission have examined this liquor and it is not as good as what they buy from Canadian distilleries, although the evidence which was given at the inquiry, and which alone we are allowed to work on, declared it to be exactly the same as the liquor which the Quebec Liquor Commission had bought and on which it paid revenue tax. I can understand the minister selling liquor as denatured alcohol if it is unfitted for use as potable liquor to a private individual who does not pay anything in the way of revenue tax; but if the minister has something which can possibly be sold for use as potable liquor, it is his duty so to sell it because in that way he gets revenue for the country which he is sworn to serve. If the minister could have got a nickel for the liquor from the commission it was his duty to get it, because if the liquor was sold to that commission the revenue tax would be paid.

The only meaning of this letter is this: While they claim, although it is against the evidence, that the liquor is not as good as what they bought themselves, they would have bought it but at a very low price. If they bought it for a cent, the revenue would be paid, the $160,000 would come to this country. But the minister preferred to dispose of it to a political associate and the country lost the $160,000, although we were led to believe by the minister himself in his first speech in this House that this money was still to come into the treasury of Canada.

I want to come to the Moses Aziz case and I shall dwell on this with a little more thoroughness.

Mr. BOIVIN: I hope the right hon. gentleman will be more successful.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I hope I shall be as successful as I was on the last. The minister's success in this House appears to be in such clashing, violent contradiction of himself as has never been witnessed before in parliament and never witnessed before in the case of a minister of his ability. Ask him to put one sentence of his speech of February 2 against any sentence of his speech of the day before yesterday and make them harmonize. Ask him in the Aziz case to put any sentence of his evidence beside his sentences in this House the day before yesterday and make them harmonize. The minister has indulged in the practice which the Prime Minister illustrated this afternoon of reserving for the committee such evidence as he thought he could safely give when subject to cross-examination and then coming to this House with the remainder and telling it here where he knows no cross-examination can take place. The minister sought to justify his course in relation to Moses Aziz by the assertion that he had not acceded to the request of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud).

It becomes us at this point to inquire what was the nature of the appeal made by the hon. member for Gloucester. Hon. members know it, but its exact terms had perhaps better be on record.

> Will you please consult with Hon. Mr. Lapointe about the proceedings instituted against Mr. A. M. Aziz, Caraquet, for violation of the Revenue Act. I attach the greatest importance to this affair, since in the actual circumstances I need the help of all my friends.
> The Hon. Mr. Lapointe will give you all the necessary information. Mr. Aziz is of the highest help for us during this campaign, and we cannot do without his services.
> With assurance of my highest consideration.

The appeal was this, that Moses Aziz, convicted for a second time on the prosecution of this government, convicted for the third time altogether of being a bootlegger and a violater on a wholesale scale of the revenue laws of Canada, having been convicted and sentenced, should be kept out of gaol because he was necessary to the hon. member for Gloucester in the election then ensuing; that he was a precious help; that the hon. member could not do without his services. This was the appeal of the hon. member for Gloucester. It was characterized yesterday by his political associate the hon. member for North Vancouver—and I would not ask that a more severe characterization be applied—as such a letter that no man who had any sense of public honour could write and that the self-respect of the hon. member for North Vancouver was such that he would not attempt to defend it.

It follows that if an appeal of this dishonourable character was made to a minister, and that appeal was acceded to by the minister, the offence of the minister was greater than the offence of the appellant. The duties of the minister are higher; his responsibilities to the whole public are higher and more direct. If the minister acceded to that appeal his offence was worse than the offence of the hon. member for Gloucester. Did the minister accede to the appeal or did he not? I put that question in the mind of all hon. members. It is always better in these matters to get down to evidence, facts and details. Let us try to understand the matter. I want now the best friend the minister has in this House to answer me when I put the question again: Did the minister accede to that dishonourable appeal or did he not? Every hon. member and none better than the minister himself knows that he did accede to that appeal, not only acceded to it at the time, but persisted in his compliance with that appeal over a space of many months.

When the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) asked the minister: Had you, at the time you answered the appeal of Mr. Robichaud, read Mr. Robichaud's letter? Mr. Robichaud's letter is dated the 21st September; the answer is dated the 28th or 29th September. The minister said that he either dictated the answer or it was ready there dictated for him when he went in. He answered the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre with the statement that he had not read the letter and that it had not been read to him. He went on to explain that he came to his office, found a large number of letters, about 150, with the answers there ready for him to sign. When he came to this he asked his secretary about the subject and his secretary said that it was an appeal from Mr. Robichaud to withhold the issuing of a summons for Moses Aziz. He asked the secretary whether Moses Aziz had been convicted. The secretary said yes. He asked him what the reason was and the secretary said that there was to be a revaluation and there was not. Then he asked him if he had power to withhold the execution of the warrant and he was told yes. Thereupon he said: Withhold it.

Speaking last night the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said that he was very much impressed by this reply. Perhaps it animated him to move this subamendment. If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would associate less with those who are vitally concerned with the result of this verdict and read the evidence itself, read the former speeches of the minister, he would not be quite so much impressed with a reply of this kind. I want to point the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to at least three answers of the minister in the evidence, when he was under oath. I believe, that he had seen that letter of Mr. Robichaud. After I have done that, I will point to something else; but before I do this, let me put a thought in the minds of hon. members. Do they think that any private secretary should be retained for five minutes who would permit a minister to sign an answer to a letter of that kind without knowing its contents? A minister's duties are multifarious, as I ought to know; I have had charge myself of as many as three and four departments at a time. But I know, as the minister knows, that no letter of that character would ever be answered by any minister or any minister's secretary without its contents being known, and if the secretary permitted an answer to be made under such circumstances he has no business to be in the service one hour longer. Had the minister denied when giving his evidence having seen the letter or having been told about it by his secretary, then the secretary could have been called, and if he was delinquent the public of Canada who pay him would know it. But the minister reserves that assertion for parliament, at a time when he knows the secretary cannot be called nor he himself be subjected to cross-examination. The minister in his address the day before yesterday said in reference to this point, as will be found at page 4838 of Hansard:

> Now what are the facts? Why did the minister, even at that late date, consider it advisable to hear the member representing the constituency before this man was sent to jail? There were several reasons. A letter from Mr. Stewart, the customs preventive officer at that point, which unfortunately was not filed, but which I have here, shows that Moses Aziz had turned king's evidence and had convicted his own brother and another person of smuggling.

The minister says that the reason he gave that answer and authorized his deputy to wire to Mr. Stewart, telling Mr. Stewart to see the magistrate and make sure that the warrant was not executed, was that he had a letter from Mr. Stewart stating that Moses Aziz had been tried in another case and had given King's evidence against his own brother, and that he had been given a vague promise by Mr. Stewart that he would be tried summarily and not on an indictable offence. This was one reason, and I ask hon. members to reflect that, to know of such reason, the minister must have examined the contents of Mr. Stewart's letter. And it is reasonable to assume that he would inquire into the contents of Mr. Stewart's letter and not acquaint himself with the contents of a letter upon the basis of which he was to take action? There is another reason also. I quote again:

> That is one point.

This illustrates the mathematical definition that a point has no dimensions.

> The next point is this: there is an assertion in the record, it is read into the record in a letter from Mr. Veniot, that the smuggling operation complained of took place before the twenty-seventh day of June, 1925, the date upon which the new law was adopted. Previous to that date no jail punishment was obligatory, and the smuggling in this case had actually taken place before the new law went into force.

The minister must have known of the contents of Mr. Veniot's letter in which Mr. Veniot contended that there was an extenuating circumstance that Aziz had the liquor before the new law of 1925 went into effect. The minister proceeds to refer to the claim for revaluation:

The law, however, provides for imprisonment for a term of one year, and he was sentenced to three months' imprisonment only. The judge therefore must himself have made a mistake.

I admit that up to the point we have reached it is possible, though very highly improbable—so highly improbable that I do not think the minister should ask us to accept the suggestion—that he would make these inquiries in order to find reasons for acceding to the appeal of his fellow member from Gloucester without knowing what was contained in the letter which that member had written. It is hardly likely that he would inquire into all these other matters which, as he says, he had in mind and not inquire into the reasons given by the member himself. It is exceedingly improbable that he would not read the letter or have it read to him. I stop here to make a few comments on these reasons advanced by the minister. The first is that there was evidence in a letter from Mr. Stewart that Aziz, because he had turned king's evidence in another case, was given a vague promise that he would be tried summarily and not on an indictable offence. The House will be surprised when I tell them that Aziz was tried on summary trial and not on an indictable offence. He was never tried on an indictable offence and the minister knows it.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend knows that under the criminal law a man may be tried for an indictable offence and elect to have a summary trial.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, but will the hon. gentleman read the charge in this case? Has he read it?

Mr. CANNON: The nature of the offence makes no difference. Whether the trial will be summary or whether the accused will be prosecuted on an indictable offence is a matter that is left to his option.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The nature of the offence makes no difference whether it is indictable or summary? What does make a difference?

Mr. CANNON: A man may be tried for an indictable offence any day and have a summary trial.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Let the hon. gentleman read the offence in this case. He will find it in the evidence at page 1316. He will see that the man was tried under section 219 of the Customs Act and convicted of a summary offence. He was not tried on an indictable offence; he appeared before a magistrate. Consequently that reason wholly falls to the ground. The next reason is that there was an appeal from Mr. Veniot on the ground that the man had liquor in his possession before the new act was passed under which we are led to understand that he was tried. But I inform the House now that Aziz was not tried under anything new in the act at all; he was tried and convicted of an offence which has been in the law for decades. Again, therefore, the reason advanced by the minister falls, as appears on the record. But the House knows, just as the minister does, that even if all these circumstances existed as they have been described they were open to Aziz in his own defence. These were matters he should have pleaded; but he pleaded nothing. The fact is that with these things before him the minister must have known that there was nothing in these allegations. And he did know it; for later on, when he had nothing more before him other than he had on September 28, he said there was no reason for interference.

Now I come to the minister's evidence. In three places he states on oath that he actually had seen the letter, and although he does not swear that he read it the clear inference open to the committee was that he had read it. Surely he would not say that he had seen the letter and wish to convey the impression that he had not read it. The committee would have a right to assume, as beyond any doubt it did assume, that the minister did read the letter.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): If he had not read it he should have said so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly, if that was his defence. But I will show that the minister's defence before the committee was wholly different from the defence he made in this House, both in manner and as to the facts he sought to establish. He took an entirely different position.

Mr. BOIVIN: I am very sorry that I did not know at that time that the committee would attach so much importance to that letter. Had I known that I would have followed before the committee the same line of defence I adopted here, after becoming acquainted with the facts.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Surely the minister knew what importance the committee attached to the letter. It was made clear enough to him in the questions he was asked. Does he stand here now and suggest that he did not appreciate the importance of a communication of that kind? Can any hon. member conceive for a moment that the committee would not attach the utmost importance to a letter which the miniser had received and which is described by one of his colleagues as stamping the writer with dishonour and something no self-respecting man would defend? Of course the minister fully understood the importance of the letter. It was impressed upon him by the questions which were put to him by the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett).

An hon. MEMBER: He was under oath.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, he was under oath. And what is more, the defence he assumed before the committee was wholly inconsistent with what he said in this House the day before yesterday. The two could not possibly be harmonized. I want to come, though, to what the minister stated in evidence. Hon. gentlemen will find it in many places, but chiefly at pages—

Mr. BOIVIN: Pages 1406 to 1413.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I thank the hon. minister. I read first at page 1407. He uttered two sentences before he used the following words:

If the committee will look two pages further down in the same evidence they will find that I took good care to say, before leaving the box, that I did not want to mislead the committee—

Evidently the minister had been in the box before.

—that I had been in Ottawa on two or three occasions to attend council meetings, and when here had gone to the office and attended to some routine matters. The 29th September, or 28th and 29th September was evidently one of those occasions. I remember very well having seen a telegram or a letter of the 21st September which was on my desk when I arrived.

How does the minister say he was right in stating that to the committee if he had not read that letter? Everybody would assume from that answer that he had read the letter. Then he goes on:

I might say I was at the office only in the evening. My private secretary, Mr. Ide, was there with me, assisting me to clean up correspondence, and when I saw the letter of September 21, without taking the time to go through the file, I was informed by Mr. Ide in a previous message sent by the—

and so on. Twice there he states he saw it. I turn to the next page, 1408:

Q. The fact is Moses Aziz has not yet been imprisoned?—A. No, he has not.

Q. And so far as the records show he has not been imprisoned because of the intervention of the Minister of Customs and Excise?—A. Well, I would not like to admit that the intervention of the minister was the sole cause of his not being imprisoned.

Now I ask hon. members to listen to this:

Q. It is the causa or causan, speaking as a lawyer,— said Mr. Bennett.

—of his not being imprisoned?—A. Possibly. I am sure the committee will appreciate—said the hon. minister:

—that seeing this letter as I did on the 28th or 29th of September, having just entered into my duties and not knowing the rules and regulations, I was asked to consult the Hon. Mr. Lapointe who was not in Ottawa at the time, and whom I could not consult.

Now, the hon. gentleman will remember that in the body of that letter he was asked to consult the Hon. Mr. Lapointe, and he explains that he did not see him, because Mr. Lapointe at the time was out of town. So far I have quoted from the minister's evidence, but now I want to direct the attention of hon. gentlemen to what the minister himself said in this House before the question of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) was posed. I ask hon. members to look at page 4837 of Hansard containing the speech of the minister delivered the day before yesterday, and I direct special attention to this because the minister knows this address was revised by himself, and very rightly so. I read:

Sitting at my desk in Ottawa, on or about September 28, I was approached by my secretary who had several hundred letters to dispose of—the accumulation of a month. He was trying as rapidly as possible to deal with them, and reading this one to me he remarked, "This is a request from Mr. Robichaud—" and so on. The minister in his own speech before the question was put declared to this House that that letter was read to him by his secretary before it was answered, and previously three times in three sentences in his evidence he declared that he had seen the letter which asked him to consult with Mr. Lapointe. I wonder if this impresses the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Are we to hear now the minister say he did not see it or read it, that he had not it read to him, that he did not know its contents when he made and directed that reply, in face of the fact that three times on oath he swore he saw it, again in his speech he said it was read to him, and in face of the further fact that the reasons given in this House for acceding to the request were reasons which involved considerable inquiry on the part of the minister, inquiry which it is certainly not reasonable to assume he would undertake without making inquiry into the contents of the letter itself. I lay these matters before hon. members, and I venture to say that all who will read this evidence will never accuse me of having presented unfairly the position of the minister.

Now he says: I was justified in directing that despatch and in writing my reply of September 28 or 29. I ask hon. gentlemen to keep closely in mind what that reply was. The minister said: I did not stop this man going to jail. I had to order him to jail—that is the only inference; I am not putting it in his own words, I admit—under the custom of New Brunswick, unless the private prosecutor interferes and sees that a warrant of commitment is issued after sentence, the warrant will not be issued; "That," he says, "is the custom in New Brunswick; I did not keep him out, all I did was to say to Mr. Stewart, 'Don't interest yourself to see the warrant is issued'." The fact is that is not what the minister did at all. The minister directed Mr. Stewart to go to the magistrate and see that the warrant was not issued.

Mr. BOIVIN: I never communicated with Mr. Stewart at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, but he directed his chief preventive officer to do it.

Mr. BOIVIN: He did not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He swore it in evidence.

Mr. BOIVIN: I never spoke to Mr. Wilson until a long time after the Moses Aziz matter came before me, when I instructed him to send a message and have Moses Aziz incarcerated. You will find the instructions given through Mr. Blair, or through the chief preventive officer.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know how many intermediaries there were, but I know that what was sent was sent by the direction of the minister, according to the evidence. The number of intermediaries is for the minister to explain, I do not know how many there were.

Mr. BOIVIN: The minister had only been in his office a few days and did not know the method of procedure.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very well. This is what is shown in the evidence to have been his instructions. If the minister will stop to look, I think he will find he himself said a telegram was sent at his request or direction. I am satisfied the minister will find that to be the case. Certainly it is shown by other evidence that it was sent at his direction, and the telegram was to the effect that the minister desired to make further investigation before the warrant was issued, and that Stewart was instructed to go to the magistrate and see that the warrant was not issued. But I ask hon. members, I put it to the minister: Does he think at this hour that he has any right to intervene after sentence is pronounced by a court of justice?

Mr. BOIVIN: It all depends on the merits of the case.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Who tries the merits, the minister or the judge?

Mr. BOIVIN: My right hon. friend has asked me a question. He asks me now if I am under the impression that I have a right to intervene between the condemnation of an accused and the execution of the sentence. I say that it may not be expedient for a minister to intervene, but that under the law as it stands to-day and in the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice as embodied in my speech the assertion is made that the minister has the right to issue a warrant of commitment or to not issue it as he sees fit.

Mr. MEIGHEN: After hearing the minister now I feel like saying that reprehensible as was his conduct in relation to both the barge Tremblay and Moses Aziz, I would rather be guilty of it than of certain statements the minister has made in this House. Does the minister stand before his fellow lawyers in this House, before a layman or before anyone and say that after conviction he has the right to interfere? Imagine him doing so! The law of the land is there; the man was convicted under a Dominion statute, and not under any provincial law. Are hon. members of this House to accept the assumption of the minister that after the merits of a case are tried before a judge there is still jurisdiction in the minister to prevent execution of the sentence? Is British law in that condition? Will the minister repeat that he believes in his heart that he had the slightest right, after the judge gave his judgment in the case, to step in between that sentence and the prisoner?

Mr. CANNON: Certainly he had.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The last words the House was treated to as it rose at six o'clock were an assertion by the Solicitor General, concurred in by the Minister of Customs, that that minister had the right, under the law of Canada, to step in between a sentence and its execution. It is one of the sad features of this House that hon. members can be found who will make assertions of law of that character. The law is written in the Criminal Code, its provisions are there; the duty of the magistrate is there. Surely it is the common knowledge of every British subject that whatever may be the rights of a prosecutor, and they are very limited, up to the time of a conviction, the moment the conviction takes place those rights, whatever they are, are closed, and the prisoner is in the hands of the court, subject to no jurisdiction but the jurisdiction of the court. If it is to be assumed that the Department of Customs has control and discretion—and it has in very large degree—during the progress of the prosecution, but that after the merits are tried, the verdict given and the sentence pronounced, it still has control, then I ask what are our courts of justice more than mere machinery of government departments? The minister said just before six, and these words are in line with what he said in his speech of the day before yesterday, that under the law as it stands to-day and in the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice as embodied in his speech, the minister has the right to issue a warrant of commitment or not to issue it as he sees fit. As I said before, it is really something of a shock to hear a minister of the crown—yea even a member of parliament—make an assertion of that sort. The minister issue a warrant of commitment? He never issues a warrant of commitment. It is the magistrate who issues the warrant of commitment, and the magistrate's duty to issue it is imperative and final, subject to the intervention of none whatever save a higher court. Aziz might have appealed to a higher court had he wished; but if he does not, no department of this government and no minister of the crown, has the right to sit in appeal over a judge and pass judgment on the merits of the sentence, or as to whether it is right or wrong.

I have before me the form of the conviction and the form of the commitment. I do not wish to labour the record with too much in the way of quotations, but if hon. members will look at Crankshaw's Criminal Code, fifth edition, at pages 1286 and 1287, they will see what the duty of a magistrate is, and will see very clearly that no one can intervene between the magistrate after sentence and the prisoner himself. Now an attempt was made—

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. CANNON: Will my hon. friend allow me a question? As I said this afternoon, it is probable that I may follow the right hon. gentleman, so in order to understand one thing may I put this question: Is it not a fact that the Criminal Code also has a clause to the effect that after sentence the Minister of Justice can interfere?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Minister of Justice can recommend parole or clemency to His Excellency as to imprisonment or as to fine, undoubtedly. There is a jurisdiction in clemency in His Excellency the Governor General, but that duty he never can depute to anybody. Here was a case where an attempt was made not only to get the Minister of Customs to interfere, but to interfere even before the man went to gaol; and so great was the confidence of the friends of Aziz—this "precious help in the election"—that they believed they could get the man out of gaol before he got in, by intervention of the Minister of Justice. Do not let anybody be confused. The question is as to the right of a minister of the crown, or of anybody at all, to step in and pervert a court of justice after the prosecution has wholly passed out of his hands and rests in a court of law. I do not think I need labour the subject more in order to convince any member of this House; but I want to say a few more words in order to put the Minister of Customs in the position he is bound to occupy in relation to this matter.

He states that he produced an opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice to the effect that he had a right to interfere after sentence was pronounced. I beg all hon. members—I do not need to say this to lawyers; every lawyer knows that no deputy minister of justice can sign any such thing—but I beg all others to read, and read carefully, what the Minister of Customs read from the Deputy Minister of Justice. I have it before me and I am afraid I will have to burden the record by reading it again. I ask hon. members to watch carefully and see if the Deputy Minister of Justice says one single word, expresses one single thought, on the subject of jurisdiction after conviction. I ask hon. members to follow the reading and they will find what the Deputy Minister of Justice says is that in the conduct of the prosecution—under the law it can be done, and as a matter of convenience it is done—instead of the Department of Justice conducting a prosecution it could be conducted by the Department of Customs. That is what the Deputy Minister of Justice says. He shows that under the law that could be done, so that whatever could have been done by the Department of Justice in conducting a prosecution can be done by the Minister of Customs. That is quite true, but neither the Deputy Minister of Justice nor anyone acting under him can step over the threshold of the conviction and stand between a prisoner and his sentence. Now I read this memorandum which the minister would like hon. members to confuse with the opinion that he had the right to do that act.

Referring to your inquiry as to the practice in the handling of customs and excise prosecutions—

Hon. gentlemen will note that:

I may say that there is a custom of long standing whereby the instructions to legal agents of this department or to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in certain classes of cases are given direct by the department whose minister is charged with the administration of the particular statute under which the proceedings are being taken.

The conduct of the prosecution is given to the department whose minister is charged with the particular work in respect of which there is an infringement: The memorandum proceeds:

The classes of cases referred to are principally prosecutions under the Customs and Excise Act, the Income War Tax Act, the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, the Food and Drugs Act and other statutes relating to health and agriculture. The reason for this practice, which has had the approval of successive ministers of justice, is that in the large majority of cases belonging to any particular one of these classes the points of law and the other considerations which arise are similar, and do not require to be specially considered by this department in each case. In order to keep the business in connection with these prosecutions running smoothly it is essential that the procedure should be so far as possible free from red tape. The practice referred to eliminates a great deal of unecessary correspondence between the departments concerned, resulting in a saving of time, labour and expense in the handling of this work.

So far as the customs and excise cases are concerned, the practice seems to be not inconsistent with the desires of parliament for at least two reasons, first because the administration of the Customs and Excise Act is given to the Minister of Customs, and secondly, because it is provided by section 266 of the Customs Act that:

"All penalties and forfeitures imposed by this act, or by any other act relating to the customs or to trade or navigation shall, unless other provisions are made for the recovery thereof, be sued for, prosecuted and recovered with costs by His Majesty's Attorney General of Canada, or in the name or names of the Commissioner of Customs, or any officer or officers of the customs, or other person or persons thereunto authorized by the Governor in Council either expressly or by general regulation or order, and by no other person."

Under the practice the proceedings are taken in the name of the Attorney General of Canada, but they are instituted upon instructions from the Department of Customs and Excise, and are carried on, adjourned, discontinued, abandoned or pressed to a conclusion as that department may direct.

There is the end of the whole opinion. Of course the Minister of Customs knows that the direction of prosecution, instead of being in the hands of the Attorney General, is only in his name, and it is in the hands of the Department of Customs—the direction of the prosecution to a conclusion. But once it is concluded his jurisdiction ends. To intimate to this House that after a conclusion is reached the minister could stop a warrant of commitment is a suggestion which does no credit to the minister and is something which should shock the conscience of parliament.

Now I turn to the minister's contention that the reason he did this was that he had the right to do so. I have argued, and I think shown conclusively, that he had not, that no deputy minister of justice or any other minister ever gave him such an opinion—and I may say parenthetically that, labouring as hon. members have to get an opinion, if they could have got such a statement from the deputy minister of justice they would have had it. They would be here in parliament with it. They might have brought it even to the committee, but they could not get it, so they produce just a long harangue in order to confuse the members of the House.

I now proceed to show that the minister knew he did not have the right, not only on the 28th and 29th October, but that he knew it ever since. He stands here and gives his reasons. Why did he not give these reasons when examined by the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett), the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) and the hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell)? I ask hon. members to ponder again and ask themselves why he did not give these reasons then. Did he believe he could stand cross-examination? If he did so believe, would he not have given the evidence? He sought to intimate this afternoon that the reason was that he did not know the committee regarded seriously this letter from Mr. Robichaud. What has that to do with the question? Nothing in the world. I now affirm and stand prepared to prove that the minister swore in evidence that he had no right at all to issue that retardation of the order of commitment, no right at all to interfere with that sentence, and not only that he had no such right, but that he knew so from the beginning—knew so at the time he gave his evidence. This is the minister who stands now before the House and says he had the right. If hon. gentlemen will turn to page 1408 of the evidence they will find verbatim the letter of Mr. Robichaud. They will also find verbatim a telegram sent at the request of the minister to Mr. Stewart, their officer, which telegram reads as follows:

Am directed to request you to stay execution of warrant of commitment against Moses Aziz pending further investigation. Arrange with magistrate accordingly.

Now we proceed a little further and we get to the evidence of the hon. the Minister of Customs. He said something about taking the place of the acting minister and being responsible alone. The evidence reads:

Q. That may be, although it seems that there is a difference between staying proceedings against a man, that is holding up prosecution, and interfering with commitment after sentence has been pronounced.

A. I am quite willing to admit that. I admit I did not understand this case very thoroughly, as I did not think it was within the power of a minister to stay proceedings on a warrant of commitment.

I will undertake to give six definite and distinct repudiations on the part of the minister of his right to interfere with that warrant. On the next page the examination proceeds:

Q. The question is still open, and I think you from the files satisfied yourself that the man should go to jail, but you held it up until Mr. Robichaud came to see you, and still the man is walking the streets and defying the laws of the country.

A. I want to be fair to Mr. Robichaud and I want the committee to be fair with me. I wanted to keep the promise with Mr. Robichaud, but I am willing to admit there may have been negligence on my part in not bringing Mr. Robichaud to my office. I want the committee to realize that since parliament opened the Minister of Customs has been exceedingly busy.

That is preliminary only. The examination proceeds:

Q. Why not issue the writ of commitment now?

A. I will be very glad to after I have heard Mr. Robichaud. If he has nothing further to say, there is no reason why it should not be issued.

The only reason he ever gave was that he had the right. Then the next question reads:

Q. What right have you to interpose yourself between a warrant issued by the court and its execution?

A. I do not pretend to have that right, but whether right or not I promised Mr. Robichaud I would hear him before I withdrew the order.

Mr. CANNON: If I understand the question aright, it is: What right have you to interfere between a warrant of commitment and its execution? Is that not correct?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister will not rise again after I have read a few more answers. The question was whether he had a right to interfere when he did interfere, and he admitted that he had no such right. I continue:

Q. Surely, you realize this, that you are a minister, and have your duties to perform as Minister of Customs and Excise?

A. I do not think for a moment I have a right to withhold it.

[Mr. Meighen.]

To withhold it merely. Will the minister rise now? He had no right to withhold the warrant, although the telegram was to withhold it.

Mr. BOIVIN: I shall be very glad to rise and reply to my right hon. friend if he will permit me.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He will be sorry.

Mr. BOIVIN: Perhaps not so sorry after all. What I said under oath in my evidence was the absolute truth. When the contents of that letter were communciated to me I did not think I had the right to withhold the warrant, and when I came before the committee I was not convinced that I had that right. What I said in my address in this House and what I might have said before the committee, although I will not assert that I did, is that I called in the senior officer of the department and asked him if I had the right, and he told me I had. There is a difference between what an officer tells you and what you think. My experience is in the courts of Quebec, where it is not necessary for a private prosecutor to apply for a warrant of commitment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Nor anywhere else, and no one knows that better than the minister. The criminal law is the criminal law of Canada.

Mr. BOIVIN: Will my right hon. friend allow me one question?

Mr. MEIGHEN: He is making a lot of the speech.

Mr. BOIVIN: If the criminal law is the criminal law of Canada, will my right hon. friend tell me why a man who was sentenced on the 18th day of August had not been incarcerated when I first became aware of the case on the 28th September?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will give a good surmise—because for that length of time the influence of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) was sufficient in itself, but as he could not succeed any longer, he called for the assistance of the Minister of Customs and he got it. Whether that was the whole reason or not I do not know. Am I called upon to answer why a peace officer in New Brunswick does not do his duty? The magistrate has since retired. Hon. gentlemen know the circumstances in the province at that time and they can surmise the reasons themselves. Read the letter of the then Premier of New Brunswick, Mr. Veniot, and perhaps that will give some idea of how justice was administered under him in that province. The fact is that the magistrate delayed the warrant; the fact is that the magistrate was ordered by the minister further to delay it, without any shadow of right and when the minister knew he had no shadow of right.

Mr. BOIVIN: Once again I emphatically deny, as I have a right to do, that I ever communicated with the magistrate or with the peace officer in New Brunswick.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will read where the minister said that the telegram was sent to him at the "request" of the minister.

Mr. BOIVIN: I said to send a telegram.

Mr. MEIGHEN: To send a telegram to withhold the commitment and to see that the magistrate was approached with a view to making sure that the warrant was not issued.

Mr. BOIVIN: The minister did not sign that telegram.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, he did not sign it, but the minister ordered it and that was the telegram that was sent. That shows that the officers of the department knew that they had to interfere with that magistrate or the warrant would issue. The telegram is signed by Mr. Wilson. I will ask hon. members to remember that only half a minute or a minute ago the minister said that at the time he gave his evidence he still was not convinced that he had that right. I should like hon. members to remember that answer as I proceed to read this evidence:

Q. Surely, you realize this, that you are a minister, and have your duties to perform as Minister of Customs and Excise.

A. I do not think for a moment I have a right to withhold it. I stated very clearly in my letter that I think the man should go to jail. I said that on the 28th of September or the 29th.

Right at the time the letter was written and the telegram sent, he declares that he said then that the man ought to go to gaol. Do hon. members have any doubt in their minds why that man did not go to gaol? Let us go on:

Q. Mr. Boivin, you are exceeding your power?

A. I do not believe the minister has the right to withhold execution of a warrant.

This will be very interesting to the Solicitor General who a minute ago was clinging to the straw that the warrant was perhaps somewhere on the road and had not been executed on the person of the man.

Mr. CANNON: If the minister said that he was wrong.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would think so, but I thought that was in the mind of the Solicitor General:

Q. Mr. Boivin, you are exceeding your power?

A. I do not believe the minister has the right to withhold execution of a warrant but the bald fact remains that I promised Mr. Robichaud that before I took action I would hear him. Surely there is no harm in hearing him.

This is reminiscent of the speech in the House. One would think the minister was being charged with hearing or making an appointment with a member of parliament. Certainly there is no harm in hearing a member, but there is harm in stepping in beyond the jurisdiction of the minister, perverting and prostituting the courts of justice, waiting till the member appears to be heard. Let us go on:

Q. Mr. Boivin, your position is a very unhappy one. —A. It is very unhappy.

Q. You are placing yourself in between a sentence of the court of this land and the execution of the sentence and you are doing it for one reason, and that is that an individual member of the House has asked that you do so. That is a very serious position for any minister to take, and I say now, this is something which you have no right to do as minister. —A. I do not pretend that I have, and I have made the statement three times.

Impatient that he should have to make it again. Still he went on and made it:

Q. He has been doing it—

That is Aziz.

—since the 18th of August and you are preventing the application of a just sentence because of your interference. You admit now you have no right as minister to interfere. I say to you, in the face of these facts, should not the writ of commitment be issued at once?—A. I think it should. I do not think it ever should have been withheld.

Q. I must admit I cannot understand the persistent delay. It is pretty serious.—A. I still state that I do not think that the telegram sent in my name or at my request, to the officer of the court was worth the paper it was written on.

I pause there just to call the attention of the minister to the fact that he had been seeking to convey the impression by interruption of my speech that he did not send or intend any message to go to the magistrate. Here in his evidence it is clear that he was under the impression that the message went directly to the magistrate.

Mr. BOIVIN: Not at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Or to an officer of the court, which is the same thing.

Mr. BOIVIN: There is a great deal of difference.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister's conduct would be excusable if he sent a telegram to the officer of the court, but wrong if he sent it to the magistrate. One is impatient and cannot bear delay over a suggestion of that sort. The minister swore in this evidence that he did not think the telegram to the officer of the court was worth the paper it was written on. On the next page we have this evidence:

Q. Speaking to you as one professional man to another you realize as minister of the crown, of Customs and Excise, that you have not the right to arrogate to yourself, the power of His Excellency, the Governor General to change or deal with the findings of a court. You say, you propose to further exercise these powers, and you think you have that right, but I cannot understand it, or cannot understand your mental process.—A. But Mr. Bennett, I do not say that, I do not say that.

Q. I am sorry, Mr. Boivin, I followed you with great care.—A. I realize, Mr. Bennett, you are a very, very able attorney. I realize that. I state as one professional man to another, or as a minister of the crown, that I never thought at any time I had a right to withhold the execution of the sentence. I have made that clear very, very many times. When the original order was given to withhold the sentence, it was given without thought and without consideration on my part, and when I was only in the office as minister for about eight hours.

If the minister had been a layman one might possibly excuse an error of that kind, he having come to his office very recently, but one could never excuse it even in a layman after the statement the minister has made in the House as contrasted with the evidence he gave before that committee. But the minister is no layman. He knows that the criminal law passed by this parliament is the law of Canada and he knows that it applies to every magistrate and judge throughout the land. He has known that for the last twenty years or quarter of a century. He has practised as crown prosecutor for years. Yet he, a skilled lawyer and a former crown prosecutor, asked a man who was not a lawyer at all whether he had the right to step in between a conviction and the sentence and keep a criminal out of gaol! What does the minister really think must be the opinion of this House as to a suggestion of that kind? If the minister went to the trouble to inquire into the contents of Stewart's letter; if he ascertained the contents of Mr. Veniot's letter; if he saw fit to take all these precautions, did he do so without knowing the reason for which the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) wanted the execution of the sentence deferred?

The minister stands here, after the hearing is over, after the cross-examination is concluded and there is no opportunity for reply, and declares that he had a letter from the Minister of Justice indicating that he had a right to do what he did—a letter which does not touch the subject at all. The minister knows that the letter from the Deputy Minister of Justice has no bearing on the subject. And that is all he produces or can produce. Further, he makes that statement after he has declared several times on oath that he had not, and knew he had not that right. The letter from the member for Gloucester dated September 21 the minister says he did not read; that is the evidence he seeks to give now after the hearing is over. But even if that were true he has no right to make such a statement at this time inasmuch as it conflicts with his evidence given before the committee. The evidence there shows that he three times declared that he had seen the letter; and even in the House in his speech he admitted that the letter had been read to him by his secretary.

Now I put the question I asked at the outset. If the conduct of the member for Gloucester is, as stated by the hon. member for North Vancouver (Mr. Donaghy), dishonourable and impossible of perpetration by any man with any sense of public decency, so gross that the hon. member would not dare to defend it out of self-respect, are we to condone the conduct of the minister who accedes to such a corrupt appeal? The minister says that if we go against the government in this question it means that members of parliament can never again make appeals to the department. No member, he declares, either on this side of the House or in any other part of the chamber may dare to interview the minister again and ask for any favour. No member need go and ask that someone's fine be remitted for any reason whatever if the conduct of the minister is not condoned to-night. And hon. gentlemen who have spoken opposite have endeavoured desperately to save the minister. Desperation is written on the page of every appeal that has come from hon. gentlemen opposite, gleaming in letters of fire in every sentence uttered by the Prime Minister this afternoon. Those hon. gentlemen have sought to impress upon the House that the practice of making appeals to ministers for anything will be for ever stopped if the conduct of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin) in this case is not condoned. Whoever heard before that it was wrong for any member of parliament to make an appeal to a minister of the crown, whether on this side of the House or opposite, where such an appeal is made on worthy grounds. We are here to make appeals with relation to our constituencies and our constituents in relation to any whom we consider worthy of such appeal. Any appeal on an honest ground, any bona fide argument which is advanced in good faith is legitimate. But there are other appeals which are distinctly not legitimate. In the first place no appeal may be made to a minister of the crown unless the merits of the case warrant it; and what never can be permitted is that members of this House shall make appeals from unworthy motives, for base, selfish, and corrupt reasons. Such appeals never can be tolerated. And such is the appeal which was made by the member for Gloucester and to which the Minister of Customs acceded.

Hon. members will turn their minds at this hour to what has occurred in Great Britain in the last few years. There we have as an example to Canada a case which is eminently pertinent, where a man issued an invitation to sedition—an offence described, by the way, by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) as merely "criticizing a government"—through the medium of a newspaper which he happened to be temporarily editing. Prosecution was instituted by the attorney general's department of England and the case was in its hands. The discretion of that department still subsisted and would continue to subsist until conviction. And while that discretion remained with him the Attorney General of England acceded to appeals to discontinue made on behalf of the accused. What was the nature of those appeals? Were they that the accused should be released in order that some politician in his county might be helped in an election? Were they appeals based on any selfish motive whatever on the part of the appellant? Not at all. Those appeals were made on the ground that this accused had fought for his country in the war, had lost both feet, was at present a cripple maimed for life having sustained his injuries in the service of his country. For these and other reasons, not wholly though very largely similar, the Attorney General of England was moved and the course of justice was diverted. Now, compare that case with the one under review to-day. Here is a case in which, when discretion no longer remains in the hands of the minister, the direction of prosecution having passed absolutely from his control, appeals are made to pervert justice—appeals based not on any ground of personal service so far as the culprit is concerned, but on the ground that the man accused, if he is kept out of gaol, will help some other interested person to get into parliament. That is the sort of appeal to which the Minister of Customs yielded, and that is the appeal on which he is indicted to-night. Can hon. gentlemen compare the two cases? Is the parliament of England to be forever honoured throughout the world because, by reason of the temper of the people of that country, the course of justice never can be turned by any appeal unless it is shown to be in the interests of the public, while we in Canada deliberately allow it to go forth that justice in this Dominion may be perverted after judgment has been pronounced by a judge, and that a minister of the crown, for political purposes and none other, may step in and save a prisoner from the execution of sentence?

The mover of the motion for the adoption of the report, the chairman of the committee (Mr. Mercier), says that if we are not to condone this government and the minister in this case, then there must be a better education of public opinion in this country. I ask him particularly, and this House in general as well as yourself, Mr. Speaker: What is this parliament going to do to educate public opinion if to-night we release the government and release the minister from all culpability? If we condone the minister and the government we shall contribute to the education of public opinion the knowledge that justice in Canada to-day stands at the mercy of the politician, whose conduct must be condoned when he yields to corrupt appeals. That will be the measure of our contribution to the education of public opinion if we fail to censure this offence—these long series of offences.

Now I turn to the position of the government itself. I have been compelled to make these remarks because of the conduct of his defence in this House by the Minister of Customs himself. Had the minister left the case as it was after the investigation, then this speech of mine would have been wholly unnecessary.

I want now to bring home to the administration this responsibility. I ask, is the administration not responsible with the Minister of Customs? I ask hon. members again to reflect on the Campbell case in England. Was the vote of censure on the attorney general alone? Did hon. members of the government of that day in England seek to say, "Here is a mistake of the attorney general's, he made it himself; do not hold us responsible." Every man of them in the Labour government stood up and took his full responsibility for the conduct of the attorney general, and that government fell because the attorney general had dared to interfere with the course of justice. Is Canada to follow that example? What is to be the name of Canada before the world if to-night, while we have the courage to attack Mr. Giroux, an underling, while we have the courage to attack Mr. Farrow while we have the courage to put our strong arm on the shoulder of Mr. McLaughlin, to compel these men to pay the penalty of their delinquency, we show by our vote that we have not the courage to bring home even censure to those who are responsible to this House for the administration of our affairs? Here is a document we are asked to accept, whose every word we are asked to adopt as ours, here are long series of findings that we are asked to make the findings of this House, and those findings declare that for years the Minister of Customs allowed a rapid degeneration of his department to ensue—

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The minister before him.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, they do not say anything about "the minister before him."

An hon. MEMBER: For a good reason.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Perhaps so. I am now dealing with the report as it stands. That report says that the degeneration in efficiency was greatly accelerated in the last few years.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not since the minister was sick, but "in the last few years." Hon. gentlemen cannot put less than three for those years of rapid degeneration. That minister is declared to have failed to appreciate the duties of his office altogether and he is further declared to have directed his officers to make reports and recommendations to him, repugnant upon the recited facts, in order that he might do something which the facts did not warrant. We are asked to approve of that report, to approve of every particular, and then we are asked to find that the government itself is guiltless of the malfeasance, so described.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): May I interrupt? Does not the report also show that when the present Minister of Customs came into office he immediately started the machinery which brought about the cleaning up of the department, and that the inquiry which he instituted was the basis of this debate and the success—

Mr. MEIGHEN: It shows this, that immediately the minister got information that the member for Vancouver Centre had a resolution on the order paper, he told an officer of the department, Mr. Duncan, to proceed to Montreal to see if he could not get evidence.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): And he got it.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, he got it. I wonder why he started it? That same officer had been in the employ of the department for months back and his efforts had been wholly sterile. The moment he was told to go to Montreal on the mission that proved effective, at that very moment he was informed by the minister and discussed with the minister the Stevens resolution in this House.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister say "no"? I read the evidence this afternoon, and there is no evidence to contradict it. I do not doubt that now the case is closed, and we have to accept the word of hon. members in this House, we will get evidence yet; but I am arguing this case on the testimony before the committee, and no hon. member has any right to come to any conclusion save on the testimony there adduced. And what is more, this government would not be arraigned before this parliament to-night seeking to give evidence from the floor of this House if there was evidence they dared to give before that committee.

Now there is an amendment before this House moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth)—an amendment to the amendment. The purpose of that amendment the merest tyro in parliamentary life can easily discern. In itself it is comparatively harmless. It seeks to destroy, and if it is passed will destroy, every word and sentence of the original amendment; it seeks to destroy every word and sentence which passes the judgment of this House that the conduct of the government in permitting this state of affairs to exist is indefensible, that the conduct of the minister is utterly unjustifiable in relation to the Aziz case; it seeks to eliminate this wholly, and will do so if it is passed. Then it says that you ought to amend clause 4 so as to provide for a royal commission to continue the investigation. I wonder if the hon. member ever read the report, or did he who collaborated with him to prepare this amendment ever read the report. The report itself advises the continuation of this investigation, not merely departmentally but extra-departmentally, and leaves it wholly to the government to say what form that investigation shall take. There is the body of the report. But in order to get something to put in a subamendment, in order to get a bridge upon which timid members of parliament could pass over and get away from the main amendment—in order to do that, the amendment to the amendment says: you must appoint a royal commission to continue this investigation. And the Prime Minister stands up and says that unless we vote for this and oppose the other resolution, thus defeating the main amendment, there cannot be a continuation of the investigation. Imagine the Prime Minister of Canada suggesting such a thing to the members of this House! The investigation, if this report is adopted, must go on by order of this House. The investigation can proceed by royal commission or by any extra-departmental machinery that to the government may seem fit.

The amendment to the amendment continues:

That the following be added to clause 6:

Your committee deplores the common practice, as revealed by the evidence, of members of parliament and others appealing to the minister to relax the regulations of the department for personal advantage or political expediency.

May I ask the hon. member why he did not go on and say, "and of acceding to those appeals?" Why did he not say that? The member is very much absorbed. Do hon. gentlemen recall that the loudest assertion of his speech, that upon which he seemed to have the deepest conviction was a declaration that the most astounding fact of the whole thing was the appointment of Mr. Bureau to the Senate; that is what he denounced most. Will the hon. gentleman tell me where that is in his amendment? His amendment is a lot of eyewash, purposely eyewash, froth and foam, and he knows it. His only purpose was to—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of privilege—

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have the floor.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am accustomed to some of these privilege matters on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The right hon. gentleman undertakes to state what my purpose was in moving this amendment to the amendment.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I assert that the purpose which I had in view was not that which the right hon. gentleman says it was. I tried last night—

An hon. MEMBER: That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I tried last night in the course of my address to state as clearly as I am capable of stating the reason that led me to propose this amendment to the amendment, and I submit, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is absolutely against all the rules of this parliament for any hon. gentleman to deliberately accuse me of having in view a purpose other than that which I myself stated.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What I had stated was that this was froth and foam, mere words, and I stated that its purpose was to save the government by giving a bridge for hon. members to cross who wanted to avoid a straight vote on the amendment. Now the hon. member says I cannot attribute to him an unworthy motive. I can, but if he considers it an unworthy motive—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was speaking a moment ago on a question of privilege, and I submit that already, in what the hon. gentleman has continued to say or attempted to continue to say, he is not repeating what he said a few moments ago. I urge that I have the right to say what my purpose was, and no man has a right to question that statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

An hon. MEMBER: You talked last night.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I talked last night and set out my reasons, and while the hon. gentleman has always the right to say what the effect may be he has no right to say what my purpose was if that purpose is other than the one I stated.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the hon. gentleman would prefer that instead of saying it was his purpose I should say it was its obvious, manifest and only effect, and that a child ten years of age could see it, I will put it in that form.

The last clause goes on to say that in clause 8 all the words after the word "department" in the last line be struck out and a clause inserted suggesting that Mr. Farrow, instead of being retired, should have his services dispensed with. This cannot be said to be without some effect; this does alter the amendment in material degree. I believe I express the mind of the government as well as my own when I say it is not usually considered necessary to amend reports on grave subjects involving great principles in the mere matter of a single detail, but if it is to be done I am disposed to the view that the evidence, which I have read, justifies that treatment of Mr. Farrow. This I say with the greatest reluctance and the greatest regret. I think that is what should be done and that the evidence would justify that action more than the action recommended. If the hon. member will add this, and for that matter add the entire subamendment to the amendment which we have moved, I will support it all; eye wash does no good, but it does not hurt. This last sentence does something, and I will support it. I would willingly support the whole added to the original amendment; then the hon. member can have his way and this House will have the opportunity of voting on the question of the responsibility of the government in this matter, while if the hon. member has his way now the House will never have that opportunity. It is not, Mr. Speaker, because of objections to the wording of the amendment; not because of what the Prime Minister calls the constructive, but for what is actually the destructive feature of the subamendment, which destroys the whole purpose of this debate and makes impossible the performance of a duty by this House; it is because of that feature of the subamendment that I am compelled to oppose it. And I say to hon. members of this House that all those who want to give a vote on the position of the government and its responsibility for the degeneration of its own department and the malfeasance of its own ministers; those who want to give a vote of that kind will be compelled to vote against this subamendment, whatever its terms. All who vote for that subamendment vote, in ambush it is true, but nevertheless directly, against this House even expressing an opinion upon the conduct of this administration in relation to the facts set out in the amendment. Hon. members who want to take that responsibility should vote for the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

An attack was made in this House this afternoon upon a citizen of this country, the president of the Commercial Protective Association. The Prime Minister sought to depict him as a partisan, blinded by partisan malice, and seeking only to injure the government—after having read the most flattering letters from him in the opening of the work of that association. All I rose to say is this. I remembered as the Prime Minister was speaking that I had received a request from that very gentleman not long ago to make no partizan issue of this matter at all and to keep it out of party politics. I hunted through my files in the meantime, and I now have the letter written me by that gentleman.

9 p.m.

Mr. CANNON: Will my right hon. friend permit a question? If his argument this afternoon concerning the Prime Minister was right, why did he not produce that letter before the committee instead of waiting until to-day?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN: After the House gets over its hilarity I will give my answer. This letter has nothing in the world to do with the subjects the committee had to deal with, but it has to do with an extraneous matter brought in by the Prime Minister, namely, motive of the president of the protective association. I hope that answer sounds to the point to the Solicitor General. Before reading this letter I want hon. gentlemen to recall that in the course of his last few ponderous sentences, with their flamboyant appeals, the Prime Minister said that if we were in earnest about this thing, about the accusation of the Minister of Customs, we would never have waited until now to bring it up; we would have done it long ago, when the facts came up. I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker; had we the right to discuss this subject while the matter was before the committee? Will any hon. member of this House suggest that we had that right, save by breaking the rules of parliament? Because we did not so break the rules the Prime Minister stands up and says we are insincere. It is true that members of the committee moved that the facts in relation to this matter be brought before the House, but the Liberal majority, assisted by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) voted it down. Therefore we were debarred from bringing up this subject until now. This was not known, I doubt not, to the president of the protective association, who is not a member of parliament, and he wrote me on March 20 having in mind the election which was then proceeding in the county of Middlesex. The following is his letter:

DEAR MR. MEIGHEN:

I am taking the liberty of writing you in reference to certain matters arising out of the inquiry into the administration of the Department of Customs and Excise.

A by-election is now in progress in West Middlesex, and there appears to be a possibility that the Customs inquiry may become a matter of public discussion.

I would appreciate it very greatly if you would endeavour to prevent the association of the name of the Commercial Protective Association, or my own name, with any campaign literature or speeches, or the use of evidence given by me as a basis for criticism of the government. As you are aware, this association, which is absolutely non-political, has, for nearly two years, been endeavouring to have conditions improved in reference to the prevention of smuggling. It was only after all our efforts to have effective action taken by the government failed that we decided to go before the committee appointed by parliament at the instigation of the Hon. Mr. Stevens. In order to establish beyond question our entire freedom from any political consideration it was necessary that we should lay before the committee a complete record of our activities during the past two years.

Just at present we are arranging for the appearance before the committee of about twenty-five leading business men, both Liberal and Conservative, for the purpose of giving evidence as to the extent of this traffic and its effect upon legitimate business. If our activities became a matter of political controversy it might create an entirely erroneous impression and might prejudice the minds of some who are to appear as witnesses.

I believe that it is in the public interest that this investigation be kept as free from politics as is possible, and for that reason would respectfully request that your influence might be used towards that end. Of course, when the committee has concluded its work, the whole matter, no doubt, will be, and should be, a matter for the most full public discussion, but, from the standpoint of the business community, discussion of this matter during the heat of a by-election might tend to interfere with the proper functioning of the committee.

Trusting that you will favourably consider this suggestion.

I remain,

Yours truly,

R. P. SPARKS,
Chairman, Executive Committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask my right hon. friend why Mr. Sparks did not address him in a similar letter for the general election instead of for a by-election?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Because the committee was not sitting then. I am quite prepared to read my reply to that letter but I do not think it is worth while; I wrote acceding to his request. Hon. members smile. Very well, I will read it. It is as follows:

Ottawa, March 22, 1926.

Dear Mr. SPARKS,

I have your letter of the 20th March. So far as your letter refers to the work of the Commercial Protective Association and to your own evidence before the Customs and Excise committee, I am in entire agreement with the statement of the situation as made by you. Undoubtedly the activities of your association have been entirely non-political and I am equally certain that your own efforts have been actuated only by a desire to carry out your duty to the committee in the most thorough and efficient manner. Having this in mind I had already before receiving your letter suggested to members of our party who are to take part in the West Middlesex election that no attempt be made to drag either yourself or your association into political controversy.

 Yours very truly,

Now this concludes the substance of what I have to say; I leave the case so far as I am concerned in the hands of parliament. If parliament believes it is in the interests of Canada to condone this conduct, parliament should condone it. If parliament conceives that a public investigation conducted under the auspices of this government by a committee appointed by this government, and from this House, after finding rapid degeneration in a great department of state involving millions of the money of the people of Canada; if parliament conceives that that can be found and be known to have gone on and the government be entirely wanting in guilt then parliament should vote for the amendment to the amendment, which means voting against all censure of the administration. If hon. members believe that a minister of the crown has a right to use property which becomes public property for the benefit of his political associates to the loss of scores of thousands of dollars of the money of the people of Canada and still be utterly without blame, though several accounts and reasons are given to this House of a contradictory character, parliament then should vote for the amendment to the amendment. If this House believes that one of the functions of the departments of state is to pervert the course of justice and step in after conviction, after judgment, to see that sentence is not executed, and to do these things on the appeal of a member of parliament in order that the guilty, convicted man may help in an election, then parliament should vote for the amendment to the amendment. The amendment to the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will effectively exculpate everyone connected with the transaction, and will declare that a ministry which allows a great department of state so to degenerate is to be held without blame before the parliament of Canada. But if, on the other hand, there is concern on the part of hon. members of this House, aside from all party proclivity, for the good name of our country; if we want to-night to show to our constituents, to the people, to the citizens of this Dominion, that we have some regard still for the honour of this nation, that we have some sense of our duty to hold ministers responsible for malfeasance, that we are not afraid—while visiting condign punishment upon officers of this government who are at our mercy, making them pay the full penalty of their deliquency—at the same time to bring home their guilt to men in high places even if they are members of this House and this government, then they will vote for the amendment. But if we are going to yield to this insidious appeal that every time an hon. member seeks to hold those in the seats of the mighty responsible, then he is playing politics, he is seeking to "get" his enemy, if we yield to such insidious appeal, then parliament is paralyzed and is no longer the guardian of the honour of the state. Between these two positions I place every hon. member of this House to-night, and I put my fellow members there with confidence that parliament at this momentous time will fufil its high purpose in our land and vindicate its name to the people of Canada.

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I wish very frankly to express my sincere feeling of hesitancy in addressing the House, following the very strong appeal which we have just heard from the lips of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen). As is realized in all quarters of the House, the question which is now being debated is a question in itself of great moment, and besides, the consequences of whatever decision may be reached by the House will be very far-reaching. My hesitation is also increased because of the fact that to-night, making an address which I consider of some importance, I will have to use language which is not my own, and therefore I am not at liberty to express my thoughts as freely as I might if I were to speak the French language.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Pretty good.

Mr. CANNON: During these remarks, realizing the seriousness of the occasion, I will endeavour to restrict my consideration purely to the judicial or legal aspect of this matter, and leave aside altogether anything which might narrow the issue or make the question petty; I wish to avoid any question of personality. I have been a member of the parliament of Canada for a period of nine years, and have taken part in many debates. I have disagreed with my opponents; I have always expressed as forcibly as I thought fit the opinions which I held to be right. On the other hand—and this is a very favourable feature of parliamentary life—if on the floor of the House I have had political opponents, outside the walls of this chamber I have had even among my opponents, very warm personal friends. The friendships which have been formed here in Ottawa amidst the battles and struggles of political life are very dear to me, and I do not wish by any remarks of mine to impair in any way the friendships which I hold so dear. As I said I shall speak simply from a legal viewpoint, leaving aside the smaller and narrower aspect of the question.

The speech delivered by the right hon. gentleman who has just preceded me can be divided into two parts, and I will endeavour to answer as briefly as possible the two main arguments that he advanced. This debate has lasted a long time. I realize the anxiety of every member of the House to have it brought to a conclusion as soon as possible, and I shall endeavour to be as concise as I can.

The first argument brought out by the right hon. leader of the opposition is that the government should be held responsible for the bad condition of things discovered in the Customs department, as reported by the committee, and being held responsible as a whole, should be put out of power. His second argument is that, should the House reach the conclusion that the government or the administration as a whole should not be held responsible, at least the Minister of Customs should be held responsible for certain things, and the House should pass a vote of censure upon him.

Before I enter into the merits of the question, allow me, following the example set by the previous speakers, to offer my most sincere congratulations to the chairman and to the other members of that committee. Their work has been arduous and their task difficult, and although very often political sentiments have clashed, they have endeavoured to introduce during the course of their proceedings an atmosphere of judicial impartiality, and they have brought in a report which contains many recommendations most useful in the public interest. The members of the committee, whether of the Conservative, of the Liberal or of the Progressive party, deserve not only the thanks of this House but the thanks of this country at large, and especially the thanks of the commercial community.

When the report was introduced, and it was stated that that report contained the unanimous conclusion reached by the members of the committee, I was hoping—I am quite sure in common with the majority of the members of the House—that we would have, in so far as the report was concerned, simply to deal with a business matter; that politics would not be introduced into the discussion of the important question which has been before the committee for over four months. Unfortunately our hopes were not realized. Politics were introduced, and I am sorry to say that that feature was brought into the debate by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) when he moved the amendment. The hon. member had conferred with his colleagues in bringing down a report which contained recommendations and suggestions which were received by the press of Canada with the greatest commendation. If the hon. member had only in mind the improvement of conditions in this country, if he had only in mind the disclosures of certain abuses and their remedy, his role would have ended and he would have been satisfied when that unanimous report was presented. But such was not his aim; such, unfortunately, was not his object.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the hon. member should not describe the report as unanimous. The findings so far as they go are unanimous, but the report was not unanimous.

Mr. STEVENS: It was carried on division.

Mr. CANNON: The right hon. member presented the argument more than once that the report was unanimous.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, I said the findings. It is nonsense for the hon. member to speak as he does. The report was not unanimous, for the reason that there was one subject not dealt with in it.

Mr. CANNON: I was pointing out that after a report had been brought in which had been approved by every member of the committee, the suggestions which had been discussed having been concurred in, the political factor or element was introduced in this House when the hon. member presented his amendment. I was disappointed, because I thought that the hon. member, with his ability, his talent and the very high motives which actuated his conduct, would remain on that high level and would not descend into the plane of party warfare to try to destroy the good effect and beneficial results of four and a half months of arduous work. But on the other hand, I know the hon. member is not responsible. He acted under pressure from his own party. If the hon. member had been left to his own counsel, no such amendment would have been brought in. But no doubt he was told, "We have been here six months trying to overthrow this government; we have adopted every possible device; we have used every method that our most vivid imagination could suggest, and on every occasion the government has succeeded in securing a majority in the House. Let us introduce a moral question; let us claim in the dying days of this session that we are not thinking of the manufacturers, we are not thinking of the commercial interests who always guide our politics; we are not inspired by St. James Street, Montreal, or King Street, Toronto; let us try to have a majority in this House for one moment and believe that we are as sincere as moral preachers and missionaries." We may fall on this question; but to those who listen to me I say that the defeat of the government may be brought about by these gentlemen putting on masks and wearing the new appearance of moralists. Before, however, they achieve their purpose I will put up a defence showing that we are justified in saying that this subamendment should be adopted. The right hon. gentleman said that the government ought to be overturned. It is very easy for him to make that assertion, but let us briefly examine the facts.

Smuggling did not start in Canada with the advent of the Liberal party. When my right hon. friend was Prime Minister of Canada a great deal of smuggling was going on, and he knows that. When his colleague the hon. member for Vancouver Centre was a minister in his cabinet, a great deal of smuggling was going on, and not far from his own home. Let those who wish to give us a moral lesson to-night, those who wish to ask this House to teach us public morality, think for one moment of the situation as it existed, not only during the four months that the committee sat, but as it existed throughout the country at large for many years.

First, can any gentleman, reading the evidence as it was given before the committee, say that this government in 1921, 1922, 1923, 1924 and 1925 was in any way responsible through its legislation for the conditions which have increased smuggling in Canada?

Mr. BURY: What about its administration?

Mr. CANNON: One moment. Can we say for instance that this government, no matter how far and wide we want to stretch our imagination, can be held responsible for the passing of the Volstead Act in the United States? That act was passed when the Conservative party were in power. Are we responsible for the increase in the number of automobiles? Are we responsible for the improvement of roads so that communication is much easier now and smuggling therefore more extended?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CANNON: This is a consideration. Hon. gentlemen on the other side seem to answer my argument by a laugh or a sneer. I am not addressing my remarks to those who wish to answer me in that way; I am addressing them to members of the House who wish to reason out the situation and to give a decision to the best of their ability and good faith according to the facts. I am not appealing to partisans; I am not appealing to those who are willing to vote against us no matter what we may say; I am appealing to those who want to give justice in this matter.

What did this government do to prevent smuggling as much as possible before even the beginning of the investigating committee? First of all—and I am going to deal with this very briefly—we negotiated a treaty with the United States. Why did my right hon. friend not do so when he was in power if he is so keen on preventing smuggling? If these gentlemen are sincere in their new campaign of moral uplift, why were they so derelict in their duty when they were in power and had authority to do something?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Conditions were not so bad as to cause the United States government to appeal to us for a treaty.

Mr. CANNON: The answer of my right hon. friend must be compared with what a doctor once remarked. He said that he was satisfied the patient had lost only one leg and before he attended him he was waiting until he had lost both. Let us come to the legislation which was passed. What did we do? It cannot be denied that we had amendments passed to the Customs Act. Mr. Sparks has been mentioned very often in this debate. I have nothing to say against him, and I have very little to say in his favour, because opinion seems to be divided. There is no doubt however, that Mr. Sparks, as regards this investigation, represented certain commercial interests who wanted to have changes made in the existing legislation. Let these gentlemen examine the evidence either oral or documentary given by Mr. Sparks, and they will reach the conclusion that Mr. Sparks wanted two reforms: first, an increase in the penalties imposed for infractions of the Customs Act and, second, an increase in the preventive service of Canada. That is all he wanted.

We can go through the whole of the evidence given before the committee and we can reach only one conclusion, namely, that before Mr. Sparks had anything to do with the right hon. gentleman in his campaign, when he was simply president of his commercial association and not at the same time a politician, he wanted only those two reforms. What did we do? It is easy for my right hon. friend, speaking with his usual facility, to try to get the minds of hon. gentlemen sitting in this House away from the main object. He talked about different correspondence and conversations that Mr. Sparks might have had with him or with others. If we examine the evidence given by Mr. Sparks we shall find that these two are the only things he wanted. And he got them. This is something that must not be forgotten.

We amended the act last year, and what happened then? These hon. gentlemen who are asking the majority of the House to put us out because, as they say, we are unworthy of the confidence of our fellow members, themselves opposed the amending legislation, some of them declaring that it was too drastic. I must say in fairness to my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) that he spoke in favour of the amendments, but we may surmise now the reason for his supporting them in view of the disclosure he has made of his relations with Mr. Sparks. His support of the amending legislation might have been an anticipation of future developments.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I speak pretty certainly from memory when I say that I had never met Mr. Sparks at the time that the amendments were introduced save at an Ottawa exhibition.

Mr. CANNON: I am sorry the right hon. gentleman wants to throw his friend overboard. I do not see why he should. But what about hon. gentlemen sitting around him? I have here extracts from Hansard which will show exactly what attitude hon. gentlemen opposite took when the legislation was being discussed. Those hon. gentlemen have changed that attitude since the report of the committee has come in, but it is interesting to know what their views were last year, two years ago, three years ago, now that their eyes are fixed upon the mirage of possible power. How did they act then? I would refer the House to the position taken by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson), who opposed the bill on the ground that it was too drastic. He said that we should draw the line somewhere and that the minister should retain discretion. That was the attitude taken by that hon. gentleman when we were trying to amend the law to keep down smuggling.

Let us pass on to something else. When we voted money to meet the second demand of Mr. Sparks to increase the number of preventive officers in Canada, what did hon. gentlemen opposite do? In order to render absolutely useless the appropriation of $350,000 which was voted, they suggested that all officials be appointed by the Civil Service Commission after examination. What would have been the result of that? It would have meant that a list should be published throughout the country of officers who were supposed to engage in secret service! That was what hon. gentlemen opposite wanted us to do; yet this year they are asking the House to put us out on the ground that we have been helping smugglers.

I go further. I am pleased to see the hon. member for Vancouver Centre here. The government made a third attempt to put down smuggling—and how? As has been explained in the House, one of the reasons why there is so much smuggling of liquor from Canada into the United States to-day is the facility with which liquor can be shipped either from the Pacific or from the Atlantic coast. Well, we introduced a law, Bill No. 43, to amend the Canada Temperance Act. Every hon. gentleman will remember that bill. It was intended to suppress the illegal export of liquor from British Columbia, Vancouver included. What happened in that case? Let any hon. gentleman consult Hansard. That bill passed this House, because naturally the leader of the opposition was too clever to have it defeated here. It got through this House but was murdered in the Senate. At whose request was it defeated in the other chamber? This party which to-night claims to engage in moral uplift, which is eager and keen, violently keen, to put down smuggling or any other unlawful practice, put up the former Minister of Customs, Doctor Reid, in the Senate to kill that bill.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman do two things? First of all will he accept my word when I tell him that I never spoke to any senator nor did any senator speak to me? And secondly, will he give the objections to the bill urged by Liberal senators?

Mr. CANNON: My answer to the first question will be brief. I will be more generous to the right hon. gentleman than he was to my leader this afternoon; I will take his word. His word is to the effect that he did not speak to any member of the Senate. Well, if he did not he failed in his duty as leader of his party. If the right hon. gentleman wishes us to go out of power in order to enable him to form an administration to prevent smuggling, and if he was as sincere last year as he wants us to believe he is this year, why then as leader of the Tory party did he not prevent the bill from being killed by Senator Benard, Senator Fisher, Senator Gillis, Senator Robertson, Senator Laird, Sir James Lougheed, Senator Mulholland, Senator Ross, Senator Webster, Senator Sharpe, Senator White, Senator Willoughby and Senator Reid? Those senators killed that measure which was intended to put down smuggling.

Mr. CAHAN: Does the Solicitor General seriously suggest that it is the duty of members of this House, whether they support the government or the opposition, to lobby in the Senate with a view to influencing senators personally as to how they shall vote?

Mr. CANNON: The right hon. the leader of the opposition is not an ordinary member; he is the leader of a party.

Mr. CAHAN: In this House, but not elsewhere.

Mr. CANNON: Well, the hon. gentleman from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) at the opening of the session expressed his loyalty to his leader, in answer to certain rumours to the contrary that had been spread.

Mr. CAHAN: I stand by every word I said in this House.

Mr. CANNON: Yes, provided his leader confines his leadership to the four walls of this room. My right hon. friend had his warning from Montreal: the moment he steps into the passage he is no longer the leader. In the Senate his own followers can kill any legislation, he can see it cast aside, and my friend from St. Lawrence-St. George will say: it is true there has been murder going on in the Senate, but my leader cannot be an accomplice because his leadership ends at the door of the Commons. It is ridiculous.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Vancouver Centre made his charges on February 2 last I was absolutely startled. Every member of the government, even the most modest—that is myself—was guilty of having taken part in murders in Montreal. I remember him pointing his finger across the floor to the Minister of Justice, to myself and to the other French-Canadian ministers in the government as he accused us of having been accomplices through our misconduct in murders committed in the Back river at Montreal. He accused us of being the friends of dope peddlers, of public poisoners. Every crime contained in the criminal code, every offence that could have come to his mind at that time was hurled across the floor into the faces of ministers, who could not give an immediate answer because the charges were so exaggerated, so excessive in their nature and scope. The motive behind the words of the hon. gentleman was so obvious that we said: We will wait, we will give the hon. gentleman every opportunity of proving his allegations before a committee, where he shall get freedom of access to every record in the Customs department, confidential and otherwise. I said confidential documents. What proves the honesty of this government—and I may say my personal opinion is that it is an exaggerated honesty—is that files were produced before that committee which could have been very easily withheld. If we had had anything to hide, if we had been criminals, the companions of murderers and poisoners, as the hon. gentleman said, we would not have opened wide the door of the Customs department and laid before that committee every file, confidential and otherwise. Do you think for one moment, Mr. Speaker, that if we wanted to deceive the country at large, and the members of the committee in particular, the letter written by the member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) would have been put before that committee? I am sure of one thing, that if the Minister of Customs had been my right hon. friend that letter would have remained in his pocket. We have had investigations before in this parliament. I recall when I was a member sitting on the opposite side, I asked on behalf of my constituents, on behalf of what I considered the sacred interests of this country, for information. When did I ever get it? Files disappeared, papers vanished.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Nonsense.

Mr. CANNON: We never could have any enlightenment, any information or any particulars before the Public Accounts committee. The only fault with the Minister of Customs is that he is too honest to deal with his opponents.

Four months and a half my friend from Vancouver Centre has had to prove his allegations. To-night, on behalf of those who sit around me, on behalf of the members of my own family, I tell him: You have a duty to perform before this parliament and this country; perform it in a manly way, as you should; get up and say that what you have said against men who are just as honest as yourself you now find was not true. Four and a half months you have had with the documents put at your disposal by this government, we have given you every possible means of making your case, and having failed, you should stand up like a man and own it. You should admit that when you made those declarations—no doubt prompted by an excessive zeal for your party, by the hope of obtaining power which was then within your grasp—in a moment when your better judgment faltered, you insulted men who to-day are entitled to an apology from you.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre now takes the credit for this investigation. His friends talk of him as the champion who has cleaned up this awful mess in the Customs department. What has he done? He has done only two things. First, putting on the mask that Mr. Sparks passed to him, he walked into that committee room and laid before the members the information that Duncan had already gathered. During those four and a half months the only thing he did of real advantage to this country was to keep the investigation from being general throughout Canada; he simply confined it to our province. In Montreal the searchlight was thrown in every corner; for weeks and for months everything was searched. But what did my hon. friend who led the investigation do with the sections of the country represented by his friends? What evidence did we have of what took place at Windsor? What evidence did we have of what took place in Vancouver or New Brunswick or Nova Scotia? Before I close on this point I will make an appeal to my fellow members. If we, the Liberal party, are the friends of the bootleggers how is it that we were defeated wherever bootlegging goes on?

An hon. MEMBER: How about Lunenburg?

Mr. CANNON: Are you going to make a speech? If not, keep quiet. Mr. Speaker, if we, the members of the Liberal party, have forgotten our duty to the public interest of Canada as alleged by our opponents; if we are the creatures, the slaves always in obedience to the smugglers of Canada, how is it that every Liberal was defeated around Windsor, where bootlegging is going on? How is it that in the Maritime provinces where, according to the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Doucet) bootlegging and smuggling flourish, we only returned one unfortunate member, the remainder being Tories?

Mr. MANION: Perhaps they hoped some members who would stop the smuggling would be elected.

Mr. CANNON: The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) might have found some reason to convince him, because I think he wishes to be convinced, but it does not convince me.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before I go any further I wish to ask the hon. member for Vancouver Centre another question. It is not for me, although many years of friendship and interest have united us, to say anything to condemn or to absolve the former Minister of Customs, Hon. Mr. Bureau. He has his own responsibilities as disclosed by the findings of the committee, and I am quite sure that he is capable of protecting his own interests and will do so at the first opportunity. But to show that very often an honest man may be carried away by party spirit to do something he would afterwards regret, I heard with the greatest surprise the hon. member for Vancouver Centre make an assertion last night which will be found at page 4890 of Hansard, where the hon. gentleman used the following words:

10 p.m.

> The answer is a very simple and a very plain one—yes, very simple. The answer is this, that the Duncan report, to which my hon. friend refers, and upon which he bases his question, was for a long time suppressed. Later on, on the insistence of certain members of the committee and the public press, it was finally read before the committee, but during the reading of that report and the evidence certain portions of it were deliberately suppressed and not read.

I have asked members of that committee sitting on this side of the House if it were true that one word, one sentence, one line of the Duncan report had been suppressed and the answer was no, that the report as made by Mr. Duncan was read before the committee and printed in the report which we have. As I say, I have no brief for anyone; a public man may be attacked in his way of administering a department, but when it comes to attacking a former fellow member who is united to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre by a friendship of many years, and insinuating anything as to his private conduct by saying that the report is incomplete when it is complete, I say that unless the hon. gentleman withdraws that insinuation, as I hope he will, members of this House will listen with some hesitation to anything he might tell us later.

Mr. STEVENS: Will my hon. friend permit me?

Mr. CANNON: Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. gentleman is quite correct in saying that that section of the report termed a report was printed, but he will note that I refer to the report and the evidence. If he will read a few lines further down he will see that his colleague whom I interrupted and who kindly gave me the floor for a moment, also recognized the point by referring to the portion which was suppressed, which was a portion of the evidence. The report consisted in toto of two reports, the exhibits and the evidence, all of which was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON: The hon. gentleman said, and his words are here—

Mr. STEVENS: At least do me the courtesy of reading them.

Mr. CANNON: I was startled, as I have already said, because as a rule the hon. gentleman uses other methods.

Mr. STEVENS: Will my hon. friend please read the words?

Mr. CANNON: The hon. gentleman said:

> But during the reading of that report—

Mr. STEVENS: "And the evidence."

Mr. CANNON: Yes.

> —and the evidence certain portions of it were deliberately suppressed and not read.

Mr. STEVENS: Will my hon. friend now do me the justice of reading what his colleague said in commenting on my action at the time?

Mr. CAHAN: It is at page 4890.

Mr. CANNON: I know, but I am saying that the hon. gentleman said that the Duncan report and the evidence attached to it had not been placed completely before the committee. That was his contention, and I am informed by every member of the committee on our side of the House that the report and the evidence were put completely in the report we have.

Mr. CAHAN: Will the hon. gentleman allow me a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CAHAN: At page 4890 does not the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Donaghy), who was on that committee, admit that a part was not published?

Mr. DONAGHY: Read what I said.

Mr. CAHAN: I will certainly read it:

> It is the hon. member's fault—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CANNON: I say, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that it has been conclusively proved that this government has done more for the putting down of smuggling in the last two years than any former government, and that my hon. friends opposite when they were in power did not do anything at all. So I conclude my argument as to the first point of the right hon. gentleman that the government as a whole should be held responsible, and I say that I do not believe the majority of the House will reach that conclusion.

Coming to the right hon. gentleman's second point, he says that the present Minister of Customs and Excise acted in such an extraordinary way in the Aziz case, and that he should not remain in this House five minutes longer. Let us examine this. I interrupted the right hon. gentleman when he was speaking by asking him to tell me if his contention, as the leader of a party and as a lawyer, was that the Minister of Customs and Excise had no authority to do what he did, and in both capacities my hon. friend replied that he had not. That is the attitude taken by the right hon. leader of the opposition, and I want every hon. member to remember it. The right hon. gentleman said that the Minister of Customs and Excise had no right to do what he did; having done what he did he committed such a terrible crime against justice and against everything that is sacred that we ought to put him out. Again I say let us examine this. First of all we have got to lay down the general principle,—and this is not to be forgotten in reaching a conclusion on this point—that customs offences up to the last amendments passed in 1925 were not criminal offences but simply penal offences. That is the principle my right hon. friend should not have lost sight of. Read the evidence given by Mr. Farrow, read the evidence given by Mr. Taylor, read the document placed in evidence by Mr. Gallagher, read the official opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice, and you will come to the conclusion that the minister has a perfect right to interfere in such cases, and I will tell you why. Notwithstanding the usual positiveness of his assertions, the right hon. gentleman did not dare deny it when I asked him—laying some ground for the argument that I am making now—if it was not a fact that the Minister of Justice had power of remission. In all cases, penal, criminal and otherwise, the power of remission exists; nobody can deny that. The Minister of Justice can remit a fine, can remit imprisonment, can change a sentence; and a clear, striking example of this is the case a few days ago of Mr. Smith. The power of remission, if it is to be exercised with ordinary logic and sense, implies the power of suspension. If I have a right to remit imprisonment I must evidently examine the case; I cannot reach a decision unless I know what I can base my decision on. But while I am examining that case, while I am deciding whether the fine is to be paid, or the penalty imposed, or the imprisonment served; while I am deliberating and trying to form my judgment, the fine is paid, the penalty is imposed, the imprisonment is served, and the power of remission becomes absolutely purposeless, because the object of remission has disappeared and the sentence has been served or the penalty paid. Therefore I say that the power of remission implies the power of suspension. And here I join issue with my right hon. friend. In this case the right hon. gentleman has tried to impress the House with the idea that the Minister of Customs and Excise interfered in favour of Aziz when the judge had issued his warrant of commitment. He said: "Why interfere with the judge when sentence has been given?" First there was no warrant of commitment issued. Why did the right hon. gentleman speak as if there were one?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It did not make a bit of difference.

Mr. CANNON: It made no difference? That is where my right hon. friend shows he is not serious.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not a bit.

Mr. CANNON: The whole point lies right there and my right hon. friend knows it. That is why he did not represent the facts as they are.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Talk sense.

Mr. CANNON: There was no warrant of commitment issued.

Mr. LENNOX: If there was no warrant of commitment issued, why was the telegram sent?

Mr. CANNON: I will come to that in a minute. I am making my own argument. I say that when Mr. Boivin for the first time had any dealings with the Aziz case he did not prevent the execution of the sentence. Aziz was just as free as I am; there was no warrant issued against him. If you examine the sentence you will realize that the sentence was suspended at first—not through Mr. Robichaud, as the right hon. leader of the opposition tried to insinuate, but through the magistrate himself; the magistrate suspended his sentence for six weeks. These are the facts. Not only was this man free, not only was there no warrant issued against him—although my right hon. friend erroneously stated to the contrary—but the magistrate had said "My sentence is not going to be executed for six weeks".

It is all right to talk about the Moses Aziz case as if it were the most important case that ever took place in Canada, but we have got to reduce things to their proper proportions and examine the facts in their right light. Here was a man who had been arrested in New Brunswick. Why? I would like my hon. friends to follow me at this point. Not for smuggling, but for having in his possession goods upon which duty had not been paid or goods which had been smuggled. That was the offence. Is Aziz to be regarded as a professed murderer, or guilty of rape, as the hon. member seemed to insinuate? If Aziz is a murderer, how many people not far from this parliament could be found guilty of having in their possession goods imported into this province illegally? Let us have the same standard of justice for ourselves as for everybody else. Why should an hon. member on the floor of this House, appealing to the thousands of people who are listening to this debate and to the millions who to-morrow will read the debate, try to distort the facts in this case to such an extent as to make the people believe that Aziz is a gross criminal and an offender of the worst kind? He was no guiltier than many a man within my hearing. He was accused of having in his possession goods that had been brought into New Brunswick unlawfully. If he lived in Ottawa he would have been charged, perhaps, with bringing goods from Hull. These are the true facts. Let us judge this case as it should be judged and not be carried away by appeals such as have been made by the right hon. gentleman, who does not even know the facts.

I said the power of remission implied the power of suspension. I said, secondly, that there was no warrant of commitment issued against Moses Aziz when the minister took action, and I say, thirdly, that the offence of which he is accused is an offence of a minor character.

An hon. MEMBER: Was the conviction wrong?

Mr. CANNON: Certainly it was wrong; instead of having a year he only had three months. Now, Mr. Speaker, the man was at liberty and there was no warrant; the minister was called upon to give a decision. Immediately we hear these new apostles of morality saying that the minister could not obstruct that case, and that the moment he gave instructions he encroached upon the very basic principles of the administration of justice. Hon. members heard that statement a moment ago. Read the evidence and get the real facts; do not simply listen to speeches. What are the facts? Mr. Taylor was not appointed by the Liberal party. Mr. Farrow was not appointed by the Liberal party, and I wish hon. members of this House to remember that every official at the head of the Customs department, where things are supposed to be so rotten, was appointed by our opponents. If the system is vicious and its conditions are bad, that system was inherited from our predecessors.

Now I come to my last point. In 1925, on the demand and at the request of Mr. Sparks, notwithstanding the opposition from the other side in many quarters, we amended the law to provide that whenever a man was found in possession of smuggled goods the value of which exceeds $200, he should be liable to one year's imprisonment. I should like hon. members to bear in mind that up to 1925 these offences were not punishable by imprisonment. Never, according to what Mr. Farrow said, for offences under the Customs Act was imprisonment imposed. In 1925 we made a new departure; we said that when the smuggled goods exceeded in value the sum of $200, a term of one year's imprisonment would be imposed. What does Aziz say? I have examined the record carefully, and I tell hon. members that he says the goods are not worth $200, but the complaint says that he had in his possession goods to the value of $600. If he had goods of the value of $600, and the complaint mentioned that fact, then, contrary to what my hon. friend contended this afternoon, he came under the new law and not under the old act. My hon. friend should read the complaint, and he will not contradict me. He had these goods in his possession before the passing of the act. Here is another principle that any lawyer in this House will have to acknowledge—

Mr. STEVENS: I know that my hon. friend is speaking with absolute sincerity, but he is overlooking one point and I will draw it to his attention. Under the amendment to the act, section 219, having in possession goods over the value of $200 becomes an indictable offence. That was the original complaint.

Mr. CANNON: I know all that.

Mr. STEVENS: But subsequently it was changed to another section.

Mr. CANNON: I had that in mind all right. I will deal with that. The original complaint was under the new law, and the goods had fallen into the possession of Aziz before the passing of the act. There is one principle of criminal justice that has to be observed in every country, namely, the non-retroactivity of a criminal statute. Even in civil law, when a new act is passed, we say that it is not to affect any interests or pending cases. In civil and in criminal matters are we going to send a man to jail for having committed an offence which did not exist in law when the offence was committed?

Mr. STEVENS: Oh, yes.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend says: "Oh, yes." I am not surprised. The only example to be found in history is the typical example given when the enemies of the Prime Minister of Charles I brought Lord Strafford before the House of Commons and he was then, under an attainder based upon a retroactive law, beheaded. But every historian—and after my hon. friend has done with the Customs department, I would ask him to read English history on that point—has said that that was a crime and a worse crime than any that might have been committed by Strafford himself. If therefore he was brought under a new act, I say that there was the principle of non-retroactivity that should have guided the minister in his decision and, second, there was the question of revaluation. My right hon. friend said: There is nothing in that; the Premier of New Brunswick does not know what he is talking about. If the goods were worth $600, he might be condemned to jail under the new law; but if the goods were not worth $200, he could not be jailed. Therefore that man had an interest in knowing what the goods were worth. It is easy to talk about Mr. Robichaud's letter.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. member say that if the goods were worth less than $200 the man could not be gaoled?

Mr. CANNON: According to the custom established before. If my right hon. friend would stay in the House all the time he would follow me better.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Read the act.

Mr. CANNON: I am talking not about the act but about what exists in the department and what is in the evidence. I have no objection to being interrupted; but I would ask my hon. friends, if they interrupt me, please to remain in the House so that they will follow my argument.

[Mr. Stevens.]

It was vital to have a revaluation. Could that be refused? The answer to that is that there should be no intervention in the administration of justice. We heard that fifty times to-night. But let us examine the evidence. I have under my hand records of which I can give a list starting in 1914, 1915, 1916, and in every one of those cases there was an intervention by the minister according to the custom existing. Is the Aziz case the only one? Is it the only time that a minister has suspended a sentence? If my right hon. friend wants to form a proper opinion of the Aziz case, I ask him to read the Plamondon case, and I am going to explain it to him in a minute. It is in the evidence, and if hon. gentlemen want to find out what existed in the department, what was the custom, what were the rights of the minister when he was a Tory, they will find it there. My right hon. friend to-day says: The minister had no right to do that. It is easy for him to say that, but I am telling him that when his friends were in power they did it all the time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will ask the hon. gentleman to produce from the evidence, outside of which he has no right to speak—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is what hon. gentlemen want. Come along with the evidence now.

Mr. CANNON: I knew beforehand the usual generosity of my right hon. friend. He wants to tell me that I cannot talk outside of the record. I am not going to talk outside of the record. My right hon. friend might be disappointed, but follow me in No. 50, of the minutes of evidence. Plamondon was a gentleman who lived in Quebec. One day the customs officials—not under the wicked Liberals, those who are unworthy of the confidence of the House but under a Tory regime, under those new angels who were in charge—arrested Plamondon.

Mr. STEVENS: What page?

Mr. CANNON: Page 2148. Plamondon is arrested, not for having $600 worth of liquor like Aziz. That was bad enough, but let us see what Plamondon had done:

I beg to enclose herewith—

That is the usual report.

—report 699 of three red copper stills and one galvanized tin still of the capacity of about thirty gallons, three lead worms, about 2,000 gallons wash, forty-five gallons' spirits, 1.7 U.P and a large quantity of other articles as enumerated on seizure report No. 699, excise form No. 4, executed on the 11th instant against Mr. Olivier Plamondon, jobber and manufacturer.

Mr. DUNNING: What date?

Mr. CANNON: This is on the 12th August, 1920. I think my right hon. friend was Prime Minister then. This gentleman is arrested. Who were the lawyers at that time representing the department? A gentleman by the name of Sevigny who, I think, was a colleague of my right hon. friend, ceases to be the lawyer of the department and becomes the lawyer of Plamondon. Two other gentlemen are appointed to represent the department, namely, Moraud and Alleyn. The minister has no business with these things now that he is a Liberal, but when he was a Tory he was consulted in these matters. This is what the representatives of the department write to Ottawa about Plamondon:

We were informed this morning—

This is dated August 18, 1920.

—that Plamondon intended to plead guilty—

Please follow me.

—and as we feared that the magistrate might be too lenient towards the accused—

Dangerous man, no doubt about that.

—we took it upon ourselves to have the following complaint sworn to before the magistrate.

Please listen to this:

(a) For manufacturing spirits illegally;

(b) For having had in his possession spirits which he knew had been illegally manufactured;

(c) For having had in his possession an empty barrel of spirits on which the marks have not been obliterated;

(d) For having sold spirits which he knew had been illegally manufactured.

This is a dangerous man. The representatives of the department are so fearful that he may escape through the leniency of the judge that they decide to lay another complaint with four counts against him. Plamondon appears before the judge. He pleads guilty. The judge says "I will fine you $200 and in addition to that will sentence you to three months in gaol." Plamondon says, "If you sentence me to gaol I will plead not guilty"—the same thing as Aziz wanted to do. No one wants to go to gaol unless he has to. As crown prosecutor I am called in and the judge wishes to know whether I will accept a change of plea. As any lawyer would do, representing the crown with dignity, as the crown ought to be represented, I reply, "Let the Customs department take their own responsibility; they have their own lawyers. I will not be mixed up in this mess." The judge persists in the sentence and the minister through his officials intervenes. Talk about interfering with the administration of justice!

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where does the minister come in?

Mr. CANNON: The minister is represented by his officials and his lawyers, and the lawyers of the department appear before the judge and say, "You must not send that man to gaol." The judge says, "I have convicted him and have sentenced him to gaol." They insist, "Even so, he must not go."

Mr. MEIGHEN: Read the evidence.

Mr. CANNON: Let the right hon. gentleman read the evidence himself. I am stating the facts.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is not in the evidence.

Mr. CANNON: I will not be interrupted.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is all imagination.

An hon. MEMBER: They did what the lawyers are paid for doing.

Mr. CANNON: It depends on the kind of lawyers, and the lawyers of the department told the judge that he must change the sentence.

Mr. BURY: Will the Solicitor General allow me to ask a question?

Mr. CANNON: Yes.

Mr. BURY: Does he not know that very often the magistrate allows a man who has pleaded, to change his plea? Will he tell the House why the Department of Customs intervened? Was it to allow the defendant in this case to change his plea?

Mr. CANNON: The attorneys of the department appeared in court and said to the judge, "Although you have condemned this man he must not go to gaol."

Mr. MEIGHEN: They did not.

Mr. BURY: Will the Solicitor General—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BURY: Will the Solicitor General—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CANNON: I will not allow hon. gentlemen to interject remarks about matters in regard to which they know nothing.

Mr. BURY: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BURY: I asked the Solicitor General a courteous question, whether he would tell the House the ground on which the Department of Customs interfered. Was it—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BURY: If the Solicitor General's friends do not want to hear the question and do not want to have it answered, I have no desire to press it. But if the hon. gentleman is prepared to answer it I will put the question.

Mr. CANNON: What is the question?

Mr. BURY: I want the Solicitor General, if he will be good enough, to inform the House on what grounds the solicitors of the Department of Customs intervened in this case. Was it to allow the accused to change his plea?

Mr. CANNON: Not at all. They intervened in order to prevent the man from going to gaol.

Mr. BURY: You are not answering the question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CANNON: That interference with the administration of justice occurred under the premiership of my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen). Now if we are to be put out of office let us at least be replaced by people who have not sinned in a worse way than we have. Under the right hon. gentleman's premiership the Plamondon case was tried, if I mistake not, and there was submitted to the judge from the Justice department an opinion which is unbelievable.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Read it.

An hon. MEMBER: Let the hon. member read it.

Mr. CANNON: They brought to the judge an opinion to the effect that the words "fine and imprisonment" in the Customs Act should be interpreted "fine or imprisonment".

Mr. BURY: Are you afraid to read the evidence?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Read it.

Mr. CANNON: I am making this point to show that when hon. gentlemen opposite talk about interfering with the administration of justice they are simply trying to make fun of us. Are we to confide the administration of justice to these same gentlemen? The judge persisted in his sentence and the department gave instructions to their attorneys—mark you, the man was defended by the Hon. Mr. Sevigny—not to oppose any appeal; and to keep the sentence from being executed an appeal was launched. While that appeal was pending the Governor General, through the government in the ordinary way, pardoned the accused so that he never went to jail. Is that interfering with the administration of justice? Remission of sentence was granted in that case by means of pardon.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the Solicitor General permit a question? Is it not true that the accused in this case turned king's evidence, and three or five others were convicted?

Mr. CANNON: I was waiting for this, I was hoping it was coming. Now I have got my friend where I want him.

Mr. STEVENS: Go ahead.

Mr. CANNON: In the Aziz case there is a report from officer Stewart that Aziz turned crown evidence. My right hon. friend says: Oh, crown evidence, piffle; don't listen to that, it is stupid. Let me tell hon. members what happened in the Plamondon case. That gentleman did not go to gaol, although the judge had sentenced him; he was relieved of that painful necessity by the representatives of the department.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

An hon. MEMBER: Through a pardon.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. CANNON: The reason they gave was that he turned crown evidence—crown evidence on his own self; he pleaded guilty. Moreover, if you examine the record you will find that this department, administered under the leadership of the right hon. gentleman when he was at the head of affairs—he who to-night has such great respect for justice, who is so indignant and scandalized—had three unfortunate men, who had been hired by that scoundrel Plamondon, sent to jail in order to give to the department a pretext to say that he turned crown evidence. These were poor, unfortunate carters, who had been his hired men, poor fellows who did not have any influence—their lawyer had been no former minister—and to gaol they went without any leniency. And do you know that this government in 1920, under the leadership of this model of morality—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. No hon. gentleman can refer to another hon. gentleman without using the word honourable.

Mr. CANNON: Certainly I said it, and if I did not I should have. I say that in the Plamondon case, if you examine the record you get an exact idea of the moral standard of our gentlemanly opponents when they are in power. After having sent these poor unfortunates to gaol, they paid Plamondon his share as an informer against his own self, and it was with the money he received as such informer that he paid the fine that had been imposed against himself. As if the Aziz case, Mr. Speaker, was an isolated case! My hon. friend knew what I was leading to a minute ago, when, getting up, he recalled the rules of the House by telling me I could not go outside the evidence as printed in the report. I have records here, and he is welcome to read them. Hon. gentlemen who wish to form an unbiased and honest judgment by perusing these records—and they are only a few—will find that the custom of suspending sentences and of remitting fines has always existed, and that Mr. Boivin never did anything else but what all his predecessors have done. If hon. gentlemen of the opposite side wanted to mete the same amount of justice to the Minister of Customs as should be given to every member of this House, they would admit that in doing what he did in the Aziz case, while it may have been a mistake, yet he only exercised his judgment within his ministerial authority and according to the custom established for many long years by his predecessors. Are we going to overturn and throw out a government on the Aziz case? Are we going to turn over the reins of power to the gentlemen who manœuvred the Plamondon case? I have here another record—I will pass it to my right hon. friend if he wants it—which discloses that at the request of a former minister in his government, the Minister of Customs at the time, 1916, did worse as to suspending sentences and remitting fines than Mr. Boivin ever did, in this petty Aziz matter.

Are we as judges in this House to say to Mr. Boivin, who is a young man at the dawn of his career: We will waste your talents, we will stop your ascending march in public life, we will ruin your future, we will cast a shadow of suspicion not only upon yourself but upon those who are around you and the members of your family, because at the opening of your administration, confiding in the advice of the old officials who had been there for forty years —officials who told him that the custom was, as I have explained, that ministers always had done what they were asked to do—you did what your predecessors had done, and because the Conservative party are hungry for power, because they are thirsty and wish once more to drink at the well of government, listening to their howls, we will refuse to pay heed to the call of common, ordinary justice, and we will break your career—the career of one of the most brilliant young men in this House? It can be done; this parliament has full authority, but coming to my last argument I say this. The government is not responsible for any wrongdoing; Mr. Boivin may have made a mistake, but he simply acted on the advice of his officials and according to customs long established in his department.

Finally, who is going to judge this case; who are going to be our judges; who in this House has the right to decide whether the Minister of Customs was right or wrong? I said that I did not wish to resort to personalities, and I will not do so. My friends opposite need not be afraid; I will name no names, but the records of many scandals are strewn on the banks of the Ottawa river; we can see them on the other side. As crown prosecutor in the province of Quebec, when a man stood in the dock with his liberty and sometimes his life in jeopardy, in justice not only to society which I represented but also to the accused whose interest I had in hand, I made it a sacred duty that no man should sit on the jury who did not have the moral qualifications to do so. I hear that this division is going to be close; I hope not, because the issue is so clear. But if it is to be close I give fair warning that we are not going to be given a certificate of moral turpitude by some gentlemen on the other side.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have done. The task was a rather tiring one at this late hour and especially so in answering my right hon. friend, who is a very able lawyer. But I did it in justice to my colleague, for whose talent I have great admiration and in whose integrity I have great confidence; I did it thinking of our leader, whose spirit of true Canadianism he has voiced many times in this House. I may say very frankly that notwithstanding the warm personal friendship and admiration I have for the leader of the Tory party I did it because I thought it was a sacred obligation on my part to prevent, if possible, repetition of his administration; I did it because, after six months of hard work against all the obstacles and difficulties imagination could put across our path, we have succeeded in writing in the statute books of Canada some liberal, progressive legislation. I want if possible, Sir, to see that our efforts do not remain without result after all this work; we should at least have the reward of seeing the legislation for which we have fought triumph in the end and not be annulled through this very indirect way adopted by the opposition of killing Liberal principles and having Tory principles triumph.

11 p.m.

I hope the vote on this question will allow us to continue on the road we have started, so that next year we will be able to do more than we did this year. This is my last word. As to this new court of King Arthur, the Knights of the Round Table, those who valiantly and with great courage always fight for noble causes—Lancelot from Winnipeg; Galahad from New Brunswick—I leave these knights in their armour and say to them that you may don your new shining armour of virtue, but unfortunately that armour does not fit; we see through it.

Mr. A. M. BOUTILLIER (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, when I rose to address this House for the first time some days ago I neglected the courtesy due Your Honour, and at this late moment I wish to express my regret and to make amends; I desire to convey to you, Sir, expressions of my highest respect and esteem.

After listening to the learned exposition by very able members of this House it is somewhat presumptuous for me to ask hon. gentlemen to listen to any remarks I may have to make. I rise with a deep sense of responsibility; I may or may not make another address in this House, but I shall be ever grateful to the electors of the constituency of Vergreville for the privilege of being present on this important occasion and having the opportunity of presenting my views.

In speaking on this matter all personal feeling is absolutely divorced; I wish to assure the House on that point. I have received very courteous treatment from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), as well as from every member of his cabinet, and I appreciate that extremely.

In looking over the columns of this morning's Citizen, I find these words as part of an editorial:

> The Woodsworth amendment should have the support of every free member in the House.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I am a free member but I am not prepared to support the amendment in its present form. I understand that the principle of the subamendment as proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has been accepted by the right hon. leader of the opposition. If I am not right I wish to be corrected.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Quite right.

Mr. BOUTILLIER: Well, if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is sincere, I presume he will allow his subamendment to be incorporated into the amendment as presented to the House, and I am sure it will facilitate matters; it will show a sincerity on his part that will be entirely admirable. I for one want that judicial inquiry, and the introduction of that part of the subamendment into the amendment will, I am sure, make for a more efficient inquiry and be more satisfactory to all concerned. As I said before, I am perfectly free—perfectly free to pronounce on the issue before the House. And I am proud of the fact that I am free. It would be a great deal easier for me to give the matter no thought but let somebody else do my thinking, and to make my decision and to vote with the crowd or with the majority. But I would not be true or faithful to the electors of my constituency if I followed that course. If being free is merely to get up in this House and declare that a public department has been debauched; that certain political conduct is inexcusable; that the lives of men and women have been ruined; that the people of Canada have been plundered of large sums of money; that certain evidence respecting the conduct of an ex-minister of the crown was so indecent that the Customs inquiry committee had to leave it out of the records; that the man to whom these remarks apply, had, in order to reform the Senate, been rewarded and elevated to that august chamber as a shining example to the youth of our land and as in indication of what they might expect in the way of gifts from this government as long as they served it faithfully—if to rise in my place and merely express my disapproval and hold no one in a position of trust responsible, if that is to be free, if that is my duty, then, Mr. Speaker, I misunderstand very largely the meaning of the word. It is nothing to the taxpayers of this country that the treasury of Canada has been defrauded of large sums of money? Canada has been suffering from a heavy burden of taxation which might have been relieved easily had the administration of the Department of Customs been honest and effective, and had not a man sworn to guard the interests of the people of this country disregarded his solemn oath of office. I consider, Mr. Speaker, that the moral welfare of this country transcends every other issue; compared with it other issues fade into insignificance. Since 1921 I have been combating political immorality of the blackest type. Such disgraceful occurrences as took place in the constituencies of Athabasca and Peace River are not unknown in the district of Vegreville. I will not weary the House with details, but court records and newspaper clippings and files can be produced to verify my statement.

My experiences in this regard have been most interesting.

In 1921 I found myself in the ranks of the United Farmers of Alberta, a band of men and women pledged to bring about better economic conditions in Canada and to work for higher standards in public life and higher standards of citizenship. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that there is now a concrete opportunity to put these tenets or principles into effect, and to strike a real blow for Canada and all who reside within her borders.

I fully agree with all that has been said as to the thanks of the whole country being due to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) for his splendid efforts, and to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) and other members of the committee who so ably assisted him. No one can come to any other conclusion, after reading the evidence, even with much of the famous Duncan reported omitted, but that a most serious and disgraceful state of affairs exists as it affects our public life. In that regard may I be allowed to read a short extract from the Toronto Globe of June 19? This is but a small portion of that editorial, Mr. Speaker, but it refers to the report brought in by the Customs inquiry committee:

> The country will be fortunate if it is not termed departmental culpability with governmental connivance. The committee is generously lenient in attributing the conditions which have prevailed to slow degeneracy in efficiency accumulated over a number of years. It may be so, but the evidence points with damning clarity to disregard of official responsibility on so many occasions that the department is made to appear too often as little less than a clearing-house for political adventure and personal ambitions.

It seems, Mr. Speaker, that the time has come when our parliamentary standards should be raised, and those who are sent here for that purpose would be derelict in their duty if they did not do everything in their power to contribute to that result. I used a very unfortunate word some time ago; it is a word I do not like to use, but it happened to come into this matter, and that was the word "indecent". I found that word on the pages of Hansard and it refers to the Duncan report. In this connection, may I quote a dialogue which occurred yesterday between the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Donaghy and the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens):

> Mr. Donaghy: It is printed in this book.
> Mr. Stevens: In part only.
>
> Mr. Donaghy: It is the hon. member's fault as well as anybody else's if the dirty part is not in it.
>
> Mr. Stevens: It was unanimously agreed by the committee to omit it. Put it all on the table.
>
> Mr. Donaghy: I am quite agreeable to that. It was through no desire on my part that any part of it was not put on the table.
>
> Mr. Stevens: The hon. member consented to its suppression.
> Mr. Donaghy: As my hon. friend knows, the part that was omitted has nothing to do with the stealing and destruction of nine government files. It relates to some matter of an indecent nature, unconnected with those files.

It seems to me it is very unfortunate that such a word should be used in connection with any public servant of this country.

Now every phase of this matter has been referred to very fully, and I just wish to touch on one matter that is quite interesting to me, namely, the bootlegging of liquor and its allied activities. This traffic, along with its allied activity, must have material to feed upon. There must be a place to go to get recruits to repair the wastage or to replace those whom they destroy. May I ask where these recruits come from? Are they not supplied from the ranks of such fine lads as we have around this chamber, from upstanding young men like those who made such a splendid display before this House a few days ago. The youth of Canada, the finest asset which the country possesses, are the fodder needed for the capacious maw of this monster. This traffic—and now we speak of it in a larger sense—does everything it can to drag our young men, aye even our young women, into its net. It would soon cease to exist if these came not forward to pay toll.

Should we not, Mr. Speaker, do everything in our power to protect the young people of this country, the next generation of Canadians? The evidence does not indicate that this administration gave a thought to our young people. In time of war we call upon our young men to go forward and fight for those who are at home, the children and the older men and women of the nation. This they willingly do. Is it then not meet and proper that we of this country with age and experience should in time of peace contend as valiantly as those who go forth to fight our battle, to protect our boys and girls at home from influences that are so terribly dangerous? Is not this serpent, this traffic, rearing it slimy head in this country in a most menacing way? Does it not strike at the heart of our country? Is it not gnawing at the vitals of parliamentary institutions? Has it not brought disrepute upon one of our greatest governmental departments? What are we going to do? Stand idly by and do nothing, or are we at this time by our action to give notice to smugglers and bootleggers that Canada will be an unpleasant place for them to live in? This enemy is not in Europe; it is here. Many of our best fall by the wayside. Some are rescued and restored, while others miserably fail.

I would that I had the eloquence of many hon. members so that I might place this matter properly before this honourable body, that I might do it justice, that I might plead forcefully in behalf of those who suffer from this traffic. The bootlegger deserves the utter contempt of every law-abiding citizen. He treats laws enacted by this honourable body with utter disregard. In other words, he is a law breaker of the vilest kind and a wretched example to all with whom he comes in contact. Apparently he has no conscience, or, if he has, it is skilfully concealed. He not infrequently causes death and disaster with the poison he peddles. Follow him and what do we find? Broken hearts, the tears and sighs of mothers, wives and sweethearts, ruined homes, disease, separations and sorrows of all kinds. He is associated in his villainous work with smuggling dope smuggling included, burglary, gambling, perjury and bribery, in fact every form of dissipation and evil. Let me say here that statistics collected by our various health departments indicate that ninety per cent of new cases of our most terrible social evil are traced directly to alcoholic stimulants. It is believed that many of these cases can be traced to the activities of the bootlegger. He respects not his neighbour, his mother, his wife, his sweetheart or his child. The children of his neighbour are not secure. They are nothing to him. He is responsible directly or indirectly, through his product, for blindness and deformity in many of our Canadian children, with all the suffering and heartache that these involve. He has no patriotism. He thinks only of himself. To add to his ill-gotten gains he would ruin his native land and those who inhabit it. He has no regard for body or soul; he is just as ready to destroy the soul as the body. He apparently pays no respect to those solemn words and I repeat them with all reverence, Mr. Speaker:

What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul, or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

Does a being such as I have described deserve much consideration at the hands of hon. members in this House? Is any treatment too severe for him? What then shall we think of those who, either directly or indirectly, have countenanced or protected such enemies of our country? How would hon. gentlemen feel if this influence touched their homes? What then of the homes of others? Shall we not remember them at this time? I ask hon. members to pause—to stop, look and listen.

Reference has been made to the ex-Minister of Customs, the Hon. Jacques Bureau, under whose administration the bootlegger and smuggler flourished like green bay trees, who was culpable of gross negligence and responsible for the loss of much money to this country. Yet this man is taken into the bosom of the Prime Minister of this Dominion and protected by him by an appointment to the Senate, the haven of refuge. Is there no sense of responsibility, Mr. Speaker? At the opening of each day's session, Sir, you most reverently repeat certain beautiful petitions. In one of these you ask—I say it with reverence—our Creator, "That peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety be established among us for all generations." It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the conduct of this administration as revealed has not helped greatly to contribute to the consummation of these desires. Where is the peace and happiness, in the homes of those invaded by this nefarious traffic? Where is the truth and justice in permitting a man, unworthy, to be elevated to the highest chamber in this country? If there is little regard for the peace and happiness of so many Canadian homes, and if there is so little regard for truth and justice, are religion and piety likely to abound?

There is nothing personal in this, Mr. Speaker. It is away and beyond a personal matter. I am here as an elector of the province of Alberta as representative for the district of Vegreville, and a servant of the people of Canada. I speak on behalf of our Canadian boys and girls, and I ask most respectfully that this parliament see that every action is taken to protect them from the evils that have been brought to light. If I have been sent here by the electors of Vegreville to apologize or make excuses for, or to attempt in any way to whitewash, the political transgressions of hon. members of this House, either singly or collectively, no matter, Mr. Speaker, upon which side of the House they sit, or to what party they belong, I mistake my mission. I do not believe it is my duty to do so, or that my electors expect it of me.

I believe that this administration has not not been careful in important matters affecting the moral and material welfare of this country; that this administration is entirely responsible for negligence in not taking steps of a sufficiently active nature to prevent bootlegging, to prevent recurring infractions of the law, and for appointments to high office of unworthy persons. For these reasons I cannot support the subamendment except under the condition under which the leader of the opposition would accept its purport.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, we are supposed to be discussing the report of a committee appointed to investigate conditions in the customs. We have not been discussing that report for the greater part of the time; we have drifted off into a discussion of an amendment calculated to give a political aspect and slant to the whole discussion and incidentally to the whole report. This illustrates the initial mistake we made in entering into this matter when we confided the investigation to a political body and consequently a partisan body, because a political body will sooner or later make a political report.

I decry in no way the sterling services rendered by these hon. gentlemen. They have given intensely of their time and energy. I would not have pretended to do it; I do not think it is fair and right that they should have been asked to do it. But the work would have been as well done by a commissioner with the assistance of the very able counsel that was engaged and hon. members would have been free to attend to their parliamentary duties. Further, when the report was brought down it would have been considered entirely on its merits and not have had a political bias imparted to it.

The amendment immediately gives it a political slant by moving a vote of want of confidence in the government and more particularly in the minister at the head of the department. We then have the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) last night. I wish to compliment him upon the very able manner in which he handled the subject. I thought he put the debate on a higher plane than it had yet reached. I was particularly grateful to him for the lucid way in which he brushed aside the superfluities, the details, that appear only on the top and got down to the essentials and to a discussion of those principles which should really govern members voting on this question to-night.

There was in his subamendment one point with which I do not entirely agree and that is the suggestion to put the deputy minister in the class of those who ought to be more severely dealt with. I know nothing about the gentleman myself and I have no brief for him at all. It is for that very reason that I hesitate to support a condemnation of him so-to-speak unheard. I know this committee of nine men have gone thoroughly into the subject and I rather hesitate, without any further evidence than that which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre furnished last night, practically to reverse that decision as regards this one man. Otherwise I am in full accord with the sentiments expressed in the subamendment.

I would like briefly to refer to the report. Section 13 claims that six men whose names are given should be dismissed. I was going to say that it shows there are six crooks in the service, but that is too strong a word. The language used in the report is only that they have been delinquent in their duties, and it may well be that there is no great censure attached to some of these men. They may have been incompetent, careless or inattentive; but for that they have to suffer because perhaps they have allowed smarter crooks on the outside of the service to take advantage of their laxity of duty. In that way they are not so much to blame as those who operated outside of the service. I am glad to think that this long investigation has so far resulted in pointing the finger at only six men in the service. It is rather a good record for the service which consists of thousands of men, men of good character and working under great temptation as we all know. I presume, although the fact has not been emblazoned abroad, that these gentlemen whose discharge is recommended, are not appointees of the present government. It is reasonable to suppose from their positions that they have been some years in the service and have therefore been appointed by hon. gentlemen opposite.

The report makes various recommendations, all of which I may say have been given very little heed to in this discussion on account of the political slant which it has taken, but all of which are good and have been arrived at unanimously. Nearly all of them deal with recommendations looking to a better enforcement of the liquor regulations, more particularly as regards the exportation of liquor to the United States, a condition that as we all know has enormously increased since the United States went dry and the temptation of bootlegging into the United States was greatly increased. That of course is what you might call a new crime or series of crimes, and therefore possibly the machinery adopted in years gone by has proved inadequate to cope with the growing increase of crime in that regard. That in some measure explains the failure of the department at the present moment.

I should like to deal briefly with the political aspect of the amendment which is entirely political and designed of course to overthrow the government. On the amendment will depend the fate of the government of the day. I would like to address myself more particularly to the Progressive members in this House; they are the jury in this case and the full responsibility lies upon them. It has lain upon them throughout the whole session so I am not saying anything more than what we all know; nor am I in making my remarks to them putting myself into the position of dictating to them in any sense at all because, with the other minor groups in the House, we must share the responsibility of having kept this government in office for the last six months.

If I might for a very few minutes turn aside, I should like to imitate the example of the hon. member for Vaudreuil-Soulanges (Mr. Wilson) who speaking a few weeks ago, hinted that he might retire from the House. I wish to take the same attitude and to say that possibly this is my last public appearance, and to take the opportunity of expressing to my fellow members my appreciation of the courtesy and kindness which I have invariably received at their hands. It has been my fortune or ill-fortune to go into politics on two occasions when times were in a condition, shall I say, of extreme flux. When I entered local politics in British Columbia conditions were even more chaotic than they have proved to be here. After I had run three elections in five years I decided that politics was no game for a poor man. If the government is defeated to-night there is no doubt that an election will be held, if not this fall, certainly before another House is called together.

Possibly suggestions have been thrown out, possibly even promises have been made that if the government is overthrown there will be no need for another election; that the House could carry on for another session or more. Anyone credulous enough to believe that deserves to be pitied. I am as certain if the government suffers a defeat to-night that an election will take place before we meet again, as I know it is impossible to stop the sun from rising to-morrow morning. In that case I will retire from politics because running an election in my constituency is a heavy and arduous task, involving three months of very hard campaigning. In addition to the duties of being here and the necessity for looking after the district at home, if one is to have the physical, not to say the financial, strain of a campaign every year, then I for one have no particular desire to undertake such burdens in the future, more especially as, being independent of party funds, my financing is a matter entirely for myself. So much for the personal aspect, and I will not allude to the matter again.

Now the issue to-night we must face squarely, so far as the groups at the lower end of the House are concerned. We are being asked to vote a Liberal government out of power and put in the Conservative party—and, by the way, I notice that the hon. gentlemen now in power are referred to exclusively as the Liberal party. We are told to turn the Liberal rascals out; that is the cry. A few days ago, however, it was not the Liberal party; that party was not functioning, for the government was said to be dominated by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke). Just a few short days ago the party in power was the Progressive-Labour-Liberal party with the Liberal very much in the background. Now, however, these other groups are forgiven their sins and if we vote the right way we are to be taken into the Conservative paradise, or, at least, be given the privilege of turning out the Liberal party.

Now I will ask one important question which cannot be put more opportunely than here and now. In return for voting the Liberal party out—and I am speaking generally for these groups at the lower end of the chamber—what is there in it for us? What shall it profit us if we defeat the government? This is the proper time and this is the proper place to ask that question. This is the highest court of the land, as we have frequently heard, and here the greatest publicity is possible. I am a firm believer in publicity; anything that cannot be told on the platform had better not be told at all. I repeat the question, therefore: If we turn the government out what shall we get in return? By that I mean, what benefit will accrue to the people whom we represent? I am not of course speaking of any individual advantage. That is the question I want to discuss for a few minutes.

We have reached in this debate the occasion which comes up about once a month when a vote of want of confidence is moved, when the Conservative party turn their eyes once more longingly towards the lower end of the House. Hon. gentlemen opposite listen to our speeches and hear us with courtesy and attention while the expectation and the hope exist that we may lend our assistance to have them regain the treasury benches through a vote against the government. So far, however, it has been our experience that after a vote has been taken and the government has been sustained in power a change has come over the spirit of the dream; the flag of truce comes down with a run, and hon. gentlemen opposite have not hesitated, indeed they have been quite frank, to express in no measured terms the contempt they entertain not only for ourselves but, as well, for our principles and all who belong to our parties. I have been wondering to-night, in the event of hon. gentlemen opposite climbing into office on our shoulders, whether—or rather I should say, how soon, for there is no doubt as to what would happen—how soon, I say, the same conditions would again prevail. I recall once in the local house of British Columbia three socialists had kept the Conservative government in power for a whole parliamentary term. Now, I never heard any suggestion that it was scandalous for these socialists to maintain that government on the treasury benches. There was no talk about any unholy alliance. It was all right because the socialists were supporting a Conservative government. In return for the support they gave that government, possibly as is the case in this parliament, those socialists got certain concessions in the shape of labour reforms, which were enacted. But time went on, and as the result of an election the Conservative party came back with a majority so large as to make them independent of the socialists, who were returned in the same numbers as before. I remember hearing the leader of that Socialist party, an able man now in a prominent position in British Columbia, saying in his soft Welsh voice, "Yes, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentlemen opposite when in power during the last parliament used to throw bouquets at us. They still throw bouquets at us, but there is a brick concealed in them." In other words, having kept the Conservative party in power for four years, these socialists, after the Conservatives had been returned by a clear majority, were ignored as utterly as they had ever been. Possibly there is a lesson there for us too.

There is some advantage in having been in local politics in times of chaos. The occurrences in the local House are to my mind a moving picture of what has been going on here; I have recognized every phase as it has come up from time to time. I recall an incident which made quite an impression on my mind. An hon. member got up in the local House on one occasion and disavowed his party. He was a Liberal and he expressed his intention thenceforward of supporting the Conservative government of the day. Now I have no fault to find with any man who takes that stand, for it requires strength of character in a man to take up a position against his party. He must be animated by a strong conviction and sense of duty. In this particular case however it was not so; this man's abandonment of his party was prompted by petty motives of a very trivial nature. But, as I remember, the Conservatives in the House and the newspaper the next day, proclaimed the bold step he had taken. Great headlines in the press, three inches deep, described him as the saviour of the country, another Daniel come to judgment, a brand plucked from the burning. He was everything that was good and great and intelligent and holy. It is many years ago but I remember saying to my wife at the time, "This man has committed suicide; now watch his finish." Time passed and an election came around. He had been carried along on a wave of popular enthusiasm for his heroism on going back on his party. He had been promised that all he had to do was to show himself at the convention and he would get the Conservative nomination. Well, he was received with the glad hand; there was still a good deal of adulation for his bold independence. He was proposed for the nomination and just as a matter of form he was asked if he had any objection to going before an open convention; and as he could not logically object he agreed. The vote was something like four for him to eighty-four for his competitor. However, he had been treated with the greatest courtesy and he got what was coming to him. I am not saying that he was wrong in changing his party if he had been animated by proper motives, but he was not. The point I make is that all is not gold that glitters.

So in this case we must answer this question: If we put hon. gentlemen opposite into office, when the shoutings die down, when the cheering is over, when the kings and princes of the Conservative party are safely installed on the treasury benches, what will be left for us? We of course can go home; there will be no bands for us, no acclamation, no $14,000 positions. I say we can go home, and when we do go home the first person who will meet us will be old Bill Smith. He may have one name in one member's constituency and a different name in another's, but he is the typical voter. Bill Smith we will call him for convenience sake. While our ears are still filled with the applause that will follow our turning the government out, while there is still lingering around us like a halo the eloquence of hon. gentlemen opposite for turning the government out and putting them in, Bill Smith will shift his chew of tobacco from one side of his mouth to the other and will say to us, "You say you have turned those rascals out. What did you turn them out for?" "Have you not heard? Why, we turned them out because of corruption in the Customs department which was proved to be directly connected with the Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin). Here is his record.

He postponed a man's gaol sentence for several months and we turned him out." Bill Smith will take another chew and he will say, "Yes, I see you turned those rascals out but whom did you put in?" Why, we will say, "We have put in the Conservative party. They will start with a clean sheet." Bill Smith will then want to know whether the Conservative party too have not a record. And then is when we shall begin scratching our heads!

Now, Bill Smith is not the man he used to be. He is not a Liberal or a Conservative because his grandfather was a Liberal or a Conservative; he is becoming more intelligent; he is taking a keener interest in politics although from a different angle. He is no longer interested merely in hearing of the success of this or that party; he is taking a keen interest in his own interest. In other words he is becoming class conscious and he wants to know what there is in any form of government for him. He is keeping a sharp eye on changes at Ottawa affecting the interests of his class. Presently he will want to know about the new party that we put in—if we put them in— "What about their policies?" For we must not forget that many of the policies of the Conservative party are diametrically opposed to those which we in these groups in the lower part of the House were elected to support when we came here. He will want to know what we have done about that. He is apt to ask us: "Well, in this change have you advanced in any way the principles, the policies and the interests of the people who sent you there?" "If not, why not?" That is the question we have got to ask ourselves, and perchance, Mr. Speaker, it would be well if we ask ourselves that question now, and have the answer ready before we go home. Therefore before we do the spider and the fly act and walk into the parlour of our friends opposite, let us ask ourselves: Is it a question of putting purity into politics, or of putting politics into purity? Or, to put it another way: Are we being asked merely to be the stepping stones, the tools, we might say, of an adroit office-seeking body of men in this House? I was very much struck by an hon. gentleman's naiveté. He does not generally display any, but in talking of something that happened in the Customs committee he said: Of course, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) gave the deciding vote. He took it for granted as a foregone conclusion that as there were four Conservatives and four Liberals on the committee the casting vote must fall upon the other man, it not being possible in his conception of political life that even in that Customs committee the Liberals or the Conservatives would be voting other than against each other. I suggest, then, we should ask ourselves, as we will be asked by our constituents: Well, what guarantees have we got to justify a change of government? I use the word "guarantees" rather than the word promises. Promises can be written in sand, Mr. Speaker. As Tennyson says:

> Like the snowfall in the river,
> A moment white, then gone forever.

Mr. FORKE: I will not allow that from a Scotchman.

Mr. NEILL: Well, it has been my experience through life that all great poetry originated with Burns, but my modesty forbids me proclaiming it. We want guarantees, not promises. When the party opposite, whose policies in many cases are diametrically antagonistic to our own, get into power what guarantee do we have that they will carry out such legislation as we desire or as we were elected to support? We do not want to be in the position of France at Versailles. Her one ambition was not to get promises from Germany. She had pages and pages of them, and France had had a bitter experience of their inefficacy. What she asked for, what she schemed for, and what she prayed for, was a guarantee. She asked Britain: Will you guarantee all these promises made by Germany? Britain did not care to do it. She then tried the United States, and if she could have got the United States and Britain to guarantee her security she would not have worried the least bit about Germany's promises. When Mahomet and the mountain come together, we want to know which will show up the bigger in the picture. When the lion and the lamb lie down together, we want to know which is going to get the better meal. These things we want to know before we go too far.

I think I am justified in saying that the amendment will convert the report practically into a political report. Now, by the shrewdly drawn amendment, the whole blame is fixed on the hon. Minister of Customs. The hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Donaghy) the other night drew my attention to the question and in some measure went into it, so I need not deal with it at length; but he did direct my attention to the fact of the great discrepancies between the charges made on February 2 by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) against the administration of this department and the results shown by the report which we are now considering. It may be said: Why bother about that? That is a thing of the past. Charges are generally more or less vague and exaggerated. Let us deal with the facts as we have got them now. Well, there is another side to it. Not only were the charges very extravagant in their language, they were exceedingly positive and were widely circulated. I have in my hand a letter from a constituent who says:

> Practically every voter in this district has been supplied with Conservative literature, especially the charges by the Hon. H. H. Stevens concerning the Customs department. I enclose a slip bearing the initials of the member forwarding some of them.

This slip bears a rubber stamp, such as we use for franking our letters, with the initials "W. K. E., M.P." Consultation of the House of Commons Guide shows me that the only gentleman whose initials are W. K. E. is the hon. member who represents the constituency of West Kootenay, which is in British Columbia. May I say that not only one of those speeches has been sent around in the manner I have indicated, but a whole assortment, like a parcel of sweet peas, was distributed. You could take any variety you wanted. It was a sort of Aladdin's lamp business, you could take what you did like and discard what you did not like. The hon. gentleman who represents that district—I do not see him in his seat, and I should like to give him an opportunity of contradicting this—apparently used his frank, or allowed it to be used, to circulate this thing. His constituency is not in any way in the neighbourhood of Comox-Alberni, it is at the extreme other end of the province, and I must thank him cordially for the kindly interest he has taken in the education of the electors of my district. I must assume that he sat up night after night with 7,000 envelopes high in front of him while he kept this little stamp with the initials, W. K. E., going in his zeal to spread the glad gospel of Conservative propaganda among the electors of Comox-Alberni. But methinks, Sir, I smell a scandal. Did he sit up night after night to do that; or was his stamp stolen from him; or did he give it to someone? If he gave it to somebody, then there is a scandal of such magnitude that that of which the minister is accused sinks into insignificance. And it is not simply one scandal; there are 7,000 scandals at your door. It is a well-known fact, and I think I am justified in saying that it is part of the law under which these franks are issued, that they are strictly non-transferable, they are not to be used by anyone other than the members of parliament in whose favour they are issued. I may be wrong, but I do not think so. I think these franks are something like railway passes, which you know will be immediately taken up by the conductor and retained by him if somebody other than the members themselves are ever detected using them. This literature containing the charges made on February 2, has been circulated far and wide throughout Canada. I presume that other gentlemen, inspired by like zeal, helped to circulate the propaganda in other districts. Now there will be the idea given out through the press in one vague, general, sweeping statement, that these charges were proved. The man out in the backwoods will reflect back upon these sweeping, horrible charges and say, "Good gracious; if they are all true it is certainly time the government was out."

Now let me deal for a moment with this man Bisaillon. It seems that Bisaillon was discharged by the government of the day before the charges were made by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. I would like to quote a few of the remarks of the hon. gentleman in making those charges. Here is the opinion of the hon. member concerning this man Bisaillon, which is found at page 684 of Hansard:

> The worst of crooks. . . . a typical debauched and debauching public official; . . . . a criminal and a known crook. . . . if I can judge by this man's character I doubt if he lived a straight day during that whole period.

That is, for ten years.

> He is the head, the chief smuggler of the ring, a perjurer and a thief.

And on page 687:

> I purpose to show that this man Bisaillon. . . . received moneys of the crown, some $69,000 . . . deposited them to his own account, and never remitted them to the Receiver-general.

Then on page 696 we find a reference to a man named Gaunt:

> —the exchequer had been defrauded of $60,000 odd in duty.

That is, by this man Gaunt. Then again, speaking of him:

> Why don't you prosecute him now? Why haven't you prosecuted him since you started this investigation? . . . . The arch conspirators, the chief smugglers, the men who deal in millions will not be prosecuted—not if the government can get away with this adjournment . . . . there will be an odd official dismissed here, a fellow perhaps like Giroux who ought to be behind the bars, and Bisaillon who ought to have a life sentence.

Then again at page 698:

> I am asking for action on the part of this government. Let them arrest this man Bisaillon. . . . let them arrest Giroux. . . . Let them prefer a charge of fraud and the grossest kind of fraud against Gaunt . . . . I could put my finger on dozens of them tomorrow—let them go after the hosts—

Mark that word.

—of others as to whom they have abundant evidence in their possession, and arrest them, put their liberty at stake and then there will be disclosures that will surprise the House and the country.

At page 699 again he asks:

Why was he (Bisaillon) not prosecuted?

Brave words full of meaning, especially if they are to be circulated to the extent of 30,000 or 40,000 copies among the electors of Canada. That was the statement of hon. gentlemen opposite on February 2, but now let us see what happened. One would suppose after the language I have read that when those who had been accusing this man Bisaillon got him there would not have been much of his reputation or indeed of his person left; you could almost imagine him crawling away, ashamed and degraded, with his reputation utterly gone. But what was the situation? It appears that Bisaillon was not that kind of girl at all. What really happened was that when they were through with him he put on his hat at an angle, wished them good-day and said he would see them later, then strutted out. It was supposed that once they got hold of him they would turn him inside out, but perhaps the inside looked even better than the outside. It might be that he had such a strong personality that he was able to put it over the members of this committee. I would not suggest that, but it seems to be the only solution. On February 2 he had been described as a thief, a crook and all the rest of it, but we find that the only reference to him in the report is as follows:

12 m.

The committee recommends that the evidence of Mr. J. A. E. Bisaillon given before this committee. . . . be transmitted to the Attorney General for Quebec—

To be compared with the evidence he had given on some previous occasion. But I would like to point out that this is all new stuff; this is something which happened when he was before the committee, and they had reason to suspect, I presume, that he was perjuring himself. So they recommended that his evidence be taken and compared with the evidence given in a court somewhere else, but there is not one word about this perjurer, thief, criminal, who should be in gaol for the rest of his life, with that exception. I think perhaps it is a good thing that the law of criminal libel does not attach to a member of parliament making statements in this House, or Mr. Bisaillon would have added something to that $69,000 which he is supposed to have swiped from the government, but which investigation showed had not been stolen, at least from the government. In other words, he was practically whitewashed and turned out into the world as a man sans peur et sans reproche.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman give an indication of where there is any evidence that that money was his own?

Mr. NEILL: I think it was admitted in the debate yesterday.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, I know it was.

Mr. NEILL: Admitted?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, not at all. If it was, why does the committee recommend that its origin be investigated?

Mr. NEILL: I was just going to deal with that. I remember the hon. member for Vancouver North saying yesterday without contradiction that crook and all as this man Bisaillon was, the one thing he did not appear to have done was embezzle the country's money. The right hon. leader of the opposition speaks of the recommendation of the committee, and I am just going to read it:

The committee recommends that the following firms and companies should be proceeded against in the proper forum to recover the sums, if any, now owing by them to the crown.

The first name mentioned is the John Gaunt Company. Yes, but that is a very different thing from the charges made on February 2. Then it was not a question of the possibility of this man owing money to the crown; it was charged that he had embezzled the sum I have mentioned, the amount of which I forget, but it was a large amount at all events. And the hon. member challenged the government at the time, asking why it was they did not arrest this man and make him talk. In the committee they had every opportunity; they cross-examined him to a finish and now their only recommendation is a somewhat meagre one, to try to collect any moneys—if any—which may be found due from this man.

These are only two occasions which I have used as examples of the wide divergence, after an investigation extending over five months, between the charges made by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre of February 2nd, and the facts brought out in the investigation. I hope the hon. member for West Kootenay (Mr. Esling) will do the Martha act and ponder these things in his heart. Perhaps in the fulness of time it will bring forth fruits meet for repentance. I hope then he will be found sitting up at night stamping another seven thusand envelopes to correct the errors of his previous propaganda, and I shall be glad to furnish him with copies of my speech at cost price. It turns out after all that a very small percentage of these statements is true, and what makes it worse is that, as the hon. member for Vancouver North pointed out, there should have been a large measure of results obtained from the charges made on February 2, because the hon. member was playing with loaded dice; he had information—someone called it smuggled information—but at any rate it was information that had been gathered by the very man he was accusing. Certainly the results should have been to have obtained a greater number of bull's eyes than were actually scored.

Now a great deal was made in the course of the debate from time to time by various other hon. members of this phase of the "booze" question, to put it vulgarly. I saw the trend of it in the speech of the hon. member who preceded me, who thought the whole country is being devastated by this influx of illicit liquor, and so on; and the suggestion was advanced—it was not specifically stated because it could not be—that the government were a party to the spread of this booze in Canada and the traffic that has grown up, admittedly grown up. Then there was the suggestion that with the wish and consent, so to speak, of the government, multi-millionaires were being created out of a traffic that was sapping the life of the young people of Canada. Much was said about the loss of revenue to Canada. Now I would point out in that connection that the traffic, immoral and improper as it was, involved no loss of revenue at all to Canada. If there was loss of revenue it was that of the United States and not of Canada, as of course the stuff was manufactured in this country. Is this a new cry? It is as far as hon. gentlemen opposite are concerned, but is it a new condition? I think not. My memory goes back to the year 1922 when the government of the day brought down an amendment to the act by which the export houses in British Columbia would be put out of business. Not one step could ever be taken so far as the province of British Columbia was concerned that would do more to crush out the evils sugested by the hon. member for Vegreville than that simple bill as introduced by the Minister of Justice. It was passed almost without comment by this House but rejected by the Senate. The Commons declined to accept the rejection of the amendment and there was a conference between representatives of the two houses. I was a member of that conference and we found that we were up against a dead wall. We could not get a compromise in any way at all, the dead wall taking the shape and form of the Brewers' Association of the province of British Columbia. The bill was rejected entirely that year. It was introduced, I think, another year and again rejected. Then what happened in 1925? Hon. members—not the Conservative member for Vancouver Centre or his associates, prominent in the House and prominent in the party as they are, but two insignificant members from the backwoods of British Columbia, the hon. member for Cariboo, Mr. McBride, well known and esteemed in this House, and myself—had to go to the government, and I suppose the Minister of Justice ought to be impeached for listening to us when we beseeched him to give us once more this law that was so badly needed in British Columbia. He yielded to our pleading. The bill was once more introduced into this House, and Mr. McBride and I had to bear the whole brunt of the opposition, led for the most part by one of the Vancouver members of the House who is still in parliament. About that time there had been two men just recently convicted of murder. They had been hi-jacking, that is stealing the other fellow's illicit booze. Those robbed could not squeal because it is an illegal traffic. The victims were murdered and these two men were sentenced to be hanged. I pointed out that it was technically and perhaps legally correct for us to allow this booze to go over to the States, but I said it was anything but a friendly act toward the United States and sooner or later it would involve us in responsibility and friction with the United States that we would be very sorry indeed to incur. I got no support from the hon. members of the Conservative party. Instead of that I got their active opposition, in the case of one or two at least who seemed more faithful to the brewers' interests of British Columbia than to the interests of the province. This booze question is not a new thing. It is brought up now in order to attack the Minister of Customs, but is not a new thing at all. Let us begin at home. Let us consider who is to blame for the situation in British Columbia. Owing to the existence of these export houses and their proximity to the water and to the neighbouring towns of the United States, the situation is ten times worse there than any revelation contained in the report we have been considering. Then do not let us talk in too careless a manner about blaming the government for allowing this liquor trade to grow up in the east.

Another feature of this amendment is the utter condemnation of the Minister of Customs and Excise. The language used is that his actions are utterly unjustifiable.

Such language to a man in an ordinary sphere of life might not seem very strong but in the case of the Minister of Customs it means his complete condemnation, just as much as if the mover of the amendment had used the word "criminal" or employed the language used to describe Bisaillon. Because in view of his position as a minister of the crown if he is convicted of doing something that is very unjustifiable it means that he must vacate his cabinet position and possibly even his seat as member. But let me compare the language used to describe this minister, whose fault was most trivial compared with that of the Hon. Jacques Bureau who, it was admitted, was responsible in very large measure for a great deal of the corruption that has gone on and for the downfall of men who, perhaps, if they had been left alone would have been in office respectable and respected to-day. What is the language used in Mr. Bureau's case? Let me compare the two. The actions of Mr. Boivin are described as being utterly unjustifiable. The language used in regard to the other gentleman—and apparently that is the only allusion made to him in this report—is:

Apparently—

"Apparently," Mr. Speaker—

—the Hon. Jacques Bureau, then Minister of Customs, failed to appreciate and properly discharge the responsibilities of his office.

And then the report goes on to say that there was a lack of efficiency. "Apparently" is the strongest term they can employ after five months' investigation of the department of which he was the head. Every trail sought apparently led directly to this man, and yet the strongest language the committee can employ is "apparently." Now I have looked up the term in the dictionary and the meaning given there of "apparently" is "seemingly but without actuality." Seemingly the hon. senator was guilty, but not with actuality. That is the language used to condemn this man as compared with the language used in the case of the minister. Could anything be more gentle or more suggestive of a Sunday-school picnic? Why was not Senator Bureau called by the committee? That question has already been asked but I am going to ask it again. It was suggested that he was not called because there were personal reasons, there were matters that it was undesirable to go into. That is no excuse, none whatever. He could have been called, he should have been called and cross-examined without any reference to these personal matters. It was not his personal record that was on trial at all, it was his official record and that could have been inquired into without entering upon any personalities whatever. Why not have called his secretary, admittedly an honest man, to make any revelations as to what transpired? It was not the duty of Hon. Jacques Bureau, an accused man, to go on oath and incriminate himself. It was the duty of those who accused him to make good their case; to call him and make him certify to the facts that the country wanted to know and which the committee indeed was created to find out. I see a parallel between the case of the Hon. Jacques Bureau and that of Samson of olden times. By the way, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre alluded to the buccaneering spirit of the Hon. Mr. Bureau; and if we cast our minds back into the pages of biblical history we find that Samson was a man somewhat of the same character; he had the buccaneering spirit. He was a man of great stature and enormous strength, and he had the convenient habit, when he needed a change of raiment, of going down into the camp of the Philistines, slaying a number of them, and getting his raiment at a very cheap rate. That was better than smuggling prison goods from the United States, because there was not the same risk and trouble. That was his attitude and course of life. He had the buccaneering spirit, and in that regard the cases are analogous. Time went on and he was betrayed by a woman. His hair was cut off, his eyes were put out and he was a horrible sight and a pitiful spectacle. But in course of time his hair grew again. He was brought out on some gala day to a place where the Philistines had assembled, and with true Jewish guile—which is exhibited among his descendants to-day—we find him saying to his attendants, "Where is the pillar of this building?" An enormous number of people were gathered in that place. They showed him where the pillar was. His strength had come to him, and he exerted all his power, with a call to his God to help him once more; he pulled down the pillar of the temple, and it is said in the Scripture that the number of the Philistines that he slew at his death was greater than all those whom he slew before in his lifetime. Now here is the comparison: There is a chance that the spirit of the buccaneering senator, when he heard there was talk of calling him, came into prominence and perhaps he said—not in the committee, no; such things are not written on visiting cards, not published through a loud speaker—but perhaps a bird whispered in the air that he had said to himself, "If I go down I will not go down alone. I will be like Samson and the Philistines, and those who fall with me will be greater than all those who have gone down before." Perhaps for that reason he was not called on to give evidence before this committee, where every suggestion of propriety and urgency demanded that he should be called.

Now, Sir, perhaps it would be well for hon. members opposite to soft-pedal when they blame the government for the petty charge made against the Minister of Customs with which I will deal in a minute. Although these men went to the committee animated with the greatest idea to keep out of politics, the smear of politics shows itself all through the proceedings. If the proceedings had been before the Supreme Court or before a royal commission, there would have been no considerations of that kind.

I want to deal with two other cases, those cases cited by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre in connection with Montreal and Regina. When the hon. member for Vancouver Centre was making his statement the other day, prior to moving the amendment, I do not mind saying that I was strongly impressed with the force of his argument, and before he had half finished I turned to the hon. member sitting behind me and I said, "If Mr. Boivin cannot answer those charges I am going to vote against him."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. NEILL: Hon. gentlemen seem to doubt my statement. Nevertheless I say I did make that statement, and I can produce the hon. member if necessary. It was one of the Ontario members. But it matters not. If they will not take my word, then they would not believe if one rose from the dead.

I was going to say that after the minister made his statement I believed he had made good his position, and I was convinced that he was worthy of support. I am coming to the stage in the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre when he introduced these cases from Regina and Montreal. I could not help feeling that he had very materially and almost fatally weakened his case, because I cannot but think it was a great error of judgment. I was reminded of the old saying that you can judge the future by the past. That is an old saying and a very good one, and I want to apply it in this way. If I were buying a motor car—I may say that my knowledge of motor cars only extends to ten per cent, and that is a liberal allowance—and a shrewd salesman was holding forth about the merits of the car and the engine and all the parts, as long as he kept off the ten per cent with which I was acquainted I might be favourably impressed with his statement, but when he entered the field of which I had some knowledge and began to lie to me, I would realize that his statement could not be correct. I would not say to him that his statement was ninety per cent true and ten per cent false, because that is not the way any reasonable man would argue. I would say to him: I have found you lying with regard to the features of the car with which I am acquainted, and therefore I cannot believe your statement in regard to the other features. I would be convinced that he was lying one hundred per cent on account of the fact that I knew he was lying as to the ten per per cent. I am not using that literally, but simply as an illustration of the principle. When you find an hon. member putting forth an argument in regard to the complicated and complex matters reviewed by that committee with which you are unfamiliar, you cannot judge whether or not his statement is correct. You have to take his word for it, and to some extent we are glad to do so. But when an hon. member introduces such cases as those I have under my hand, which we can check up, and when we find he has not been so straightforward in his presentation of those cases as he should be, it leads us to suggest the same argument would apply to his statement in regard to the other features of the case with which you are not acquainted. We would say his statements were overdrawn and the matter was overstated. I think the letter to the Prime Minister was framed for a certain purpose, not to give information. The very language of the letter will show it. The purpose of the whole suggestion would have been very far-reaching if it had been successful. The purpose of the resolution was to catch us at the lower end of the House and to say to us, "Now you have heard the records of the crookedness and corruption of this department, and you should form your opinion of the matter on that record. But here is the feature: who is to continue the work and who is to turn over the new leaf? Listen to these revelations. They are proceeding at Montreal and Regina with the same corrupt practices and interferences as have been the whole cause of trouble so far." These statements have been made to us, and it is argued that therefore we could not trust them further. Had that argument succeeded we would have been justly entitled to say that these men cannot be trusted with the reins of power and continue the administration. I quote from page 4829 of Hansard some of the remarks the hon. member made. This is from a letter to the Prime Minister:

I have now before me information regarding two cases, a recital of the facts concerning which would indicate that, in spite of the disclosures of the last four months, there still remains within the ranks of the government those who are willing to submit to outside influence in order to prevent the ultimate result of illegal and criminal practices being arrived at through the regular courts of justice.

If that is true, then let us vote against them. Then in the same letter he says:

It appears however—

Dealing with the Montreal case—

—that certain influences in the government ranks are exercised to prevent this case from being successfully handled.

Again we find that "the police operative at Regina is recalled, on the excuse that he is required to give evidence on a case in Montreal." If that is true that is a very vital and important thing, as if the Minister of Customs was to take that man away from Regina the government should be condemned; and that is a statement made with the knowledge of the fact before him. He says:

The police operative is recalled on the excuse that he is required to give evidence on a case in Montreal, and Bryant is removed—

He was a Conservative lawyer employed by a policeman, a peculiar method to hire a lawyer.

—and one Anderson, secretary of the Liberal Association of Regina, is retained.

The hon. member was asked—I would hesitate to make the statement if I had not seen it in Hansard—if he did not know that Bryant was a Conservative and leader of the Conservative organization. He said that the man that the government ordinarily used and employed to prosecute cases in that district was the secretary of the Liberal Association. But he said that he did not know that the man whom the operator hired, on some sudden inspiration from heaven itself, I suppose, was the president of the Conservative Association.

Again we find—and this is my closing quotation:

The facts as disclosed to me—

This is a solemn letter written on a solemn occasion to the Prime Minister and intended to be brought into this House:

—reveal a continuance of a practice of political interference, which cannot now be justified, and which would seem to indicate a continuance of the very practices which brought about the breakdown in the Customs department.

If that letter is true I repeat: It is the bounden duty of every decent man to vote against the government. But along comes this letter from the respected head of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police which knocks the whole thing into a cocked hat. It says:

It is always customary to apply to the Department of Justice for the appointment of counsel.

He said that the police agent had no authority to hire another counsel. He said that the secret agent had not been removed from Regina; that his absence was only temporary. Then he went on to explain that the secret agent was working on a very urgent case in Montreal and the arrangement had been made that he should immediately go back to Regina and prosecute the work there. The letter goes on:

There has been no interference whatever in connection with Secret Agent Cahill's work.

That is signed by the commissioner of the mounted police. But supposing the commissioner had been a man of a different type; supposing that when he was asked for this report he had shilly-shallied and said he did not know; he would see about it later on. Where would the reputation of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Customs have been in these two cases? It would have been another nail in the condemnation of their conduct. One of these cases was dealt with in the committee; the other was not. They were being vigorously prosecuted and there was no necessity and no design at all in bringing them into the House except for the purpose I have suggested, namely, to suggest that the government were proceeding in the same way as had been done by certain officials in the past.

By the way, if I may refer for just one moment to the Cohen case in Montreal, a great deal was made of the fact that this bootlegger or criminal had turned king's evidence. Yes, many a man turns king's evidence to save his neck. Many a man condemned to the gallows will give away a great deal in the hope of extending his life a little longer. The word "frame-up" was used against the government. It seems to me that Mr. Cohen with all his national ability rather slipped up a cog. It appears that it was he who was framed up. He gave evidence against certain smugglers, but he apparently was not smart enough to have a legal adviser so that he might get protection for himself. If there was any frame-up it was not against the interests of justice. But these two cases were used to prop up the idea that the government were not worthy to prosecute any further. Instead of weakening the position of the government, it has weakened the confidence we must place in the arguments adduced by hon. gentlemen opposite in this connection.

Let me give just one illustration more and I am done with this phase of the matter. The suggestion was made that there was a paradise of smugglers down near the border at a place called Rock Island. The suggestion was made with very great subtlety, subtlety worthy of a better cause, that the constituency of the Minister of Customs was in that neighbourhood. It would not have done to say that he represented those thugs and bootleggers. That could have been contradicted. It would not have done to say that they were living in his constituency, so that the adroit language is used that the district was in his neighbourhood. Another hon. gentleman got up and pointed out that it was not even the next district to the one in which the smugglers were located; that there was a constituency in between. In the same way one might suggest that the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Donaghy) was liable at least for the electoral corruption that went on in the Peace River district because there is only one constituency between that of the hon. member for North Vancouver and that of the hon. member for Peace River. Of course it takes in the whole province of British Columbia, 1,500 miles across, but one could as truthfully say that the constituency of Vancouver North was in the neighbourhood of the constituency of Peace River.

I come now to the famous Moses Aziz case, soon I hope to be known as Moses as was. On this centres the whole crime and crux of the charge against the Minister of Customs. It appears that the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) was guilty of endeavouring to influence the attitude of the Minister of Customs, and I admit frankly that the hon. member for Gloucester did what he did for entirely improper purposes. But his motive is not of so much importance because there is no charge against him, there is no vote of want of confidence being moved against him. The charge is against the Minister of Customs who, in ignorance of the improper motive of the hon. member for Gloucester, gave heed to him and postponed action until the member could have an opportunity of being heard. In other words, the hon. member used his influence. If a member is to be condemned for that, how few of us indeed can go unscathed! I spend half, yes more than half of my time using my influence such as it is for the benefit of my constituents in every walk of life. More than that, I have done it with every department of the government and I have done it and am willing to do it again to the extent I have done it with the Department of Customs. I claim it is my perfect right and duty to do so. The Minister of Customs in these matters has a discretion allowed him by law, a very proper discretion.

I am not quite clear what the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) means. It says something about taking away that discretion. I hope if he takes it away from the minister he will leave it in the hands of some officials, because it is essential for the ordinary and decent carrying on of the law that someone should have some discretionary power. If you make one fixed arbitrary rule, one fine for one offence, you are going to inflict unheard of hardships on many practically innocent people.

The criminal law, the greatest law we have dealing with these things, in almost every page records the fact that it is necessary to give the magistrate or the judge a margin on which to work. I was a magistrate for many years and under the act the penalty, if I remember correctly, for vagrancy gave a justice of the peace power to impose a fine of not more than fifty dollars or not more than six months in gaol. But he can impose as small a fine as he likes or as short a time in gaol as he likes. It is very essential that this should be so. Cases came before me time and time again when I would have been doing absolutely wrong on a technical conviction if I had given anything but the most trivial penalty possible. That is so particularly in the Customs department. We must have somebody using that discretion and it is the privilege and duty of every member to appear on behalf of his constituents in that regard.

Even while this investigation was going on I had the temerity to apply to the department. I think I even intruded on the minister himself in the case of a man in my district. This was a large respectable firm doing a big business, importing a lot of stuff. Inadvertently they had made a mistake to the extent of some $200 in the value of some articles they were importing. It was a pure accident, a pure mistake. They showed me how it had occurred and asked me to explain the matter to the department. More particularly they did not mind paying any appropriate fine, but they did not want the officials here to get the idea that the firm was the cheap, shyster kind of dealer who would make a practice of that thing, because they had a high reputation to maintain.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. NEILL: Some members laugh at the idea, but men treasure their reputation. There are in British Columbia, if not in Ontario, men who treasure their reputation. This firm is one of that class. They did not want their reputation to be shattered. They asked me to lay these facts before the minister and I was only too pleased to do so.

Another case that comes nearer home is one that I was mixed up in. It was a bootlegging case and I wonder that I am not at the bar of the House to-night, accused of all the crimes in the calendar. The only reason for my immunity is, thank God, the obscure position I hold. Had I been in the position of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin) nothing would have prevented my exposure. Here is my criminal record: a boat was caught bootlegging to the United States and the Customs department seized it along with the liquor. It was discovered that a gentleman in the district I represent had chartered the boat for so much a day, and according to the customs law the boat was going to be confiscated and he would lose the whole value of it. He was as innocent of any desire to bootleg as I could have been. At the previous election he had voted against me but I took the case up as a fair one. I made representations to the department in the matter. I did not ask for anything improper but by putting the wheels in motion I facilitated the settlement of the case. I got the man's boat out on bail, so to speak, by having him put up a large sum of money as deposit by way of guarantee. This enabled him to have the use of the boat in the meantime. Otherwise he would have suffered a considerable loss for many months. Was there anything criminal in that? In the course of time the matter was settled satisfactorily. I merely smoothed things over so that business was accelerated and justice was done.

I want to deal for a moment now with the position of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Boys). Of his action in connection with the Waisberg case I have no complaint whatever to make. I would have done exactly the same thing in his place, with one distinction, which does not touch anything vital, being perhaps merely a matter of opinion. I may be wrong, and if I am I offer the hon. gentleman my apologies; but I understood his position to be that when he applied to the minister on behalf of Waisberg he did so not in his capacity as a member, but as a lawyer. In that case, in my judgment, he was wrong. I cannot conceive how a man can be these two things at once; I do not understand such a dual personality. Was the hon. member using his friendship with the minister, his reputation and standing as a member of parliament, in order to secure, in his capacity as a lawyer, justice for this man? I do not think that hon. members who are of the legal profession should allow their respective interests as members and lawyers to conflict. I remember once a man, not a constituent of mine, asking me to present his case before a certain department. I said I had troubles enough of my own and I asked him why he did not consult his own member. He said his member was a lawyer and he would charge a fee. It would not have been proper for me as a member to charge anything, and I am sure no member wants to do that. If the hon. member from North Simcoe had not been a member there would of course have been no objection to his making representations to the minister in his capacity as a lawyer. I entirely support the view that he was not guilty of any crime any more than I was guilty in the case to which I have referred.

But there is another aspect of the matter that must be considered. I do not attach any blame whatever to the hon. gentleman but I would attach blame to myself—the hon. member for North Simcoe can speak in his own behalf—I should indeed be ashamed if, after having solicited a favour of the minister and accepted it, I then turned round and condemned him for granting a favour in some other case. We all remember, I am sure, the occasion on which the founder of our religion, when a certain woman was taken in sin, and brought to him, uttered those words which it is well for men always to bear in mind when judging their fellow men. A Jewish lawyer was endeavouring to get from the Master an opinion that the woman should be punished according to the strict letter of the Mosaic law, and the reply came:

> He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her.

He appealed to the best elements in human nature in speaking those words.

I entirely endorse the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) that we should consult our common sense, our good taste and our good judgment and refrain from any attempts to embarrass the minister or his officials with overdone appeals. A good deal of the fault must be shared by every member, for there is hardly one of us, certainly none of the older members, who have not been guilty—if there is any guilt about it—of applying to the minister to exercise discretion in particular cases. In the Moses Aziz case the minister was asked merely to delay and not to cancel the penalty that had been imposed, and I see in that a parallel in my own experience. When I was a magistrate charged with the duty of sending men up for trial in a higher court, I was often asked, when it was apparent that I was about to do so, not to sentence the accused immediately, for the reason that he would have to remain in prison until he could appeal to the higher court. Because once a man is sent up by the magistrate the magistrate cannot give bail. I was asked to delay the process of justice for a few hours until arrangements could be made for the man to get bail. I notice that the hon. member for Gloucester requested only such delay as would afford him an opportunity of being heard, whereas the hon. member for North Simcoe appealed for several delays, and that, too, for his own convenience.

Now the minister is accused of interfering with the course of justice, but he has read a statement by Mr. Gallagher of the Department of Justice in which the opinion is expressed that it was for the Minister of Customs to exercise discretion. I believe that a good deal of the contradictory exchanges that have taken place between the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) and members on this side of the House is due to misunderstanding.

I am reminded when considering the case of the Minister of Customs of the incident which was discussed in this House at a previous session in which the Hon. James Murdock, who was then Minister of Labour, was charged with having acted in violation of his oath of office because he had withdrawn certain private deposits which he had in the Home Bank before the failure of that institution, which failure he knew was imminent. We can recall that, according to hon. gentlemen opposite, the very foundation of constitutional government would quiver on its base unless parliament voted a want of confidence in Mr. Murdock. Let me read from the words of the leader of the opposition spoken on that occasion—words that echoed familiarly an hour ago while the right hon. gentleman was addressing the House:

> It will not do for this House to treat these matters lightly. If the House goes on record as stating that in the face of all these circumstances a minister can so act, and be acquitted, then so much the worse for the conduct of cabinets and public men in the years to come; so much the worse for the honour and repute of parliament; so much the worse for the standing of our political institutions throughout the empire and throughout the world.

The whole condemnation of the world was to be gathered around us if we did not cast from our midst the hon. Minister of Labour of that day. The same language, or something almost similar, was used to-night in an exaggerated and magnified form about this trivial case of Mr. Boivin, who delayed a sentence of three months. What happened to the Minister of Labour? We were invited, as I say, by every phrase of oratorical ability to condemn this man. We did not condemn him; this House sustained him by the huge majority of 110. The case was then traversed to the greater court of appeal, to the district of the hon. member who made the charge, and there again the common people of Canada said they did not take much stock in condemning a man who, going down the street, heard that the bank in which were all his little savings was going to break, and he took them out. The man in the street looked at it in that way.

Mr. GOTT: They attended to him on October 29 last.

Mr. NEILL: I have neither time nor inclination to pay attention to such an interruption, and I hope I am a bigger man than to be distracted by it. Here then is a parallel case. The conduct complained of in Mr. Murdock was, in a sense, more serious than that complained of in the Minister of Customs. The latter only exercised delay in his discretion as given him by law. I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that but for his position we would never have heard of his case. Had it happened to myself or to any other private member it would never have come before parliament. And his case would never have come before parliament had it not been for the exigencies of political war which made it necessary to find a peg to hang a motion of want of confidence on, and a very poor and faulty peg I think it is.

If the government are going to be defeated, perhaps it might be to my advantage, perhaps it might be to our advantage, to chip in with the crowd and turn on the government before it is too late. But, Mr. Speaker, the role of a rat deserting a sinking ship has never been a popular one with me, nor has it ever been with the ordinary member. I have received many benefits of legislation, of policy and of administration from this government for the district which I have the honour to represent; nothing for myself, but everything for my people. They have benefited individually in many cases, in sections and in classes, and though I may have nothing to do with the steering of the ship, yet I think if the ship is going to founder I would prefer to go down with her rather than scurry to shelter at the eleventh hour. I might lose something in that way, but, Mr. Speaker, I would not lose my self-respect, I would not have with me for all time the feeling of unspeakable meanness that would possess me if I knew I had solicited this man Boivin to do me a favour and was then going to condemn him because he agreed to do it. It is Robichaud and Boivin to-day. It may just as well be Boys and Waisberg or myself and my constituents to-morrow; the cases are practically parallel. It is only a chance that we, too, are not standing in the dock, so to speak, arraigned in the same way.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that in the years gone by I can be accused of having been particularly over-enthusiastic in proclaiming the virtues and merits of this government, but I have watched Mr. Boivin for four years as a private member in the last parliament and his career as a member of the cabinet in this, I have watched him handling matters intricate and delicate always with conspicuous ability. Even yesterday at the crisis of his career when he was in this awkward and embarrassing situation, trying to defend himself against charges yet to be made—an unfair position but one assigned to him by our rules—when, if ever, we might expect any man to show irritation and nervousness and loss of control, he maintained his same cool judgment, his same courtesy in debate, and his same careful consideration of the arguments that he wished to make. I have seen him handling bills through this House, and to those of us who were in the older parliament and saw the confusion of some ministers and the way they poked their bills through the House, it was a pleasure to see the hon. Minister of Customs pilot his bills through the House. His knowledge of the subject, his courtesy to his opponents, his ability, his willingness to explain any point, and above all his readiness to accept reasonable suggestions from anybody, made the passage of any bill that he was handling very easy. I submit this as my judgment, poor as it may be, that we could ill afford to spare a man of such outstanding ability.

I wish to express my unqualified conviction, Mr. Speaker, staking on it such poor reputation as I may have gained in this House, that the Hon. George H. Boivin is first of all a capable man, next he is an honest man; therefore we cannot afford to lose him from this House; and though it should be the last act of my political career, I propose to express that opinion by the way I cast my vote.

On motion of Mr. Campbell the debate was adjourned.

[Mr. Neill.]

PRIVILEGE—MR. STEVENS

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. My attention has been drawn by the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Donaghy) to a reference in Hansard at page 4889 which, inadvertently both on his part and my own, may do an injustice to an individual who certainly was not intended to be brought into the discussion. In the course of his speech the hon. gentleman challenged me in these words:

> Perhaps the hon. member will say that Senator Bureau would not accept the invitation to appear before the committee.

Then there was a little passage between us, and he said he would give me an opportunity to speak in a moment. Later on he used these words:

> Why did the hon. member for Vancouver Centre not ask to have the Hon. Jacques Bureau's secretary summoned before the committee. Now I pause for an answer.

I rose and answered in a manner applicable to the ex-minister, not noticing that the word "secretary" had been used. I want to say very frankly, Mr. Speaker, that I had no intention, and it would have been altogether wrong, to apply what I did say to the secretary of the minister. Therefore I desire that this should be corrected in Hansard.

On motion of Mr. Robb, the House adjourned at 12.50 a.m. (Friday).

Friday, June 25, 1926

The House met at two o'clock.

THE DUNCAN REPORT

Mr. DUGALD DONAGHY (North Vancouver): With the consent of the House I should like to move that the Duncan report be laid on the table of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER: According to the rules of the House, two days' notice must be given.

Mr. DONAGHY: Is it not in order to make the motion with the unanimous consent of the House?

Mr. SPEAKER: Bourinot says:

> The documents laid before parliament are presented either by message or by command of His Excellency the Governor General, or in answer to an address or order of the House, in pursuance of an act of parliament.

In such cases two days' notice is required.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Speaking for myself and with the authority of my right hon. leader, we would have no objection at all to the unanimous consent being given, but with one proviso—that is that the report, evidence and exhibits complete, should be laid on the table.

Mr. DONAGHY: That is the way I have drawn my motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion is:

Moved by Mr. Donaghy, seconded by Mr. Jenkins: That the interim report of Walter Duncan, dated December 10, 1925, and the report of Walter Duncan dated February 8, 1926, mentioned in the proceedings before the special committee investigating the Department of Customs and Excise, together with transcript of evidence referred to in the report of February 8, 1926, and all exhibits mentioned in said evidence, and all enclosures accompanying said report or referred to therein, be laid on the table of the House.

I have stated that two days' notice should be given, but if the motion is made by unanimous consent the motion may be put.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. GEORGE H. BOIVIN (Minister of Customs and Excise): I hope I may have the unanimous consent of the House to lay the documents on the table during the course of the afternoon, as soon as I can get them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understood the motion was to lay them on the table now.

Mr. BOIVIN: Just as soon as I can get them. I was unaware that this motion was to be made.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know how the motion to lay them on the table can be passed, unless they are laid on the table at once.

Mr. BOIVIN: They will be laid on the table in the next ten minutes.

CUSTOMS INQUIRY

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE AND AMENDMENTS THERETO

The House resumed from Thursday, June 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mercier (St. Henri) for concurrence in the report of the special committee appointed to investigate the Department of Customs and Excise, the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. Mr. Stevens, and the proposed amendment to the amendment of Mr. Woodsworth.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, we as members of parliament are now being called upon to adjudicate on what, I think I am safe in saying, is one of the greatest moral and political scandals that ever besmirched the fair name of Canada. The details of the doings of high officials are so disgustingly immoral that the committee through a sense of public decency refuse to allow them to be incorporated in the evidence at all.

Mr. DONAGHY: May I make a remark and ask a question here?

An hon. MEMBER: Keep quiet for once.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. DONAGHY: I take it I have the hon. member's consent.

Mr. SPEAKER: You may proceed, if you have the consent of the hon. member.

Mr. DONAGHY: When the report mentioned in the motion just agreed to is laid on the table it will be found that nothing is excluded from it, and everything is printed in the proceedings of the committee.

Mr. HOCKEN: Will the Duncan report appear in full in those proceedings?

Mr. DONAGHY: It will, and it appears in full in the report of proceedings which is now in the hands of hon. members.

Mr. CAHAN: And the evidence?

An hon. MEMBER: Produce the evidence.

Mr. CAMPBELL: We will have to defer our decision on that to some future occasion. The facts as far as I am aware are as I have stated. I do not propose to go into all the details of the case because they have been pretty well laid before the House by previous speakers. It suffices to say that the chief offender in all these disclosures would appear to be a former Minister of Customs, the Hon. Jacques Bureau. It would also appear that when the condition of affairs within the Customs department became revealed to the country, the government rewarded the Hon. Mr. Bureau for his services in debauching the department by appointing him to a senatorial position and placed in charge of the department a young and active minister in an effort to clean up that department.

I am not one of those who will readily condemn the present Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin). I have a good deal of sympathy for him. He inherited much of the present situation from the former chief of that department. The whole Customs department was debauched previously and perhaps it was too much to expect that the new Minister of Customs could set things right almost immediately. Therefore I say that I am prepared to be quite tolerant in my judgment of him. I shall be frank in saying that if there were no sins levelled at the government beyond that of the charge against the present Minister of Customs, I would be prepared to say to the minister, "Go and sin no more," and to vote confidence in this government.

But the facts would prove that there is a good deal of responsibility on all, or nearly all, the colleagues of the minister besides the responsibility that is placed upon himself. I am not prepared to make him the sacrificial goat for all the inherited sins of the party or the iniquities of that particular department. One of the things that I would hold against the minister—indeed I look upon it almost as his cardinal sin—is the fact that he would rise in his place in this House as a minister of the crown to defend the former Minister of Customs. If I was rather surprised at his action a few days ago, I was amazed when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) did the same thing yesterday. I think the least we might have expected was that these two hon. members should have dissociated themselves from the former Minister of Customs and been prepared to admit that a mistake was made in appointing him to the upper chamber.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend: if he will read my remarks in Hansard, as he may have heard them yesterday if he was listening, I made no defence of the former Minister of Customs whatever. I made an explanation with respect to the circumstances attendant upon his appointment and I asked that the former Minister of Customs be allowed to make his defence before a judicially constituted tribunal. I made no defence of him myself.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have no desire to enter into an argument with the Prime Minister about this because his remarks are a matter of public record and anyone can read them in Hansard. The principal responsibility which I would place upon the government is that of putting the former Minister of Customs in the upper chamber when, according to all the evidence, conditions in that department, the debauchery of that department by that minister, were a matter within the knowledge of most of those ministers.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): Would my hon. friend allow me a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I would prefer that my hon. friend should wait until I have finished.

On February 2 when the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) brought this matter to the attention of the House, he levelled a direct charge against the government. I am going to read the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre as found on page 681 of Hansard. This is what he said:

> What I am accusing the government of is this: that for a year the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Customs, the ex-Minister of Customs, the Acting Minister of Customs, the Minister of Marine, the present minister,—no, I will stop with the others—they knew that this condition existed. The Minister of Customs learned it when he entered office. The Solicitor General entered the government with a knowledge of these things.
> Mr. Lapointe: I deny that entirely.

Further on the Minister of Justice continued:

> Mr. Lapointe: If what my hon. friend says is true, and I do not think it is true, I deny entirely the knowledge of any such thing and I throw the charge back into his teeth.

The Solicitor General interjects:

> Mr. Cannon: If my hon. friend will allow me, following my leader, I do the same.

Further on the Minister of Justice again states:

> Mr. Lapointe: Even that I deny. Anything my hon. friend has said as to my knowledge I deny entirely.

Further on the Minister of National Defence as reported on page 713 makes the following statement:

> Mr. Macdonald (Antigonish-Guysborough): As a member of the government I want to say that I have not heard of the hon. gentleman's story.

On referring to the report of this committee, I find in the sworn testimony of Mr. Sparks he refers to a letter dated June 23, 1924, addressed to the Prime Minister and although it is rather long perhaps it is important enough for me to weary the House by reading it. It reads:

> Dear Sir,—Confirming the writer's conversation with your secretary, Mr. McGregor, we would respectfully ask the opportunity for a delegation representing this association to lay before the government certain matters in connection with the wholesale smuggling of various classes of goods into Canada.
>
> We think it would be desirable, should you grant this request, that the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Justice might be present, as the matters which we wish to lay before you affect these three departments.
>
> We believe the Minister of Finance would be interested in the statement of our opinion that the loss of revenue will exceed $10,000,000 per annum.
>
> As the prevention of smuggling comes under the Customs department, certain very important facts which we propose to put before the government in reference to the ineffectual methods now adopted by the Customs department will be of interest.
>
> We shall also call attention to the fact that conditions in the ports, particularly in Montreal, are such that smugglers are practically immune from punishment.
> The whole question of smuggling has become a national problem. It is seriously affecting business, and, as pointed out, causing a tremendous loss of revenue. This association for more than a year has studied this problem, and we would like to lay before your government a comprehensive statement covering the matter.

We would respectfully suggest that, if you are able to fix a date, it should be at least a week or ten days forward, as representatives from various parts of the country will require to be notified of the date set.

Trusting you will see your way clear to meet this delegation, and awaiting your early reply, we remain,

Yours respectfully,
Canadian Association of Garment Manufacturers, per (Signed) R. P. SPARKS,
President.

This is addressed to the Prime Minister under date of June 23, 1924. In the sworn evidence Mr. Sparks states that the deputation appeared before the government on the 6th August, 1924. When asked what ministers were present he answered as follows:

Right Hon. Mackenzie King, Hon. Jacques Bureau, Hon. Mr. Lapointe, Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Hon. Mr. Graham and Hon. Mr. King.

Yet, Sir, we find a number of these ministers denying absolutely on February 2 last that they had any knowledge of these conditions. To my mind that is amazing.

I am not going into many details but in my opinion the government had one opportunity to vindicate itself before the country, and I took occasion to point that out to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) privately. I even quoted an analogous instance in which the Scott government in Saskatchewan some years ago took action to clean up a corrupt state of affairs which was brought to their attention. A great deal of corruption had prevailed among members of their own party and among the civil servants, and the Saskatchewan government took steps to have the whole matter investigated. Did that government evade the issue? Did their members in the legislature stand up to a man and defend the malefactors? Not at all; the Premier said, "We want the fairest and fullest investigation, and we want everything that is wrong exposed."

Mr. MOTHERWELL: By a royal commission.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It does not make much difference what means they took. They got all the facts and punished every man who was found guilty. Among those who were punished were three members of the party supporting the government and they served terms in jail for their crime. The result was that the Scott government was vindicated before the people of Saskatchewan, and when the next election came around they were returned by a larger majority than before. I as a supporter of that government felt proud to be of the same party. Now I say that this government lost an opportunity of vindicating itself by not going on record as being prepared to face the situation fearlessly and courageously. As I have told the Prime Minister, had he taken that course, I would have been prepared to vote confidence in his government and would have been glad to see them still in the treasury benches. If the government had faced the situation as they ought to have done I would have felt that the ends of justice were being satisfied.

Now we are considering to-day an incomplete report; I say incomplete because it is a well known fact that the members of the Conservative party on the committee wanted to add an appendix to have certain recommendations embodied in the report, but the majority of the committee declined to accept that proposal. It is equally true that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy), representing the Progressive group on the committee, desired to have certain recommendations added to the report. His representations were also refused by the majority of the committee. For that reason I say that the report we have received in this House is incomplete.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre, in order to represent more properly the point of view of the whole committee, moved what I consider a very moderate amendment. If I were to find fault with the amendment I would say it erred on the side of moderation; and I think it expresses, if not in words at least in substance, just what the member for Peace River, the representative of the Progressive group on the committee, wanted to add as an appendix to the report. We in this section of the House have confidence in the hon. member for Peace River. We realize that having sat on the committee and heard all the evidence he is in a better position than any other member in this group to understand the situation, and so far as I am concerned this amendment, meeting as it does in substance, as nearly as we could get it, the actual recommendations of the hon. member for Peace River, our representative on that committee, I feel I can do nothing but support the amendment.

Mr. FORKE: So far as the hon. member for Peace River is concerned, I agree with every word the hon. gentleman has said.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. FORKE: But I want the hon. member who has the floor to speak for himself and not for the Progressive group.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I may frankly state that the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke) has never been able to speak for the Progressives and is not able to speak for them to-day.

Mr. FORKE: Will the hon. member allow me another word?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I speak with no authority for the Progressive group, but I say that this group has confidence in the hon. member for Peace River. Will the hon. member for Brandon deny that?

Mr. FORKE: No.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Will he say that we have no confidence in the hon. member for Peace River?

Mr. FORKE: I told you we have.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Then why rise to deny the statement I have made?

Mr. FORKE: I simply wanted to say that we did not want the hon. member to speak for the Progressive group; let him speak for himself.

Mr. CAMPBELL: So far as that goes I can speak for the Progressive group. Now I come to a consideration of the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). I am sorry indeed that the hon. member is not in his seat, because I want to make some personal references and I hesitate to do so when he is not here.

An hon. MEMBER: He is here.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I hope he will come in before I am through.

An hon. MEMBER: He is behind the curtain.

Mr. WILSON (Vaudreuil): I am not Woodsworth.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. CAMPBELL: Now there is only one useful purpose which can be served by the subamendment so far as I can see, and that is to whitewash the whole filthy proceedings and to prevent the members of this House from having an opportunity to vote on the original amendment, which in my opinion is the crux of the whole debate. If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre or those whom he represents want to evade the real issue why do they not stand up and vote directly against the original amendment? That, in my estimation, is the manly thing to do.

There are some things I find difficult to understand in regard to the action of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Just what does he want to do by this subamendment? Does he object to the recommendations of the committee that a number of civil servants who have come under a cloud in this affair should be dismissed? Does he object to that? Not at all. He does not object to that, because he adds another name to the recommendation for dismissal. He is satisfied that a number of civil servants should be dismissed from their positions; he is content to have them thrown to the wolves for their part in the corruption; but when it comes to members of parliament on both sides of the House what does he say? He proposes to delete from the amendment every single word in condemnation or censure of the actions of the government and proceeds to whitewash the whole thing. But that is not in accordance with what the hon. gentleman said in his speech. I could quite understand the motive of the hon. gentleman in moving this subamendment if he were prepared to vindicate the government, to wash them and leave them white as the driven snow. I could quite understand his action if he were prepared to do that. But the statements in his speech prove otherwise. At page 4922 of Hansard I find the following:

> Again we have brought before us the conduct of the former minister, Mr. Jacques Bureau, and let me say, as far as I am concerned, that the worst thing the present government has done in connection with the whole matter was to put that gentleman in the Senate.

I quite agree with the hon. member in that regard. And by the way, I am glad to see that he is here now. I am sorry to have discussed him while he was absent, but I will repeat some of what I said for his benefit.

> I cannot let this opportunity pass without protesting against the unequal justice that prevails in connection with our laws. Petty thieves, even young boys, are sometimes given months or years in gaol.

He goes on:

> What is the penalty for debauching a government—a senatorship!

Then referring to some other members of parliament, he said:

> But I think most of the members here would agree with me that action such as Mr. Robichaud took in writing a letter asking for leniency on the ground that a certain man who was convicted was useful to the party is absolutely inexcusable, and in the interest of establishing what I believe to be a higher standard of political morality in this country I think we are bound to say so.

Again I heartily agree with the hon. member. Then he makes some other references to Mr. Boivin, Mr. Duff and Mr. Boys. The original amendment does not condemn the government or these members in nearly as strong language as the hon. member does in his speech, and yet in the same breath he moves an amendment to the original amendment, the purpose of which is to delete every bit of that condemnatory or censuring language from the original amendment. Could anything be more inconsistent?

An hon. MEMBER: Nothing.

Mr. CAMPBELL: No hon. member in this House has talked humanitarianism more than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth); no one has protested more vehemently in this House and out of it against social injustice than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre; no one that I know of in the Dominion of Canada has protested so vigorously as has the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre against discrimination in the enforcement of our laws—and again I say I honour him for it. But what does he propose to do in this amendment? He concurs in the dismissal of all those civil servants who have been guilty of minor crimes, but he applies the whitewash brush to all the officials higher up who were guilty of the major crimes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does the hon. member characterize the statements which he has just read from my speech as whitewash?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. I was pointing out the inconsistency of the hon. gentleman in condemning these men in his speech and yet moving to delete from the main amendment every single word of censure on the same men.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask the hon. gentleman—and I do so because I know him very intimately—if he would mind discussing the points that I was trying to urge in that speech.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am speaking with the hon. member's permission.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There was the twofold consideration: on the one hand that it was impossible to conduct a judicial inquiry in a body of this character, and on the other hand that in discussing this case—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

An hon. MEMBER: It is another speech.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —we could not very well disregard other factors.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Speaker, I was just coming to that when the hon. gentleman interrupted. I quite agree with him as to the necessity for a judicial inquiry, and I may remind him that the right hon. leader of the opposition intimated to him that he was quite prepared to have that incorporated in the main amendment, but the hon. gentleman sat quietly in his seat and refused, by silence at least, to consent to that, thereby leaving his sincerity open to question. There is just one thing I will give him credit for—he was quite frank in saying that he justified his amendment on the ground of political expediency. No one, Sir, in the Dominion of Canada has condemned the old party system more severely than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. With most of what he has said from time to time on that subject I agree, because to a large extent I belong to the same school of thought, and that is one thing that makes it particularly painful for me to disagree with him at this time; but to-day he is prepared to whitewash one of the worst scandals in the whole history of Canada on the ground of political expediency.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If my hon. friend will permit me? I know he wants to be perfectly fair. I think he will admit that that phrase is his, not mine. I did not say I was justifying my amendment on the ground of political expediency.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Perhaps I misunderstood the hon. gentleman. Let me quote his remarks at page 4921 of Hansard:

> So let us be frank and say that in a case of this character it is extermely difficult for the most honest and honourable men—and I take it that despite some cheap sneers hurled across the floor the large majority of this House are honest and honourable men—I say it is very difficult in such a case for us not to be biased by partisan considerations.

I do not wish to quote further, for it seems to me it is quite obvious from that passage—and I appreciate his point—that he is justifying his action on the ground of political expediency, and the necessity, as he said, of keeping this government in power.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think the hon. gentleman will have to read a great deal more of my speech before he will find those words.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman delivered a rather lengthy speech two days ago and I do not want to read it all. It is of public record, and anyone can convince himself of the fairness of my characterization by reading the speech. But I wonder what some of those poor, distressed working people, for whom he has been pleading so earnestly and so tearfully, in this House for the last five years, will think when he justifies the dismissal from their position of civil servants because of the mud thrown up by someone bigger falling on them, and at the same time applies the whitewash brush to the real criminals higher up.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend permit me a question? Does he describe the Minister of Customs as one of the "real criminals higher up"? Is that what he means? Let the House understand what is intended by "the real criminals higher up."

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think I made myself quite plain at the outset. I have no intention of being drawn into any further argument with the Minister of Railways.

Mr. DUNNING: Will he justify—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DUNNING: Is he man enough to justify the term?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order. Sit down.

Mr. DUNNING: I ask him as a man, will he—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DUNNING: Will the right hon. leader of the opposition—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. DUNNING: I have the floor.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order. Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The Chair will deal with any point of order. No hon. member can interrupt the hon. gentleman who has the floor without the latter's permission.

Mr. DUNNING: I had the hon. gentleman's permission, Mr. Speaker. I asked him to justify the application of the term, "criminal" to the Minister of Customs.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The hon. Minister of Railways must be possessed of some supernatural power if he is able to read into my remarks some direct reference to the Minister of Customs. I find that on this side of the House we are not alone in our opinion on some of these things. I find the hon. member for North Vancouver made a very direct reference to one of them when, speaking from the Liberal benches and pleading for that application of the rule and for a vote of confidence in the government, he said:

> Nobody with any sense of public honour would attempt to justify the expressions used by Mr. Robichaud in that letter and I am not going to attempt to justify them. My self-respect will not permit it. The sting, I say, is in that letter and it is contained in these words in the letter which Robichaud wrote to Mr. Bureau, not to Mr. Boivin:
> Mr. Aziz is of the highest help for us during this campaign, and we cannot do without his services.

And so on. It appears to me that when we have remarks of that kind from the Liberal benches, there is at least some justification for strong language from other parts of the House.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. gentleman kindly tell us who are the "criminals higher up"?

An hon. MEMBER: Go and read the evidence.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The hon. member knows as much about the evidence as I do.

Several hon. members have referred to this House as a jury. In a sense that may be true, but if I were to go into details I would describe the situation a little differently; I would place the government in the position of defendant, the official opposition in the position of plaintiff, and I would place the jury seats in this corner of the House. After all, we have to face the facts and there they are; there can be no question about that, and even in a larger sense I am not so sure that it is not so. Our party system is based on the principle of competition. We have two major parties competing for the spoils of office; we have a party in power fighting to retain office and a party out of power fighting to get into office. The group in this corner of the House was brought into being through a desire on the part of hundreds of thousands of the electors of Canada for something which would modify that situation, something which would make a definite change there. They believe a system could be worked out on the co-operative principle; they believe a system could be worked out whereby all the parties in the House could co-operate in forming a government and giving to this country the best brain and brawn of all parties. That, I say, was the ideal in the minds of hundreds of thousands of electors, the evidence of which we find in this corner of the House. This group is not looking for power; we never expected to be in power and probably never will be. But I say that in this position we should at any rate be able to judge without partisan consideration, and that is what the people of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific are going to expect of us at this time.

I object to the expression, "voting with the Conservatives" or "voting with the Liberals." That is the way the press have dubbed it, but I think we have tried to vote on the issues at stake regardless of where the chips fall, and in this case I think we should do the same. I think the voting public of Canada are not going to deal very harshly with the government; I think the people understand the party system of government and they will expect the government to hold on to office and probably try to whitewash themselves if they can, while they will expect the official opposition to try to get on the treasury benches.

Mr. CANNON: Will my hon. friend allow me a question? The hon. gentleman says that we would attempt to whitewash ourselves. Can he say that I am guilty of anything more than he is? I would like him to state that like a man.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am not a minister of the crown; I am only a private member, but as a private member I have certain responsibilities, and I am prepared to face them. If there is anything wrong that I have done I am quite prepared to admit it, if my hon. friend can prove to me that I have been wrong.

Now I want to point out again that the voting public of Canada will not after all expect very much else from the Conservatives or the Liberals than a struggle for the spoils of office. Perhaps I am not fair in saying that, but I think generally speaking the voting public will look at it in that way. But the voting public will expect something different from the group in this corner of the House. Unless the third party stands for something different from the two old parties; unless that party stands clearly for something different, I do not see much justification for the necessity of putting the people of Canada to all the expense of organizing and maintaining this party, because it does mean a good deal of expense to our electors. When this matter is brought before the final court of appeal, the people of Canada, the credit or discredit, whichever it may be, will fall on the members in this corner of the House.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Has not that system existed for a great many years, to turn one group out and put another group in? Might it not be worked out in a different way?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I do not quite see the hon. gentleman's point. I was pointing out that very fact.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite so—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am quite sure the hon. gentleman is willing to allow a question. We have been discussing the question of affairs of political organization which he undertook to bring forward in his address to-day. I was just going to ask him—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —with his permission, whether the practice in matters of this kind had not been from time immemorial to simply turn one group out and put the other in, and whether or not a third party might not devise another means of treating such a question as this and insist upon it being considered on its merits.

Mr. CAMPBELL: That is precisely what I was trying to point out; I thought the hon. gentleman understood me. The responsibility is on the third party, and the country has a right to expect something a little different at this time from those who do not agree that the old party system is entirely the proper one.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): Might I ask a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): When I was speaking the other day the hon. member asked me several questions which I was pleased to answer. I am sure he will now allow me to put a question, and will give me an answer. The hon. member has brought out the point, or has tried to make out that the Prime Minister—

An hon. MEMBER: Put your question.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): If you want me to put the question, let me put it, otherwise I will sit down. The hon. member charges the Prime Minister with defending the Hon. Jacques Bureau. Might I be permitted to read an extract from his speech—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): —and ask my hon. friend if that is a defence?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER: This is out of order.

Mr. R. S. WHITE (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I cannot hope to entertain the House for long, but I trust I may be permitted to make a few observations. I do not intend to enter into the whole question, but having some knowledge of the Customs department, having been connected with it for twenty-one years in the city of Montreal, I think I speak with some authority.

The first observation I would make is that the action of the hon. member for Vancouver

Centre (Mr. Stevens) in moving for the appointment of this committee has been justified by results. There can be no question, and there is no doubt throughout this country, but that a public service has been rendered by the hon. member who was instrumental in securing the appointment of that committee. Sometimes we hear mention made of the cost of the investigation. I venture to say, without knowledge but with strong presumption, that the cost of the investigation has already been recovered to the treasury by additional revenue through the lessening of smuggling.

I would like to address the House for a moment on some of the recommendations of the committee. One of the recommendations urges a reduction in the number of ports. I tell hon. gentlemen of this House, and I speak with some experience, that that is impossible. All that the government can do is to refrain from opening more ports. Let any hon. member who has a port in his constituency ask himself if he is going to urge that that port be closed up. If he did, and the port was closed, he would at least lose political strength, as well as probably inconveniencing the commercial community it served. If we were starting all over again, we might follow the procedure of the United States and have only frontier ports; that is all they have, and I think it is a wise and proper system.

Secondly, it is recommended that there be a uniform appraisal of goods for duty purposes, ad valorem. That is a very old story. The ideal system is the specific duty; but with the ad valorem system it is entirely different. I can recall very well that a quarter of a century ago the Board of Trade of Montreal passed a resolution in favour of the appointment of a Dominion board of appraisers who were to go from port to port and see that there was a uniform appraisal of goods for duty purposes. I would say to the Minister of Customs that he should think very carefully over that question of the appointment of a board of appraisers for the Dominion. It would at least help the commercial community of Canada, and possibly help to swell the revenue.

One other word and I am done. In my opinion the report of the committee, unanimous though it was, was unfair to at least two people, and possibly to more. I refer to the present collector of the port of Montreal, Mr. Weldon, and his surveyor Mr. McLaughlin. The minister was good enough to put on record in Hansard a letter that he received from Mr. McLaughlin protesting his innocence. Sir, I believe in his innocence, but I believe equally in the innocence of the collector, Mr. Weldon, and I want to express here publicly my confidence in the integrity of both these gentlemen. Mr. McLaughlin has had forty years' service, and there is no one in the whole of Canada with a more profound knowledge of customs than Mr. Henry McLaughlin. Mr. Weldon is a comparative newcomer, but he has made a reputation for himself, and I say that it is unfair to besmirch a reputation that has been acquired during forty years of more or less public service in the city of Montreal. When, after the session, the Minister of Customs comes calmly and quietly to determine what course he is going to take in carrying out the recommendations of the committee, I would ask him—not to have mercy, because mercy implies guilt—but to see that justice is done to Mr. Weldon and to Mr. McLaughlin, and I will include also Mr. Wilson, chief preventive officer, whom I know well, who has for many years performed faithful service, whose character cannot be disparaged and whose experience is an asset to the department.

Mr. T. W. BIRD (Nelson): Mr. Speaker, before I commence my remarks upon the subject before the House I want to bring to the attention of the House a matter which I attempted to bring up by way of privilege yesterday. It is in connection with a letter that I have received, casting certain aspersions upon myself, and I want to say that I am not reading this letter in order to make any capital out of it, but simply in order that I might, if possible, make the ears of the perpetrator tingle, because I think they richly deserve it.

It is written on House of Commons notepaper, and posted in the House of Commons post office. I shall not read it all, because it is too infinitely childish to impose upon the House, but the first sentence, which is the offensive one, reads:

> If you continue to allow yourself—

I want to remind the House that I have a certain sense of humour:

> —to be bought and sold much longer, the hope for your entry into heaven is small.

I do not take any exception to the doubts cast on my right to enter Elysium, because I have often had great doubts about it myself, but this is an attack upon one's reputation under the cover of anonymity, and I want to submit, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman who wrote this, and forgot to sign his name is, to use mild language, a contemptible and despicable coward, and if he has a fibre of manhood in his composition he will give me an early opportunity to say so to his face.

With respect to the subject matter under debate, I rise with a good deal of diffidence. I listened to the appeal made by the right hon. leader of the opposition especially towards the close of his speech, and such an appeal is difficult for all serious-thinking persons to lightly withstand, and all the more so, so far as I am concerned, because I have the highest respect for the opinions of that right hon. gentleman. During the five years I have been in this House I have developed an admiration for the abilities and the personality of the right hon. leader of the opposition which I am afraid on some occasions I have only imperfectly been able to conceal. It is with much regret that I have to differ from him and from his conclusions.

3 p.m.

I want to keep out of my address all expressions of a provocative kind, if I can help it, but listening to this debate I have been reminded of a speech, I think from Cicero, which says, "How hard it is to be virtuous, and how difficult it is even to pretend to be virtuous." As I have thought of the government I have thought with Cicero, how hard it is for politicians to be virtuous. As I have thought of the strictures of our friends to my right I have thought with Cicero, how hard it is for politicians even to pretend to be virtuous.

I intend to vote for the subamendment, not because I want to camouflage my underlying intention at all. The right hon. leader of the opposition said it was a bridge over which timid Progressives might pass into an attitude of support toward the government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend has unintentionally misstated what I said. I did not use the word "Progressive"; I said timid members.

Mr. BIRD: I did not think there was any other kind of members in the House thinking of crossing a bridge. I think the right hon. gentleman is a little unfair to the member from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). Perhaps he was partly justified in his statement because the member for Winnipeg North Centre possibly made somewhat of an irrelevant attack upon the right hon. member, but I want to refer more particularly to the remarks of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell). I was somewhat surprised to hear him interlard his speech so much with the word "whitewash", and especially with regard to my hon. friend for Winnipeg North Centre. I think that kind of charge is extremely double edged. The hon. member should be very particular how he treats the motives of other people. Of course there is an obvious retort to that, and one that I would be disinclined to make use of, but the people of the country might be asking what brand of wash is he going to use when he is called upon to support our friends to my right.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I was not questioning the motive of my hon. friend at all, I was dealing with the effect of the amendment.

Mr. BIRD: I must say the hon. member has a very ungraceful way of dealing with the question before the House, when he refers to the action of another hon. member as whitewashing the government. I think it is all very well for the hon. member to take that attitude in defending himself by putting other people in the wrong. Some of us have been quite willing to concede to the hon. member the highest motives in the attitude he is taking, and I think the hon. member ought to be willing to concede to others similar motives. Two or three persons yesterday suggested to me that the decision before the House was one that was very simple. They could not understand why we Progressives had been worrying day and night in order to come to a decision upon this point that was so manifestly clear. I, Mr. Speaker, have been a student of moral questions for a good many years, and it is the first time I have ever been told that questions involving human decision of importance were matters of simplicity. It may be on some outstanding occasions in our experience the line between right and wrong is so clearly defined that even fools might not err in their decision; but a question of this kind is fraught with all kinds of questions bearing in upon it, questions of public enlightenment, the thought of what the public will think, the thought of the capability of the public of forming an opinion upon our action, the question of expediency versus principle, the line where the two meet or where they seem to clash. These things make it impossible for any person who understands the situation, as they do, to say it is a simple question which we are called upon to decide. I may say that I do not think there is one Progressive no matter on which side he is going to cast his vote, who would say that it is a simple question to decide. I think every individual in the group has realized that he has been called upon to decide upon a question the difficulty of which has no precedent in the experience of the last five years.

While I support the amendment, and thus by implication support the government, I do not want to mislead anyone in that respect. I desire to say that in taking this action I am not for one moment condoning any one of those things which have been laid at the door of the members of the government.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, yes, you are.

Mr. BIRD: Here is another hon. member who takes the simple view of morals, one of these minds of pristine simplicity that looks out upon a great complex world and sees nothing but black and white, no fine gradations at all, no shading, but simply glaring black and white. I am sorry I am not in that enviable position of the right hon. member. But I want to say that I am not condoning this action on the floor of this House and I will not condone it on the platforms of my constituency. What are these charges that are laid at the door of the government which are inexcusable and admittedly damning? In the first place we have a minister of the crown in one of the highest positions of the land demeaning himself to use his high position for purposes which no right-thinking man could possibly palliate, and the irony of the situation is this, that the hon. member is now hanging on the horns of the altar in the sanctuary beyond, where public opinion cannot touch him, where the avengers of blood cry out in vain. I do not mind much about the avengers of blood, but I do about public opinion. It is an ironical thing that here we have a member of our community who has debased his high office, who has brought shame upon the government of this country, and yet to-day he is in a place which is immune from public opinion. I do not think that position can be condoned or palliated for one moment.

As to my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin) I would agree with many of the expressions of opinion that have been given that the faults and the mistakes of my hon. friend were of such a character as not to be an adequate foundation of a motion for general censure upon the government, I want to say that I am second to none in my admiration of his great ability. I believe in my heart that he is a man of soundness of character. What did he do? He showed a regrettable disposition to fall into the rut that his predecessor travelled in, that his predecessor had travelled in and that his predecessor had travelled in. In public life we need to treat the reputations and characters of other hon. members tenderly, considerately and carefully. But there is such a motto as "noblesse oblige" and "To whom much is given, of him shall much be required."

I am optimistic enough to believe that the hon. gentleman has realized the full import of the mistake he made in not fully meeting the demands of an arising public opinion in this country. The obligation rests upon every hon. member not supinely to follow in the traditional ruts of laxity that have prevailed in our parliamentary system, but to rise up and if possible to strike out new courses of probity, to set new standards of rectitude in our public life. His alacrity in rising under the sting of the whip of public opinion is somewhat praiseworthy. There was no disposition to dally and hedge, but rather an earnestness to start out afresh. I am optimistic in saying so but I believe what I am saying. I believe the hon. gentleman has long ago made up his mind that in regard to the administration of public departments, not only of his own, but of others, new standards are long overdue.

What about the government? What about the Prime Minister and his attitude towards these matters? What about his attitude towards his delinquent minister? It is a very difficult thing, on the evidence that we have, to characterize just what his attitude was. According to his speech, which I am prepared to accept as I would the speech of any other hon. gentleman, the conclusion we come to is this: that he was more or less conscious of an undesirable state of things in that department which was presided over by a man whom we all knew, one of his own friends, a man of long standing in this House, and that his disposition was not to stay proceedings in the process of cleaning up, but rather if possible to let down his colleague as lightly as possible.

We are not living in the old patrician days of Rome when stoic doctrines ruled the minds of senators and sometimes of people, when a Roman patrician would order his son to death because in some thoughtless and rash way he had tampered with the peace of society. We have wandered a long way from those days of stoic sternness when they were willing to sacrifice their own flesh and blood for the sake of principle. I am afraid we are living in very Christian days when we are all willing enough to forgive ourselves—and to exact the last pound of flesh from the other man. But is that Christian? I know it would be a good thing if we had some of the iron of the old stoic morality in our blood; but we do not want to go back to stoic days when that unnatural condition prevailed that a man would sacrifice his friend in cold blood. We have too far advanced into the Christian era to want to do that. There is a higher standard set for men and women of to-day; that is, that in respect of things connected with one's personal conduct there shall be stoical sternness and in regard to the conduct of all others there shall be Christian consideration. If I am going to be condemned for any expressions of leniency as to the conduct of any hon. member, I am prepared to be condemned; but if I pass from public life with a stain on my own conscience that in any respect I have fallen short of my personal duty here, that is the thing that will follow me to my grave and not the other.

I said that I was not going to condone this kind of conduct. What does this arise out of? It may have arisen out of the humanity of these men. It may have arisen out of the fact that they are very much like ourselves; that is there was a readiness to respond to the solicitude of a fellow member; that there was a tendency to hide, to shield and to protect a friend. There may have been that; but added to it was this effete, exploded idea of cabinet solidarity that we as a Progressive party came here to protest against, an idea of solidarity which encourages a weak member of the cabinet, that man who is morally weak to say: I will take the plunge because I am a member of a clique with a traditional esprit de corps; nothing serious can happen to me; they will all defend me, stand by me to the last extremity. Can hon. members see the mischief of it? Look at the influence upon the other members of the cabinet who are compelled, almost by the rules of the game, to condone, to glaze over, to veneer absolute corruption in the administration of individual members of the government.

I want to say a little about the defence that has been made. There are always two sides to a question. First of all, I want to give certain weight to points that have been made on the other side, but certainly not the weight that I have heard given to them by some members on the other side. In the first place it is maintained that the system was effete, out of date; that it was brought face to face with new circumstances of an overwhelming character and that in an attempt to meet them it went to pieces. That is one of the points in the defence, but I do not attach much weight to that from my standpoint as a Progressive member. What business have governmental systems to become effete? What are ministers bound to do but to keep them in condition? I cannot attach any great weight to that, but it applies equally to one government as to another. Through all these years the people have been led to think that by voting one way or the other they would eventually get a perfect system of government administration. What have we after all these years? We have a system that we are almost ashamed to describe lest it should get abroad and we should become a laughing stock to other countries.

Another argument which has been made—and this is a more serious question for discussion—is that the attitude of members in general has been such as to make it difficult for ministers to carry out their duties with rectitude. That is contained in the amendment. There is a sort of moral haziness existing in the rank and file. After all the black and white distinctions do not prevail amongst private members so much as private members imagine they do. There is a kind of blurring, a kind of uncertainty, about the moral standards that ought to apply to individual members, with the result that individual members go hat in hand to ministers of departments and ask those ministers to do things which they have no right to do.

The cabinet after all very much reflects the House and the House reflects public opinion back home. The public have been listening to this debate for the last two or three days and I am afraid they have been listening to it with an air of mere curiosity. But they are as much concerned in it as the members sitting on the floor of this House. Every man, every woman in the gallery this afternoon, everybody back home is concerned about this. They too have elementary conceptions of what is right in the life of a public man, and they too have made upon us demands which should never be made by the people upon their representatives if they wanted to keep their representatives clean and straight.

I come now to the most serious argument of all and that is that the other group are just as bad. That is not an argument at all. It is good English common sense that two blacks do not make a white and the people of Canada will so decide. It is not the morality of this or that party that I am concerned about this afternoon; it is the fundamental rottenness that has grown up from the very system that underlies them. You know the parable of the unclean spirit that went out of a man, wandered through dry places seeking rest and finding none, came back to his house and found it empty, swept and garnished, then went away and brought back seven other devils worse than himself and entered in and the last state of the man was worse than the first.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BIRD: Hon. gentlemen opposite are applauding me, thinking I am getting one in on my friends to the right. That is not at all the point I am making, because hon. members will observe that it was the same devil—the same devil reinforced. The same devil, not another devil, went out and brought in seven other devils worse than himself.

Mr. BURY: Does the hon. gentleman not recognize that the seven devils came into the so-called purged party?

Mr. BIRD: No, I do not.

Mr. BURY: That is what it is.

Mr. BIRD: I am not so highfalutin as to think I came into paradise when I became a member of the Progressive party. At the beginning of this session our sympathizing friends came to us and said: "You are between the devil and the deep sea." I replied, "No, that is not right. We are between two devils, two deep seas." In saying this, I am not casting any reflections upon the personnel of the parties at all—I never have.

An hon. MEMBER: Yes you have.

Mr. BIRD: My hon. friend apparently has the elementary ethics of the stone age. He has not yet risen to that plane of intelligence where mankind can draw a more or less fine distinction between one course and another. My hon. friend from Mackenzie gave the House some idea, according to his own light, why the Progressive party came into existence. I am sorry to say I think the hon. member has not grasped the reason why we came into existence, or the spirit in which we began this session. My hon. friend talks of co-operation. All that he knows about co-operation is to try to reap its benefits without accepting its responsibilities. There has been a lot of talk about expediency, and about the morality of expediency. What about the expediency of morality? What about the spirit of Pecksniff, which says: Let us be moral, let us contemplate the universe. You cannot be moral by saying so. You cannot be moral for political purposes. It has been said that some people's morality is in the piece, and has not yet been made up into a garment. We do not want piecemeal morality. We want a morality that goes down to the very depths of a man's personality and affects his outlook on life, not now while the government is in danger but all the time.

In dealing with the attitude of my hon. friend from Mackenzie, let me state what my conception is of why the Progressive party came into existence, and of the ideal that it has been trying to maintain ever since; and I guarantee that nine out of every ten Progressives will accept my conception. I go back to the last election. Up to then I myself had an inveterate repugnance to co-operating with any party in this House, and I think most of my colleagues had. I think it was the results of the election that caused a change in our ultra-idealism. Back home I fought a straight fight with a Conservative —so-called. Now it might be thought that therefore I was supported by the Liberals, but I tell the House that for two elections now I have fought my constituency and snapped my fingers at both Liberals and Conservatives. At the last election I was urged, not only by Liberals but by some of my own friends, to approach the Liberals, to be a little more agreeable to them. But without hesitation I refused to do so, and my course has been justified by what is happening now.

Mr. MULLINS: Was T. A. Burrows responsible for the hon. gentleman's candidature in Nelson? He is the outstanding Liberal there?

Mr. BIRD: The hon. gentleman is trying to make a joke.

Mr. MULLINS: No, I am asking a question.

Mr. BIRD: Mr. T. A. Burrows had no more to do with my nomination than the hon. gentleman for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) had. Mr. Burrows may have supported me, but I have never acknowledged any support I may have got from him.

An hon. MEMBER: Very ungrateful.

Mr. BIRD: I am not ungrateful at all; but I tell the hon. gentleman that if I had acknowledged such support and governed my course accordingly, he would have been the first to cry me down for it, he would have said, "Here is a man with strings on him." I do not say it boastfully, because I think every Conservative in my riding would agree in my declaration—I have no strings on me whatever, except my own Progressive organization, which is an organization of farmers and business men in my riding. And I want to say now that that is the attitude I am going to maintain.

When we found the position was such that though few in numbers we had yet the balance of power, we were astonished at our own importance. It is something difficult for ordinary human nature to withstand, to think that twenty-five of us held the balance of power. Personally I was never very much carried away with the idea, and I have since learned that I was right. It is not a desirable position to be in. But what happened? My executive met after the election to discuss the situation. Members of that executive wanted me to enter into an agreement with one or other of the parties. This was repugnant to my notions at that time and I refused pointblank. I hope the House will pardon me for giving this history, because I think it illustrates the experience of many of us. I consulted several prominent individuals in western Canada and in eastern Canada, concerning the course that it was desirable for me to take, and for the party to take. I came down here and met fellow-members of my party, and ultimately I could see that it meant co-operation with one or other of the old parties or else a course of futility, that is, another election and perhaps still another election. So at the beginning of the session I undertook with my colleagues to support the Liberal party. Why?

An hon. MEMBER: Old ties.

Mr. BIRD: Not at all. It is on record that in the last election I criticized the Liberal party throughout my riding just as I did the party to my right, and on the same basis—out of my firmly established belief that the system that we have at the present moment can be productive of no good for the democracy of this country.

Mr. LUCAS: Would the hon. member have continued supporting that party if they had failed to live up to their promise respecting the Hudson Bay railway?

Mr. BIRD: The hon. gentleman has asked me a very pertinent question. I certainly would not have supported them if they had failed to live up to their agreement.

Mr. LUCAS: May I ask another question? Would you put in that class a member from another province who would not support the government because of their failure to give Alberta its natural resources?

Mr. BIRD: I am not attributing any blame to the hon. gentleman, and he knows it. He knows that I have as much respect for him as I have for any other member, and I have no reflection to make upon the course that either he or any other member has taken. I want to say this, in regard to the natural resources of Alberta as in the case of any other item of the agreement of co-operation which we had with this government: I would certainly have used my influence to turn the government out if they had ever considered going back upon their promises. I take the same attitude in regard to rural credits, the same attitude in regard to the Hudson Bay railway, the same attitude in regard to the amendments to the Grain Act, in spite of the fact that I have had communications from many people expressing doubt with respect to some of these questions. Hon. gentlemen ought to give those who entertain a different opinion the same credit for sincerity of purpose which I am prepared to accord to them. We decided as a group to support a government that we had denounced during the elections, a government that we had no more confidence in then than we have now. How is that procedure to be characterized? Was that acting from highfalutin motives? I think it was acting straightly and unabashedly from motives of political expediency; and we did it with our eyes open.

An hon. MEMBER: That is right.

Mr. BIRD: It is right; and it was just tou h and go that we did not make the same arr ngement with our friends to the right.

An hon. MEMBER: You are lucky, though that you did not.

Mr. LENNOX: You would have lost your four thousand dollars.

Mr. BIRD: No, we would not have lost it because hon. gentlemen on the floor of this House promised us they would not go to the country for two years. Two years ago our group acted from motives of expediency, and no individual more so than the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell), because expediency is stamped all over the epidermis of that gentleman. Yes, we acted from motives of expediency, and I am here to-day to defend expediency, an expediency that is open and aboveboard. We Progressives came down here to represent ourselves. We are not interested in the garbage cans of the old political parties; we are not going to waste our time nosing round their records—we are only too glad to forget that. I think I have never in all my political history laid a finger on the reputation of any old party individual although I might have done so. What is to be gained by it? It just deflects us from the ends that we have set before ourselves; and those aims are designed as exactly as we can frame them, to represent the rights and the opinions of the people who sent us here. Yes, I say it was expediency; and this is not an opportune time to reproach any of us with trifling with moral issues. Some hon. gentlemen are like one of Steele's characters, one of those ladies of exceedingly high style and dubious morality who adorned the society of the eighteenth century, and of whom that author said, "They are outrageously virtuous." It seems to me, although I hope I am mistaken, that there has been a lot of outrageous virtue expressed in this debate, irrelevant virtue. We are all driven by necessity or expediency, and the only question is whether that expediency is of a right kind. Is it actuated by personal motives or by motives of the highest public utility? I claim that my expediency in choosing the Liberals against the Conservatives at the beginning of this session had no personal animus at all. I considered it—and I am fallible—as expediency in relation to what I deemed to be the good of the public of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BIRD: If the hon. gentleman will look me in the eye and repeat that remark I will answer him

Mr. GOTT: I said oh, oh.

Mr. BIRD: That is about all the hon. gentleman ever says. I wonder if the hon. member for South Essex ever thinks of the crudity of his conduct in this House. He sits there—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GOTT: It will compare very favourably with yours.

Mr. BIRD: The hon. gentleman sits there all the time making inarticulate remarks concerning other members when they are on their feet. He should be reminded as a new member of the conduct which is expected from a member of this House towards his fellow members.

I was proceeding to say, Mr. Speaker, that my attitude in deciding to support the Liberals at the beginning of the session was purely one of expediency, and I am not ashamed of it. For a good many years, nay, for a generation or two, the parties of this country have periodically gone before the people and asked their support because the other party was corrupt; that is all. They have fooled the people for all these years into supporting one party or the other because one of the two was not fit to maintain office. As a Progressive five years ago I admonished my people that that sort of thing must cease, and that is what brought the Progressive party into being. The people were no longer prepared to be interested in these nauseous muckrakings of the old parties, because they had been fooled for so long.

What are we doing to-day? It seems to me we are doing the very thing which we condemn in our people; we are in danger of being stampeded by one of these old parties attacking the morality of the other party. That is all, as I see it. My address to-day concerns no individual; I have learned to respect the leading men on both sides of this House since I have been here. My personal opinion is that very few countries of the world have leading political lights shining quite so brightly as those in our Canadian House of Commons.

Hon. GEORGE H. BOIVIN (Minister of Customs and Excise): With the unanimous consent of the House which was given a short time ago I would like to lay upon the table the interim report made by Inspector Walter Duncan on December 10, 1925; the official report made by the same gentleman on February 8, 1926; the file containing the enclosures mentioned in the official report; the evidence taken in the investigation held by Inspector Walter Duncan from December 1, 1925 to February 1, 1926 at Montreal, and the exhibits A to Z referred to in the said evidence.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I only desire to take a very small portion of the time of the House in speaking to the amendment to the amendment. We have been told, Sir, that this is the high court of parliament, and we are on this occasion assembled as a court to pass judgment upon one of our members. So for a few moments I want to examine the nature of this court.

This is a court, Sir, unlike any other; considerations affect our actions which affect the actions of no other court in the world other than a similar parliamentary court. My hon. friends opposite will not deny that their judgment as to the innocence or guilt of the Minister of Customs is influenced by their desire to turn this government out of office. They know they are not sitting here as unbiased judges of the conduct of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin); the very nature of the amendment is proof of that, because it is carefully worded to involve not only the Minister of Customs but the fate of the government as well.

A high court! Will someone tell me, Mr. Speaker, what the fate of the amendment to the Grain Act now before the Senate has to do with the guilt or innocence of the Minister of Customs? Will anyone say that action or lack of action in the other chamber is not being used at the present time as an argument to influence the votes of members of this chamber as to whether the Minister of Customs is innocent or guilty? I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is high time consideration should be given to the independence of members of this chamber from coercion from whatever source.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker, the minister owes it to the House to state more specifically what he means. If he means that any coercion has been exercised from this side of the House in respect of any bill before the other chamber I give it an explicit and firm denial.

Mr. DUNNING: I will advance the reasons for my language. Is it not well known to every member of the House that by parliamentary devices, under the rules, it is possible to adjourn consideration of a particular matter; and is it not well known to every member of the House that the Conservative majority in the other chamber has adjourned consideration of a particular matter for a very considerable time?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. DUNNING: I am willing to be interrupted on a point of order, but not otherwise.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am speaking to a point of order. It is inconceivable that any member of this House should deem it his right to refer to the conduct of the upper house or of any committee of the upper house, especially when that house is sitting. It is still more inconceivable that a member of the government should do so and should be allowed to proceed.

Mr. DUNNING: I referred not to the upper house as such, not to any committee of the upper house as such, but to the Conservative majority in that upper house, a Conservative majority which no more than one year ago was asked by my right hon. friend to co-operate more fully with the party in this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker, I take the first point of order and ask for a decision.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think we are going to be overawed by noise.

Mr. SPEAKER: Under rule 19:

> No member shall speak disrespectfully of His Majesty, nor of any of the Royal Family; nor of the governor or person administering the government of Canada; nor use offensive words against either House, or against any member thereof; nor speak beside the question in debate. No member may reflect upon any vote of the House, except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.

I call the hon. gentleman's attention to those words:

> —nor use offensive words against either House, or against any member thereof; nor speak beside the question in debate.

Bourinot, at page 357, states that it is the well known practice that no reference shall be made in this House to what takes place in the other House. I take it that the point of order is well taken. If one refers to the debates of the other House or characterizes the actions of any member or group of members of that House, he is infringing the rule.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Speaker, I shall, of course, be happy to obey your ruling. I may be permitted however to ask this question—

Mr. MEIGHEN: The only obedience to the rule is to withdraw the remarks objected to.

Mr. SPEAKER: There were no offensive words used, but the references of the hon. gentleman to the debates or action that was taken in the Senate were against the rule, and I have ruled them out of order.

Mr. CANNON: If I may be allowed, Mr. Speaker, for the future guidance of the members, is it not a fact that the rule should be interpreted as follows: That members should not refer to anything which has taken place or is taking place in another place, the Senate, during that session, so that we shall not interfere with the proceedings in the other House. But surely we can make a reference to what has taken place there in a former session.

Mr. SPEAKER: I gathered from the remarks made by the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) that he was referring to the action of the Senate or a group of senators during the present session. It is better to live up to the rule I have just cited.

Mr. DUNNING: I shall do my utmost to do so, Mr. Speaker. I think, however, it is within the rules for me to ask if it is right and in accordance with the independence of this parliament for action in another place to have a bearing upon the votes of hon. members of this House as to the innocence or guilt of the Minister of Customs. Surely that is in order, Sir, and I may add to it the well known fact that Conservative senators and Conservative members of the House of Commons meet in caucus together to concert their plans.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I cannot express my amazement at the conduct of the minister. I want to give the most explicit denial to any concerting of plans whatever, near or remote, of any character or of any kind. The hon. member's remarks are unworthy of a member of this House.

Mr. DUNNING: I am content to let the facts speak for themselves.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. DUNNING: They are sufficiently known to members of this House, regardless of what my right hon. friend may say.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DUNNING: I wanted to make a few remarks, Mr. Speaker, with reference to the address of my hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell). I am sorry he is not in his seat. I advised him that I intended to make some reference to his remarks, and I must therefore proceed in his absence. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that if this government and this parliament followed the practice of the Scott government in Saskatchewan, when certain of its ministers and others were thrown under suspicion, he would support such action and support the government in so doing. Now I want, if I can, to get my hon. friend's support for the amendment to the amendment upon the basis of his own professions, because the action taken in that case—both myself and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) have reason to be very familiar with it, because we were there at the time—that action was what? Investigation by a parliamentary committee, a committee of the legislature, and upon that committee reporting its findings, there was a decision made by the government and the House to appoint royal commissions to investigate further those matters which the committees themselves were unable to go into. If my hon. friend from Mackenzie is honest and sincere, and I believe he is, in saying that he supported the action of the Scott government at that time because of that procedure, how then can he justify a vote against the amendment to the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth)? I can put on Hansard, if it is necessary, the proof of my statements from the journals of the Saskatchewan assembly.

Here is the report in the Saskatchewan journals concerning the personnel of the three royal commissions that were appointed:

> The first for the purpose of inquiry into all contracts and other works under the control of the highways commission, to consist of ex-Chief Justice Wetmore and Messrs. Mason and Smith.
> The second for the purpose of inquiry into the charges of bribery against certain members of the assembly, to consist of Messrs. Justices Brown and Elwood, and
> The third for the purpose of inquiry into the charges concerning the erection of certain public buildings, to consist of Sir Frederick Haultain, Chief Justice of Saskatchewan, and Messrs. Justices Newlands and Lamont.

I would point out further that a former leader of the opposition was asked by the Saskatchewan government to take the chairmanship of the committee of inquiry into its own actions.

With regard to the matter mentioned by my hon. friend from Mackenzie in connection with which he characterized the Minister of Customs as a criminal, and refused, when asked by myself, to withdraw the word in relation to the act of the Minister of Customs, what was that act? After all the arguments that we have heard in this House during the last two days, what was that act? Was it not in fact the withholding of a warrant of commitment to gaol at the request of a member of the House? My hon. friend from Mackenzie condemns the Minister of Customs, and used the word "criminal" in relation to that action, when he well knows that within the last two months he has requested action of that same Minister of Customs that would have exactly the same effect—the withholding of a warrant of commitment to gaol.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is putting them over the plate.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend wrote, as he had a perfect right to do, to the Minister of Customs—this file has been supplied to me by the Minister of Customs as an evidence of what has been pointed out right along, that this is a common and usual practice in the department—and he asked for what? The leader of the opposition was very careful to say when the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) attempted to introduce argument of this kind: Oh, you cannot go outside of the evidence which came before the committee. There is a good reason for that, and my right hon. friend well knows it. In this particular case a constituent of my hon. friend from Mackenzie gets into trouble for making home brew, and if there is any offence that I know of that is worse than smuggling, it is the making and selling of that vile stuff known as home brew. A fine was imposed, with imprisonment as an alternative to payment—imprisonment, of course, if the fine was not paid. My hon. friend from Mackenzie writes to the minister, as he has a perfect right to do, to point out to the Minister of Customs or the Minister of Justice that this man cannot pay the fine, and he thought he ought not to be sent to gaol, but ought to be given till the fall to pay his fine. There is only one way for the Minister of Customs to accede to that request, and that is to withhold the warrant of commitment. My hon. friend shakes his head.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly; all the difference in the world.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. DUNNING: My right hon. friend has made his speech. Let me make mine. I have the floor.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon gentleman is very brave.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. DUNNING: If my right hon. friend desires to ask a question, all right, but if he wishes to rise to make a statement, no.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I only wish to inform the hon. member—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. DUNNING: Does the right hon. member desire to put a question?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I rose to ask a question, but I do not propose to be treated discourteously by the hon. member again.

Mr. DUNNING: I had no intention of treating my right hon. friend discourteously, and I should think he should be the last man in this House to complain of discourteous treatment. I hold in my hand a letter which proves, if anything can be made to prove, the practice of the department in this regard. This letter is written by a man who has been spoken of in the highest terms by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, Mr. Taylor, Assistant Deputy Minister of Customs and Excise and relates to a case that was evidently dealt with as a matter of course. This is a memorandum addressed to the chief of the customs and excise preventive service as a result of the representations made by my hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) and reads:

It appears desirable that warrant of commitment be not executed against him at the present time in view of the fact that he is a farmer and the seeding season is at hand.

An hon. MEMBER: He would be a great help in an election!

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend appears to have some doubts as to the bona fides of this matter. I shall be very pleased to read the letter of the hon. member for Mackenzie, and in reading it I want to repeat now what I said a few moments ago that he was perfectly within his rights in writing it, and that the action taken as a result of the letter was a perfectly proper one. It had the result of carrying out my hon. friend's request, the withholding of the warrant of commitment against a man found guilty of an act similar to the act for which my hon. friend from Mackenzie condemns the Minister of Customs in terms such as "criminal."

Mr. CAMPBELL: I did not use the word "criminal" as applied to the Minister of Customs at all, and I think the Minister of Railways should retract that statement.

Mr. DUNNING: I endeavoured to give my hon. friend an opportunity to take back the word "criminal."

An hon. MEMBER: He took it back.

Mr. DUNNING: He did not take it back. If he takes it back now, I shall be happy to accept the retraction.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I will say quite frankly that the use of the word "criminal" was too strong. I should have used the word "offender." The minister had no right to make the statement he did make, because I made no direct reference to the Minister of Customs.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member takes it back, and that is quite sufficient for my purpose. This letter is addressed to the Minister of Justice, dated April 11, 1926, written by the hon. member for Mackenzie, and reads:

I understand that some time ago Mr. John J. Chernankoff of Pelly, Sask.—

This is not the only peculiar name in the Dominion of Canada. There are others which sound strange to English ears, but they may be very decent people, whether their names are Chernankoff or Aziz.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Did my hon. friend say that letter was addressed to the Minister of Justice?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. RYCKMAN: And not the Minister of Customs.

Mr. DUNNING: I can deal with that feature later. The letter was addressed to the Minister of Justice, and because it related to a customs offence, it was, as the file later reveals transferred to the Minister of Customs to deal with, because it involves the matter of withholding a warrant of commitment. I should have said it was transferred to the deputy minister. It did not even go to the Minister of Customs, and this is a practice that has occurred in dozens if not hundreds of similar cases throughout the country. I will read the letter:

I understand that some time ago Mr. John J. Chernankoff of Pelly, Sask., was fined $200 the charge being the making of home brew. I may say that Mr. Chernankoff has paid $50 on this account and is not at the present time able to meet the balance.

As the seeding season is approaching it would be a very serious matter for his family if this man were obliged to go to jail and I believe it would serve the ends of justice if you could extend the time of payment of the balance of this amount sufficiently to enable him to meet it, as it is impossible for him to raise this money at the present time. I am given to understand by people who know this man thoroughly that he has never made this stuff for sale.

How often have I had that plea presented to me. The letter continues:

Under the regulations, had he known so, he could have notified the Minister of Customs that he was making home brew for his own use, in which case he would not have been guilty of an offence against the law.

I do not know where my hon. friend gets his law for that. But that is what he says.

Some hon. MEMBERS: That is right.

Mr. DUNNING: The letter continues:

I think this might well be taken into consideration when his case is dealt with.

Then there is an acknowledgment sent to Mr. M. N. Campbell by the Minister of Justice. Mr. Campbell's letter is written on the paper of the House of Commons. Surely it is quite clear that my hon. friend does not deny writing the letter. I do not question for a moment his right to write the letter.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think it is only fair to the hon. member for Mackenzie to point out that he is not putting that request on the basis of any service rendered to him in the constituency.

Mr. DUNNING: No, Mr. Speaker, but are we to say that because one man is foolish enough to put in a letter the statement that this is a political friend, as the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) did, that he is to be condemned and that the ministry is to be condemned for it and on the other hand a member who is clever enough to know that it is not the proper thing to put in a letter and who simply leaves the minister to read between the lines is to get off scot free? None of us can be so incredulous. I do not want to labour the point, but hon. members will understand that men who have served as ministers of the crown at least will realize that while it is decidedly improper to urge political consideration regarding matters relating to one's constituents, is there a man in this House who will say that a letter from a friend, political or personal, with regard to a particular matter does not receive consideration outside of the borders of its literal contents, and to some extent in deference to the relationship which exists personally or politically between the writer of the letter and the recipient of it? That is common sense.

Mr. BURY: Does the minister infer that the hon. member for Mackenzie had that motive or intention when he wrote that letter? The minister is reading it between the lines and wanting the House to read it between the lines.

Mr. DUNNING: I was merely replying to a question addressed to me in that regard.

Mr. BURY: And the minister's reply implied that.

Mr. DUNNING: I am not drawing any inference with respect to that letter; I am making a statement which is within the knowledge of every hon. gentleman facing me. When letters are written it is not necessary to state, in the terms stated by hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud), that this man is a supporter and so on, to get consideration from a personal or political friend. Let us take the case of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Boys). There was no political friendship, but the evidence indicates that there was considerable personal friendship, which I have no doubt exists still and which is no discredit to my hon. friend. He writes a letter. It would have been foolish for him to put into that letter: Please do so-and-so because this man will help me politically. It would not have been good sense for my hon. friend to do that. But my hon. friend did urge every consideration he was capable of urging; he did take the fullest advantage, proper advantage possibly, of his friendship for the Minister of Customs, and certainly the man concerned—Daivey Waisberg was it not?—received generous treatment. What a Godsend it is that the hon. member is not a Liberal member. If he had been, how the welkin would have rung from the other side with reference to the correspondence and his action!

To pursue the matter of the member for Mackenzie a little further, the Minister of Justice transmitted the letter to the chief of the Remission branch and he in turn transmitted it to the Department of Customs because it was a matter with which the Department of Customs had to deal, the withholding of a warrant of commitment for more months of time in order to enable John J. Chernankoff to pay the fine. According to my understanding of the file he had to go to gaol for seven months if he did not pay the fine. The hon. member for Mackenzie, very properly I have no doubt, from his knowledge of the man and his case urged that the minister should extend the time. There was one way of doing it and that was to withhold the warrant of commitment until the fall. If the man at that time did not pay the fine, he would go to gaol. May I point out that that was exactly the thing which the Minister of Customs requested to know from his deputy on that famous day when he first came into the office, namely, whether he had power to withhold a warrant of commitment? This is a letter—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Read the whole file.

Mr. DUNNING: I will read the whole file, although it will take time to put it on Hansard. I want again to emphasize that I am not condemning the hon. member for Mackenzie with regard to this matter, but this shows the practice and the injustice of my hon. friend's attitude this afternoon towards the Minister of Customs.

Mr. MARCIL: Did the man go to gaol or is he still at large?

Mr. DUNNING: He is still out.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I again rise to a question of privilege. I want to point out to the Minister of Railways—it seems impossible to make him understand it—that I dealt very tolerantly with the Minister of Customs.

An hon. MEMBER: That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. CAMPBELL: If the charges against the Minister of Customs were the only sins of which the government were guilty I would be quite prepared to vote confidence in the government.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend indicated very plainly that he was prepared to vote for a resolution which would have the effect of driving the Minister of Customs out of public life. That is how tolerantly he dealt with him.

This is the letter of transmission from the chief of the Remission branch to the deputy minister of the Department of Customs and Excise under date of April 17, 1926:

Dear Sir:

In further reference to the case of John Chernankoff, I herewith return your file No. 130028, which you were kind enough to forward to this department for consideration. I thank you for your courtesy herein.

I now forward you copy of a letter from Mr. M. N. Campbell to the Hon. the Minister of Justice, and would draw your attention particularly to the second paragraph of the same. As Mr. Campbell is asking that the time for payment of the balance of the fine imposed be granted the defendant, and as this is a matter rather for your department than this—

For Customs, rather than for Justice.

—I submit it to you for such consideration and action as you think advisable in the premises.

Then Mr. Taylor, a man of whom the hon. member for Vancouver Centre spoke so highly, writes this letter in reply. I am saying nothing against Mr. Taylor; I am merely pointing out that this business of keeping men out of gaol after they have been sentenced is in various ways a fairly common practice in this department or letters of this kind could not have been written. This is a letter written by Mr. Taylor, Assistant Deputy Minister of Customs and Excise, to Mr. M. F. Gallagher, chief of Remission branch, Department of Justice under date of April 22, 1926:

Sir,—Replying to your letter of April 17, (File 18052), I am enclosing herewith copy of a letter addressed to the chief preventive officer, from which you will observe that the department has agreed to extend the due date for payment of the balance of this man's fine until October 10, proximo.

I venture to say that the Minister of Customs never saw that; that it was handled as a routine matter in the department. What does this letter contain? This is a letter addressed by Mr. Taylor to Mr. Wilson, chief of the Customs and Excise preventive service. Ottawa, under date of April 22, 1926:

Sir:

Re. P.S. Excise Seizure No. 6548,
John Chernankoff, Pelly, Sask.

The department is advised that the above offender has paid fifty dollars on account and is unable at the present time to pay the balance. It appears desirable that warrant of commitment be not executed against him at the present time in view of the fact that he is a farmer and that the seeding season is at hand.

In the circumstances I would state that, provided the justices of the peace are willing, the department will raise no objection to the balance of the fine and costs being allowed to stand until October 10, proximo. If not promptly paid by that date the department should be advised.

But even on October 10 apparently he would not go to gaol until the department was advised. The discretion would still continue.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: By whom is that signed?

Mr. DUNNING: By Mr. George W. Taylor, Assistant Deputy Minister of Customs and Excise, and it is apparently in conformity with the general practice of the department. All of this correspondence took place while the committee was sitting, while the Moses Aziz case and all those other cases to which reference has been made, were before the committee. The final letter on the file is from Mr. M. F. Gallagher chief of Remission branch of the Department of Justice, to Mr. Campbell:

Dear Sir:

With further reference to your letter of the 9th instant to the Honourable the Minister of Justice with regard to John J. Chernankoff, recently convicted for a breach of the Inland Revenue Act, I beg to advise you that this case was at the time referred to the Deputy Minister of Customs and Excise who now informs me that instructions have been issued to extend the due date for payment of the balance of the fine imposed in this case until the 10th of October proximo.

And the man will not go to gaol until the 10th October.

I would call attention to the fact that I am asking for the support of the hon. member for Mackenzie on the basis of his own professions in the matter of the Scott government to which I referred this afternoon before the hon. member came back to his seat. The additional point I am now endeavouring to make is this: the language used by Mr. Gallagher, the chief of the Remission branch of the Department of Justice, in the letter signed by Mr. Gallagher which I have just read, was exactly the language contained in the letter on file in the Aziz case from the same Mr. Gallagher—exactly the same. There are other cases I could quote in which members of this House asked for consideration and wound up with the request not that this case be given consideration because the man was a political friend, but saying very properly at the end, "I make no recommendation as to what shall be done." Enclosed with a letter of that kind is a letter from one pleading on behalf of the individual concerned and winding up with the statement "This man is a political supporter of yours." The member making the recommendation did nothing wrong. I am not saying there was anything wrong at all; he made no recommendation in the case, he merely transmitted a letter to the government and said—not only for self-protection but because he did not know enough of the facts—"I make no recommendation in this case." That is the proper kind of a letter to write to a department or a minister when a member is transmitting information of that kind. But you see, Mr. Speaker, how difficult it is for any man who represents the people to deal with matters of this kind, particularly if he happens to be a Liberal, without subjecting himself to all kinds of accusations. Oh! I can imagine what would have been said by hon. gentlemen opposite in connection with the Daivey Waisberg case if the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Boys) had only been a Liberal. We have no doubt at all what they would have said then.

What are we asked to do after all in this matter? This House is asked not only to condemn and drive out of public life the Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin)—

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. DUNNING: Somebody says "hear, hear"—"As ye judge so may ye be judged."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. DUNNING: Among the jury are men who should, for very conscience's sake, hesitate to cast a vote condemning as a political outcast the Minister of Customs for the offence with which he has been charged, the offence in question, stated at its worst, being that of being too lenient, as was within his discretion, with respect to a man who should have been and now is in gaol. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) made, I think, a very strong point when he asked if this House should displace this government because one of its ministers exercised too great leniency and put in its place a government the head of which would be the man who sent that telegram to Winnipeg which was quoted by my hon. friend and which had for its effect the approval of putting men in jail illegally. The gentleman in question stated his own doubts of the legality of the proceedings but said: Put them in jail and deport them as quickly as you can, and if there is anything wrong about the proceedings we will consider ratification later. I submit, Sir, that from the point of view of the public good the minister who is even rightfully accused of being too lenient is not so great a danger politically in Canada as the man who would sign such a message implying such an awful invasion of the liberties of the subject in this Dominion. And then we are asked, Sir, to vote out this government and to put in another government from across the way, remembering as we all must remember, that the reason why smuggling is profitable is because there is a customs tariff which is high enough to enable those breaking it to make money, and to be able to afford the taking of the risk involved. We are asked to put in a government a cardinal point of whose policy would be the increasing of the premium on smuggling.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend surely understands that the reason smugglers make money is because there is a customs tariff, and by smuggling they are enabled to put that tariff into their own pockets. That is why smuggling exists, and everyone knows that if you increase the premium it will constitute an ever-increasing attraction for the law breakers, who are inclined to enter that business. And so we are asked to turn out this government and put in another one which will say through its policies to all the smugglers in the country: We will increase the profits of your business. That is the position exactly.

Mr. STEVENS: Would the same argument apply equally to the excise duty and the sales tax?

Mr. DUNNING: Of course there is a difference.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. DUNNING: I was speaking of smuggling, which means the bringing in of goods from a foreign country without the payment of a customs duty. Will my hon. friend argue for a moment that increasing a customs duty will not increase the premium to the smuggler if he is successful in getting his goods in?

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend did not quite catch my question. I am speaking quite seriously. I say smuggling is an evasion of the customs law. Now I ask will the same argument apply to the evasion of the excise duty and the sales tax which is involved in our report just as much as smuggling is?

Mr. DUNNING: That is one of the reasons why we reduced some of the excise taxes. We decided to reduce the premium on law breaking.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): We want to get an honest government.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend says he wants to get an honest government. I have always said that honesty was not the peculiar prerogative of any political party, least of all the political party which has within its ranks—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, hon. gentlemen would like to drown my voice. I was going on to say this—least of all the political party which has in its ranks at this moment men who, while their country was engaged in war, grafted out of the public purse.

Mr. CLARK: What did you do in the war?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Stand up.

Mr. CLARK: All right, I will stand up. What did any one of you do?

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Let me pour a little oil on the troubled waters. I must remind hon. members that this is a debate.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was.

Mr. DUNNING: It is very strange, Mr. Speaker, that my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition can on all occasions stand up and pour his vitriol over this House while we sit and listen, but when anyone on this side stands up and hands him back some of his own medicine there is an uproar from our friends opposite.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. RYCKMAN: You plume yourself overmuch.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend from Burrard asked what I did in the war.

An hon. MEMBER: Or any one of you.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DUNNING: I would refer my hon. friend to his leader; I do not discuss those matters.

An hon. MEMBER: Then why did you bring it in?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Speaker, I have done. I started by arraigning this court which is trying this matter. This whole proceeding, Sir, is an indication of the unfitness of this body to act as a court in the trial of an individual who is a member of it. That is why in the evolution—

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Speak for yourself.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CANNON: Get some Australian butter.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DUNNING: That is why, Mr. Speaker, many years ago parliament tried, or purported to try, many offences which do not now come before parliament—there are many instances—because it was found better to transfer such cases to a judicial tribunal, which I submit this body never can be with respect to a matter of this kind. When I say so I am saying no more against my hon. friend from South Oxford than against myself. I say that he and I, in connection with a matter of this kind, are influenced not only by the facts of the case but by political considerations. Yes, all of us are so influenced. Perhaps I should except some hon. members in the far corner who describe themselves as jurymen in this case. I will not pursue that suggestion for it would lead to endless debate. But I do urge, Sir, that it is possible as a result of the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre to take this matter out of the atmosphere of political partisanship with which we are all surrounded, and to have it examined in the cold, independent atmosphere of a judicial tribunal.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I think it is unnecessary for me to apologize to this House or to my constituents for my action in connection with the case related by the Minister of Railways. The very fact that the Minister of Justice acceded to my request proves I was right.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The Minister of Justice did not accede to my hon. friend's request. The Minister of Customs, or the Department of Customs, did exactly as in the Aziz case.

An hon. MEMBER: That is not correct.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Let the hon. gentleman state his question of privilege. He is not allowed to make another speech.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think I have a right to explain my purpose.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. He has that right if a question of privilege is involved, but I do not see any. The hon. gentleman is answering the hon. Minister of Railways.

Mr. CAMPBELL: In this particular case, Sir, I might say—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I do not consider the fact of an hon. member writing a letter asking what the hon. gentleman is said to have asked constitutes a question of privilege. It happens every day. I do it myself.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like, if possible, to introduce into this debate, in as few words as I can make use of, the so-called judicial spirit which we are supposed to have in order to pass judgment in this case. Not being a lawyer, and therefore having no chance of becoming a judge one of these days, perhaps I can afford to make use, now, of some of that legal spirit in discussing this matter. It seems to me that some of the numerous lawyers who have been pleading for the adoption either of the amendment or of the report have not contributed much, in the last few days, to convince us that this parliament has really been transformed into a court of justice. I entirely agree with the closing words of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning): it has been made quite clear that this House is not in a mood to pass cool and impartial judgment upon the matters referred to it by the Customs committee.

May I suggest something more, Mr. Speaker? By the very nature of things, it was unreasonable to expect that this matter could be dealt with, not only in this House but likewise in the committee to which it was referred, without any political considerations. I have followed this debate pretty closely—as much as I could stand of it,—I have read a good deal of the evidence brought before the committee. It seems to me that we should, first, make a division of matters. First, we should consider the matters that are strictly before the House as a result of the report of the committee, and thereupon consider the three motions that we have to deal with—the motion to concur in the report of the committee, the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr Stevens) and the subamendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth).

Then, there is something else. I do not want to be offensive; but there is what I would call influence brought to bear upon this debate and upon all questions of this nature by public opinion outside that has become very nervous every time some question of liquor smuggling arises. That public opinion is not always exactly judicial; and when expressed by speeches and votes in this House it very often comes near to what I would call hypocrisy, if the term were parliamentary. I learn from members on all sides of the House that it has become almost impossible to deal with liquor control or smuggling without raising such prejudices as tend to warp one's judgment. Thirdly, we have to consider the broad political issue; and here, I join hands with my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre in his statement, that this whole matter demonstrates once more the absurdity of a system under which, first of all, committees of this House—composed of members designated by political parties whose main object is either to keep or to attain power— cannot divest themselves of those considerations, and secondly, that when the matter is brought before the House there is no choice other than to vote for either this motion or that motion, and thereby bring about a change of government. This situation should be brought home to the thinking men, both in and out of parliament, as frequently as possible, to show the imperative necessity of modifying the habits of our parliament in this respect. It stands in contrast with the wisdom of this same parliament in connection with matters of electoral contests, for example, when it divested itself of the power of passing judgment upon these matters, in order to leave them to impartial tribunals.

The question at issue in this debate should have been brought before a judicial commission at the start; the whole inquiry should have been conducted by such a commission. For my part, I say quite frankly and openly that I do not feel prepared to pass judgment, in an impartial manner, upon the matters referred to in this report. I will not take advantage of the compliment paid to a few members at this end of the House by the Minister of Railways; I will not say that I feel more virtuous or more disinterested than any Conservative or Liberal member; I only say that there is not here the same consideration of party which may animate the Conservatives or the Liberals. But I cannot dissociate this question from the political consequences which will follow the vote. In justice to my constituents, in justice to the people who believe in me in my own province, and even outside of that province, I cannot consider this sole issue of whether or not the Minister of Customs was right in the Aziz case or any other case. I cannot dissociate these "great" issues, now before the parliament and the people of Canada, from those "minor" considerations which the right hon. leader of the opposition says are not worth mention in this House—matters of war and peace, matters of foreign relations, questions upon which the decision taken by the House to-day may mean, in five or ten years, the loss of 50,000 lives. Of course, that is a trifling matter for the right hon. leader of the opposition. It is "time-killing" to think of the future of our country; it is "time-killing" to talk about the foreign affairs of this country, or to talk of great constitutional principles. But if you can find one little fault in this man—if he is a Liberal and you are a Conservative—if you can catch this minister at fault and in so catching him gain power, here is a great constitutional issue!

I do not blame hon. gentlemen opposite for doing a few of these things. But is this what the great Conservative party has come to? It may be that it will give them power, I do not mind; whether they are in power and the Liberals in opposition is not my main concern. Likewise, the fact of one Liberal minister or two or three Liberal or Conservative members having committed errors of judgment in order to serve some political ends, would not appear to me as sufficient to bring about a political crisis and make a change of government without considering what the effect would be on the whole legislation of the country, on all the principles of government and administration. On this point I entirely agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre: it is absurd for this House to pretend to transform itself into a tribunal of adjudication, when every time judgment has to be passed that judgment will be influenced by political or party considerations, rather than by considerations of justice. The time will surely come when it will be possible to vote for or against a certain action taken by one minister, or for or against certain pieces of legislation, without being forced to say: "This means a change of government." Even in the great Mother of Parliaments, of which we hear so often from members who like to quote British precedents when they suit their views and purposes, where the principle of ministerial responsibility is the basis of the system, they have been forced by circumstances to come to the conclusion that many questions which here, with our old views and narrow spirit, we consider questions of confidence, are not such questions at all. Ministers are censured, government motions are defeated, but the government is not called upon to go out of office. The result is that they can deal in a much broader and more effective manner with the many problems confronting the government than we in Canada can do, because of that old inherited habit of fifty years ago which says that upon every question which may crop up, or almost every one, we must vote the government down or keep them in office.

With regard to the various questions mentioned or raised in the report, I shall not dwell upon them at length. I do not think we are in a position to pass judgment upon the various matters brought before the committee. We are not in a position to say that the findings of that committee, with regard either to individuals or to administrative methods, are necessarily just and right. In the report itself, what do I read: "The matters referred to have not been completely reviewed" and "to a degree, therefore, this report is incomplete and suggestive rather than final." So it is upon an incomplete report from a committee, the members of which declare that they have not been able to review the whole question, that we are called upon to pass judgment; to put out of public life this man or that man; to blame or excuse this one or that one, to endorse either the recommendations made by the committee or the suggestions contained in the amendments also before us. We must decide all this in half a week, after a hurried debate in which I failed to see on either side the disposition or the will to remedy the real evils that have been disclosed before that committee. The one single dominating thought is: Which party will carry the vote?

Let us be true to ourselves. For my part, I am not capable of voting upon this matter without coming back to the position in which I found myself, five or six times, during this session.

Mr. MANION: Are not the recommendations of the committee designed to remedy conditions?

Mr. BOURASSA: I will deal with that.

Rather than throw down this government and bring into power the other party, whose policy I do not approve, and approve still less after the six months session we have had than I did at the beginning—I am bound to give my vote dominated by that thought, which has nothing to do with the administration of the Customs department, and has nothing to do with the moral guilt or innocence of the Minister of Customs or any of the other officers named in that report. This is absurd; and, for that reason, I am entirely in agreement with the first part of the sub-amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that this inquiry should be turned over to a judicial commission, which would cover the whole ground and come back with a report. Then, at last, of course, we would have to take some action; but it would be action preceded and directed by the findings of an impartial body, safer and much better preserved from political interference than the committee was. In this respect, again, let us be frank.

[Mr. Bourassa.]

I heard a large part of the very able speech delivered by the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Donaghy). It was, I think, the most complete analysis of the report; but he used one sentence which made me shrug my shoulders. He said, in effect: If we had delved into the years gone by we could have opposed to the findings with respect to the administration of the last four years, some acts of maladministration on the part of the opposition, dating back ten or twelve years, and in that way we could have put the opposite party in an equally bad position. I say boldly that the committee did wrong in not doing that. Either of two things: Either that committee was a political body working for the benefit of one party or the other, or it was a judicial body looking for real reforms in the administration of the Customs department. If it was a political body, the Liberal members on that committee were foolish to leave the matter entirely in the hands of their opponents. If it was a judicial body, and if they wanted to gain the confidence of the people of Canada in their findings, they had to show up every misdemeanour of all governments for the last ten years; and that would have made things equal as between the two parties. From the highest point of view, the government had no right to allow the members of the opposition to make of this inquiry a political propaganda duel.

Mr. NICHOLSON: They could not help themselves. The government members could not produce any other evidence.

Mr. BOURASSA: I think they could have.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Why didn't they do it?

Mr. BOURASSA: I think they were foolish in that respect; they were very weak. The whole documentary evidence was prepared by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre in conjunction—perhaps I should not say that, for I do not know their relations—with that so-called Commercial Protective Association of Montreal. It was not the business of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre to dig up everything that could go out against his own party; just, as the right hon. leader of the opposition said yesterday, it was not for the Conservative members of that committee to call upon the Hon. Jacques Bureau to come and give evidence.

Mr. STEVENS: I think the hon. member desires to be fair. If he will permit me, the original request was for a committee to survey recent years; I think I named, originally, the last four or five years. Then another motion was suggested by the minister, which was accepted by my right hon. leader and everyone on this side, that the committee should go back with their inquiries as far as they liked. So it was open to the committee.

Mr. BOURASSA: Precisely, but they confined their inquiries to the last five years, and did not go beyond that.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Is the hon. member aware of the fact that inquiries into matters dating beyond the last two, three, four and five years were invited by the members of that committee?

Mr. BOURASSA: That proves again that the Conservative members on the committee did not find their match in the Liberal members of the committee. The Liberals were far too anxious to prove that they were not acting from political motives.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Or they were asleep.

Mr. BOURASSA: Perhaps; I do not know what the cause was; I am simply stating the fact as it is. But, after all, this is only what I would call the least important point. The more important point is this, and I ask every hon. member to ponder on what I am going to say now. Being given those facts, you will not get a consensus of the moral opinion of this country at the back of the vote that will be given to-night one way or the other. Why? Because the force of circumstances has turned this matter into a political bone of contention; and if there is an election upon this question, the Conservatives will go around the country to demonstrate that the Liberals are rotten, that they have brought the Department of Customs to such a state of corruption that they cannot be trusted with office; and the Liberals will reply with equally true things, which, however, they will have to take from the past records of the Conservative governments,—and they will find plenty of them. The result will be that you will have a mud-slinging election of the first order, or of the last order, with one-half—

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Will the hon. gentleman specify those things which he says they will find plenty of?

Mr. BOURASSA: Yes, I would take the whole war administration. I would take all those facts upon which Sir Andrew MacPhail has reported in his very interesting book dealing, for instance, with the manner in which the unionist government organized that comedy—I cannot use the word, because the results were so abominable—that orgy of peculation and exploitation of patriotism for the basest objects, and which cost the lives of so many Canadians.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Will the hon. member point to that "plenty of things" in the evidence that was taken before the Customs committee, and not simply in any book by Sir Andrew MacPhail?

Mr. BOURASSA: The hon. gentleman, who has a very keen mind, and who is a very intelligent and courteous member of this House, must remember that I have just stated that one of the faults of the Liberal members of the committee was precisely to have put themselves in the position where the whole evidence that was given in that committee conncerned a Liberal administration; they made little or no effort to pierce to the bottom of things and show what had been done under past Conservative administrations.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): That does not answer my question.

Mr. BOURASSA: Yes, it does. I say that if the Conservative party, as they evidently wish to do, are going to carry on a mud-slinging campaign against their opponents, using the findings and evidence of this committee, their opponents, having let themselves be put in this position, will refer back to some other scandals; and you will have the people of Canada listening for months to that kind of accusations, right and left, and having to choose between the two, and they will say, as they very often have to do now: Let us try to find out which is the less crooked of the two. That is a great danger to the moral and political stability of the country, and to a large extent it is unjust to both parties.

5 p.m.

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman has just made a general statement about the bad administration of the government during the war. Would he mind telling us, for the information of the House, of any charges that have been made against the government that was handling the affairs of this country during the war?

Mr. BOURASSA: You have only to read the pages in which Sir Andrew MacPhail describes, for instance, the organization of Valcartier camp, the thirst of the late Minister of Militia to send as many men as possible to the other side without proper equipment, without proper weapons, so that the Canadian soldiers threw their guns into the ditches rather than make use of them, because they were more dangerous to themselves than to the enemy. Guns were forced upon the department by the minister of the previous Liberal government, Sir Frederick Borden, then by Sir Sam Hughes, who were both hand in hand—I mean in a very friendly sense—with Sir Charles Ross; and this entailed a cost of millions of dollars to the government of Canada and resulted in the loss of the lives of hundreds of Canadian soldiers. It was improper to use these guns in that warfare, but they had been forced upon the soldiers.

Mr. MANION: Is the hon. member not aware that Sir Andrew MacPhail was an A.D.M.S.—I saw him there myself—and would not know anything about the cases of the soldiers dying in the front lines?

An hon. MEMBER: You were a Liberal then.

Mr. MANION: That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. BOURASSA: The Ross rifle was so well known to everybody connected with the militia that my hon. friend would surely not ask me to bring evidence to substantiate my statement. He has only to interview the officers and soldiers who were engaged in the war and he will ascertain the truth. The unanimous finding was to the effect that the government were obliged to destroy every one of those discarded guns because they were unfit to use. Those guns were put into the service to please the friends of the former Minister of Militia.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Will my hon. friend inform this House what on earth the charges against the Ross rifle have to do with the charges now levelled against the Department of Customs for corruption in office?

Mr. BOURASSA: I would not have brought up the matter at all, if it were not for the question put by the hon. member. I was making the point that the first error had been committed by confiding this issue to the findings of a committee which was bound to become a political body; secondly, that since it was found to become a political body, the Liberal members of that committee and the ministers at their back made a great mistake in permitting the inquiry to be confined to these issues which tell against their friends. I made my point there, because, as I said, the moment the Conservative candidates begin exploiting the findings of that committee for their electoral purposes, they are sure to have the candidates of the other party reply by making counter charges against the other side. I gave that as an example.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): The Ross rifle as an example?

[Mr. Bourassa.]

Mr. BOURASSA: Yes, among other things. I have given that merely as an illustration of the false principle upon which this whole matter has been based.

Now I come to the other position, demonstrating what I would call the absurdity of the parliamentary situation. I have demonstrated the absurdity of the suggestion that we are acting as a judicial body. The manner in which the "gentlemen of the jury" in this House have deliberated for the last few days is sufficient to show that we are not in a judicial frame of mind, and not in a position to render a judicial decision upon this issue from any point of view. Let there be no Pharisees among us. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Bell), who asked me a question, feels just as I do in regard to this matter —not perhaps as a lawyer, not perhaps as a Conservative member, but as an honest and clever gentleman.

Let us consider now the absurdity of the parliamentary situation. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre spoke of the quandary in which he found himself in reference to casting his vote, and he explained the situation in a manner which, I may say, corresponds with nine-tenths of my own feelings—except that he made the matter worse for me by bringing in a subamendment. I must tell the House frankly that neither the subamendment, nor the amendment, nor the main motion to accept the report, accords with my views. Nevertheless, I have no other opening and I propose to give my support to the subamendment merely because it provides for a reference of this matter to a judicial commission and for no other reason.

Mr. STEVENS: The report itself contains a recommendation unanimously arrived at that there should be an extra departmental investigation, leaving it to the government to determine what form that should take.

Mr. BOURASSA: I will explain my position on that point. I am accepting the subamendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) solely on account of that recommendation which it makes. I may say that I approve also of the second paragraph of the subamendment, because it is a declaration of opinion, which practically is the same as one of the paragraphs in the report, though couched in somewhat different words. It reads:

2. That the following be added to clause 6: Your committee deplores the common practice, as revealed by the evidence, of members of parliament and others appealing to the minister to relax the regulations of the department for personal advantage or political expediency.

But I cannot approve of the other portion of the subamendment of the hon. member. That is to say, I agree that it is wrong, "for personal advantage or political expediency" to intervene with the minister, or for the minister to intervene with the ends of justice; but I have no hesitation in saying that it would be still more wrong to prevent the minister from exercising his judgment and taking his responsibility upon the application of the law, and it would be equally wrong for members of parliament to be remiss in their duties, if they did not call to the minister's attention such cases as deserve clemency, indulgence and the application of mere human intelligence. This brings us back to what I stated at the beginning of my rambling remarks. We have come to the point that every time smuggling and liquor is mentioned we seem to have lost all sense of propriety and proportion. I hope I will not scandalize anybody, when I state what is in the minds of a large number of the members of this House, and that is, that there are many worse things than smuggling and drinking which are treated with much greater leniency by governments, parliaments and tribunals. We are reversing the basis of morality and the sense of justice. Not content with the amount of crime and weakness which our poor human nature contains and evidences every day, and against which laws divine and human are incapable of accomplishing perfection in a day, we have been going on in Canada as in the United States, much more so than in Europe, creating crime and enacting penal laws for matters which have never been and will never be considered as crimes by any right thinking individual or by any community which has preserved the proper sense of things.

Therefore, apart from the reasons which I have just given—that the report is incomplete, that the House is not in a mood, in a position and in itself constituted to pass upon that report—I cannot agree to concurrence in the suggestions of that report, because, in my opinion, they tend towards increasing the evil rather than remedying it. The Minister of Railways and some other hon. gentlemen have touched upon one aspect of the question when they spoke of customs dues; but I am afraid they were more concerned with trying to impress free traders of the west with the importance of voting with the government. No doubt, customs dues are to a large extent the main cause of smuggling.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The only cause.

Mr. BOURASSA: I would not say it is the only cause.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Why smuggle if there is no duty?

Mr. BOURASSA: If you have an excise duty which applies to goods sold in our country and not to goods sent into another country, you have again a question of smuggling from Canada into the United States bringing back, for instance, narcotics. If we were not so much concerned with the liquor question and a little more concerned with narcotics, we would be doing more service to the young people of whom the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Boutillier) spoke with so much fervor yesterday. That is one point on which the effort of the police force should be directed.

But as regards liquor, as long as you preserve the present excise and customs duties, you are inviting smuggling to such a degree that no parliament, no government, no laws and no regulations can prevent it. I take the very argument that was made yesterday by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) with regard to the great matter of state, much more important to call for the thoughtful reflection and great enunciation of principles of a great statesman than the mere matter of a few thousand Canadians being killed or not in the next war. I refer to the selling of those 16,000 gallons of alcohol. He said that it would have been better to sell them for one cent a gallon to the Quebec Liquor Commission as potable or possibly potable alcohol in order to get the $10 a gallon in revenue. I ask any sensible business man in this House: If you take an article of merchandise which you value at one cent a gallon and you make it worth artificially $10 a gallon because you impose an excise duty upon it, are you not inviting the ingenuity, the activity and all that can be done to produce that article at what it is worth, namely, one cent a gallon, and sell it at an enormous profit if you avoid paying the $10 of excise duty?

One recommendation of the committee which is worth considering is to impose the excise duty at the distillery, whatever the destination of the liquor may be. In that respect, if we were in a position to enter into the merits of the case, I would say boldly to the government: Lower the excise and Customs duties against all alcoholic beverages. Apply the attention of your officials to the introduction of the right kind of beverages. So far as that is concerned, you will find a great help in the working of the Quebec Liquor Commission, because, however faulty it may be in some respects, it has at least this advantage that it looks after the quality of the products that are imported into this country. But if you desire to maintain the customs duties as you have them at present against all articles of luxury, to maintain the excise duties or even to put them higher, as you have them in the case of alcoholic beverages, to prevent all smuggling of liquor into Canada and then to look after the smuggling of liquor into the United States because of the return smuggling, you might just as well make up your minds that you will have to devote all the revenues of the Customs and Excise department and perhaps the whole income tax, before you prevent one-half of the smuggling that is going on.

I heard the leader of the opposition read a letter from another gentleman who has been very closely connected with this matter. I refer to Mr. Sparks. By way of parenthesis, the right hon. gentleman opened his speech yesterday by saying that this was to be a great historic debate. I have been tempted at times to think it is rather an hysteric debate. But supposing it goes down in history, the funny thing is that you will have two monuments that will stand in the annals of Canada, one to Moses Aziz and the other to Mr. Sparks. I think the Conservative party, the moment they get into power, should devote their first contribution to the fine arts of Canada by having a beautiful monument erected to Mr. Sparks with Moses Aziz, for instance, in the position of one of those little devils who play in the corners of medieval cathedrals; because no doubt they will owe their advent to power largely to the efforts of Mr. Sparks, and also to the martyrdom of Moses Aziz.

I come back to that great pillar of virtue, of economic reform, who has received so much attention from both sides of the House. I feel at ease in speaking of him in this great historic debate because, my knowledge of history being very limited, I have never before heard of Mr. Sparks in any capacity whatever. But if he wrote this letter to the leader of the opposition, and if the leader of the opposition expects to become Prime Minister and to accomplish what Mr. Sparks told him could be done by adding a few words to the law and a few policemen, namely, the suppression of 90 per cent of the liquor smuggling in Canada and out of Canada with its return smuggling, I say that Mr. Sparks does not know the first elements of human nature and economic conditions.

[Mr. Bourassa.]

Mr. STEVENS: As Mr. Sparks of course cannot speak for himself, would the hon. member permit me to say that in all Mr. Sparks' activities he never once touched the smuggling of liquor. He and his association dealt with matters within their own knowledge and range of activities, namely, the smuggling of merchandise other than liquor. I say that merely in justice to him.

Mr. BOURASSA: But you cannot disconnect the two things.

Mr. STEVENS: I am merely making a statement of fact in fairness to Mr. Sparks.

Mr. BOURASSA: I was not trying to be unfair to Mr. Sparks; I was referring to him merely as interpreted by his first lieutenant, the leader of the opposition, or if you prefer it, as interpreted by his counsel before the cool, judging tribunal that we are. I think the leader of the opposition, who is a great lawyer, is quite capable of interpreting Mr. Sparks or anybody else or even of twisting anything in connection with the case.

But supposing this refers only to other merchandise than liquor. There are two points I want to make. First it is all very well to look after the contraband of smugglers as against legitimate trade, but I would like to know what has been done in the last thirty years against false declarations made by so-called legitimate traders in the customs house?

I will give a brief example of my incidental knowledge of the matter. One day, I was coming back from Europe where I had left some luggage behind me. The luggage came two months later, with what the French call "slow speed". I went to the Customs house of Montreal, then under the very able jurisdiction of the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. White). Of course, I did not see at first the member for Mount Royal, or the superintendent, or the chief inspector; but one of the officials presented me with a certain form. I looked at it and I said "That will not do, it does not correspond to my case. I cannot swear to that",—because we have to swear to everything at the custom house. Well, they handed me another form and I said "That will not do either; it does not meet my case at all". The official replied "Those are the only two forms we have." Then I said "I am not going to make a false oath; I am not going to commit perjury". So I went to the chief and it was then I made the charming acquaintance of Mr. White. After I had explained my case he looked at me—he is not here at the moment so that I can speak with more freedom—in his quizzical fashion over his eye-glasses; apparently in that way he sees more clearly; and with a smile of irony, he said: "You are the first man I have seen in fifteen years who hesitates at committing perjury." He added "Between ourselves, this is the greatest manufacture of perjury there is in Canada." That impressed me at the time and the impression has remained. I am, in some respects, very old-fashioned. I believe that perjury is a much worse offence than smuggling or taking liquor. I do not know, perhaps my morality is not up to that of Vegreville, but I consider that when you accustom young boys of fifteen and sixteen years of age to go to the customs house and make false declarations for the benefit of their employers in order to have false entries made and thus pay less duties—and that is the practice of a large number of so-called legitimate houses of commerce—it disquiets me much more than the question of whether Moses Aziz should stay out of gaol for three or four months—much more.

In the second place, you cannot, in our days, disconnect the smuggling of various articles of merchandise which enter into competition with the goods of the regular trading houses, from liquor smuggling. That has been already explained to the committee, and the committee reports on that fact. The committee points out that with the adoption of the Volstead Act, with the development of the means of communication between the two countries, there is such an export of liquor from Canada into the United States that it pays to engage in a return trade in other commodities. The man who goes into the United States from Canada with an automobile loaded with liquor tries to bring back some things that will give him as much profit on the return trip as on the outgoing trip. He will bring back narcotics, he will bring back silks, he will bring back jewellery; he will bring back articles that will take up limited space and yield great profit. What was done on a very small scale, when the trade communications between the United States and Canada consisted practically of a few trunk lines of railway, is now multiplied, I do not know how many times, as a result of the building of highways and the use of automobiles. And I repeat: you cannot put a stop to the smuggling evil, taking it as it is, without any exaggeration, you cannot put a stop to it to the extent of 90 per cent, or 50 per cent, or 25 per cent, or even 10 per cent, unless you treble, and increase even to a far greater extent, the expenditure of your Department of Customs and Excise. Therefore I say: Why not diminish the incentive to smuggling? Why not endeavour to alleviate the causes which make it pay to smuggle? I am not referring especially to the customs duty, I have reference also to the excise duty. That is one of the points, it seems to me, upon which the committee has not deliberated at all. I have not read anything in the report that would indicate that the committee has paid any attention to it. Of course the traders of Canada are rather disposed to include the entire country and its social and economic interests within the four corners of their special sphere. Mr. Sparks, or Mr. So-and-So, will come here and tell you that unless you correct this or that, it will mean the end of the world, because as matters stand their individual profits are lessened. I do not blame them for entertaining that view but we have to take a broader outlook and consider what can be done to diminish in reasonable degree, all over, the evils of smuggling. We should start first of all from the point of view that it is far better to diminish inducements to smuggling than to increase the punishment for engaging in it. In the second place I say it is wrong—although that is not the view of traders generally—to make penal laws of such a character that you will put administrators or other high officials in the position of not being able to consider every case on its merits and exercising some degree of leniency. I repeat, you cannot enforce penal legislation unless you have the honest opinion of the people at your back. You will never make them believe that it is right to punish with a heavy fine and imprisonment acts that are and have always been considered by the public and individual conscience as minor offences, whereas offenders against real moral laws escape more lightly. If we want to correct evils of this sort we must begin by putting on a proper basis our standards of public morality and of penal legislation.

There is something in this report which I regard as very dangerous. It suggests that there should be an increase in the inducement to detectives and officials to arrest smugglers by increasing their share of the proceeds from fines and seizures. In the second place, it is proposed to give them the power to arrest anybody without a warrant; and, here I cannot agree with my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), the third section of whose amendment would deprive the minister of the power to exercise any leniency. If you enact this into legislation you must be prepared to multiply the number of gaols in this country in order to accommodate the number of people that will have committed merely technical offences, and the gaol wardens will have no time to think of the real criminals. Then the hon. member for Vegreville, ten years from now, will see whether public morality has been improved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Did not the Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin) the other day suggest that if he were relieved of this right of discretion it would solve a great many of his problems and leave him free for general administrative work?

Mr. BOURASSA: The hon. member is perfectly right and it shows how absurd the position is. May I slightly correct my hon. friend. The minister said it would relieve him of much of his troubles and give him more time for administrative work. But you would have to find somebody else to do that. If you did not, you would create a state of tyranny in this country that would simply be intolerable or you will give a further premium to smuggling, to hypocrisy, and to evasions of the law. It will be one or the other; it cannot be otherwise. You will get more and more people thinking: How is it? There have been denunciations of this man and that man because he brought a few bottles of whiskey from Montreal to Ottawa to distribute to his friends. A minister has been denounced because he prevented a man from going to gaol after he had been fined, or rather he took action to delay his going to gaol.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): To prevent.

An hon. MEMBER: To delay.

Mr. BOURASSA: Suppose it had been the other way,—as is done every day in every province, including the province of the hon. gentleman, where sentences are suspended or are not enforced. I must admit that I have not the legal mind. But to say that it would be right for the Minister of Justice to let a man go out of gaol the day after he went in, but that it is a crime for the Minister of Customs to prevent that same man going into gaol that day, is something that, while to the very delicate consciences of lawyers it may appear very big, yet to the less cultivated consciences of commonsense people, seems a very fine distinction without any substantial difference. The moment you do something to relieve a man from paying the penalty for a wrongful act, whether it is done on Monday or Wednesday, or whether it is effected through the action of this hon. gentleman or that other hon. gentleman, it comes to the same thing. You have thousands of Canadian citizens who realize that there are some people who go to gaol and there are some who do not.

There is more than that involved. Our whole economic system in the last twenty years has put a premium on theft—theft organized by some of the leading men of this country, bank directors, railway promoters, men who have been rewarded by senatorships, men who have received decorations from the king—not that the king knew anything about them, but because they had paid enough money to a decoration agent to be entitled to those decorations in the name of the king—those men have been crowned as captains of industry, they have been acclaimed as makers of Canada, while they were making their fortunes by extorting capital out of the gullible people of this country, by levying tribute upon the consumers and the travellers of this country because of the conspiracy of parliament and of governments. This evil calls for much more denunciation than the petty action of a small smuggler, or the neglect of a minister to see that a petty smuggler goes to jail. Let us take our lesson now, Sir, from the subdued indignation in the sub stratum of society against the power of the ruling classes, against kings, aristocrats or plutocrats, based upon the accumulated injustice and hypocrisy that have built up the socialism of Europe and its extreme form, the Bolshevism of Russia.

Let us make no mistake, let us not narrow our minds, let us not increase the incentive to legal misdemeanours, let us not show a scandalized conscience in regard to minor acts of neglect on the part of responsible administrators of departments and conspiracy with real criminals, let us look at the question from a broad point of view. Every one of these problems is connected with some other similar problem, and until we have a sense of the whole fabric of social justice and economic order I say that, for a third reason, we are disqualified to settle this problem in the manner that is suggested to us. At least I feel that I am. Perhaps I know a little too much and not enough to feel positive in regard to this matter. I envy the position of those who, because they possess an intimate knowledge about certain matters connected with the merchandise they sell, or because they hold at the tips of their fingers all texts of law, imagine they are in a position to settle all these things. No. That is where lawyers and business men lose their sense of humanity, their sense of the social order. You cannot settle everything from the dollar point of view, nor from the legal point of view.

Now, Sir, that is the situation as I view it. Perhaps it is because I have not read every word of the evidence adduced before the committee.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Hear, hear.

Mr. BOURASSA: I have endeavoured to keep my mind free and broad, instead of overfeeding it at the risk of losing the proper sense of things and getting an indigestion of small matters that would entirely disturb the balance of my mind.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): You mean, of facts.

Mr. BOURASSA: No. I recognize my own limitations. I admit that I am one of the least instructed and enlightened members of this House.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. BOURASSA: But perhaps also there are in this House members who do not know everything, perhaps there are a few men, even on the side of the great Conservative party, who have not mastered all those great problems of social order as they connect with economics, with fiscal laws, with the application of the customs laws, with the balance between various kinds of taxation—all those things have to be considered. Therefore I say we are not in a position to pass judgment. My inclination, if I could find support in this House, would be to throw out the three motions. I would throw out the motion moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, (Mr. Woodsworth), although I agree with nine-tenths of it, because it is connected with concurrence in the report. I would throw out the motion of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) because it is on its face a small and narrow political manoeuvre that will defeat the object he has in view. I want to be fair, I credit him with the idea, when he started, to arrive at the truth, I believe that he wanted to do justice to legitimate trade; but I am afraid that by the force of circumstances—I would probably have done the same if I had been in his place and a member of a party—there grew a tendency to forget more and more the interests of legitimate trade and to think more and more of the illegitimate thirst of the Tory party to get into power. Of course, that is quite legitimate from his point of view, just as it is legitimate for the other gentlemen of the jury, sitting on this side of the judge, to differ from him in that respect and to think that they ought to defeat his political object. I tell him frankly, and it is just as sincere as everything I have just said, in itself the fate of this party or that party is absolutely indifferent to me, as a party.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Oh.

Mr. BOURASSA: Yes, absolutely. But being given the conditions in which we are at present, being given the mentality that has been shown by the Conservative opposition during these six months, not to speak of the past, I would give ten times as many bad votes as I might give to-night to prevent them from coming into power. But of these three motions I take the one which comes nearest to my point of view. The amendment suggested by the member for Winnipeg North Centre has as its necessary consequence that no legislative action will be taken hastily upon the findings of the committee. It means, if carried, that the report of the committee will be inoperative—not to prevent the department from adopting this or that measure for diminishing the evil of smuggling—but that no radical measure or so-called remedy will be adopted. In other words, the general conclusions of the report will not be acted upon until after the evidence is complete and we have a report, not "incomplete" but final, a report given by a body in which, even though they are judges, there may be some trace of political spirit, there are very few in Canada among the men of all races who have not some political tinge—but a body of men who, by their position and by the very power that will be given to them, will be in a position to deal with this matter in a much more impartial way than either the hon. member for St. Henri (Mr. Mercier), the hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell), or the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. They may have done the best they could, but still there are a few things which should commend themselves to the delicate conscience of some members of the Progressive party, who seem disposed to vote with the Tory party in order to avenge virtue and make all vice impossible. When it came out before that committee that the distilleries, those infamous dens of vice which the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Boutillier) painted in such dark colours yesterday, when it came out that these agencies of vice were helping the Tory party as well as the Liberal party, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) wanted to have the accounts opened in order to find the proportion of funds which went to the party of virginity and to the party of vice. But we are not in a position to know which cost the more, to get the favours of the Tory virgin or the caresses of the Liberal—well, I will not qualify it. The remainder of the committee, Liberals and Conservatives, the virtuous and the vicious, the avengers of moral right and justice as well as the depredators of public conscience, all joined together so that the people would not know how much more it cost to purchase the Conservative party than to purchase the Liberal party. Therefore, how can members of the Progressive party, whom I credit with a sincere desire to protect the morals of this country, justify a vote for this party more than the other? How can they justify themselves, any of them, in voting against the only possible suggestion so far made to keep the findings of this committee from the devil of political partisanship? This is just as bad for the morality of the country as the alcohol described by the hon. member for Vegreville, upon which a large number of the members of both sides do not show such horror when they are not making speeches; a number of hon. members even show in their speeches that they are not altogether convinced that whiskey is in itself vicious and illegal, even when it is drunk in contravention of the temperance laws of the virtuous province of Ontario.

One more point and I am finished. Another reason for which I think this inquiry should be pursued in every part of the country by a judicial tribunal instead of being passed upon by the House at this stage was pointed out by the Prime Minister. It brought shouts of protest from the other side when the Prime Minister said it was not sufficient to inquire into the province of Quebec. Let us have a real understanding; I have never stood for the protection of any crook in Quebec or elsewhere; I have perhaps denounced more malefactors of my own blood and race than any other public man in Canada, and I have taken them as they came, from both parties. But, on the other hand, using the same argument I made a few moments ago, if you want to have the public opinion of the people of Canada back of this attempt at reform, it must not be suspected that this inquiry was started or conducted—and I will not exaggerate anything—with as one of its objects, the idea of lowering the chances of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec, or if that did not succeed, enabling Tory candidates elsewhere to denounce Quebec as a den of thieves, of smugglers and of immoral public men protecting vices and violations of law. I know that is not in the mind of the hon. member for West Hamilton; I know it is not in the mind of the right hon. leader of the opposition; but they know also that there are around them men prepared to do that sort of thing just as, if the situation were reversed, there would be camp followers of the Liberal party prepared to do the same thing.

The moment the inquiry was coming to the end of its investigation of Montreal affairs, one of the Tory papers of Montreal, I do not remember whether it was the Gazette or the Star, published a communication from Ottawa saying that the committee would soon end its inquiry because it had found sufficient evidence to demonstrate the system.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Might I ask a question? Would the hon. gentleman for one moment be prepared to suggest that it was on the responsibility of any member of this committee that that paper should publish any such statement?

Mr. BOURASSA: No, not at all; I have just stated the contrary, and I have not corrected myself. I do not think it has ever entered the mind of any hon. member of the Conservative party whom I know; but circumstances are such that, if we adopt this report, the lower camp followers of both parties will be put by this House in a position to use that argument and counter-argument; and that should be avoided. Whether it means retaining this party in power or putting that party in power, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) knows that I always speak my mind, and I say that it is my earnest desire to prevent, if I can, a question of this nature being used to stir up racial prejudice and hatred.

Mr. CAHAN: I certainly have the same earnest desire.

Mr. BOURASSA: I know my hon. friend has the same desire. There is no man in the province of Quebec, perhaps, who suffers more than the hon. member, at times, from the fact that he does not always find the same sympathy, from a purely social and individual point of view, amongst French Canadians as he would otherwise find if it were not for these base processes which have been resorted to time and again by both parties. If you create a political crisis of this issue without having completed your evidence, without having probed Toronto, Vancouver and any other town east or west in the same manner as has been done in the case of Montreal, without having brought before the bar of that committee all the miscreants, to whatever race or province they belong and whatever their political affiliations, you cannot avoid it. I will not do it; the hon. member for West Hamilton will not do it in Ontario; the leader of the opposition will not do it as the head of his party, but it is bound to come. I have heard it said three hundred times at least since this committee first started: Yes, they are going to find out all about vice in Montreal, but they will not touch holy Toronto. I have heard that said in Montreal by honest people. There are a few things that have been said, and that are still being said, which justify some people in believing that there is some truth in that—not in the sense that the hon. member has rightly protested against, but truth in the sense that there are members of his party who are prepared to do that kind of thing. Already you see in various organs of opinion tentative suggestions to prepare the way for an anti-Quebec campaign, unless, of course, Quebec makes up its mind to help the Tory party, and then, of course, Quebec will be blessed just as it was blessed when it helped to throw down the Liberal party in 1911. I am not ashamed of having taken my share in that, but I admit that I felt ashamed afterwards of some of the men who made that fight with me. I have finished on that, but I repeat what I said the other day on war and peace issues, that it is far better now to face all the aspects of a position like this than to wait till the devils of racial discord are unleashed.

I sum up the whole thing. In the name of social justice and economic order, and for the sake of the proper administration of public affairs, the question whether this man or that has been indiscreet or not is a very small issue. The real issue is, since parliament has decided to get to the bottom of this, let us go to the bottom and let us come back next session, either under a Conservative or a Liberal administration; and in cool blood and after due reflection, let us pass such legislation and adopt such regulations as will command the confidence of the public conscience of the people of Canada at large, and not simply of one party or the other.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Lunenburg) moved:

That owing to the late period of the session all the private bills received from the Senate and not yet referred to a select standing committee be read a first and a second time and referred to the select standing committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

He said: There are certain bills yet to be referred to the select standing committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 206 (from the Senate), for the relief of Ethel Clementina Craig-Williams.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 207 (from the Senate), for the relief of Frederick George Jones.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 208 (from the Senate), for the relief of Ida Lula Dupuis Murchison.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 209 (from the Senate), for the relief of Gladys Andrea Boyle.—Mr. Lennox.

Bill No. 210 (from the Senate), for the relief of Edward Barker.—Mr. Ross (Kingston).

Bill No. 211 (from the Senate), for the relief of Joan Henderson.—Mr. Ladner.

Bill No. 212 (from the Senate), for the relief of Vina Kennedy (otherwise known as Vina Dorothy Kennedy).—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 213 (from the Senate), for the relief of Sadie Joy Downey.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 214 (from the Senate), for the relief of Aimée Glenholme Young.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 215 (from the Senate), for the relief of Alberta Lutz.—Mr. Mewburn.

Bill No. 216 (from the Senate), for the relief of George Frederick Adams.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto).

Bill No. 217 (from the Senate), for the relief of Edward Saville.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto).

Bill No. 218 (from the Senate), for the relief of Leslie Ellis Noble.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 219 (from the Senate), for the relief of Cecil Chester Richardson.—Mr. Arthurs.

Bill No. 220 (from the Senate), for the relief of Manford York.—Mr. Harris.

Bill No. 221 (from the Senate), for the relief of Robert Fisher.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 222 (from the Senate), for the relief of James Alfred McCabe.—Mr. Church.

Bill No. 223 (from the Senate), for the relief of Dorothy Terry.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 224 (from the Senate), for the relief of Lillie May Brown Nichols.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 225 (from the Senate), for the relief of Hazen Pearl Clarke Pearcy.—Mr. Geary.

14011—320

Bill No. 226 (from the Senate), for the relief of Edith Swartz.—Mr. Hocken.

Bill No. 227 (from the Senate), for the relief of James Gibb Erskine.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 228 (from the Senate), for the relief of Ernest Johnson.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 229 (from the Senate), for the relief of May Elizabeth Chambers.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 230 (from the Senate), for the relief of Maxime Demers.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 231 (from the Senate), for the relief of James Edward Barnaby.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 232 (from the Senate), for the relief of Joseph Azarie Handfield.—Mr. McPhee.

SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 194, for the relief of Gwendolen McLachlin.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 195, for the relief of Jessie Evis.—Mr. Arthurs.

Bill No. 196, for the relief of Max Gertler.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No 197, for the relief of Florence May Hicks.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto).

Bill No. 198, for the relief of Ruth May Harrington.—Mr. Edwards (South Waterloo).

Bill No. 199, for the relief of Edith Maude Bull.—Mr. Kaiser.

Bill No. 200, for the relief of Joseph Bernard Hoodless.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 201, for the relief of Amelia Chester.—Mr. McClenaghan.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE— THIRD READING

Bill No. 174, to incorporate The Detroit and Windsor Subway Company.—Sir Henry Drayton.

THE BRONSON COMPANY

Mr. STEWART McCLENAGHAN (Ottawa) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 113, respecting The Bronson Company.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

RED LAKE AND NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY

The House resumed, from June 22, consideration in committee of Bill No. 95, to incorporate the Red Lake and Northwestern Railway Company.—Mr. Heenan—Mr. Duff in the chair.

[Mr. Duff.]

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. HEAPS: I wish to make one or two remarks arising out of some statements made by me when we last had this bill under consideration. I stated on a previous occasion that Manitoba was guaranteeing bonds to the extent of $25,000 a mile for a railway to go into this area. That statement seems to have been challenged by some hon. gentleman. Therefore I have tried to confirm this statement and I find it is correct. I have been unable, as I said before, to obtain an actual copy of the bill; but looking up the files of the Manitoba Free Press in the Parliamentary Library I find that the day before the Manitoba legislature prorogued a bill to that effect was passed. This House would be creating a very bad precedent if it were at the present time to give its consent to the construction of another railway into the same area when one of the provinces of the Dominion has already agreed in some way, shape or form that I am unable to state to-night, to guarantee $25,000 per mile for the construction of a railway into that same area.

Mr. CAHILL: What does the hon. member mean by a guarantee of $25,000 per mile?

Mr. HEAPS: I believe a company was to be incorporated in Manitoba to build as far as the Manitoba boundary. If we look at a map of the Red Lake district we shall find that for the purpose of being able to get to a large centre of population for its supplies, the nearest point is the city of Winnipeg. On account of that fact I believe a company was to be incorporated to build a railway and Manitoba agreed to guarantee bonds to the extent of $25,000 per mile as far as the Manitoba boundary. That bill was passed during the last session of the Manitoba legislature which closed about the end of April.

This is something more than a mere branch line that we are asked to sanction the construction of to-night. I think we were told the last time the bill was under consideration that the charter was for a line to be built a distance of from 350 to 400 miles. A line 350 miles in length is more than a mere branch line. This bill has had very little consideration in committee. Another reason that was given for the construction of the line was the fact that there were 3,500 prospectors in the particular area that the railway was going to traverse. If this government is going to give charters for the construction of railways in every place in Canada where prospectors go in, we shall be doing nothing but issuing charters in all parts of the Dominion. I would prefer to wait in regard to this charter until another year, until we see what happens regarding the proposed connection with the Red Lake area from the city of Winnipeg.

Another reason why I think there is good ground for objection to this particular bill is that if we grant this charter, this railway will be given the right to traverse the same line and area as the Canadian National Railways traverse in northern Manitoba. It was stated here the other day that the Premier of Ontario had given his consent or voiced no opposition to this particular measure. I wonder why the promoters of this bill have not consulted Manitoba, which is vitally interested in the development of the northern part of Manitoba.

Manitoba is vitally interested in the completion of the Hudson Bay railway; yet this charter is to be given for a railway to go into The Pas and in the direction of the Hudson bay itself. In other words, although there are members in different parts of this House who doubt the feasibility of completing the railway to the Hudson bay because they think it will be a white elephant, yet there are others who come along at this juncture and want to build another railway into the same area. In other words in an area where some hon. members think it is impossible for one railway to pay, we are asked to grant another charter with the result that two lines may be built in the same area where it is contended that one line cannot pay. We should not be in too great a hurry to grant charters, because every time we grant a charter for a railway into a particular area we give the stamp of approval of parliament for the construction of that railway. I do not think it is a wise policy for this House to give the stamp of approval on railways until we have far more information before us than we have at the present time.

I object to this charter being granted for the additional reason that Manitoba has not as yet had an opportunity of saying whether it is in favour of this railway or not, and until such time as I know what the opinion of the Manitoba government is I feel bound to voice my opposition to this measure. Those who are interested in the passage of this bill through this House would be doing no hardship to the promoters of this company if they had to withdraw it at the present juncture and bring it before the House again at the next session of parliament. Very little would be lost because those who feel bound to voice opposition to this bill would perhaps be in some way convinced as to its feasibility. In the second place it would give Manitoba an opportunity of determining whether or not it should oppose the bill.

Another reason is the fact that it would enable us to see whether the company which is about to be incorporated in Manitoba will go ahead with its project, and whether Manitoba will be liable for the $25,000 per mile guarantee in accordance with the bill which was passed at the last session of the provincial legislature. I feel I would have to voice my opposition this evening even to the extent of talking this bill out.

Mr. HEENAN: I have already spoken on this bill a couple of times, and I had it in mind to say just what the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) has said for me, but I hesitated to say it. I think anyone who has followed his remarks will now be of the same opinion that I am, namely, that this is a fight between the interests of Manitoba, which is desirous of building into Ontario, and the people of Ontario who desire to develop Ontario's own natural resources. That has always been the situation regarding the northern part of Ontario. Every time that we have endeavoured to develop northern Ontario we have obstruction from Manitoba, guardedly or unguardedly. The hon. member, contrary to some of his friends on the other side, has not argued in favor of public ownership in this regard, although he is a public ownership man, but he has argued that a private concern which has gone to the government of Manitoba and induced them to give a guarantee of $25,000 a mile for the building of a railway should receive consideration ahead of a concern in Ontario which desires to build a railroad into the Ontario mining area without any government guarantee. I think we have now a sufficiently strong case to show that no hon. gentleman opposite who has any regard for the province of Ontario and its development should vote against this measure. There is no question in my mind, any more than there is in the minds of the people of the part of Ontario affected that interests in Manitoba desire to tap the mineral wealth of Ontario and direct it into Manitoba channels.

Mr. HEAPS: If that is the case will the hon. gentleman explain why the same interests are seeking to build a railway which will tap the natural resources of Ontario?

Mr. HEENAN: The "same interests" are not asking to tap the natural resources of Manitoba.

Mr. HEAPS: I beg to contradict the hon. gentleman. Authority is asked for in the bill to go to The Pas in the province of Manitoba.

Mr. HEENAN The object is to build into the Red lake area first. In order to carry out that purpose they have to go through another province than Ontario. In view of that fact they have to get a charter from this government.

Mr. HEAPS: Why did they not go to the government of Ontario?

Mr. HEENAN: You had better put that question to the promoters of the bill. I cannot conceive that the rules of this House will permit the hon. member to talk out this bill, although he threatens he will do that. Surely the fate of the bill ought to be settled on its merits. If the rules of the House permit a bill to be talked out, without its being discussed on its merits, then those rules should be altered. When the measure was being considered in the Railway committee all kinds of obstacles were raised to its passage. First of all it was said that the opinion of the government of Ontario should be obtained with respect to it. This argument was urged by Ontario members and I have no complaint to make of that. Those hon. gentlemen wanted to know what the policy of the Ontario government was in connection with the bill. That information has been vouchsafed. Then a desire was expressed to know what the policy of the Dominion government and Sir Henry Thornton was in the same connection. That information has been given also. Finally the measure was remitted to the House, and now that we are in committee on it, instead of considering each clause of the bill on its merits there is discussion once more as to the principle embodied in the bill. Surely we ought to consider on its merits a bill which was passed by the Railway committee on a vote, I think, of nineteen to nine and been given a second reading by this House.

Mr. HEAPS: I cannot let some statements made by the hon. member pass without contradiction. He says that Manitoba interests are opposing this bill. Such statements are entirely out of place.

Mr. HEENAN: I did not say that.

Mr. HEAPS: I wrote down the statement made by the hon. member and he said it was "obstruction coming from Manitoba interests." I am not obstructing the bill on behalf of any Manitoba interest; I am acting entirely in the interests of the province of Manitoba as a whole. It may be true that I am opposing some interests in the province of Ontario, but I really do not know at this hour what interests are behind the bill. For all I know those interests may be interests of Backus and if that is the case I would oppose the bill a thousand times more strongly than I intend to do at the present time. So far as I know there is no obstruction from any interests of the province of Manitoba. Certainly I have received no instructions from anybody in that province to oppose the measure, but I do know this: a bill was passed at the last session of the Manitoba legislature giving a guarantee of $25,000 a mile towards constructing a railway to the provincial boundary; and unless there is some representation from the government of Manitoba agreeing to this bill I think I am perfectly justified in opposing it. What does the bill contemplate? It distinctly states that it is for the construction of a line to a point at or near Red Lake, a distance of about 100 miles, then in a generally northerly and westerly direction to a point on the Hudson bay division of the Canadian National Railway at or east of The Pas in the province of Manitoba. Now, if I am to take the correct inference from the statements of the hon. member, the only reason this clause was put into the bill was in order to obtain a Dominion charter. I think the statements of the hon. gentleman afford sufficient reason for the House to reject this bill. In other words, there is absolutely no intention on the part of this company of building into the province of Manitoba; there is no intention to build into the district of The Pas, and the granting of this charter would prevent the development of that district by others at some future time. Certainly no bill should be passed containing provisions which are not likely to be carried out. If the promoters have no intention of going to the province of Manitoba as the hon. member states, such a provision is merely camouflage.

Mr. HEENAN: I did not say anything of the sort.

Mr. HEAPS: I did not say my hon. friend spoke of it as camouflage; that is my own statement. But he did say that the provision was put in for the purpose of getting a Dominion charter.

Now if the promoters are going to confine their operations purely to Ontario, why did they not go to the Ontario government and get a provincial charter? Then there would not have been any necessity for introducing the present bill in this House. The bill has been before the Railway committee on two occasions. The first time it was thrown out, I do not know for what reason. When it came back to the committee a second time it was passed and now comes before this House. We have as yet received no information as to who is behind the bill or who is going to finance the contemplated work; we have no information except what is contained in the clauses of the bill. I felt impelled to rise in order to contradict the statements of the hon. member, which statements, in my opinion, contain sufficient reason why this bill should be rejected.

Mr. EVANS: I rise again to oppose this bill, not because of any personal or private interest but simply on general principles. I believe with the advocate of the measure that it should be accepted or rejected on its merits. I intend to speak briefly on those merits once more, but I would have thought that those who have this project in hand would have seen fit to withdraw the bill, seeing that it has been considered so many times by the Railway committee and by the House and has failed of acceptance. I am rather glad that this discussion has taken place because I believe it will result in the establishment of a railway policy for the Dominion which ought to be a guide for us in future applications for railway charters. The people of Canada have loaded themselves with a railway burden; they have plenty of trouble to ponder over for another generation or two owing to the indiscriminate granting of charters of this kind in the past throughout th[illegible]ion. The people of this country are already sufficiently burdened with a debt of considerably over $2,000,000,000 through our railway system, and this has been brought about simply by small beginnings such as this charter represents.

Regarding railway service, this country is obligated to do two things. In the first place, we have been repeatedly told by financiers, stockholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and many others who favour private ownership, that a 10 per cent dividend must be paid on the capital stock of that company to maintain the financial credit and integrity of Canada. If the present railway rates are not sufficient to do this, they must be raised, as they were in war time and since by the modification of certain statuory protection which the west enjoyed under the Crowsnest pass agreement. One thing is certain, we have been paying a handsome dividend to the privately owned Canadian Pacific Railway, while the government system has involved us in a deficit year after year, running all the way from $30,000,000 to $60,000,000. We have been trying to make a great transportation system out of these scattered branches of our Canadian National Railways. All these branches were indiscriminately chartered by past governments. The other obligation is to provide a service which, because of vested interests created by such indiscriminate railway construction, causes an overhead expense which cannot be met out of earnings, yet on the other system we are, through the people's industry, creating big dividends for private shareholders. This, I might say, is one of my chief objections to granting a charter for a railway which begins nowhere and ends nowhere, and is bound to be a burden to the country later on, when we shall have to take it over and perhaps purchase the charter from those who are now seeking it. The dividend on the privately owned system and the deficit on the government owned system is a super tax on the earnings of the people. Both are the result of past mistakes, which this Red Lake project seems to repeat. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that had there been one complete system of government railways the railway year of 1925 would have shown a surplus instead of a deficit. That is, the people in primary production and through our export trade have paid for railway service over $60,000,000 more than was necessary had there been a complete system of government ownership of railways. This added to the saving which the elimination of duplication of service would have effected would have greatly lightened our burden of taxation to the extent, I believe, of about one-third of what is required for administration purposes this year, or about $120,000,000.

I have said that this parliament will have to formulate a railway policy. In confirmation of this let me quote a paragraph from a report of a royal commission on which Sir Henry Drayton and Mr. Acworth sat some few years ago. Regarding the ownership and control of our railway systems they advised:

> That henceforth there shall be in Canada only two railway systems, the one consisting of the Canadian Pacific under its present management and control, and the other made up of the present government railways, the Grand Trunk system, including the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the Canadian Northern.

That the promoters of this wildcat scheme —for it is nothing more—for the exploitation of the people for private gain persistently push this project is evidence of the profits they expect to make when the charter is obtained. When this bill was before the House the last time the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), I think, told us that the Premier of Ontario had no objections to it, and that the Canadian National Railway board was not even interested. But this is the people's business, and it is parliament that should decide whether or not this charter shall be granted, not the Minister of Railways or the board of the Canadian National Railways. I would ask hon. members to consider this bill very seriously and not grant a charter which will aggravate our railway problem, for we are bound to be faced with heavier deficits if we indiscriminately grant charters of this kind.

Mr. HEAPS: Clause 1, Mr. Chairman, which is now under discussion, gives the names of the gentlemen seeking incorporation as John H. Cassidy, Charles B. Hibbard, and Frederick R. Brown, all of the city of Montreal, and D'Arcy Scott, of the city of Ottawa, "together with such other persons as may become shareholders of the company." I am wondering who is behind this scheme. I have become a little more suspicious since being informed a few moments ago that there is no intention of building this railway into the province of Manitoba, but merely from a point somewhere in the township of Wabigoon to a point touching Red lake somewhere in Ontario. If such is the case I think we should have a little more information than is contained in clause 1, and I would like to know if those promoting this bill can give us that further information.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. HEAPS: Could I have the information I am asking for?

Mr. HEENAN: I cannot give any information other than what was given by the lawyer, Mr. D'Arcy Scott, when he was before the Private Bills committee; he gave the names of the bankers who were behind it. My hon. friend said a while ago that if he thought Mr. Backus was behind it he would oppose the bill. I want to point out that Mr. Backus now has authority to build a railway through the province of Ontario, and this proposed railway will be in competition therewith. I did not say, as the hon. member suggests, that it was not intended to build into Manitoba; I said it was necessary to go into two provinces before coming to this House for a charter. The committee was given full information as to the people behind the bill by the lawyer who had it in charge and by the promoter himself. I have nothing more to say; I am not going to talk my own bill out. If there are any questions, I will be glad to answer them.

[Mr. Evans.]

Mr. HEAPS: The only information the hon. member can give is that Mr. Backus is not behind the bill, together with the additional statement that the committee was told of the bankers who were behind the bill, but that is not sufficient information. I think we should be given more than the name of the lawyer who appeared before the committee and the names of three individuals of whom we know nothing. I see the lawyer's name mentioned here as one of the promoters of the bill; I believe it is quite usual in an application for a charter to have the name of the lawyer appear, but there is nothing to show that this charter if granted will not subsequently be disposed of to the highest bidder, and there is nothing in this bill to compel the company to actually construct one mile of a railway.

If it were only intended to construct this railway in Ontario that would be a very good reason for the bill being withdrawn and the required power obtained from the Ontario legislature. There would be very little time lost, because I understand that the Ontario legislature meets early in the year and continues in session for several months. Under this charter a period of twelve months is given in which construction must be commenced, and if that is not done the charter automatically lapses. But let me point out to the committee that the twelve months really amounts to two sessions of this House; after granting the charter we will not know definitely whether or not anything has been done until after next session and the probabilities are that the charter would not be allowed to lapse but that this House would be requested to extend that time. It is stated in one of the clauses that the sum of $100,000 must be spent by this company during the twelve months, but it does not mean that that amount must be spent in actual construction. That money can be easily spent in lawyers' and promoters' fees and in other matters of that kind; then the company can come back to the House and say they have spent the required amount of money and ask for an extension of the charter. That would establish a very bad precedent and I think we should demand something more than that.

In addition, no good reason has been presented as yet why a charter should be granted to cover the Manitoba area. A good case could be made out for a railway to enter the Red lake area and possibly I would not oppose the bill, but when power is requested to go for a distance of 400 miles when 150 miles would be ample, I feel bound to offer my opposition, not merely because I am in favour of the principles of public ownership but because I feel that the promoters are asking for far greater power than they actually require. Unfortunately the promoters of this bill cannot give us the information we asked for, and I think that information is very germane to the whole bill. We have no assurance in any way that those behind the bill will proceed with the construction of the road, and I think under the circumstances we should not allow the bill to proceed at all until they first go to the Ontario legislature and have the measure passed there.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, the letter from the Premier of Ontario to the committee in which he stated that he had no objection to this bill had been read to the House. I have not seen that letter nor have I heard it read here. It is rather strange that although the Ontario legislature began its session about the time this House met those responsible for this bill did not see their way clear to go to the Ontario house and secure the rights they are asking for here. It is one of the unfortunate things in our legislative structure that two bodies should have the power to grant charters for the construction of railways; that is another reason in addition to those enumerated by the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) why we are in such difficulties at present. Here on the one hand we have all the provinces with authority to grant railway charters and give guarantees, and on the other hand we have the Dominion parliament granting exactly the same privileges. It has been stated that the only intention of the promoters is to tap the Red Lake mining area, and to give the prospectors there railway facilities. I think this is a purely provincial matter and should not have been brought before this House. From the statements submitted here it appears that the reason this charter has been asked for in this parliament is to overcome probably some legal technicalities, and if that is so I think it a very good reason why parliament should not grant a charter of this description. When the bill comes before the House we are informed by the hon. gentleman in charge of it that this is only put into the bill in order to overcome certain technicalities, in order that the House itself might provide this company with a charter to construct the road, which is to be purely within the province of Ontario. If it is going to be entirely within the province of Ontario, the promoters of this railway had a perfect right to go before the Ontario legislature at its last session and secure a charter from that legislature, and then it would not have been necessary for them to come to this House at all. We have had this bill before the House three times now, and several hours of valuable time have been taken up discussing it; it has been twice before the committee, and there does not seem to be much chance of it passing to-night.

Mr. McGIBBON: You are deliberately obstructing it.

Mr. HEAPS: I may be in a sense, but that does not mean to say that I am not within my rights. One of the reasons why I am obstructing this bill—I am perfectly frank to admit it—is that the House has not the information to enable it to pass intelligently upon it.

Mr. HEENAN: Is the hon. member a member of the Railway committee?

Mr. HEAPS: Yes.

Mr. HEENAN: Then if he had attended the meetings of that committee he would have got all the information he desires.

Mr. McGIBBON: He does not want it.

Mr. HEAPS: It has been stated that I did not attend the Railway committee meetings. Another hon. gentleman has stated that I did not want the information. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, I cannot be in two places at the same time. I am a member of the committee on National Railways and Shipping, and also a member of the Railway committee, and if I could have managed to have cut myself in two and have one-half of me attend the Railway committee and the other half the committee on Railways and Shipping, I might have been able to attend both committees at one and the same time. The Chairman of the committee on National Railways is here, and he can tell you that I did not miss one of the meetings of that committee. It so happened that the Railway committee, when this bill came before it, was holding its meetings at the same time as the other committee, and consequently I found it impossible to attend the meetings which my hon. friend from Kenora says I should have attended. I want to assure him as well as other hon. gentlemen that I have not refused to attend a single meeting of any committee this session which I have found it possible to attend, but some mornings there have been meetings of three committees of which I was a member meeting at one and the same time, and I thought it better, as a member, to understand thoroughly the workings of one committee—

Mr. McGIBBON: My hon. friend is deliberately obstructing this bill after he admits that he does not know anything about it. How much longer is he going to continue to talk of something he knows nothing about?

Mr. HEAPS: Three minutes. I did not say I did not know anything of what I was talking about.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): It is about true.

Mr. McGIBBON: You admitted it.

Mr. HEAPS: What I said was that the House did not have sufficient information before it.

Mr. McGIBBON: Speak for yourself. You are not the House.

Mr. HEAPS: I have the floor, and I am expressing my opinion. You can express yours when I am through.

Mr. HEENAN: I think you could save five minutes of the time of the House, Mr. Chairman, if you would call it nine o'clock.

Mr. McGIBBON: We will get even with the hon. gentleman on some other occasion.

Mr. HEAPS: That is a threat.

Progress reported.

CUSTOMS INQUIRY

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE AND AMENDMENTS THERETO

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mercier (St. Henri) for concurrence in the report of the special committee appointed to investigate the Department of Customs and Excise, the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. Mr. Stevens, and the proposed amendment to the amendment of Mr. Woodsworth.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, in entering upon a discussion of the resolution, the amendment and the sub-amendment now before this House I feel a deeper sense of personal responsibility than I have felt on almost any other occasion in my life, which has been one of varied experiences and of grave responsibilities.

I represent, Sir, in this House a constituency in the province of Quebec, and it has been suggested that a vote against the sub-amendment and a vote for the amendment may be deemed to be a reflection upon the honour and reputation of that great province. That, Sir, I specifically deny. I 9 p.m. have had intimate acquaintance with the leading men of that province during the past forty years. I have had the esteem of a number of my fellow-citizens in that province, and I have given to a greater number my esteem and personal affection, and therefore, although I am an English-speaking citizen of that province, and although I think there are a few in that province of its English-speaking citizens who are better acquainted than I am with its language, its history, its literature and its traditions, I feel a sense of jealousy for its good name and reputation, and for that good name and reputation I am prepared to stand at all times and on all occasions.

I also have, as I stated in an address which I delivered to this House on February 5th of the present session, a personal esteem not only for many of the members representing that province in this House, but for the members of the ministry who represent that province, and I think I can say, after a pretty careful reading of the evidence, that I do not find in that evidence any fact reflecting upon the personal honour of those members of whom I spoke on February 5th—the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin), the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon); nor do I suggest that the facts reflect severely upon the personal honour of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin), at the present time. In regard to the Minister of Customs, I felt all through this debate, having read the evidence, a measure of personal sympathy, in view of the facts which he had stated to the House: that he had just entered upon his duties as a member of the government at the time that the Robichaud letter, so-called, had been received from the hon. member for Gloucester; that he had but a day or two in this city; that he was pressed with the business of his new department; that numerous letters had been placed before him, and that it could not be expected that he could give that time and attention to the reading of letters that he might have done in less busy times and calmer moments. Although there were numerous discrepancies between the statement he made in that respect, as pointed out by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen), and the evidence which he had given personally before the Customs committee, and some discrepancies between his later statement and the statement he gave to the House when the motion for the appointment of that committee was made, yet after many years' experience in the courts, having been myself called upon to give evidence on many occasions, I am prepared to believe that the most intelligent witness in the witness box may at times be unintentionally guilty of inconsistencies and verbal contradictions in his evidence. But what impressed me most, and what finally decided my opinion, was the statement of the hon. minister himself to this House in the debate on June 22. The member for Vancouver North (Mr. Donaghy), who sat on the committee and who is a political friend and associate of the hon. Minister of Customs, said in reference to the Robichaud letter:

> The sting in the whole thing is contained in the letter which Mr. Robichaud wrote. We cannot hold anybody responsible for writing a letter like that other than the man who wrote it. Nobody with any sense of public honour would attempt to justify the expressions used by Mr. Robichaud in that letter and I am not going to attempt to justify them. My self-respect will not permit it. The sting, I say, is in that letter and it is contained in these words in the letter which Robichaud wrote to Mr. Bureau, not to Mr. Boivin:
> Mr. Aziz is of the highest help for us during this campaign, and we cannot do without his services.

That is the sting. I could well believe that if I had been in the position of the hon. Minister of Customs, with all the cares and distractions upon my mind which he had at the time, I might justify, on account of the conditions prevailing at the time, the instructions given through an officer of his department in the Aziz case. But the hon. Minister of Customs, in making his statement on June 22 to this House, said:

> But I say now that if I had seen the request—

There had been discrepancies in his statement previously as to whether he had seen the letter and as to whether seeing the letter meant that he knew its contents:

> But I say now that if I had seen the request and been cognizant of all the other circumstances my conduct would have been the same; I will say further that if this request had come to me from a Conservative member of parliament, my conduct and my reply would have been absolutely the same.

I do not say, I would regret to say, that the incidents of that case reflect severely upon the personal honour of the Minister of Customs, but the spirit which he showed in that vaunting statement to this House, sitting in judgment on this case, shows that at the present time, at least, he is not actuated by that spirit which should actuate a minister in his high position in the administration of the acts, matters and things that come from day to day before the Minister of Customs. I think the attitude he should have taken, in view of the facts that are before him now, and I think the attitude he should take now in view of that statement, is to withdraw from the ministry, to send in his resignation, to relieve, so far as he can, the members of the government and the Prime Minister from the responsibility for approving the statement which he now makes—that even if he had been fully cognizant of the facts he would have acted in the same way as he did act under the circumstances. I have not lost my personal respect for the Minister of Customs. I know he is a younger man than myself, of great talents in many respects, talents which might be used to assist in the administration of the government of this country, talents which might be used in the public service, in other relationships and other spheres. But I do hope that a temporary absence from the ministry of this country will somewhat reform his spirit, will give him time for reflection, and that the time may come when he will withdraw those words and be in a position to resume again his high place in a position of public trust in this country.

The position in which the House finds itself to-night is this: A committee appointed by this House has heard the evidence and has made its report, a report which has met with the express approval of the Prime Minister, a report which the Prime Minister says he and his government and his party are prepared to endorse by their votes to-night. Paragraph 10 of the report so approved and so submitted contains this statement:

> 6. The evidence submitted to the committee leads to the general conclusion that for a long time the Department of Customs and Excise had been slowly degenerating in efficiency and that the process was greatly accelerated in the last few years. Apparently the Hon. Jacques Bureau, then Minister of Customs, failed to appreciate and properly discharge the responsibilities of his office and as a result there was a lack of efficient, continuous and vigorous control of subordinates by the headquarters staff at Ottawa.

Dealing with the administration of that department, the report also finds that in cases where a report was required from subordinate officers to comply and to conform with the well understood wishes of the minister, although in contravention of the facts then on the files of the department, subordinates were induced to make reports in order to sustain or to vindicate the action of the minister. That shows a thorough demoralization of that department at headquarters. On the other hand, with regard to the administration of that department in the matter of excise it is stated that orders in council had been passed, beginning on April 17, 1924, under which in the opinion of the committee unmatured spirits unfit for human consumption were freed for public consumption to the injury of the public health. Further this is what the committee find in the administration of that department at the customs ports of the country:

10. The committee find that it is the common practice of the department to grant clearances to vessels wholly or partly laden with liquor for the United States, or allegedly bound for a foreign port, but admittedly sailing to "rum rows", and that false landing certificates have been produced to obtain cancellation of bonds given for foreign export of cargoes so cleared.

In the evidence adduced before that committee and as showing that the reflections, such as they are, contained in the evidence and in the report, bear upon other provinces, bear with terrific force upon my native province of Nova Scotia, we have the evidence adduced that vessels laden with thousands of cases of liquor would leave the port of Halifax for ports in South America, in the United States or in the West Indies, in many cases voyages requiring weeks and months for their completion, and would return within twenty-four hours to the port of Halifax with landing certificates to release their bonds, landing certificates which never could have been obtained from Lima, Peru, from Nassau in the Bahamas or from any other port to which they sailed; and that officials and officers of the Customs department knew that in accepting those certificates they were giving facilities for forgery, fraud and perjury and admitting those fraudulent, false and perjured certificates as reliable documents on which and receiving which the Customs department could relieve the parties of the bonds which they had given to the department for the faithful export and landing of those liquors at the port at which they were alleged to be destined.

Those facts must have been known to every official of that department; they were current in the press of the country. I know during the past summer when I was engaged before the courts in Halifax and in some proceedings there it was a gibe on the streets, a gibe of which you heard in the recesses of the courts of the city, that fraud, forgery and perjury were being committed with the knowledge of the customs officials of that great port. Although I regret to say it, and although I believe the general reputation of my native province is equal to that of Ontario or of Quebec, if there is any reflection upon a province in this report and in the facts adduced before the committee and found to be true in the report, it reflects as greatly upon my native province of Nova Scotia, where public morality as a whole is as high as in any other province of Canada.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Why did the facts which were alleged come from the city of Montreal? Montreal is not the province of Quebec. Montreal is a great commercial city, it is true; but the high public morality, the virtue of private living and life which characterize that great province, may not be so well exemplified in some of the worst quarters of the great city of Montreal. But because we have wrong-doing in some of the purlieus of Montreal I defy any intelligent man to say that the bringing of those facts to light from the purlieus of that city casts a reflection upon me or my fellow citizens of Montreal.

In addition, the report of the committee which has been approved by the Prime Minister and by the government, as I said, asks for further investigation into the facts, and I as a citizen of Quebec wish to know what are the facts with regard to Windsor, Vancouver and other ports of entry in the western provinces. The committee, headed by one of the most intelligent young men representing my city in this House, reported as follows:

12. . . . With reference to the distilleries, the committee has not had time to investigate them all. The committee recommends that a thorough audit and examination be made of the records and accounts of all the distilleries.

14. The committee recommends that the conduct of the officers at the port of Windsor, Ontario, and other important ports, should be further investigated and that the services of such of them as are found guilty of evasion of duty should be dispensed with.

The committee knew well that having been engaged for some five months in this inquiry they had not completed all the evidence available, and they urgently demanded, so far as they could, that this House and the government should insist upon further inquiry and investigation being made. But the government has the full duty and responsibility with regard to that investigation. The government has the authority, without any further legislation or direction from this House, to appoint a royal or other commission under the Inquiries Act to make full, careful and complete inquiry into all these transactions at other ports.

Now in regard to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) the House is asked to approve of the following:

The evidence further discloses that ministerial action has been influenced by the improper pressure of political associates and friends of the minister, or acting minister, administering the department, resulting in the suspension and in some instances the abandonment of prosecutions against those charged with violation of the statutes, and in the loss of revenue to the country. Moreover, successful appeals have been made to the minister and acting minister administering the department to improperly interfere with the course of justice between the conviction of the offenders and the execution of judgment thereon.

With regard to that I wish to say that the argument that under previous administrations there has been wrongdoing, where corrupt acts have been committed by members of the ministry or employees of the department, is not convincing to me. Under the conditions which prevail in Canada to-day—and I will leave the province of Quebec—under the conditions which prevail in my native province of Nova Scotia the rum traffic, unhindered, is ruining homes and ruining lives, and steps should be taken to enforce the law in that province. As to the appeals which have been made under previous administrations, all I have to say is, that although the evidence adduced by the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) is not convincing to me until I have read and analysed it, previous wrongdoing does not justify the action of this House in refusing to condemn similar practices to-day. If we are coming to the stage that the public honour of this country is not to be maintained, that the moral spirit of this country is not to be maintained, because in times past there has been wrongdoing by Conservative administrations which justifies wrongdoing by a Liberal administration to-day, then I say I am prepared to abandon every other political relation I have in life and join some independent party in this country who will see that the law is properly administered, irrespective of what has been done in the past either by Conservatives or Liberals.

The amendment further declares that:

The Prime Minister and the government had knowledge for some considerable time of the rapid degeneration of the Department of Customs and Excise, and their failure to take prompt and effective remedial action is wholly indefensible.

I think it has been shown by the letters produced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) himself that his government were very fully informed, as I will show in a few minutes, of the material facts of the case. Then the amendment declares:

The conduct of the present minister of the department, the Hon. George H. Boivin,. . . . is utterly unjustifiable.

His action was unjustifiable if he had been thoroughly informed of the facts; and now that he, before the high court of parliament, has declared that his action would have been the same if he had known the facts in all their ramifications and all their bearing, I have no hesitation in saying his conduct was not justified. And yet when I say that I make this reservation; I do not believe that is a finding, as hon. gentlemen opposite have said, to the utter dishonour of the Minister of Customs. I hope and believe that when he has had time to reflect upon his admissions before this House he will regret such admissions and regret the spirit which prompted them as much as I, standing in my place in this House to-night, sincerely regret them.

Next the amendment declares:

Your committee deplores the practice, as revealed by the evidence, of certain men influential in public life to direct appeals to the minister to relax and depart from the proper administration of his department for reasons of political expediency.

Your committee is of the opinion that this practice is detrimental to the best interests of the country and prejudicial to the administration of the department.

Now, the sub-amendment, which Your Honour has declared to be in order, in the main asks that clause 6 in the amendment be deleted and in lieu thereof the following inserted as an addition:

Your committee deplores the common practice, as revealed by the evidence, of members of parliament and others appealing to the minister to relax the regulations of the department for personal advantage or political expediency.

I entirely agree with that statement, but why, by inserting that, should we remove all reflection upon ministers of the crown who give effect to such appeals, and without whose definite action such appeals would be entirely in vain? Why is it that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), who proposed that subamendment, wishes to remove that reflection upon the government of the country, and every reflection upon a minister of the crown who had given effect to sordid, personal appeals of that character? Therefore my position is this: that with respect to the contents of the subamendment proposed I would be prepared to vote in favour of those in the main, but they can and should only be given effect to as an addition to and not as a substitution for the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens). And if the government wish to give full effect to the opinion of this House I believe they will now agree and will solicit the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to withdraw the subamendment as a substitution for the amendment and add it to the amendment in order to give it full and complete effect. In so far as the subamendment proposes that a royal commission should be appointed in order to continue the investigations, that is a matter entirely within the discretion of the government; it has full power and authority to appoint such a commission.

But, Mr. Speaker, although the Prime Minister has declared his approval and the approval, I understand, of his government, of the general recommendations and the statements contained in the report of the committee that:

> The evidence submitted to the committee leads to the general conclusion that for a long time the Department of Customs and Excise had been slowly degenerating in efficiency and that the process was greatly accelerated in the last few years.
