OFFICIAL REPORT

Wednesday, June 9, 1926.

The House met at two o'clock.

FUEL SUPPLY COMMITTEE

Mr. E. A. LAPIERRE (Nipissing) presented the second report of the special committee appointed to investigate the fuel supply of Canada, as follows:

Your committee recommend to the House that they be given leave to sit while the House is in session.

He said: By unanimous consent of the House I beg to move:

That the second report of the special committee appointed to investigate the fuel supply of Canada presented this day be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY COMMITTEE

Mr. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): On behalf of the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Cahill) I beg to present the third report of the select standing committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

EXCISE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. GEORGE H. BOIVIN (Minister of Customs and Excise) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 188 to amend the Excise Act.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Explain.

Mr. BOIVIN: At the present time there are customs bonded warehouses at many seaports where there are no excise warehouses. Imported tobacco, cigars and cigarettes are supplied as ships' stores from these customs warehouses, and no excise warehouses being available at these points, American goods are sold where Canadian goods cannot be sold. The Canadian manufacturers have complained of this discrimination, and the proposed bill is merely to provide that tobacco and cigars may be removed from excise warehouses to customs bonded warehouses, in order to place our Canadian manufacturers in the same position as the American manufacturer. There is a second clause in the bill providing that on all cigars the rate of excise shall be $3 per thousand. At present the rate is $3 on all cigars except those put up in very small packages of ten or less, and for some unexplained reason the latter have paid the higher rate of $4, although the cost of packing must be considerably more. The object of the bill is to do away with the discrimination. There are no other clauses.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read a second time?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Now.

On motion of Mr. Boivin the bill was read the second time.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is the bill distributed?

Mr. BOIVIN: I do not insist on proceeding at the present time. It can stand until tomorrow.

Mr. SPEAKER: Next sitting of the House in committee of the Whole.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Bill No. 173 (from the Senate), respecting The Quebec, Montreal and Southern Railwas Company.—Mr. Morin (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville).

Bill No. 175 (from the Senate), for the relief of Alice Victoria McGibbon.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 176 (from the Senate), for the relief of Samuel Paveling.—Mr. Geary.

Bill No. 177 (from the Senate), for the relief of John Jones.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 178 (from the Senate), for the relief of Benamin Rapp.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto-High Park).

Bill No. 179 (from the Sente), for the relief of Bernard Thomas Graham.—Mr. Baker.

Bill No. 180 (from the Senate), for the relief of Robert Edward Greig.—Mr. Baker.

Bill No. 181 (from the Senate), for the relief of Dasie Hawkey.—Mr. Speakman.

Bill No. 182 (from the Senate), for the relief of Annie Sophia Gordonsmith.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 183 (from the Senate), for the relief of Bertha Amelia Bertelet.—Mr. Mewburn.

Bill No. 184 (from the Senate), for the relief of Olive Mary Mead.—Mr. Bell (Hamilton West).

Bill No. 185 (from the Senate), for the relief of Alice Elizabeth Blakely.—Mr. Geary.

Bill No. 186 (from the Senate), for the relief of Ethel Maud Hargraft.—Mr. McClenaghan.

Bill No. 187 (from the Senate), for the relief of Frédéric Vinet.—Mr. Geary.

THE DETROIT AND WINDSOR SUBWAY COMPANY

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York) moved the first reading of Bill No. 174 (from the Senate) to incorporate the Detroit and Windsor Subway Company.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not the bill before me, but my attention has just been directed to the fact that the stock having no par value the revenues of Canada will lose $10,000 by the incorporation of this company. The bill is presented quite regularly under the rules, I think, but I bring this to the attention of the House so the rules may be amended. Otherwise, if this becomes a common custom, the treasury will suffer.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: I may say that I gave instructions to our officers at the beginning of the session to adhere strictly to the rules laid down as regards fees and additional charges, but some time ago the House decided upon a motion made by the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Parent) to disregard them on account of the early meeting of parliament. Naturally, this may entail loss of money to the exchequer but our officers are not responsible.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $12,000,000 FOR TERMINAL FACILITIES

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the House go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to authorize a loan to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal in an amount not exceeding $12,000,000, to carry on the construction of terminal facilities, upon approval by the Governor in Council of detailed plans, specifications and estimates for such works and the deposit of debentures of the corporation to cover said loan.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution recommends it to the favourable consideration of the House.

Mr. CANTLEY: We have not heard all of what was said. Will the minister speak out so we may know what this resolution is?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I will read the resolution.

Mr. CANTLEY: Well, Mr. Speaker, you do not speak any too loudly.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I speak loud enough.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Explain.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is new usage; these explanations have never been given before.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It may not have been done before, but I understood we were trying to shorten the work of the session, and if we know what we are expected to loan this $12,000,000 for, it will hasten things along.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have noticed, Mr. Speaker, that when an explanation is made on notice being given we have to give the same explanation when the resolution comes up the following day. This has never been done before; it is a new practice inaugurated this year to give explanations when we give notice of resolutions.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am not insisting if my hon. friend does not want to give the explanation; I cannot insist, but I am suggesting that it would save time.

Mr. CARDIN: I have no objection at all—

Mr. SPEAKER: Louder.

Mr. CARDIN: I have no objection to saying a word in regard to this resolution. This is simply a notice that to-morrow I propose to move that it is expedient that a loan be made to the harbour commission of Montreal of an amount not exceeding $12,000,000. The loan is made under the same conditions as previous loans have been made to this harbour commission; there is no change at all. The contention is that additional works are required to meet the developments of the port of Montreal, and we propose to make a loan on which they will have to pay interest, as they have paid interest on the money advanced previously.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I thank my hon. friend for the information, but he has not added to our knowledge of the subject at all. I merely express the hope that when he brings on his motion to-morrow we may have full particulars of what this money is to be spent for.

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly.

Motion agreed to.

VANCOUVER HARBOUR COMMISSION

LEASE OF ELEVATOR No. 1 TO WHEAT POOL

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Some weeks ago I placed a question on the order paper regarding the leasing of No. 1 elevator in Vancouver. The answer I received conveyed the idea that nothing was under direct consideration. I desire to bring the matter again to the attention of the government and must do so with some considerable force because of a distinct conflict of information emanating from government sources. To make my point clear I would like to read an editorial appearing in the Morning Star of Vancouver, under date of June 4:

> According to an Ottawa despatch the conference in progress over the proposal that the wheat pool lease No. 1 elevator here have ended in a "settlement agreeable to both sides". If the terms of the settlement are those contained in the telegram there need be no doubt that they are satisfactory to the wheat pool. "The elevator", it is stated, "will continue to be operated this summer by the harbour commissioners, but it is agreed that by the end of October the commission will notify the pool whether or not the elevator will then be leased to it. If it is to be retained under the harbour commission the pool will then be free to go ahead and provide such facilities of its own as are required."
> This is simply so much camouflage. Beneath the smooth phraseology which implies that the disposition of the elevator is still an open question may be discerned the intention to hand it over to the wheat pool next fall. The commissioners will continue to operate during the summer—when the elevator is doing little or no business—but before the end of October the pool is either to step in or "be free to go ahead and provide such facilities of its own as are required". The pool, however, as everybody knows, is perfectly free to go ahead at once and provide its own facilities in Vancouver. Moreover, it cannot wait until October before it makes its arrangements for handling the new crop through this port. It follows that it would not delay beginning building operations a single day were it not very sure that the government would provide it with facilities by surrendering No. 1 elevator through the harbour board.
> There can be no reasonable doubt, if the despatch is authoritative, that when Colonel Kirkpatrick returns to Vancouver he will have a very clear idea of the decision the harbour board is to render four months hence—when protest will be futile in the face of the accomplished fact.

I wish most respectfully but urgently to request a clear, definite statement from the government on this important matter, and I also wish to direct attention to the fact that every large representative business group, the board of trade, the shipping interests, the merchants' exchange and others in Vancouver are deeply concerned and interested in this question. I am not expressing an opinion; I merely draw these facts to the attention of the government and in justice to those interests I think before a decision is finally arrived at a definite statement should be given by the government officially. If the government are not prepared to make this statement to-day I would ask that a statement be given as soon as possible, and that the agreements or correspondence be laid on the table of the House in order that we may know exactly what is in the mind of the government and what proposals are under consideration.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): For the present I may say that a request has been made by the people to whom my hon. friend referred to the harbour commissioners to lease No. 1 elevator, and representations have also been made to the department. A meeting was held in Ottawa between representatives of the pool and the president of the harbour commission of Vancouver, and it was agreed between the parties that everything would be maintained for the present as it is now; no change is to be made. It is understood that by the end of October a decision will be reached one way or the other, and the harbour commission will give a definite answer then. This proposal has been accepted by the representatives of the pool, who have agreed to wait until the end of October for a definite answer from the harbour commission. So for the present the position is absolutely unchanged, and if any change is made a definite answer will be given in October next.

Mr. STEVENS: One further question, if I may be permitted. Is there any understanding between the government and the pool that the harbour commissioners are to give a decision granting the lease?

Mr. CARDIN: No, there is no understanding.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the harbour commissioners be at liberty to make the decision they think best at that date, namely, October 31?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

REPORTED STATEMENT OF CAPTAIN SHAW

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): I would like to ask the government a question based on an article appearing in the Edmonton Journal of June 2. This is a despatch from High Prairie, dated June 2, headed:

Alberta needs Liberal government to get favours, says Captain Shaw.

It quotes some other remarks made by Captain Shaw at this meeting, and says in part:

He spoke on long term credits, educational and health matters but doubted if a Liberal government at Ottawa would sponsor any legislation promoted by an Alberta government other than Liberal.

I would like to ask the government if the leader of the Liberal party in Alberta is correctly interpreting the attitude of this government, and if he has received any authority from this government or any member thereof for making such a statement.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I would not like to be drawn into participation in the general election which is taking place in Alberta at the present time. I would say to my hon. friend, however, that so far as co-operation by this government is concerned I do not imagine any legislation would be prejudiced by coming from a Liberal government anywhere; but I would also say that this government is ready to co-operate with any of the provincial governments irrespective of party affiliations in measures which are for the general good of Canada.

CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon R. J. MANION (Fort William and Rainy River): I have a telegram here, which I imagine has been sent to a number of the members, in regard to civil service salaries. It is from the amalgamated civil servants at the head of the lakes, who wire:

General meeting of Amalgamated civil servants demands the immediate completion of personnel of Civil Service Commission, also a satisfactory revision of the civil service salaries before the end of the present parliamentary session, with increases made retroactive to April 1, 1924.

Perhaps the Prime Minister would care to make a statement in regard to that.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The only statement I would have to make in regard to that particular telegram if it reads as I think I heard it, that certain persons demand that certain things be done, is that the government is not inclined to respond to requests preferred in that way.

Mr. MANION: That is a matter between the Prime Minister and the amalgamated civil servants. I was simply asked to bring the telegram to the attention of the government.

Mr. A. U. G. BURY (East Edmonton): I would like to call the attention of the right hon. the Prime Minister to a telegram received by me from the civil servants in the city of Edmonton, expressing dissatisfaction that the salary revision of the civil servants has not been effected, and asking whether anything will be done this session, and that the increases be made retroactive. I would like to know if the Prime Minister can make any statement in that regard.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All I can say is that this matter is receiving consideration. The government has had numerous representations from civil servants as to the position of their salaries, and we are as anxious as any hon. member to have the matter adjusted as speedily as possible, but the government does not wish to have a large bill for increased salaries run up without the matter being carefully inquired into, and we will have to use due caution in that regard.

Mr. BURY: May I ask the Prime Minister if it is the intention to hold the matter up until the personnel of the Civil Service Commission has been completed?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not necessarily.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TORONTO OFFICE BUILDING

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William): Some time ago I put a question on the order paper dealing with the erection of a building at the corner of King and Yonge streets, Toronto, and asked if any new arrangement had been come to in regard to that proposed structure. I received the answer no. I do not doubt the word of the government, but even before then I had received word, rather authoritatively, that an arrangement had been entered into. I should like to ask now—it is some weeks since I put the question before—if the government has any further statement to make dealing with the erection of a building at the corner of King and Yonge streets, Toronto.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): The statement made previously is still true in every particular.

Mr. MANION: No arrangement has been come to?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

DEBT AND TAXATION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. W. E. TUMMON (South Hastings): I should like to ask the government, more particularly perhaps the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) when I may expect replies to questions put on the order paper on February 4, and appearing on the order paper, previous to March 15 last, as question number 108, and passed on March 15 as an order of the House for a return. I have made repeated inquiries about the matter, but am told the information has not yet been brought down.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Would my hon. friend state what was the subject matter of that order?

Mr. TUMMON: The question had reference to the total net debt of the Dominion, the amount of the debt said to be attributable to the war, the total amount collected through the income tax, sales tax, and so forth.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): My recollection is that the return was tabled some days ago, but I will have the matter looked into.

STRAWBERRY IMPORTATIONS

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. S. F. TOLMIE (Victoria): I would like to ask the Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin) if the government has taken any action or proposes to take any action in connection with the report presented to the House yesterday by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Dickie) relating to the flooding of the Canadian market by American strawberries.

Hon. GEORGE H. BOIVIN (Minister of Customs and Excise): I am very sorry that owing to an engagement with an official from a friendly country I was unable to be in my seat in the House yesterday at two o'clock.

[Mr. Manion.]

I am glad to say that the government has taken action. A representative of the Department of Customs has been sent to the country of production to ascertain on the ground the home market value of the fruit in question, and in the meantime instructions have been given to all of our collectors in western Canada to accept entry only subject to amendment and correction.

KINGSVILLE HARBOUR MASTER

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. E. J. GOTT (South Essex): In Hansard of May 26, at page 3729, the following question appears:

> Has Mr. J. A. Donaldson of the town of Kingsville, Ontario, who acted as returning officer for the south riding of Essex in the federal elections of 1925, been appointed to the position of harbour master at the port of Kingsville, Ontario?

Several other questions followed. The answer to the first question was no, and the other answers were just as empty.

On June 7, the following appeared in Hansard:

> 1. Who was the harbour master at the port of Kingsville, Ontario, in 1925?
> 2. Who occupies the position of harbour master at port of Kingsville, Ontario, now?

and several other questions. To that the answer was:

> 1. There was no harbour master at the port of Kingsville, Ontario in 1925.

And the other answers were just as empty.

I would ask the government, or the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) if this is an evasion, or if the questions are unanswered simply because of a technicality, because the word "harbour master" was used in place of "wharfinger."

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): The answer which has been given to my hon. friend was given according to the information handed to me by the officers of the department. I am bound to say that I think the information given is absolutely correct. I can understand that certain questions might not have been answered specifically, but by a reference to the answer to a previous question, such as "Answered by No. 1." Of course, if no harbour master has been appointed, it is unnecessary to give any particulars about him. At all events, I shall make inquiries, and if there is any technicality in regard to which my hon. friend thinks he is entitled to complain, I shall see that he is given the information.

SUPPLY

HUDSON BAY RAILWAY

The House in committee of Supply, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Railways and Canals—Hudson Bay railway—construction and betterments, $3,000,000.

Mr. CAHAN: I realize, Mr. Chairman, that a member representing one of the Montreal constituencies, when he rises to discuss before this committee the question of the completion of the Hudson Bay railway, cannot expect a very sympathetic hearing from a certain section of the House representing those western constituencies which undoubtedly regard the completion of this railway as a matter of supreme importance to them and to the grain trade of the constituencies which they represent. I wish to state, however, at the outset, that I am personally not conscious of any prejudice against those who represent the constituencies of the middle west, and I came to this House actuated with a sincere desire to ascertain the views of those gentlemen upon all the important public questions of the day, and with the desire to assist, so far as I could, in what I believed to be the national interest in carrying their views to a successful application and issue. One who represents an eastern constituency, however frequently he may pass through from the eastern ports to the western ports of the continent, staying over a few days here and there in the cities and towns of the middle west, coming in contact only with acquaintances who reside in those towns, with an occasional automobile ride into the country to see the progress of the wheat crop for the time, does not, I am sure, become completely acquainted with the views of the more rural sections of those districts, and, therefore, I have found the House of Commons something of a training school in the five months or more which I have passed here. Contact with the very able and intelligent representation of the middle west in this House has certainly modified my own views to a considerable extent, and therefore I trust the gentlemen who compose it will give me a patient hearing for the short time in which I consider the question before the committee.

The city of Montreal has no jealousy whatever with respect to development of other ports as grain ports of this Dominion. When it was ascertained, after the completion of the Panama canal, that the grain trade could successfully be assisted and its interests promoted by the shipment of grain from Alberta to Vancouver, and then by sea through the Panama canal to the ports of Europe, I believe the leading commercial men of the city of Montreal were as gratified by the fact that that venture was proving successful as if it had meant an increase of the grain trade through the port of Montreal itself. And with respect to the possibility of developing a grain trade through Port Nelson or Fort Churchill through Hudson bay and Hudson strait to Europe, I feel assured that if the interests of the middle west could be promoted by the development of this proposed route, the amount of trade to be done through either port would not to any appreciable extent affect the interests of the port of Montreal, and that the successful carrying out of that project would be received with almost unanimous approval in that city. The fact is, however, that with regard to the development of the route in question the people of the east wish to know, wish to be informed in some reliable and satisfactory way, that it is a commercial project that can be carried on upon ordinary business lines, and that the results in giving a lower grain freight from the middle west to Europe will be such as to justify not only the expenditures made in the past but the expenditures which must be contemplated in view of the completion of the railway—the provision of terminals, the provision of ships and the possibility of those ships operating for such a time and under such conditions as to lower the grain freight rates from the middle west to Liverpool below existing rates over the present routes.

In that connection there is a feeling that we should not, at the present time, enter upon projects involving large capital expenditures and increases of the obligations of the country unless and until Canada as a whole is quite fully persuaded that the projects contemplated are not only feasible but likely to prove profitable. I do not wish to enter upon any side issue but the fact remains, and every elector of the eastern provinces is conscious of it, that the railway obligations of the Canadian National Railways have increased from approximately $103,000,000 to $2,120,000,000 since 1911. That is an increase in the long term obligations of the people with respect to railways of nearly $2,000,000,000. We know, of course, as stated by the hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Foster) last evening, that the net national debt of this country represents $2,442,000,000, and that in addition to that there are outstanding securities of the National Railways which are now the obligation of the Canadian people, to the amount of $931,000,000 odd additional, increasing the net national debt—if we include the National Railway obligations, which are owing to the public, in the general debt of the country—to $3,373,000,000. Therefore, the conditions under which we are met today to consider the question of the completion of the Hudson Bay railway and terminals are very different from those with which this House was face to face in the year 1911 when the contract for the construction of the first section of this line was made. In 1911 we had a very considerable industrial and commercial activity in this country. We had had the national policy of safeguarding the interests of the country ratified time and again by the action of the Liberal party under the leadership of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Hon. W. S. Fielding. There was stability in tariff affairs and there was reliability with respect to the action of the government which had given confidence to those engaged in the industrial development of Canada from one end to the other. We were sanguine, and possibly too sanguine. On the eve of the election of 1911—if I remember the facts and I have quite a vivid memory—there was a great issue before the people of this country. But the representatives of the Liberal party, in their natural desire to secure the sympathetic support of the people of Manitoba and Saskatchewan and even Alberta, in that day, during that election campaign, promised that the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, if returned, would enter upon and prosecute in a practical and successful way the construction of a railway from The Pas, to which an extension had been completed by Mackenzie and Mann from their main Canadian Northern line, to Hudson bay. That government was defeated in the election, but before resigning office in August 1911 they entered into a contract with J. D. McArthur for the construction of the first 185 miles of line from The Pas to Thicket Portage, and upon that line there has subsequently been expended, for the 185 miles of road, the sum of $2,300,000. But in that election of 1911 representatives of the Liberal Conservative party had also assured the electors of the middle west that if they were returned to power they would give sympathetic and practical support to the construction of the same line of railway, and there was, if I may say it without offence, a sort of competition between the propositions made by the leaders of the great parties in the contest. The first section of 185 miles having been partly completed in the year during which the work was carried on, in September 1912 the government of Sir Robert Borden, to show their sympathy with the aspirations of the people of the west, entered into a contract for the extension of the line from Thicket Portage to Split Lake Junction, a distance of 68 miles, on which according to the returns, $2,300,000 has been expended. Following that up, in the ensuing month, December 1912, the government of Sir Robert Borden made another contract for the final section from Split Lake Junction to Port Nelson a distance of 171 miles, on which up to the present time $3,500,000 has been expended. No rails or ties were laid over the last 92 mile section to Port Nelson. Therefore, if both parties have striven for the favour of the electors of the middle west by making promises with regard to this railway construction, if both parties have expended millions of public money in carrying out the promises which they made and if the course which they pursued was commendable, both parties should receive equal approval with respect to the results. If, on the other hand, there was a premature attempt to open up that line, if the project has not proved successful and is not likely to prove successful in the future, both parties must assume responsibility. In addition to these expenditures I mention, I find that The Pas bridge, built by the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, has cost $300,000. The bridges at Manitou rapids and Kettle rapids together cost $460,000; rails, fastenings, frogs and switches $2,500,000; while other miscellaneous expenditures on the railway amounted to $2,500,000; or in all, in round numbers, $15,000,000 has been expended on that railway up to the present time. In addition there has been expended on the terminals at Port Nelson $6,500,000 in round numbers. On the harbour terminals, as stated by the Minister of Railways, no work has been done since 1917, and the work upon the railway was closed at mile 332 in October 1918. In endeavouring to ascertain the reasons why this work was discontinued in 1917, I have examined the official documents so far as they are available, and I can only say to hon. members of this House who have not taken the trouble to peruse these documents, that if they will examine sessional papers No. 234 and No. 234A of 1924, which were brought down in the House in response to an order of the House, passed on April 14, 1924, they will find a body of information which is very informing indeed and which will prove useful to hon. members in coming to some practical decision upon the issue that is now before us. At page 16 of this return I find a report from Port Nelson dated December 22, 1917, by Mr. D. W. McLachlan, the engineer then resident at Port

3 p.m.

Nelson, a man, I believe, of very, very considerable ability—at least he has been eulogized somewhat by members of the present government. I am going to weary the House for one moment with a quotation.

Mr. DUNNING: What publication is the hon. member referring to?

Mr. CAHAN: It is a return made to an order of the House of April 14, 1924, I do not think many hon. members are aware of the existence of this return.

Mr. HANNESSON: Is it not the same return that was quoted in the House yesterday?

Mr. CAHAN: I cannot tell you whether it is or not, but I am going to refer to it. The report is addressed to W. A. Bowden, chief engineer Department of Railways and Canals, Ottawa, Ont, and reads:

Many a time during the past four years I have been on the verge of coming out in absolute condemnation of the undertaking on which I am engaged, but so long as I thought there was a chance of the Hudson Bay railway ever proving of value for any national purpose—

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps it will help my hon. friend if I tell him the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) placed that report on Hansard yesterday.

Mr. CAHAN: I did not find it.

Mr. DUNNING: It appears at page 4208.

Mr. CAHAN: The report proceeds:

—I thought that I had better not do so, especially as I know that you have always been one of its staunchest supporters. In the light of the ice conditions of this year, which I observed carefully on August 13, 29 and September 6, in the entrance to Port Nelson and the operation of our ships to and from Port Nelson for the past five seasons, I have come to the conclusion that the season for tramp steamships on this route is going to be so short that the cost of doing every item of work in the handling and transporting of merchandise is going to be so great that the route is not going to be able to compete with the lake route to Georgian bay and rail to Montreal.

Port Nelson was this year blocked with ice on August 29, and there was still ice around the harbour entrance on September 6, proof of which I inclose.

The Sheba altered her course twice on the 12th of September to avoid ice within one hundred and fifty miles of Port Nelson. Though this year is extremely late as regards ice, yet it is quite usual to meet ice in the vicinity of cape Tatnam until September. The extreme season will count in a commercial route. I also feel that we cannot extend the latter end of the season beyond the date on which our ships have been leaving in recent years, which means that the 15th of October will terminate commercial navigation, unless aeroplane reconnaissance of the Fox channel ice floes brings to light something now unknown.

Assuming for argument as long a season as can be hoped for, viz., two months between arrival of first ship at Port Nelson and departure of the last ship, I find that the Hudson Bay railway route could not offer a greater rate to tramp steamers to come to Port Nelson than would be required to induce them to go to Montreal, and I feel that under equal rates the tramp steamer will prefer to go to Montreal rather than to Port Nelson when sailing to or from a European port.

For your perusal I have prepared the following table, showing cost of transporting grain from Saskatoon to Liverpool via Fort William:—

With the permission of the House I shall place this table on Hansard:

| | Cents per bushel |
|---|---|
| Saskatoon to Fort William 917 miles at 4½ mills per ton mile.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 12.4 |
| Transfer to Fort William— | |
| Interest on cost of elevator and dock space at 6 per cent, handling its capacity seven times in season at 45 and 35 cents per bushel first cost 80 x 6 x 1.. .. .. .. .. | 0.7 |
| 100 7 | |
| Labour and operation of elevator. Average of Port Colborne and Montreal.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 0.3 |
| Lake boat transport Fort William to Bay Port, September rate.. .. .. .. .. .. | 1.5 |
| Transfer at Georgian Bay port, same as above.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 1.0 |
| Rail haul to Montreal— | |
| Present C.P.R. line from Port McNicol, 375 miles at 4 mills per ton mile, or C.N.R. line to Key Harbour to Montreal proposed, 401 miles at 3½ mills per ton mile.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4.5 |
| Transfer at Montreal.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 1.0 |
| Ocean voyage pre-war rates.. .. .. .. .. | 5.0 |
| Insurance omitted.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | |
| | 26.4 |

The report goes on:

As a comparison with the above I have prepared the following table showing costs of transporting grain from Saskatoon to Port Nelson. The rate via Hudson Bay railway would be as follows:—

| | Cents per bushel |
|---|---|
| Saskatoon to Port Nelson, 730 miles at 6¼ mills per ton mile.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 13.8 |
| Transfer to Port Nelson— | |
| Elevator and dock space each 70 cents per bushel. | |
| Interest on cost of above space handling capacity twice 70 x 6 x 1 x 2.. .. .. .. .. | 4.2 |
| 100 2 | |
| Forward.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 18.0 |
| Labour power and operation of elevator double lake costs.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 0.6 |
| Interest on cost of ⅜ grain delayed three months, value $1 per bushel at 8 x 3 x 2. | 1.3 |
| 100 12 3 | |
| Total above.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 19.9 |

Margin left for ocean voyage, extra insurance and interest on cost of works=26.4—19.9=6.5 cents per bushel.

The ocean rate from Montreal is generally a liner rate, not a tramp rate. When a tramp rate is quoted it is usually two cents in excess of the liner rate and less than seven cents has hardly ever been quoted, so that even if the Port Nelson route could get as good insurance as Montreal the best that can be offered would only equal the Montreal rate to tramps. On account of trans-shipping difficulties it is hardly possible to conceive of liners running to Port Nelson or package freight being handled in large quantities.

In the figures given I have assumed that it will always cost twice as much to furnish the labour to handle a cargo at Port Nelson as it will cost to furnish the labour to handle a cargo in Fort William or Montreal, and I also assume that the operating cost per ton mile on the Hudson Bay railway will be 40 per cent higher than a railway between Saskatoon and Fort William, both on account of the increased price of fuel and the shortness of the season, which I consider must synchronize with navigation from Port Nelson to Europe. I can prove that I am within the mark in many ways. If a man is brought here for two months' work as much will be paid out for transportation wages and time as there is for work done, provided no higher rate is paid than in Fort William and there is in addition the cost of assembling and disbanding the organization. Though transportation on these works has amounted to 28 per cent of the pay-roll, yet there is also a large amount of overhead charges carried by other accounts in the nature of waiting for the season and other things. The construction season here has been nearly three times as long as the operating season will be and one of the embarrassments of the future construction work will be the absence of work in April and May. The very thought of bringing together an organization to operate a port for two months with no other diversion but the loading of irregular ships and then disbanding again as abruptly, is, of itself, a most difficult task and its cost will be very nearly the cost of a similar organization elsewhere if operated for their season. The stationman on the Hudson Bay railway makes $10 per day for ninety days and does nothing the rest of the year. Our men here do nothing outside from November to April, and so it will be for all time.

If you have any doubts re this matter, think of our experience with the stevedore. Time in, time out; transportation in, transportation out; and ten hours when there are no ships.

I have no longer any hesitation—

And remember that is the resident engineer on whose advice the government were depending.

I have no longer any hesitation; the Hudson Bay railway is doomed to certain failure. There may be fish in Hudson bay, but there is no fishing season. There may be minerals on the east coast, but they are as accessible from Halifax as from Port Nelson.

There is nothing for the Hudson bay north of the Huronian rock out-crops south of Split lake, so long as the St. Lawrence river route is available and as for agricultural possibilities north of the same point, there are none.

Yours very truly,

D. W. McLachlan.

In the face of that report anyone who is concerned about the increasing burden of debt and taxation which the people of this country must bear, but who nevertheless is anxious to see every consideration given to the furtherance of the interests of the various sections of Canada including the middle west, in order to give them the cheapest possible rates from their producing centres to the markets of Europe, must hesitate, if he is a man accustomed to dealing with facts and figures, before voting large expenditures upon the completion of the Hudson Bay railway, with the main purpose in view of providing cheaper grain rates from the middle west through Hudson bay and the the straits to Liverpool and other European ports. I will pass over the other reports dealing with the difficulties of constructing terminals; of overcoming the ice obstacle; of the fact that ships can come only in special weather within 20 or 22 miles of the proposed wharves and docks at Hudson bay; of the fact that there is ice filling up a large part of the estuary and preventing ships having access to the harbour works from November 15 until the following April and May.

But in passing I should like to refer to a further report. We all know that in 1920 the Senate formed a special committee to report, not on the feasibility of constructing and operating the railway, not on the cost or future value of the terminal works at Port Nelson, but to confine itself solely to the navigability of the straits and the bay during the various seasons of the year. That committee met. With regard to the evidence placed before that committee, and as to the report the committee made, I do not think any practical man who has had very much experience in the construction of large engineering works, would, on that evidence and on that report, authorize on behalf of any company an expenditure of $500,000 at the least. I happen to have had, during some seven or eight years of my life, experience as the local executive head of a company that carried out one of the great undertakings of the world, employing for seven or eight years some 15,000 to 20,000 men, and having at least 300 competent engineers from every part of the world to consult with, in making a railway through mountains which, if not inaccessible, were accessible with great difficulty, in building the largest dam in the world until it was surpassed by the Gatun dam of the Panama canal, and in building an enormous reservoir which wiped out two or three considerable towns, and which developed a waterfall eight times the height of Niagara. Connected with that enterprise, which cost many millions of dollars and has proved one of the most successful of its kind in the world, one attains certain habits of mind in dealing with such a project, having always in view, as you must have, the necessity of keeping down expenditures so that the works may be created at a cost which will ensure the possibility of the project becoming a commercial success. With that habit of mind, acquired during those years and other years, I read the report of the Senate with the utmost dissatisfaction, and it gave me no confidence whatever in the feasibility and practicability of the navigation of the Hudson straits for more than two or two and a half months during each year, nor in the feasibility and practicability of the railway itself and the terminal works which were partly completed there and which are still contemplated.

Mr. MURPHY: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. CAHAN: I would prefer it being put later on if the hon. member has no objection. At the moment my mind is on a particular subject. Mr. McLachlan, in his evidence before the committee gave an account of himself which I should like to put on record. He said:

I am engineer in charge of the work at Port Nelson on Hudson bay. I have been in charge from August 6, 1913. Nelson at that time had been selected as the terminal. The minister went up in 1912, the year before I went up, that was the confirmation of the former selection. I left Halifax on July 4, Sydney on July 8, and arrived at Nelson on August 6. We were stuck in the ice, we were stuck about a week in the Strait about half way through the strait, then we got away from there and I think we got over to 140 miles from Nelson on about the last day of July and we were stuck there until the 4th.

Remember, that is 140 miles from the estuary out in Hudson bay itself.

We got loose from that ice on the evening of the 4th, and we arrived at Nelson on the 5th and went in on the 6th.

So they were stuck by ice one day's steam from the estuary.

It was heavy ice, enough to stop one of those Newfoundland sealers. I was in the Bonaventure, which is just as good an ice-breaker as there is, she was a Newfoundland sealer. There was practically nothing done at the terminal when I got there. I ran it a year and four months the first time, but I have gone back each spring about April 1. I came out sometimes about December 1; sometimes I did not come out until the middle of February. I always go and come overland by way of Le Pas. I have made only the one trip by water.

In dealing with his own experience as to the navigability of the bay and the estuary of the Nelson river, he says:

Regarding the navigation season from the Atlantic to Port Nelson, my opinion is that in the early part of the season the ice conditions immediately off Nelson will govern—

So that it is not entirely a question as to the navigability of the straits, but the ice conditions immediately off the Nelson estuary govern for a certain time of the year.

—and that at the end of the season the ice conditions at the head of Mansell island will govern. The latest ice at the mouth of the Nelson estuary occurred in the season of 1917. On August 13 of that year the ice appeared to stretch in a continuous belt from the Nelson shoals towards cape Tatnam, and I consider a tramp steamer could not pass through. On August 29 in the same year I found the ice stretching in a great belt just off the outer bar.

That is, the outer bar of the Nelson river.

Beyond this seaward the surface area of the water seemed to be densely packed, though a tramp steamer might be able to worm her way through at considerable danger to herself. Anything in the nature of buoys in the outer bar and for many miles inside it would have been carried away had they been placed. During the next few succeeding days ice was seen floating about in the estuary at within eight miles of the island.

That is the island they were building in the estuary in connection with the particular terminal.

The experiences of this particular season are extreme. In the year 1915 a Newfoundland sealer arrived at Port Nelson on August 1, and the tramp steamer Sheba arrived in 1916 on August 8. They both met considerable ice. I do not think that any ship arriving at Port Nelson earlier than August 20 has done so, since I have been there, without encountering ice at some point or other on its voyage.

Proceeding further, he says:

The latest departure from Port Nelson was on October 22, 1915, when the tramp steamer Sheba and two sealers, Belleventure and Adventure, left. The only ice they encountered was a belt about twelve miles wide near the head of Mansell island. The earliest difficulty with the ice during my stay at Port Nelson was when the tramp steamer Sinbad, which left Nelson on September 30, 1913, encountered ice in the vicinity of Mansell island, got frightened and came back to Nelson, but made a second attempt, leaving Nelson on October 13, and made the journey successfully. During that same season the tramp steamer Alette, which left Port Nelson on October 7, encountered ice near Mansell island and received a hole in her bow and returned to Nelson, wrecking herself on the 16th.

And so on. I do not regard evidence of that character as conclusive either with respect to the navigability of the straits and bay or even of the estuary of the Nelson river for more than two months or at most two and a half months each year. But when this government came into office it was met with the fact that nothing had been done in the construction of that railway and nothing had been done to keep it in operating condition since 1917 or 1918, and the government undertook an investigation asking for further reports on the condition of the railway at that time. I find a report made to the government by Mr. McLachlan under date of February 7, 1923, which appears at page 35 of sessional paper No. 234A for 1924. The information which the government obtained at that time as a basis for future action reads in part as follows:

The Hudson Bay railway and the Port Nelson harbour works stand in the following positions:

(1) Eighty pound steel rails are laid from The Pas to mile 333, which is the second crossing of the Nelson river.

(2) The remainder from mile 333 to Port Nelson, mile 424, is graded but practically no bridges are built.

(3) A steam-hauled train is operated from The Pas to mile 214 twice a month. On this section the ties are now nine to ten years old, and they cannot hold up a steam locomotive any longer. Heavy expenditures on tie renewals are necessary.

(4) The timber trestles all along the Hudson Bay railway to mile 333 have heaved badly, and the telegraph line is also in very bad shape.

(5) Large quantities of train-hauled ballast would be required to put the 333 miles on which track is laid in shape to support heavy freight business, as the foundation grading is composed of vegetable material which shrinks when loaded.

(6) In the 91 miles between the second crossing of the Nelson river, mile 333, and Port Nelson, there are two rivers to cross, viz., the Limestone and the Airhole. The bridge required in the latter case is quite expensive, and will require a viaduct one hundred feet high and nearly one thousand feet long.

(7) Though the 91 miles between mile 333 and Port Nelson is said to be graded, there is only a mound of vegetable material in place and 80 per cent of the work of making a satisfactory road-bed is yet to be performed in this section.

(8) At Port Nelson an excellent base for operations has been established, and the work done on the artificial island, and on the bridge which connects it with the north shore has stood the test of storms, ice action and tides splendidly.

(9) It could reasonably be said that the harbour works at Port Nelson are advanced to the point where work could soon be begun on sinking the cribs for the deep water dock face, which is designed to lie along a sloping hardpan surface about 800 feet north of the present estuary channel, and three-quarters of a mile south of the north shore of the estuary.

(10) Very little of the 5,500,000 cubic yards of dredging which is required has been done. Up to the time when the work was shut down in 1917, all the plant was used in dredging crib sites, and obtaining gravel and stone from the river bed for the filling of the cribwork, as it was sunk in place.

(11) Careful surveys of the channels leading from the proposed docks to deep water in Hudson bay were made in 1918. These show that it will be feasible to provide for the accommodation of ships up to 26 feet draft, but no anchorage for such ships can be provided except at huge expense within 22 miles of the proposed docks.

(12) The nature of the estuary and the foundation conditions in it did not permit anything in the nature of a shelter from storms to be provided in the design of the harbour works. It is hoped, however, that the 13 miles of shoal water between the docks and the relatively deep water of the bay will so break up the waves that ships will not suffer damage when lying against the wharves.

(13) The strong tidal currents and the low distant shores will always prevent ships entering and leaving Port Nelson except during clear weather.

(14) The chief difficulty and expense with the dredging at Port Nelson is the disposal of the material in a situation where it will not be subsequently dislodged or carried into the channel which it is proposed to use for navigation.

(15) The navigation season for tramp ships entering and leaving Port Nelson will not be longer than from August 20 to October 20, and even in that period will not be entirely free from ice. In 1917. the estuary was blocked with ice on August 29, and in 1913, the Fox channel ice in Hudson straits blocked the tramp ship Allette and prevented her passing through on about the 10th of October.

D. W. McLACHLAN.

In view of that report and others accompanying it I find a clear inference that the government decided, so far as it came to a decision, not to proceed with the completion of that line, and apparently, at one time, almost decided to remove the rails from a part of that line and prepare for its operation as a light railway with light oil-burning locomotives. As I read these reports I can find no evidence whatever that there is any prospective agricultural development north of The Pas which should induce the building of a road for the purpose of opening up that district. I have some acquaintance with the great Peace river district of British Columbia, and, if this road were to be built for agricultural purposes, I would vote to spend ten dollars to open up that Peace river district for every dollar I would spend to open up the district north of The Pas as an agricultural district.

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend know the country north of The Pas from personal knowledge, as he says he knows the Peace river country?

Mr. CAHAN: I have never been there, but I am reading between the lines of these reports.

Mr. DUNNING: Between the lines!

Mr. CAHAN: Between the lines as well as the lines themselves. I ask the hon. gentleman, who should know, if there is any agricultural district north of The Pas which would pay for the expense of constructing and operating a colonization road to open it up.

Mr. MULLINS: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: Some of my hon. friends are answering the question. It is not proposed to build this line solely for the purpose of developing the agricultural possibilities, but there are agricultural possibilities northeast of The Pas along the line of the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. CAHAN: I am not denying that, but I am saying that they are very limited in area, and I am saying further, from the best information I can obtain, that no one would ever suggest the construction of this line as a colonization road for the opening up of agricultural districts, such as they are, and limited as they are, north of The Pas.

Mr. DUNNING: Not for that alone.

Mr. CAHAN: Not for that alone; that is what I intended to say. Now I have evidence in these reports, and I have had the evidence of those who have been over that line, of one in particular—I am not going to give his name, because it was a confidential inquiry and a confidential answer—that from mile 214, at The Pas, north the entire distance to Port Nelson the line runs through what is largely muskeg.

Mr. BIRD: It is not so.

Mr. CAHAN: A considerable part of this road from mile 214 north is covered with 4 feet of moss on the average.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is not now quoting any official report.

Mr. CAHAN: I am quoting from the information given me by an engineer who went over that road personally.

Mr. DUNNING: But not from any official report.

Mr. CAHAN: I will prove it pretty largely from Mr. McLachlan before I am through, if necessary.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. McLachlan never had anything to do with the railway.

Mr. CAHAN: He reported to a considerable extent, and the minister has brought down his estimates, as an engineer, as to the cost of terminals and all that sort of thing.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is misquoting me there. I produced at no time figures from Mr. McLachlan relating to the railway.

Mr. CAHAN: I am not saying you did. Therefore, do not accuse me of misquoting you.

Mr. DUNNING: I hope my hon. friend will read Hansard to-morrow morning on this point.

Mr. CAHAN: I will, and if I have made a slip, why I certainly take it back. But I am saying this, that your estimates with regard to the terminal and port are within a few thousand dollars of the estimates which were made by Mr. McLachlan several years ago, and which I find in this report. Therefore, I infer that those estimates which were given to the House yesterday with respect to the port terminals are in fact Mr. McLachlan's estimates, and being so, any man who is a competent engineer for the harbour works of the nature and extent contemplated at Port Nelson is quite competent to give evidence with regard to the construction of a railway line over the muskeg which extends for a very considerable distance at least from Port Nelson south.

Mr. CAMPBELL: May I ask if engineer McLachlan reports muskeg on the line of the Hudson Bay railway?

Mr. CAHAN: I will deal with that in a moment. I am saying now that in certain parts on which the line is laid over muskeg, I am told that the subsoil to that muskeg is continuously frozen until the muskeg and moss is removed, and that the embankment then built over that for a considerable section of the 92 miles to Port Nelson has by its own weight sunk down until you cannot see the line because it is engulfed by the mud which the sun has opened up beneath.

Mr. HANNESSON: May not the moss have gathered owing to the delay in construction?

Mr. CAHAN: I have no doubt that the moss has gathered during the one thousand years or perhaps one million years in which we were awaiting railway development there. It undoubtedly did gather there in that time.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps my hon. friend would permit a question.

Mr. CAHAN: No, if you will allow me—

Mr. DUNNING: Just in fairness to Mr. McLachlan. My hon. friend does not intend to convey the impression that Mr. McLachlan is the engineering authority responsible for the statements just made by my hon. friend with regard to muskeg along the railway.

Mr. CAHAN: My hon. friend, I have noticed since he came into this House, has the habit, which he no doubt acquired when he was dealing with another body, of asking questions the implication of which is very unpleasant and unfortunate, and which is not in accordance with the fact on which his questions are based. There is no desire whatever on my part to mislead him, and I am not endeavouring to mislead the House either. The House knows and clearly understands, if it has not permeated the dull intellect of the hon. gentleman, that I was not attributing that statement to Mr. McLachlan. But I have Mr. McLachlan's own statement and his sworn evidence before the Senate committee of 1920 where he said:

I have thought a great deal about the difficulties of building a railway across barren land, and the only way that I can see would be by the construction of a continuous pile threstle or a continuous timber platform. The Hudson Bay railway through out almost its entire length is not built of solid material, such as clear sand and gravel, but is constructed out of the vegetable material of the country. This creates an embankment which is compressible and has a tremendous shrinkage, and would require a large amount of ballast continuously applied for a great many years.

That is Mr. McLachlan's evidence upon it, and I think it quite fully supports the private report which I obtained in making personal inquiries of gentlemen who have been over that line.

Mr. McLachlan, in another report which I have at hand, has dealt with the comparative costs of shipping grain from the middle west to Europe via Port Nelson and other routes. At page 39 of this report, No. 234A, he deals with the cost of building at Port Nelson elevators, and compares the cost with the cost of building similar elevators at the city of Montreal or at Fort William. He says:

The cost of constructing the elevators at Port Nelson may be taken as 50 per cent advance on Montreal and lake port costs.

The annual operating cost for labour, material and repairs at the Port Nelson elevators can be taken at 90 per cent of that at Montreal or at the lake ports.

The operating cost per ton mile, north of The Pas on the Hudson Bay railway, may be taken at 80 per-cent advance on the rates used in other parts of Canada.

The general rail rates should be taken at sufficient to pay interest on equipment and out of pocket costs, which is probably about 60 cents per 100-ton mile, except on the Hudson Bay railway.

The grain facilities at Port Nelson and other ports may be taken for estimate purposes, at 2 elevators of 3,500,000 bushels capacity each with 4,000 lineal feet of deep water berthing space in front of them.

The stay in port of each ship may be taken at five days in ocean ports and four days in lake ports.

[Mr. Dunning.]

The cost of docks and dredging in Port Nelson may be taken at double that in Montreal and four times that at the head and foot of the lakes, where pile construction can be used.

And then he gives a tabulated statement—dealing solely with the cost of elevators and their operation—showing that the cost of transfer per bushel at Port Nelson would be 8.9 cents, at Montreal 1.27 cents, and at the head and foot of the Great Lakes 1.13 cents, showing a very considerable difference in the expense of operating the proposed elevators at Port Nelson.

Then at page 40 he gives a table showing the transport costs from Humboldt—which he selects as a typical point—to Liverpool via various routes. I will not give the entire statement, I will simply state the results of his findings. He finds that via the Hudson Bay railway and Port Nelson the minimum cost per long ton of grain freight will be $12.63. He finds that the present rate, via the lakes and rail to Montreal, is $12.17; and he finds that via the St. Lawrence, upon the completion of the Welland canal, the rate will show a reduction to $10.96. In the face of that report I ask hon. gentlemen to believe at least that the practical business men of Montreal are not jealous of, and are not opposed to the opening of, a rival port so-called when the cost of operating from a point like Humboldt in the middle west to Liverpool will be at least $1.67 per long ton more via Port Nelson than via Montreal.

I do not wish to take up more of the time of the House but the position as I see it is this. I have spent a very considerable time in reading the official reports included in the records of the House, which reports, some printed and some not, are available to members and which are at the disposal of any hon. member who will call at room 108 where he will find every courtesy extended to him if he wishes to explore these papers. I find it difficult to conceive how any experienced practical business man can assume that even if the line is completed, even if the terminal works are carried out on the scale suggested by the Minister of Railways—but which he has not pledged himself to carry out, as I understand it—you can carry grain from the middle west via—

(Mr. Speakman, member for Red Deer, having entered the House after an absence of several weeks owing to illness.)

Mr. CAHAN: If I may be allowed, I wish on behalf of hon. members on this side, and I am sure also on behalf of hon. members in other quarters of the chamber, to say how deeply gratified we are to find that the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat is able to return and associate with us once more.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CAHAN: But to proceed—

Mr. MILLAR: May I ask the hon. member a question at this moment?

Mr. CAHAN: I do not know enough about the subject to answer questions with any greater degree of accuracy than I am doing.

Mr. MILLAR: Can the hon. member give me, from Mr. McLachlan's report or from any other source, any good reason why the cost of handling grain over this railroad and at the elevators should be doubled, trebled, and in some cases quadrupled, as compared with any other route?

Mr. CAHAN: All I can say is that I ask the hon. gentleman to give the same earnest attention to these reports that I have given myself, and I am accepting them as the best information available to me. The information set forth in detail there—in greater detail than is possible for me to quote—appeared to me at least to throw the gravest possible doubt upon the practicability of sending grain from the middle west via Port Nelson to European ports at less cost than it can be sent now via the Montreal route.

Mr. MILLAR: You just have to swallow the bald statement.

Mr. CAHAN: No, I do not swallow the bald statement. I am studying the engineers' reports with such intelligence as I possess and with such experience as I have had. I am giving a certain credence to them and I have learned nothing anywhere that disputes the information therein contained. That is as far as I am going.

Even if you carry the grain to Port Nelson there is then the difficulty of finding ships. The other night when, on another motion, I was carrying on a discussion with the Minister of Railways and urging him to use his influence with the officials of the Canadian National Railways to transport grain over that system to the ports of Halifax and St. John, I pointed out to him that, after the close of water navigation on the St. Lawrence, the grain rates from Fort William and from lake ports to Halifax and St. John were exactly the same as those to Portland, and exactly the same as those to New York, Baltimore and Norfolk, Virginia, and I argued with some vigour that, in view of the fact that the grain rates were the same, a certain part of the grain transportation of the Dominion during winter months should be given to the ports of Halifax and St. John. We all know that Halifax is open every hour of the year. We know that exactly the same can be said of the port of St. John. We all know there are lines of steamers each week from St. John to Liverpool, and that there are lines of steamers connecting with European ports which regularly call at Halifax. We know as well that these are ports which are open to secure tramp steamers on very favourable terms. We also know that the rate of insurance, even in winter, is not high from St. John or Halifax. And yet hon. gentlemen opposite—and if I am not mistaken, the hon. Minister of Railways, but I would not like to misquote him—suggested that the reason why grain could not readily be sent via St. John and Halifax was the alleged fact that ships were not available there for carrying grain.

Mr. DUNNING: No, I did not say that.

Mr. CAHAN: Well I was certainly confronted with that statement by some hon. member opposite. I had suggested that we could provide the ships at St. John and Halifax in such numbers and of such capacity that there was no reason why St. John and Halifax should not participate in that grain trade transportation. Think of those ports open the year round, with certain liners coming week by week, with tramp steamers calling there almost week by week throughout the year; and yet it is claimed that they do not come in sufficient numbers to facilitate the export of grain. Compare that with Port Nelson, open for the grain train two and a half months in the year at the most, closed in the estuaries till late in the season, so that if ships could even enter the straits and find their way through the fields of ice which are sometimes found in the Hudson Bay, they would be waiting for days for openings in the ice to get into Port Nelson and to the wharf. How are you going to procure the availability at Port Nelson of ten ships which are necessary even to begin the transportation of wheat from that port? How are you going to obtain ships of a construction, a class and a quality capable of performing that service, in view of the fact that they have to encounter the field ice at the most critical time during every month of the summer. Those ships are not in existence to-day and must be specially constructed, and I may say that that will not faze hon. members opposite, because they always want ships, and in their specifications always arrange to provide ships which must be specially constructed, and of a class not to be found in active business in any part of the world, as for instance in the Jamaica and West India service.

But what will be the cost of constructing these ships of 5,000 to 7,000 tons for the grain trade, and of sufficient strength to meet the ice fields that will be encountered? Have we any estimates of the cost? The estimates are an important part of the proposition. If we are to deal with the feasibility of the route, the capital expenditure necessary for the completion of these ships is a relevant and salient fact which should be placed before the House. Are you going to construct these ships as a part of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine service, or are you going to subsidize them, and if you have to subsidize them, have you obtained any estimate of the cost, by way of subsidy, of securing the services of these ships during those two months and a half? That is information which the minister can obtain any time within thirty or sixty days from the shipbuilders in England, or if he wishes, from shipbuilders in Germany, who I believe furnish ships now-a-days at a little less cost. What is the capital cost? Are we going to enter upon the work of completing the Hudson Bay railway, the Hudson bay ports, and the Hudson bay services overseas without the slightest idea of what it will cost to provide the ships? The information can be obtained any time in a general way within sixty days. What is to be the cost of insurance on freight and ship from Port Nelson overseas? That enters into the cost of the carriage of grain or other freight. Have you sought information from the great marine insurance companies? Certainly the insurance rate will be higher during those two months than the rate of insurance to any other Canadian port from Liverpool or any European port. That excess adds to the cost. In other words, Mr. Chairman, this House, as a body of intelligent business men, should know, and should know now before we enter upon the completion of that line to Port Nelson, what would be the cost of providing the ships, and of providing facilities in the bay, including light houses and attendants and including the radio stations and telegraph stations, and all the paraphernalia necessary to open up that strait, bay and estuary, so as to make it a feasible commercial proposition for steamers to enter there.

Hon. members say the Hudson's Bay Company has been operating in the Hudson bay for some hundred or more years, but I have read something of the history of the Hudson's Bay Company, and I do not believe that until this year, or last year at the earliest, the Hudson's Bay Company ever placed a steamship in their ocean service to the Hudson bay. Their ships were sailing vessels similar to those used years ago to trade out of Newfoundland and Maritime province ports up into the Hudson bay. Time was of no consequence in their voyages. They fitted out for the north and for the Hudson bay, and it was quite immaterial to them whether they returned that year or the following year. They provided themselves with sufficient supplies to enable them to remain there the whole winter. If they were caught in the ice they stayed there, and when the spring freshets came and the water of Hudson bay or the estuary warmed up and the ice melted, they took up their hawsers and started out. That sort of navigation of the Hudson bay offers no precedent whatever for the commercial operation of ships on a business and profitable basis, for the purpose of placing the grain trade of the middle west on a more economic and profitable basis than it is at present.

Therefore I say that we require more information. No body of business men who sit on the board of any company entering upon a large construction such as that would authorize an expenditure of $500,000 or $50,000 and rely on the feasibility of the project on such information as is available to this House at present. We are told that we may open up in that district a mineral belt, and that as a colonization road it may prove profitable. A private member of this chamber has difficulty in getting information. Even if I asked some of the engineers in the employ of the Department of Railways, they do not like it to be known that they are giving information to a member of the opposition, whether he sits on the front bench or a rear bench, but sometimes one can obtain some information from the outside. I have no doubt from the reports I have that there is mineral wealth in that country. Why then should we not have from some department of the government a complete return of all information available regarding the mineral resources of the district? That would help members on this side of the House to a material extent in the consideration of the partial appropriation which is now before us. I am told that the entire mineral wealth out there is south of mile 214. My information is that no minerals have been discovered north of that point. The mineral belt lies considerably nearer The Pas than even mile 214 to which the road is now operated twice a month and affords ample facilities for the transport of all minerals produced in that district, and I therefore suggest to the minister that this present expenditure be confined to improving the road as a branch line, or, to use what is really a synonymous term, a colonization road—not a standard main line—up to mile 214. The road is now tumbling down and is unsafe for locomotives. As a matter of fact the railwaymen are fearful when setting out from The Pas as to whether they will ever bring the locomotive back. Why should we not put into working condition the existing road which passes through the mineral belt, and have a complete report presented to the House as to what further extensions are necessary to open up every prospective mine within a considerable distance of the line? Because this line, as I view the map, runs right through the mineral belt, although the minerals are to be made available only by extensions in an eastern and western direction from the line. We could vote this three million dollars on such an understanding. Why should not the minister undertake to spend $2,000,000 in putting into proper operating order the line as far as mile 214? Why not encourage likely prospectors to come in and ascertain what can be done in opening up that mineral country? Why not submit to the House every bit of information available with regard to the possibilities of the district? The government, it seems to me, might well study the views advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) last night in his address, many suggestions in which I must say I heartily approve of. We can have definite information on the subject whether from engineering or other experts. I am sure it is possible to collect all the facts and all the information which is to be found in a hundred and one reports, and which may be supplemented by calling upon those who have already reported upon the subject to give more definite information. All that we can, I have no doubt, easily procure and embody in concrete form so that in voting further appropriations for the Hudson Bay railway we may at least have the satisfaction of knowing that there is some practical, substantial ground for our expenditures.

Those of us who have come into this House for the first time do not feel bound in the slightest degree by the political game which was played between the two parties to secure popular support in the northwest in 1911. Nor do we feel bound by the proposition made on the one hand by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to secure a large vote from Saskatchewan in the last election, any more than we consider ourselves committed, on the other hand, to any of the counter propositions, as reported in the press, made by some of the leading Conservatives to obtain the same support. We wish to exercise intelligent, conscientious judgment. If the road, by any reasonable expenditure within our means, can be made a profitable enterprise capable of serving the interests of that western district, we are anxious to do everything in our power to promote to that extent the national welfare of Canada. But we do not want to be seduced, by mere camouflage or by mere dreams, into making further appropriations of money which is so necessary for development in other parts of the country, and wasting it on a project upon which $20,000,000 has already been expended without any results up to the present day.

Mr. MULLINS: Are all the brains of the country centred in Montreal? Have we no intelligence in western Canada?

Mr. CAHAN: I quite conceive that we in the east in some matters are mere children intellectually as compared with some hon. gentlemen from the west, but we have interests to represent, and therefore we want all the information available to our dull brains so that we may satisfy our conscientious judgments in considering such a question as this. And I ask for no more than such information. If this appropriation is restricted simply to putting the existing road into shape with a view to saving what money has already been spent—spent, in my opinion, recklessly— if it is to recondition the road up to mile 214, which I understand is as far as it goes now, opening up all the timber resources now waiting to be developed, then I am prepared to stand up to-night or to-morrow or at any other time and vote in favour of it. But I do not feel disposed to vote in favour of a readjustment of the line, so as to place it in operating state, if such a vote is to be regarded as a promise and a pledge on the part of this parliament that it will embark upon further extensions of the railway to the bay, involving additional equipment and possibly an added expenditure of $20,000,000, and providing ten specially equipped steamers to do the service of the grain trade for two or three months of the year through Hudson bay and the straits. And that is the predicament in which we find ourselves to-day. We members from the east, so far as I know, are sincerely desirous, yea, we are anxious to associate ourselves with the people of the west in the development of their country by every reasonable project. But we do not wish to be deceived into supporting a partial appropriation such as this, knowing that the fact that we vote for it will be alleged by hon. gentlemen opposite, and construed by the country, as implying on our part a promise to vote for the completion of the road through the last ninety-two miles of bog and moss to reach Port Nelson and to provide for the steamship equipment necessary to carry grain during two months of the year.

Mr. DUNNING: I shall put on record in Hansard some other documents from the reports from which my hon. friend (Mr. Cahan) has been reading, and I will treat him with more courtesy than he extended to me, although I confess I feel rather more comfortable since his admission that the dulness of intelligence is not altogether confined to myself.

Mr. CAHAN: I place myself far below the minister's limit.

Mr. DUNNING: We have listened to a very excellently prepared address embodying all the facts which could be marshalled and all the inferences which could be drawn in order to prove that this enterprise is complete and utter folly. I must congratulate my hon. friend on having done the job thoroughly as a special pleader against the route. My hon. friend based most of his remarks, in so far as they were based upon official documents, upon the 1917 report of Mr. McLachlan, and that is the report I want to refer to particularly. It must be remembered that Mr. McLachlan is a very excellent engineer who specializes in port and hydraulic work generally. To listen to my hon. friend, one would think that Mr. McLachlan was an economist, a financier, an expert in shipping, an expert in railroading —indeed an expert in anything connected with the operation of a transportation system. Mr. McLachlan himself would be the last man to claim special knowledge along those lines. It is true Mr. McLachlan made a report in 1917. He has made other reports since, but the latter are never quoted by those who desire to use Mr. McLachlan in the manner in which my hon. friend used him. The only fault I have to find with Mr. McLachlan is that in his 1917 report he went entirely outside his professional sphere in many respects. The government of the day recognized that and referred his report, in so far as it related to factors outside his special professional knowledge, to a man who might be expected to have some professional knowledge and training with respect to those factors.

If hon. members will look at the return to an order of the House of April 14, 1924, to which reference was made by the member for St. Lawrence-St. George, they will there find at the bottom of page 63 a letter from Mr. R. A. C. Henry, to whom I referred yesterday—addressed to the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals. Following that on page 64 they will find Mr. Henry's detailed analysis of the factors which fell within his purview with regard to the Hudson Bay route and its possibilities. I should like to dispense with reading both those documents, but if I am not permitted to place them on Hansard I shall be very glad to read them, because as a commentary on the address of my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George they are illuminating indeed. I prefer to let them speak for themselves.

An hon. MEMBER: Put them on Hansard.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is a very able lawyer, but frankly, I would not go to him if I wanted advice with respect to an aching tooth or a contagious disease.

An hon. MEMBER: You might.

Mr. DUNNING: No, not with respect to any disease.

Mr. CAHAN: I am an expert on teeth, not on contagious diseases.

Mr. DUNNING: I would not go to a railway man if I wanted advice on shipping. I would not go to the economist, Mr. Henry, if I wanted advice regarding those technical engineering matters with which Mr. McLachlan is familiar by reason of his special training. But when Mr. McLachlan, I admit in a period of some discouragement with regard to the particular work he had in hand, makes a report entirely outside his professional sphere, my hon. friend exclaims, "This is just what I want! True, this man is not an expert along the line he is now reporting on, but his report suits me, and I ignore the report made by Mr. Henry, whose special line of work is to analyze these particular matters." The interruption which so angered my hon. friend I made only in justice to Mr. McLachlan. Following my hon. friend's remarks, he passed from Mr. McLachlan's statements to those made by some engineer, whom he did not name, and back again to Mr. McLachlan, and I only wanted to make sure in justice to Mr. McLachlan—for whom I have a high regard—that my hon. friend was not attributing to him statements made by the anonymous engineer. That was all. There was no need for my hon. friend to be angered or to impute to me discourtesy. I had no such intention. It is now clear, however, that my hon. friend did not attribute to Mr. McLachlan statements with regard to the construction and the condition of the railroad other than those which he read from Mr. McLachlan's own reports.

That is all I have to say. I know other members desire to speak on this subject. I merely want to put on Hansard the report of Mr. Henry.

W. A. BOWDEN, Esq., Chief Engineer,
Department of Railways and Canals, Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I am enclosing herewith, in duplicate, memorandum prepared in connection with the Hudson Bay railway and Port Nelson route which may be of assistance to you.

You will notice that I have indicated or rather I have estimated the minimum tonnage to be handled over the railroad to meet not only ordinary operating expenses but also fixed charges. I also assumed that all that this route would be required to do would be to land wheat or grain in Liverpool at the same total transportation cost as obtained via the Georgian Bay-Montreal route.

I am also returning Mr. McLachlan's memorandum which you handed to me for comment.

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) R. A. C. HENRY.

Memo. for Mr. Bowden Re Hudson Bay Route

An analysis of the traffic possibilities of the Hudson Bay route on a pre-war basis appears to indicate as follows:

1. That about 5,000,000 bushels of wheat or wheat equivalent in other grain must be handled to meet operating expenses.

2. That about 10,000,000 bushels of wheat or wheat equivalent in other grain must be handled to meet operating expenses and pay 3 per cent on estimated cost of the development now under construction.

3. That there is sufficient grain now grown in the territory tributary to the Hudson Bay railway to warrant the belief that with equivalent rates to Liverpool the quantity of grain last mentioned would go via the Hudson Bay route.

4. That there could be developed a sufficient inbound tonnage from Europe to place Port Nelson on the same footing with respect to the load factor as say Montreal.

5. That the possibilities of the safe navigation of this route have not yet been sufficiently demonstrated to warrant any private company undertaking the placing of a sufficient number of vessels in this service to carry the quantities of grain above-mentioned without assistance from the government is certain. Hence it seems evident that the government must purchase or charter sufficient vessels to handle this traffic and operate the route until such time as its commercial feasibility has been demonstrated.

These vessels, if chartered, could be chartered only for the period of navigation and, if purchased, could be used during the period of closed navigation on the Hudson Bay route, for traffic between the Atlantic and Pacific or distributed on several trade routes.

6. That it would be necessary by some means to hold sufficient grain over from one year's crop to provide cargoes for vessels arriving before the new crop was ready to move.

It has been suggested that the season of navigation on the Hudson Bay route is so short that the cost of doing every item of work in the handling and transporting of merchandise is going to be so great that the route is not going to be able to compete with the lake route to Georgian bay and rail to Montreal, and that the necessity of creating an organization for such a short period is a very serious factor.

That the season of navigation from Hudson bay is limited to two and one-half months there does not now appear to be much doubt. It is and must be frankly admitted that such a condition would be expected to involve a larger expenditure per unit of traffic than would be the case if navigation were possible during the whole year and the load factor favourable and constant. Unfortunately, however, the load factor in the Canadian internal freight traffic is neither favourable nor reasonably constant. For example, an examination of the shipping records on the Great Lakes will disclose the fact that on the average since 1909, over 40 per cent of total quantity of wheat, in fact of all grain, passing through Fort William and Port Arthur eastbound goes forward in two months, namely, in October and November immediately following the harvesting of the crop. The peak load in the grain traffic east is from two to three times the average load, so that during this period from two to three times the average number of cars, train employees, elevator employees, and lake vessels, which would be required to handle this traffic if it flowed uniformly throughout the season of navigation, must be diverted from other channels or called into action from idleness. Conditions on the Hudson Bay route would vary from those obtaining on the lake route only in degree and probably not to as great an extent as might at first thought be supposed, especially now that the government controls the Canadian Northern system with its many branches into the heart of the grain belt. The difficulty of bringing a separate organization into existence for the short period of navigation on the Hudson bay will not be any more serious than doubling or trebling the handling equipment normally in use on the prairie, in fact the labour equipment etc., could probably be utilized for an extra month in relieving the pressure of traffic to the head of the lakes after the close of navigation on Hudson bay.

The amount of traffic to be handled is another factor, it would be absolutely foolish to consider shipments limited to a million bushels or even two million bushels by this route and the elevator should handle its capacity five times instead of twice as has been suggested.

Transportation charges Saskatoon, Fort William, Georgian bay, Montreal, Liverpool.—The cost to the shipper at Saskatoon for the transportation of a bushel of wheat from that point to Liverpool via Fort William-Georgian bay ports-Montreal on the pre-war basis (liner rate exclusive of insurance) is about 26 cents. This rate obtains so long as there is a fair amount of grain offering. When there is an excessive amount of grain to be moved the rate increases and when there is not very much grain offering the rate declines slightly.

Transportation charges Saskatoon-Port-Nelson-Liverpool.—If wheat can be transported via the Hudson Bay route at the same rate as obtains via the Georgian bay-Montreal route it would be expected to obtain a portion of the traffic, so that it will be assumed for purposes of comparison that a rate of 26 cents per bushel can be met on this route which will be subdivided as follows:

|---|---|
| Charges Saskatoon-Pas, ½ cent ton mile, 300 miles | 4.0 |
| Ocean voyage and insurance, say | 8.0 |
| | 26.0 |

It remains therefore to determine the minimum quantity of wheat or wheat equivalent in other grains (as the outbound traffic must necessarily consist largely of grain) which must be transported over this route to cover operating expenses and provide a fair return on capital investment. The annual fixed charges in connection with the Hudson Bay railway and Port Nelson terminals are estimated as follows:

| Three per cent interest on cost of Hudson Bay railway, $16,000,000 | $480,000 |
| Three per cent interest on cost of Port Nelson terminals, $13,000,000 | 390,000 |
| Total | $870,000 |

The minimum annual maintenance expenditure required to keep the route open is:

|---|---|
| Maintenance Hudson Bay railway, 420 miles at $800 | $336,000 |
| Maintenance Port Nelson terminals (arbitrary) | 250,000 |
| Total | $586,000 |

Traffic ex north Atlantic ports in terms of tonnage appears to be somewhere in the vicinity of double the tonnage into these ports as far as foreign trade is concerned. It will be assumed then that an inbound tonnage equivalent to 50 per cent of the outbound tonnage may be expected via the Hudson Bay route. On the basis of 10,000,000 bushels of wheat or wheat equivalent in other grains per year or 300,000 tons outbound and 150,000 tons inbound, assuming an average net load outbound of 1,200 tons and the same number of trains inbound, we have 500 trains or 210,000 train miles at $1.40 per train mile or a cost for maintenance of | $ 294,000
Elevator operating expenses, ¾ cents bushel | 75,000
Unloading charges, 50 cents ton on inbound tonnage | 75,000
| $ 444,000
Total annual charges | $1,900,000

Gross receipts would be as follows:

|---|---|
| 10,000,000 bushels wheat at 14 cents | $1,400,000 |
| 150,000 tons freight inbound at $3 | 450,000 |
| Total | $1,850,000 |

It seems evident therefore that at least 5,000,000 bushels of wheat must be handled annually to clear operating expenses and at least 10,000,000 bushels to meet both operating expenses and fixed charges at 3 per cent on money invested.

The first of the new crop would not reach Port Nelson until about September 10th to 15th, so that shipments made prior to that date would have to be from the previous year's crop.

The handling of ten million bushels of wheat in such a short period would require a large number of vessels, from 20 to 50 dependent upon tonnage, as each vessel could probably make only two trips in one season. Berthing accommodation for four or five vessels would appear necessary, and an elevator of 2,000,000 bushels storage capacity to prevent congestion and insure a steady flow of grain at all times during the short season. Almost 7,000,000 bushels of wheat passed through the government elevator at Saskatoon during the period from September 1, 1915 to August 31, 1916, so that no difficulty should be experienced in securing 10,000,000 bushels of grain, or wheat equivalent, for the Hudson Bay route from the district tributary to Saskatoon.

Attached hereto is a statement giving description of land tributary to certain Canadian Northern lines which might be considered as partly tributary to the Hudson Bay railway, also giving by car loads grain originating on each. This statement would appear to indicate that there is now at least 10,000,000 bushels within easy reach of the Hudson Bay railway.

With regard to inbound tonnage, the initial trip of the season might either be from the Atlantic coast of America, or from Europe; the second trip would of course have to be from Europe. Coal would appear to be a likely cargo inbound. Thirty-five thousand tons of bituminous coal would be required annually for the operation of the railway and terminals to handle the traffic outlined above. This coal might either be obtained at Sydney or from England and could be landed at Port Nelson at a cost of about $5 per ton. There is no possibility however of bituminous coal imported by way of the Hudson Bay route competing with the western product from the mines in the Yellowhead or in the vicinity as the attached tables will show.

Anthracite Coal:—In the case of anthracite coal, however, the prospects are much better. The pre-war price of anthracite coal at Saskatoon was around $13.50 per ton retail. This comes from the Pennsylvania district. I am advised that good quality Welsh anthracite compares very favourably with good quality

Pennsylvania anthracite, but the characteristics of each are sufficiently different to demand somewhat different grates and arrangements for draught. The Welsh anthracites are on the whole somewhat softer, contain less ash, and volatile matter, burn more freely and give slightly more heat than the Pennsylvania anthracites. Welsh anthracite is not used to any extent in Eastern Canada partly because of the proximity of the Pennsylvania fields and partly because generally speaking furnaces have been designed to use the Pennsylvania product. In the middle west, however, circumstances have forced design of furnaces which would burn bituminous as well as anthracite coal, for this reason it would appear that good quality Welsh anthracite might be expected to compete with the Pennsylvania product in the portions of the prairie provinces tributary to the Hudson Bay route under favourable conditions as to price. It would seem on the basis of pre-war prices that Welsh anthracite could be landed at such points as Moose Jaw, Regina and Saskatoon at from 65 cents to $2 per ton less than Pennsylvania anthracite could be landed at the same points. During the years 1912 to 1915 inclusive the imports of anthracite coal through the ports of Fort William and Port Arthur has been fairly constant and has averaged approximately 490,000 tons (2,000 pounds) annually; during the same period the imports of anthracite through the Dakota and Minnesota gateways has averaged 15,000 tons annually, making the total imports of this commodity from the Pennsylvania fields into the middle west about 500,000 tons annually. The exact distribution of this coal is not certain but it is estimated as follows:

| Port Arthur, Fort William and points east of Winnipeg .. .. | 130,000 tons |
| City of Winnipeg .. .. .. .. .. | 200,000 tons |
| City of Moose Jaw .. .. .. .. .. | 10,000 tons |
| City of Saskatoon .. .. .. .. .. | 10,000 tons |
| City of Regina .. .. .. .. .. .. | 15,000 tons |
| Points in Manitoba and Saskatchewan west of Winnipeg .. .. | 135,000 tons |
| Total .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 500,000 tons |

It would seem reasonable to expect a traffic in Welsh anthracite coal to the extent of from 50,000 to 75,000 tons per annum with conditions so favourable as to price, and there is no doubt that with a decrease in price of from 65 cents to $2 ton the consumption of anthracite would be increased largely especially in parts of the country where there is no wood available for fuel.

There is also the possibility of some traffic in structural steel to certain portions of the west in competition with steel from the Pittsburg district, and a good deal of structural material will be required in the next few years of development in western Canada.

During the years 1911-12, 1912-13 and 1913-14 the customs returns show that about $15,000,000 worth of goods consisting of cottons, woollens, iron and steel products, china and earthenware, glass and glass products, cocoa, paper and paper products, linens, gloves, linoleum and other general merchandise was imported direct from Europe annually to such points in the middle west as Winnipeg, Brandon, Regina, Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Calgary and Lethbridge. In addition to this there is also a large volume of general merchandise imported from Europe annually which is handled through jobbing houses in Montreal and Toronto, and eventually finds its way to the prairie provinces. There is no doubt whatever that with the opening up of the Hudson Bay route, even with the short navigation season, that a substantial portion of this traffic would take the Hudson Bay route since there would be a considerable saving in distance over the route via Montreal or Halifax.

The middle west has been developing rapidly during the last few years and has shown a very substantial increase in population. A very substantial portion of this increase is from the British Isles and these settlers are certain to purchase a considerable quantity of general merchandise in Great Britain if there is a substantial decrease in the long rail haul from Montreal. They will naturally time their purchases so as to come within the period of navigation on Hudson bay.

The foregoing memorandum has been made on the basis of pre-war conditions and it is only fair to remark in this connection that conditions may be largely changed for a considerable period following the war, in what respect and to what extent is of course difficult to forecast. The following tables are attached:

1. Table showing shipments by lake of wheat and all grain from Fort William and Port Arthur by months, 1909-1912.

2. Table showing Exports of Canadian wheat and all grains from various Canadian ports, 1910-1915 inclusive.

3. Table showing quantity of grain exported from Montreal.

4. Table giving the estimated transportation expenses, Hudson Bay railway in handling 10,000,000 bushels of wheat outbound and 150,000 tons inbound in 75 days.

5. Table showing population of principal western prairie cities, towns and provinces, 1916.

6. Table showing value of goods imported from the United States to Canada through the Dakota gateways during years 1912-1915 inclusive.

7. Table showing imports of coal through ports of Fort William and Port Arthur during fiscal years ending 31st March, 1912, 1913, 1914 and 1915.

8. Table showing probable freight charges on rolled steel shapes from Pittsburg and England and various points in western Canada.

9. Table showing probable relative costs of anthracite coal to western points from Pennsylvania and Wales, 1913 prices.

10. Table showing cost of fuel purchased by Canadian Northern railway during the year ended June 30, 1916.

11. Table showing probable relative cost of bituminous coal from Yellowhead, Pennsylvania and Sydney, 1913, at various points in western Canada.

12. Table of distances.

13. Table showing value of goods imported through the principal ports in the middle west during fiscal years ended March 31, 1912, 1913, and 1914.

14. Table showing quantity of United States anthracate coal used 1916-17 in various western cities and towns with prices, from report by Commission of Conservation, 1917.

15. Table showing cars of grain handled 1913-1916 inclusive on various Canadian Northern lines tributary to Hudson Bay Railway.

Statement showing number of cars of grain originating on some of Canadian National Railway lines tributary to Hudson Bay Railway, 1913 to 1916 inclusive.

Swan river to Preeceville—distance 72 miles

This line is through an open prairie country with occasional wooded bluffs and admirably adapted for either grain growing or mixed farming.

Dauphin to Prince Albert—Distance 160 Miles

This line leaves the main line of the Canadian Northern three miles north of Dauphin. For the first 120 miles north and westbound from the junction with the main line, the country is open and wooded in some sections, well adapted for mixed farming; in addition to grain production a considerable amount of live stock is shipped. From mile 120 to Tisdale, mile 272, the line runs largely through a timber country producing quantities of lumber and other forest products, which are shipped east and west. The principal mills are on Red Deer lake, about mile 160 and at Crooked river, mile 259. This section of land has produced large quantities of ties and piling timber used for maintenance purposes for other sections of the system. At Tisdale, mile 272, the line enters the open country well adapted for grain growing and mixed farming. This class of country, with the exception of occasional bluffs, extends to Prince Albert, mileage 360. At Prince Albert, with a population of about 6,500, considerable traffic is secured from the Prince Albert Lumber Company in lumber shipments destined to various points on the system.

Hudson Bay Junction to The Pas—Distance 87 Miles

This line is through timber country. While eventually there may be some farming done, it cannot be classed as desirable from an agricultural standpoint. All material for the construction of the Hudson Bay railway is handled by this line, in fact it is the only line having connection with the government line under construction to Port Nelson.

Regina to Prince Albert—Distance 249 Miles

Acquired in 1906 by purchase from the Regina, Long Lake and Qu'Appelle Railway. The principal cities are Regina, population say 30,000; Saskatoon, population 24,000 and Prince Albert, population 6,500. The line from Regina to Saskatoon, 160 miles, is through an open prairie country, ranging from flat plains to rolling country and well adapted for grain growing. The only important stream crossed is the South Saskatchewan river at Saskatoon.

From Saskatoon to Prince Albert, a distance of 89 miles, the country for the first 60 miles is open prairie, generally level and grain producing throughout. From Roddick to Prince Albert, a distance of 29 miles, the line is through partly wooded country, adapted for cattle raising and mixed farming.

This line crosses the main line of the company at Warman.

Saskatoon-Calgary Line—Distance 400 Miles

From Saskatoon to Munsen, a distance of 302 miles, the line is through an open prairie country, slightly rolling, well adapted for grain growing and well settled, with villages or towns located at intervals of about seven miles. While the country is only partly under cultivation the yield has been satisfactory as the statement shown below will show. From Munsen to Calgary, a distance of 98 miles, it can be classed as a good mixed farming country, shipping a considerable amount of grain and cattle. From Saskatoon to Hanna, a distance of 262 miles, the company handled 59.3 cars of grain per mile of track for the crop of 1915.

[Mr. Dunning.]

For mileage 312 to 324 and along the Red Deer river is located what is commonly called the Drumheller coalfields—fourteen mines are in operation and have produced up to 136 cars per day. The mine owners claim that this can be increased at any time to 178 cars per day, or approximately 5,500 tons, providing sufficient cars are supplied. Provision must be made, commencing September next, for daily loading of approximately 7,000 tons, all of which must be handled by the Canadian Northern railway.

Delisle to Dunblane—Distance 59 Miles

This line is through an open prairie district, ranging from level plains to rolling country, well adapted for grain growing, for mixed farming. From the crop of 1915, the Canadian Northern railway moved 3,317 cars grain, say at 66,000 pounds, carrying a rate of 23 cents per 100 pounds to Port Arthur—$151.80 per car or total revenue of $503,530.60, equivalent to $505 per mile of track from the originating point to Port Arthur, a distance of 997 miles.

Elrose Junction to Eston—distance 85 miles

This line is through open prairie country, slightly rolling and well adapted for grain growing. Some of the company's lands are located along this line, which is likely to be extended westward to a connection with the Saskatoon-Calgary line. From the 1915 crop there was shipped 4,056 cars from this line, or 48 cars per mile of track, the revenue from which was approximately $626,927, the rates to Port Arthur from stations on this line being 23 and 24 cents per 100 pounds, and basing the figures on 66,000 pounds to the car. The above amount provided revenue of $589.77 for every mile of track from a point midway on this branch to Port Arthur, i.e., 1,063 miles.

From Prince Albert westerly for the first 15 miles can be classed as a cattle country, but producing considerable cordwood, which is shipped to Prince Albert and to points south including Saskatoon. From mileage, 15 to Denholm, with one or two small exceptions, the country is open prairie, well suited for grain growing or mixed farming.

Shellbrook to Big River—distance 56 miles

This line is through part open country suitable for mixed farming and partly through timber. The Prince Albert Lumber Company have logging operations tributary to this line and deliver cars loaded with logs at sidings on this branch which are then handled by the Canadian Northern to Prince Albert. At Big river, the terminus of this line, there is also a saw-mill, the product of which is shipped over this line.

North Battleford to Turtleford—distance 56 miles

This line leaves the main line at North Battleford and runs through a good farming country all the way to Turtleford. The company have under construction a line extending from near Edmonton easterly and when completed will connect with this branch, giving the settlers on the north side of the Saskatchewan river transportation facilities. At present some of these settlers have upwards of 60 miles haul to reach the nearest railway which is the Canadian Northern main line. Under these conditions the settlers are confining their efforts to livestock which can be driven to market.

Mr. BIRD: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HANNESSON: Mr. Chairman, I should like—

The CHAIRMAN: The member for Selkirk (Mr. Hannesson) has the floor.

Mr. BIRD: Mr. Chairman, I had the floor and gave way to the Minister of Railways.

The CHAIRMAN: It is quite true the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird) had the floor on that occasion, but about an hour ago the hon. member for Selkirk sent me a note saying he would like to follow the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) and I promised to recognize him.

Mr. BIRD: Is it in order for an hon. member to pre-empt the floor of the House?

The CHAIRMAN: If the hon. member for Nelson wants the floor he has the right to it; he rose first. I leave it entirely to his judgment.

Mr. FORKE: Mr. Chairman, I rise—

Mr. CAHAN: I should like to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Nelson established the precedent of pre-emption.

Mr. HANNESSON: Mr. Chairman, I might explain that I deferred rising in my place because the hon. Minister of Railways had intimated to me that he wished to speak next.

Mr. FORKE: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I think the Chairman is perfectly straight and honest in his rulings, but I do think on this occasion he kept his head too close to the papers in front of him, for the simple reason that I have watched him time after time when members in this end of the chamber have risen first and have noticed that some other member to the Chairman's left has caught his eye.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. FORKE: I am not attributing anything unfavourable to the Chairman's conduct. I think he is perfectly honest—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. FORKE: —but it seems to me he should look along the chamber sometimes, when he would probably see other hon. members trying to catch his eye besides those to his left.

Mr. BIRD: Mr. Chairman, I did not understand that in committee it was customary to make arrangements as to the order in which members are to speak. It seems to me unfair when a member sits here throughout a debate that his chance to speak should be lost simply because another member, who may not have been in the House during the debate, has arranged with the Chairman and pre-empted his turn.

Mr. HANNESSON: I have been in my seat the whole afternoon.

Mr. BIRD: However, I am quite willing to give way to my hon. friend because I realize we are both fighting in the same cause. I simply protest against the procedure.

The CHAIRMAN: I might say to the hon. leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke) that of course while in the chair I have no particular sympathy with any party or any member. I need not go further than that so far as he is concerned. About an hour ago the hon. member for Selkirk sent me a note saying he would like to follow the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. I wrote him in reply that the arrangement was quite satisfactory to me. Shortly after the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) also sent me a similar note, and I told him where he would come in. Then the Minister of Railways asked that he might follow the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, and to this the hon. members for Selkirk and North Battleford agreed. The hon. member for Nelson rose in his place first, and if he desires to exercise his right he is entitled to the floor, but I think under the circumstances that, as he has just admitted, both the hon. member for Selkirk and he are fighting for the same cause in this debate the incident is satisfactorily settled.

Mr. FORKE: Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have this matter definitely settled. It is just a point of order. I have always understood that when the Speaker was in the chair during a regular debate it was arranged between the whips in what order hon. members should speak, and the Speaker was furnished with a copy of that list, but this is the first time I ever knew that the chairman of the committee of the Whole kept such a list with no arrangement whatever being made.

The CHAIRMAN: I might also say to the hon. member for Brandon that the practice is quite usual, whether in committee or in the House and if persons send their names to the Chairman he is perfectly justified in following that list.

Mr. HANNESSON: When the motion to adjourn the debate was made last night I had not intended speaking because I felt the House to be so favourable to this item that it would be useless to take up any more time. But I have a deep interest in this subject, and the remarks of to-day and last night compel me to say a few words. When in 1886 the famous telegram to which the minister referred was sent saying "Hurrah; the rails are shipped", the projected route of the Hudson Bay railway was through the constituency of Selkirk, and to-day the dump from which the rails were removed is still to be seen at Warren, Manitoba. The descendants of the original Selkirk settlers are also to be found in that constituency, people who came in by way of Hudson bay, and the descendants of most of the Hudson bay factors find their homes there. These people have all had to do with the Hudson bay and the north country, and they have not only a sincere belief in the feasibility of the route but a conviction that it can be made to pay and that the completion of the road is inevitable. If I thought for one moment there was any danger that this item might not pass, I would not be doing my duty if I did not say something. But I believe something should be done to controvert what I can only characterize as propaganda against that railway which I regret to say has come almost altogether from this side of the House, with the exception of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth).

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would just like to say that I resent having my speech characterized as propaganda against the railway; in my remarks I stated that I would vote in favour of the estimate. I prefer to make my statements in my own way, without having them characterized by the hon. member opposite.

Mr. HANNESSON: My hon. friend's remarks will speak for themselves, and I am sure he will again have occasion to do some explaining in this connection. Last night I was very much impressed by the remarks of the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean). He pointed out that the destiny of Canada would be realized in the north, and I am a firm believer that if we are to realize our destiny we must look northward. Every movement in that direction has been successful, and has worked to the good of Canada.

Every argument I have heard in this House and elsewhere against the feasibility of the Hudson Bay railway has been almost identical with the arguments advanced against practically every effort that has been made to extend our civilization and settlement northward. I can also say that during the years I have heard the Hudson bay route discussed —and they are many—the same kind of talk has gone on as we have heard in this House with regard to the feasibility of the route. It is a remarkable thing that although the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) had apparently spent a good deal of time gathering data and material to demonstrate that the route was not feasible and would not pay, he was unable in support to quote a single witness with the exception of Mr. McLachlan, a man uninformed in many things, however well he may be informed in others. It is all very well for hon. members to say that the north is a frozen country fit for nothing and that Hudson strait is not navigable, but when they are asked for proof they point to a report made in 1917 by an engineer who was there when nothing was doing and made but one trip by water. This same man gave evidence before the Senate committee in 1920, among other witnesses, and we all know the report made by the Senate.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said last night he would like to have an expert commission investigate the matter; he wanted expert evidence. Is not that exactly the kind of propaganda which has been delaying the construction of the Hudson Bay railway all along? Whom would that commission be composed of? He suggested it should include engineers, shipping men, grain men and others.

May I point out the nature of the evidence given before the Senate committee, upon which the report was based? They took the evidence of a sergeant of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who had been in that country for many years; Mr. F. C. T. O'Hara, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce; Mr. J. G. Desbarats, Deputy Minister of Naval Service; Captain Frederick Anderson of the Hydrographic branch, Naval Service; D. W. McLachlan; Vilhjalmer Stefansson, the Arctic explorer; Captain Norman E. Freakley, who had been in the Hudson's Bay service since 1898, sailing the bay; Captain Bernier, the Arctic explorer, sent specially to Hudson bay by the government; W. P. Anderson, of the Marine Department; Lance Corporal White, of the mounted police; Edward E. Prince, Dominion Commissioner of Fisheries; Mr. John L. Payne, statistician, Department of Railways and Canals; Hon. Frank Cochrane, who went to Hudson bay himself; W. G. Walton, a missionary; J. B. Tyrrell, a mining engineer; J. W. Tyrrell, a civil engineer; Mr. E. E. Clawson, Department of Marine and Fisheries, and others. All these men had been at the bay personally and were as well qualified in their own branches as anyone who could be selected by this government. Yet my hon. friend says there is not sufficient data and information. After hearing the evidence of these men the Senate made a report which fully justified the government in going ahead. It must also be remembered that in 1912, when it was decided to go ahead with this matter, the then Minister of Railways personally went to Hudson bay. For several centuries men have been doing business there. There are records dating back to 1740 showing the nature of the country, the feasibility of the route and all that is required.

Before I go into some of the objections which have been made I would just like to say that I was very grateful to the minister for the information he gave, but that information was disappointing to me as it will be to a great many other people. In the first place I think this House is entitled to know the exact condition of the system from someone who has made a personal examination. It is hard to believe after the appropriations that have been voted almost every year by this House, running up to $300,000 in some years, that the system should be so badly run down that it requires $3,000,000 to put it into shape. Mind you, I am not finding fault with the principle of first repairing the existing track. I think that is only sound business, and that it will decrease the expense in connection with further construction. But when we are asked to vote an amount of $3,000,000 I think this House is entitled to know that it is not an estimate made by some person sitting at a desk here in Ottawa or in the Department of Railways and Canals. I think the House is entitled to that information. I asked for it yesterday, and it seems to me that it should be made available. But that is not the only disappointment. I am not going to go over all the promises of construction that have been made, but during the last year both parties made specific promises to the people of the west. The promise of the Liberal party was as specific as it could be—"immediate construction of the Hudson Bay railway to Port Nelson." That promise was reiterated here in the House in the Speech from the Throne; it was made again in the Prince Albert by-election. Again, when the leader of the government in the Senate said that the vote was only for repairs, that statement was afterwards denied in this House. The people of western Canada expect that there will be no more dilly-dallying about this thing. They do not want to be put off further, and if $3,000,000 is not enough—and remember, the construction of the 92 miles could be proceeded with concurrently with the repairs—we expected that the amount required would be voted this session. I say that this House should go on record as definitely committing the government of Canada to the construction of the road right to the bay. That is all that I suggest they should do. I quite realize that if the road is constructed to the bay, the further question of the construction of harbour works and improvements will come up subsequently. But by the time that does come up, we shall expect the government to have sufficient information to enable us to judge whether it is wise to make that expenditure or not. But that is not an issue at the present time. The government is not committing itself on that point, and I am not asking this House to commit itself to that further construction. But I say that we are entitled, in view of the promises made by representatives of both parties, to a definite declaration that the full amount required for the road be appropriated.

A great deal has been said about navigation. I submit that in view of the Senate report there is no need to go into that question exhaustively, particularly as the present vote is not concerned with that expenditure. Every man in the west believes that the Hudson Bay railway will be a grain route, but whether the grain business alone or the cattle business alone will justify the construction of this road, we believe that the grain business and the cattle business taken in conjunction with the other business that the road will develop will justify its existence, and it is only from the point of view of dealing with these characteristics that I am going to speak now, because I think we have gone far afield in dealing at the present time with navigation or with the cost of harbour improvements at the bay.

In the first place, may I draw the attention of the House to the report made by Professor Prince, at page 43 of the Senate report, with regard to the fisheries? It shows beyond all question that not only are the fisheries of the rivers wonderful, but the wealth of fisheries at the bay is overwhelming and would add greatly to the wealth of Canada. Almost every kind of fish is to be found in the bay. Mr. McLachlan has said that there might be fish there, but that there would be no fishing season. The only thing he had to go upon in making that statement was what some Indians in the district had told him. As everybody knows the Indian is not a deep sea sailor, and he fishes in a very crude way.

A pamphlet has been issued this year by the inspector of fisheries of the Dominion, showing the result of investigations made last year, and it confirms Mr. Prince's view that the fishery wealth of northern Manitoba and the bay is amazing. I am not going into the details, because any member who is curious can find them in the sources I have indicated.

With regard to minerals, the Senate report gives considerable information. We know that at The Pas minerals have been discovered that justify the expression of opinion that was made by Mr. Tyrrell before the Senate committee. There is not the slightest doubt that there is enormous mineral wealth in that district that will be available when the country is opened up by the railway. When you think of the wealth produced for Ontario in what was the backwoods of that province, which years ago people would not hear of as fit for habitation, you can realize the possibilities in the Hudson bay territory.

There is not only timber but pulpwood in that territory. Between The Pas and Split Lake it is estimated that there are 6,000,000 cords of pulpwood. There is now a mill at The Pas with a capacity of 125,000 feet per day, and the timber runs farther north than has been indicated. I have examined the photographs available to every member of this House, taken by the Air Service, and to be found in the Topographical Surveys branch, showing the whole country from The Pas to Port Nelson and Fort Churchill covered with forests of much the same character almost right up to the bay.

I do not need to dwell upon the fur wealth of that country, and how that will help. For centuries the Hudson's Bay Company has been capturing fur-bearing animals in that district. That will add to the business of the railway, and it is a big business, as witness the fur market in Winnipeg, which is going to equal the Montreal fur market. The furs come altogether from the territory that is to be served by the Hudson Bay railway.

I am going to dwell for a few minutes on the climate and soil, because more has been said detrimentally about that than perhaps about anything else except navigation. Hon. members laughed at the hon. member for Marquette when he spoke of bathing in the Hudson bay. I am not going as far as that, but I shall read a few extracts to show the nature of the weather at the bay, and which will at the same time give an idea of the capabilities of this region for cultivation. I am reading from "The Hudson Bay Road" by A. H. de Tremaudan, which will be found in the library. He has gathered information regarding the climate going back as far as 1752. He says:

> In 1752, Robson, the architect of Fort Prince of Wales, had a similar opinion: "I have seen a small pea growing without any culture (at York Factory). Most kinds of garden stuff, particularly peas and beans, grow here to perfection....I am of opinion that barley would flourish....Gooseberries and red and black currants are found in the woods growing upon such bushes as in England....I should expect by no more labour than would be proper for my health to procure a desirable livelihood; not at all doubting of my being able to raise peas and beans, barley and probably other kinds of grain (on Hayes river).... The natural produce of Hudson bay grows very fast, and comes to perfection much sooner than that of England. There is no spring or fall—a leap from winter to summer....The soil is fertile, the climate temperate, fit for the produce of all kinds of grain and for raising flocks of tame cattle....At Churchill horses and cows have been kept in winter, though greatly exposed to the frost and cold,....at Moose Factory sown wheat has stood the winter frosts and grown very well the summer following,....black cherries also planted here have grown and borne fruit, as would other trees if propagated;....the climate is not worse than that of Sweden, Denmark, Russia, Poland and North Germany."

Then take the evidence of Mr. R. F. Stupart, now Sir Frederick Stupart, director of the Meteorological Service, before the Senate committee of 1907:

As to the isothermal lines of that part of the country lying south and west of Split lake on the route of the proposed railway between the head of The Pas and Churchill, Mr. Stupart explained that in the month of June the district in question is between the isothermal line of 50 and 55. The corresponding isothermal district in Europe would be the extreme north of Scotland in June. In July that district is between the isothermal lines 55 and 60, and that would correspond with Scotland and a portion of Scandinavia. In the month of August the district in question is about 55, and there you have Scotland again. The country had a reasonably fair climate for the three summer months, June, July, and August.

I could quote more to the same effect. It is the long day of sunlight that enables things to grow so well in that territory, in fact the temperature rises until about six o'clock in the evening of each day. Then as to the soil. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George talked about the moss in that country. The engineer whose statements he was quoting was not talking about moss; he was talking about the bog covering swamp where it went to any depth. But in the northern country where there is rock there always will be moss. Nevertheless there is plenty of good land in that country as it shown by the evidence given before the Senate committee in 1924. Let me point out the evidence of Mr. Stefansson to be found at page 34 of that report:

I think Churchill would be the best place to establish a musk-ox ranch because we know that it is good grass country.

He went on to explain that on the prairie there was plenty of grass, and that what is known as the barren lands was actually prairie. On those barren lands there are no trees but there is plenty of grass. At page 50 of the same report we find the evidence of Mr. J. B. Tyrrell who stated:

I think a reindeer ranch proposition on the west coast would be quite feasible. I saw great stretches of grass land, and also I saw vast herds of caribou which live on grass exclusively. They seemed to get abundance of feed.

What is the use of the hon. members accepting the biased reports of men that have travelled only in a very restricted area of that country and who say that the barren lands are incapable of producing, in the face of the statements of men like Stefansson and Tyrrell who say that those districts are capable of producing live stock, and in particular reindeer and musk ox. We who have been in the region referred to, and are familiar with its capabilities, know that in the matter of production it has great potentialities. At one time in our history the cry was raised that very little could be grown away from the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway in the west. Nevertheless that company has built many branch lines from its main line in Saskatchewan and in that territory to-day there is a production of no less than 150,000,000 bushels of wheat. Those identified with the early history of the Canadian Pacific railway should have known better than to entertain any doubt of the possibilities of the west in the matter of production. Similar doubts were expressed in the past with regard to the possibilities of Manitoba, or at least the northern part of the province. It was said that grain could not be grown there. Yet grain is being grown there to-day, and all the time the area of production is extending farther and farther north. There is no question in my mind but that people who have posed as authorities have been utterly wrong in their statements about the northern country. It is not one bog or swamp, nor is it a useless and barren country. It is a region capable of great development and that development will take place before many years have passed. We of the west who know that country and realize its possibilities have great faith in it. We come to hon. members with assurance and ask them to give us something that has been promised for generations and generations. We say to them that if they wish the destiny of western Canada to be realized they will help us to roll the map northward because that is where the future development of western Canada lies.

Mr. BIRD: It had not been my intention to speak at all until I listened to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). I notice, by the way, that that hon. gentleman is in the habit of delivering himself and getting out of the chamber as quickly as possible; he has everything to teach and nothing to learn evidently. I listened very carefully to the hon. member's speech throughout, and I must say that it was a very clever piece of special pleading. His procedure amounted to this: All he did was to magnify the McLachlan report and belittle the Senate report. It is a very easy form of arguing when you can take two documents and carefully select all that is palatable in the one and all that is unpalatable in the other. I do not mind the hon. gentleman belittling the Senate on ordinary occasions it he can do it. Nor do I mind him glorifying Mr. McLachlan on the proper occasion. But let us deal for a moment with the notorious McLachlan report. Personally I do not want to detract from the ability of this engineer. I think it is conceded that as an engineer he is foremost in his profession; but I want to remind the House that not a word in this report comes from Mr. McLachlan in his capacity as engineer. I would point out that this famous letter deals with phases of the problem which lie entirely outside his capacity as a port engineer; and if you will read all that Mr. McLachlan has ever said about Port Nelson you will find that on no occasion has he ever attempted to detract from that port. So far as Mr. McLachlan is concerned, the problem is not an engineering one at all, because Mr. McLachlan will be the first man in this country to admit that the engineering problems have been solved, and I think he would be prepared to admit that they have been solved by a very clever engineer. Of course I give due weight to the opinions of Mr. McLachlan as expressed here on the problems of navigation. I suppose he has as much right to an opinion as anybody in this House on navigation; and also we must attach some weight to his opinion given on matters of transport. This letter is composed of two sets of opinions; one based upon his view of the navigation difficulties, and the other on his view of the transport problem. He speaks in the first instance as a navigator and in the second instance as a freight expert, but not as an engineer because if he had spoken as such he would have described Port Nelson as one of the best ports of its kind on the face of the globe, as it surely is. The beginning of this letter always strikes me with a certain amount of amusement:

> Many a time during the past four years I have been on the verge of coming out in absolute condemnation of the undertaking.

I think it sheds a ray of light, if I may say so, on the temperament of Mr. McLachlan. It seems that he had his ups and downs. At times he felt that the enterprise was going to be a success. At other times he was down in the dumps, so to speak, and he felt sure, almost to the verge of admitting it, that it would not be a success. I am afraid that Mr. McLachlan, although he is an expert engineer who has carried a great work to the point of success, is in his disposition somewhat a little bilious and a little inclined to waver. Let me point out that my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George has built up the edifice of his argument on this somewhat strange, outlandish document of Mr. McLachlan. The hon. member mentioned what Mr. McLachlan said in the following paragraph:

> Port Nelson was this year blocked with ice on August 29.

Now all newspapers opposed to the Hudson Bay railway have based leading articles on that one paragraph which stated that in midsummer Port Nelson was blocked with ice. Our friend from St. Lawrence-St. George emphasized that. I have the report before me, and if hon. members wil turn to page 19 they will find that Mr. McLachlan wrote a letter dated August 30, the day after the port was supposed to be blocked with ice, in which he says:

> As I write this letter, the ice is still in clear view in the vicinity of the Alette. Yesterday as it was a very fine day, I seized the opportunity and went out in a gasoline boat to a point about five miles beyond the Cearense.

He went fifteen miles down the estuary in a gasoline boat the day he reported the port was blocked with ice. I think this periodical appearance in the Nelson estuary of floating ice in summer is just as understandable as the appearance of floating ice in the estuary of the St. Lawrence. These phenomena arise precisely from the same cause. Mr. McLachlan admitted that it was an extraordinary year. It may occur in midsummer of any year that there may be a field of floating ice going as far south as the estuary of the Nelson just as it gets as far south as the north Atlantic shipping route in certain years. That goes without saying, but it is another matter to base on that an argument against the feasibility of the route. Mr. McLachlan's report is based solely, not upon his experience as an engineer, because his experience as an engineer relieves the Hudson bay route entirely from any doubt. I say that Mr. McLachlan would be the first man to admit that Port Nelson at the present time, up to the point he left off working on it, was a real success, and that nature and human ingenuity had come together and had made a feasible port in that estuary. Too much importance can be attached to these point blank statements we have listened to this afternoon. If you look at any project from the beginning, it is easy to conjure up imaginary difficulties which, in the popular view, will condemn it. Suppose such a process had been followed for instance in regard to the port of Montreal, or in regard to any great world ports, that would be sufficient to condemn it in the minds of some people. I have before me some excerpts from a pamphlet entitled:

Notes from report on British and continental ports with a view to the development of the port of Montreal and Canadian transportation.

It states here:

Although Great Britain's sea power during Elizabethan times achieved a position that has since preserved her commercial integrity, Liverpool's maritime commerce was then being carried by 15 ships with an aggregate burthen of 268 tons. The sand dunes sloping to the river were undisturbed by artificial construction, and no shelter for ships existed. Nature has, however, been overcome by the courage, persistence and skill of determined men who, in the words of a former dock chairman, have made of Liverpool "a purse out of a sow's ear."

They had made a port out of the level sand dunes. I have another interesting extract here.

The length of the channel from the Nore Light to London Bridge is 47½ miles, with a width varying from 1,000 feet to 200 feet, and a depth varying from 26 feet to 14 feet at low water.

And the narrowest width of the channel at Port Nelson is over 1,000 feet. Now let me give a further extract. This relates to Montreal:

In the year 1773 Glasgow was an important town, having less than 30,000 inhabitants. There was no harbour, the river Clyde being in places from 15 to 18 inches deep, and with only a "sensible" tide opposite the town. As far down as 12 miles below Glasgow the river was fordable. The river Clyde is now one of the great navigable highways of the world, 22 feet deep at low tide and 33 at high tide——and its construction is considered a triumph of engineering skill. The creation of this inland waterway, with the resulting commercial and manufacturing establishments, is certainly a most notable achievement. It was the success of the improvements on the Clyde which prompted the improvement of the river St. Lawrence ship channel to Montreal, which now, as regards size and navigability, so far surposses its model.

Almost exactly what the channel at Nelson is now.

I quote this just to show that from the point of view of engineering the proposition at Port Nelson is one of the best this world affords, one of the shortest, deepest and cleanest channels you can mention off hand. As to ice conditions, it is possible to magnify ice to almost any dimensions, if you want to belittle this proposition, but I want to say that some of the busiest trade channels in the world have conditions which are just as black to the outside observer as anything pointed out by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. Let me now quote from Lloyd's calendar for 1924; concerning ice in the Baltic:

The obstruction by ice varies considerably in different years.

Just as it does in the Hudson bay.

The winter marks are laid out in November and December, and removed in March and April. In the northern part of the gulf of Bothnia, navigation is not generally open to sailing vessels until the middle of May. In the gulf of Finland navigation is usually closed about the end of November and opens late in February. The entrances to the gulf of Riga are usually closed in a few weeks, but the middle of the gulf rarely freezes completely. The river Dwina is kept open by ice-breakers. The earliest recorded date of the closing of Kronstadt is 12th November and latest 20th January, and the earliest opening 9th April and latest 24th May, Petrograd being a little earlier and later.

It goes on to show the ice conditions in a good many other important ports of northern Europe, and none of the conditions portrayed are any more favourable than the conditions portrayed by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. It is beyond refutation that in relation to this route there is no engineering problem whatsoever. The whole problem with regard to the Hudson bay route boils itself down to the navigation of the straits. Every reasonable man must concede that. There is no problem anywhere else.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): What about money?

Mr. BIRD: That problem depends upon one's point of view and the object aimed at. I can quite understand that it looms larger in the mind of the hon. gentleman than it does in mine. That is explained by a difference in geography. The problem of the Hudson bay route, I repeat, is precisely that of the navigation of the straits. And we must narrow it down still further, for I do not think there is a man in this House who will deny that the Hudson straits are navigable during some part of the year. Everybody knows that; everybody is aware that in certain months during the summer the straits are as navigable as the Mediterranean sea. It is therefore not a question of navigability. I listened to the speech of the hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Foster) last night, and I was surprised to hear him suggest that this was all a matter of sentiment. You will have observed as I did that he was the only man who had indulged in any sentiment so far as the debate had then proceeded. In fact, his speech was all sentiment. I have read it again and I have yet to discern a single fact in it. He declared that he had gone through the straits and had got scared, notwithstanding the fact that he had gone in an ice-breaker. He went through the straits and was so scared that no money would ever persuade him to repeat the trip. He is the only man bearing an Anglo-Saxon name I ever heard of who was scared in going through the straits.

Mr. PRICE: I do not think the hon. member is quoting the member for Hants-Kings correctly. I do not think he made use of that language at all.

Mr. BIRD: Of course he did not. I could not repeat offhand the exact language he used, but the substance of it was that having gone through the straits he was in a superior position to give an opinion on the question. If therefore he was possessed of the information he should have cited a few instances in proof of his assertions so that he might have been checked up. As it is we cannot check him up.

This is more than a matter of sentiment. So far as the navigability of the straits is concerned, no reasonable man here or elsewhere will deny that the whole question is the length of the season of navigation. I want the committee to keep that in mind because it is the kernel of the whole question. Do not let us be led aside by any talk of muskegs along the Hudson Bay railway or by any suggestion of difficulties in engineering, because such difficulties do not exist. The whole problem, I say, consists in the length of season in which the straits may be navigated. Now that problem certainly is not a matter of sentiment, nor is it a matter of mere guesswork. It has been investigated at least three times through money voted by this House. In 1885-86 an expedition was sent out to the bay at the instance of parliament to look into the question, and again in 1896 another and better equipped and a more costly expedition was dispatched to make investigations. And that expedition had the benefit of the findings of its predecessor. Again, in the years 1910, 1911, 1912, 1913 and 1914, at the expense of the country, a more thoroughly equipped and a scientific expedition was sent out for the sole purpose of discovering how long the straits were open for navigation in the course of the summer. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George never mentioned that expedition. He never referred to it, for the simple reason that it was not just favourable to the trend of his speech. That expedition was instructed to enter the straits at the earliest practicable moment and to leave them at the last moment it thought advisable, and it reported in favour of the Hudson Bay route, giving the length of the navigation season at four months as a minimum, with a possibility of extending it at each end. I have before me the report submitted by that expedition and I find in it this statement:

> The period during which vessels could enter Hudson strait with comparative safety may be taken to extend from July 15 until November 15, with an extension of a week at either end according to the season.

That was no hasty conclusion; it was the deliberate finding of a careful, well equipped and scientific expedition. So that the question as to the earliest moment at which vessels may enter the straits and the time at which they may safely depart has been settled. It has been known for a good many years that the middle of July may be regarded as the average date at which commerce may enter these straits with any degree of safety. There is no question about that; we do not need to send any more expeditions to discover the fact. It has been settled for all time to come. It is as firmly established in the realm of realities as is the clock tower on this building. We do not need to spend any more money whatever to find it out. It does not matter what documents may be brought forward, those who follow the researches that have been made are bound to come to the conclusion that July 15 marks the beginning of commerce in the straits. The only question therefore which we have to decide is the length of time during which shipping can go on.

Now the hydrographic surveys carried out in the years I have mentioned afford the only instance of any earnest effort having been made to determine the date at which navigation in the Hudson straits closes. The Anderson expedition, sent out particularly with the idea of ascertaining the closing date of navigation, without very much effort found that navigation could go on for at least another month beyond the date set by Wakeham. I believe any reasonable person who reads the story of the Anderson expedition will come to the conclusion that the hydrographic surveys, although they went further than any other expedition along those lines, did not go as far as they might have gone; and it is my belief that in many years the period of navigation will extend over a much longer period than that which the Anderson expedition gave as their conservative report.

The member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) and other hon. gentlemen who have spoken against this proposition have advocated a new expedition. Now, I wonder what more that expedition could find out than has already been found out. How would it help this problem to take in coal and dump it in the Nelson river? I do not know very much about navigation problems—

Mr. CANTLEY: Agreed.

Mr. BIRD: I know perhaps as little as the hon. gentleman who interrupts.

Mr. CANTLEY: Very likely.

Mr. BIRD: But I know the problem is simple—in fact at one end of the period there is no problem at all, and at the other end it is so simple that it does not need a special expedition to find out just when the period of navigation closes, because I feel convinced that all the documentary evidence exists whereby any reasonable person can form a fair conclusion as to the conditions of navigation in November and December. Supposing this expedition, advocated by the enemies of this scheme in order to win delay and profit by the accidents that might happen, went there in a very unfavourable year, ran into a pack of ice in the middle of August and was stuck there, unintentionally, just as I was told by my hon. friend from Marquette a short while ago the Welshman, a tramp steamer, ran into a pack of ice in the St. Lawrence river in the month of May about two years ago; supposing that happened, would it not be a triumph for our hon. friends? That is precisely what they want. Supposing on the other hand it happened to be a very favourable year, something like the year 1912 when ordinary steamers could have gone in the middle of June and sailed out in the first week in January, because it is on record that in certain years there the straits are clear of ice for seven months, during which commerce could safely traverse those straits; what would our friends say if that happened to be the sort of year in which this expedition was sent out? I am afraid they would not accept the results, and all the money would have been spent for nothing. The futility of a proposition of that kind is beyond words to anybody who knows anything about the documentary evidence.

Mr. MANION: Did the expedition to which my hon. friend refers make one trip or a number of trips?

Mr. BIRD: They made a number of trips in the one year. Their official instructions were to enter the straits at the earliest moment, and to leave at the latest moment. they did considerable cruising around the straits in between the trips.

Now let me refer to the colonization phase of this subject. My hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George made a big pretense of building up a solid structure of argument against this proposition. It is only necessary to point out one or two things in addition to those I have already brought to the attention of the committee, to demonstrate that his argument from beginning to end was just a form of special pleading, not very much better than the servile articles that have now and again appeared in the newspapers of Montreal —not very much better, not much more solid; a little more pretentious, that is all, but in some cases actually based upon those pot-boiling articles. For instance, imagine the hon. gentleman standing up and seriously telling us that the Hudson Bay railway runs through a country of muskeg! We thought that bogey had been dissipated a good many years ago. We thought when that wilderness had been penetrated by actual construction work that all the talk about frozen tundra and frozen soil would be forever shattered. You know, in the childhood of the race people always conjured up all kinds of chimeras just beyond the horizon where the unexplored land lay. It was always very easy for the childish mind of humanity to conjure up all sorts of mysteries in that region where human beings could not penetrate and find out for themselves. Similar chimeras were conjured up about the Hudson bay country before construction of the line began. I had not intended to mention the fact, but I myself two or three years ago went over the entire length of the Hudson Bay line as far as steel is laid and then went down the Nelson river to the port itself. I want to say, in contradiction to what the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George said this afternoon, that there is no such thing as muskeg between The Pas and Port Nelson. Why, the original reports of Mr. Armstrong are enough to prove that. Under a Liberal government he was sent to investigate conditions for railway construction in the direction of Port Nelson, and here is an excerpt from his report:

> The route selected towards Port Nelson follows the Churchill route for some 150 miles, or thereabouts, the description of which has been given. Unlike the Churchill route, the Nelson route does not resolve itself into natural divisions, each presenting different characteristics peculiar to itself, but throughout maintains a generally uniform appearance, so that the description given for the first division of the Churchill route may be applied in a general way to the whole of the Nelson route. It is not expected that the rock work will amount to very much, the major portion of the grading being in clay loam with smaller percentages of sand, gravel and swamp. The tundra is not encountered on this route, the whole line being through timber not appreciably different from that described on the first 200 miles of the Churchill route. It may be mentioned here that sand and gravel has been found sufficiently often to justify our belief that ballast may be had without unduly long hauls, except on the northern 70 or 80 miles of the Churchill route.

Having been over the entire length of the road I can fully confirm everything said there. Here and there the line naturally passes through a small piece of swamp land as it would in any part of Canada, but speaking generally I believe there is no length of railway in this country so easily maintained and operated as will be this portion. The hon. gentleman said the line had actually gone out of sight in the bog. I travelled very inch of that line, and as far as I remember we kept on top all the time; I do not remember any time that the train or gasoline car had to be portaged. In a great many cases the line passes over rock and sand and gravel and clay, just as Mr. Armstrong says.

The hon. gentleman was quoting, I think, from a pamphlet written by a Mr. Payne, who is a paid propagandist for the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. member was trying to belittle the natural resources along that route. The Department of Agriculture of this government a year or two ago was asked to establish experimental stations along the line of this railway, in that well known clay belt discovered by Mr. Tyrrell many years ago, amounting to over 10,000 square miles. It was well known that gardens were kept successfully in that clay for many years, but until last year it was not known how agricultural products generally could be raised. I have the report of the mile 137 station,—

Mr. DICKIE: How far is that north of The Pas?

Mr. BIRD: There is one at mile 185 and one at mile 137, and the station at mile 137 had the following results:

|---|---|
| Wheat— | |
| Garnet | 64.3 |
| Bishop | 64.3 |
| Marquis | 62.8 |
| Ruby | 53.5 |
| Early Triumph | 47.8 |
| Prelude | 46.3 |
| Oats— | |
| Legacy | 125.2 |
| Victory | 118.2 |
| Banner | 117.0 |
| Gold Rain | 90.5 |
| Daubeney | 79.4 |
| Alaska | 68.5 |
| Barley— | |
| O.A.C. No. 21 | 106.4 |
| Chinese | 102.2 |
| Early Chevalier | 98.9 |
| Charlottetown | 95.4 |
| Duckbill | 87.5 |
| Albert | 28.5 |

Anyone who knows that northern country is quite well aware that the section described by Mr. Tyrrell is an agricultural district of great potentiality. That part of the country far away from the line may not be developed for many years, but as soon as the line is constructed and a regular service guaranteed surely settlers of all kinds will be attracted.

I need not go into the mineral situation, but everyone knows perfectly well that for the first hundred miles this railway passes through the great pre-Cambrian field which has made Canada so famous in regard to minerals. That great pre-Cambrian area almost entirely surrounds Hudson bay, and the Hudson Bay railway passes right through the centre of it. This mineral area is in two lobes, almost like a human lung; the one lobe is the great northern Quebec district, while the other is the district running to the Mackenzie basin and the Arctic circle. The Hudson Bay railway, almost as though by design, strikes this great district in its very centre and runs through it for the first hundred miles or so. It is a matter of history that in recent times great deposits of copper and gold have been discovered in close proximity to the first hundred miles of this railway.

I need not enlarge upon the agricultural prospects of the next two hundred miles, but besides agriculture in that district there are immense possibilities in the way of timber and fish. This is the lake district of Canada; the most wonderful lake district in the world exists in my constituency about half way up the railway, and that district is noted for its beauty as well as for its wealth of fish. I believe no lakes on this continent excel in beauty some of those to be found near the Hudson Bay railway. Someone has said we cannot run this railway on sentiment alone. We do not have to; we have learned within the last two or three years that even natural beauty is an economic asset. But with fish and timber and agricultural possibilities I believe the central part of the Hudson Bay railway is destined to attract a great amount of settlement.

I do not want to prolong my remarks, but in closing let me refer to the last despised hundred miles of this railway, which has been referred to by former speakers. They have said that the last hundred miles is barren of prospects there. To my mind that is the most attractive portion of the whole line, because in the first thirty miles of that part there are some of the most wonderful water power resources to be found anywhere in Canada. The railway actually runs within a mile or two of and parallel to the river for this distance, contiguous to some of the finest water power sites in the world, with the last power site sixty miles from Nelson, at Limestone rapids. Within that thirty mile stretch there are two million units of horse power at minimum flow and over three million at maximum, and to my mind that is the most promising and most attractive part of the railway.

I need not enlarge upon the possibilities of the bay itself. Mr. McLachlan, who in his time has played many parts, tried to become a fish expert as well as a transportation expert; he said there were fish in Hudson bay but that there was no fishing season. I would take the word of a resident of the constituency of my friend from Selkirk, where the people are born fishermen and know fishing prospects when they see them, rather than the word of Mr. McLachlan or anyone else in the engineering line. I will read this interesting paragraph taken from The Pas Herald of August 1, 1924:

Captain Baldwin Anderson, of Gimli, Manitoba, who has been in charge of fishing operations at Manito Rapids for the Armstrong Independent Fisheries Co., returned to The Pas last Saturday .

Before returning here Captain Anderson made a trip to Port Nelson in the interests of the fishermen of Lake Manitoba, who have been wanting to get some knowledge of the fishing possibilities of Hudson Bay. The Captain spent some time at the Bay and made a thorough investigation.

He was very pleased with the results and says there are great possibilities for the fishing industry in the northern waters. At the mouth of the river, tullibee, herring and trout are very abundant, while white whale and seals are also in large numbers. The white whale, Mr. Anderson states, produces the finest quantity of oil, and the flesh, when cured as it is in Iceland, is also good to eat. Further up the river sturgeon are abundant, Mr. Anderson taking out $1,200 worth in 10 days.

Fishing boats, he states, could go up the river for 60 miles. The banks of the Nelson River would form an ideal location for fishermen's homes. The banks are high and the ground rich. Farming could be carried on at the same time, and the fishermen could have their boats tied up right at their door.

That is from a practical, an experienced fisherman, and that was precisely the impression that the party which I was with took of the situation. I have been up lake Winnipeg and have seen the conditions under which lake Winnipeg fishermen make their living, and I know perfectly well that if ever that class of men, who run their fishing with their farming, get an opportunity to settle at the end of the railway at Hudson bay, that is where they will be, for that is the kind of living they wish to have. I think I have said enough, Mr. Chairman, to show the fallaciousness of the ponderous argument put forward by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George.

Any Canadian with only a little amount of imagination who looks at a map of Canada will surely see that when the Hudson Bay railway is completed we are going to get immediate access both summer and winter to that immense continent which we call ours, but which in actuality we have never yet claimed and never laid hold of. When this railway is completed, we will find ourselves immediately in touch with every coast and shore along the Hudson bay. in touch with those great islands to the north, and with those great rivers which flow into Hudson bay and which are navigable, some of them, for two or three hundred miles from the Bay.

I should like to quote, in closing, words which I think are most worthy of the subject, and which were uttered by the right hon. leader of the opposition at Regina, on October 13th last, when he said:

Canada is too vigorous, too virile and too proud to see the Hudson Bay railway carried to within seventy or eighty per cent of completion, and leave it there a spectacle to the world.

Those are sentiments with which every full-blooded Canadian can sympathize. After all, it is not so much a matter of local sentiment. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George went back a few years, in order to gain a point, and said that both the traditional parties, the Liberals and the Conservatives had demeaned themselves in order to respond to this fatuous appeal from the west. That is an attitude which no hon. gentleman can take who knows anything about the history of the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): He did not use those words.

Mr. BIRD: No.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Then why did you use them?

Mr. BIRD: The hon. member will not deny that that was the essence of what he said.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I deny it.

Mr. BIRD: I think the hon. gentleman would deny anything that was unpalatable. I know it is an unpalatable thing for any party to have any of its members detracting from the traditions of the party in that way. I think it is unjust because anybody who understands the history of the Hudson Bay railway knows that no great party in this country could have escaped declaring themselves on this question, because it was not the aspiration of any small section of Canada, it was the aspiration of the whole of Canada. At that time it was the whole of Canada that was ambitious for the development of the west, and the great parties and their leaders, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir Robert Borden, and men of almost equal standing, all of them alike caught this spirit which was possessing Canada at that time, this desire to see that western country developed to its utmost. I do not think it is fair, I do not think it is advisable to detract from the history of our parties more than is necessary, and the parties certainly were not deserving of that criticism at that time, because I believe with all my heart that they responded inevitably to what was a national aspiration and a national demand at that time.

As usual, Mr. Chairman, when a person speaks without preparation he tends to run to length.

Mr. FOSTER: What rivers does the hon. member refer to that are navigable for two hundred miles from Hudson bay?

Mr. BIRD: The Thelon river, for one. Perhaps the hon. gentleman knows the geography well enough to know where that is.

Mr. FOSTER: Will you tell the House where it is?

Mr. BIRD: The Thelon river is on the eastern side of the watershed which divides the eastern side of the Northwest Territories from the west. The Mackenzie basin is on the one side, and the basin of the Thelon is on the other. The Thelon river is admittedly one of the greatest rivers in Canada. Anyone who wants to find out about the river only need to apply for a pamphlet issued by this parliament, and written by Mr. Tyrrell, who himself was one of the most recent explorers, in fact, the only Canadian explorer of that country. It was explored many years ago by Samuel Herne and men like that, British explorers, but Mr. Tyrrell was the first Canadian, I think, who ever took an accurate survey of the great Thelon river, and as soon as the port is established at Nelson, the Thelon river will be within a day or so of Port Nelson, and surely it will bring business to the road because that is one of the finest fur-bearing countries in the world. Its mineral wealth is great; in fact, it has been noted for centuries as a place where the mineral possibilities were almost mythical in magnitude. In regard to copper, there is a district up there called the Copper Mine country. Anyone who exercises his imagination only a little must realize what immense possibilities lie in opening up even a river basin like that, which is navigable for three or four hundred miles from its mouth even by ocean-going steamers, not to speak of the reaches beyond which would be open to smaller craft, to canoes and the like. That territory has sometimes been called barren, but that is a sad misnomer for that important part of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER: Where does that river open into the bay?

Mr. BIRD: About two hundred miles north of the Churchill river.

Mr. FOSTER: It is frozen all the year round.

Mr. BIRD: I beg to differ from the hon. gentleman. That very river was the channel which the ancient seekers after the northwest passage navigated. The river was so mighty that they thought they had found the passage; they thought it was a branch of the sea leading to China, and those noble men of old sailing in there in their little cockleshells went down the river for hundreds of miles until they tasted the water and found that it was getting fresh, and they turned back home. My hon. friend says it is frozen all the year round. That is a little more of his sentiment.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend made a reference to Mr. Tyrrell, the engineer. Did he report in favour of the Hudson Bay railway or against it?

Mr. BIRD: I do not think that Mr. Tyrrell ever made a pronouncement on the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): He has written articles on it.

Mr. BIRD: Yes, and perhaps the hon. gentleman has something in his mind—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BIRD: I meant something specific. However, I will venture this statement: If all the members in this House to-day were animated by the same spirit that animated Mr. Tyrrell there would be no question about the Hudson Bay railway. To him and his brother, I think, Canada owes more with regard to our existing great unexplored territories than any other men that went up into them, not excluding the type of explorer sent cut by Great Britain. The Tyrrell brothers were scientific geologists who traversed the country not only because it was their business to do so but because they loved it with a great love. Those men were enthusiasts, and I really think that if we had to depend upon the statements of the Tyrell brothers there would not be much doubt as to the Hudson Bay railway becoming an actuality.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend who has just taken his seat, and some other hon. members, have implied that the party on this side was completely opposing the expenditure now proposed on the Hudson Bay railway. I admit that a number of speeches have been delivered on this side questioning the advisability of spending such an amount of money, and the advisability particularly of spending the vast amount that will ultimately be necessary to build up elevators, lighthouses, and so forth, to investigate the feasibility of the Hudson bay route. At the same time I point out that the best speeches, to my mind, which have been made in favour of this vote have been made by members of the Conservative party from the western provinces, in particular the members for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers), Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Kennedy), and others. I say that in justice to these gentlemen, because it is true that in this party there are differences of opinion.

I have sat in this House for a number of years, and for the last four or five years I have heard this question discussed. But this is the first time I have ever said a word on the subject, and while I represent the city of Fort William, which would probably be injured more by the building of the Hudson Bay railway and the utilization of that route, if it were a success, for the shipment of grain, than perhaps any other city in the country, I am not opposing the vote this afternoon in any way. I have the good fortune to represent a very fine constituency. I represent a constituency where the people are broadminded enough to think in Canadian terms; and in saying that I do not desire to make any reflection upon anybody who may differ from me in regard to this railway. I believe we should look upon all questions of this kind as Canadian questions. Personally I am of the belief that we cannot carry on the government of this country successfully and well if we take too much of a sectional view in regard to any of these questions. I am quite open myself to conviction upon this matter. At the same time I point out—and with all due respect to the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat and who has been a little severe, too severe perhaps, towards those who do not agree with him and who hold that the grounds upon which this undertaking is based should be looked into—that those entertaining a contrary opinion have as much right to their views as the men who support the building of the Hudson Bay railway. They have looked into the project, they have read the reports made with respect to it, they have read the editorials in the press, they have heard speeches upon it; and certainly you can find from these different sources as good an argument one way as the other—perhaps I should say a better argument against than for. Take for example what we read in the newspapers of this city. If I mistake not, the two papers published here, one Liberal and the other Conservative, are both opposed to this expenditure upon the Hudson bay route. That is my recollection; I am open to correction if I am wrong, but I think I am not. The same is true of other sections of the country; many newspapers, both Liberal and Conservative, have been opposing the expenditure upon this route. At the same time I believe the real basis for that opinion is that the people feel they do not want to embark upon the expenditure of another twenty-five or fifty million dollars without being certain they are going to get something in return. This is the feeling which prevails throughout the country. And may I right here suggest something my hon. friend (Mr. Bird) has sneered at but which I think, has never been done, although necessary, that is to have a proper investigation made of Hudson strait and Hudson bay before expending further large amounts of money. I am not discussing the vote of $3,000,000 which is proposed by the Minister of Railways at the present moment. I have no objection to that expenditure because it has been promised, I think, by the leaders of both political parties, who I believe made promises in the west that an amount of money would be spent for this purpose. Personally I have no criticism to offer of that expenditure, but to make the route feasible, to make it possible for ships to carry wheat by this route to the European ports, which would mean the building of elevators, the dredging of the Nelson river, and the building of docks and lighthouses, the Minister of Railways himself admits would require an expenditure of $26,000,000; and anybody who is familiar with the administrative matters knows that a minister will always admit a very much less amount than the actual expenditure will be. Probably the right figure would be half that much again, if not double the amount of the minister's present estimate. Now, I do not believe that even my hon. friends from the prairie provinces, who are heartily supporting the project, would be very desirous of spending unnecessarily, from twenty-five to fifty million dollars of the money of the people of this country. I cannot understand why they should take the attitude of desiring such an amount of money to be spent unless there will be some return for it. May I suggest that while this expenditure of $3,000,000 is being made to convert the Hudson Bay railway into a colonization route or a development route—and when I use the word "development", I use it in the sense of developing the minerals and other resources in that region of which hon. gentlemen have spoken —why could not a proper investigation be made into the complete enterprise? Such an investigation could be carried on at comparatively little cost to the people of this country, for a period of two or three years. I have discussed the matter with the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black), and I asked him this afternoon what the cost would be of making use of one of the vessels of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. He told me that to put one of those vessels on the service for three years between Halifax and Port Nelson would cost not much over $100,000. I am not allowing for depreciation, insurance, or anything of that sort. Up to the present time we have not got very much value out of these ships, in fact a number of them have been sold for a figure as low as $40,000. Why not make use of one of these vessels in connection with an investigation of this kind? It could for a period of four or five months each year of the investigating period, conduct complete surveys and give a good return for its trip. As a result a report could be made to the people of Canada fairly and honestly with the desire to bring out nothing but the actual facts as to whether this is a feasible route or not.

Mr. DUNNING: Would my hon. friend permit me a question? Is he not aware that continuous voyages of the kind he refers to were made during the period of work at the port by vessels chartered by the Department of Railways and under its control?

Mr. MANION: Not voyages of the kind I have proposed; I do not think anything of the kind I have proposed has been made. I admit there have been many trips into Hudson bay but they have been isolated in a sense, whereas the whole season should be investigated. Such an investigation could be conducted at a small amount of cost compared with an outlay of from twenty-five to fifty million dollars upon this route which may turn out to be a failure. I do not think our western friends desire to spend any such amount of money upon a scheme the outcome of which is doubtful. Let us investigate first and spend whatever money may be necessary afterwards. Speaking personally, if the reports of that steamer showed that the route was a favourable one for the shipment of grain I am one of those who would unhesitatingly vote for it. For the sake of national unity, if for no other reason, I would vote for it, because we want national unity in this country and the people of the west demand that this route be developed.

Now, why do I say it is questionable? We have heard reports read time and again in regard to the feasibility of this proposition, and we have heard reports read this afternoon by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. These reports are absolutely contradictory as to the feasibility and practicability of this route. I have listened to the reading of the Senate report, and I have also heard the McLachlan report. The Senate report rather supports the scheme and the McLachlan report opposes it. I have in my hand a statement by C. B. Watts, of the Dominion Millers' Association, from which I will read a few sentences. He has looked into the matter from the standard of the shipping of grain. He says it is not feasible and he reports against it. He says:

> What are the essentials necessary to move grain in large volume over any route.
> 1. Low freight and low insurance rates.
> 2. Large volume of shipping available.
> 3. Frequent sailings to various destinations.
> 4. That boats sail on schedule time.

And he points out that these are not obtainable on that route. I have something else which I wish to read, and really my reason for rising, rather than any other, was to read this letter. I ran across an Anglican clergyman who had spent thirty-two years in the Hudson bay territory as an Anglican missionary, a man not interested in the political affairs of the country so far as I know. He gave me permission to use his name. I wrote him a letter asking his opinion on the feasibility of the Hudson bay route as a grain shipping or cattle shipping route. I think the letter is worth placing on Hansard.

An hon. MEMBER: Where was he stationed?

Mr. MANION: I think he mentions the place. He was living in Toronto at the time, but had lived thirty-two years in that district. He says:

> In reply to yours of the 28th, instant, I may state that for thirty-two years I was the Anglican missionary to the Indians and the Eskimos who live in the territory east of the Hudson and James bays.

I understand that is not on the Nelson side, but conditions are very much the same I think. The letter continues:

> I left London, England; in the Hudson Bay Company's sailing vessel, The Lady Head, on June 11, 1892 and during that memorable voyage to Moose Factory, James bay, we met with very heavy ice in the Hudson strait. We entered the ice pack off Resolution island about July 27 and did not see open water again till eleven days after. Of course there were many huge icebergs seen each day when the fogs permitted. Since that year it has always been a matter of great interest to us in the bay to hear the annual news of how many days the ship was in the ice, and only once, as far as I can recollect did the ship come through the strait and down the bay without encountering any.

Northerly winds are the most prevalent in the Hudson bay and that must account for the ice remaining in the Hudson bay till towards the middle of August as a rule. Then again, the waters, being so cold, we inevitably experience heavy fogs after every rain storm.

Knowing the great interest that has been stirred up in Canada re the Hudson bay route to England, I asked the captain of the S.S. Naskopie on the 12th of August, 1920 what he thought of Churchill as a harbour and he stated that only two ships, the size of the Naskopie, could be anchored at one time in that harbour and that even they had touched bottom there that year when a strong northeast gale was blowing. On August 7 they met with ice in the northern part of James bay and did not get free for three days. The ice drove the ship on to a shoal but they fortunately managed to get free again.

During the first two weeks of October, I understand, the heavy ice of Fox channel comes south and passes through the Hudson strait and that is the most dangerous of all, as the cold weather is already setting in by that time.

There can be no possible doubt that any vessel going to the Hudson bay must be strengthened in order to come through safely, for the ice will inevitably be met as a rule before August 7 and after October 1. Now it has been stated that a vessel larger than 5,000 tons cannot be navigated in the ice, and that strengthening the vessel for the ice means losing a certain percent of its carrying power. It is a significant fact, which should not be overlooked, that the Hudson's Bay Company, after a very long experience, use special vessels, and are now building one for the bay which cannot be a profitable cargo boat in the ordinary sense of the word, but built in relation to that exceptional condition which obtains in those northern waters.

As regards the establishing of aerial observation posts in the Hudson straits, would not the dense fogs which are so prevalent interfere in locating any possible open channels there?

Every one I have met who has had any experience in the two bays is of the opinion (apart from the lack of good harbours) that the ice and fog conditions are such that the Hudson bay route to England will never prove a success.

I would further state as regards the smaller vessels actually used in the bay every summer, that they usually stop sailing by the end of September. The Hudson's Bay Company, have a ninety ton engine boat, which supplies the cargoes to the southern posts of James bay during the first two weeks of July, and starts for Great Whale river post, Hudson bay (southeast) about August 1, taking a route along the shore so as to avoid the ice. Two or three of these vessels were brought in through the Hudson straits originally during the latter part of August and in September for use at Fort York and Moose Factory.

Personally I used a canoe myself in my summer journeys from post to post as I found from experience that I could have a better chance of getting through by that means, since my fifteen ton barge was forced up on to the land of Cape Jones by the ice on July 15 many years ago.

In concluding, I would like to add for your information that in taking the temperature of the waters from different depths in Hudson bay the highest I obtained at the surface during the hottest time of the summer was 47 degrees fahrenheit.

Your sincerely,

(Rev.) W. G. WALTON.

I would like to quote one sentence from a second letter I received from him dated May 4, 1926.

You may assuredly use my name and any information I give you in any way you desire. The bay (Hudson) on the eastern side freezes over for a distance of about 130 miles out from the coast in the vicinity of the two Whale rivers, owing to the chain of islands called the south and north Belshers. There are some excellent natural harbours here and there along the whole of the eastern side of James and Hudson bays.

He speaks also of the fish, but I will not take time to read his statement. He practically says that there is no possibility of its ever becoming an important fishing centre.

In closing, I wish to point out that I am not opposing, and many hon. members on this side of the House are not opposing, the expenditure of money putting into shape this Hudson bay route as a colonization and developmental road. We on this side of the House are just as sincere as my hon. friends who are fighting for completion of the road, but we have a perfect right to take issue and contend that before we add to the immense debt of the country another twenty-five or thirty million, we should know what we are doing and we should have a proper investigation as to the feasibility of the route. As we can do that at a cost of about $100,000 by using our own Canadian Government Merchant Marine boats, I think it is only a fair proposition. The minister should consider that while he is carrying on the proposed construction the investigation could be made. It is a fair and an absolutely honest proposition so far as I am concerned, and if I am in the House when this matter comes back to us, and if the report of that investigation shows it is a feasible route, I will gladly support my hon. friends from the west in regard to it.

Mr. SANDERSON: The letter my hon. friend read referred to the port of Churchill, not Nelson.

Mr. MANION: Yes, I understand Churchill is a very much better port than Nelson.

Mr. SANDERSON: That is not my hon. friend's opinion.

Mr. MANION: I have not offered my own opinion. I have not said anything about it personally, but I say, in view of the information we have received from reports from engineers and others and from the newspapers, neither my hon. friend nor myself can have any absolute conviction as to what the most feasible route would be.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. McINTOSH: As the representative of a riding which may be described as being in the backyard of the Hudson bay territory, and as a western member of this national assembly, I feel it my duty to take part in the debate to which we have been listening for the last two days. The speeches on the other side of the House remind me of a story in which the element of doubt is the most conspicuous feature. There was a good-natured, well developed and exceedingly corpulent coloured gentleman named Cy Stoutin who, after a life in which spirituous refreshments played a prominent part and in which he had as good a time as possible, finally lost control of himself and passed off the stage. Upon his death a lady friend of the family called upon his widow to offer her condolences. This good soul, who happened to be a spiritualist, said that in a vision the night before she had seen Cy in the company of spirits. The widow said this could not possibly be; there must be some doubt, for Cy had been of such a nature and had lived such a life that he certainly could not have left any spirits behind him. In this debate, although there is an element of doubt as to where some hon. gentlemen stand, the western contingent in this House are deeply pleased to observe that this question has taken a hold on many members in the party to the left of the Speaker. With that support, and with the solid support of Liberals, Independents, Progressives and members of the Labour party, we need have no misgivings as to what will be the outcome if this matter is pressed to a vote.

The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) before the committee rose at six o'clock, said that the best speeches that had been made on the subject had come from the party on the left of the Speaker. Well, so far as this side is concerned, I may inform the hon. gentleman that there is no necessity for Liberals from any of the provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta to put themselves on record as being in favour of the Hudson Bay railway, inasmuch as we as a party have for years advocated the project.

[Mr. Manion.]

Personally I have supported it in the newspapers I control in my own riding, and I have espoused it as well from time to time on the platform. Last night the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) suggested that the government in asking for a vote of $3,000,000 to complete the first lap of the road was not going as far as it should. In his opinion the government should ask parliament for $6,000,000. Now we know what would have happened if the government had come down with such a request. We know that sections of the eastern press—our western press is wholeheartedly in favour of this project—daily and weekly would have said to the country: Six million dollars is too big a sum of money to vote, $3,000,000 will be sufficient, for we ought to put the road first in shape, we ought to recondition it and lay the foundation well, and then next year complete the road by putting through another estimate for $3,000,000. I think the government has taken the right stand in asking for a vote of $3,000,000, which will demonstrate to the people that they mean business. I believe this is the common sense way of approaching the problem. I do not believe it would be good business to ask for a vote of $6,000,000 and rush the road through to the bay, instead of making a complete job of it as we go along. The people of western Canada from Winnipeg to the mountains, and beyond the mountains to the Pacific, are thoroughly satisfied with this estimate of $3,000,000, and they are daily putting themselves on record to the effect that the Liberal party is standing back of its pledges to see this road completed.

The hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) asserted last night that before we tell the Dominion we are going forward with the completion of this road we ought to secure all the facts through investigation after investigation, and if we fall short of one fact we should not proceed. He said:

> We must have all the facts before we could prove to the world and prove to the Dominion that the navigation of the straits would be a commercial proposition.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that you could have investigation after investigation from year to year, from decade to decade, but even after securing all the facts available it is quite probable that many members would not be satisfied and would still make this a controversial proposition. I claim we have sufficient information to prove that this will be a successful road, and I say this government is doing the correct thing by submitting this estimate of $3,000,000 and telling the country:

We are going to get down to business and make a start on this all-important project.

The hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Foster) asserted last night that if he cast in his lot with the majority of this House for this estimate his vote would be based very largely on sentiment. There are three factors in the life of any individual,—and what concerns the individual concerns the nation, because the nation is simply the individual writ large—they are intellect, which gives vision; sentiment, which adds fire; will power, which manifests itself in action. And by action we capture objective after objective in life. So I say to the hon. member that he is not basing his vote on a broad enough foundation. I should like to see him go further and say that so far as his vision and his sentiment and his will power are concerned, he intends to put them together and tell the people of the west that he is wholeheartedly back of this proposition, and by his vote will do his best to put it through the Commons.

The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) was good enough to tell the House that the representation from western Canada was an important representation, that we try to take a wide view of things, that we honestly stand back of what we think should be done for Canada. I thank the hon. gentleman for those sentiments, but I would remind him that as representatives from western Canada we are simply carrying out the desires of our electorates in the stand we take on this important question, because there is no doubt about it throughout Manitoba, throughout Saskatchewan and throughout Alberta, the people want the government to go forward and complete the Hudson Bay railway without further waste of time. The people of the west expect us to cease talking and to show our faith in a greater Canada by moving northward—because our destiny is in that direction as well as in the east and in the west—and tap that great area, thus proving to the world that we are ready to overcome the difficulties that lie before us. That is the only way an individual or a nation can be successful. You know the saying, "He who doubts is damned already." If we are going to have doubts regarding great national projects of this nature, then I say we are not going to make history as our fathers did in days gone by.

The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George said that the completion of this road would add to the obligations of Canada, and on that argument he based his advice that we should pay off all our debts before we proceed further with this undertaking. But, Mr. Chairman, that is not the way we do business. A business man pays his debts as he goes along, and he reaches outward and beyond his present area of activity continually. It is men of this type who are successful in their own undertakings or in the management of great corporations. Therefore I do not think the hon. gentleman's advice should be accepted either by the government or by the country, for it would entail delay and ultimately stagnation. Let us go forward and meet our obligations as they mature just as we have met them in the past.

The hon. gentleman also said he would like to see a further investigation made of this project. We talk about commissions and committees of investigation, until we are gradually getting into the condition of losing faith in the power of our own initiative. We must rely upon the individual and collective enterprise of our people. Without wasting further time in talk, let us go ahead as quickly as possible with this undertaking.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I notice the same hon. gentleman mentioned the agricultural and fishing possibilities of the Hudson bay country. As to the former, I can assure him that the experimental farm branch of the Department of Agriculture carried on investigation work during 1925 throughout the area along the Hudson Bay line. We find tests were made with several varieties of wheat, oats, barley, peas, mangels, turnips, beets, carrots, sweet clover, alsike, red clover, brome grass, timothy and western rye grass. The seed was sent forward early in May, together with directions for its use.

Mr. DICKIE: I would like to ask the hon. gentleman a question. How many settlers are along that road from The Pas to rail end, aproximately?

Mr. McINTOSH: I never took a census of those settlers, so I could not say definitely. But it is not the settlers there now about whom we should concern ourselves; we are concerned about those who will be there ten, fifteen or twenty years from now.

Mr. DICKIE: These settlers have had railway facilities for three or four years.

Mr. McINTOSH: The railway facilities have not amounted to anything for years. This $3,000,000 is going to give them some real railway service. But to return to the investigations of which I was speaking. These were carried on at Hudson Bay Junction, mile 137 and mile 185, and the results were wonderful. I would like to place them on Hansard, because I think the country will want to know exactly what can be grown at points along that line up to mile 185. Results were obtained at mile 185 and mile 137 of the three points cultivated.

At mile 185, where the soil is a medium silt clay loam with a fairly large proportion of fine sand, which could be improved by manuring or ploughing down a green crop, four varieties of wheat, sown May 23 and harvested August 29 to September 15, gave the following results: Garnet, 40.05 bushels per acre, grade No. 4; Marquis, 35 bushels per acre, grade No. 6 (immature and frozen kernels); Prelude, 32 bushels per acre, grade No. 1; Ruby, 29.6 bushels per acre, grade No. 3.

Banner oats yielded 73.5 bushels per acre; Daubeney, 70.8 bushels; Gold Rain, 66.1 bushels and Alaska, 54.7 bushels. With the exception of Banner, all varieties were fully matured and should make good seed if screened to remove small grains.

With barleys, Alberta yielded 30.8 bushels per acre, and O.A.C. No. 21, 39.7 bushels, the grain being well matured and would make good seed.

That is one place where tests were made. Two varieties of clover and two of grass were sown with excellent results. Peas did exceptionally well, as did potatoes, but the results from turnips and carrots were rather poor.

At mile 137, where the soil is similar to that at mile 185, six varieties of wheat were sown May 22 and harvested between August 28 and September 15. Ruby yielded 53.5 bushels per acre, grading No. 4; Marquis 62.8 bushels, grading No. 6; Garnet 64.3 bushels, grading No. 3; Bishop 64.3 bushels, a white wheat, difficult to grade according to western standards; Prelude, 46.3 bushels, grading No. 1, and Early Triumph, 47.8 bushels, grading lower than No. 6. The Prelude wheat harvested at this point furnished the best sample of all those grown in the whole project. All the other varieties received a low grade on account of excessive starch.

Of the six varieties of oats, Daubeney yielded 79.4 bushels, Alaska, 68.5 bushels, Legacy, 125.2 bushels, Gold Rain, 90.5 bushels, Victory 118.2 bushels, and Banner, 117.0 bushels. As with the wheats, oat yields were phenomenally high, but some varieties were held a little too long before being harvested and some slight shelling had started.

With barley Alberta yielded 28.5 bushels per acre, Chinese 102.2 bushels, O.A.C. No. 21, 106.4 bushels, Duckbill 87.5 bushels, Early Chevalier 98.9 bushels, and Charlottetown 95.4 bushels.

With grasses, clovers and roots, practically the same results were secured as at mile 185.

At Hudson Bay Junction, no definite results were obtained, as the plot on which the crops were sown was flooded during excessive June rains.

Mr. DAVIS: Would the hon. member kindly inform the House what acreage these crops were grown on?

Mr. McINTOSH: They were just small plots. I am not sure of the size, but they were calculated on the basis of the acre. A person can sow 25 square feet of land and get a product which can be measured in terms of the acre, if he is any kind of a scholar, it only takes a little arithmetic.

Before taking my seat I would like to give some reasons for an expenditure of $3,000,000 this year for going forward to the bay and an expenditure of $3,000,000 next year to land us at the bay. That will complete the road and help make that route one of the international highways of commerce. I have not the slightest doubt what the results will be; from what I have read on this question I am more of a believer now than when I began to consider it years ago. I believe that in ten years the men standing up in this House and decrying the Hudson Bay railway will be ashamed of their statements.

The first reason is that this road will increase the flow of immigration from the United States, the United Kingdom and the northern areas of other countries from which Canada should hope to draw population if the unit of our people in the years to come is to be racially, mentally, morally and in initiative what we hope it will be. Another reason is that it will most certainly contribute to the development of western Canada between Winnipeg and the mountains and even beyond that bulwark of rock, timber, minerals, and precious stones, dividing the prairies from the great province of British Columbia. It will also, by becoming a part of the Canadian National system, make better and fuller use of its equipment thereby energizing the road as a whole and acting as a by no means inconsiderable factor in paying the operating expenses. It will help wonderfully in placing the people's railway on a more solid and enduring basis. And it will tell the world and this continent of which we are a conspicuous part that our future as a nation is not only eastward and westward but northward as well, thereby at least making a small attempt to make good the appellation bestowed upon us by Grant Balfour when he wrote:

> Dominion of the north, how vast!—
> Unequalled in the distant past
> By proud, imperial Rome.

That is a great name, and we should do our best to merit it. Further, the completion of this railway will prove to mankind now and hereafter that the evidence some hon. members of this House profess such a great desire to have in their possession—scientific and engineering data enough of which we already have to go resolutely on with the project—is objectified before them. How? By the lands to be developed, the mines to be opened, the fisheries to be tapped, the water powers to be harnessed and the gas and oil possibilities to be discovered, apart from the geographical quotient of the entire problem which when worked out will constitute all the factors required of the business and commercial equation compatible with the reason and faith which should characterize us as a people. And it will be a fitting testimony to the genius and vision of Canadians, because it will be a visible sign to all nations that we intend to prosecute a vigorous and forward policy in the settlement and development of our northern heritage. By the very process of development of our natural resources it will gradually increase our exports, thereby aiding in obtaining a more favourable balance of trade. This is something for which Conservatives and Liberals alike have been proclaiming the need from the housetops since confederation. It will internationally make Canada a more popular trading ground—a very important thing. It will make way for a great tourist traffic, which is bound to arise when we prove to the continent and the world at large that we have tapped that great country and are ready to receive from all parts of this continent and from all parts of the world tourists who can spend weeks in that territory not only enjoying themselves but in contributing to their health as well. Lastly, it will add immensely to the principle of national unity in the Dominion, something which is devoutly desired by the adherents of all political parties in this country.

Before taking my seat, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I am back of this project, and I intend to vote for it, if it comes to a vote, as I believe every member of the Liberal party from western Canada, without finding it necessary to speak on this subject, is back of it, and will do his best to support it and thus help make the project one of the most successful in the history of Canada.

Mr. MacLAREN: Mr. Chairman, the Hudson Bay railway has been under discussion for two days. That is a very brief period when we consider the fact that this same railway and the Hudson bay have been under discussion in this parliament and in the country for the last forty years. The views that are held are most conflicting, first, as to the commercial feasibility of the route, and secondly, even if it is commercially feasible, whether the project is commercially sound and of advantage to the country. I am satisfied that all members of this House and the people of the country are prepared to examine a subject such as this in a fair and broadminded way, but I believe also that it is equally important for the members and the people to be satisfied that this is a sound, sane and prudent project.

The first thing to consider, I believe, is what is the proposal of the Minister of Railways. He proposes now that a grant of $3,000,000 be made to restore the portion of the line on which the steel has already been laid to the standard of a branch line. He further proposes that the balance of the road, which is graded, but on which the steel has not been laid, should be completed up to a similar standard. That would make in all an expenditure of $6,150,000. He also gives us estimates for terminal facilities and equipment, amounting to $20,000,000. I notice that in those estimates there is no reference to the steamers, I presume of special construction, which will be needed to carry on the trade. Nor do the estimates contain a reference to a dry dock. I doubt very much if the grain trade could go on from the Hudson bay, so far away from all other ports, unless a dry dock is provided. The minister says that when this expenditure of something over $6,000,000, and the expenditure of a certain portion of the $20,000,000 has been made and the equipment provided, he proposes to test out that route. Evidently the minister has some doubt in his own mind, because he says: We will go only so far as this point, and then we will make the test,

If the test proves the route to be feasible, it will be necessary then to do two things. It will be necessary to re-lay the whole road to bring it up to first-class standard, for otherwise it would be impossible to do an intensified grain traffic over that route, and secondly, he will need to build his terminal facilities, adding considerably to his estimates that are now before the House. But I will consider this question on the basis of his present estimates. I suppose in every case where large construction has gone on, the original estimates have been exceeded three or four times. I do not think I would be making a wild guess if I were to say that $100,000,000 will be needed to complete this project if it is carried on to finality. Now if the minister's test is successful, he will require to re-rail the route and provide further facilities. If it is not feasible, then we have spent a large sum of money almost to no purpose.

I believe that the minister in his proposal is starting at the wrong time and from the wrong end. I would submit to the House that the time to make the test, which he proposes to make after the construction, is before the construction; in other words, that the time to make the test is now. Surely we will all agree to that. He also, I submit, begins from the wrong end. The wrong end is to make the test beginning from the Hudson bay outwards. I submit that the proper end at which to begin is from the Atlantic inwards.

Now what might be done? I would advise that several ships—not one ship, as was suggested here to-day, because that would be no test; it would not be fair that the whole project should depend on the success of one ship, because something might go wrong with it—proceed to the Hudson bay at intervals of a week or thereabouts during the period in which the bay and the straits are supposed to be open. I believe in that way we would get evidence that we have not got at the present time which would give our people, if it succeeds, some assurance. Let me say to the committee that a large section of the people of this country regard this project as an obsession and as a chimera. They are not satisfied that the project has been sufficiently supported by evidence. I submit that we should take means not only to satisfy the people but to satisfy ourselves by getting the evidence in connection with a project such as this which has been postponed now for so long, by testing out the route, by sending in the ships that we now have through the straits and the bay. By testing out the route in that way we will be prepared, if the evidence is favourable, to support the project, but at the present time and on the present proposal I feel that I shall be compelled to oppose it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am one of those in the House who have been from the outset a supporter of the Hudson Bay railway. I well remember the initial steps in connection with this route. I well remember the Right Hon. George P. Graham, then Minister of Railways, turning the first sod of the railway. I think at that time we were all impressed with the importance of the proposal, and perhaps some of us were somewhat too optimistic. I am inclined to class myself even now as one of the supporters of the proposal. But if my confidence has been somewhat shaken by the reports which have been developed over a period of the last ten or twelve years, I think an equal lack of confidence is felt not only on this side of the House but by very many hon. members who sit on the other side. I judge that from the remarks which have been made directly to myself, from items which we read from day to day in the daily press, and from reports which have come to hand over a period of ten or twelve years, and I for one feel now that we are either taking the first step in a tremendous outlay, or else we are merely completing a line of railway which ought to be completed and the expenditure on which can be kept within reasonable bounds.

I should like the minister, for my own sake and I think for the sake of a good many hon. members of this House, to make a little more clear his declaration of the policiy of the government with respect to this undertaking. I listened to the remarks of the minister yesterday with great attention, I have read his remarks again to-day from the columns of Hansard, and so far as he has given the committee any indication of the policy of the government in regard to this proposal it is all contained in very few words, capable I think of more than one meaning. I refer to his language as reported at page 4192 of Hansard, where he says:

> Now, in connection with these figures I want it distinctly understood that I am not committing the government to this expenditure.

That was the expenditure in regard to the Port Nelson harbour. Then further on the minister said:

> It is the policy of the government to complete this route as economically as possible, in order to enable a fair trial of it to be made.

To complete what? Is this the route to Europe, or is it only the route to Port Nelson? Later on he says:

> When I spoke of a fair trial being made I meant a fair trial of the sea route to Europe from a Hudson bay port.

To my mind it is evident that the policy of the government is really the extended plan, the ultimate object of the government being to establish a sea route from Port Nelson to Europe as a commercial undertaking of this country. It is a proposal which according to all experts, whether they be the experts of the government or otherwise, is going to involve an expenditure in regard to the sea route and harbour improvements of from twenty millions—the figure announced by the minister, although he said he was not committed to it—up to the estimate of forty millions, placed upon the undertaking by the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson), who gave figures in this connection last night. For my part I should like to have some plain declaration by the minister before I am called upon to decide this question, either by vote or by silent assent without a vote.

I am in favour, as I think every member of the House is, of the completion of this line of railway, a railway upon which this country has now expended—I think this is a reasonable statement of the fact—$20,000,000. To have that railway lying there practically worthless after such an expenditure is an absurd situation. We have gone so far that we must go farther; and if it requires $3,000,000 to put that road in running shape as a branch line railway I do not think anyone would hesitate to vote the money. If it requires another three millions to continue the road to Port Nelson I for one would not hesitate to grant that money. But there I stop, because from the evidence which has come to me, and from what I have heard and read, I do not think we have sufficient information to justify the larger expenditure from Port Nelson to Europe.

I think there is a great deal of force in what my hon. friend (Mr. MacLaren) said a few moments ago. Why not try out the feasibility of this water route before we go further? Why delay the matter? Surely it is not an impossible thing in the course of a season to find out just what the possibilities of the route are—if a ship could not be bought for the purpose, surely one could be chartered—before we launch the substantial expenditure which is proposed. I think that in the minds of the most sanguine there is doubt as to the feasibility of the route. I believe there is doubt in the mind of the minister; I know there is doubt in the minds of some of his colleagues. This is not a new question; it has been discussed, considered and turned over time and again during the last five or six years. Deputations have come down from the west in regard to it. The matter cannot be made free from doubt unless some money is spent in actual experiments, in making a fair trial. Then I appeal to the minister: Why not have that trial made now? It could be done from the eastern end, it could be done from the ocean approach. Let us see from actual experience what could be done in the way of navigation of Hudson strait, what could be done in the way of navigation of Hudson bay, what could be done at present with regard to Port Nelson without further expenditure. Go ahead if you will with this $3,000,000 expenditure, but let it be understood that it is only for the purpose of rehabilitating that portion of the road upon which the steel is laid. I think we will all agree to that. If the minister would give the committee a declaration that the policy of the government is not to plunge this country into a larger expenditure, that the outlay is merely to be confined—in the meantime at least, until further experiment is made—to the rehabilitation of the road, avoiding any commitments in regard to the larger issue, I do not think there will be very much difference of opinion in regard to the question in this committee.

Mr. DICKIE: Coming as I do from British Columbia I may be pardoned if I do not display the same enthusiasm for this "On to the Bay" project as some gentlemen do who are greatly interested in it. I have sat here patiently listening and hoping for some information that would convince me that I was probably a little wrong in the impression I had formed with respect to this route. I expected to receive from hon. gentlemen opposite, from the ministers or from the gentlemen sitting behind them, some information with respect to the project. We have heard nothing of the kind except from the Minister of Railways. Surely the members from Quebec have something to say with respect to the proposed expenditure of such an immense amount of money. Surely these gentlemen have met with hardly voyageurs who have been up in that country and who know something about the Hudson Bay route, much more than those of us who belong to British Columbia. I would have welcomed any information from hon. gentlemen opposite. We have received none, nevertheless we have the assurance that these hon. members are going to vote solidly for this large expenditure. I am a little disappointed in that respect. I should like to have heard from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell). He spoke last year with reference to this subject and I should like to quote a few of his remarks. In the House of Commons on April 7, 1925, the Minister of Agriculture said:

> I do not know why we are not now going to Churchill instead of going to Nelson, and I am going to read and put on Hansard some of the authorities whose testimony makes that question still more puzzling. Again I ask, in view of what these authorities say, why did they go to Nelson? I do not know. Some of our western friends are impatient on this subject, and I do not blame them because they have really been thwarted on this matter so long. I do not blame the late government for suspending work in 1917 and 1918. I recognize that I run the risk of being misunderstood in casting doubt on the practicability of Nelson as a proper harbour. I have come to the conclusion that there has been a big blunder made in going to Nelson. Why did they do it?

That is from the Minister of Agriculture. Why does he not give us some information to-night with respect to the matter? I remember that he made a very excellent speech with respect to the resources of that route alongside the railway. He told us of the grain that could be raised there at the experimental farm. He also spoke very dramatically about the great possibilities up in that country. He said he saw an apple growing there. There was just one small little apple, but it was an apple. He spoke twice with respect to it, and I could not help feeling pity in my heart for that little lonely apple in that Laurentian country, waiting for the railway to be built. Then the thought occurred to me that perhaps some pre-Cambrian serpent had beguiled the Minister of Agriculture and he "did eat" the apple. He said nothing more about it. Perhaps he spoke allegorically, I do not know. I know he spoke very glowingly with reference to the agricultural possibilities alongside that road. I will go further and quote some further remarks that estimable hon. member made. He said:

Well, I am going to quote what was stated in an annual report of the Department of the Interior in 1884:

"The Nelson, in the last thirty miles of its course expands like a funnel, from half a mile to many miles in width at its mouth so that it offers no natural advantages or facilities for a harbour, but rather the reverse."

Then he quotes an extract from the report by Lieutenant Gordon in 1886, where he said:

I consider the estuary of the Nelson river is one of the most dangerous places in the world for shipping to go.

He also quoted Captain Bernier, and we all know the reputation of that intrepid mariner. He knows this district very well indeed. The quotation reads:

In the Hudson bay, as far as my experience has gone, there are two ports—Port Nelson, which will never be a port, because the river gives so much sediment and every spring when there is a heavy thaw there is a wash-out which changes the channel of the previous year. Therefore, a vessel coming in would need to have full knowledge of the present spring before she could enter, and she might be obliged to discharge outside. I consider that Canada is too poor to maintain a port like Nelson.

How in face of this information are we from British Columbia, who are relying on facts and figures as to whether this is going to be a proper project in which to embark many millions, going to decide? I have listened to many arguments on the floor of the House in favour of the project. Hon. members spent more time in criticizing the efforts of those who could not see eye to eye with them than in adducing argument in favour of the project.

Mr. HANNESSON: What has that to do with the question?

Mr. DICKIE: It has everything to do with it. I quote a few more words from the Minister of Agriculutre in connection with this matter:

Here is Nelson, exposed to the sea, an uncertain channel, better, it is true, than we thought it was a few years ago. The season opens up a little earlier at Nelson, but there are low tides, great mud flats, with a channel away off from dry land, with half a mile of steel trestling to get to it, quite a considerable quantity of dump to get to the steel trestling, and an artificial island at the end of that. Imagine that! Just a row like these desks for half a mile of steel thestles to go across a mud flat to the channel which is constantly changing at Nelson. Then you have to build a great island on which to erect elevators like those at Montreal. The man who built on sand was, it seems to me, a wise man in comparison with this one. Why did they go there? There has been spent on that harbour up to date about six million dollars, and it is believed that Churchill could be established at a port for one-half of what it would take to complete the harbour at Nelson. Those of you who know what dredging means will realize how slow a government dredge can be, especially if you have ever gone down the St. Lawrence and looked at some of the locks there: the lock-keepers have to put up a picket to see whether the dredges are moving or not. As to dredging Nelson harbour, you would have to wait from now till the crack of doom to get results.

That is the idea of the minister with respect to this project. What are we to expect? How are we to be guided if we have to rely on such expressions of opinion as that?

The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George quoted Mr. McLachlan at length; there are however some things he overlooked to which I would like to direct attention. In Mr. McLachlan's report of September 17, 1917, I find the following:

Port Nelson was this year blocked with ice on August 29, and there was still ice around the harbour entrance on September 6, proof of which I enclose.

Now we have the hon. member for Nelson this afternoon telling us there were no difficulties, apart from those in the straits, in navigating the Hudson bay. They were the principal difficulties, but I consider the greatest difficulty is at the mouth of the Nelson river.

Mr. HANNESSON: In dealing with the navigation, would my hon. friend quote from Captain Bernier or Mr. McLachlan, specifying the qualifications of each?

Mr. DICKIE: Yes. It is hardly necessary for me to dilate on the qualifications of Captain Bernier, the man who has made many trips into the Hudson bay and is more familiar with it, perhaps, than any other navigator in the world.

Mr. HANNESSON: Did he give evidence of that?

Mr. DICKIE: The evidence he gave I have quoted.

Mr. HANNESSON: But with reference to the navigation of the Hudson bay?

Mr. DICKIE: I am saying nothing of the navigation of Hudson bay or the straits. Possibly they are navigable for several months of the year, but I do not think Port Nelson is accessible for ships for more than sixty days at most in the average year. On the 15th, Mr. McLachlan wrote:

On Monday succeeded with difficulty in reaching Nelson Shoal with Yates. Ice very heavy and densely packed. A twelve and a half foot tide completely covers Nelson shoal.

That is not the paragraph I intended to read.

Mr. HANNESSON: The hon. member should be very careful when he quotes.

Mr. DICKIE: What is wrong with that quotation? I think the trouble is with your imagination.

Mr. CAHILL: Both hon. members might speak a little bit louder.

Mr. DICKIE: Referring to the railway, Mr. McLachlan, the engineer in charge of the works up there, said:

In the 91 miles between the second crossing of the Nelson river, mile 333, and Port Nelson, there are two rivers to cross, namely, the Limestone and the Airhole. The bridge required in the latter case is quite expensive, and will require a viaduct 100 feet high and nearly one thousand feet long.

Though the 91 miles between mile 333 and Port Nelson is said to be graded, there is only a mound of vegetable material in place and 80 per cent of the work of making a satisfactory road-bed is yet to be performed in this section.

There we have 92.5 miles with just a little amount of vegetable matter, and still we have an estimate of the cost of completing that grade of over $20,000. That is $210 a mile for grading that 92.5 miles. Any man familiar with contracting work would laugh at that estimate. There is no man who is at all familiar with railroads who will not laugh at that estimate. It is absurd to imagine that we can complete, on an expenditure of $210 a mile, a grade of railway in territory where there is now only a mound of vegetable matter. It is simply impossible.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not admit that the grade is merely a mound of vegetable matter.

Mr. DICKIE: We have to be guided by the reports, and I have gathered from several engineers with whom I have conversed on this subject that the reports, so far as this is concerned, are quite correct. I do not think the minister would suggest for a moment that that grade could be completed at $210 a mile. I say it is absolutely ridiculous and if the other estimates are on a par with this we can see what we may expect. Mr. McLachlan says:

The nature of the estuary and the foundation conditions in it did not permit anything in the nature of a shelter from storms to be provided in the design of the harbour works. It is hoped, however, that the thirteen miles of shoal water between the docks and the relatively deep water of the bay will so break up the waves that ships will not suffer damage when lying against the wharves. The strong tidal currents, and the low distant shores will always prevent ships entering and leaving Port Nelson except during clear weather.

The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George has referred to the tramp ships. To any man who is even slightly familiar with navigation, one of the most serious obstacles in the way of this project is indicated in another report by Mr. McLachlan:

The tidal and channel conditions of this estuary, even after improvement, will require a ship to wait outside the entering channels in Hudson bay until high tide, and then when the tide is high, it must come in quickly with the tide and tie up to the wharf before it has fallen materially. It also contemplates that a ship, when loaded, must arrange to leave the wharves a little before high tide, so as to traverse the distance from the wharves to deep water in Hudson bay, a distance of about twenty-two miles, before the tide has fallen more than a few feet.

Do hon. gentlemen realize what that means? Any ship coming in in a fog, in a snowstorm, or in a wind storm would find it impossible to keep to the channel, even if it were dredged ten feet. This twenty-two miles of shallow water before reaching the river proper is one of the greatest objections to the scheme, and it seems to me we are embarking upon something the success of which we are not assured of. While at the outset it was considered a feasible route for the shipment of grain and cattle from the northwest, overseas, it is obvious that there are now very grave doubts as to the possibility of its success in view of the reports of Mr. McLachlan. And I have not heard anyone challenge Mr. McLachlan's engineering ability. Everyone knows that he occupies a high position because of that ability; I do not think anyone would suggest for a moment that Mr. McLachlan would submit any report which he did not sincerely believe to be true. He spent four or five years studying that country, under inclement conditions and after investigating the whole subject thoroughly he gave it as his opinion that the project was not feasible.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is it not fair to say that the reports of the Tyrrell brothers are quite the opposite of those of Mr. McLachlan?

Mr. DICKIE: The Tyrrell brothers do not recommend Port Nelson as the harbour.

Mr. HANNESSON: The hon. member heard the minister's statement regarding Mr. McLachlan's qualifications as an engineer, but did he not hear what was said of his qualifications as a seaman?

Mr. DICKIE: It is a waste of time talking to anyone who is as biased as my hon. friend. I am trying to get the facts of the matter. I do not say that I am opposing this undertaking. Certainly I am in favour of reconditioning the road to mile 214, or to the point at which Split lake is tributary to the railway. But I do want to have all the facts fairly submitted to the House, and I can assure my hon. friend that I am discussing the subject with an unbiased mind. Hon. gentlemen who are so enthusiastic over this matter cannot see any facts that are not favourable to the completion of the Hudson bay. But we know that any loiterer by the wayside will notice a flat tire on a limousine sooner than the occupants of the car will. I am afraid hon. gentlemen who are so stoutly supporting this project are very much in the position of the occupants of a car so disabled.

I listened with careful attention last night to the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), and while it is seldom I find myself in agreement with that hon. gentleman I must admit that he made a very practical, a sensible and a forceful speech on this subject. The hon. gentleman has peculiar ideas in some respects but I consider him a brave man who can stand up and say clearly and fearlessly just what he thinks on a question of this kind, as the hon. member did last night, when he knows that the views to which he is giving expression are not regarded with favour in the city from which he comes. He is entitled to a great deal of credit for the stand he takes. But so far as other hon. gentlemen are concerned, those gentlemen who are waving their hands and arguing strenuously in support of the undertaking without advancing good reasons, they will not convince anyone who is really anxious to get at the facts and to view the whole question from an impartial standpoint.

A good many reports on the Hudson Bay railway are available from various sources, both from the engineers and from private persons who have been on the ground, and these reports cannot be ignored. I should like to think that the project could be made successful, and I say this as a resident of British Columbia, knowing quite well that the greater the success of the Hudson bay route the greater probably would be our loss out there. We have nothing to gain by it. But I am trying to look at the matter from a broader standpoint. In days gone by we in British Columbia have borne without murmur our share of Canada's burden. I have sat in this House and seen an appropriation asked for which will lead to some $10,000,000 in order to develop trade with the West Indies, and I observe that there is foreshadowed a loan of $12,000,000 to Montreal. We in British Columbia contribute in taxation per capita as heavily as does any industrial part of Canada, and we are willing to do all we can for the general good of Canada. But I do not believe that the Hudson Bay grain route is feasible, and in my opinion the only means of settling the question beyond doubt is to send up a couple of our own ships to cruise back and forward there for about a year. Although I have no doubt that if this were done the verdict would confirm the finding which has already been made. Some years it might be possible to get into Port Nelson during two or two and a half months, but of what use is the month of August for taking grain from Port Nelson? And with a 4,000,000 bushel elevator, how could we expect to haul enough grain to make the thing pay? An hon. member said last night that they would be storing grain between the close and the opening of navigation. What nonsense! Imagine hauling grain in there in the winter time and letting it lie in the elevator until the following August. The thing is absurd. In my opinion the whole project is an hallucination.

Mr. MILLAR: Do they not haul grain to Fort William in the winter?

Mr. DICKIE: But they do not wait until August 20 of the next year to take that grain out. And they can take it by rail any time they want to. Port Nelson, on the other hand, is absolutely sequestered. My hon. friend knows that without my telling him.

Now, as I say, I do not know just exactly what to do with reference to this question. I do not believe in voting the $3,000,000. I believe in voting enough money to recondition the road up to the point so graphically described this afternoon by the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird). Beyond that, to talk of the mineral possibilities is simply speculation. When you get beyond the Flin Flon and Mandy mines, north of The Pas, where is there one mining property of value in that whole country northward to the bay? There is no ore coming out of there. The formation being pre-Cambrian, we are in the habit of saying that we have the greatest potential gold region in the world in the north, but those gold deposits are not contiguous, they are sometimes hundreds of miles apart. The Hudson Bay railway might be completed, and yet a branch line running off a hundred miles from the main line might have to be built to tap the mining region which we hope may be discovered, and even that might be tapped easier from The Pas.

Mr. MILLAR: There are millions of bushels of grain in the country elevators in March and April. Would it be foolish to take that grain in April to Port Nelson to be shipped out in July?

Mr. DICKIE: There is no record of the port being open in July.

Mr. MILLAR: Oh, yes.

Mr. DICKIE: Mr. McLachlan in his report states that in the middle of August, 1917, the port was not open. That may have been an exceptional year, but the consensus of opinion is that two months navigation is all you can depend on from August 20 in each year. We know the intense desire on the part of the people of the west for that route, they are willing to stake their all that it will be a success. But how are we to judge? As I say, we are loiterers by the wayside trying to deal with the question from the point of view of the best interests of the whole Dominion. Suppose the route is a success to the point that you can send grain just as cheaply from Port Nelson as from Fort William and down the St. Lawrence, how will Canada benefit? What about our great ports of Montreal, Quebec, St. John and Halifax in the east, and our two great ports on the Pacific?

Mr. MILLAR: There will be plenty of grain for all of them.

Mr. DICKIE: Why spend money on the hypothesis that we are going to have a port up there that will bring transportation relief? It is absolutely money thrown away.

Mr. HAY: Mr. Chairman, personally I am supporting the vote, and I am doing so for the very good reason that I have an abiding faith in the possibilities of the Hudson bay route. I am in rather a unique position in my faith in this route. Three generations of my ancestors came into Canada through Hudson bay as pioneers, my great grandfather almost a century and a half ago. In conversation with men who were actively engaged in the early days in transporting goods from Port Nelson I have secured information that confirms my faith and convinces me that the route is practicable and feasible and will ultimately become one of the highways of the North American continent to Europe.

A number of hon. gentlemen are opposed to this expenditure. I can understand some of the opposition coming from eastern Canada, whose representatives fear that perhaps the completion of the Hudson bay route will interfere with the trade which is now going through the port of Montreal and other eastern ports; but like many others who have had some experience of the west and its possibilities agriculturally, I believe that every avenue of transportation will be necessary to handle the grain and other produce of the west when it becomes fully settled, or even when another 500,000 farmers are located on the western plains. Consequently I do not think there is any reason for eastern Canada to fear the effects of any competition from the Hudson bay route; I think there will be ample traffic for all our ports when the west is properly developed.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the greatest factor in the development of western Canada will be the completion of the Hudson bay route. The Hudson's Bay Company have realized the possibilities of this route for over two hundred years. This summer it will be 258 years since their first vessel sailed from England to the bay, and ever since their ships have each year safely navigated the straits to Port Nelson with goods for that northern region. Recently I noticed in the press what seems to me to be a significant item. It is dated Winnipeg, January 21:

> The board of directors of the Hudson's Bay Company announced that a large steel icebreaker will be put into service in the Hudson bay next summer.

That is, the present summer.

> The icebreaker is now under construction in England, and it is expected will be completed by July.

Then I notice another significant press despatch, dated London, March 9:

> Colonel J. Obed Smith, former director of European emigration for the Canadian government, has been retained as special adviser by the Hudson's Bay Company Overseas Settlement, Limited, the newly formed unit of the Hudson's Bay Company, which will carry out the company's own migration scheme in Canada.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, those two articles are somewhat significant, particularly in view of the intention of the government to complete the line to Port Nelson at the earliest possible moment. The minister has assured us of that, and personally I have no reason to doubt his sincerity. I am naturally a little disappointed that an effort is not being made to complete the road to the bay during the present summer. I think it would have been possible to do that had an amount of $6,000,000 been included to complete that line. In view of the fact that the harbour commission of Montreal is asking this government for a loan of some $12,000,000, and in view of the fact that the Welland canal appropriation for the present summer amounts to $14,000,000 I do not think it would have been out of the way if $6,000,000 had been asked for the completion of this road this summer.

A number of members of this House speak of the completion of the Hudson Bay railway as a concession to the west. I disagree with and resent that statement, because that is not so. We do not look upon the completion of this railway as a concession to western Canada; it is a right which belongs to us, a right which the western people have bought and which their lands have paid for. Consequently it is wrong to speak of it as a concession.

A good deal has been said, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the feasibility and navigability of the route to the Old Country by way of Port Nelson. Some of our friends say we have not sufficient information to warrant such expenditures, while others say we should satisfy the people of the country before spending more money. The governments of this country have been trying to satisfy the people for a number of years with respect to the navigability of the route. As far back as 1884, during the regime of the late Sir John A. Macdonlad, a committee was appointed to investigate and gather information with respect to the feasibility of this route, and I am going to quote some of the evidence placed before the government by that committee. I may say that they gathered information from all reliable sources and presented a report to the government, and a part of that report was to the effect that the government would be well advised to send an expedition to Hudson bay to find out whether the straits and bay were navigable and whether the route was feasible. In 1885 the year following the report, something like forty years ago, an expedition was sent to Hudson bay. The vessel arrived there in June, I believe, and cruised around the bay and straits until the following October. Observatory stations were established at different points, and I would like to give some of the information gathered. I think this will be of interest, because we of the west are vitally interested in this proposition and believe that it is necessary to the future development of western Canada. So we cannot allow such statements as were made in the House yesterday and to-night to go unchallenged.

I want to quote first of all from Dr. Robert Bell, who was senior assistant director of the Geological Survey of Canada, and who was examined at length by this committee:

> He had, in the course of his professional duties, visited the immediate shores of Hudson bay, or the country surrounding it, each of the six years from 1875 to 1881, both inclusive, and was therefore in a position to give much valuable information to the committee. Besides, he had passed through Hudson strait, and had been to considerable trouble in collecting information from others concerning the navigability of those waters.
> Having travelled much over the country, he gave it as his opinion, based on an extensive knowledge of engineering, that there were no great obstacles in the way of the construction of a railway from Winnipeg to Hudson bay. He further stated that the bay and strait were open long enough each year to be utilized for ordinary commerce, or to the extent of four and a half months, and possibly longer.

The doctor's own language was:

> We know them both to be open for four and a half months at least, say from the middle, and certainly from the end, of June until the middle of November.

He also gave a full account of the resources of that country. I want to quote further, and I think the information I intend putting on Hansard should convince at least some hon. gentlemen who are opposed to this route that the contentions of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) particularly, together with those of the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) and one or two others, are not borne out by the facts gathered by this commission. The information I am now giving with respect to navigation and ice conditions in Hudson bay was gathered by this committee from the most reliable information, the log books of the Hudson's Bay Company ships which had been plying these straits for a number of years. The information covers a period of something like thirteen years, from 1871 to 1883, or eighteen trips in all. I will just give some of the outward bound trips together with the conditions which prevailed in these years. On August 16, 1870, the ship Prince Rupert passed through the straits and met some ice; in 1871 the same vessel passed through the bay and straits and met with no detention. The same conditions were met in 1871, 1872, and 1873. The Ocean Nymph entered Hudson bay and passed through the straits on August 10, meeting with heavy ice, and the following year the same ship also met with ice. The Lady Head, another Hudson's Bay Company vessel, passed through the straits in 1876 and met no ice, and the same conditions prevailed from 1876 to 1880, a period of six years; there was no detention at all from ice and in some cases no ice was sighted. In 1881 the Prince of Wales passed through the bay and straits and was not detained, while in the following two years this ship met with some ice. Of the eighteen trips outward bound on only five occasions were the ships detained by ice, or ice was sighted only five times. Consequently you will see, Mr. Chairman, that the navigation of the straits is feasible at that time of the year at any rate, and for a much longer period, I believe.

I want to quote now from the log books of the Hudson's Bay Company vessels—and this evidence was also given before the committee:

> There is no record in any of these logs—

That is, logs of the Hudson's Bay Company's vessels:

> —as to the date of the closing of the strait. The latest given of passing out was October 27, 1883, having sailed from Moose Factory October 7th. No loose ice was seen in the bay or strait; only a few icebergs in the strait.

In other words, almost until November 1 no ice was seen with the exception of an iceberg in the straits. It goes on:

> It will be seen from the evidence submitted to the committee, that there was a difference of opinion as to the duration of navigation in Hudson strait. Mr. McElhinney, with the log-books of the Hudson's Bay Company's ships, covering thirteen years from 1870, to guide him, said that "three months' navigation is all" that can be counted upon; while Dr. Bell, from personal experience, to a certain extent, felt sure that four and a half months, at least, could be relied on.

The title of this book is Our Northland, and it was written by Charles R. Tuttle, who was employed as observer with the expedition by the Dominion government. This is how he sums up the whole thing:

> Ice, in certain seasons of the year, will always be an obstacle to the navigation of Hudson strait; but I hold the opinion that having acquired a full knowledge of the character and movements of the ice, and being furnished with steam vessels suited to those waters, the mariner will have but little difficulty in making expeditious voyages from the west shore of Hudson bay to the ports of Europe, during at least eight months in each year.

That is the evidence of a man who was employed for the special purpose of observing conditions in the Hudson bay and straits during the time the Dominion government expedition was cruising in those waters. That is the opinion I also personally hold, after speaking with men who have been through those waters, and have lived in that territory for a great many years.

I do not wish to take up any more time, Mr. Chairman. I simply wished to place on record these facts, which may be helpful in showing that the Hudson bay and straits are practicable for navigation during a large portion of the year. The hon. minister can count on my support in any attempt he makes to complete the road, not only to the bay, but so far as the ocean part of the route is concerned as well.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Permit me, Mr. Chairman, for a very brief time to occupy the attention of this House on this very important item of expenditure. I remember for the last three or four years that every report, written or verbal, ever made on this subject has been given to this House. I also am acquainted with the history of this question, and know that there are three periods especially in Canadian history which have brought a revival of this question before the people of Canada. But first let me say that if the minister would rise in his place now and take the responsibility for the statements just quoted by the last speaker to the effect that this is a navigable route for eight months of the year, I will sit down at once and say not another word. But I know he will not, nor will any other person who is acquainted with this subject assume that responsibility or take that position.

Those three periods in Canadian history to which I have referred are, first, the period when a charter was given to the Hudson's Bay Company to trade in this part of North America. There was no other route by which that company could reach the tract of land chartered to them; consequently they had to use that route, and they brought to this country settlers of whom we are all very proud, and of whom the last speaker is a very worthy example.

The second period in our history which brought a revival of this route was in that strenuous contest between two nations of Europe for the possession of this part of the continent—the contest between Great Britain and France. The British had no route by which to reach their part of the Dominion except by means of the Hudson bay and straits, and it was therefore absolutely necessary for them to use that route.

The third period was when the traffic began to flow freely, too freely, from the north west through St. Paul, Minneapolis and Chicago, owing to the very expensive rates through our own Canadian ports.

These three periods in history have practically passed, Mr. Chairman, and therefore the great urgency for that route has passed, except for this reason—and I am surprised that those in favour of the route have not brought this forward as an argument for the completion of the road—that it will give us another British route by way of the Hudson bay and straits, one of importance to our empire for military purposes and tactical reasons. I am very much surprised, I say, that that argument has not been used by those who advocate this route.

Coming to the statement of the Minister of Railways, he has placed upon Hansard and before the people of this country the facts on this question that have been available for a great many years. Complete data have been available for many years he said, for the decision of this matter, and in view of those statements I am very much surprised at the position that has been assumed by this government during the last three or four years. I would like to examine and review the position of this government and of their followers during that period.

Let me begin first with the statements made during the late compaign by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Customs while touring the west. The Minister of Customs, as reported in the press, said:

Had there been fourteen or fifteen Liberals from Saskatchewan to urge the necessity of the Hudson Bay railway, the railway would now have been built. It had been discussed in one or two caucuses—

I would like our friends to the left to listen to this:

—and Mr. Motherwell was always in favour of it, but he had no support. There was no one to help him out.

The Prime Minister made use of these words:

Do you wonder that the Hudson Bay railway was not completed when there was no one to speak for it?

Let us see. From 1921, Mr. Knox, who occupied a seat in this House, was a persistent advocate of the railway, and how much assistance did he get from the Minister of Agriculture? Mr. Knox moved a resolution as follows:

That in the opinion of this House it is expedient that more effective consideration and recognition be given to the resolution adopted by parliament on March 12, 1923, recognizing the priority of the Hudson Bay railway with reference to the transportation projects started subsequently.

Now let us consider the statements by Mr. Knox as to the party which is now expected to put the Hudson Bay railway through. In the first place Mr. Knox expressed himself as follows:

A party like the Liberal party which has made no further advances during the four years in which it has held office in the carrying into effect of its platform and policy published will certainly not be received with open arms by the thinking portion of the electorate, especially in that part of Canada lying west of the Great Lakes.

Here we have the Prime Minister and the Minister of Customs saying that they received no support during their four years term of office for the completion of the Hudson Bay railway, and on the other hand an expression of opinion by Mr. Knox that they did nothing. But additional interest will be found in the remarks of the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird) who has so consistently and strongly voted confidence in the government this session. The hon. gentleman's remarks will be found to be of great interest in view of the statement of the Prime Minister and his colleague, when they went west, that they had received no support in connection with this project. Mr. Bird said:

Where does the Liberal party stand in regard to the Hudson Bay railway? Who knows? Who can tell?

Answer, nobody. He said further:

There is such paralyzing influence within the ranks of the Liberal party which makes it impossible to proceed with this venture—

Mr. Knox also made a reference in this House to the party that were supposed when they went west to be strong supporters of this railway. With respect to the Minister of Agriculture he said:

I have often wondered why the hon. minister could not see his way to give us his influential support.

Who is right, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Customs who went west and said that Mr. Motherwell was the only one who was pushing forward the Hudson Bay railway and got no support from the Progressives, or Mr. Knox who wondered why the minister could not give his support? Mr. Knox continued:

In 1925 after the Minister of Agriculture had made a trip to Kettle Rapids he became an out and out believer in the scheme.

Listen to further remarks of Mr. Knox:

We are almost forced to the conclusion that the minister had his line of action already decided upon before he started for Kettle Rapids. Such a statement coming at the present time to me looks somewhat fishy —too much of the red herring variety—a further excuse for further delay.

The foregoing is the opinion expressed by Mr. Knox of a member of the government who was supposed to be the only member pressing for the completion of the Hudson Bay railway. Now the hon. member for Nelson remarked with respect to Mr. Motherwell in 1925:

The minister is one of those gentlemen, and there are a great many of them, who form their opinions first and collect their evidence afterwards.

This with reference to the man who was the only supporter of the Hudson Bay railway. Now listen to this as showing the strong sympathy of the Minister of Agriculture for the Hudson Bay railway:

> He quoted evidence that Port Nelson was not a port. To-day after having investigated the matter further he quotes other evidence which proves exactly the opposite. Two devils were at work, the big devil Mr. McMaster and the little devil Hon. Mr. Motherwell, against this project.

We are assured that Mr. Motherwell assumed a dangerous attitude, especially for a minister of the crown. However, the minister went to Kettle Rapids, where he consulted trappers who gave him his opinion that Port Nelson would never make a suitable terminal for this railway. We would like to hear from other hon. gentlemen opposite, who now seem to be anxious for the completion of this railroad, why they have changed their views expressed during the past three or four years. I notice the Chairman of the committee has just gone out. I should like him to have an opportunity of showing whether or not he was a supporter of this railway. The hon. member recommended two proposals—first, a special committee to consider the matter; and second, a committee of business men to go into the bay themselves and see the feasibility of the project. I have failed to hear the hon. gentleman expressing one word in regard to the attitude the government has assumed to-day.

Then there was the Minister of Agriculture with his suggestion. He wanted to load one or two Atlantic liners, or boats as large, to go up the Labrador coast to Fort Churchill before coming to a conclusion in regard to the matter.

Mr. BENNETT: It might be a valuable route for shipping Saskatchewan and Alberta horses purchased by the minister for European customers.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I do not know as to that. This is the opinion he gave here. This strong advocate of the Hudson Bay railway who could not get any support for the scheme, was going to have these tests made before he could come to a conclusion and advise as to one route or the other. In any event he was quite satisfied that Port Nelson was not suitable.

The Hon. Mr. Graham, former Minister of Railways, was not going to be driven into a corner on this question by hon. gentlemen to the left. Consequently he did nothing except what I am going to state later. Then we come to one hon. gentleman very prominent in the ranks of hon. gentlemen opposite, one who aspires to be Minister of Railways—I refer to Mr. Euler. He made the statement I am going to quote as far back as 1921, but we fail to hear him and others giving expression to their sentiments this session. Why such secrecy? What is the matter? Is there any explanation for the silence they are maintaining to-night? Listen to these words from Mr. Euler. The proposition had been made to discontinue the grant for further work on this railway, and then the hon. member for North Waterloo says:

> I may say at the outset that if the Minister of Railways had stated to the House that the government had definitely decided not to continue the construction of that railway at any time, I believe he would have met the wishes of a large majority of the people of Canada.

In view of this strong stand taken by very important members of the party opposite in the last few years, how can hon. gentlemen on this side who have doubts upon the question be expected to support this item unless these gentlemen explain why they have changed their minds, or if they have not changed their minds that they will not support the item? Is it fair to expect that we on this side, after such strong statements have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite, should support this vote? The same hon. gentleman, speaking of a member of the Progressive party who had brought forward the motion to go on with the project, said that he quite expected the grandchildren of that gentleman would be heard in the House expressing a wish for the completion of the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. EULER: I said I hoped they would, I did not say I expected they would.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): There is not very much difference between a hope and an expectation. One step has been taken in that direction by not sending back to parliament this particular gentleman to advocate the completion of the Hudson Bay railway.

Now let us go further. What has been the attitude of the government towards this question? In 1923 Mr. Knox brought forward his annual motion, and this government placed in the estimates $350,000 for the same purpose that the present Minister of Railways would lead us to believe the item now under consideration is inserted in the estimates, namely, to put upon a solid basis the road as it is. Yet what was their strong enthusiasm, and what did it amount to? After getting this vote of $350,000 they spent $60,000 on the railway. And what was that to do? Partly to replace the rails and the ties that they had taken away from it for the benefit of the Canadian National. If the government got a vote of $350,000 from the House and only spent $60,000, how much heart had they in the proposition or why this change of attitude towards this scheme?

I was glad to hear the hon. member for Saskatchewan say he was sick of committees and commissions, but his heart was not strong when the measure came up, because even in his time in this House he has already seen two commissions appointed, a tariff board and a commission on Maritime rights. I have no doubt he is getting very sick of it and not willing that any other commission be appointed to investigate this matter.

Having dealt with what this government has done and what it has not done, and what it has promised to do and has not done, I would like in a word to express my own attitude towards this proposition. I am not so bigoted or biased, if sufficient reasons were shown that there was anything to be gained by this expenditure, that I would not vote for it. I am Canadian first, last and all the time, and I do not care where the expenditure is; if it will benefit Canada I am ready to vote for it. But when a vote is given which the government has jockeyed with for three or four years, and now comes along and makes up its mind to an indefinite programme, I have my doubts as to whether I should support it or not.

I am going to take up two arguments presented in favour of this road. First, it is said that it is a colonization road. If this is the best place we can build a colonization road, I would discontinue the construction of any further colonization roads. With so many extra districts in Canada which are superior to the country here concerned—and I know those parts of the country, where roads would bring colonists, while, and this proposed road will not—I am going to oppose the Hudson Bay road as a colonization project. Further than that, if we should, by some good fortune, get colonists along that road, would it be a favourable place for them? Not at all. In the first place, supplies can only go to this district for a certain part of the year, and for the remainder of the year the expense of bringing supplies to them would be too great to make it an advantageous place for any colonization work. Secondly, it is claimed that it would be a grain route—because I do not think any person in advocating the road has separated it from a sea route via Hudson bay and the straits. Therefore the second factor in the advocacy of the road is that it is a grain route. Speaking of it as a grain route, I am going to place before the House what I think are the conditions. I am expressing my views; they may not be the views of other hon. members and may not be sound, but I think I know something about grain routes. Even the St. Lawrence as a grain route has one disadvantage so far as routing from ports south is concerned, and that is the insurance. The higher insurance is a factor against the St. Lawrence route, and what will it be on a route like the Hudson bay and straits? I have heard hon. members argue that there are no icebergs. That is quite true, but I do not think an iceberg is as dangerous as a field of ice. Navigators can circumvent an iceberg, but not fields of ice. So that the insurance rates on this route will be greater than on the St. Lawrence; therefore it is not so feasible as a grain route. The third point is the uncertainty of the arrival of vessels. I am not going to discuss the feasibility of the route and will not say whether it is navigable or not navigable, but there is an uncertainty as to the arrival and the clearing of vessels. Now that is a very important point with grain dealers and certainly it would be a great disadvantage to the Hudson bay and Hudson straits route. The fourth point is the uncertainty of getting a cargo. We know the disadvantage of the lake route, as far as it affects us as Canadians. We could contend easily with the Americans if we had a certainty of a return cargo to points such as Fort William and the north or the head of the lakes, and undoubtedly this route will be under a greater disadvantage in the uncertainty of cargoes inward.

My attitude is this: the government have not given us any idea of their complete programme in this matter. We are all agreed that perhaps it would be a good thing to complete what is of use of that road. Further than that, we are in the dark so far as this government is concerned. In spite of the many promises of the government, the minister will not stand up and say. "We propose to build this road, to put the terminal there, and to make a complete route to Hudson bay". All speakers in the past number of years have stated that the completion of the route to Hudson bay would be of very little use without a complete arrangement for the routing through the Hudson bay to Europe, and I find therefore that I cannot go much further than did the Hon. Mr. Crerar in 1921, when he said:

> I believe this route will ultimately become a great highway, and if the financial situation of the country warranted the expenditure I would be disposed to support the motion, but on account of the considerations I have mentioned I think it is well to postpone further expenditure for the present.

I think that would be the platform upon which a great many members of the House would stand if they expressed their opinion. We have had under the present government in the last four years expenditures that are staggering, and I think we can quite well say, "We will go no further on account of the financial situation of the country."

Mr. BENNETT: Both parties have in times past been in favour of the construction of the railway to Hudson bay. I do not regard the vote now before the House as in any sense committing me to the construction of a single foot of railway in addition to what has already been laid. It is true that the minister has declared it as the policy of the government to construct the line to the bay, but the fact is that the vote under consideration will not carry the road a single foot beyond where it now is. The money he now asks us to vote is for the purpose of reconditioning and rehabilitating the line already constructed. I am not opposed to that being done, but lest it should be thought that by acceding to this grant I am agreeing in principle to the completion of the line to Hudson bay, I desire to make a few observations.

We have at the moment some $20,000,000 odd invested in the road. If the records are correctly read, about $14,000,000 of that money came out of the sale of pre-emptions in western Canada. As a matter of business in an ordinary transaction most men would consider an expenditure of $3,000,000 somewhat large for the purpose of saving an investment of $20,000,000 amounting as it does to 15 per cent of the whole. I do not think it will be necessary to spend $3,000,000 for that purpose; less money than that will re-condition the road and restore it to proper working condition. That is my view after hearing the estimate of the work that has to be done to put the road into shape. The kinked rails, decayed ties, ruined road-bed, the light steel—all these are matters that can be looked after by an expenditure of less than $3,000,000. I therefore support the vote as it is proposed by the government. But from the information I have I could not under any circumstances vote to extend the railway a single foot beyond the present end of steel. I could not vote to send the railway to Nelson. I say that because I have not adequate information that would convince me that the expenditure of the money necessary, some $29,000,000 or $30,000,000, would be in the public interest. We have no such data as would warrant a board of directors, in the case of private corporation, speaking for intelligent, sober minded shareholders, in arriving at the conclusion that the expenditure now proposed was justifiable. And as I have frequently observed, we in this parliament in relation to railway matters are in the capacity of shareholders. We are shareholders of the Hudson Bay railway. Speaking from that point of view I should not be prepared, upon the information which has been submitted to us, to vote if I were asked to,—I am not as a matter of fact called upon to vote. at the moment—in favour of an extension of the Hudson Bay railway to the bay.

My mind is open; I have no preconceived notions, no prejudices and no bias with respect to this question. On the evidence as I have read it—I have read all the evidence that has been available—there seems to be a marked conflict of opinion. These points are apparent: first, that since the opening of the Panama canal and the movement of wheat from as far East as Maple Creek, and perhaps a little further, to the Pacific slope there is no longer that urgent demand for the movement of grain west of that point to the Hudson bay or Fort William. Rather the desire is to move it to Vancouver. In the second place it must be remembered that the population of the country is not expanding as we should like, and that any movement that takes place of grain toward Hudson bay must necessarily involve a corresponding diminution in traffic on the two roads that now operate. And the Canadian National Railway system cannot afford at this juncture to lose any traffic. It is now costing the people over $40,000,000 a year, notwithstanding the claim which is occasionally made that the figure is as low as $7,000,000. The fact is that last year it cost us over $71,000,000 in interest, of which, as has been said, but $33,000,000 was earned. So that when we realize that we are paying every year the substantial sum of $40,000,000 or thereabouts in interest for the maintenance of the Canadian national system, we can readily understand that any thoughtful man must view with apprehension loss of traffic, whether it be diverted in the direction of Hudson bay or be incurred in any other way.

I do suggest to the minister that inasmuch as—if he is permitted to remain in his office, as I trust he will not be—he proposes to submit to parliament some day a vote for the construction of the road to Hudson bay, he take steps immediately to demonstrate beyond any peradventure the feasibility of navigation in the straits. The minister has indicated, although not in so many definite terms, that he will at some future day ask parliament to support such a vote. We are not asked to do so to-night, but before that moment comes may I suggest to the minister that he take a few of our Canadian merchant marine vessels and send them to Hudson bay to make a practical investigation of the question. Some of these vessels we sold last year at $40,000 each, and it is not too much to ask that four or five of them be specially equipped and strengthened in proper docks and shipyards and dispatched to the straits to ascertain under capable supervision what may be expected in the way of navigation in the straits and in the bay. That would be the path of reason. I do know that large private organizations desiring to carry on trade in the orient send out skilled men to study the conditions of the market, and I know also that the railways in days gone by, desiring to extend their lines, have engaged men to explore new territory, to examine the conditions and to estimate the traffic possibilities, all this being done with a view to ascertaining whether or not the undertaking contemplated would be warranted.

No one in this House can say authoritatively that from the evidence we have before us it is an economic certainty that the Hudson Bay railway if constructed to the bay would successfully, efficiently, or economically serve the purposes in mind. That, it seems to me, can be ascertained only by a thorough examination on the part of those competent to make such an examination, not on the land but on the sea. Let us remember that the sea traffic is what is of importance in this case; it is the dangers by sea that have to be considered. The dangers incident to navigation in the straits and in the bay must be carefully analysed When therefore we have ships of our own for which we have paid large sums of money and some of which, as I have already remarked, we sold last year for $40,000, might it not be possible to equip four or five or half a dozen of these vessels, strengthening them especially for the purpose, and have them systematically study the conditions in Hudson bay and straits from the standpoint not only of climate but of navigability, so that we might decide with certainty, before asking the people to expend further sums of money, whether or not the completion of the road would be justifiable? Let properly qualified and thoroughly competent men investigate the question, not on the ground but on the sea. Let them look carefully into the conditions incident to the safety of navigation at Port Nelson and in the straits. Have a careful investigation made of all the circumstances—the nature of the port and the channel; the shifting character of the sand bars; the possibility of erecting proper docks; the availability of material for the construction of such docks; the cost of elevators; the time required in the movement of grain from Port Nelson to Liverpool; the dangers that would be encountered in transportation, so that the insurance rate might be determined; and other allied questions. All these questions could be studied at firsthand by men specially deputed to carry out the investigation.

This, I submit, is not an unreasonable suggestion to make at this time. I will concede that the minister is as desirous as any other hon. member to avoid any unnecessary expenditures. I believe my friends who support so strenuously this route are just as anxious as I am that public money should not be wasted, are just as desirous as any person could be that this route, if established, should be a success. But I do ask them to support the representations to the minister that we should not rush into this enterprise without having that measure of information, that extensive knowledge which private business men as directors of a well-defined body of shareholders would be required to have before they would recommend to their shareholders the expenditure of these sums of money. I do this to-night because, fortunately, it is not that vote which is being considered by the committee. That vote will come, perhaps at another session, but in the meantime I do implore the minister to ascertain whether or not the commitment of this country to the expenditure suggested, namely, some $25,000,000 to $30,000,000, would be warranted from the dangers incident to navigation, from the conditions that prevail, and from the availability of the route measured by every test that would be imposed by a competent and skilful navigator in determining whether or not he would be warranted in taking his ship and cargo into and out of this port in the season of the year when the straits and bay would be open. That is all I suggest. We have ships that we are now triying to sell; they are no longer valuable from the standpoint of trade and commerce—and my friend from Kingston suggests to me that the cabinet might take a trip in one of those ships for the purpose of ascertaining the conditions of navigation.

Mr. DUNNING: We might take the board of strategy along also.

Mr. BENNETT: I assure my friend the minister that if he takes the board of strategy along they will then be the government.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They have not made much success in that direction so far.

Mr. BENNETT: There are evidences not wanting of the measure of success that one might expect, namely, the consciousness of having done one's duty to his country regardless of attempts to secure support by means that might easily be questioned; and there are not lacking very striking evidences, in fact they have been apparent during the last few hours, that we have achieved some success at least in the effort to protect the industrial life of Canada from destruction. But I can readily understand my friend the Minister of the Interior, who sounded "the death knell of protection" a few years ago, making such an observation.

But let me proceed. I doubt not there are gentlemen within sound of my voice who would gladly take a trip in one of these ships for their own edification. I say that in no jocular sense. I do know there are members of this House with whom I have discussed the matter who have very strong personal opinions, based not on personal knowledge but on conviction arrived at from what they have read and from what they have been told. I think the minister and the government would be well advised to afford us an opportunity to have firsthand information derived from competent sources as to the availability of this harbour and of this bay for navigation for the purposes we all have in mind, namely, to afford us the cheapest possible route for the transportation of the commodities of western Canada to the markets of the world. If I believed that were possible I would support the proposal regardless of governments or parties. Because I have no such evidence as I would require if I had to consider it as a judge in an impartial way, I believe the whole matter is impracticable. And because of that fact I suggest we should utilize the means we now have at our disposal for the purpose of thoroughly testing this port, for the purpose of thoroughly testing this route, and for the purpose of enabling the government, as a board of directors, to recommend to their shareholders—the taxpayers of this country—a scheme, based not upon the land observations of people who do not know, but upon practical observations and experiments conducted by men who have sailed the seas and know whereof they speak.

That, however, as I said when I first rose to address the committee, is a matter which must be considered at some future time. The vote now before the committee is to rehabilitate the line as it now stands; it does not add a single mile to the Hudson Bay railway, but it saves the investment we have already made of upwards of $20,000,000. For that reason, and that reason only, I shall support this vote. But as to any further expenditure, I reserve to myself the right to have before me better evidence than I have yet seen introduced to justify it, believing that the country in its present economic condition, with the demands that are made upon the taxpayers by reason of the deficits that have to be met yearly on our National Railway system, believing, as I say, that we are not in such a position as warrants an additional dollar beyond the amount of this vote being spent on the route until we have evidence to convince our shareholders that such expenditure is warranted in the light, not of sentiment but of economic principles and of economic reasons.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. BURY: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate just as keenly as any member on either side of this chamber that the committee has listened very patiently to the long debate on this question, and I do not intend to trespass on the time of the House to any extent. I would not now have risen to speak but for the fact that the member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh)—with the best intentions in the world I have no doubt, and being himself assured of the truth of what he said—told the committee that the whole of the west was solidly behind this proposition, and he specifically mentioned the province of Alberta. Now, I cannot let that statement go unchallenged, because there is at least one member—and indeed the House has heard another in the person of the member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett)—who does not believe in the project of the Hudson Bay route as a grain route. I cannot concede that it will be an economic grain route. Apart altogether from positive evidence either for or against that proposition, there is the undoubted fact that at the present moment the reports dealing with this aspect of the project are contradictory, that reports even from the same authorities are contradictory, and that the statements and sentiments of the ministers and the members behind the government who are supporting it are contradictory and inconsistent. If there was nothing else, that of itself would be sufficient ground for members on this side of the House who have no personal knowledge of the matter to pause before they could give support to the proposition as a grain route.

I have personal and specific reasons why I do not believe in the project as a grain route, but I am not going to trouble the House with them because, as the member for West Calgary stated, that question is not now before us. I do want to say, however, in respect to this project that even as a colonization road I am not altogether in sympathy with it. The member for North Battleford has assured the committee that as a colonization road the project is justified, not because of the settlers who are there now but because of the settlers who will come after the road is completed. May I remind the House that there are great extensive tracts of this country, tracts the most fertile, the most promising, that are waiting to-day for railway outlets and cannot get them; tracts that have been colonized for ten, fifteen and twenty years and even longer, tracts from which the settlers have for years been going away because of lack of an outlet for the produce of their farms. So long as the Peace river country, the Grande Prairie country, and the High Prairie and Spirit river country are settled with colonists of the very best class, possessing lands which cannot be beaten and in few cases can be paralleled anywhere else in Canada, who are without railway outlet, I for one think it is wasteful to spend money on a colonization road with no settlers. That is my sentiment. I do not know that it will even meet with the approval of some of the hon. gentlemen of the Progressive party who represent Alberta or the other western provinces, but I want to make it perfectly clear that, either as a grain-carrying route or as a colonization road, I do not believe it is warranted or that the money to be spent is justified in view of the fact that there are other settled portions of the country crying out for railway facilities. I am not going to oppose this vote, but I could not let it pass after the statement of the hon member for North Battleford without letting the House know where I stand as a member from Alberta. I congratulate the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) upon his perspicacity when he said that that province always adopts and maintains a strictly judicial attitude on this question.

Mr. MURPHY: I had not intended to speak during this debate at all, when there was a prospect of this vote, which I am going to support, carrying. But when I hear hon. gentlemen, especially those of the legal fraternity, arguing so strenuously against certain aspects of the matter, with regard to the completion of the road and the route in general, I feel that I cannot give a silent vote on this question. When the matter came up on Friday only a few were on this side of the House. I was fortunate enough to be one of them and I took a certain stand upon that occasion. I regret to say that an injustice was done by the press to the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins). He was reported as being absent on that occasion and as not looking after his parliamentary duties while to my personal knowledge he was sitting just across the aisle from me.

We have some objections raised to this route, in the first place with regard to the railway itself. These objections have centred mainly in the suggestion that this railway must be put into first class main line shape before it is ever used; that was one argument advanced last night. Are all railways first class when they are built Are they not sometimes built very shakily at first and later developed into main line condition? That has been the history of almost every railway in Canada, but of course the Hudson Bay railway must be in first class main line condition; nothing else will suit these gentlemen. Then the next point was that Port Nelson is not suitable; some hon. gentlemen think there should be further investigation with regard to the respective merits of Nelson and Churchill. The fact that they have been investigated and reported upon several times, and decided upon, counts for nothing; these gentlemen must be individually convinced, and the port must be selected to suit them. In this connection I would like to read from a report made by the Minister of Railways of the Borden government, Hon. Frank Cochrane. He looked over the ground personally and inspected the proposed terminals, Nelson and Churchill. On his return he spoke enthusiastically of the project. He said:

> I have every faith in the scheme, and I will push the Hudson Bay road for all it is worth. We intend to make this a good road. We have four-tenths grade. We are using eighty pound rails. I believe that the Hudson Bay route will mean much to the west in the way of lower freight rates. It will be a leveller, east and west. Just consider how much cheaper iron, steel and coal, for instance, from Sydney, could be shipped to the prairies. It will be of the greatest advantage to the east, and I believe eastern opposition is dying out. We found the bay free from ice. In fact, the only ice we saw to amount to anything was the bergs near Belle Isle, where all the Atlantic steamers encounter them. The straits are very wide, and with the aid of wireless I believe can be kept open for a long period.

Now hon. gentlemen who have never been over the route either by land or sea must be convinced; even the evidence given by the Minister of Railways under whose direction most of the work was done is not acceptable. In all seriousness I ask what kind of evidence could be adduced to satisfy men of that type.

Certain other gentlemen in speaking to-day against Port Nelson have used the name of the engineer in charge there, Mr. D. W.

McLachlan and I am going to read something which has not been read so far. These men pose as unbiased; they are adopting the judicial frame of mind. They are going to listen only to the evidence, and then they get up and argue—at least one hon. member argued—for a period of nearly three hours. During that three hour talk he did not bring forward one single bit of evidence in support of the project, but read everything against it. He simply adopted the lawyer-like attitude of arguing before a judge, bringing out everything in favour of his client. And he was adopting the judicial attitude! Here is what Mr. McLachlan, the engineer, at Port Nelson, said in his evidence before the Senate committee, among other things:

Last winter we knew that the chart which was prepared and published was not right, and we went back and thoroughly surveyed the entrance to Port Nelson all over again, with the result that we got the channel in a different place from the one shown on the chart. The result is that we effected a great improvement in the entrance to Port Nelson.

We have a channel there that has 20 feet of water at low tide. That means that when you have the height of the least tide to be expected you get a channel that is 33.7 feet deep. You can come into Port Nelson at any time. The new channel is a natural channel without any dredging. The depth is 20 feet at low tide, 33.7 at high tide and about 40 feet at spring tide. The great advantage of the new channel is that at first it leads towards one shore and then towards the other shore and finally up the centre of the estuary.

These extracts do not occur in sequence in the Senate report, but they will all be found there. This is the gentleman who has been quoted most copiously to-day as absolutely damning the whole project.

There has been opposition to the railway; there is opposition to the port and now the navigability of the straits is questioned. I would also like to put on Hansard a few extracts with regard to the navigability of Hudson straits. Here is the evidence of Commander A. R. Gordon, who made several trips there in the Neptune:

The ice has been supposed hitherto to be the most formidable barrier to the navigation of the straits, but its terrors disappeared to a great extent under investigation. We met no icebergs in Hudson bay nor did we hear of any being seen there; in the straits a good many were seen. The icebergs seen in Hudson straits in August and September would form no great barrier to navigation, nor do those met with off the straits of Belle Isle, nor were they more numerous in Hudson straits than they frequently are off Belle Isle.

Commander William Wakeham said:

Steam has now effected a complete revolution in ice navigation, and the most advantageous time for pushing on is when the ice is loose. Under similar circumstances a sailing ship would be utterly hopless. . . . . The nature and consistency of the ice in Hudson straits are such that, with an efficient steamer, the passage should be accomplished with very little delay or difficulty . . . . I absolutely agree with Captain Gordon in fixing the date for the opening of navigation in Hudson straits for commercial purposes by suitable vessels at from July 1 to 10. I consider that navigation should close from October 15th to 20th.

Here is the evidence of Doctor Bell:

It is impossible that there should be at any time in the twelve months difficulty in navigating the straits, for they are upon tide water. . . . . Why, navigation through the straits should be particularly easy, because, while there may at times be floating ice, there are no rocks and no islands upon which to go ashore.

Here is the evidence of Mr. J. W. Tyrrell, who has gone through the straits several times:

The straits can, in my opinion, be relied upon for unobstructed navigation from July 15th to November 1st, with a possible extension of two weeks at either end.

Captain Bernier says:

The Hudson bay and straits are open to navigation the year round, but as far as the strait is concerned icebergs block the way in places according where the current into or out of the bay drives them. With wireless stations established so that ships could be directed in their course the Hudson bay ports would rank amongst the most important on the continent, owing to the very appreciable difference in distance to Europe compared with that of other ports.

There is evidence in regard to the navigability of the straits; yet hon. gentlemen have said that there is no evidence in the record which they can accept as to the navigability of the straits or of the bay. Here we have the evidence of men who have gone in there, not once or twice, but many times.

We have heard during this debate that before we can test out the route and decide whether it is a feasible proposition, it must be put in ideal shape; everything must be finished; the road be made a first-class main line, the port fully established, with special ships constructed, and everything put beyond the possibility of a doubt. Conditions must be ideal. I would say to hon. members that if that had been the spirit which actuated our forebears, Canada to-day would be a wilderness. I would like to know how many farms would have been opened up in Canada if before the pioneers of this country started in to farm they must have a barn, thirty-five to forty feet wide and a hundred feet long, a two-storey brick house, furnished with the finest furniture, equipped with electric light and water works, and the farm with so many acres broken; with so many thousands of dollars worth of machinery and stock, and an automobile to run around in. Imagine having to take all these things into consideration and to have them on hand before a pioneer started in to farm! If you want to consider this railway in that light, it will never be a feasible project. Yet some hon. gentlemen will not be satisfied with a test unless they can have everything perfect with which to begin. Can we not as common sense men look at that route as we would look at anything else that we were starting out upon as individuals? We do not wish to have everything perfect when we start out. You can test out this route in a small way first. Finish the road to the bay, and the sea route can be tested out without going to an expenditure of twenty, thirty, forty or fifty million dollars. When any man says that that amount is necessary before the road can be tested out he is talking the veriest nonsense, and he knows it. I have it on the authority of the hon. member for Marquette that there is a gentleman in Winnipeg who has purchased two ships of the merchant marine from this government, and who is willing, out of his own purse, to build an elevator at Port Nelson and put these two ships which he has purchased into service on that route to test it out. Are not hon. gentlemen satisfied with that as a practical test? That is not going to cost the people of Canada one dollar. I know of that man; I am not going to give his name, but he is financially able to do what he claims he is willing to do.

It has been argued that before we start on this project every member of the House must be satisfied, according to his own individual opinion, that the route is actually feasible. Well, we would never have a car running over that road if every individual member of this House has first to be satisfied, according to his own individual opinion, as to the feasibility of the project. One man wants the ships to run in there, loaded with coal, to make a test, dump the cargo into the sea, perhaps, and later pick it up again. Another man wants the ships loaded with ballast, and to chase in and out of those waters to see if they are navigable. Other opponents of the project argue that the port must first be put in ideal shape to know whether the port can be used or not. Now what is the use of loading a ship with ballast and running it through the straits and the bay down to Port Nelson if you cannot test out the port? It would prove absolutely nothing to run ships through the straits and bay to Port Nelson unless you have docks and wharves there where the ships can tie up and unload.

Now I come to the last point I wish to make, and I do not know of any speaker who has mentioned it here to-day. It is to my mind the most important reason for the completion of this road, and it is this: Every government and every leader of a political party from 1884, or earlier, up to the present, has stated that it is the policy of his party and government to finish the road. Every leader since that time has personally given his word to the people of this country that the road would be built. Now do the expressed opinions of the governments of this country mean nothing? Are the expressions of the leaders of the political parties in this country to mean nothing to the people of Canada? Are they simply vote-catching devices? Have we come to such a low tide of political morality in this country that we cannot accept the word of our governments and our leaders? If that is the opinion of the hon. members of this House after sixty years of responsible government in Canada, I say that it is surely time that we took stock of ourselves.

The second reason for the completion of this road which seems most important to me is this: that the funds were provided for the building of the road from the sale of lands in western Canada. Any man who wants to look up the records can find that out for himself. I could read them to-night, but I do not propose to take up the time of the House as they can be found in the Hansard debates of 1908. Those funds, Mr. Chairman, have actually been provided to the amount of $20,000,000, of which only $14,000,000 has been spent, and there is about $7,000,000 still to be collected for the building of that railway. The people who purchased those lands in western Canada did so on the distinct understanding that those funds were to be used for the completion of the road, and I am profoundly astonished that legal gentlemen who have such a high regard for contractual obligations and living up to the spirit of a contract will get up in this House and say that they are not convinced in their own minds that this road should be built. Surely if contracts are sacred as between individuals they should be even more sacred as between governments and the people of this country.

I regret, Mr. Chairman, that this discussion has savoured altogether of sectional expressions of opinion. There has been no hon. member of this House who has so far been—shall I say?—big enough and broad enough to argue this question from a national standpoint. They have taken simply a sectional view and considered how it is going to effect the particular part of the country in which they reside. I have not been a member of this House long enough to be able to study all the important questions before the people of this country and express an opinion upon them. I hope, however, at some time in the future to be so well informed that no matter to what part of this Dominion a question coming up in this House may relate—whether it be one affecting Maritime rights, transportation problems, the building of wharves or terminals, or any other question—I shall be able to express a well-reasoned opinion concerning it, regardless altogether of whether it is specifically in the interest of the province of Manitoba or my own particular constituency.

I have only one regret with respect to the present proposal, and it is this: The vote of $3,000,000—which will undoubtedly pass—is not for the completion of the road but merely to put the existing line into shape. After the $3,000,000 is expended we shall not be one foot nearer tidewater than we are to-night, nor than we were in 1918. We shall be in exactly the same position, and shall not have made any material advance. I confess I was bitterly disappointed when I heard the Minister of Railways make the statement he did, and I am sure that other hon. members, notably hon. gentlemen from Saskatchewan, must feel equally disappointed. I do not see how it can be argued that this vote of $3,000,000 cannot be used to do more than put the existing road in shape. Surely only a portion of this three million is needed to repair the existing line so that work trains could be run over it and extend the line for a considerable distance towards the bay. I hope the minister will be able to justify the stand he has taken before the people of the west, because under the present proposition I do not see that the Hudson Bay railway will be at all advanced in the desired direction of reaching tide water.

RAILWAY BELT WATER ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior) moved the second reading of Bill No. 171, to amend The Railway Belt Water Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Duff in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What does the main act do?

Mr. STEVENS: I may say that I have gone over this bill pretty carefully. It is not very long and it appears to me to be perfectly all right. As I understand its purpose, it brings the Dominion legislation into harmony with the recent revision of the British Columbia statutes in connectoin with this particular matter, namely, the water rights in the railway belt. Also certain acts passed in the legislature of British Columbia affecting the manner of dealing with water rights, subsequent to the Dominion act of 1913, have possibly been made applicable by order in council, and the present legislation will validate these actions. I think that is really the substance of the bill, with one addition, namely, that hitherto the provincial government have submitted applications to the minister, and that is now made obligatory. Would the minister kindly make an explanation?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The hon. gentleman has stated the objects of the bill fairly thoroughly. It is retroactive only in so far as it will validate the time that may have elapsed between the passing of the order in council and the passing of the legislation. There are one or two additions beyond what the law officers of the provincial government have suggested, making it compulsory on their part to furnish us with the details of applications in order that we may judge whether or not they are going to affect residents on crown lands.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is really the purpose of the original act?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Prior to 1910 there was some doubt as to who controlled the water rights in the railway belt. That was settled in 1912, and an act was passed by this parliament empowering the provincial government to supervise the granting of these rights. Concurrently the leasing under license of any of those water rights was made to apply to both crown lands and provincial lands, and the difficulty arises owing to the fact that there are crown lands in the railway belt as well as provincially owned lands that have passed into private ownership. This is simply to harmonize and make effective the legislation of British Columbia for the whole period dealing with water rights.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is confined to power and irrigation purposes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Irrigation particularly.

Mr. FRASER: Heretofore, under the legislation of 1913, the exclusive right of administering these lands was in the province of British Columbia. Now you are taking that exclusive right away from them and asking for a dual administration. Is that the idea?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, we are not doing that. We are not making any change in the administration. That was decided in 1912. The decision by the Privy Council is that the federal government have the control. The federal government in turn passed the control to the provincial governments by the act of 1912, amended again in 1913. There were several amendments during the years up to 1924, when the British Columbia government consolidated their act and made it necessary to bring our act into conformity with theirs. That is all we are doing.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Administration under British Columbia Water Acts.

Mr. FRASER: I want the minister to be sure he is quite right in connection with that. In section 3 you are cutting out the words "exclusive control," referring to the province of British Columbia, and putting in the words:

Under the control of the authorities of the province of British Columbia.

That does not say "exclusive control." It appears to me that that brings in a dual responsibility for every water record issued in the railway belt.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No. All we are doing is asking that the British Columbia government furnish us with the details of every permit that is issued, in order that we may ascertain whether or not it will adversely affect residents or lessees on crown lands. We are not interfering in any way. The British Columbia Water Act prevails, and the administration is in the hands of the British Columbia government—not exclusively of course, because we are asking them to perform these services which formerly they had been performing voluntarily, but under the agreement in the old act. Objection has been raised by some of the residents on crown lands. The delay is the difficulty at the moment. There are 100 odd applications held up pending this regulation, and the Attorney General of British Columbia drafted these sections, with the exception of section 3 and the additions to section 5 of subsections 11 and 12, which are merely putting in the legislation what was formerly being done by them voluntarily, in order that we may have a definite record here for the protection of the people on crown lands.

Mr. FRASER: The reason I am so anxious to see that the legislation is correct, and that no mistake is made, is this: you might as well give a man nothing at all as give him a piece of land in that country without the water. The water is absolutely essential to the ownership of the land, and if in any way you provide a dual control of that water you make it that much more difficult for the licensee of water to get control of it. If a man makes an application to the British Columbia government for a grant of water, it has to be submitted first to the officials of the provincial government. If they decide to grant the application, it will have to go through the same process at Ottawa, and the matter will be complicated. As I am anxious to see the people there obtain their water as easily as possible, I must say my suspicions were aroused in regard to the elimination of the word "exclusive". Formerly the British Columbia government had the right to make the grant, and when you took out the word "exclusive" it looked as if you had dual control, making it that much harder for the people to secure their water.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Only to the extent that they furnish us with full particulars of the application. In certain cases it is referred to the board, which is a board of the British Columbia government. Lessees of crown lands are affected, and all we are doing is to provide that we shall be furnished, as we have been furnished in the past, with all the records. Previously it was not compulsory, but now it will be. There will be no dual control. We are not concerned unless objection taken to the application and the issue of the license by some resident on crown lands who feels that he is being injured. Then and then only will we interfere.

Mr. FRASER: That is all right.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—Commencement and publication of orders in council.

Mr. FRASER: In regard to those orders in council, do I understand that this act is made necessary by reason of the fact that certain regulations which were called for in the former act by order in council had not been completely complied with? Here you are providing for the same practice exactly; you still require these orders in council. Could the act not be so amended as to make the procedure a little simpler, so that it would not be necessary that the order in council should be published in the Canada Gazette for a specified time? That is what has given rise to the trouble.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We cover that completely. If it is discovered, in the case of certain permits now in existence, that after the issuing of the license, delay occurred by reason of the fact that we had not brought our act into conformity with the legislation of British Columbia, the retroactive provision of this bill will validate those permits. As regards the necessity for legislation in the future, the hon. gentleman will see, if he studies the bill closely, that we are providing against such a contingency. We cannot forego the right to pass orders in council, because after all the authority still remains with the federal government. If there should be a short delay between the issuing of the permit and the passing of the order in council, no action will be taken against the lessee.

Mr. FRASER: You have eliminated the necessity for repeating that legislation, like a recurring decimal, every four or five years?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Section 5 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

The House met at two o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS COMMITTEE

Mr. GEORGE PARENT (Quebec West) presented the sixth report of the select standing committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

ALLIED INDIAN TRIBES OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster) presented a petition from the allied Indian tribes of British Columbia.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

COLD LAKE—FOREST FIRE

Mr. SPENCER:

1. Was there an attempt to fight forest fire near Cold lake, Alberta, in October, 1925?
2. Were persons of the names of Martin and Shaw supposed to have taken part in fighting fire?
3. Did they send in a bill for the work they were supposed to have done; if so, to what amount?
4. Who is the fire marshal for the district around Cold lake?
5. Did he make an investigation with regard to supposed fire? If so, how many witnesses did he call?
6. What was the cost of calling said witnesses, and has a report been received by the government?

Hon. Mr. MOTHERWELL:

1. A forest fire started on the north side of Cold lake in the latter part of July and was effectively cut off and brought under control by August 8th. This fire apparently continued to smoulder inside the fire guards, and some time during September and October, two persons named Martin Nyhus and Lester Shaw, considered it advisable to make some extra fire guards. This was done without securing the authorization of the forest authorities.
2. Answered by No. 1.
3. Yes. Approximately $460.00 is claimed. Department is paying $88.00.
4. The local Dominion fire ranger for the district around Cold lake is Mr. J. W. Allen.
5. Yes. Four men who worked in the original fire. An investigation was also made by the district fire ranger at Edmonton.
6. No expenditure was incurred in connection with witnesses, either by the local fire ranger or the district fire ranger. A report by the district fire ranger is on file.

EXCISE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. GEORGE H. BOIVIN (Minister of Customs and Excise) moved that the House go into committee to consider Bill No. 188 to amend the Excise Act.

An hon. MEMBER: Is it printed?

Mr. BOIVIN: I am informed, Mr. Speaker, that the bill was printed and sent to the distribution office this morning. It was explained yesterday.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Duff in the chair.

On section 1—Removal of tobacco, etc.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Chairman, I think the object sought by my hon. friend is perfectly proper. As I understand it, the purpose of the bill is to enable trade to be carried on at ports where we have a customs warehouse, but no excise warehouse; that is, to enable Canadian goods to be sold in competition with American. This is quite right. It is a little dangerous, though; does my hon. friend think he has got everything safeguarded? I would have thought the easiest way would have been to make any customs bonded warehouse an excise bonded warehouse.

Mr. BOIVIN: If every customs bonded warehouse were made an excise bonded warehouse I am afraid the abuse would be still greater. It is understood that every excise bonded warehouse in the country is subject to continual surveillance by an excise officer, and to the payment of a fee. It is pointed out that American cigarettes are brought in to these customs bonded warehouses and sold as ships stores to the fishermen going to the Grand Banks and elsewhere, without the payment of any duty and without the payment of any American excise. It is absolutely impossible for the Canadian manufacturers to compete with them, and the acting deputy minister of the department, who was also head of the excise branch, advises that the safest way would be to permit them to remove Canadian cigarettes of domestic manufacture from the excise bonded warehouse and place them in the customs bonded warehouse, where they would have no excise duty to pay.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. George H. BOIVIN (Minister of Customs and Excise) moved the second reading of Bill No. 116, to amend the Income War Tax Act, 1917.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Duff in the chair.

On section 1—Gross revenue.

Mr. STEVENS: Paragraph (m) of this section defines the gross revenue where a personal corporation has revenue from more than one source, in which case the gross revenue means the sum of the net profits from each source. Does this affect in any way what I think we will come to somewhere later in the bill, the subject matter of previous discussion, namely double taxation or taxation from two sources? I have not had time to consider this paragraph very carefully, and I was just wondering whether this definition will in any sense establish the principle of double taxation.

Mr. BOIVIN: No, indeed. The definition just referred to is inserted for the express purpose of avoiding the possibility of double taxation. There is a clause further on in the bill which provides that all dividends upon which taxes have once been paid at their source, shall not again be taxable. My hon. friend will also see later on in the bill that a personal corporation is assimilated to a person, and therefore the dividends which may go through one, two or three holding companies will come to the final holding company or the personal corporation absolutely free from any except the original tax.

[Mr Boivin]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the idea of confining that particular definition to personal corporations? It is rather badly drawn, but I take it that the intent of that paragraph is to confine it merely to personal corporations.

Mr. BOIVIN: The gross revenue means the sum of the net profits from each source.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is not that the effect of the definition? The paragraph reads:

> "Gross revenue" (where a personal corporation has revenue from more than one source) means the sum of the net profits from each source.

I admit that the drafting is not what one would desire, but it seems to me the effect is that in the case of personal corporations having revenue from more than one source gross revenue shall mean the sum of the net profits from each source. Am I wrong?

Mr. BOIVIN: The sum of the net profits from each source is right. The definition of gross revenue is required in the act and was not there before, because that phrase is now used in the section of the bill dealing with personal corporations; it will be found nowhere else. One of the requisites of a personal corporation is that its gross revenue must be, to the extent of one quarter or more, derived from the ownership of investments or from trading in investments. In all other cases the revenue taxed is the net revenue after exemption, but in order to determine whether or not the corporation is a personal corporation the gross revenue has to be considered. This is the only part in the bill where the words "gross revenue" are used.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I take it, then, that this refers only to personal corporations?

Mr. BOIVIN: Yes.

Mr. CHURCH: When this resolution was in committee I suggested an amendment which would come properly under section 1. My suggestion was that a definition of the word "resident" be added. As I pointed out, certain gentlemen who live in Canada, possessing large incomes, go to Europe and England and say, "We do not live in Canada", and they pay no income tax here at all. When they go to England and France they say the same thing; they do not live there, but live in Canada. It seems that now there is one law for the rich and one law for the poor, and I ask the minister if he will not accept Bill No. 147, introduced by myself, and incorporate it in this present bill. It is too late now to advance my bill beyond the first reading, but I think the bill is a fair one. It is the law of the United States and of Australia. I do protest against the lopsided enforcement of the present act. I think the minister should look at Bill No. 147, and I am sure if he does, he will see that it is a perfectly fair bill. What are you going to say to the poor man who has to pay a tax of $40 or $60? I have heard of cases where men were summoned to the police court because they did not pay their income tax for smaller amounts than that, and the judge imposed a heavy fine on them for violating the act. I submit to the minister that this is the place to incorporate my amendment in the definition. I do not want to move an amendment and delay the committee, but I hope the minister will attend to this matter. A large number of wealthy people are evading payment of the income tax by saying that they do not live in Canada, although they are domiciled here, their business is here, they draw dividends from business carried on in Canada. I venture to say that the minister knows many of these cases himself, and I would like a statement of policy from him in that regard.

Mr. BOIVIN: I have looked at Bill No. 147, which was introduced by my hon. friend a few days ago. The object of his bill is to prevent anyone from evading taxation, but while the persons he refers to may at the present time evade municipal taxation, owing to the fact that they are not in Canada at the time the municipal taxes are levied, I think I can pretty truthfully assure him that they do not evade federal taxation. The Income War Tax Act provides that:

> There shall be assessed, levied and paid upon the income during the preceding year of every person,—
> (i) residing or ordinarily resident in Canada, or > (ii) who remains in Canada during any calendar year for a period or periods equal to one hundred and eighty-three days, or > (iii) who is employed in Canada, or > (iv) who, not being a resident of Canada, is carrying on business in Canada, or > (v) who, not being a resident of Canada, derives income for services rendered in Canada, to any person resident or carrying on business in Canada but only upon that portion of the income so earned by such non-resident.

We feel that this cannot be very well strengthened without causing hardship and without causing recrimination on the part of foreign countries. When it is provided that everyone who is ordinarily resident in Canada, everyone who resides in Canada, and everyone who remains in Canada during any calendar year for a period equal to 183 days, is obliged to pay income tax to the federal treasury, I really do not think it would be advisable to add the still more drastic terms of bill No. 147. In any event, if it was the desire of the government to incorporate Bill No. 147 as part of this bill or as an amendment to it, it would be necessary for us to begin by introducing a new resolution, because it might entail a slight increase in taxation, and the government could only provide for that in the usual way by introducing a resolution in the committee of Ways and Means, having it adopted there, and a bill then submitted for the consideration of the House.

Mr. CHURCH: I still think that something should be done in this connection, and I would like to have the minister say whether he will adopt my suggestion, yes or no. The minister knows that there are evasions of the income tax by wealthy people, and with all respect I do say that little or no effort, so far as I know, is being made to collect the tax from these people. We have had these people before the court of revision in Toronto, where they have claimed that they live in England, and have millions of dollars invested there. They claim the same thing in connection with the federal taxes. I would like the minister to say yes or no whether he will accept this amendment as set out in Bill No. 147.

Mr. BOIVIN: As I pointed out before to my hon. friend, the persons to whom he refers who evade the tax in Toronto pay their federal taxes to the federal government. They are unable to evade the federal tax with the excuse which was mentioned by my hon. friend, and the commissioner assures me that they are obliged to pay their federal taxes to the federal treasury, that they are reached by the present bill. As I pointed out to my hon. friend a moment ago, the adoption of his bill would necessitate a new resolution, and a long routine of procedure which would delay the adoption of the measure for several days.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Dividends to individuals to be liable to tax.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: During the main discussion of the principle which is covered here, my hon. friend was asked whether he would not look after the case of people who are now being taxed on dividends for the first time this year in regard to their income of 1925. The income is pretty well spent by this time; they had no idea that they would be taxed, and I should like to know whether my hon. friend has come to the opinion that it is impossible to postpone that tax and make it applicable only to the income of 1926. My hon. friend will recollect that this point was stressed at some length, and I thought he was going to agree to the suggestion.

Mr. BOIVIN: Yes, I remember very well that the point was argued at some length, in two connections: first, the retroactive effect which it was proposed to give in the case of personal corporations going away back to the period of the inception of the corporation, and secondly, the taxing of the dividends earned by joint stock companies and distributed during the year 1925. Both matters were taken up and carefully discussed together, and submitted to the legal department of the Income Tax branch, and also to the Justice department. It was pointed out that the taxation of the dividends drawn in the year 1925 was perfectly within the rights of the Dominion government; in fact, it was pointed out that the retroactive effect in general would be legal and could be enforced. But I am leading up to the statement that it was deemed not to be advisable to give a general retroactive effect to the provisions of the present bill, but that in so far as the revenue earned during the year 1925 was concerned, it should not create any great hardship to the holders of these dividends to have to pay the taxes upon them, for the reason that in practically 90 per cent of the cases of taxpayers in the Dominion of Canada the taxes paid, even considering the taxes on the dividends, will be smaller this year than last year. That has been figured out and has been ascertained. There are a few individual cases where persons deriving almost their entire income from dividends will have to pay slightly more taxation this year than they did the year before, but it was pointed out that the changes in the income tax law are always made at the time of the budget, that in so far as last year is concerned these people should have made provision for any possible change in the income tax so brought down, that it has been customary to make these changes when the budget is introduced and to make them apply to the previous year, and that no serious hardship would be felt, providing, however, that the retroactive effect would not extend further than one year, and that is the year upon which the taxes are being paid. In deference to the wish expressed by the hon. member for West York, the former Minister of Finance I propose later on to introduce a clause removing the drastic retroactive effect from the personal corporation dividends.

Mr. CLARK: In the amendment which the minister proposes to introduce will the 1925 dividends of corporations be taxed on the same basis as they were last year?

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Mr. BOIVIN: No, the dividends from corporations will be taxed upon the new basis—that is to say the earnings of corporations will be taxed at 9 per cent instead of 10½. The dividends derived from corporations and taxed as income to the shareholders will be taxed, of course, under the new schedule of rates. In other words the entire bill, with its advantages and disadvantages, will be applicable to the revenue earned during the year 1925.

Mr. CLARK: Will the minister state whether he considers it would be within the powers of parliament not only to enact legislation for the purpose but to collect taxes on income earned, say ten years ago?

Mr. BOIVIN: There is nothing which would prevent the government, if it so desired and parliament approved, from reaching back for ten years and collecting taxes on income earned at that time. But we do not propose to do that. We propose only to collect the new tax on the dividends earned last year, on the dividends for which return was not made at the time the new bill was introduced, on the dividends earned during the year which was dealt with by the Minister of Finance when the budget was introduced into the House. We propose to follow the custom which has always been followed in the administration of the Income Tax Act, that it be made applicable to the returns filed during the year in which the income tax changes were made.

Mr. CLARK: In other words the minister states that income from dividends earned ten years ago would be on the same basis as incomes from dividends paid in 1925 in so far as the legal powers of enacting legislation and collecting taxes thereon are concerned.

Mr. BOIVIN: If my hon. friend will look at the book, the very excellent book written by Mr. Lefroy on The Canadian Federal System, he will find that Mr. Lefroy states:

> There is nothing whatever to prevent the parliament of Canada, or even the provincial legislatures, from legislating retrospectively in relation to all matters within their respective jurisdictions.

I do not mean to say that to go back ten years would be a good principle. As I have just stated to the hon. member for West York we have considered the representations made, and we have decided that there will be no retroactive effect to our legislation previous to the year which is now being budgeted upon and for which the returns were made after the changes were introduced in this House.

Mr. CLARK: Is the quotation which my hon. friend has just read the basis of the opinion given by the Department of Justice and the legal officers in the Income Tax branch?

Mr. BOIVIN: I did not ask all the officers of both departments what books they had read before giving their opinion.

Mr. CLARK: I am asking is that the basis of the opinion?

Mr. BOIVIN: It would form a very good basis for the conclusion I would arrive at, that our legislation is legal but I understand there are many other authorities, that in fact the Income War Tax Act itself was amended in the same way by a previous government some time ago. Originally, if the tax was not collected within three years it became prescribed. It was found that a great many abuses occurred under this provision, and very rightly my hon. friends now sitting opposite introduced an amendment giving the tax retroactive effect, claiming that all income taxation not paid to the Dominion government should be paid and should be collected. Under that retroactive effect many amounts were made payable which had become prescribed under the former law. The matter has been tested in the courts and my hon. friends were found to be absolutely right. It was decided that the parliament of Canada had the power in question.

Mr. CLARK: I think my hon. friend has missed the point. I argued the point at some length the last day this matter was before us, and I enunciated the principle my hon. friend has quoted from Lefroy, namely, that it is within the competence of parliament to enact such legislation—there is no argument about that. But this is a tax against the income of the individual; it is a tax against property and being a tax against property, it must attach to the property. My point is, however, that if the property has ceased to exist there is nothing for the tax to attach to; and as the Minister of Customs admits, the property is just in the same position, whether it was earned ten years ago or last year, insofar as the collection of taxes is concerned. The income earned ten years ago forms, perhaps, a better basis for a picture. The income which was earned ten years ago is indisputably out of existence, and so is the income that was earned last year. That property has ceased to exist. Therefore, though parliament may pass an enactment taxing the income that was earned in any year, the power of collection does not exist because there is nothing for the tax to attach to. It must attach against something, but it being a tax against property there is nothing for it to attach to because the property does not exist. That is where I submit the minister is wrong and where; if he has quoted the whole opinion of the Department of Justice and the legal advisers of the Income Tax branch, they are wrong. I suggest that the full details of their opinions be given to parliament because if they base them upon the quotation from Lefroy undoubtedly their position is sound—that is that parliament has the power to pass the legislation. But I say there is no power to collect a tax against property because there is nothing for the tax to attach to, the property having ceased to exist.

Mr. BOIVIN: Well, if my hon. friend was right, there would be hundreds of people in Canada who would pay no income tax, and I for one would have paid none during three years, because at the time I came to make up my income tax returns I found the money upon which I was paying my income tax had ceased to exist—

Mr. CLARK: That is not the point.

Mr. BOIVIN: —and I was obliged to borrow in order to pay it. That would apply absolutely to the argument of my hon. friend who says that the dividends earned during 1925 have ceased to exist. Is that the argument he makes?

Mr. CLARK: May I put the matter in this way: Take last year when there was no amendment before the House. The Minister of Customs knew the year previous—the year that he was earning his income—exactly what taxes he had to pay. As he earned income the tax attached to it, and he was bound by law to set aside a sufficient portion to meet that tax. And so in regard to the ordinary income earned last year: In so far as our taxation was not increased and made retroactive we all knew what tax was going to attach to it and we were bound to make the necessary provision to meet it. If the minister was foolish enough to spend the money, to make no provision for taxation, and to be under the necessity of borrowing, that was a matter of business and he was a poor business man. He was bound to set aside something to meet the tax. The taxpayer did not know last year, when he was earning his income, and setting aside something, that the government would this year increase the tax to be paid upon last year's income. If he had known that legislation was to be passed, it might have been different. He did not know, did not make provision and thought he was entitled to spend every cent of his income, except that portion necessary to provide for the taxes which were then applicable to his income. The situation to-day is therefore quite different from that which my hon. friend has described as the one which influenced him in his decision to spend all his income.

Mr. BOURASSA (Labelle): I am surprised the hon. gentlemen is getting so scrupulous about the retroactive effect of this measure. Under the old act, as I pointed out recently before coming to this House, the people who were married, having a community of property, were taxed as having one single income; in fact, they had only one margin of exemption, but people who had not a community of property had two margins. But in 1916 there was a doubt. People married under the regime of community of property—and I was one of them—made their return under two separate forms, one-half of the income being attributed to the husband and one-half to the wife. The department refused to accept these returns. They claimed the taxation should be levied on one income, and therefore there would be only one margin of exemption. I got an opinion from one of the most eminent civil lawyers in Montreal and sent it to the department. The Minister of Justice had the law amended and made retroactive, so as to force us to pay for the year 1916 and the year 1917 with one margin of exemption, while other people were allowed two margins of exemption. That was a clear case of injustice, as pointed out by the hon. member who has resumed his seat, but I do not see that there were any scruples of conscience on the part of any Tory members, because that principle was applied for six years against all married people having community of property. In my case, I had only one margin of exemption while married people having separate property had two margins.

Mr. CLARK: Did any one contest it?

Mr. BOURASSA: I protested it.

Mr. CLARK: But the hon. member did not contest it in court?

Mr. BOURASSA: No, I was not going to spend any more money, but I was in the same position as my hon. friend, relying upon the law, upon the principle of justice, and upon the legal opinion which I had obtained with reference to taxation based upon equity and common sense, and upon what I understood was the law. But the Justice department interpreted it otherwise, got parliament to sanction that interpretation and enacted it into law.

Mr. CLARK: That is the point the Minister of Customs referred to—that parliament had passed the law. Undoubtedly parliament has passed lots of legislation which, if certain aspects of it had been contested in the courts, might have been found to be ineffective. If my hon. friend had contested the case in the courts, it might have been found that he was not liable to pay the retroactive tax, especially if it were on property which ceased to exist.

Mr. CAHAN: When the resolution preliminary to the bill was introduced, I urged somewhat strenuously that the dividend income of the tax-payer for the year 1925 should not be increased by ex post facto legislation. The hon. member for Labelle has pointed out a case of ex post facto legislation which certainly did cause a very great deal of irritation in the province of Quebec, to which it alone applied. But the fact that the department insisted upon clearing up the doubt in regard to the meaning of the act by subsequent legislation which became retroactive, is no reason in my opinion why this parliament should now create similar grievances. I quite understand that in the majority of cases, as the Minister of Customs has suggested, this provision will decrease the tax payable by individual holders of stock in Canadian companies. But there is a great number of cases where they will suffer grievances. I have to accept what the minister says, that the increased tax will apply to only ten per cent of the tax-payers, but I know a number of people who have suffered grievances. I know of cases where, if this provision applies to 1925, they will pay two or three times as much and they are not people with large incomes either. I pointed out to the hon. member the other day a case which came under my notice—I have the correspondence in my desk—of a clergyman who is retiring, and whose entire savings of a lifetime are invested in stock of Canadian companies. Under this act he will be compelled to pay nearly three times the amount he would have paid upon his income in 1924. The number of such cases may be ten per cent. That would mean that nearly two thousand people will undoubtedly pay more for 1925 under this legislation than they would have paid under the legislation existing up till April. That will cause very serious grievances, and I think these people are justified in complaining. It is imposing upon them a burden which they should not have to bear, and I take issue with the government on that point. Any man having a small investment in Canadian companies up to December 1925 could not foresee that parliament was going to increase his taxation two or three times by legislation introduced in April 1926. That is a grievance which should not be allowed to exist. It will cause great irritation and dissatisfaction, and therefore I suggest that the best way to proceed is this: In so far as the income tax payable for 1925 is concerned, no tax-payer should be compelled to pay more than he would have paid under the legislation existing up to April 1926. That would be fair. If you wish to make a reduction to others, well and good, but do not increase the tax on one or two thousand people who, to my mind, are largely people whose incomes depend upon estates which are being administered by trust companies and trustees. I am not referring to the widow and orphan class. Do not make those people pay two or three times as much as they would otherwise have paid in order to make up the deficiency in income due to the reduction of the taxation of other people with respect to 1925. With regard to 1926 they can get rid of their stock, sell it for what it is worth, and invest it in other things. I am suggesting to the minister that a fair way is to have a proviso that by reason of this legislation people should not be compelled to pay now with regard to 1925 incomes more than they would have paid under legislation existing during 1925.

Mr. BENNETT: I should like to add a few arguments to those advanced by my hon. friend with respect to the desirability of removing this difficulty if possible. In a recent issue of the Free Press there was an editorial on double taxation pointing out that the minister had been making a very earnest effort to meet the difficulties of the situation as they were apparent to him and also expressing the hope that he might meet them. This is a real, not an imaginary grievance; it is double taxation in the very worst sense. The effect of it is to induce Canadian holders of securities of their own country to sell them and to invest the money in United States securities. Prior to the enactment of this legislation it is perfectly clear that there was a direct inducement to a man having money to invest it in Canadian enterprises because the dividends he received from it were free from normal tax. As the legislation now stands there is no freedom from normal tax on the part of those dividends and dividends which he receives from a United States investment stand on exactly the same basis as dividends which he receives from a Canadian investment. I think the minister admitted that the other evening. The discrimination is therefore only against Canadian investments.

I suggest in addition to what the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) has suggested, that in respect to dividends of 1925 the law is obviously unfair for this reason. Brokers and bond sellers, have been disposing of securities and advertising in the public press during 1925 that income from preferred shares, for instance, of their companies would be free from normal tax, and stating what the normal tax was. It is clear that as the legislation now stands there is no freedom from normal tax, but the income from those dividends on Canadian securities is to be taxed just as incomes from dividends on Canadian securities were taxed before this law came into operation.

I will give an illustration from my own experience. I have some preferred shares, we will say for the sake of argument, in a Canadian company and last year let us say that I received $5,000 in dividends. That $5,000 in dividends having in the hands of the company paid tax once to the government, came into my hands free from normal tax. When my tax return was made out I received the benefit of the tax paid by the corporation on that money. There was therefore freedom from normal tax. Let me say also for the sake of argument that I had some shares in the American Telephone and Telegraph Company from which I received $1,000. That $1,000 in dividends in my hands paid income tax upon the whole amount because, as this was a foreign corporation, there was no freedom from normal tax. That is, this country's exchequer had received no money from the corporate income of that company. The effect of this legislation is to place my Canadian securities upon exactly the same basis as my United States securities. I can see no answer to that as regards the tax returns. I observe it has been suggested that such is not the case, but the evidence is that the dividends of $5,000 which I received from the Canadian company in 1925 are going to be taxed at exactly the same rate as the money which I received from the United States company. I have to put them into my tax returns as moneys received from that Canadian company, upon which money I pay that rate. It is true that the United States corporate tax is a higher tax than the Canadian corporate tax, but the money as it comes into my hands pays the same form of taxation in both instances.

When for instance people of small means whom I know bought some preferred shares last year it was said in the literature on the subject that those shares were free from normal tax and these people bought on the strength of the legislation then existing with reference to 1925. It appears to me that the suggestion made by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George is only fair when he asks that parliament should declare in a section attached to this legislation that nothing therein contained should be taken as compelling payment by the taxpayer of a higher tax in 1926 than he would have paid under the act that was in force in 1925 on the income derived by him from the very sources that paid it.

The minister should go a step further. I think the other evening he admitted the difficulty of double taxation. It is not only double but treble taxation in some instances and I will give an illustration that has come under my observation. The directors of a Canadian company gave dividends to a trust company that was appointed executor of a man's estate. In the hands of the trust company the department insisted upon payment of income tax upon that money as income derived from the estate of the testator.

3 p.m. Then the trust company distributed that money to the several persons named and in their hands the department also sought income tax on that money. I know that a protest was made at the time the tax was paid but I know that the given sum of money, say "X", paid taxes three times before it reached the ultimate beneficiary. That is a fact. Whether it is right or wrong I do not know. The protest which was made at the time was unavailing and the tax was paid. "X" money paid tax, first, as owing by the corporation that earned it; second, in the hands of the trust company that received it for distribution and, third, in the hands of the ultimate beneficiaries to whom it was paid by the trust company. I can give the names and the amounts if necessary. Those are facts. In every instance, however, there was a freedom from normal tax on money in the hands of trust companies that received dividends in the manner I have indicated and in the hands of the ultimate beneficiaries. The minister realizes the difficulty and if he is not able to make what is suggested of universal application, he should make it of limited application at any rate for the smaller taxpayer. It seems to me that is desirable.

[Mr. Bennett.]

The minister said the other evening that they were considering the matter. The journal to which I referred in its editorial hoped that he might be able to find some solution. I suggest as a solution that we should add to the bill a section declaring that with respect to Canadian dividends there should be a reduction of say 4 per cent from the tax; that is that all Canadian dividends should be free from a normal tax of say 4 per cent. That would give an incentive to Canadians to invest their money in Canadian enterprises rather than send it to the United States. I know whereof I speak when I say that since this budget came down, there has been a realization to no inconsiderable extent of Canadian securities and the money has been invested in United States securities, first, because their market ability is greater than ours and, second, because the return is larger than ours. I know a gentleman who tells me that he always invests his money in United States securities because he gets larger returns. "Now," he said, "it is settled, I would not care to put them in Canadian securities at all because I get no allowance for my normal tax. I pay my corporation tax, and then I pay the full tax, the same as I would in the United States; and I can realize upon my securities much more quickly and get a better return in the United States than here." If anything can be done to meet this situation of double taxation, however slight it might be, I am sure it would serve as an incentive to people to invest their money in enterprises in this country. As it now stands, any man with $10,000 to invest will not feel disposed to put that money into enterprises in Canada, knowing that by so doing he will have to pay 9 per cent on any money that is earned in the hands of a corporation, and then the full tax, without any allowance for normal tax, on the income as it is paid to him by way of dividends. If the minister can effect that purpose I think he will be doing Canadian industry some service, and he will be giving some slight inducement to Canadians to invest their money in Canadian enterprises rather than in those of a foreign country. Those are the suggestions I desire to make to the minister.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Before the minister answers, may I say how pleased I am that my hon. friend from West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) has put forward this particular phase of the matter in his usual forcible way. I desire to support what has been said by him and by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). The other evening when we were discussing the resolution I took occasion to speak about this same subject, and I now want to add slightly to what my hon. friend from West Calgary has said. My idea is that not only will the bill as brought down result in investors being more likely to put their money into American stocks, but I feel very strongly indeed that it will have the effect of preventing the starting of new enterprises in this country. It seems to me this will be more harmful than the question whether the bill will tend to divert Canadian money into foreign investments. The other day the minister agreed with our position and said he would try to provide a remedy in this bill. I had not intended to speak on the subject until we got to the particular clause, but as the new proposal he has made with respect to family companies hardly meets the case, I want to urge as strongly as I can that he should carry out some such suggestion as that made by the hon. member for West Calgary; that is, there should be some substantial allowance off the regular tax for income derived from Canadian companies. To my mind that is the simplest way to put this matter right and still leave an inducement to Canadian investors to place their money in Canadian enterprises, and so provide work for our own people.

Mr. GEARY: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question with regard to the same clause? It is subject to two perfectly fair criticisms. First, it is retroactive, and I am sure this government does not want to pass retroactive legislation if it can possibly be avoided. Such legislation is not looked on with favour, least of all I think in connection with taxation. Secondly, this is undoubtedly double taxation. I should like to point out to the minister something that has not yet been brought to his attention. There is a definite ruling by the department that the taxation on corporation income should not be taken into account in the statement of the company in arriving at its net return; that, on the other hand, the taxation is directly against the shareholders' profit. That has come up on several occasions and the ruling of the department is definitely to that effect. You cannot get behind it. When the shareholders' profit is divided possibly the percentage of return is lower because of the taxation. Now the government proposes to impose an additional tax on that residue.

As to investment, it takes two courses. The first is the ordinary course of trading. I agree thoroughly with my friends who have preceded me that one prefers putting one's money into a Canadian company rather than into an American or even a British company. All the more was this the case because of the advantage that has accrued to him when he came to pay his income tax. But a more important side is that in raising money for new enterprises one of the baits—I do not speak disparagingly of the prospectuses issued by the promoters of Canadian companies—presented to the people of this country has been that on the preferred or common stock you might be assured that the normal dividends would be exempt from tax.

Mr. POWER: If the hon. gentleman will permit me—to his knowledge, since this budget was brought down two months ago, has there been a considerable falling off in the sale of Canadian stocks and a diminution in their value on the stock market?

Mr. GEARY: I do not know definitely, and if I did I would say to the hon. gentleman it would mean nothing to me. I do not think you can get any gauge of the prosperity of the country or the real value of stocks by the prices quoted on the stock market; those prices fluctuate from a variety of causes.

Mr. POWER: I merely put the question because from the observations of my hon. friends from Toronto and from West Calgary and other hon. gentlemen it might be gathered that this legislation would have the effect of preventing investment in Canadian industrial enterprises. But if my information is correct —it may not be because I do not follow the stock market—I am led to believe that stocks have risen in value during the last few months and that there has been a large volume of transactions on the stock exchange.

Mr. GEARY: Mr. Chairman, I am quite ready to admit that, but I do not think you can tie it up to the situation we have in hand. I have suggested there are two branches to be considered in the investment of money. One is the ordinary day by day trading of people who are investing in the stocks of companies which are already under way. Without knowing the result of this legislation, I think I am safe in saying that as a matter of ordinary common sense it is not an advantage to buy a stock upon which your income is less. But I think a more important phase to consider is that of putting money into new enterprises. Take an enterprise well known to my hon. friend, the St. Maurice Company. My recollection is that the prospectus in regard to a recent flotation contained this inducement to investors to put their money into the preferred or common stock: The stock will escape the normal tax. I would suggest to the hon. minister and his colleague that it is quite plain that by reason of this tax immunity many hundreds of thousands of dollars of Canadian money have gone into Canadian enterprises which require new capital, that money having been diverted from other channels. It has been a decided inducement to the Canadian people to support Canadian enterprises, and it has been a corresponding advantage to the latter in getting the capital required for carrying on their business.

Mr. LADNER: Mr. Chairman, I have come across a number of cases where double taxation would work a hardship, certainly under the first proposed legislation, although I think the modification perhaps removes that hardship. Perhaps the best illustration I can give, and it will be of interest to the minister and the House, is with respect to the British Columbia Electric Railway Company, which with its subsidiary companies represents a capital investment of $60,000,000 or $70,000,000. In a letter from the president he sets out the effect upon his company of the amendments originally proposed, but he also mentions other points, for instance:

With regard to the taxation of dividends, I of course find it difficult to see any justification for the course proposed by the government, and in particular so far as my company is concerned, I strongly protest against the proposals on the following grounds:

In the first place, this company, like many others, has in the course of its growth during the past thirty years, acquired many smaller companies, until to-day it consists of an aggregation of some twenty companies, of which the British Columbia Electric Railway Company is the parent and owns all the stock. To take an instance, the Vancouver Gas Company was formed many years ago and was purchased by this company about the year 1906. The Vancouver Gas Company received a charter from the city of Vancouver to do a gas business within the limits of the city of Vancouver.

Consequently it was necessary to keep this company alive in order to preserve its charter. When the city of Vancouver grew, it was found necessary to extend our gas business into the outlying suburbs of South Vancouver, Point Grey and Burnaby, and it became necessary to form another company to do this business, as the charter for the Vancouver Gas Company was limited to the boundaries of the old city of Vancouver. Here we have an illustration of two companies.

I mention this, Mr. Chairman, because these companies were not formed to evade taxation, but rather as the necessities of the business grew.

The shares of the British Columbia Gas Company, which was formed to do business in the suburbs, are owned by the Vancouver Gas Company, and the shares of the Vancouver Gas Company are in turn owned by the British Columbia Electric Railway Company. As I understand the proposals of the government, the profits made by the British Columbia Gas Company will first of all be liable to taxation. Those profits, when realized and transferred in the shape of dividend to the Vancouver Gas Company, will become again liable to taxation, and the profits of the Vancouver Gas Company, when they in turn are transferred by means of dividend to the coffers of the British Columbia Electric Railway Company, will be subject to a third tax. Can this wholly unjustifiable and inequitable suggestion be a serious proposal of the government?

Just at that point I would like to ask the minister if the amendments now contained in the bill cover that question, and limit the taxation to the original company producing the dividend, and then to the shareholder when he receives it.

Mr. BOIVIN: My impression was that, as my hon. friend could not find very much criticism against the bill itself, he was reviving a dead horse for the purpose of killing it all over again. If he would look at subsection (12) of section 3 of the bill—

Mr. LADNER: That is not the case at all. I wish to make sure of this point, which involves a great deal of money.

Mr. BOIVIN: Subsection (12) of section 3 of the bill reads:

An incorporated company shall not be subject to a tax in respect of dividends paid to it by a company incorporated in Canada the profits of which have been taxed under this act.

The next paragraph also touches this point.

An incorporated company shall be exempt from taxation in respect of dividends received from a company incorporated outside of Canada to the extent that the latter corporation has earned income within Canada and actually paid a tax in respect of such income under this act.

So I think it is quite clear that all those complaints, which I will admit were made legitimately by this electric company when they had nothing before them but the resolution, are covered. The resolution gave us the power to tax in the way set forth in that letter, so the protest was certainly legitimate at that time, but it is very clear now that no double tax can be collected under the bill.

Mr. LADNER: There was just one other point.

The second serious complaint I have is that, as you know, my company made a local issue—

That is, in Vancouver.

—which called in the first instance for $2,250,000, but as the public subscribed for $7,000,000 of this stock we ultimately issued $5,000,000. In our prospectus we stated that the dividend on these shares would not be liable to taxation, a statement which was of course perfectly true at the time it was made, and no doubt assisted materially in selling the shares. Now we are told that these dividends are liable to tax.

I want to ask the minister another question in this connection. Under the terms of the bill as it now reads, I understand that notwithstanding the conditions under which these shares were sold, the tax will be levied against the shareholder in any event, and that he will have no redress against the company.

Mr. BOIVIN: My hon. friend is quite right there. In all cases where the revenue of the unmarried shareholder exceeds $1,500, and the revenue of the married shareholder exceeds $3,000 the dividend he would receive from the stock of this company would be liable to taxation. It may be that the prospectus issued two or three years ago by the company stated that the shares were not liable to taxation.

Mr. LADNER: They were issued this spring.

Mr. BOIVIN: At the time the prospectus was issued that statement was absolutely correct, because at that time the moment the corporation paid 10½ per cent as a company tax on its earnings the balance, when distributed to the shareholders, was liable to taxation but exempt from the normal tax. In many cases there was at least a 2 per cent tax and in some cases more, according to the revenue derived by the shareholders, but these dividends were exempt from the normal tax of 4 per cent or 8 per cent as the case might be. In that respect the statement was quite true. But I do not think it will be embarrassing to the company. No one can expect a company to guarantee in advance what the Canadian government will do in years to come, and parliament certainly cannot be limited in its taxation powers by any statement which may be placed in the prospectus of any individual company.

Mr. CAHAN: In order that I may bring the point I had in mind before the committee I beg to move the following amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Preston):

Provided, however, that no taxpayer shall be liable by virtue of this section to pay in respect of dividend income for the year 1925 a greater tax than would have been paid by such taxpayer in case this section had not been enacted.

I am simply putting it in this form in order to place my position on record, and I am very anxious that the minister should take this point under his favourable consideration.

Mr. BOURASSA: I think it would meet the wishes of the hon. member if the paragraph were amended by applying it to the year 1926 instead of 1925.

Mr. CAHAN: That would suit me quite as well.

Mr. BOURASSA: That would be quite simple, and would be quite proper, I think, because I am not in favour of retroactive legislation in any form unless it is absolutely imperative. The question of double taxation was dealt with during the budget debate, and I think it is applied more or less in every country; taxation is levied upon company profits and upon individual income. I think this is so in the United States, and I do not see how the Canadian investor would gain by placing his money in that country which, according to the statement of the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) is more heavily taxed than is Canada. A person receiving his income from the United States would have to declare it in the same way he declares his income derived from Canadian investments. I think it is wrong to create the impression that this legislation is discriminating against Canadian investment; it is simply putting the individual taxpayers of Canada on the same footing whether the income is derived from foreign or from Canadian investments, and whether from real estate or industrial pursuits.

Then there is another feature which has to be considered. What proportion of these dividends has accrued on real invested capital, and what proportion on watered stock? We hear very much about the pitiful position of the poor widow and orphan deriving a small income from money invested in Canadian industrial enterprise. I think the number of widows and orphans in Canada who have invested their money in industrial enterprise is very small compared with the number of financial sharks who have issued stock for twice and three and ten times the real amount of legitimate capital invested in their industry; and now because they are going to be taxed not only on their legitimate individual incomes but also upon the incomes they derive from their investments in watered stocks, we hear all sorts of wailings about the fate of the widows and orphans. I think it is high time that parliament should make a readjustment so that all taxpayers are put on the same footing. We should cease considering the individual through the company. The company's profits are one source of revenue that is taxable, and rightly taxable, giving returns to the state. The individual income of each taxpayer is another thing to be considered. and when you treat the dividend owner in the same manner that you treat the farmer or the real estate owner, who is not taxed upon his revenue below a certain figure, and above that is taxed according to one single scale of taxation on his individual income, whatever the source of it may be, I think you are coming nearer to social justice than you have previously.

With regard to the retroactive feature, I entirely agree with the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George and the hon. member for West Calgary. No doubt calculations were made on the individual incomes of 1925 without anticipation of this legislation. I do not think we should make it retroactive, and therefore I would be prepared to vote for an amendment that would make this section cover incomes accruing only in 1926 and in the following years.

Mr. HANSON: I have given a good deal of consideration to this question of double taxation. I believe that the situation created by the new legislation has given rise to a very great deal of anxiety on the part of Canadian investors. The chief objection which I had to the provision of the bill relating to taxation of companies has been done away with by the insertion of the amendment which is provided for in subsection 12 of section 3, which provides:

> An incorporated company shall not be subject to a tax in respect of dividends paid to it by a company incorporated in Canada the profits of which have been taxed under this act.

The only objection I have to that clause is that it does not go quite far enough, because there are cases of Canadian companies owning American subsidiary companies which have paid taxation, or will have to pay taxation, to the American government, and under this they would be taxed twice. I think they ought to be in the same category as the Canadian subsidiary, and I would ask the minister to give consideration to that point. If he does not provide for that case, there will be double taxation such as he is attempting to avoid, I think, in this connection.

There still remains, however, the objection to the retroactive features of this legislation, and the best solution that I have been able to devise is the one that has occurred to the hon. member for West Calgary, and to which he has given expression, that some arbitrary provision might be set up by the department which would relieve to a limited extent this hardship of double taxation. It is important, notwithstanding anything that might be said with respect to the sale of shares upon the stock market, because I tell the minister that this feature of double taxation is going to make it extremely difficult to get people to buy stock in new Canadian enterprises. I have had just a little bit of experience in that matter, and I know that to induce the ordinary hard-headed investor to buy preferred stock in a Canadian industrial concern, you have to give him a very handsome bonus of some sort before he will put his money into it at all. You have got to go further than that. You have to pay the underwriters who take the stock and put it on the market a very handsome commission, which has to be absorbed by the company before it can begin to pay any returns. I do want to impress upon the minister the desirability from the standpoint of pure business, and that is the only point of view from which I want to discuss this thing, of giving consideration to the suggestions that have been made in this respect by the hon. member for West Calgary. Like other hon. members I have not had very much opportunity to study the proposed amendment of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, but I imagine that that amendment is brought forward to meet another situation in respect to the province of Quebec with which we in the common law provinces are not very familiar.

I want to urge upon the minister that before he forces this legislation through, further consideration be given to the representations which have been made with respect to taxation of dividends from Canadian companies. It is hard enough now to get people to invest in them, and what will happen is this: People will not invest in Canadian companies, but they will put their money into bonds where they can get a fairly good return with less liability to taxation. That is the point I would impress upon the minister. I do not wish to take up any more time, but I still think that the act is unfair in that regard. I know that people who are in the money market or who are liable to come into it very soon, for funds from the public, view with a very considerable degree of alarm the enactment of this legislation, and they take the view that having made dividends taxable—the minister used the word "earned;" I think what he meant was dividends earned, declared and paid in the year 1925—having made those taxable, I think the minister is not doing himself or the country justice when he elaborates that feature in the bill. That is another matter against which I protest.

Mr. O'NEILL: Apropos of the suggestion of the hon. member for West Calgary in the matter of taxing dividends, I understand that there is a 50 per cent depletion allowance on dividends paid on gold and silver stocks, 25 per cent on copper stocks, and nothing on nickel. Is there any rational basis for that arrangement?

Mr. BOIVIN: I am informed that the reason why no depreciation so far has been allowed in the case of nickel is that the matter has not been brought to the attention of the department; no formal request for a regulation covering nickel has been made. I am informed that under the act the minister has the right and power to determine the amount of the reduction which will be allowed upon the taxable portion of the dividend to compensate for the depreciation in the value of the mine from which the mineral is taken. That explains why the depreciation is greater in the case of gold, and the commissioner tells me that if an application is made in respect of nickel it will be taken into consideration and a regulation framed which will be fair to the miners of nickel, the same as to the miners of other metals.

Mr. O'NEILL: The same would not apply in the case of pulp and paper, which is a wasting asset?

Mr. BOIVIN: It does apply to the depletion of timberlands.

Mr. HANSON: What is the depletion allowed for pulp and timber limits?

Mr. BOIVIN: I am informed by the commissioner that it depends entirely upon the value of the timber before it is removed, and that it depends also upon the locality in which the limits which are depleted are situated.

Mr. BENNETT: And the purpose for which it was used.

Mr. BOIVIN: It depends entirely upon the nature and value of the timber, the quantity depleted, and the value of the property from which the timber has been removed.

Mr. HANSON: It is a floating affair, so to speak.

Mr. BOIVIN: It is an affair which must be settled by regulation. If any specific, definite rule were adopted, what would be fair for one would be very unfair for another, as with regard to the rule we are trying to adopt now, that everybody pay the same tax upon the same amount of income. It appears to my hon. friends opposite to be very unfair in certain cases. Well, I am willing to admit that in certain particular cases there is unfairness. It is absolutely impossible to draft any income tax law where there will be absolutely no unfairness. However, if hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken to the amendment moved by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George have concluded their remarks, and as it is desirable that we should reach a vote upon it at the earliest possible opportunity, I should like to say to my hon. friend that his amendment cannot be accepted by the government. According to the wording of the amendment he would immediately take eight per cent from the income taxation of every person whose income was derived from dividends during the past year.

Mr. CAHAN: No, the minister has not understood me correctly.

Mr. BOIVIN: Well that would be the result according to the wording of the amendment.

Mr. CAHAN: If the minister will allow me, all the amendment says is practically this:

Providing, however, that no taxpayer shall be liable by virtue of this section to pay in respect of dividend income for the year 1925—

Mr. BOIVIN: That is it.

Mr. CAHAN: Only for dividends for the 1925 period.

Mr. BOIVIN: That is it.

Mr. CAHAN:—

—a greater tax than would have been payable by such taxpayer in case this section had not been enacted.

Under this the tax could not be raised on any individual for the year 1925, but if there was any reduction he would get the benefit of it. In regard to that 10 per cent of the taxpayers to which the minister made reference, the persons making up that 10 per cent would not be compelled to pay a higher tax in respect of their dividend income for 1925 than they would have paid if this had not been passed. You should not by ex post facto legislation compel the taxpayer to pay a higher tax than he would otherwise have paid in respect of his dividend income for 1925.

Mr. BOIVIN: I do not like ex post facto legislation, neither do I like the tu quoque argument. But I can say to my hon. friend that while his friends were in power they passed ex post facto legislation every time they amended the Income Tax Act, and they increased the amount that had to be paid by the taxpayer for the year preceding the one during which the income tax was introduced. May I cite for example—

Mr. HANSON: It is no answer to the argument to say that because we did something you are justified in doing the same thing.

Mr. BOIVIN: I am very glad to hear the hon. member for York-Sunbury say that because his party did wrong it is no argument whatever for us to say that we are doing the same thing. I am going to try and argue that what may be wrong in some cases is not always wrong. I am going to try and argue that it is not a hardship, that it is not illegal, that it is not even ex post facto legislation, to determine and decide at the present time, with the approval of parliament, that some persons who made their income tax returns after this legislation was introduced into the House shall pay upon their dividends more than they paid last year. It is proposed, if I understand the intention of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George correctly, to see that no one's income tax is increased this year.

Mr. CAHAN: In respect of dividend income.

Mr. BOIVIN: In respect of the amount received from dividends, but according to the amendment as worded it is quite clear that the revenue from all dividends should not be taxed more this year than it was taxed last.

M. CAHAN: No, no.

Mr. BOIVIN: That would mean a reduction of 8 per cent. Of course the wording of the amendment may be slightly altered. Let us suppose the wording is slightly altered to convey the exact meaning of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George beyond all possible doubt. I say that even then it would be impossible to accept the amendment for the reason that this legislation is correcting what we consider to have been a wrong. I am not prepared to admit that the patriotism of the people of Canada is so weak and so futile that it must be bolstered up with the promise of exemption from taxation in order to get them to invest in Canadian companies. If that is the argument hon. gentlemen oposite want to advance, and if they say we are going to kill Canadian industry because we are asking the industrialists of Canada to pay as much taxation upon the return they will derive from their home dividends as upon the dividends they derive under greater difficulties from foreign investments then this government is willing to take the onus and the blame.

[Mr. Boivin.]

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Surely my hon. friend does not want to be unfair. All we are objecting to is that Canadian enterprises should be required to pay double taxation.

Mr. BOIVIN: If my hon. friend puts the matter in that way I say it is just as fair for a man to pay the company his share of taxation on his dividend and then pay the government his share of taxation on the income from dividends as it is for him to go to the United States and pay 13½ per cent there and the same tax in the case of dividends received here. When hon. gentlemen opposite say that investors are going to be driven to the United States do they realize that when they go there they have to pay 13½ per cent if the shareholder really pays the dividend? It may be argued, perhaps, that the shareholder does not pay the dividend. If that is so the whole argument falls to the ground. But if it is true that the shareholder pays the dividend his taxation is 13½ per cent in the United States whereas it is only 9 per cent here.

Mr. BRISTOL: Is that a correct statement? I think perhaps it might be true in the case of New York state but not in the case of New Jersey.

Mr. BOIVIN: The 13½ per cent is the federal income tax. I am very glad that my hon. friend has reminded me that in certain states of the American union there is an additional tax to be paid by the company to the state. I had forgotten that, and I thank my hon. friend for his reminder. In any event the federal income tax is 13½ per cent. But hon. gentlemen opposite say "Oh well, why don't you do as the United States do; why don't you exempt as they exempt from normal tax?" Do my hon. friends stop to consider what the exemption from normal tax is in the United States? Do my hon. friends stop to consider that upon the first $4,000 of net revenue in excess of credits, the normal tax in the United States is only 1½ per cent? The only exemption that the American investor gets from the 13½ per cent that he is obliged to pay, or will pay next year, unless his revenue exceeds $4,000, is 1½ per cent, and he is therefore obliged to pay a net 12 per cent to the government, because the corporation tax exceeds the normal tax by 12 per cent. If you want to go a step further, upon the second $4,000, or upon $8,000 revenue in excess of credits, the normal tax is only 3 per cent; therefore the total tax they are obliged to pay over there, even with the exemptions, is 10½ per cent, whereas the tax payable here is only 9 per cent. I cannot understand how my hon. friends can argue for a moment that this is going to drive capital from Canada into the United States. It is true, as my hon. friend from York-Sunbury pointed out, that this expression in the prospectus that the dividends derived from Canadian companies would be exempt from taxation, may have been an additional lure to people, perhaps to the widows and orphans referred to by my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George, to invest their capital in these corporations, but I claim it is not a safe and sound investment for people with very small capital, and that lure should not be held out to the widows and orphans to place their money in corporations where the revenue is not absolutely sure and safe, and where the investment is not the kind that is recognized as a safe investment for trust funds. I want to go a step further. My hon. friend referred very feelingly—and I always admire such an expression of sentiment—to the cases of clergymen who have retired from the church, and of widows and orphans who are deserving perhaps of more generous consideration on the part of parliament than other people. But my hon. friend is not making an appeal on behalf of people who are very poor, or on behalf of the indigent widows and orphans who require government assistance, because any person who is obliged to pay one single cent upon revenue derived from corporation dividends must have at least an invested capital of $60,000 before he draws an amount in excess of the $3,000 that is exempt from taxation. Is my hon. friend going to tell me that anybody who has not at least $60,000 invested is going to draw more than $3,000 in dividends? It is absolutely impossible, because the dividends paid by our corporations, while they may be a little bit higher than 5 or 6 per cent, generally, if you consider the price at which the security is sold, average 5 and 6 per cent. If the dividends derived are 5 per cent, it would take $60,000, and if they are 6 per cent, it would mean $50,000 of invested capital before that poor widow or poor orphan, or poor minister, would have to pay one single cent in Dominion taxation.

Mr. CAHAN: I cannot follow the declamation of the hon. minister. Nor will I attempt to match my wits with his in dialectics of the kind he has attempted. I am dealing simply with this point in the proposed amendment; that with regard to last year, 1925, you should not impose, in this month of June, a higher tax than would have been paid if this legislation had not been passed. I am not dealing with the question of widows and orphans, but simply stating that a great number of people who derive their income from estates or investments in Canadian companies will pay two and sometimes three times as high a tax, under the legislation we are now enacting in 1926, as they would have paid under the 1925 legislation. I suggested to the hon. minister that he give it favourable consideration. He wishes to make it a vote of want of confidence in the government. If it is the wish of hon. members that in discussing these bills any suggestion made on this side of the House shall be regarded as a vote of want of confidence in the government, they are establishing a precedent that has never been established in this House before. The minister asks us to discuss the question on its merits. When introducing his bill, he asked that we should make suggestions, and stated, if I remember correctly, that the government were prepared to receive fair suggestions for their consideration. That was the proper spirit. The hon. member suggests that those sitting on this side of the House have enacted similar legislation in years past. If so, as a new member, I assume no responsibility for it. I am here to act according to my intelligence and judgment, and I do not regard myself as responsible for the wrongs which have been created in the Canadian parliament for the last fifty years by either party. Therefore I ask hon. members to consider the very point and the only point raised by this amendment. Such legislation as he has suggested could not be passed under the constitution of the United States. Hon. members laugh, but they simply show their entire ignorance of the subject by laughing. Ex post facto legislation of this kind could not be passed under the constitution of the United States, and you will look in vain, through the taxation proposals of the British government if you endeavor to find a proposal in any year to impose a higher tax on incomes earned the previous year than was in force in that year. Therefore let us deal with it squarely. I say that it is unjust, no matter who does it, in the case of a man who has derived his income from dividends only—and I am limiting it to dividend income—that he should be compelled to pay a higher tax on a legislation passed in June 1926, on his income for the year ending December 31st, 1925. The hon. member should not make it a vote of want of confidence in the government. I had hoped that it might have been considered fairly, apart from the partisan aspect, which unfortunately the hon. member has injected in the discussion.

Mr. BOIVIN: I hope my hon. friend will not misunderstand me. In my remarks, I was not answering merely the argument advanced by my hon. friend, but I was endeavoring to answer the criticisms which have been levelled since the discussion commenced against this particular clause of the bill.

Mr. CAHAN: Why not limit the discussion to the amendment for the present?

Mr. BOIVIN: I do not propose to limit myself to the amendment, owing to the well-known rule of parliament, that when a member is discussing an amendment to a bill or to a clause of a bill, he also has the right to discuss the bill or the clause itself. That is one reason, and the other reason is that I hope, when we reach the vote on the amendment, and when all our hon. friends happen to be in the House, that we may possibly dispose of the clause itself at the same time.

Mr. CAHAN: I can say that until I told the hon. member to my left (Mr. Preston) no member had the slightest idea that I was going to move an amendment, and I had not discussed it with anyone.

Mr. BOIVIN: I do not mean that at all; but since the amendment has been moved by my hon. friend a large number of members on both sides have come in for the purpose of listening to the discussion and taking part in the vote, and I thought it would be a good idea if we could dispose of the amendment and the clause at the same time. My hon. friend need not assure us in the loud tone which he has used that he has no responsibility for the legislation enacted by his hon. friends in the years prior to 1925. Any hon. member who read his speeches during the campaign in his constituency well knows that he accepted no responsibility for any acts of the Conservative party prior to then.

Mr. BOURASSA: That is why the hon. gentleman was elected.

Mr. BOIVIN: For once the hon. member for Labelle and myself entirely agree. But let me come to the subject matter of the amendment itself, which I am willing to say has a great deal of merit. At first I misunderstood the amendment. That misunderstanding I corrected. I pointed out that under the intent of the amendment we would be obliged to remit 8 per cent upon all income derived from dividends which we would collect this year. I said that that was impossible owing to the fact that when the budget was drafted and the reductions were made, the additional revenue to be derived from dividend income was taken into consideration and a remission of the entire revenue from dividend income would throw the whole fabric—

Mr. CAHAN: I know the hon. gentleman is sincere, but this does not remit.

Mr. BOIVIN: I am just coming to that. I say that that would be the argument if we remitted 8 per cent on all dividends, but my hon. friend pointed out that that was not his intention. His intention is merely to prevent an increase in the amount paid by any dividend earner during this year over what he would have paid under the old law. That, I understand, is the exact purpose of my hon. friend's amendment. There are in Canada some people who receive this entire income from dividends and of course they would be favoured by my hon. friend's amendment because they would pay less than they would pay under the new law. But there are many other people who derive one-half or three-quarters of their income from other sources and the balance from dividends. They could very well come to the government and say: You were unfair to me; you reduced the taxation which you should have collected on dividends received by my neighbour, but you did not reduce it on mine. Where is the answer?

Mr. CAHAN: I will give the answer. The answer would be that you have not reduced it at all. The answer is that this payment with reference to the year 1925 would be exactly what would have been payable under 1925 legislation, but for the future the tax payable by the man who receives income from dividends is increased. You are simply making it impossible to take more from one class on income derived in 1925 for the purpose of reducing the amount taken from another class on income derived in 1925.

Mr. BOIVIN: It is impossible to make the taxation of all persons who derive income from dividends the same this year as last year. To do so would destroy the effect of the budget.

Mr. CAHAN: That is not what I said.

Mr. BOIVIN: That is merely to give the comparison and to lead up to the other argument. If we do not do that we are removing the retroactive effect as regards some dividend receivers and leaving the retroactive feature as regards others.

Mr. CAHAN: We are taking away to a certain extent the retroactive effect with regard to one class but with regard to all others we are reducing their taxation. The retroactive effect with regard to every other class is to reduce for 1925 what they would otherwise pay. Be fair.

Mr. BOIVIN: I want to be exceedingly fair and I am going to ask my hon. friend again: Does he by his amendment propose that income tax payable on all revenue derived from dividends shall not be greater this year than it was last year?

Mr. CAHAN: Not at all.

Mr. BOIVIN: If that is not his proposal, what revenue derived from dividends does he desire to exempt?

Mr. CAHAN: Under the legislation now proposed in clause 2, 90 per cent, according to the statement of the minister, of income tax payers of Canada will pay less in respect of dividend income received for 1925.

Mr. BOIVIN: I did not say "in respect of dividend income received." I said "90 per cent of all the income taxpayers of Canada, no matter from what source their revenue was derived, would pay less income tax than last year."

Mr. CAHAN: I understood the hon. gentleman differently. I understood that we were dealing with those who derive their income from dividends. I retract the implication but there was a misunderstanding. My point is this. We in 1926 are removing the normal tax provision and decreasing the taxation upon a great body of income taxpayers. I understood that this would merely mean that the proposed legislation would give taxpayers who were paying tax for 1925 a reduction in their net income tax payable. But I understood the hon. gentleman to say in answer to me that he agreed that it would increase the tax on 10 per cent of the taxpayers. Whether the percentage is 10 or 20 per cent, it is unfair now to reduce the income tax

4 p.m. payable for 1925 in respect of 90 per cent of the taxpayers and to increase the tax payable in 1925 on the remaining 10 per cent if those are the proportions. Whether they are the correct proportions or not, this illustrates my point. Therefore I ask the minister, not with regard to income generally, but with regard to income received from dividends on Canadian stocks, that the income tax payable for 1925 under this legislation shall not be increased beyond what would have been payable under the legislation existing in 1925. The tax on income received from dividends should not be greater than it was so as to avoid increasing the tax on those individuals by ex post facto legislation. In that connection I suggested certain reasons why I regard ex post facto legislation of this kind as immoral; further than that, it increases dissatisfaction and discontent, and creates grievances from one end of the country to the other. Let us deal fairly with those people and say: We will increase your income taxes from this day forth, for 1926 and every subsequent year, but we will not now by retroactive legislation increase your taxes on income derived from dividends for the year 1925.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Chairman, I do not know what has happened. When I went out of the House for a few minutes we were getting along in a calm, business-like spirit, but I come back to find the hon. minister standing on both hind legs and with both hands extended to high heaven hurling all kinds of challenges at this unfortunate opposition. I wonder if it is the time for us to indulge in this kind of gymnastics. We have any amount of material for it, and if it is the wish of the government we certainly will indulge in this diversion. But I prefer to think this is a matter of business and that we are trying to get the right thing done for the greatest number of our people. I ask the minister at this stage of the session to consider our harrowed feelings and no longer to harrow them unnecessarily. Let us see if we can approach this subject now in the frame of mind that will enable us to ascertain if two and two make four. Now, Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a little bit of misunderstanding between the minister and the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George as to what is meant by the resolution.

Mr. BOIVIN: My hon. friend says he was out of the House. We are not discussing the resolution, we are discussing the amendment.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have gathered that. I should say the effect of the amendment is to make paragraph 2 apply for the year 1926 instead of 1925.

Mr. CAHAN: I offered even a greater advantage to the government than that.

Mr. BOIVIN: My hon. friend understands it still less than I do myself—although I admit I do not.

Mr. CAHAN: Would my hon. friend kindly procure the amendment from the Clerk just to see the point?

An hon. MEMBER: Read it aloud.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Some hon. gentleman says, "Read it aloud." Here it is:

Provided however that no taxpayer shall be liable by virtue of this section to pay in respect of dividend income for the year 1925 a greater tax than would have been payable by such taxpayer in case this section had not been enacted.

Mr. CAHILL: Now, what does it mean?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would suppose, Mr. Chairman, it means that the section refers only to income taxpayers. I think that is clear.

Mr. BOIVIN: It refers only to dividend income taxpayers.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is what I mean. It refers to them solely, and I would take it that the object of the amendment is this: The tax payable in respect to these dividends is to be calculated upon the law in effect before this act was passed.

Mr. BOIVIN: That is as I understand it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, that is something which we can discuss quietly. My hon. friend is to some extent—and I give him credit for it—recognizing the evils of double taxation, and he is seeing to it that at least double taxation should occur only once as a result of what he is doing with respect to companies; he is making profits only once paid subject to double taxation. My hon. friend admits that. Well then, he agrees with us that double taxation in itself is bad. I wonder if he could not help a little bit in this connection. It is perfectly true that the number of people affected is small compared with the whole, but my hon. friend will find some taxpayers have to pay twice as much as they were paying before, others more than twice as much. Their accounts are closed for the year. I think in some instances my hon. friend will find he is putting those people in his class and my class—they will have to borrow money to pay those taxes. That is really what is being done. My hon. friend of course wants revenue. Well, has he considered this? I made a calculation as to how much additional revenue could be raised, but in that calculation I had to assume certain figures, and it may be that I assumed figures too high in connection with the class of income that the dividends would fall under, and I think my hon. friend is of that opinion. But instead of having this change in the law, as the minister wants revenue, has he considered putting up instead of reducing the corporation tax? If we want revenue, and if we do not want simply to bother people because they are owners of industrial shares, why should he not put a little more tax on companies?

Mr. BOIVIN: The reason it was considered advisable to reduce the company tax instead of increasing it was that Canada is a young, undeveloped country requiring a certain amount of foreign capital to assist its development, and we thought the lower the company tax the easier it would be to attract foreign capital to develop our natural resources.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am quite frank in telling my hon. friend there is no doubt it is a help to some extent. But does he not think he is perhaps doing more harm than good? From what I caught of my hon. friend's peroration he wanted to debate the question of the loyalty of the Canadian investor, and he contended that the Canadian investor would invest in the enterprises of his own country never mind what happened, or words something to that effect. I do not think there is any question of driving Canadian capital out of the country. I am frank in telling my hon. friend that.

Mr. BOIVIN: Hear, hear.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Because when Canadian investors go outside with their capital they are still liable to income tax on their income from foreign investments. But this is what will happen. My hon. friend now is putting down the yield on these dividends to 5 and 6 per cent. He knows that bonds can be bought on the basis of this percentage where there is a first charge and practically no risk, he knows also that mortgages can be obtained to return this rate of interest, and I submit to him that the effect of the amendment therefore is to put a premium on bond and mortgage investments. To the extent that you remove the incentive for taking a chance you put a premium upon investments in safe things. Does my hon. friend think that is a good thing? I know he will agree that it is not, but he had to look for revenue somewhere and this is the result.

I also want to point out to my hon. friend that companies and shareholders can evade this double taxation; all they have to do is change the form of the security, and my hon. friend is going to receive less money than he is now getting. It is as well to recognize these things clearly; in order to get rid of this double taxation to a very large degree it is only necessary to increase the number of bonds and deferred stocks, and limit the number of shares. Payments for moneys legitimately invested in business on the creditor basis are certainly deductions which have to be made, and if that be done —and there is no reason why it should not be done—serious inroads may be made on the $31,000,000 now received from corporations. I ask my hon. friend to consider this himself, without appealing here and there for advice. Is it not possible for him to make such a provision as well give some incentive, never mind how slight, to the financing of industrial corporations? I do not want it for all corporations; some, such as banks and mortgage loan companies, do not require this sort of thing at all and I am not asking it for them. But when we come to industrial corporations, which my hon. friend will agree we need and which are difficult to finance, is it not possible for this government to continue some sort of incentive to investment in that class of security by the Canadian taxpayer? I would ask my hon. friend to think it over carefully.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think some of us are still rather at a loss to know how to vote on this amendment. Several explanations have been made, but they are rather involved, bringing in as they do the principle of double taxation and also the particular point before us in the amendment, namely retroactive legislation. I confess that the statement of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) rather appeals to me; I do not like the idea of retroactive legislation. If his statement is correct I am almost inclined to think I will have to vote for the amendment notwithstanding its source. But if there is any real objection I would like to have it from the minister, as it seems to me the minister has not definitely and satisfactorily answered the argument of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George.

Mr. BOIVIN: I have attempted to answer it, but I have been interrupted so often that my answer has not been completed.

Mr. HANSON: You interrupted yourself to make a campaign speech.

Mr. BOIVIN: I do not very often follow the example of the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson); if I did so once he should forgive me. I endeavoured to point out that while there was a great deal of merit in the amendment proposed by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George it was unacceptable to the government because the amendment itself created an inequality and a hardship. The hon. member has in mind, I think, the idea of exempting those taxpayers who are called upon this year to pay income tax on dividends derived from corporations, who are paying a greater tax this year under the new law than they would have paid under the old law. The desire is to make their taxation as small this year as it would have been last year under the old law. That is not the exact wording of the amendment, but the wording is immaterial.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I did not quite so understand it. I wanted to make sure of that.

Mr. CAHAN: There is one error I might point out. The hon. gentleman uses the word "this year;" this is now the year 1926.

Mr. BOIVIN: I mean the tax payable this year on the income earned in 1925.

Mr. CAHAN: I am saying that we should not by legislation now, in June, 1926, increase the tax payable on income dividend received in 1925, but for this year in which we are now living, 1926, the increased taxation shall apply as in the bill brought down.

Mr. BOIVIN: There is something to be said in favour of the argument of my hon. friend. I tried to point out, however, that we could not reduce the income tax as we have reduced it for the taxpayers in general if we did not impose what is called by some double taxation on company dividends. You cannot both eat your cake and have it.

Mr. CAHAN: May I ask a question, just to make it clear?

Mr. BOIVIN: Certainly.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. gentleman does not object. Does the minister mean that we cannot, in respect of the 1925 income, reduce the tax for a large class of people without increasing the tax on the other classes?

Mr. BOIVIN: I say that if you reduce the tax on the dividends derived by one individual in Canada from joint stock companies you must do the same on all dividends derived by all individuals from Canadian joint stock companies, and if you do that you are obliged to reduce the only tax which you are now imposing by about eight per cent, which was the normal tax exemption given under the old law. If that is done it will cause a loss to the Dominion treasury of over $2,000,000, and if you lose that $2,000,000 in order to buckle your budget, as we sometimes say in French, it will be absolutely necessary to increase the income tax upon the others. If my hon. friend wants to submit as an amendment that the income tax in force last year be applicable to everyone for the income to be collected in April, 1926, we will then get more revenue and I would have no objection to consider his amendment. But it is absolutely impossible for this government to make both ends meet if we reduce the tax to everyone entitled to a reduction under the new law without collecting the taxation upon incomes derived from corporations. We will lose that $2,000,000 if we adopt the amendment proposed by my hon. friend, and this government cannot afford to do that without changing the whole structure of the income tax act.

Mr. BOURASSA: Will the minister permit a question? Let us confine ourselves to the taxation of corporations and their shareholders. Supposing you tax for the year 1925 all corporations according to the rate existing previously, that is 10½ per cent; then supposing you tax the individual shareholders according to the rate of taxation in existence last year, you will then make both ends meet. Do not make it retroactive, and I think you will get a figure which will perhaps be sufficient. Of course, if you decrease the rate from 10½ per cent to 9 per cent on the profits of the companies, and you accept the amendment of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, I admit that you have a decrease. But if you treat both corporations and individuals alike for the year 1925, and apply the new legislation to the year 1926, both as to corporation profits and individual dividends, I think you will reach your object, and be far safer so far as the principle of the legislation is concerned.

Mr. BOIVIN: I know that the intention of avoiding even the semblance of retroactive legislation is a good thing, and if it were possible always to avoid retroactive legislation I would be in hearty accord. But I say once more that to adopt precisely the principle put forward by my hon. friend from Labelle would cause a loss to the Dominion treasury, upon the estimate made by the Minister of Finance, of $2,000,000. We cannot afford to make that loss without increasing the income tax upon the individual. It would be absolutely necessary to adopt either the entire law of last year or the entire law of this year. By adopting the entire law of last year we would collect about $12,000,000 more than if we adopted the law of this year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We have a loss of $2,000,000, the minister says, if the amendment be adopted. Is that loss of $2,000,000 over and above the receipts from the companies on the basis of last year's taxation, which would be 10½ per cent? Then what does my hon. friend say the real loss would be, because the suggestion of the hon. member for Labelle seems to me to be absolutely reasonable, that if you delay the taxation of the individual shareholder you must also delay in the case of the corporation.

Mr. BOURASSA: Quite so. Apply the same thing under section 5.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Would there be anything like that loss then?

Mr. BOIVIN: Yes, the loss was calculated by making a comparison as regards corporations under the present law and under the old law. If we were to adopt the amendment of my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George without reverting to the original tax on corporations, I think the loss would be about $4,500,000.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Is that $4,500,000 the amount the 10 per cent of the taxpayers who are going to pay more would have to pay under the present law as compared with the old?

Mr. BOIVIN: I think my hon. friend misunderstood me entirely. I did not for a moment wish to convey the idea that 10 per cent of the taxpayers were going to pay this difference in taxation. The idea I wanted to convey was this, that of all the taxpayers in Canada there were 10 per cent whose revenue was entirely derived from the distribution of dividends, and that that 10 per cent would pay more taxation than they had paid previously, but the other 90 per cent would pay less. I am quite willing to admit that among the other 90 per cent, there may be 40 per cent or more who may pay on their dividends more taxation than they paid before, but that amount will be offset by the reduction on the balance of their revenue to such an extent that their total tax will be reduced. But it is absolutely impossible to give an estimate as to the exact amount that will be paid by the 10 per cent who will pay more taxes. There are in a very, very few cases some persons who may pay taxation now who never paid taxation before. Take the case of a person with no revenue except a revenue of $5,000 from a $100,000 investment in some Canadian company. That person previously received exemption from normal tax and paid no taxation whatever. At the present time he will be obliged to pay 2 per cent on $2,000, or a tax of $40. So it is absolutely impossible to answer direct the question of my hon. friend.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I thought that the officers of the department, in making a comparison as between the two systems of taxation, would have arrived at some calculation of the extra amount which this 10 per cent would have to pay who are going to pay more under the present law.

Mr. BOIVIN: I am sorry that was not done.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I want to get this clear. My hon. friend's point, as I understand it now, is that there would be a loss, if we adopted this amendment, of $2,000,000 even if we reverted to the taxation of 10½ per cent.

Mr. BOIVIN: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Therefore the calculation of the department as to what will be recovered for the treasury under the new law taxing the shareholder will approximate $5,500,000.

Mr. BOIVIN: No, $4,500,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, $5,500,000. I understand from the debate that there is a reduction of $3,100,000 or $3,500,000 in the taxation on the companies by reducing the rate from 10½ to 9 per cent. Am I not right?

Mr. BOIVIN: I am informed that the entire tax derived from the companies during the last fiscal year reported was about $31,000,000, and 1½ per cent on that would be a little over $4,500,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister is quite right. My hon. friend gets the figure of a little over $4,500,000 as the reduction in company taxation, and he says in reply to the hon. member for Labelle that if we go back to the old form of taxation having regard to the companies, on the one hand, putting them back on the 10½ per cent rate, and having regard to the shareholders, on the other hand, there will be a loss of $2,000,000. If that be correct, it is perfectly plain that my hon. friend's estimate of new money to be found by the new tax is $6,500,000.

Mr. BOIVIN: I think my hon. friend is right.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then on my hon. friend's basis we are raising new taxes to the extent of $6,500,000.

Mr. CAHAN: In view of the fact, according to the explanation of the Minister of Customs, that $3,500,000 or thereabouts is to be taken off the taxation of companies and imposed largely upon a certain class of shareholder only, and as the government have treated this as a want of confidence motion, which I did not intend at all—I moved it simply to serve as a protest against that kind of legislation—with the permission of the seconder, I withdraw the amendment.

Amendment withdrawn.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Personal corporations.

Mr. HANSON: Is any amendment proposed in connection with this section?

Mr. BOIVIN: Before section 3 carries I should like to make an amendment to which I am sure we shall all agree. That is in paragraph (g) of subsection 10—personal corporation dividends. It will be found at the top of page 3. In the clause we are now considering it is stipulated that it shall have a retroactive effect and that dividends earned prior to 1925 shall be taxable when distributed. If they are not distributed year by year for the next five years they will be taxable at the end of the five years. The government is bound to admit that while the personal corporation was perhaps a method of evading taxation, it was nevertheless a legal method. The company was legally formed and carried on its operations legally. We have therefore decided to amend that clause by striking out paragraph (g) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

Dividends actually declared by a personal corporation after the 31st day of December, 1924, shall be deemed to be paid out of income earned after the said 31st December, 1924, so far as the same is available, and to that extent shall not be liable to further taxation in the hands of the shareholders.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is retroactive for one year.

Mr. BOIVIN: The same as in the other case we have just been discussing. That is to say for the income tax returns made this year they shall pay but there shall be no further retroactive effect.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What about distribution?

Mr. BOIVIN: It is provided that all dividends which are actually declared by the corporation after the 31st December, 1924, shall be deemed to be paid out of income earned after that date, and to that extent shall not be liable to taxation. I think that makes it quite clear that in so far as there is any surplus available, when dividends are declared from it, these dividends shall not be taxable again if they have been taxed once.

If, however, the company decides to take the surplus that it now has on hand and later distribute it as dividend, and if that surplus is in excess of the entire earnings of the company on and after the month of December, 1924, then of course that would become taxable as a dividend distributed to the shareholders.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The original idea, as I remember it, was this: We started out with the tax running back and covering the whole period. My hon. friend stops that and now brings the period down to a year. That still leaves available undistributed profits. My hon. friend had a certain length of time within which profits were to be distributed. What does he do with that?

Mr. BOIVIN: That is wiped out entirely. There is no obligation on personal corporations now to distribute profits. They are going to be treated as individuals and going to pay taxation on their earnings in the future. After that they can distribute their profits as they please without taxation.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If I follow my hon. friend the effect of that would be to draw the teeth of the whole of this legislation.

Mr. BOIVIN: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh, yes, if you just make profits taxable as against the company. What we want to do is to make them taxable as against an individual.

Mr. BOIVIN: Certainly we want to make them taxable as against the individual. The original intention was to try and make these corporations pay a corporation tax and then oblige them to distribute their dividends and pay personal taxation upon the dividends. That was deemed to be unfair; I think my hon. friend will admit it is unfair. The object is to prevent an evasion of the law. A personal corporation may very well have been formed for some other purpose than to evade the law. There is no desire on our part to destroy a personal corporation; we do not want to force the personal corporation out of existence. If for purposes of succession duties, for instance, and if for purposes of administration, people prefer to operate as a corporation all right, we have no objection, but we do say that they must pay the same amount of federal taxation as if they had continued as individuals. That is the object of our law, that is the case we want to get at. If my hon. friend considers that we have made any mistake in trying to attain that end I am willing to correct it. We do not want to make the law retroactive. We do not want to go back and force them to distribute their surplus because many of these personal corporations have invested that surplus in non-liquid assets, and we feel that it will be harsh to make them borrow money to pay income taxation as my hon. friend and myself were obliged to do. Therefore we make the law effective this year for the profits earned by the operations of the personal corporation last year. In future, no matter what the surplus may be the entire earnings of the corporation will be taxed as personal income every year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The main shareholders?

Mr. BOIVIN: All shareholders.

Mr. HANSON: The company.

Mr. BOIVIN: Not the company, the shareholders of the company.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is what I thought.

Mr. BOIVIN: In that case the profits are deemed to be distributed for the purposes of taxation and they are taxed accordingly. That will be the case for last year and for all future years. Surplus accumulated in the past upon which taxation has not been paid will not be taxed until it is distributed as profits. They can distribute these profits when they like subject to whatever income tax may be in effect at that time.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What section will deal with the question of election in the case of these companies?

Mr. BOIVIN: For the personal corporation there is no election. A personal corporation will be treated as an individual and will pay no company tax. There is a section with respect to election in the case of a family corporation namely section 8. In section 8, subsection (b) provides:

> The shareholders of a family corporation may elect that, in lieu of the corporation being assessed as a corporation, the income of the corporation be dealt with under this act as if such corporation were a partnership.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was just wondering whether you distinguished between family corporations and these personal corporations.

Mr. BOIVIN: Both are defined under the act. The personal corporation is defined in section 3, and the family corporation in section 8.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Very good.

Mr. BOIVIN: My hon. friend will readily see the difference between the two. We can discuss the subject of family corporations when we reach section 8.

Mr. CLARK: Did I understand the minister to say that in future the profits of a personal corporation will be taxed whether distributed or not?

Mr. BOIVIN: The profits of a personal corporation will not be subject to the company tax at all. They will be taxed as if they were the earnings of an individual. Once taxed, it makes no difference whether they are distributed or not, they will be taxed as the earnings of the individual, but they will not be subject to further taxation.

Mr. HANSON: Take the case of a personal corporation which was formed for the purpose of reducing the income tax paid by the owner of the corporation, who transfers a million dollars' worth of securities from which the personal corporation receives the coupon or dividend. Assume that amounts to $100,000 per annum. That $100,000 has already been subjected to a tax in the principal company from which it is derived. That is one tax. Now $100,000 in the hands of a personal corporation is to be treated as the income of that personal corporation, and taxed to it, whether it is distributed or not. That is the proposition now. Even though they do not declare a single dividend, that $100,000 will be included in that tax. Will the corporation pay a third tax at the hands of the owner of the personal corporation?

Mr. BOIVIN: No.

Mr. HANSON: It may be cured by subsection 12.

Mr. BOIVIN: The definition of "personal corporation" is as follows:

(10 (a) For the purposes of this act a "personal corporation" means a corporation or joint stock company (no matter when or where created) controlled directly or indirectly by one person, who resides in Canada, or by one such person and his wife or any member of his family, or by any combination of them, or by any other person or corporation on his or their behalf, whether through holding a majority of the stock of such corporation, or in any other manner whatsoever, the gross revenue of which is to the extent of one quarter or more derived from one or more of the following sources, namely:—

from the ownership of or the trading or dealing in bonds, stocks or shares, debentures, mortgages, hypothecs, bills, notes or other similar property, or from the lending of money with or without security, or by way of rent, annuity, royalty, interest or dividend, or from or by virtue of any right, title or interest in or to any estate or trust.

Paragraph (b) of sub-section 10 reads:

The income of a personal corporation, in lieu of being assessed the tax prescribed by subsection two of section four of this act, shall on the last day of each year be deemed to be distributed as a dividend to the shareholders thereof and shall in their hands constitute taxable income for each year in the proportion hereinafter mentioned, whether actually distributed by way of dividend or not.

It should be quite clear, first, that in order to be a personal corporation that corporation must be an investment corporation and not and industrial concern. I think it further makes it quite clear that there is no double taxation whatever. Of course if the person is the owner of shares in an industrial corporation which has once paid a 9 per cent income tax, and derives dividends from those shares, those dividends form part of his personal income and are taxable as his personal income. If those shares, instead of being owned by the person, are owned by the personal corporation, they will be taxable in the same way. But I want to make clear to my hon. friend, as treble taxation has been mentioned, that a third tax will not be paid, and that there will be no company tax whatever paid by the personal corporation under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HANSON: I am relieved to know that. Then this will be the situation: A tax-payer owning $5,000,000 of stock in an industrial corporation, which is the active earning corporation, and which will pay the tax, transfers this stock to a holding company, a company which will come within the definition of this sub-section, and be a personal corporation with $5,000,000 of stock, upon which dividends are declared; that dividend will first be paid into the hands of the holding company in which the stock is registered, and will be deemed under this act, as far as I can see, to have been paid directly to the shareholders themselves, without going through the hands of intermediaries.

Mr. BOIVIN: Yes.

Mr. HANSON: Then there is no treble taxation. There is that feature of the double taxation and I am relieved to find that there is no treble taxation.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the section be adopted?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. HANSON: I understood we were going to deal with the subsections.

Mr. BOIVIN: I have no objection to having them discussed.

Mr. HANSON: They are important.

Mr. BOIVIN: Yes. The Chairman called section 3. I proposed a most important amendment to paragraph (g), subsection 10 and that was carried, as I thought.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the amendment to paragraph (g) carry?

Mr. HANSON: We have not reached that yet.

The CHAIRMAN: Yes, hon. members have been discusing it.

Mr. BOIVIN: While paragraph (g) has been amended, I do not think we should preclude any hon. member from discussing any other paragraph if he desires to do so.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall paragraph (a) carry?

Mr. CAHAN: I would like to speak to paragraph (d).

Paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) agreed to.

On paragraph (d)—Valuation of property transferred.

Mr. CAHAN: I wish to make a few observations, but not to provoke an acrimonious discussion. In ascertaining values, under this section, regard shall be had to all the facts and circumstances and the decision of the minister in that respect shall be final and conclusive. Those are the words of the paragraph. I think it is most unfair to place in the judgment of a political head a decision affecting very large values. It should be open to appeal, like any other matter of assessment. To place in the hands of a political head power to adjust matters of this kind is in my opinion to prolong that same condition of affairs which we found in another department now being investigated.

Mr. BOIVIN: In answer to my hon. friend I say, first, that I do not consider that the minister will be called upon very often to pass an opinion, because the very nature of this legislation will perhaps discourage the formation of personal corporations and the passing on of property to them. Paragraph (d) reads:

> The value of the property transferred by each shareholder or his predecessor in title shall be the fair value as at the date of the transfer of such property to the corporation.

That must be determined by someone. If it is not to be determined by the minister, by whom shall it be determined?

[Mr. Boivin.]

Mr. CAHAN: If it is to be determined by the minister, I am suggesting there should be an appeal, as in other matters, to the board. I do not think the arbitrary decision of the minister should be final and conclusive.

Mr. BOIVIN: If my hon. friend looks up the Business Profits War Tax Act, he will find two similar sections in that act which was administered by the present commissioner of Taxation and which gave rise to no trouble whatever. I think my hon. friend will admit with me that it is always well whenever possible to avoid litigation and law costs. When he uses the phrase "placing power in the political head of the department", perhaps technically according to the letter of the act he is right. But my hon. friend knows that neither the present minister nor any of his predecessors belonging to either political party ever sat down to examine into the details of any individual tax return in the office of the Commissioner of Taxation. The word "minister" is used in the act merely as a term to represent the official to whom the minister delegates his powers and who has charge of the administration of the act. The act has been administered with fairness since its inception; there has never been any complaint. This is carrying out the terms or provisions of other sections of the act as enacted by the previous government. If there was anything good that the previous government did it was the inclusion in the Income Tax Act of certain sections which prevented litigation and the payment of costs. It is true that speaking as an attorney I may be advocating a law which will be inimical to the interests of members of my own fraternity who might like to make law costs out of this litigation, but I am sure it will be for the advantage of the taxpayers in general.

Mr. CAHAN: The suggestion does not apply to me as one who makes law costs out of his clients. I repudiate that.

Mr. BOIVIN: In making these remarks I absolutely forgot that my hon. friend is like myself a member of the bar. I was thinking of myself alone and not of him. If he imagines there was any thought of an insinuation in my mind that he was proposing this amendment for any such purpose, I hasten to retract. I am not going to offer him an apology because I never intended nor thought that the expression could refer to him.

Mr. CAHAN: In respect of decisions of the minister, if I remember correctly—I have not the act before me—I understand that "the minister" is defined as "the minister or his deputy." I have brought up before the Commissioner of Taxation for his decision a great number of matters on behalf of clients of mine when I have time after time placed the legal aspects of those questions before him. While I do not always agree with his legal decisions I certainly have never found on his part any disposition to be unfair or unjust; on the contrary I have found every disposition on his part to give an adequate hearing to the presentation of such points of law as I have had to present on behalf of my clients. But in respect of his decisions so far there is an appeal. This clause as I understand it takes entirely away the appeal in these matters and I see no reason why there should not be an appeal from the deputy minister to the board in the ordinary course. This involves large questions of values, and, if my memory is correct, this is not the only clause in the bill in which the decision of the minister is final and conclusive.

Mr. BOIVIN: There is no board before which the appeal could be lodged. The appeal would have to be lodged with the Exchequer Court. There is already in the act a provision by which any shareholder complaining of the amount assesed against him has the right to appeal from the decision of the commissioner to the Exchequer Court of Canada.

Mr. CAHAN: Is the old appeal board abolished?

Mr. BOIVIN: The board which was originally created for the purpose of administering the Income Tax Act was abolished some three years ago.

Paragraph agreed to.

On paragraph (e)—One personal corporation succeeding another.

Mr. HANSON: Will the minister state shortly the object of this paragraph?

Mr. BOIVIN: The object as I understand it is to place the Commissioner of Taxation in a position where he can always bring back the earnings to the individual instead of to the company. In other words, where one personal corporation is succeeded by or transfers its property to another personal corporation, the shareholders of the first shall be deemed to have transferred to the second the property which they transferred to the corporation first mentioned, that is to say the original corporation:

When any person has acquired or acquires the control of a personal corporation he shall be deemed to have transferred to such corporation the property transferred thereto by his vendor.

That means this. Let us suppose that two personal corporations are brought together and that is the case which it is sought to cover. All the property placed in one corporation by one individual will still be considered to be his property, and all the property placed in the corporation by the other individual will still be deemed to 5 p.m. be his property when the two are welded together as one corporation and when the profits are divided between them. In taxing the profits of personal corporations it is of course absolutely necessary to retain the percentage of shares or percentage of interest held by each individual shareholder. This provision is inserted in the law merely for the purpose of making it possible for the Commissioner of Taxation to determine what the proportionate share of the profits of each individual partner will be.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If that is the idea, has the minister considered the effect of the limiting section as defining "personal corporations"? In that section the minister will see that we have a combination. We shall have more than one person coming in. We shall have a series of families doing that. My hon. friend is right in stopping it.

Mr. BOIVIN: This is what I wanted to point out. If it were possible—a thing which is practically impossible—for two personal corporations to be brought together owned by two persons who are not members of the same family, then it ceases to be a personal corporation.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is just what the minister does not want to have cease. The easiest way of evading the act would be to put the two of them together.

Mr. BOIVIN: It is pointed out to me that if that was done the past surpluses of the corporations at the time of reorganization would under another clause of the act, as it exists at present, be taxable.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Which section is that?

Mr. BOIVIN: Section 5 of the Income War Tax Act amendment which was assented to on the 19th July, 1924, chapter 46, 14-15 George V. The section reads:

On the winding up, discontinuance or reorganization of the business of any incorporated company the distribution in any form of the property of the company shall be deemed to be the payment of a dividend to the extent that the company has on hand undistributed income.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is amalgamation covered by those words?

Mr. BOIVIN: It is certainly a reorganization; when two companies amalgamate one, in a way, has to be purchased by the other.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think that is right; it must be a reorganization.

Paragraph (e) agreed to.

Paragraph (f) agreed to.

On paragraph (g)—Personal corporation dividends.

Mr. BOIVIN: That is amended.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is limited to the one year?

Mr. BOIVIN: Yes.

Mr. HANSON: Has the minister any estimate of the additional revenue the government will get under this new section 3?

Mr. BOIVIN: A certain number of personal corporations were formed during the last fiscal year, and it would be absolutely impossible to state the amount of revenue we will derive from those particular corporations until the income tax returns reach the head office. In most instances those returns are not yet available. As to corporations organized prior to that time it is also impossible to state what their earnings for the last year were and consequently what the tax will amount to. I would hesitate to estimate the amount of gain at the present time.

Mr. HANSON: Does the minister mean that he has not the amount, or that he does not want to give an estimate?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Both.

Mr. BOIVIN: If my hon. friend desires, I will endeavour to have an estimate made and give him the information personally or in answer to a question which he may place on the order paper if he so desires.

Mr. HANSON: That is good enough.

Mr. MacLAREN: Mr. Chairman, it is most desirable that no difficulty should be placed in the way of these personal or family corporations. So far as I am aware they are largely for the purpose of avoiding difficulties with respect to succession duties which at the present time may be imposed even on small estates by many of the provinces and also by the United States. I think the minister appreciates the usefulness of these corporations, which are conducted for perfectly good sound reasons. So far as I can come to a conclusion on this matter, the amendment will allow incorporations to be effected without undue difficulty as to taxes, and at the same time will prevent the evasion of income tax by the individual.

Amendment agreed to.

Paragraph (g) as amended agreed to.

On section 3, subsection (11)—Carrying charges.

Mr. BOURASSA: In what degree does this differ from the corresponding paragraph of the resolution, No. 8 I believe? Under this paragraph people holding property, some parts productive and other parts unproductive, heretofore were allowed, quite properly, to deduct from the income of their productive property the taxes paid or losses incurred upon their unproductive property. The member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) and several other hon. gentlemen raised the point, and the minister made it quite clear, I think, that it was his intention to cover it. He said he wanted to reach the speculator who was investing some of his surplus income in real estate for speculative purposes and thus evading taxation. The other point is this. I know many instances, for example, of a family holding a couple of houses or tenements which are returning an income, and holding besides two or three vacant lots as part of the estate. Very often the latter class of property cannot be readily sold for what it is worth. It is not held for speculative purposes, but municipal taxes are levied upon it every year. Surely it is as equitable that the owners should be allowed to deduct the losses upon the unproductive property from the income returned by their productive property as it is for a company before distributing dividends to deduct losses incurred and taxation paid upon unproductive property. I understand that companies are covered. It is said that:

> The carrying charges or expenses of unproductive property or assets not acquired for the purposes of a trade, business or calling, or of a liability not incurred in connection with a trade, business or calling, shall not be allowed as a deduction in determining income for the year 1925 and each year thereafter.

The result is that the speculator who trades in real estate will under this clause be able to deduct the taxes he pays on unproductive property from the income he receives on productive property; but the small property-owner, one of the most useful type of ratepayers and citizens, will be unjustly treated.

I think it is unsound legislation. It could be covered without much change in the tax law, provided of course it was interpreted in the proper spirit.

Mr. BOIVIN: This subsection is nothing more than an amplification of subsection 8 of section 3 of the act, which reads as follows:

In computing the amount of the profits or gains to be assessed ,a deduction shall not be allowed in respect of disbursements or expenses not wholly, exclusively and necessarily laid out or expended for the purpose of earning the income.

As to income from the taxpayer's chief occupation, the subsection proposed is to render certain what has been deemed to be the law heretofore, namely, that the profits of a person derived from a trade, business or calling, if invested in unproductive property not required for the carrying on of the business, precludes the carrying charges of that property from being allowed as a deduction from the annual revenue of the particular business or calling. Such expenses are not necessarily laid out or expended for the purpose of earning the income, but rather for the carrying of a capital non-productive asset.

As to income from sources other than the chief trade, business or calling, that has generally been termed a secondary income. It may be said by way of example that taxes and interest in respect of unproductive real estate would not be allowed as against say, income from royalties. However, the interest payable in respect of the money borrowed, of which the unproductive property represents the security, may be set against the interest received on money loaned by the taxpayer but taxes, local improvements, assessments and like carrying charges of unproductive real estate are not proper deductions against income derived from salary or from interest. Such charges naturally should be capitalized; they should be added to the cost of the property in order to determine whether or not a profit is made at the time the property is sold, which profit, of course, is now exempt from taxation. The main point is that the expenditure is not made in the earning of income; it is an expenditure on capital account, and expenditures in connection with capital do not come within the purview of the income tax act. Notwithstanding what may be said to the contrary, the clause in its present form appears to me absolutely fair and logical, because all that a taxpayer is entitled to deduct in computing his income should be expenditures made to earn the income or in the hope of earning it. The carrying charges of unproductive property acquired by a taxpayer, which acquisition he is not prepared to admit would constitute a piece of business, are certainly not business expenses. If they are not business expenses they must be personal expenses, so the taxpayer is no more entitled to deduct the carrying charges of a vacant lot or of unproductive stock than he would be entitled to deduct the taxes paid in respect of his own garden or the property on which he resides.

The income tax act is not and cannot always be in every respect strictly logical; in some cases it may not always be absolutely fair, but so far as this clause is concerned, if fairness and logic are to be appealed to, all I have to say is that it is pretty difficult to find words in which to enact a clause which might be fairer. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) is perfectly right when he says it might create a hardship on the person who has inherited unproductive property, who is obliged to hold that property and who will not be allowed to charge against his revenue from other sources the taxes and insurance which he must pay on the property which he is obliged to carry. In the first place, if the man were a dealer in real estate he would of course have a right to charge the taxes and insurance as a part of his business. If he is not a dealer in real estate, or if he is an investor and has a certain number of tenements or houses which he rents, the carrying charges of all his real estate will certainly be liable as a charge against the revenue derived from part of the real estate. But I do not see how a clause could be worded to get over the difficulty presented by the hon. member for Labelle if at the same time we do not exempt all real estate which is unproductive and which is being held as an investment. After all, no matter what may be the value of a property, it is undoubtedly held in the hope of a future sale and profit. "Hope springs eternal in the human breast." I am willing to admit that in a great many cases the hopes are never realized, and that in a great many cases the property is eventually sold at a loss. But perhaps it would have been better if the property had been sold years previously; perhaps the loss might not have been so great, and the carrying charges would have been saved. There is no doubt that when property is held it is held in the hope of an eventual profit, and that profit must include the taxes paid on the property. The income tax act does not touch that profit; it is left clear in the hands of the man who makes it, and for that reason I think it is fair to say that the carrying charges should be assessed against the property.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend referred to the different kinds of income, primary and secondary. In view of what my hon. friend has said am I right in saying that this inhibition merely applies to the income derived from the chief occupation or business? If that is so I entirely agree with it, but if it is being pressed as against secondary income I think it would be wrong.

Mr. BOIVIN: It will be up to the Commissioner of Taxation, of course, to decide whether or not exemption should be granted for the carrying charges on real estate, for instance, if a man is the owner of a certain quantity of real estate, part of which is rented, but of which a building which should have been rented is left vacant for a year or so owing to the condition of the building or because of the fact that the demand is not equal to the supply in that particular locality, that man is not going to be penalized. He will be allowed, of course, to deduct the carrying charges of that vacant building from the revenue derived from the other buildings on which he derives a profit. I am not prepared to say that all cases of secondary revenue should be grouped together, but I will say that I think in effect and in principle my hon. friend is quite right when he says that the revenue derived from the principal occupation should not be offset by these carrying charges on unproductive property, but that where there is an additional revenue which does not come from the chief occupation it should be considered, and I am sure the commissioner will act accordingly.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is my whole point.

Mr. BOURASSA: Do I understand the minister to say that, if the owner of real estate derives a certain amount of revenue from that property while holding some other real estate with charges upon it, these charges will be deducted from the revenue derived from other real estate?

Mr. BOIVIN: Yes, I think I can make that statement now and I think the commissioner will so interpret the act. Any person holding real estate part of which is rented and part vacant may deduct the carrying charges of one part from the profits on the other providing the property is not held for speculation.

[Mr. Boivin.]

Mr. BOURASSA: That is the way it was done under the old act.

Mr. BOIVIN: It will contiue to be so done.

Mr. HANSON: The minister will agree that on a strict interpretation of this section that would not be the case.

Mr. BOIVIN: The object of the clause, as I think my hon. friend will realize, is to prevent abuse. These abuses have crept in through people who have gone out deliberately and bought property which for the time being is unproductive, but upon which the rate of increase of value is so large that in three or four years the property becomes very productive indeed. They sell it at a large profit within three or four years. They play the game of speculation where property values are going to increase rapidly, and in that way evade the income tax. The purpose of this particular clause is to reach those people and to oblige them at least to pay taxes upon that property without deducting those taxes from the revenue on which they can claim exemption. There is no intention of imposing any hardship.

Mr. HANSON: If that is the purpose of the section, it is all right.

Mr. BOIVIN: That is the purpose.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Rates of tax.

Mr. BOURASSA: With reference to section 4 (1A), I must again appeal to the minister to consider the question of the exemption of children. We have heard on many occasions during the budget debate, and again in this debate, of the interests of corporations and the advantage of inducing people to invest in industrial pursuits; but I repeat now what I stated on a previous occasion, that the great defect of the fiscal legislation of almost all countries is to forget the state of the family, is to forget that the primary advantage of a country is the establishment of a family, and that the duty of the state is to alleviate as much as possible the burdens of fathers and mothers. Why adopt the age of eighteen instead of twenty-one? Twenty-one is the legal age. Until a child has reached the age of twenty-one he is under the legal and social responsibility of his father and mother. Even in the English provinces, and under some legislation of our province which is not in harmony with our church legislation, marriages between two minor children, both of marriageable age, are declared null if not accompanied by the consent of their parents. Therefore, until they have reached the age of twenty-one, boys and girls are not full-fledged citizens and ratepayers; they have not complete liberty of action. Besides, under the previous law, as under this law, there is ample margin for the government to do away with the exemption in case of children earning their own living. The section itself says:

For each child under eighteen years of age who is dependent upon the taxpayer for support.

Why should you tax the parents who have in their charge boys and girls of nineteen, twenty, and twenty-one years of age? That is the very time of life when their maintenance and education is the most expensive to the parents. It seems to me it is precisely at that period of family life that the parents should be helped and considered by the state. Therefore I again appeal to the government —we shall have to do it one day or another, because public opinion will force it upon us—why not be agreeable to it now and raise the margin of exemption from eighteen to twenty-one years of age? If it is said that a large number of children between eighteen and twenty-one years of age are earning their living, then I repeat you have under this clause, as well as under the preceding law, power to prevent parents claiming exemption on account of children who are earning their livelihood. Even at the present time there are children of sixteen and seventeen years of age whose parents cannot claim exemption for them under the present law. Therefore this only applies, I repeat, to those parents who have the will and the courage to impose upon themselves the necessary sacrifices to give further education to their children, who endeavour to make of their children more useful citizens, and try to arm them for the battle of life as well as for the responsibilities of citizenship. I think they should be encouraged. We read much about the advantages of education, but when the father and mother impose upon themselves sacrifices to give a better education to their children, the state steps in and says: You shall pay the penalty of your devotion to your child, to the state, and to society. It is all wrong; it is inspired by a false conception of the duty of the state towards the family. Means could easily be found to recoup the state for the little difference this would mean in the taxation raised.

I think this matter should be considered right now, when we are speaking of reducing the burdens of the people of this country, when we are speaking of inducing people to be more hopeful of the future of this country. If there is a class of people that demand the sympathy of the state and of parliament, it is those men and women who have the courage to establish a family and to impose upon themselves sacrifices in order to make of their children as useful and as cultured citizens as they can possibly become. It seems to me there should be no hesitation, Mr. Chairman, in making the age of exemption coincident with what has been adopted in all our civil laws as the age of full maturity, of full emancipation for the children. Up to the age of twenty-one they are socially, morally and legally a charge upon their parents to a greater or to a lesser degree; the principle is there, and I think the principle should carry here. Until the civil codes of the various provinces are amended so as to say that children are fully emancipated at eighteen years of age, I do not see why you should tax parents for the maintenance and education of their children between the age of eighteen and the full age of civil emancipation, which is twenty-one. If I can find a seconder I would move that the words "twenty-one" be substituted for the word "eighteen."

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I would like to say a few words in support of my hon. friend from Labelle. I quite agree with the argument he has put forward. Everyone in this country believes in giving the children a good education. I have not had the experience myself, but I quite realize how difficult it must be for the father of a large family to see that his children are properly brought up and educated as they should be. It is for the good of the state in every way that that should be done, and if the children are given a proper education, it means that the father has to keep on supporting them until they are twenty-one years of age or thereabouts. As a matter of fact, the burden on the family grows heavier as the years go on. To my mind the suggestion of the hon. member is well worthy of consideration by the minister.

Mr. CAHAN: When this was before the committee before, I supported the suggestion of the hon. member for Labelle, and I went further and suggested that there should be added after the word "child" in paragraph (c) the words "under twenty-one years of age or incapable of self-support on account of mental or physical infirmity."

Mr. POWER: There would be an exemption, under the amendment suggested by my hon. friend in the case of children say of 19 or 20 years of age who were self-supporting.

Mr. CAHAN: Who were self-supporting?

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: My hon. friend is quite right, I am putting the amendment in the wrong place. My suggestion is there should be exemption for every dependent child under 21, and for every other child over 21 who is incapable of self-support on account of mental or physical infirmity.

Mr. POWER: Would it not meet a greater number of cases if you inserted in the interpretation clause the word "child"? That would cover every case in which the child was incapable of supporting himself.

Mr. CAHAN: Perhaps so. We all know that in the province of Quebec, by statutory law, children, even over 21 years of age, who are incapable of self-support on account of mental or physical infirmity must be supported by their parents.

Mr. POWER: That is not very much of an argument, because the parents must be supported by the children too in some cases.

Mr. CAHAN: Yes, in certain cases. We have, in other words under the code in the province of Quebec a system of law which provides for support by the family of those who are otherwise incapable of supporting themselves. But inasmuch as this applies to the whole country, may I point this out? I have a case in mind of a parent having two blind children, who are being educated, and who will at a certain age be quite capable of earning their own living by reason of the education they are receiving at a modern educational institution for the blind. But there are cases of a different character. I remember the case of a young man, under 21 years of age, who was earning his own living by working in a machine shop. A spark from one of the machines destroyed his eyesight, and he is entirely dependent upon his parents until by education he can learn to support himself by some other means, weaving wickerwork and that sort of thing. For every child under 21 years, and for every child over 21 years who is dependent upon his parents for support—in other words, to use the term in the statute who is incapable of self-support on account of mental or physical infirmity—there should be a deduction of $500.

Mr. FORKE: What is meant by the expression, a child under 21 years of age dependent upon its parents? How is that interpreted? I know many instances of young people of 19 and 20 years of age, teaching school and drawing salary, who are dependent on their parents. There is an instance, very close to myself, where a girl of 19 or 20 is teaching school and earning a salary. Would she be regarded as dependent upon her parents for a livelihood?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No.

Mr. FORKE: There is likely to be some injustice unless the interpretation is clear and unmistakable. I should like to have some explanation from the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George in regard to the matter. Does my hon. friend understand what I mean?

Mr. CAHAN: The point to which my hon. friend refers was not the point I was raising.

Mr. FORKE: I quite appreciate the point my hon. friend raised. It had reference to children of any age who by reason of mental or physical disability, were not self-supporting.

Mr. CAHAN: My hon. friend might put his question to the minister who is in charge of the bill.

Mr. FORKE: I thought the hon. gentleman was advocating a change with respect to this particular section of the act.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend be good enough to inform us what the informal friendly conversation he is conducting is about, because we cannot hear it at this end of the chamber.

Mr. FORKE: I am very glad my hon. friend is getting a taste of the experience we at this end of the chamber have had day after day, week after week. I am afraid that if the Minister of Railways had had the same experience he would have lost his temper after a while. Nevertheless that is the experience we are continually encountering here. Its effect is baneful, because if you are not able to hear what is going on you lose interest and begin to talk with your neighbour, which only aggravates the condition. In the last parliament I had a seat in the central part of the chamber and my interest was much keener in everything that went on. This session I do not feel the same interest simply because I am not able to hear what is said.

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. member is more happily situated this session, because he knows beforehand what is going to take place.

Mr. FORKE: I am very glad to confess that sitting so close to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, as I do, I am able to hear no inconsiderable part of what is said in this chamber.

The CHAIRMAN: It has been moved by Mr. Bourassa, seconded by Mr. Woodsworth, to amend paragraph (c), subsection 1A of section 4 by striking out the word "eighteen" and replacing it by the word "twenty-one."

Mr. BOIVIN: Before the amendment is voted upon I have only one word to say. I do not intend to disagree at all with the hon. member for Labelle. We have discussed this matter together at least on one occasion, and we are in hearty accord with the idea that the parent who has a child under twenty-one years of age in a college or convent, and who is endeavouring to give to that child all possible education and fit it for the struggles of life, should receive an exemption of income tax, at least upon the amount expended for that education. I think we are agreed on that. But there is this to be remembered: The government is handing out exemptions this year in every direction under the Income Tax Act. It must be remembered that previous to the present year the only exemption the father of a child got was an exemption from the normal tax. In other words it was an exemption of 4 per cent of $500 if he was a poor man; if he was a rich man it was 8 per cent of $500. That is all. But under the act as it now stands the father is getting a straight exemption of $500 no matter what rate of income tax he pays. In other words, if a father has a net income of $25,000, he is getting an exemption of 25 per cent on $500. We are practically multiplying by three the exemption given to fathers and mothers under the old act, and we are making progress in another direction. We have given an exemption this year of $1,000 more to the parents themselves. Last year the exemption to married persons was $2,000; this year it is $3,000.

Mr. CAHAN: But the minister increased it in other cases.

Mr. BOIVIN: We are increasing the exemption.

Mr. CAHAN: No, decreasing it.

Mr. BOIVIN: Well, we are in certain cases.

Mr. CAHAN: You increase the exemption by $1,000 in some cases.

Mr. BOIVIN: I shall be glad to discuss that with my hon. friend when we reach that clause. The fact is that under the old act married persons got $2,000 exemption.

Mr. CAHAN: Each.

Mr. BOIVIN: Yes, when they were not married in community of property; when they were wealthy enough to have separate incomes.

Mr. CAHAN: When they did have separate incomes.

Mr. BOIVIN: Yes, but if they happened to be in the moderate class or in the poor class, which class my hon. friend has been defending, under certain circumstances they had no double exemption, because they had no double income.

Mr. CAHAN: Does the minister mean that when they have $3,000 exemption they are in the poor class, and that when they have $4,000 income and are subject to $4,000 exemption they are in the rich class?

Mr. BOIVIN: No, that is not what his hon. friend has said. If that point is to be discussed now, let us discuss it. In the case of a man and wife living in a certain village, there is no reason why the man, simply because he happens to hold real estate and property, should be obliged to pay taxation to the government on a revenue of $4,000, while the man and woman living on the other side of the street, receiving the same income, should be exempt because they happen to have made a marriage contract. That was unfair and unjust, and we have endeavoured as far as we can—we cannot do it perfectly—to adjust that inequality by making the exemption the same for all married couples. But let me answer my hon. friend from Labelle. In the year 1918, when the first amendments were made to the Income War Tax Act, the exemption for a child in the case of the normal tax was only $200, and the age limit was 16 years. In 1919 the age limit was raised to 18. In 1922 the exemption of the normal tax was increased to $300 and the age limit was 18 years. In 1924—and this was due largely to public opinion created by the paper published by my hon. friend from Labelle—the exemption was raised to $500 for all children under 18 years. This year we have increased the exemption to married people, the fathers and mothers of these children. I would request my hon. friend from Labelle, in view of the fact that we have been following him along the way—perhaps from afar, but following him as well as we could—to consider withdrawing his amendment for the present session, with the assurance that when we see what revenue is derived from the tax as it will be when these proposals are adopted, if it is at all possible to do so the exemption will be proposed by the government. It would be impossible to do it now in the case of all children. It would be very difficult for the commissioner to deal with cases of students in the universities who are earning money to pay part of their way. It would be very difficult, in the case of children who are not in school, to determine whether or not they are entirely dependent on their parents. In the case of a widow who has children going through college, and in the case of the widower who ceased to be a married person and who has children going through college, provision is made that where either is the parent or a child under 21 years of age the same exemption is allowed as is given to a married person, namely, $3,000. The law has been further amended by giving to all householders that same exemption of $3,000. I think my hon. friend from Labelle is convinced that we are moving in the right direction. We may not be moving quite so rapidly as he would desire, but I assure him that his request will receive very serious consideration, and I hope that next year the condition of the country will be such that it will be possible to make a further increase in the exemption.

Mr. BAKER: In reference to the exemption on account of children, in the case of the son of a well-to-do family, who is not going to college, who is quite able to work but will not work, and who gives his life to sport, where does he stand?

Mr. BOIVIN: One of the reasons why we have endeavoured to keep the age of children in respect of whom exemption is granted at eighteen years is to prevent children who are not going to school and who refuse to work from getting the benefit of the exemption.

Mr. BOURASSA: There are very few children who are what are called "sports" and who do nothing except enjoy life. I do not know whether there are in Ontario or not. Perhaps the hon. member is referring to the class of family, which is rapidly growing—described as the new American family—which consists of a man, a woman and a pet dog. But I am not referring to them at all. I am referring to the families with a large number of children. There are some in all provinces.

I would not have any objection to withdrawing the motion in view of the opinion the minister has expressed, but what I am afraid of is the spirit of his department. The department is imbued with the idea of getting money, which is quite proper; but very often when officials of the department become imbued with that idea they lose sight of other aspects, the human aspect and the social aspect. They become so imbued with the idea of getting dollars and cents that they have a dollar mark imprinted on their brain, and they have a fifty cent piece in place of a heart. The minister says that to increase the margin will enhance the difficulty of finding out what children are actually dependent upon their parents. There are difficulties in finding out what moneys are to be paid by any taxpayer. The minister is finding out that there is some difficulty in ascertaining what amount of duty should be paid at the boundary for customs duties. All ministers of Finance, Customs, and the old Department of Inland Revenue knew of the difficulty of collecting taxes. There are always people trying to deprive the state of its due. There are plenty of capitalists who have made false returns of income tax to this government. There are plenty of debenture holders who collect their coupons through banks without paying tax upon them because they do not declare them. I would suggest that the government impose a stamp tax upon those coupons as a safe means of taxing them. The answer is: Oh, no, we do not want a stamp tax; the business community does not want to be disturbed. But the poor individual who has eight or ten children to raise, who is not allowed the amount of rental he pays on his house if he owns none, who is not allowed the taxes he may pay on a small piece of property he is keeping as a legacy for some of his children, is looked after very carefully and keenly by the officials of the department. He is easily reached, first, because he is honest and, second, because the value of his property and goods is readily determined by the taxing bodies of the government, whereas the large capitalist or investor, about whom so many hon. gentlemen have spoken with such tenderness, is the one who finds the greatest ease in evading taxation.

The minister cannot devise any form of taxation to cover all forms of fraud perpetrated on the treasury. No minister, no department, will ever be able to do that, but that should not distract us from the social aspect of a fiscal system, of taxation and of government. I repeat, in a country like ours where we are crying out for population, where we are spending millions to attract foreigners to build up Canada, can we not make a little sacrifice to help the people born and brought up in this country who are trying to increase our population by the most natural law, by the law that has been made and blessed by God, but which unfortunately is being evaded by an increasing number of taxpayers?

I will not withdraw this amendment unless I have a declaration that no other change will be made to the income tax and no reduction granted to any other class of ratepayer until the case of the father of a family has first been considered.

With regard to dependents it is said that it will be a difficult thing for the officials to find out what children are at school, what children are helping their parents or not. Undoubtedly a few cases of that nature will escape just as other cases of fraud or injustice occur under other articles of the law. The minister has admitted very candidly that he cannot frame a law that will apply in all cases and prevent all fraud. I repeat, just because a few parents might claim undue exemption for children who are not a charge upon them, are we not first and above all to consider the case of numerous fathers of families who have dependent upon them as a family charge children between eighteen and twenty-one and who are certainly much more interesting than any other class of ratepayers we have considered? If the minister is prepared to make the declaration that the first reduction in income tax will be along that line and that the officials will not prevail over him to the contrary, I am prepared to withdraw my amendment now; otherwise I will maintain it.

Mr. ROBB: I am very much in sympathy with the views advocated by my hon. friend, but I think I can give him some additional reasons why he should not press his amendment at this time. We have had presented to us from many sources applications for exemptions, and as my hon. friend knows we have conceded some of them. There is the case of dependent children who are invalids, unable to earn. They may be thirty, forty or fifty years of age.

Mr. BOURASSA: But only upon brothers and sisters, not upon parents.

Mr. ROBB: They may be. They are dependents. Then there is the case of hospitals, which has been very strongly brought to our attention. I think my hon. friend, in view of our record of the past few years, might very well trust us as to what we shall do in another year.

Mr. BOURASSA: I want something clearer than that.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at six o'clock we were considering subsection (1A) of section 4 of Bill No. 116.

Mr. BOIVIN: An amendment, Mr. Chairman, had been proposed by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). If I understood him correctly, just before adjournment he said he would withdraw his amendment upon condition that the government would give him an assurance that this amendment would be first considered before any further amendments were made to the Income Tax Act. While we have not had a meeting of the cabinet, and therefore I am not in a position to speak for the entire government, I give my hon. friend my assurance that before any other amendment is made to the Income Tax Act at a future session; if I am still a member of the government, the amendment proposed by him this afternoon will receive first consideration.

Mr. BOURASSA: This is a rather guarded statement, Mr. Chairman, but I suppose the hon. minister can hardly express it any other way. Anyhow, while I remain a member of this chamber, or even out of it, I shall have some means of reminding the government next session, even if the hon. minister should not then be one of its members, of the promise now given by him. Consequently in view of the late stage of the session and of what the government has already done to come nearer to what I consider a better spirit in the Income Tax Act, I consent, upon the promise, to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment withdrawn.

Subsection (1A) agreed to.

Subsection (1B) agreed to.

On subsection 2.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is that section?

Mr. BOIVIN: In the old act there was a definition of the term, "dependent child", which is replaced by the new subsection (1A).

Subsection 2 agreed to.

Sections 4, 5 and 6 agreed to.

On section 7—Transfer of property.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the real change there? I thought that was the law.

Mr. BOIVIN: This takes the place of the provision which is now in the act, and which is expressed in such a manner as to permit the minister to ratify a transfer to a wife or child.

if he is satisfied that such transfer is not made for the purpose of evading the income tax. In practice, the minister has consistently refused to ratify any transfer to a wife, but has ratified transfers to children where the same have been reasonable, irrevocable and made in good faith. The amendment distinguishes between a transfer to a wife and a transfer to a child. As to the latter, the law remains the same; as to the former, the minister is relieved of all responsibility. It will be noted that there is nothing to prevent the transfer of property by a husband to a wife, but when it is for the purpose of evading income tax it will be ignored. That is to prevent the evasion of the law which very often takes place when the husband has a very large and his wife a small income, or vice versa; in order to evade payment of income tax they even up their respective incomes by means of a transfer. We do not attempt to prevent this; we merely say that the income tax will be the same as if the transfer had not been made.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: But was not that properly looked after before? It could not be done without the minister's consent. But suppose now you have a husband and wife separating, are you going to drive them to divorce before any proper rearrangement of their property can be effected?

Mr. BOIVIN: No. Under the old act the minister was never called upon to give consent, but had he been so requested he could have consented I think under such a provision as we are now incorporating. If a married couple separate, and the husband desires to transfer to his wife a certain amount of property, there is nothing in the act to prevent it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, he must pay income tax on property he no longer owns.

Mr. BOIVIN: He must pay the same income tax as if he had retained the property.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is what I say; in order to get rid of taxation on property you have not got, you must get a divorce. I think my hon. friend should let the old section stand.

Mr. BOIVIN: I am willing to admit in connection with this law that my friend is right part of the time, but I hope he will not even insinuate that I have framed this clause to encourage divorce.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is where we are getting to, though.

[Mr. Boivin.]

On section 8—Family corporations.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the provision that 75 per cent of the stock must be owned by the members of one family is quite comprehensive enough to cover the conditions which I pointed out when the original resolutions were under discussion. The other alternative is 80 per cent of the stock—> which is owned by persons actively employed in the business of the corporation or by such persons—

That is, those actively employed in the business of the corporation.

> —and their families.

We have in the various provinces, particularly in Quebec, a number of corporations which are private companies within the meaning of the Companies Act. The definition of "private company" under that act is:

> A company which by its letters patent or supplementary letters patent,—
> (a) restricts the right to transfer its shares; and,
> (b) limits the number of its members (exclusive of persons who are in the employment of the company and of persons who having been formerly in the employment of the company were, while in such employment, and have continued after the termination of such employment, to be members of the company), to fifty; and,
> (c) prohibits any invitation to the public to subscribe for any shares or debentures of the company.

A very considerable number of partnerships have been organized as private companies under that act. They do not consist of companies of which 75 per cent of the stock is held by the members of one family; you would hardly find one private company of that kind, and on the other hand 80 per cent of the stock may not be held by persons actively employed in the business of the corporation, or by such persons and their families. I could tell the committee of a very considerable number of companies in which the partners, attaining age and wishing to be relieved of active participation, have formed their employees together with themselves into what is known as a private company. A few of the neighbours in the little country town are brought in and they really operate as a partnership although incorporated as a private company. The transfer of their shares is restricted; they cannot go out and appeal to the public to subscribe for new shares; they cannot sell their bonds and debentures to the public. I think if we are to maintain our small local industries in the towns and villages of those provinces which I know, east of the Ottawa river, the restrictions of this definition will not enable us to do so; the profitable operation of these companies will be impossible. They are operating on a small margin, they give industrial life to our towns and villages and should be encouraged in every possible way. One encouragement I should like them to have is relief from the double taxation involved in this act, by allowing the shareholders of such companies, as are defined to be private companies under the Companies Act, to be treated as partners in respect of the income tax which would otherwise be levied upon the company.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In support of what my hon. friend has said I would point out that in Ontario I know of trading concerns which, for the purpose of ease in carrying on business, have been incorporated. The members of the firm are not always members of the same family, and sometimes where there were three or four or five members actively engaged in the business, two or three have died and the business is carried on by those remaining, who certainly could not hold 80 per cent of the stock. Yet at the same time this would be an essentially private corporation. I have in mind an insurance corporation which I think is incorporated for half a million dollars. They are agents, carrying on the underwriting business; they are not an insurance company themselves. Although the stock is distributed the payments out of profits are not distributed on a stock basis. They meet together and apportion the profits in accordance with the activities of the different members during the year; sometimes one will get more and sometimes the other, although the holdings are exactly the same. We have a number of companies of that kind, and I really think they should have this option, if the minister can see his way clear to adopt it.

Mr. BOIVIN: I agree with what has been said by both hon. gentlemen; I think these companies should not be treated as a corporation if they desire to be considered a partnership. It was our idea that we had pretty well covered every possible case. I may be wrong, but I think the case mentioned by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George would come under the second part of the definition, which says:

> —a corporation. . . . eighty per centum of the stock of which is owned by persons actively employed in the business of the corporation or by such persons and their families.

Take a case where the owner of a store or any trading corporation, desiring to interest his employees in the business, gives them a certain number of shares which are not transferable and which cannot be sold to the public on the stock market. He brings these people into the business; he wants their continued interest, support and assistance. It is not necessary that they should be relatives, nor is it necessary that they should be members of the same family so long as they have an interest and are actively engaged in the business. That company would come under the terms of this act as a family corporation.

Mr. CAHAN: Would the minister allow me an interjection? I am dealing now with the class where 80 per cent of the stock must be held by persons actively employed in the business or by such persons and their families. If I were in my own office I could give a list of at least a dozen companies each carrying on a small manufacturing business in a country town. There will be two or three employees who have been the clerks and officers employed in that business, and the real owner of the business may have made provision in his will giving 20 per cent or even 25 per cent of the stock to his employees by way of remembrance and providing that the employees, while they remain in the business, shall have the option of buying the remaining shares at a certain rate from the estate. Many companies of that kind have been formed during the last few years, and if the second part of this clause were made to read 50 per cent it would cover quite a number of the cases I have in mind, but 80 per cent is a very large proportion. I know of some companies doing business in small towns in Quebec where the owner of the business has died and the employees have gone to one or two local people of importance and secured from them the financial assistance necessary to buy out the concern. Some change such as I suggest would assist very much in promoting the small industrial undertakings of our smaller towns and villages.

Mr. BOIVIN: I can assure my hon. friend that I see the force of his argument. I think most cases where the original owner of the company had died and his business was transferred, as I think my hon. friend suggested, in a major portion to his heirs, but in a certain portion to his employees, who might not have sixty per cent of the stock, would be covered by the proviso that 75 per cent of the stock would be held by members of one family.

Mr. CAHAN: It is usually put in trust.

Mr. BOIVIN: I understand that. What I am prepared to say to my hon. friend is this: We do not want to create any hardship. We do not want any concern which in reality is a partnership, which has been formed into a corporation for legitimate reasons, to suffer under the terms of this act and if any such case as that suggested at this moment as an example by my hon. friend, is brought to our attention during the course of the present fiscal year, instructions will be given to the Commissioner of Taxation to withhold the levy, and at the next session of parliament this clause will be amended in a way which will meet that particular case. But you must give us a chance to gain some experience in the nature of the cases that will be presented to us. Also you must not get away from the idea that in all joint stock companies where the stock is not all held by the members of one family, or by former partners in the partnerships, then there enters into the administration of the company at least a different mode of accounting. Then salaries are paid to the directors of the company. Then the manager of the company is operating and administering property which belongs to somebody else. The directors are working both in their own interest as shareholders, and also to earn their salaries as directors of the company.

Mr. CAHAN: Why not make it 60 per cent, instead of 80 per cent? That would make it perfectly clear that those who are actively employed in the business of the company own a clear voting majority of the stock. That would overcome that objection. If you make it 60 per cent for the present year, at the end of this year the Commissioner of Taxation will have before him a complete list of all such companies, and will be able to suggest such amendments as would deal fairly with them so as to prevent any imposition by persons who were not in good faith carrying out the provisions of the act.

Mr. BOIVIN: I would be disposed to accept the suggestion made by my hon. friend were it not for the fact that this afternoon he protested very strongly against retroactive legislation which would make the tax more instead of less. I would prefer to have our retroactive legislation next year reduce the tax instead of increase it.

Mr. CAHAN: It would only increase it for the future.

Mr. BOIVIN: But for the present year it would increase it. What I want to say to my hon. friend is this, and the only objection there is to accepting his suggestion at once is that if you make it 60 per cent, you would place two or three employees in the position of forming a partnership and then going to the general public and selling 40 per cent of their stock. When that 40 per cent of the stock was sold to the general public, they would still be, in so far as the Income Tax Act is concerned, in a position where they could optate to have their profits taxed as a partnership, and I am sure my hon. friend does not want that to happen. He does not contend that the men who go to the public and sell 40 per cent of their stock should be placed in a different position from any other industrial corporation.

Mr. CAHAN: I would obviate that by taking the definition of private company, which prevents the sale of the stock except under very grave restrictions. I do not think that allowing three or four old employees to go to their neighbours and secure assistance from them, they purchasing a minority share of the stock, would create any difficulty which could not be overcome very readily. If you wish to limit it, limit it as to the amount of capital. But as to these smaller companies, where you have men who are really in a partnership and some other person coming in with a limited partnership, it would apply in exactly the same way. They come in for the purpose of assisting local industry, and for the purpose of assisting temporarily those who are actively engaged in the business locally. I am sure if that were reduced, even if you reduce it to 60 per cent, it would give relief to such cases as I have in view because in all these cases the employees would own at least 60 per cent of the stock within a year or two.

Mr. BOIVIN: I do not think there would be very much hardship, because I am sure my hon. friend will admit that in every case where the profits of that company are more than $12,000 there will be no incentive and no reason for these people not to pay as partnerships, because they will be saving money by doing so. If the company decides to pay the company tax, which is 9 per cent, it will be paying a greater tax only in the case of incomes under $10,000. If the income of the company is more than $10,000, it will suit them better to pay the 9 per cent than it would to decide to pay as a partnership.

Mr. CAHAN: I cannot follow that quite.

Mr. BOIVIN: I think my hon. friend will admit that the company tax is 9 per cent, no matter what the profits may be.

Mr. CAHAN: Yes.

Mr. BOIVIN: Next there is a $2,000 exemption for companies, and the tax is payable on all profits over $2,000, so that the profit must be $12,000. The profit is $10,000 plus $2,000 before the company tax becomes less than the normal tax. For the smaller companies, the company tax is a hardship, and they would be better off if they paid the ordinary individual tax. For large companies the company tax is a benefit. I think my hon. friend will find that all these companies to which he refers, where they are making more than $12,000 a year, would be very pleased to keep on paying the company tax of 9 per cent. They will place their surplus aside and pay no tax whatever on it; they are not obliged to pay one cent on their dividends until they are distributed. If there is that intimate personal interest in the company that my hon. friend referred to a moment ago, if these are partnerships where the partners are striving to get the shares of the deceased owner, I think they are really family corporations in the real sense of the word.

Mr. CAHAN: No—

Mr. BOIVIN: "Family corporations" as defined under the act. Perhaps we might have found a better term. But I think my hon. friend will admit that there are very few of these corporations that are going to optate to pay as partnerships. Most of them are going to pay as corporations. I repeat to my hon. friend again, if there are any corporations which are in reality family corporations who come to the Commissioner of Taxation, and who make the option of paying as partnerships and who cannot be allowed so to pay under the act, their case will be held in abeyance. It will not be decided by the minister, but will be held in abeyance and brought to parliament next year, and an amendment will be made which will cover every individual case which has merit. I hesitate to accept the amendment of my hon. friend making it 60 per cent for the reason I gave a moment ago. It will enable people to go out and sell 40 per cent to the public if you limit them to the definition in the Companies Act that my hon. friend read. There will also be additional hardship in administration because companies which are not family corporations at all, and companies which are not composed of individuals who were formerly partners could come in and take advantage of the act. We do not want them to do that.

Mr. CAHAN: Would the minister make it 75 per cent in both cases?

Mr. BOIVIN: I am informed by the officers of the department who have reviewed all the income tax returns for the past few years, that all cases are covered by the 80 per cent, and that it is a fair proportion. However, as I promised my hon. friend, if it is found that there is unfairness in the clause as it stands, it will be corrected next year even before the tax is paid.

Mr. EULER: Will there be any discrimination, for example, in the case of shareholders of companies affected who are not all resident in Canada?

Mr. BOIVIN: No, there is nothing in the bill which says that shareholders of a company must be all resident in Canada. They must be all members of one family or persons actively employed in the business, one or the other.

Mr. EULER: Is there a definition of what constitutes the members of a family?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I take it the wording in the bill really means they must be relative?

Mr. BOIVIN: Yes, I would say relatives. Subsection 7 of section 8 of the act provides that the decision of the minister upon any question arising under the subsection, including any question as to the application of the term "family corporation", shall be final and conclusive. I can assure my hon. friend that the clause will be very liberally interpreted so far as relatives are concerned.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT, 1915

The House resumed from June 7, consideration in committee of Bill No. 115, to amend the Special War Revenue Act, 1915.—Hon. Mr. Robb—Mr. Duff in the chair.

Mr. CAHAN: Before proceeding may I ask, just for information, whether Bill No. 147, to amend the Income War Tax Act, 1917, has passed the committee?

Mr. BOIVIN: That is a private member's bill, which appears on the order paper as a public bill. It was introduced by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) and stands for second reading.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is not likely to be reached this session.

The CHAIRMAN: When Bill No. 115 was last before the committee we were considering an amendment moved by Mr. Robb to section 9.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, if you would announce to the committee that the amendment you are reading is not in the printed bill we shall have a better understanding of what we are doing.

The CHAIRMAN: I may say that all the clauses in Bill 115 were passed either at the last sitting of the committee or at a previous sitting. The Minister of Finance at the sitting of June 7 proposed an amendment to section 9, and that is what we are now considering.

Mr. POWER: Is it the same amendment that was proposed two or three days ago?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes. It is in Hansard of June 7.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The time seems to be opportune to ask the government again what further amendments they propose to the budget of the year, and when they will be announced?

Mr. ROBB: I have no others in contemplation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I need only add that the answer of the government to any queries of this sort is useful only as indicating that the opposite to what the government informs the House is likely to take place. I cannot say I am surprised at what the government has done in proposing this amendment, nor is my state of mind affected one way or the other by the several assurances which came from various members of the government many times: first that amendments were not contemplated at all or intended, next that there would be none, and lastly, and in the most solemn possible form from the Minister of Finance, that there would be none that would be substantial, and that if there were any they would just be a change in wording so as to make clear something about parts. All these assurances have gone the way of all assurances this government ever gave. They have proven to be wholly without any purpose, at least without any effect save to mislead the House, and to be wholly falsified by events. In a word they have been in every way worthy of the administration. Nor am I surprised at the character of the amendment itself. It is just about the kind that of retreat which one would expect this government to choose. One would never expect it to come out of the front door and admit it is wrong, but if there is any chance of escape out of the back door, under cover of an umbrella, that is the course the government will always pursue.

I am not at all out of sympathy with the object of the amendment; in fact its object is in line wholly with the central policy of the Conservative party, its historic policy. The government's course is merely a camouflage surrender to the principles which they have for many years denounced and to the men whom politically they have for many years derided. The way this should be done, as everybody knows, would be to restore the duty, pending investigation, to where it is placed by this amendment, at 26 per cent or slightly over, on lower priced automobiles, and then remove the excise tax. Then, if anything be needed to further ensure a larger proportion of manufacture in Canada, it should be done in a straightforward way by the duties being further adjusted against importation of parts. This would be the frank and correct way, and the people would understand it, but it is just because the people would understand it that the government does not choose such a course—no other reason in the world. The excise tax is to be removed. All right, remove it in a straightforward way, and make what is left the duty. When you remove the excise tax on goods made in Canada and leave it on goods imported from the United States, then it is an excise no more; it is a duty. But the government want it called an excise in order that under such miserable camouflage they can can escape. That is the whole idea of this amendment. I would be delighted to support it if the government would reach the object in a frank, open way: put the duty at 26 per cent and remove the excise tax on automobiles under $1,200. Why is it not so done? Does any hon. gentleman suggest any other reason, save that they want to confuse the people of Canada? They want to secure by subterfuge and indirection what they have not the courage to secure by the open straight-forward way. What is to be thought of an administration which boasts of its hostility to protection—that is, boasts of it where they feel the cause is not strong and not popular, but is ready to secure all the protection possible as long as it is called "safeguarding;" an administration which is opposed to duties as such, but is ready to get duties as long as you call them "excise"? Such is the position of this government. And when they bring the amendment in they stand up and say: "Now we are ready to put this through, but if by any chance our precious political lives are imperilled we are ready to repeal or to withdraw it." If the supine and spineless could go further than that, I have never witnessed it in my life. Is there anything but the jelly-fish in the whole conduct of the administration on tariff matters? If this is essential, if this be the true mind of the government, why do they not come forward and declare it to be government policy and stand or fall by it, instead of holding it as a sword over the committee, saying, "If anybody opposes it we will drop it. It is right; we ought to do it, but it is not half as right as that we should be in power. It is valuable, but not half as valuable as our precious political lives." This is the attitude of the administration, and hon. members will not be deceived, and I hope the country will not be deceived, although certainly the government will endeavour to deceive it. This is merely the restoration of the duty to 26 per cent and the removal of the excise tax. That is all. The excise tax was not there for the purpose of raising the duty on automobiles. It was there to get revenue for Canada out of automobiles instead of having to get it out of what were considered more acute necessaries of life. If the government feel they can do without the revenue, well and good; let them do without the revenue; let them remove the excise. If they feel that the duty has to be reimposed in order to retain the industry in this Dominion, they will be supported by every member on this side of the House. They tell us that this is going to secure the manufacture of these goods in Canada. It is the duty that secures the manufacture in Canada. If the manufacture consists more than it should of importation and assembly, then the frank, open way to remedy that situation is by a duty on the parts, thereby providing for manufacture of the parts in Canada.

The hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler), who is following me closely, knows this just as well as I; he knows that this is a camouflage; that it is intended to mislead and confuse the people of this country; that it is put in this form in order that ministers of the crown may go out and say: We reduced the tariff on automobiles to 20 per cent, when they did not do so. It is done in order that they may go out and say: We have cheapened them, and in order that they may pretend that they have cheapened them at the expense of the manufacturers when really they have cheapened them at the expense of the treasury of Canada, or in other words at the expense of the taxpayers of this Dominion.

All I rose to say was this: When we have a government taking a course and asking the House to follow it, let that course be taken in the straightforward way, in the way the people will understand. Do not let it be taken in a circuitous way, by the subterfuge such as this, which leaves the law in such shape that we have a duty of 26 per cent, 6 per cent of it being called an excise tax when it is not an excise tax at all. In a word the government is calling a duty "excise" in order that the people may not understand what is being done, the government thereby being relieved, so they hope, of the ignominy into which they have brought themselves.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I take direct exception to my right hon. friend when he says that the government in this measure is proceeding in any indirect or circuitous way to attain an object which it has had in view with respect to all tariff changes which have been made during this sesion. The one object underlying the changes in the tariff this session has been to make commodities cheaper to the consumers of this country. The automobile is a necessity to practically all branches of industry and trade and to consumers in a large way; we have been endeavouring to make that particular commodity available at a lower rate to the consumer. We have sought to do that first of all by a reduction in duty. We are seeking to take a step further in the same direction by the removal of a war tax hitherto imposed upon automobiles of $1,200 and under when manufactured in Canada. My hon. friend admits that that will be the effect of removing the excise at the present time. If that is the effect it is attaining the object this government has had in view in the tariff changes which have been introduced.

The customs duty on automobiles of $1,200 and under has been cut 15 per cent. That cut remains 15 per cent and my right hon. friend by no argument of any kind can refute that statement. The tariff is there; it is printed so that everyone can read and make comparisons for himself, and the fiscal statement as it will appear after this budget has been adopted will disclose two facts, first, that the tariff on automobiles of $1,200 and under has been reduced 15 per cent, and that in addition on cars manufactured in Canada a 5 per cent war tax has been removed, which benefit the manufacturers of automobiles have undertaken to see is passed on to the consumers by way of an equivalent reduction in the price.

It has been stated that possibly the manufacturers will not keep their word in that particular. I for one am prepared to accept their word at the present time. But if it is found that they do not keep their word in that particular, the government has at hand a remedy that can compel them to keep their word in a manner that will still further help the consumers of this country, and that is by removing the war tax on all cars of $1,200 and under, wherever manufactured. The government has power to do that by order in council without legislation because in this particular we can lower although we cannot raise taxation by order in council. If automobile manufacturers do not give to the consumers of this country the full benefit of the reduction in excise which we are making at the present time, this government by order in council will remove the 5 per cent excise on all cars of $1,200 and under. Having said that much, may I add this? My right hon. friend, I believe, desires to help the manufacturers of this country, but we on this side of the House are just as anxious as my hon. friend to help the manufacturers of this country. Hon. gentlemen opposite think the only way in which to help the manufacturing industry is by increasing tariffs, putting on more protection.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is what this is doing.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: To-night we are showing by this method that we can help the manufacturers by taking off taxation. There is a great difference between imposing a tax to protect an industry and removing a tax in order by so doing to help consumers and incidentally to help manufacturers as well, as I believe and hope this will do in the case of the manufacturers of automobiles in Canada. If the removal of this excise tax tends to create a large demand for automobiles because of their selling at a lower rate it will certainly help that industry and ought to be beneficial to the automobile manufacturers. We believe it will have that effect. Just as we discovered that owing to the lower cost of agricultural implements the demand increased, so we believe with a lower cost of cars, the demand will increase.

My right hon. friend says a great deal at different times about manufacturing in Canada, about encouraging manufacture in this country. This is the removal of a tax affecting the product of Canadian industry. We are allowing the tax to remain on the product of United States industry; we are helping our own industry in this Dominion in a way which assists the consumer and the manufacturer at the same time. If an object of that kind is not laudable and worthy, I should like to know what object could be laudable and worthy. Again I repeat that the change which the government is making at the present time is in the direction of the budget as introduced which aimed at removing taxation. The tariff has been reduced 15 per cent on automobiles of $1,200 and under. That reduction remains as it is, and now we are proposing this further removal on cars manufactured in Canada, of a 5 per cent tax which was imposed in time of war. May I add that to enjoy this immunity from taxation the cars manufactured must represent manufacture to the extent of at least 40 per cent for a year and 50 per cent thereafter in Canada, which means additional employment to and of labour in this country. That is another very important item. These are the objects which the government has had in view, and they are objects which should commend themselves to this House irrespective of party.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If anything was necessary to improve on the presentation which I made of the actual effect of what has been done and also its character, if anything was necessary to supplement what I said, the Prime Minister has supplied it. I stated that this was being done in this form with the effect of leaving a duty of 26 per cent on automobiles of $1,200 and under and at the same time enabling members of the government who do not want the people to understand that effect to say that those same automobiles had a duty of only 20 per cent. That is exactly what the Prime Minister has said to-day. On an automobile under $1,200 coming into Canada a duty of 20 per cent has to be paid and as well—

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes; wait for the next "hear, hear." In addition 5 per cent has to be paid on the imported value for customs purposes plus the duty. This means 6 per cent more on the imported value for customs purposes. This 6 per cent is called an excise tax although it is not because it is not levied on the home-made article and it cannot be called an excise tax unless it is levied on the home-made article. Because it is called an excise tax when it is not, the Prime Minister stands in his place and says, "Only 20 per cent has to be paid." I ask hon. members opposite of open mind, could anything be a more miserable subterfuge than that? Exactly the same dollars and the same cents are paid on every imported automobile under $1,200—exactly the same as if the duty was 26 per cent.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Certainly, on every imported automobile; but we are speaking of the cars manufactured in Canada.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What can the duty be on except on the imported automobile? Every imported automobile pays a duty of 26 per cent, and the Prime Minister now says, "Certainly." Never let him say anything else. That is precisely what has to be paid. Therefore there is protection of 26 per cent, and the government has retreated to that extent. But what I am objecting to is not its retreat, I am objecting to the covering of that retreat, to the deception of the Canadian people.

"Now," says the Prime Minister, "this excise is going to be reflected in the lower price;" and he adds that I admit the fact. Certainly I admit it. I have not the least doubt the manufacturers will carry out their undertaking. But I suggest to the government: if it put the duty to 40 per cent, the manufacturers will give the same undertaking exactly that the taking off of the excise will be reflected in lower price. Then we would have far more automobiles made in this country, almost half as many again, and we will have a still lower price.

Now I ask the government, as it is ready to take the word of the manufacturers that they will reduce the price by the excise in the present case, why will it not take their word in the other, and so secure the making of all the goods in this country? This though is another phase of the discussion which, while it is valuable to enter upon, takes the attention of hon. members from the character of this amendment, from the cover under which the government seeks to beat this retreat in order that the people of Canada will not observe the shame into which it has brought itself. Let me repeat, what should have been done and what would reach precisely the same end would be frankly to say: We have a duty now of 26 per cent on imported automobiles; that is quite right and proper. We have no more excise tax on any automobiles. Very good, if you want that we have no objection. It reaches precisely the same end, and that is the way the government should word its amendment. And wording its amendment in that form, I believe it would secure the overwhelming support of this House. The only reason the government does not do it is in order that unscrupulous speakers on the other side may stand before the electors of this Dominion and boast falsely that this government has reduced the tariff on automobiles to 20 per cent when it has done nothing of the sort.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is just one circumstance of my right hon. friend's reasoning that I should like to draw to his attention and to the attention of the House. If it be correct to say that by taking off this tax of 5 per cent we are increasing protection to that extent, by the same process of reasoning my right hon. friend should have spoken of the previous tariff rate not as 35 per cent but as really 40 or 41 per cent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Exactly. According to my right hon. friend's reasoning we have been paying all along 41 per cent; we are now reducing it to 26 per cent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am almost ashamed to rise to answer a contention of that sort.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No wonder.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Protection is a charge against the imported article which is not charged against the home article. The charge now against imported automobiles is 26 per cent, which is not against the home article at all; so the duty is 26 per cent. Before the charge against imported automibiles was 35 per cent, which was not against the home article; so the duty was 35 per cent.

An hon. MEMBER: Plus.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Plus nothing. Again I apologize to the committee for explaining that two and three are five.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the government upon its adoption of the protective policy. I would suggest that they can place the industries of this country in a strong and stable position if they will proceed further with their present policy and remove the excise tax from all products of Canadian industry, retaining the tax on importations of similar products.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will my hon. friend agree that the government is adopting a protective policy if it now proceeds to remove from American cars the tax that we have just removed from those of Canadian manufacture?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is what we are doing.

The CHAIRMAN: Carried.

Mr. CHURCH: Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. CHURCH: I think I am in order, Mr. Chairman. At the present time the automobile industry of Canada simply consists of assembling plants, the various component parts being brought in from the United States. It is no use for the Prime Minister to blow hot and cold on this question. There is such a thing as protection not only for automobile parts, but for the whole car. I contend that what we need to make this a key industry is the imposition of such tariff protection as will result in the manufacture of every part of the automobile in this country. I contend that this is practically a second budget and the government has not played fair with the automobile industry. By their unstable tariff policy they are driving our motor mechanics across to the United States. I am quite in order in speaking to this matter. This resolution was in committee and you cannot consider the resolution without considering the amendment as well; they are all interlocked and related to the automobile industry, which has been ruined and destroyed by the present government.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BURY: Would the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) say whether he has considered, as he promised to consider when this question was up before, the matter of excepting building materials from the sales tax? The Minister promised to give that suggestion consideration, in the interests of settlers.

Mr. ROBB: As my hon. friend knows, that is a pretty wide question. I recall now that my hon. friend referred particularly to lumber, but lumber is not the only building material. The officers of the department are studying the subject now; we have power to do that by order in council, should we so decide.

Mr. ARTHURS: Some time ago I called the attention of the Minister of Finance to the fact that settlers having their own logs sawn had to pay sales tax.

Mr. ROBB: I do not think so.

Mr. ARTHURS: It is being collected.

Mr. ROBB: I will direct this matter to the attention of the minister administering the act. I recall that when Sir Thomas White introduced the act he thought that should not apply.

Mr. ARTHURS: This tax has been collected continuously in my county. During the budget debate I drew the minister's attention to the fact, and I suggest now that it would be just as sensible to charge a tax on the threshing of grain as to charge sales tax on the logs a settler has sawn up for his own use.

Bill reported.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move that we proceed now to order No. 25 of public bills and orders.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT

The House in Committee on Bill No. 8 to amend the Canada Grain Act (warehouse receipts)—Mr. Campbell—Mr. Duff in the Chair.

On section 1—Contents of warehouse receipts.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): The bill now before the House is to my mind of such importance, particularly to western Canada, that I feel I owe no apology to members of the House, coming as I do from the city of Winnipeg, for taking the time necessary to discuss it and to explain its import.

Both sides of this House and all parties are one in their pride in respect to the position held by Canada to-day in the grain trade of the world. Canada stands in the very vanguard as an exporter of wheat, and to appreciate the importance of her position in that regard it is but necessary to state it. To-day the world wheat crop amounts to approximately three billion bushels. Much of the wheat is consumed by the countries producing it, and the number of wheat exporting countries is comparatively few. The amount of wheat required by importing countries over and above what they themselves produce is roughly seven hundred million bushels. Of this huge total Canada alone supplies about three hundred million bushels, or approximately half. Other countries together supply the balance; Argentina two hundred million bushels; United States one hundred million bushels; Australia ninety million bushels, with the remainder coming from the Danubian states, India and other small exporters.

It must be at once apparent to the House that in the building up of such a tremendous wheat export Canada must have developed machinery and handling equipment for that trade which represents a very considerable investment. In round figures the amount of private capital invested in plant and equipment for the handling of that export trade is $85,000,000. This represents the investment by private companies in country elevators, terminal elevators and incidental equipment. Until at least three years ago the whole of this export trade was handled by what I may call private grain companies in close competition. The heart of the trade is Winnipeg, and its ramifications extend throughout the prairie provinces, their purpose being to gather the wheat crop of the prairie provinces and to convey it to terminal ports in order that thereby it may reach the markets of the world. Never has it been a monopoly. This trade has been carried on by companies entering into the keenest sort of competition.

Within recent years the movement in the west toward the co-operative marketing of grain has materialized and within the last three years there has appeared above the horizon in western Canada a new competitor. That new competitor is known in common parlance as the wheat pool. Let me remark here that so far as the wheat pool is concerned I as a western Canadian, I as a Canadian, cannot, nor do I, take any exception to the object it has set out to achieve. In so far as the purpose of the wheat pool is to gather and carry the produce of the western farmers to the markets of the world at as cheap a cost as possible, I am in entire accord therewith. The only question at issue, so far as this bill is concerned, is by what means shall it secure the object which it has set out to attain. It is this association known as the wheat pool that sponsors this bill No. 8. I shall refer to the grain trade, apart from the pool, in general terms as the grain trade. The grain trade oppose this bill because they see the effect of it is to imperil their investment by a means not available to the ordinary competitor, but by means of legislative enactment. When I say the grain trade takes exception, I am referring not to a trade that has been a discredit to this country, but to a trade that has been developed in this country throughout the many years that wheat has been produced and is generally recognized as being conducted in a very efficient manner.

The pool and the grain trade take issue on this amendment. This House is asked to decide between the two, and for that purpose I here and now wish to state the facts as I understand them after some investigation of the situation, and I hope I speak with some knowledge of it. I wish to state the facts merely as they are and leave to this House the matter of judgment. Before proceeding further it might be well to look for a moment at just what is the existing relationship between the producer of grain and the grain trade to which I am referring. Is the producer of grain to-day, without this amendment, at the mercy of the grain trade? Their relationship is regulated by the Canada Grain Act, administered by a Board of Grain Commissioners, a public body appointed by the government. Now comes the pool and asks that the Canada Grain Act be amended as set out in Bill No. 8. In order to appreciate the purpose of this amendment, as well as its effect generally on the grain trade in the west, it is necessary, chiefly for the benefit, if I may say so, of those members of the House who come from the east, to make just a brief survey of the method by which the grain is collected on the western prairies and transmitted to the terminal ports whether they be at the head of the Great Lakes, Vancouver, Prince Rupert, or Duluth.

With a crop the size of the Canadian wheat crop, which last year was approximately 430,000,000 bushels, every member will at once appreciate the fact that it is necessary to establish warehouses where this grain may be stored, in two places: first, throughout the country, secondly, at the terminal points. If any member of this House desires to enter into the business of handling grain effectively, he must do this: he must establish terminal elevators at some terminal port, and he must also establish lines of elevators throughout the country to gather the grain in order that that grain may be fed into his terminal elevator. If any man entering the grain business invests his money in a terminal elevator without investing also in feeders throughout the country, there is only one end, and that is his terminal elevator will fail to get the grain from the country, and he must go out of business. Therefore he builds as feeders the country elevators, which collect the grain in competition with the elevators of competing companies, and having so collected the grain, their purpose is to carry that grain where? To the terminal elevator of his particular line. It is axiomatic, therefore, that if by any process of legislation or otherwise you commandeer the capacity of his country elevators, and having so commandeered it, take the grain that is stored in his country elevators and divert it from his terminal to the terminal of a competing company, you are thereby forcefully taking away business from his company, with what result? At first, loss of profit on his investment, and eventually, if carried to its logical conclusion, bankruptcy of his concern. If hon. members have followed that, I would like to say here, that just such an outcome is the tendency of this amendment. If I have money invested in a terminal elevator at Fort William, we will say, a terminal elevator of 1,000,000 bushels capacity, that will cost me approximately $1,000,000, and if I have a like amount or double or half the amount invested in country elevators acting as feeders to that terminal, then if by legislation you force my country elevators to feed, not my own terminal, but the terminal of a competitor you thereby do me injury. If that effect is brought about by open competition I can have no complaint. The grain trade in the west acknowledge that. They say that if their competitor, the pool, by virtue of erecting terminal elevators at the points of export and by virtue of erecting or acquiring country elevators, secure a share of the grain trade and take it to their own terminal elevators, they accept that as being fair competition. But they do take exception to this House putting through the present bill which says in effect "you the private grain trade, with money invested in terminal facilities and in country elevator facilities, must accept into storage in your country elevators the grain of members of the wheat pool and not only that but at their direction, having so stored the grain in your country elevators, you must divert it from your terminals to their terminal which is the terminal of a competitor." I appeal to the fairness of this House, altogether apart from political expediency, I appeal to the business judgment of hon. members, to say if that is a sound business proposal?

Now, what reasons do the pool advance for the passing of legislation such as this? They state a principle and one which meets with popular approval; they state a principle to which I can take no exception. The wheat pool in western Canada is an association of producers of grain controlling to-day at least 50 per cent of the wheat of the west. Having so associated themselves for the purpose of marketing their own grain they say: We the growers of grain have the right to associate ourselves as a co-operative institution for the purpose of gathering our grain into warehouses or elevators in the country and storing it there until such time as we are ready to ship it, and having so stored it to maintain control over that identical grain and ship it from any elevator in which it may be in the west direct to the pool terminal. I accede at once to the soundness generally of the proposition that they have the right, as an association of wheat producers, to gather their grain, store it in country elevators, maintain the identity of that grain, maintain custody over it throughout, and ship it to their pool terminal. But the question arises at once how they are to effect that purpose. Supposing the Minister of Agriculture, if I may take him as an example, decides that he will go into the business of handling, exporting and selling grain in the markets of the world, how would he proceed? I take it that he would have to proceed without any special legislation from this parliament. He would have to proceed in the way that every other private grain company in the west built up its trade. He would establish a plant of elevators both terminal and country, terminal elevators to store the grain which his country elevators would collect throughout the prairie provinces. How far would the Minister of Agriculture or any other private individual get if he or they acquired terminal elevator capacity at the head of the lakes, or at Vancouver, or at Duluth, and then said to me as a competing company or to any other private line company "I have capacity for the storage of grain at the head of the lakes, or at Duluth, or at Vancouver, or at Prince Rupert. Now I want grain to feed to my terminal elevator"? If he did that how far would he get? Would I, through my country elevators ship the grain I have collected to his terminal elevator? Would any other private operating company do so? No, not a bushel would he get. He would be bound, therefore, to enter into competition by a system of gathering elevators throughout the country, collecting the grain from the farmer, and then feeding his terminal. The grain trade say that the pool should proceed by the same method. But is it proceeding that way? Having first sold the idea of the pool to a considerable portion of the western farmers it binds them upon contract to do what? To deliver their grain to the pool. The question then arises: How shall this grain that is contracted by farmers to be delivered to the pool reach the pool terminals? The solution is along the lines of ordinary competition, and this would be the procedure: The pool, having decided to go into the grain handling business, and having acquired terminal space at points of export, would then proceed to erect gathering elevators throughout the country, known as country elevators, and it would be through such elevators that it would feed its terminals. But so rapidly has the idea of the pool grown that it finds itself with more grain under contract than it has country elevator capacity to handle. Therefore instead of at once proceeding to build sufficient country elevators to collect the grain from all pool farmers, it now seeks to take a short cut which is not the line that can be taken by an ordinary competitor. And so it conceived the idea that it would get legislation passed so that it could say to the private line companies, "You must not only accept pool grain for storage at country points as you have to do at present under the act, but you must send it to such terminals as the pool farmer directs you to send it, not to your terminals at the head of the lakes, or at Vancouver, or at other points." Where will the pool farmer, under these circumstances, direct the private line companies to send the grain? The answer is obvious—to the pool terminal. Pool members will tell you frankly that is the purpose of this legislation. If you read it you will see that it gives the owner of grain the right to demand delivery in two places—either at the country point, where stored, or on track in cars at the terminal elevator which it sees fit to name, which is in fact the pool terminal elevator. I want hon. gentlemen to note this fact—because it is a matter of considerable importance, and I appeal to the fairmindedness of those who have invested money in private enterprises—that if this bill goes through, a pool farmer can come to me, if I am the owner of a line of country elevators and terminals, bring in 1,500 bushels of wheat and say to me: "Store my wheat." I have to take it, as I do now under the law. He can come back in ten or fifteen days or two months, if the grain is still there, and say to me: "I want you to ship that grain to the pool terminal at Fort William." I would do that as the act now stands, provided he accepted delivery at that country point and took the chance of leakage and other hazards en route. But if this bill goes through, he can say to me: "I want you to deliver that grain not at your terminal but to the pool terminal, and you have to guarantee my weight and grain at the pool terminal." That is the situation. Under the existing act he can drive to my elevator in the country and say to me: "What grade will you give me for this grain?" I say: "No. 2 northern, a certain per cent dockage." If he in his experience and judgment considers that that is the proper grade and proper dockage, he will say: "Agreed; take it in store." I have got to take it in store. As the law now stands I am responsible for the safe keeping of that grain. I give him a warehouse receipt which certifies that I have received into store at that country point 1,500 bushels of No. 2 northern wheat, with a certain dockage. I must keep that in store; but if I need extra space in my elevator I have the right, upon giving him forty-eight hours' notice, to ship that wheat to some terminal point; or he himself can come in at any time the grain is in storage and, having ordered a car, order it loaded. According to the practice of the grain trade at present, when I ship it from my country point to my own terminal elevator I guarantee to him at the terminal point grade and weight. That is as the law now stands. Having received into store at the country point 1,500 bushels of No. 2 northern, I must deliver to him at my terminal elevator at any terminal point he may name a warehouse receipt calling for the same weight and grade of grain. But mark you, under the existing law I can afford to do that. I can afford to guarantee him weight and grade at the terminal point, because not only have I got the handling charges of that grain at the country point, which are fixed by law, but having transmitted it to my terminal I have there the benefit of the additional charges for handling and storage. There is no member of the pool but will acknowledge that the profitable end of the grain business is at the terminal elevator. That is the most lucrative part of the business.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): I observe that hon. members agree. Now if by legislation you divert the grain from my country elevators to the terminal of the pool, which is a competitor of mine, what do you do? I handle the grain only at the country point, which is the least paying portion of the handling. How will that affect the grain trade in the west?

Mr. SPENCE (Maple Creek): Why?

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): The hon. member asks me why. I am prepared to discuss it, but frankly I do not want to labour the question before the House. I appreciate the courteous hearing which has been accorded me. I am a new member and diffident about taking up too much time, but this question is of such vital importance to the west that I press it. Without any intention of being discourteous, I would ask hon. gentlemen to make a note of their questions, and when I have finished my argument, to submit them to me, when I will answer them frankly and candidly, so far as I am able.

I want hon. members to follow this and understand it. Those in favour of this legislation will endeavour to impress you—and perhaps they will succeed—with the argument that there is justification for that diversion of the grain from my country elevator and my terminal to their terminal. They feel confident, I have no doubt, that they can advance reasons for that diversion. As to that I will speak a little later, but at this point I want to bring home to hon. members of this House the fact that my grain handling plant is an economic entity, consisting of terminal capacity and country elevator capacity. My money has been invested in a system of grain handling whereby, in effect, the practice has been for me to gather grain in the country and transmit it to my terminal. That is why I built the terminal and the country elevators. They now ask that a change in the manner of handling that grain be brought about by legislation, with this effect: that every pool farmer or other farmer who stores grain in my country house can come to me any say: "Kennedy, I want you to send that grain which you have in storage in your country plant, not to your terminal elevator but to the pool terminal." What is the effect? It must be obvious. If hon. members agree—and I know by their attitude that they have agreed—that the profitable part of my plant is the terminal plant, then every carload of grain which, under ordinary circumstances would be fed to my terminal plant by my country elevator, is diverted from my country elevator to their pool terminal elevators, is a loss of business to my terminal and a gain of business to theirs. I want hon. members to observe that in the handling of grain the pool is a competitor and a real competitor. Is that proceeding along sound business lines of legislation?

If the private grain trade of the west had a legislative monopoly on the gathering of grain there, well might an organization of farmers such as the pool come to this House and say: You by legislation have given a monopoly of gathering grain in the west to private grain companies. We now demand legislation whereby we can get to our terminal elevators at least that portion of grain which belongs to the farmers who have entered our pool. If that were the situation I would not have the temerity to stand here for one moment to-night to oppose it, but that is not the situation. The grain trade of the west is not controlled by any legislative monopoly; it is being handled, as I say, by men who have risked their millions by way of investment in building up the business. They say to you to-night and they say to the pool: We take no issue with your objective to transmit wheat to your pool terminals and keep it in your own hands throughout the whole process of gathering and feeding it to the world markets as you like. But we do take strenuous objection to your asking for legislative powers that will compel us to use our country plants, not only to gather and store your grain, but having so gathered it, to transmit it, divert it from our terminals to the pool terminals, our competitor, thereby resulting in loss of business to our terminal plants and, by the same token, in gain of business to the terminal plants of our great competitor.

Moreover the effect of this legislation is to compel me as a private grain dealer, not only to divert the grain from my terminal elevator to the pool terminal, but, having parted with the custody of the grain at the country point thousands of miles, it may be, from the terminal elevator, to assume absolute responsibility for its safe delivery at the pool terminal on track guaranteeing grade and weight. If there be leakage en route who suffers the loss? If there be accident en route who suffers the loss? It is up to the private grain dealer to stand that loss without any remuneration. That is the situation. They urge with much show of reason this principle. For instance a pool farmer says: "I have cultivated the soil; I have grown this carload of wheat on my farm; I have gathered it, threshed it, brought it in and stored it in a warehouse belonging to a private company. Why should I not have the right to go to that warehouse and say: Deliver to me my identical property, my grain, in a car here?" They have that power; they can get that identical grain by virtue of provision in the Grain Act with respect to special binning. Of course in the rush season there are not special bins available for all who want them, but at present they have the right to come to my elevator and say: "I want to 'special bin' this," and if there is a bin available, under the law I must allocate that bin upon request, giving him a warehouse receipt for the weight of grain stored. When he orders his car I put the wheat in his car and I am done with it.

On the other hand if there is not special binning capacity and a farmer comes to me with a carload of wheat, since no special bin is available the grain must be mixed with other wheat because you cannot keep a separate bin for every farmer. As the wheat must be mixed with other wheat we must first decide what grade that grain is. I examine the grain and say: "I will give you No. 2 northern." Hon. members will remember that I am dealing with men experienced in grading grain. If the farmer is satisfied with that, he says: "All right." I tell him how much the dockage will be and he agrees to that. The only thing that remains to be done is to weigh the grain. I put the grain in a bin with other grain which I have graded

No. 2 northern. Another farmer comes along and the same thing happens, so that very soon in the one bin I may have the grain mixed of half a dozen or a dozen farmers. I shall have No. 1 northern in one bin, No. 2 northern in another, No. 3 northern in another and so on. At once hon. members will see that the identity of that grain is lost. Unlike furniture, the identity of which can be retained in storage, the identity of grain is lost as soon as it is mixed with other grain. But the farmer has a warehouse receipt that shows that I have taken into storage 1,500 bushels of No. 2 northern with a certain dockage. There is the right on which he stands. There is the document on which I must settle.

He has two rights. If he wants to take charge of that grain at the country elevator he orders a car. He comes to me and he says: "Kennedy, load my grain into car so and so." I do it. If he takes charge of that car, at once you will observe the practical difficulty arises that is urged by the western grain growers, and I accede to it. I load the farmer's grain in that way and I tell him I have weighed 1,500 bushels of No. 2 northern into that car. He may have a doubt as to the weight in that car; he may have some doubt as to the grade. That car is shipped and it arrives at the terminal fifty or a hundred bushels short. He comes back to me and he says: "Kennedy, my car is fifty or a hundred bushels short," as the case may be. I ask my operator and he says: "I weighed in the full weight." The question arises: Why is it short? Did it leak in transit? That is the question to be decided between the farmer, the railway company and the elevator company and it presents a practical difficulty. So in the trade the practice has developed that instead of the farmer taking delivery at the country point, with the exception of at the outside about five per cent, he takes delivery at the terminal elevator of the company that has his grain in storage at the country points, and the company guarantees his weight and grade, taking all chance of loss in transit by leakage and otherwise. By this legislation he wants the right to take delivery not at my terminal but at the country point and yet have the company guarantee weight and grade at the distant terminal. Why? The reason is obvious; it is because he has entered into the grain handling business and he wants to get the grain to feed his terminals. So he says: Give us a law that will make the private company not only deliver the grain at a country point but guarantee the weight and grade not at the country point of delivery but at the pool terminal at Fort William or wherever it may be.

Now, it may be urged: You took into store 1,500 bushels of his grain, No. 2 Northern; if you load it into his car on the track at the country point he is not there perhaps when it is loaded, and if he is he cannot tell by looking at it its weight nor its grade; therefore why should you not guarantee it at the other end? He has his remedy. Why should I be asked to give up possession of the goods in my storage, turn them over to his custody and let him take them a thousand miles or more on a car that he has ordered from the railway, not I—it may be full of leaks so far as I know—why should I be bound to run all the risk without the custody and guarantee to him weight and grade at the other end? Suppose he puts this question: Well, if you do not guarantee weight and grade at the other end, how do I know I will get there the weight and grade my certificate admits? This is the way the law now stands, as I have already stated: If the grade remains in my custody and is shipped through my terminal, I give him a terminal warehouse receipt that he can go on the market with and demand delivery from my terminal of the exact quantity of grain that his certificate calls for in weight and grade and dockage. But he says: I do not want to do that, I want this legislation to get around that very thing; I want my grain to go to the pool terminal, not to yours. Well, this is my answer—the same answer that I would give to any other competitor: If you want the grain to go to your terminal, then you do what every other dealer in grain does, you provide the facilities in the country for gathering that grain; and if you build or acquire or lease your own country elevators and gather that grain, you can ship it to Timbuctoo if you wish, or to any other point. That is the answer.

Is that a solution beyond their power? If this law goes through—and a man does not need to be in the trade to know what will happen—instead of the terminal elevators of the private line companies working to capacity, they will be working on part time. I wonder if eastern members realize what the investment in a terminal elevator means? Approximately the cost of a terminal elevator is $1 per bushel of capacity; thus, a terminal of 1,000,000 bushels capacity means $1,000,000 of investment; of 2,000,000 bushels capacity an investment of $2,000,000. Now, I direct this situation to the attention of any hon. member or any group of hon. members: Suppose you have $1,000,000 tied up in terminal elevators, just as soon as you begin to divert the grain that feeds those elevators and keeps them busy, so soon you begin to cut down on your profit—if you have a profit—until you come to the point where you investment no longer pays a profit, and eventually you get down to where it is a losing investment. You all know what that comes to. And so the grain trade say to the pool: We recognize you as a big competitor, as a growing competitor, as a serious competitor, but we stake our judgment on this—that it is efficiency which in the long run will get the business, and we are willing to pit our experience, our investment of capital and our method of handling grain against the pool method; we challenge you—if I may use that term—to proceed along the ordinary lines of competition, and we await the result with confidence.

Suppose pool members say, as hon. members who are urging this bill say: Well, if this legislation does not pass, eventually we will eliminate you anyway; if we do not get this facility through your country elevators we will build others and put you out of business. Well, what do we reply? Let me remark, Mr. Chairman, that when I say "we" I am not in the grain trade, I have not a dollar invested in it, and I am not acting for grain clients. I practise law in the city of Winnipeg, but so far as I know to-night, I have not one single grain company among my clientele. But I know something of the immense investment in the business, and it is because of that and because I come from the city of Winnipeg where this investment is centred that I discuss the question at such length. Well, what does the grain trade say in reply to that threat? They say: Proceed to collect your grain by building or acquiring country elevators, and having so collected the grain, ship it to your own terminals in competition with us; if you eliminate us by that method of competition, well and good, the best system wins. They say further: We are content to submit to elimination by competition; but we are not content, and we protest against being eliminated by legislation. For that is what the sponsors of this bill are seeking to do.

Now, I have pointed to the remedy open to the pool—to build its country elevators, collect its grain and ship that grain to its terminals. Is that impossible? How far have they proceeded with the solution? This far. I will divide the space so far as the storage of grain is concerned into terminal space—by that I mean space at any port of export at the head of the lakes, and at Duluth, Prince Rupert and Vancouver—and country elevator space. The total space in terminal elevators of all companies, including the pool, at the head of the lakes is, 64,700,000 bushels. Of this the pool owns or controls at the present time 17,450,000 bushels space. The United Grain Growers, which is also an association of farmers, controls at the lake head terminal space amounting to 3,100,000 bushels. The grain trade, as distinct from the pool and United Grain Growers controls 44,150,000 bushels space at the lake head.

That is only at the head of the lakes. Apart from that, the trade has terminal elevators at Vancouver and Calgary and at certain milling centres. Also, the pool has acquired from the Saskatchewan Co-operative Elevator Company its terminal elevator at Buffalo with its present capacity of 1,100,000 bushels, together with an addition now in course of completion, which will be ready for this year's crop, of another 900,000 bushels capacity, making the total terminal elevator capacity controlled and owned by it at Buffalo 2,000,000 bushels. In addition to this the pool has leased the government elevator at Prince Rupert with a capacity of 1,250,000 bushels. This gives the pool terminal elevator space as follows:

| | Bushels |
|---|---|
| Lake ports | 17,450,000 |
| Buffalo | 2,000,000 |
| Prince Rupert | 1,250,000 |
| Total | 20,700,000 |

In addition they have the right to terminal space in the government elevators at Vancouver of which there are two run by the Vancouver Harbour Commission. So much for the terminal space. For the handling of this season's grain the pool will control from one quarter to one third of the terminal space of all the elevators in the west.

Now we come to the country elevators. The total number of licensed country elevators is 4,292 according to a recent report, with a total capacity of 141,250,000 bushels. The pool now owns or controls, including the current year's building programme, the following: In Alberta it will have built 33 and controls under contract from the United Grain Growers 186, making a total of 219; in Saskatchewan it has built and acquired recently through the Saskatchewan Co-operative a total of 571; in Manitoba for handling this year's crop it will have forty, making a total of 830 country elevators under its control for the purpose of gathering grain. In addition the western farmers, through the United Grain Growers, own considerable additional country space, and with that held by other private farmers' companies of a smaller nature it may be conservatively stated that the producers themselves own or control from a quarter to a third of the country elevator space for the handling of this year's crop. Out of approximately 4,300 country elevators the pool and its associated companies will have approximately 1,000 with which to take care of this year's crop. Therefore, so far as all space is concerned, it will own or control from a quarter to a third of the total space. You must remember, too, that the pool has only been in operation for a short time, and in a period of three years the three principal pools have gone thus far towards solving this economic problem. But where the shoe pinches is that they have signed up about 50 per cent of the grain and want all that grain in their terminal elevators. That is the rub, and we say to them, "Get it there the way any other company would get it".

Now I am going to appeal to the champions of the pool to forget for a moment, if they can, the political expediency of this legislation, and to view it as business men. If they had the money invested, as have the private grain trade how would they view this legislation? Is it to be supported by self-interest alone? Self-interest will dictate that any member of this House who is also a member of the pool will vote for this amendment, which is demanded by the pool. And if they recognize the necessity of catering to the wave of enthusiasm in the west in favour of the pool system of marketing, to which system I take no objection, they cannot help but support the amendment. But I ask them, perhaps without avail, to divorce themselves from immediate self-interest and from political expediency. I say to you that already, under your system of co-operative marketing, you have proceeded far; under propitious circumstances you have met with a large measure of success, from which I have no desire to detract. I congratulate the farmers of western Canada on the success which has attended their efforts through the pool, but having succeeded that far by the usual means of competition and your own intelligently directed energy, I urge upon you to seek not unfair advantage by legislation, in order to bring about a little faster what you yourselves claim you will do in any event by competition. Pass the word along to your men, if you like; tell the rank and file of the pool that the battle cry is to be, "No quarter to the grain trade of western Canada". Men of British traditions have heard and given the slogan of "No quarter" before, and they have always accepted it. The grain trade can take no exception to such an ultimatum, but I ask you to pause and consider. Suppose the effect of your legislation should be to eliminate entirely private investment in the grain trade of the west; you will then eliminate, although you may not take it very seriously, a factor from the handling of grain which to my mind goes to the root of the handling of all commodities; I refer to strong competition. If you drive out private competition from the handling of grain in the west and place it in the hands of a monopoly, however ideal it may be in theory, I warn you that you are courting a danger from which you may some day be glad to flee. I say to you then, do not ask this House to legislate your competitors out of business; do not seek to crucify on the cross of political expediency an investment of $85,000,000; do not let us stamp Canada as a country which lightly deals with the rights of invested capital. Hon. members may say to you as they have said to me, "Where did they get the money? If we did wipe it out they would not lose very much, even though $85,000,000 is invested." Some have had the temerity to say, "They got it from us, and if we take it away from them they are not entitled to much sympathy". That is a vicious principle on which to proceed with legislation. The money is there invested in plant and equipment; do not lightly pass legislation that will tend to confiscate it.

In closing I say to this House that Canada needs private capital for its development, not only for the grain trade but for our resources generally. This money that stands to-night invested in the grain trade in the west to the amount of $85,000,000 was invested certainly not with any idea that legislation would be passed that would tend to confiscate it. I urge upon the House therefore to remember that the future of Canada demands this, that private capital shall not have any special privilege, but that it shall have at least such a measure of protection as will not only reasonably safeguard its investment, but will tend to attract to this country capital for its development.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to take up much time debating this question because it has been fairly well threshed out in the committee on Agriculture and around the corridors. I believe most members are fairly familiar with the case for both sides. However, in view of the statements put before the House to-night, I feel that there is an obligation on me to present the case from our side, and in opening perhaps I might give a brief history of the pool, what it is, and what it stands for.

The first pool operating in western Canada was that organized in the province of Alberta, which began its operations in 1923 and handled the crop for that year. The pools organized in Saskatchewan and Manitoba operated first in 1924. The three pools last year handled 81,500,000 bushels of wheat, besides a considerable quantity of other grains. This year it is estimated that the joint pools will handle at least 200,000,000 bushels of wheat, besides a very considerable quantity of coarse grains.

Some estimate of the importance of the pool and of the volume of its business may be gathered from the fact that next year's business will probably more than double the annual gross earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway. In one interim payment made by the pool in March last, the amount of $37,000,000 was paid out in one day to the farmers. That was one of four payments. The pool now has offices at Vancouver, Calgary, Regina, Winnipeg, Fort William, Toronto, New York and Paris, and has made connections with agencies in every important country in the world. The pool will have in Alberta this fall for the handling of grain 33 of its own elevators, and will also have a joint control in the operation of 186 others, or a total of 219 elevators. In Saskatchewan they will have 571 elevators, and in Manitoba by next fall they will be operating 40. This makes a total of 830 elevators, which is 20 per cent of the total of 4,300 elevators in western Canada. The total terminal capacity at the head of the lakes is 64,700,000 bushels. Of this the pool at the present time controls 17,450,000 bushels, or 27 per cent of the total. The total capacity of the 4,300 country elevators in the prairie provinces is 143,351,000 bushels.

All this controversy arose, I may say, over section 159, which was the original section in the 1912 Canada Grain Act. As we understood that section, it did give to the farmer the right to determine the destination of his grain, and I do not know of a single instance in the last twenty-five years where a farmer putting his grain in a special bin in a country elevator was ever refused the right to ship that grain to any terminal of his choice. There are many farmers in this House to-night on both sides who have exercised this privilege for the last twenty or twenty-five years, and to whom it has never been denied.

We have two farmer elevator companies operating in western Canada—the Saskatchewan Co-operative, and the United Grain Growers. In my own district many a shareholder in one of those companies has found that his own elevator was plugged, and that he could not take his grain in there, but he was able to secure a bin in one of the line elevators, and was always permitted to have his grain shipped from that elevator direct to the terminal elevator of his own company. I do not know of a single instance in which he was ever denied that right. The elevator companies naturally must have assumed that the law compelled them to do that, or they would not have carried it out.

The particular clause which deals with this phase of the situation was, however, rather ambiguous because it says, as anyone may see who will look at section 159, "if either party so desires." That is in reference to shipping grain to the terminal of his choice. That being somewhat ambiguous, Chief Justice Turgeon, with the consent and approval of the Board of Grain Commissioners in drafting the new clause introduced in the bill of last year made it read, "if he so desires." He put it beyond all doubt that the right was in the hands of the farmer, and the farmer only, to determine the destination of his grain. That, I may say, was the clause in bill No. 113 of last year, the bill which had its first reading in this House on May 11, 1925. In the Agriculture committee last year, however, the grain interests were able to secure the passage of an amendment which took away from the farmer that right by altering the wording of this clause, and in addition, not being satisfied with that, they added another clause, which distinctly and specifically relieved the country elevator from all responsibility for weight and grade in case the farmer exercised this right.

The argument is used—I think it was used by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre to-night—that the farmer still has the right to determine the destination of his grain under the present act. Technically that is so; in reality it is not so, because under this disability, with the country elevator relieved of responsibility for the weight and grade, the farmer cannot possibly exercise that right. I do not suppose there was a single instance in western Canada last year where the farmer would take that chance.

In dealing with the situation as regards the country elevator, I may say that the transportation is part of the system. The country elevator is not a private institution. It is a semi-public institution. It has a public duty to perform. It is licensed by a public body, and recognized by law, and given certain rights and privileges, and placed under certain restrictions. Being given those rights, it has certain public duties to perform, and part of those duties in the handling of special bin grain is to guarantee the weight and grade at the other end; that is, when a farmer secures a special bin in a country elevator and has a carload of grain put in there, when it is loaded out on the car on the track the responsibility of the elevator has not ceased. The system and the law has always recognized that the farmer, not being in a position to check the weight and the grade in the car, must be guaranteed that weight and that grade when it is delivered at the terminal elevator. I might add that the handling charges are based on that. The elevator companies have staffs of men at Winnipeg who examine these cars as soon as they arrive there. They are notified by the railway company, and they examine the cars to see that there is no leakage or damage to the car itself, and they check the grade and the weight. They have a similar staff at the terminal points, at Port Arthur and Fort William, and at other points to which the grain may be shipped. This, I may say, is included in the handling charges. That is the elevator company are supposed to be paid a sufficient sum to reimburse them for the cost of examining these cars.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): What is the charge?

Mr. CAMPBELL: The regular charge for special bin grain is 1¾ cents per bushel, but they are permitted by the Board of Grain Commissioners to charge 2½ cents per bushel. I may say that except in very rare instances they do not exercise that right. They prefer to handle it at 1¾ cents a bushel which is the prevailing rate charged in western Canada.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): What do the country elevators get now, under the law, for handling grain?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Under the law the elevators are permitted to charge 2½ cents per bushel.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): That is for special bin grain?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): And for grain other than special bin grain 1¾ cents?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): If this bill passes you will be allowed to have the grain diverted from the country elevator direct to your pool terminal. With the private company guaranteeing wheat to the pool terminal, is there not an additional charge provided for under the proposed amendment?

Mr. CAMPBELL: The present regulations provide for a charge of 2½ cents a bushel, as I said, but the elevator companies do not exercise that right.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): I am not talking about special bin grain but grain stored in country elevators. If this bill passes will they not be entitled to charge 1¾ cents for handling grain at country points?

Mr. CAMPBELL: In the first place, there being no extra responsibility, it is not necessary for them to make any extra charge. The Canada Grain Act, I may explain for the benefit of the hon. gentleman, does not set the charges; it authorizes the Board of Grain Commissioners to set charges that in their estimation will be fair. The Board of Grain Commissioners meet every year for the purpose of discussing this question with the grain trade and setting what they consider a maximum charge. If they find, after a few years, that the elevators cannot be made to pay we have authority to say—and I say here tonight on the authority of the board—there is no question whatever but that the board will raise the rate in order to permit the operations of the elevators to pay.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Another question—

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think the hon. member should be fair. He asked me not to interrupt him while he was speaking.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): As you gave me a most attentive hearing I was going to ask you whether you would prefer that I should ask you these questions as the points arise, or reserve them until you are through. If it is your wish that I should reserve the questions until you are through, I shall gladly do so.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think I would prefer to take the hon. gentleman at his own word. He appealed to myself and others not to interrupt him while he was speaking. I am quite ready to accord to him the same courtesy he accorded to us; I am quite ready to answer any of his questions at the close of my speech.

I may say there are two classes of grain. These are subdivided into other classes but for the sake of argument I will say there are simply two. The first class is street grain and the second is special bin grain. Street grain is the grain that comes in by wagon load; that is where the farmer cannot make up a car and he simply sells his grain by the wagon load direct to the elevator company. Special bin grain is grain that the farmer does not want to sell at that particular time. He simply uses the elevator company for warehousing purposes. He secures a special bin, has his grain placed in that bin, and has it shipped out to his order to whatever elevator he chooses.

Dealing now with the question of weights and grades out of the country elevator, I may say that the farmer authorizes the elevator man to order the car when he wants that grain shipped out. The farmer is out on his farm five, ten, perhaps fifteen or twenty miles from town in a good many cases. He may be in a place where there is no telephone, and he has no idea when the car will arrive. Sometimes the farmers have to wait months, actually months, before they can secure the necessary cars. As occasionally happens a trainload of cars will arrive late in the evening in a small town and the grain will be loaded into them by the elevator. In the busy season the elevator man will go to work at night to load that grain out; the farmer has no means of knowing when that is done. The first thing he knows about it, perhaps, is when these cars are hundreds of miles away on the road to the Great Lakes. Therefore the argument that the farmer can be on hand to see his grain loaded into the car is absolutely absurd. Any practical farmer in the House knows that it cannot be done except in very rare instances—in fact I will go further and say that I think in the majority of cases the grain is not weighed at all. When his grain is put into special bins the elevator man gives him a ticket for so many bushels. In many cases when that grain is loaded it is shot direct from the bin into the car; it is not put through the scales at all. The elevator man will report to his company not the exact weight but what the storage tickets call for. We do not assume that these elevator men are all dishonest, although in many cases they are. The police court records of western Canada will show a great many cases where these elevator men have been dishonest. However, that is not our reason for objecting to their weight. It is very easy for the most honest man to make a mistake. The farmers bring their wheat to the elevator in wagons. I have seen ten, fifteen, and twenty teams lined up behind each other waiting to unload into the elevator. Farmer No. 1 has a certain bin. He asks that his grain be loaded in that bin. The elevator man starts his engine and the grain is elevated into that particular bin. The very moment the first farmer's team pulls out another man comes in who has another bin. The elevator man then switches his spout to another position and it is very easy sometimes for him to get grain mixed. Any elevator man will tell you that one hundred or three hundred bushels of one man's grain may very easily get into another bin. When a particular car is loaded it is sealed up and shipped out. We will say in this particular case the farmer exercises the technical right which the act gives him of shipping to the pool terminal. But when the car gets there it is found that it is 100 bushels short. The act distinctly states that the elevator company shall not be responsible for that weight. Who does the weighing? The weighing in to the terminal elevator is done by government weighmasters who have no monetary interest in the grain there and whose scales are checked up repeatedly. Their scales are inspected and representatives of the elevator company stand by the scales and see every pound of their own grain weighed. Therefore I say the farmer has a perfect right to refuse to accept the weights set by the country elevator. But what does the elevator company do? They refuse to accept the government weights. In effect they state that they have not confidence in the government weighmaster, and they tell you that they have no right to examine these cars or to check weights and grades. That is another argument that cannot be backed up. When a farmer exercises his right to have a car of grain shipped to a pool terminal the elevator company cannot govern that but it can endorse on the bill of lading we will say for instance, "Advise the Pioneer Grain Company, Winnipeg". When a car of grain so billed arrives at Winnipeg, notwithstanding the fact that it is pool grain and that it was shipped by a farmer through a line elevator, that elevator company is immediately notified by the railway company. They have a staff for that purpose and they can go and examine the car. If there should be a broken seal, if there should be any sign of leakage, they immediately report it to the railway company and they have a claim for damages against the company if it does not weigh out at the terminal elevator. When it arrives at the terminal they have the same opportunity to check it. They are in identically the same position as they would be if the grain were going to their own elevator, and I defy the hon. member from Winnipeg South Centre, or anyone speaking from the viewpoint of the grain exchange to-day, to show me any material difference between the case of a car shipped direct to their own terminal, and the case of a car billed as I have suggested, going to the pool terminal, where they have a terminal of their own.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): I accept that challenge.

Mr. CAMPBELL: All right. The question arises, why does the farmer want to determine the destination of his grain? There are various reasons, and I will not give them in detail. I will give a specific instance to illustrate one of the reasons why the farmer wants his grain to go to his own terminal. I am speaking now of course from the standpoint of the pool, but before I am through I propose to speak from the standpoint of the non-pool farmer, because we are fighting the battle of the non-pool farmer just as much as the battle of the pool farmer. A farmer residing in a part of my constituency last year had two fields of wheat, one grown on summer fallow and the other on spring plowing. When he sent his samples to Winnipeg they were each graded No. 2. Under our grading system they graded exactly the same, but the grain grown on the summer fallow had a much higher protein content, which made it more valuable for milling purposes than the car of grain grown on spring plowing, although the grade was identically the same as the other. The farmer sent samples to a grain company in Minneapolis. One of them they passed on as a straight grade, and they would not pay more than the market price for it. On the other they offered a premium of 26 cents a bushel, because it was very much more valuable for milling purposes; the higher-priced would have netted the farmer nearly $400 per car. That is one of the reasons—I do not say the only one—why we want our grain to go to our own terminals, or why the farmer wants to determine the terminals to which his grain shall be sent, and also the reason why the grain companies want to have all the grain sent to their own terminals, whether the farmer wants it or not. We are not denying to the grain companies the right to send their own grain to their own terminals. They have a perfect right to do it and to get all the premiums they can on their own grain. But we object to giving them the privilege —it is not a right—of sending grain that does not belong to them to their own terminals, selling some of it as premium grain, securing the premium price for it, and delivering to the pool terminals grain of a similar grade, but of a quality that does not command the premium. That is one of the reasons why we want our grain to go to our own terminal and one of the reasons why they want to ship it direct to their terminals.

The argument has been frequently used that the country elevator system and the terminal elevator are a unit, and that if you separate them you destroy the system. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre stated that first a company builds a line of country elevators; that then they must of necessity build a terminal to handle the grain at the other end, and that if we use country elevators and ship the grain to whatever elevator we like, we are simply destroying the system. On the face of it I will admit that it looks plausible, but when you examine into it you will find there is nothing in it at all. I ask the member for Winnipeg South Centre, if that be so, how do the government terminals exist at all? Because the government own a tremendous amount of terminal space and have not one single country elevator, and it is only in so far as we depart from the present law that the government elevators are able to get any grain at all. The law to-day actually prevents grain going to government elevators. It is a direct discrimination against them, and I may say for the benefit of the hon. member and those who agree with him that a considerable number of grain companies operating elevators in the prairies to-day do not own terminals a tall. One such company is operating in my constituency, and so far as I know they make good profits and earn good dividends. One of the largest companies in western Canada, the one that showed the highest profits, was the Alberta Pacific Company. They have shown substantial profits, although they never owned any terminal elevator.

The question is asked, if the pool grain is passed through the country elevator and then all of it is permitted to go to the pool terminals, what are they going to do with the other terminal elevators? What is going to be done with them? I may say at the outset that there is not a bushel of terminal storage at the head of the lakes more than we need in a year when there is a good crop. That is proved by the fact that last year the pool in the busy season had to divert 5,000 cars of its own grain which it was not able to take care of itself, to outside elevators. Take an extreme case: suppose that all the local elevators of a certain company were used for pool grain, and not one bushel of grain was permitted to go to their own terminals—of course such condition is impossible but we will take it as an hypothetical case—it would simply mean that the other terminal elevators could not accommodate that grain, and that particular terminal elevator would have to be used, either purchased or leased in some way. We all realize that in such a case we are up against economic laws. The men operating the pool are sensible business men, and they know that if they go to the terminal elevator and offer either to buy or lease, they must pay the value. If they buy it, they must pay the replacement value, and if they lease it they must pay sufficient to provide a good dividend on the money invested and all operating charges. They would have to do it if they built it themselves. There is no desire on their part to confiscate anything, nor could they do it.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre tried to make a strong point of vested rights. He told us that there was invested in the grain handling facilities in western Canada about $85,000,000, and that this investment was going to be seriously jeopardized if the amendment went through. A good deal of this investment is government money. They have a very large proportion of it. In addition to that, the pool itself has about a third of the investment. Well, perhaps I am not correct in saying a third. The pool has about a third of the terminal storage and a smaller proportion of the country elevators, but at any rate, deducting the government investment, deducting the pool's investment, deducting the investment of another farmer's company, the United Grain Growers, I think I am safe in saying that the interests that are fighting this amendment to-day have an investment of not more than $45,000,000. On the other hand, what has the farmer got? According to last Canada Year Book the farmers of Western Canada have an investment of $3,350,000,000, or eighty times as much as the grain trade. My hon. friend will raise his hands in holy horror at the idea of jeopardizing an investment of $45,000,000, but if the amendment does not go through we are injuring vested rights eighty times as great. The secretary of the Grain Exchange, addressing the Agriculture committee, stated quite frankly that the pool could put the grain men out of business in two years. His exact words were that they could put them out of business in two years anyway. Supposing that to be so, supposing that in two years' time most of these grain companies go out of business, what will be the position of the non-pool farmers? because there will always be non-pool farmers. I am a strong supporter of the pool myself; my grain goes through it; I believe in supporting it, and I do not think I shall have any reason to change my mind. But I am not so optimistic as to believe that the day will ever come when every bushel of grain in western Canada will go through the pool, I think there will always be a grain exchange and always non-pool farmers. I ask hon. gentlemen then to consider seriously the position of these companies operating on the grain exchange and the position of non-pool farmers if this amendment does not go through. I am really arguing from the standpoint of my hon. friend, only I am looking ahead a couple of years. I am quite prepared to make the prediction now that if this amendment does not go through, within two years you will find officials of the grain exchange and these lawyers who are representing them here to-day coming to Ottawa and pleading with tears in their eyes to put through, in the interest of the grain companies and the non-pool farmers, the very amendment they are asking you to reject to-day. There is no question about that.

In my constituency there are a number of sidings where this year there will be none but pool elevators. That means that non-pool farmers at those particular points will have no other means of shipping their grain except over the platform, and it is only practicable to use that at certain times. The law as it stands to-day would at these points give the pool elevator a distinct advantage. Suppose a farmer thinks he has premium grain. He wants to take advantage of that fact. He puts it into a special bin in the pool elevator; he instructs the pool to ship it; but the pool exercises its right under this act—there is no reason why it should not—and ships it to its own terminal. If it is premium grain the pool will secure the premium and it will go into the pool for the benefit of the pool farmers. The farmer, the owner of the grain, will have delivered to some grain company to whom he wishes to sell his grain, grain of a similar grade, but the stuff is not premium grain. There is no question about that. The men who are operating the pool elevators are shrewd business men; they will not let an opportunity like that pass, and since the grain companies take advantage of the present law, most assuredly the pool elevators will take advantage of it themselves. What is then the position of the non-pool farmer? What is the position of the independent grain company operating on the grain exchange? There may be some of them who want to buy grain at points where there are none but pool elevators. They may buy grain through the country merchant or dealers working on commission, but the law distinctly prevents them from procuring it—a distinct discrimination. I think I am safe in predicting, as I said before, that if this amendment does not pass now, within two years you will see this same host of gentlemen who are in the corridors to-day, pleading with tears in their eyes for us to pass this very amendment in the interest of the grain exchange and the non-pool farmers.

I want to make it distinctly understood that while we may be primarily representing the pool, we are pleading for a cause that is really in the interest of all the farmers and will eventually be in the interest of the grain trade itself. How does it happen to-day that we find the grain trade lined up on one side and the pool on the other? It is simply a coincidence, because it happens that the pool have about 50 or 60 per cent of the grain, but only a small proportion, about 20 per cent, of the country elevators. So the injustice in the aggregate is done to the pool. But in two years, according to Dr. Magill's prediction, the situation will be reversed and there is no doubt that the pool will have 80 per cent of the elevators and 80 per cent or more of the grain. Then what will be the position of the farmers who own the other 20 per cent of the grain, and what opportunity will the man operating on the grain exchange have—because I think there will still be a grain exchange—to secure that grain in its purity directly from the farmer?

The question of rates, of course, has figured very largely in this debate. The grain men tell us that if the country elevators are taken away from them; that is, if we are allowed to use the country elevators for storage purposes only, they will lose a great deal of money because the country elevators do not pay. I am not certain whether that is true or not, but I am not going to argue the point. To me it is immaterial whether they pay or not. But if they do not pay the fault is with the elevator companies themselves because they are permitted for "special bin" grain to charge 2½ cents per bushel, but they charge only 1¾ cents. It is true that on the other stored grain they are permitted to charge only 1¾ cents, but we have it on the word of the Board of Grain Commisisoners that if necessary they will be permitted to charge higher rates and we know they must be so permitted if they cannot be operated at a profit at present rates. The question arises why they do not exercise the right they have to-day to charge higher rates than they are now charging. The whole situation is this, that if the local elevator paid very well many country merchants, many groups of farmers, would go in and build elevators themselves. That is a condition the grain trade do not want; so by operating their country elevators at a loss they are able to secure a complete monopoly of the receiving end, and they can easily make up at the terminal what they lose at the country point. That is the situation. They are not frank and honest with us to-day in stating the situation as it is.

They also use the argument that if they charge higher rate the farmers will load their grain over the loading plaform. There may be in western Canada points where the farmers have gone fairly extensively into mixed farming, where grain is only a portion of the total products, where perhaps they could, with facility, handle there a little bit of grain over the platform. But that is not so in the great majority of cases in western Canada. In my town we have five elevators and the car loading platform has accommodation for only two cars. It will take the average farmer from two to four days to load a car. With the quantity of grain shipped out of that point, even if they started loading on the first January and continued loading until the end of December of the same year, they could not load the total crop over the platform, and the amount the farmer would pay in demurrage charges would often be more than he would pay in elevator charges. Therefore that argument does not hold good, and if the elevator companies want to make the local elevators pay all they have to do is to ask for higher rates and be prepared to deal with competition at the country end.

There is one argument that our friends of the grain exchange have used around the corridors and in some of the committee rooms, but they have not used it before the Agricultural committee, nor publicly. It is this: They say that the pool to-day has an elevator at Buffalo and that if this amendment goes through and permits the pool to ship to their own terminal, it will assist in the diversion of Canadian grain to United States ports. What are the facts? In the first place the pool, I may say, did not build a terminal at Buffalo; they took over the Saskatchewan Co-operative Company's elevators and this terminal was included. But as the situation stands to-day at the Canadian ports of Quebec, St. John, Halifax and other points like that there are no elevators except government elevators, and as the law now stands it puts an impediment in the way of grain movement through those ports. Indeed it is only through the operations of the pool and of the law as we expect to have it after this amendment passes that grain can go forward to those ports. The figures prove that every bushel shipped to the port of Quebec last year was pool grain. It would not be company grain because they send their grain to their own terminals and they have no elevators at Quebec, St. John or Halifax. If hon. members will look up the prices, they will find that prices of grain futures on the grain exchange are for delivery at the head of the lakes only. A miller in England buys a certain quantity of grain for delivery in May, July, October and so on. The price on futures on the Winnipeg Exchange is quoted to him f.o.b. head of the lakes, and the head of the lakes only. He cannot secure a future price on St. John, Halifax or Quebec. Why? Because through the operations of the grain exchange these Canadian ports are discriminated against. There is no question about it. Let me ask you: Who all these years has been fighting for the retention of our grain by our own ports; who in this House for the last four years has been fighting for it? The farmer group in this section of the House, joined recently by another farmer group in another part of the House. One of the reasons why we want to retain the grain in our own ports is because we wish it to go to the old country in its purity. We know that in transit through the United States it has been debased in grade; we know that while it has borne the Canadian grade certificate the Americans have been taking off some of our better grain and substituting their poorer grain therefor, using our better grain for milling purposes and debasing the grade of our grain on the European market. Therefore the pool that we are representing will find it to its interest entirely to divert every bushel of grain it possibly can to Canadian ports.

And what about the elevator at Buffalo? Will all the grain received there go down through American ports? Not at all. The pool has that listed as a transfer house. Through the operation of the Canadian coastal laws, it is often more profitable to ship grain to Buffalo and then transhipit to Montreal than to send it direct to Montreal from the head of the lakes. That is the situation, because American ships can handle the grain on that route but are prevented from doing so on the direct route, and so they cut the rates under all Canadian routes. Consequently a great deal of our grain goes to Buffalo for transhipment to Montreal and it does not go to the ocean through American ports at all. That is why the pool lists this elevator as a transfer house, and as far as I know it will not under ordinary circumstances send one bushel out through United States ports that can possibly be avoided.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN: Let me say to the committee before there is any further discussion that we are on section 1 of Bill No. 8—contents of warehouse receipts. Of course, I understand I have to allow some latitude on the discussion of this clause, but I would ask hon. members to keep as close to the clause as they possibly can.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): I think, Mr. Chairman, the matters that have been discussed by both the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) and myself are all very definitely related to just that clause. Now, the hon. member has suggested two or three points and asked two or three questions to which I wish to refer. He states that the country elevators are semi-public institutions, and arguing therefrom he contends that therefore they should be available for whatever purpose the producer of grain desires. The hon. member also says that the country elevators are licensed and regulated by the government. That is true. So is a drug store, so is practically every institution in this country that does business with the public. But because they are so licensed and regulated, does it follow that they are public institutions, to be used by the public for whatever purpose they wish?

Mr. CAMPBELL: May I be permitted to correct the hon. gentleman?

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): They represent private investment of capital that is regulated under the terms of the Grain Act. The hon. gentleman also says he is not sure whether the amount these country elevators are now by law entitled to charge for the handling of grain is remunerative. Now, generally he was very fair, but I think he overstepped the mark a little there. He tells us that our country elevators are entitled to charge 2½ cents for specially binned grain. That is true. I ask him what percentage of the grain handled in the west is specially binned; is it 10 per cent, taking the whole of the west?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Yes, considerably more.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Would the hon. member say 15 per cent?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Well, he is misinformed.

Mr. EVANS: It is 50 per cent sometimes.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): At a given point perhaps. The hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) knows very well that 50 per cent of the grain throughout the west is not specially binned—not even 15 per cent.

Mr. EVANS: It depends on the season.

Mr. CAMPBELL: In some years it is 50 per cent, at some points more.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): That is begging the question. I say, averaging the wheat crop year in and year out, not 15 per cent is specially binned.

Mr. EVANS: You are wrong.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Then it is an honest mistake. That is my definite information. So much for the amount of grain on which they can charge that 2½ cents a bushel for handling. On all the other grain the rate fixed by the Canada grain commissioners is 1¾ cents a bushel. The hon. member for Mackenzie suggests to this House that he does not know whether or not this rate pays the country elevators. Well, if he does not know, he is the only member of the pool who is in that position. If he refers to the report of the Turgeon Commission, a commission that made a most exhaustive examination of the grain trade generally, he will there find it stated, and it is well known throughout the west by farmers and men in the grain trade, that the 1¾ cents per bushel handling charge does not pay for the money invested in those country elevators.

Mr. MILLAR: The time was when they did pay. They do not pay now because their number has been unduly multiplied by the grain trade.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): The hon. member admits that that rate does not pay at the present time?

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): I am speaking to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar). He has just interpolated that the time was when they did pay, but now they do not.

Mr. MILLAR: I admit frankly they do not pay now. They did pay. The reason they do not pay now is that they have been unduly multiplied by the grain trade.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): I thank the hon. member for that frank answer—which I could not get from the hon. member who represents Mackenzie—because the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has sat on several grain commissions and knows what he is talking about in that regard. Now the hon. member for Mackenzie says: Well, I have the word of the chairman of the grain commission that if this grain is diverted from the country elevators to our terminals, and if the rate of 1¾ cents does not pay, then he will regulate it so it will pay. Is that evidence upon which this House should act in view of the admission of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle that 1¾ cents a bushel handling charge does not pay those private companies? There is no provision in this amendment for increases in rates. The hon. member for Mackenzie suggests that if after three or four years' trial we find it does not pay, we have the word of the grain commission that they will raise the rate.

Mr. EVANS: Does not the hon. member know that only a few years ago they offered to handle the grain for nothing? How did they make their money then?

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): I do not know that as a matter of fact.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of privilege. The hon. member is misquoting me. He stated that I said if after three or four years we find it does not pay we will raise the rate. I made no such statement whatever.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): I accept that; I did not intentionally misquote the hon. member. Cut out the three or four years; what guarantee has this House that if this amendment is passed and it is found that these rates do not pay, they will be raised? I submit that this is not a sufficient ground on which to pass this legislation. The hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) suggests that the elevator companies are willing to accept a lower rate, or to handle it for nothing. I am so accustomed to extreme statements from the hon. member for Rosetown on any subject he discusses that I attach no importance to that remark. The hon. member for Mackenzie says assuming that the private elevator companies do go to the grain commission and say, "One and three-quarters cents handling charge in the country does not pay; we want to raise it to three cents," they will raise it. Suppose it is raised to three cents. In theory that is all right, but what will happen? Take a country point where there is a pool elevator and a private elevator; the private elevator raises its rates to three cents and the pool elevator stores grain for two or two and a half cents. How much grain will the private elevator get? You may ask how the pool can store it for two or two and a half cents while the other elevator charges three cents. The pool does not need to care; if it loses on storage charges at the country point under the co-operative system those losses will be made up at the other end. So far as the operation of its business goes the pool need not charge a cent at a country point; they could store the grain free. But they would have to make up the loss at the other end, and in the final result it would make no difference to the farmer. Therefore, as a matter of practical competition, the line elevators cannot raise their rates as against the pool elevators.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): It is not carried. I may say that since I have been in this House many hours and even days have been spent wrangling over matters of far less importance than this amendment. The hon. member for Mackenzie suggested that it is impossible for the farmer to be present at the country point when his grain is loaded. It is not physically impossible, but I will grant that as a fractical proposition it certainly is not convenient, and if he wishes to term it impossible I will not quarrel with him. But as the law exists the farmer does not need to be present to see his grain weighed, because he has a warehouse receipt which calls for delivery of weight and grade at the terminal of the company which accepted his grain for storage. The hon. member suggests to this House that if this amendment goes through, private line companies will still have custody of the grain from the time it leaves their country elevator; by some regulation which he suggests but which is not in the act, they are able to keep control of and examine the grain at any point, and he challenges anyone to deny it. Any man familiar with the shipping of commodities knows that to be impractical and impossible. As soon as the farmer goes to the country elevator and says, "Load out my car of grain and ship it to the pool", what happens? The elevator operator must load that car of grain and bill it, not to his company at the pool but to that farmer at the pool, and at no point in transit has he the right of inspection or examination. I grant you that the hon. member might be able to work out some provision, to go along with this amendment, which would give him that right, but there is nothing of that kind contained in the act and we must take the act as it is.

[Mr. W. W. Kennedy.]

The hon. member also suggests that they want their own identical grain delivered to the pool in order that they may get the benefit of any additional protein content of any particular wheat. I submit that that is an argument in favour of their objective. I do not dispute it, but let them build their own country elevators, gather the grain and ship it, and in that way they will get the additional protein content. In querying the position I take as to the economic entity of a company's plant for handling grain, the hon. member suggested that terminal elevators and country elevators were not bound up as an economic entity. He said, "Will the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre tell me how it is that the government's terminal elevators get on without country elevators?" Well, government institutions have a way of getting on without paying their expenses which does not apply to private institutions, and I tell him that the government terminals do not pay as such.

Mr. COOTE: Does the hon. member know that the total earnings of the government elevator at Port Arthur over a period of ten years have been $4,924,000 with an expenditure of $1,474,000, leaving a net operating surplus of $3,450,000?

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Let me ask the hon. member a question. Did they make that profit without handling grain?

Mr. COOTE: They made the profit without having any feeder.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Will you tell me where the private line companies will get their grain, without country feeders?

Mr. COOTE: I suppose they will get it where the government elevators get their grain.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Not if the pool carries out the intention which is suggested as a reason for this amendment. They say they want to get the wheat into their own terminals, and certainly the private line companies want the same thing. Where the government elevators will get their wheat it is difficult to say unless it is the surplus in busy seasons, and elevators cannot be made to pay on that basis.

Issue has been taken with my statement of the amount of money invested by the private grain trade in elevators, terminals and equipment. My figure of $85,000,000 did not include the pool investment, nor that of the private farmers' companies. This figure was given me from a reliable source as the actual present day value of the investment of the private grain trade; it is not $45,000,000, as suggested by my hon. friend, but $85,000,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): It will probably be carried in just a moment. I do thank hon. members for their patience in listening to me. I am probably just as tired as they are. The history of this bill a year ago may be of interest to some of the members of the government who are in a hurry to get it through. and to this point I would particularly direct the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell). I am sure he will correct me if I am misinformed, but I understand that in the committee on Agriculture last year the minister spoke in favour of the amendment, but when the matter came up for discussion in the House he voted against it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is not right.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): I am glad to know that the minister is more consistent than my information led me to believe. I was wondering whether he was going to support or oppose this bill.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have supported this legislation from its inception, and I am going to do so to-night.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): And you have never spoken against it either in the House or in committee?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Never.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): I wonder how about the hon. member for Brandon, the leader of the Progressive party? I think I have the records to show that a year ago he not only spoke against this same amendment, but voted against it. Am I right?

Mr. FORKE: Even the best of men make mistakes.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): I find myself wondering by what process of reasoning he has changed his mind from a year ago from opposing this measure to now supporting it, as I assume he is going to do. I have had no indication in the House of his attitude, although I had in committee. I am sure that, interested as he has been in the growing of wheat in western Canada, of which he is so fond of telling us, for a matter of thirty or forty years, he must have had sufficient experience a year ago to direct him how he should vote.

That brings me to this, and it is my last point. I would ask the House, is it because of any change in his opinion as to the merits of this bill that he is now supporting it, or is it because of political expediency? Is the passing of this Bill No. 8—I do not want to use a term that will be offensive to the acting leader of the government—

Mr. LAPOINTE: He has better information now.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): This bill which did not receive the support of the government a year ago is now taken up by the government, I am assuming and I ask for what purpose? At least the circumstances to my mind are suspicious, and if we could put on Hansard the facts as I know they are in the minds and in the hearts of the sponsors of this bill, we would see some reason for this Bill No. 8, an act to amend the Canada Grain Act, being given such consideration by the government immediately after it was assured of the support of the group which is sponsoring this bill in favour of the amendment in connection with the excise tax on automobiles. I ask the House now to consider this matter on its merits. I leave it in their hands.

Mr. ROGERS: After my long experience in western Canada, and in the grain business for a very long time, I trust that the committee will bear with me for just a few minutes. Legislation such as that which is now before the House is always dangerous in that it interferes with vested rights. You have been told to-night of the vested interests incident to the terminal elevators, and the country elevators as well, in western Canada. Legislation, I say, under those conditions is always dangerous and is, in general terms, unsound in principle and unjust in its application. May I hope that this legislation, when it becomes law, will not work out in that manner? I am free to say, however, that I believe the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) and the other members who sit around him in that part of the House will be back here in one or two years asking that this legislation be repealed, believing and recognizing, as they will then, that it is bad in principle, that it will work out with disadvantage to themselves, and prove of no advantage to the grain trade of western Canada. Believing that, Mr. Chairman, I only wish to express my regret that this legislation has been brought before the House. Still more do I regret that it is plain that this legislation is going to carry, because I am confident that it will work out to the detriment of the grain growers of the country, as it will work out to the detriment of the grain carrying trade of western Canada. That is all I have to say. I just wanted to put myself on record that I am confident that in one or two years these same gentlemen who are promoting this measure to-night will be back here seeking a change in the act at the hands of parliament to relieve them from the conditions in which they are placing themselves by passing this legislation to-night.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I beg to move to add as clause 2 of Bill No. 8 the following:

2. Subsection 2 of section 193 of the said act is amended by inserting the words "Moose Jaw" after the word "Edmonton" in the forth line and also by inserting the words "or the words Moose Jaw" after the word "Edmonton" in the eight line thereof.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): I would like the mover to explain the purpose of his amendment.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The effect of this amendment is to make Moose Jaw an order point. The Board of Grain Commissioners at the present time are establishing a grain inspection point at Moose Jaw and to make it a practical success an order point has to be made there. That can only be done by an amendment to the act. When Edmonton and Calgary were made inspection points, the act was immediately amended to include Edmonton and Calgary in this section. That is all I am asking now with regard to Moose Jaw.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): The hon. member seems to be putting the cart before the horse. He says that the Board of Grain Commissioners have under advisement the matter of making Moose Jaw an inspection point, and therefore he wants this amendment made. If that is the intention of the board I suggest that he should have been able to come here with the information that that had been done, or at least have produced some evidence before the Agriculture committee to show that it was the definite intention of the board to make Moose Jaw an inspection point.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps the minister could tell us at once.

Mr. ROBB: The government have after consideration and consultation with the Board of Grain Commissioners intimated that an inspection point will be established at Moose Jaw, and the Board of Grain Commissioners are now instructed to make preparations to inspect the next year's crop there.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $12,000,000 FOR TERMINAL FACILITIES

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to authorize a loan to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal in an amount not exceeding $12,000,000 to carry on the construction of terminal facilities, upon approval by the Governor in Council of detailed plans, specifications and estamates for such works and the deposit of debentures of the corporation to cover said loan.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Hon. ROBERT ROGERS (South Winnipeg): No, Mr. Speaker. This motion proposes a very large expenditure and before we even permit its introduction we should have some explanation. I would ask the leader of the government that the resolution be allowed to stand until to-morrow, at all events until we are given some details. It is a very heavy expenditure to authorize in a few minutes.

Mr. CARDIN: We are only dealing now with the resolution. Full details of what is proposed will be presented on the second reading of the bill. We simply desire to advance the proposed legislation a stage.

Mr. ROGERS: You will present all the details showing the necessity for this expenditure?

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Mr. STEVENS: I agree with the hon. member for South Winnipeg in his request for information. The resolution deals with a large sum. I take this opportunity of saying that as far as I know Montreal has always paid its interest on advances from the government, and I think the harbour commission of Vancouver is in the same position. But this is a large sum, $12,000,000 and I would ask the minister—I am not expecting him to give it to me now—to be prepared to furnish information when the House is in committee regarding certain expenditures that have been made as to which information was laid on the Table last session. I refer, for instance, to the cold storage plant in Montreal. Speaking from memory it was estimated, by the engineer of the harbour commission that the expenditure upon that plant would be $900,000, but I understand it amounts to pretty nearly $3,000,000. There was also a jetty, if I recall the facts aright, or other works, where the actual expenditure exceeded beyond all reason the estimate of the engineer. Furthermore, there was some extension to the elevators proposed. These matters were dealt with in returns brought down last year but which we had no opportunity of discussing. I would therefore ask the minister to give an explanation of these wide discrepancies between the amount expended and the amount estimated. Then I think we are also entitled to a statement as to the amount of Montreal harbour bonds outstanding or held by the government, and the earnings of the port. I am sure the harbour commission have paid their interest, but the House ought to be informed as to the manner in which the interest has been paid and if there has been any delinquency in that regard. I do not think there has been, but if not let us have the information in an absolutely official manner. I think a full statement of that character will tend to shorten any debate on the matter, and also will give the House confidence in voting a large amount of this character.

Mr. CARDIN: I shall be pleased to give all the details that have been asked for by my hon. friend when we reach the second reading of the bill.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In the meantime has my hon. friend any idea of what this is for? Because the sooner we get that information the sooner we will be able to deal with the bill.

Mr. CARDIN: I can give that information now.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If you please.

Mr. CARDIN: The idea is to spend a certain amount of money in harbour dredging

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How much?

Mr. CARDIN: About $800,000. Then on wharves, piers and basins, $5,400,000; on plant, $155,000; on shops and buildings $322,000; on rails and electrification, $1,342,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Is that for switching?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes. For permanent sheds $300,000; for grain elevators $3,155,000; and there are sundries amounting to $142,000. I will give further details when we reach the second reading, but the items I have enumerated are the largest items.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When we have these details under consideration the minister will advise us at the same time as to the total amount of business done by the port?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The total amount of business done in grain, the grain storage at present, the necessity for further grain storage, and the necessity for all these different works having regard to the volume of business.

Mr. CARDIN: I will.

Mr. MULLINS: We have been passing large sums of money during the past few days in comparison with the few millions apportioned to the Hudson Bay railway. Last night we put through $14,000,000 for the Welland canal, and you are now slipping through $12,000,000 for Montreal harbour. Will there be any money left for Nelson harbour? I should like to ask the minister that question. To western members these amounts are staggering.

Mr. CARDIN: We are not "slipping through" any amount at all; we are only dealing with the resolution which ordinarily precedes the introduction of the bill. At the next sitting we will deal with the bill itself, and my hon. friend will have ample opportunity to discuss the request we are making. The government is not making a gift but a loan to the harbour commission of Montreal. The harbour commission have paid interest to the government in the past upon all the loans made to them, and they are in a position to pay interest even on the money they are asking for in this instance.

Mr. MULLINS: We may need a loan for Nelson harbour. We will have our indebtedness as well as Montreal, and I should like to see some money left in the treasury.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think I can promise my hon. friend that if the Nelson harbour commission will undertake to pay interest as the Montreal harbour commission does, it will get a loan.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to say just a word on this resolution. I have often wondered what was the purpose of bringing in a resolution previous to the introduction of a bill unless it was to secure the wish of the House as to whether the bill should be introduced. As a rule when these resolutions are brought forward we get very little information such as would enable hon. members to determine whether or not they approve of the proposed legislation. I think it would be good policy on the part of any government, if they think it necessary to introduce a resolution preceding a bill, to advise the House exactly what provision the bill is going to make. Then they would know whether it was the wish of the House that the bill should be proceeded with. Personally I cannot object to-night to this resolution. I do think, however, that the amount is very large, and if the government are taking it for granted that the House approves and wishes them to introduce the bill it would certainly be a good time to present information in a general way as to what is to be done with the $12,000,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The resolution is simply an extra precaution in the way of preparing members for the bill when it is introduced. It draws their attention to the fact that a bill on the subject will be presented for their consideration. I agree that it is well that information should be furnished on the resolution, but I think far too much time of the House has been taken up, certainly this session, in discussing resolutions. The resolution is merely an introductory feature, but in some cases we have spent much more time in discussing the resolution than in discussing the bill itself. At the time the Grand Trunk acquisition took place, the government of the day, which had charge of that measure, refused to allow the resolution even to be discussed, holding it was not debatable. I cite that case to show how much beyond the former point of view the present administration has gone in regard to resolutions which have been introduced.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: A departure from sound practice.

Mr. COOTE: I hope the business of the House will not be carried on according to precedents established by former governments. I think it would be far better to give the members of the House some information on the resolution; then if that information leads them to believe the bill should not be introduced, they have a chance to express their opinions. After the bill is introduced and we vote against the second reading, it becomes equivalent to a vote of want of confidence. Therefore I believe the purpose to be served by resolutions is altogether lost if no information be given when the resolution is introduced.

Mr. HAY: Can the minister give us the total amount loaned up to the present time to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal?

Mr. CARDIN: The amount was $44,000,000 up to December 1 last, upon which they have always paid interest.

Mr. RYCKMAN: How much of principal has been paid?

Mr. CARDIN: None at present.

Mr. RYCKMAN: What sinking fund has been provided? It is a very nice thing to be able to borrow millions of money and simply pay the interest. As hon. members know, a man named Ponzi went to Atlanta penitentiary twice—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CARDIN: If I am not mistaken, they have already a sinking fund of over $1,000,000.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Cardin thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 189, to provide for a loan to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 11.50 p.m.

OBJECTIONABLE PRINTED MATTER

ADMISSION TO CANADA

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. H. C. HOCKEN (Toronto West Centre): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin) and in doing so to read an extract from a magazine called The American Mercury, published in Boston and edited by H. L. Mencken. In an editorial of the issue for June the following reflection will be found:

> The average Englishman is a dull fellow and seldom shows any enterprise, but he knows how to follow leaders who have what he lacks, and he did it to immense effect for many centuries. But to-day, it must be obvious, there are few leaders for him to follow, and most of the few are pathetically fourth rate. It would be a sheer impossibility to imagine Palmerston or Disraeli swindled and made a spectacle of as Austen Chamberlain was at Geneva. It would be equally impossible to imagine the England of the great days following such dubs as Baldwin, Asquith and Winston Churchill—half of them fanatics and the other half rogues. The one English statesman who has shown any genuine skill at his trade for a generation past is Lloyd George, a petty attorney from a Welsh country town—the sort of fellow who, a century ago, would have served his country by sitting to Dickens or Thackeray, not by bossing the state. Nor has luck run with the Motherland on the next higher level. The amiable George V is so plainly a blob that alluding to the fact becomes a sort of cruelty, and his heir, searching the empire for a horse that won't throw him, becomes simply a comic character, even to the English. More and more they miss the waspish but hard-headed Victoria, and on blue days they miss dear Albert too.

I would ask the Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin) if that kind of magazine is to be allowed to enter the Dominion of Canada.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Customs is not in his seat, but I can assure my hon. friend that the minister will be as anxious as he is to avoid a casus belli or improper reflections in any way. I am sure he will look into the magazine and consider carefully whether its articles are of such a character as should cause it to be prohibited.

STRAWBERRY IMPORTATIONS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. JAMES STEEDSMAN (Souris): I would ask the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin), if before applying any dumping duty to strawberries entering this country an inquiry will be made into the retail price at which strawberries are selling in the prairie provinces. I am informed on reliable authority that strawberries are selling retail in Manitoba at $7.75 per crate of 24 quarts. What I want to know is will the officers of the department be instructed to make an inquiry into this matter before any action is taken with regard to the dumping duty?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I think my hon. friend may assume that his request in that particular will be met.

WELLAND CANAL VOTE—$14,000,000

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I desire to direct to the ministry a question based on an incident that occurred in this House on June 9. As Your Honour will remember, we had just passed the Hudson Bay vote, and there was some confusion, some noise in the chamber, when the next item was called, which happened to be the item of $14,000,000 for the Welland canal. I very distinctly heard the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning) say: "If you will allow me to get the Hudson Bay material into this envelope, and to draw the Welland canal material out of another envelope, we will proceed," or words to that effect. I assumed, and so did many of my colleagues, that the minister was about to make a statement with regard to the item, but it appears that the Welland canal item carried quickly without any statement having been made. I desire to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals and the government if they would consent to the restoration of that item for the purpose of allowing the minister to make an explanation of that $14,000,000 vote.

Mr. MALCOLM McLEAN (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, it had been my intention to make the same request of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning), but as it has been preferred by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), I shall simply endorse his request.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, I am of course in the hands of the House in regard to the matter. I was quite ready to proceed to give any information desired by members of the committee with respect to the Welland canal item, but from all quarters of the House came cries of "Carried," and I thought the item was carried. In addition to that, another item dealing with the Welland canal was called, and I believe carried also. But if there is an opportunity under the rules of the House again to get into a position where I can give any information which any hon. member desires with regard to the Welland canal, I shall be happy to do so. I do not know how under the rules the matter may be revived, but I have certainly no objection to giving the information.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would ask again whether the minister would place on Hansard an explanation with regard to this vote. The House is entitled to the information. The item only carried, I am convinced, on a misunderstanding. The minister, we assumed, was going to make a statement, but that statement was not made.

Mr. DUNNING: I am not just positive how a matter of this kind can be dealt with under the rules, but on the next occasion when the estimates of the Department of Railways and Canals come up for consideration in committee of Supply, I shall be pleased, with the consent of the House, to give the information, and in that way it can go on Hansard, as well as any discussion relating to it. I merely want to assure my hon. friends that I have no intention of avoiding a discussion with regard to the matter.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—YOUNG-PRINCE ALBERT BRANCH LINE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to read part of the following telegram from Prince Albert, and ask a question concerning it:

> Understand that board of trade here have sent a resolution to Ottawa favouring the handing over of the Grand Trunk Pacific line from Young to Prince Albert to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Believe that this would be the biggest steal of public property ever yet pulled off.

The telegram goes on:

This action of the Canadian Pacific Railway will supplement the action of last year when the people's railway was debarred from the Nipawin country, thus losing an enormous amount of revenue, and if the Canadian Pacific Railway get the established line referred to, the chances of the Canadian National Railway to gain greater success will receive a severe setback in this part of the country.

H. D. DAVIS,
Alderman and Chairman Western Lines
B.R.C. of A.

May I ask if the government has received such a request from the Board of Trade of Prince Albert, and further, whether there is any intention of turning over this branch line to the Canadian Pacific.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): As the member for Prince Albert, I might say to my hon. friend that if there were anything really serious in the message he has received, a message from the Board of Trade would have been sent to me. I have received nothing from that source, nor so far as I am aware has the government.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The part of the telegram I omitted to read, thinking it irrevelant, contained the information that a similar message had been sent to the Prime Minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that whoever sent that message to my hon. friend found it necessary to make that assertion, for up to the present time I have not received such a message, but no doubt it is on its way.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): Perhaps I should say a word in reply to my hon. friend's question. There has been some talk in the vicinity of Prince Albert as to the desirability—

Mr. RYCKMAN: Who is the member for Prince Albert?

Mr. DUNNING: I am replying, as Minister of Railways, to a question relating to the possible disposal of a portion of the Canadian National system. If my hon. friend thinks I am out of order in doing so, I shall be pleased to sit down.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to have an answer from the Minister of Railways.

Mr. DUNNING: There has been some talk among the people of Prince Albert, and possibly among responsible bodies in that city, regarding the desirability of having the Canadian Pacific Railway enter that city. The Canadian National Railway at the present time has two roads running north into the city of Prince Albert, one the former Canadian Northern line, and the other the former Grand Trunk Pacific line.

Mr. HOCKEN: Cut one out.

Mr. DUNNING: Well, there is territory to be served by both. They are both necessary to serve the people of the areas through which they pass; no one who knows the country will doubt that. I have been led to believe, as Minister of Railways, that the citizens of Prince Albert generally would welcome some such arrangement in order to get what they believe to be the benefits of competition. The telegram which my hon. friend read is a duplicate of one which reached me this morning, and is the first evidence of any dissension in that regard in that city that I have received.

With regard to the question itself, I may say that no sale has been made. Proposals were made, I am given to understand, by the Canadian Pacific Railway to the Canadian National Railway in connection with the matter and were declined by the Canadian National some time ago.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT, 1915

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. 115, to amend the Special War Revenue Act, 1915.

Mr. LAWRENCE A. WILSON (Vaudreuil-Soulanges) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I would ask my colleagues of the French language to bear once more with me, while I express myself in the language of the majority of this House, in order to make a few remarks in connection with the bill at present before the House.

Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of making some suggestions to the Minister of Finance. I shall be very cautious this time. When I made my maiden speech the other day I had had no acquaintance with Hansard. I find that the debates reporters are not only very capable stenographers, expert stenographers, but are really photographers because I think that every move I made on the occasion referred to was noted in Hansard.

Mr. MANION: Was your speech illustrated?

Mr. WILSON (Vaudreuil-Soulanges): It was rather in the nature of a cartoon. My purpose in rising on the present occasion is to help the Minister of Finance to increase the revenue and thereby reduce taxation. I have the pretension to think that if my suggestions are accepted by the House they will result in increasing the revenue of this country by $20,000,000 per annum.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Hear, hear.

Mr. WILSON (Vaudreuil-Soulanges): This may seem a very large amount but I believe I can convince the House that I have not overstated it. I desire to make an absolutely non-partisan speech, and should any hon. member wish to ask me any questions while making these few remarks I will do my utmost to answer them. Now let me refer to alcohol, spirits, whiskey. These are words that are very seldom heard in this House. They have been heard, I believe, during the last four months in the Customs inquiry, and I think it is an opportune moment to bring the question into more striking relief in this House. I quite appreciate that the subject is not a popular one among members of the House of Commons. It is rather a delicate question for various reasons. May I say that I was president of the Licensed Victuallers Association in the Dominion of Canada for twenty-five years and during that time our good friends—my good friends—of the Dominion Alliance and other associations of that class, invariably sent out a questionnaire on the eve of every election to candidates asking them if they were in favour of the suppression of the sale, manufacture and importation of wines, beer and alcohol. I was therefore obliged, as president of the Licensed Victuallers Association, to counteract that menace by asking the different candidates in a great many divisions whether they would be in favour of the sale, the legalized sale of wines and spirits. That placed the candidate in a happier position and the issue was not forced. I simply mention that en passant.

You are all aware, of course, of the many changes that have taken place in the license laws in the different provinces in Canada. On that question I have nothing to say, because each province, according to the British North America Act, has an absolute right to say whether there shall be license or non-license, and to enact its own laws on this subject. But the federal government has the sole and absolute right to legislate concerning importations, the duties upon liquors and the conditions under which distillation may be carried on. The duty upon domestic liquor at the present day is $9 per imperial gallon, and on imported liquor $10 per imperial gallon—100 degrees proof. Proof means 100 degrees. Consequently 9 cents per degree is paid in the case of domestic spirits, and 10 cents per degree in the case of imported spirits. Scotch whiskey, brandy and gin are usually shipped by reputable dealers at 20 degrees under proof. That is good drinking strength. Consequently it pays $8 per gallon or $16 per case; there are always two gallons to the case. In Great Britain today the duty is £3 15s. 4d. per gallon, or $28 per case. I have made it a little lower. It is really $30 and $32 per case according to strength. However, the duty is $28 per case in Great Britain or $1 per bottle more than the duty here. Liquors in wood, that is in the cask, are generally shipped at proof strength or 100 degrees, as the importers do not wish to pay freight upon water, and the whiskey is generally "knocked down" or reduced by the importers here. That is well known in the trade. And still some think that the duty should be lowered and thereby diminish the amount of smuggling or illicit distillation. Even if we reduced the duty to $2 per gallon it would not prevent those abuses, as spirits do not cost more than 45 to 50 cents per gallon to manufacture.

The revenues derived in Great Britain last year from beer, wines and spirits were as follows:

|---|---|
| Customs— | |
| Beer | £5,591,362 |
| Rum | 4,839,167 |
| Brandy | 2,646,265 |
| Other spirits | 1,407,222 |
| Wine | 3,368,648 |
| | £17,852,664 |
| Excise— | |
| Spirits | £45,144,092 |
| Beer | 76,110,638 |
| License duty | 162,888 |
| Liquor | 4,144,555 |
| Other | 467,867 |
| | £126,030,040 |
| Grand total | £143,882,704 |

Now, listen to this marvellous legislation or order in council in connection with the customs tariff on imported liquor:

> Provided, as to all goods specified in items Nos. 156 and 156a when of less strength than the strength of proof, that no reduction or allowance shall be made in the management thereof for duty purposes, below the strength of fifteen per cent under proof.

This means that imported liquor must pay duty at least upon 85 degrees of spirits even if it is half that strength. If the liquor is 25 degrees under proof, it pays $2 per case upon water, and if it is 40 degrees under proof, it pays $5 per case upon water, but there is no such provision for domestic spirits. It pays an excise duty only according to its strength, and I regret to say that I have known ryes in bottles, bearing the excise stamp, shipped from certain Canadian distilleries at 40 and 50 degrees under proof, given a preference over the imported of $6.20 and $8 per case respectively.

Is it fair to the Canadian government and to the people? No other country in the world has such an anomaly. To my mind the government should enact a law that no liquor in bottles, imported or domestic, should be allowed to be bottled or sold less than 25 degrees under proof and, in order to protect our distillers, the government should increase the customs duty to $2 per gallon, and leave the excise as it is at present. The government would reap a much larger revenue from both the foreign and Canadian distilleries and, at the same time, protect our home industries, which is only right, but, conditionally, that the strength be as indicated.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I come to that wonderful two-year law—a standing joke for many, many years. The excise law states that Canadian spirits must be kept in bond for maturing purposes at least two years before being offered for sale, but it fails to state that the spirits must be aged in oak or wooden casks. This is the little joker and the laughing stock of the foreign distillers or those who know. The great bulk of spirits, actually over 10,000,000 gallons, held in bond by the Canadian distilleries is kept in huge copper tanks or steel barrels where no perceptible evaporation is possible.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Would the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILSON (Translation): With pleasure.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): On what date was the order in council just mentioned passed?

Mr. WILSON: That order in council dates back to Alexander Mackenzie's time. It is very, very old.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It has whiskers.

Mr. WILSON: I must say, in justice, that I know of some distilleries that do age a portion of their output in wood, I have seen hundreds of barrels in Messrs. Walkers' warehouse, and I hope they reserve a fair portion for their friends in Canada.

Spirits cannot improve in copper tanks—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Hear, hear.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): How about human tanks?

Mr. WILSON: Well, we pour it down the sewer. Spirits cannot improve in copper tanks any more than whiskey can improve in bottles, even if kept a hundred years. In these receptacles there is consequently no evaporation of fusel-oil and such whiskey should not be permitted for consumption.

Notwithstanding this, the law allows these distilleries 17 per cent for evaporation of spirits in copper tanks, namely, 4 per cent the first year; 3 per cent the second year; 2 per cent the third year; 2 per cent the fourth year and 1 per cent per year from the fifth to the tenth year, which equals 17 per cent allowance for supposed shrinkage, but when the spirits are kept in wood, an allowance of 33 per cent is made for the same period of time. This conclusively proves that the evaporation or shrinkage is considerably more in wood than in copper tanks.

In Great Britain, whiskey must be kept for three years in oak or wooden casks before being released for home consumption, but the foreign distilleries in Great Britain, France, Holland or any other country can export their new, raw material, made yesterday, and that is the "rotgut" we frequently receive. It is true that a recent order in council requires that foreign spirits should be at least two years old, but where is the proof? And, moreover, the order in council does not state it must be aged in wood; certainly not the gin from Holland or England that arrives here as colourless as the day it came out of the still, whereas if it had been stored in wood it would have been straw or amber colour.

I would also draw attention, Mr. Speaker, to the many false representations on the bottles, flasks and other packages of goods coming into this country, and would advise the government to adopt the English law in that respect. No bottle of brandy can enter England without an official stamp stating that it is distilled from pure grape wine, and it is not surprising that England has on her bonded docks the finest wines and liquors in the world.

I have been familiar with the Customs and Excise department, now merged into one, for nearly half a century, and I have a very high appreciation of the standing of the deputy ministers and other officials in those departments. I am not speaking of the ministers themselves because they never remain long enough. To-day we have excellent officials, and I am sure they would welcome an order in council, providing that excise stamps, affixed to bottles, should show clearly whether the contents have been aged in wood or in copper tanks, with the date of bottling as well as age and strength. I have no doubt these gentlemen will assist me in making my suggestions more concrete, so as to offer the government a bill that will be satisfactory to all concerned.

Let us build up the same reputation for our goods as they have done in Great Britain and, at the same time, increase our revenue. This would decrease bootlegging and moonshine stuff, as the people would insist upon having the article certified by the government, and would refuse the concoctions as we would refuse a counterfeit bank note.

With reference to recent smuggling of liquor into the United States via Canada, owing to prohibition in the United States, I believe this could be remedied to the satisfaction of the English, American and Canadian governments. In this connection, liquor has been imported consigned to a bonded warehouse in Canada, then export papers have been obtained to tranship these goods to St. Pierre and Miquelon, Mexico, Japan or the Sandwich islands. These goods, as has been clearly proven in the customs probe, never reach their supposed destination, but are landed in transit on the American side. This can easily be prevented by the Customs department, of which the hon. Mr. Boivin is now the vigilant head, by not allowing any transhipment of foreign liquors in bond after having been warehoused at any port of entry in the Dominion. Duty would then have to be paid upon such consignments and the government would derive a larger revenue.

It is easy to understand, Mr. Speaker, that no foreign shipper would consign goods to Montreal or Toronto if they were purchased by a legitimate dealer in New York, Chicago, New Orleans or San Francisco. This would not prevent shipment through Canada from the other side to another country, on a through bill of lading, and would therefore not deprive transportation companies of freight charges upon such shipments.

I will not dwell upon the question of wine at any length. I might say, however, that wine should never be classed with spirits. Spirits are distilled and wine is made from the natural fermentation of the grape. I would suggest, however, that no wine, either foreign or native, should be allowed to be sold if manufactured from dried raisins with sugar and alcohol added. The governments of Portugal, Spain, France and Germany have very strict regulations regarding the sale of wines for consumption in their countries. There is nothing more pleasant or healthful than pure wine with a lovely bouquet, developed only by the evaporation of ethers, and the combination of the natural spirit with the succinic, tartaric, tannic, citric and malic acids contained in the wine. The colouring is formed in the grape skin during its ripening, by the action of the sun and soil. But I will leave this to another occasion.

In conclusion I wish to assure my prohibition and temperance friends, if there are any in this House, that I have no desire to interfere with their opinions concerning the liquor traffic. I respect the views of every man on that question, but I would remind them, if they allow me, that liquor is absolutely necesary in certain cases. I might tell hon. members about a certain town in Nevada where they have the most stringent prohibition law ever enacted. One provision of the law is that no person can purchase a drop of liquor unless he has been bitten by a snake, and the certificate which he has to obtain from the medical practitioner of the town must be endorsed by the mayor and three aldermen. One day a traveller arrived at the hotel in the town and said, "I must have a drop of brandy or I will die." The hotel man said: "You cannot get any liquor in this place unless you are bitten by a snake." Where are the snakes? "They are up in the mountain yonder." The poor man wended his way up the mountain with about a hundred pilgrims ahead of him, but when he reached the summit the snake was too tired and it refused to bite. It is a terrible thing to be deprived of liquor under those conditions. Only the other day a man was knocked unconscious at the corner of 42nd street and Fifth avenue, New York. He happened to have a flask in his hip pocket. On the way to the Bellevue hospital in the ambulance the poor man came to and he felt something trickling down his leg. He exclaimed: "Great Scott, I hope it's blood."

I have the honour which very few other hon. members have had of seeing Sir John A. Macdonald in this House as well as his successors. I was quite a young man, but we all liked Sir John and I think he liked me. I have seen all his successors, Sir John Thompson, Sir Charles Tupper, Sir Robert Borden, my right hon. friend, Mr. Meighen, and now my dear friend, Mr. Mackenzie King. I do not see any reason why I should not disclose this secret if it is a secret. I am sorry Hansard is here for part of my remarks. In 1896 I came to Ottawa and sat in the council chamber where I saw Mr. Fielding, Mr. Davies, Mr. Blair, Mr. Paterson, Sir Henry Joly de Lotbinière and Mr. Sifton. I came with the very proposition that I am bringing before the House to-day and they thought well of it.

I have been an agent for distilleries for some years and I think a good deal of our distillers. There are no better citizens than our distillers; but they have made millions and as I told some of the representatives of the distillers who are here to-day, I think that owing to our great war debt these gentlemen should give us a piece of the melon. I do not think it would be any hardship for them to agree that, outside of the changes I suggested, we should get a share of the profits. I do not know how that could be worked out, but it would be a good thing. As hon. members know, during the war there was a time of great uncertainty whether they should continue operations. There are hon. members who remember quite well when there was total prohibition and prevention of the manufacture of spirits in this country and there was a time when the distillers had cold feet. If they were to give this country a share of their profits we would be co-partners in their business; there would be a better feeling throughout the country, and there would be for the distillers more stability, which should exist as it does in all other countries. Otherwise, if you raise the two year law that I referred to a few minutes ago, you might have many distilleries cropping up throughout Canada as has occurred in Scotland, France and other countries.

Mr. HOCKEN: What limit would the hon. gentleman put upon their profits?

Mr. WILSON (Vaudreuil): That is a difficult question to answer. I do not know, but from what I know of the profits of the last fifty years which of course they have not on hand, but which have been handed down from father to son, I think they could give something. Hon. members know of the wealth of the large distilleries, such as the Corby's and the Seagram's. They certainly deserve it because they made better spirits than the American people did and they made a reputation in Canada for their product. They are valuable citizens; they give employment to large numbers of people and so on. This is a very delicate question because these gentlemen are good friends of mine; but I think they should do their share toward reducing our debt, and I am sure the leaders of the different parties in this House would look upon a project of that sort with some favour if there is still going to be distillation and sale.

In conclusion, let me refer to another source of revenue which I believe could be developed. I believe that our millionaire philanthropists in Canada should, while they are still living, do a little more than they are doing for the welfare of their country or their home cities or towns. Our Canadians are very charitable; in their wills they leave large amounts for hospitals and homes of different kinds. If they did that during their lifetime it would be more to their credit; they would see what they were doing, and it would help this country enormously. If a man who has an income of $200,000 or $300,000 a year gives $50,000 out of it, he is giving practically nothing if you take into consideration the income tax and the succession tax in Quebec. If a man is worth a million dollars he has to pay $60,000 in succession tax which the province gets. If while he is living he devotes some of his revenue to the public good he is doing something for the welfare of his country. Unfortunately, men who are wrapped up in business are not in the habit of handing out their money; they always think there is going to be a lean year or rainy day. It is only when they are dying that they see a different horizon and their outlook becomes broader. That is a question which these millionaires who are hoarding their capital should consider.

I may not have the honour of being very long in this House and this may be my last utterance. I feel that I could be easily replaced by a man who could do more for the country. But before I resign I must take this occasion to thank all hon. members for their kindly attitude toward me and for making me feel at home and comfortable. If I leave the House I shall have great pleasure in saying how well I was received by my friends from Ontario and the eastern and western provinces who understood my particular temperament and were kind and charitable.

Before resuming my seat I wish to take the House into my confidence in connection with a little dream I had the other night. We dream here a good deal. I dreamed that I died in Ottawa. I thought I was a senator and consequently I thought I was dead. I dreamed that I had left $100,000 to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), $100,000 to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen), and $100,000 to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb). It was stipulated in the will that they should each put into my coffin $1,000 to show that they had confidence in me and respected my word. This would prove that they believed I had the wherewithal to meet the provision of the will. Well, while lying there I saw the Prime Minister come along gaily and deposit $1,000 in fresh bills.

Mr. STEVENS: Or a promissory note?

Mr. WILSON (Vaudreuil): And the leader of the opposition put in his $1,000 in gold. The Minister of Finance afterwards came up to the coffin, took out his cheque book and his fountain pen, wrote out a cheque for $3,000, laid it on my chest, took out the $2,000 in bills and gold—and went to Huntingdon.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

PUBLIC WORKS

The House in committee of Supply, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Public Works—Maritime provinces generally—Dominion public buildings, $43,000.

Mr. ROGERS: The minister might explain this item briefly.

Hon. J. H. KING (Kootenay, Minister of Public Works): This is required for improvements, repairs and renewals in connection with public buildings in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island including the cities of Halifax and St. John for which in previous years special appropriations were asked. In 1925-26, $42,997 was spent. It is an annual vote.

Mr. ROGERS: For ordinary repairs?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. HANSON: I was not here when vote 133 was under discussion. If the minister would be good enough to give me the information I should like to know what will be the probable cost of the new post office at Chipman. I am anxious to get some information also with regard to the post office at Moncton.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The item was passed some days ago but I am glad to give the hon. gentleman the information. We are asking for $5,000 to complete the construction of the building at Chipman. A contract was entered into and out of the appropriation of $10,000 for 1925-26 $8,000 was spent, $7,500 being on the contract and $500 for the purchase of the site. An unexpended balance of $2,000 is being re-voted this year. The fixtures for the post office have been contracted for and are now being placed. For these fixtures six tenders were received, ranging from $945 to $1,576. The lowest tender of $945, from the Office Specialty Company, was accepted.

3 p.m.

Mr. HANSON: I am not so much concerned about the fixtures. What was the total cost of the structure including the site?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The contract was for $8,445.

Mr. HANSON: What about the building at Moncton? For a good many years the people there have been asking for a post office. Business men, boards of trade and other public bodies have been requesting the government to put up a new post office at a point east of the subway so-called, and notwithstanding the preference as to location indicated by these people the government bought a very expensive site from one of its own friends, the McManus Company. For that site they paid $40,000. The property is still occupied by the McManus people at a rental of $40 a month. A site costing $40,000 is being rented to the original vendor or a member of the family at the handsome sum of $40 a month, and no move has yet been made by the government to build the post office. Is this delay due to the opposition that has developed from the business men of Moncton, and if so is it the intention to abandon the proposed site? What does the minister intend to do about the matter, and why has nothing been done so far towards erecting the building? I believe this is a political deal made to suit the purposes of a valiant supporter of the government. The price paid was excessive, being nearly double the amount of the assessed valuation of the site, which is wholly unsuitable from the standpoint of the business people of Moncton, and the whole transaction has a very unsavoury smell. We ought to know something about it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I shall be glad to give my hon. friend full information on the subject. I absolutely resent his remarks. It is true that at the last session parliament did vote moneys for the purchase of a post office site in Moncton. Several sites were suggested. Those in the down-town section were carefully appraised as were also the proposed sites above the subway. The site my hon. friend speaks of was considered by the appraisers, by departmental officials and by myself—because I made an inspection—as the proper site for a post office building in Moncton. The price is a reasonable one and is confirmed by the assessors and by departmental officials. I am not prepared to say whether it suited the business community, but we had in mind other people than those with property to sell in the business section. We had petitions from people in the down-town section and from residents of Moncton, one for and one against the downtown location. If any gentlemen familiar with Moncton will, when arriving there by train, pass from the station across to the property owned by the government they will confirm my judgment and that of the officials of the department. This was a proper purchase and is an ideal spot for a public building in Moncton.

Mr. HANSON: If that is so, why have not the government constructed the building? Is it because Moncton voted against the government on October 29 last? Why is the building rented for the absurd sum of $40 a month? That is not an adequate rental for a building costing over $40,000. I would like to tell the committee that this was a residential property not in the business district, although it is on a continuation of the main street. I venture to say that the preponderance of opinion as evidenced by public bodies, and not by individuals having private interests to serve, has been against this site from the very beginning. But this property was purchased from one of the members of the New Brunswick legislature who supported the late government there, and so far as I can observe that is the only reason for the purchase. I ask why the building has not been proceeded with.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The property was bought because it was the proper site for a public building. The price was fair, but the criticism of my hon. friend is not fair.

Mr. HANSON: Would the minister tell me why construction is not being proceeded with?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. A large sum is required, and the matter is under consideration as to whether it is now opportune for us to proceed with the construction.

Item agreed to.

Public Works—Dominion public buildings—Improvements, repairs, et cetera, $102,000.

Mr. ROGERS: This amount is a re-vote from last year, is it not? Where is that amount to be spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is required for maintenance and repairs in connection with public buildings in Quebec, including those in Montreal which in previous years were carried under a special appropriation. Last year there was expended $101,990 from this vote, for the usual repairs and upkeep of buildings.

Item agreed to.

Public Works—Maisonneuve—public buildings, $50,000.

Mr. ROGERS: What is this amount for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is the purpose of the department to purchase a property there from the municipality. Maisonneuve has now become part of Montreal and they have no use for this public building, which has been examined by the officials and reported upon as a very suitable building for postal purposes. It is the intention of the government to secure this property from the municipality for that purpose.

Mr. ROGERS: Just a few years ago we built a splendid post office there. Is there any necessity for another?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The government bought a site at that time but a building was never constructed. I understand that site has been used by the municipality for a market place. It is proposed under this arrangement to take over from the municipality this municipal building, and exchange the site formerly bought for post office purposes.

Item agreed to.

Public Works—Montreal—Ordnance stores building, $24,550.

Mr. ROGERS: What is this amount for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is the sixth payment on the Grant garage on Hillside avenue, Westmount, under an order in council dated April 16, 1921. There is interest due and other items, making a total of $24,533, and the vote is for $24,550. This building was formerly called the Grant garage and is being used to house ordnance and garage stores. The premises were secured by the government in 1921 and are being paid for by yearly payments.

Item agreed to.

Public Works—Montreal general post office—reorganization, $50,000.

Mr. ROGERS: That is a very large item for improvements or reorganization. Surely they could get along with less.

Mr. MacLAREN: What is a postal station? Is that a post office?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. This amount is required for a reorganization of the interior arrangements of the Montreal post office in order to provide improved facilities for the handling of mail. This is requested by the Postmaster General's department; it is a departmental matter and is carried as such.

Mr. ROGERS: It seems to be a very large amount.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, but of course there is a large service at Montreal.

Item agreed to.

Public Works—Toronto—Postal station "A"—mechnical equipment, $50,000.

Mr. POWER: That is a very large item for Toronto.

Mr. HEAPS: There are two items I would like to ask about.

Mr. POWER: I have already asked a question in regard to the vote for mechanical equipment at Toronto.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount has been requested by the Post Office department to provide for the installation of mechanical equipment at postal station "A", Toronto, in order to handle the ever-increasing postal business there. This will effect a reduction in the operating expenses and will facilitate the despatch and delivery of mail. This amount is to be used in the establishment of a mechanical system for handling and forwarding parcel post; this class of mail matter at present is somewhat congested and requires relief. This is a recommendation and a request coming from the Post Office department to improve the facilities in Toronto for the handling of mail and parcel matter.

Mr. ROGERS: Is this all to be used in connection with the head office in Toronto?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is for postal station A, the Union station.

Mr. POWER: With the installation of this mechanical equipment, will it be possible to do away with a large number of the employees at the post office in Toronto?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not that knowledge; that comes within the Post Office department, but usually when mechanical improvements are installed it is with a view to increasing the facilities and improving the conditions.

Mr. ROGERS: I would point out that the post office at Toronto does a great deal more business than probably half the rest of the post offices in Canada put together.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Not more than Montreal.

Mr. ROGERS: Oh yes, far more than Montreal. There is no comparison at all.

Mr. HEAPS: There are two small items to which I wish to refer, the Hamilton armoury and the Niagara Falls armoury, in connection with which local improvement taxes are to be paid by the government. What is the policy of the government in this regard? Is the same practice followed in regard to similar buildings in other parts of Canada?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes and no. Usually in connection with local improvements adjoining public buildings, if the government is properly approached and the improvements are in conformity with the improvements being carried on by the citizens, a local improvement payment is made. Sometimes some municipalities make the improvements and then would assess the government of Canada. Municipalities who move in that way will have to take their chances as to whether they will receive favourable consideration or not. In some cases if the improvements are of such a nature that the department feels justified in compensating the municipality for those improvements, that is done. Usually I might say that in connection with sidewalk and street improvements adjoining public buildings, the government contribute to the local improvements.

Mr. HEAPS: Am I to understand that this is only a temporary charge for sidewalks and that sort of thing, or is this an annual fixed charge?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This payment is the government's share of the cost of sewerage and asphalt roadway on Robert street between James and John streets in the city of Hamilton. This is the cost complete; there are no carrying charges.

Mr. GEARY: I am very glad to see that the municipality of Hamilton is getting some return in the way of local improvement taxes. Is it the policy of the department to consider favourably all such requests, or is the policy of the department against giving consideration to requests of municipalities for payment of its proper share of local improvement taxes?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think that, generaly speaking, local improvements in the vicinity of government property would be considered favourably by the department and by the government, providing that the municipality is carrying on similar improvements in the vicinity.

Mr. GEARY: I beg to call the attention of the minister to a case in Toronto. It may be more convenient at a later date, but there is a case of hardship south of the armouries in Toronto.

Mr. McGIBBON: What is the total cost of the building at Gravenhurst?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The estimated total cost is $27,496.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will that complete the building?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That will complete the building.

Mr. GEARY: My hon. friend from Quebec South had a keen eye and found $50,000 for postal station A, Toronto. I have been looking in vain for some appropriation for a custom house in Toronto. I do not know whether it is coming along in the supplementary estimates, but I should like very much to know if the minister would say that consideration will be given to that pressing need. It is a pressing need. It has been spoken of a great deal, and I am not going to give the figures and dates that have been placed before the House from time to time, but to the best of my recollection it must be fifteen years ago that the site for the new customs house in Toronto was purchased and the old custom house destroyed. Business, as I understand from commercial people, is suffering from a very great inconvenience; the inconvenience of doing work through the present custom house makes itself felt very widely throughout the commercial life of the city. This building has been a long time coming, and I should like to know if the minister has some project in mind.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I quite agree with my hon. friend that the necessities for an improved customs building in Toronto are great. If he will go back a few years he will remember that it was considered wise at that time to remove the building that was serving as a custom house. That building was taken down, and later the proposal to rebuild was abandoned. That was in the after the war period, and my hon. friend no doubt realizes that the difficulties that prevented his friends from moving have been, and are still, in the way of this government. The money necessary to provide the facilities that should be provided in the city of Toronto would run into a very considerable sum, and up to date the government has not felt that they were in a financial position to undertake the construction that would be required. But the matter has been and is receiving consideration, and undoubtedly better accommodation will have to be provided in the city of Toronto.

Mr. BIRD: I wonder if the minister has given further consideration to the desirability of rearranging the seating in this chamber. I think I am speaking for almost all of us who sit in this section of the House when I say that fully one-third, if not one-half, of the total transactions in this chamber are lost to those of us who sit in this part of the House. In view of the constant protests that have been made, and sincerely made, I think the government ought to take into consideration the need of some rearrangement so that all members may take their part in the business of the House. In order to take one's proper share in what is going on, a considerable strain is involved on those who sit away from the treasury benches. I sincerely hope that the minister will give some thought to this matter. It may involve some considerable expense, but I think it would be money well spent if it means that it will give each and all an interest in the business of the House. I think that sometimes the sparse attendance in the House is very largely due to the fact of the strain imposed on some of us to attend to the business that is going on.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In reply to my hon. friend, I think all of us who have been in the House for some time realize that its acoustic properties are not as good as we would like. Hon. gentlemen, of course, must realize that this is a very large chamber with high ceilings. In addition to the doubtless inferior acoustic properties, conversation often occurs between members when an hon. gentleman is speaking, with the result that there is a certain amount of confusion and noise which would not be overcome even if the seats in the chamber were re-arranged. The suggestion has been advanced that the throne should be moved to a point just about opposite the clock, and that the chamber should be reconstructed in a semi-circular form with members confronting the chair. I had Professor Saunders, of Harvard, a well known authority on acoustics, make a careful examination of the chamber some two or three years ago but he did not suggest that this idea should be carried out. He recommended that to improve the acoustic properties of the chamber a carpet be laid, and that curtains and other sound-absorbing material be hung from the walls, in order to intercept noises or echoes. I think a marked improvement resulted from the work carried out as a result of his suggestion. An estimate was made as to the cost of re-arranging the chamber and if I remember rightly it ran to between forty and fifty thousand dollars. At that time, as hon. gentlemen will remember, there was some doubt in the minds of members as to whether the tower and other portions of the building should be completed. Under the circumstances I did not feel that we would be justified then in spending such a sum upon the re-arrangement of the chamber; and I think that before such a plan is seriously entertained we should get expert advice as to whether this chamber is one that would lend itself to such a re-arrangement. If the plan is reported against I am inclined to think that hon. members will have to continue to be subject to the existing conditions. This year a rather good line of procedure was followed in that the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition moved down one seat nearer the centre of the chamber. I think there would be further improvement if they moved their desks still further down. I am satisfied that both the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition would be happy to accommodate hon. members if it was their desire that this should be done. In any event I think very careful inquiry should be made before deciding upon any plan of reconstructing the chamber.

Mr. McGIBBON: I endorse the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Nelson and I ask the minister this question: Does he not think the present government has been in power long enough to get a comprehensive report on this subject; or does he intend to let matters drift without doing anything to bring about an improvement? If anything can be done to improve the existing conditions, there ought to be no delay in carrying it out in the interest of members generally. I ask the minister if he intends getting a report on the subject from some competent authority?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend must have misunderstood me. I stated a moment ago that some two years since I had Professor Saunders report on the matter and I gave from memory the substance of his report. The document is now in the Department of Public Works and is available to hon. members if they wish to consult it.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I remind the minister that he closed his statement by saying that another report should be obtained?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I said that before adopting such a plan as had been suggested careful inquiry should be made of people who are versed in matters of the kind. Personally I would not like to undertake to pronounce an opinion that the chamber could be re-arranged in the manner suggested and still afford all the necessary advantages. If it is the wish of hon. gentlemen another inquiry could be made. At the same time I impress upon my hon. friends the fact that an inquiry has already been made and that the information in our possession is against the suggested change.

Mr. BIRD: Has the minister inquired into the utility of some kind of loud speaker such as is used in large halls for public meetings?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That would necessitate every hon. gentleman taking a forum and speaking from there. Probably it would be an advantage if all hon. members would speak from some central point in the chamber.

Mr. CANTLEY: I have listened with a very great deal of interest to what the Minister of Public Works has said in reply to the suggestions for the improvement of this chamber. I am not in a position to say what improvement in the acoustic properties has resulted from the changes of which he has spoken, but I must state that for a very considerable number of members the existing conditions are almost intolerable. Personally I do not hear much more than one-half of what is said here. I will admit that my hearing is not as good as it was ten years ago but still it is just about as good as that of one-half of the members that sit around me. May I say that when His Honour the Speaker makes any observations it is very seldom that I am able to hear much of what he says. This building is constructed of stone and the combination is the poorest possible in regard to acoustic properties. I think a great deal might be done in certain directions to improve the chamber but I am not going to take up time in enumerating them at the present moment. The hon. member for Nelson suggested the installation of a loud speaker. There is no doubt that something could be done along that line that would enable each member in the House to hear the speaker's remarks. To illustrate the possibility in that direction let me say that a few weeks ago I was present at the annual meeting of the American Iron and Steel Institute. It took place in one of the largest auditoriums in New York city where over 1,500 people participated. Speeches were made by gentlemen in various parts of the great hall and as a result of the apparatus that had been installed those speeches were heard perfectly in every corner. If that happy result could be achieved there it can be done here. I would ask the minister to invite people who are regarded as authorities to come here and give him some practical advice on the matter, because I am quite convinced that by the installation of appropriate devices the difficulty at present complained of can be thoroughly overcome. I ask the minister to take up the matter as soon as the House closes so that measures may be adopted without delay to overcome the present intolerable and unfair state of affairs which is not befitting this House of parliament.

Mr. MacLAREN: I would urge the minister to consider the advisability of filling in many of the spaces around this chamber with oak. I believe that would improve to a marked degree the acoustic properties of the chamber. The hanging of curtains has been of assistance but I think that possibly the filling in of many of the spaces with similar coloured wood would not detract from the appearance of the chamber and would result in a very substantial improvement in the matter of audibility.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will be very glad to consider the suggestions which have been made. May I say, however, that I think the filling-in of the vacant spaces with wood would affect the ventilation of the chamber. Even if that filling were done the use of curtains would still have to be continued. I am very glad this discussion has taken place and the government will give the matter consideration, with a view to improving the acoustics of the chamber.

Mr. ROGERS: I entirely endorse what the hon. member for Pictou said in regard to the acoustic properties of the chamber. I remember when the parliament buildings were being erected, before the spaces were put in, we very frequently came to the chamber, Senator Watson, myself and others, to test the acoustics. We made speeches to the architects and those in charge of the work, and at that time we felt the acoustics were going to be very satisfactory, but apparently something in the building of the galleries and the opening of those spaces has interfered with the acoustics. I think if the minister would secure the services of some authority on acoustics and have a very thorough examination made, a great improvement could be obtained. It would be most desirable, and I hope he will give careful attention to this matter, because the acoustics to-day are very bad indeed, and are a very great drawback to the business of parliament. Probably some trifling thing is causing the difficulty that we encounter from time to time.

Mr. MacNUTT: I am very glad the hon. member for Nelson has brought this matter to the attention of the committee. I was not aware that it came under the Department of Public Works; I thought it was a matter which the Speaker looked after entirely. I can assure the minister, now that I have learned that it comes within his purview, that he is going to hear from me quite frequently unless conditions in this chamber are improved. I am not hard of hearing, but I confess I do not hear more than half the discussion that takes place and as a result I absent myself from the chamber very frequently when under better conditions I would be here. If hon. members will look from my seat at the other end of the chamber, and see the number of members on both sides with their hand to their ear,—very often with one hand to each ear,—they will realize that the acoustics of the chamber are not what they should be. I am sure the country will welcome any expense the minister may incur to so improve the chamber, that members can hear what is being said. I have not been in my seat at the other end of the chamber for some weeks. I steal a place here and there in the middle of the chamber, to try and hear what is being said, and I am very glad to hear the promise of the minister in reference to this matter.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): When we were sitting in the Museum we had the same trouble. Authorities in acoustic arrangements were brought from the United States to make an investigation. They were able to show that by placing little openings in the wall and closing them in such a way that they could not be detected, the acoustic properties of that building could be greatly improved. There are establishments in the United States who make a business of revolutionizing the acoustic properties of buildings such as the parliament buildings.

Mr. MANION: There is another point about this chamber which I think the minister might well deal with. I refer to its ventilation. I do not know how other members feel, but I certainly find this chamber very close despite the fact that it is built much as a cathedral is built. The temperature is often unbearable. There is a ventilation system but whether it gets out of order or not I do not know. Frequently the temperature is uncomfortable. I think if some arrangement were made so that during the warm weather, the windows at the top could be opened at the highest point, we would have a much finer system of ventilation and a more comfortable chamber. There is no doubt that a stone building such as this should be one of the coolest and most comfortable places in the universe. I do not think that any part of the building is so uncomfortable as the chamber. An investigation of the ventilating system should be made. Many times during the last couple of weeks conditions have been almost unbearable. I think great improvement could be made by some arrangement for opening the upper windows, as is done in many large halls.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We will be glad to give the matter consideration. We are advised that we have one of the most up-to-date ventilating plants that can be obtained.

Mr. STEVENS: Is the plant properly run?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think so, sometimes the fans are run too fast and have to be slowed down. The opening of the windows would not improve matters.

Mr. MARCIL: Members of former parliaments will recall that we had a perennial discussion of the question of ventilation of the chamber in the old building. It was a house within a house, and we never got fresh air except that coming through the corridors. The Speaker's chair was put in the centre of the chamber, but the Senate, being a small chamber, the Speaker's chair was allowed to remain at the end. Here we have placed the Speaker's chair at the end of the chamber. If the Speaker's chair were placed at the centre and the seats were changed about members would get closer together and hear what was going on. I rarely hear what is going on at the other end of the chamber, except in case of a very loud speaker. The question might be studied to ascertain if it would be an advantage to remove the Speaker's chair from the end to the centre of the chamber, as it was in the old House of Commons. In that chamber the seats were reversed. In England they have a small room, comparatively, where the members sit, but the members are not all in the House at the one time; if they were they could not be seated. In Washington and Paris they have adopted the same principle. But here we have the Speaker's chair at one end of a large room. Perhaps the minister will investigate the matter and consider my suggestion with regard to placing the Speaker's chair at the side of the chamber. In the old building that arrangement was made and proved very satisfactory.

Sir EUGENE FISET: May I also mention the question of the light in the chamber? We have here direct light from globes in the ceiling, the result is that there is a tremendous glare, and we have to wear glasses. The glare is simply awful. This could be remedied by using proper lights.

Mr. BENNETT: Under this item I understand it is proper to discuss the question of departmental buildings in this city.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No. We will come to that later under item 142.

Mr. ROGERS: What does the item of $130,000 re purchase of Daly building mean?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is to provide payment of the sixth instalment of the purchase price of $1,000,000 for the Daly building. The building was leased to the government at an annual rental of $85,000. The owners of the building offered to sell it for the sum of $1,000,000 payable in ten annual instalments of $100,000 each with interest at 6 per cent. The purchase was made in August, 1921.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): Wonld the minister explain the item of $25,000 for warehouses on lake Erie for the Department of Agriculture? What buildings are being erected?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is a revote of $25,000 for the construction of warehouses for the storage of onions and other early vegetables on lake Erie. The proposed building is a two-storey frame structure, 35 feet by 70 feet deep, estimated to cost $25,000. It is being erected on the advice and suggestion of the Department of Agriculture in order to assist those who are engaged in the growing of onions and vegetables of that kind in the matter of storage so that they may get them on the market.

Mr. ROGERS: There was a vote of $60,000 last year for this warehouse. Has $35,000 been expended?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ROGERS: This is to complete the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): How much land is connnected with this building?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They bought a site at Leamington for $2,500 and there is one at Erieau?

Mr. GOTT: Are there two distinct warehouses?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): One at Leamington and one at Erieau. The one at Leamington is the only one constructed.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): One is to be constructed at Erieau?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is the intention out of this vote.

Mr. BOYS: Would the minister explain the item of $219,780.35, appropriations not required for 1926-27? Would he give a list of the appropriations not required?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is a book-keeping statement placed there by the Department of Finance. It really indicates that the money has been expended and the work done, or it is found not necessary to expend the money.

Mr. BOYS: I should like if possible to get a list of the contemplated works for which money was not required. Possibly the items might be placed on Hansard.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The list is as follows:

Ontario

|---|---|
| Essex public buildings—improvements to heating | $ 1,900 00 |
| Hailebury—To pay to the municipal authorities the amount of fire insurance for erection of community hall | 33,500 00 |

Mr. GOTT: How does the government propose to operate these onion warehouses?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have scarcely reached that question yet as the building at Leamington is not equipped with the crates necessary to do the storing in. When the matter was first discussed with a committee representing the Leamington Onion Growers Co-operative Association, it was understood that the government would charge a fee for the services performed in very much the same way as they do in connection with elevators in the west. That fee has not yet been agreed upon or levied, but it was generally understood that the service would be paid for and operated in a similar way to the elevators for the portion of the year in which the storage is in demand. This is usually the fall of the year immediately after the onions are harvested. It will be operated by an officer of the government, possibly by someone selected by the Onion Growers Co-operative Association. I suppose he will have to be appointed by the Civil Service Commission, a fee charged and the building operated in the usual way.

Mr. GOTT: Will it be completed in time for this year's crop?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes. There was sufficient money in the estimate for the work, but there was a good deal of delay in connection with the site. Some objection was raised to the first site because it was thought that an onion warehouse would be somewhat of a nuisance owing to the odours from it. A delay occurred with the result that they were not able to spend the money by the end of the fiscal year. That is the reason for this revote.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The appropriations not required for 1925-26 amounted to $146,758 and this year the amount is $219,780. The list is too long to read, but would the minister read the list which includes the $73,000 difference in last year's appropriations not spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not understand my hon. friend's question Last year's appropriations not required under this vote amounted to $146,758.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): This year the amount is $219,780 or in other words $73,000 of last year's appropriations are not required. Will the minister give us the items comprising that amount?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The items will be in the list that I have handed to Hansard. These are expenditures that have been made, the work done, and therefore the sums are not required for the coming year.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Complaints have been made about the acoustic properties and the ventilation and lighting of this building. I should like to add one more and I think a more serious one with regard to odours that are sometimes found around the building. In some of the rooms these odours are particularly noticeable. I have no doubt they come from the sulphite mills across the river.

Mr. STEVENS: A good disinfectant.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That may be but they are very unpleasant just the same. Surely the company is large enough to devise some way of consuming its own gas and preventing it from coming over here.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The people who have to work in the midst of it do not mind it very much and those of us who are legislating might put up with it. The industry provides employment and we ought to be glad to see it going.

Item agreed to.

Manitoba—improvements, repairs, etc., $43,000.

Mr. ROGERS: The stables at Osborne were destroyed by fire over a year ago, and were not replaced in time to be of any service last year. The delay caused a good deal of hardship and inconvenience, as the government has many horses at that point. The loss sustained was quite serious. When will the structure be completed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The contract was entered into in December, 1925, and this is a re-vote. The stables will be completed this spring.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will the minister put on Hansard a statement regarding the appropriations not required?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, they are as follows:

List of Appropriations not required for 1926-27
Public Buildings

| | Chargeable to income Appropriation 1925-26 |
|---|---|
| Manitoba— | |
| Brandon armoury—local improvement taxes | $ 1,397 34 |
| Brandon public building—local improvement taxes | 4,248 92 |
| Winnipeg—Fort Osborne barracks—purchase and alterations of Red Cross hut | 12,000 00 |
| Winnipeg custom house—alteration and improvements | 7,500 00 |
| Winnipeg—government's share of cost of high pressure fire protection service | 19,101 61 |
| Winnipeg immigration building—alterations and repairs | 18,500 00 |
| | $62,747 87 |

Item agreed to.

Saskatchewan—Dominion public buildings, $20,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: A statement will also be put on the record with regard to the appropriations not required?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, I will give it to Hansard:

Item agreed to.

Alberta—Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs, etc., $40,000.

Mr. ROGERS: What is the explanation regarding the public building at Edmonton?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is a property adjoining the post office. The matter has been under consideration for some years, and we purchased the site last year. The sum of $23,000 is required to complete the payment on the property. In 1919 a building was offered the department for $90,000, and later on for $81,000, but this year we secured it for $52,500. We required an addition to the site and this vote is for the purpose.

Mr. ROGERS: Perhaps the minister would let the item stand until the hon. member for East Edmonton (Mr. Bury) comes in.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is really nothing more to be said on the vote. The property is essential to the business there, and the price is reasonable.

Mr. ROGERS: I am sure the minister will not mind letting the item stand.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Very well.

Item stands.

British Columbia—public buildings, $210,650.

Mr. ESLING: I presume the $9,000 for the Revelstoke building is by way of completion.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ESLING: What is the explanation of the $6,500 vote for the Trail public building?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is for the site.

Mr. ESLING: Is there any prospect of an early construction of the federal building at that point?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The matter is under consideration. Since 1914 very few public buildings have been put up anywhere in Canada although last year we constructed a few. It is hoped that this year provision will be made for others. There are many localities in which sites were purchased years ago and the communities have been waiting patiently for the buildings. These demands are being met from time to time as our finances will permit.

Mr. ESLING: This community of Trail has not had, to my knowledge, one dollar of expenditure from the Public Works department in the last thirty years. It is perhaps the most thriving and most pro-
4 p.m. gressive community in the interior of British Columbia. Its payroll amounts to $300,000 a month, and located in Trail is what probably is the most extensive smelting plant in the empire. It is rather strange that no attempts have been made to put up this building which is very much needed. I am glad that at least some steps have been taken towards securing a suitable site. On whose recommendation was the site purchased, and were any other sites recommended to or considered by the department?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I agree with the hon. gentleman that undoubtedly Trail is a very important point and it is in recognition of that fact that we have placed a sum in the estimates to secure the site. We hope to have the construction undertaken at an early date.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I understood the minister to say that the site had been secured. Which is correct?

Mr. ESLING: It has been purchased, has it not?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, this is to complete the payment.

Mr. ESLING: Does the minister know anything about the site?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have no personal knowledge of it apart from what I know of the locality generally. An examination was made by one of the officials, either Mr. Brown or Mr. Henderson—I am inclined to think it was Mr. Brown—who reported upon the site as being favourable. I am informed that it is satisfactory to the citizens of Trail.

Mr. ESLING: Nothing can be said against the site, but the consensus of local opinion is that the matter savours very much of political influence. During the past twenty years officials of the federal Public Works department have come from Victoria and made inspections and secured recommendations for the purchase of sites for a local federal building. I think I am safe in saying that at no time was this particular site recommended but that on all occasions another site was suggested, and I think it will be found that in the selection of this site two or three weeks before the last federal election there was a very strong inclination to think that political influence was brought to bear, without consultation with the citizens or general public. The old site, or rather the site recommended at all times, was a business property which was for sale—as were other pieces of property which are on record with the federal Department of Public Works at Victoria—for a less sum than was paid for this property. The other site is very desirable and, pending construction of a public building, would have brought in a revenue not less than $125 per month. When an appropriation is made for a site we do not expect the immediate construction of the building, but in this case the business property would have brought in a very substantial revenue. But without the knowledge of any of the citizens this residential site was purchased for $11,000 as against the business site which could have been purchased for $10,000. The site purchased will bring in no revenue until a building is constructed and the house removed. This site was purchased from the local Liberal whip, I may as well say, and will bring in no revenue whatever.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I would like to ask to whom my hon. friend is referring.

Mr. ESLING: I am referring to the local Liberal whip. The point is that the government is deprived of a very substantial monthly revenue, and our only hope is that the government will make up for that loss by speedy action in the construction of a local federal building which is so much needed there. At present rental is being paid for a customs office and for a post office, and in view of the immense revenue derived there a federal building is certainly justified. This government receives annually $1,500,000 in taxes from Trail. I cannot give the different items, but you will be able to judge them when I tell you that the Consolidated Mining & Smelting Company at Trail sets aside $2,500,000 every year for all taxes, and in addition there is the usual income tax collected. Surely a community which contributes so much to the public treasury is entitled to some recognition by way of a very much needed public building, which has been discussed for the past twenty years and strongly recommended during that time by both the local board of trade and the Associated Boards of Trade of British Columbia. I only hope the minister will give this matter serious consideration.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would like to ask the minister the exact date of the purchase of this property from the local Liberal whip.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not heard that term used in connection with the gentleman from whom we bought this property. Mr. Binns is a respected citizen of Trail, and a business man there, although it is true, I believe, that at times he has supported the Liberal party. The property was bought on October 6, 1925.

Mr. STEVENS: I notice that the minister rather resents the vendor of this property being called a Liberal whip. I would refer him to my friend the chief Liberal whip here to wipe out that stigma at least. Would the minister be good enough to read the official report and recommendation in this matter? I think that would clear up a good deal of the dissatisfaction felt by some on this side.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I find that I have not the official report from Mr. Brown, but it will be available to the committee later.

Mr. STEVENS: Perhaps this local whip reported to the chief whip here, and he may have the report.

Mr. CASGRAIN: No, I do not have it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This may be a case where we will have a report written nunc pro tunc. There is no time for reports just before an election comes along and it is found necessary to make a purchase. The minister makes the purchase and of course he has not the official report, which would be rather inconvenient. But I have no doubt one will be supplied in due form, with all the marks of seriousness. In the meantime the whip has sold his house, and everything is over. I do not notice anything provided here for the house; this vote deals only with the property. What is the total price of the property?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The price was $11,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Here we have a vote of $11,500, $5,000 of which was voted last year. Was that spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How was it spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As a partial payment.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where did the money come from?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): From the appropriation passed last year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Was an appropriation passed last year for this amount?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, an appropriation of $5,000. You will find it in the third column on page 34 of this year's estimates.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, but I have a way of looking back a little further. Was not this amount taken out of the general vote last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, it was a special item in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Will the minister tell us if the other property did not belong to a good Tory there?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is why the property was not bought.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): That is why the explanation is not given.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The hon. member is quite right. That was the reason why the property which brought in a good revenue, and which was a good business property, was turned down, and why we got the property that is bringing in nothing.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw: The hon. gentleman wants to have the buying of property while he is in power and out of power as well.

Mr. BENNETT: We want business conducted in a businesslike way.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think the chief Liberal whip has given us the reason—to the victor belong the spoils. That is the maxim of this government. The chief Liberal whip is quite right, and the spoils here are to go to the local Liberal whip of the province, and they go.

Mr. TOLMIE: In connection with the item for replacing buildings and equipment destroyed by fire at Esquimalt, I would point out that a number of workmen who were employed at the place at that particular time had their tools stored there, and they were all destroyed in the fire, entailing a very severe loss in many cases. These men are not rich; they are men working for wages, and I would like to know if the government does not intend to make any provision for compensating them in full or in part for the loss of the tools destroyed at that time.

Mr. ESLING: What revenue is the government going to receive pending the removal of this house in Trail? Is there any revenue coming from this site at all? The owner lives in the House, and is the government going to get any revenue at all from the site, while losing all the revenue it would have received from the business site?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am not familiar as to the revenue being received. I have no doubt there is a charge being made, and I will ascertain what it is and advise my hon. friend.

Mr. ESLING: The site which has been purchased I admit is a very desirable site. It is right in the centre of the business district, but it is not so good, or not any better than the site that was rejected. The point is this, this department had on file in its office at Victoria bids and tenders for local property at lower prices than was paid for this property, and the property offered at a lower price was a monthly revenue producing property belonging to a good Tory, while the property purchased produces absolutely nothing, was purchased at a higher price, and belongs to the local Liberal whip. My Farmer-Labour-Progressive-Independent opponent got $5,000 on the eve of the election, and he slips into town and nobody knows anything about any negotiations until we learn that this residence property has been purchased for $11,000 bringing in no revenue, while the property at the other end of the block, which was always recommended to the government, and was generally accepted by the government as a proper location, was rejected although it was offered at a lower price, $10,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have no knowledge of the matter my hon. friend speaks of, but we know that in Trail, real estate values are changing very, very rapidly, and the property which he speaks of which was offered for $10,000 in 1915 or 1919 may be much more valuable to-day. It may be that my hon. friend has an interest in that property. He is himself a large owner of real estate in the city of Trail. So far as this particular piece of property is concerned, it was bought by the agent of the government, a gentleman in whom the department have confidence, and

I am glad to hear my hon. friend say that the site is an ideal one. I think that is true. We have had no complaints from the citizens of Trail, and I think the implication of my hon friend is hardly fair.

Mr. ESLING: But it is true. I have no objection to the site. I am merely pointing out the influence which was brought to bear on the eve of an election, and the further fact that the government had on file in its office at Victoria tenders at a lower price than was paid for this property.

Mr. MANION: Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture could help the minister, because he did a lot of purchasing on the eve of the election. He purchased a lot of cattle for $28,000, which were afterwards sold for $7,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has the minister an official report on the item with respect to Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs and so forth?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Replying first to my hon. friend from Victoria, who referred to the loss of some tools by workmen in a fire at Esquimalt, it is true that representations have been made to the Department of Militia and Defence regarding the loss by these workmen. I know that I have personally made representations, and I am hopeful that the department may find it possible to recoup the workmen for their loss.

Mr. DICKIE: I wish to back up the request of the hon. member for Victoria. These Esquimalt workmen were practically promised that they would be reimbursed for the loss of their tools in the fire several years ago. The Minister of National Defence gave me what amounted to a promise, and I think he intended to see that these men were reimbursed as soon as his representative had been out there and had made a report. I can assure the minister that they are entitled to be paid. The tools were very valuable, and they were supposed to be stored in a safe place.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Representations have been made to me along that line, and I would remind the House that this loss was directly occasioned by the burning of the government's own building. These men were working there, and if this House can find it necessary to return a huge sum to the automobile dealers, as it did the other day, for a loss entailed by a change in taxation, I cannot see why a few hundred dollars should not be paid to these workmen who have lost their tools.

Mr. ROGERS: Would the minister explain the item of $20,000 for mortgage interest in connection with the Winch building at Vancouver?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Answering first the question as to improvements and repairs to Dominion public buildings, this item is increased by $15,000 over last year. The increase in this appropriation is due to the cost of rearranging the heating for the post office, the examining warehouse and the Winch building, the cost of which is estimated at $13,800. The other items are for the usual repairs and renewals of buildings throughout the province.

In reply to my hon. friend from South Winnipeg regarding the 5 per cent mortgage interest item of $20,000, this is to pay the interest on the $400,000 required to be paid on the purchase price of the Winch building. This building was bought last year at a cost of $700,000. We exchanged the old post office property in Vancouver, at a value of $300,000, and took over the Winch building, leaving a balance of $400,000 to be paid, the payments extending over a period of years. We assumed the mortgage, and this is the first interest payment.

Mr. MANION: Unless it is a mortgage that cannot be paid off, the government could save $2,000 or $2,500 a year by paying it off, because they have money of their own which they are borrowing at less than 4½ per cent. It would pay them to pay off the mortgage if they have that privilege.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I rather agree with my hon. friend that there is a considerable amount paid for this purpose.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The arrangement was entered into when money was much more expensive than it is to-day.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Personally I think it would be better business to try and clear up these items. I have suggested to the Minister of Finance that possibly it would be wise to do this, and I am hoping that next year something will be done along this line.

Mr. MANION: We will clear the matter up for you next year.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister give an explanation of the second item reading as follows:—

Douglas—Site and building for immigration and customs—excise purposes, $15,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is a new customs building to be erected on the international boundary between the state of Washington and the city of Vancouver at the town of Douglas.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister indicate just where the building is being placed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): On the international boundary, on the Pacific highway, near the Peace arch. My hon. friend knows the place.

Mr. STEVENS: I know the place very intimately.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The property the government is using, if my memory serves me right, is Indian property.

Mr. STEVENS: At the present time.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think so.

Mr. STEVENS: The present shack is on an Indian reserve, but the suggestion of customs premises, both on the American side and on the Canadian side, at the Peace arch has been the subject of some considerable negotiation. I was wondering if this appropriation cared for the purchase of the lands adjoining the Peace arch on the Canadian side, or whether it is intended to put up the buildings on the old site on the Indian reserve.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have this memorandum in my notes:

The local municipal authorities and the Departments of Immigration and Colonization and of Customs and Excise have not reached a final agreement regarding the site, and until one is selected it is impossible for the Architects branch to prepare a plan of the building.

That is the report we have. I know that within the last month there have been negotiations regarding some of these lands.

Mr. STEVENS: Nothing has been spent as yet.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. STEVENS: But you are increasing the vote.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the minister give some explanation regarding the last item, repairs and improvements at William Head quarantine station?

Mr. KING (Kooteney): The item covers the annual repairs and improvements at William Head quarantine station. As my hon. friend probably knows, it is a very important station. The item of $82,200, covering appropriations not required for 1926-27 is made up as follows:—

|---|---|
| Bentinck island lazaretto—new buildings and improvements | $ 14,700 00 |
| Courtenay—public building | 33,000 00 |
| Esquimalt boat house at H.M.C. barracks | 9,000 00 |
| Kamloops—public building | 20,000 00 |
| Vancouver—grain inspection office | 5,500 00 |
| | $82,200 00 |

Mr. McGIBBON: Has the minister got details of the hospital station at William Head?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The cost of construction up to March 31, 1925, was $636,715.18, and the repairs over that period were $58,337, making a total of approximately $695,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has the minister any report with respect to the public building at Revelstoke for which a vote of $9,000 is asked?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is to complete the contract for the building and furnishings.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Official reports have been furnished with respect to all these items except the vote for the Trail public building. Would it not be advisable to allow that item to stand until the report has been forthcoming?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will have the information for my hon. friend.

Mr. DICKIE: We know the minister is good-hearted. Would he not assure us that the artisans who lost their tools during the fire at Esquimalt will be repaid? It is an old question and it will only mean the expenditure of a few hundred dollars. These men should be compensated and that would be the right thing to do. I am sure the minister will view the matter in the same light as I do myself. May I remind him also that compensation was practically promised two years ago?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think I explained to the House that the matter was one within the Department of National Defence and that it was being considered—I hoped favourably considered—by the minister who will make an announcement to the House on the matter.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister promise us a statement on the matter before our next sitting on Monday?

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think that will be hardly fair to the Minister of National Defence. He will deal with his own items as they come up and it will be for him to make any announcement in connection with the matter, not for me.

Mr. FRASER: I understood the minister to say that the amount of appropriations not required for 1926-27 was $82,200. I did not gather that the minister made any statement with respect to Kamloops public building.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, the information will appear in Hansard.

Item agreed to.

Alberta—Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs, etc., $17,000.

Edmonton—public building—addition to site, $23,000.

Mr. BENNETT: I desire to make a few observations with respect to the public building at Calgary. Some years ago the government acquired a site on the leading street of of the city, opposite the Dominion Bank and the Union Bank which cost a quarter of a million dollars. As a matter of fact the site was originally—a portion of it at least—acquired by the citizens and given to the crown. Then the additional property was acquired. In the estimates the year the war broke out provision was made for commencing the building. The old building was taken down because the floor space which is so essential for a post office was not there. At the present time we are paying in Calgary over $90,000 per annum for rental of public buildings. The minister has the figures before him. I think perhaps it is a little more than $90,000. Am I right?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Somewhere in that vicinity.

Mr. BENNETT: The amount is a little over $90,000. Now, a federal building in a city like Calgary is almost essential. It should not be a post office building. There should be a post office on the ground floor, and provision should be made for every federal service—the land office, the immigration office, the railway commission, and others. A building of about eight storeys would cost approximately $1,500,000, or let us say $1,600,000. If a special form of security were issued to provide public works in this country, where the rental paid would be sufficient to meet the interest on the capital expenditure plus a sinking fund, it would be a very economical procedure. Now suppose we fixed the amount at $1,600,000 in the present case and paid as high a rate as 5 per cent; that would be $80,000. But it would not be necessary to spend quite that much money, and the rate of interest would be less than 5 per cent. It would therefore follow that the interest could be paid, and a sufficient sum set aside for sinking fund sufficient to amortize the entire loan at the end of twenty years, and the country would own the building. There has been some discussion with respect to the site. It was acquired at a time when land was very high, but it is admirably adapted to the construction of a public building. The citizens who originally contributed the corner lots do not look kindly upon the idea of there being any change in the post office location. For instance, two large banks were established there in the first instance, because of the post office being located nearby. I desire to urge upon the administration an appropriation for the purpose of enabling the building to be commenced, basing that appropriation upon the rentals now paid, so that there will be set up in the public records of this country an account for that particular building, and the rentals that are now being paid will be, without increase, credited to that account from year to year, being sufficient to liquidate the entire interest charges, with a sinking fund that will entirely absorb the loan within fifteen or twenty years. While I am speaking on that subject, I have the same observation to make with respect to the public buildings in this city. From time to time I have looked into the situation here. This country owns a large area of property west of the Supreme court buildings facing on the river. All those buildings belong to the crown, as I understand it. Let us assume it would cost $8,000,000 to put up a suitable departmental building covering that area. Some may say it would cost much more than that, but for the purposes of the services of this country we do not require the most ornate building in the world, and I am informed that the rent paid in this city by the government, notwithstanding that we have the new Hunter building, and notwithstanding the purchase of other buildings, amounts to nearly $700,000 per annum.

Mr. HANSON: It amounts to $1,400,000.

Mr. BENNETT: I have the figures here and I think the amount is about $700,000. That $1,400,000 includes buildings outside of Ottawa. Let us see what that means. That $8,000,000 at 4¾ per cent would cost this country less than $400,000. The amount to be set aside for sinking fund at $200,000 which is entirely too large, would mean that we would save $100,000 per annum. What we are doing at the present time is not business. I remember when the Canadian Pacific put a viaduct across the river at Lethbridge they had experts determine exactly what it cost to move traffic. They erected that great steel viaduct because it showed an annual saving, and it enabled them to deal with the situation just as I have outlined. Why should the country not conduct business in the same way, and pass legislation to create a special form of security which would be gladly purchased by the insurance companies, and issue 4¾ per cent or 5 per cent bonds for fifteen or twenty years and apply the rent we are now paying in Ottawa against that cost? Not only would we save money, but what is more —and this is the important factor—we would save large sums in heating, elevators and lighting. This morning a gentleman from my own constituency came to me asking for information, and I had to ring up three different buildings before I could get it. No one knows better than the minister the difficulties that are incident to the present situation. Some of the ministers have to keep automobiles, magnificent machines, imported at great cost, because it is so difficult to get from one branch of a department to another. I sympathize with them, because it would be detrimental to their interests if they should have to walk any great distance in a city like this, and Peerless transportion is very much to be preferred to mere pedestrian action in a city like Ottawa, where the streets are bad and the sidewalks are not what they ought to be. My hon. friend understands what I mean. I suggest that we apply ordinary business principles to this situation. My remarks apply also to Calgary. In that city we should spend not less than $1,600,000 to erect a federal building, and all the services in that city would be cared for. In this city we could spend $8,000,000, and still, after amortizing the loan, have a substantial sum of money each year to pay for improvements and repairs. I commend this to the minister. We desire economy and efficiency. The Pennsylvania railway put their terminals in the city of New York for that very reason rather than continue the transfer of passengers across the harbour. Well conducted enterprises study the saving to be effected and make the capital expenditures necessary, after ascertaining that the result of the economies effected will enable them to retire the loan at maturity, which may be fifteen or twenty years. I realize that the $80,000 or $90,000 paid by way of rental in Calgary will meet the situation there with respect to public buildings, and the $700,000 paid here will also meet the situation. There are other cities in Canada which stand on the same basis. I realize that unless you can show parliament and the people of the country that by the method I have indicated you may be able to effect a saving of public money, this is not the time to ask for public expenditure. Everybody knows that. I cannot ask the government to give me $1,000,000 for public buildings, unless it can be demonstrated beyond peradventure that the cost of constructing the new building will not involve the country in the expenditure of a single dollar more than is now spent. Everybody knows that is what a board of directors does. I am convinced that the loss in this city on account of the extra employees necessary on account of having these buildings scattered all over the city cannot be less than at least $100,000 per annum. I estimate it at much more than that. When I previously had a seat in this House I got a complete return of the employees in the public service and what was involved by reason of their being scattered all over the community. I would ask the minister to have prepared by his deputy a report showing: (a) the capital cost of a new building upon this property, (b) rentals now paid; (c) the saving that would be effected in lighting, heating, general efficiency and reduction of the staff. I believe we can put $10,000,000 in new buildings west of the Supreme court and have a profit to carry forward for repairs every year of not less than $100,000.

The people look for a business administration of their affairs. In England they are taking this course with respect to every branch of the public service. In the United States they have adopted the same course. It is the only way they can conduct their affairs; and in other communities the same system has been adopted. My observations are not limited to the city which I have the honour to represent. This is a proposition that applies east and west, north and south. If the minister lays down a principle and establishes a special form of security, and says, "I will apply that principle to every city in Canada just as soon as I find conditions warrant it, the amount saved will be sufficient to retire the expenditure." For the $90,000 rental that we now pay in Calgary we would be able to defray the cost of the necessary loan and, either by the operation of a sinking fund or by amortization, which is the application of the sinking fund idea in another form, to retire the securities at their maturity. I know the minister cannot do this to-day or to-morrow; but as he expects, contrary to my own expectation, to occupy his position for some length of time, I trust if he does that before he retires he may be able to give effect to some such principle as that, improved it is true by those in his department who have larger knowledge and who will be able to recommend what means should be taken to effect the economies I have suggested.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I largely concur in the remarks made by my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett): It is true that many departments of government are not properly housed in Ottawa from a departmental standpoint or from the public point of view, and the government has seriously considered the advisability of constructing new departmental buildings on property it owns in the city. The same thing is true in Toronto, Montreal, Calgary and other centres throughout Canada. The same is also true in some of the smaller cities. The proposals made by my hon. friend would ordinarily be accepted in business circles as good business. It is the first note that I have heard in four years that would indicate that such a suggestion coming from the government would be acceptable to parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: I speak only for myself.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I know that, and I appreciate the speech of my hon. friend, because I believe that very shortly we shall have to face that problem. Unless there is a discussion of this character it will be difficult for the government to proceed, because if the requirements and the means to meet those requirements are not understood, there is misunderstanding, misconception and trouble. In relation to the rental of space, I had an inquiry made a year ago and I found the ratios were somewhat as follows. In Great Britain at that time they were renting about 28 per cent of the space required for their civil service.

Mr. BENNETT: Is that because of after-war conditions?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, I would think so.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps my hon. friend knows that this year they are engaged in putting up a new structure at not great expense.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In the United States it is about 34 per cent and in Canada about 39 per cent. If one looks carefully into rentals in Ottawa, it will be found that they are not as a rule excessive.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not suggest that they were.

Mr. KING (Kootenay:) But the matter is one that should receive careful consideration and I shall be glad to go into it. In fact, in the Department of Public Works we have been going into it carefully. I hope the time is not far distant when we may present to the House a proposal that will be acceptable and that will mean an extension of our departmental buildings in Ottawa.

Mr. BENNETT: Has the minister any estimate of the probable cost of a departmental building such as I have mentioned, covering the property leased?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. There were three or four buildings proposed in the plan at a cost of about $3,000,000 each.

Mr. BENNETT: That would be $9,000,000 if three were erected and $12,000,000 if four were erected.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: I am advised that the cost of construction is somewhat less than that now and that three units could be erected for $8,000,000. If so, it is perfectly clear that we would pay all those off in thirty years, paying interest and having a substantial sum to take care of repairs apart from the saving and convenience to the staff.

Mr. MANION: The minister says that during the past four years he has not understood that the proposition has been acceptable. I doubt if a year has gone by that some proposition has not been laid before the government, perhaps not so lucidly, ably and clearly as by the hon. member for West Calgary. The only attitude we have taken and still take is this, that if such a proposition is gone on with it should be carried through in a businesslike manner, forgetting everything but business and forgetting political friends.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: May I supplement the remarks of my colleague the Minister of Public Works, with whom I have had many conversations on this question? I wish to align myself with the views of the hon. member for West Calgary. It is so seldom that we can get on the same stamping ground that I do not wish to miss this opportunity.

Mr. BENNETT: I would like to think the hon. member is right in this case.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When I first came to this House in the larger sphere I realized the greater responsibility of my work, but I was amazed at the various—I will not say buildings—rookeries in which my departments were housed. To-day nearly sixty years after confederation, the Department of Agriculture has not a roof under which to place its head. The thing is absolutely ridiculous, not only from that standpoint but from the standpoint of the comparatively inefficient service that has been referred to. I do not like to dwell too selfishly on my department, because the same remarks apply to other departments. May I refer to the court house in which the hon. member for West Calgary is particularly interested? I was there only once, when I had occasion to look on as a spectator this winter in the Exchequer court building. The court was held in a little rookery upstairs with the skylights above. If you had put a dozen spectators into the room it would have been overcrowded. It used to be a carpenter shop of some kind and now that is the whole Exchequer court. When I saw that I felt my indignation rise at a building of that description being located with such menial surroundings, services and conveniences. I recognized that it was not because my own department alone was neglected that I had been complaining in past years.

Outside of the experimental farm buildings my department is housed in twelve different buildings in this city. If a visitor comes to my office I have to place an escort at his disposal to take him to some of the branch heads throughout the city. If I had the eight different buildings in the experimental farm my department alone is housed in twenty different buildings throughout this city and the experimental farm. The thing is ridiculous. It would not be so bad if we had a decent telephone service between the different buildings, not to say anything about the chauffeur or motor car service. If you want to ring up any of the officials the telephones are semi-hello and semi-automatic and between the two of them you are kept guessing. I have given up all hope of calling any one up myself. I call in a secretary and say: Get Mr. So-and-So as quickly as possible, and after several attempts we finally get him. But in the meantime I have lost a great deal of time and done incalculable damage to my soul in endeavouring to get him.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister will be forgiven.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Perhaps I may, because the provocation is great. What is the difficulty in starting on a business venture of this kind from the drop of the hat? One thing is that public sentiment is not ripe for it and I want to thank my hon. friend for starting to educate public sentiment. The former hon. member for Marquette made reference to it the first session I was here, but it did not receive any plaudits and it did not receive many pludits on this occasion. If the people, including members of this House, knew that we were gettng only about sxty-five per cent efficency out of our staff there would be much more popular clamour for proper accommodation. When neighbouring countries send representatives here, they hear about Canada being a wonderful country. They hear about our live stock and all about our natural resources and when these people come to visit us from little countries like Holland and Denmark, where these services are all excellent, the members of my staff have to smuggle them into the Chateau Laurier or some other place outside because they are ashamed to bring them into the offices of the department. The street on which some of these buildings are located has come to be known as Slum avenue. Many of these buildings on Wellington street are adjacent to shabby houses and they have been themselves occupied continuously by tenants who one after another have left them in a deplorable condition. One tenant has left a building in worse condition than he found it, with the result that the place is not fit to house human beings. Whenever any attempt is made to improve a condition such as this there is always a chain of propaganda drawn around you so that it is almost impossible to move. It is for the right-thinking men of the country to assert themselves and demand proper accommodation for the public services. This is so elemental a necessity that I am surprised someone has not long ago taken action. The difficulty, of course, is that in the last few years governments have been very short-lived institutions. Formerly a government would be in power for fifteen years, and although there were disadvantages to such a length of administration, yet things could be accomplished which are not possible when there is a frequent change of government. If hon. gentlemen opposite will give us a reasonable length of time in office the Minister of Public Works, I am sure, assisted by my own humble efforts will be able to do something so that there will be no cause of complaint

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. McGIBBON: May I suggest to the minister that if he is allowed to remain in for fifteen years his soul will be eternally damned.

Mr. McCLENAGHAN: The people of Ottawa have long advocated the construction of proper public buildings on Wellington street. The report just published by the Civil Service Commission strongly recommends the acquisition of new buildings, pointing out, as the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) does, that the country would save money while there would be an improvement in clerical efficiency as well as a reduction in the maintenance of the buildings themselves. Everyone will endorse the businesslike suggestion of the hon. member in which he shows the government how they may finance the proposition without cost to the country, using for the purpose of paying the interest on the loan the moneys now paid out in the form of rentals. The citizens of Ottawa will be delighted to read the report of this afternoon's debate and to find that both the opposition and the government are agreed on the desirability of making this city what it should be, really the capital of Canada, and of concentrating its services in respectable buildings.

5 p.m.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I agree to a considerable extent with the remarks of the hon. member for West Calgary, and if for no other reason than to save the soul of my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture we should undertake at once to provide some of these buildings. No member of parliament can adequately serve the interests of his constituents, nor can any department of government function efficiently, under present conditions. Either the government will have to centralize their offices, or they should provide members of parliament with a guide and an automobile if the various departments are to be located with any degree of ease. When I first came into the House the party to which I have the honour to belong, which was led a few years ago by the Hon. Mr. Crerar, then the member for Marquette, strongly urged this matter upon the government. Even if we spent $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 there would be a saving in the long run as a result of increased efficiency and a reduction in expenditures in connection with messengers, telephones, and all the other paraphernalia now found indispensable. That saving would take care of the interest on the investment and the cost would be wiped out in twenty-five or thirty years. Thereafter there would be no rents to pay. I do not know whether the present buildings are rented from whips or ex-whips or other people of that description, and while it is true, as the Minister of Agriculture says, that whenever any attempt is made to get away from settled conditions a chain of difficulties is always put in the way, I am sure that if the government made a determined effort to move in the direction suggested this afternoon that chain could be broken. No chain is unbreakable. Let us pull together and help the government in power, no matter what government it may be, to break that chain and to do something to provide an economical and efficient public service.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): The member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) said the other day that in his opinion the seat of government in a few years would be Winnipeg. In view of that suggestion would it not be unwise to spend more money in Ottawa?

Item agreed to.

Public buildings generally, $263,000.

Mr. ROGERS: What is the vote of $40,000 under the head, "public buildings generally?"

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is necessary to meet annual expenditures in connection with public buildings controlled by the Dominion government throughout the country, and it takes care of such special outlays as cannot be charged against any one particular item. It also includes travelling expenses of the Architectural branch, stationery, instruments, printing, telegrams and miscellaneous accounts. Of the amount voted last year $28,838 was spent.

Mr. ROGERS: There is an increase of $10,000 in this particular vote this year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The increase is to provide for the Canadian building in London, England, for which in previous years a special appropriation was voted. Taxes and rates amount to $8,662, insurance, $486, and repairs, $973.

Mr. ROGERS: That is the new building in London.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What does it cost to carry that building now? Two years ago we had an estimate and it would be interesting to compare it with the actual cost at present.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I shall get that information later. In the meantime we can let the item stand.

Mr. ROGERS: In this item there is a vote of $93,0000 for experimental farms, including replacements, repairs, improvements, and so forth. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture might give us some information with regard to that vote.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This item is required for replacements, improvements, alterations and repairs at the several experimental farm stations throughout the Dominion. It is asked for by the Deputy Minister of Agriculture. The central experimental farm at Ottawa will require $28,590 and the other stations throughout the Dominion $64,100. There will be expenditures at Charlottetown, Fredericton, Nappan, Kentville, Farnham, LeFerme, St. Anne de la Pocatiere, Cap Rouge, St. Joachim, Lennoxville, Kapuskasing, Morden, Brandon, Indian Head, Rosthern, Scott, Swift Cuurent, Lethbridge, Lacombe, Summerland, Invermere, and Sidney, making the total of $64,100 spent outside of Ottawa.

Mr. FRASER: Does that vote include any new buildings?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. FRASER: Under what vote do the new buildings come, or are any new buildings provided for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not in the estimates now under consideration.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: While it does not cover new buildings, it seems to cover improvements.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): And repairs.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Improvements are one thing and repairs another. Repairs are an annual charge, while improvements may be a new investment. Can the minister say how much is needed for repairs and how much for enlarging our investment?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): At the experimental farm it is proposed to spend on general repairs $20,000; then there is a list of other items.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The others are not repairs?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes; animal husbandry division, $925.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: For what, repairs or improvements?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It will be for repairs; $500 for painting interior of dairy and piggery; for repairing doors, et cetera $100; whitewashing steer sheds, piggeries.

sheep barn, horse box stalls, et cetera $100; summer water supply, pipes to swine rotation pastures $125; emergency repairs $100, a total of $925. They are practically all repairs.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then we are to understand this item is for repairs to farm buildings and so on.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ROGERS: There is an item of $5,000 for flags, and $5,000 last year. Was that amount spent last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is about the usual amount voted for flags throughout the whole Dominion.

Mr. ROGERS: Do we spend $5,000 a year on flags?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, very close to that.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): What military buildings are supposed to be repaired under this item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This item is required for the fitting up and effecting of major repairs, alterations and so forth costing $1,000 or over in various buildings used by the Militia department. This request is made by the Deputy Minister of National Defence. The items vary; we have repairs to buildings occupied by militia services $36,450; repairs to buildings rented by the militia $10,580; to buildings rented by the naval service $3,105, and to those rented by the air service $205, or a total of $50,000 odd.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Are these all in Ottawa?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, all over the Dominion.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Are any repairs to be made to the Christie street hospital in Toronto?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are always some repairs at Christie street and other hospitals.

Mr. ROGERS: I notice there is an increase of about $20,000 in this item. What is the reason for that?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend will remember that many of these buildings were of a temporary character; each year there is great depreciation and the expense of maintaining them is very considerable.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: But that was up last year or the year before, and I understood the work was to be concentrated, that there was less work to be done and some of the hospitals could be closed. I should have thought that would pretty well answer what my hon. friend is now saying.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Repairs on these buildings vary from year to year, of course. Possibly if we spend $75,000 this year to get these buildings in good shape they would go for a period of years with only minor repairs. The expenditure at Ste. Anne de Bellevue amounts to about $20,000; Camphill hospital is only a small item—

Mr. QUINN: What is that item for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Repairs to power house and mechanical service, and general repairs. At Shaughnessy hospital, Vancouver, there will be repairs to power house and mechanical service, together with exterior painting.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): What repairs are to be made to Christie street hospital?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Repairs to power house and mechanical service, general repairs and painting.

Mr. FRASER: Would the minister tell us what was spent in Shaughnessy hospital last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The amount was $4,034.20.

Mr. FRASER: And it will be $11,000 this year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, it will be more this year.

Mr. ROGERS: Did I understand the minister correctly when he said $20,000 would be expended at Ste. Anne de Bellevue?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ROGERS: That is a large sum for repairs, although probably that is one of the most desirable places for a military hospital.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is a large item for painting the exterior, amounting to $11,705; repairs to power house and mechanical service $2,000, and general repairs $6,000. Then the interior is to be painted, which will cost $1,000. They are large buildings, and I understand no exterior painting has been done for years.

Mr. ROGERS: Has the minister any estimate of the number of patients in the hospitals?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, I have not. I think that would come from the Department of Health.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Has the minister anything to do with the sale of old disused barracks?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): That is under National Defence?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think so.

Mr. CANTLEY: Why do not these military hospitals come under the Department of National Defence?

Sir EUGENE FISET: Because they are under the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. The title of "military hospital" is a misnomer.

Mr. CANTLEY: When we try to find the total expenditure of any one department, we find estimates and expenditures scattered throughout the book under several different departments.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The National Defence department has nothing whatever to do with the administration of the military hospitals. They are under the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment.

Mr. CANTLEY: My query is why do they come under public works?

Sir EUGENE FISET: The Department of Public Works maintains all the public buildings.

Mr. CANTLEY: Surely a military hospital is not a public work.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It would be a public work so far as maintenance and repairs are concerned.

Mr. BURY: The same is true in respect of buildings in connection with the experimental farms. You do not get that expenditure in the estimates under the Department of Agriculture. I take it that comes under public works.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have charge of their construction, care and maintenance.

Mr. BURY: Even capital expenditure on construction is under public works? So that the different estimates of the Agricultural department will not include the cost of buildings?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No. The different departments submit their estimates to the Public Works department in respect of buildings, and they are voted by this department.

Mr. BURY: All I am saying is that when you look up the estimates of the Department of Agriculture you do not find there the items of expenditure on buildings.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Would the minister give us the annual expenditure on buildings in connection with the experimental farm at Ottawa?

Mr. CANTLEY: I quite understand the explanation, but due to this system it is very difficult to find out what the cost of any particular service is. For instance, on page 26 I find item No. 102, "construction of magazine, Halifax, $50,000," and "reconditioning mine sweeper, $50,000," the latter is a marine job, and various other items for construction. Why should not all these items appear under the same head? Surely we could evolve a system of bookkeeping and administration that would show all the money expended on any particular service. The same is true with regard to the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. You will find twenty different items scattered through this book chargeable to Agriculture which do not appear under Agriculture estimates, and you have to hunt the whole book through from end to end to find how much money is being expended on any particular service. That does not seem to me like business.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Answering my hon. friend from Halton, the expenditure on the experimental farm buildings at Ottawa for 1915-16 was $91,000; 1924-25, $222,000; 1925-26, $156,000.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): It averages about $100,000 a year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): About that.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): I would draw the minister's attention to the public building at Tignish, Prince Edward Island. That building has been giving trouble, and some repairs were made to it a couple of years ago. This year they are having trouble with the basement being flooded with water, and there is no proper drainage. Complaints, I think, have been made to the department, and I hope that the officers in charge of the Maritime buildings will be instructed to look into the condition of this building. They claim that the water is backing up and filling the well in the building. I know these reports are true, because they come from the janitor and other responsible parties. I hope the minister will see that these complaints are looked into.

Mr. KING (Kooteney): I shall be very glad to see that the representations made by my hon. friend are brought before the proper officers for consideration.

Answering my hon. friend from West York regarding the London building, the estimated annual cost of maintenance is $35,300, made up of taxes, insurance and repairs amounting to $10,122.64; heating, $1,450; lighting, $2,500; power, $140; rents, $9,733.30; salaries for caretakers engineers, firemen and so forth, $7,617; water, $3,547.79, making a total of $35,110.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think we paid for that building in cash. There is no interest charge?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The capital charge was $1,540,781. There is no interest charge. We paid that in cash.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Were any additions made to military buildings last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): "Improvements and additions" is the wording that has always been used for this item, but there were no additions last year, just repairs.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose our total overhead in connection with the London building would be about $100,000 a year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Including salaries?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Not salaries, but including interest and the other items the minister gave.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): About that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I bring to the attention of the minister the representations of two or three groups of public employees? Right here in the city of Ottawa I am informed that the office cleaners, not in this building, but in the other offices, receive $1.25 daily for their morning's cleaning, or $32.50 a month. Not only is that a low item which they think should be increased, but more than that, I am informed that if these women are absent one or two days owing to illness, pay is deducted. It seems to me that is a very small way, to say the least, of dealing with these lower paid employees, and I hope the minister will see his way to remedy that state of affairs.

There is another group that has made representations to me, and that is the elevator operators in these various public buildings in the city of Ottawa. They state that there are now five classes of salaries for elevator operators under the new classification, and yet all the employees are performing the same kind of work. For example, right here in the House of Commons and in the Senate there are seven elevators operating during the session, and four operators get a maximum salary of $1,260, one a maximum of $1,200, two a maximum of $1,080, and one operator, who is single, a maximum of $960. All are performing the same class of work and all are permanent employees. I am sure these representations have been made to the minister, and I would ask if there is not a possibility of having the matter satisfactorily adjusted. Then there is this further fact: I am informed that those employed by the House of Commons and those employed by the Senate are receiving different wages for the same class of work. This, of course, leads to considerable heart-burning and creates a feeling that the lower paid employees are not receiving fair play.

An hon. MEMBER: Which class is the highest paid?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The Senate employees. It would seem to me that as we are trying to consolidate our departments in one building, or a series of buildings, we might very well undertake to consolidate the departments themselves and the different types of work. We have heard about the duplication in connection with our railway systems. We have absolutely unwarranted duplication right under our noses every day. I cannot for the life of me see why a staff under one management cannot manage the affairs of these buildings, whether it is in the eastern part of this structure or in the House of Commons portion. We have two sets of doormen, two sets of charwomen, two sets of cleaners, two post offices with separate staffs, and the same thing all down the line, and why this should be passes my comprehension. It seems to me that if these matters were managed in a businesslike way there would be a consolidation of these departments under one management. May I say in closing that I should like to get answers from the minister to the questions I put with regard to these various classes of lower paid employees.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The char service is largely carried on by female help. The work is done early in the morning and occupies about two and a half hours, paid for at the rate of $1.25 per day. That is not a bad wage for the time occupied, which is not very great each day. The department, I think, have found that the char service is being done efficiently, and although those engaged in it would welcome a larger amount of remuneration, still it is considered that $1.25 for two and a half hours' work a day is probably as much as the government would be entitled to pay. Now in regard to the elevator and other services—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Before the minister leaves that subject, may I suggest to him that provision should be made for fairer treatment of these employees in the matter of sick leave and questions of that kind?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): These employees are not regarded as part of the civil service. They are paid at what is known as "prevailing rates" and have not been considered in the light of civil servants. There is something in what my hon. friend has suggested with respect to sick leave. I may point out, however, that it is a pretty difficult service to control, and one that requires careful supervision. Representations have been made on this subject and they will be given consideration. The employees in the House of Commons, I believe, enjoy certain holidays and other privileges that are not enjoyed in other branches of the service.

With respect to the elevator operators there is a difference in the matter of annual increase of pay. There are also temporary employees who have not been made permanent. The latter class are not given an annual increase and probably have not been fairly treated in that regard. I am asking that these temporary employees, some of whom have been in the service for twenty years, should be made permanent. I think they should be brought in and placed on a footing of equality with other employees.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is a matter for the government to do. It is a wonder they have not already done it.

Mr. ROGERS: The item of $385,000 for char service in the departments generally, including the payment of $100 for firing the noon gun, is a pretty large amount. There must be a lot of women employed if the rate of pay for the char service is only $1.25 a day.

Mr. TOBIN (Wetaskiwin): Would any hon. member suggest that the elevator men in the Senate enjoy a better rate of pay because they have to exercise greater care over those who use the elevators?

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): What are the elevator men paid?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Their pay ranges from $85 to $95 a month.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Does that include those who are in attendance during the session of parliament?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, the regular employees.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Are they employed for the whole year or just for the session?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Some are permanent employees, and others are temporary employees.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): What is the total number of employees in the char service and the amount paid in salaries each year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The total staff numbers 879, and the amount paid for salaries each year is $355,393.

Mr. ROGERS: There is an item of $99,000 in vote No. 142 for elevator attendants. Last year the vote only amounted to $72,000. Why the increase of $27,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Previous to this year these employees enjoyed a bonus which was paid from the bonus allowance. But there has been a reclassification or adjustment of salaries, and the increase is attributable to that adjustment.

Mr. ROGERS: The bonus is cut out altogether.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes by reason of an adjustment in salary.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): How many elevator attendants are there including those in the Senate?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are 16 elevator attendants employed during the session.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): There is an item here which requires explanation. It is that of $100 for firing the noon gun. I thought this government boasted of its economy. If so it should cut out all this noon gun firing. Is there any special necessity for having this gun fired at Ottawa? Perhaps it is the hour of the cabinet meeting, or it may have some other special significance. Is the man who fires the gun an artillery man, or what is the special reason for carrying on this practice when it has been cut out in all other parts of Canada?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is an old practice, it costs $100 a year, and I observe that when the gun goes off nearly every member of the House takes out his watch to see the time. I think it would be a mistake to dispense with it.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Why is this piece of antiquity continued in Ottawa when it has been abolished in all other cities?

An hon. MEMBER: Not all.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is supposed to be. They do not employ a man to fire the gun any other place. Have the people in Ottawa a bad set of watches?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think they should be checked anyway, so that they could get the right time once a day.

Mr. McCLENAGHAN: If you cut out the noon gun in Ottawa you upset the whole timing system of the city. Every house is run on the noon gun. At every gathering in the city when the gun is fired, everyone pulls out his watch and sets it. It is historical. It goes back to the days of Colonel By when Parliament Hill was then Barracks Hill. When visitors and tourists are being shown around the beautiful Parliament grounds and buildings and the gun suddenly goes off the guide is able to tell them a wonderful story. He can draw on his imagination and suggest that the gun is now fired from a spot where the Indians camped in the early days. We could not do without our noon gun.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): This is not the explanation. This practice has been discontinued in other cities for the sake of economy.

Mr. McCLENAGHAN: This is the capital of the Dominion.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is it maintained because it is the capital. Is the whole city run by the noon day gun?

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I am interested in finding out about how much a session of parliament costs the country. How much are the charwomen who are employed during the session paid? How many engineers, firemen and watchmen are employed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The char service in the building is under the Speaker of the Senate and the Speaker of the Commons, and we have not that information.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): The charwomen are mentioned in this item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not for this building. This item refers to other buildings.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I understand the charwomen mentioned here are engaged in this building.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. ROGERS: They are not included in this item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. ROGERS: Is the item of $650,000 the same as last year? Was that amount used last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Last year there was an over-expenditure of $2,000. The total amount expended last year was $652,869.

Mr. ROGERS: It is a large amount.

Mr. FRASER: I notice there is a considerable increase in the item for heating.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I give the same explanation as I gave with regard to the elevator men. Some of those connected with this work were drawing a bonus, but it was discontinued and the salaries have been adjusted.

Mr. FRASER: The same with the lighting?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. The item would be for increased current. I do not see any change in the lighting.

Mr. FRASER: An increase from $207,000 to $217,000.

An hon. MEMBER: You are looking at the wrong page.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The amount for lighting Ottawa public buildings and grounds is $82,000. The explanation of the increase of $10,000 in the estimates for lighting Dominion public buildings is:

|---|---|
| 1. An increase of 38 in the number of buildings at a cost of.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $ 7,260 |
| 2. An increase in consumption at various buildings.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 740 |
| 3. The cost of lighting the Canadian building at London, England which was formerly paid out of the special appropriation provided for that building.. .. .. | 2,500 |
| | $10,500 |

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is included in the $35,000 you gave for that building?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ROGERS: Was the $60,000 expended on Rideau Hall last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We spent $62,698, so that the appropriation was over-expended.

Mr. ROGERS: Is the minister going to keep it down a little this year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We hope to.

Mr. ROGERS: It does not require $19,000 for lighting at Rideau Hall?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is fuel and light.

Mr. ROGERS: Does it take that amount?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. The coal would be the large item.

Mr. ROGERS: Telephone service, $95,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is for the whole Ottawa service.

Mr. ROGERS: Reading the item one would think it was simply for Rideau Hall.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I understood the minister to say a moment ago that the increase of $10,000 in the item of lighting for Dominion public buildings was partly due to the fact that the Department of Public Works was now paying for the lighting of the Canadian building in London.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: What responsibility has the Department of Public Works for the Canadian building in London?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Under the Public Works Act it is under the Department of Public Works just as other buildings are. We are asking for supply in order that we may heat, light and take care of the building generally through the commissioner.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Does the Department of Public Works pay everything in connection with that building as it would with regard to a building in Ottawa, that is, the taxes, ground rent, lighting, heating, char service and everything of that kind?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, through the commissioner in London.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Is that not a new venture?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I do not think that was the policy when I was there. I quite admit we had not as good a building as the present one, but I think all the charges in connection with it were paid out of the High Commissioner's vote.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Of course at that time the hon. member was in a rented building and the department had not any direct interest in the commissioner's office. But since the property now known as the Canadian building was taken over and reconstructed, the Department of Public Works came on the scene and we are now asking parliament to vote supply for maintenance of that building.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Is this the first year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The first regular year that has been in operation.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is then rather a good time to suggest that the hon. gentleman is not responsible for one cent being spent there. He has not the slightest supervision of expenditure. He has nothing to do with the charwomen or anything else there. He neither hires nor fires the man that looks after the furnace or anything else. They are all employees of the local office.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The Civil Service Commission hire and fire.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In England?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It seems to me that the government sometimes strain at gnats and swallow camels. They are making a great deal out of a gnat in this case. I have a shrewd suspicion that the real reason they are doing that is that it is not convenient to show the annual carrying cost of that building in an item of $110,000 a year. There is so much trouble about this gnat. My hon. friend is put into this position that he is asking for a vote for something which he knows nothing about and which his officers know nothing about. If a man is to be hired to look after the furnace in the Canadian building in London, how is he appointed by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Firemen are exempt under the Civil Service Act.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I knew they were. That was the reason I was taking my hon. friend at his word for the moment, because when I was asking how the man was hired or fired I was told that it was done by the Civil Service Commission. I knew that was nonsense. What appointments have been made by the Civil Service Commission to positions in connection with the London office?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): What I have said is right. We submit the list to the Civil Service Commission. Although they do not appoint the firemen, they indicate the position and the salary. Others on the staff are appointed by the commission. Of course our connection with the building is that merely of the Department of Public Works which is maintaining buildings say in Vancouver, and there is no reason why it should not maintain a building at London under the same conditions. We have our agent there, the High Commissioner, and the department is kept informed. There is nothing cumbersome, nothing unusual about this; indeed I think it is a proper procedure that the vote should come before parliament in this way.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister now says that the Civil Service Commission apparently makes out the classification of services there. I want to know what appointments it has made there.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not a list at hand, but the salaries for caretakers, engineers and firemen which we provide for amount to $7,617.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is exactly what I did not ask my hon. friend. He is fond of giving information that is not asked for. He gave information as to appointments being made by the Civil Service Commission. Now I ask him what appointments have been made to the London office by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am informed that the Civil Service Commission approved all the caretakers, engineers and firemen employed in the Canadian building, London.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The whole thing comes down to this, that the High Commissioner over there makes the appointments and they are approved by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It comes down to that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Who is my hon. friend's representative in England?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The High Commissioner.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We are learning something all the time. We learn now that the Hon. P. C. Larkin, the High Commissioner, is the representative of the Minister of Public Works in London.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend is unfair; he knows he is not speaking according to the book. The Hon. P. C. Larkin is High Commissioner for Canada in London, and in that position in addition to his other duties he represents the government of Canada in the administration of the Canadian building in London.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend said that he had a representative over there and could run that office just as well as he could run an office in Vancouver.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Why exaggerate?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is what my hon. friend said. He wants now to deny that. He did not say that he had his representative there and could run that office just as well as he could run a building in Vancouver?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend is exaggerating.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend's memory is as weak as his logic. I asked him who his representative was and he said it was the Canadian High Commissioner. It seems that is a farce.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: It seems to me it is a mistake for the Department of Public Works to take over this service. The High Commissioner in London and his secretary are really the ones who administer the building, who pick out the men who are to do the work, and the charges for it should be through the High Commissioner's office. It is not reasonable to have the expenses over there divided into a number of departments so that it is impossible for anybody to find out the total cost of the building and the services in London. It is only camouflage to put it through the Department of Public Works when the High Commissioner and his office are responsible for the whole expenditure and are the people who really select the men. The minister has made a mistake in including this vote in his estimates. What is the total cost of the services in London?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is $35,110.73.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Does that include ground rent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It includes taxes, insurance, repairs, heating, lighting, power, rents, salaries of caretakers, engineers, and firemen. I do not think there is any option in the matter unless we amend the Public Works Act. There is no use creating any mystery about it. Mr. Larkin is in London and is surrounded by a capable staff, and as we approach the period of estimate-making we are advised as to how much their requirements will be. And that is entered in the Public Works estimates. One or two hon. gentlemen have made the same complaint about some items which in their opinion should properly come under the estimates of other departments to which they appertain. This has been pointed out in the case of Agriculture, for example. But the fact is that under the Public Works Act this department is responsible for the expenditures so included. There is no desire on my part to control expenditures that do not rightly come under my department, but this is the system which has been adopted.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: How is it that from the time we have had a High Commissioner in London until to-day these services have not been administered by the Public Works department? It is true that we had a rented building, but we have throughout the country many such buildings which the Public Works department administers. If it is contrary to the act, how is it that until to-day the Public Works Department has not administered the services in London?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The High Commissioner is free to rent any buildings, but the moment a building becomes the property of the crown it comes under the Public Works department.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: But the Public Works department has already administered rented buildings.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We have a grant for $1,400,000 for rented buildings occupied by other departments. Will the minister give us a list of those buildings, including the offices in Ottawa, for which rents are paid.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

JOLIETTE AND NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY

The House in committee on Bill No. 12, respecting Joliette and Northern Railway Company.—Mr. Denis (Joliette)—Mr. Duff in the chair.

Mr. MEIGHEN: May I ask if anyone here is familiar with this bill? I do not want to hold it up because the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Denis) is not here.

Mr. SPEAKER: I saw the hon. member for Joliette at six o'clock, and he had to leave for his home. This bill was passed unanimously by the Private Bills committee. It is an old bill which has been before the House for three years, and merely asks for an extension of time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no Rouyn railway circuitousness about it, is there?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No; no bill would be needed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has it any distant relationship to the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not know; I have no information.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Perhaps the hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugene Fiset) can tell me.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The hon. member for Joliette told me it was a first cousin to the Canadian National Railways.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DOMINION ELECTRIC PROTECTION COMPANY

The House in committee on Bill No. 155, respecting Dominion Electric Protection Company—Mr. Marcil—Mr. Duff in the chair.

On section 1—Capital increased, par value of shares decreased.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In the absence of the promoter, can the hon. member for Rimouski give us any information as to the pedigree of this company?

Sir EUGENE FISET: No.

Mr. LAPOINTE: As neither the member in charge of the bill nor the chairman of the Private Bills committee is here to give any explanation, I think this bill should stand.

Section stands.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY

The House in committee of Supply, Mr. Duff in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When the House took recess at six o'clock we were discussing resolution 142 on page 34 of the estimates.

Mr. ROGERS: The minister was about to make some explanation in regard to the matter of rents. I notice there is an increase of rents of some $30,000. The amount originally was very high, $1,410,000; it is now $1,440,000, and I think it would be well for the minister to give some information as to the necessity of paying such an enormous amount for rent.

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Public Works): The increase is largely made up of the inclusion in the estimates of the Canadian building in London, $9,733, the rental of the Duford building and the McDougald building. Those buildingse are occupied by the Marine Department and the Mounted Police. The Blythe building is occupied by the Mines Department at a rental of $3,600, and the premises 31 Sparks street by the Post Office Department at an expenditure of $900. The total rental is $28,691.

Mr. ROGERS: Would it be convenient to give us a list of all the properties rented in Ottawa, with the names of the lessors?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): R. L. Blackburn appears to be one of the larger lessors; C. J. Booth, and the Imperial Realty Company—

Mr. HANSON: Who are they?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think they are residents of Ottawa. Mr. Blackburn and Mr. Booth are well known. I do not know who compose the Imperial Realty Company. The list will be placed on Hansard so that it will be available to hon. members. It is as follows:

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): Would the minister tell me whether it is true that officials and employees of the Interior department are distributed over twenty buildings in this city, or if not, how many?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The Department of the Interior, which includes the Indian department and the various branches, are in twelve different buildings in this city.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): I was informed by a man who ought to know that they had offices in twenty-six buildings. Even twelve buildings seem an enormous number for one department to be spread over. Is there any way whereby a more economical adjustment of that department could be brought about?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think the way to accomplish that is by consolidation in new buildings. We were discussing that question this afternoon. The Parks branch of the department is a distinct branch and it is in its own quarters. The Indian department have their own quarters and so on through the department. The main offices of the department are in the Langevin block.

Mr. McCLENAGHAN: I would like to ask the minister about the Carling building on Bank street between Sparks and Queen. When was the lease with Mr. Carling cancelled?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There was no cancellation. The lease expired some months ago. I have not the exact date under my hand, but I shall be glad to supply my hon. friend with that information.

Mr. McCLENAGHAN: I understand Mr. Carling's lease expired and the building was left on the market empty. It was a very expensive building; I believe he had it on the market at $200,000 and he could not rent it to the government. I do not know why they left it. It had been occupied by the Department of the Interior from the time it was built. I understand that nothing Mr. Carling could do would induce the government to re-lease it. It was eventually sold to the President of the Eastern Ontario Liberal Association and I believe within twenty-four hours of the sale being effected a new lease was made out to that gentleman and his friends. That is the information I get. I do not know whether it was because Mr Carling was a son of his father, a former Conservative Minister of Agriculture, or not, but I know that building was lying idle for about a year. I understand the department have rented it and paid rent since last May although it was occupied only about a month or two months ago. The tenants who went into that building were removed from the Bryson building on Queen street, a building with light on four sides, to a building that has light just on Bank street. The building on Queen street was owned by the George Bryson Realty Company and it is now lying idle, while the building that the government could not use prior to the time that the President of the Eastern Ontario Liberal Association bought it is now occupied by the Parks branch that was formerly in the Bryson building on Queen street.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend is not correctly informed. The lease of the Carling building expired. There were changes and removals in the department. As my hon. friend living in Ottawa knows these things take place from time to time. It is true that a department has gone into that building, but it has been renovated and improved so that it is a satisfactory building to-day.

Mr. McCLENAGHAN: Is the Bryson building on Queen street not satisfactory? It had been occupied by the Parks branch ever since it was built fifteen years ago. It is right behind the Hunter building with light on four sides; it is an isolated fireproof building. I know the property on Bank street. Up to the two top storeys it has light only front and back. The rest looks on to an alleyway; if they need light they get it from the alleyway. This building was occupied for a number of years. Mr. Carling lost on that transaction probably $100,000. The building was put on the market with the brokers at $200,000; then the price was reduced to $175,000, and finally when the building was lying there idle without rental he had to take the best offer he could get, which was $110,000 or $115,000. Therefore through the fact of the building not being occupied, he lost the difference between $110,000 or $115,000 and the $175,000 or $200,000 at which the building was put on the market. This looks to me like a clear case of patronage. We people in Ottawa do not like patronage at all; we are very much surprised that the Minister of Public Works would think of such a thing when Mr. Carling, who was a very prominent citizen, put up this building, thus helping to make Bank street the wonderful street that it is, the building lay empty for about a year on account of its not being well lighted; yet as soon as it becomes the property of the president of the Eastern Ontario Liberal Association it has plenty of light around it and becomes rented.

Mr. BURY: When the lease of that building expired and the department felt that it required certain alterations, did the minister give the lessor an opportunity of making those alterations? Did he make any requirement or suggestion to the lessor that the building would be suitable if certain alterations were made?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend would understand the situation better if he would go over the numerous leases we have in Ottawa and if he realized the difficulty of accommodating various departments. A department is very much like the ordinary tenant who moves into a house and occupies it. After he is there a little while he finds the light not good or the premises dirty or cold, in the case of premises rented for departments the Department of Public Works hears of these things. We act as agents for the various departments and changes are made from time to time. When a man or a firm rents a building to the Department of Public Works or the government of Canada there is no assurance and no reason to have assurance of tenure any more than in the case of any other lessee. It is true that if departments are comfortably situated and complaints do not come in we try to continue the tenure, but changes will and do take place from time to time.

Mr. BURY: I quite appreciate the fact that the lessor of a building to the government has no right to expect from the government more than from any other lessee. But I think he has a right to expect that if his lessee, the government, has any fault to find with the premises, he might be informed and given an opportunity of making the necessary alterations. It strikes me as a new member of this House as rather strange, to say the least, that when the premises had been vacated by the government on the expiration of the lease the new Liberal owner is given an opportunity of putting the building into condition, meeting the requirements of the department and becoming himself a lessor. Any lessee who has occupied as a tenant premises for any considerable time usually, if he finds fault with the premises, gives his lessor an opportunity of putting them into proper condition.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As the result of certain reorganization in the last two or three years a number of changes were necessitated in the Immigration department, and these changes are all justified. The reference to the president of the East Ottawa Liberal Association is without point.

Mr. McCLENAGHAN: The minister means the Eastern Ontario Liberal Association. Did the department make any extensive repairs to that building or was the work all done by the owners?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Largely by the owners.

Mr. McCLENAGHAN: Ordinary men on the street inform me that they have seen Public Works men around the building during the past six months. What was wrong with the Bryson building? That building has been occupied by the Parks branch alone. It is an isolated building with light on four sides and it seems rather strange that it should be vacated and the Parks branch transferred to a building which has been condemned for want of light.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The Parks branch complained that there was not sufficient accommodation and that the building was cold and dirty. They wanted to be transferred.

Mr. McCLENAGHAN: Was the Journal building vacated for the same reason? Was it, too, cold and dirty simply because it happened to be the Journal building?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I suppose the hon. gentleman would wish the government to continue renting the Journal building. Our lease expired and we moved.

Mr. BURY: Reverting to the Carling building, did the department comunicate with the owner before he made the improvements? Did they submit to him certain specifications for improvements and request him to comply with them?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We insisted upon the improvements being made before the building was leased.

Mr. BURY: Might not the department have done precisely the same thing with the previous owner?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): He was not given an opportunity.

Mr. BURY: Exactly; Mr. Carling was not given an opportunity. Aparently what the government could do for the one man they could not do for the other. They could not go to the old lessor, whose tenants they had been for years, and tell him that the building as it stood was not suitable and demand certain improvements and alterations. They could not do that in his case but they could with the next owner who happens to be a Liberal.

Mr. HANSON: It would be ridiculous to suggest that Mr. Gordon Edwards, a member of a family that has been a milch cow to the Liberal party for a quarter of a century, would not be given an opportunity in this matter.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The hon. member for East Edmonton (Mr. Bury) evidently did not hear me say that there was a reorganization. We moved from the Norlite building to the Jackson building for consolidation purposes in connection with the Immigration department. That was at the request of the minister. We then consolidated the Lands branch in the Norlite building, removing a part of that branch from the Carling building. That is how the Carling building was vacated in the first place. On the occasion of a further reorganization the Parks branch at their request were transferred from the Bryson building to the Carling building.

Mr. MacLAREN: What are the rentals respectively of the two buildings?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the information here; the transaction took place some months ago. But the rentals, I fancy, are about the same. I shall look into the question. In the Carling building we found increased accommodation for the Parks branch, and naturally as there was more space the rent would be higher.

Mr. BURY: The minister has not yet satisfactorily answered me. I am prepared to accept the statement that there had to be a reorganization of certain branches. After that reorganization the plans of the government evidently fit into the Carling building. My question is this: could not those plans have fitted into the Carling building while it was owned by the other gentlemen? Do they fit in now better than they did before. merely because the present owner is a Liberal and a friend and supporter of the government? Could not the same improvements and changes, the same structural alterations, have been effected under the old lessor as under the new?

9 p.m.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): During and after the consolidation the Carling building was vacant for a period of nearly one and a half years. We had left it and we went back to it at the request of the Parks branch, which needed better and larger quarters.

Mr. BURY: That does not answer my point.

Mr. HANSON: I presume we may discuss under this item the famous Union Club purchase. How much has been spent on this building for furnishings and so forth since the close of the fiscal year which is covered by the last report of the Auditor General, that is to say, since March 31, 1925?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the capital expenditure; I gave that to the House last year. The information I gave to-day has reference to the vote, now under consideration, for maintenance. I submitted the details this afternoon. The total is $35,110.73.

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Mr. HANSON: I am not interested in the maintenance. I want to know what we have spent on the structure in addition to the cost.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is a total expenditure of $1,540,781.

Mr. HANSON: We have spent a considerable sum in refurbishing and refurnishing the building since buying it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In addition to the purchase price a certain amount of reconstruction was necessary. That information was given last year, together with the amount for furnishings. I have not the information here as to those expenditures; I have the explanation of the expenditure for the coming year.

Mr. HANSON: That is for maintenance.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. HANSON: Is there any expenditure contemplated for further furnishings in the coming year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. HANSON: So we may take it for granted that the building has cost the country as it now stands $1,500,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. HANSON: Gentlemen who were in the last parliament may remember the subterranean methods used to secure this building in order to satisfy the pet whim of the Prime Minister and his friend Mr. Larkin, and I propose to put on Hansard some little information from the Auditor General's report in regard to this matter. The purchase price of the Union square building was £225,000, which with the extras figures out at $1,008,950.08. The ground rent adjustments which had to be made with the landlord amounted to $10,437.60; for the leasehold we paid $511, and the alterations and additions cost $233,600. The architect's fees were $26,742.33 and there is an item for a clerk of works, $1,946.67. Then come the gems I would like the House and the country to appreciate, and they will be found in the Auditor General's report, part V, at page 155. The following furniture was purchased in England: Spink & Co., two bookcases, $1,887.16. That certainly beats the mahogany paper basket purchased by a minister a few years ago at a cost of $90—or was it a coal scuttle, or was it a silver teaball for the Prime Minister, at $18? Five chandeliers $1,788.50; two chairs $171.67; an Agra carpet from the Vigo Art Galleries $1,102.18. From Waring & Gillow were purchased 12 pairs of curtains costing $2,044; four chairs $584. I wonder where are our friends from Saskatchewan.

Mr. HANSON: Do they approve of this?

An hon. MEMBER: We do not approve of twisting it.

Mr. HANSON: I am reading absolutely from the record.

An hon. MEMBER: Has the record been changed?

Mr. HANSON: No, the record has not been changed. I will continue with the items. A settee $279.84; a satinwood table $803; a walnut table $187.80; two chairs $184.93; a pair of corner cabinets $180.07; nineteen fenders $155,73; sundries $255.75. Then there was furniture purchased in Canada to the value of $9,800, including $2,200 to the Andrew Malcolm Company. That is a total of $19,424.63 for furniture up to that time, when the building had not been completed, and since that time over a quarter of a million dollars more has been spent, if I understood the figures correctly from the minister. That makes a total of $1,540,000, less $1,302,421.88 up to March 31, 1925. I would like to ask if there is any justification for this extravagance.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I disagree entirely with my hon. friend; this has not been an extravagance. Canada to-day has a fine building in the seat of empire, and I believe we have the best location within the empire for a building of that character. We have furnished that building properly, to the credit of the Canadian people. It is true that there are many fine pieces of furniture in that building, but every Canadian who has been to London and who is interested in the welfare of Canada in relation to Great Britain, irrespective of his politics, will report to the individual members of this House, I am sure, that Canada has to-day the finest location in London of any of the dominions. The building is a credit to the Canadian people, and in relation to the expenditures of other dominions we have not overpaid. We know that the Union club building at the corner of Cockspur street and Trafalgar square is a wonderful location, and we have a lease on that building running until 1962, with the option of extending it for another thirty-three years then. We are paying an annual rental of £2,000, and we have a ground area of 9,254 square feet. The South African building, on the corner of Trafalgar square and the Strand, opposite our building, with to my mind not an equally good location—and I think those who are familiar with the square will agree—carries an annual rental of £2,000. The lease has eight years yet to run, and a renewal has been offered at a rental of £4,000. The ground space in that instance is only 5,000 square feet.

Mr. BURY: Will the minister give the comparison between what was paid in that case for the leasehold interest and what the amount was in the case of Canada?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am speaking of the ground lease.

Mr. BURY: I am aware of that, but you paid something for the lessee's interest in that lease.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If my hon. friend will wait until I finish he will probably understand better. I am making a comparison between the amounts being paid by the respective governments for the lease. We have a lease running until 1962 with a ground space of 9,254 square feet, for which we pay an annual rental of £2,000.

Mr. BURY: Yes, but—

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Just wait. Then we have the South African government; they have a lease which has to run eight years, and the present rental is £2,000, with an opportunity of renewing that lease at a rental of £4,000. They have but 5,000 square feet. Then we have the P. & O. Steamship Company, Limited, 15 and 16 Cockspur street. The lease in that case is for thirty years; the annual rental is £5,000 and the ground space amounts to 5,500 square feet. Then there is the Barclay's bank building at the corner of Pall Mall east and Haymarket. The term of that lease is eighty years; the annual rental is £8,000 and the ground space amounts to 11,500 square feet. Then there is the Cox's bank building at the corner of Waterloo place and Pall Mall. The lease in that case is for eighty years, the annual rental £7,500 and the ground area 10,000 square feet. I give this information to the committee because I think it only fair that the Canadian people should know that this country has not failed to secure a good property at a reasonable ground rental. As for the reconstruction of the building, this was done under a capable architect, Mr. Warwick, who is well known in this country. He was formerly associated with architectural work in the city of Montreal, and is now resident in England. The actual work was done by Messrs. Trollope & Colls, Limited, the foremost and most reliable contractors in London. They in competition with other contractors submitted prices as to what the work would be done for. Their price was accepted, and I am satisfied that if hon. gentlemen have an opportunity of visiting London and seeing this building they will not complain very much in regard to Canada's investment.

Mr. BURY: May I ask the hon. minister now to answer what was the most material question in that comparison? One government has a lease for a certain number of years at a certain rental of a certain area. It had to buy the lessee's interest in that lease, and the smaller the rent, the longer the term, and the better the terms of the renewal lease, the bigger the price it will pay. That is perfectly obvious. I want to know if the minister is going to give this House a proper comparison between the bargain made by this Dominion, and that made by South Africa, or by any other country for its leasehold interest. What was paid for the leasehold interest in each case?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have bought the building and we have bought the lease at the rate of £2,000 per annum until 1962, and we can extend that to 1999 for an additional £850 per annum.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister can give the committee, if he will just refer to his figures, what we paid for the lease. I know the property. I saw it when the front was all torn out of the building, and the new front was being built in. If the minister will give us the amount we paid for the lease—which for the moment I have forgotten, but it runs into a very large sum—and then tell us what it cost to remodel the face of the building—because they took out the old face of the building, leaving very little else—that will give us some idea. The minister speaks about the ground area. Unfortunately that building is a very shallow one. While its general location is excellent, I admit, as everybody must admit who is familiar with the Trafalgar Square district, although the side of the street the Union Club is on is not as much travelled, I think, as the side immediately opposite, yet the location is not so super-excellent as the minister would lead us to believe. But I am not going to quibble over that. It is a good location, but, as I say, the building is a very shallow one. It is a sort of triangular affair, on an obtuse corner, and the whole front of the building had to be torn out and rebuilt with a stone front, with the result that it looks very well.

[Mr. J. H. King.]

The minister mentioned a moment ago a building that undoubtedly ought to have been secured, Cox's Bank on Waterloo Place. It is a perfectly new building, modern in every respect, a magnificent building with 114,000 square feet of space. The minister gave the ground area as 10,000 square feet, as compared with 9,000 feet in the other building, but the Cox building is a magnificent one, a modern stone building ideally located, facing directly across to Whitehall. It is ideally located for the purpose of a Dominion government in London, a much better location than the site on Trafalgar Square. I admit that for retail business perhaps, the sale of tickets, for instance, the particular section where the present building stands is very good. It is largely occupied now by offices of various steamship companies; the Canadian Pacific is almost across the street, and there are the Grand Hotel and other buildings. As a location for business I admit it is better than Waterloo Place where Cox's Bank is, but for an office building for Dominion government purposes the Cox's Bank location, to my mind, would have been very much better. Furthermore, you would have had four or five times the floor space that this building supplies. The government could then have rented part of the building, but as we are situated at the present time in London, the building is more than fully occupied and does not house all the government services.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Practically all.

Mr. STEVENS: Almost all, but not quite.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is space there to spare.

Mr. STEVENS: I think the minister will find that you cannot put the government services now in London in that building. I was fully advised of that a year or so ago when I was over there. But I am not complaining that the location is not a good one. That is not the question. The question is, are we getting for the expenditure we put into that building the best return? I submit that we are not. I think the government made a serious mistake when it did not secure Cox's building for this purpose, which in my opinion is the best location for the purpose in London. The Australian building, which is further down towards the city, is a much better place for the headquarters for the Agent General and for Dominion government purposes than is the Union Club building which we purchased. It is too late to quibble over the matter now, I suppose, but I want to recall to the attention of the minister and of the committee that before this deal was consummated I brought the matter to the attention of the House in 1923, indeed in 1922, before the Prime Minister went to England, and he stood in his place in the House and promised us that the matter would not be consummated until it had been further discussed by parliament. But in the interim we were committed to this purchase by a certain Colonel Hyde, if I remember rightly. Again, in 1923 we warned the government that it was not making the best possible bargain. Now I think when we have all the expenditures before us it will be found that we have bought a very costly location which gives us not by any means the best possible accommodation for our Canadian services.

I would ask the minister to give us separately the cost of the purchase of the lease, the cost of renovating and rebuilding the structure, and the cost of the furnishings to date.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the items separately before me, but my hon. friend from York-Sunbury gave them a few moments ago from the Auditor General's report. The cost of the building and lease was £225,000. if I remember rightly, and the cost of reconstruction some £70,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Is that the complete cost of reconstruction?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, if I remember rightly. The hon. member for York-Sunbury gave the cost of the furnishings a moment ago.

Mr. HANSON: Only up to March 31st of last year.

Mr. STEVENS: As a matter of fact it would amount to about $1,500,000 for the lease and the rebuilding of the structure.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The total capital expenditure to date is $1,540,000.

Mr. HANSON: We would like to get from the minister his defence of the purchase. I am not going to question the location for I am not able to speak as to that, and there is a difference of opinion. But we will concede that the location is a good one. We should know the purchase price of the lease before we can understand exactly the comparisons made by the minister with the locations of the buildings of other dominions.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think I gave that information very concisely this afternoon, but I will read it again: London, Canadian building: Paid for equipment of the Union Club, interest in site and building, including adjustment of taxes and costs of transfer and registration, $1,009,436.74. I think that is the information my hon. friend wants. Then the amount for the reconstruction and improvement of the building is $531,344.81. I deem it best to give the figures in dollars and cents rather than in pounds. The total capital expenditure is $1,541,781.

Mr. McGIBBON: If I understood the minister, this building cost approximately $1,000,000; $500,000 was expended upon reconstruction and improvement, and we have to give it up in thirty years?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, we do not. We have the option of continuing.

Mr. McGIBBON: What is the increase in the rental?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): An additional £850 per year will enable us to go to 1999.

Mr. McGIBBON: Who authorized the extravagant furnishings for this building?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think the furnishings are extravagant; I think they are in keeping with the building and the location. The money for this purpose was voted at the last session of parliament.

Mr. McGIBBON: Does the minister justify it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, entirely.

Mr. McGIBBON: On what ground?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As being necessary for a building so situated.

Mr. BURY: What did South Africa pay for its lease?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not that information.

Mr. BURY: Then it is impossible to make a comparison. It is utterly futile to compare a lease with a rental of two thousand a year with another lease with a rental of two thousand a year unless one knows what was paid for the leasehold interest in each case.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What is the cost of furnishing the building up to the present time?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not happen to have that information at hand at present. The hon. member for York-Sunbury gave from the Auditor General's report a few moments ago the expenditure for furnishings for the building. I have already given the total capital expenditure, and we are dealing now with the item for maintenance for the coming year. I shall be glad to give to my hon. friend the information he asks for, but I regret that I do not happen to have it here just now.

Mr. HANSON: The amount as shown by the Auditor General's report was a little less than $25,000. Since the date of that expenditure the building has been completely furnished and the total amount must be greatly in excess of the sum mentioned. I should like to have that information if I could get it in some detail.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I shall be very glad to bring down a return containing the information.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In addition to the offices mentioned by the minister, what other offices are accommodated in this building?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am advised that the government agencies and offices in London are now housed within the Canadian building. There may be one or two offices maintained down town for the convenience of the public, but the headquarters of the offices in London are now within the Canadian building. That was true when I was in London this year and it certainly was the intention of the High Commissioner to have that done.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What offices are maintained downtown?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not know of any, with this exception: The Immigration department have offices scattered throughout England. They may find it necessary to maintain a sub-agency down town away from the main office in the Canadian building. The same is true of the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Soldiers Pension branch, and other departments.

Mr. STEVENS: And the National Railways.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The National Railways are a separate corporation. They have their own office across the street from the Canadian building.

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the minister tell us something about these two book cases which cost $1,900?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They are very beautiful bookcases and are good value for the money. If hon. members saw the furniture they would be well satisfied in regard to the outlay.

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Mr. McGIBBON: Tell us something about it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would rather my hon. friend would get a magazine and read about it.

Mr. STEVENS: Go over there and see it for yourself.

Mr. McGIBBON: I was over there.

Mr. FRASER: The item for rents has increased from $1,410,000 to $1,440,000. What is the explanation of that increase?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I gave that information to the committee a little while ago. Included in the increase are the following items: London, England, Canadian building, $9,733; Duford building and McDougald building, Ottawa, occupied by the Department of Marine and the Department of Mounted Police, $14,458; Blythe building, occupied by the Mines department, $3,600; premises at 31 Sparks street, occupied by the Post Office Department, $900, making a total of $28,691.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): When the minister brings down a return of the expenditure incurred in furnishing this building, will he include a list of the offices in the building and a list of the offices maintained outside?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In London? Yes.

Mr. FRASER: I notice a very substantial increase in the item for the salaries of caretakers, engineers, and so forth. How does the minister account for that increase?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The explanation is the same as the one I gave this afternoon in regard to other items. Previous to last year these men received a bonus which was not voted in connection with the departmental estimates but was paid separately. Last year there was an adjustment of salaries, and as a result the bonus has been done away with. The increase here is largely accounted for by the adjustment in salaries.

Mr. FRASER: It is a pretty large amount.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It really is not an addition. They received an augmentation before in the shape of a bonus, but it did not appear in this item. Now, by reason of the adjusted salaries, it does appear there.

Mr. MULLINS: I notice an item of $60,000 for the maintenance of Rideau Hall and grounds, improvements, furniture, and so forth. Will the minister give an explanation of this item so that we may all understand it? What has been the total cost of Rideau Hall up to date?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): For the last ten years the cost of upkeep has varied from $60,000 to $65,000 annually. In 1914 and 1915 the vote was $65,000, and the amount spent was $65,176. The item varies from year to year, but it is always close to that figure. As to the total cost of Rideau Hall, the purchase of the property and additions and alterations amounted to $774,232, maintenance $1,535,792, making a total of $2,310,000.

Mr. MULLINS: I have received from a reliable statistician figures to show that Rideau Hall has cost $5,000,000. At 5 per cent that would mean an annual rental of $250,000. Are these figures correct?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think that is not putting it quite fairly. You do not charge interest on maintenance as a rule.

Mr. MULLINS: My figures show that Rideau Hall has cost the country $5,000,000. At 5 per cent interest it would mean a rental of $250,000 a year, and there is an item of $19,000 for fuel and light.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The cost of the property and the additions and alterations to date amount to $774,232.

Mr. STEVENS: That is the capital cost?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. I have given the figure for maintenance. You would hardly charge interest on maintenance.

Mr. BURY: Can the minister give us the valuation put on that London Building by Knight, Frank and Rutley, to whom the government paid $511 for making the valuation?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The hon. member will find that that information was placed on Hansard last year. I have not got it here, but I shall be glad to bring it down.

Mr. BURY: The rent and the interest, with the amortization on the million and a half paid for the building, would mean that we are virtually paying between $82,000 and $85,000 a year for the building.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and Rivers, Nova Scotia, $402,550.

Mr. ROGERS: There is an item in connection with Dingwall (Aspy Bay), Breakwater, $48,700, for which $25,000 was voted last year. Is there any explanation of that?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is required for the construction of a breakwater at Dingwall, Nova Scotia, now under contract. It is a cribwork breakwater, a thousand feet in length, ten feet wide, three hundred and fifty feet by fifteen feet. The work will be completed during the year.

Mr. STEVENS: What is the amount of the contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): To complete the contract $43,208; and inspection, contingencies and so forth, $5,492. The contract was for $54,708 to W. E. Landry, of Antigonish, who was the lowest tenderer. With regard to the district served by this construction, there are some 3,000 farmers and fishermen residing in the district. It is an important community being isolated and dependent largely on water transportation. It is to be stone cribwork.

Mr. BOYS: Would the minister give us the details of the item of $65,000, harbours and rivers generally, repairs and improvements?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is required to make provision for repairs and improvements to harbours and rivers in control of the Public Works Department in Nova Scotia which are estimated by the district engineer to involve an expenditure of less than $1,000. There is a long list of these works, the expenditures varying from $15 up to $1,000 or $2,000. As my hon. friend knows, this item is to take care of unexpected and unforeseen conditions which may develop in the harbour work, piers or public works in that vicinity.

Mr. ROGERS: Was the vote last year all expended?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We spent $63,000 last year.

Mr. BOYS: I quite appreciate what the minister says about taking care of the unforeseen expenditures, but in the main, as I understand it, the vote is the result of items that are before the minister, and in coming to the House he asks for the total amount. Possibly in addition to that he may put in a miscellaneous item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Is it my hon. friend's desire to have a list of what it is now intended to expend from that vote?

Mr. BOYS: If it is not very long the minister might read it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is for works varying in cost from $75 to $500.

Mr. BOYS: I would be satisfied with a list of the expenditures over $500.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are 37 proposed expenditures, repairs to wharfs, repairs to landing steps, repairs to approach, construction of sheds, construction of skidway and other items.

Mr. BOYS: That gives us no information at all. Is the particular wharf that is to be repaired not designated?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. BOYS: That is the information we want.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is only a tentative list. Take Sable Island, repairs to wharf, $200—

Mr. BOYS: Am I not right when I say it is the result of reports made by officers of the department?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. BOYS: Would you put it on Hansard?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes The statement is as follows:

LIST OF WORKS AUTHORIZED 1926-27

|---|---|
| Nova Scotia— | |
| Centreville (Cape Sable Is.), repairs to wharf | $ 200.00 |

| Middle East Pubnico, repairs to wharf | 500.00 |
| Ostrea Lake, repairs to wharf | 100.00 |

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): May I ask for information regarding the wharf at Sydney?

[Mr. Boys.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is for the purchase of the old pier or wharf site of the Sydney Foundry Company and the construction of a cribwork wharf at that point. In 1921-1922 the sum of $100,000 was voted towards the construction of a wharf 540 feet by 70 feet to be located at Battery point at an estimated cost of $444,545. There is no doubt that there is a necessity for a wharf or pier in Sydney harbour for commercial purposes, but we do not feel that we would be justified in spending half a million dollars for the construction of a new pier there. An opportunity has arisen whereby we can secure a property which we are advised will give the accommodation we require and which can be constructed at a total cost of about $150,000. That proposal is under consideration. The matter has been gone into by the Department of Public Works and also by the engineers of the Canadian National railway who have conferred and have recommended this site and this purchase to the government.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): What was the purchase price of the site?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The purchase has not yet been made. We have had two or three estimates of the value. The price it is proposed to pay if the property is bought is $68,000. The valuations have been checked not only by the departmental engineers but by individuals outside of the department.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): Some time ago I directed the attention of the government to the fact that the terminal wharf of the old Intercolonial is situated less than 300 yards from this property. It has been partly destroyed by fire, but it can be put into a state of repair for a very much less amount than this, so I am informed. Is the minister prepared to say that the Railway department intend to extend their railway from the present terminus to the new site?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I might just read to my hon. friend what the district engineer had to say in regard to the Battery point wharf. He said:

> We examined the site at Battery point where there is at present a portion of a wharf in existence, but this was not suitable because it is located in an exposed position. which would only enable us to utilize the inner side of the said wharf, and in order to get sufficient accommodation for the trade which was outlined to us, it would have to be extended to such a length that its cost would preclude its consideration.

The cost, as I said a few moments ago, being $444,545.

> It likewise possessed the disadvantage of being located too great a distance from the business section of the community, so that transference of goods to it from mercantile establishments or from it to the said establishments would render the difference between rail haulage and water transit practically a negligible quantity.

In regard to the further question whether the railway company will utilize the proposed pier, the railway engineer and the Public Works engineer have drawn plans and it is their intention to use this pier once it is reconstructed. Instead of 300 yards it is some 3,600 feet from the present terminus of the Canadian National railway, and I understand the cost to the company will be not more than $15,000.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): I may say, having personal knowledge of the location, that as regards the Intercolonial the two sites are identical.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have been in Sydney only once, but that is not my impression.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): I have been there for many years. If the minister is satisfied and will assure us that the railway intend to extend their road to that wharf, there is no further objection; but so far as I can learn from the Railway department and from questions put to the railway officials yesterday in the committee, there is no such intention at the present time.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The whole matter has been discussed with the Canadian National Railway officials. If the railway company will intimate to the Department of Public Works that it is not their intention to use this pier, it will not be built.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): In the event of the wharf being built, according to the present estimate there will be only $7,000 left for the wharf. Is it the intention of the department to bring in a supplementary estimate to build the wharf this summer?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend has raised some doubt in my mind regarding this property, and I have suggested to the engineering branch that further inquiries be made and further information secured. As to whether the government will vote more money for the construction, my hon. friend will have to wait and see. The supplementary estimates will be down in a day or two. They are not yet complete; they are under consideration. It is not my privilege or right to indicate what will be in them, other than to say that if the government secures this property it is with the desire and intention of giving to the people of Sydney a terminal wharf at that point, and that will require some more money.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): At the earliest possible moment?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. QUINN: Will the minister give some information with regard to the item of $2,000 for Portuguese cove breakwater? I notice that in the previous year $11,700 was spent. Is this $2,000 to complete the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): To complete the contract.

Mr. QUINN: The minister no doubt is aware that when the breakwater was nearing completion last year, the cribwork was carried away owing to a very severe storm. I was wondering if this item of $2,000 would complete the work.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is all that the engineering branch have asked for. Our information is that this $2,000 is required to complete payments on the breakwater. Portuguese cove, under contract by W. S. Landry. We have a report from engineer Locke in which he says:

> The old work with the exception of the approach which was badly damaged by storm in December, 1919, was completely destroyed by the storm during the winter of 1923.

That was before we started this work. I am not advised of a recent storm.

Mr. QUINN: I am referring to a storm last fall, in the latter part of September or the beginning of October, when a great deal of the new work was carried away. I was there early in October and I am quite sure that $2,000 will not complete that breakwater.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The work was reported as satisfactorily completed on December 17. Did the storm occur after that?

Mr. QUINN: The first week in October or the latter part of September.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This report is subsequent to that.

Mr. CANTLEY: Under the head, "Harbours and rivers generally—repairs and improvements" there is an appropriation of $65,000, which is apparently an annual vote. How much of that has been spent in Pictou and on what sort of work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That vote is to meet contingencies that may arise from time to time. I am not sure that any of it is for Pictou county; I would say not. The money is at the disposal of the Engineering department. The estimated requirements are so far comparatively slight. Last year we spent $63,000.

Mr. CANTLEY: As practically no expenditures in Pictou county are contemplated in any of these estimates, I hope the minister will bring down in the supplementary estimates a sum sufficient to provide wharf accommodation for Pictou Island.

Mr. JOHNSTONE (Cape Breton) : What is the actual cost of the breakwater?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $54,708.

Mr. QUINN: Has any of the work at Hall's Harbour been begun yet?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The vote is required to complete the work now under contract, which consists of 100 feet of breakwater, 26 feet by 29.

Mr. QUINN: That is Hall's Harbour?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Prince Edward Island—harbours and rivers, $69,000.

Mr. ROGERS: What does the item of $10,000 mean for harbours and rivers generally? Is that to be spent throughout the province?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ROGERS: There is a large vote for New London.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That vote is required to complete the construction of the eastern breakwater at New London now under contract. Of the $30,000 asked for $17,000 is a re-vote.

Mr. ROGERS: That $17,000 will complete the work.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Mr. HANSON: Before that motion is carried, will the minister agree to the discussion, when the item for New Brunswick is taken up, of any points that may suggest themselves in relation to the Prince Edward Island vote?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Progress reported.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION

Loan of $12,000,000 for terminal facilities.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved the second reading of Bill No. 189, to provide for a loan to the harbour commissioners of Montreal.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Mr. ROGERS: The minister might give us some information not only regarding the purpose of this proposed loan but as to what has been done with the loan, made a year or two ago, of $11,000,000 or $15,000,000, I forget which. What is the necessity for this loan?

10 p.m.

Mr. CARDIN: The total amount authorized during the past four years is $15,000,000, expended as follows:

| | $ cts. | $ cts. |
|---|---|---|
| Elevator System for Handling of Grain:— | | |
| Grain Elevator No. 3 with conveyers and jetty | 3,716,167 00 | |

| Building, equipment and ⅓ cost power house | | 819,349 89 |
| General Improvement:— | | |
| Plant, land and extensions | | 1,276,329 46 |

This accounts for the $15,000,000 advanced to the harbour commission during the four preceding years. The amount paid out in wages is $2,865,000.

Mr. ROGERS: Do you include under bridges the large bridge which was built?

Mr. CARDIN: The south shore bridge is not included in this statement, which only accounts for the $15,000,000 already advanced. In connection with that bridge we have not advanced any money; we have merely guaranteed the debentures which are to be issued by the harbour commission.

Mr. ROGERS: You bought a lot of right of way and that sort of thing in connection with the bridge?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. ROGERS: Where did you get the money?

Mr. CARDIN: About $1,000,000 has already been applied to the construction of the bridge, and has been taken from this $15,000,000 already voted. This amount will be returned, however, when the harbour commission issues the debentures for the bridge, one-third of said debentures being taken care of by the federal government, one-third by the provincial government and one-third by the city of Montreal.

Mr. ROGERS: What was the estimate of the cost of the bridge?

Mr. CARDIN: About $15,000,000.

Mr. ROGERS: I think $11,000,000 was agreed upon between the three parties.

Mr. CARDIN: No, it is about $15,000,000.

Mr. ROGERS: I think the minister is mistaken.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was $6,000,000 when the late member for Chambly-Vercheres first pressed upon the House the construction of the bridge and persuaded the government to agree; the House was advised that it would cost about that amount. It is quite true that we on this side of the House told him he was millions out, and that it would probably run up to $12,000,000. This is just another case where the government's information misled parliament, while the opposition was right.

Mr. ROGERS: My information is that the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec appear to have an understanding that the cost shall not be more than $11,000,000, and that they have refused to exceed that amount. They will not pay anything more than one-third of $11,000,000, according to my information, which comes on very good authority.

Mr. CARDIN: I think there is no restriction.

Mr. ROGERS: The province and the city claim to be restricted to one-third of $11,000,000.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not think so.

Mr. HANSON: Is there a definite contract with the city to pay a proportion or any stated sum towards the cost of a new bridge?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes. The city of Montreal was authorized to take one-third of the responsibility, through a law passed at the last session of the Quebec legislature.

Mr. HANSON: And have they agreed to pay one-third of the total cost?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. HANSON: Is there a contract to that effect?

Mr. CARDIN: There has been a by-law passed by the city of Montreal.

Mr. HANSON: Is that equivalent in law to a contract?

Mr. CARDIN: It has been so considered by the legal advisers of the harbour commission.

Mr. MacLAREN: Two or three weeks ago a question was put on the order paper asking for the amount of the salaries paid to officials of the harbour boards of Montreal and Quebec. I am referring now to other officials than the harbour commissioners. This information was refused. The minister is now asking for a further loan of $12,000,000 to the harbour commission of Montreal, and I wonder if he still refuses to give us that information. I can hardly believe that this information is to be withheld from the House, because we have the information in regard to the salaries of the commissioners. I wish to press this matter very strongly on the minister, because I submit that we are entitled to have this information. Perhaps in view of the criticism levied since, because of the refusal to supply information on at least one other occasion, the minister may have thought proper to change his opinion in this matter.

Mr. CARDIN: I explained the other day that, this information being of an administrative character, the harbour commissioners should not be requested to supply it. We have no desire to conceal anything, and in view of the representations made the other day by hon. members opposite I am quite willing to give the information now concerning the Montreal Harbour Commission.

Mr. MacLAREN: That will be satisfactory. When will the information be given regarding the city of Quebec?

Mr. CARDIN: At the next sitting of the House, on Monday.

Mr. ROGERS: Is the minister prepared to give us the information in regard to the purchase of the right of way for the bridge, and to explain as well the necessity for changing the bridge from the original plan?

Mr. CARDIN: I do not exactly see my hon. friend's point. The site of the bridge has been changed; is that what my hon. friend has in mind?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. CARDIN: It has been thought by the advisory committee, composed of engineers, and by representatives of the city of Montreal and of the provincial government that the best site, and the one which has in fact been chosen, is that which lands the bridge at the foot of Delorimier avenue. The other proposal was that it should land just in the middle of the harbour, in that part of the city where there is the greatest congestion, and it was thought that to bring all the traffic over this bridge into what is already the most congested part of the city would be a source of trouble. So it has been decided, after due consideration by all interested parties, that the proper place to land would be the foot of Delorimier avenue. This, indeed, is the site which was indicated as long ago as fifteen years, when the first proposal for the building of the bridge was made. It is thought to be the more advantageous site because it is going to land in the eastern part of Montreal, in the manufacturing centre of the city where there is no such congestion as there is at the other site. The present site has been agreed upon by the representatives of the provincial government, of the city of Montreal, and by the board of engineers which has been constituted to advise the commissioners in regard to the bridge.

Mr. ROGERS: Could the minister give us some idea in regard to the amount of right of way that was purchased for the first location that is no longer of any use?

Mr. CARDIN: No property has been purchased.

Mr. ROGERS: Oh yes, you purchased considerable property.

Mr. CARDIN: No property has been purchased for the present site according to my information.

Mr. ROGERS: You mean to tell me that you have not purchased any of the right of way for the bridge yet? Of course you have.

Mr. CARDIN: There are proceedings under way for acquiring the property which has been chosen.

Mr. ROGERS: And the right of way was purchased for the bridge as originally planned.

Mr. CARDIN: No property was bought for what my hon. friend calls the old site.

Mr. STEVENS: On the south side of the river? I was down there the other day, and I saw a mile or more of grading and huge cement abutments.

Mr. CARDIN: This is government property. It belongs to the Department of National Defence.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Through how many general elections does the government expect the building of this bridge to last?

Mr. CARDIN: I think the bridge will be built before the next election.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister's powers of prophecy will fail, as his other powers have done. There is just as much chance of the heavens falling, and a lot less chance than of the government falling. The minister said that about $1,000,000 had already been spent.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does he think there is very much to show for that in the way of a bridge?

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly. A very large pier has already been completed on the south shore, and there are two piers completed on the south side of St. Helen's island. The foundation of the most important pier on the north shore, in Montreal, is already completed.

Mr. MANION: Would the minister give to the committee the amounts of money that have been advanced to the different harbour commissions, and state which of them are paying interest and which are not?

Mr. CARDIN: Unfortunately I have not the exact figures here. So far as Montreal is concerned, $44,000,000 is the amount of the debentures which the government has in its hands at present. I think the advances to Vancouver amount to about $15,000,000.

Mr. MANION. Is Vancouver paying interest?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: And sinking fund too. Don't forget that.

Mr. CARDIN: Montreal is also paying interest. We have advanced about $15,000,000 or $18,000,000 to Quebec, but no interest has been paid.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is Toronto paying its interest?

Mr. CARDIN: Toronto is on a different footing. Practically all the expenditures made in Toronto have been made by the Toronto harbour board and guaranteed by the city, except an amount of $8,000,000, which has been expended there by the Department of Public Works. That is a capital charge, upon which we are not getting any return. We have also made certain disbursements in the Maritime provinces. In Halifax about $15,000,000 or $18,000,000 has been expended by the Department of Railways and Canals. Of course, we are not getting any interest on that; that was a capital expenditure. I think about the same amount, $15,000,000 or $18,000,000, was expended at St. John by the Public Works department. These expenditures by the Public Works department are not in the same category as the advances that we have been making to Montreal, Quebec and Vancouver. The expenditures at the other ports have been public works disbursements.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where there is an obligation to pay interest, it is only being paid at Vancouver and Montreal?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is there any other place where the obligation exists?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, Quebec.

Mr. MEIGHEN: On that point, I do not think the fact that a harbour pays interest is any reason for the government and parliament shutting their eyes to the expenditure and allowing the commissioners carte blanche to go ahead with the investment of more millions at their own sweet will. I think there has been a good deal of money wasted and perhaps worse than wasted by harbour commissioners. Of every million dollars and every dollar that we put into the harbour of Montreal it is certainly the duty of the government and of parliament to see that every cent is spent to advantage, that it is necessary expenditure and is not merely made for the purpose of serving some object of local pride, but that it is essential for the service of the traffic of the Canadian people. At Montreal the more millions we put into harbour expenditure, assuming that some of it is not wisely spent, the greater the cost of the grain on the original producer, who necessarily has to pay it. The fact that Montreal pays its interest is merely evidence of the fact that it is so located that our grain and other commodities go through there. It has that geographical advantage, but in the end it is merely a form of taxation, the support of the harbour for services rendered.

The point I want to make is this: We really should have as direct and as full supervision over the expenditure at the harbour of Montreal as we have over the expenditure at Belle river wharf or at Fort William or St. John or Halifax or any other place. We have not got it. We are allowed to go so far, and there we have got to stop. We are asked to believe that everything beyond that is sacrosanct, and we cannot set our unholy feet there at all. That should not be. Why should members of parliament be told, for example, in answer to questions on the order paper, that the people's representatives are not entitled to know what salaries the harbour commission in their benevolence may see fit to pay to employees, not only in Montreal but all over the world? I do not know where they have not got employees now. We should have as much direct supervision over that as over anything else, because as I stated in opening, out of the pockets of the Canadian taxpayer, through one channel or the other, comes the money that supports the whole institution. The minister cannot get out of the responsibility merely by saying that this is a corporation and it is paying its interest to us; that we get the interest annually and are making an investment of this. In the present case, though we may be making an investment, the interest attached is really a charge against the grain of the west and a charge against the traffic of Canada in general, I think it would be time well spent to have a pretty thorough inquiry into some of the expenditures by our harbour commissions.

Mr. CANTLEY: May I point out that it is not only a charge against the grain of the west—

Mr. MEIGHEN: I said the traffic of Canada generally.

Mr. CANTLEY: —but also a heavy charge against the coal of the east. In the case of every ton of Nova Scotia coal sent up to Montreal we have to pay a wharfage rate of 7½ cents a ton. In addition to that we pay a very high annual rent for every foot of space that is occupied by that coal, which necessarily has to be stored there during the spring and summer months in order to carry on during the winter. The expenditure for that purpose runs into forty, fifty, sixty and even seventy thousand dollars, for cash storage space and constitutes a heavy tax on every ton of coal we send up from the lower provinces to Montreal. Therefore we are very particularly interested in all the expenditures made by the harbour authorities; and yet, as has been pointed out, we have no opportunity whatever of criticizing that outlay in any way. That is why we are so very much concerned.

Mr. MacLAREN: May I ask for a little further explanation in regard to the port of Montreal? Have there been repayments of any portion of loans made to the harbour commission, or have any previous loans matured? I notice that in this case the period mentioned is 25 years. I observe also there is a sinking fund amounting to something over a million dollars. Perhaps we can get some information as to what percentage is set aside to form a sinking fund. There is one further question, if the minister would be good enough to give the information: Is this a so-called free port or is there a tariff of charges? If so, what are the charges?

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. CARDIN: In the first place may I say that none of the debentures have yet matured. A sinking fund is provided for and it amounts to about $1,000,000 at the present time. I must confess that I am not in a position at the moment to state what dues are charged in the port of Montreal. Generally, however, I can say that the charges are about the same as those in Vancouver, and that they compare with advantage to similar charges in the port of New York. I quite realize the point made by the hon. member for Pictou that the people of the Maritimes are very much interested in the port of Montreal, as they are in fact in any other port. My hon. friend would like to see the charges made as low as possible and be afforded an opportunity to look into the administration of the harbour. That is a legitimate wish, and nobody objects to it. At the same time it must be realized that the wharves and other facilities at Montreal demand the expenditure of money. We cannot enjoy shipping facilities such as exist there without paying something for them. This money could be paid directly, through a vote of the Public Works department, without any return to the government. Nevertheless it would be an expenditure of public money and the Canadian taxpayers would still be bearing their share of the burden. On the whole I think I can state that the charges in the port of Montreal are quite reasonable in comparison with the charges paid in all the other ports of America.

Mr. CLARK: Has the minister given full details of the purposes for which this money will be expended?

Mr. CARDIN: I enumerated the main items last night. If my hon. friend desires I can state all the details, but there is nothing very interesting in a description of piers, dredging basins, and the like. The money is to be expended on dredging, wharves, piers, basins, plant, shops and buildings, permanent sheds, railways and electrification, and increasing the storage capacity of elevator No. 3.

Mr. ROGERS: What will be the increase in elevator capacity?

Mr. CARDIN: It will be 3,000,000 bushels.

Mr. CLARK: Has the minister put on Hansard the amounts that will be spent on each of these items?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, I placed them on Hansard last night.

Mr. HANSON: Before the expenditures are actually made will they be approved by the government?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes. Before any expenditure is made a request is presented by the harbour commissioners, accompanied by detailed plans and specifications of the work, which has to be approved by the Governor in Council.

Mr. HANSON: After the money has been expended is any independent audit made, and if so by whom?

Mr. CARDIN: The firm of Riddell, Stead, Graham and Hutchison have been auditing the books of the harbour commission for the past fifteen years.

Mr. HANSON: Does the government take any steps to ascertain if the money actually goes into the work or do they simply rely upon the representations made to the harbour commissioners, and this audit, this post audit as I understand it?

Mr. CARDIN: The department has an employee who visits all these ports and reports upon the progress of the work.

Mr. ROGERS: I asked the minister a while ago what price had been paid for right of way. If I understood him correctly he said no right of way had been purchased yet.

Mr. CARDIN: There is no right of way to be purchased on the south shore of the St. Lawrence, because there the bridge is going to land on government property.

Mr. ROGERS: But as to the part of the bridge that is not on government property?

Mr. CARDIN: Not on the south shore.

Mr. ROGERS: It does not matter whether it is on the south shore or not.

Mr. CARDIN: In the city of Montreal the biggest pier is built on the property of the harbour commission. It is only the landing of the bridge which is going to go over certain private property. The harbour commission is negotiating at present in order to get these private properties.

Mr. ROGERS: I have a statement in regard to this matter; that is why I am putting these questions to the minister. Of course he knows more about the subject than I do. But the statement in question, which is signed by Charles Bernier, reads as follows:

In re: Expropriation for the Montreal Bridge Erected by the Harbour Commissioners

I, the undersigned, Charles Bernier, architect, of Montreal do solemnly declare:

1. I have taken cognizance of the sales made to the Montreal Harbour Commissioners and the government of Canada of certain properties situate in the city of Montreal and hereinafter described;

2. I have personally taken cognizance of the civic valuation of these properties and I have personally examined and I know the properties in question and their real and marketable value:

3. I give hereinafter, under my oath, my own personal valuation of these properties, and also the prices at which, I am informed. these properties were sold to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, for the purpose of the erection of the bridge.

| Cad. No. St. Mary Ward | Civic Valuation | My own Valuation | Price Paid |
|---|---|---|---|
| P. 31—P. 32—P. 33.. .. | $22,500 | $35,000 | $48,000 |
| P 491.. .. .. .. .. .. | 18,500 | 38,000 | 78,000 |
| P 492.. .. .. .. .. .. | 9,500 | 25,000 | 50,000 |
| P 493.. .. .. .. .. .. | 48,000 | 75,000 | 125,000 |
| P 494.. .. .. .. .. .. | 28,000 | 35,000 | 44,500 |
| | $126,500 | $208,000 | $345,500 |
| Excess paid over value.. | $137,500 | | |
| | | | $345,500 |

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

Now they sent me as well another document. I am willing to give these to my hon. friend, because he will know more about them than I do. But I think it is only fair to him and to the House and to everybody to ascertain whether these facts are correct, because if they are they appear to be very much against the desirability of this parliament lending much more money to the harbour board of Montreal or to entrust them with much more expenditure of public money in any respect. I will only read one of these statements in respect of how this transfer is made. Here apparently is a certificate of title from the deputy registrar, Mr. LaRue. They are practically all the same.

Mr. STEVENS: Read them all. Put them on Hansard.

Mr. ROGERS: They are as follows:

At the instance of A. Julien against lots numbers 31, 32, 33, 491 and 494-1 and 502A, on the official plan and book of refence of Ste. Marie ward, including only the entries done at Bureau de Montreal under numbers 096787, 096935, 098002, 0101014, to wit:

Marie ward less the part sold to the terms of the sale in date of the 13th June 1902, D. Cushing N.P. for the sum of one dollar ($1) and other good and valuable considerations received. Registered 29th November 1925, No. 096787.

Sale the 20th November 1925, T. Bissonnette N.P. by Joseph Chartier contractor of the city of Montreal to Elizabeth Carmichael Monk of lot No. 494-1 of Ste. Marie ward with right in common in the lane therein described for the sum of one dollar ($1) paid cash and other good and valuable considerations received. Registered 21st November 1925, No. 096935.

Sale the 1st December 1925, T. Bissonnette N.P. by Eugenie Blanchard wife separate as to property of Merile Guertin of the city of Montreal, and Gustave Gilbert, gentleman, residing at Waterloo in Belgique, to Elizabeth Carmichael Monk of Lots Nos. 31 to 33 of Ste. Marie ward for the sum of one dollar ($1) and other good and valuable considerations received. The said Gustave Gilbert acknowledges to have received from the said Dame Guertin the sum of one thousand seven hundred and eighty-five dollars and sixty cents, ($1,785.60) and interest due according to deeds registered at Bureau de Montreal Est under Nos. 94960 and 95791 also the sum of nine hundred dollars ($900) due according to deed registered at Bureau de M. E. under No. 110076 whereof quit. Registered 3rd December 1925, No. 098002.

Sale the 12th January 1926, G. C. Marler, N.P. by Charles Strangman of the city of Victoria in the province of la Colombie Anglaise to Elizabeth Carmichcael Monk amongst others of a part of lot No. 502A of Ste. Marie ward, the whole for the sum of twenty-four thousand dollars ($24,000) paid cash. Registered 13th January 1926, No. 101014.

All which I hereby certify to all whom it may concern.

Witness my hand at Montreal this fourteenth day of May nineteen hundred and twenty-six at three o'clock in the afternoon.

All the titles seem to have passed from Elizabeth Carmichael Monk, therein described, for the sum of one dollar paid in cash, and "other good and valuable considerations received." I want to give these documents to my hon. friend the minister, so that he will have a chance to examine them and see how correct they are. If they are correct I think the minister should be very careful about spending further sums on the harbour at Montreal until he has made a more careful examination to ascertain the facts.

Mr. CARDIN: I shall be pleased to look into the documents read by my hon. friend.

Mr. MacLAREN: Can the minister inform us if any of the revenue derived by the commission is expended in construction work? Or is it done through the loans received from the Dominion government?

Mr. CARDIN: Two million dollars of revenue has been spent by the commissioners in construction and important work in the harbour of Montreal.

Mr. MacLAREN: Out of their own revenue?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Mr. MANION: Has the government spent in the harbour of Montreal money outside of that loan to the harbour commissioners, and if so how much?

Mr. CARDIN: No, no other money.

Mr. MANION: Never?

Mr. CARDIN: Except a sum of $3,000,000 which was spent in the harbour before the incorporation of the present harbour commission.

Mr. MANION: What year was it incorporated?

Mr. CARDIN: I think it was twenty years ago.

Mr. MANION: And only $3,000,000 was spent before that?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, only $3,000,000.

Mr. CANTLEY: Has the Montreal Harbour Commission been in existence for only twenty years?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, in its present form.

Mr. CANTLEY: Certainly the Montreal Harbour Commission has been in existence much longer than that, the commission undertook and carried through the entire scheme of deepening the St. Lawrence—

Mr. CARDIN: It is a very old institution, but in its present form it has only been in existence twenty years.

Mr. CANTLEY: As a commission it has been in existence for over forty years. Did the minister state that the same firm of auditors had audited the books of the harbour commission for fifteen or twenty years?

Mr. CARDIN: That is my information.

Mr. CANTLEY: I do not know who they are and I am not making any reflection on them, but if one firm of auditors has been auditing the books for fifteen or twenty years, I would advise the minister to make a change and employ some other firm of auditors.

Mr. CARDIN: Personally I have no objection to that.

Mr. CANTLEY: I think it would be desirable to do so. A new broom sweeps clean.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Has there been any congestion in handling the grain down there? Has the minister given the information asked for by the ex-Minister of Finance last night in regard to the storage of grain at that point? And what are the facilities?

Mr. CARDIN: I might as well give the information that I promised to give my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre and the ex-Minister of Finance, and make a short statement of the condition of affairs. In doing that I will reach the point referred to by my hon. friend in regard to the cold storage facilities at Montreal. The revenues of the harbour of Montreal for the last five years are as follows:

| Year | Operating receipts |
|---|---|
| 1921 | $2,891,274 |
| 1922 | 3,460,810 |
| 1923 | 3,721,159 |
| 1924 | 4,382,115 |
| 1925 | 4,749,100 |

The elevator capacity of Montreal at the present time is 12,162,000 bushels. The total shipments of grain in 1921 amounted to 100,282,536 bushels and in 1925 they had reached a total of 165,870,814 bushels.

It is true that the cold storage was estimated in 1919, when the contract was decided upon at $900,000, but later on the size of the proposed building was increased and a new estimate of $1,400,000 was made. Subsequently it was decided that it would be advantageous to put in additional equipment and appliances and this, in conjunction with the fact that construction was carried on at a time when costs of labour and materials were considerably in advance of those prevailing at the time the first estimates were prepared, made the final completed cost of the structure $2,952,154. That is the explanation which is given to me of the discrepancy between the first estimate and the real cost of the cold storage. The gross revenue from the operation of the cold storage was $270,933 in 1924, and it increased to $276,261 in 1925. The following figures are very interesting in regard to the business of the cold storage plant at Montreal:

|---|---|---|
| Butter | 1,672,000 | 15,928,224 |
| Cheese | 13,000,000 | 15,000,000 |
| Fish | 850,000 | 2,652,177 |
| Meat | 1,500,000 | 12,607,512 |
| Poultry | 500,000 | 2,841,741 |

This gives a pretty good indication of the development and progress at the port of Montreal. If I might give another figure which is not without interest, the total tonnage of imports and exports at the port of Montreal in 1921 was in round figures 6,000,000 tons, and in 1925 it was more than 9,000,000 tons. In 1922 there were exported through the port of Montreal 21,854 head of cattle, and in 1925 54,867 head, or much more than double.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We should be sending 100,000 head. May I suggest that while all this is very gratifying, it has not answered my question? Was there any congestion in the port of Montreal in the grain handling facilities last year?

Mr. CARDIN: The information we have in the department from the harbour commissioners is that there really was congestion, and not very long ago we received a delegation from the Dominion Marine Association. In their representations they asked the government to grant a request that was going to be made by the Harbour Commission of Montreal to increase the elevator facilities there and particularly to increase the storage capacity of elevator No. 3. In fact it is well known in Montreal that there was congestion there last year.

Mr. FRASER: The minister has given us the gross quantity of goods that went through the cold storage plant. Can he give us the gross operating cost of the plant?

Mr. CARDIN: Unfortunately, no.

Mr. FRASER: Can the minister get it?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. ROGERS: If the minister proposes to increase the grain capacity of the elevator, it would be well for the government, if they want to get business to assist that elevator, to change their statutory freight rates in respect to the manner in which they handicap that harbour as against the habour at Portland. A very serious discrimination exists under the statutory rate made a short time ago at the request of the Prime Minister to the railway commission, and this discrimination very seriously interferes with the development of the port of Montreal. For example, on our western grain coming down to the bay ports, when shipped from the bay ports, say to Montreal harbour a distance of 383 miles, the rate is 8.6 cents per 100 pounds. If the shipper of that grain wants to take it on to the port of Portland, a distance of 300 miles further, according to this new rate he is privileged to take it on for $\frac{5}{8}$ of a cent per 100 pounds. In other words, you can take grain 300 miles to Portland for five-eighths of a cent while you have to pay 8.6 cents to carry it 383 miles from any of the bay ports to Montreal. You are therefore encouraging to that extent the development of the port of Portland to the detriment of Montreal harbour. That is a matter that should engage the serious consideration of the government. The discrimination is severe, and as these are official rates they cannot be denied. I might quote other rates but I will not do so. The fact is, however, that the discrimination exists all the way from Vancouver to Montreal, Quebec, St. John and Halifax in respect of these statutory rates fixed a short time ago by the present government. The discrimination bears more heavily against Montreal than any other harbour, and if the minister has at heart the development of Montreal harbour and wishes to increase its capacity to handle grain his first duty is to correct that rate which militates so seriously against it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): Will the minister not give some explanation in answer to the statements made by the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) in regard to the purchase of land by the harbour commissioners of Montreal?

Mr. CARDIN: I am not in a position to discuss that statement. The hon. member has given certain figures which have come to him from someone in the city of Montreal, and I shall look into the matter.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): When may the House expect an answer from the minister?

Mr. CARDIN: My information is that most of the expropriation remains to be made. I know personally, for example, that certain property which is required has not been bought, and there is still some disagreement with the proprietors.

Mr. STEVENS: Will you expropriate it?

Mr. CARDIN: We shall have to.

Mr. ROGERS: We have no desire to delay the bill, but in all fairness the minister should allow the matter to stand until Monday and in the meantime look into the point raised. I can assure him that when he comes back with a statement we shall be glad to facilitate the passing of the bill.

Mr. CARDIN: I suggest that we get through with the bill and discuss the point on the third reading.

Mr. ROGERS: We shall not be able to debate the subject then.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Mr. CARDIN: We will raise no objection.

Mr. ROGERS: We will not delay the minister at all, and if he will bring down the information on Monday we will help him to get the bill through.

Mr. CARDIN: We might pass the clauses of the bill.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Can the minister tell me —I know the facts and circumstances will be in his mind—whether the government has paid the judgment of the Exchequer court in connection with certain property in the harbour of Quebec? Judgment was recovered and the case was carried through all the courts of Quebec and finally to the Supreme court. The judgment was not paid by the late government. I cannot at present recall the name of the owners of the property, but some $40,000 was involved.

Mr. CARDIN: I should not care to make any definite statement, but I think the money has been paid.

Mr. MEIGHEN: So do I, but I should like to have a definite statement as to what was paid, to whom, and when. Will the minister have that information ready when the bill comes up again?

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly.

Mr. CLARK: Does the $44,000,000 outstanding include the sum voted for the bridge?

Mr. CARDIN: Nothing was voted for the bridge. We merely guaranteed such debentures as might be issued by the commission, but we made no advances in respect to the bridge.

Mr. CLARK: Is the whole $44,000,000 in the same position?

Mr. CARDIN: No, the $44,000,000 represents money actually advanced. The debentures for the bridge have not yet been issued.

Mr. CLARK: This $12,000,000, then, would make the total advance $56,000,000?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. CLARK: The minister has said that the rates compare favourably with those in New York. Does he mean that the two are more or less equal?

Mr. CARDIN: The rates in Montreal and Vancouver are on the whole more favourable than those in New York.

Mr. CLARK: In ports that are so much smaller the rates might well compare favourably with those charged in New 11 p.m. York; in fact, they should be considerably less. The value of real estate on the water front in either Montreal or Vancouver would be very much less than in New York, and consequently the rates should be a great deal lower in both Canadian harbours.

Mr. CARDIN: As a matter of fact they are.

Mr. CLARK. You have no figures?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. ROGERS: It is understood, I take it, that we may discuss on Monday the point I raised.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

ALLIED INDIAN TRIBES OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the Order for Motions:

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I presented a petition from the allied Indian tribes of British Columbia. I think a report has been laid on the table in connection with that petition, and if it is in order I now move that that petition be printed in Hansard.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. McQuarrie moves that the petition from the allied Indian tribes of British Columbia be taken as read, so that it may appear in the debates.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): Is my hon. friend referring to the petition filed by Mr. Kelly?

Mr. McQUARRIE: I presented it last week.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is it the one that has reference to supplying funds in connection with making representations before the Privy Council?

Mr. McQUARRIE: It was the petition of the allied Indian tribes of British Columbia. I presented it last week, and I believe it has been reported to be in order.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is no objection.

Motion agreed to.

(The petition is as follows):

To the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament Assembled

The Petition of the allied Indian Tribes of British Columbia humbly showeth as follows:—

1. This Petition is presented on behalf of the allied Indian Tribes of British Columbia by Peter R. Kelly Chairman duly authorized by resolution unanimously adopted by the Executive Committee of allied Tribes on 19th December, 1925.

2. When British Columbia entered Confederation Section 109 of the British North America Act was made applicable to all public lands with certain specific exceptions. By virtue of the application of this Section it was enacted that public lands belonging to the Colony of British Columbia should belong to the new Province. By virtue of the application of the same Section as explained by the Minister of Justice in January 1875 all territorial land rights claimed by the Indian Tribes of the Province were preserved and it was enacted that such rights should be an "interest" in the public lands of the Province. The Indian Tribes of British Columbia claim actual beneficial ownership of their territories, but do not claim absolute ownership in the sense of ownership excluding any title of the Crown. It is recognized by the allied Tribes that there is in respect of all the public lands of the Province an underlying title of the Crown, which title at least for present purposes it is not thought necessary to define.

3. In order to make clear what is meant by an "interest" the Petitioners quote the following words of Lord Watson to be found in the Indian Claims Case—L. R. 1897 A. C. at page 210:—"An interest other than that of the Province in the same appears to them to denote some right or interest in a third party independent of and capable of being vindicated in competition with the beneficial interest of the old Province."

4. The position taken by the allied Tribes was placed before Parliament by means of Petition presented to the House of Commons on 23rd March 1920 and read in the House of Commons and recorded on 26th March 1920 (Hansard p. 825) and Petition presented to the Senate on 9th June 1920, to all contents of which two Petitions the Petitioners beg leave to refer.

5. In the month of August 1910 Sir Wilfrid Laurier, having been advised by the Department of Justice that the Indian land controversy should be judicially decided, met the Indian Tribes of Northern British Columbia at Prince Rupert and speaking on behalf of Canada said—"I think the only way to settle this question that you have agitated for years is by a decision of the Judicial Committee, and I will take steps to help you."

6. By Agreement which was entered into by the late Mr. J. A. J. McKenna Special Commissioner on behalf of the Dominion of Canada and the late Premier Sir Richard McBride on behalf of the Province of British Columbia in the month of September 1912 and before the end of that year was adopted by both Governments it was stipulated that by means of a Joint Commission to be appointed lands should be added to Indian Reserves and lands should be cut off from Indian Reserves. By that Agreement it was provided that the carrying out of its stipulations should be a "final adjustment of all matters relating to Indian affairs in the Province of British Columbia."

7. On the 30th day of June 1916 the Royal Commission on Indian Affairs for the Province of British Columbia appointed in pursuance of the Agreement above mentioned issued Report which was placed in the hands of both Governments.

8. In the month of September 1916 the Duke of Connaught, acting as His Majesty's Representative in Canada and in response to letter which had been addressed to him on behalf of the Nishga Tribe and the Interior Tribes gave assurances communicated by His Secretary to the General Counsel of allied Tribes in the following words:

"His Royal Highness has interviewed the Honourable Dr. Roche with reference to your letter of the 29th May and your interview with me and I am commanded by His Royal Highness to state that he considers it is the duty of the Nishga Tribe of Indians to await the decision of the Commission, after which if they do not agree to the conditions set forth by that Commission, they can appeal to the Privy Council in England, when their case will have every consideration. As their contentions will be duly considered by the Privy Council in the event of the Indians being dissatisfied with the decision of the Commission, His Royal Highness is not prepared to interfere in the matter at present and he hopes that you will advise the Indians to await the decision of this Commission."

9. The allied Tribes have always been and still are unwilling to be bound by the Agreement above mentioned and have always been and still are unwilling to accept as final settlement the findings contained in the Report of the Royal Commission.

10. In the year 1920 the Parliament of Canada enacted the law known as Bill 13 being Chapter 51 of the Statutes of that year authorizing the Governor General in Council to carry out the Agreement above mentioned by adopting the Report of the Royal Commission. From the preamble and the enacting words the professed purpose of the Bill appeared to be that of effecting settlement by actually adjusting all matters.

11. In course of debate regarding Bill 13 had in the Senate on 2nd June, 1920, Sir James Lougheed, leader of the then Government in the Senate, answering remarks of Senator Bostock by which was expressed the fear that if the Bill should become law the Indians might "be entirely put out of Court and be unable to proceed on any question of title," gave the following assurance (Debates of Senate—1920 p. 475 col. 2):

"I might say further, honourable gentlemen, that we do not propose to exclude the claims of the Indians. It will be manifest to every honourable gentleman that if the Indians have claims anterior to Confederation or anterior to the creation of the two Crown Colonies in the Province of British Columbia they could be adjusted or settled by the Imperial Authorities. Those claims are still valid. If the claim be a valid one which is being advanced by this gentleman and those associated with him as to the Indian Tribes of British Columbia being entitled to the whole of the lands in British Columbia this Government cannot disturb that claim. That claim can still be asserted in the future."

12. Upon occasion of interview had with the Executive Committee and the General Council of allied Tribes at Vancouver on 27th July, 1923, the Minister of Interior speaking on behalf of the Government of Canada conceded that the allied Tribes are entitled to secure judicial decision of the Indian land controversy and gave assurance that the Dominion of Canada would help them in securing such decision.

13. By Order in Council passed in the month of August, 1923, the Government of the Province of British Columbia adopted the Report of the Royal Commission.

14. By Memorandum which was presented to the Government of Canada on 29th February, 1924, the allied Tribes opposed the passing of Order in Council of the Government of Canada adopting the Report of the Royal Commission upon the ground, among other grounds, that, no matter whatever relating to Indian affairs in British Columbia having been fully adjusted and important matters such as foreshore rights fishing rights and water rights not having been to any extent adjusted, the professed purpose of the Agreement and the Act had not been accomplished.

15. By order in council passed on the 19th July, 1924, the government of Canada, acting under chapter 51 of the statutes of the year 1920 and upon recommendation of the Minister of Interior adopted the report of the royal commission.

16. From the memorandum issued by the Deputy Minister of Justice on 29th February, 1924, answering questions which had been submitted by the allied tribes to the government of Canada, the order in council passed on 19th July, 1924, and the memorandum issued by the Deputy Minister of Indian Affairs on 9th August, 1924, it clearly appears as is submitted that both the Department of Justice and the Department of Indian Affairs regard the statute chapter 51 of the year 1920 as intended, not for bringing about an actual adjustment of all matters relating to Indian affairs, but for the purpose of bringing about a legislative adjustment of all such matters and thus effecting final settlement under the laws of Canada without the concurrence or consent of the Indian tribes of British Columbia.

17. The allied tribes submit that, so far as section 2 being the main enactment of chapter 51 may be interpreted as being intended for accomplishing the purpose above mentioned and thus bringing to an end all the aboriginal rights claimed by the Indian tribes of British Columbia that enactment is in conflict with the provisions of the British North America Act.

18. On the 15th January, 1925, the executive committee of the allied tribes unanimously adopted the following resolution:—

"In view of the fact that the two governments have passed orders in council confirming the report of the royal commission on Indian affairs, we the executive committee of the allied Indian tribes of British Columbia are more than ever determined to take such action as may be necessary in order that the Indian tribes of British Columbia may receive justice and are furthermore determined to establish the rights claimed by them by a judicial decision of His Majesty's Privy Council."

19. In the course of debate held in the House of Commons on the 26th June, 1925, the Minister of Interior speaking on behalf of the government of Canada in answer to the representations which had been made on behalf of the allied tribes recognized that the allied tribes are entitled to obtain from His Majesty's Privy Council decision of the Indian land controversy and agreed that the government would give authoritative sanction for doing so.

20 With regard to the remark then made by the minister that the government would not be justified in providing funds unless "something very concrete" should be presented, the allied tribes submit that they have already presented "something very concrete," namely their own conditions proposed for equitable settlement by their statement presented to the government of British Columbia in response to request of that government in the month of December 1919, and subsequently presented to the government of Canada.

21. With regard to the general subject of the funds which as the allied tribes claim the Dominion of Canada is under the obligation of providing, the allied tribes have placed in the hands of the Superintendent-

General of Indian Affairs the following Memorial:—

The Allied Indian Tribes of British Columbia to the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs

By this memorial of the allied tribes of British Columbia it is respectfully submitted as follows:—

The allied tribes submit that the Dominion of Canada is under obligation for providing all funds already expended and all funds requiring hereafter to be expended by the allied tribes in dealing with the Indian land controversy, in establishing the rights of the allied tribes, and in bringing about final adjustment of all matters relating to Indian affairs in British Columbia.

The allied tribes so submit upon grounds briefly stated as follows:—

1. Well established precedent relating to judicial proceedings intended for establishing the rights of Indian Tribes and in particular that of the Oka case, which was carried independently to the Judicial Committee of His Majesty's Privy Council by the Indians interested and of which the total cost was provided by the Parliament of Canada.

2. The fact that the Dominion of Canada being by virtue of the British North America Act and the "Terms of Union" Trustee for the Indian Tribes of British Columbia and under all obligations arising from such trusteeship has by entering into the compact with British Columbia above mentioned rendered itself incompetent for taking effective action establishing the rights of the Indian Tribes of British Columbia, as is clearly shown by the opinion of the Minister of Justice issued in the month of December 1913, and moreover has put itself in the position of a party in the case upholding the contentions of the Province of British Columbia, and by the acts so stated has placed upon the Indian Tribes the absolute necessity of proceeding independently for establishing their rights.

3. The principle of compensation in respect of all aboriginal land and other rights of the Indian Tribes of British Columbia, responsibility for which has already been conceded by the Dominion of Canada, and of which as the allied Tribes submit the first item consists of the full expenditure required for establishing such rights of the Indian Tribes and bringing about adjustment of all matters now requiring to be adjusted.

4. The assurances which on behalf of the Dominion of Canada have from time to time been given to the Indian Tribes of British Columbia and in particular that of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and those of the present Minister of Interior.

5. The lands and funds held by the Dominion of Canada in trust for the allied Tribes and being the full beneficial property of the allied Tribes.

Therefore the allied Tribes now formally demand from the Dominion of Canada payment of the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, being the total amount of such expenditure already incurred, and further demand from the Dominion of Canada that full provision be made for paying all additional funds which hereafter shall be required for such expenditure, as shall be agreed upon between the allied Tribes and the Dominion of Canada or if necessary shall be determined by the Judicial Committee of His Majesty's Privy Council.

Dated at the City of Ottawa the 10th June, 1926.

PETER R. KELLY,
Chairman of Executive Committee
of Allied Tribes.

To Honourable CHARLES STEWART,
Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa.

22. The Government of Canada having definitely agreed as is above shown that the Dominion of Canada will facilitate securing from the Judicial Committee of His Majesty's Privy Council decision of the Indian land controversy, the General Counsel of allied Tribes entered upon discussion with the Minister of Justice regarding the particular method by which the securing of such decision will be facilitated, and offered to suggest for consideration of the Minister of Justice common ground which might be reached by the Government of Canada and the allied Tribes in connection with the carrying forward of the independent judicial proceedings of the allied Tribes.

23. In presenting this Petition to the Parliament of Canada as the Supreme Body representing the Dominion of Canada the allied Tribes declare that, while it is necessary for them to demand what they consider to be their rights from both the Province of British Columbia and the Dominion of Canada and even to contest the validity of an Act of the Parliament of Canada, they desire and intend to act towards all Ministers of the Crown, all Members of both Houses of Parliament and all others concerned in a thoroughly reasonable and conciliatory way and that their one central objective is by securing judicial decision of all issues involved to open the way for bringing about an equitable and moderate settlement satisfactory to the Governments as well as to themselves.

Therefore the petitioners humbly pray:—

1. That by amendment of Chapter 51 of the Statutes of the year 1920 or otherwise the assurance set out in paragraph 11 of this Petition be made effective and the aboriginal rights of the Indian Tribes of British Columbia be safeguarded.

2. That steps be taken for defining and settling between the allied Indian Tribes and the Dominion of Canada all issues requiring to be decided between the Indian Tribes of British Columbia on the one hand and the Government of British Columbia and the Government of Canada on the other hand.

3. That immediate steps be taken for facilitating the independent proceedings of the allied Tribes and enabling them by securing reference of the Petition now in His Majesty's Privy Council and such other independent judicial action as shall be found necessary to secure judgment of the Judicial Committee of His Majesty's Privy Council deciding all issues involved.

4. That this Petition and all related matters be referred to a Special Committee for full consideration.

Dated at the City of Ottawa the 10th day of June, 1926.

PETER R. KELLY,
Chairman of Executive Committee
of Allied Tribes.

NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

Mr. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I beg to move that the third report of the standing committee on National Railways and Shipping be referred to the committee of Supply.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to oppose the intent of the motion, but it runs in my mind that I have never heard of a report of a committee being referred to the committee of Supply, and that the right procedure is to have the report come before the House and be by the House referred to the committee of Supply. I speak, though, without having had time to look the point up.

Mr. EULER: I am making the motion entirely at the suggestion of the Clerk. I presumed this was the right procedure to follow in connection with interim supply with regard to shipping.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the rule?

Mr. SPEAKER: From the information I can gather, this motion refers to a certain appropriation for the merchant marine which has been dealt with by the standing committee on Railways and Shipping. I understand that this item has been passed upon by the committeee, but that it has never been referred to the committee of Supply. I understand that there will be an Interim Supply bill, and in order to put things in shape, this report should be referred to the committee on Supply, in order that the amount may be included in the Interim Supply bill.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is to say the submission to the committee of Supply would come in the usual way?

Mr. SPEAKER: Certainly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is all right.

Motion agreed to.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

MOTION BY MR. NEILL TO ASCERTAIN ACTION TAKEN BY THE SENATE

On the Order for Motions:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni) moved:

That this House take the necessary steps under rule 86, to search the journals of the Senate in order to ascertain if any action has been taken by the upper house with regard to Bill No. 21, an act respecting Old Age Pensions.

He said: For the benefit of members who would prefer, perhaps, to see the motion in print I may say that they will find it under "Notices of Motion and Questions" in Friday's Votes and Proceedings. I think this motion is thoroughly in order under rule 86, to which I would refer the House. I admit that of late years it has not been much taken advantage of, it has somewhat fallen into disuse. Nevertheless it still remains there to be available for our protection if we require it, and I think this is one of the occasions on which it should be properly invoked. There are two purposes that will be served by this motion. One, of course, is the very obvious purpose stated in the motion. I think it would be better if the motion had read "what action, if any, has been taken", but nevertheless I suppose the wording will cover the purpose aimed at. It seems a remarkable thing that at present we have no channel whatever whereby this House can receive official information of the rejection of any of its bills by the Senate, or perhaps I had better adopt the conventional words that have come to be regarded as proper in speaking of the Senate and that is "another place". I had better use these words hereafter. But if any of us were to ask the Clerk to-day what has become of this bill—or any other rejected bill for that matter but decidedly so as far as the present bill is concerned—his answer would have to be officially "I do not know." If a bill is accepted by the other House and is returned here we know when that happens because we receive a message to that effect and the same if it is amended. But if a bill is not accepted no message returns and the Clerk of this House is forced to conclude, by some Sherlock Holmes method, that something has happened to it, and that it has been thrown out. That is the exact procedure to-day. If a bill does not come back from the Senate there are several reasons that might account for it. It might have been lost in transit, or one of the papers, when a clerk was collecting a number to send here from the other place, might have slipped out of the folder, have been picked up by the char-woman and by her, in ignorance of its value thrown into the waste basket. The present bill, to all intents and purposes, is in the same position as if it had been in that category. Human nature is liable to make mistakes and something might have happened to the measure on the journey between the two Houses.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. NEILL: Some hon. gentlemen seem to think the matter is one for laughter but it is within my recollection at any rate, as it must be within the recollection of several other members, that in the last parliament covering only four sessions such a thing as that happened practically twice. I do not say that the whole bill was lost in its transit from the other chamber but in one case an important section was lost between the two Houses. In the other case some provision was either left out or put in; I think it was put in on the way back. It is not desirable, it is wholly undesirable, that this haphazard method of communication should prevail. I therefore desire that this House should be informed when any bill so important as this has been rejected or whenever any action whatever with respect to it has been taken by the Senate.

The second purpose that I seek by this motion is somewhat along the same line. I wish to correct, or perhaps correct is not the right word; it can only be corrected by changing the procedure as it at present exists —perhaps overcome would be the better term, an anomaly in the present procedure. The procedure to-day is that when a bill has been sent from this House to the other chamber and it has been accepted, a message to that effect is sent back. Supposing it has been amended in a slight degree, it is returned to this House with a message indicating what the amendments are and the report is placed on the orders of the day and can then be debated. Three courses are then open to this House: We can accept the amendments proposed in the other place or we can reject them, or we can call for a conference which, as the House knows is practically a joint committee of members of the two houses to see if an agreement can be reached. Now all this procedure, this careful and thorough procedure exists to take care of an amendment even of the most petty character. It may be only the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t" but that procedure is gone through in order to maintain our right, at least of making representations, in case of any difference of opinion between the two legislative bodies. But here is the anomaly, here is the peculiar situation. If it is a case of the total rejection, not of some comparatively unimportant feature but of the whole principle of a bill then none of these safeguards exist at all! Now, if a careful procedure be necessary when a comparatively unimportant amendment is in question, how much more necessary is it when the whole principle of a bill is at stake. I believe that rule 86, which I have invoked in this case, allows us, within certain limits, to which I propose strictly to adhere to debate this subject. In the present case such official as we would send to do what is required would come back and make his report. On receipt of that report we might, if necessary, stretch the rules a little, and base upon it an expression of opinion of our right to make further representations and ask for a conference. If that conference were not successful in determining the issue raised in the other chamber it would at least have the effect of impressing upon its members that we are determined to proceed with the legislation.

There are some further remarks I want to make on this subject. I may be sailing rather close to the wind in connection with the matter of being out of order. But I very carefully framed my remarks so as to keep just within the line, and as long as I am within the line it matters not how small the margin may be. I will anticipate any criticism which may be made on that score by referring the House to rule 16, page 50, paragraph 203:

> Allusions to debates in the other House are out o order—and so on. I propose to adhere strictly to that. I do not propose to make any allusion to debates or anything else that has transpired in the other House at all. I may also call the attention of the House to rule No. 19, page 62 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules, paragraph 234 (b) which says that a member of the House cannot:

> refer to any debate in the Senate—

And mark this:

> but he may refer to the official printed records of the upper house, though they have not been formally communicated to the lower house.

So I am thoroughly in order in referring to the alleged printed records of the other House. I use the word "alleged" advisedly, because I have in my hands what purports to be minutes of the other House but there is nothing in it to certify to its correctness or to its authenticity at all. It is not signed by any clerk or certified to by anyone. There is a small note at the very end of it to say that it is printed by the King's Printer, but there is a lot of stuff printed by the King's Printer that I would hesitate to endorse as authentic. There are also speeches delivered in this House for the accuracy of which I hope the King's Printer is not responsible. I use that word rightly when I say that it is alleged to be the printed minutes and I therefore assume that I am correct in referring to that printed record. The record, page 279, shows that the bill was defeated, or supposed to be defeated, by a vote of 45 to 21 a majority of 24. There are 96 members in the other chamber. At present there are three vacancies. The presiding officer reduces that number by one; so that there are ninety-two members competent to vote, and when I say, competent to vote, Mr. Speaker, I mean able to stand up. That is the only requisite required there; so long as they can stand up they can vote. Out of 92 members competent to vote 66 actually voted, about two-thirds. The same record discloses the fact that this was the 24th day this session that a meeting had been held in that chamber. That means 24 working days in five months, an average of less than five days each month.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Whose fault was that? It was the government's fault.

Mr. NEILL: And let us consider how short a lot of these sessions were—

Mr. McQUARRIE: No business for them.

Mr. NEILL: —and during a great part of the session some of these members were pawing over the nauseous details of divorce bills which should never have been introduced into parliament at all. If there had been any party advantage to gain I can visualize the kind of vote that would have been taken. In this House with our 245 members, at times we have seen practically a complete vote recorded in matters of far less importance than the question under discussion. Although only 66 votes were recorded on that occasion, the same record I have referred to shows that 77 members were present in that chamber at some time that day; so that 11 were present who did not vote. Now I may be prejudiced in discussing this matter, but I will try not to be.

The first reaction to my mind when I read the news in the paper was that this was the result of an arrangement by the Conservative party in this House with their friends elsewhere to defeat the measure. That was my first suspicion, and I must say that that suspicion was somewhat strengthened by the proceedings the last time this bill was before this House. When the bill came before us in its early stage I cannot say that it was welcomed with acclaim by the Conservative party, but many hon. members announced openly their approval of it and stated that they intended to support it, but when it was before the House on the last occasion, it was remarkable to see how hon. members on the other side of the chamber who spoke united to condemn it. I took down some of the language used. One hon. member stated it was utterly disappointing. Another hon. member alluded to it as absurd. Another one called it a wash-out, and another hon. member characterized it as abortive. I remember saying to the hon. member sitting beside me at the moment that I could see the finish of the bill in another place, owing to the attitude of hon. members opposite. Further strength is lent to that suspicion—and it may be an unwarranted suspicion—by the fact that in the other place all the Conservatives present save one solidly voted against the measure, which would point to such a unity of action as would almost presuppose some pre-arranged plan. At any rate, be that as it may, the Conservatives have the largest body in that other place; certainly they could have put the bill through, and certainly they did not, and they must share to a large extent the responsibility for its defeat.

But there were other people in that august body besides the Conservative party. Without reducing the responsibility of the Conservative party, let us consider the action of the Liberals in that connection. The Conservative majority, as I gather it, in a full House would have been 12. I am told it is less than that, but certainly not more. Why then was there a majority of 24 when only 66 voted? That calls for investigation and analysis. There are supposed to be 40 Liberals in that place; 20 of them voted for the bill, 3 against it and 17 were absent. Of that 17 it is noteworthy that 7 were in the House that day and did not vote. Some of the absentees may have been sick, but it is not reasonable to suppose that all of those 17 members were sick, and besides that we know that the 7 were present. Have they forgotten the Liberal platform and convention called in Winnipeg in 1919, where a policy was adopted to guide the party in years to come, not to be put into force in a day or a week or a year, but as circumstances warranted? The government of the day thought the time and the circumstances were ripe and introduced the measure. Was it not the duty of the Liberal senators as henchmen or supporters of that policy, to adhere to the principles of that policy? If they had stood by their principles and by their platform the vote would have been, 42 Conservatives against 40 Liberals for.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Although my hon. friend may be technically within the rule, I submit he is establishing a very dangerous precedent in referring in terms lacking in respect to members of the other chamber. Certainly he does not show great respect in using the language he has used. I have no objection to the motion, but I do think there should be some limitation of the language which an hon. member may use in speaking of members of the other House. I think the expression he has used is against the spirit of the rule.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. member to withdraw the expression "henchmen." Although it is a proper expression under certain circumstances, yet as the hon. member for South Wellington says, it is not very appropriate when referring to members of the upper house. There are certain amenities in parliament which are not to be ignored. I would call the attention of the hon. member to rule 19 which reads:

> No member shall speak disrespectfully of His Majesty, nor of any of the Royal Family; nor of the Governor or person administering the government of Canada; nor use offensive words against either House, or against any member thereof.

The subject is a very delicate one, and I would ask the hon. member to kindly live up to the letter of the rule. I do not think that the use of the word "henchman" is an insulting expression, but I would not like to be called a henchman under circumstances such as the present. He could say that a member was a supporter of a certain party but "henchman" is too strong an expression in my opinion.

Mr. NEILL: I have not the slightest hesitation in withdrawing that word, I had never thought it could be regarded as offensive.

Mr. SPEAKER: I never thought the hon. member intended to be offensive.

Mr. NEILL: If I had intended to be offensive I would have used much stronger and more appropriate words. I suppose I adopted the word after reading some of Sir Walter Scott's novels, where it is used and where it was considered to be a compliment for a baron or knight to be called a stout henchman of the king. I think probably that is the way it came into my mind, but I certainly will avoid calling any member a henchman hereafter. I was analyzing the vote, and without adding any adjectives I will say; had the vote gone as I suggest it should have done, it would have read like this: Forty-two Conservatives against, forty Liberals and one Conservative in its favour, or forty-one against forty-two. It would have lost by a majority of one, and a loss by a majority of one would have been satisfactory in this respect that it would surely predicate the passing of the bill at a session in the immediate future. We know there are three vacancies and they possibly would have been filled up before next session by men who would be inclined to support the measure. If that body had rejected it by a majority of only one there would not have been very much complaint, because educative forces would have been brought into play and no doubt they would have been prepared to pass it in the near future.

It has been suggested in the press—and I suppose I can allude to it—that possibly the government were animated by improper motives in introducing this measure in this House, the suggestion being that they had been held up—that language was used from time to time—by certain Labour members in this House as the price of their support. May I in parenthesis make the remark that in this House there are other members sympathetic to labour besides the two Labour members from Winnipeg who represent labour? On both sides of the House there are many members who owe a large measure of their support to labour and who are not found wanting in connection with anything that can be done to advance the views of labour. In any event I do not know that it would be a very great crime if the government had yielded to wishes presented by a considerable section of this House in reference to legislation. That is a method adopted by most governments. If we hold views of that kind we are apt to get into a discussion as to whether the dozen members of the cabinet constitute a body of super-human beings and the ordinary members are here only for the purpose of recording the wishes of the government, or whether, as some people hold, the 245 members of parliament are to regard the cabinet merely as an executive body to carry out the people's wishes as expressed by them.

Mr. CAHAN: I rise to a point of order. The resolution reads:

> That this House take the necessary steps under rule 86, to search the journals of the Senate in order to ascertain if any action has been taken by the upper house with regard to Bill No. 21, an act respecting Old Age Pensions.

I think such a discussion as has been proceeding for the last five minutes is entirely out of order as being irrelevant and not pertinent to the resolution, and I ask for a ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does any other hon. gentleman desire to speak on the point of order?

Mr. NEILL: On the point of order I would say that there is not any. This motion refers to the old age pension bill, and within limitations, without making reflections or especially without referring to the debate elsewhere, I consider I am perfectly in order. At the particular moment when the hon. member interrupted me I was dealing with newspaper rumours as regards the motive for the introduction of this bill which motive the newspapers said might have influenced members elsewhere. I think that is a legitimate subject of comment in dealing with the subject generally. I was analyzing this vote which I took from the printed record alluded to before. I submit I am in order within the judgment of this House in dealing with that phase of the matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. Bourinot at page 357 says:

> It is also a part of the unwritten law of parliament that no allusion should be made in one House to the debates in the other chamber, a rule always enforced by the Speaker with the utmost strictness. Members sometimes attempt to evade this rule by resorting to ambiguous terms of expression—by referring, for instance, to what happened "in another place"; but all such evasions of a wholesome practice should be stopped by the Speaker, when it is evident to whom the allusions are made.

Bourinot adds:

It is perfectly regular however, to refer to the official printed records of the other branch of the legislature, even though the document may not have been formally asked for and communicated to the House.

So far I think the hon. member is referring to those printed records and speaking of the printed record of the occasion referred to.

Mr. CAHAN: I was referring to the fact that having dealt with the action of the Senate, the hon. member seemed to me to be reflecting upon the motives of members of this House and members of the government with regard to the introduction of the bill in question, the manner in which it was introduced and the action taken. This seemed to me to be irrelevant as regards the resolution submitted.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman who is now addressing the House knows the rule I have laid down and I am following him pretty closely to see that he does not go beyond that rule.

Mr. NEILL: The hon. member (Mr. Cahan) is certainly beside the point when he says that I reflected on the government. I was not reflecting on the government at all. I will leave that phase of the matter seeing that it seems to be a source of irritation to my hon. friend although I do not know why it should be. I will summarize the situation in this way. This bill was passed unanimously by this House; therefore there can be no suggestion of coercion of the government, and this same House passed unanimously a resolution three years ago in favour of the same principle. One hon. member who recorded his vote against this measure sat in this House last session and voted for the very principle and methods which he now condemns. How true it is that in a different environment we forget the convictions and principles with which we start out. There must be something enervating, in the atmosphere of the place, which to amplify the name of a popular or unpopular novel, I might call "The Land of Twilight."

The situation as summarized from the official record is this: The Conservative party could have passed the measure and did not; the Liberals might have tried to pass it and they did not. So this was not a partisan decision in any way, and we can only suppose it was in some way connected with the environment, with some kind of a sobering, might I say stupefying, influence that seems to dominate in certain places, that seems to paralyze any desire for enterprise or progress. Possibly it is also due to the fact that possession of great wealth or connection with the big interests necessarily gives one a different point of view, and above all to that freedom from responsibility to anyone or everyone.

An hon. MEMBER: Does the hon. member want to go there?

Mr. NEILL: Some hon. gentleman suggests I may be there. Perhaps if I were there I too would have a selfish point of view. Perhaps I would remember that as long as I lived I had a remuneration just forty times as great as that suggested that this government should be called upon to bear in the case of a poor old industrial worker, that for each day of the average session I would be drawing nearly double the amount proposed to be contributed by this government for a whole year to that industrial worker. Above all there is the lack of accountability. That I think has a great deal to do with the matter.

There is an old saying—I do not know the author of it and it does not greatly matter—"Whom the gods seek to destroy they first make mad." I was at church yesterday or at least recently and I heard a portion read from the Old Testament. The biblical historian recorded the doings of one of the Kings of Israel in this language:

And Ahab the son of Omri did evil in the sight of the Lord above all that were before him.

I could not help thinking what a terrible epitaph that was to put on a man's life career, what a poor letter of credit for a man to carry into another life. Glancing over the pages of history since confederation and looking forward as far as one's limited vision can go, I have not read and I cannot conceive of any step more calculated absolutely to alienate the sympathy of the ordinary people of Canada, sometimes called sneeringly "the common people"—I will adopt the term as it is a good phrase—than the rejection of a measure of such popular importance as this is. The average point of view of the man in the street towards the Senate is one of mild derision, rising in some cases to rather hostile dimensions, and I am afraid that when the people in general find that a body which costs them three-quarters of a million a year has rejected not the details of this measure, but —and this is the vital point in respect of which the common man will be most embittered—the very principle of the measure itself, the feeling against that body will be greatly aggravated. The details of the bill could have been adjusted, but the vital principle of the whole thing has been rejected, and rejected by such a large majority. It means that for a long time to come, until time has got its work in, there will be no hope of this or any other government bringing forward a measure of old age pensions in the face of such a complete and final rejection of the principal at stake by such a considerable majority. If I were, what the hon. gentleman hopes I shall be some day, a member of that body; if I had no conscience whatever, no regard for the welfare of anyone but myself; and if I were animated only by a selfish desire to remain in the promised land as long as I could until death might us part, my one last and only advice to my fellow members would be, "Pass this measure, and pass it quickly, for if you don't the people will turn on us and rend us and we shall be torn apart from the emoluments we receive." That would be my advice, purely from a mercenary point of view.

There was an English king many years ago who opposed, as so many kings do, certain measures of reform sought by his subjects. Ultimately the aggrieved subjects took up arms, with the result that there was a long and bloody war that lasted six years. Finally they cornered the king, driving him into a position where defeat and humiliation with the possibility of death stared him in the face. In the space of one short hour he conceded the reforms for which his subjects had been contending for six years, and was astounded to receive the advice of his subordinates that the people would not accept these belated concessions. His advisers told him, "A month ago the people would have been satisfied with half the reforms you now grant them, but to-day they demand more". What they demanded was in addition, the unconditional abdication of his majesty. There may be a moral there for our political Ahabs, the privileged sons of Omri.

Now I have almost done. I do not apologize, even at this late date of the session, although I have spoken at considerably greater length than I should otherwise have done. But the matter is of far greater importance than many others that have engaged, or will likely engage, the attention of parliament this year, and the time I have spent discussing it this afternoon is fully justified. I want to quote from the pen of an abler man than myself, a few observations on the defeat of this measure. But I cannot quote his own words precisely; I must venture to paraphrase them.

The Old Age Pension Act, he says, has been blocked by reactionaries. It is nearly twenty years since Great Britain enacted an old age pension measure, and fear and want is no longer seen in the eyes of old British workers as it is in too many instances witnessed among the old people of Canada. Australia has old age pensions, and so have most of the progressive nations of Europe. No body must be allowed to deny Canadian workers this moderate measure of social reform, which after all is only a palliative. There would be no need for old age pensions under a complete system of social justice. No body must stand as an obstruction against social justice or against any of the temporary expedients which other civilized nations have adopted as insurance against revolution. The reactionary sits securely on the backs of the Canadian toilers.

I may digress here for a moment to observe that we are spending large sums of money on immigration to secure from the Old Country men who when they are out of work are in the receipt of doles, and who are insured against subsequent privation and suffering by a system of old age pensions. Is it any wonder that such people do not come in the numbers we anticipate?

The writer then goes on to remark that in the British Isles a condition prevailed somewhat similar to the one we have in this country, but that the House of Lords of their own volition curtailed their powers to a reasonable extent. The suggestion about safeguarding provincial rights is so much humbug. Such rights have been outraged session after session for the benefit of bootleg liquor vendors in the province of British Columbia. So says the writer, and I know this to be the case inasmuch as I come from that province. I should like to have the words of this writer written in letters of gold, as the saying is, but the paraphrase I have given must suffice. Here is the gem of the whole article: The withered hand of reaction will emerge at the end of every session and throw back legislation which the elected members of parliament have approved, so long as the majority of the Canadian people are satisfied to have it so. One Nova Scotia fisherman at the age of seventy, one Quebec lumberman, one city street sweeper, if you will, one farmer has contributed more to the upbuilding of Canada and has done more to earn a pension than any one of these political reactionaries.

Long years ago when I was a boy my father, I remember, warned me against any attempt to bolster up a good case by means of exaggeration. I notice how true this is all through life. When you have a good case you should not seek to spoil it by overdrawing or exaggerating it. It is always better to be moderate, temperate, indeed almost kindly, in the language you use, for such language will appeal to reasonable people where stronger and more passionate words will fail. Therefore I will not indulge in the language with which I should like to characterize the rejection of this very moderate measure of social reform. We know that it is only a bad case whose arguments must be reinforced with declamation and abuse, and I have carefully refrained from anything of the sort. I endorse, however, every word of the editorial from which I have paraphrased some sentences, and I trust that it will be read throughout the country and will result in the formation of a determined public opinion. A strong and determined opinion among the masses of the people is the greatest force for good in a democratic country or one governed under democratic conditions. I hope therefore that public sentiment will develop and crystallize into such an insistent and vigorous demand as will render it impossible ever again for a measure like this, passed unanimously by 245 newly elected members representative of the common people of Canada, to be blocked or rejected as this one has been.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): The motion which the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) has introduced proposes that some officer of this House shall search the records of the Senate to ascertain what has been the fate there of a certain measure with relation to old age pensions. It is a motion which I have never seen made in this House until to-day, and which I fancy is a relic of antiquity having as much place in our modern practice as would some procedure adopted at the Norman conquest. The hon. member purported to give two reasons for bringing in the motion: one, that he wanted to be sure of what the Senate had done, the second reason being based upon the assumption that he was sure already, and consequently itself stamping as insincere the reason he first advanced. As he proceeded to state the real object of moving the motion he did, in my humble judgment,—and I say this with all respect—come into conflict with the rules of the House, both in letter and in spirit, as violently and as persistently as I have ever witnessed in this assembly.

I cannot conceive what is going to become of our parliamentary institutions if an hon. member is to be permitted to rise here, and under cover of a motion of another character altogether, or under any cover whatever, enter into an elaborate criticism of the conduct of the other branch of parliament, a criticism which in this case reeked with insult and offence from the first word to the last. I will not, however, imitate his example, even on the other side of the shield, by offering anything in the way of defence. My reason in rising is chiefly to give the most explicit denial to the suggestion which the hon. member was apparently anxious to convey, namely, that the action of the other house was in some measure due to influence brought to bear by members of the Conservative party here. I want to state—and I am sure the House has never heard anything more complete in the way of denial—that not only was no such influence brought to bear, but that I never spoke either with the leader of the Conservative party in the upper house or with any member of it, nor did any of them speak to me on the subject, nor was there any communication, direct, indirect, oblique or in any other way, with reference to the bill at any time whatever during the whole course of this session and until after the bill met defeat in the Senate.

I go further, and make a statement which I do not think I have ever taken the responsibility of making before. I would have much preferred if the Senate had taken the other course. I say so, not that I have very much respect for the merits of the measure as it passed this House, because I think it was largely a sham; I do not believe indeed it would ever have gone into effect, for the reason that it would not have been accepted by the provinces. My preference is further founded on the belief that it is just about time this government ceased to make the Senate an object of its hostility, for purely political advantage and the conduct of the Senate its last and only excuse for remaining in office.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Bill No. 190, from the Senate, respecting certain patents of James McCutcheon Coleman—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 191, from the Senate, to incorporate Gatineau Transmission Company—Mr. Fontaine.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT BOARD—WINNIPEG OFFICE

Mr. BROWN:

1. Was there a legal department functioning in the Winnipeg office of the Soldier Settlement Board at the time Colonel F. J. Murray sold the W½ of 2-16-1 East of the 1st in Manitoba to the board and was the purchase approved by the head of the department or any member of his staff?

2. Who signed the requisition for the purchase price and who forwarded the cheque for the purchase price to the vendor?

3. Was any member of the legal department negligent in the performance of his duties in approving of the purchase of the said land and in paying the purchase price to the vendor? If so, who was the party?

4. Did any official of the board investigate the aforesaid purchase and report at any time to the head office of the board or any other government official whether any member of the staff of the legal department had failed to perform his duties properly in connection with the purchase of said land and recommend that the services of the negligent party be terminated? If so, who made the investigation and report and who was named in the said report as the negligent party?

5. Was any member of the staff of the legal department in Winnipeg dismissed or otherwise punished for negligence in connection with the said purchase? If so, who was so punished?

Hon. Mr. STEWART (Edmonton):

1. Yes, the purchase was not approved by any member of the legal staff.

2. W. K. Chandler signed the requisition. No cheque was forwarded to the vendor. Two warrants were forwarded to the vendor's solicitors—one by C. M. Boswell and the final warrant by A. M. Graham.

3. No member of the legal staff was found negligent by the board.

4. While a general investigation of purchases of land made in Manitoba was being held in 1920, this purchase came to attention and was investigated by the commissioner holding the inquiry, John Barnett. No recommendation was made that the services of any member of the legal staff should be terminated because he had failed to perform his services properly in connection with the purchase of said land.

5. No.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT BOARD—LAND PURCHASES

Mr. DONNELLY:

1. What prices were paid by the Soldier Settlement Board for each of the following parcels of land,—South ½ 25-2-21 W. 1st, East ½ 30-2-20 W. 1st, West ½ 2-4-20 W. 1st, all of section 9-4-20 W. 1st, and North ½ 3-4-20 W. 1st?

2. Who in each case was the vendor, and when and at what price did the vendor acquire the land?

Hon. Mr. STEWART (Edmonton):

1. Of the twelve quarter-sections described the board purchased only two quarter sections, namely,—the S. E. 25-2-21-W. 1 for $6,200; and the N. E. 30-2-20-W. 1 for $6,000.

2. The vendor of both quarters so purchased was R. G Willis. According to the vendor's affidavit on Form E, he purchased the S. E. 25-2-21-W. 1 in November, 1914, for $4,000, and subsequently erected a frame barn (36 x 42) on a cement foundation with cement floors, completed a well with windmill, fenced the whole quarter and improved the house; and he purchased the N. E. 30-2-20-W. 1 in 1915 for $4,800.

PRINCE RUPERT ELEVATOR

Hon. Mr. MANION:

Has any guarantee or pledge been given to the lessees of the Prince Rupert elevator, either by the government or the officials of the Canadian National Railway, that sufficient ocean tonnage will be brought to Prince Rupert to take care of all the grain cargoes offering?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE: No guarantee or pledge by Canadian National Railways.

F. J. SOLOMON

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings):

1. Is the government aware that prohibition or inland revenue officers searched the premises of F. J. Solomon at Georgetown, Prince Edward Island, on or about the 12th March last, finding therein a still which was seized and placed in the custody of the local customs officer, and reporting same to the inland revenue authorities?

2. If so, what disposition has been made of said still?

3. What action has been taken with regard to a prosecution in this case?

4. Was a fine imposed, and if so, was it collected?

5. If not, why not?

Hon. Mr. BOIVIN:

1. Yes.

2. The still has been destroyed by order of the department and certificate to that effect furnished by T. Morrissey, sub-collector of customs and excise at Georgetown.

3. F. J. Solomon was prosecuted under Section 180 (e) of the Excise Act; pleaded guilty and was sentenced to a penalty of $200 or six months' imprisonment. The case was tried by Judge A. L. Fraser of Georgetown.

4. Yes.

5. Answered by No. 4.

AMHERSTBURG—DREDGING

Mr. GOTT:

1. Was any dredging done by the Canadian government at the port of Amherstburg, Ontario, during the years 1922, 1923, 1924, and 1925?

2. If so, under whose supervision was the work carried on?
3. When was the work completed?
4. What dredges or tugs were used in connection with the work?
5. Were any reports made that the work was not properly completed?

Hon. Mr. KING (Kootenay):

1. Yes, in 1924 at Mullen's coal dock.
2. District Engineer H. B. R. Craig.
3. June 30, 1924.
4. Dredge "Q & R No. 1" and tug "Peel".
5. No.

IMMIGRATION SERVICE—WINDSOR

Mr. GOTT:

1. How many officials are engaged at the port of Windsor, Ontario, in the immigration service who are non-residents of Essex county?
2. What additional expense does it cost the government (average per man) to employ outside men in the immigration service at the port of Windsor, Ontario?

Hon. Mr. STEWART (Edmonton):

1. One.
2. Sixty dollars per month living allowance, pending completion of transfer.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—O.C.S. FREIGHT

Mr. WHITE (Mount Royal):

1. In the Canadian National Railway annual report for the year ending 1925, a comparative statement of revenue tonnage is shown on pages 33 and 34. Is O.C.S. freight included in this statement?
2. If so, what were the tonnages of the various groups handled O.C.S.?
3. What amount of revenue, by groups, was credited to the Canadian National Railway earnings on account of this freight?

Hon. Mr. DUNNING:

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.
3. Answered by No. 1.

THE NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. SPENCER:

1. What is the total liability of the Dominion of Canada in respect to short term notes?
2. What are the maturing obligations of Canada during each of the next ten years?
3. What is the amount of Canada's national debt as on the first of June, 1926?
4. Of this amount how much is tax exempt?

Hon. Mr. ROBB:

1. $51,000,000 (detailed in answer to No. 2.)

2.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CANADIAN MILITIA

Mr. WOODSWORTH:

1. What is the name of the Deputy Minister of National Defence and his salary?

2. What is the number of officers in the Canadian militia on the staff or in the permanent force who receive an annual salary (including pay and allowances) of:

(a) $9,000;
(b) $7,500 and over but less than $9,000;
(c) $6,000 and over but less than $7,500;
(d) $5,000 and over but less than $6,000;
(e) $4,000 and over but less than $5,000;
(f) $3,000 and over but less than $4,000;
(g) $2,000 and over but less than $3,000?

3. Is it the intention of the minister; (a) to maintain any longer officers receiving a higher salary than the deputy minister of the department; (b) to reduce the salary of officers on the staff as was done with the privates in 1924?

COLONIZATION SUB-AGENTS

Mr. BARBER:

1. Were the following in the employ of the government, during the years 1925 and 1926, as special colonization sub-agents: Rev. J. M. Boucher; Rev. A. S. Deschenes; Rev. J. M. Doucet; Rev. Nap. Eavreau; Rev. F. X. Goyette; Rev. L. P. Gravel; Rev. G. P. Jubianville; Rev. S. Lajoie; Rev. L. A. Lebel; Rev. A. Lepage; Rev. E. Martin; Rev. Chas. Minette; Rev. J. A. Normandeau; Rev. P. M. ## CALGARY STOCK YARDS INVESTIGATION

Mr. DAVIS moved:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, reports and other documents relative to the investigation of certain alleged irregularities in connection with the handling of live stock and other matters at Calgary stock yards.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in so far as this motion refers to correspondence, letters and other documents relative to this investigation, there can be no exception whatever taken to their production. However, as the report referred to deals with an inquiry which is still under way, I do not think it would be in the public interest that at the present state this report should be tabled. With this reservation, I shall be glad to get the other documents before the House as early as possible.

3 p.m.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister mean there has been an interim report?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is an interim report of a departmental nature, dealing with an inquiry that is still under way.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It will be brought down later?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would think so.

Mr. DAVIS: Mr. Speaker, I understand that representatives of the department were sent to Calgary to investigate local conditions, and that they have made a report. That is the report which I asked for.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is the report to which I referred, but inasmuch as I am advised that a further inquiry will be necessary before a solution of the various problems involved can be arrived at, I do not think it is in the public interest to make that report public at the present time.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (West Calgary): Mr. Speaker, this is a much more important matter than the minister's casual observations seem to indicate. There has been litigation. The matter has been heard in the courts, and at the moment there is intense dissatisfaction on the part of the people connected with the stock yards as to the character of the investigation that was carried on by the representatives of the minister. They went there, they made an investigation, and they made a report; it was not an interim report. The minister then directed that they should make a further report, as I understand, and those who have been connected with the stock yard industry in Calgary for many years are under the impression that a very great injustice is being done to them, and that the government is endeavouring to assist in that injustice. I do not for one moment associate myself with that contention, not being sufficiently informed to form a proper opinion, but they feel that very strongly, and they have telegraphed and written to me, and when I was west the other day a delegation called to see me. They sent a telegram to the minister, to which he replied indicating that a further investigation would be held. In the meantime a certain license has been extended for another thirty days. The case is being tried in the press, and the general impression on the part of the stock yard industry is that they are being badly treated by the minister, because time is passing, and they fear that their case is not being properly presented to the country at any rate, and that they are being prejudiced and their interests sacrificed because of an alleged desire to carry on what is called co-operative marketing, which they submit is nothing more than an effort to destroy this legitimate business built up after the expenditure of vast sums of money. I think the investment in the Calgary stock yards by the Canadian Pacific Railway is something like $700,000, if my memory serves me; I have not seen the last annual report, but that investment is listed among their securities. Under these circumstances, I submit that the matter is of very great importance.

Mr. SPEAKER: No debate is allowed on such motions.

Mr. BENNETT: Not on motions for papers?

Mr. SPEAKER: No. I thought the hon. member was just making an explanation, but it turns out to be an address. Shall the motion carry? Carried.

Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: With the reservation I made.

Mr. BENNETT: Carried on division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

INTERIM SUPPLY

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): I would like to ask if provision is being made for the passing of the necessary supply for the payment of the civil service to-morrow? To-morrow is a pay day, and I understand that the interim supply has been exhausted. I thought I would bring it to the attention of the Minister of Finance, and ask if provision will be made to pay the service to-morrow.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): When my hon. friend rose in his place, I was just about to ask the unanimous consent of the House to present interim supply bills, which I do now. I move that the House go into committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Duff in the chair.

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

Mr. ROBB moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $15,934,291.06 being one-twelfth of the amount of each of the several items to be voted as set forth in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1927, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, be granted to His Majesty, on account for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1927.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I assume, Mr. Chairman, that the proportion, one-twelfth, has been correctly worked out.

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is just one mistake that I want to bring to the attention of my hon. friend, a mistake made by one of his colleagues in connection with the previous interim supply votes. I know there is no misunderstanding between my hon. friend and myself; that is, the fact of these supply votes being allowed to go through in this way does not commit the House in any way as to the principle in connection with any item in the estimates, and further, that the voting of this interim supply is never taken as authority to make any new commitments. I think my hon. friend entirely agrees with me.

Mr. ROBB: That was our understanding, and it is so set forth in Hansard.

Mr. ROBB moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $10,200,000, being ten million dollars on account of the total amount to be voted by vote No. 372 for loans to Canadian National Railway Company, and two hundred thousand dollars on account of the total amount to be voted by vote No. 373, for a loan to the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited, as set forth in the estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1927, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, be granted to His Majesty, on account, for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1927.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

COMMITTEE OF WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. ROBB moved that the House go into committee of Ways and Means.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Mr. ROBB moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1927, the sum of $10,200,000 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In this case, Mr. Chairman, the resolution is in a different form. It has to be in a different form because this year, following the practice of last year the railway estimates were separated from the general estimates, but in doing so it was overlooked by the government—I do not know who overlooked it, but at any rate it was overlooked—that nothing was included in their interim supplies for the National Railways. It developed before the committee that the National Railways urgently required this $10,000,000, and that the merchant marine urgently required this $200,000, and as we certainly do not want to see these things held up, the committee unanimously consented that this matter should come forward.

Mr. ROBB moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the Supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1927, the sum of $15,934,291.06 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Robb thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 192 for granting to His Majesty a certain sum of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1927.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first and second time.

Mr. ROBB thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 193 for granting to His Majesty a certain sum of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1927.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first and second time.

Mr. SPEAKER: I presume the two bills will be considered together in committee.

The House then went into committee on the bills, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: So that it may be clear that we understand each other, both these bills will be subject to the stipulations already made in connection with the resolution?

Mr. ROBB: That is quite understood.

Bills reported, read the third time and passed.

MARITIME RIGHTS COMMISSION

On the Orders of the Day.

Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (St. John-Albert): May I ask the Prime Minister to inform the House when the royal commission in connection with the Maritimes will proceed with its work?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have received word that Sir Andrew Rae Duncan, chairman of the commission, expects to sail for Canada before the end of the present month. Arrangements are being made to have the commission begin its sittings immediately after his arrival in this country.

SALE OF EMPIRE PRODUCTS IN GREAT BRITAIN

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. A. De WITT FOSTER (Hants-Kings): I draw the attention of the government to an article appearing in the Mail and Empire of June 12th, and if I may be permitted to read just a few sentences from it I should like to found a question thereon. It is in reference to a matter which I have brought before this House a couple of times, dealing with the sale of Canadian products in Great Britain. The article referred to sets forth, in corroboration of the statement I made in this House, that the British government has taken the lead by allocating one million pounds yearly to encourage the sale of empire products in that country, part of which will be spent on advertising. It purports to say further that an important scheme for co-operation between Canadian producers, exporters and transport agencies and the Canadian government, to promote the sale of Canadian food products in Great Britain, has been submitted to the British authorities by the High Commissioner. In view of the importance of the matter I ask the government if they are participating in this scheme by the allocation of a certain sum of money or otherwise, and whether they are assisting in this very laudable purpose of advertising Canadian products in the British Empire?

Right Hon W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The position the government is taking with respect to the money that has been provided for the purpose indicated by my hon. friend is, that the money having been voted by the parliament of Great Britain, the allocation of it comes under the responsibility of the minister in London primarily concerned. However, an intimation has been given us that the British government would welcome the co-operation of our government by way of suggestion, and we have undertaken to co-operate in that way. But we have sought to make one point clear and that is that our co-operation is to interfere in no way with the responsibility of the British government for the expenditure of its own money in its own way. To the extent that our advice is asked and we are invited to make suggestions, we are only too happy to comply with the invitation.

Mr. FOSTER: Will the Prime Minister go a step further and tell us if this government is contributing, and if so will we have an opportunity to discuss in this House the subjects which are to be covered by the contribution?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the point I wish to make clear. Our government is not contributing. This is a sum of money voted by the British parliament to advertise products of different parts of the empire, but it is voted in its entirety by the British parliament itself.

NATURAL RESOURCES

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. FRED DAVIS (East Calgary): Will the Prime Minister tell me if it is the intention of this government to transfer the natural resources of the province of Alberta to that province during the present session?

[Mr. Foster.]

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): It is not the intention of the government to proceed with the resolution which now appears on the order paper with respect to the transfer of the natural resources of Alberta.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Or on any other resolution?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, unless of course there should be some material change in the situation existing at the present moment.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER REVISION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): Before proceeding with the orders of the day, I desire to call the attention of the government to a matter of some importance and to address an inquiry to the Prime Minister in connection therewith. Last session a committee was appointed to deal with the revision of the rules. That committee met and did a good deal of work. I think it sat four or five weeks, and finally a report was made to the House. Unfortunately, for one reason or another, the report was never dealt with, nor discussed and no action was taken. It would be very regrettable if the work of that committee were entirely lost. I would ask if it is not possible to take action on that report this session, so that next year we may have the benefit of the recommendations of that committee?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I do not know whether my hon. friend was in the House when this matter was brought up before. At the time I mentioned that the Minister of Customs, a former Deputy Speaker, had been asked to confer with the leader of the opposition and the leader of the Progressive party in respect to the rules and to ascertain if it might not be possible to secure agreement in reference to the adoption of certain parts of the report, if not the whole report. I asked my colleague to-day if he had a final conference in this matter, and he mentioned that he had been more or less busily engaged with some other pressing matters, but he hoped to be in a position to have a further conference very shortly. It is the expectation and wish of the government that this matter shall be taken up this session.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I think the report of the committee of last session might well be used by the government and by this House as if it were a report of a committee this session. It is not a subject that has any special relation to time or to any parliament; consequently I think the government should act as if the circumstances were that the report had been brought down this session. I would not like to undertake to act on a committee representing this side of the House with a view to seeking to come to an agreement on that report. The report gives certain special advantages to leaders of parties, and I think the matter is now in a position where the government might well take the report, or such portions of it as it approves, and move in the House for their adoption. I have stated to the Prime Minister that, so far as my personal opinion goes, I would be glad to give it, if it is worth anything, in relation to such portions of the report as the government wishes to move to adopt, but I do not think I can act for the party on any committee with a view to unanimity, in view of certain special features of the report.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The wish of the government in the matter was to avoid discussion, if possible, when the report was brought down. I think I stated, in the absence of my right hon. friend, that he had mentioned to me that he hoped the government would bring forward such parts of the report as they were prepared to move in this House. As a result of that suggestion, before bringing forward any part of the report, the government thought it advisable to ascertain if there were any serious objection to any portion of it by any hon. member opposite or from any group in the House. In the event of finding out that there was objection to any part liable to create long debate, the government thought it would be inadvisable to introduce that part. The only wish the government has in the matter in conferring with my right hon. friend or any other member is, if possible, to bring in only such parts of the report as are likely to be generally acceptable to the House, and thus avoid a protracted debate, but not to bring portions of the report likely to occasion protracted discussion. Perhaps my right hon. friend will give us the benefit of his opinion as to the part he thinks will meet with opposition of hon. members opposite, and if he will go that far, we will take his opinion into consideration in deciding what part of the report should be submitted to the House.

PERMANENT FORCE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. A. J. DOUCET (Kent, N.B.): Will the Minister of National Defence tell me when I may expect the return to a motion adopted by the House on March 22, last with reference to officers and men of the permanent force of Canada?

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Minister of National Defence): My hon. friend will recall that the form of that resolution was in question for some time and he wrote me stating that a certain portion of the information would be satisfactory. That portion is now being prepared, and will be brought down in a few days.

GRADING OF EGGS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to a telegram that I received which I will read and send to him, and ask him to send it with other data to the committee on Agriculture. The telegram reads:

Courtney, B. C.

A. W. NEILL, M.P.,
Ottawa, Ont.

View with alarm attempt to discontinue grading of eggs. The district association here sure that increased consumption result of consumer being better able rely upon freshness of eggs offered for sale. Considerable improvement in quality of eggs here since grading enforced. Believe same in interest of both producer and consumer.

Comox Creamery Association.

DOMINION IRON AND STEEL CORPORATION

Mr. FINLAY MacDONALD (South Cape Breton) asked leave under rule 39 to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the industrial crisis arising out of the announced intention of the directors of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, Limited, to default in payment of interest on bonds maturing July 1, 1926, with consequent unemployment on a large scale, and distress particularly in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am not quite sure that it is a matter of urgent public importance but of course according to rule 39 if twenty members rise the hon. gentleman may proceed.

The Clerk assistant having stated that more than twenty members had risen:

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): I appreciate the responsibility of any hon. member moving the adjournment of the House and in order to do so he must be able to justify himself by calling the attention of the House to a matter of urgent public importance. The subject that I am going to bring to the attention of hon. members this afternoon is one not only of grave, but of vital importance to the people of eastern Canada. For the past few days the financial press of Canada has carried the news that the directors of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, Limited, intend to default in the payment of interest and sinking fund on their bonds, the first issue of which matures on July 1, and the second on September 1. The importance of such a move as this cannot be exaggerated. It is widespread and it is going to have a most disastrous effect as regards not only the island of Cape Breton, but the whole of eastern Canada.

The Dominion Iron and Steel Company, Limited, is one of the constituent companies of the British Empire Steel Corporation. It has been in existence for about a quarter of a century. It was organized about 1899 and began operations two or three years later. It is situated in the city of Sydney which at the time of its inception was a town of 3,500 inhabitants. Owing to the establishment of that company there, the town has grown into a city of about 25,000 inhabitants. The little town at the inception of the company obligated itself very heavily to the extent of $100,000 odd for the purchase of a site on which to establish this organization. At the time of the inception of that company we were led to believe that it had an exceptionally bright future. It was situated at tidewater within easy access of coal deposits and iron ore and in a particularly good situation to manufacture iron and steel cheaply. As a result of that the stock of the company was very largely marketed. The Liberal governments of that day both of Nova Scotia and of the Dominion at Ottawa assisted the corporation very generously. The federal government afforded them a certain measure of tariff protection and also gave them bonuses which had the effect of stimulating industry in its early days.

The city of Sydney in order to meet the growing demand of the population also went heavily into debt to the extent of some millions of dollars in order to provide the necessary civic services for this great corporation. The population grew from 3,500 to 25,000. At the present time there are some 3,000 employees in that corporation, not all on full time, but all depending for their livelihood on it. There are several allied industries which depend upon it. For instance the Tar and Chemical Company, the Cross Fertilizer Company and some smaller industries depend for their existence upon the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, Limited. The Dominion Coal Company alone gets a market for about 1,250,000 tons of its coal there. In addition to those millions that the city has spent on services, trust and loan companies have spent other millions of dollars in mortgages and other securities in the city of Sydney. If this industry goes, all those industries go, all this money invested in stock, city bonds, stocks of other allied industries and mortgages in the city, go. So that when I contemplate the threatened failure of this industry as it is now threatened by the action of the directors who say that they can no longer carry on and pay the interest on their bonds, I shudder to think of the widespread disaster that must follow.

I think this government can save the situation and I am imploring them to do it. I am pointing out to them that this corporation is a child of Liberal administrations in the past. Its birth and growth were due to them and in years gone by they pointed with pride to the result of Liberal administration in Canada in the establishment, organization and carrying on of those great companies. To me the thing absolutely transcends all political interests. It is so important that I approach it entirely from a national standpoint. It is not my purpose to indicate how I think the government should act; that I leave entirely to them. It is not my purpose to insinuate even in the most indirect way that the situation is due to the action or inaction of any government in the past. I intend simply to point out the present situation, the disaster that threatens that company, and to ask the government if they will give us any assurance that this great disaster may be averted.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What would my hon. friend recommend should be done?

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): As I pointed out I leave that entirely in the hands of the Prime Minister and his government. It would be presumptuous of me to indicate in any way what they should do. They are advised of the situation and they probably know as much about it as I do. I feel sure also that they are as much concerned about it as I am and that they will do whatever they deem fit. I leave it to their wisdom, because on their shoulders will rest the responsibility.

Mr. L. W. JOHNSTONE (Cape Breton North-Victoria): I rise to second the motion of the hon. member, and in doing so I heartily endorse every statement he has made. The only excuse, if excuse is necessary, for bringing up the matter is that it is one of vast importance to the Maritime provinces. I do not think the government and the members of this House generally realize quite fully what it means to those provinces to have either of our two basic industries closed down. It would throw out of employment some 3,000 men who are entirely dependent upon the operations of the industry, and, in addition to this, the market for local produce which supplies the needs of these miners would be affected. Small business firms, various minor industries, and citizens of all classes living in the surrounding districts are vitally interested in the coal and steel industries of Nova Scotia. The people of the province as well as others in eastern Canada have also invested their money in the bonds, debentures and stocks of the company. I have personal knowledge of some who have sunk their savings in the industry, and the closing down of operations would mean ruin to them. Our steel works have passed through a very trying time during the past number of years. By reason of the situation on the seaboard the industry has suffered more than any other steel industry on this continent from the competition of European producers, which competition has been stimulated by depreciated currency abroad. This disability cannot last forever, but it may continue long enough to kill the industry in Nova Scotia. We therefore come to the government to-day and ask them to do something to solve this great problem. Definite action is needed right away to give the people of the province, and especially those engaged in these industries, some assurance of stability. I cannot do better than quote in this connection the words of an editorial which I have taken from one of the principal newspapers of Nova Scotia and which I think covers the ground completely:

> The greatest industrial interests of the province are in jeopardy; an untoward result means for the worker poverty, for the owners of these properties ruin, and for the enterprising communities which have grown up around them desolation and decay. Such results are not local in their consequences. They affect the whole business life of the Dominion. May they do more, they affect the prestige of Canada.

We are asking the government to take hold of this matter in earnest, to investigate the facts, and to adopt such means as will render impossible such a condition as is predicted in this editorial. The situation in which the industry finds itself to-day is so serious that in a very short time unless relief is forthcoming the province of Nova Scotia will be injuriously affected, with the possibility of the city of Sydney being wiped off the map.

Mr. ROBERT K. SMITH (Cumberland): As a Nova Scotian I cannot sit idly by and allow this discussion to pass without offering some comment. The point raised by the hon. member who moved the resolution is well taken: this matter should be approached in a non-partisan spirit. The situation is so grave that, as he observes, it transcends all political affiliations and I have no doubt that we are capable of considering it from the national standpoint and from that standpoint alone.

The coal and steel industries of Nova Scotia have been very closely associated for the past number of years, so that what affects one industry naturally reacts upon the other. A blow to the steel industry of Nova Scotia is a blow to the coal industry of the same province, and vice versa. When we realize that these are the staple enterprises of that province, employing over 25,000 workmen, and that upon them over one-fifth of the entire population of the province is directly dependent, not to mention the other people in the province who are indirectly affected, we can understand how important it is to the province that nothing shall be done to impair their activity. I do not think there is any need just now to elaborate the circumstances which have hastened the present situation, but it can fairly be said that the steel industry of Nova Scotia, while it can compete with legitimate English or American industry, cannot meet the competition of European countries where cheapened labour, a depreciated currency and non-union conditions, and in a good many instances, child labour, make for a low cost of production.

Mr. CAMPBELL: What has the depreciated currency to do with foreign competition?

Mr. SMITH: It has been stated by those who are in a position to know that the wages of the steel workers in Europe have increased to six times the value of the franc which is not on gold coin basis while in Canada the wages of steel workers have gone up 80 per cent on the basis of the gold standard. This means that whereas the wages of European workers have increased six times on the basis of the franc, the increase is but 2 per cent on the basis of the gold coin. On the same standard the wages of the steel workers of Canada have increased to the enormous extent I have mentioned.

Mr. CAMPBELL: To the extent to which currency in foreign countries has depreciated, the cost of living has increased. Therefore the workman would have to secure a proportionately larger amount of money. I am not arguing on the general question that the hon. gentleman is discussing at all, but I fail to see his point, that the European manufacturer is in a favoured position because of the depreciated currency of his country.

Mr. SMITH: I think my friend will admit, taking that one point alone, that since 1913 we have increased the wages of our employees 80 per cent to meet the situation on a certain gold coin basis, which is the only basis we appear to be able to work on in Canada to-day, but with only a two per cent increase on the same gold basis in Belgium and France we are up against a disadvantage that we cannot very well overcome without some change.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the hon. gentleman state what the importation of steel from Europe has been for the last year or two?

Mr. SMITH: I have the information, but I cannot put my hand on it at the moment. Our total importations of iron products for the year ending February, 1926, amount to $171,000,000 odd, of which we imported from the United States $151,000,000 odd, and from the United Kingdom $17,000,000 odd. I cannot give my hon. friend exact figures of the importations from European countries.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The depreciated currency, then, does not enter very largely into the matter when you consider the imports.

Mr. SMITH: It is a well-recognized fact, and I think my hon. friend will admit it, that large steel importations have come from Belgium and France.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Not according to the figures the hon. gentleman presented to the House.

Mr. SMITH: What figures does my hon. friend refer to?

[Mr. Smith.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Of the total importations from the different countries, $171,000,000 odd, the gentleman stated that $151,000,000 odd came from the United States.

Mr. SMITH: I hope my hon. friend is not trying to take an advantage because I do not happen to have before me the figures of importations from the European countries. I have given the total importations.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is merely a matter of mathematics as to how much is left.

Mr. SMITH: I do not think so. I did not give my hon. friend complete figures.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the hon. member say whether the importations in recent years have been more or less than they were before 1913?

Mr. SMITH: Since 1913 the steel industry in Canada has suffered considerably, and whether the importations have been more or less I do not think is pertinent to the question that affects us to-day, because it is recognized that we are in a position which we cannot overcome under the existing circumstances.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It has a direct bearing on the hon. gentleman's statement with regard to the effect of depreciated currency.

Mr. SMITH: Does my hon. friend want to convey the impression to the House that there are no importations from the European countries?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No; on the contrary, I am trying to get from the hon. gentleman whether the importations have not been a great deal less.

Mr. SMITH: Whether they have been less or not is not material if the situation is very seriously affected, as it is.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is material to the hon. member's argument.

Mr. SMITH: I do not think so. I am arguing that importations of iron products are coming from European countries with depreciated currency, and those importations are putting our manufacturers out of business. Now that situation may have existed in 1913, as my hon. friend says, more of the iron and steel products of European countries may have been imported then, but other elements may have entered into the matter then which would not affect it so adversely as to-day.

Some figures have been handed me of importations from European countries. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1924, the importations of steel billets from France and Belgium were 3,498 tons; for the same period in 1925, 5,628 tons; and for the ten months of 1925-26, 10,559 tons. These figures indicate a very marked increase.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the hon. gentleman give the proportion of steel billets to the total steel imported?

Mr. SMITH: I am not an expert on this question and cannot supply the information requested.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The figures do not mean anything unless we have that information, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SMITH: The figures I have quoted surely mean something. They show a very marked increase of importations in that particular line, and it is a line that seriously affects us in Nova Scotia. With respect to the importations of steel from Belgium, in my home town of Amherst, Nova Scotia, we have been endeavouring for some time to carry on a rolling mill for the manufacture of reinforcing rods, using scrap steel in the process. Usually there is a ready market for this product. I wish to quote from a letter that I have received from one of the officials of the company to show what this industry is up against by way of foreign competition. He says:

4 p.m.

I went down to Halifax on Tuesday and found the city full of Belgian bars. A certain company have received 725 tons, and all the jobbers of course are going there for supplies.

He mentions the name of the firm, but I do not wish to publish it. He states further:

Apparently the company, and possibly a number of other concerns, have bought Belgian bars, and as far as I know we have never been asked to name a price. However, it is impossible for us to compete with the continental product to-day, and if this kind of thing is allowed to continue, it simply means that as far as the Maritimes is concerned our rolling mill is out of business. In fact it is a serious condition in Montreal as well.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not think I need stress the very serious and unsettled situation existing to-day in the Maritimes on account of the announcement of far-reaching consequence which the big iron and steel company has been forced to make. Unless something is done by the government we will be very seriously affected in the province of Nova Scotia, and indirectly the whole Dominion will be adversely affected. Therefore I wish to appeal, as did the hon. gentlemen who have preceded me, to the government to adopt whatever ways and means they deem to be most effective to avoid the very critical situation that is now impending in Nova Scotia.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask the hon. gentleman one question. He spoke of the unfair competition of Belgian workers. The steel workers of Nova Scotia have been working twelve hours a day. Would he suggest that the Belgian workers are working longer hours?

Mr. SMITH: From the information I have they do not appear to have any regular hours of work over there. To a great extent it appears to be non-union labour and, as mentioned before, starvation-driven labour. That is the sort of competition we are up against to-day. I am not in a position to say what hours they work in Belgium, but I think it is a pretty safe guess that they work longer hours there than they do in Nova Scotia.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I fancy the hon. gentleman is chiefly guessing.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Could the hon. gentleman tell us whether or not it is true that Besco has discontinued buying Canadian-made nail kegs because they can buy to better advantage in the United States?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why shouldn't they?

Mr. SMITH: I cannot answer my hon. friend's question.

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I have very much to add to the discussion. I did make some remarks outside the House, in the city of Toronto, in connection with the situation in Nova Scotia for which I was afterwards very strongly criticized in this House by one of the members from Nova Scotia. I made the statement at that time that something was wrong with the coal and steel industry in Nova Scotia, that apparently there was something economically wrong with the industry, that it was not on a sound basis. I wonder just what is the matter. We are having a discussion this afternoon and we are told that something has got to be done to save the coal and steel industry in the province of Nova Scotia. But if they are carrying on under proper conditions, if economically they are on a sound basis, just what is the trouble? Hon. gentlemen who have spoken want the government to do something. That is pretty nebulous. I do not know what "something" means. I think the members from Nova Scotia who are asking the government to do something should tell us what they want done.

In regard to what has been said about depreciated currency, that is a favourite argument in the House. I am willing to admit that there may be something in it, but not nearly as much, I think, as some hon. gentlemen would have us believe. If the workers in Great Britain work longer hours, work faster, and do not live as well, then probably they can compete at an advantage, but I question very much if they would under those circumstances. What does experience show? It shows that well-paid workers, living and working under proper conditions, can and do compete successfully with those who are not working under proper conditions. We are continually hearing one side of the argument, about depreciated currency and a low standard of living in Europe, and then hon. gentlemen immediately turn to the other side and speak of the high wages paid in the United States, and say that we cannot compete with the United States under the conditions they have there. Those two arguments do not harmonize.

I am forced to the conclusion that there is something wrong with the industries in the province of Nova Scotia, and I am quite willing to hear a statement of the conditions as they exist in that province. Let hon. gentlemen tell us plainly what is the matter with these industries. Not one hon. member has yet told us what is the matter with them. Let them tell us that plainly, and not get behind some other thing that perhaps is not the reason why these industries are not able to compete. Nova Scotia is the oldest province of the Dominion, and it has done a lot for Canada. I sympathize with the people there.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Before the hon. gentleman proceeds, he says that there is something wrong with the industry. Will he not tell us what it is, and not be so nebulous?

Mr. FORKE: Perhaps they are working under wrong economic conditions; perhaps they are over-capitalized.

An hon. MEMBER: Perhaps not.

Mr. CANTLEY: Perhaps is not good enough.

Mr. FORKE: I want hon. gentlemen from Nova Scotia to tell me what is the matter. They tell us that these industries cannot exist, and I do not know that I am called upon to make clear what the trouble is.

[Mr. Forke.]

Mr. CANTLEY: The hon. gentleman makes insinuations that are not fair. He ought to say what he means by those insinuations, and be frank and straightforward about it.

Mr. FORKE: I do not know what I am insinuating. Hon. gentlemen from Nova Scotia tell us that these industries cannot exist, and I want them to tell us why they cannot exist. Some explanations have been given, but they do not sufficiently explain to me why the failure of the British Empire Steel Company is in the immediate offing. There is something more to explain. There must be some reason for this condition at the present time.

Mr. FOSTER: Will the hon. gentleman tell us whether he, as leader of his party, has seen the clear and distinct representations made by the Steel Company themselves as to what was wrong with that industry?

Mr. FORKE: I do not know that I can begin to answer questions in that way, but I think that people who really love their native province and understand some of the difficulties down there in Nova Scotia should explain to the House what the difficulty is. I do not think the House has ever been told. I do not think it is my province to tell the House exactly what is wrong with these industries. We have a large population depending upon these industries, and it will be very serious for them if they are thrown out of employment, and I am prepared to go a long way to help those people. I have sympathy for them. I might even be prepared to sacrifice some of my principles to help them. I do not wish to be held up here as antagonistic to the workers down in Nova Scotia. I simply would like to know what is the trouble. We know that these two industries are linked together, but no one has told the House whether the coal industry is leaning on the steel, or whether the steel industry is leaning on the coal. I have never had that made clear yet. We want to know something of the economic conditions under which these industries are being carried on, and I repeat, there is something economically wrong, because these industries have received tremendous bounties in the past, a vast amount of money that I cannot name, and yet we find ourselves in the position to-day of being called upon to do something to rescue the industry from approaching bankruptcy; in fact, they are bankrupt. Would a little assistance really remedy the situation? Would the company not in a year or two find itself again in its present condition? Let us get down to the basic facts and find out what is wrong. I repeat again, I am not antagonistic to these industries nor to the people dependent upon them. I am very friendly to the people of Nova Scotia, but I would like to know what are the basic facts underlying their difficulties. Can we possibly remedy them by paltry assistance in the meantime to get over a difficult situation? I hope some member from Nova Scotia will get down to basic facts, and tell us what is really the matter with the coal and steel industry in his province.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): We are face to face with a situation that might have been expected by anyone who had in any way learned even the ABC of economics many years ago. It is a case where an industry built up on a false basis has come practically to the point where it has got to reorganize and be built upon a sure foundation, on its own merits and standing, or it can go no further. The steel industry in Canada has from its inception been favoured as perhaps no other industry has; in fact, I do not think that in any country in the world has the steel industry been favoured as it has in Canada, and I am not excepting the United States. I remember that when the Dominion Iron and Steel Company was first inaugurated it secured from this government pretty nearly everything that we could give it. In the first place, we gave it a protection of some 17½ per cent on steel rails. Then the government of the province, or the municipalities, gave it thirty years' exemption from taxation. It got $7 a ton bounty on steel rails, and also got favoured railway rates throughout the Dominion, and any royalties supposed to have been collected on coal were repaid to the company. At that time there was a great steel trade going on in Canada owing to the tremendous amount of railway construction work in progress. The two great companies in Canada were then furnishing steel rails for the government sections of the Transcontinental railway. The government paid as high as $32 per ton for these rails. They also paid a bounty on production making altogether $39 a ton for the steel rails used on the government sections of the Transcontinental. At that very time one of these companies was cutting prices against the whole world, and delivering rails in India at a price of $24 a ton. Did they need protection to carry on in this country, or did they use the protective privileges we were giving them to enable them to deliver rails at $24 a ton in that distant land? Either the companies cannot compete abroad or they do not need protection at home. The charge has been levelled at us in this corner of the House during the last five years that we would destroy every industry in the country. We have no such intention, in fact I would not be averse to a little protection if it were simply the home market they needed.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Hear, hear.

Mr. HANSON: Well done.

Mr. EVANS: That statement pleases hon. gentlemen.

Mr. HANSON: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The lost sheep.

Mr. EVANS: But this is what I have to say: If they needed protection to get the home market only nobody would have much objection to it, but the government for many years sought to give them a blanket protection to fleece the rest of the community. That being the case I say it is time to quit. When that stage is reached it becomes class privilege, and the granting of any privilege of this kind to one industry is done at the expense of other industries. I say that we have come to the point in this country where no industry must be privileged to tax other industries in order to keep itself going. If there is an industry in Canada which is essential to the national welfare it ought to be maintained but it should establish in the first place that its maintenance is a necessity to the country at large and that it needs protection. The hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. MacDonald) admits that the British Empire Steel Corporation enjoys all the advantages of coal, ore, and of convenient transportation facilities; in fact if you look at the map of the world to-day you would think the industry was most advantageously situated for delivering its products to the markets of the world.

What then is wrong at the present time? Another hon. gentleman says the government can prevent a catastrophe from occurring but does not say how the government can do it. Can this industry ever stand on its own feet? After the lapse of thirty years it has shown that under present methods of manufacturing it cannot do so. We should consider now what is wrong. If hon. members in favour of protection cannot answer this question why do they not support a reference of the case to the Tariff Advisory Board in order to get at the root of the matter? It has been shown how important all the subsidiary industries are to this particular industry. Well, practically all industries in this country are subsidiary to agriculture, because the latter is a basic industry. Actually agriculture is being destroyed to-day because of having to carry the other industries on its back. It has had to pay artificial prices, enhanced prices, for everything it has needed whereas for the things it produces it is compelled to face the competition of the world. The steel industry says it cannot compete with the cheap labour and the depreciated currencies of Europe. But we farmers with our own products have to compete against the cheap labour of the whole world, even the labour of Europe, Asia, India and the Argentine. In no other country in the world are such high prices being paid for articles needed on the farm as in Canada. When an hon. gentleman urges the importance of this matter on the House, and expresses a fear that the country does not appreciate its urgency, does he not see the importance of having every industry stand on its own feet, and should he not refrain from insisting upon protection which will be ruinous to other industries? Industries should pay their way, but according to the tales of woe we have heard in this House for the last four or five months no industry engaged in manufacturing is able to stand on its own feet. What is wrong? Let us ask this question and try to answer it. The fact is that because of our fiscal policy, which has been a false one from the beginning, we keep the cost of production at too high a figure for successful competition in the markets of the world. To-day the industry of agriculture is being carried on at a loss. Somebody may ask how it has been possible for it to remain in this condition for so long a period. Agriculture has been mining the soil in this country for the last thirty years. The farmers have been mining the soil in order to satisfy the demand of the rest of the country and have been obliged to pay enhanced prices for everything they needed under the protective tariff.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If agriculture is carried on at a loss why did the hon. member vote for a Speech from the Throne which stated it was very prosperous?

Mr. EVANS: The right hon. gentleman is evading the issue. He knows very well that what I am stating is the case.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. member say that the Speech from the Throne does not declare that agriculture is prosperous?

Mr. EVANS: I was not speaking of the Speech from the Throne and do not intend to allude to it. The right hon. gentleman knows as well as any man in this House that even the agricultural industry cannot be carried on under present conditions. Because we had a good crop last year and conditions are a little better in the country, it is not to be inferred that agriculture is on a permanent basis of prosperity. Our manufacturing industries have had prosperous years in the past but they did not seek to put themselves on a sound footing; they relied on the price-fixing power given them by the tariff to fleece the consumers. Then when they have destroyed their own market and lessened the purchasing power of those who are engaged in the primary industries they raise the cry that they are face to face with a catastrophe. Another hon. gentleman has declared that depreciated currency has killed the iron and steel industry. I ask this question: Does not the agricultural indutsry have to face depreciated currency as well as other industries?

The same hon. gentleman argues that the industry has been hurt by low wages. At the same time we are told that the country which pays the highest wages in the world and has no depreciated currency is one of our chief competitors, and there is a general unanimity of statement that we cannot compete with the United States in the matter of industrial production. If depreciated currency is a detriment and prevents us from competing in the markets of the world, surely a country where the currency is not deflated can be more easily competed with, but such is not the case. I think the iron and steel company have come to a point where they might consider retrenching. Either the output is too great or something is wrong with the fiscal policy if they are unable to pay wages and employ labour. The threat is so often made in this House that unless protection is maintained or increased capital will seek investment in other parts of the country, and our workmen will go to the United States. The fact of the matter is that they will not do anything of the kind, and a great many threats have been made even this year regarding the steel and automobile industries. In fact some of them shut down for a little while for no object except to create public opinion.

What is this catastrophe which is facing us now? is it anything more than to create public opinion, to obtain more protection and to gouge more money out of the pockets of the people? I do not know, but one thing is certain. The tariff in this country has destroyed the enterprise of our manufacturers, and to-day they are carrying on with obsolete methods, and they prefer to follow any means whatsoever to create the impression that protection is needed and must be provided before they will look to their own house, change their methods and find their own market. It is a serious thing. Hon. members in this House point to the dole system in England, declaring that the workmen in England do not want to work as long as they get a dole. The whole of the manufacturing industry of Canada has depended on the dole for the last thirty-five years and now if it destroys the desire to work on the part of the British workman on the one hand it must on the other destroy enterprise on the part of employers and manufacturers.

I took a little trip down into Quebec the other day and I saw a product being mined and shipped to Rochester. I refer to feldspar. We have all that feldspar in that district, easily mined, with the power in the river close by, the cheapest power that can be got any place in the world, yet not one industry using that product in this country is established, and it finds its market in Rochester. I came down to Buckingham Junction Saturday night and found thirteen cars all loaded for a foreign market. We have no enterprise in this country. What is wrong with it? Why will people rely on the tariff and not on their own enterprise? Why will they continually pursue a false fiscal policy which puts the cost of doing everything entirely out of line with world prices and then come back and seek more protection?

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): My only excuse for asking the House to bear with me now is the gravity of the situation referred to by the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. MacDonald) who introduced the motion. I have no intention of referring in any way at this time to the fiscal policy either of this government or of any past government in relation to the condition of affairs that now exists in Nova Scotia, though greatly tempted, in view of the remarks of some speakers to my left, to deal with that matter. I prefer however not to do so because I really do not want to make this a controversial question at this time. The gravity of the situation in Nova Scotia is certainly great. I may attribute it to one source and other hon. members may attribute it to another source. I am not going into that at this time. The fact is that the affairs of the British Empire Steel Corporation to-day are in a critical condition. Practically one-half the population of Nova Scotia is in doubt and almost despair as to what the outcome is to be.

There is I think an idea in the House that the iron and steel industry of this country dates back to the inauguration of the Dominion Steel Corporation about the beginning of the present century, but I would like to point out that it goes back very considerably further. Open hearth steel was first made in this country at New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, in 1882 and the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company continued to produce steel in yearly increasing quantities until the absorption of that company in 1921 by the British Empire Steel Corporation. In the year 1900 the Scotia company acquired the property of the General Mining Association of London, England, who began operations at Sydney Mines, Cape Breton and at Albion Mines near New Glasgow, Pictou county in 1826 just a hundred years ago. In passing I may say coal has been exported from Nova Scotia for 254 years; at first in small quantities. Some thing has been said as regards the inter-dependency of the coal and the steel. I can tell the House that so far as the Dominion Steel Corporation is concerned, that corporation was founded entirely with the object of providing a home market for the slack coal which was then produced in quantities much beyond what it was then possible to find any market for on this continent. It is an entirely mistaken idea to suppose, as many do suppose, some inside this House and a very great many outside the House, that the steel corporation was and is being operated at the expense of the coal property. There is a figure which the steel companies ought to pay the coal companies for all the slack coal used quite irrespective of whether they are independent or inter-locking companies. But my point is that if you close down the steel plants in Nova Scotia there will soon accumulate a large quantity of slack or small coal for which no market is available.

Consider the position in Cape Breton prior to the establishment of the iron and steel industry. The situation was this: not over 15 or at the most 25 per cent of the slack coal produced could find a market. A large quantity was stowed in the goof under ground; dumps containing hundreds of thousands of tons were to be seen in close proximity to the coal mines, not only in Cape Breton but in Pictou and Cumberland counties—hundreds of thousands of tons in all for which there was then no market. I myself have bought slack coal in thousands of tons, tens of thousands of tons in the late eighties and nineties at ten and twelve cents a ton. The price later went up to twenty-five cents, to fifty cents; it has gone up a great deal since that time; but the fact is that the coal industry of Nova Scotia cannot be carried on to-day without a steel industry supporting it. They are inter-dependent.

Mr. FORKE: That is part of the information we have been seeking.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am trying to give it to the House.

Mr. BROWN: Does the statement that there is such a large quantity of slack coal mean that there is more slack coal in the Nova Scotia mines than in other mines throughout the world?

Mr. CANTLEY: It does not necessarily mean anything of the kind. The quantity of slack coal produced in any particular field depends on the character of the coal and the method of mining.

Mr. BROWN: Does it mean that Nova Scotia coal is not of equal value to other coal?

Mr. CANTLEY: It does not mean anything of the kind.

Mr. BROWN: Then I cannot understand the point.

Mr. CANTLEY: There are I fear many things the hon. gentleman cannot understand. I am sorry I cannot enlighten him in reference to everything.

Mr. BROWN: Since the hon. gentleman has made that remark, might I ask how it is that when representations are made to us to aid certain industries, it is definitely stated that Nova Scotia coal is not of equal value to other coal?

Mr. CANTLEY: That statement is made by people who have very little knowledge of the facts.

Mr. BROWN: That statement is made by people who say they know.

Mr. CANTLEY: It does not make any difference whether they say they know or not if they really do not. An hon. member recently made certain assertions regarding the character of Nova Scotia coal. I say that they are not true. When you mine 5,000,000 tons of coal you must of necessity have a considerable quantity of slack, I do not care in what country or under what conditions the coal is mined. There is a difference between the quantity of slack produced in certain fields and from certain kinds of coal, but all coal mined produces a considerable quantity of slack, some of which is used and some wasted unless there be nearby some coke consuming enterprise.

As regards the Belgium situation I am not going to deal at length with the question of depreciated currency, although it has a very important bearing on the facts notwithstanding what representations may be made in this House. The hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans), when he referred to the effect of depreciated currency in regard to farming, put his finger exactly on one of the factors bearing on the case. The franc to-day is worth less than four cents or about one-fifth of the nominal value. Labour is getting more in francs than it did before the war; but food in proportion to the gold value of the franc is very much lower in price than it was prior to the war, with the result that owing to the depreciation of the franc in their country Belgic work people are able to live more cheaply than they were before the war. We are not handicapped by the whole difference in the value of the franc, but we are to a considerable extent. Let us get down to concrete facts. Two steamer loads of Beligum wire rods have been landed in Cape Breton within the past year. Why? Because they could be and were landed there at a figure representing nine dollars a ton less than the cost of producing them in Sydney. Thousands of tons of Belgian billets, some French billets and some German billets and a large tonnage of skelp bars for pipe have been landed at Montreal for further manufacture. Why? Because the steel can be landed there under present conditions of labour, exchange and freight for less than we can produce them in Canada. I am not going to say who is to blame. I state only what are patent facts that cannot be disputed. That is one of the causes of the present difficulty.

One hon. gentleman says that agriculture is the most important industry in Canada. Undoubtedly it is; it is so in most countries. But next to agriculture the most vital industry in any country is the iron and steel industry. Reference has been made to the tax which the iron and steel industry imposes on agriculture. In view of the fact that the steel used in the manufacture of practically all implements used in agriculture is admitted into Canada free, what burden is the steel and iron industry on agriculture in this country?

I would like to make some little reference to the importance of the iron and steel industry in Canada looking back over the history of the last ten years. What happened immediately after war was declared? We were asked whether we could supply certain munitions of war. How did we meet the demands upon us and what was the effect of our so meeting them? We were able to demonstrate that we could make in Canada basic steel which would meet all the requirements of the British War Office, though of a class of steel which they claimed and indeed was different from what they had always used and which they were getting elsewhere; in short, they wanted acid steel of which none was made in Canada. They had certain specifications, certain tests. We met those specifications and tests both chemically and physically and we did it with basic steel, with the result that we were able in this country to embark on the production of munitions.

It is in the mind of all the leaders on both sides as to what that meant for Canada. It meant that hundreds of thousands of people were employed over a period of years. It doubled and quardrupled our exports within eighteen months. It enabled us to earn money with which to prosecute the war. It gave employment to thousands of women and girls also to men who were incapacitated for service and who otherwise would have been idle. Not only did it create a great demand for iron steel and coal, but it extended its ramifications to almost every industry in this country, notably to the lumber industry, millions upon millions of feet of lumber being used in the production of boxes and cases for the export packing of munitions of various kinds. The outcome of the whole situation was that Canada was put in an industrial and exporting position that it never before occupied. The war profits taxes that came afterwards contributed very largely to meeting the expenses of the war. The steel and iron industry is fundamental, and essential to the national existence.

What is the situation in the United States? They are to-day making more than two-thirds of all the steel made in the world. Year after year for the past half dozen years on the average we have brought into this country nearly 700,000 tons of steel, or enough to provide work for every blast furnace, every open hearth furnace and every steel mill in Canada. I do not want to get into the discussion of a national policy or any other policy; I want to get back to the fact confronting the industry to-day. The towns of New Glasgow and Trenton are dependent entirely upon that industry. One has a population of say 12,000 and the other has a population of about 8,000; they both have all modern conveniences, tramways, paved streets and so on. In the town of Sydney Mines, which has a population of about 12,000, not a wheel has turned, not a furnace has been lighted since 1921 when the Nova Scotia Steel Company came under the control of the British Empire Steel Corporation. I know there will be a difference of opinion as to what is to blame for the present situation, whether it is due to management or tariff. I am not going to discuss that now. What I want to discuss is this. We are up against not a matter of opinion, but concrete facts. Tens of thousands of people in the eastern part of Nova Scotia to-day are in doubt whether they are to continue to get a living where they now live and have their homes. Hundreds are absolutely ruined. The government has a duty in the present situation. I am asking them to take at once what steps they can to give some measure of relief to a section of the country which is looking to them for help. Some hon. gentlemen may say it is incumbent upon me to suggest to the government what they should do in the circumstances. I am advised that proposals have been submitted to the government as to what they are or how far they go I am not fully informed and if I were so informed I would prefer not to discuss them here; indeed I fancy the government would perhaps not care to have them discussed. What I here and now ask is that the government take adequate, effective and immediate action to meet the critical condition which now faces one-half of the population of my native province.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Every hon. member will I am sure appreciate the position taken by the representatives of Nova Scotia who to-day are alarmed over the situation which is developing in that province in connection with those great enterprises, the coal and steel industries controlled by the British Empire Steel Corporation. When the British Empire Steel Corporation was organized all Canada thought that the location of the works justified the expectation of a great future for the company. It is true that many people looked with alarm upon its over-capitalization, and I have reason to believe that while that over-capitalization was considerable it was not all that the promotors at that time attempted. We are told in reports that have been made on the coal situation in Nova Scotia that in the coal properties owned or controlled by the British Empire Steel Corporation there are latent reserves for more than 1,000 years on the basis of the present consumption, and we know that the company is well and favourably located for obtaining iron ore. It has splendid iron ore properties in Newfoundland and the works are surrounded by coal fields. All that is needed is to cross the water to get at the iron ore in Newfoundland. The ore obtained in that island is good and the company ships some of it to other parts of the world. I understand that it gets the bulk of its ore from Newfoundland but also a small quantity from Africa and some from Spain.

Now in Canada there are three large primary steel industries—the Steel Company of Canada located at Hamilton, the works at Algoma, and Besco in Nova Scotia. And Besco, so well and favourably situated, is apparently not able to pay its dividends, while the Steel Company of Canada has paid its interest and shown a profit each year. The Besco merger was formed in 1921.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Can the minister give us a statement, equally accurate, as to the Algoma company?

Mr. ROBB: I have not been looking into that company recently, but I will deal in a moment with the situation at Algoma. The Besco merger, as I say, was formed in 1921 and we have been told by an hon. member who is well posted in the industry and who himself, I believe, was associated with it—possibly he is still—that during the war the company was so well equipped and competent that is was able to meet the competition of the world and was of great advantage to Canada. The profits it made in the period of the war led the organizers of the merger in 1921 to inflate the capital to a considerable extent, although they did not go so far as they would have gone if my hon. friends opposite, who were then in power, had not refused their application for a charter.

It is true that this company, as my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Cantley), who ought to know, has said, from the day it was organized in 1921 until the present time, has not turned a wheel in many of the larger branches of the industry. And the hon. gentleman wonders why it has not paid profits. Well, surely it was due to no fault either of this government or of the previous one that the company has not turned a wheel since 1921, because the protection which it has enjoyed in the meantime has been practically the same as it got during the war. The company has not paid dividends either on the second preference or on the common; and, I repeat, while this industry in Nova Scotia so well and favourably located, surrounded by coal fields and in proximity to its ore, has not paid any dividends on second preference or on common—it is said the company is going to default on some of its bonds—the other great steel industry of Canada located at Hamilton has at the same time been making money, paying all interest and putting aside substantial sums for reserves.

I am sure we all regret the labour divisions that have taken place in Nova Scotia. It is a matter of public knowledge that these labour troubles have been occurring intermittently for some years. Much has been said to-day about the competition the company have encountered from importations from countries in which there is a depreciated currency. But the sworn statements of the customs officials of Canada do not go to show that there have been such great importations from depreciated currency countries. Most of our importations of steel products have come from the United States, where the tariff has not been changed, in my recollection, for some years.

Mr. CANTLEY: Has not the duty on agricultural implements been interfered with in the last few years?

Mr. ROBB: That affected only to a small extent the operations of the British Empire Steel Corporation. I admit that it may have affected the Steel Company of Canada to a certain degree, but I do not think it affected the other company.

Mr. CANTLEY: I may inform the minister that we scrapped at New Glasgow plant to the value of over a quarter of a million dollars, plant that had been installed for, and which was devoted entirely to, the making of steel for agricultural purposes.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): When?

Mr. CANTLEY: At different periods within a short time.

Mr. ROBB: I do not know what quantities the company in the Maritime provinces have sold to the manufacturers of agricultural implements, but I shall deal with that in a moment. In view of the statements made this afternoon, with regard to importations from countries where there is a depreciated currency, I wish to put on record certain figures which will throw some light on this question. It has been represented that thousands of tons of steel billets have recently come in from Belgium. I have here a statement of importations from Belgium of iron and steel during the months of April and May in the years 1925 and 1926 respectively. In 1925 we imported in April some $14,000 worth of these products, and in May, $105,000; in 1926, our importations were $52,500 in April and $215,000 in May. France is another country with depreciated currency. From that country we imported:

| | April Value | May Value |
|---|---|---|
| Year 1925.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $ 562 | $60,820 |
| Year 1926.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 10,205 | 34,970 |

Mr. MANION: Does that include iron pipe?

Mr. ROBB: This is the record given me. I can hand it over to my hon. friend if he wishes. It is taken from the importations of iron and steel during that period.

Mr. CAHAN: Is it not perfectly obvious that that covers only one item and does not include the items with respect to which the company in Nova Scotia makes its most serious complaint?

Mr. ROBB: I am not going to enter into a controversy with my hon. friend, because I do not wish to prolong the debate, but I will say this: the representatives of Belgium have visited me recently and protested that under our legislation we are keeping out their products and they cannot compete in this country. My hon. friend will understand the difficult position of a finance minister when the representatives of a country with whom the balance of trade is largely in favour of Canada say: We cannot sell any of our products in your country.

Mr. CAHAN: Does the hon. gentleman represent in this House the interests of Belgium or the interests of this country?

Mr. ROBB: I do not, of course, represent any but the interests of the Dominion. But when the representatives of a great nation come to Canada, does my hon. friend say that I should not receive them and listen to their protests that they cannot do business here although the balance of trade is against Belgium?

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. ROBB: Now, what are the conditions in Canada? Let us see what business these gentlemen are doing. In 1925 Canada produced 752,695 tons of steel ingots and castings, or an increase of 16 per cent over the 650,000 tons produced in 1924. These are the per capita productions:

| | Tons |
|---|---|
| 1921.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 170 |
| 1922.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 121 |
| 1923.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 217 |
| 1924.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 158 |
| 1925.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 180 |

I direct particularly to the attention of the right hon. leader of the opposition the comparative per capita production in 1925 and 1921.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the hon. minister got comparative figures of the United States production in 1925 and 1921?

Mr. ROBB: I am not dealing with the United States, I am dealing with Canada.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would recommend him not to.

Mr. CANTLEY: Would the hon. gentleman give the production in 1913?

Mr. ROBB: I have not the figures.

Mr. CANTLEY: I can tell him the production is less than it was ten years ago.

Mr. ROBB: But my hon. friend gave the reason: He said that since the merger in 1921 one of the industries had not been operated.

Mr. CANTLEY: Will the hon. minister allow me a word?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CANTLEY: I think that is rather unfair.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. ROBB: For the first three months of 1926, Canada's steel production amounted to 180,458 tons—

Mr. CANTLEY: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. ROBB: —or about 9,500 tons over the—

Mr. CANTLEY: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has risen to a point of privilege.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am not making any noise. There is no objection to my standing until the time comes.

Mr. SPEAKER: What is the point of order?

Mr. CANTLEY: It is a question of privilege, if you please. I claim that I am misrepresented by the hon. gentleman with regard to the statement—

Mr. ROBB: In what way?

Mr. CANTLEY: I did not say anything to give the impression that the shutting down of the one plant meant that the other plant was or was not working full time. As a matter of fact, five blast furnaces are on one side of the harbour and two on the other. I referred to the 5 p.m. two blast furnaces and the five open hearth furnaces at Sydney Mines, which I said had not been in operation at all. As a matter of fact, today only two furnaces out of five are in operation on the south side of the harbour and none at Sydney Mines, on the north side.

Mr. ROBB: I thank my hon. friend for again telling us that this industry has not been running for some time. He said a moment ago that some of the plants had not been running since 1921.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is true, but not wholly so.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. ROBB: For the first three months of 1926 Canadian steel production amounted to 180,458 tons, or about 9,500 tons over the output of 171,952 in the first quarter of 1925. Production in the month of March was 58,765 long tons, an advance of 10 per cent over the figures of February.

Now, Mr. Speaker, while the great steel industry in Nova Scotia is of importance to Canada—and we all appreciate the value of that industry to Nova Scotia in particular—and while the government has every desire to do all that is possible to make that great industry what it should be, an industry so well located right at ocean navigation, surrounded by coal fields and close to the iron ore of Newfoundland—while, I say, the government desires that that industry should be as prosperous as the other steel industry of Canada located at Hamilton—and, I submit, not quite so favourably located as the sister industry in Nova Scotia—yet the government has a duty to the other industries throughout the Dominion that use iron and steel, because that is the raw material for many of our industries. I have not before me the figures of the number of men employed by the Besco corporation, but I have a statement respecting the number employed by the other industries throughout the Dominion that use iron and steel. There were 1,004 concerns in Canada in 1924 engaged in the manufacture of iron and steel and their products, in which a total of $535,539,833 is invested, and which gave employment to 78,240 persons, who were paid $99,600,000 in wages and salaries. The combined production value of these industries was $368,476,650 during that year.

[Mr. Cantley.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, the automobile industry is of considerable value to Canada, and hon. gentlemen will be glad to know from recent announcements in the press that that industry proposes to go along stronger than ever. A moment ago we had considerable criticism respecting the importation of iron and steel. I have since placed my hands on the records of the imports of iron and steel and their products. For the calendar year 1924 these were valued at $137,979,471 as compared with $173,720,299 in 1923. Imports for the first ten months of the last fiscal year amounted in value to $144,029,695, being practically the same as for the ten-month period ending January 1924. So much for the trade—

Mr. CANTLEY: Will the hon. gentleman allow me a question now? Will he tell me how many items of iron and steel are on the free list?

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend will find that on reference to the Customs Act.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am quite familiar with the number as shown by the Customs Act; I was wondering if the hon. minister was?

Mr. ROBB: We have debated that question all winter, and parliament has decided that the proposition submitted by hon. gentlemen opposite of higher and higher tariff was not in the general interests of this country. Now let us come to present-day conditions. My hon. friend who has just spoken knows, as he said, that the government has been approached to do something for the Besco corporation. It is a hardy annual. Every year about this time, towards the last days of the session, somebody comes along and asks that something be done for the Besco corporation. Last year when we presented the budget we did do something for that corporation and the great coal areas of Nova Scotia; we imposed a uniform tax on bituminous coal of 50 cents a ton. Hon gentlemen might as well know they have been urging us in season and out of season during the winter to so provide that ships coming into our ports cannot coal unless they use Besco coal or pay an extra 50 cents a ton. I have answered that all that will do is to drive the ships to Portland or Boston, where they will coal free. So we have not consented to that. They have made certain other propositions to us and I propose, in order that this question may be clearly and well understood by all Canada, and particularly by our friends from Nova Scotia, to place on record the position of the government in that regard.

We know that a certain report has been made on this industry in the Maritime provinces. We have asked for that report, and the reply has been made to us that the report was not intended for publication, that it was not intended for the government or parliament who were being asked to give them greater relief, that it was intended for the directors. We said to them: Until we can have that report, we are not in a position to decide intelligently whether or not we should recommend to parliament what you are asking.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister refer to the Duncan report to the provincial government?

Mr. ROBB: No—and by the way, it would be interesting for the right hon. gentleman to read that report.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have read it.

Mr. ROBB: But just now I was not speaking of the Duncan report.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What report is it?

Mr. ROBB: The Coverdale report.

Mr. MEIGHEN: At whose request was it made, and to whom?

Mr. ROBB: What does it matter?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would think it had something to do with our right to it. At whose request was the investigation and report made, and to whom?

Mr. ROBB: They are basing their demands upon the conditions presented in this report, and we say that if that is so, we should have that report, which has been prepared, I understand, by engineers. I propose to place the correspondence on the records:

Ottawa, June 5, 1926.

Dear Mr. WOLVIN:

In view of representations made regarding the financial position of certain companies in Nova Scotia, and the request for immediate consideration of the question of payment on account of enemy war claims for losses, my colleagues suggest that before taking up the consideration of the various matters said to have affected the Nova Scotia coal and steel situation the government should have before it a copy of the Coverdale report recently made to your officers and directors. If you agree, please mail a copy to either the Prime Minister or myself.

Yours faithfully,

JAMES A. ROBB.

ROY M. WOLVIN, Esq.,
General Manager,
British Empire Steel Corporation,
Montreal.

Then on the 8th of June I received the following:

Montreal, Que., June 8th, 1926.

Hon. J. A. ROBB,
Minister of Finance,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Your letter fifth received. This is a very serious request and I will come to Ottawa this afternoon if you can arrange for me to discuss same with you and Prime Minister this evening.

R. M. WOLVIN.

Following that I received this letter:

ROY M. WOLVIN,
President.
British Empire Steel Corporation Limited.
Office of the President,
Montreal, Canada, 8th June, 1926.

Cable Address "Bremsteel."

Hon. J. A. ROBB,
Minister of Finance,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Mr. ROBB:

I received your letter of June 5th with reference to making available to your colleagues the report of Coverdale and Colpitts upon our various industries in Nova Scotia. I telegraphed you and also telephoned your secretary that there were conditions governing the publicity of this report that might make more difficult any reorganization that might be undertaken by the bondholders of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company. The report has been made for consideration by the directors, who understand the details of the business, and it occurred to me that this request of yours should be fully discussed between the Prime Minister, you and me before acting on it. Your secretary has just called me to say that the press of legislation, for which you are personally responsible just now, makes it impossible for you to see me today or to-morrow. This will necessitate delaying the matter which I wish to discuss until a later time.

In the meantime, I trust that you will be able to give me the advice I requested prior to Friday, on which date I am planning to hold a meeting of the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company.

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) R. M. WOLVIN,
President.

On the 9th of June I wired Mr. Wolvin as follows:

Ottawa, June 9, 1926.

ROY WOLVIN,
President.
British Empire Steel Corporation,
Montreal.

In conference with premier of Nova Scotia. We must have copy of Coverdale report to enable us to fairly consider requests on behalf of your companies.

JAMES A. ROBB.

To which Mr. Wolvin replied:

Toronto, June 10, 1926.

Honourable J. A. ROBB,
Minister of Finance,
Ottawa, Ont.

Your telegram received. I offered to go Ottawa to discuss recent report on Nova Scotia properties Tuesday evening or Wednesday with Prime Minister and yourself but pressing legislation made this impossible.

Report referred to is confidential and not intended for publication. If you will telegraph me here King Edward hotel an appointment with yourself Premier King and Premier Rhodes to-morrow I will bring report and confidentially will furnish such information therefrom as may be required.

R. M. WOLVIN.

Then on June 10th I received this telegram, from Toronto:

Hon. J. A. ROBB,
Minister of Finance,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ont.

Not having heard from you leaving for Ottawa to-night. Will be available for conference at any time you may suggest.

R. M. WOLVIN.

It is fair to Mr. Wolvin to say that he was prepared to give to myself and to the Prime Minister a copy of that report, but I pointed out, and I think correctly, that governmental responsibility required that any such report given to me in that capacity must be available to the whole government. We parted with that, and I have not heard from Mr. Wolvin since.

There is just one more matter in connection with the steel industry in Canada that I desire to place on record. It is a letter addressed to Right Hon. Mr. Graham, the chairman of the tariff board, under date of April 30, 1926, which reads as follows:

Dear Mr. GRAHAM:

I am referring to the advisory board on tariff and taxation, for full investigation, the matter of tariff adjustment on iron and steel products requested by the Algoma Steel Corporation in a communication dated April 3, copy of which is enclosed, in triplicate.

As the request of this corporation involves the whole industry, I would suggest that you investigate fully the whole iron and steel industry in respect to its claims for tariff consideration. In the course of such investigation, may I suggest that you look carefully into sales to and purchases from subsidiary, affiliated or other companies and organizations in which any officer, director or shareholder of the iron and steel companies is financially interested. This applies to goods sold outside of Canada as well as to those sold in Canada, and you may widen the scope of inquiry if it appears to you in the public interest.

Yours faithfully,

JAMES A. ROBB.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Before the hon. gentleman proceeds, would he say whether it is his contention that this Coverdale report, made under those circumstances, should be given out for publication?

Mr. ROBB: Oh no, and I am glad my right hon. friend directed my attention to that. I replied to Mr. Wolvin that the government have entrusted to them many confidential reports which would be regarded as confidential. My right hon. friend knows that many times the government have confidential information given to them, and I appeal to my right hon. friend, does he think we were wrong? This company comes before us and asks for certain considerations involving expenditures in which the public are interested. The government are responsible to the public, and was it not fair that we should have this information before us, which I am certain their bankers will have to get—indeed, I understand their bankers have seen it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. minister asked me a question. I understood by his recital that the company had offered the information to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, and the minister's contention was that it should be spread to the other members of the government. Am I to understand that the British Empire Steel Corporation does not trust the other members of the government?

Mr. ROBB: I would not like my hon. friend to draw that conclusion.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What other is there?

Mr. STEVENS: It sounds reasonable.

Mr. ROBB: The British Empire Steel Corporation will have to trust the other members of the government before they get any concessions from this government. Mr. Speaker, I have stated frankly and freely our position. We have every desire to see this great industry go on; we have every desire to help them. But in helping the British Empire Steel industry, we do not wish to injure any of the other industries in Canada.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will my hon. friend kindly tell the House what the company is asking? I have heard what he has done in connection with their request, but I do not know what their request was.

Mr. ROBB: I have a memorandum here. First they wanted a bonus of 50 cents a ton to steel plants using Canadian coal for metallurgical purposes, and an agreement that we would pay this for ten years. The reason they gave for this request was that the steel industry of Hamilton, in importing coal from the United States, gets a remission of this duty. They said that if we would make that concession to them they were hopeful of getting similar concessions from the province of Nova Scotia. Then there was another matter, and I may as well—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Can my hon. friend say what that would amount to?

Mr. ROBB: They were prepared to place a maximum. They suggested first five hundred thousand a year, and if we would not agree to that they said that three hundred thousand would help them in the matter of reorganization.

There was another question Mr. Wolvin submitted to me. He said: We have certain claims against the revenues that you are receiving from Germany under the Dawes plan. Some of our companies have met with certain losses during the war and we want you to pay us on this account. My reply to Mr. Wolvin was that those moneys had been paid in to the Receiver General and they would have to be voted out by parliament. Then he represented we had other moneys, and my reply to that was that before the government could pay out on these claims we should know what all the claims were so that each would share alike on a percentage basis.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Were there any further requests?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, Mr. Wolvin represented that our depreciated currency legislation did not quite cover certain importations because the duties were specific instead of ad valorem duties. That matter is under consideration.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Would that be everything that was asked?

Mr. ROBB: I would say yes, speaking from memory.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps my hon. friend has a letter here making these requests.

Mr. ROBB: I hope, after the explanation I have given, my hon. friend will withdraw his motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. gentleman withdraw his motion?

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): There were some other speakers who desired to express their views. However, I wish to make a few observations on the situation as it stands. It was quite evident from the address of the hon. gentleman who introduced the subject (Mr. MacDonald) that he was most anxious to avoid any post mortem into the causes, various though they may be, which have led to the present unfortunate pass in relation to the steel industry in the province of Nova Scotia. Very carefully he assigned no responsibility, and he did so not because he did not feel that responsibility rested with well-known parties and well-known governments, but because he was desirous of finding a remedy for the present and not of censuring in respect to the past.

I do not think the seriousness of the position could be better stated than in the terms of the hon. member himself. When a city of 25,000 people, as well as other towns of less dimensions, depend wholly for their existence upon this industry and upon this company, and when, as well, communities further distant are dependent upon allied industries, it becomes only too evident that if Nova Scotia is to have a chance at all in the years that are before us, we cannot sit silently by and disinterestedly allow this industry to fall. Sometimes commercial collapses are of such dimensions that whatever may have been the original causes, however various may have been the foundation causes of the malady, it becomes a national question whether or not we should stand by and allow a crash. The late government found itself in that position in relation to more than one enterprise; in relation to the Canadian Northern enterprise in the first place. We could have stood by and permitted the collapse of that great business entity. Had we done so and the result been merely local or individual we could have been justified. Had we been able to do so and left the nation as a whole better off than by any other course we might have taken, it would have been our duty to stand aside and let matters take their course. The same situation presented itself in relation to the Grand Trunk Pacific, and again in relation to the Grand Trunk. In much less forceful degree but nevertheless with considerable menace, it presented itself also in relation to the Quebec and Saguenay railway along the north shore of the St Lawrence. In each of these cases we felt that we were not in any way responsible for the situation as it had developed. We might very well have washed our hands of the whole affair and said others were responsible for the agreements that had generated the enterprises, and that therefore we had nothing to do with the consequences. But we felt it was not well to take that rather complacent attitude, and we addressed ourselves to trying to solve the problem that presented itself, and to seeing that the least possible disaster ensued to the people of Canada. The present situation seems to be of much the same kind.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The industries my right hon. friend referred to were railways.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, those which I have mentioned.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: With respect to which there is more or less of a federal obligation—I mean primarily?

Mr. MEIGHEN: In the case of the Quebec and Saguenay railway I do not think there was any federal obligation. At all events it was not the fact of a federal obligation that influenced our action; it was the immensity and far-reaching character of the disaster that would ensue; it was the extent of the repercussion which would permeate almost every branch of Canadian activity. We asked ourselves would there be greater injury caused by this than would result from the imposition of the burden which we called upon the country to sustain. Here the situation relates to an industry which appears to be localized to the province of Nova Scotia. It is not wholly so localized; Canadians everywhere are interested in the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, in the foundations of that industry in the eastern province. But even if it were localized to Nova Scotia it is of so immense a character and its results are going to be so crucial that it behooves this House to examine the situation and see if there is anything we can do. I do not want to traverse the inquiry which is again insisted upon by the leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke) as to what the causes are of the present situation. I will make a few references to what has been said in that regard but they will be very brief.

I do not think the causes can be named in any single sentence. The causes are more than one, I would say, fundamentally though they allot themselves into two catalogues: first, tariff; second, transportation. But I do not seek to give the House the impression that in these two fields alone are to be found the whole of the original reasons for the present position. I do not know but what, perhaps, some may be looked for in the field of management. At the same time I am of the view that you might concede a very great deal in the way of better management and still you would has this position at the present time, or very little later, on account of the other two causes themselves. Hon. members of course have argued, particularly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) that the condition cannot be attributed to anything in the way of government policy, because he is able to look at one steel company in Canada and say that that company has succeeded. Well, if this is to be taken as an answer and as a vindication of government policy, then government policy never can be wrong. I do not care what government policy you have in this Dominion in relation to any commercial matter whatever. I do not care what fiscal policy you have, you cannot have any fiscal policy under which there will not be some company in some industry succeed. With the advantages this country possesses, with the type of its citizenship, with the enterprise we have, there will always be some company which will succeed under any conditions. But he who is satisfied with the condition of the steel industry as an industry in Canada to-day, especially when he compares it with the progress made by our great competitor, is either a very small Canadian or else he is so blinded by politics that he is satisfied with anything under his own party.

The steel industry of Canada to-day is struggling and almost staggering. I know the Steel Company of Canada has had a measure of prosperity. I do not know that I can very fully, as a business man could, assign the special reasons which apply to that company, but I know that it is engaged in successful production, which production has a limited market in this Dominion; others cannot engage in it for the reason that the market is not here—classes of production which in a considerable degree are protected by the tariff even as it stands now, lines of production that are not comparable in very many important respects with those that are followed by the Algoma Steel Company and the great industry of Nova Scotia, the other two elements of steel production in our country. The minister was happily ignorant of the condition of affairs in the Algoma company. He is never prepared with any statistics that cast the least reflection upon the specially well selected figures he produces himself. He does not know anything about them, and he led the House to believe that if the British Empire Steel Corporation had had a management which would have produced the Coverdale report, or if it had less capitalization, all would have been well with them. The fact of the matter is that this Dominion of Canada now, in the great articles of steel production, is only producing 68 per cent—that was the figure in the very latest report I was able to get—of what it produced I think in the year 1913, at all events in the year which has already been mentioned in Hansard in the speech of the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett). That is the production of the steel industry of our country, a production which compares only as two-thirds of what we produced years ago. The United States, our great competitor, in the same time are producing 60 per cent more than they produced previously.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): What about our importations?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Our importations per capita are immense. They are not governed by the same consideration which affect the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young).

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): How do our importations to-day compare with those before the war?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Our importations to-day are 600,000 odd tons of steel.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): How do they compare with importations before the war?

Mr. MEIGHEN: They are immense compared with previous importations.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): What were they in 1914?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not the figures before me, but if the hon. member contends they were more in 1914, the reason would be that we have less use for the product in manufacturing to-day than we had then.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My right hon. friend knows that a large portion of it went into the manufacture of steel rails.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, the Minister of Finance smiled when referring to the progress of the Steel Company of Canada. I have before me the report of the president of that company, the only company which can be said to have had any measure of success at all, and that measure for reasons akin to if not exactly those I have stated to the House. Here is what the president of the Steel Company of Canada says about the progress of his own company under the policy to-day:

The progress, or perhaps I should say lack of progress, of the steel industry in Canada during recent years is not generally appreciated. The competitive conditions I have referred to have been accentuated by the narrowing of the market as a consequence of the various tariff changes made from time to time. These embrace preferential trade agreements, drawback items and exemptions from duty which apply to steel for particular purposes,—also free list items which have been added and which, supported by lower wages and depreciated currencies in other countries, have facilitated the entry of foreign sellers into this market. Statistics show the production of steel ingots in Canada has been as follows:

| Calendar Year | Gross Tons | Calendar Year | Gross Tons |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1912.. .. .. | 821,800 | 1923.. .. .. | 840,000 |
| 1913.. .. .. | 1,006,000 | 1924.. .. .. | 625,000 |
| 1914.. .. .. | 725,000 | 1925.. .. .. | 734,000 |

That is really a brilliant record.

It will be observed that, during the past two years, in spite of the general increase in the consumption of steel per capita—

And this is what counts.

—shown in most other markets, the production in Canada has been less than that shown during 1912 and 1913. In fifteen years Canadian production shows an increase of less than 1½ per cent, 1925 over 1910, while in the United States the increase has been 75 per cent.

This is quite satisfactory to the hon. member for Weyburn.

Mr. CAHILL: Is that not the time my right hon. friend and his friends were in power?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, that is the period we should have been in power, and if the hon. member's party had appealed on this policy in 1921 we would have been in power until 1925.

Mr. CAHILL: A pity for the country.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Our steel production in 1921, the year of depression over the whole continent and over the whole world, was 64 per cent of what it was in 1913.

Mr. CAHILL: Shovels for Roumania largely.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Those were long before, and they would not amount to one-tenth of one per cent. That is about the size of the mind of the hon. member for Pontiac.

Mr. CAHILL: About $25,000,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They would not amount to that. In 1921 our production was 64 per cent of what it was in 1913. The United States production the same year was exactly 64 per cent, showing that they shared in that world depression with ourselves, but they sprung out of it immediately, and from that day to this their production has gone steadily ahead until to-day they are 60 odd per cent over what they were before, while we are just 68 per cent of what we were before. We are still struggling—

Mr. EVANS: Will my right hon. friend not admit that in 1913 we were over-producing a great deal?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would not admit it, I do not think it is true. I cannot say I have given special study to that matter. We were importing at that time, and we had a hint from the hon. member for Weyburn that we were importing more then than now, but I think he is wrong. It seems to me we were not producing enough then, and are not now either. Those are the general conditions. Under our tariff to-day 15 per cent of all that is produced by the three great steel companies of our country, the British Empire, the Steel Company of Canada and the Algoma Steel Company, is either imported free or given the benefit of a 99 per cent rebate on the importation. Under this situation we find our largest company shivering right on the brink of the precipice while the great companies of the United States are enjoying a prosperity never before known in their history. Whatever the causes may be, hon. members cannot complacently sit down and say: Oh, that is because we have not good enough men here, or because there is too much capital in this company.

Mr. ROBB: My right hon. friend is not insinuating that I said the men were not good enough.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, but my hon. friend did intimate that the management was not good enough, and management usually consists of men.

Mr. ROBB: I challenge my right hon. friend to find where I said anything of the kind.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I accept my hon. friend's explanation, but I ask him to chide the rest of his followers when they give that as the cause, because that is all the 'cause I have heard given this afternoon.

Mr. FORKE: I think the right hon. member himself admitted that something might be due to management.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It may be, but that is not the fundamental cause. The great fundamental causes are different, and they are to be found in the field of tariff and transportation. The hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) asked: What is the matter with the Canadian people? Or rather he would not put it so widely as that because he never included the farmers of the west in his query. He asked: "What is the matter with the Canadian manufacturers? They have no enterprise. I saw thirteen cars of feldspar somewhere in the province of Quebec going down to the United States to be manufactured." I ask the hon. member for Rosetown, as well as other hon. members: Does he think there has been some special virus or poison or disease that has affected one selected portion of our population and rendered them inferior to their competitors, while the rest of us are all right?

Mr. EVANS: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He does. I do not think that does credit to the hon. member's intelligence, so whenever he asks me I will relieve him of the sentence he uttered this afternoon. Our manufacturing population is recruited chiefly from our agriculturists. If the hon. member looks to-day at those men upon whose shoulders rests the burden of our great manufacturing enterprises, within whose brains develop those great enterprises, he will find them the sons of agriculturists. He will find right in the offices, right on the directorates of the greatest manufacturing industries of our country, men who were very recently farmers or the sons of farmers.

Mr. EVANS: I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman if they have not brains to stand on their own feet now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If they had not brains they would not be where they are, so the reason cannot be lack of brains. Some of them are not where they are, if I may use the Irish expression. They are over there and when you find them over there, they are right at the top. Indeed many sons of Canadian farmers are to-day at the top of great enterprises in the United States. If you put the Canadian enterprise on a footing where it has a chance to compete with the United States enterprise, they will be here and not in the United States. You may preach enterprise all you like; you cannot found an enterprise and force it ahead if the fundamental conditions surrounding your competitor are better than those surrounding yourself.

Mr. FORKE: The right hon. member has struck the nail on the head right there.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I certainly have, and I hope the hon. member for Brandon will strike the same nail on the same head. That is exactly the head he has been missing for many a year.

Mr. FORKE: Will the hon. member let me put myself right? He referred to the fundamentals in connection with industry. If the coal is as good and the materials are as good and there is some protection, what is the matter?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is all a matter of what is "some," but I congratulate the hon. member for Brandon on his progress. I have no difficulty in remembering the time when he would not even countenance some protection.

Mr. FORKE: I do not think so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I remember when he would never sound the word except by way of anathema, when he used to make the welkin of the school houses ring against protection in any form. Think of the progress the hon. member for Rosetown has made! We would not hear it suggested that protection was necessary for the home market. My heart took a leap of joy when I heard from the hon. member for Rosetown. When I get him that distance there is not much left in the way of conversion of the entire House of Commons.

Mr. EVANS: I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman again: What are the fundamentals of industry?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would say: Common sense, conditions comparable with those of one's competitors, and hard work. The hon. member has the hard work. I will not deny him common sense. Just come along with the third requisite.

Mr. EVANS: Is that all the right hon. gentleman is asking for to put industry on a safe basis just now, or is he asking for more tariff protection?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think that is all. Make conditions comparable with those of one's competitors and I shall be satisfied. I say to this government: if that can be done without tariff protection, they will find me at their back even if I am in company with the hon. member for Rosetown. But what is so foolish is all this talk about lack of enterprise of Canadians. I do not say it in self-flattery or in flattery of the Canadian people; but if every hon. member this afternoon would search his heart, there is not one of them that does not know that there is as much or more enterprise in the individual Canadian on the average than in any other people in the world. In this northern climate, from the stocks from which we spring, we cannot be charged with want of intelligence or ability.

What to-day is responsible for a large share of the progress of the United States? Look over there and tell me what country outside of the United States has the biggest proportion of big men in charge of the big enterprises of the nation. That country is Canada. Ours sons are there; our college graduates are there, men who have gone through the fiery furnace of Canadian industry. Some of them who failed in this country have gone to the United States and become great successes there. The fault is not that of the Canadians.

Mr. EVANS: Why are they not in this country?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have been trying to explain to the hon. member that it is because we have had a population filled by false doctrine who have turned policy in the wrong direction, or, where not turned in the wrong direction, have failed to follow courageously through a true policy.

Mr. CAHILL: How long is it since we have been under a protectionist policy in this country?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is only five years since hon. gentlemen opposite came into power, but it seems fifty to the country.

Mr. CAHILL: It seems so to my right hon. friend because he is out of office, but not to anyone else.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was the country I was feeling for, not myself.

Mr. CAHILL: I think the right hon. member comes first in his feelings.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I want to make a reference to a statement which came from the Minister of Finance, who said that this House has decided that higher and higher and still higher protection was not to be the policy of Canada. For myself, although I have listened carefully to the voices of Canadian parties and people, I have never heard anyone suggest that that should be the policy of Canada. I have heard it suggested that a definite, sound policy of protection applicable to all Canadian production should be our policy; that it should be frankly carried through; that it should be pursued rigorously and thoroughly; that it should be adhered to definitely and consistently year after year, and that all these thunderings and lightnings against it should cease, so that confidence among our business men might be restored. I have never heard anyone talk about higher and higher and still higher protection save those who, afraid of a true statement of the Conservative doctrine, always seek to misrepresent it in order to have something to attack. It does not follow that, even after repeated reductions in many important lines, merely because we want protection restored in those lines we therefore want a high tariff, because if a high tariff follows from a raising of the tariff in any particular, then it must follow that free trade must be the logical policy of those who are preaching freer trade. If those who want higher protection on certain lines of Canadian products are to be denominated high protectionists by hon. gentlemen opposite, then those who preach freer trade must be denominated free traders. The Prime Minister of this country (Mr. Mackenzie King) has preached "freer trade" in that very language, and he has preached it frequently in this Dominion. But if I were to call him free trader there is no language which would be vicious enough for him to apply to me. I ask to be treated in the same way as we treat hon. gentlemen opposite. They are in favour of a continuous lowering of the tariff; we are in favour of no such thing. We are in favour of necessary protection for Canadian industry, whatever that protection may be. But because we are in favour of that measure of protection we do not want to be called higher and higher and still higher protectionists every hour of the day.

Mr. FORKE: The right hon. gentleman says that the Conservative party stands for adequate protection, but I have yet to hear any hon. member say what adequate protection actually is. Does it mean such protection as will absolutely prevent foreign products from coming into Canada?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Nothing of the sort. It is protection at a level which shall put the Canadian industry on a parity with its competitor.

Mr. FORKE: Brick for brick.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That does not follow at all. The United States might have a high duty on something on which we did not need a duty at all, and they might have no tariff whatever on something upon which it would be necessary for us to impose a duty. They have to-day no tariff whatever on some things on which we must necessarily have a tariff if we are to have any Canadian production.

I cannot recall who it was, but I rather think it was the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) who sought to give the House the impression that we had not so good a quality of coal in Nova Scotia, and that this probably accounted for the trouble. If I were asked any question in regard to the respective qualities of Canadian and American coal I could not answer it, but the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) has said that while there is a large proportion of what is called slack coal in the Canadian mines, such coal is to be found in mines elsewhere. It is of course obvious that some mines are better than others, and I should be obliged to concede that great areas of American coal are better in quality than the Canadian product. But I do want this to sink into the mind of the hon. member for Lisgar, as well as others, that even if that is true it is not good business, it is not common sense on the part of this country to buy the better article from another country if we can use the inferior product ourselves.

Mr. BROWN: I was trying to find out if it was true, that is all.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think the hon. member went further than that, but still I believe the lesson is necessary even though he did not give immediate evidence of its need. I ask hon. gentlemen this question: Even though we have not quite as good coal as is to be found in the great anthracite fields of the United States, is it not better economics, is it not more thrifty, is it not wiser for Canada so to direct its policy as to consume its own coal rather than buy the superior article from a foreign land? Let me illustrate. Suppose the hon. member had a farm and on that farm he had a supply of coal which was not as good as Pennsylvania anthracite but which nevertheless was of fair quality and quite fit for use. Would it be thrifty of him and his family to purchase American coal of high quality and ignore his own because he was not enterprising enough to dig it from the ground and use it for the purposes of his farm? The illustration is a simple and homely one, but it applies to countries as much as to families. And unless we have common sense and business acumen enough so to direct our policy that our own coal fields will be exploited, thus saving scores of millions of dollars which heretofore have gone to other lands, we shall continue in that difficult situation portrayed by the hon. member for South Cape Breton and other gentlemen who have spoken this afternoon.

All through these years, in 1922, 1923, 1924 and 1925, we have been gradually lowering the tariff, and now we find ourselves face to face with a crash in what is perhaps the greatest single enterprise in Canada outside the railways. What is the remedy? I am not going to say that an immediate remedy can be found wholly along one line. Sometimes you get to a pass where you are bound to explore other possibilities than the one which seems obvious. I know certain appeals have been made by the industry—appeals recited, perhaps not quite completely, by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) this afternoon. I know, too, that objection can be offered to many, if not all, of them. But sometimes we have to overcome such objections, and by whatever means we have at our disposal we must avoid a great calamity, knowing that though the objections be considerable it is far wiser to surmount them than to encounter disaster itself. I promise the government that any suggestions they may put forward we shall approach in a sympathetic mood. We want this industry saved. I implore the government to exert its best ability, in the light of the best information it has, to meet the situation. I assure them that though we cannot promise to endorse their proposals, if they are the worst we shall at least review them in a sympathetic frame of mind; and certainly it is our earnest hope that we shall find ourselves able to support them.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Hon. members will recall that time and again this industry has come to the attention of the country. Only last year its workers came here asking for a small amount to tide them over their period of unemployment, and we were told then that this was entirely a provincial matter. Now Besco itself waits upon the government with a request for a handout of $500,000 or $300,000. There have been many investigations into the coal and steel industry of Nova Scotia, at least in certain aspects, but we have never yet had an investigation into the finances of the company, and until the financial affairs of this concern are disclosed to the country the government in my opinion is quite right in refusing any assistance. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) takes the view that the company must trust the members of the government. He should go further, and declare that before one red cent more is given to Besco the financial situation of the company shall be made public.

The leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) has referred to the tariff and transportation. I submit there are other matters to which reference should be made and which have been lightly touched upon to-day. Again and again we have had the most extraordinary representations from Besco. Those who spoke for the company last year assured us then that within a few weeks everything would be lovely. Mr. Kyte, later followed by Mr. Carroll, had something to say with regard to the situation. On February 24, 1925, as reported in Hansard at page 488, Mr. Kyte said:

> The question of unemployment, therefore, is about settled so far as Sydney and Glace Bay are concerned. If this despatch is true, and I believe it is; if the steel plant will soon be working on a basis of 100 per cent production, then there will be employment for every steel worker in the city of Sydney, and for every coal miner in the county of Cape Breton. That is the happiest solution of our difficulty, and I think the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg might very well allow the matter to drop with the assurance given in this despatch that unemployment will cease entirely and that the plant will be working full time by the sixteenth of March.

These are the representations we have had from time to time. We have had only a mere reference to-day to the over-capitalization of this company. Anyone might have gone further and said that the whole company has been a splendid example of frenzied finance. We have had very little said of the mismanagement that has characterized the operations of this corporation. Charges have been made before on the floor of the House in other connections in regard to this matter. The very fact that we have had such industrial trouble in the steel and coal industry during the last few years is of itself indicative that the men in charge of this big corporation are not fitted for such responsibility. I have spoken again and again in this House on behalf of the steel and coal workers of Nova Scotia. I may say that it has been more than a surprise to me to receive letters from the shareholders of this concern thanking me for having done something to expose the situation that prevails in Nova Scotia, because they realize that if the existing conditions continue they are sure to lose their investment in the company, that even the bondholders will lose their capital.

I need not go into the exploitation which the company has practised against the workers. It is only a few days ago that in this House we had to protest against more coal miners being imported from the Old Country. Surely those in control of the company must know its affairs, and yet they were proposing to bring in many more miners because they say the mining industry is growing at such a rate that they must have a larger number of miners to carry on the work, and then in regard to the steel workers, again and again we have stated in this House that they have been worked eleven and thirteen hours shifts, and every other week twenty-four hours on end. Yet we were told to-day by one hon. gentleman who was speaking on behalf of the company that this industry could not stand competition with the product of the low-paid workers of Europe. I think the hon. Minister of Finance has answered the main part of that contention, that there is comparatively little importation of steel products from Belgium. There is the other side of the question. Statements were made that in Belgium men were working very long hours, that there was child labour and that very low standards of living prevailed. I would point out that since June 1921 Belgium has had a very stringent eight-hour day in force.

Mr. CANTLEY: Does the hon. gentleman wish the House to understand that the workers in Belgium during the last three or four years, or since the war, have been confined to an eight-hour day?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes. I should like to read a protest—

Mr. CANTLEY: Will he let me make a statement?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am making the statement just now. I have only a minute or two more at my disposal. I hold in my hand one of the publications of the International Labour office of the League of Nations, to which we are a contributing member. This is dated May 31, 1926, and the hon. gentleman will find in it a strong protest on behalf of some of the employers of Belgium to the effect that they are in a very awkward position in regard to the eight-hour day because they are forced to compete with nations whose labourers are working longer than eight hours a day.

Mr. MANION: What about the wages paid those workmen?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The wages are low, but on the other hand those wages bring in more in the shape of substantial comforts to the workers of Belgium than they do to the workers in Nova Scotia.

Furthermore, in regard to other conditions of work, I should like the hon. member to study certain tables which have been published by the International Labour Office showing the progress of ratifications of the treaty. He will find that Belgium stands high with respect to hours, unemployment, childbirth, night work (women), minimum age (industry), night work (young persons), and so on. When we come to Canada's part in regard to these matters, we find there is an absolute blank, so that the impression given by the hon. member opposite is far from being correct.

I am not going to say anything about reparations, to which reference has been made, except to state that one of the difficulties is that the countries paying reparations have had to lower their standards of living, and we are being adversely affected because of that. I would urge—

Mr. FORKE: It is six o'clock.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I will close in a word or two. I would say that undoubtedly any failure of a large industry of this kind will undoubtedly seriously affect the workers of Nova Scotia; indeed it will seriously affect the whole of Canada; but before assistance in any form whatever is given to this industry I would urge that certain conditions be laid down. The industry must be thoroughly reorganized and the interests of the workers in every respect thoroughly safeguarded.

[Mr. Cantley.]

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. gentleman shall have leave to withdraw his motion? Carried.

Mr. FOSTER: Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a few remarks on the question.

Mr. SPEAKER: It being six o'clock I leave the chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. A. de WITT FOSTER (Hants-Kings): Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock I had succeeded in catching your eye and arresting the attention of the House for a brief moment, and I assure you it is not my intention to detain the House at any length in discussing this very important matter. It is a matter exceedingly important to the province of Nova Scotia, to the Maritime provinces, and I venture to suggest to the whole Dominion of Canada. It is important to the constituency which I represent, and that in the main is the first consideration which induces me to detain the House for a few moments in discussing some of the points that have been raised in the discussion this afternoon.

It is true that the steel industry is not located in either of the counties which I have the honour to represent in this House, but like so many of the industries of Canada the ramifications of which extend to the various portions of the Dominion, it is not surprising that this company and its success should have a marked influence upon conditions arising in my own constituency.

I said it was important to all the Maritimes. When one remembers that 25,000 people are employed in this industry in the province of Nova Scotia, and that one-fifth of the entire population are practically dependent upon it for their living, one sees at once the market for the products grown in the rest of the province which is here contained in the cities which are the very centres of the steel and coal industry. The apples that are raised in the Annapolis valley, many of them, find a market in New Glasgow and Sydney and various portions of Glace Bay, and in other coal, steel and iron centres. The products of the farm, butter and eggs, while they come into competition with other similar products, nevertheless have to find a portion of their market in these cities. In the winter time some of our men are engaged in the woods getting out pit props in the eastern part of Nova Scotia, and ties are obtained for laying in the various tracks of Besco's mileage. In that way the ramifications of the industry can be seen to extend into the various sections and centres of our province, in fact, throughout the whole Maritime provinces.

It is on behalf of these people that those who have spoken from this side of the House have approached the consideration of this question. It is not from the point of view of defending a corporation. The corporation of Besco is personally, save in the by and large, unknown to me. By that I mean I have not had the pleasure of meeting either the president or the officers of the company. I have not had the opportunity to enter into an examination of their financial standing or status or of any of the intricate problems with which the company's officials alone would be familiar. I presume in that respect I am somewhat in the same position as the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke), who inquired this afternoon why it was that we had not specifically placed before the House the exact conditions that mitigated against the success of this company. He alone of members on this side of the House, assuming for the moment the geographcial position rather than that of political distinctions, would have an opportunity of knowing what the problems of this company were and what requests they were making from the government. In general policy at any rate we are led to believe that the hon. member for Brandon has access to the demands which have been made upon the government, and it was with that idea in mind that I asked him the question I did this afternoon, and which he evaded answering. However, I find no fault with him for that, and I take this opportunity of thanking him for the interest he manifested, and for the promise he gave that in the consideration of this and other eastern difficulties we would have his consideration, and, I rather think I might say from his remarks, his support along certain lines, if not wholeheartedly, at least some support. I appreciate and gratefully acknowledge the proffered suggestion and support of the hon. member. I wish, however, that he might make a definite pronouncement that in matters affecting the east, as in those affecting the west, he would be willing to go as far with us as we have shown our willingness to go with him and those whom he leads in this House, in regard to legislation which has been brought forward for that particular section of the country.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) rather led the House to think that we on this side were speaking in defence of the company, but as I pointed out a moment ago there is no hon. gentleman in this party who has reason to defend the particular policy of the officials of Besco. I have not heard that suggested, and I am sure it is not so; but we do have in mind the very serious condition which will result to the workers in those mines and to the people of the Maritime provinces in particular if a remedy is not provided. It does seem to me that if we had come here with the identical case which has been submitted to the government by the Besco officials and presented it to the House, we might then have been accused, and with some show of reason, of presenting a case in favour of the company itself. But we have not done so. In fact we have approached this question in an entirely non-partisan way, because we believe that when one of the major industries of this country is shaken to its very foundation and when a crisis is approaching it, the situation should not be made a political question to the extent of at least effecting no remedy and allowing such industry to come to grief.

Mention was made of the capitalization of Besco. I fail to see what that has to do with the matter, for the reason that we have been told by the Minister of Finance that up to the present time Besco had not paid any dividends on its second preferred nor yet on its common stock. Surely it cannot be claimed that in the bonds issued there was over-capitalization and that the property is not worth the value of the bonds. I fear it is default upon the bonds that will take place in the early summer rather than default upon any stock.

Mention was made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) in discussing this question that the government had gone into the matter to a very considerable extent. According to the conversations which he repeated and the letters and telegrams which he read, they had had various conferences with the officials of Besco, and it seemed to me, if I gathered the proper deductions, that the reason why action had not been taken turned upon the non-receipt of a report called the Coverdale report, the officials of Besco claiming that the report in question was a private document for their own particular use, and the government maintaining that they could not act without having this report in their possession. I venture to assume that there may be material in this report which it would not be wise for the public to know in view of the present serious situation. I feel certain, however, that the officials of Besco would be perfectly willing to produce this report for the examination of the members of the cabinet, on their assurance that the matter would be treated as confidential. In view of the difficulties connected with the situation and the calamitous results that are likely to ensue, as has been pointed out and as is believed at least by the people of eastern Canada, the government should not hesitate, because of a technicality of that nature, to provide at least some of the suggested remedies which have occurred to them in the discussion of this problem, if not all that have been claimed by the management itself.

We were told that there were three phases of this question upon which a solution depended. One of these is the tariff. With that I do not propose to deal, because I am sure my views on that subject would not coincide with those of the government, and inasmuch as the tariff commission is already investigating the matter it seems to me that an interim report might very well be made by that commission to the government to aid them in arriving at proper conclusions. I have my own ideas as to what those conclusions ought to be; but I cannot speak for the commission, and the results I have in mind may be arrived at in a manner different from that which we on this side have been led to believe is the right and proper way. And so I say that so far as the tariff is concerned, if the government could secure such information as has been laid before the tariff commission, that in itself might help them to come to a conclusion upon the point.

The Minister of Finance dealt with the question of the claims urged by the company for certain moneys, and I am bound to say that his position in that regard seemed to me to be eminently fair, inasmuch as the moneys have been paid into the public treasury and, as the minister pointed out, only parliament itself could vote those moneys back again. With respect to other claims, they should be on a parity with the rest. As regards the government's position on these two matters I venture to say that very little fault can be found; but the fact remains that having taken that position and adhered to it, no relief can come so far as the ministry is concerned without bringing those matters to the attention of this House and laying before it some concrete proposition upon which it could act. It is that thought I had in mind with the desire of suggesting it to the minister.

The other point I had in mind was that relief might come to some of these industries through the medium of a bounty. Being a protectionist, as I announced on a previous occasion, I have no fault to find with the system of bounties, but they must be sparingly used and applied for proper purposes.

[Mr. Foster.]

I remember reading a speech on the subject of bounties delivered in this House by the Hon. W. S. Fielding on December 14, 1909, in which the hon. gentleman made, as I believe, one of the most successful cases, if not the most successful, in favour of bounties that has ever been made in this House. In the course of that speech he pointed out that while the government had paid out some $13,000,000 in ten years to the steel industry in this country, yet in the various places where steel and iron were manufactured—such as Sault Ste. Marie, Sydney, North Sydney, Sydney Mines, Glace Bay, New Glasgow and Hamilton—the increase in the customs duties alone at these points had been over $9,700,000, or less than $4,000,000 short of the entire amount which has been paid out in bounties. And from that he argued that in thus giving a stimulus to this industry, the producing power of the country had been increased, more wealth had been created, and as a consequence the people of the country were able to pay into the treasury almost as much as had been voted from it to this particular industry. Whether the subject of bounties is one which the government should consider is not for me to say; I merely point out that there is an argument to be advanced in favour of bounties, the most extreme kind of protection.

The main point of the whole matter, it seems to me, is that we ought not to allow this House to prorogue, we ought not to allow this debate to finish, until we have at least some indication that the government will take this matter into consideration and that if it is not done before the House closes they will do by order in council, if they can do it, what they have in mind for the benefit of this industry. We should be told that the government are willing to submit for the consideration of the House certain conclusions at which they have arrived for the benefit, indeed for the saving, of this industry. If we can judge from the remarks of hon. members to my left, I believe this House will be willing to give earnest and non-partisan consideration to this problem. I regard it one of the greatest Maritime problems, and with that statement I believe the ministry agrees.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): It was not my intention to take part in this debate, and I would not have assumed the responsibility of continuing the debate past six o'clock, but since the hon. member who has just spoken assumed that responsibility, it may not be out of place for me to continue the discussion. I do not propose to say anything about the British Empire Steel Company itself—at least not that portion of the company's business which relates to steel—but by general consent it would seem that the coal interests are linked up with the steel business, and on that question I propose to make some very brief remarks.

When the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) was speaking I interjected a few remarks which the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) interpreted later as throwing some doubt upon the quality and availability of Nova Scotia coal. He quite correctly interpreted my remarks, and, speaking honestly, Mr. Speaker, there does seem to be some question as to the quality of Nova Scotia coal and its availability. By that I mean the cost at which that coal can be laid at the pit's mouth. The right hon. leader of the opposition suggested to me that if I had a coal mine on my farm it would be better to dig that coal, and set my family digging it, than get it elsewhere. I should not like to give an unqualified consent to a proposition of that kind. It would depend altogether upon circumstances, and upon the spread between what it would cost me to dig that coal and what it would cost me to get it elsewhere. I was reminded of the story of a farmer who was travelling along the road with a tank of water. A stranger met him and asked him how far he was drawing the water. He said, " three miles." The stranger said, "Would it not be better for you to dig a well"? The farmer replied to him, "Well, it is just about as far that way as the other way" , and I presume it would be sound protectionist doctrine to dig a well three miles deep instead of to draw water for the same distance. That is an extreme illustration, but after all does it not elucidate the point I wish to make, namely that we must give some attention to the question of cost when we are considering whether we will develop our own resources, whether we will dig our own coal or buy it elsewhere?

There seems to be some question in the minds of many with reference to Nova Scotia coal. I made the statement this afternoon that there were some things I could not understand, and the hon. member for Pictou sarcastically remarked that there were many things I did not understand. That I am quite prepared to admit, and among them are the reasons advanced as to why a certain policy should be followed. Now the reason for not developing Nova Scotia coal is that Nova Scotia coal is not of equal quality to other coal used for the same purpose. On the other hand, when provincial rights are touched the Maritime men stand up and declare that their coal is equal to any other, and they resent very keenly any statement to the contrary, as the hon. member for Pictou said in referring to the remarks made by the leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke).

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The hon. member asserted two or three times this afternoon that Nova Scotia coal was of an inferior quality, and he attributed the statement to some particular individual or authority. I should like him to name that authority.

Mr. BROWN: If the hon. member will call upon me privately I will tell him all I have in mind and the sources from which I have gained my information.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: There is nothing private about it.

Mr. BROWN: Very well. We have had it brought before us that Nova Scotia coal is very much inclined to slack When the proposal is made that it be shipped up the St. Lawrence, they tell us it does not stand handling, and again that it does not stand banking.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Who says that?

Mr. BROWN: That seems to be very generally conceded.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Give me one authority who makes that statement.

Mr. BROWN: I might go further and state the exact propositions that have been made to us. One of the reasons given for the adoption of certain policies was that Nova Scotia coal for certain purposes was not worth within $2 a ton of American coal. I shall be very glad to give the hon. member the information.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Now is the time.

Mr. BROWN: The matter has been brought before some of the members here in such a way that I do not feel at liberty to give to the House all that was said to us on the question. Personally I have no objection to doing it, but there are other considerations which, at the present time, I feel under obligation to observe. So that it is a subject to which we endeavour to give consideration, and I am perfectly willing myself to give consideration to these questions. But when we are asked to endorse a certain policy we must know the facts. From my own observation there seems to be reason to believe that doubt can be thrown upon the quality of Nova Scotia coal, and not only upon the quality, but upon the cost of laying it at the pit's mouth. A party of Progressive members visited Nova Scotia some years ago. We went down one of the coal mines in New Glasgow. We were told that that was the driest mine in Nova Scotia, and we were also informed that it was necessary to take out one ton of water for every ton of coal. Whether that is economical or not I do not know, but we are informed also that in some of the mines in Nova Scotia they had to elevate five tons of water for every ton of coal they took out. Then it would seem to be a fact that some of these mines are now extending out miles under the sea. Surely hon. members will admit the possibility that some of these mines—I will say only some of them—cannot be economically operated. If that is a fact, why not let us face it? It seems to be an admitted fact in regard to the mines in the Old Country. The newspapers tell us that some of the mines over there are in distress because they cannot be economically operated.

I understand the difficulties that confront us in a situation of that kind. It is not easy to move a population which has been built up around a certain industry, even when that industry can no longer be carried on economically. I appreciate that point and am prepared to give consideration to it. But at least we want to know the facts, because it is only when we are face to face with the facts that we can hope to find a proper solution. The hon. member for Pictou did not do his case any good, but rather harm, when he took the leader of the Pregressive party to task for the statement he had made in reference to the quality of Nova Scotia coal and its availability. We were told, for instance, that some of the coal with which Nova Scotia has to compete, the Virginia coal, is loaded at the pit's mouth for about 90 cents a ton. One thing is certain, and that is that they are bringing large quantities of Virginia coal into the Maritime provinces. We saw that when we were down there a year ago, and if the coal is of the quality they say it is, and if the mines can be operated as economically as they say they can be, then why the importation of Virginia coal into Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia itself? Let us know all the facts. If provincial pride conflicts with economic necessity they will have to put their provincial pride into their pockets and give the House and us from the west the fects so that we shall know how to face this question.

For my part, as I have already said, I am ready to give full consideration to policies that may seem to be necessary to meet the situation that has developed in the Maritime provinces. If it is true that their coal is more given to slacking than some other coals, and that the cost both of laying the coal at the pit mouth and of transportation is unduly high, we will give consideration to those policies that are necessary to relieve that situation. Let us not have on the one hand evidence offered to us that would seem to throw doubt upon the quality of the coal, and on the other hand have men stand up in the House and find fault with those members who, trying only to arrive at the facts, make statements that meet with their disapproval. I may say again that the hon. member for Pictou did not do his cause any good but rather did it harm when he took the attitude he did in the House the other night.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, no one has less reason to love the Dominion Coal Company or the Dominion Iron and Steel Company than I. I fought them at their formation for years and they followed me every time I contested a constituency. They had more money than I had and I went down. There is no doubt that the defeats I suffered in Nova Scotia were due to the expenditure of funds on the part of those associated with either the Dominion Coal Company or the Dominion Iron and Steel Company. But that is no reason why one should not approach the question with a fair and open mind.

The matter which is now up for consideration arises out of the fact that, on July 1 next, $5,159,000 of first mortgage bonds of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company will not pay their interest coupons, and that if the interest coupons are not paid on that date it is an absolute certainty that the interest will not be paid on $7,035,000 of consolidated mortgage bonds, interest on which is payable on September 1. Therefore it is perfectly clear that the Dominion Iron and Steel Company is unable to operate with an operating profit sufficient to pay interest upon some twelve million dollars of its mortgage bonds. I understand the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) to say that the government at the present time has no suggestion of relief to make, but I would earnestly suggest to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) that this is a great industrial concern, and that the fact that it cannot pay interest upon its first and consolidated mortgage bonds for the coming year should not be clouded by the undoubted fact that in some of the stock, particularly the common stock, of that company, there may be water. With respect to the bonds one dollar of cash went in for every dollar of bonds outstanding. I think that is absolutely clear.

Mr. CAHILL: Was there value there for the bonds?

Mr. CAHAN: Value for the bonds and much more. I am going to deal with that in a moment.

Mr. CAHILL: They are safe enough.

Mr. CAHAN: I do not know whether they are safe or not now; I am going to argue that point with the Prime Minister. If the announcement made by the Dominion Iron and Steel Company may be relied upon, this concern will be in the hands of a receiver during the summer months, and in the hands of a receiver they cannot operate unless the Prime Minister on behalf of this government will make some announcement which will induce the investment of sufficient funds to reconstruct that company on a sound and stable basis. If a receiver is appointed and no new announcement is made from the government, there is a fair possibility of that whole concern going down to wrack and ruin. If the Dominion Iron and Steel Company goes down during the summer months, if it is unable to induce capital to come in and assist in reconstructing the company on a sound financial basis, the Dominion Coal Company will go down with it, because the Dominion Coal Company cannot operate successfully unless it has a market for the coal which is now consumed by the Dominion Iron and Steel Company. I think that is a fair statement. I am trying to keep within the limits.

What has brought this about? It is brought about by circumstances and conditions arising out of the war. I am not going to talk tariff for the moment; I am trying to place the facts as I see them before the Prime Minister and the members of his government. In 1913 we produced in Canada on an average every month 84,000 tons of pig iron. Last year we produced 48,000 tons. In 1913, we produced 87,000 tons of steel ingots and castings. Last year we produced 63,000 tons There has been a great diminution of production. To what is that due? It is due I think to lower costs of producing similar products in France and Belgium. The Minister of Finance said that there had been no large imporations from either France or Belgium, but I think I can say without fear of contradiction that during the past two or three years the price in Belgium and the price in France have governed the price in Canada. Therefore to produce at all in Canada the Canadian companies have had to reduce their selling price to conform to the selling price in France and Belgium.

A great part of that iron which enters into production both in France and Belgium came out of the Ruhr during the Ruhr occupation. A very considerable part of it comes out of Germany by way of reparations, and although France and Belgium have it at a certain price, in order to realize they have been selling their products and obtaining less return for the iron than they have actually credited Germany with in the matter of reparations. Two years ago this summer I was in France and England examining into some contracts in which a client of mine was interested for the sale of iron products coming out of the Ruhr to England. As a matter of fact the prices offered under those contracts were so low that producers of similar products in England would have been driven entirely out of employment at that time. The British government intervened and prevented those contracts from being carried out, because they held that it was a great injustice to producers in England to allow those cheaper goods to come in under the circumstances so as to destroy, for the time being, British industries. We can in this country secure those products temporarily from Belgium and France at less cost than that at which we can produce them profitably in this country. It is stated, and I have no doubt it is true, that reckoned in terms of the gold exchange the cost of production of iron and steel in both France and Belgium is half what it is anywhere in Canada. I do not think there is any doubt about that. Indeed, in a review by experts of the United States which I saw some time ago it was so stated. This is due partly to depreciated currency. Anyone who has examined into conditions in France and Belgium knows that reckoned in gold—because the prices at which these countries sell here are based upon that standard—wages have not increased proportionately to the depreciation of the franc in either country.

Mr. HEAPS: Is the hon. member sure of that fact?

Mr. CAHAN: I have it on the most reliable authority and I believe it to be true. Two years ago this summer I spent considerable time looking into the question with some of the best experts in England in connection with some contracts with which I was concerned. And I have seen large quantities of Belgian iron products coming into Canada. If I mistake not, last autumn I saw some iron for structural purposes being landed in Montreal, and upon inquiry I ascertained that it was to be used in one of the government contracts. I cannot speak with personal knowledge of that, but I do know that a considerable quantity of this material is imported. The Canadian company to-day is obliged to meet the French and Belgian prices, and the cost of production has been so reduced in both these countries that their manufacturers can ship the product, pay the freight and the tariff as well, and sell cheaper than the Canadian producer can sell at a profit.

There is one other point to be considered. The duty on iron and steel has always been specific, and in 1913 it averaged, I think, pretty nearly 15 per cent; but with the prices now prevailing that specific duty reduced to ad valorem is only about 7 per cent. And that is without reference to any interposition on the part of the government: it is due simply to changing conditions of trade. The tariff against the French and the Belgian product is reduced one-half, and I suggest therefore that it is a fair matter for the consideration of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and his government, apart altogether from any question of protection or free trade. There is invested in this industry some $500,000,000 in round figures—I have the specific figures somewhere if they are called for. It is for the government to consider whether that industry should not have at least the same protection as it enjoyed in 1913 under the conditions which then prevailed, and, if we are to have a specific duty, whether that duty should not be raised so as to give the same ad valorem protection as was afforded at that time.

Another important question arises, a question which must meet the Prime Minister and his advisers at every turn in dealing with a matter of this kind. We have in Canada a population of 9,000,000, stretching across the continent, with a population of 112 or 114 millions to the south, producing the same things that we produce. The United States, with 5 per cent of the population of the world, produces 50 per cent of the entire output of the world's manufactures. This is according to the latest statistics I have seen. They can produce, owing to what is commonly called mass production, much cheaper than we can produce the same standard articles in Canada for a market of 9,000,000. The government must therefore decide, parliament must decide, whether in face of that competition we shall endeavour as best we can to safeguard Canadian industries in which there are large investments. We may be compelled to pay somewhat higher prices in Canada than those that obtain in the United States in respect of many of these products. Personally I think it is wise for the country to do so, and it is for the Prime Minister to decide that question. I understand there is a broad line of division, but we must face it if we are to preserve the financial, the industrial and the commercial integrity of the country.

One word more. I can quite understand that the Dominion Iron and Steel Company might not be prepared to submit the whole of the Coverdale report to the country, but I understand that they offered to produce it for the consideration of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb). The Prime Minister and his colleague could have considered the report and decided whether there were certain matters which should be presented to the House and to the public and upon which they might base future action with regard to the company. There were, I know, certain other matters which might well be regarded as private and confidential and which it would not be fair to submit to their competitors. If I thought that the Dominion Iron and Steel Company was not willing to have the government take from that report all matters really of public interest and which the government might reasonably require the House and the country to learn, and base upon these matters such action as they saw fit, I for one should feel reluctant to support the company. But I fancy there may have been some misunderstanding. I cannot understand that the representatives of the Dominion Iron and Steel would refuse to allow the government to take from the report all matters relevant and material to any decision which it might be called upon to make.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would it be unreasonable to ask that the minister of the crown representing the province concerned should have the same right as his colleagues to see that report?

Mr. CAHAN: I should think so. At one time under an order of the court I spent six months with twenty or thirty accountants in going through the books of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company from A to Z, and I think I knew them at that time as well as any person could after such an exhaustive investigation. I know they contain matters which should not be brought before the public and before their competitors; but there were other matters disclosed by those books which I think are very relevant, and in my view the government has the right to have those facts in order that it may be in a position to render an intelligent judgment in regard to future action with respect to this company. That far I am with the Prime Minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not like to interrupt my hon. friend, but may I ask him this question: Having gone through the books of the company, I think he referred a moment ago to its capitalization of $500,000,000; am I correct?

Mr. CAHAN: I was talking of all the companies engaged in the production of iron and steel products in Canada. I may have made a slip, but that is what I meant. Now I make this suggestion. It would be a most serious matter for Nova Scotia in particular, and possibly for Canada as a whole, if this undertaking in Cape Breton, Pictou and Cumberland, which may be termed a national undertaking, should go completely to the wall. I think it would be impossible to obtain the fresh capital necessary to place it on a basis where it could operate to a moderate extent, let alone to the full capacity of the plant, unless the government of the country announces some stable policy with regard to the iron and steel production of Canada. I do not want to put this offensively, but I say that company will go into the hands of a receiver unless there is some assurance that the industry will be safeguarded in a manner in which it is not now safeguarded against this foreign competition, and in that event, as a practical man, I think it would be impossible to obtain the new capital necessary to carry it on, on even the most conservative basis.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend seeks to place responsibility on the government of this country. Does he recognize no responsibility on the part of the government of the province directly concerned?

Mr. CAHAN: Quite so, but so far as I can see, there is no announcement that the government of the province of Nova Scotia could make under present conditions which would create the confidence necessary in the public mind to secure the requisite fresh capital for the reconstruction of that company and the re-establishing of that industry. That was my point. I do not wish any unpleasant inference to be drawn from what I am saying; I simply want to state the facts because I recognize the government must take the lead. The responsibility ultimately will depend of course on the action of the parliament of Canada, but under present conditions it seems to me the government must take the lead. Here is a great industry being disrupted and going to ruin, and unless the government acts very speedily I am afraid there will be no possibility of the redemption of that industry within the next few years. That is my sincere view. I am putting my own point of view before the Prime Minister, I am not endeavouring to throw any partisan prejudice into it at all, but I am simply trying to state the case to him with perfect frankness, because upon him really as the leader of the government there rests a very grave responsibility. Although I represent a constituency in Quebec and as a Conservative am opposed to him politically, personally I would go a long, long way to support any reasonably effective action that he and his government might take to save this industry from ruin.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): Mr. Speaker, as a protectionist I have been very much impressed by the statement made by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) this afternoon that he and his friends would do what they could to support the government in applying a remedy to this situation. Let me suggest to the House what may prove to be a practical solution. Public ownership as applied in the province of Ontario to the distribution of power and light is of its kind one of the most marvellous enterprises I know of on the American continent. It is a great financial success, and to-day I am glad to say it has excited the envy of private enterprises competing against it.

Now, to my mind what Nova Scotia ought to do as a way out of this trouble is to handle the problem by way of public ownership—pool the leading mines, devote them to the production of electric energy near the pitheads and distribute that energy all over 9 p.m. the province for power and light, and ship the balance of the product of those mines to Quebec and Ontario for fuel. In this way the coal industry of Nova Scotia would be put on its feet, it would supply power and light for the province, and it would also supply fuel for Ontario and Quebec.

Now then, if the steel industry of Nova Scotia had the assurance of coal at cost, or very nearly at cost, produced from the pick of the mines that had been pooled, that of itself would be an encouragement to that industry. Then if the company had to be reorganized, capital would be forthcoming for the reconstruction of the steel industry. That is what we want to see. If they can have, as they have, a great steel industry in the United States, I say we can have a great steel industry in this country. Evidence came out this afternoon that to-day the Americans are the greatest producers of steel at the cheapest price, and they sell it all over the world. They are the most protectionist country on the face of the globe.

Now, Mr. Speaker, by adopting this western principle of pooling the best of the coal mines in Nova Scotia we would get coal almost at cost; the coal industry would flourish, and it would enable us to insist that the men who work the mines get decent pay and decent houses to live in. That is another progressive idea, but it is worth while considering. This summer if we are to have a commission investigate the industries of the Maritime provinces, I should like to see it take up the coal and steel industries on the lines I have suggested. I am, of course, only stating it crudely to-night, but I am confident that in my suggestion there is contained the key to the solution of some of these Maritime grievances, for it will enable the miners to be paid good wages, and by the establishment of coking plants in Ontario and Quebec we can handle the coal of Nova Scotia, supply the fuel wants of the central provinces and get the advantage of all the by-products incident to the coking process. That will open a new vista for the people in the Maritime provinces. I am not going to take up any more time, but I just throw that out as a supplementary proposal. I think the government have been impressed by the debate this afternoon and will listen to the various suggestions that have been made, and I believe they will see that it is their duty to do something in the way of coming to the relief of Nova Scotia if this crisis of which we are told to-day really does impend, because it would mean a great injury to a great industry that we have in this country. If we want to go into the steel business, we must go into it in much the same way as the United States have done. We must encourage it, and perhaps the best way to encourage it was suggested here to-night, and as the Prime Minister says, probably the provinces ought to do something too. But probably the best relief would be by the bounty system. I know nothing that is better calculated to encourage an industry in a country than the bounty system, backed by the province and the Dominion. But some duty is on the government, so far as I can see, after hearing the debate here this afternoon, and is incumbent also, I think, on the province and on this House and the people of Canada, and especially the people of Quebec and Ontario, to take their coal from the Maritime provinces instead of sending their money to the coal mines of the United States.

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Minister of National Defence): Naturally, Mr. Speaker, I am very deeply interested in this question and in the discussion which has taken place to-day. I want to commend my colleagues from Nova Scotia on the very fair and reasonable manner in which they have presented for the consideration of the House the problems that face us in Nova Scotia in regard to the steel industry. The discussion, however, has gone very far afield. We have drifted off into the consideration of whether Nova Scotia coal was good or bad, and into coal questions generally. All these matters have no relation at all to the vital issue before us. There is only one issue before us—small only having regard to all the other questions that have been referred to this afternoon and this evening, but in itself very vast and important.

Intimation was made to the government by representatives of the British Empire Steel Corporation that the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, one of their subsidiaries, was in such a position that they feared a receiver would have to be appointed. The reason they thought that course would have to be taken was on account of the information contained in the report of special accountants, known as Coverdale and Colpitts, who had made full and complete inquiries into the workings of the company and of all its subsidiaries. I happened to be present with my two colleagues, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), when the president of the company conveyed that information to us, and I asked him what did he propose as a remedy. There were only two proposals that he made: first, that there should be a rearrangement of the law in regard to goods coming from countries where there was a depreciated currency; and secondly, he made an argument in favour of a bounty being granted upon coal that was used in the production of steel. He pointed out, by way of illustration, that the Steel Company of Canada and the Steel Company at the Soo, when they imported coal into Canada and used that coal in the manufacture of steel were entitled to receive and did receive a rebate from the government of 99 per cent of the duty that they had paid on the coal when it entered. Therefore, he argued that Nova Scotia should get a bounty of 50 cents upon every ton of coal that entered into the production of steel. That would mean a bounty of $2 a ton on every ton of steel. I stated to the president of the British Empire Steel Corporation that I could hardly see the logic of his proposition. In the one case you were rebating duties to companies importing coal, and you were not giving any subsidy at all, but in the other case you proposed to go into the treasury and give a subsidy of $2 a ton on every ton of steel manufactured out of Canadian coal, and that the proposal was one that we would have to consider very carefully. In view of the conditions which he said existed in the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, as disclosed of this report of Coverdale and Colpitts, the government came to the conclusion that in order to have the full and proper information before us, in order to ascertain first, what was the cause of existing conditions, and secondly, what we ought to do, we could not move intelligently unless we had that report. I think the House will agree with me that that was a reasonable and proper proposal, and so my hon. friend and colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) conveyed that information to the president of the company.

Hon. gentlemen who were here this afternoon have followed the correspondence which took place, in which Mr. Wolvin took the position that he would not produce the report. Finally, at a conference on Friday last he intimated to the Prime Minister and my colleague the Minister of Finance that he would produce the report for their private consumption only, and that they should not be permitted to communicate even to their colleagues in the government what was in the report. Now that is naturaly a very unreasonable position. Every hon. gentleman who has parliamentary or governmental experience knows that under the oath of office that every privy councillor takes, there are at all times important matters of confidential character which all members of the government have to keep secret in the public interest. We never thought of suggesting that the report should be given to us for the purpose of being thrown open to the public or anything of that kind, but simply and solely for the purpose of enabling us to know the cause of the present conditions, and what was the best remedy—because enough was said, and enough has been said in addresses to the shareholders of this company, to indicate that this firm of accountants did make certain findings and also certain recommendations as to the future.

The position of the government is this: We feel we are entitled, before we come to any policy in regard to the matter, to a perusal of that report. It might be found necessary that certain portions of the report should be given to the House and the country in justification of any action we might propose to take or of any policy we propounded. I am sure that no hon. gentleman with any sense of responsibility would say that this government could act until we have before us the facts contained in that report. We are not insensible to the present position of the company; we appreciate the grave consequences that would follow to the province by the sea if this steel industry should fail, or as my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) said, be ruined. The consequences would be serious not only to the section where this industry is located, but to all the other industries throughout the province. We are prepared to give the fullest and most sympathetic consideration to any proposition that can be made, and will endeavour to devise proposals in order that what is said to be impending may be averted. But we do think, and we submit to the House, that the president of the British Empire Steel Corporation should allow us to examine that report in order that, being acquainted with the facts, we might know what to do.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William): I shall take but a bare three or four minutes, to reply to a remark made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) as to the wages paid in the steel industries in Europe as compared with the wages paid in the same industries on this side. During his remarks, after he had mentioned that there were laws in Belgium forcing workmen to work eight hours per day, I asked him what about wages, and while he admitted that the cash wages were higher on this side of the water, at the same time he said that the wages they received in Belgium purchased as much goods as the amount of wages received over here. Now in 1924 I discussed this wage question in the House with the then Minister of Labour, Mr. Murdock; the then member for Red Deer, who is also the sitting member for that constituency (Mr. Speakman) backed me up, and we asked the Minister of Labour to put on record the wages paid over there as compared with the wages paid here. He said that he had these figures after a very thorough investigation had been made by the British Ministry of Labour. These figures are not figures obtained by the Canadian Ministry of Labour, by the Conservative party, by the Liberal party, the Progressive party, or the Labour party, but figures obtained by the British Ministry of Labour after full investigation. And they are not cash wages, they are what are called "real" wages, that is the cash turned into food, clothing, rent and so forth. I have here the report issued by the Canadian Minister of Labour, Mr. Murdock, on May 20, 1924, and recorded in Volume III, page 2339 and subsequent pages, of Hansard of that year. Mr. Murdock points out that these are figures of the British Ministry of Labour. I mention that because he himself points that out. He mentions various lines of work in Europe and the real wages obtained by the workers in those occupations. The statement shows the wages paid in Belgium, France, Germany, England, in any of the European countries from Austria on the east right west to the British islands. It is pointed out that in no one of these countries does the rate of wages come within one-half to one-fifth of the rate of wages paid in Canada. I am going to give a couple of instances which bear out the statement, and I shall take the engineering trades, which are more or less related to the industry we have been discussing to-day—that is the iron and steel industry. I will only mention a few of the cities but I desire to draw special attention to Brussels, Paris, New York and Ottawa. I imagine most hon. members will realize it is important to understand what real wages are. That point arises because of an argument made on a former occasion by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke). I repeat that real wages are wages converted into food, clothing, and shelter, the necessaries of life.

Mr. BROWN: What is the index number?

Mr. MANION: In London the index number is taken as 100. The figures for the engineering trades are as follows:

|---|---|
| London | 100 |
| Amsterdam | 108 |
| Berlin | 57 |
| Brussels | 73 |

And it was of Belgium that my hon. friend was speaking.

|---|---|
| Christiania | 104 |
| Madrid | 83 |
| New York | 162 |
| Ottawa | 196 |
| Paris | 58 |
| Prague | 54 |
| Stockholm | 79 |
| Vienna | 62 |
| Warsaw | 61 |

I will repeat just here these four: Brussels, 73; Paris, 58; New York, 162; and Ottawa, 196. It will be seen that the figure for Ottawa was four times what the Paris figure was, and almost three times the Brussels figure. These are figures dealing particularly with the engineering trades that are most closely related to the industry we have been discussing to-day.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, no.

Mr. MANION: These trades are just as closely related as any trades that are contained in the same report. They deal with fitters, iron moulders, pattern makers, and turners—occupations, I think, closely related to the iron and steel industry.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. MANION: These trades have a great deal to do with the iron and steel industry; they are the closest to it that I could find for the purposes of illustration. What does my hon. friend say the closest occupation would be, that of men engaged in foundries?

Mr. DUNNING: I think my hon. friend will find that none of the trades he mentions have to do with the British Empire Steel Corporation's problem.

Mr. MANION: I quite appreciate the fact that the industry concerned is the iron and steel industry. But figures relating to iron and steel workers are not given here, and I endeavoured to give the trades as nearly related to that industry as I could get. The figures for unskilled labour are also given here and I will enumerate them. They are as follows:

|---|---|
| London | 100 |
| Amsterdam | 111 |
| Berlin | 71 |
| Brussels | 78 |
| Christiania | 136 |
| Madrid | 63 |
| New York | 150 |
| Ottawa | 173 |
| Paris | 64 |
| Prague | 65 |
| Stockholm | 95 |
| Warsaw | 62 |

You will see that in all these cases the amounts are from two to three or four times less than the amount paid in Ottawa. Now I will give the combined figures for all occupations, but simply taking Brussels, Ottawa and Paris. The index figure as given is of August 1st, 1923, and this information was given in 1924. Naturally it could not be given for a very much later period. The figures for the three cities named are as follows:

|---|---|
| Brussels | 57 |
| Paris | 86 |
| Ottawa | 183 |

The difference between Brussels and Ottawa in all branches of labour was nearly four times, it was certainly three times, being the difference between 57 and 183. I shall not go through the list of all the occupations. I only give this information to show that the rate of wages in those countries in Europe where currency is depressed, where standards of living are low, where wages are low, where labour laws are low—that in those countries the real wages are very much lower than the real wages in Canada, and that is one of the reasons why such companies as the British Empire Steel Corporation find it difficult to compete with countries such as I have named.

I may add in closing that my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre is a man whom I consider sincere. But he pretends to represent labour in the House and I do not understand why he would take the attitude that the real wages are as high in Belgium as they are in Canada. Because according to these figures obtained by the British Ministry of Labour the real wages are very much lower in Brussels, and all these other countries named, than they are in Canada.

Mr. HEAPS: What he said was that they were as high as they were in Sydney, Nova Scotia.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is right, the member for Winnipeg North Centre did say that. But in this record the wages are not given for Sydney, Nova Scotia. However, I have no reason for thinking that the wage rate is materially lower in Nova Scotia than it is in Ottawa. I presume the Ottawa figure is a composite figure for the whole of Canada, although I do not know whether that is actually the case. But the fact remains, as shown from figures compiled after careful investigation by the British Ministry of Labour, that the real wages—whether in the British islands or any other of the continental countries—are materially lower than the wages paid in Canada.

Motion withdrawn.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $12,000,000 FOR TERMINAL FACILITIES

The House resumed from June 11 consideration in committee of Bill No. 189, to provide for a loan to the Harbour Commisisoners of Montreal—Mr. Cardin—Mr. Duff in the chair.

Mr. CARDIN: The other night the committee passed the different clauses of the bill with the understanding that I should give further explanations in regard to the report supplied to the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) with respect to the purchase of certain properties needed for the landing of the Montreal bridge on the island of Montreal. I must state that the harbour commissioners primarily considered it would be more advantageous to effect the purchase of these various properties by private sale, if at all possible, rather than by expropriation proceedings or any other method. The engineers, when preparing the estimates of the cost of the bridge, went into the valuations of the properties which it might be necessary to acquire for the approaches. These figures prepared by the engineers have been checked by the representative of the city of Montreal, Mr. Terrault—who, as a matter of fact, represents the city of Montreal on the advisory board which has been formed by the harbour commission, for the special purpose of advising the commission in all matters concerning the bridge. On this advisory board is also found the name of Mr. Vallée. He is an engineer of the provincial government, who supervises the construction of all bridges built by that government. Mr. Vallée is a member of the advisory board with Mr. Terrault. All these figures were also checked by Mr. Beique, real estate man in Montreal, a man of experience in his trade. They were carefully gone over by Mr. Browne, a man having a thorough knowledge of real estate in Montreal, in fact I think he has been in the real estate business in that city for thirty-five years. The engineers' estimates regarding the cost of the acquisition of the property necesary for the approaches of the bridge in Montreal at first placed it at $1,400,000. Later on, after further examination, it was found by Mr. Beique, that the amount necessary to purchase said property would probably be $1,645,000. The valuation as given out by Mr. Browne, was $1,560,000. On account of certain difficulties encountered with the proprietors of very large real estate properties the course of the landing was somewhat changed. A suggestion was made that there should be a change because the original plan involved the expropriation of property of very large value. It was in fact discovered that it would cost too much to expropriate this property at the price asked by the proprietors, therefore a change was made in the course to be followed by the approaches and the estimates were accordingly reduced to $1,184,800. Judging by the progress made up to the present in the buying of the property, the commissioner and those working for him in this connection are under the impression that the whole expropriation will not cost more than $1,000,000. Obligations have been undertaken for about $750,000, and this represents much over one-half of the value of the property which will be required for the approaches; in fact, it is nearly three-quarters of all the real estate which it will be necessary to secure for that purpose.

In the sworn declaration which was read by the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) the other night, the civic valuation of five properties is given, probably based on the valuation of these properties to determine the price at which they should be bought. According to my information, the civic valuation is never taken as a basis for the valuation of property. In fact the city of Montreal has made numerous expropriations and particularly, in one instance for what is known as the boulevard Saint-Joseph. Expropriation proceedings were carried on, and it can be fully established to-day that the price that was paid in these expropriations was nearly five times the amount of the civic valuation in that locality. The same thing has happened in other instances. For example, in the expropriation of land needed for the Windsor Street station, the Canadian Pacific Railway paid as high as $22 a foot for property which was never assessed at such a high price. The same thing occurred in many cases in the expropriations carried on by the same company on Notre-Dame street. On the occasion of the sale by auction of the old fire station on St. Catherine street, near Bleury, which was sold for $61.75 a square foot, the assessment was one-third of this amount. The old High School was sold at auction for $1,385,000, and the assessment was about one-third of that amount. The property at the corner of Laurier avenue and St. Lawrence boulevard was sold at $12.50 a foot, five times the city assessment. In fact the city valuation has never been taken as a basis for determining the price which is to be paid for properties to be expropriated.

I will now give the committee the information given me by those who are negotiating for the harbour commission in trying to acquire property by private sale. Take the first case mentioned in the sworn declaration, P-31, P-32, P-33, this property has a frontage of 127 feet on Notre Dame street, 124 feet on Craig street and 31 feet on Delorimier avenue and is entirely built upon. It has a frontage on three streets, it is shallow in depth and contains an area of about 5,000 feet. The first price asked for the property was $75,000. According to my information, this property had been valued by Mr. Julian and Mr. Chaussé at a price of $100,000. There had been numerous interviews with the proprietor and the first option which had been obtained was for $60,000. It was afterwards discovered that half of the property belonged to a man named Gilbert residing in Belgium. After negotiations the property was bought for the sum of $45,000, which was a very favourable price indeed, because in the same locality Molson's, the brewers, had paid the sum of $10 a foot for a similar piece of land, and on top of this, there is the question of the buildings. Therefore, according to my information and the representations which have been made, the price which has been paid for this property is quite correct. To show that we did not rely too much upon the civic valuation, I may say that Mr. Bernier, who made the sworn declaration, gives the civic valuation of this property as $22,500 and he says: My own valuation would be $35,000." That shows that he does not himself place very much reliance upon the civic valuation of the property. Has he more experience than others? Is he entitled to more credit for his valuation? Nobody can say, but according to information given already and prices paid for properties situated in the same locality, I think we are right in concluding that the price of $45,000, paid for a property covered by buildings and situated iu practically the centre of the eastern part of the city of Montreal, is not very high.

As regards property P-491, it has a frontage of 80 feet on Delorimier avenue by 120 feet deep. It is only 42 feet from St. Catherine street, and it is practically St. Catherine street frontage. If the owners of the property fronting on St. Catherine street had acquired this property, we would have had to pay $12 a foot for it. According to the ratio of values, this property is worth $9 a foot. The owner has been asking $8, and the price paid by a representative of the harbour commission is $6.50 a foot. The civic valuation of the property is $18,500, and Mr. Bernier says: "My own valuation would be $38,000." According to the sale of similar properties in the vicinity, the price which has been paid, namely $78,000, is fair and reasonable, and even a low price. We are told by men of experience that if we had gone through the ordinary expropriation procedure we would have paid a higher price for this property, in addition to the cost of expropriation, and we would have incurred all the delays of such a procedure.

As regards property P-492, it has a frontage of 36 feet on St. Catherine street and is within 40 feet of Delorimier avenue on the transfer corner. It has only a depth of 42 feet, all built upon with a meat and sausage business fully equipped, doing a trade amounting to $120,000 a year. The owner asked at first $65,000 for the property, good-will, loss of business, removal of fixtures, and an ice plant installed which would thus be rendered useless and which had cost $12,000. The commission has paid $22,500 for the property itself, and they have allowed the sum of $18,500 for the loss of his business, removal of fixtures, Loss of trade, and so on, which amount certainly could have been obtained by the proprietor in any expropriation proceedings. Mr. Bernier gives the civic valuation of this property as $9,500 and says that his own valuation would be $25,000. This shows once more that the civic valuation can not be of any help in determining the value of properties.

As regards property P-493, Mr. Bernier gives the civic valuation as $48,000 and he says that his own valuation would be $75,000 and that he is informed that the said property has been bought privately by the harbour commission for the sum of $125,000. This is not correct, because the said property is being expropriated; it has not yet been bought, and the price will be determined under expropriation proceedings.

As regards property P-294, it has a frontage of 46 feet on St. Catherine street, and it contains an area of over 3,000 square feet. It is fully built on with a brick building. The price originally asked by the proprietor was $75,000, which was entirely out of the question. By gradually negotiating with the owner, the commission got the price down to $47,500, and the deal was finally put through at $44,500. The building cannot be erected for $30,000, not to speak of the cost of the ground. This building is valued at $35,000 by the same party who valued P-492 at $25,000, although the land is double the size and the building is a brick building, three storeys and basement. Even basing the value on the same valuation, the area being double, the man should have valued this property at not less than $50,000, plus a certain amount on account of the difference in value between the north and the south side of St. Catherine street and the difference in value between a brick building and a wooden building.

I am afraid that some people may have been disappointed because they have been deprived of an opportunity to make some money out of the purchase of certain properties which were needed for the building of the approaches to the bridge. My information goes so far as to permit me to state that the man, whose name is mentioned on the certificate of research which was produced or read by the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) the other day, has been trying to get in touch with the proprietors of a certain number of properties in order to act as their agent and has even promised certain proprietors a large profit in the case of the property being expropriated by the harbour commission. To show that the purchases which have been made are really advantageous, I may say that one of the proprietors agreed to give a Mr. Julien, probably the man whose name is mentioned on the certificate of research, authority to sell his property or to act as his agent. He signed a document setting forth the conditions upon which he was prepared to part with the property. He fixes the price at $12,000, and he says to the agent in effect, "If you cannot get $12,000 you will receive no fee for your services in this transaction." I am informed that said agent asked the harbour commission the sum of $14,000 for the same property which has been acquired by the commission, through its own agent, for $9,500. This is one illustration of the good work which the commission is doing.

Attention has been called to the fact that, according to the certificate of research, no mention has been made of the prices at which these properties have been acquired. In the matter of price, the only indication that appears is the phrase, "One dollar and other considerations". May I observe that a general statement of this kind is nothing new. Wherever properties are purchased on an extensive scale, it is the practice to omit from the deeds any reference in direct terms to the price paid, inasmuch as it would be to the disadvantage of the company or the person making the purchase or, in the case of the crown, the expropriation to have it made public just what was paid in any instance. The price is kept secret between the buyer and the seller, and this avoids any possibility of exorbitant demands being made subsequently for other properties. This is the procedure which, as a general rule, has been followed in connection with expropriations.

It has been pointed out further that apparently all these properties have been purchased in the name of one particular individual. There is nothing extraordinary about this. We are trying to secure these properties privately, and when they have all been acquired it will be easier to transfer them to the harbour commission if they have been purchased through one and the same person. It will mean only one deed of transfer to the commission.

This is the situation according to the information which has been submitted to me, and before concluding I feel bound to convey to the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) my appreciation for the fairness he showed the other evening in stating the case which he presented to the committee.

Mr. ROGERS: I appreciate the compliment, and of course I want to be fair. I want the minister to understand that I am not in any way opposing the construction of the bridge nor the work that is going on. At the same time, when the minister comes to parliament asking for a vote of $12,000,000, it is naturally the duty of someone to ascertain how the money is being spent. When I asked the other night how much of the right of way had been purchased, the minister said none, and he repeated that statement twice or three times. Now he says it is all purchased, to the extent of $700,000. Surely it is time to ask questions in view of such conflicting statements. My hon. friend has not mentioned how much property situated on the site originally planned has been bought and paid for and which is not now required. Perhaps he could give us some information on that point; it would be very valuable just now.

Mr. CARDIN: It is just possible that I was not altogether wrong in the statement I made the other evening, for the purchases have not been completed by the commission. All the work is being done at present by its agents. I admit frankly, however, that when the matter was last before the committee, I was not familiar with all the details of the transaction. I am not quite clear now on the question the hon. gentleman asks, as to how much property has been bought on the old site.

Mr. ROGERS: The minister is aware that the bridge is not being built on the site originally planned. I have here the plan originally made and I can submit it to him. The bridge follows the old survey up to a certain point and then branches off, and considerable property has been bought along the original site up to that point. I expected that the minister would be able to give us some information in that regard to-night.

Mr. CARDIN: I have no information in that respect. I am under the impression that no property has been bought along the line of what is supposed to be the original site. I am informed that when it was discovered that it would be necessary to acquire certain properties which were of relatively high value, and that expropriation proceedings would have to be taken, the engineers of the commission looked over the plans and made some changes in connection with the approaches to the bridge. There has been no change so far as the bridge itself is concerned. The line of approach has been curved, so to speak, and I have no information as to any property purchased along the original site. What property we have bought lies along the line decided upon lately by the engineers.

Mr. ROGERS: My information is that a considerable amount of property was purchased along the old line.

Mr. CARDIN: No. According to the first estimate the expropriation would involve about $1,500,000, or $1,600,000, and when the harbour commissioners were faced with the high prices which they would probably have to pay for five or six properties, they made the change to which I have referred, and which reduces the estimate by some $400,000. So the estimated value of the properties, which was at first put at $1,600,000, has, by the change, of course then approved, been reduced to $1,182,000, and now judging by what we have purchased already we expect that the total expropriations will not cost more than $1,000,000. But I repeat, I am under the impression that no other property has been bought than those which will be absolutely necessary for the building of the approach, according to the line which has been established lately.

Mr. ROGERS: I should like to give my hon. friend some information as to the properties which were purchased covering the old site before the change was made. They are the following:

Those are not required at all in connection with the bridge as now laid out. I have received this list from a reliable quarter, and I cannot understand why my hon. friend has not with him more information in verification of what is necessary for this work. He talks of expropriating this land, but according to his own statement it was acquired by private sale.

Mr. CARDIN: There are a few other expropriations under way at the present time.

Mr. ROGERS: There may be, but it has all been done by private treaty. Then you have the properties deeded by a lady who acknowledges that she has received one dollar and "other valuable consideration". Is it fair to come to this House for $12,000,000 without a clearer and more definite statement to support the application? If there is the slightest doubt that this is not being carried on in the best interests of the harbour and in accordance with honest dealing with the people's money, we shall be in a very serious position. My hon. friend should realize that and make sure that he has been furnished with accurate information, because from what he has been able to place before the committee to-night it will be very hard for me, as I am sure it will be for other hon. members on both sides of the House, to consent to the passing of a bill to place in the hands of a body of men the expenditure of millions of dollars when those men apparently have not used good judgment in the administration of the money that has already been entrusted to them. I think my hon. friend will himself agree with me that he should have a great deal more information and that considerably more care should be taken in order that all the facts may be placed before parliament, because this is the only opportunity we will have in this House of getting any knowledge of how the money is to be spent. We have discovered that the price of the right of way apparently is very exorbitant. It goes without saying that civic assessments are no criterion of property values, especially in the city of Montreal. We are anxious to get the facts. The other night my hon. friend told us that no property had been bought at all; to-night he admits that $750,000 worth has been acquired for the right of way. Now he tells us that no property has been purchased for the original site that will not be required as a result of the change of plans beyond $250,000 worth; but I have just given a list of properties purchased on the old, original site that will not now be required. I for one have not the slightest desire to delay the passing of the bill, but, as I say, this is the only chance for parliament to get reasonable information as to the expenditure of the money asked for.

Last week my hon. friend told us that the city of Montreal was paying one-third and the province of Quebec another third. I think he must be mistaken, for as I understand it the legislature of the province has passed legislation on behalf of the city of Montreal and on its own behalf that each will be responsible to the extent of $150,000. The other night the minister told us that this bridge will cost $15,000,000. I do not suppose he will get the money at less than 5 per cent, or an annual charge of $750,000, and if the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec are to be called upon to pay only $300,000, the Dominion will be responsible to the extent of $450,000 annually. So if we allow this bill to go through we will be called upon to pay a great deal more than we originally agreed to be responsible for, the first arrangement having been for a contribution of a third by the city of Montreal, another third by the province of Quebec, and the remaining third by the harbour board through the Dominion.

The minister is good enough to acknowledge that the evidence I produced the other night was quite correct. I think he will find that the further evidence I have placed on Hansard to-night is equally reliable. Therefore before he asks us to proceed with this bill I hope he will get some definite information on the points I have referred to, and if he does, I can assure him there will be no delay in passing this measure so far as I am concerned.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Chairman, I think it is my duty, in view of the question that has been raised with regard to the price of lots, and that has been dealt with by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to say some words in his support. My own position is this, and I took this position in the campaign, that I was reluctant to see the bridge added on as a part of the harbour works of Montreal. We in Montreal regard the harbour works as a great national undertaking, and if they cannot be justified as a great national undertaking they cannot, in my opinion, be justified at all. As a national undertaking they must be kept clear of any shade or shadow of wrongdoing, any shade and shadow of graft or fraud. When it was represented to me, therefore, as a member from one of the Montreal constituencies, that a higher price had been paid with regard to those lots which have been dealt with specifically to-night by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I made the most careful examination that I could to ascertain the facts, and I am in duty bound to say that I think that the purchases of those lots are free from any wrongdoing, and that the facts which I obtained after a careful inquiry are in entire accord with the explanation made here tonight by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I am dealing now specifically with lots P-31, 32, 33, 491, 492, 493 and 494. In the exercise of their discretion they may have paid a higher price than they possibly should have paid. It may have been that by closer bargaining they could have taken a few thousand dollars off the price, but I will say that, having done everything I could in the way of inquiring and investigating whether there was any shade or shadow of fraud or wrongdoing in connection with those lots, I became convinced as an independent member of this House that there was nothing of the sort.

Mr. McGIBBON: What about the old lots?

Mr. CAHAN: They were not reported to me, and I do not know what lots were bought.

Mr. McGIBBON: There were a quarter of a million dollars' worth.

Mr. CAHAN: In the reports that were made to me, it was these lots I have mentioned that were specifically referred to as matters that were open to debate. With regard to the others, I do not know. But I will say this, that in connection with the Montreal harbour works I think the accounts of that body should be audited from year to year by the Dominion government auditor. I do not think that is a matter that should be open solely and exclusively to a private auditing by the auditor who is engaged and is under the sole direction and control of the harbour commissioners. I think that change should be made.

There is no doubt that if one were to tell the truth—and I dislike to say it for fear of casting suspicion where no suspicion might lie—in connection with the contracts for the construction of the bridge in all its ramifications there has been a very great deal of gossip in the city of Montreal and a great deal of suspicion aroused as to the way in which those contracts were placed. Yet I am bound to say this: I have been as persistent in trying to ascertain the facts as a member could be, and I have not yet been able to find any fact that would warrant me making any charge against that commission. But I would be satisfied, and I am sure the citizens of Montreal would be better satisfied, if the accounts of that board were audited by the Auditor General or one of his representatives.

There is one other matter, and then I am done. In order that the commission may carry out its work as a great national work, I do not think the board of commissioners should be entirely changed with every change of government. The very fact that each succeeding government accepts the resignations of all the commissioners then in office and appoints an entirely new body of commissioners from those of its own political faith—from, if I might use a word that was allowed this afternoon by Mr. Speaker, its own henchmen—tends to discredit the work of the commission in the eyes of many of the people of Canada. If another government does ever come into office, or if a vacancy should occur in the present board of commissioners, I trust that the government will see that one member of that commission is nominally of the political faith of the opponents of the government. There is no reason why the government, being responsible for the work, should not have a majority on the commission, but it would give just a bit more confidence in the commission if there was a minority on it representing the old regime. The board would then carry on always with a majority representing the government, who have the responsibility, but with at least one member of the old regime who knows what has been done and who would act as a binding link between the two successive boards.

Mr. BENNETT: The west is vitally interested in this harbour. It supplies primarily the products from which the tolls are exacted that ensure the payment of the interest upon the securities that are emitted by the board and guaranteed by the government of Canada. It is not conducted, or should not be conducted, as a money-making enterprise. The harbour board is the creature of statute, a statute of this parliament. It issues securities; we pay them the money, and we have not yet any control over that expenditure. The Public Accounts committee of this House may not examine those accounts. We may not appoint a firm of auditors to audit them. That is the law at the moment. During the last session of parliament a large sum of money was voted for the construction of a bridge at Montreal. We are now being asked to vote the large sum of $12,000,000 for harbour purposes. It is true that we get for that $12,000,000, securities which are issued by the harbour board, and those securities doubtless will have the interest paid upon them regularly. But I can say this to the Minister of Marine and to the Prime Minister, there is abroad in western Canada the idea that this harbour board's affairs are not conducted as they should be, that this country should have the right to audit those accounts in order that the rates charged might, if possible, be reduced and thereby render the charges on the shipment of grain from western Canada to the markets of the world cheaper than they are now. That is the impression that prevails. There was, for instance, in one of the newspapers—it was carried as a despatch in many of the newspapers— last fall during the time of the election a very disconcerting paragraph. It indicated that the expenses of the election were being paid out of the funds that were derived out of these transactions. Now that is calculated to have a very injurious effect.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will my hon. friend make a charge to that effect?

Mr. BENNETT: No, but I will tell you what I am coming to. It is too late this session, but if I am here next session I am going to ask for a commission or parliamentary committee to investigate the operations of the harbour board for reasons that I am going to state. Those reports, I say, were circulated throughout western Canada and they found credence in many minds. There is one way in which this impression can be removed, and that is by a full, free and thorough audit by competent men of the accounts of the board, or by the submission of its accounts to the Public Accounts committee of Canada.

Let us look at this question of acquiring land. Land acquired by a public body is, of course, capable of being acquired by expropriation or by private treaty. I do not know what the law of Quebec may be, but in the other provinces, of whose laws I have some knowledge, it is customary to file a plan, and to vest the property, under the Public Works Act of Canada, or under the Railway Act, either in the railway or in the crown, as the case may be. Then there is a procedure whereby the price can be settled before a judicial tribunal or before a board of arbitration. But if private negotiations are carried on without the plan being filed, in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred the price paid would be and is excessive. In this instance the minister has been speaking to-night of expropriations, yet I find, after listening to his remarks, that in many instances there was no such thing as expropriation. What happened was that in a number of cases they proceeded to negotiate by private treaty for the acquisition of lands that were used for the rights of way to this bridge on either side. Now, had a plan been filed and, to use a term in vogue in United States very largely, the land been condemned by the filing of the plan, then the price to be paid would be settled in one of the manners I have indicated. In this instance the proceedings have apparently been carried on by private negotiation or treaty, with the result, the minister asserts, that substantial sums of money had been saved. May I point out to him that the filing of the plan and the condemnation of the land, and expropriation proceedings are what should be done under the law in all cases where the people of Canada are finding the money and a body over which they have no direct jurisdiction is spending it. I submit this axiom with respect to a matter of this kind: No public body that derives its moneys from this parliament should be permitted to carry on its operations except by strict regard to the law, which means that when property has to be acquired it should be acquired by condemnation and by expropriation in the manner provided by law. I submit that to the minister for his consideration.

I said a moment ago that grave suspicions were aroused because of articles that were circulated in the public press, not in one paper but in the public press generally, with respect to the relationship of the construction of these harbour works to the elections. If it were not at this time of the session I would make this motion:

That the accounts of the harbour board be referred to the Public Accounts committee for the purpose of enabling them to be investigated.

One should not make rash promises, for life is uncertain, but I do think that if I were privileged to be in this House another session I should make such a motion in the interest of western Canada. As a matter of fact there should be no necessity for such a motion; such a provision should be made by statute. It should be part of the law that where this country finds the capital sum for great public ports amounting to forty and fifty millions of dollars, as in the case of the city of Montreal, the expenditure of that money should be subject to the scrutiny of the representatives in parliament of the people most affected. I know of no part of this Dominion that is more interested in the harbour of Montreal than western Canada; and if these moneys are not expended with the most scrupulous care, with the most exacting care, with respect to every dollar that is obtained, it follows that the tolls that are imposed for the use of the harbour facilities will not be as low as they otherwise would be, and as a result of that western Canada will suffer. I admire greatly the harbour facilities in Montreal but I find great difficulty in understanding why we are now asked for $12,000,000 while at the same time we are talking of providing further accommodation at Hudson bay that will limit the use of those facilities. In addition to limiting the use of the facilities at Montreal there is this also to be borne in mind: We have created a harbour board at Vancouver. Notwithstanding the harbour facilities that are being created on the Pacific we are now being asked for $12,000,000 additional for Montreal when much of the grain traffic that used to flow to Montreal is now going to Vancouver. I can recollect the first shipment of grain that ever went from Vancouver through the Panama canal; I happened by accident to be associated with the enterprise conducting it. That is not so very long ago, but I have seen that traffic steadily develop and increase until there are now many million bushels of grain going from Vancouver to Europe through that canal. To the extent to which those facilities are used, to that extent there is a less demand made upon the facilities of Montreal. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) may shake his head, but that carries no conviction. I know whereof I speak; I happen to know the facts with respect to this matter and it is not a matter of imagination. I had to do with the first cargo that went by the route in question.

There is one further question to be considered in relation to this matter. American grain is being sent through our ports. That is not an unmixed blessing. Some people say, "Expand your facilities in order that you may get more American traffic". But we have had our grain in western Canada held up because our facilities were being used by American grain. That is not hearsay either, that is a matter of record. Now if we are going to increase these facilities for the purpose of offering them to American grain and American commodities, thereby prejudicing the right to move our own commodities, then the less we do of it the better. However, the important point is the passing of the grant of $12,000,000.

I have given a little more than ordinary business consideration to the harbour of Montreal and its accounts. I have given some little attention to its cold storage facilities, to the charters of railway companies and others with respect to that harbour. I have studied with some little degree of care the various transactions that have taken place by which the present condition has been arrived at. I have seen the votes of this parlaiment last year. I am now called upon as a member of this House to express my approval or disapproval of this vote and I wholly disapprove of it at this moment. I wholly disapprove of it, first because I have no adequate and proper information vouched for by the auditors of this country, the shareholders or owners of these facilities in the ultimate analysis, that will enable me to say that the tolls charged are just and reasonable tolls having regard to the just and reasonable charges that should be made against that harbour. Secondly, I have not had presented to me any evidence that would warrant me in agreeing to a vote of twelve millions at this moment, having regard to the condition of this country. If the movement of grain and other products westward, and the movement of products from Europe through the Panama canal to Vancouver for distribution on the prairie—that is the return cargoes—are to increase as they have, and if the Prince Rupert monument—I call it the monument—is to bear the inscription which was originally intended, obviously these facilities would not be so greatly required. But if indeed it is to be, as it now is, a monument to political necessity and business incapacity, then these facilities may be required. But when you think of that great property being rented for $100 per annum, one can readily understand the circumstances which should bring a blush of shame to the cheek of every Canadian, one can understand why parliament is asked to vote money for this purpose. But I go further and say that if I have the opportunity, I shall certainly demand, in the interests of western Canada, that the accounts of that harbour board are no longer left in the hands of a political body which changes, as the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George says, with each government. The audit of accounts should not be left in the hands of auditors appointed by such a board. These accounts should be subject to the scrutiny in every detail, either of the Public Accounts committee of this House or of auditors independently appointed by parliament for the purpose of safeguarding the expenditures made by the people of this country on Montreal harbour, whose money it is and who are merely advancing it on the strength of securities the interest upon which is defrayed and the sinking fund provided out of tolls exacted to a very substantial extent in the final analysis against the products of western Canada that is in the case of the outgoing traffic—and on the manufactured goods and other commodities that come into the harbour of Montreal for shipment to every part of the country. Every pound of freight that goes to the prairies, every bushel of grain that leaves the prairies and goes to the harbour at Montreal, is making a contribution to those facilities and therefore helping to pay the interest on the $12,000,000 we are asked to advance to-night.

For those reasons, considering the paucity of information at the command of the minister, the lack of information, and the necessity of obtaining this information, I am compelled to accord my disinclination to approve of this expenditure this session. I do think that in the interest of the country as a whole and this parliament in particular, these expenses should be and must be audited or referred to the Public Accounts committee before we conclude to vote money by millions, as we are doing, for this harbour.

Mr. STEVENS: I want to associate myself with the suggestion made by the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett), to this degree at least, that the accounts of the Montreal harbour board—and I rise for the purpose of adding to that the accounts of the Vancouver harbour board also—should be placed under the control of parliament. I will illustrate the necessity of that, or I will add to the illustrations already given, by pointing out that in the case of my own city, Vancouver, I am confident that there has been some very grave and gross extravagance in the construction of the works there during the last few years. I do not wish at this time to attack the department or the harbour commission of Vancouver, but I say, with equal emphasis to that of my hon. friend who has just spoken, that these accounts should be subject to the scrutiny of parliament, and I certainly will welcome the motion he mentions for next session. I suggest to him now that he should add to that, "other harbour boards organized similarly to that of Montreal."

I may say, to show to the minister and the hon. members representing the Montreal district that there is no malice in my mind toward that city, that when the Vancouver harbour commission was organized I had to do with it almost entirely; in fact I introduced the bill, or got the government to introduce the bill, and at my own expense had the original bill drafted. I modelled it after the Montreal harbour board scheme, so that I approve of it. I have great respect of the record of the Montreal harbour board and its accomplishments, but that does not, I think, bar us from offering constructive criticism of its actual administration and suggesting a change in that one respect which I think would bring a great deal more confidence to the mind of the public generally. These great public bodies, spending millions of public money—I speak now particularly of the Vancouver and Montreal harbour boards, whose organization is practically identical—should subject themselves to the scrutiny of parliament through the Public Accounts committee, and I believe also through the Auditor General's department. Perhaps it is too late in the session to deal with a matter of this kind.

but I would suggest to the government that between now and next year the department having to do with these two commissions should prepare a careful presentation for the Public Accounts committee of the major capital expenditure in both harbours during the last four or five years. I know that in the case of the Vancouver harbour it will be difficult to explain some of the extravagant expenditures, and I may also add this: once there is extravagance in connection with a capital expenditure, that saddles for all time, or for a great many years, on that port the necessity for raising an unnecessary amount of money to pay the annual charges in the way of interest and sinking fund. This in turn is raised by the tolls upon the shipping, and thus the rates are increased beyond what they ought to be, if there is extravagance. Consequently it is very necessary to keep those expenditures down to the lowest possible point.

Mr. BENNETT: Would the minister consider this amendment to the bill, which it might be possible to introduce on the third reading:

That the expenditure of the money hereby or heretofore granted shall be subject to audit by an auditor to be appointed by the parliament of Canada and to investigation by the Public Accounts committee of the House of Commons.

I mention that for consideration by the minister, and between now and the third reading of the bill he might be able to agree to it. I am not sure of the exact language which should be used, but that is the sense of what I have in mind.

Mr. CARDIN: I am pleased to agree to the recommendation which has been made by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) and the hon. member for Centre Vancouver (Mr. Stevens): I am sure the harbour commission of Montreal, of Vancouver or elsewhere will have no objection at all to submitting themselves to a more direct control by parliament. We are following the practice that has been established since the corporation was formed, and, so far as they are concerned, I do not see any objection at all to an audit of their books; in fact they have been audited. In the course of last year the Auditor General went to Vancouver and made an audit of the books of the harbour commission. He went to Montreal and made an audit of the books there. I think at the present time these harbour commissions come under the Audit Act.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. BENNETT: Their accounts do not come before the Public Accounts committee. Many things are audited, but they never come before the Public Accounts committee of Canada. Things disclosed before the auditor would not come before the House for acceptance by that body.

Mr. CHURCH: I think it is a matter of congratulation that the port of Montreal is receiving such a large increase in business, tonnage and receipts. The government have spent $44,000,000 on the harbour and now propose to give them $12,000,000 more, making a total of $56,000,000. The Montreal harbour board had jurisdiction over the channel of the river between Montreal and Quebec from 1854 to 1890, when it was transferred to the Department of Public Works. In 1894 the control of the river channel between Montreal and Quebec was transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries where it remains to-day. I think it is the desire of every Canadian that the harbour board shall have money to carry on their work. Any remarks I have to make will not be in criticism of the work because every Canadian desires to see this national port grow and progress. On the deep channel from Quebec to Montreal there was spent in all $44,000,000, which added to the $56,000,000 will make $100,000,000 spent on the Montreal harbour and approaches; add to that the million spent on railway terminals and railway facilities, expenditures amounting to perhaps $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 for railway approaches. I think this port should be taken out of politics and managed from the commercial aspect, and the same should apply to Quebec and Vancouver. The minister should consider whether there should not be a non-political board established to manage the affairs of all the federal and national ports, so that there would not be a change of board every time there was a change of government, thus making for continuity. If the Canadian National Railway board should be a non-political organization, so should our national ports. It is an economic and business question, not a political one. In my opinion, a general act should be passed applying to all these harbour commissions and it should be brought up to date, providing for capital charges, sinking fund, interest and everything else. This board have spent $56,000,000 and they have a sinking fund of one per cent of the loan or only $1,000,000, or one fifty-sixth of the total amount of their capital. This is far too low and it is not proper financing. I do not wish to offer any criticism because I believe the port of Montreal is going to go ahead by leaps and bounds in the volume of business brought to Canada. I believe every assistance should be given the board to function in a businesslike manner. The present commissioners under the party system of control are no better or worse than those under the Conservative administration, and I believe they have the interest of the port at heart. I know some of the commissioners and I believe they give a great deal of their time and attention to this work as did their predecessors. In my opinion this great national port should be conducted from the commercial aspect and taken out of politics altogether.

Another feature of the matter that should be dealt with is this. This question was discussed at a convention of port authorities when they were here from all over the world from England and other places. Some arrangement should be made for a civic boulevard, park and recreation scheme along this magnificent stretch of river and the island of Montreal in unison with the harbour. I hope they will not make the same mistake that was made in regard to the port of New York, where conditions are somewhat similar to those at Montreal. Recently three commissioners were appointed by the state of New York and three by the state of New Jersey to look after the port of New York. They have jurisdiction over 800 miles of territory around the island on the ocean and rivers. They have found that it is too late to reclaim the water front; that they should have started fifty years ago, and I hope this board will not make the mistake that has been made in other places but will redeem forever the whole water front. They should construct a proper boulevard and harbour driveways and parks to provide breathing spaces for the working people of the great city of Montreal. Some time ago at the convention I discussed this matter with the president and members of the commission and suggested that a harbour survey be made on these lines, not only from the business standpoint but from the standpoint of beautifying the waterfront and affording a breathing space in the near future for the masses of the people of Montreal.

The minister should bring down some better capital financing of this particular project. Certainly a million dollars is not enough for a sinking fund for $56,000,000 of debt, and as regards the interest charges and capital there should be some refunding scheme for this debt. The various loans should have a refunding basis. This money is not a guarantee of bonds; it is a direct advance of cost up to $56,000,000 to the board. We should not depend upon the harbour board audit or a departmental audit of the accounts of this board. We should have a professional auditor appointed by parliament to audit the work of this and other boards and report to parliament direct, in order to see that the Canadian people have received value for their money. The Toronto commission do not get one cent from this government; all the money they spend is money guaranteed by the city. All the money spent in that port by the Dominion government since confederation amounts to $8,000,000 although the revenues are from $90,000,000 to $96,000,000 a year. As regards the three ports, Montreal, Quebec, and Vancouver, a general act should be passed and brought up-to-date to provide for a uniform system of audit, a uniform sinking fund, and a uniform method of financing the work, and of refunding and repayment of the loan.

The hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) referred the other night to some sales of land, and he read an affidavit. I believe the port on the whole has done very good work under all governments, but we must not forget that it is operating a public trust. I have confidence in the minister and the department but I believe we should have an independent audit made once a year by someone responsible, not to the board, not to the department, but to the high court of parliament.

I notice the operating receipts of the port are increasing very rapidly. Something should be done to prevent the discrimination which has been brought out in this particular debate against the port of Montreal for the benefit of Portland and other ports in the United States. I do not believe the port of Quebec has ever had a chance. It was a seaport before Montreal. In 1854 Montreal was no more a seaport than Hamilton, Belleville, or Port Colborne on lake Ontario. It was made a seaport by deepening the channel between Quebec and Montreal at an expenditure of nearly $50,000,000. We in Ontario claim that this deep waterway system should be extended to the head of the lakes.

In my opinion Montreal is not what might be called a free port; it cannot be a free port because they have to pay interest and sinking fund but they should try to work up to the time when the port may become a free port. Although Canada receives $4,000,000 in revenue, that is only a small drop in the bucket of what would accrue to Canada if Montreal could be a free port and attract not a thousand but two thousand ships. The largest ports in the world have been turned into free ports; they came to the point where they had to become free ports in order to draw trade and commerce to them. These ships go out to the seven seas and if they draw trade to Canada in the way in which they should draw it, a mere $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 would not amount to very much in comparison with the increase in trade which would help the city people and the farmers of the country as well. I hope the day will come when we shall have a non-political commission in charge of this and other ports. As regards the port of New York where politics had been rampant, a new act was passed whereby the Governor of New York appointed three commissioners and the Governor of New Jersey appointed three, but they control little or nothing. They have had a survey made of the port and they are working up to the time when they hope that great port will be taken out of politics, the same as all the United States ports on the great lakes.

The people of Canada want value for their money and I hope the time is not far distant when the authorities will get together and see if something can not be done to take these great national ports of Montreal, Quebec and Vancouver, which are doing splendid work for the country, out of politics and administer them from a commercial standpoint.

Mr. MacLAREN: What percentage is paid into the sinking fund annually?

Mr. CARDIN: One per cent of the loan.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I drew to the minister's attention the other evening the fact that as things are now we do not know what is being done with our money. The matter came up in connection with some man in Quebec drawing a salary of $12,000 a year, and my hon. friend agreed entirely with the simple proposition that we have a right to know what disposition is made of the money which we either vote directly or grant by way of endorsation. All that he has to do is to provide that the accounts in connection with the moneys which we place in the hands of the commissioners from time to time may be submitted to the Public Accounts committee. There can be no objection whatever to such a provision. If the present practice is not right I am sure the minister wants to make it so.

Mr. CARDIN: I have no very serious objection to that.

Mr. ROGERS: Then let us agree to that and pass the bill.

[Mr. Church.]

Mr. BELL (St. John): Can the minister give us any information as to salaries paid to officials other than harbour commissioners in Montreal and Quebec?

Mr. CARDIN: Unfortunately I cannot give that information to-night, but I will submit it to-morrow.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How shall we best carry our agreement into effect? Would it not be better to insert the amendment now rather than leave it to the Senate?

Mr. MacLAREN: It is desirable to have on Hansard the particulars regarding the salaries. How are we to get those particulars if the minister has not the information here to-night?

Mr. CARDIN: I will make a statement to-morrow.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is satisfactory.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall I report the bill?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We cannot report the bill if the minister is to make a statement to-morrow.

Mr. CARDIN: Is it wise to delay the passing of the bill merely pending the submission of information regarding salaries paid to officials in Montreal?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is not what I have in mind. I am thinking of an amendment which would enable the Public Accounts committee to look into the expenditures of the commission. I am sure the minister wants to incorporate such a provision in the bill, and the sole question is, at what stage it would be most suitable to submit the amendment. I suggest that we leave the bill where it is.

Mr. CARDIN: If I understood the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) rightly, he offered two suggestions. One was that the accounts of the commission should be submitted to the Public Accounts committee and the other was that an absolutely non-partisan audit should be made, an independent auditor being appointed. This latter proposal is already embodied in the law.

Mr. BENNETT: When I made that suggestion I did not have an opportunity to qualify it, having been interrupted. What I was going to point out is this: an audit may or may not mean anything; it may mean merely the production of pieces of paper as receipts for certain moneys expended. What we desire is an opportunity to investigate the accounts represented by those vouchers or pieces of paper, and that can be done only by the Public Accounts committee. When I mentioned the audit I was not clear whether or not the country exercised any control in that regard. I had not read the statute at the moment, but I know now that the government may, if it desires, audit the accounts. But that is not sufficient. What is wanted is an investigation into the accounts themselves, and whatever may be necessary for that purpose should be added as section 6 of the bill. It would save time if the amendment were made now, because if the bill is reported there will have to be a motion on the third reading to refer it back to the committee. I suggest that we leave the bill in committee and in the meantime have the minister draft a suitable amendment. I could draft one myself, but probably it would be better for him to have it done by his law officers, as it would then be satisfactory to himself.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. CARDIN: When the bill was in committee the other evening, it was agreed that all clauses should go through and progress be reported, on the understanding that an opportunity would be given later to discuss the question of expropriation. It was understood between the hon. member for South Winnipeg and myself that the matter should be left in abeyance in order to have that question considered subsequently. Personally I have no serious objection to the suggestion of my hon. friend from West Calgary, but I hardly think it would be well to adopt now an amendment which would have the effect of changing the present system.

Mr. BENNETT: It would not change the system.

Mr. CARDIN: If hon. gentlemen insist, I should prefer to get out of the committee stage and have the matter taken up on the third reading to-morrow. As I have said, it had been understood that we should go into committee again only for the purpose of considering the question of expropriation.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know anything about that understanding, but what has come up to-night turns surely upon that very question; it follows logically from what it is understood we were to consider. There seem to be differences between the hon. member for South Winnipeg and the minister, and we want to have some machinery by means of which those differences can be adjusted. The minister agrees that there should be a remedy, and if an amendment is to be made we may as well make it now. The usual thing is to move such amendments while the bill is in committee.

Mr. CARDIN: Does my hon. friend think it would be fair to insert such an amendment in this bill?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes.

Mr. CARDIN: Then the port of Montreal will be an exception inasmuch as such an amendment would not affect Vancouver. We cannot touch other ports with this bill, and if we adopt the proposed amendment it will leave open to the Public Accounts committee the accounts of the Montreal Harbour Commission, and of that commission alone.

Mr. STEVENS: Let us amend the Montreal bill in this respect and the minister can do the same thing in the case of Vancouver. For my own part, the sooner he amends the Vancouver act, the better.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The committee has overlooked an act introduced by Mr. Fielding, who was then Minister of Finance, and passed in 1923, for the express purpose of supervising just such expenditures as those which are incurred by harbour commissions. The statute in question was assented to on June 30 of that year and I quote from it the following actions:

> The board may inquire into the financial affairs of any commission or other public body the operations of which are carried on by appropriations from the treasury of Canada or which are aided by grants or loans from the said treasury, and shall make any recommendations which in their judgment will tend to a more effective control of the expenditure.
> The Minister of Finance may extend the powers of the board to include inquiry into any other undertaking or service belonging to or receiving aid from the government of Canada as he may deem to be in the public interest.
> Each member of the board shall for the purposes of inquiry under this act have all the power and authority given to the Auditor General of Canada as respects the various departments of the Dominion government.

These are the most important clauses, and—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend, though, I think will agree with me that that was merely a temporary bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think he will find that that is the case. My recollection is we extended the term of the Board of Audit.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This is still part of the statutes of Canada.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It was repealed last year.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think the essential parts are there.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There was a new act last year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, I happen to know how it was brought up again and why. I had been urging on my hon. friend the former Minister of Finance the necessity of a pre-audit, and out of that idea came this audit board. Apparently we are not at one yet, therefore it seems to me all the more necessary that we should rise and report progress.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) has been kind enough to draw my attention to the statute of last year repealing the previous statute, and to tell me that it contains the essential features of the latter. For instance:

> The treasury board may from time to time extend the powers of the board to include inquiry into any other undertaking or service which has received or is seeking aid from the treasury of Canada as may be deemed to be in the public interest.

That covers it.

Mr. STEVENS: No, my right hon friend will notice it does not meet the case at all. It merely says that the Treasury board, a section of the government, may ask the Board of Audit to look over certain acccounts that they themselves are interested in. We are asking that there shall be preserved to parliament the right to examine those accounts, which is obviously different. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has agreed that the suggestion is a sound one. It only remains to draft a clause and incorporate it in the bill. We suggest that in order to save time the committee now rise to give the minister an opportunity to prepare the necessary clause, which can be placed in the bill when it is again in committee, and we can then give it third reading.

Mr. CARDIN: Mr. Chairman, in view of the representations that have been made, I have no objection to move that the committee rise and report progress.

Progress reported.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

The House in committee of Supply, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Labour—Combines Investigation Act, $30,000.

Mr. HANSON: Will the minister inform the House if any prosecutions have been ordered as a result of the investigation under this act into the New Brunswick Potato Dealers' Association?

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Labour): On June 9 a report was made that a combine existed in regard to the marketing of potatoes in New Brunswick. This report 11 p.m. was remitted to the Attorney General of New Brunswick on June 11, 1925, and on September 15, 1925, it was again remitted to the Attorney General of New Brunswick in the new administration.

Mr. HANSON: Has any action been taken by the Attorney General of New Brunswick?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not so far as we are aware.

Mr. HANSON: Has any action been taken by the government? The time limited by the statute has long since elapsed.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No further action has been taken.

Mr. HANSON: Does the department intend to take any further action in the premises?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is left with the Attorney General of New Brunswick to act.

Mr. HANSON: Supposing he refuses to act, is it the intention of the department to act? It has power to do so.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That has not been considered.

Mr. FLEMMING: What was the cost of the investigation?

Mr. ELLIOTT: $7,216.69.

Mr. HANSON: How was the amount distributed?

Mr. ELLIOTT: In this manner:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| McLellan and Hughes: | | |
| Legal services | $2,197 50 | |
| Expenses | 232 08 | |
| | | $2,429 58 |

| 1924-25 expenditure .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | | $1,129.16 |

Mr. HANSON: Who is Mr. Jackson?

Mr. ELLIOTT: He was a special investigator engaged.

Mr. HANSON: Is he an official of the department?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think so.

Mr. BENNETT: He is a lawyer, is he not?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I understand not.

Mr. FLEMMING: I would like to ask the minister in regard to the method of conducting investigations under this act. I have no disposition to go into the merits of this particular case, but my understanding is that when charges were made that certain firms had violated the Combines Act, an investigation was ordered and the parties who were complained against had no opportunity of meeting their accusers and no opportunity of being present when evidence was being taken, no opportunity of questioning or cross-questioning witnesses, and no opportunity of presenting any evidence in their own defence. Is that the policy of the department in conducting investigations under this act? It would seem to be most extraordinary. I remember very well at the time the Hon. Mr. Jones of Woodstock was acting for the accused, and he complained most bitterly that they were not allowed the opportunity to cross-question any witnesses, or to submit any evidence in their own behalf, or to do the things which ordinarily an accused person is allowed to do. I would like to know what is the policy of the department in conducting investigations of this kind. It seems so wholly and absolutely contrary to the principles of law and right and justice. A man accused ought surely to have the chance to see who his accusers are. He surely ought to have the opportunity of cross-questioning witnesses who give evidence, and the opportunity of giving evidence in his own behalf. Then you can have a fair investigation as a result of which you may reach a reasonably proper conclusion. Without that the investigation would be utterly devoid of the merit which an investigation conducted in accordance with the principles of law would have. No one knows at what time some other firm of reputable dealers might be accused of violating the principles of the act, and it seems highly important to know that at least they would be accorded what we would call fair play, an opportunity of cross-questioning witnesses, and of giving evidence in their own behalf. One cannot imagine that the commissioner investigating would not want that very thing done if he wanted all the information, and wanted to go to the very root and bottom of the case and get the facts. Surely that is what he would require to be done. But I understand that in that case it was absolutely not done.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Of course a good deal had to be left to the initiative of the investigator in each particular case. I wonder if my hon. friend is not overlooking the fact that this matter has not yet been brought to trial. Of course at the trial both sides will be represented. I take it that the inquiry up to the present in the case to which my hon. friend refers is merely an investigation by officers of the department, or by investigators on behalf of the department, to ascertain whether or not a combine exists, and whether or not there is such a set of circumstances as justifies a prosecution being instituted. Once the trial takes place the defendant will be represented and will have the right to cross-examine witnesses and to produce evidence on his own behalf, but up to the present no trial of that kind has taken place. It is merely an investigation to find whether or not in the opinion of the department officials and investigators a combine really exists.

Mr. HANSON: I think that the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton has understated, rather than overstated, the circumstances surrounding this case. These gentlemen were charged under the act, and an investigator was appointed. The performance can be characterized, I think, as a star chamber performance. This produce association, or the members of it who were charged, employed counsel, but he was not admitted to the hearing. Witnesses were taken in one by one. The department was represented, I may say, by able counsel, but only one side of the case was heard. It was not even a preliminary examination such as you might anticipate before an indictment is laid. Counsel for the defendant and his witnesses were excluded, and an ex parte investigation was held. I want to ask the minister if that is the policy of the department, so that the public may know in the future what they may expect. By reason of the action of the investigator, the case I think has been robbed of any semblance of fairness. There certainly was not an opportunity on the part of the accused to make out even a semblance of a defence. They were not allowed to be represented, and there was no cross-examination by counsel for the defence of the witnesses produced for the affirmative. The whole proceedings we considered were very unfair. I would like to know if that is the way in which this act is to be administered in the future.

Mr. ELLIOTT: So far as I am aware, no complaint has reached the department that this or any other investigation under this act has not been conducted in accordance with the act.

Mr. BENNETT: Complaints have been made.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend's complaint is the first that I have heard in connection with it. The act practically prescribes the manner in which the inquiry shall be conducted. Section 19 says:

> The proceedings of the registrar and every commissioner shall be conducted in private, but the minister may order that any portion of the proceedings before the registrar or any commissioner shall be conducted in public.

Section 20 says:

> Whenever in the opinion of the minister, the public interest so requires, the minister may apply to the Minister of Justice to instruct counsel to conduct the investigation before the registrar or any commissioner and upon such application the Minister of Justice may instruct counsel accordingly.

I would point out—and I am saying this without having, as I say, considered that question at all before, because I have heard no complaints—that the practice that was adopted in this case was the same, I am told, as that which was adopted some years ago in Ontario when a certain prosecution took place there. I think it was the plumber's case.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No. I was in the plumber's case. Take another one.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am referring to the case where they seized all the documents. Was not that the plumber's case?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That was done in that case. In the plumber's case the documents were seized but those accused were given the right of being present. I think my hon. friend's predecessor held that, although the proceedings were to be private, a man under suspicion should have the right of being represented by counsel.

[Mr. Hanson.]

Mr. HANSON: Especially when the crown is represented by counsel. I am not concerned with the merits or demerits of these controversies but I do submit that to carry on these investigations without giving the right of representation to the accused is not in consonance with the principles of British justice. As to whether complaints have been made or not, the deputy minister can say if the political head of the department at the time in question received many complaints. Because many of the gentlemen connected with these cases were political friends of the government. The government counsel in New Brunswick is one of their most important supporters there, and I will venture to say that he brought this matter to the attention of the then administration in no uncertain manner. I should like to know if there were not complaints brought to the attention of the then minister against the manner of this investigation. The deputy is there and he can inform my hon. friend.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The deputy says he does not recall complaints being made specifically. He says there was a feeling expressed in certain quarters of the nature the hon. gentleman has just stated, but it is the first I have heard of any criticism of that kind. By that I do not mean that there may not have been many complaints, but they were not brought to my notice before.

Mr. HANSON: The hon. gentleman was not here then.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I may say without any hesitation that I cannot see how any injustice would be done, under the Inquiries Act or any other act, by letting everybody concerned, particularly the man who is accused, have the fullest possible opportunity of conducting his defence, just as a man at a preliminary trial has the right of being present and of cross-examining witnesses if he wishes. The man who is accused has a right to a fair trial under any circumstances. I am very glad that hon. gentlemen have brought this matter to my attention and I will see that in future investigations everybody concerned shall have a fair deal.

Mr. HANSON: I am very glad to hear the minister say he will take that course. I assume that the public can take it for granted in the future that in these investigations there will be a full right of defence. That is all we ask for.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): How many investigations were held last year and how many convictions resulted?

Mr. ELLIOTT: In the fiscal year 1925-26 the number of formal applications received was seven. In three cases it was reported that no combine existed. Investigations are still in progress in three cases, and in one case the application has been withdrawn. One was referred to the commissioner and five inquiries were conducted by the registrar, and the application was withdrawn in one case. The number of investigations conducted by the department without formal application was ten. The only convictions that I am aware of are those that took place in connection with the prosecutions of the Nash concern. I think my hon. friend is familiar with them.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): In western Canada.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend knows the results in the Nash case so I need not refer to them again. They were very satisfactory, I think, from the standpoint of the people who complained at any rate, and I hope from the standpoint of the public generally.

Mr. CHURCH: Has the minister read a decision of the Privy Council on the Industrial Disputes Act which would indicate that legislation with respect to combines is ultra vires of this parliament? I raise the question that the money being voted for this purpose is going to lead nowhere. There is no country in the world where trusts are flourishing like they are in Canada to-day. When the British North America Act was passed there were no such things in Canada as combines, gentlemen's agreements, or interlocking directorates, and under that act matters relating to property and civil rights were confided to the provinces. I venture to say that if an appeal is taken on the Combines Act to the Privy Council a judgment similar to that given in the industrial disputes case will be rendered. on the ground that it conflicts with property and civil rights and employer and employee. The Industrial Disputes Act from cover to cover was ultra vires of this parliament, and the same is true of the act we are now considering. The Privy Council held that the Industrial Disputes Act conflicted with property and civil rights in the provinces, interfered with contracts between employers and employees, and dealt with properties wholly in the provinces. I believe the eight-hour day legislation, except as to day labour on Dominion works, is beyond our competence for the same reasons.

In 1921 we were told that the Conservative party were the creatures of the big interests, and that if the Liberal party were returned to power they would turn down the combines. "Death to the trusts" was the slogan of the Liberals at that time. But what action did they take when they came into power? They introduced legislation to put an end to the Atlantic combine and an investigation was made into the question which lasted for weeks. But the ocean combine is still doing business and carrying on a land office business at that. In the United States they have the anti-Sherman trust law and they have been carrying it out most effectively. The coal, bread, and sugar combines were dealt with and the Standard Oil Company was brought to book. Judge Landis fined the Standard Oil Company fifty million for breach of the anti-Sherman act. They secured results over there, and they got some measure of control in the regulation of rates. But what control have we got in this country.? In Canada where we had seventeen banks we have now twelve; various banks have been amalgamated, and we have the manufacturers' trust, the transportation trust, the ocean combine, the bread combine and many other combines. The Liberals said, "We will bring these combines to time if we are continued in power." Did they do so? No. Did they put proper provisions in their charters? No. There is a clause in the Criminal Code with reference to these matters providing for prosecutions of restraints of trade, but how many prosecutions have taken place under that provision in the code? None. How many investigations have they held under the Combines Act? There has been one prosecution out at the coast, the fruit case, but if this case was taken over to the Privy Council I believe the Combines Act would be declared ultra vires. I hope it will be a long Defferred Day in Canada when we will abolish appeals to that greatest of courts, the Privy Council. I am not satisfied with the details of this vote this year or last year. There has been a prosecution of some fruit men, and results of the prosecution went into the lawyers' pockets. That is all the result. More mergers have been consummated under the present government than were ever formed in Canada before. A prosecution of the milk combine was started in Toronto and the judge would not accept the bill of indictment. The milk dealers sat down at a table and arranged it among themselves. They said, "You sell here" and to another man, "You sell there", and so on, and in effect they agreed to enhance prices. One would ask, "What are you selling for", and the other man would tell him, and they all agreed and said, "We will all sell at the same price". They sat down around the table and fixed the prices, and of course in that way those prices were enhanced. A prosecution was attempted; an application was made. I think before Mr. Justice Kelly, and he would not accept the bill of indictment on the crown's advice in 1921.

A little while later, in 1923, the Minister of Labour in 1923, brought down a measure which was passed in this House. Of all the machinery that was ever coined or invented by a government that was the most wonderful. It was a dream; it should have been placed in the Victoria Museum, to show to future generations the activity of the present government in prosecuting combines. What do they require to do? If they believe a combine exists under the act they send a man up to see some of the officials of the Labour department. I would not wish to criticize the young Minister of Labour; my criticism does not relate to him but to the act. You have to get at headquarters to destroy the combine. This act is due to the manner in which our charter, the British North America Act, has been framed. Those who drafted the act had not in mind special agreements, interlocking directors, gentlemen's agreements and lawyers' agreements. I do not believe it is possible that the act will come within the four corners of section 92 of the British North America Act. they have a different constitution in the United States. I fail to see that any useful purpose will be served by spending $30,000 and I venture to say that if the minister got the opinion of the Justice department on this particular act he would find that it is ultra vires for the same reason that the Industrial Disputes Act was declared ultra vires.

Item agreed to.

Conciliation and Labour Act, $35,000.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Would the minister explain the Conciliation and Labour Act?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The amount of $35,000 is the same as voted last year. The appropriation is intended very largely to meet the cost of printing, binding and distributing the Labour Gazette. That is the greater part of the expenditure. From this appropriation also is paid the salary of some sixty to seventy persons employed as correspondents. The salaries are not very large, running from $125 to $300 per annum, and these correspondents are scattered all over the country. Their duties are to report to the department matters they think of interest relating to the industrial situation in their particular community and matters of general interest to the department. Small payments also are occasionally made for special work in connection with surveys, statistics, or conciliation in labour disputes. Travelling expenses for that purpose are met from this vote. It is the same as last year. I could give my hon. friend further details if he wishes. Last year for correspondents the salaries ran to $9,663. Hon. members will see that between sixty and seventy persons are employed. The details of expenditures were as follows:

|---|---|
| Correspondents' salaries | $ 9,663 14 |
| Services, fees, etc. | 3,343 99 |

Mr. NICHOLSON: The item has no reference to conciliation work at all. The item specifies conciliation and labour. I took it for granted it had something to do with conciliation and labour disputes, but apparently it is a miscellaneous item covering printing.

The CHAIRMAN: Carried.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not think we can pass that item so quickly. I thought a question was being asked of the minister, and when the answer is given I should like to make a few remarks.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I was going to say that, in attempting to effect conciliation between the different parties who seem to be getting at variance in labour matters, it is necessary to know about the cost of the various articles in that particular community, what the industrial conditions are, and those are the services for which those correspondents are paid. Then there are four or five fair-wage officers employed. Their salaries are in the civil government estimates, and I think this only covers the expenses in connection with them. In any of these disputes they inquire as to what wages are being paid and what relation those wages bear to the cost of living in the particular community, with a view to enabling them to arrive at a conclusion as to whether or not the wages under all the circumstances are as nearly as possible what are fair.

Mr. MacLAREN: Do I understand the fair wage officers are paid out of this vote?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No. Part of their disbursements are paid I understand.

Mr. MacLAREN: Out of this vote?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, I believe it is out of the fair wage vote.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Is there in reality anything being carried on by the Labour department in the character of practical conciliation as between employers and employees where disputes arise? I know that I would be out of order if I undertook to discuss item No. 258, Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, but I would like to get from the minister a statement that would indicate exactly the position the Labour department is in as regards matters of dispute arising between employers and employees. It must come under one of these two items; if this means what it says, it means conciliation and it must mean as between employer and employee.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Very valuable work is being done by these fair wage officers who are selected on account of the experience they have and their peculiar fitness for this particular work. Their services have contributed much to the prevention and settlement of disputes between employers and employees in a number of cases. They are doing valuable work for the department and for the cause of conciliation.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Will the minister cite for the benefit of the committee something of the character of the work that these men are doing, or a special instance that would give some idea of the work to bring about a better understanding between employers and employees where disputes may have arisen?

Mr. ELLIOTT: In connection with disputes in the coal fields of British Columbia, Alberta and eastern Canada, these men made investigations and gave to that matter close attention with very beneficial results. Perhaps I could give some cases with which my hon. friend would be familiar. I find on reference to the Annual Report of the Department that Mr. Harrison in the Vancouver office was successful in securing an adjustment of wages and rates affecting workmen employed on the construction of the subway at Edmonton which was being built under agreement between the municipality and the Canadian National Railways. The dispute had previously led to a strike of several weeks' duration in mid-winter and had been the subject of protracted discussion between the authorities concerned and the workmen's representatives. Mr. Compton, resident fair wage officer in Toronto, spent a great deal of his time during the winter in connection with labour questions arising on contracts for the Welland ship canal, which are dealt with in the report of the Department of Labour. Thomas Bertrand, resident fair wage officer in Montreal, investigated eleven industrial disputes in the year, involving 258 employers and 3,640 employees. Assistance was rendered wherever possible in securing working agreements between the parties affected. In several instances mediation through the departmental officer was instrumental in preventing threatened interruption of work.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Under what authority are those men working? Is it purely a voluntary effort on their part, or have they any statutory authority behind the work they are doing?

Mr. ELLIOTT: As regards conciliation they work under the Conciliation and Labour Act.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Perhaps it is hardly fair to criticize a new minister, but I should like to say a few words in regard to the department and the way in which it has been conducted in the last few years. It seems to me that the previous minister had as his object very largely to cut down wherever he could, to make all sorts of small economies involving the curtailment of the real work which ought to be done by a department of this character. Anyone who has had anything to do with the publications of the Department of Labour in the United States will know how much more extensive the work carried on by that department is than has ever been attempted by our department in Canada. Years ago when I had to make some investigations in connection with the interprovincial bureau of which I had charge in the west, I found that I could go to the United States bureaux and obtain very full information with regard to almost any phase of labour conditions, but with regard to Canada the situation was almost hopeless. There were very few investigations; we had contented ourselves with reports of studies which had been made in other places. If this Department of Labour is going to take any real part in the solution of the industrial problems of this country, we ought to have a staff of well-equipped investigators continually making researches and studies of various kinds. I can not but contrast this department, we will say, with the Department of Agriculture, where various experiments with regard to diseases and the welfare of animal and plant life are carried on on a most extensive scale. We have in connection with our industries themselves an industrial research council which is doing very fine work in making researches and experimentations along various lines. If it is of so great importance for us to experiment with regard to industries or to investigate the whole situation with regard to plant or animal life, I cannot see why we should not pay a little more attention to the various conditions which affect the labouring population of this country. We have for example our casual labourers drifting about from one part of this country to another. Who knows anything about them? Who knows the reason for their movement? Who is making any attempt whatever to stabilize the labour market. It is all very well, as we note in the next item, to have a department devoted to co-ordinating the employment bureaux, but we shall have to go a great deal further than that. Why should not someone make an examination, for example, into the question of seasonal labour? Undoubtedly in this northern country we must always face the problem of seasonal work. We cannot change our climate. We require a very much larger force of labour in the summer than we do in the winter months and we are content smiply to turn these labouring people out when the fall and the freeze-up come, and allow them to shift for themselves. As individuals they cannot do very much, but if there was a department which was alive to the situation there would be all sorts of studies going on as to how we could dovetail certain types of summer work into certain types of winter work which ought to be developed in this country. According to recent magazine articles, even our friend Henry Ford, who is so versatile, is turning his attention to the employment of some of the factory workers on the farms. At times when factories are slack, the workers can pass to the farms where their services are required. I give that just in passing as a possibility that might be developed by an alert and capable labour department.

There are one or two specific matters that I should like to mention. In the publication to which the minister has made reference we have tables given us as to the cost of living. In connection with our investigations on the minimum wage question before the committee this year we found that the officers of the department had investigated only part of the cost of living; that is, a certain minimum for food, clothing and shelter is recorded, but nothing whatever is said as to the other items which must enter into the matter if a family is to maintain a reasonable standard of living as we understand it. It seems to me that the present way of stating the living costs gives us a very false impression. Frequently this family budget is taken as a basis for estimating certain wage schedules; yet on the face of it, and according to the testimony of officers of the department, it does not really represent the cost that is necessary in order to maintain a family. I would suggest to the minister that those statements be changed and that provision be made for other items that are necessary if a workman is to maintain anything like a decent standard of living.

We have the Labour Gazette, and if I am rightly informed as supplemental to the gazette, there is a publication called Labour Organization of Canada, of which the fifteenth annual report contains a great deal of valuable information. I should like to call the attention of the minister to the very large space given to the discussion of certain aspects of labour that really are not very prominent. Among the regular labour organizations, for example, I find one whole section devoted to revolutionary labour societies, such as the Red International of labour unions, the Communist Party of Canada, and so forth. Some pages of this, I notice, were reproduced in Toronto Saturday Night practically in toto, and already they have been quoted extensively in this House. I submit that we have a right to expect the department to give us a somewhat more balanced account of labour as it really exists. I know there are some people who are very much afraid of the "red menace." I remember two or three years ago the students of Toronto University invented a new yell. Some of the graduates of universities will understand what a college yell is, and this one ran something like this:

> Revolution! Riot! Blood and gore!!
> Down with the capitalist evermore!
> One! Two! Three!
> Who are we?
> B-O-L-S-H-E-V-I-K-I!!

That song was actually reported to the police of Toronto, and I cannot see how it possibly escaped being recorded in this document as one indication of red tendencies prevailing among the students of our universities.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the hon. member tell us when that was adopted as the college yell of Toronto university?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I heard it sung by some of the students of that university.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is not what the hon. member said.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I said they discovered or invented that yell.

Mr. McGIBBON: You said they adopted it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There were some hundreds of students singing it.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is not the university yell.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am sorry if I said anything that would imply that it was. Certainly I did not intend to suggest that it was the official yell of the university of Toronto. But I did hear some of the students shouting it and it goes to emphasize the point I am making.

In this document, which covers the whole country and which is used as a basis for the investigation of labour affairs in Canada, we have one section devoted to labour in politics, and again great prominence is given to a communist organization. I am rather jealous of this because I belong to another organization which at election time is more or less opposed by the communists. Yet I find that our organization, which actually has two representatives in this House, is honoured with two lines out of twenty or thirty pages. I do not think it is fair.

Mr. DUNNING: It is outrageous.

An hon. MEMBER: Out-page-us.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Out-page-us, if you will. I do submit that we should be given more than two lines out of twenty or thirty pages, especially in view of the fact that we have two representatives in the House. It seems to me there is a little bias evident in some other respects in this document. I do not know what officer is responsible for it. A list is given of the labour papers in Canada, among which I notice the Weekly News of Winnipeg, a small publication in which, as it happens, I am interested, inasmuch as it prints most of what I write. But there is another paper much older and with a very much wider circulation, the One Big Union Bulletin, which is not even mentioned in this official list of labour organs in this country. The minister just now calls my attention to the fact that the information that the official paper of the One Big Union is the O.B.U. Bulletin and is published in Winnipeg is given on another page. It is not included in the list of labour papers. This may be an oversight, but I suggest that where a little paper, such as the one in which I am personally interested, is included—and I am glad of that fact—this other and more extensively circulated publication should certainly not be omitted, and this omission would seem to indicate either ignorance of the actual labour situation or a prejudice against particular labour unions. I call attention to these facts not with the idea of denouncing the department, but rather with a view to encouraging a little more accuracy and a somewhat more extensive investigation in dealing with the labour situation in Canada. I am convinced that there would be much less apprehension of and a great deal less prejudice towards certain sections of the labour movement if that movement were better understood by the large majority of the people.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am rather sorry for the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elliott) when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has to come to his defence. I want to ask that hon. member, who prides himself upon being a representative of labour in this House, what he has ever done or advocated in parliament to help any man get a job. I have followed the hon. gentleman's course in this House for four or five years and—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not know whether I am on the witness stand or not. I thought we were discussing an item in the estimates, and I have been trying to point out certain matters in relation to labour which I think ought to be considered. If, however, I am to be questioned and criticized, under cover of this item, because of what I have said either in this House or elsewhere, I shall expect to be given an opportunity of replying to the hon. member.

Mr. McGIBBON: The hon. member will have all the time he wishes to make his reply. As I say, he prides himself upon being a representative of labour in this House and on every occasion that offers he informs us that his one object in life is to help the labouring man. Now, the hon. gentleman has been in this House for four or five sessions, and I ask him, through you, Mr. Chairman, what he has ever done or advocated during that time to help the cause of the labouring men of Canada. As a matter of fact, he has supported policies that have driven tens of thousands of our workingmen from their jobs and many of us to-day are representing constituencies that have been so affected. It is time, Sir, that those who advocate the rights of our labouring men put forward something constructive to help those men earn their daily bread and maintain their families. I have watched the members of this House—

Mr. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, what item are we discussing?

The CHAIRMAN: Conciliation.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am glad, Mr. Chairman, that I am able to stir up something in this House at this late hour. Hundreds of thousands of our workingmen have had to leave Canada to get jobs in the United States.

I represent a constituency where four or five years ago we had industries employing hundreds of men, but to-day those industries are practically at a standstill. All this has been due largely to the policies of this government, supported on every occasion by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I for one get tired of hearing advocated those policies that take the bread away from the wives and families of our workingmen. I hope before this session closes those hon. gentlemen who claim to speak for labour will do something towards insuring our workingmen a living in this country so that they may be able to maintain their wives and families.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Mr. Chairman, while the matter I am about to mention perhaps does not come under this item, yet when we were discussing it last year the Minister of Justice promised to give it his attention. In 1924 the employees of our penitentiaries were brought under the Civil Service Act, and were told that in order to secure the benefits of superannuation they would have to contribute to the fund 5 per cent of all their former pay. The hon. minister's predecessor promised to take this matter up because in several parts of the Dominion he had received complaints of a similar kind. I do not think it is a fair position to require these old employees to pay anywhere from $1,200 to $1,800 to become co-partners in the civil service superannuation scheme, when they may, perhaps, without a minute's warning, lose the gratuity which they have already earned. It was proposed that only a portion of that gratuity should be contributed to the superannuation fund. Has the department done anything in this respect? I may add that I shall discuss the matter again when the estimates of the Department of Justice are under consideration.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The matter is new to me. I understand it relates to the Justice department. I shall be very glad to take it up with the Minister of Justice and see if anything has been done.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister promise before the estimates of the Justice department are brought forward to consult with the Minister of Justice? The Deputy Minister of Justice knows all about the matter.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Mr. Chairman, to revert for a moment to the question I asked the minister before, is there any statutory authority for these investigators or conciliators to act in adjusting disputes between employers and employees?

[Mr. McGibbon.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: Section 12 provides for the disseminating of accurate statistical and other information relating to conditions of labour, the collecting and digesting of all information possible and putting it into suitable form so as to show the conditions of labour, and the conducting of inquiries into important industrial questions upon which adequate information may not be available, and so on. There is no doubt that under this section and sections 6, 7 and 9, there is ample power to prevent disputes by conciliation.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The minister misunderstands my question entirely. I was not referring to the collection of information with regard to the conditions of employment generally; that is purely a statistical matter. His answer leads me to the conclusion that in regard to this item it is not a question of conciliation between employers and employees, but that it deals merely with the collecting of information as to existing conditions. There was a time when the department did real valuable service in effecting conciliation between employers and employees in genuine disputes, but through precipitate action taken a few years ago the department has been placed in a position that to my mind now renders it impotent in cases of that character. My own view is that unless the Department of Labour or the government responsible for the department undertakes to re-establish the Conciliation Act, which would more properly come under item 258—Industrial Disputes Investigation Act—the Department of Labour might just as well go out of existence, because all we are getting from it now is merely a matter of statistics. In that connection may I say that this is one of the departments that creates the multiplicity of statistics that have to be furnished where two or three sets of the same statistics are furnished to different departments of the government. If this whole work were turned over to the chief statistician, I am confident that it would be done much better, and all the information we now get would be available.

So far as the work for which the Department of Labour was really designed, is concerned, namely, to be the medium through which and by which disputes between employers and employees could be conciliated, the situation now is that the department is doing nothing of that character whatever. If there is anything to which a Minister of Labour might direct his attention, it is I think to bring about a common understanding between the federal and provincial authorities by which there could be a federal measure of genuine conciliation, something of the nature of the Industrial Disputes Act, which has been declared ultra vires of this parliament, because the number of disputes that will arise between employers and employees that cannot be dealt with by provincial authority is very great. As a matter of fact having had some little experience on both sides of the question, I would say that the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act as it previously existed, and as it was previously carried out, was one of the best acts this country ever had. Surely there should be some way by which the federal and provincial governments could get together and reach the point where the federal department could be given authority to carry on as they did before. As it is now, when you talk about conciliation or about the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act you are talking about something that in reality does not exist, because the so-called investigators have no legal authority whatsoever to intervene in a dispute between an employer and his employees.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister referred to a man by the name of Mr. Quirk. Would he state what are his duties, where he has been employed, and with what result?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Mr. E. McG. Quirk lives in Montreal. He is not on full time, but is an investigator engaged for special work as the necessity arises, and where there is danger of a dispute or of a strike his services are called into requisition with a view to seeing the parties, doing exactly what is covered by the sections to which I have just referred. If they do not accept his suggestions and his good offices, he cannot force them upon them, but he is the kind of man, and I think the others are of the same kind, who has had a lot of experience in that sort of thing, and I think his offices have been valuable.

Mr. CANTLEY: If I am not mistaken, he was down in Cape Breton a year ago or less, prior to the last strike. Did we have any results following his visit?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, but I suppose he is not the only man who failed to bring about conciliation there.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Will the minister say whether he, as head of the Labour department, has any intention to make a real effort to bring back into existence a general conciliation measure, or is he just going to allow the thing to drift on as it is now, leaving the department utterly impotent in the fact of any dispute that may arise—because that is the situation in reality. If I am wrong I would like the minister to point out where I am wrong, but nothing that has been read so far gives the conciliator or investigator or anyone representing the federal Department of Labour any authority whatsoever to intervene in a dispute as between an employer and his employees, and I submit that if there is anything to which the department should give its attention it is to re-creating the condition that prevailed before the Industrial Disputes Act was declared ultra vires of this parliament.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Does not my hon. friend think that that is covered, and I think very fully covered, by the various clauses, among others, to which I have just referred:

> Where a dispute exists or is apprehended between an employer or any class of employers and workmen, or between different classes of workmen, the minister may, if he thinks fit, exercise all or any of the following powers, namely:—
> (a) Inquire into the causes and circumstances of the dispute;
> (b) Take such steps as to him seem expedient, for the purpose of enabling the parties to the dispute to meet together, by themselves or their representatives, under the presidency of a chairman mutually agreed upon or nominated by him, or by some other person or body, with a view to the amicable settlement of the dispute;
>
> (c) On the application of employers or workmen interested, and after taking into consideration the existence and adequacy of means available for conciliation in the district or trade and the circumstances of the case, appoint a conciliator; and,
>
> (d) On the application of both parties to the dispute, appoint an arbitrator or arbitrators.
> 2. The conciliator shall inquire into the causes and circumstances of the dispute, by communication with the parties, and otherwise shall endeavour to bring about a settlement of the dispute, and shall report the proceedings to the minister.
> 3. If a settlement of the dispute is effected either by conciliation or by arbitration, a memorandum of the terms thereof shall be drawn up and signed by the parties or their representatives.

I quite agree with my hon. friend that it is highly advisable, in every case where it can be done, to try to get the parties together by every possible means, and by means of the best conciliators who can be obtained to endeavour to come to an agreement without a strike.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The minister has confirmed exactly the view I expressed, namely, that in relation to disputes the department is in exactly the same position as any private individual, if both parties to the dispute agree. If disputes arise, conciliators may be appointed, and these conciliators will do all they can to bring the two parties together, but in relation to the character of the work that was previously done by the department, they are helpless. That is the situation, as the minister has put it.

Item agreed to.

Fair Wages and Inspection, $5,000.

Mr. MacLAREN: Would the minister give us some particulars? Does this vote include payment for a fair wage officer for the Maritime provinces? I think the minister is aware that there is considerable dissatisfaction in the Maritimes over the absence of a fair wage officer, and many organizations have made representations on this point. They say there are numerous instances of labourers not receiving the pay which they should receive, and that there is no proper supervision of checking up infractions of the regulations by employers. I would ask the minister therefore if this vote will include the employment of a fair wage officer for the three Maritime provinces.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My understanding is that at the present time there is no fair wage officer who has been resident in the Maritime provinces. I think an officer from Montreal has made several of the investigations that took place down there. I quite agree with what has been suggested, that the fair wage officer should be as representative as possible, and I would take into consideration my hon. friend's recommendation. If it is thought that matters relating to these provinces cannot be covered with the present number of officers or that some distinct representation should be given, my hon. friend's statement will be considered. No complaints, I am told, have reached the department on the subject from the Maritime provinces.

Mr. MacLAREN: May I point out that the officers now employed do not meet the situation satisfactorily at the present time. The labour organizations have given me assurances to that effect and I think that what they say is true. There are two or three fair wage officers in the Dominion at the present time, are there not? One or two in Montreal, one in Ontario and one in the west?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is one in Vancouver.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. MacLAREN: I think there is a good deal to be said in favour of appointing another officer to carry out the general policy of the department, and also to guard the interests of the workingmen in the Maritime provinces.

Mr. CANTLEY: I would ask the hon. gentleman who has last spoken if he thinks it is really necessary that the government pay attention to anything in the Maritime provinces.

Item agreed to.

International Labour Conference, $10,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the minister give us an outline as to what this conference has done?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This conference is just going on and no report has yet come to me of what has taken place there so far. The expenditure under this head arises out of section 13 of the Peace treaty. It is probable that the 1926 conference will deal with various matters.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Who are Canada's representatives?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Doctor Riddell and Mr. Lucien Pacaud are the two representatives of the Department of Labour.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is that Mr. Pacaud of the High Commissioner's office?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was the amount spent last year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The amount spent last year was $9,571.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask what action the Labour department proposes to take this year in order to give effect to the Peace treaty and to the various conventions that have been adopted since that time? We all recognize that in a federal country this is a very complicated problem, but still we are under obligations to carry out the provisions of the Peace treaty. Is there any definite action being taken to-day or is it contemplated in the near future?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Conferences have taken place, and are contemplated in some other cases, with the various provinces in regard to carrying out the terms of the convention, but nothing of a very concrete character has yet been arrived at.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Or will be.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This matter has come up again and again, for example with regard to the eight-hour day, and matters of that kind. We entered into a solemn obligation and this treaty is as binding on Canada as it is upon any of the other countries involved. We are under a solemn obligation to carry the treaty out and yet the minister stands here to-night and says there is nothing very definite to announce. It seems to me that is not a very satisfactory attitude for him to take. I would ask him if some definite action could not be taken this year that will enable us to carry out fully our international obligations in this regard.

Mr. ROGERS: Give him a chance. He is new to the job.

Item agreed to.

Joint industrial councils, $3,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Several years ago immediately after the war, a great deal was said with regard to industrial councils, and a number of publications were issued by the department dealing with the Whitley plan. I should like to know what this $3,000 is used for—what has been done and what is proposed to be done?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Part of this allowance covers the payments that have been made to the gentleman to whom I referred a moment ago, Mr. E. McG. Quirk, who at various times has conducted special investigations for the department. He is not paid a salary and the amount asked is to cover living allowance and transportation expenses. The expenditure for the last fiscal year was $2,175.94.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: These amounts then are not being spent for the purpose of setting up industrial councils, they are being spent on general conciliation work? Am I correct?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They are councils as between employers and employees.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Surely the minister does not intend to give the committee to understand that when a man goes out to try to conciliate two parties he is setting up a permanent institution that should be generally recognized as a joint council? I ask the minister whether it is his intention to set up anything like a Whitley council or to attempt to do so in the civil service itself? There at least since we are an employer of labour we might become a model employer.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No decision to that effect has been reached up to the present time, but it is just possible that the work of this particular branch will be enlarged in the future. I am hoping that such will be the case.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It seems to me that we might expect the minister to go further than that. A year or so ago we had a strike by certain postal employees in a number of eastern cities. We were then told that it was a dreadful thing for civil servants to strike. But there seems to be no means by which the civil servants can bring their grievances before any tribunal and thus effect a settlement. A great many private industries have already set up joint councils on which there are representatives of both the employer and the employees, and these joint councils have, we are told, done something to settle minor disputes. They have done a great deal to allay friction. If we take the position that the civil servants are in a somewhat different position from other employees and ought not to resort to a strike or anything of that kind, then there should be the most adequate provision for councils by which they could bring their grievances to the proper authorities. I should like to see this plan carried out, especially in such an institution as the postal department. I would ask if the minister could not use his departmental machinery to make inquiries and investigations with regard to that matter, and to induce the department and the cabinet generally to adopt this arrangement as a means by which we could more effectively carry on the public service.

Item agreed to.

Technical Education Act, $3,000.

Mr. HEAPS: I see lower down on this page of the estimates a sum of $1,100,000 for technical education in Canada. Will the minister be good enough to give us a brief outline of what that is?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is an expenditure of money that is apportioned among the provinces under an agreement. The act is the Technical Education Act, and it provides as follows:

(1) For the purpose of promoting and assisting technical education in Canada, the following sums, aggregating ten million dollars, shall be appropriated, and paid out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada during each fiscal year for the period of ten years beginning with the year ending the thirty-first day of March, one thousand nine hundred and twenty, namely,—

(a) During the fiscal year ending the thirty-first day of March, one thousand nine hundred and twenty, the sum of seven hundred thousand dollars;

(b) During the fiscal year ending the thirty-first day of March, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-one, the sum of eight hundred thousand dollars;

(c) During the fiscal year ending the thirty-first day of March, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-two, the sum of nine hundred thousand dollars;

(d) During the fiscal year ending the thirty-first day of March, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three, the sum of one million dollars;

(e) During the fiscal year ending the thirty-first day of March, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-four, the sum of one million one hundred thousand dollars; and the like sum of one million one hundred thousand dollars during each of the succeeding fiscal years until the expiration of the fiscal year ending the thirty-first day of March, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-nine.

(2) Such sums, subject to the conditions of this Act, shall be allotted and shall be paid quarterly as grants to the Governments of the several provinces as follows:—

(a) The sum of ten thousand dollars shall be paid in each year to the government of each province;

(b) The remainder of the appropriation for each year shall be allotted and paid to the governments of the respective provinces in proportion to the population of the said provinces respectively as determined by the last federal decennial census.

Item agreed to.

Public Printing and Stationery—printing, binding, etc., the annual statutes, $10,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does the minister not think we have done well enough? We have finished Labour and we are going into a new department. It is half past twelve.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We will take one item of soldiers' service re-establishment.

Soldiers' civil re-establishment—capital, $10,000.

Item agreed to.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then one item of the Health Department.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh, no.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 12.28 a.m. (Tuesday).

The House met at two o'clock.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following letter:

Ottawa, June 15, 1926.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Right Hon. F. A. Anglin, acting as deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-day at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

F. C. L. PEREIRA,
(for the Governor General's Secretary)

RAILWAY COMMITTEE

Mr. FRANK S. CAHILL (Pontiac) presented the fourth report of the select standing committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

STANDING ORDERS

Mr. RENE MORIN (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville) presented the second report of the select standing committee on Standing Orders.

He said: I beg to move that the second report of the select standing committee on Standing Orders be concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER: By leave of the House.

Mr. CAHILL: I ask that this report be allowed to stand, as I wish to present a letter to the House before the report is dealt with.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands.

Motion stands.

TARIFFF ADVISORY BOARD

RECORD OF EVIDENCE FOR INFORMATION OF MEMBERS OF HOUSE

On the Orders of the Day.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): Is it the intention of the government to have the evidence given before the Tariff Advisory Board made available for the members of this House?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): My colleague the Minister of Finance is taking up that matter at the moment with the chairman of the board, and he will have something to state in reply to my hon. friend a little later.

CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES

On the Orders of the Day.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): I wish to ask a question in reference to the report on the salaries of the civil servants. I understand that action has been deferred pending the appointment of the two other commissioners, there being only the chairman at the moment. There being no Civil Service Commission fully appointed, will the question of salaries have to remain in abeyance until the next session of parliament?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The matter need not necessarily remain in abeyance until the next session of parliament; I hope the commissioners will be appointed long before that time. I think I can say to my hon. friend that any delay that may be occasioned will not cause any loss to the civil servants in any particular.

PRIVILEGE—MR. MULLINS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. H. A. MULLINS (Marquette): Before the orders of the day are called I wish to bring up a personal matter. The correspondent of the Free Press sent out from the press gallery a statement that I was not in my seat with certain other members of the House last Friday night when the Hudson Bay railway was under discussion. That statement is untrue and unfair, and I have been subjected to a good deal of criticism in western Canada for being absent on that occasion. I am in receipt of letters from numerous parties in the west asking why I was not there as champion of the cause. I appeal to the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), to my hon. friend from Springfield (Mr. Hay) and to my hon. friend from Neepawa (Mr. Murphy), who will certainly state that I was present in my seat all day Friday, and it is most unfair that a statement of that kind should be hurled against a member of the House.

REPORT

National Research Council, report of the president and financial statement for the year 1924-25.—Mr. Robb.

SUPPLY—MOTION OF WANT OF CONFIDENCE

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into committee of Supply.

Mr. FRED DAVIS (East Calgary) moved:

That the Speaker do not now leave the chair, but that it be resolved that this House, because of the failure of the government to implement promises contained in the Speech from the Throne, and for other causes, has no longer any confidence in the present government.

He said: At the opening of parliament we were presented with a Speech from the Throne forecasting certain legislation which was to be introduced in this House. The Speech from the Throne states that legislation will be enacted under which the natural resources of the province of Alberta will be restored to that province, and in an answer to a question I addressed to the Prime Minister yesterday we were assured that the government has no intention during this session of carrying out the promises it made in that Speech from the Throne. Following the Speech from the Throne an agreement was entered into between the government of Alberta and the government of the Dominion of Canada, which agreement was signed by ministers representing both governments. I submit that that agreement should be lived up to. If we flout the will of parliament and deceive the people we sacrifice that prestige parliament should enjoy in the estimation of the country. That is my reason for this motion. Having been a member of the legislature of Alberta, I in common with the present Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) and other members on the government side of the House, placed myself on record as favouring the restoration of the natural resources of Alberta to that province and with them supported a memorial to that effect addressed to this parliament. Now that that question is before the House I hope each member will give consideration, not merely to the question of the restoration of the resources to the province, but also to that of the fulfilment of the promise this government made to the government of Alberta. Upon that one question I desire through the medium of this motion to place every member of the House on record.

Mr. F. P. QUINN (Halifax): I offer no apology to the House for having my name coupled with that of the hon. member for East Calgary in introducing this motion. We have been in session since the 7th of January, and up to the present time, looking over the record of this government, what do we find? I submit that we can find very little, practically nothing, in the way of legislation. There is only one thing I desire to say in seconding the motion, and that is in connection with the matter of the appointment of the royal commission to investigate Maritime rights or the wrongs of the Maritimes? I will not say anything whatever about the personnel of that commission, but I wish to criticize the appointment which we have seen announced in the papers during the past few days of the two joint secretaries of that commission. The government has appointed as secretaries of that commission two gentlemen in the province of Nova Scotia, who are worthy, estimable and good citizens in every way, but who took such a stand against the Maritimes and what we call Maritime rights during the last campaign that I submit, Sir, their minds are too prejudiced in the matter and that they should not be appointed or permitted to take part in the deliberations of that commission. I submit if one secretary is to be selected from amongst those who were outstanding in criticism or opposition to Maritime rights the other appointee should be one who is sympathetic towards the matter. I claim it is unfair to have two gentlemen of the same political stripe on that commission.

Mr. T L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): In referring to the return of the natural resources of the province of Alberta, I wish to say that the Minister of the Interior, on the 18th March last, placed on the order paper a resolution approving the agreement made between the Dominion of Canada and the government of Alberta respecting the transfer of public lands in the province of Alberta.

The government made this announcement in the Speech from the Throne:

> Your attention will be invited, among other measures, to a bill to provide for the transfer to the province of Alberta of its natural resources.

On the 18th March a resolution was placed on the order paper by the Minister of the Interior to bring about this legislation. It practically has been dropped as the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of the Interior announced in the House. The Prime Minister only yesterday repeated the statement.

Mr. J. J. DENIS (Joliette): I rise to a point of order. My point is that the subject matter of the resolution standing on the order paper in regard to the agreement made between the Dominion government and the Alberta government cannot be debated now under this resolution.

Mr. CHURCH: I wish to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister announced some time ago that the government were not going to go on with this resolution to which the hon. gentleman now refers. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) said the same thing a month ago. The point is not well taken for May at page 249 says with regard to anticipation:

> In determining however, whether a discussion is out of order on the ground of anticipation, the Speaker must have regard to the probability of the matter anticipated being brought before the House within a reasonable time.

I am not discussing the motion on the order paper. I am supporting the amendment now before the House and not touching the text of the resolution referred to.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): I submit that the point of order is not well taken. We are not discussing one way or the other the merits of the resolution now standing on the order paper; we are discussing the failure of the government to implement its pledges, its promises. It would be a most extraordinary thing if a vote of lack of confidence on such grounds could not be moved simply because the government keeps on the order paper an order which it has no intention of going on with and the merits of which are not challenged in the present discussion.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Perhaps I would not have raised the point of order personally, but as regards the discussion of the matter I think the point is well taken. I would refer Your Honour to Beauchesne at page 38, section 146, under rule 13 relating to discussions taking place before going into supply or on motions that are moved before going into supply. This section concludes:

> Provided that the discussion and the amendment—

The discussion as well as the amendment.

> —if one is moved, shall not relate to any decision of the House during the current session, nor to any item of the estimates, nor to any resolution to be proposed to the committee of Ways and Means, nor to any matter placed on or whereof notice has been given in the order paper.

Therefore no discussion can be allowed before going into supply when it relates—that is the language—to a matter placed on or whereof notice has been given in the order paper. The discussion which the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) has started relates to a matter which is on the order paper.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I have very few words to say on the point of order. The point of order must go merely to the matter of the discussion and not to the matter of the amendment itself. It is too manifest for debate that the amendment itself is in order. As to the discussion, it may be under the portion quoted by the Minister of Justice that the merits or demerits of a motion now on the order paper cannot be reviewed. I do not think the speaker though has got so far as to discuss the merits or demerits of the motion and consequently he would be in order. But is it not most extraordinary that the government, having abandoned a motion by official and specific renunciation in this House, can by retention of that motion obstinately and worthlessly on the order paper effectively shut out from the discussion of this assembly any matter related to it? I am indeed surprised that the government would suggest that they could be justified in taking such a course. If they are sincerely of the view that while they retain this on the order paper after having renounced it in this House as any portion of government policy it does interfere with discussion, clearly it would be their duty immediately to ask for its removal from the order paper.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does any other hon. member desire to speak on the point of order? I will now give my ruling. I read in Beauchesne page 38, No. 146:

Whenever an order of the day has been read for the House to resolve itself into the committee of Supply or the committee of Ways and Means, the motion "That the Speaker do now leave the chair" must be proposed, except in cases provided by rule 17c. When such motion is proposed, it shall be permissible to discuss any public matter within the powers of the federal parliament or to ask for the redress of any grievance, and it is not necessary to move an amendment for that purpose; provided that the discussion and the amendment, if one is moved, shall not relate to any decision of the House during the current session, nor to any item of the estimates, nor to any resolution to be proposed to the committee of Ways and Means, nor to any matter placed on or whereof notice has been given in the order paper.

This is based upon Bourinot, May, Redlich and Bourke. In the present instance a motion has been moved that I do now leave the chair for the House to resolve itself into committee of Supply. To that motion an amendment is moved expressing the view that the government, not having implemented its promises, has lost the confidence of the House. I give the amendment in general terms. The amendment itself is drafted according to the rules and it is in order. But the discussion as stated in Beauchesne, according to Bourinot, May, Redlich and Bourke, must not bear on questions which are still standing on the order paper. The hon. member for Joliette has mentioned that there stands on the order paper in the name of the government a resolution dealing with the return to Alberta of its natural resources. That is the point at issue. Can any hon. member, upon an amendment or a motion which is itself in order, discuss a question standing on the order paper? On that point I may quote from May at page 248:

A motion must not anticipate a matter already appointed for consideration by the House, whether it be a bill or an adjourned debate upon a motion. A motion is equally out of order, if it anticipates a notice of motion for leave to bring in a bill that includes a subject proposed to be dealt with by the motion. A matter already appointed for consideration by the House cannot be anticipated by an amendment, while a notice of motion as long as it remains upon the paper, whether for a specified day or not, prevents its subject-matter being discussed by means of an amendment to a motion or of a motion for the adjournment of the House, including a motion under standing order No. 10.

The same view is held by Bourinot, at page 320:

An amendment cannot anticipate a notice of motion on the order paper.

It is true, as I have ruled, that the motion in amendment presented by the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Davis) is properly drafted and in order; it is broad in its terms. But discussion upon that amendment must bear on the subject and must not impinge upon nor anticipate a question already appointed for consideration by the House.

I find in Denison's and Brand's Decisions on this point several instances confirming the view I have advanced. For example, at page 118, under the caption "Anticipating Discussion," the following decision is given:

Mr. Speaker said it was out of order to discuss amendments to a bill which would come before the House at a subsequent period of the evening. . . . In a debate on the arrangement of public business, it is not in order to discuss a bill which is to come on at a later period.

At page 119 this decision is given by Brand:

It is irregular to discuss a motion on the paper for a future day.

The question in this instance had reference to the treaty of Washington, and it bears an analogy to the present one. According to Brand:

An hon. member having placed a notice on the paper cannot, while another subject is before the House, refer to the subject of that motion, even under the plea of illustration.

Brand again, at page 119:

When a bill is before the House it is not competent, by a motion on the same subject, to anticipate discussion.

Denison goes still further:

When the further consideration of a bill is postponed it is not in order, by moving a resolution in the interval, to raise the whole question.

I rule, therefore, that while the proposed amendment is perfectly in order the discussion thereupon must be confined entirely to the subject of that amendment and must not embrace any question which is already on the order paper.

Mr. CHURCH: I accept your ruling on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I have no wish in view thereof to discuss the amendment further, as I hope to have an opportunity later on of dealing with the whole Alberta resources question. However, I wish to point out that Sir Erskine May at page 249, twelfth edition, qualifies the rule respecting anticipation as follows:

In determining, however, whether the discussion is out of order on the ground of anticipation, the speaker must have regard to the probability of the matter anticipated being brought before the House within a reasonable time.

The Speech from the Throne contains this definite statement of government policy:

Your attention will be invited, among other measures, to a bill to provide for the transfer to the province of Alberta of its natural resources, and to a bill amending the Dominion Elections Act.

This promise, although not carried out, was followed on March 18 by a resolution, still on the order paper, to turn the resources over to the province. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart, Edmonton) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) both intimated that this resolution would not be gone on with, and so did the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) in making his statement of policy on the orders of the day to refer the validity of the Alberta Act, 1905, and of section 17 particularly, to the Supreme Court, notwithstanding that its validity has never been questioned. The Prime Minister yesterday on the orders of the day, in answer to the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Davis), stated that it was not the intention of the government to make this transfer at the present session. There can therefore be no question of anticipation under these circumstances. Alberta should get her resources free of all conditions whatever.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Before I discuss the amendment, may I direct the attention of the House to the circumstance that this is the first notification which the government has had of any intention on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to move a motion of this kind. It is a courtesy of long established usage and precedent that when a motion, in the nature of a want of confidence motion, is to be directed against the government, the leader of the opposition or some of his party notifies the ministry in advance of such intention. Hon. gentlemen opposite have not seen fit to follow this practice on the present occasion, and inasmuch as they must undoubtedly be aware of the custom, I can conceive of only one reason for the course they have adopted, that is the hope that by springing a motion of this kind suddenly, when all their members are present while some on the opposite side are possibly absent, they may be able to score against the administration. If that is the motive of my hon. friends, the sooner they score the better. If this administration does not enjoy the confidence of the House of Commons, the sooner we know it the better, and we will carry our appeal from parliament to the country.

This motion in its language is as general as any motion can possibly be made. It specifies nothing in particular, it simply alleges that the government because of failure to implement promises contained in the Speech from the Throne, and for other reasons which are not specified, has no longer the confidence of the House. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we have not yet reached the conclusion of this session and that it is therefore impossible for the members of the House to say whether or not the government will implement the various promises contained in the Speech from the Throne. No one can make such an assertion until the last word has been heard in this House with respect to the several measures which have been mentioned in the Speech. If hon. members will read the Speech from the Throne they will, I think, be agreeably surprised to discover to what extent the government has carried out the promises therein made. I will make this statement without fear of contradiction, that never since this parliament has been in existence has it been possible, owing to one circumstance or another, for governments to fulfil all the undertakings they have set forth in speeches from the throne. The session is entered upon with every intention on the part of a government to carry out its entire programme as outlined in the Speech, but until the government, as the session proceeds, discovers what may be possible, it is not in a position to make any final statement with respect to every item in the forecast.

One item has been mentioned, and only one, in regard to which the government apparently, according to hon. gentlemen opposite, is not about to make good its undertaking. That is the item which appears as follows in the Speech from the Throne:

> Your attention will be invited, among other measures, to a bill to provide for the transfer to the province of Alberta of its natural resources.

If I wished to take that language literally I could submit to this House that it has been fulfilled—the attention of the House has been invited to the measure.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not saying that I wish to take it literally; I do not intend to, but if I did I could point to the fact that the attention of the House has been invited to that measure. However, when that language was put in the Speech from the Throne—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would remind the right hon. gentleman I have just ruled that it is out of order to discuss the merits or demerits of the resolution he is referring to.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to discuss the question of the transfer of its natural resources to Alberta. But I would ask your ruling as to whether or not I would be justified in informing the House why that particular measure is not being proceeded with at the present time.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the only point I should like to know whether I am free to speak on.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, I would support the Prime Minister's contention in every particular. I surely feel he has an absolute right to speak on that restricted point.

Mr. SPEAKER: According to all the authorities I have quoted, it is not permissible to discuss the merits or demerits of a question which is already on the order paper. Of course, if both sides agree that the right hon. gentleman may discuss the particular feature of the question mentioned by him, it is permissible.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, if there is any objection, as there appears to be to my making any mention of that particular point I shall refrain from so doing. I have no desire to go beyond the rules in the slightest degree. However, hon. gentlemen will be able to conclude for themselves the reasons that have caused the government to indicate the course with respect to this particular measure that has seemed advisable to it.

Now, if one looks at the Speech from the Throne, the outstanding undertaking is that the government hoped in the course of this session as a result of its past policies and its present measures to be able to afford substantial relief to the taxpayers of this country, that it hoped to be able to lower the customs tariff on commodities that are in general use by the people and that it hoped to reduce taxation in other ways. The House knows that after very considerable discussion in this chamber the government has succeeded in reducing the duty on automobiles by 15 per cent.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But we have.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wonder that hon. gentlemen opposite groan; that is where the shoe pinches. What the people of this country are interested in at the present time is a reduction of taxation, and that has been the great objective of this government. Session after session we have made reductions, and this session we have made possibly the greatest measure of reduction in taxation that has ever been made in any session of parliament. On automobiles of $1,200 value and under we have reduced the customs duties by 15 per cent. In addition to that, with respect to automobiles of that value manufactured in this country, we have removed the war tax of 5 per cent, giving consumers the corresponding benefit. We have removed the taxation which was put on receipts, a form of taxation which had come to present many difficulties to retailers throughout Canada, and which meant an additional burden to the people themselves. There has been a reduction in the income tax all along the line. Besides that we have removed taxation in other forms; for instance we have undertaken to say that on July 1 this year we will return to penny postage in the Dominion, and we intend to see that that promise is implemented. I might mention other things in the same category, in all of which the people are most vitally interested; but I will not take up the time of the House in going over the record of the administration in that regard.

I should like to draw the attention of the House to one remark made in the course of this debate, namely, that a great deal of time has been spent this session and very little accomplished. May I ask, who was responsible for the time that has been consumed? Hon. gentlemen opposite spent nearly a month at the beginning of the session discussing whether or not the present administration was to be permitted to carry on.

Mr. MANION: Your party did just as much discussing as ours.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In the course of the discussion on the tariff, another debate lasting a month, more or less, took place, for which hon. gentlemen opposite, I think, ought to share the main measure of responsibility.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that to carry on government this session has not been an easy matter for the administration,—

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —but I do say that no other party or group in this parliament could have carried on at all. I think the administration deserves the greater credit in that, under circumstances such as we have been confronted with, we have been able to carry on so successfully, and to give to the country the benefit of so much useful legislation.

May I repeat in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that this motion prefers no specific charge against the government in any way; it is a general want of confidence motion. It means, of course, that if this motion carries the government will have to consider the next step to be taken.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Let me tell hon. gentlemen opposite at once the step that will be taken. If this government does not enjoy the confidence of the House it will lose no time in asking for a dissolution of parliament and making its appeal from the House to the country.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. W. T. LUCAS (Camrose): Mr. Speaker, it had been my intention not to let parliament close without making a protest against certain promises contained in the Speech from the Throne not having been carried out, and it was only due to the fact that I was endeavouring with some of my colleagues to draft a resolution to-day that would not be challenged on the ground that it dealt with a resolution now on the order paper that I was not in my seat this afternoon to raise this question myself.

Now, every hon. member is well acquainted with the situation we faced at the beginning of the session. At that time I did not see eye to eye with the majority of my colleagues as to the party that should be called upon to form the government. However, I was overruled. I then stated to them that I was down here to get certain legislation, and so long as the government would implement the pledges contained in the Speech from the Throne I was prepared to stand behind and assist it to carry on. Had the government done so, I would still consider it my duty to stand behind it. However, one of the questions that vitally affects the people of Alberta, a question in which they are all keenly interested, whether they be Liberal, Conservative or Progressive, is the return of the natural resources to their province. We have discussed this matter with the government, and some few days ago, I think it was on June 2, the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) made a statement to the House. On the day following I asked the government if they would not reconsider their position and bring in a measure to transfer the natural resources to the province of Alberta. The answer is on Hansard.

We have not taken the government by surprise in this matter. We have discussed it with them very freely. We did so yesterday, and we were told that nothing was going to be done this session, and therefore, Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, while I have felt that I was in duty bound to support the government so long as they were willing to do their part, now that they have failed so far as Alberta is concerned in that one question that is vital to us, I feel that I am relieved from that responsibility, and I shall have to take my own course. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that if it had not been for a signed agreement, an agreement which was signed on January 9, this government would never have been in power to start with.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend has referred to some signed agreement. I do not know to what he is referring.

Mr. LUCAS: I will tell you. I hold in my hand, Mr. Speaker, an agreement made on the 9th day of January, 1926, between the government of Canada and the government of the province of Alberta. It is signed by the Hon. Ernest Lapointe and the Hon. Charles Stewart, for the Dominion of Canada, and by the Hon. J. E. Brownlee and the Hon. Vernon W. Smith, for the province of Alberta. It is a signed agreement to deliver the natural resources to the province of Alberta.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not know whether my hon. friend is in order in alluding to the natural resources, but if he is permitted to do so, and is going to read one agreement, I would ask him to read also the supplementary agreement which sets forth the exact terms of the bills which were to be brought into both Houses.

Mr. SPEAKER: In view of the authorities cited and having regard to parliamentary jurisprudence, I cannot allow the agreement to be read. I assume it refers to the natural resources.

Mr. LUCAS: It was not my intention to read this agreement, Mr. Speaker, but the Prime Minister asked me to what agreement I referred and naturally I had to state what it was.

I do not know that there is any need of going into a long discussion of this matter, but the hon. members from Alberta feel that they cannot go home to their people without having found a satisfactory solution for it. While I would prefer to have brought in a resolution which would have dealt specifically with this question, seeing that it is already on the order paper and cannot be discussed, a vote of want of confidence is the only way in which the matter can be dealt with, and I am therefore prepared to support the resolution.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no matter what colour my hon. friends opposite may place on their resolution introduced to-day to show that they at least have no confidence in the government, the government realize full well what is behind the resolution. From the day parliament met until this very hour, even up until yesterday, the question discussed most in this House was not a question of any particular item mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, but a question as between high tariff and low tariff. That was the question that was brought forcibly before the country by hon. gentlemen who lead the opposition, and it was upon the question of high tariff or low tariff that they challenged our right as a government to carry on. We gave them our answer on the 15th of April when we brought down the budget, when we reduced the duty on automobiles, when we made reductions all along the line in the income tax, when we removed altogether the receipt tax, when we removed the sales tax from certain items in which the people of this country were most interested, and when we announced that on the 1st of July we would restore penny postage. Hon. gentlemen opposite may challenge the government's right to carry on, but I submit that the country is not going to be fooled by this resolution presented to-day. We are prepared as a government to have this question settled once and for all, and the sooner we have the vote and the sooner we know whether the policy of high and higher and still higher tariffs is going to prevail in this country, or the policy of the government, which is a policy that has led to the encouragement of our trade all over the world, the better it will be for Canada.

3 p.m.

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, a very peculiar situation is before the House. My hon. friend from East Calgary (Mr. Davis) has moved a resolution of a very general character and in the course of his address he stated that the ground of his moving it was one subject, and one subject only. Your Honour has ruled that that subject cannot be a matter of discussion in this debate, so that so far as this resolution is concerned, according to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, the matter referred to by the hon. member for East Calgary is eliminated from consideration by this House in this debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): My hon. friends intimate that I am not correct. Let me say this: If the Speaker's ruling is right, then the one, and only one, question that my hon. friend from East Calgary said he wanted to submit is not before the House at this time.

The only other matter that has been suggested as a reason why this government has lost the confidence of the country was supplied by the junior member for Halifax (Mr Quinn), who, while admitting that the government had carried out the promise contained in the Speech from the Throne, to appoint a commission to investigate the situation in the Maritime provinces, said that two very worthy gentlemen, Professor Rogers and Mr. A. F. McDonald, should not have been appointed secretaries of the commission. Is that a very serious question? Is that a reason, supposing that there were any basis for consideration at all, why the House should declare that the government had lost the confidence of the House? Let me say in that connection that my hon. friend from Halifax based his claim on that one point, and on no other. So, as far as the opposition is concerned, they are in a most ridiculous position in regard to their claims for moving this resolution.

What is the situation in regard to these two gentlemen who have been appointed secretaries to the commission? Both of them are very able men. Their position in regard to the commission will simply be that of carrying out the duties and instructions given to them by the commission, presided over by Sir Andrew Duncan; that is their position, and those are their duties, and those alone. Let me remind the House that this government carried into effect and implemented the promise contained in the Speech from the Throne that such a commission would be appointed. The appointment of that commission has been hailed with satisfaction all over the Maritime provinces. Everybody has recognized that that is the proper way to deal with the question, but because these two gentlemen, according to my hon. friend from Halifax, have spoken against what he conceives to be Maritime rights, then forsooth this government should be turned out! Those gentlemen who came here as Maritime righters were nothing less than Tories pure and simple—high tariff men, that is what they were. And at this late hour notwithstanding the splendid character of the budget, notwithstanding the overwhelming approval with which that budget has been received all over this country, the government is to be censured. Hon. gentlemen opposite, no matter what their views may be, must agree with me that the budget pronouncement of the Minister of Finance was received with greater acclaim throughout the country than any budget which has been presented for many years. And yet notwithstanding our record, we are to be turned out of office because two men that do not agree with the extreme views of our Maritime rights friends have been appointed as secretaries to the commission. That is where the issue stands at this moment.

[Mr. E. M. Macdonald.]

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): May I ask the Minister of National Defence if, in view of the gravity of the situation which confronts the steel industry in Nova Scotia, he is now prepared to vote for an increase in the duty on steel?

Mr. ROBB: That confirms what I told my hon. friend a moment ago.

Mr. CANTLEY: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has already spoken.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): It is not entirely surprising that the amendment before the chair does not meet with the enthusiastic approval of members of the government. Nor is it surprising to be confronted with the method of self protection which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) set on foot and in which he is supported now by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald).

Mr. ROBB: And supported now by the member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley).

Mr. MEIGHEN: No. The member for Pictou will be found where he is always found. The Minister of Finance will be found on both sides of every concrete question, first, on what he thinks is the popular side, and next on the other side under cover, in ambush. But it is strange, Mr. Speaker, that in almost all debates which have taken place the members of the government have found bitter fault with hon. members on this side because they persist in importing the tariff question. We have now learned that there are some subjects which they prefer to leave alone even at the expense of introducing the tariff question themselves. There is one thing they would rather not have discussed even than the tariff question and that is their own competence under the circumstances of to-day to govern this Dominion.

The amendment declares that because of failure to carry through or to implement the promises contained in the Speech from the Throne, and as well for other causes, this government no longer enjoys the confidence of parliament. The Speech from the Throne is a most solemn method of embalming in the records of parliament the policy of an administration. That sentence applies to all speeches from the throne at all meetings of any parliament. But the circumstances which surround the present situation, including the insertion of the long list of governmental pledges in the Speech from the Throne of this session, are so peculiar, so unprecedented, that a special importance attaches to the inclusion of these pledges and their implementing at the hands of this parliament. It is well known that this government after the election found itself with a following of only 101, and that others who were elected to this House, exceeded their own numbers by some forty, nearly all of them elected in direct antagonism to government candidates and to government policies, and in very direct antagonism to governmental record. The House was called—as declared by the Prime Minister in an official pronouncement—solely for the purpose of deciding which party had the confidence of the newly elected parliament. But in order to prejudice the decision, the free decision, of the House on this question, this government came before parliament with a new list of pledges addressed to certain specific members of this House, and declared that if hon. members elected against government candidates would come in and support the government this new list of pledges would be made law. As to the constitutionality of that procedure, history would be ransacked in vain to find a precedent; and as to its immorality the records of all parliaments and of all legislatures would be ransacked in vain to find its equal. To describe it within parliamentary terms you, Mr. Speaker, have declared the task impossible because the mildest possible language has been pronounced against the rules of parliament. Because of these circumstances a special responsibility rested upon the government of the day to implement the pledges thus solemnly made to this House in the Speech from the Throne.

The government now is confronted with a motion which recites that this has not been done. I wonder would any member even among the followers of the government look his fellow in the face and say that those promises in the Speech from the Throne have been kept. I know there is not one; I know when they search their consciences they can not do so. Read the Speech from the Throne and tell us what is pledged therein. Read the outstanding pronouncements; not one of them is through parliament yet. It is true that one measure is through the House of Commons—in that respect the government has done its duty—but take all the others. Has the government fulfilled its pledge, for example, to bring in "provisions" to complete the Hudson Bay railway forthwith? Does anyone suggest that it has? Is that policy of "completion forthwith" consistent with the statement of the Minister of Railways, or of any member of the government, when the vote merely for the improvement of the section already built was under way? "Provisions—for the plural was used in the Speech from the Throne—'provisions' to build the road forthwith!" Hon. members will say "You are complaining because we have not voted twenty-six millions or fifty millions to complete the road." I am doing nothing of the sort. Because I do not agree with every section of government policy it does not follow that I must forgive the government for abnegating its own programme; it does not say that I must become a party to the prostitution of government pledges within the confines of the House of Commons. In respect of the Hudson Bay railway the government is undoubtedly in plain and defiant default. In that respect it has played fast and loose with the confidence of hon. members of this House, the confidence of those who supported it on the faith of a definite article of policy.

Let me refer for a moment to a subject which seems to be just now very precious to the Minister of Finance, the subject of the tariff. Looking across at his erstwhile Progressive allies he tells them: If you dare to vote for this amendment you vote for higher, and higher and higher tariff. Was there ever a more childish appeal addressed to members of this House? Does the Minister of Finance expect anybody to be quite so simple as not to see the trap into which he seeks to allure full grown members of parliament? And then he says that because the member for Pictou is in favour of a readjustment and a higher duty on steel, that means the Conservative party is in favour of higher, and higher and higher tariff. But let us come to the relation of the tariff question to the amendment. Will the Minister of Finance look at the Speech from the Throne? Will he suggest to me that the government has kept its promise made there? "Oh," he says, "we reduced the duties on automobiles; reduced the duty and the sales tax on automobiles." Will he tell us where he promised to do that in the Speech from the Throne? Will he? Will he even tell us that he has done it? I know he did so for a few weeks with a flourish of trumpets and fanfare, and got his press going, thundering through the country about the taxes the government was lifting from the shoulders of the masses. But did he really do so? In the silence of the night, after he had got all the applause, when the echoes are dying away, he comes under ambush into this House and moves a resolution to restore the greater part of these duties and he has them restored to-day. He and his Prime Minister think, because they call these restored duties "excise," that they are deceiving the House and the country. That they are trying to deceive both there is no doubt. The restored duties are called "excise" though they apply only to imports. Then he extends other help all at the expense of the treasury of Canada. With the two together he has placed the automobile people back virtually where they were before, so far as protection is concerned.

Mr. ROBB: Is that why the automobile people are now advertising lower prices for their machines?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Every dollar of lower price they are advertising is at the expense of the treasury of this country—and that means at the expense of the taxpayer—and if the Minister of Finance will look upon his sales tax revision of two years ago he can reflect that the Liberal party to-day, under his guidance, has succeeded in making it easier to buy cars and harder to buy clothes. This is the last phase of Liberalism in Canada—more taxes on the clothes on the workman's back, and less taxes for the buyers of automobiles. But what does the Speech from the Throne say in this respect? This government went through a campaign in which they found they had disturbed the whole business community of the Dominion. Confidence in them was seriously shattered. The country knew they had no fixed principle of fiscal policy, and because the country so knew, there was stagnation of business enterprise and fear to invest money in any productive concern. What did ministers do? They went through the country and upon platform after platform proclaimed that if they were kept in power the day of repentance would come; that the day of repentance indeed had already come, and they would never repeat this performance. They declared that the day of tariff tinkering was over, and if they were restored to office the tariff would be altered only after investigation by an independent body, a tariff advisory board. Incidentally they assured one-half of the voting population of our Dominion that a representative, a woman representing that half, would be a member of that advisory board. That solemn assurance passed to half the voters of the country, from the mouth of the Prime Minister himself, in virtually every speech he delivered in the campaign. That he did not intend such a thing to happen I am quite ready to concede; that the empty promise served its purpose I am quite ready to concede. The only purpose was to entice into the Liberal ranks as many women voters as he could entice. Then it was ruthlessly cast overboard, the minute it served its purpose. But this other and more extensive assurance stood and remained to be embalmed in the Speech from the Throne itself, the assurance that a "Tariff Board" hereafter would by its investigation precede any alteration of tariff. More specific language never was used. The Speech from the Throne said:

> My ministers are of the opinion that a general increase in the customs tariff would prove detrimental to the country's continued prosperity and prejudicial to national unity. In their view the incidence of this form of taxation should bear as lightly as possible upon the necessaries of life—

Such as automobiles.

> —and on agriculture and other primary industries. They believe that in the interest of industrial development every effort should be made to eliminate the element of uncertainty with respect to tariff changes; that changes in the tariff should be made only after the fullest examination of their bearing upon both primary and manufacturing industries and that representations requesting increase or decrease of duties should be made the subject of the most careful investigation and report by a body possessing the necessary qualifications to advise the Ministry with respect thereto. A Tariff Advisory Board will accordingly be appointed forthwith.

Members of the government wilfully, recklessly, without the slightest regard for their obligations, without taking into account in the least the position in which they put His Excellency, without taking into account in the least degree the betrayal of the interests of this country which they had so solemnly pledged themselves to guard, came along and broke that pledge in their first budget in this House. I ask the Minister of Finance, if he can look across the floor to-day and say the pledge he there gave that tariff changes would be preceded by an investigation by a tariff board has been kept? He will not even shake his head, to say nothing of speaking a word to go into Hansard. He knows the pledge was broken, but he does not worry about the breaking of such pledge as this. The only pledge he worries about breaking is one which might affect hon. members to my left by whose vote he hangs to power to-day. If he has broken a pledge which affects them he is worried very much, and anxious to shift the discussion to some other subject.

At the conclusion of the Speech from the Throne the government declares:

> Your attention will be invited, among other measures, to a bill to provide for the transfer to the province of Alberta of its natural resources, and to a bill amending the Dominion Elections Act.

I refer first to the last point. I cannot be very well impeded in my remarks, because in this respect the government has not taken the precaution to put a notice on the order paper, in order that the violation of their pledges, however flagrant, could not, under the rules, be brought home to them, within the life of this session. They did not take the precaution even to bring down a bill or resolution to amend the Dominion Elections Act. This pledge stands violated. The Prime Minister says: "You cannot tell what we may do between now and prorogation; wait. We still have a few days." It is only two weeks or approximately that time since the Prime Minister recited in this House all that they intended to do between that date and prorogation, subject only to such matters as arose out of the work of committees. No measure referring to the Elections Act was promised. Does anybody imagine or suggest that legislation on this subject may arise out of the finding of any committee?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think my hon. friend will bear me out when I say that at the time I made that announcement I referred specifically to the Elections Act. I said the government was not contemplating a general election, but if hon. members were concerned about it we would bring in amendments to the elections act, and we will do it if hon. members want it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then we are in this position, that a promise in a Speech from the Throne to produce legislation and submit it to parliament all depends upon how members of the House feel towards the end of the session. By that slender thread the government holds itself in office and defends its ebbing life. Well if that is the kind of government that hon. members feel is worthy of this country and of their confidence their duty is to vote against this amendment.

But let me refer to the first portion of the statement that I have just quoted. Hon. members know—and I cannot be swerved by any rule of parliament from saying this—that a great factor, if not the chief factor in determining the votes on the crucial division in this House which decided what party was to be in power, was the promise contained in the clause I have read with respect to the natural resources of Alberta. That was the greatest and most relied upon factor of all. The government say that they have not broken it. The Prime Minister says: "Well, we put something on the order paper. We did not allow you to discuss it. We never got to that point. We never called it. But you saw it there in print and that ought to satisfy you. Not only have we not called it nor given any person a chance to say a word about it, but we do not intend to call it; we have abandoned it." "Surely," he suggests, "that does not constitute a breach of our pledge." Hon. members who follow that reasoning with approval should vote with the Prime Minister.

It may be that the government encountered difficulties. Very well. The government should have had its difficulties surmounted before it made a pledge upon the faith of which it sits in office. The government should not bind and had no moral right at all to bind itself to a course of conduct until it knew that that course of conduct could be carried through. The government to-day stands in possession of the votes by which it stays in power, having obtained those votes on a pretence which was false, namely the pretence that it was in a position to carry through the pledge contained in the clause which I have read.

Has the government a right to those same votes this afternon? Will any hon. member suggest to me that that pledge was not a factor in securing in the division the majority by virtue of which this government is in office now? No member of the House will suggest such a thing. All hon. members, especially hon. members diagonally opposite who come from Alberta, know it. Hon. members from Saskatchewan also know that the great impelling factor was the promise of the return of the natural resources, a promise supplemented by a signed agreement, already quietly distributed, the contents of which were known to members of this House. That promise was the determining, the most determining factor of all the long list of pledges which this government was permitted to lay before hon. members of this House in order to entice their votes. They stand to-day with that promise unfulfilled and with a declaration that they do not intend to fulfil it, with a declaration that an amended agreement which they brought into this House has also been abandoned so far as this session in concerned. In the face of that the government pretends it still deserves the confidence of parliament. What right had this government, until it knew that its difficulties were surmounted, that its mountains were passed, that it had an agreement by which it could and would abide, to get the votes of hon. members upon the basis of that agreement?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If I am in order, seeing that my right hon. friend has been speaking at some length on this question of natural resources, I may say that if the government of Alberta will allow us to bring in a measure—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is all right.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If the government of Alberta will agree with this government to bring in a measure which both have agreed upon and will stand by that, the government will go ahead with the legislation it has.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will hon. gentlemen contemplate where the government is now following this last statement of the Prime Minister? He says: We have abandoned the agreement by which we got the votes of hon. members of this House.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I did not say that. I said: We will stand by it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The agreement of January 9 referred to in the statement of the Minister of Justice?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The agreement come to between this government and the government of Alberta.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That second agreement was not come to at the time this government got the votes of members of this House. This fatality of dates is very unfortunate for the Prime Minister. The agreement to which he is referring now was not in existence at that time. It had not the slightest influence in affecting any hon. members because it was not in being. But there was an agreement in being; that agreement the government laid before hon. members of this House. That agreement is the agreement referred to in the Speech from the Throne, for there was no other. The government declared that that agreement they would pass. Now they say that they made that declaration before they knew whether they would be able to pass it or not—and indeed they refuse to pass it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Was the agreement in evidence before the Speech from the Throne was brought down, or was it not a general statement that an endeavour would be made to transfer the natural resources?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know there was an agreement in existence signed on the 9th January.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It was not in evidence in parliament.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: But its terms were known and I leave it to hon. members of this House whether they were affected by it or not. I know its terms were made known to them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That may be, but the right hon. gentleman says that the vote in this House was on the specific terms of that agreement which were afterwards amended. I say to my right hon. friend that that agreement was not tabled at that time but a general statement in regard to the return of the natural resources was tabled.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not say it was tabled before the vote was taken, but I say that many things were known to members of this House before being tabled and the terms of that agreement were known.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is very adept at getting around sharp corners. He has been arguing—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is there no chance to ask the right hon. gentleman a question? I want to make it perfectly clear; my right hon. friend has argued that that agreement was in evidence and upon that agreement the vote was taken.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That agreement was not tabled at the time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman attaches an almost sacred importance to the word "tabled."

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not. It is my right hon. friend who attaches importance to it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. member suggest for a moment that hon. members who saw that agreement were not influenced by its terms?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot say that they were.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I leave it to hon. members of this House who had to do with it whether they were influenced or not.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I would say this that a number of members from Alberta were very well aware, but that is not the point.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If they were well aware, that is all that is necessary for my argument.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I say this to my right hon. friend, that everyone knew that the Premier of Alberta discussed the agreement with members of this House?

Mr. MEIGHEN: And members of the government too.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Undoubtedly. He made the agreement with the government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And members of the government discussed the terms with other members of the House. I put this question to the minister: Before the vote was taken which decided which party was to be in power in this House, is he quite so sure that that agreement was not indeed tabled?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is my recollection. I may be wrong.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will not give my recollection until I am certain, but I am inclined to the view that it was. I do not however care a whit whether it was or not. I know as well as I know I am standing in this chamber that the terms of that agreement were known and on the faith of those terms the government secured the votes in this House. We cannot discuss the question whether the terms were right or not; it is not necessary to discuss such a question; the discussion would not have the slightest thing to do with the matter now before the House. Whether they were right and true and just or not, is not the question at all. The point is that the government got the votes of members of this House on the faith of that agreement. The government sits in power because of that confidence so obtained. The government therefore is in default on the solemn pledge by which it sits in office. This is what we allege in the amendment before parliament. But there is something else.

Mr. CANNON: Before my hon. friend takes another point, may I ask him a question? Is it not a fact that this agreement passed between the federal government and the Alberta government and the resolution placed on the order paper were amended by the Alberta government and not by this government?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know the government has said so, but I cannot see what in the world it has to do with this matter.

Mr. CANNON: My right hon. friend knows it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not on that point—for it does not matter.

Mr. CANNON: Be fair in debate. My right hon. friend knows that an amendment was brought in by the Alberta government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know that any amendment was brought in by the Alberta government.

Mr. CANNON: Then you should know.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the hon. gentleman has a speech to make he will have his opportunity.

Mr. CANNON: It is gross ignorance on your part.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hon. gentlemen are very much excited, and no one can understand the reason more clearly than I do. I have not disputed any word or line of the explanation of this situation as given by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), but not a word nor a line of it has anything whatever to do with this question, namely, whether this government made a definite pledge on the faith of a definite agreement, and then failed to keep that pledge by means of which it sits in office at this hour.

Mr. CANNON: Will the right hon. gentleman allow me a further question? Can he declare before this House and the country that he is willing to accept the amendment brought in by the Alberta government?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am afraid the usual discretion of the Solicitor General has for this moment been abandoned. Now the government has revealed the cloven foot; hon. gentlemen now see what the government wants to make a subject of discussion in this House. The Speaker has ruled that that subject may not be discussed, and I shall not either evade or conflict with that ruling.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hon. gentlemen would like to discuss the merits of the last agreement as compared with the former. But who was the first to rise in his place to make sure that Mr. Speaker would rule that we could not discuss the subject? Was it not the Minister of Justice?

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Solicitor General is really the subordinate of the Minister of Justice and now he disputes the tactics of his chief.

Mr. CANNON: I apologize to my right hon. friend; I was not present at the opening of the sitting. I am sorry.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I accept the apology in the spirit in which it is intended. Now, Mr. Speaker, the amendment declares further that there are other causes why this House should vote want of confidence in the government, but the time taken would be too considerable if I were to undertake to review that phase of the motion. Those other causes are so numerous that little can be gained by discussing them at this time. I will, however, emphasize one of them, and about two sentences will end what I have to say. This government cannot enjoy the confidence of the country while it fails to present to parliament any definite policy upon any subject whatever. It is a government by compromise, a government by intrigue. This government sits in office because of intrigue. The government sits in office because of pretences, of promises made which it never intended to carry through. It sits in office because of solemn pledges made and repeated and embalmed in the most sacred form, which today it ruthlessly repudiates.

The Prime Minister says, "If this vote goes against us you men are going to have to go back to your constituencies and fight an election". There is the sword held over hon. members of this House. May I remind the Prime Minister that the question of dissolution is not one within his prerogative to decide. There is no region in the whole realm of autocracy into which the right hon. gentleman is not prepared to soar, if by so doing he can hold office for another week or another day. But there are regions into which he cannot enter, into which he is forbidden. This government conducted the last election campaign under its own auspices; it appointed its own officials. And, hon. gentlemen, I have heard one of them especially, his eye glancing in the direction of Peace River—declare that "Liberalism" is now more alive than ever. The result of the government's control of the election machinery is now public and open before the electors of Canada, and these Ministers should hesitate ever to ask to be placed in charge of election machinery again. But even if they do, this parliament was elected on the government's appeal; this parliament was elected under the auspices of this government, and if the government is not able to carry through its policy, is not able to retain the confidence of a parliament so elected, then its duty is to resign. That is the only right this government has. The Prime Minister knows this full well, but he believes that the threat of dissolution may be effective in turning one or two votes in a division. The threat of dissolution is launched only for the purpose of frightening those whom the Prime Minister believes to be timid and susceptible to such a threat. But, I repeat, neither the prerogative nor the right of dissolution is his. There are however open to him both a right and a duty, and these he can embrace only by the act of resignation, for he must know that he has not the confidence either of this parliament or of the people of Canada.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): I have only now had an opportunity of looking at the amendment which has been proposed, for when I asked for it a little while ago it was in circulation right and left. Evidently it is of much interest. I have heard the comment of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen), and there is a good deal of truth in what the right hon. gentleman has said. As a matter of fact, if one were to take the history of parliament, session after session, ever since confederation, pretty much the same comment might be made upon the course of governments. I have sat in this House for eleven years, and have read to a considerable extent the records of parliament both before and since that period, and I cannot recall one single session in which the entire programme as announced in the Speech from the Throne has been fulfilled either by Conservative or by Liberal administrations. In that respect I make bold to say, at the risk of scandalizing some of the virginal minds opposite, that I do not feel quite so exercised over the failure of the government to implement every paragraph of the Speech from the Throne by a specific piece of legislation. It is, I think, a mistake to put too much into speeches from the throne; it would be preferable to announce less and to accomplish more. This however has been the habit of governments; and I do not fancy that any member of this House who decided to support the present administration in preference to one formed from the Conservative party—because that was the only alternative—would be justified in voting for this resolution for the reasons that have been advanced this afternoon and those that are contained in the resolution itself. Of course there is the qualifying phrase "and for other causes", which is very broad. There may be many causes or reasons for voting confidence or want of confidence in a government. I therefore put to hon. gentlemen the question I ask myself: Has anything occurred during this session which would warrant those of us who have elected to support this government rather than a Conservative government, led and inspired by the right hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Meighen), and holding the principles which the party opposite holds, has anything occurred to justify us in changing our attitude, in departing from the course we have followed for five months, and throwing down the government in office in order to give their opponents an opportunity to take their place? Because that after all is the question.

Now, many situations connected with parliamentary government are illogical. Very often one is forced to choose between supporting a government in which he is not over-confident and putting into its place an opposition in which he has no confidence at all, or decidedly less confidence. To my mind this is the situation that presents itself to those of us who, not having been elected as members of the Liberal party and blind supporters of the Liberal government, have now to take their stand courageously and make their choice between the policies presented by the Liberal government and the policies presented by the Conservative party. There is no other choice. By supporting a resolution of this kind we cannot create a new party that will satisfy all we ask for. Members of the Progressive party can no more do it than can my two neighbours who represent the labour element; neither can I nor my neighbour to my left (Mr. Neill). There are features in the government policy which I do not like, or that I would rather see improved; but would I achieve my object by throwing this government down, and putting in its place a party which, on these very questions, would be further away from me and the people I represent than the party and the administration now in office?

This is the position, and the only position, which presents itself to the conscience and sense of public duty of those who have been elected neither as Liberals nor as Conservatives, but who have put before their respective electors certain issues upon which they gave certain pledges, supplementing those pledges, as far as I am concerned, with the only declaration that I think an independent candidate could make, that, if elected, as between the two parties who possess enough votes to form a government he would choose that party which corresponds more faithfully with or comes more closely to his own policies, his own views and his own principles. It is one of the inevitable situations in which independent members of parliament, or even members of the respective parties with an independent turn of mind, find themselves placed on many occasions, not only in this parliament but in all the parliaments of the world. Hon. gentlemen opposite are apt to quote very frequently the precedents established by the British House of Commons. I have respect for a good many of those precedents, provided they apply to us; but in the very words of a past leader of the Conservative party, in the words used by Sir Robert Borden in the conference of 1917 and the correspondence which followed prior to the signature of the Versailles Treaty, when Lord Milner appealed to him to abide by certain precedents: The situation being new, it calls for new precedents.

Now, up to a few years ago, the House was divided as between two parties. A few members once in a while changed their party, but most of the time, during the life of parliament, it was a battle of words between the government and the opposition, and finally when the election came the people decided in favour of one party or the other. But in the last parliament and in this the situation has changed; we have three main groups. One of them, the Progressive group, holds the balance of power to-day. True, it gives them great strength, but it also imposes on them great responsibility. I have no title whatever to appeal to them on any grounds. They know the needs of their country. I simply leave with them this general question for reflection: Whether the people they represent, whether the interests they have at heart, whether the worthy enterprise they have taken up, for the last five or ten years, to convince the people in the east that more sympathy should be shown towards the needs of the west, that those needs should be better understood in the east,—I repeat, is it in the interests of the west, is it for the better future of those interests that the members of the Progressive party should make it possible to let power, influence and legislation pass from the hands of the present government into the hands of the opposition? That is the question that presents itself for our consideration to-day. I will go further, because I must say that the sympathy I have borne for years towards the population of those western provinces and their needs is subordinated to the sympathy I bear towards the needs and interests of Canada generally. During this session we have heard much of the necessity of bringing closer together east and west, French and English, Catholic and Protestant. We have spoken of it, and it has been intimated in another sphere of this parliament, that confederation should be celebrated next year in the spirit and according to the principles of the men who made confederation possible. Well, here again, supposing the question were presented to us in this form: Is the spirit of confederation, the spirit of union between east and west, the spirit of co-operation between French and English in the ranks of the Conservative party or of the Liberal party? Both parties, during the last twenty-five years, have committed many sins against the spirit and the principles of confederation. Whether it relates to the rights of various ethical and religious minorities in the several provinces, or whether it has to do with the relations between Canada and Great Britain, both parties have sinned against the spirit of confederation, both parties have prejudiced the rights of minorities, which was one of the most important principles upon which the men of upper and lower Canada and the Maritime provinces united to make confederation possible. The other cardinal principle was the maintenance and the development of the spirit of Canadian nationality against the encroachments of Tory imperialism, which had already shown itself in England in those days, but which was as strenuously combatted by Sir John A. Macdonald, the then leader of the Conservative party, as it was by the Liberal party, headed then by Mackenzie and by Blake.

Since those days and at the present time where lies the best guarantee that something at least of that spirit of confederation will be revived and maintained? I repeat, is it in the hands of the Liberal party or of the Conservative party? I am free to speak on this question. I have fought strenuously the Liberal party every time I thought they were abandoning some of those principles. I have denounced some of their actions which I considered detrimental to the general interests of Canada as well as to those two great basic principles of confederation—respect for minorities and the maintenance of Canadian autonomy against British Tory imperialistic encroachments. But also I found this out, that after every crisis, the spirit of repentance showed itself more quickly within the Liberal ranks than within the Conservative. At the present time, in the province of Quebec, a new group—the third or fifth reincarnation of the so-called Conservative spirit—is endeavouring to show that the present leader of the Conservative party is more nationalist than we are ourselves, that during the war it was the present leader of the Conservative party who prevented the application of the law of conscription in the province of Quebec. It endeavours also to show that because the present leader of the opposition, after a great deal of ingenuity and much industry, has acquired a certain knowledge of the French language, he is therefore the best upholder of all French Canadian traditions. This is the campaign at present conducted in the province of Quebec, and undoubtedly the Conservative party would gladly try to reap that advantage as soon as possible before it is found out whether or not there is a basis for this new propaganda, for this new revival of the so-called Conservative Nationalism, or whether it is not simply of use at election time. It may be that there is some necessity imposing itself upon the present leadership of the Conservative party to have an election as soon as possible, so as to reap in the province of Quebec the benefits of this new campaign, while at the same time preserving in Ontario and some of the western provinces the great advantage of having as their guiding star, as the vanguard, the rearguard and the flank forces of the Conservative party, the Orange lodges and all that their political influence means. I do not see why, for my part, I should make myself an instrument of those calculations. I do not see why, for my part, as a Canadain, I should play into the hands of a policy inspired apparently by such motives, and carried on with this kind of propaganda.

I may say at once, Mr. Speaker, that I regret two things: first, that your ruling, which I think is quite according to the letter of the rules, does not enable us to discuss here and at once the whole question of the Alberta resources on its merits, and to find out where the responsibilities lie, right and left, to find out whether there is a real desire to abide by a word given, or whether there is a desire to try once more to take advantage of this situation to unbridle the devils of racial and religious animosity. I regret that we are prevented from discussing the whole question on its real merits, to find out where are the upholders of the principle of confederation, of minority rights as well as of the sanctity of contracts entered into between two governments. I shall not go further into that. I hope some other occasion will be given to the leaders of the Conservative party to show in Ontario, as well as in the west, as well as in the east, in the same language and standing on the same principle, whether or not it is true, as we are told in the province of Quebec, that what the Conservative party want is to re-establish the minorities in the west in their rights.

4 p.m.

There is another thing I regret, individually speaking, and therefore it makes me quite free in the vote I am giving. I would far rather have a solution right at once and a general election right now than go on at the pace at which we have been going this year. I would far rather have the situation cleared, and if I had any influence with the government, I would say: Take up the challenge; endeavour to get a dissolution, if you can get it, and we will find out what is the people's opinion. Let us have a clear-cut situation. For my part I am not afraid of an election. I would rather have a clear-cut solution than such an uncertain situation as we have had for some time.

Is there need to say more? I fail to see that I need any more reason for voting against this motion, for the same reasons, and standing on the same principles which in my mind made me clear at the beginning of this session, and all along during the session, that when it came to a matter of choice as between the Liberal party and the Conservative party as at present constituted, inspired, and led on both sides, I would rather vote for maintaining the Liberal party than putting the Conservative party in power. In fact, what has happened during the session, and the press campaign that has been conducted from one end of the country to the other, precisely with the object of making this Alberta issue a burning question, would be, if I had no other, a sufficient reason for me to support this government and to vote against the opposition. With regard to other questions as they come up, I repeat, all independent members of this House will remain as free as they were to oppose this legislation or that.

Hon. gentlemen opposite appear very scandalized because on certain questions the influence of the Progressive party, the influence of the Labour representatives, and perhaps my own influence, had something to do with government measures. Here again this is childish play; I do not want to qualify it in harsher language. If I did, I would say it is coming near to hypocrisy. There has never been a government, in any parliament of the world, that, in framing their legislation, have not taken into account the opinions, the feelings, and the influence of the members who support that government. If I were as expert as my hon. friend from West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) in quoting British precedents, I could find a bushel of them without even going to the library to find my authors. I could remind him of the change of attitude of Sir Robert Peel on the Corn laws. I could remind him of the famous declaration of Mr. Disraeli, who, after having secured the defeat of the Liberal government on electoral reform, came back with a more radical measure of reform, and had to encounter the same kind of accusations that we have heard here during all this session, and again this afternoon. What did he reply? "We have always acknowledged that the people were our masters, but since the last parliament we have educated our masters, and therefore we have more confidence in them than had the previous parliament." I could quote him the example of Mr. Gladstone, who, after having applied to Ireland more drastic laws and measures of political oppression than any Tory government ever resorted to, turned around in favour of Home Rule, and quite sincerely, but also a little because of the influence of Parnell and his party.

The whole story of British parliamentary government is one of opportunism, is one of compromise, is one of give and take. It is at once what I would call its contemptible and its most precious part. Of course, if you view it from a very high-minded point of vantage, if you enter into your 'tour d'ivoire' and philosophize upon the logic of politics, you may be entitled to view with some contempt and derision the efforts of all governments, especially governments weak in their support, to get votes from people who are not exactly of their own political allegiance. There are only two ways of getting those votes: one means is by corrupting individuals, and the other is by giving satisfaction to principle. I would rather have a government making compromises with members or groups that are neither their supporters nor their opponents, by adopting some of their principles, than a government trying to purchase votes by promising emoluments or personal advantages to a few individuals in order to round up a majority. The high-minded philosopher may condemn both ways, but where is the political man in Canada to-day, or where is the party, that can boast of such purity of motives and such virginity that he or it has never resorted to either of these means in order to secure or maintain a majority? No Conservative in this House nor in this country entertains a greater admiration for Sir John A. Macdonald than I do. To show how rabid a Liberal I was in my young days I do not think I have ceased for thirty years to repent my refusal to assist in an official capacity at the funeral of that great statesman. But later on I found out that I was a very foolish greenhorn. I studied Sir John A. Macdonald's political life and leadership, and if there ever was a man who has given an example of both means of making up or conserving majorities—I mean offers that appeal to principles or policies, and offers to individuals or groups having different principles or policies from his order to secure their support,—or even the practice of political corruption for the purpose of reinstating himself or remaining in power,—it was Sir John A. Macdonald. But nevertheless he will stand high in the annals of Canada and in the annals of the British Empire, because after all, the means he took to maintain or to gain power were always with a view to carrying out a policy beneficial to the whole of Canada. So that as far as corruption goes, or compromise, or government by conference, and all that, the argument which has been advanced is, to any man who has studied the politics of this or any other country, purely childish. It is not convincing, especially on the lips of hon. gentlemen opposite. During the war, when the preceding government wanted to accomplish a certain object, contrary to the solemn pledge they had given to all classes of people in this country, the most solemn pledge that could have been given by a government to any people, namely that they would never resort to conscription in order to carry on the war—I am not discussing now whether they did right or wrong —what did they do? They approached members of the opposing party, not to offer them compromise on principles but to offer them offices of emolument; and they secured their majority and they passed their legislation in the teeth of the will of the people of this country, or at least a large portion of them, because they had secured such a support from individuals who were pledged like themselves to vote against the legislation which they enacted, not to speak of other pieces of legislation, making their action good later on at elections won as we know the elections were won in 1917.

Now, Sir, when it is found out that in the history of all political parties, in this country or in other countries, there have been such exchanges of view, such acts of compromise, so as to secure legislation and secure government, let us place ourselves in the position in which this parliament is now. Of course the thing has been threshed out throughout this session. The whole of this debate, the whole object of this amendment, is nothing but a repetition of what happened at the opening of the session during the debate on the Address, and later on during the debate on the budget. The situation is not a new one, it is the same, so that we have to repeat what was said on previous occasions. What was and what is the position? Is there a group or party in this House capable of carrying on the government of its own action? No. The present leader of the opposition, especially with that very tender and scrupulous conscience which has developed in him since he has found out that he is not master of the administration of the country, could not carry on the government without having recourse to the same means of compromise; and his speech to-day has been an appeal to Progressive members to help him in doing now what they did not consent to do at the beginning of the session,—nothing else. I repeat that it is the business of the hon. members in question and they know their business. They know their political situation; it is for them to decide whether or not the bait offered to-day is more acceptable than it was at the beginning of the session. I simply say that the situation is exactly what it was at the beginning of the session. The Conservative party could no more assume and exercise power at the present time than it could at the beginning of the session; it could do so only with the support of some members of this House who were elected against that party to as great if not a greater degree than against this government. Is the leader of the Conservative party prepared to-day to offer the Progressives terms of agreement which he was not prepared to offer at the beginning of the session? If so what becomes of his political conscience, what becomes of those great principles of political honour to which he has given expression? My own choice would be that we should have an election right after this session and perhaps the good of the country would be better served by following that course. For my part I am not afraid of it; whether I come back or not is immaterial. As to that I am wholly indifferent; in fact in many respects I would rather stay at home than come and lose six months of my time here. But we have to take the position in the light of circumstances as they have been created—I will not say by the will of the people, although there are some who set up that contention. I do not believe the people of Canada want the actual situation to be as we have it now; I do not believe they desire matters should remain as they are at present. But a growing number of people in this country are losing faith in politics, in politicians and party shibboleths, a growing number of people are prepared to vote for any party, for any group of men or for any individuals, in whom they think, rightly or wrongly, they will find a little more satisfaction from their point of view, from whom they expect a little more legislative and administrative action, inspired by the will of doing the right thing by Canada, rather than by the thought of maintaining in office a certain number of individuals calling themselves Liberals or calling themselves Conservatives, who fill up the judgeships or senatorships by appointing sometimes old, worn politicians and at other times young politicians who have rendered them service, but most of the time nominating their own political servants and friends.

The need for a broader national spirit and for politics inspired by broader minds is growing fast in Canada and that sentiment is a good one. How will it resolve itself? I do not know; that is something the future will settle. But no doubt the existence of that feeling is the main cause of the development of the group system, whether we like it or not. So long as important groups of the electorate in this country desire to send to parliament men of such a type to represent them rather than men elected by the funds of political parties, so long as the people of this country chose to send men with different types of mind and various programmes of policy, there will be no government possible, unless it is a government of compromise between two or more of the groups. It will be such on the surface at all events; and what ought to appeal to gentlemen opposite, is the fact that that will become the standard of politics in this country as it has got to be in England. I refer them to English precedents of which they are so fond. There have been such governments formed in England during the last forty years. Since the time of the break of the Liberal party on the Irish question, every government in England, with a few slight exceptions, has been a government of compromise. No policy of economics, no policy of social import, no policy of internal government or external affairs has been possible in England, during the last forty years, without the party in power, sometimes the strongest, but not always, having to resort to the same means of action that this government has resorted to. Gladstone, Lord Salisbury, Lord Rosebury, Mr. Asquith, in fact every one of the great leaders of British politics in the last few years, had to go to some of their opponents and ask their support on this ground or that ground of policy, for which they had to pay by making concessions to the men whose support they were seeking. Otherwise, the government of the day could not have been carried on. Are we going to be told that all politics in Great Britain has been dishonest? I should like to hear the great upholders of British loyalty, the sturdy unfurlers of the British flag, tell us that England is on the way to political decay, and that all English politicians are dishonourable, and that every leader of government in that country has dishonoured his conscience and has done the most horrible thing that could be imagined under responsible government. I stand half way between those who will have nothing of English precedents, who will have nothing to do with English principles, or practice or policy, and those who are blind admirers of them. I am neither one nor the other. I am a Canadian; but Canada, having inherited and adopted the basic principles of British government, it is a good object lesson for us to follow the trend of events in England, and to study the practices and policies introduced in English public affairs for the last twenty-five years. I do not say that they should be copied entirely, but they might be studied and adapted to our own situation.

The British constitution is much more elastic than the American or the French or our own constitution; not only much more elastic in the definition of political power, not only much more elastic legally speaking; but precisely because of that indefiniteness of the British constitution in pure matters of law and in matters of practice also, there, has developed in the mind of the English statesmen a facility, or rather an aptitude, to adapt themselves to new circumstances which I am always surprised to find is much less developed in our own country, even in spite of all our boastfulness of British loyalty. Why do we not try to adapt ourselves in the same manner as they do in England? I would not go the length of saying that we should copy the government instituted by Queen Anne, when half of the members—the whole of them being sworn to her—were in correspondence with the Pretender and trying to prepare for the downfall of the queen. They were friendly with the queen in England, but conspiring against her on the continent. I do not think the hon. member for West Calgary would ask us to be admirers and copiers of such British precedents; but without going that far, are we going to lay down a rule to-day that whenever a house of parliament is divided between various groups, none of which is strong enough to form a government which will receive the constant support of the House during the parliamentary term, there shall be no government; or that the one group having a number of seats will hand over the government to that group which has the largest number of followers, incapable in itself of ruling the country, not having received, as it has not received, the confidence of a clear majority of the people of this country? No sir. What is sauce for the goose to-day will be sauce for the gander to-morrow. If that condition develops in the next parliament as in this one, most likely there will be no clear majority, because really I do not think the new tactics of the great board of strategy will be successful. I do not think the people of Quebec will be convinced that the whole future of the Catholic faith and the French race is in the hands of the Conservative party, and especially of that wing of the Conservative party headed by the member for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Hocken). I do not think it will carry, but suppose it carried in Quebec, how will it adapt itself to the line of argument used by the powerful wing of the Conservative party which goes everywhere in the province of Ontario and the western provinces, with its organs, proclaiming that the country is abandoned to French domination, that the member for Labelle is imposing legislation upon the government as against the rights of the provinces of the west? How will that carry? Is that in full accord with the high sense of honour, with the high spirit of straightforwardness of which we have heard so much this whole session and again this afternoon from the right hon. member? Is he going to be the John the Baptist of Quebec and the William of Orange of Ontario? No, he cannot be, and as far as we in Quebec are concerned we would rather have—I was going to say an unchristian, but I will simply say, a Canadian pure and simple, whether Catholic, Protestant or English speaking, or French speaking; we would rather have a Canadian standing by certain basic principles which we consider essential to the welfare of this country west and east. Any government that offers us a guarantee that we can accept, that in their hands the interests of the minority will be better preserved than in other hands, and that in our dealings with Great Britain and foreign countries the interests of Canada will be upheld against the interests of Great Britain or any other country, is worthy of support and will have our support. Any government which will be the true inheritor of the spirit of the Conservative party of Macdonald and Cartier, will have our confidence even if we think it is weak or deficient in some respects, and even if it does not do all it can do. We are reasonable enough and British enough to understand that the absolute good, such as everyone, every individual, every group of men and every party in the country conceives it to be, is impossible of realization unless it be accepted by some other man, or some other group, or some other province to carry on. We would rather have a relative measure of good for the better welfare of the country, for a better feeling between consumers and producers, farmers and manufacturers, French and English, west and east; we would rather have a fair, level policy of justice to all than a policy based upon the narrowest appeal to French feelings in Quebec and to anti-French feelings outside of Quebec. I know that Liberals have resorted to that kind of appeal. Of course, some have resorted to it; all parties have. It would be another piece of hypocrisy to claim that appeals to racial feeling are the fault of only one party.

First of all, racial feelings are noble and natural in themselves. The men or the nation that would not have feelings connected with their blood, their traditions, their aspirations, would be worthy of all the contempt which the leader of the opposition has expressed towards a political group standing in his way. Right appeal to racial feeling is essential to the maintenance of the ideals of a nation. I would have nothing but contempt for the Canadian of English origin who would not be proud to be a scion of that great nation, nothing but contempt for the Scottish-Canadian who would not take pride in the history of that marvellous race that has filled up the British Empire with the works of its genius, nothing but contempt for the Irish-Canadian who would not sympathise with the twelve centuries of effort of that heroic nation to maintain itself in spite of British domination.

Likewise the French-Canadian would be contemptible if he were not attached to everything that is dear to him, to his language, his religion, his family traditions and the school system which enables those great inheritances to be perpetuated. By so attaching himself, the French-Canadian is not only doing his duty to himself but rendering the best service he can to confederation. Thanks to his religion, his language, his separate schools, his traditions, he is the only moral and social obstacle to the penetration of Yankeeism which has been justly denounced by an hon. member on the other side, but which is so powerfully helped by the same school of politics to which that member belongs and which finds an enemy everywhere there is a French word pronounced, everywhere there is a school conducted according to our conscientious beliefs, everywhere there is an effort on the part of a French-Canadian group to maintain those traditions, not by the oppression of any other group, but by the free growth of our ideals alongside of those of British birth and of Canadians of English, Scottish or Irish origin.

It may be said that this is out of place. I do not think so. If this motion is, in its short and curt form, a challenge to the conscience of parliament and of the people to choose between the two parties who have governed Canada alternately for the last twenty-five years; if it is a challenge to the public to make a choice between those two parties as at present led, inspired and influenced, as a French-Canadian and as a Canadian I say that I take up the challenge. As a true lover of Canada from one end of the country to the other I take up the challenge. It is not that I have any prejudice against the Conservative party. I have worked with many Conservatives in public affairs. Strange to say I found this out: Every time I attacked the Liberal party for what I considered lack of duty, every time I reproached them for making concessions to the enemies of French-Canadians or to imperialism, those Conservatives who worked with me were more rabid in their denunciation of imperialism, of everything tending to enhance the interest of Great Britain in this country than myself, my true Nationalist allies and the Liberals who detached themselves from their party to help us. They were always ready to go to one extreme or the other. Some men connected with the present board of strategy of the Tory party in Quebec went so far, in 1911 and 1917, as to reproach me for being half a traitor because I was not prepared to raise rebellion on the streets of Montreal and Quebec to shoot down the leader of the then government of which the present leader of the opposition was a member. They are now trying to make the people of Quebec believe that the Conservative party is the anti-imperialistic party; that it was thanks to the Conservative party that conscription was so mildly applied in Quebec; that it was thanks to the present leader of the opposition that so many young Canadians escaped going to the war. Is that going to be the gospel preached in western Canada? Is that the great policy of national unity upon which the next Conservative government is going to rule this country? So long as the true spirit of Macdonald and Cartier is not revived in the Conservative party, right and left, west and east, among French and English, hon. gentlemen opposite, I am sorry to say, must quit the hope—I will not say of gaining power: that is a very small matter in my opinion—but of regaining the true confidence of the people. They retained power in 1917 by the means of which we are all aware, but they lost it in 1921 though a reaction which was the punishment of the means resorted to in order to retain power in 1917.

Likewise the Liberals lost power and would have been out of power for many long years, because of the mistake they made from 1896 to 1911 in courting imperialism, Toryism and protectionism. One straight Liberal of Toronto, a man who has remained a Liberal all his life, English-born and a Protestant, told me at the time of the South African war: "The greatest mistake our leaders can make, both in Toronto and Ottawa, is to try to cover themselves with a thin coat of Toryism and imperialism; they are simply educating the people to the doctrines of their opponents; and the time will come when no Liberals will be able to stand up in Ontario because they have not at the present time the courage to stand by their principles and traditions." Let the present day Liberals think of that. In justice, it must be acknowledged that some effort has been made by this government to come back in the right direction.

I also want to do the leader of the opposition this justice. I never, either with his Liberal opponents or with some of his most ardent apostles in Quebec to-day, denounced him as being anti-French or anti-Catholic. Never a word of mine yet spoken or written has sent forth that kind of propaganda. But what I have stated and what I state is that neither he nor any leader of the Conservative party as at present constituted is capable of presenting a true national policy to the whole of Canada. He might do it if left alone, but he is impotent in face of the split which occurred in the Conservative party thirty years ago and which was so aptly described by an old Conservative leader, a staunch Orangeman of true spirit, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, when he said, 'You have turned this government into a nest of traitors." I shall never forget meeting the old gentleman, because he was a perfect gentleman, at one session when he spoke some words which have remained with me ever since. He had taken a fancy to me, I do not know why; but at any rate we were quite friendly, and he said, "Bourassa, remember what I say. I'm an old man and you will no doubt survive me. But of two things I am absolutely convinced: There is no safety for Canada until a Conservative government, inspired by Conservative principles and putting into effect a true Conservative policy, is in power in Canada. But—he added—that day is far distant, because the spirit of the nest of traitors is still active." That was indelibly impressed on my mind, and I have had many proofs of the truth of it. The right hon. leader of the opposition has also had many proofs of it, for he has seen the eggs in that nest of traitors hatching right and left.

An hon. MEMBER: St. Lawrence-St. George.

Mr. BOURASSA: No; St. Lawrence-St. George as at present represented has always been straight and fair both to friends and to foes. There has never been any baseness of mind nor any resort to low tactics either for or against others so far as that hon. gentleman (Mr. Cahan) is concerned. But the leader of the opposition knows quite well how true is the remark of Sir Mackenzie Bowell which I have repeated. Now where is that nest of traitors? Rather, I should use the plural: Where are the traitors of that nest? The right hon. gentleman is to-day in an unfortunate position. He is a man of talents, his personal integrity is unquestionable, and he has a sincere desire—he knows that I speak what I think—to do the right thing by his country as well as by his party. But he is incapable of putting those qualities to use because of that dual spirit which was created after the death of Sir John A. Macdonald. There is no longer that united desire to give to Catholicism and to Protestantism alike the same equal consideration, to give equal satisfaction to Quebec and to Ontario, uniting both sections of the country under one dominating principle of true Canadianism before everything else—Canadianism against Britain if need be, as well as against the United States. The Conservative party has been split into two wings, one parading in Quebec as more French and more friendly to the Catholics than the Liberal party—because of the attitude of the Greenway government and of the old traditions of George Brown—the other appealing to the province of Ontario. Formerly the Conservative policy was that England might be at war any time she chose, but that Canada was at war only when she was threatened. That was the Conservative policy; but now the policy of the party is pro-British in one section of the country and anti-British in another. And more than that, attacks are made in the name of the Conservative party upon this government because it does not give positions of emolument to French Canadians. Appeals are made to all the smaller and narrower prejudices of the French against this government in relation to all sorts of petty questions of patronage. It is, I say, unfortunate for the right hon. the leader of the opposition to be at the head of such a party, because after all it is to the detriment of the country that his talents should be lost. But they are lost and they are lost irretrievably. Even if he assumed power as the result of a snap vote or of an election waged under the same conditions as obtained in 1917, when ballot boxes were stuffed in the pretence of saving the empire, although damning the morals of the country, the right hon. gentleman's usefulness would be impaired so long as he and some men of broad mind and strong hand in his party failed to crush the eggs that are being hatched in the nest of traitors season after season.

Now I have gone beyond the letter of the motion, but I think it was just as well. If this amendment is to be the preface to an appeal to the people of Canada it is well that a few men, who are absolutely free to say what they think of one party or the other, should stand up here and speak in the name of those numerous Canadians in Quebec and in Ontario, in the east and in the west, who are thinking less from day to day from the narrow point of view of party and more and more from the standpoint of a true national policy for this country. Whether one party or the other does the right thing is utterly immaterial to me. Suppose we had an election and came back to the House, as is likely, and found ourselves in a situation similar to that which faced us at the opening of this session. Suppose hon. gentlemen opposite had the advantage of numbers to start with; suppose they formed a government. I think I voice the feeling of those men and women who have given me their confidence not only in the small portion of Quebec which I represent but throughout the province, the men and women who rightly or wrongly have chosen me as their mouthpiece for some years past, as well as the feeling of a growing number of English-speaking Protestants in Ontario, in eastern and in western Canada, when I say that the government which under such circumstances would command the respect of the people would be not one which would attempt to secure a victory by means of a snap vote, but one which would consult the interests of the country at large. Let us who speak independently for the people admit that we are a very small body of men; but I venture to say that the party which will win and retain the enduring confidence of the people of Canada will be that party which will espouse a policy the most Canadian and the most national in military matters, in foreign affairs, in economics and in relations between race and race whether within or outside of Canada. It will be the party which will do the most to re-establish, as the basis of government, equal rights as between the various sections of the country and mutual respect as between east and west and as between French and English. This end will not be attained by any attempt to take advantage of the first opportunity to rouse the Orange lodges against the hierarchy or to enrage Quebec at the expense of Alberta. It will not be done that way. It will be done by a constant effort upon the best minds in all the provinces and in all parties to look for the broader, for the bigger, for the most solid and enduring policy. If we do that we will find that we have turned a long circle and come back to what was once the standard policy of the Conservative party, the policy which enabled the alliance of Macdonald and Cartier—not upon any small calculation as to the misdoing of their Liberal opponents in this little matter or that little matter, not upon the advantage that could be gained by getting the support of the bishops in the province of Quebec and of George Brown and his clear Grits in his appeals against Romanism in the province of Ontario. No, it did better than that. Macdonald and Cartier took the leader of those men, George Brown, in their government; —I admit they did not keep him long, but they kept him long enough to muzzle him while confederation was consummated, to prevent him from introducing in the new-born nations the poison which he had been distilling for so many years in Upper Canada. The result endured for some time; but unfortunately, the venom had not disappeared. It started again in Ontario, it extended to the west, and it was taken up by some Liberals and by some Conservatives.

What did it achieve? What has been the result to Canada as a whole, morally, socially or politically, of every encroachment made by any government, Conservative or Liberal, upon the principle of minority rights? What has been gained to Canada by any abandonment of the sound national policy with regard to participation in imperial affairs? What has been gained, I ask? More prejudice to-day as between French and English than there was fifty years ago; more cleavage as between Catholic and Protestant than there was fifty years ago—less violent, I admit, but perhaps more subtle. That is in regard to inter-racial matters in Canada. With regard to outside affairs there is to-day less unity in matters of national import. Why? Because we have appealed alternately to the British to think of Britain first and of Canada second; and to French Canadians to enlist and fight for France instead of remaining here and working for Canada. Thereby we have revived the old colonial, racial spirit in every group in Canada.

But the reaction is on, and I am happy to say it is perhaps to-day stronger in English Canada than in French Canada. I venture to predict that the party that will win the heart even of British Canada within the next ten years will be the party that will unfurl, not the Union Jack—the Union Jack will be respected so long as the present system continues, so long as we remain in a free alliance with Great Britain—but the flag of Canada, the party that will put itself courageously, frankly and intelligently at the head of the nationalistic instincts of the people of Canada east and west, English and French. I know this looks venturesome, I know this may be considered as the back thought of an old eccentric; but that old eccentric has kept some of the youth of heart and mind in him, has remained in contact with both old and young Canadians in all parts of Canada, and he receives daily communications from people in Canada born in the Old Country. Let me take this only as an example. One English-born Canadian told me, not long ago: You express our feelings, but we are yet too much under the domination of racial pride and the prejudice of tradition to admit it; but go on speak your mind—which is ours—and the time is coming when our sons, who will be one degree more Canadian than we are, will go in advance of you because you will be too British for them. I am beginning to find that out.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in this long—I will not call it oration—rambling, if you like, I have given time to gentlemen on all sides of the House to make due reflection. I noticed when I began to speak there was some excitement; now some hon. gentlemen are on the point of sleeping, which is a good cure for nervousness. At any rate, they have had time for reflection, which is a good thing for the mind, and therefore I hope when we come to vote on this amendment it will be in one of two ways. If judged within the narrow circle of its wording, well, it will be treated as all similar motions have been treated this session; it is the same thing in different words. If, on the contrary, it is taken in a broad way, I for one am prepared to thank the right hon. gentleman for having enlarged the scope of the motion, for having talked outside it and made perhaps what he expects to be his first electoral speech, in which event I think we should follow him on that ground. But then, this motion is not worded in such terms as to inspire those thoughts or reflections that will enable any member of this House or any ordinary elector to see that it leads to anything. It is no declaration of principle on the part of the Conservative party. It is such a vague denunciation of the attitude of the Liberal government that really no Conservative can find much solace in it; and I do not think Liberals can be much exercised over it, except perhaps if they are short of a sufficient number of votes to give them a majority, which from a certain point of view is absolutely immaterial to me. But surely it is not upon a motion of this nature that a great party, boasting its historic traditions, lays all its future hopes of success. But perhaps that should raise my hopes, for it shows there is more conscience in the Conservative party than I gave them credit for; they feel they are so far away from their great traditions that they must not express them, they must minimize their policy in as few words as possible, and in words that carry as little significance as possible. I think that is a form of sincerity which is to be commended. It proves that they are in the process of evolution. Perhaps within a session or two, or after a couple of elections, they will have found their way to Damascus, they will have seen some of the true light. It may blind them at first, but after the cure has operated—of course if they have grace enough to be worthy of cure—they will see things through the new medium and will change their tactics. I do not mean their board of strategy. I do not know the gentlemen composing that board, but I am quite sure there must be in it men who do not see things exactly as some others do, there must be some few differences in aspirations, in ideals and even in politics. I am quite sure of it. I should not like to calumniate the gentlemen opposite with such stupidity as to imagine that nine or ten of them could always agree upon everything. There must be a tendency upwards and downwards. I think unfortunately I am expressing the view of a large number of people outside the House when I say that the tendency downwards has manifested itself quite often during the session. We have heard heroics about the great principles of economics all connected, as I have said before, with the four wheels of a motor car. We have heard tremendous denunciations, but, after all, what has it come to? To a few motions of non-confidence, very unhappily worded. In fact, it looked at times, and I said so at the beginning of the session, as if the government had to thank the Conservative board of strategy, for it has certainly saved this government on more than one occasion, and it ought to be as successful this time as it has been on previous occasions. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I need not say that I would not think for one moment of supporting this motion. I am sorry the session should end with such a poor, meagre, expression of opinion on the part of the great Conservative party, previous to what they expect to be an appeal to the people either this year or next. I think it behooves them and would be to the advantage of the country if the Conservative party would decide at last to frame a great policy in clear-cut words that would really express something to the minds of the people who are thirsting for ideas and principles, much less for words and for tactics.

Mr. A. M. BOUTILLIER (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, coming from the province of Alberta and being deeply interested in this question, I feel that in my feeble way I should like to say a few words. Being but a child in parliamentary life and experience I feel that it is a high honour to be permitted to follow one so experienced and so eloquent as the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), who has just sat down. While I am compelled to admire his power in debate and the many admirable qualities which he possesses, I regret to say, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot see eye to eye with him on the matter that is now before the House.

He has mentioned the word "party" a number of times in his address, I think perhaps with a degree of nervousness. We have been told time and again in this House that principles are greater than party, and I claim, Mr. Speaker, that a principle is involved here which is greater than any party. The hon. member for Labelle has also shown a great desire for Canadian unity. With that I am in full accord, because I claim there is no member of this House who has a greater desire for Canadian unity than myself. Like the hon. member for Labelle I can also claim to be a Canadian. The blood of four or five generations of forebears runs through my veins. When my ancestors came to Nova Scotia in the year 1753 that province was wooded right down to the shore line, and those men had to go into the forests and hew out a place in order to provide themselves with humble homesteads. I have lived in the province of Nova Scotia half of my lifetime. The other half I have lived in the province of Alberta, that great province which in a few years will hold its millions of people, and in which I am proud to represent the important district of Vegreville at the present time in this House. I say I am very anxious for Canadian unity. I hold up my hands, while living in that province, to the province of British Columbia on the west, to the prairie provinces, to the central provinces, and to the Martime provinces down by the sea. I want to see them all bound together in one spirit of national unity that will be conducive to the prosperity of this great Dominion of ours.

5 p.m.

Reference has been made to a certain agreement. When the executive of this group called upon the Prime Minister in the early days of this session, I was given to understand that that agreement was signed, and the signing of that agreement, as stated by the hon. member for Camrose (Mr. Lucas), had considerable influence in directing the minds of the members from the province of Alberta. Not only did I understand that that agreement was signed, but I was shown the pen which was used at the time the agreement was signed. When the announcement was made on January 22 or 23—I forget the exact date—at a large farmers' convention at Calgary, that Alberta was going to get her natural resources, it evoked a great deal of enthusiasm and deep satisfaction, and when later the Prime Minister rose in his place and made the distinct announcement that a certain measure by which Alberta would get her natural resources would not be proceeded with at this session, I was greatly disappointed, and I felt that any agreement or any responsibility that I had in regard to supporting the government ceased from that moment. The pledge given, as I considered it to be at that time, was deliberately broken. That is the way I felt about it. I do not intend to detain the House any longer, because hon gentlemen know my mind. I rose merely to place myself in full accord with all those sentiments that have been so ably expressed by my hon. friend from Camrose. In regard to the action of the Prime Minister, let me say that if I voted against this amendment I should be saying to the people of Alberta that I approved of his action. That Mr Speaker, I cannot do.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Edmonton, Minister of the Interior): Mr. Speaker, with the subject matter of the amendment I have no quarrel and could have none. One who is aligned with or supporting any political party is bound to meet with opposition from the opposing party. It has always been so, and I presume always will be so. But notwithstanding the fact that we may divide into groups, there will always be but two sides to any question, and we will find ourselves aligned on the one side or the other. I have no exception to take to the motion of my hon. friend from East Calgary (Mr. Davis). He may at any time test the feeling of this House with respect to the confidence that may be reposed in the government. The mover of this amendment did not embody in it its real purpose. That is evident because immediately after moving the amendment he took the opportunity of stating the grounds upon which is was based. The amendment simply alleges that the government has not implemented its pledges as announced in the Speech from the Throne. Well, Mr. Speaker, we have listened to the leader of the opposition, who spoke for the party responsible for the amendment, and save in one particular he has not been able to find any particular fault with the actions of the government in regard to the legislation introduced at the present session. The one shortcoming of which he complained is that we have not introduced, up to the present, legislation for the amendment of the Election Act. Stripping all verbiage from the speech of my right hon. friend, that is the sole particular as to which he makes complaint, with one exception, and I will deal it in a moment. That is the only respect in which he finds fault with the government and charges it with being recreant to its pledges. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has made some sensible comments with respect to the procedure adopted by governments in the past —and this does not apply to any particular party, it affects both the two old parties—in the matter of announcing legislation in the Speech from the Throne and introducing it subsequently into the House. So that the criticism of the right hon. leader of the opposition falls to the ground in that particular respect. If the present government had been the only sinner in the matter complained of, my right hon. friend's criticism might have had some weight and effect. In view of the actual facts it has no weight whatever. The right hon. gentleman has failed to recognize the fact that in almost every particular the promises contained in the Speech from the Throne have been implemented by legislation. Some of that legislation has met the fate that legislation of a similar character encountered in former days in the other chamber. As to that I have nothing to say.

Mr. MEIGHEN: To what legislation does my hon. friend refer?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The legislation on old age pensions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is not named in the Speech from the Throne at all.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That does not make any difference, it was part of the sessional programme of this government. My right hon. friend was criticizing the Speech from the Throne, but he took good care to refrain from alluding to legislation of a very vital character to the people of Canada that was introduced by the government and passed by the House at the present session.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What particular bill is my hon. friend alluding to now?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There have been a half dozen measures at least, I am not going to take time in enumerating them this afternoon. The government has reduced the taxation, and it was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. Nevertheless my right hon. friend had nothing to say about it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is a sham.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My right hon. friend has made the same statement about the tariff amendments. He is not fair in that regard, neither is he fair in what he has to say about the reduction in the duty on automobiles.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Most assuredly there has been a reduction in the duty. I say that without fear of contradiction. My right hon. friend himself knows that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: You do not know it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Oh yes I do. I quite apprehend the right hon. gentleman's purpose. Has not the statement been deliberately made that there has not been a 15 per cent reduction in the duty on automobiles of $1,200 in value and under?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Has that not been repeatedly said? My right hon. friend still maintains that statement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My right hon. friend argues that because we eliminated the luxury tax it does not mean a reduction in the tariff.

Mr. MEIGHEN: On Canadian made goods.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is most unfair for my right hon. friend to take any position of the kind.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Are we children?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Let me say this to my right hon. friend: I agree with him that the elimination in question will not reduce taxes, but to argue that it does not reduce the tariff is—perhaps I had better not say it—an unadulterated fabrication, or a statement that will not hold water. Nobody knows that better than my right hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know what the facts are all right.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I accept my right hon. friend's statement that the elimination of the luxury tax means that the treasury of this country will suffer to that extent; but to argue that the removal of the duty means an increase of protection is so far from the truth that I am surprised my right hon. friend should attempt to argue it. The fact is that we have implemented our promises.

My right hon. friend goes to the one question that we are not permitted to discuss, the one matter I have laboured harder to bring to a successful issue—I say it with all sincerity—than any other with which I have had to deal. If I am permitted to discuss it, I will say that having laboured zealously for at least ten years to bring about its settlement in the interests of the province which I represent, I see a shadow arising that will prevent that accomplishment perhaps for years to come. This government has not said that it has abandoned the hope of securing for the province of Alberta, its natural resources, not by any means. I, perhaps more than any other member of the administration, am desirous of bringing that question to a happy issue. The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Boutillier), who has just resumed his seat, says that he is anxious that national unity should prevail in Canada. May I say that even beyond my desire to secure for Alberta its natural resources I am anxious that we should have national unity in this Dominion. I am more desirous that nothing should happen to disturb national unity than I am of anything else. We who know something of the difficulties encountered in the past in connection with the question of provincial autonomy are not desirous of questions arising at any time that will tend to unfavourably influence and retard that national unity which should prevail in this country from one end to the other. Personally I rather welcome the fact that some of us are restrained from discussing this matter frankly and freely at the present time. Because I do feel that if opportunity is provided difficulties that are now looming up can be got out of the way, and what I have zealously and earnestly laboured for so long—namely the return of its natural resources to the province of Alberta—will become an accomplished fact.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Who is responsible for the restraint?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend knows perfectly well that I am not permitted to discuss this question.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The question I asked was who is responsible for the restraint?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It requires two to make a bargain, and that has been the difficulty all along.

An hon. MEMBER: Yes, and it requires two to keep it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No one is going to deny that difficulties have arisen in connection with this matter, but I have not the slightest doubt that those difficulties can be overcome. Still if this issue is plunged into the maelstrom of politics I fear that the fond hopes of the representatives from Alberta will be dashed to the ground and we may have to wait another hundred years before we in that province obtain the natural resources that rightfully belong to us. That is my feeling with respect to the matter. Apart from that I welcome the amendment as a test of the confidence of hon. members in this government, as to whether it has or has not carried out its promises in the Speech from the Throne as far as possible and given to this country good and economical administration. If the vote should go against the government, I for one am perfectly willing to go to the country on the record of this government, even during the last session of parliament, and take my chances.

An hon. MEMBER: We welcome that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friends say they will welcome it. May I be permitted to doubt their sincerity? Notwithstanding the attempt that has been made by hon. members opposite to place the representatives of the province of Alberta in a position which they think will embarrass them, I am going to vote on the amendment in full confidence that the people of Canada and my constituents will understand that the avowed policy of the Conservative party is one of protection and that that is the issue we are facing at the present moment, because that is all hon. members opposite have to offer. They are asking this House to put this government out of office and vote them into office. The Minister of Finance put it in the most emphatic and clear-cut language. That policy of protection, according to hon. members opposite, is the one panacea for every ill, and the only one in their view. If anyone ever heard of any other policy put forward by them I shall be glad to know it. They wish to put this government out and place in office a government that will give them increased protection.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): The last time this government was challenged in this House it was on the question of the grading of eggs, and the motion was moved by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). I do not know exactly what happened, but something seemed to backfire on that occasion, and my hon. friend from South Wellington did not seem to secure the support from his own side that he wanted. Now my hon. friends are taking up another problem, which is more momentous but entirely different. The amendment today is a challenge to the government on the ground that they have not carried out their sesssional programme as set out in the Speech from the Throne. That should be very easy of verification or refutation. We have the record and it is very easy to ascertain the facts. I have gone over it very hurriedly during the last hour. First, I refer to rural credits. In the Speech from the Throne the statement is made:

> To this end a measure will be introduced offering wide facilities for rural credits.

The whole House was tumbling over itself to see who would be the first to propose a resolution relating to rural credits. One of my hon. friends opposite had a resolution on the order paper but withdrew it, and the government resolution was put through. That promise was carried out 100 per cent. That is tally number one.

Then the next matter to which I refer is the statement in the Speech from the Throne with respect to the tariff, which reads:

> A tariff advisory board will accordingly be appointed forthwith.

Was that done? We hear a great deal about our not doing it quickly enough, but we did it as quickly as it could be done. Is the personnel of that board objected to by hon. members opposite? Is even the secretary objected to, as has been done this afternoon in the case of the secretary appointed to the Maritime Rights Commission? But in this case not even the secretary is objected to. That is 100 per cent again. Tally number two.

Then further:

> Every effort will be made to further reduce expenditures. To aid in the reduction of expenditures in administration certain of the departments of the public service will be consolidated with others and government services more effectively co-ordinated.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Elliott) took over the department of Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment. Is that an accomplishment?

That has been carried out. Tally number three. Further on:

In this connection a trade agreement entered into with the British West Indies, Bermuda, British Guiana and British Honduras will be submitted for your approval.

Has that been carried out? That has been done, no thanks to the Tories opposite from whom we heard nothing but yapping from start to finish. Hon. members talk of loyalty, patriotism and all the rest of it, but when it comes to doing anything practical there is nothing but talk. But there was not sufficient talk to stop the progress of this piece of legislation. I think that is score number four.

An hon. MEMBER: Number five.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Will somebody keep the tally? Then the next:

My government propose to submit provisions for the completion forthwith of the Hudson Bay railway.

Is that satisfactory to those who are most concerned in this enterprise? Do you hear one objection from any friend of the government in the west? The amount is $3,000,000. Is that not the exact sum my right hon. friend promised on one condition, namely, that that sum would be sufficient to complete the road to the bay, which he knew was impossible? We have placed it in the estimates, it has gone through and it has not been challenged. And what has my right hon. friend to say, about it. Had we not talked so long in this House we might have got this put through earlier. I do not know of one single fair critic particularly friendly to the government who is not satisfied that we have done everything he anticipated with regard to that great enterprise. How much more could be spent? Would you want the whole estimated cost of $26,000,000 put in the estimates? On one occasion we voted $350,000 and a great deal of dispute ensued, because we had not time to spend that amount, as it was late in the session. My right hon. friend cannot make any capital about the Hudson Bay vote up to the amount mentioned by him. There is no reservation by us that this will do the trick.

The next matter to which I refer is the statement in the Speech from the Throne that a royal commission will be appointed to inquire into the claims and the rights of the Maritime provinces. Has that been done?

An hon. MEMBER: Not yet.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Has any exception been taken to the personnel of the commission?

An hon. MEMBER: When will they start?

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Some objection was taken to the secretary. One hon. member said he was a fine estimable gentleman, quite qualified in every respect but he had taken sides in the recent election, apparently against my hon. friend. Are you going to disqualify him because of that? Surely not. There we have another 100 per cent, and that is tally number six. I come now to the forbidden one.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why did the hon. member leave out certain very important ones on the way?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am taking them as they come.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member left out two or three.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The right hon. member will not have another opportunity to speak, but he can give the tip to some of his admirers to bring up what I miss. I have not finished yet. The next is a bill to provide for the transfer to the province of Alberta of its natural resources. Mr. Speaker, you have forbidden a discussion of that subject; but a good many hon. gentlemen have been eating the forbidden fruit if I know anything about the matter, and I wonder if you will let me get as near to it as they have. As the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) indicated, it takes two to make a bargain. There was a bargain put down in black and white, that this government concurred in, that the Alberta government concurred in. A resolution in regard to it was placed on the order paper. There it remained as was indicated by the recital of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) in this House a few weeks ago. We cannot force that on the Alberta government.

There must be two parties to a contract before it can be consummated. If one backs out the other cannot make the bargain with himself, unless there is concurrence and agreement in these matters. We could not have any June weddings without two parties to the contract. If one party defaults, the other cannot marry himself or herself. All they can do is to wait for a more favourable day, present their admonitions, and continue negotiations towards the desired end. Is that not what will be done? A more fortunate, a more acceptable time will no doubt come to the Alberta government, a time when it will be more opportune for them to accept the agreement than now. We do not know the minds of the members of that legislature. We know what was said to be the reason, but we do not want to repeat or to elaborate it. The fact stands out that we can "resolute" from now to doomsday, but we cannot alone make a bargain. We are prepared to carry out the bargain on the terms mutually agreed upon by both sides. What more do hon. gentlemen want? This resolution is more absurd than the egg resolution of the other day. There was something to that resolution. It seems to be assumed by hon. gentlemen opposite that we can carry out this agreement ourselves, or in other words that one party can make a contract.

If my right hon. friend has anything to suggest as to what has been omitted from what the Minister of the Interior has indicated, it may be the amendment to the Elections Act. Was there any uproarious demand throughout the country for an amendment to the Elections Act? At the time that paragraph was inserted in the Speech from the Throne it was generally assumed by nine out of ten that we would need an election this summer. Was there the same apparent evidence of that during the last month? Was there the same necessity for it? Have we not had a long session? Is it not the natural thing, when you reach the June days, the hot days and the dog-days of summer, to eliminate anything that is least pressing that has been referred to in the House? Will there be any great alarm or anxiety or indignation throughout the country if this one item is not carried out? We can carry it out yet if that is required, but I do not see any evidence of any pressing need for it.

Let us consider some of the things that do not appear in the Speech from the Throne, but that nevertheless were forthcoming. Let us suppose that there is a balance on the wrong side with regard to the return of the natural resources. Something happened through no fault of ours. What about the introduction of the penny postage, mentioned for the first time by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) in his excellent budget speech? This is an old Liberal policy introduced in Sir Wilfrid Laurier's time by a former Postmaster General, Hon. Mr. Mulock. I know when the Tories came into power they raised it to three cents, a war tax if you like; but along with many other taxes we have removed this one cent war tax on letters and restored penny postage. If that had come from the party of ultra-loyalists you would have heard some hurrahing about it. That was not promised in the Speech from the Throne, and that is so much superabundance over and above what was pledged in that Speech

What about old age pensions? I think it has been slain above or below, I do not know which. Was that promised in the Speech from the Throne? It is a comparatively new question outside of this House, but an old one in it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): A supplementary address.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The legislation? That is what I am saying; it is supplementary to the Speech from the Throne. It far more than outbalances the omission of an amendment to the Elections Act which, after all in my estimation, was not required this session. It has met a sad fate, it is true, but is that our fault? Exactly the same arguments were used in the upper house that were used in this House against the bill. It was said that there should be a contributory clause in it. They objected to it because it was a non-contributory plan of old age pensions and the same argument was recited in the other house. There may have been no connection between the two. I am inclined to take the word of my right hon. friend that he would rather it had passed; I believe that is his view.

After the experience of so many Liberal candidates in this province being flayed and slain in the manufacturing centres of Ontario and elsewhere, not many low or moderate tariff men expected to see much reduction in the tariff this session. We came here on the 7th January feeling that it would be a case of marking time in the matter of tariff; that there would not be very much doing. But even under adverse conditions this government has dared to carry out its general policy of removing or remitting taxation wherever it was bearing heavily upon the people and it has done so. We are ahead on that count No hon. gentleman can stand up and say that we fell short of our expectations as regards lowering taxation through the tariff and in other ways. The income tax reduction was a prize package to hundreds of thousands of people in Canada who never expected to get any remission, and the delight was greater when it was found that the remission applied to the year which we had gone through. That was very much in excess of what was promised.

My hon. friends are quite quiet now. I am going to refer to this 5 per cent luxury tax that the leader of the opposition spoke about the other night in high dudgeon. He had first rehearsed his speech in the breezy west—Winnipeg—to see how it would go there. He did not need to go there to find out how it would go; I could have told him. I wish I could indicate his manner of speaking, but I do not think I could, with his hands going around like those of a man flailing peas. Why was the hon. gentleman angry with us for undoing something that he said put us in wrong? If we had put our foot in so badly, should he not have been glad, should we not have seen his face all smiles—though we do not see that very often? He should have taken our action in that way, but instead he was in high dudgeon because of our remitting that luxury tax. The fact remains that the 15 per cent reduction on the smaller cars stands, 7½ on the more expensive ones, and in addition to that there is a remission of the 5 per cent luxury tax on the smaller cars. That really means a reduction of 20 per cent. Now let us analyse it, and perhaps in the process we may be able to drive some Liberal ideas through the cranium of a thick-headed Tory. Formerly this 5 per cent was paid by the manufacturers to the government. Is not that right? Will anyone object to that statement? I repeat, formerly the 5 per cent luxury tax was paid by the manufacturers to the government.

An hon. MEMBER: You are absolutely wrong.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is a voice under the gallery. What is the hon. gentleman saying? I did not get it. I say, this five per cent used to be paid by the manufacturers to the government.

An hon. MEMBER: You are wrong.

Mr. KAISER: It was collected by the manufacturer from the consumer and handed to the government.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: And now the remission of the tax will be passed on by the manufacturers to the consumer in the form of lower prices. The consumer will get the benefit of it instead of the government. Is that not right? I call the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) to witness, for he himself has said that it will be passed on. He said so the other night when he stated his belief that the motor car manufacturers would keep their signed word and pass on this advantage to the purchasers. I am not quoting the precise words of the right hon. gentleman, but that is the substance of what he said. And the leader of the government (Mr. Mackenzie King) intimated that if the purchasers were not given this benefit the tax would be taken off corresponding cars of other makes than Canadian. The thing is as plain as noonday. It is obvious that this is one more remission of taxation; it is so much money going from the treasury of the country into the pockets of the consumers. It is as much a remission of taxes as the reduction in income tax or the reduction in postage. Yet my hon. friends will cut up didoes and go through all sorts of verbal gymnastics in their endeavour to conceal the truth. But they will not succeed. The people are not fools, and when they get the new price list they will find out what has been done. When they compare the new prices with those that formerly obtained they will discover that the government has made not only one but two reductions in respect of motor cars.

You will observe, Mr. Speaker, that hon. gentlemen opposite have quieted down. They are fading away. Why? Because they cannot reason against the facts. There has been one more remission of taxation and they know it, and the trouble with them is that they are mad because we have made this remission. They would rather have seen Oshawa close its shops so that they might have a real justification for howling; but instead, the order will be given for full steam ahead. Yes, these hon. gentlemen are staunch loyalists and very great friends of the manufacturers. But we know exactly what is aimed at.

The leader of the opposition declares that the government has no right to dissolution; according to him we have only a right to hand in our resignation.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear!

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, let us look into that, too. What is the usual evidence by which one is led to conclude that a government is either losing or gaining in the confidence of the people? I submit, Mr. Speaker, that by-elections constitute one infallible barometer. And have we been losing any by-elections which might tend to suggest that we were going down in the estimation of the country? Let us see. The first by-election was held in Prince Albert, where the Prime Minister was returned with a majority which we reckoned in thousands.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is all the contribution some hon. members can make to the debate—a guffaw. Another by-election was held in Regina a reasonably safe fighting proposition from the standpoint of the opposition. A year ago this month one of two provincial cabinet ministers was defeated in Regina, and there is always a strong Tory contingency to be found in that capital city. Well, the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) presented himself for election in that riding, and it was impossible to get a Tory or anybody else to toe the scratch at all. Is there any evidence there of a decline of the government in the affections of the people? Then we come to Ontario, where it was predicted that the government would not dare open a seat. It was thought that from one end of the province to the other it would be impossible for the government to find anywhere a safe constituency. We went to West Middlesex where the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elliott) ran and was elected. Some hon. gentlemen opposite, genial, affable good fellows, went into West Middlesex to try their hands at throwing out the minister who stood for election. The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) went up there. and you know the result. He was ably flanked by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins), and you know his usual theme. Well, by the time we got there we found that the fight had been already won for us; the Liberal contingent that went into the constituency on the last Saturday need not take any credit. Those two hon. gentlemen alone could have won the election for the Minister of Labour, and as a matter of fact they did contribute largely to that end, if I am to believe one-half of the unsolicited testimony of many electors. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that if ever I get into a tight place again—it has happened once or twice—I shall issue a special invitation to my two hon. friends to come and help my opponent.

In view of all these evidences of the confidence which the country has in this government, why should we not be entitled to dissolve parliament? It is our right and we will get it too—

An hon. MEMBER: How?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: —if it is required. Now, for a few brief minutes I will review the events in parliament during the past few months. It has been a most interesting time and I would not have missed it for anything. A number of precedents were established; a number of others were dug up; some of the old ones died and were buried; and some brand new ones were born. And we all know how nice it is to be at the birth of some new institution. The principle of government by a majority of parliament was recognized and we have carried on, under difficulties, it is true, upon that principle. But we have carried on. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that it was not by resolutions alone that hon. gentlemen opposite endeavoured to shake us out of these seats. They resorted to every invective which waspish tongues could utter: we were a rum government, a remnant government, and a ramshackle government. When I was at school they used to teach the three R's but these gentlemen have introduced a new trio—rum, remnant and ramshackle. The hon. member for Fort William is, I think, responsible for the last mentioned. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), after all hopes had been disappointed, would turn around upon the Progressives and you could see the bristles on the back of his neck fairly rising; and we all remember how the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) did his coquetting on that occasion. But he was not quite happy in this unaccustomed role; it is so long since his courting days that he has forgotten how to play the part. But the Progressives did not respond and, when persuasion failed, hon. gentlemen's affection turned to wrath and bitterness; it was ashes in their mouths. They were ready to devour every Progressive or anybody else, for that matter, who was not a Tory. They would eat a Progressive any morning before breakfast without salt. Why, they hated them with the most venomous hatred.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Don't look so amazed. If my hon. friends knew how they looked after that first vote they would not care to see a photograph of themselves. They would not recognize themselves in moments of reflection. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) particularly distinguished himself by shouting; "Why don't you get out? Resign!" Those were the cries that came to us from across the floor. Well, we did not resign, we are not out yet. Those tactics simply rebounded upon my hon. friends opposite; they did not work. Now here is a resolution that they hope will work—a resolution that we are forbidden to speak about; only the first speaker had that opportunity. The rest of the programme has been carried out in its entirety with the one possible exception referred to. In fact we have given full measure, running over, for we have introduced half a dozen supplementary pieces of very important legislation that were never referred to at all in the Speech from the Throne.

I find this query among my notes: In the event of a general election how will Saskatchewan go? I will not speak for any other province. I think we on this side of the House can view with the utmost equanimity the prospect of a general election. Why? Right on our record this very session that my hon. friends opposite are criticizing. If all other provinces go the same as Saskatchewan, there will not be a Tory left in this House. True, there is not one from that province here now, and they cannot have less than a duck egg, but the result will be repeated at the next general election.

I remember, Mr. Speaker, when things were at their worst, and they were pretty bad the night of that first vote, we were all pretty tense and anxious—we might as well admit that now—for we knew there was going to be a close shave. The galleries, I think, were even more concerned than we were. About that time the officials of my department had to put in force quarantine regulations with respect to dogs because rabies had attacked our canine heroes throughout the country. Well, Mr. Speaker, I was beginning to think that some of our political opponents were suffering from political rabies, for they were snapping and biting at everybody within reach, and I was wondering if my officials would have to prescribe muzzles or leashes for my hon. friends opposite. It seemed we would have to put the mouth clamp on them. —I guess that was done, too, when the closure was applied. But, I repeat, it was nothing short of a species of political rabies that ran right through the opposition both in the House and outside during the first two or three months of the session. But just as the canine disease has run its course, so have these manifestations died out in our friends opposite. At that time they were scarcely human beings, they were scarcely fit to live with. That day is past and they are now pretty good fellows. We used to wonder how in the world anybody wanted to elect such representatives. Now we understand they are pretty much like ourselves, human beings, asserting the right to challenge the existence of the government. They have that right, I accord it to them, and so far as I am concerned I am quite willing to abide by the result of the vote on this motion.

One other incidental conclusion I might arrive at in connection with this challenge. Up till to-day the trump card that it was hoped would pull the trick was the customs inquiry.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am out of order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman is straying in that direction.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, I think I have gone far enough to indicate it. I think, Mr. Speaker, you will admit that all the other speakers went much further in connection with the natural resources matter, so if I strayed a little bit I suppose you will forgive me. Anyhow, in addition to the other demonstrations, the House has not forgotten that famous snap verdict. After all the grimaces that were made against us, after all the denunciations of this government—

THE ROYAL ASSENT

SUSPENSION OF SITTING

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

COMMITTEE ON STANDING ORDERS

Mr. W. F. KAY (Brome-Missisquoi): With the unanimous consent of the House I beg leave to move that the House return to the order for motions.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand the hon. gentleman wishes this motion to pass in order that a private bill, which has not yet been before the Private Bills committee, may be given a chance to be considered by the House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the bill in question?

Mr. CAHILL: The Gatineau Transmission Company bill.

Mr. KAY: This bill was introduced in the Senate, but owing to the time prescribed having expired it had to come before the Standing Orders committee in order to get their approval. I now move that the second report of the select standing committee on Standing Orders, which was presented this afternoon, be concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House that the second report of the select standing committee on Standing Orders be concurred in?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know what the report of the Standing Orders committee is, but at the present moment we are in the midst of a debate, and I never heard of any motion to return to the order for motions at such a time.

Mr. SPEAKER: The report was presented at two o'clock, and when the motion to concur in it was made, the hon. member for Pontiac raised objection. I understand he has now withdrawn his objection.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is true, but would not the proper time for this motion be at the end of the debate?

Mr. SPEAKER: This is the hour for private bills. I understand the House gives unanimous consent to the motion.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION ELECTRIC PROTECTION COMPANY

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure) moved that the House go into committee on Bill No. 155, respecting the Dominion Electric Protection Company.

Mr. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): I was wondering, Mr. Speaker, if by leave of the House I could move—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is too late; he can move his motion later. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee on the bill, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Mr. MARCIL: This bill was allowed to stand in committee for the purpose of allowing an explanation of its purpose. I may say that it seeks to amend chapter 102 of the statutes of 1924, and merely authorizes the company to increase its capital stock to $1,000,000, divided into shares of $25. The measure has already been passed in the Senate. The company was formed in 1924 for the purpose of carrying on a system of electric protection. It is doing business in Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa and other cities.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PRESIDENT OF THE LETHBRIDGE STAKE

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Mr. L. H. JELLIFF (Lethbridge) moved the second reading of and concurrence in an amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 11, to incorporate the President of the Lethbridge stake.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

THE JOHN E. RUSSELL COMPANY

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Mr. DAVID SPENCE (Parkdale) moved the second reading of and concurrence in an amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 13, respecting a patent owned by The John E. Russell Company, Limited.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

PRIVATE BILLS

SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 190 respecting certain patents of James McCutcheon Coleman.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 191, to incorporate Gatineau Transmission Company.—Mr. Fontaine.

RED LAKE AND NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): I beg to move that, owing to the late period in the session, Bill No. 95, to incorporate the Red Lake and Northwestern Railway Company, be placed on the order paper among private bills for consideration in committee of the Whole this day.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the bill been considered before any special or standing committee of the House?

Mr. HEENAN: The bill passed the committee to-day.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Duff in the chair.

[Mr. Speaker.]

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. EVANS: This bill has been before the committee for some days, and to-day it was passed by just one-quarter of the members of the committee. It is a bill to incorporate a company to construct a railway from a point on the Canadian National railway into the Red Lake district. That territory is naturally Canadian National territory. If a railway were needed into that part of the country, the Canadian National naturally would be the company to construct it. In the past we have made many mistakes in railway construction in Canada. On account of the haphazard granting of charters for railways such as this, we find ourselves in the railway debacle which we are facing at the present time. This is a foreign company. The railway is not called for by anybody living in the district. A mining camp has just been started there, and no requisition has come to us for a railway. We have landed ourselves in a railway debt which we shall not be able to pay for generations. Before the committee grant this charter we should seriously consider whether we desire to incorporate a foreign company to go into the centre of this country to construct a railway where it is not wanted or called for at the present time. I am an advocate of government ownership, and I believe that this proposition cannot fail to have a detrimental effect on our Canadian National Railways. The idea of the promoter is that this railway will extend up through northern Manitoba and into the Hudson bay district, and I am wondering whether hon. members who so strenuously opposed the Hudson bay grant this year will now be willing to incorporate a company with powers to go into that district, exploit our natural resources, and intensify our railway problem. I oppose the bill for these reasons, and hope the committee will reject it.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I was in the committee room when this bill came up to-day, and to my mind this is an exploitation company to get a charter which may hereafter become valuable. Not only does the bill ask for power to construct 100 miles of railway into Red Lake, but it asks for further power to go as far as The Pas, many miles northwest, and eventually become a new transcontinental line paralleling our two transcontinental lines across this continent. The Deputy Minister of Railways was present at the committee to-day and in reply to me he said that the department had no objection to it; but on behalf of the National Railways, although only a humble member of this House, I object to this free chartering of companies that are mainly for the purpose of exploitation, especially when, as was stated to-day, those who are asking for the charter are residents of the United States.

I think the time has arrived when the Minister of Railways should say whether he is willing to assume the responsibility of creating companies that are practically schemes for exploitation. It develops to-day that this is really in opposition to a parallel railway into which we are putting $3,000,000 now and into which we shall have to put $16,000,000 or $20,000,000 later on. Not only does it parallel that road to The Pas, but eventually if it means anything its object is to be another transcontinental railway in this country. The trouble in Canada is this over-duplication in regard to railways, and we are continuing in the same course. What we want to do is to get rid of these duplications. If a mining territory must be served with railways we ought to keep that for the National Railway system in preference to encouraging the construction of new railways. I have put in and I will continue to put in my protest hereafter against any schemes for railway construction for which good reasons cannot be given.

There may be a gold field there—I hope there is—but if there is, it is contiguous to the Canadian National Railways and the best way to get to it is by the Canadian National. If the people there want to get a road they ought to go to the Canadian National and ask them to serve them by a line from their main line to this new gold field. Again I protest against this continuation of indiscriminately chartering new railroads that are to be subjects hereafter of trouble and expense to the Canadian National or the Canadian Pacific, and that are mainly promoted by those who are called dealers in charters or schemes that will eventually be a tax upon the people of this country.

Mr. HEAPS: I would like to hear a little more in respect to this bill from those who are supporting it. If I understand the matter correctly, the province of Manitoba has agreed to guarantee certain bonds for a railway to be built from somewhere near Winnipeg into this very same area. If that is correct, the city of Winnipeg and the province of Manitoba are vitally interested in a measure of this character, and consequently before I could support this bill I should like the promoters to give the committee a little more information than is at present before us. I do not know whether there is any time limit within which the proposed company must begin construction or complete the railway.

Mr. HEENAN: In the territory that I have the honour to represent we have a new mining area known as the Red lake mining area. This application for a new railroad company came before the committee, where is was turned down without very much consideration. The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) very kindly brought it up again in this House and had it resurrected and sent back to the committee. At the next sitting of the committee sufficient information in connection with the railway was not forthcoming from the promoters, and it was sent back again until they could give us some further information and until the Canadian National and the government of Ontario could be heard from. The Premier of Ontario has written a letter to one of the northern Ontario members of this House who is interested in that territory and he states that with certain modifications he has no objections to the bill. The Deputy Minister of Railways came before the committee and the department has no objection to the bill.

In reply to the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps), I may say that we have to-day included in the bill a special clause providing that construction must be under way and $100,000 spent within the first year. If that is not done at the end of next session then all rights become null and void. We have taken out of the bill as it appears before the committee to-day certain clauses which the province of Ontario objected to in regard to water powers. Therefore I think the bill meets every objection, with the exception of the objections of those who are against all private enterprise in this country.

As regards the statement of an hon. member opposite that this is a foreign corporation, I do not know where he gets his information. While I do not know any of these gentlemen I see that clause one reads:

> John H. Cassidy, Charles B. Hibbard and Frederick R. Brown all of the city of Montreal, and D'Arcy Scott, of the city of Ottawa, together with such other persons as may become shareholders of the company are incorporated under the name of the Red Lake and Northwestern Railway Company.

It is true that the gentlemen when asking for incorporation told the committee that they had Boston bankers behind them, but I do not think it is a crime for anyone starting a new enterprise in this country to have it backed by foreign capital. At least, if that is the case, I have not yet heard it so stated.

The hon. gentleman said there was no request from the people of that district to have this railway built. As the member representing that part of the country I am in a position to refute that statement. The district lies principally in unorganized territory and there are not very many councils or boards of trade, but such town councils as there are, like Dryden, for instance, are certainly demanding this railway. That particular council passed a resolution favouring the granting of the charter and as the representative of the people in the district I stand here to-night and say that they do want to have the railway built into that country.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): How many miles will it run?

Mr. HEENAN: It is 125 miles from the Canadian National railway, directly north into Red lake.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): What is the total distance north and west?

Mr. HEENAN: It does not run parallel with the Canadian National railway, but at right angles to that line. That is all the information I can give at the moment, unless hon. gentlemen want to ask any questions.

Mr. HANNESSON: Does the hon. gentleman say that the Canadian National Railways have no objection?

Mr. HEENAN: That is what the deputy minister told the committee.

Mr. HANNESSON: Was Manitoba consulted?

Mr. HEENAN: I do not know.

Mr. HEAPS: In view of the fact that this railway will run through Manitoba territory, perhaps representatives from that province may be able to say something about the bill.

Mr. HEENAN: The hon. member is mistaken; the railway does not run through Manitoba. It merely touches that province, lying entirely within Ontario.

Mr. EVANS: Notwithstanding all that the hon. member has said, I still require further information before I can give my sanction to this matter. This railway will run across a corner of Ontario and into northern Manitoba, and according to the promoters of the bill it is intended to go into the mining area in proximity to Hudson bay. I am surprised to see how little interest parliament takes in this proposition, which in my opinion is a most unreasonable one. Our decision on this bill to-night will be a decision between public and private ownership, and whether we consider the National railways worth saving or not, the fact remains that we are dividing the country up into small sections under private corporations to an extent which has been unknown in the past. We know to what pass the country has been brought through enterprises of this sort, and I fear it will not be long before the government will have to take over an unprofitable concern if we pass this bill. In spite of everything the hon. member has said as to the personnel of this corporation, I would remind the committee that the evidence came out before the Railway committee that a company of Boston bankers was behind the scheme, and I do not think that we in Canada have any occasion yet to invite any foreign company to come and tell us what we need in the way of new railways.

Mr. JACOBS: If the foreign company is prepared to put up its own money I do not see why we should object to taking it.

Mr. EVANS: No deposit has been made, nor has any guarantee been given that the work will be proceeded with. I do not think that we should lightly grant a charter to a company which apparently is merely charter-mongering. I should like to know from the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) what is the policy the government intends to pursue in relation to the government ownership of railways. It has been said that the Canadian National Railways are not interested in the matter. I would point out that those railways now belong to the people of Canada and it is for parliament to say whether or not the Canadian National system is interested. We cannot help being interested when we know that this new railway is going to run into territory which will be served by the Hudson Bay line. We are immensely interested in this matter and before the bill passes the House will no doubt demand further information.

Mr. CHURCH: I oppose very strongly this grab bill. I attended three sessions of the Railway committee when this bill was being considered. The committee saw fit to turn down the preamble, rejecting the bill for many reasons, among which was the contention that it was not in the public interest to pass this bill, that it was not a work for the general advantage of Canada, and that a territory containing such immense wealth should not be handed over to a few self-seekers and private corporations to be exploited for their own purposes and benefit. The entire railway policy of this country is all wrong and always has been. Parliament appointed a railway commission in 1917 for the express purpose of recommending what course should be followed in regard to just such matters as we are considering this evening. That commission made, among others, this recommendation, that before any bill was adopted by parliament it should first of all be passed upon by the railway commission itself. In the service of the commission there are experts who, from the information to which they have access and from the knowledge they possess, are able to decide whether such a bill as this is in the public interest or not, or is a work for the general advantage of Canada.

The proposed railway passes through a district in New Ontario which contains untold wealth, of which neither the provincial nor the Dominion government know the full extent. I do not think that anyone could possibly consider this project one for the general advantage of Canada. The road lies almost entirely in the province of Ontario, but it has been made by this bit of paper an interprovincial undertaking in order to bring it within the jurisdiction of this parliament. On three occasions the Minister of Railways has been asked by the Railway committee to outline the policy of the government in connection with this bill, and the House has a right to know. The other night the minister himself introduced a vote for the Hudson Bay railway. If this bill passes and the proposed line is constructed it will run parallel to the Hudson Bay railway, and will take business away from that road.

I submit that this matter should be allowed to stand over for another year. There is no particular reason why we should rush it as not one yard of railway will be built this year. The company will not build, I say, a mile of railway this year, for an examination of the facts shows that the concern behind this application is nothing but a paper company. If we examined the records we should be surprised to find how many paper companies have been given charters for thirty years by this legislature. We should go over the books and wipe such companies out. I know of one company which was given a charter in 1905 and which came to parliament year after year with request for an extension of time and got fourteen extensions. This sort of thing should be put an end to. The time has come when the people will rebel against the taxation which they are called upon to bear in connection with railways in this country. We have spent millions of dollars on the National railways, and whenever there is any rich territory which might be developed for the benefit of the country at large, Sir Henry Thornton is prepared to hand it over to private concerns. On the other hand, there is apparently too great a readiness to build branch lines which lead nowhere and will never yield a cent of revenue to the country. If these branch lines were built on the free trade law of supply and demand there would be fewer lines and fewer deficits and millions less cost to the country. The whole railway policy, I repeat, is unsound, and the time has come for a show-down. Are we going to repeat the fatal mistake made in this country from 1890 to 1911 when everyone could get a charter for the mere asking here in this legislature? One of the reasons why New Ontario has been economically annexed to the United States is the fact that American capitalists have secured control of the water-powers in that part of the country. These water-powers are the key to industrial development, and if Sir Adam Beck had been given his way and the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway had been electrified there would be in that district to-day, not 60,000 but half a million of people, and there would be such a development as has never been witnessed anywhere in the world, as the result of publicly owned development of water-powers and transportation.

This is a purely provincial railway. If the promoters of this bill are anxious to put it through they ought to go to Queen's Park, Toronto. It is not and never was a work for the general advantage of Canada. I would ask the hon. gentleman who has spoken in support of the measure, who are the Americans back of it? What has Mr. Backus to do with this bill? He wrote to the Railway committee a letter in which he made the statement that he was prepared to build the road himself. Well, we all know that he is an American millionaire who waited upon the Ontario legislature in the days of the Drury-Raney farmer regime and was given a principality, a kingdom, an empire in itself of timber within New Ontario, all at the expense of the province. It is men of that type who are behind this undertaking. Mr. Backus is the silent partner who is ready to take the road over when we pass it, for he knows this parliament will never stand, or the public, for what he got away with in Ontario.

I am very much surprised at the action of the Ontario government under the premiership of Mr. Howard Ferguson. When Sir Adam Beck wanted the Whitney government to electrify the Temiskaming railway, private interests at that time opposed that policy, and the water-powers were handed over to private capital. I want to see the policy of protection adopted for this new part of Ontario. Are we going to repeat the mistakes we made in old Ontario; are we going to see the great corporations of

New York, Boston, Toledo and Buffalo in control of the vast natural resources of that region? No I say the time has come to call a halt here and now and lay this bill over until we have the results of the survey parties which are now going over this new district. No one knows the wealth of the country to be served by this railway. There is no demand for this legislation. The territory should belong to the so-called public ownership Canadian National Railways who support private grabs all the time. I am not surprised at the stand taken by the Premier of Ontario. He has always been on that side, and therefore it is quite natural that he should support this bill, but in doing so I believe he is making the same mistake in New Ontario that has been made in the older parts of the province. He fails to realize the possibilities of this newer New Ontario, as he failed to protect the 1914 New Ontario.

I am prepared, Mr. Chairman, to move by way of amendment that it is not in the public interest that this bill should be passed. Nobody knows who or what is behind this proposed charter. If you give to the promoters the powers they ask for under section 7 you will be giving them the individual key to that great district for ever, which is a kingdom in itself. It is purely a provincial railway, and instead of seeking a charter here the promoters should have taken a leaf out of the book of their great American millionaire leader Backus. He went to Queen's Park for his millionaire fake charters, and when he could get nothing more there, of course, he decided to invade the federal arena here. Not by the wildest stretch of the imagination can this bill be said to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. We are in effect being asked to grant a charter over the head of the Ontario legislature, over the head of the Canadian National and the railway commission. Who are the promoters of this bill? I know only one gentleman, Mr. D'Arcy Scott, whose address is the city of Ottawa. Before any more charters of this character are granted they should be reported on by the railway commission to the House. What is the railway commission for but to check up bills of this kind? I was glad to see the member for South York (Mr. Maclean) in the Railway committee this morning take a strong stand against the passing of this bill. I was there three days and missed him and his support. I am sorry a better hearing could not be had before the committee this morning, but no doubt the other members having already considered the bill two or three times had made up their minds with respect to it.

[Mr. Church.]

I am utterly opposed to the principle of this bill, Mr. Chairman. We should preserve this rich territory for the people of Ontario and the people of Canada, not deliver it over to these American millionaires whose names appear in clause 2 of the bill, Mr. Backus and his friends, who already have a kingdom up there in New Ontario. New Ontario to-day is owned very largely by American capitalists. The mining development of that country has been retarded owing to the lack of protection, which apparently some Conservatives would put on the scrap heap to-day for a few friends. The Conservative party in this honourable House is supposed to be a protectionist party. The most shining example we have to-day of the benefits of that policy is the hydro-electric movement in Ontario. The Hydro fought the battle of the masses against the classes, and saved and redeemed the water powers of Ontario without any help from Hon. Howard Ferguson, for the people of the province forever. Sir Adam Beck and myself, head and president of the hydro municipalities and as his first lieutenant respectively, often had to fight against the whole Ontario government and cabinet. We stood by our principles through thick and thin, in fair weather and bad.

This bill was considered a month ago in the Railway committee, and the application was refused. The committee then reported to the House, and the chairman of the committee moved concurrence in the report, which which was adopted by the House. But about two weeks later, a motion was made in the House to recommit the bill to the committee for further consideration. What happened between the first consideration and the second consideration of this bill by the committee I do not know, but the American interests got busy and in the first place I would say that I think it was a breach of the rules of the House to recommit the bill, and an abuse of the privileges of the House to send the bill back again. Secondly, I would point out that I have had three bills in the public interest on the order paper since January 12 on railway matters, one placed there on the 8th of January and one on the 12th, and they have never been called in this House except on one occasion at eleven-thirty at night, when I was not present and no one had any notice that the bill would be called. I contend, Mr. Speaker, that those bills have just as much right to be heard before the standing committee on Railways as this favourite grab bill of private interests. This bill was recommitted to the committee, and the committee held two sittings, one last Wednesday and another on Thursday, but the members did not get the notices in time and I moved that the bill be laid over for consideration until this morning. There was no letter written by the Premier of Ontario addressed to the committee, but there was a letter addressed to the gentleman who introduced the bill.

But what we have to consider, Mr. Chairman, is the public interest. That must be paramount in this House. Section 12 of this bill shows what this company is seeking. It provides:

> The company may acquire (but not by expropriation) or lease and operate water-powers along the line of its railway or in the vicinity thereof and construct, maintain and improve dykes, piers, and flumes and all other works required for the development of such water-powers as well as for producing electricity or other power.

This bill is 95 per cent a power proposition. If you will read section 7 in conjunction with section 12, you will see what is behind this bill. Section 7 provides:

> The company may lay out, construct and operate by means of steam, electricity, or other motive power a railway or tramway, from a point at, or near the village of Quibell in the township of Wabigoon, in the province of Ontario, thence in a northerly direction by the most feasible and advantageous route to a point at or near Red Lake a distance of about one hundred miles, then in a generally northerly and westerly direction to a point on the Hudson Bay division of the Canadian National railway at or east of Le Pas, in the province of Manitoba.

I contend, Mr. Chairman, that these sections are ultra vires of this parliament. Why? Because the government of the province of Ontario has seen fit to appoint a hydro-electric power commission having jurisdiction over all the water-powers of the province, including this territory, and I contend that it is outside of the power of this parliament to pass these provisions. Under the decision of the Privy Council the province has jurisdiction over all the water-powers that are entirely within the province for regulation and control purposes.

Not by any stretch of the imagination can this tramway of a few miles be said to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario was never consulted, and I say should never stand for any more of this kind of thing, and the people are going to protest, not only in the law courts, but through the ballot boxes. The older sections of New Ontario were so badly treated by the National railways that the province of Ontario had to build its own Temiskaming and Ontario railway without any federal subsidies, while similar provincial railways built in Manitoba got millions in subsidies. I wish to protest, on behalf of the people of 9 p.m. Ontario, against the shabby treatment they have received. If necessary, this bill will be taken into the law courts to prevent the abuses it proposes. I protest against the bill passing, as I believe it is not in the public interest.

The CHAIRMAN: Nine o'clock.

Mr. CHURCH: I am glad I talked this grab bill out anyway, on behalf of the people of Ontario, and we will have a reckoning with the Ferguson government a little later and with the National railways, who together are playing the game of the private interests.

SUPPLY—MOTION OF WANT OF CONFIDENCE

The House resumed consideration of the proposed motion of Hon. Mr. Robb for committee of Supply, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Davis.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When you left the chair, Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock, I was on the point of drawing attention to a certain snap verdict that our Conservative friends scored on the government in committee of the Whole about two or three months ago when the estimates of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin) were before the committee. It was thought at that time by our Conservative friends that it would go abroad that the government was defeated by a majority of thirty odd, and that there would be a great sensation throughout the land, that a crisis would be precipitated, and that probably the government would be shaken out of the treasury benches. Well, Mr. Speaker, it did not work, you may have noticed. It fell on the public mind as flat as the proverbial pancake. They knew it was just a stunt, or, as described by my colleague the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), it was just a matter of playing hide and seek. That is all it was—hide and seek politics. I must compliment them to-night on the more businesslike and manly way in which they are challenging the right of this government to govern. The hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Davis) has brought down an amendment. True, he forgot to notify us in the usual way, but that is a trifle in these days, I presume. It is the custom of two boxers when they first meet in the ring to shake hands, no matter how much they may want to kill each other. My hon. friends across the way forgot to shake hands by not giving us the usual notice that they were going to strike, but we will forgive them that trifle. I cannot help contrasting their attitude today, however, with the manly deportment and behaviour of the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) who gave me notice several days before that he was bringing down his famous egg amendment and challenging the government. Possibly one was only meant for the yolk, while this was meant for real blood.

I would like to inquire for a few moments what this amendment really does mean. If the contention of the right hon. leader of the opposition holds good, that is, that if we are defeated on this vote and ask for a dissolution and it is refused, we resign, then it will mean that the government of the country will go over into the hands of the Conservative party led by the leader of the opposition.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am glad my hon. friends see it that way, because that is the way I see it. Furthermore, it might dispel some of the illusions that some people have that some other leader might come to the front on the opposition side, for it is said that others have aspirations in that direction. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, there is no danger of the supremacy of the right hon. leader of the opposition being challenged in this respect by anyone. He will have a lot of good material over there out of which to make a cabinet, so let us be as cheerful as possible under the circumstances. There is no one he will choose quicker than his colleague who sits to his right, the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers), a gentleman of well known cabinet material. Like myself and others, he has been in provincial political life for many years before coming to Ottawa, and is recognized as having left his mark on the political life of Manitoba. I hope in my humble way that I too have left my mark on the provincial life of Saskatchewan. So I do not think the right hon. leader of the opposition will have any lack of material out of which to form a cabinet. It is therefore a fair fight and no favours, and may the best man and the best cause win.

There are far worse prospects than an election, Mr. Speaker. I could ask nothing better than to have a round out of our old traditional Tory friends, but I do not care much for the thought of spending a few thousand dollars in an election campaign in two successive years. I remember back in 1917, again in 1919, and again in 1921, I fought three successive elections, each two years apart. There is not much money in that, Mr. Speaker, and from that angle I do not think much of the prospect of an election, but from the point of view of results I fear it not.

What would the carrying of this amendment mean in addition to turning the government of this country over into the hands of the Conservatives, led by the right hon. leader of the opposition? It is far better to look this issue straight in the face and take plenty of time to consider it, than to vote upon it in haste and repent at leisure. Consequently I am not going to be in a hurry. Now I want what this step will mean to percolate into the minds of hon. gentlemen, especially those from the smaller provinces. There are two or three questions which have an important bearing upon it. There is no question but that the tariff is one of the questions. Nearly all our time during this session has been spent in discussing the tariff, and the election campaign to a large extent was fought on that issue. The government have followed up their election promises by making substantial reductions in the tariff not only on automobiles but pasteurizing plants in connection with our dairy industry, milking machines identified with the same industry, and many other articles that I could mention. There is no doubt that the right hon. leader of the opposition—and I say he did it manfully, openly and avowedly—challenged the issue of protection as against our policy of lower tariffs and wider markets. Consequently every hon. gentleman who deliberately throws the government of this country into Conservative hands and into the hands of the right hon. leader of the opposition is voting for a higher tariff and more taxation. There is no doubt about that. If it does not mean that then it does not mean anything at all. What is more, those who placed my right hon. friend in his present position and gave him a large number of seats in Ontario will have won their point. My hon. friends can rest assured of that. And so I say that every man who casts his vote for this amendment will be voting for a higher tariff. Had the Conservative party been in power do you think we should have got the present reduction in duties on motor cars? No, Sir, not at all. We may as well look the issue squarely in the face. We are going to have it settled and nobody will be allowed to wriggle out.

There is another very important question that has been before the House. It is one that has been before the country for twenty-five years, and that is the right of the farmers, particularly those in the west, to market their own grain, in their own way, and through their own channels. I was identified with the fight for that long before I became known in any other capacity. We were forced into the contest by the exigencies of the situation. We had to do it, it was a fight for our lives, and this fight has been going on ever since. Every time the matter came before parliament, and there happened to be a Liberal government in power, we always got some redress in the direction desired; we always made progress. I impress that upon hon. gentlemen.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg:) Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Are you the member of this House whose name appears in Hansard of last year as voting against the amendment to the Canada Grain Act which is known this session as Bill No. 8?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It was the motion for the third reading of the bill and I voted for it. Had the wishes of my hon. friend and those associated with him prevailed the whole bill would have been defeated. I know the exact circumstances and I know what happened. The hon. member has not been long enough in this House to know what was under consideration at that time. I say I voted for the third reading.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Will the hon. gentleman permit me another question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Have I the hon. member's permission?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, well, there is no use putting your feet in it all the time.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): The minister, apparently, did not understand the purport of my remarks. I drew his attention to the record in the Votes and Proceedings of last session when amendments to the Canada Grain Act were under consideration. It was moved by Mr. Coote, that the bill be not then reported but be referred back to the committee in order that an amendment exactly in the phraseology of Bill No. 8 might be inserted. The yeas and nays being taken, there appears on record in Hansard the name of Mr. Motherwell as voting against it. I ask if you are that member.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The question was should the bill be read a third time or not.

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That was the question, and if the bill had not been read a third time its entire purpose would have been defeated. Had the bill gone to committee that would have been the time to vote upon the amendment of Mr. Coote.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh yes, you cannot put me into a false position of that kind; I am not half as green as I look. Let my hon. friend just sit quiet for a little while and take up something else. I advise him to try something harder next time. Evidently my hon. friend suspected a sore spot was coming. This question was before the committee on Agriculture this year and finally a vote was taken of 54 to 12. Where did those 12 come from? How many Progressives or Independents voted against the Campbell amendment? How many Liberals voted against it? How many Conservatives voted against it? Twelve Conservatives did so. Had there been no Conservative votes the amendment would have passed unanimously. Do you mean to say the bill would not have had a better chance of getting through the upper house if there had not been that Conservative vote against it? There were 54 votes for it and 12 against it. That makes 66 votes. Had the 12 Conservatives voted for the bill that would have been 66 in its favour and none against. Do hon. members think any upper house would have vetoed that bill? Well I hope they will not, but everybody knows they are just tetering on it up there. Nobody can conjecture what the fate of the bill will be. It would have been sure to go through, but true to the traditions of Toryism there were enough of them there in the committee to do the trick.

My hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Kennedy) took up another matter. I may say that he was in the cradle when I was working for the farmers' cause. That seemed to take all right. My hon. friends are smiling and we are all smiling and we will give them more along that line. My hon. friend, who was good enough to move this amendment this afternoon—

Mr. TOLMIE: Will the hon. minister permit a question?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Always too pleased to make way for the hon. member.

Mr. TOLMIE: Will the minister tell me how many Tories, as he calls them, voted in favour of that bill in committee?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Quite a number, but there would have been none at all if no Tories voted against it. My good friend voted for the bill and quite a number of others, and we quite appreciate it. But the fact remains that if it had not been for the Tories there would have been no vote against it.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Will the minister permit another question?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think if my hon. friend is good to himself he will sit down. My hon. friend from East Calgary (Mr. Davis) yesterday asked that certain papers, documents and reports be tabled here. I intimated that they would all be tabled, except a departmental recital of certain conditions that were found to prevail on the Calgary stock yard. This recital was sufficient to warrant my coming to the conclusion that a thorough investigation was justified, not only into the conditions in the Calgary stockyard, but in reference to every stockyard in the west. The hon. member insists that we table that departmental recital and report that were our guidance for action. In whose interests? Was it the cattle pool? Was it the co-operative marketing? Was it the United Live Stock Growers that were interested, or was the hon. member trying to embarrass all these activities? It was a partial report; not even one side was heard, and we had not an opportunity to investigate the other side. Imagine wanting a judge to give a decision before half of the evidence was in—hardly any evidence. That is the attitude, whether my hon. friend knows it or not, and that is the hon. member who is challenging us tonight.

Mr. DAVIS: I submit that the hon. gentleman has no reason whatever for intimating what my idea was in asking for answers to my questions. In asking for the report of that investigation, my idea was to see that the officials of his department should do justice in the investigation that was taking place.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will do justice. My hon. friend need not perspire about it. When the House understand that the leader of the Conservative party in Alberta is counsel for one who was making the inquiry, he will understand more about it. Mr. McGillivray is counsel for the Live Stock Exchange in Calgary, and that is the interest my hon. friend is serving, rather than the United Livestock Growers, whether he knows it or not.

Mr. DAVIS: The hon. minister looks at me and refers to me as though I were a substitute for the solicitor for that organization. Not until the present moment did I know who was the solicitor. I have never heard from him in connection with this matter. My interest was more along other lines than those suggested by the minister.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will take it for granted that it is merely a coincidence. Mr. McGillivray, the Conservative leader in Alberta, is counsel for the Livestock Exchange, and my hon. friend is making an inquiry regarding a complaint they made against the United Livestock Growers. The farmers of Alberta know which side he is on. We find that the policy of the Conservative party is in the direction of the bigger interests and not in favour of the farmers' rights, you cannot get away from that. I do not mean to say that I am going to give more than justice to the United Livestock Growers: but I am going to see they all get justice, and no report will be made until both sides are heard.

I am sorry the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) is not in his seat, because I am going to pay a little attention to him. I think I take more fun out of this than anyone else on the other side. It always makes the right hon. gentleman look tired and feel tired when he is jollied a little bit. What will it be when the right hon. leader of the opposition becomes Prime Minister?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What about the "ready, aye, ready"? What about his Hamilton speech? The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, (Mr. Cahan) knows what he said in Toronto criticizing the speech of the right hon. leader of the opposition. What did he say at Hamilton? He said he thought it would be best in future, before Canada sent troops abroad, to engage in other wars outside of Canada—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, oh.

Mr. MULLINS: May I ask a question? Is that a Saskatchewan call?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The report of that speech, which went through the whole of western Canada, reads:

> Mr. Meighen stated that in the future it will be best for all that before the government takes a step in the direction of sending troops the will of the people should be known.

What does that mean? In the past we have taken the attitude that the will of parliament should be known, but this speech says distinctly that the people would be bound only by a submission of the question to them in a general election. Do not try to crawfish away from that. You might as well know what you will have to face if you are going to have an election. We may as well rehearse to-night—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: A short time before, I think in 1923, at the time of the trouble in the Dardanelles, my right hon. friend was ready to sally forth on the seven seas to fight anything in sight, without knowing what it was about or who was going to be fighting on our side. It was at that time that the right hon. gentleman made his "ready, aye, ready" speech without knowing whether there was going to be war with France or Italy or any other country. He was ready to go out and fight anything on the seven seas without knowing a thing about the matter. That was one extreme. The other extreme was just before the Bagot election—of course that was a coincidence—when he got down on his marrow-bones and was ready to do anything—to go to the people and have an election on the question. In other words he was going to turn this country into almost a civil war in order to determine whether it was to go into a foreign war or not. That is what will be meant, if words mean anything, by this parliament taking the desperate step of putting the affairs of this country into the hands of the leader of the opposition.

It means more than that. If we are to judge from our respective attitudes on the tariff, it means if the Conservatives are returned to power this time they will consolidate the financial and political influence in central Canada, a thing which has been such a bane of the outlying parts of Canada for the last many years. There is no question about that. I have no word to say against the older provinces in many respects. Ontario is my birthplace and I have a great respect for that province. But that is not the point. The Maritime provinces have been given some raw deals and the western provinces right out to the Pacific have been neglected under Tory rule. That is what will happen again if this consolidation of wealth and political power becomes once more centralized in older Canada.

Look at the first step that was taken to consolidate the National railways. Everyone knows how dear to the hearts of the Maritime people was the old Intercolonial railway with its low freight rates. Who took it from them? The leader of the opposition and his party merged it with the Canadian National railway system, making no provision whatever for recognizing the tacit understanding of confederation that there would be such rates on the Intercolonial as would make it possible for them to deal with older Canada. If you take that out of their grievances there is not much left. But that is a very valid grievance. How do I feel so strongly upon that point?

Mr. PRICE: Will the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Let me finish. Because the same Tory party did their level best to take the Crowsnest pass agreement from the west and I know how we felt about that. Very little heed was paid to the Maritime provinces in connection with the consolidation of the Canadian National railways. What shall we do?—was that the murmur of my hon. friend across the floor? If my hon. friend has not been asleep all session he must know that we shall be starting in the course of a few weeks to look in a constitutional way into the whole problem of Maritime rights.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): You are slow in starting.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Do not imitate the chirp of a canary when you are going to say anything. As I say, the result will be the consolidation of financial and political power in older Canada to the detriment of the outlying parts of Canada at this particular stage when we are endeavouring not to hand out anything to the outlying parts, but rather to do mere justice to them in place of the neglect which they have suffered during past years. There is no dream about that; we are doing that to such an extent that we are being charged with being too partial to them. That is not so; we are doing only what should have been done long ago.

I have a great deal of sympathy for the people of the Maritime provinces. I was never more interested than in my short sojourn down there, where I at once sensed their chief trouble. Indeed one did not require to be very acute to do so, because it was evident everywhere. It is one of the most interesting parts of Canada and the people of the Maritime provinces are going to defeat any government until they get some of those wrongs righted. No matter how Liberal they may be, they will strike at a Liberal government or a Tory government until somebody comes forward and recognizes that they have a grievance and makes at least an attempt to rectify or remedy it. I do not think anyone will gainsay that. What has brought this about? It is due to neglect by Tory governments dominated by central Canada, and unless the government of the day pays particular attention to the outlying provinces, that centralization is bound to result. Wherever you have wealth and numbers there is bound to be power unless the government of the day recognizes that it must make a special effort to reach out to the younger and smaller provinces. That has not been done in the past, but that is what we are endeavouring to do now. Every man who votes for this amendment is going to stop the progress of our programme in this respect and revert to the old order of things that led to those grievances.

I think I have covered the four of five points that I wanted to deal with. The Conservatives, I observe, are now getting tamer. Two of my Progressive friends, so far as I could hear, announced their intention to vote for the amendment. I have nothing to say about that; in fact I want to thank all our allies, because it took all our allies and the Liberal party to carry on the affairs of state during the last five or six months. They have supported not so much the government as the government's programme. Are they going to vote against that programme now because the party of the other part will not play? Are they going to expect us to do the impossible? As I pointed out this afternoon, in order to have a marriage you must have two contracting parties. Are you going to ask us to marry ourselves? If a woman is going to get married and she breaks the contract or for some good reason defaults, is the man going to marry himself? If he is he is going to make a very poor match. Such a match is impossible. I would ask all who contemplate voting for this amendment because they think we should do so-and-so regarding these natural resources, to see how impossible it is for the government, one contracting party, to consummate this contract. If you want to defeat the government, do it on something that at least we can discuss in this parliament. As regards a possible election I am going to shake hands with my Tory brethren.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Good-bye.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will reach out my hand to all and sundry and say to you in the words of Macbeth:

> Lay on, Macduff,
> And damn'd be him that first cries "Hold, enough!"

Mr. A. W. NEILL: Mr. Speaker, I trust in the few remarks I may make to-night I shall be more successful in keeping in order than I was yesterday. It seems to me there is favouritism shown in this matter. I heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) allude to his friends opposite this afternoon as "thick-headed Tories" and I submit to the judgment of the House whether that is not more offensive than calling people "henchmen". The Minister of Agriculture should in my opinion have been reprimanded. There ought to be the same law for the rich as for the poor.

The resolution before us declares, in the language of the mover, that we should resolve, that this House because of failure to implement promises contained in the Speech from the Throne and for other causes has no longer confidence in the present government.

The question which immediately suggests itself is, what are these promises that have not been fulfilled? The hon. member who moved the resolution was kind enough to indicate one at least, namely, the failure of the government to carry out an agreement to restore to the province of Alberta its natural resources. So far as I know this was certainly not an issue at the general election. It undoubtedly was not an issue in the province of British Columbia, for I cannot recall having heard it mentioned once, either on the platform or in the press at that time. At all events, I received no mandate from my constituents in reference to the matter, and I imagine that most hon. members from that province are in the same position.

This strikes me as a somewhat narrow issue upon which to seek to defeat the government of the day. It has not been featured in the debates of this session. We have hardly heard of it except possibly from one or two men from the province concerned. It reminds me of a woman playing bridge, who persistently bid up hearts at every round until she got up to four hearts and then suddenly switched to five clubs. Why the switch? We have been fed the tariff for five years and especially during the last four months. That was the piece de resistance of hon. gentlemen opposite. They fed it to us at every political meal ad libitum, not to say ad nauseam, and now suddenly they switch to clubs without notice, and apparently without design.

The government claim, with what force I am not entirely in a position to decide, that this is not a matter of refusing to grant the rights demanded; it is merely one of disagreement. It is only a question of delay. In that case it would seem to be an extraordinary step to defeat the government for not being able to carry out an arrangement to which necessarily there are two parties. It is as though we should bring forward a want of confidence motion to turn out the government for having failed to negotiate a reciprocity treaty with the United States at a time when we knew that such a treaty could not be negotiated. I presume the latent motive of the party opposite is the hope of being able to capitalize some dissatisfaction that may exist among the representatives of Alberta and to hang upon that dissatisfaction a resolution by means of which the government may be defeated. Now I would be the last to condemn the attitude taken by some hon. gentlemen from Alberta who spoke this afternoon. It would come with particularly bad taste from me, and in any case in similar circumstances I might be tempted to act in the same way. But without desiring in any way whatever to dictate to hon. gentlemen, I would suggest that they consider the seriousness of their action. Their decision will not be confined to a mere expression of dissatisfaction on their part as regards the natural resources of Alberta; it will mean, if they support the motion, the complete overthrow of the government. And for this they will be responsible and will have to answer to their constituents. However, it is entirely a matter for themselves and, as I say, I would be the last to criticise their point of view.

The motion as it reads, even with the explanation of the mover, is practically a straight vote of want of confidence in the government, and as such it must be met by every hon. member. This is the first time there has been brought up this session a want of confidence motion in respect of which my consideration at least can be confined entirely to the merits of the motion itself. Similar motions on previous occasions have had hitched on to them other questions of such of character as utterly to preclude the consideration of the want of confidence aspect. For instance, there was a want of confidence vote in connection with the Australian treaty, and the importance of that treaty to the province from which I come altogether outweighed, in my opinion, any consideration of want of confidence.

I was elected as an Independent four years ago and again last year, although with the bitter opposition of what I may call the Conservative machine. They were wont to declaim at great length, and with an almost total disregard of accuracy or of veracity, that my independent attitude in the previous four years had been entirely a camouflage and that I was decidedly and absolutely a supporter of the Mackenzie King government. Among some of the other things by which they sought to prove this charge, thinking it would hurt me in the election, was the statement that I had always in this House been opposed to any anti-Japanese legislation. When I first heard that charge it amused me, because I knew very well that to anyone who had sat in the last House my attitude was so well known as to be notorious. Anti-Japanese propaganda was as much associated with my name as is Canadian railway consolidation with the name of the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) or the hydro question with the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church). As time went on, however, I found that attention was actually being paid to this charge and in some cases I had to meet it quite distinctly. It was pointed out, for example, that a resolution was brought up in the House on May 8, 1922, asking the government to introduce legislation to exclude further Asiatic immigration into Canada. Hon. gentlemen who were in the House at that time and who were sufficiently interested in the matter will recall that the government of the day put up one of their ministers to move an amendment to strike out the word "exclude" and substitute therefor the words "effectively restrict". There was a long discussion over the amendment and the members from British Columbia held out for the word "exclusion". The government, however, gave diplomatic reasons why in their opinion it was not wise to use a word said to be offensive and one which would hinder materially rather than assist negotiations with the Japanese government by which they hoped to achieve the same end. There was a full dress debate, and members from British British Columbia had a consultation among themselves as to whether they would accept the amendment of the government or not. The government said, "If you will accept this amendment we will put your resolution through unanimously", which was a considerable bait to us from that province who had never been able to put through a resolution so drastic. We had also to face this angle of the situation, that if we did not accept the government's amendment, they might reject the whole resolution. It was a matter for the critical consideration of those who had the interest of the subject at heart. Some members from the province of British Columbia met in caucus irrespective of party, and the Conservatives declared that they would fight for the word "exclude" if for no other reason than that it would embarrass the government. That was no concern of theirs. But it was up to us to decide what we should do. Some of us were entirely supporting the government of the day, others, partially so. Well, we met together by ourselves after that, and we had a very serious consideration of this matter which was so vital to us in British Columbia. After a great deal of debate we decided it was of such supreme importance to British Columbia that even at the risk of losing the whole resolution it became us to oppose the government in the amendment and to vote for the principle of exclusion. I do not know whether we were using the very best judgment when we did that, because it might have imperilled the whole situation. Perhaps the government thought we were playing politics. I recall one of its members saying: Surely the representatives of British Columbia are not going to antagonize the Japanese at the very time when delicate negotiations are going on between the two governments with regard to restricting immigration from that country. The Conservative members also decided to vote against the government, with the result that backed up by the Progressives and by their own party the government were able to muster a majority of about 110 in favour of the amendment. That was in 1922, and is all recorded in Hansard. Members who were here at that time were as fully aware of the situation as any of those who now hear me, yet in the last general election the allegation was yelled from a hundred platforms that in order to be subservient to the Prime Minister of the day I had voted for the government's amendment and against the resolution in its original form. Of course, anyone familiar with the conditions knew they were speaking absolutely contrary to the truth when they put forward a statement like that. It was absurd on the face of it, and, moreover, there was the record of Hansard to show that I had voted against the amendment. But, Mr. Speaker, a great many people in the country districts and even in the towns, are not familiar with Hansard. They do not know what Hansard is. In this connection I recall an occasion when a friend of mine was trying to persuade a voter against his expressed determination to vote against me because he was being told that I had voted with the government and against this resolution, and he believed it. My friend said, "Neill voted against the government and for the word exclusion", but the man would not be convinced. He said, "They tell me he voted against the resolution." You know how people often use the indefinite term "they". "Well", my friend said, "I can prove it to you by Hansard." But the man would not be convinced and did not want to be convinced, and he retorted, "I don't care if you bring a dozen Hansards, they are probably all Grits anyhow."

Another instance of the kind of propaganda that was developed in that campaign along the line of my record for independence was a statement regarding not what I had done but what I was supposed to have done. A gentleman got up on the platform and said, "Ladies and gentlemen, I want to reveal to you the real character of this man who poses before you as a would-be exclusionist of orientals. I have here Hansard," and he produced it and explained what it was. "Now," he said, "one of the worst features"—and in that at least he spoke the truth—"of Japanese immigration is the fact"—it is still the fact—"that provided Japanese women can prove by methods of their own that they are the wives of Japanese now in Canada, they can come in and raise families." Of course, that was a far graver danger of Japanese imigration than the comparatively small number of males whose entry is restricted by the gentleman's agreement. He explained all that. Then he said, "You realize the importance of restricting the immigration of Japanese women and children, because children also can come in free. Now, let me quote what this man said in Hansard," and he read out words to this effect that I had used when speaking on the subject: "As regards the question of Japanese women and children coming in, I wil not waste the time of the House discussing it, but will go on to another phase of the subject." I did say this. Then this would-be orator declared, "There you are. I have explained to you the vital importance of keeping out these women and children, and yet Neill said in the House of Commons he would not waste the time of the House discussing a matter of that importance." But had my honourable friend—I shudder to call him "honourable"; it goes against my respect for veracity—but had he finished the sentence it would have been to this effect: "I will not detain the House discussing that phase because I discussed it fully two days ago." Then he would have been doing justice to the situation, but he omitted those qualifying words. He used that subtle kind of suggestion to convery the impression that I was recreant to every promise I had made to my constituents in that regard. Those hon. members who know the attitude I have taken on oriental immigration throughout the last five sessions will be able to appreciate that form of propaganda.

Now, a very large number of orators were scattered through my district during the campaign. I counted at one time twenty-six, all outsiders. They came from far and near, they were of every kind, colour and description—cabinet ministers, members of parliament, members of the legislature, party leaders, lawyers, shysters, bootleggers, parsons, senators—and curiously enough, Mr. Speaker—"Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon"—when you got those senators out on the platform they proved to be a very ordinary and very decent sort of fellows. Divested of the glamour and atmosphere of their golden chamber, which smells like a cross between a cathedral and a tomb, the average senator is just an ordinary man of very fair appearance and character. We had them there, some of them brought as far as from Winnipeg, whence they were taken back again. Others, I am told, had to be brought from jail—I do not mean senators, I mean some of the other speakers. One slogan was: "A vote for Neill is a vote for the Pope." I trust I may enlist the sympathy of my hon. friends from Quebec should I need a vote on some future occasion, by the record given me in that regard, by explaining to them the somewhat subtle connection between the Pope and myself. I happen to be a Presbyterian, but that does not matter. This is the way it was worked: "Neill is going to be a willing tool of Premier Mackenzie King; he in turn will be dominated by his Quebec supporters; and they in turn by their religious advisers, and so on, back to the Pope; therefore a vote for Neill is a vote for the Pope." That was solemnly advanced on a number of occasions.

Then again we had our bootlegging friends; they also did their share in their attempt to defeat me. On one occasion I recall going up to a logging camp. I may say that the boys there always treat me very well, and I got wonderful support from them that I will never forget. On this occasion I met with what I thought was a very friendly reception. Later on I heard it stated on the platform: "Neill need not think that the men at such and such a camp are going to vote for him; we have been up there and turned the whole bunch around." There were about forty-five votes. It transpired afterwards how they had expected to do it. These parties had gone up there, and some of my friends of a jovial and genial disposition took a few of them aside and said: "We are not compelled to vote for this old hayseed from Alberni, send us up a couple of cases and it will be all right." The bootlegging department attended to it and the couple of cases were duly despatched, but one of them fell by the wayside, and my health was drunk at some point down the line. The other case did reach the camp with the result that every single vote recorded there was recorded for myself. So I benefited by proxy, at any rate by their efforts. I do not want to be misunderstood at all; I may say that these activities were all exercised by outsiders, people brought in to tell the people of Comox-Alberni not only how they ought to vote, but how they had got to vote. But it did not work worth a cent. I have many warm friends among the Conservatives in the district I represent who voted for me, more who did not, but that has not prevented me being on friendly terms with them, and I still have correspondence with them. I have no complaint to make of the Conservatives, but only of the Conservative machine, operating for the greater part from outside.

I might also suggest, in connection with this question of independence, that perhaps the cabinet of the day and even the Liberal whip would be in a better position to certify to my independence than hon. gentlemen who are only attacking it for political purposes. I have no doubt that on this occasion I have a chance, in the eyes of my hon. friends opposite, of redeeming my character of independence, proving myself in their eyes a true patriot, I am sure, and getting a little applause for the moment by announcing my intention of voting against the government and for this amendment. But unfortunately, or fortunately perchance, I am not responsible to hon. members opposite; I am responsible to my own people at home, many of them Conservatives I admit, and that responsibility I propose to meet at the proper time and place, but I do not propose to stultify myself for a moment's cheap applause upon an occasion of this kind.

My deskmate, the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), when he was speaking this afternoon, said that this was an occasion on which men like himself, and it applies to me also, could not hold aloof and say: "Well, I am not going to vote Conservative, and I am not going to vote Liberal," because the situation is such that we must make a decision for the moment in favour of one party or the other. My deskmate described himself at one stage of his remarks as being in some halfway situation. I have forgotten the exact metaphor he employed, and he described his situation with his usual wealth of beautiful imagery, which I cannot hope to imitate, but translated into the common vernacular of the man of the street, which is also that of myself, his idea was that he, and I myself, were situated between the devil and the deep sea. Not being a good sailor he thought he would prefer the dangers of water rather than those of fire, and I heartily agree with him in that regard. Further he said, and I wish again to record my endorsation of it, that this was not so much a question of deciding whether he had confidence in this government to my left as it was of showing that he had even less confidence in the party opposite. That is exactly my situation and my point of view in that regard. It is not from any deep-founded confidence in the government—far from it—but rather that I cannot see what object is to be attained by the interests I represent by placing the opposite party in power.

Then, if I should strive to be non-partisan in my attitude—and of course incur the ill will of both parties, the common fate of a man trying to keep the middle of the road or to be a peacemaker—I would ask myself what advantage is to be gained by the country, by the province, or by the district I represent by making a change of government? I think I suggested that idea in a debate earlier in the session, and I was directly informed by hon. members opposite that the advantage would be that they would be in power. That, no doubt, would be a result, but whether it would be a good result remains to be seen. It certainly is not the goal of my ambitions to achieve that, unless there is some specific object to be gained or some benefit that would inure to the country at large.

As regards the country at large, everything points to-day to a revival of business of an enormous and unprecedented character. The trade returns and bank reports are very favourable and very hopeful indeed, and those who are not interested in politics do not hesitate to say frankly that we appear to be on the eve of a revival of business that bids fair to last for a considerable period and be of the very greatest advantage to the country. In that regard, then, it would be somewhat doubtful, at least, it would be open to considerable criticism, whether it would be wise for us to swap horses, to use a common expression, in midstream. If the country is prospering—we will not say because of this government; that would be too much for hon. gentlemen opposite to swallow—but if the country is prospering, let us say, in spite of this government, or partly both ways, perhaps it would be a good thing to continue the government in power so long as that prosperity appears to be at our door.

As regards the province, and I am speaking now of British Columbia, we have there certain interests which have been vitally affected for the better by some of the legislation of this government. I refer more particularly to the Australian treaty, concerning which we had a vote of want of confidence some few months ago. The Australian treaty, I think it can hardly be denied, has been a very material benefit—and its affects are only beginning to be felt—to the province of British Columbia. It has opened up the Australian market to our fish. I believe that we shall probably control in a very short time the whole Australian market, which is a big and an increasing market, and one of great value to the province of British Columbia. I was reading only yesterday that the fishing industry has gone up very much in the last year. The records are distinctly better than the previous year, and better than ever before in the history of the industry, and getting into the Australian market practically without competition is a matter of great and vital importance to us.

The same is true of the paper industry. That is opening up a tremendous scope in Australia for our business interests in British Columbia, and it will influence and improve business in other lines of activity in the province, such as the pulp industry and the lumber industry, which afford an ever-increasing source of employment to our workers. There are quite a number of paper mills in British Columbia, roughly about a dozen, and one or two of them have been in deep water, some of them practically in the hands of a receiver, but their affairs are being straightened out again, and they are beginning to operate. Two of them in my own district are going to be manufacturing on an increased scale in the immediate future. Then, again, we have the importation of motor cars into Australia, which will be of benefit to the manufacturers in eastern Canada, rather than to us in British Columbia.

There is another source of business to which we look forward hopefully in the near future under the influence of the Australian treaty. When that treaty was being negotiated an attempt was made, I believe, by the representatives of Canada to secure us a preference on lumber, which would have been of great importance indeed. But the Australians have got one or two ideas very sharply defined, and one of them is that they stand absolutely and entirely for a white population—a white policy—and some organization in Vancouver I believe wired them at the critical moment to say that a great deal of the lumber cut in our saw-10 p.m. mills in British Columbia was manufactured with the aid of orientals, and that when they were giving a preference to our lumber they were giving a preference to orientally manufactured goods. In consequence of that advice, the negotiators on the Australian side broke off the agreement as regards lumber. An attempt was made to deny that, and the negotiators in Australia then said that when we could show that that was no longer the case, they would be perpared to give us a substantial advantage in the lumber trade, which would be a concession of great importance to us in British Columbia.

Now the local legislature has recently passed an act, called the Minimum Male Wage Act, under which it is proposed to standardize the minimum wage for 90 per cent of the industries of the province. They based that act upon their experience gained under the Minimum Wage Act for women. It has been found the latter act worked out fairly well, with a very small amount of friction and it is now proposed—it is the law and has been for eight months—to make the same provision applicable to men. One of the first industries to be attended to was that of lumbering, and commissioners on behalf of the board that will deal with the situation have been travelling the province accumulating evidence and reports to ascertain what should be the minimum wage for workers in saw mills and logging camps. It is anticipated, of course, that it will be fixed at what would be considered a minimum existence wage, with the minimum amount of comfort, for a white workman. If and when that is done, and they expect it will be in less than a month, I think the result will be to discourage the employment of orientals, because an oriental, while he is willing to work for low wages, is incapable in most occupations of doing the amount of manual work in eight hours that a white man can do, and our mills, are running on an eight-hour day now as a result of having passed an eight-hour day law some years ago. So it is hoped and believed by the people of the province that the lumber industry will be regained for our white workers in that way, and when that is done then we will be able to re-open our negotiations with Australia with a view to securing that market also. Of course it is obvious it would be hopeless of our doing so if there were any interference with the Australian treaty. That is a strong argument why we should not defeat the present government. We have entered into the Australian treaty and we do not want an election at the moment; we want to dig in and make some money now while the making is good. Times have been bad in British Columbia in years gone by and now that prospects are good we want to take advantage of them. That applies as much to the logger as it does to the manufacturer, the canner or the fisherman. We want a chance to be let alone under this treaty to trade with Australia and make some money while the opportunity is good. Of course we cannot anticipate the treaty would be left in existence if there were a change of government; it would be either destroyed entirely or materially alterated. I can gather no other expectation from reading the speeches in Hansard of hon. gentlemen opposite, and the fact that there was a vote of want of confidence moved by them framed practically and entirely on the existence of the Australian treaty made by this government. So much for the aspect of Canada as a whole and that of our province.

Let me come now to the district that I represent, the district of Comox-Alberni. By the way, in order to explain the requirements of that constituency I might briefly refer to the platform on which I was elected, and I may say that this is not something personal to myself. It was formulated at a large and very well attended convention called to nominate a candidate on the independent ticket. Most of it was formulated before I was actually nominated, especially the first clause which reads as follows:

1. In the event of the return to power of either a Liberal or a Conservative government the nominated candidate will be pledged to support any constructive legislation brought in by either party if it is in the best interests of Comox-Alberni and British Columbia generally.

Then follows the platform which I will read. The idea, of course, was that I would support a Conservative or a Liberal government if it was formed, provided they would accept the salient points of the platform that we were interested in, and which that representative meeting agreed were our most important requirements. I have in consequence not only pressed the items of this platform on the government of the day, but have also kept close watch on the utterances of hon. gentlemen opposite to see how much of that programme I could reasonably expect to see carried out had they, or did they, or should they get into power. Here follows the remainder of the programme:

2. Fisheries (a) That there be no close season for salmon trolling and cod line fishing on the west coast of Vancouver island.

That has been adopted.

(b) No increase of trap licenses.

That also, I think, is clearly settled.

(c) Continuance of the policy of gradually restricting fishing licenses to White British subjects and Indians, native of British Columbia.

That has also been going on gradually for four years now, and I am glad to say that we recently adopted a resolution in the committee on Marine and Fisheries recommending to the government that it should be finally carried out under an agreement extending over the next ten or practically eleven years. Theoretically it would take eleven years, but the representatives of the cannery men who are most concerned have agreed in a very fine spirit indeed to accept the situation and to make no further protests. They were opposed to the way in which it was done at the initial stage fearing they might be handicapped by the lack of white operators. They have now accepted it. They say the time allowance is ample, and they propose to co-operate by making efforts to get a supply of white fishermen. They expressed the view, or at least their representative did, that restricting the fishing to whites and native Indians will be carried out in the short period of four or five years, because once the provision was in working order there would be little trouble in getting the few additional white men. That, of course, is a very gratifying thing to us in the west, knowing as we do the importance of restricting the oriental invasion and also because we want—some of us at least do so—to see the growth of a white native population of fishermen from which in case of war the navy, such as we have, could be recruited. The third item is:

3. Immigration. Absolute exclusion of Asiatics.

That, of course, is the object we seek to achieve, and it has already been met, practically in its entirety, as against the Chinese element. Negotiations are still going on to arrive at an amicable settlement, because we would like it to be amicable, with Japan. She has great trade interests in us and we have in her, and if we can avoid it, we do not want to adopt any drastic or harsh measures against Japan. The negotiations are proceeding, I think in a satisfactory way. In fact I would have been this afternoon at a meeting where I expected to hear some further information on the subject had this debate not come up. Now the next item is:

4. Labour.—An Act or resolution establishing the right of his industrial freedom to every citizen of Canada to bargain for his services.

Hon. members may, perhaps, recall that I introduced a resolution, which passed the House some months ago, carrying out the spirit and the purport of that clause in the platform. The next item is:

Dominion assistance to the provinces to pass an old age pension act.

As we know, that has been carried out to the very fullest extent, I think, that could have been expected by this government. I think those who were interested in the success of an act of that character—who were generally interested in it and worked for it during the last parliament—will admit that the bill brought down this session was a very genuine attempt to meet the situation. Some of us thought it did not go far enough, but it was founded on a belief that the best way to start was to start slowly, in a moderate way, and if necessary increase the pace later. We know the lamentable fate that worthy act has met in another place. A consideration of what should be done in the premises will not be out of place, perhaps, for a moment or two. If I had any influence with the government of the day, or with those who are disposed to assist in the passing of an act of that kind, I would suggest and urge the government not to remain satisfied with the present position. I am aware—we are all aware—that a bill which has once passed this House and been rejected in another place cannot be introduced again at the same session, but my first thought, and the thought of some of our friends, was: Well, let us stay here and re-enact it as a protest against the fate it has received. But we found, as I have said, that it could not be passed in the same session. Well there is a solution of that problem which might be easy of achievement. This session will end up possibly in a couple of weeks. There is nothing to prevent the government of the day winding up this session and calling another session the day after. An arrangement could be made under which we could not draw our sessional indemnity for the second session, and if somebody insisted on drawing it he would only draw the proportion of the indemnity for the few days we would be sitting. I might even extend that point of view further and point out to hon. members that if there were a further curtailment of our rights and privileges in this House—not merely the old age pension bill, but any other legislation that falls by the wayside in the Senate—the legislation might be re-enacted, in order to show that we were sincere in this matter, and that we were protesting against the action taken in regard to this measure and others which were in a similar position.

The next item reads:

Revaluation where required of lands held under the Dominion Soldier Settlement Act.

When that was put in it seemed to me almost a forlorn hope. The government had turned it down in the last parliament, and appeared to have the support of a large number of members behind them in their action. I recall that when the matter was going through, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) announced that he would grant an abatement of a certain proportion of the value of the stock purchased in certain years, but he expressed his determination, and that of the government, that he would not contemplate any proposal to revalue the land, which a number of us held was an absolute essential to the settlement of the question. Representations were made in reference to the value of land by three members on that side—I was one; the then member for Selkirk, Mr. Bancroft, was another and the member for Dauphin (Mr. Ward) was the third—that injustice would result, and we made out such a strong case in reference to our particular districts that the Minister of Finance promised at least to have a valuation made by his own employees in the department before another session, to ascertain how bad the situation was in that regard. I may say that so far as my district is concerned the government implemented their promise. A very able and skilful man came out, with no local affiliations at all; he handled the situation very carefully, and I believe his report was and will be of great value to the government in dealing with this matter. We heard a great deal here and in another house with reference to the expense of these boards created to handle the revaluation of the land. I do not think there will be any great trouble so far as the district of Comox-Alberni is concerned, because the report of this gentleman, Mr. White, is of a character that will commend itself to the government, to the board, and to the men themselves. It is a source of great satisfaction to us in the district that the government have passed an act almost exactly as we required it to meet the situation in our districts. There was some divergence of opinion as to the minor details, but I think the great bulk of the soldiers in that district and in British Columbia generally will be satisfied with the act as it is framed, if it goes through and is not badly handled in another place. A resolution was sought to be passed by some organization, not a soldier settler board but a veteran organization in Vancouver, by which they suggested that the method of revaluation adopted by the government was unsatisfactory and that the proper way was to grant a remission of interest. There was an outstanding and fatal objection to that. Of course it would save the expense of boards, but probably it would not do so in the end because the reduction of the interest to everybody would mean a greater expense than that proposed in the bill. But the rank injustice would be this: that everybody would get a comparatively small sum of money, so small that it would not be of much use, or it could not be done at all. It would mean a little pocket money for a day or perhaps a week, but there would be the other side of it, that everybody would get a small remission—and everybody would take it of course; but it would be a present for many people who do not really want it and would not think of asking for revaluation, because they happen to be in fortunate circumstances, having got a good farm perhaps, or having bought right, as they say; or local conditions may have increased the value of their lands. These people know they would get nothing under the revaluation. A convention was held in Vancouver. You know that when you hold a convention in a town there are always more delegates and representatives in the convention from the neighbourhood than from districts where people have to travel a very considerable distance to attend. And it has been suggested that the reason of that attempt to upset the proposition of the government was that that convention held in Vancouver would be more largely attended by farmers from the Fraser valley, which is the garden of British Columbia and perhaps the garden of Canada. They have rich land there and good farms; if a man could not make a success out there he could not do it anywhere. The men in that district would know that they had nothing to hope for from a revaluation. Perhaps I am wrong in suggesting this, but it seems to me the motive that actuated them was, "We will try and switch in a new system under which we can get some benefit". That was very human and natural, but not fair, because the result would be they would get a remission of interest amounting to a considerable sum in the course of time, while the men who are up against it, the men who, on account of wrong buying or of accident, or of the high prices at the time, got struck on land not worth half the amount they paid for it would get practically nothing at all. Those are the very men that the government and that this House wanted to keep on the land, because if you tell a man who has paid $2,000 or 50 per cent too much for his land, that he will not have to pay any interest on that extra 50 per cent, it is not going to aid him or encourage him to stay on the land. I hope if there are any changes in this bill in another place that the main principle will not be altered.

I observe with great satisfaction the fact that the government of the day undertook the revaluation of the land, not only in my district, but throughout Canada, and I believe it will form a satisfactory solution of the question that only got worse the longer it was delayed.

Another plank in the platform, which is number seven is:

A business administration of public expenditures resulting in reduced taxation.

I am pleased to be able to say that we foresaw the budget of this session when we put that plank in the platform—a business administration resulting in reduced taxation. It might have been better administered and result in greater reduction of taxation, I admit, but it has gone along lines we wished and desired when we drew up the platform.

Then the next plank is number eight:

Consolidation of Dominion and provincial income tax and abolition of all unnecessary government returns.

I believe that matter was debated at the conference of the premiers the other day. As regards unnecessary returns, some of them have been cut off, but it is very hard to divorce an official from his return. If he is supposed to get out or send out that return, he will fight to the last ditch before he will allow us to strike from it even one foolish or unnecessary question.

The ninth plank is:

A federal inheritance tax on large estates.

That is popular perhaps in some places, but it does not seem to be popular in this House and still less would it be popular in the other house. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has championed it before now. Some people take exception to it on the ground that it would tend to keep people from coming to live in this country, and to make them go to some place where their estates would not pay duty. But I do not think there is a very great danger in that. People will generally go where conditions please them or very commonly where they have relations and friends. As a rule a man in his declining years wants to secure some comfort or enjoyment for himself. He is not going to an inhospitable place and to live in uncomfortable conditions even if by so doing he is going to save some estate taxes for those who come after him. I do not think the average man of large estate is so self-sacrificing on behalf of his successors as that.

The same argument was brought forward, I recall, when the British death duties, which is the name they give to the succession duties there, was first introduced many years ago in Great Britain. It was said that it would lead to all kinds of evasions; that men would give away their estates in their lifetime to their children and friends and thereby evade the act. That was carried out to some extent but to a much less extent than was anticipated, and finally it practically almost disappeared. For one thing the government inserted in the bill a clause making it retroactive to the extent of, I think, three years. That is, if a man gave away his money to his children and died within three years his estate still had to pay the tax. The element of human nature also entered into the situation. It was found that even old men sometimes changed their minds; they gave away their estates to their children and afterwards conditions sometimes arose under which they wanted to get their estates back again. They did not always get them back and a few dreadful examples of that kind discouraged the practice.

I recall one wealthy man, a widower, who gave away his estate amongst his children A few years afterwards he chose to get married again; but his childen did not think it was necessary for him to get married, and they declined to give him back any money except a bare subsistence for himself. A few examples of that kind discourage others from doing the same thing. There is nothing wrong in the principle involved in this plank and I believe this country could very well adopt a federal inheritance tax. There may be inheritance taxes in some provinces, but they are on a small scale. I think I figured it out on one occasion that if we adopted in Canada a similar federal tax to that prevailing in New Zealand, we would have from that source alone an income of about $3,000,000 a year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I rise to a point of order. Coming into the House I thought we were discussing the amendment to the motion for committee of Supply. My hon.

friend is discussing the laws of inheritance tax, and it seems to me the discussion should have something to do with the question before the House.

Mr. NEILL: I am speaking to the point of order. My hon. friend deprived himself of the opportunity or pleasure of hearing my opening remarks. Perhaps I had better begin again so that he may get the correct thread, because, if he had been present all the time, he would not have raised that point of order. I was proceeding along a logical and well thought-out line of thought until he butted in. I will explain what it was. I was dealing with my anticipated attitude as an Independent on this vote of want of confidence. I was going into my record as an Independent. I was dealing, and I think rightfully, with the ambitions and aspirations which the people who sent me here entertained when they elected me. They drew up a simple platform in which there were only twelve items. I have reached the tenth now, and the hon. gentleman is a little late in the day in interrupting me. I consider I am logically carrying out my line of thought by explaining to the House the purposes for which I came here. There is plenty of time, and if the hon. member will give me time I will explain at some length what success I have met with in connection with those particular and individual items. In fact that is what I am doing now. I conceive that I am thoroughly in order and that the hon. gentleman ought to apologize.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not rise in the first instance for the purpose of apologizing, but again addressing myself to the point of order. I thought we were discussing a resolution to call in question the breach of promises by this government. I did not know that we were discussing a resolution which had to do with a platform on which the hon. gentleman got himself elected in the last election. I am perfectly aware that the whole idea of the discussion is to kill time.

Mr. NEILL: I protest.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am merely raising a point of order to be disposed of by the Chair.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I submit that the amendment is so indefinite and broad that any hon. member can discuss the policies of the government generally. It reads:

> That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the chair, but that it be resolved that this House, because of failure to implement promises contained in the Speech from the Throne—

That is one thing that is definite.

> —and for other causes.

I should like to know what is the idea in the mind of the hon. member who used those last four words. They might take us back to the deluge.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That would be a matter of government policy.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): The hon. gentleman says: For other causes I have reason to say this or that. The amendment was drafted not from this side of the House, but from the other, and it leaves the door wide open for any hon. member to discuss policies generally.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. gentleman is in order. This amendment is very wide in its range. It reads:

> That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the chair but that it be resolved that this House, because of failure to implement promises contained in the Speech from the Throne and for other causes has no longer confidence in the present government.

Any hon. member speaking on this amendment can very well say that the government has or has not implemented the promises made in the Speech from the Throne. As regards the other causes, any member who has been elected to the House on certain pledges he took before his electors might very well say: The government has not seen fit to implement the promises that I as its supporter made or that I as its opponent made. Therefore that opens a very wide vista. Of course as much as possible hon. members must keep within the bounds. This is a motion of want of confidence, and if it is carried the hon. gentleman who is speaking will be sent back to his electors. Before he is sent back he wants to show cause why he should not be sent back. On the whole I think the hon. gentleman is in order.

Mr. NEILL: I thank the hon. gentleman for the opportunity of rest he gave me, and I will accept the apology I see in his eye, even if he does not express it. He knows I was perfectly in order anyway, but out of his goodness of heart he wanted to give me a moment's respite. I did feel somewhat aggrieved when he made the suggestion—I am sure he could not have been referring to me—about killing time. I am quite sure the hon. gentleman would not suggest that I was killing time, for there are many methods by which that may be done which would be far more exhaustive than any discussion of the subject I am now considering. I could for example, give him, if I wanted to kill time, a short resume of the character of Moses, or I might touch upon the record of Jeremiah. I assure the hon. gentleman I have no desire to kill time, and with that assurance I shall proceed with my remarks, if he will keep quiet.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the very fact that the hon. gentleman suggests a character sketch of Moses and an excursion into the record of Jeremiah is evidence of a desire to kill time. Now, in connection with the point of order—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am speaking to the point of order.

Mr. POWER: I rise to a point of order. The hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) has no right to impute to the hon. gentleman who has the floor any improper motives whatever, and to suggest that that hon. gentleman is merely killing time is to impute such a motive.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. POWER: I insist upon my point of order.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It would be improper to accuse the hon. gentleman of killing time if it were not for the fact that the train comes in at one forty-five. However, I take it, in view of the ruling of the Chair that the hon. gentleman would be perfectly in order if he undertook to discuss Moses and Jeremiah.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not permissible to charge any hon. member with obstructing the business of the House. It will, I think, be assumed that the suggestion that a member is "killing time" is tantamount to a charge of obstruction. The expression is, of course, a mild one, but inasmuch as it is open to a more serious construction I must rule it out of order.

Mr. NEILL: I certainly had no desire whatever to kill time, Mr. Speaker. I have a simple message which I wish to convey to the House, but owing to the interruptions of my hon. friend I am afraid it will be some time before I get on to the thread of my argument again. I come now to section 10—there are only three more—justice to British Columbia—If any man may not on this occasion express the urgent importance of justice to his own district, I do not know when he can. This is the section in question:

> Justice to British Columbia in the matter of railway rates, particularly on wheat from the prairies for domestic use.

[Mr. Neill.]

May I dwell for a brief, fleeting moment on that aspect of the subject in view of hon. gentlemen's ignorance of the situation? You have heard a good deal about railway rates, but I do not propose to go into that subject which is really a side issue. In any case it is of such vast extent that it would be beyond the scope either of my ability or of the time at my disposal to-night. We in British Columbia are large consumers of wheat particularly for chickens. We have large poultry farms on some of which there are from 5,000 to 10,000 birds, and we use considerable quantities of chicken feed. The principal source of supply, apart from a limited quantity obtained in the fall from the Okanagan valley, is the prairie country and transportation is high. By the time therefore that the wheat reaches us, the price is so prohibitive as to make profitable egg production hard. Representations have been made from time to time by the province of British Columbia, and on one occasion we spent $50,000 in an effort to bring the matter to a successful conclusion before the Board of Railway Commissioners and the government of that day. It has been under consideration on various occasions and we have been given some measure of relief, but not enough. As a result of our representations a reduction in freight rates was ordered but unfortunately they were only of a partial character That is to say, they were reduced on export wheat only, so that wheat shipped to China, Japan or Liverpool from the prairies went at the lower rate, while the same wheat destined for use in British Columbia was refused the concession. On two occasions there was a reduction in the rates, but in neither case was it made applicable to wheat for domestic use. If I mistake not the difference is $4.10 a ton on domestic wheat.

There is another feature which accentuates our grievance in this regard. The reduced rate on export wheat applies to numbers one, two, and three wheat exported for manufacture into flour in these foreign countries. The wheat we use for chicken feed would grade at the highest four, sometimes five and six. You can export number one, worth perhaps $2 a bushel to Vancouver from Medicine Hat at a certain rate, whereas if you want to ship a grade four degrees below that, worth only 50 or 30 per cent of the higher article, you are bound to pay $4 a ton more for carrying it to British Columbia. It may be suggested that the cost of handling the car for British Columbia is greater. Nothing of the kind. A train that takes twenty or thirty carloads of wheat of one grade for export can take the same quantity of the other, and there are ample facilities for switching to the various private elevators in the case of wheat destined for use in the province. There is therefore no reason why we should suffer this gross discrimination. It puts us in most invidious and unfair competition with the people of China, Japan and other foreign countries. Why, you can actually deliver wheat in China from Moose Jaw at a cheaper rate than you can deliver it in Vancouver. If that is a defensible situation I should like to hear it defended. It might be argued that it is a matter of terminal or competitive rates; it might be said that water competition enters into the question. This is true where both rail and water transportation are involved, it may sometimes be necessary to fix a competing price on the railways to meet the price at which the article can be transported by water. Under those conditions you sometimes find the apparent anomaly of a freight rate higher from the point of origin to an intermediate point than it would be for the full journey to the terminal where it would meet water competition. But no condition like that arises here. There is no water competition from Medicine Hat or from Moose Jaw to Vancouver; in both cases it is purely a rail haul. The discrimination cannot be defended; we should not have to pay a freight rate that makes our wheat dearer to us than to the egg producer in China, who is thus encouraged to send his eggs over here to compete with our eggs in British Columbia and eastern Canada. That is why that plank was put in the platform. My protest may be falling on deaf ears at the moment, because it is perhaps more a matter for the Board of Railway Commissioners to deal with, but it will be brought up by the province of British Columbia, and if it is decided adversely to our interests, I have no doubt it will be laid before the executive body of this government by way of appeal. Then I hope the hon. premier and the other members of his government will remember this explanation of the subject.

The next item reads as follows:

> The continuance of the legislation against the importation and sale in Canada of oleomargarine.

That is an old and a sore subject with us in the west. Most members of the old parliament will recollect the fight that was made in the sessions of 1922 and 1923 to forbid the further introduction of oleomargarine and its sale and manufacture in Canada. That fight was led by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), and well he justified his place in the government in that respect. His strong sympathy, his active support and the attitude he took on more than one occasion saved the day ultimately for the Canadian dairy farmer, and we in British Columbia generally and in our district particularly are very much opposed to anything that would favour the introduction of oleomargarine once again. Perhaps in that will be found some explanation of the fact that the dairymen of British Columbia as a whole, and of the Comox-Alberni district in particular, have not made the violent protest that has been made in some other sections of the country against the provisions of the Australian Treaty. They realize they were treated fairly when the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine was suspended, and they thought the consumer perhaps should be given an opportunity in certain months of the year to get his butter at a price that would keep it within the limits of his purse. I do not say that our dairy farmers approve of the provisions of the Australian Treaty in that particular, but that point was considered in connection with it; and further, we have the advantage of the growing markets in our immediate vicinity, promoted by the conditions of the Australian Treaty in the way of lumber camps, pulp mills, and so on.

The last item in the programme is simple and easily understood:

> In tariff matters to be guided by the necessities of the industries located in the district.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a simple plank, and yet one capable of a wonderful expansion of thought. Perhaps it explains why I have been criticized at certain times in this House as being willing to vote one day for protection and another day for free trade. I have been told I was inconsistent in that regard. Possibly I was from a tariff point of view, but I was consistent to the ideals and interests of the people that I represent, who are not nearly so much concerned as to which party shall be in power, or whether this party advocates high tariff and some other party low tariff, as they are concerned with the immediate results of the tariff today on the industries in which they are engaged. Therefore the provisions of that plank enable me, as I say, to advocate protection where I see it is necessary for any of our struggling industries, and also under other conditions to advocate free trade.

The other day in connection with the committee dealing with the coal supply of Canada, on behalf of the coal miners and owners of our district I put forward a plea for an increase of the duty on fuel oil, explaining that the competition of this commodity had nearly driven our mines on Vancouver island out of business, and that unless some relief was provided I was afraid of what the ultimate results might be. They are deep mines, somewhat costly to work, and in some cases being under the sea hon. members from the Maritime provinces will know what that means in added expense. We have sufferred very severely from the competition of fuel oil. It galls us to see millions of money going into the States to bring back this product, which is of no use when it is brought here, except for the actual purpose of fuel for locomotives and steamboats. It is not as if we were sending those large sums of money out in order to bring in some raw material that we could manufacture. Yet when I was making that plea before the committee, this platform enabled me also to say that if the opposition of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and allied interests, both railways probably, steamboat companies, and so on, made it impossible for the committee and this government to entertain the idea of an increased duty on fuel oil, then we were quite willing and able to take the reverse position and say: If you cannot give us protection, give us free trade. We were quite willing to accept that horn of the dilemma. It would work out in this way. The duties on coal are the only ones in the American tariff which are entirely on what is known as a reciprocal basis—not a basis by which they can be changed by representations to the President of the United States; it is embodied in the tariff act itself. The wording of it is like this:

> That the duty on Canadian coal entering the States will be at all times the same as the duty which Canada imposes on the same class of American coal entering Canada.

A distinction is made not only between coal but between classes of coal. So we find Canada has no duty on anthracite coal because we want it to come in, and therefore there is no duty on our anthracite coal, if we had any, going into the States. As we know, the duty on bituminous coal is now 50 cents a ton, and therefore of course the United States have a corresponding duty of 50 cents a ton against our coal. At one time we had quite a large market for our domestic coal in the cities on the Pacific seaboard of the United States, but we lost that partly on account of the competition of fuel oil, no doubt, but also on account of this duty. If it was taken off and we had free trade in coal, that would mean our coal would be priced in San Francisco 50 cents a ton less than it is to-day, and we would be able to regain part of the large market that we lost in years gone by. That of course would be a very desirable thing for us. I think an increased duty on fuel oil probably would be a greater advantage. But if we could not get the one we were willing to accept the other. I am afraid that might meet with opposition from my Nova Scotia friends, but I am only advocating the views and the distressed condition of the coal miners in my own district.

That completes the brief resumé of the platform which was formulated at the convention and to which I was expected to devote my best energies and my constant attention to get carried into legislation. I was not particularly hampered by being instructed to observe that there was any particular tag on the party that put such legislation into effect. The first plank in the platform says that it is up to me to support that legislation by whatever party or interest it is introduced.

Now, briefly expressed, these are some of the advantages that have accrued to the district I represent by the present government being in power: Soldiers' revaluation—a great boon; old age pensions; the negotiations which are going on steadily and the promise made as regards further restrictions of Japanese immigration. The rural credits bill is also one to which we look forward with a great deal of hope. These were all good bills and conceived in a spirit that we think will make them applicable and serviceable to the district I represent.

Mr. Speaker, it has been alleged that political gratitude is an almost unknown quantity and is best characterized as a lively sense of favours yet to come. From that point of view, dismissing the past, I might say: We have got these things out of this government, and we can now afford to be indifferent to their political fate; what they have given they cannot take away; let us look then rather to the future and see what we can hope to attain by perpetuating the lease of power of this government, or on the other hand, by putting some other party into power. Some of the things that we wish for and want badly I will just briefly mention.

I did not refer to it before, because I was dealing along the lines of our platform, and it was not a part of our platform, but we appreciate the reduction that has been made in the duty on motor cars. That is a thing that I find by letters and correspondence has been very and peculiarly acceptable to the people I represent. Because of our conditons there, and for various reasons that I need not go into, we are large users of motor cars—more particularly of the cheaper variety. The motor car has gone almost beyond the stage of being a luxury; it has become almost an essential to many our residents. Everybody in business, every farmer, and many other people, are almost compelled to have a motor car, even though it is of the cheaper variety, and the reductions in duty that have been enacted by the present government appeal to us very strongly. For that reason we are interested in the fate of the government inasmuch as we do not want to see these reductions destroyed or taken away. But what could we expect, if there is a change of government and our friends opposite are put into power, but that the old duties will be re-enacted. I think we can be fully justified in anticipating that, because we have listened to over a month now to philippics and fulminations dealing with the improper action of the government in taking those duties off, and it is almost impossible to conceive that our friends opposite would be so lost to their past pledges and statements, and so stultify their actions and their words in this House, as not immediately to re-enact those duties of the removal of which they have complained so bitterly in the past several months.

Then again, we in the Comox-Alberni district, in fact, all over but particularly in that section where we are engaged in dairying, but it applies to the consumer in the small town as well, particularly do not want to see the re-introduction of the manufacture and sale of oleo; and what can we believe but that if our friends opposite get into power a measure of that kind would be immediately introduced, because we know that the chief protagonist of that industry being allowed into Canada was the ex-Minster of Agriculture; in fact, I think at one time when he was sitting on this side of the House he introduced a bill making its continued sale lawful for all time to come, and his vote and the strong, forcible, logical speeches that he made in support of allowing oleo to be manufactured and sold in Canada have convinced us in our district that if his friends get into power, in which event, of course, he will be Minster of Agriculture, one of his earliest actions would be to permit the manufacture and sale of oleo once more. For that reason a large section of us at least would be sorry to see this government go out of power.

Again, we are unwilling to see this government go out of power because we believe, if we can take the statements of hon. gentlemen opposite at their face value—and I would not pretend to do anything less—that if they got into power the Australian treaty would be mutilated, if not entirely destroyed, and that treaty, as I have already said, is one of the most vital things British Columbia can have. It may be said: They will not monkey with the Australian treaty; British Columbia need not be afraid. In that case they will be false to the statements they have made in this House and to the spirit which animated them when they moved a motion of want of confidence in the government on the Australian treaty. It is true that that particular vote of confidence, as I pointed out at the time, was rather subtly worded. It only condemned the government for their actions in connection with certain treaties, but did not specifically mention the Australian treaty. I pointed that out at the time. But I also remember noticing and pointing out that the hon. member who introduced the resolution—just as did my hon. friend in introducing his resolution here to-day, when he immediately proceeded to explain that the spirit of it was the natural resources of Alberta—the hon. member who introduced this other motion of want of confidence in connection with the treaties, while he only spoke of trade treaties in his motion, in his opening sentence and in every sentence thereafter expressed his abhorrence and objection to the Australian treaty as such, and the determination of himself and his friends to do away with it at the earliest possible moment. We cannot conceal these facts from ourselves; we must look forward and anticipate them, and realize that the day that this government goes out of power will be the death knell of the Australian treaty so far as British Columbia is concerned.

There are many other things that we want to obtain in the future. There is, for instance, and this is something that is very strongly favoured by my Progressive friends opposite, and also by the Labour representatives to my right—I think we are all a unit in asking for the introduction of the transferable vote; and there is nothing more certain, if the party opposite gets into power, than that we shall never get it, because we have that position set forth over the signature of the right hon. leader of the opposition. He and his party have a perfect right to entertain such views in that regard, if they see fit, but we cannot escape, and they cannot escape, the knowledge and the responsibility that they hold such views, and therefore if they get into power we at the lower end of this House might as well give up all hope of seeing the transferable vote introduced, which is a matter that is very dear to a large number especially of the labour element in Canada, because they feel they have not got justice in the past in their representation, and that if we had the transferable vote in the single member seats some step would be taken towards remedying that evil. At least, Mr. Speaker, with the transferable vote we would not have the spectacle of hon. members sitting in this House representing sometimes only 25 per cent of their electors. It is for that, and other reasons that I need not go into, that we think it is highly desirable that we should have the transferable vote, and we know that our only hope of getting that—and I am not sure that it is a very strong hope at that—

11 p.m. is to keep the present government in power.

Our aspirations are also strongly along the line of old age pensions, and we hope and believe that the government will take further steps in that regard. I commend to the government the remarks I have already made about holding a short session at the close of this one, and passing that act again, if it is only as a protest against the action of the other House, to show that we are determined that that legislation sooner or later shall be carried into effect. When we recall the language used by hon. gentlemen opposite in speaking of this old age pension measure—on the very last occasion it was up in the House it was described in the classical language of hon. gentlemen as a washout, abortive, disappointing, and so on—we can hardly expect to find those hon. members eating their words and stultifying themselves in passing an old age pension measure. That is another reason why we believe it would be better to maintain the present government in power.

Now, not so much for failure in the line of government policy, or government legislation, but having regard to certain departmental failures and neglects, there has been more than one occasion during this session when I could and would have lent a very willing ear to a proposition to replace the government by my hon. friends opposite. I kept a very close watch on the discussions that went on to see how much we could expect of the policies to which I was pledged if hon. gentlemen opposite succeeded in reaching the treasury benches. But I must say that the experience has been one of disappointment. Keeping in mind the platform to which I have given expression to-night I could not find that I was going to get a great deal of sympathy from hon. gentlemen opposite if they were placed in power. I have kept in close touch with my constituents, it being a country seat; I believe it to be not only my interest but my duty to do so. I have kept in close touch with every section of my constituency. Letters reach me sometimes containing the declaration, "I did not vote for you and I will never vote for you" but the writers always get a courteous reply. In that way I am at least in touch with the spirit of the people I represent, and having kept my ear well to the ground this session as in previous sessions I cannot find any warrant from any body or any element in those people, more particularly from those who supported me in the campaign, entitling me to throw out the government of to-day for the sake of the party opposite, more especially on an issue of this kind which professes to be wholly in regard to the resources of the province of Alberta, and particularly when we consider that the attitude of the government is not one of refusal, such as was the attitude of the other House in the case of the old age pensions bill, but merely one of delay. Whatever weight there may be in the government's argument it is a matter of disagreement, and you can hardly vote want of confidence in a government because the other party to the contract has not agreed with it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have finished my few brief remarks. I am sorry I could not have condensed them, but this is a matter of moment, a matter of great moment. Possibly some of us members sitting here will never again have an opportunity of addressing this House, and I feel at least that I have endeavoured to express in such poor language as I could and to the best of my ability, the wishes, aspirations and desires of the people I represent.

Mr. J. J. DENIS (Joliette): I find that this amendment reads as follows:

> Moved by Mr. Davis, seconded by Mr. Quinn:
> That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the chair but that it be resolved that this House, because of failure to implement promises contained in the Speech from the Throne, and for other causes, has no longer confidence in the present government.

In this amendment are to be found two very different propositions. One is that the government has failed to implement promises contained in the Speech from the Throne; the other is that for other reasons the government should be turned out of power. These two propositions need a definite and distinct answer, and I will try, in the few moments I propose to address the House, to show, first, that there has been no failure to implement the promises contained in the Speech from the Throne, and secondly, that the confidence of the House should not be withdrawn from the government for any other causes.

As to the first proposition, I suppose the mover of the amendment holds that when a government presents a speech from the throne it is bound to adhere to that speech and not deviate from it. I wish to submit to you that if that principle is a correct one, and I doubt it, it has never been followed in the application. Furthermore I affirm that the present administration has adhered to its promises more closely than any previous administration has done. I was present in the House this afternoon when the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) charged the government with not having fulfilled its promises as set forth in the Speech from the Throne. May I remind the right hon. gentleman that he was a member of a government which not only did not fulfil its promises contained in the Speech from the Throne but introduced into the House matters that were absolutely foreign to that speech. It will be recalled that there were two sessions of parliament in 1919. The second session, which met two months after the close of the first session, was called, according to the Speech from the Throne, in order to ratify the Peace treaty. It was thought that ratification was a necessary proceeding in connection with bringing the war to a conclusion. Was that not a definite condition under which parliament was summoned? There was no reason, outside of that, for convening parliament, because the previous session had been brought to a close only two months before. What happened when the second session opened? The Peace treaty was ratified because it was not a contentious matter, and everybody was in accord with the idea. But after the ratification of the Peace treaty the right hon. gentleman who now leads the opposition brought in a bill for the acquisition of the Grand Trunk railway, which had not been mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, a piece of legislation of a most momentous character in which the people were concerned not to the extent of one or two millions but to the extent of hundred of millions. Now was there anyone at that time who would say that the treaty of peace should not be ratified by parliament? Surely not. After many months of discussion in Europe, and after England had accepted the treaty, it was brought to Canada, and the parliament of Canada was asked to agree to it. I say, therefore, that the reason that session was convened was a very slight one indeed, but the real reason for calling parliament was to consider a bill to acquire the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada at a price of approximately $400,000,000 of the money of the people of Canada. And yet that measure was never mentioned in the Speech from the Throne.

Hon. gentlemen opposite say, "You have not implemented your promises made in the Speech from the Throne". My answer is that the Speech from the Throne is only a tentative programme of proposed legislation. The government is not bound by the terms of the Speech from the Throne. If it is, then I would like the right hon. leader of the opposition to tell me why in 1919, when he himself was the sponsor of the bill for the acquisition of the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, he did not mention it in the Speech from the Throne.

We are faced with this situation: that the government have prepared a programme for the consideration of parliament. This programme might be good or it might be bad. When the session opened we had a very long debate; a vote was taken and parliament sustained the government. Parliament is master of the situation and might change its judgment from day to day. It is the duty of parliament to follow events and to judge as it thinks fit, but is there any change in the situation now? I cannot see it. Some of my hon. friends in the Progressive group express the view that if they wish to vote against the government on this motion they are perfectly free to do so, but it seems to me that it would not be good policy. This afternoon I listened to the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Boutillier). First of all he voted against the government. Why? Because he would not have this government in power. After that what does he do? Well, he supports the government and votes for it day in and day out, and expresses his confidence in the government. But he says: "When the government withdraw their assent to this bill with reference to the natural resources of Alberta, I withdraw my allegiance to the government." If that is the reason it would be a logical one. The government advertised in the Speech from the Throne, almost as loudly as the Germans advertised their victory in the first period of the war, that the natural resources of Alberta were going to be returned to the province. What is the situation? When the government put in the Speech from the Throne this paragraph with reference to the natural resources of Alberta, I assume they knew what they were doing. But hon. gentlemen will understand that they meant that an agreement had been arrived at between representatives of the federal and the provincial governments in relation to the matter. They came to a direct understanding, and not only did they draft the bill themselves, but every word, every clause of it was accepted by both governments. Does any blame attach to this government for doing that? If the bill was bad, so much the worse for this government. If the bill was good, so much the better for this government.

After that bill had been drafted it was the duty of the federal government in Ottawa and of the government of Alberta to have the bill passed as drafted. What happened? The federal government are ready to have the bill passed and to implement their promises on it, but unfortunately the government of Alberta did not have the bill passed as originally drafted. In the Alberta legislature the bill passed its first and second readings and was put through committee, but when it came to the third reading there was an afterthought and the third reading of the bill as originally drafted did not carry. Where does the blame rest? Does the fault lie with this government or with the government of Alberta? We are not, however, so much interested in this matter; we are interested in knowing whether this government has implemented its promises or not. It has implemented its promises. What this government promised the government of Alberta it gave to the very last inch or cent; it gave everything it had promised. When the session is coming to a close, when communications between the two governments are difficult, when an election is pending in Alberta, is it possible for this government to come to a settlement that would satisfy the country? They did everything in their power; they said: We stand by our guns; what we have promised we will give now, but if you change your opinion we are not responsible for that. That is the position exactly. If there is any strength in the amendment it rests on that, and the hon. gentlemen who moved and seconded the amendment rested their arguments on that. They said that the government did not implement the promises which they made in the Speech from the Throne. Can the government of Canada do anything more than carry out their promises?

As the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) said so rightly to-day, to make a contract you must have two parties. When two parties have agreed to a contract and when the terms of the agreement are clear beyond peradventure, if the contract is broken by default of one of the parties to carry out the agreement, who is responsible? I do not want to cast any slur on the Alberta government, but whose is the responsibility? The Alberta government agreed to the bill. The federal government agreed to the bill. Who changed their minds? The Alberta government. This is public knowledge. Therefore I do not see why this government in the last lap of the session should be condemned because they did not agree to changes which the Alberta government had seen fit in their discretion to make. That is the main point in the amendment, which reads:

> Because of failure to implement promises contained in the Speech from the Throne.

Those who have spoken on the subject have raised the question: Wherein did the government fail? They failed because they did not give Alberta its natural resources. Is that a reasonable or a fair argument? When the Alberta government failed to implement its promises, should this government be blamed because they did not meet the conditions imposed on them by the Alberta government? The matter is so simple and clear that we should not discuss it any longer.

Of course there is something behind this amendment. The second part of the amendment means everything and anything. The hon. member who moved it must be a very poor judge of politics if he could not do better than to say, "and for other causes." What are the "other causes?" I do not know. The government does not know. The opposition does not know. No one knows. The hon. gentleman who moved this amendment should tell the House what these other causes are.

The seconder of the amendment spoke for about three minutes, just the length of time that the mover spoke. I am not reproaching him for that, because I am not in favour of long speeches, but this goes to show that the matter was all framed up in advance. The seconder mentioned as one of the other causes that Maritime rights had been ignored. I am one who wants to give the Maritime provinces their rights. Quebec and Ontario, the two main provinces in this Dominion, are big, prosperous and generous enough to give the Maritime provinces all their needs and rights. But those rights must be defined. What is their definition? The Maritime provinces say, as I understand the matter, that they are in a tight corner; that industries in the Maritimes have vanished. The Martime provinces were not obliged to enter confederation, but they did so on the understanding that the rest of Canada would come to their assistance, and it is the duty of parliament to look into their claim and give whatever relief they are entitled to. We must remember that the tariff that was in force in the United States at the time of the Canadian confederation has undergone many changes, just as our own tariff has done, and this is something that must be taken into consideration.

Now from what quarter can the Maritime provinces expect relief? I do not want to make a political speech just now, but I modestly suggest it is the Liberal party. That is the party that has helped the Maritime provinces in the past. In the last parliament the Maritime provinces returned sixteen Liberal members from a total of sixteen constituencies, and if they have decided to return a large number of Conservatives on this occasion they have a perfect right to do so. But this does not dispose of Maritime grievances. Last summer I travelled throughout the Maritime provinces, and I must confess that I was struck with the fact that they have not developed either as rapidly or to the same extent as the other provinces have done. Whenever anyone is suffering any hardship he is more than apt to attribute the responsibility to somebody else. The Maritime provinces in 1917 returned a practically unanimous representation against the Liberal party; in 1921 they sent to parliament a practically unanimous representation against the Conservative party; and in 1925 their representation again was almost wholly against the party now in power. I repeat the question I asked a moment ago; Who will give relief to the Maritime provinces? And I submit again that this relief must come from the Liberal party. It must come from the provinces of Quebec and Ontario and, if I may say so, primarily from Quebec, because the same feelings, sentiments and aspirations that animate the people of Quebec animate the people of the Maritime provinces. Yet those provinces in the last election saw fit to sever their cause from that of the Liberal party, which was so strongly supported by Quebec. As I say, they had a perfect right to do so and no one can question their right to do the same thing at any subsequent election. But surely it must be obvious to any student of Canadian history that throughout the last fifty years the sympathies of Quebec have been with the Maritime provinces. It is no secret that the Maritime problem to-day is quite grave, but it is due to a very considerable extent to the geographical situation of the Maritimes.

Now, with reference to the question as to where help for the Maritime provinces will come from, will anyone suggest that the Conservative government between 1911 and 1921 did anything to further the interests of the Maritime provinces? I do not think the suggestion will be made. Yet that government had ten years in which to provide some remedy. They made the Intercolonial railway a part of the national system and they left the Maritime provinces in more straitened circumstances than before. The result was that those provinces in 1921 overwhelmingly defeated that government. They knew that the Conservatives had done nothing for them in ten years. This was perhaps to some extent an injustice to the Conservatives, inasmuch as they could not have found a remedy. But when the Liberal government in four years, from 1921 to 1925, found it equally difficult to provide any specific remedy for the evils of the Maritimes, they turned that government out also. From 1896 to 1911 we had in power in this country what I might call, if I were inclined to boast, the greatest administration this country has ever seen, the government led by Sir Wilfrid Laurier; and if the Maritime provinces did not make any very appreciable progress the reason is, as I have said, to be found in their geographical situation. But let us go back still further. What did the government of Sir John A. Macdonald do for the Maritime provinces? Were they any better off then than they were under Sir Robert Borden or Sir Wilfrid Laurier?

Now, why should it be said that the government has broken faith with the Maritime provinces, that those provinces are dying because of the policies of this government? Mr. Speaker, this is an old tale that has been told for fifty years, in fact ever since confederation. Climate and geography count enormously in the development of states. We have an example in the relative development of Canada and the United States. Geographically they are on a parity for the most part, but the United States enjoys an enormous advantage in point of climate. Hence, although this country has been settled for over three centuries, we have a population of only nine million people as compared with the one hundred and thirty million population of the United States. But we would never think of blaming our ancestors for this disparity. Unfortunately the development of the Maritime provinces has not kept pace with the development of the other provinces of this Dominion, but this is not the fault of the present government or of its predecessors. I have a strong affection for the Maritime provinces, and I say to them that the old province of Quebec will always be willing to extend a helping hand to her sister provinces by the sea.

Now, what is the object of the amendment? First of all, to demonstrate to parliament and the country that the government has not implemented its promises. There is not the slightest basis for this allegation: the government has implemented its promises to the fullest extent. With the exception of one or two measures, the government has introduced all the legislation promised in the Speech from the Throne, and in addition it has introduced several other measures which were never promised. But is it reasonable to say that the government should follow exactly what is stated in the Speech from the Throne? During the few sessions I have been a member of this House, whether in opposition or as a supporter of the administration, I have never seen any Speech from the Throne implemented to the last line,—100 per cent. After all, the Speech from the Throne is merely a tentative programme of what the government intend to lay before parliament. When was it laid down that such a declaration must be followed to the letter? It has never been done in this country, it has never been done in England. The Speech from the Throne is simply a declaration on the part of the administration that they will bring down certain measures as circumstances may warrant; in other words, certain measures mentioned in the Speech from the Throne might not be introduced, and on the other hand other measures not mentioned at all might under certain circumstances be necessary and accordingly would be sponsored by the government.

At the beginning of my speech I quoted an instance in 1919 when the government of the day brought in a bill for the acquisition of the Grand Trunk railway, a measure which was far and away the most important introduced in the course of that session, and yet it was never mentioned in the Speech from the Throne at all. Summarizing the Speech from the Throne on that occasion—because it is illuminating—it said that it was in the interests of this country that the treaty of peace with the enemy nations should be ratified, and a special session of parliament was convened for that purpose. There was no other reason for convening it and everyone thought that it had been called for the purpose of dealing with the treaty, and nothing else. But it was not that at all. Suppose we had not signed that treaty of peace; what difference would it have made? None at all. The warring nations were already at peace, and no one believed that if we had not had that special session of parliament our soldiers would have been sent back to Europe to fight again. Ratifying the treaty of peace was simply a formality which could have easily been postponed until the next session.

Ostensibly that session was called to ratify the treaty of peace, but in reality it was called to acquire the Grand Trunk railway, and that important measure was never mentioned in the Speech from the Throne.

This afternoon the hon. member for Vegreville said that he had given his allegiance to this government until the government had decided that the natural resources of Alberta should not be returned to that province, but since that time he had been profoundly disappointed, and he could no longer support the government. Let me say, in reply to the hon. member, and to those who sit around him, that from the outset he has been against this government, and he is still. When the first test vote was taken in the House and the government secured a majority of three, the hon. member for Vegreville voted against the government. What was his reason then? Did he know at that time that the Speech from the Throne would not be implemented in regard to Alberta's natural resources? The Speech from the Throne indicated to him that the natural resources of Alberta would be returned to the province. Yet the hon. member voted to turn this government out of power, in order that the natural resources of Alberta should not be returned to the province. He voted to prevent the government from doing what they had promised to do in the Speech from the Throne. That is very plain. Now, where is the sincerity of the hon. member? He voted against this government then, and he is voting against it now. It is plain that he is here to defeat this government whenever he can. There can be no doubt as to his sentiments, and where he stands.

I have no grudge against any member of this House who wants to defeat the government; that is his privilege. As I said on a previous occasion, it is the privilege of parliament to dethrone the government. As my leader has said many times, the government is only a committee of parliament, and therefore when parliament decides at any time to put out a government, that is their privilege. But one should be sincere, and not act under false pretences. To say that the government is not giving justice to the province of Alberta, and that it does not intend to give back its natural resources, is an act of insincerity on the part of the hon. member, but we should not be surprised, because he voted to oust this government at the very first opportunity, this government which had pledged itself to return the natural resources to Alberta.

This question of the return of the natural resources to Alberta, in my opinion, should not be brought into politcs at all. Canada is a fine country, large and prosperous, but for good or for bad Canada has not a homogeneous people. We have in this country different races, peoples with different religons and different aspirations; in fact, Canada is not one country but four countries. Those four countries are, first, the Maritime provinces, which are a country by themselves dating back into history; Quebec and Ontario, another country by themselves; the praire provinces, a third country, different from all the rest; and finally British Columbia, another country. Anyone who considers the situation carefully will understand the difficulties of governing a country like ours. Our natural resources are immense, our wealth is very great indeed. But we have French and English living together, Catholics and Protestants living together, the east and the west joined together, and different interests fighting each other. Under these circumstances it is very easy to arouse racial or religious prejudices. Unfortunately the motive in the present case is to arouse prejudices. I am afraid hon. gentlemen opposite are trying to make a political football of the Alberta question; they are trying to arouse racial and religious prejudices. I hope they will not succeed in that baneful purpose. If I had any advice to give the right hon. leader of the opposition it would be not to seek to make political capital out of such a controversy. Let us look at the problems that confront this country in a broad light. If we do that it will be better for all of us.

I have one last word to say and it is that the amendment is purely and simply a political amendment. Its purpose is to try to corner the government. Hon. gentlemen opposite thought that by quietly hatching their plans and bringing in the amendment suddenly they could surprise the government and bring about its defeat. Let me say to them that even if they succeeded there would be no glory for them in a snap vote because they have not acted as they should have done. In olden times when armies were to meet on the field of battle notice was given when the attack would commence. A similar procedure has generally been observed in parliament. Whenever an oppositon desired to challenge the authority of a government it has been the custom, and has been regarded as a duty, to give notice of the action intended. The opposition thought to surprise the government and to what extent they have succeeded I do not know. However, I say this to them: If it is to be a contest for supremacy in this House let it be a real contest, and if my hon. friends can defeat this government without taking it by surprise it will redound to their glory. But they have no right to try to take the government by surprise.

Mr. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): Mr. Speaker, before the question is put I would crave the indulgence of the House for a few moments while I point out the very peculiar nature of the amendment that has been moved this afternoon. That amendment declares that the government has failed to implement the promises which it placed in the Speech from the Throne. It is rather a strange situation to find the opposition so eager for the government to fulfil promises which they themselves claim are not in the interests of the country. They say that the Speech from the Throne contains certain promises, which they at first criticized, and yet after the House has been in session for over five months, the only fault they find with the government is that it has not carried on those promises. Hon. gentlemen opposite thought the Speech was so bad that they kept on obstructing it for nearly two months. Indeed it was deemed by them to be so bad that it was not possible to get a vote on it until the closure was invoked. Yet now, at the end of a session in which so many things have transpired, the only criticism hon. gentlemen opposite have to bring against the government is that it has not fully implemented the Speech, which they considered to be so objectionable that they constantly obstructed it.

If the government wanted praise from its opponents it could not obtain higher praise than the present debate has yielded. The Speech was submitted to parliament early in January last and for weeks and weeks it was denounced by hon. gentlemen opposite. Every feature of it was regarded by them as nothing but a shameful bargain with certain members of parliament. We have been in session for five months and just when we are about to sum up what has been accomplished, and when the time was appropriate for the leader of the opposition and his party to place their programme before the country, the only taunt they can level at us is, that in their estimation, we have not carried out every promise which the Speech contained. Listening to what we have heard to-day one would think that the Conservative policy in this House is merely to see that the Liberal programme is well and properly carried out. It was all wrong when it was outlined five months ago, but to-day the government is blamed for not having carried out what the opposition criticised so strongly and at such great length. As a matter of fact the government has carried out its programme. That was amply demonstrated this afternoon and this evening, but hon. gentlemen opposite should be the last people to complain that the government has not fulfilled it promises. And when we go before our electors, whether it be this year or another year, shall we not receive their full endorsation when we can tell them that the programme laid before the House was such a good one that, after five months of session. the only thing the Conservatives could charge against us was that we had forgotten perhaps or left over a very small particle of that programme?

I am not surprised at the tenor of that amendment, but is it not the same kind of amendment that was moved against the budget? We would have thought when the budget was brought down that either the leader of the opposition or one of his main lieutenants would avail himself of the occasion to place before the public that part of the Tory programme that they thought would appeal to the electors, but they did not do so. The only amendment they had to bring before the House, and the only complaint against the budget, was that it was not strictly in accordance, in their estimation, with one of the paragraphs in the Speech from the Throne. Now that we have progressed further in the session they bring down the same kind of amendment. The Liberal programme is so good that if we leave out the least item they rise in their places at once and insist that we put through that item right away. The leader of the opposition goes further and complains that the Senate, where he has a majority of his friends, is killing some of our measures. It is a strange want of confidence, Mr. Speaker,—in fact they have an overconfidence in our programme. They are going to see that we put through the programme, if they think we are not doing it.

That is the effect of the motion before the House to-night. It is the same kind of motion that was introduced against the budget. Oh that budget! Of course in their speeches they said that under the provisions of the budget, industry was going to suffer, automobile people were going to close their factories; and a huge delegation came here. It was never in the mind of the government for a moment to injure that industry. Their only intention was to cheapen the price of automobiles in this country in order that the consumer might be able to buy an automobile at a low price, and when it was discovered that the government was able to lower that price and at the same time take measures to put the manufacturers in a better position, I would have thought my hon. friends on the other side would have risen in their places and congratulated the government on being able to accomplish such an achievement. But they did not do so. They found fault because we were going to ruin the industry, and a few weeks later they found fault because we had discovered a method of helping the industry and at the same time giving a low price to the consumer. Not only are we not going to ruin the automobile industry, but the other day Mr. McLaughlin, who engineered that huge delegation to Ottawa, made a declaration that his factory was going full speed ahead, and not only were they not going to close, but he was going to make an addition to the factory. What is the result of the budget? It lowers the prices to consumers and puts the manufacturers in better shape. Will my hon. friends say we have been wrong twice, in the first instance when we lowered the price, and in the next instance when we helped the manufacturer?

I do not intend to go through the whole Speech from the Throne and show that practically every paragraph of it has been fully covered, because that was done so well this afternoon by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell). But as the right hon. leader of the opposition said, some of those matters are not through parliament; some of them are before parliament yet. Well, we are not responsible for the action of the Senate. I would not go so far as to say my right hon. friend is responsible, but he is closer to the majority in the Senate than we are, and it seems a very strange thing that while some of the matters which have come before us have been discussed at great length, yet they have been passed without difficulty and with the support in many cases of Conservative members. They have been sent to the Senate, and in that body they are having a more perilous journey. Are we going to be held responsible for the actions of a Conservative majority in the Senate? Certainly we are not. I do not think that, after a moment's reflection, the leader of the Tory party will try to sustain such a view.

Then we have the question of the Hudson Bay railway, the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) had only one fault to find with the action of the government in that matter. He said we were not going fast enough, we were not spending enough money. Another instance of a Tory member complaining that we were not proceeding fast enough with the programme of the Liberal party. That is very comforting, and I welcome the motion we have before us to-day, as I welcomed the unexpected support we received from the other side in favour of the Hudson Bay railway. I will admit that in the east quite a number of us entertained some doubts as to the feasibility of the Hudson Bay railway or Hudson bay navigation, yet we support the item in the estimates in that connection. Why? Because we know that public opinion in the west is solidly behind it. In a confederation such as ours we must have regard for the aspirations of the people of every part of this country. We must do something for this province and something for the other province. We are quite willing to spend millions for the completion of the Welland canal. Hon. members on the other side are agreeable to support such items, even without discussion, when it is proposed to spend money either in the west or on the Welland canal, yet become very inquisitive when it is proposed to lend money, which will pay interest, to the harbour of Montreal. Even if we encounter difficulties in securing money for the harbour of Montreal, I am willing to support the Hudson bay vote or the Welland canal vote, because I realize that in all these projects there is more than the spending of a sum of money, the laying of a few miles of railway track, or the deepening of a canal. There is the matter of meeting the wishes of an important portion of the population of Canada, and that is why we vote the money. On this as on other grounds, not only can we say that the government of this country has implemented the promises in the Speech from the Throne, but it has done so with the support from hon. members which in certain cases was given not so much on account of the merits of the measure, as it appeared to our own eyes, as on account of our great desire to meet the wishes of the people of other provinces. The motive which is behind this amendment is of such a character that we should also approach it in the same spirit as we have approached other questions.

According to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, which I very much respect, we are not permitted to discuss to-day the Alberta question. But I think we can go so far as to say that the government, after promising to return to Alberta its natural resources, has fulfilled its promise by bringing down the measure which was fully approved by the Alberta government. If a difficulty has now arisen that can become very grave if we do not deal with it with great delicacy, that is not our fault. The government is going on with that measure. The government has submitted the constitutional difficulties involved to the Supreme Court of Canada. Surely after the government has done that, as a new phase in its effort to restore to Alberta its natural resources, but to do it in such a way that by doing justice on one side it will not create an injustice on the other, the government cannot be blamed now, when the question is before the Supreme Court of Canada, for not dealing with it at this stage.

So there alone remains the question of the amendment to the electoral law. I understand the amendment proposed at the time was the alternative vote, and I am surprised at members on the other side trying to blame us for not going on with that now, because I am sure if we did bring down that measure there is nothing they would fight with more vigour. For one the hon. member for West York would be the first to rise in his place to protest against it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend would be with me.

Mr. RINFRET: As every Liberal always does, I will listen to my hon. friend's arguments.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Perhaps he will convince the hon. member.

Mr. RINFRET: Yes. I am always very careful about Tory arguments, and I would also listen to replies from this side of the House. I know the hon. member for West York will find no fault with us if we want to wind up this session without bringing down that amendment to the electoral law.

There is a Liberal programme as contained in the Speech from the Throne, and there is also supposed to be a Conservative programme to be moved in the form of resolutions or amendments from the other side. Where is that programme? Every time my hon. friends opposite find opportunities to move amendments they never move their programme; they move that we do not carry out our programme. That is a most extraordinary stand to take, especially for a party which claims that according to their numbers they should govern this country. What would they do if they should be in the place of this government? They claim that they are great protectionists, but no mention was made of protection during the whole course of the debate on the address. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) often claims that there are some protectionists on this side of the House. Why does he not try to fish for them occasionally? Why does he not move an amendment to find out?

Perhaps he thought that on the Address, although they moved everything under the sun, it was not the proper time; that the time would be more proper when we came to discuss the budget. But on that occasion there was no amendment forthcoming on protection. The only time the leader of the opposition made a move in that respect was one Monday evening when the House was practically empty and when we were discussing a motion by private members. He was suddenly taken with a wonderful fit of eagerness to vote for protection that night. There was no one in the House except those who he thought would vote for protection. Why did they not move to-day that they have no confidence in the government because of its tariff policy or something of that kind? I know why. It is because he is not any surer that some members elected in western Canada would be eager to vote for protection than he would have been sure that members from the west in his own party would have voted for a motion to do away with the item for the Hudson Bay railway. In fact the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) gave him no opportunity. As soon as that item was before us he rose and said that he wanted more money for that project. There was then no chance for the leader of the opposition to rise next and say that we should not carry that item.

We have heard a great deal from the Maritime provinces, and I congratulate them on the persistence of their claims on behalf of their provinces. They also very carefully avoid discussing the tariff. Perhaps they would vote for protection, but they would rather not. That is why it is not moved, and that is why the leader of the opposition and some of his friends, wishing to express their want of confidence in the government, always take the circuitous way and blame us because we do not do something which, if we do it, they claim is going to be awful for the country.

The House of Commons is not the only tribunal in which the Tory party can proclaim their policy. Perhaps they would rather do it elsewhere. They are a great democratic party, and perhaps they think they would spoil their efforts in not speaking directly to the people if they were to proclaim their policy in this House; but when they meet the masses of the people they are then going to lay down all their Tory policies. The leader of the opposition was in the Forum in Montreal the other day. Did he tell us what was the policy of the Tory party? No; he was too busy explaining by what extraordinary change in his sentiment he now considered that Mr. Patenaude and himself were on the same platform. Mr. Patenaude had been very clear in his declaration during the campaign that he was as independent of Mr. Meighen as he was of Mr. King. If we take that declaration literally it would have been just as proper for the Prime Minister to go to Montreal and appear on the same platform with Mr. Patenaude as for the leader of the Tory party to do so.

Did the leader of the opposition tell us the meaning of his Hamilton speech? That speech, by a mere coincidence, was launched a few days before the Bagot election. Not only do I find fault with my right hon. friend for not making his position in the matter clear at that time, but I am surprised that after five months of this session, when he is so eager to see the government implement its promises, he has not seen fit himself to say anything about what he promised in the Hamilton speech, what he repeated in the county of Bagot, and probably what he forgot the night he found out that the speech had been useless and that Bagot had voted as it did before.

The leader of the opposition was extraordinarily cautious in regard to the Alberta question this afternoon. He would not question the ruling of the Chair for one moment. When he was put a very pertinent question by the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) he said that he could not even whisper on the matter because Mr. Speaker had ruled that he would not be in order. That was a different stand from the one he took a week or so ago when he went so far as to dispute a decision given in the House by the Deputy Speaker and to uphold the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) who was very clearly challenging the dignity and authority of the chair. On that afternoon he would have been ready to go on; but to-day when he was asked what he thought himself on that question, he said he was so respectful of the chair that he would not whisper one word about the matter. There was no speaker in the chair at the Forum, nor was there any decision there that would preclude him from stating his opinion, and if he intended only a few days later to launch this assault upon the government in respect of one single promise which the government is not in a position to implement, how is it that he did not then give his reasons for the course he contemplated? He was too busy explaining why he was then willing to open his arms to Mr. Patenaude, the gentleman who was so very much independent of him four or five months ago, but who now is prepared to go hand in hand with him in any further electoral campaigning.

I do not wish to drag out this debate any longer, but I would remind the House, as the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) observed this afternoon, that group government in the present juncture is a necessity and it is equally necessary, so long as that form of government is unavoidable, that legislation should reflect the desires and the aspirations of the different groups constituting the government. Right here I appeal to the sense of honour of the Progressive party. If I were a Progressive I would strongly resent the language which is periodically directed by members of the Conservative party towards hon. gentlemen of that group. Those hon. gentlemen are charged with having bargained with the government, with having sold their votes for legislation. I say, if I were a Progressive I would resent that imputation. The Progressive party has supported the government because the government programme as a whole appeals to that party. It certainly cannot be said that Progressive members have bargained for any particular consideration, and it ill becomes Conservatives to suggest anything of the sort, especially when this House has seen hon. gentlemen opposite week after week offering to the Progressives the same measures which this government put forward in the Speech from the Throne. The Conservatives were ready to do anything at all to secure the support of the Progressive party; in fact, the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) went so far as to promise that if they would support the motion which at that time his party had submitted, there would be no election. There would be no change of any kind of which the Progressives could complain. He was clear on that point: there would be no election. Now, if I were to hold hon. gentlemen opposite to their own argument, I should say that they have committed themselves to the undertaking that there shall be no election for four years, and therefore they should not press the present motion.

But suppose the motion now under consideration does carry. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) properly remarked this afternoon—and we stand behind him—that in such an event there will be an election. We are ready for it. The country does not want an election, but it will have it if this amendment carries. I regret that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) is not in his place, because I should like to put a question to him. If we have an election this summer or this fall in the event of this amendment carrying what sort of candidates will he have in the province of Quebec? It is all very well for hon. gentlemen opposite to charge the government with failure to fulfil its promises and, by such charges and hair-splitting, create confusion; but what has the Tory party done in the province of Quebec? If you go back to the year 1911 you will find that they did not have any Conservative candidates in the field to face us. Who therefore will come forward in that province in behalf of the Conservative party to give effect to the promises of hon. gentlemen opposite if this motion of want of confidence carries and an election is brought on? I should like to know that. I know very well what will happen unless there is a great change in the party. In 1911, as the hon. member for Labelle knows better than anyone else, all the Conservatives in Quebec were Nationalists, and in 1917 there was not one Meighen candidate in that province apart from some special seats. In 1921 we had candidates of every shade, the only shade that was missing being the straight Conservative, and in 1925 we had candidates standing for a man who declared that he was as independent of Mr. King as he was of Mr. Meighen. The excuse given in the Forum for this independence on the part of that gentleman was the suggestion that, due to a mistake on the part of the Tory organization, Mr. Patenaude and the right hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Meighen) did not make it plain that they were working together while apparently pretending to be going in opposite directions. I regret, as I say, that in making these remarks I do so in the absence of the leader of the opposition, but some of his lieutenants are present, and they can answer this question. If this House has no longer any confidence in the government, and if we appeal to the country, can we depend upon meeting straight Conservative candidates who will recognize their leader, who will not be ashamed either of him or of his programme, and who will fight unequivocally for the policy of the Tory party? Can we depend upon meeting Conservative candidates who will stand by the promises of the party—if they can disinter them from oblivion? If we do meet such candidates our task will be so much easier, and after the stand they have taken to-day I do not see how they can escape responsibility.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (West Calgary): The hon. member who has just taken his seat states that in the event of the amendment carrying there will be an election. This is the first time I have ever known a private member of the House declare the will of His Excellency under such circumstances as the present.

Mr. RINFRET: That was the declaration of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) this afternoon.

Mr. BENNETT: The declaration of the Prime Minister was that he would advise His Excellency to grant a dissolution; the observation of the hon. gentleman who has just concluded is that there would be an election. It well may be that a government which entirely disregards constitutional practice and procedure may find some consolation in its Prime Minister threatening the House with dissolution, but I venture to say that constitutional practice and procedure would not warrant any governor general in granting a second dissolution to the present Prime Minister. I go further and submit that it is a matter for very careful consideration, to what extent any prime minister is justified in threatening the members of the House with an election.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was not using a threat; I was making a statement as to what would take place.

Mr. BENNETT: The Prime Minister said he would advise His Excellency—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So he will.

Mr. BENNETT: —to dissolve parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So he will.

Mr. BENNETT: But that is a far cry from a dissolution being granted. It is not customary to grant a second dissolution to the same prime minister under these circumstances. I leave the matter there.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): You have no authority for that.

Mr. BENNETT: There are numberless authorities.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): What about Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Wilfrid Laurier?

Mr. BENNETT: When did Sir Wilfrid Laurier ever obtain a second dissolution after less than a year of office and leading the second group in the House?

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): You are quibbling now.

Mr. BENNETT: No. When did Sir Wilfrid Laurier get a second dissolution?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Never.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): In 1900, in 1904, in 1908—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): —and, my hon. friend will remember, in 1911, after having served three years of his term.

Mr. BENNETT: I hope the hon. gentleman from Wetaskiwin (Mr. Tobin) will now thump his desk when he realizes that there is no instance of Sir Wilfrid Laurier obtaining a dissolution six, nine or ten months after the first, or even within a year.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend said that I had cited a precedent. Would he like me to cite him another?

Mr. BENNETT: Surely.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, after having held office for one session, was granted a dissolution by His Majesty the King.

Mr. BENNETT: I was about to mention that as the conclusive precedent against the Prime Minister, because Mr. Ramsay MacDonald was not a prime minister who had secured office on his own dissolution. He was granted a dissolution when he was beaten in the House of Commons on a motion to go into Supply, the Campbell motion, in which it was charged that the executive authority had been abused by a minister of the crown.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): Not at all. I may tell my hon. friend that I was in the British House of Commons on the night that the Campbell motion was debated.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): My hon. friend has no right to try to draw a red herring across the trail with that as a precedent.

Mr. BENNETT: Now, my hon. friend from Guysborough—formerly from Pictou—must realize that his presence in the galleries of the House of Commons does not necessarily create a precedent. I doubt not there was great appreciation of the honour thus done to the British House of Commons.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): You are back to your old form.

Mr. BENNETT: But let him recognize the fact that the Campbell resolution condemned the government for what was done by the attorney general in respect of the Campbell prosecution. There was a motion to refer it to a special committee, which was asked for by Sir John Simon in a very vigorous speech; and Mr. Asquith, who was then in the House, asked the same thing. Mr. Baldwin rose late in the debate, saw exactly what was happening, and said: We are going to end this administration once for all. Then joining with the Liberals, their combined vote defeated the government. Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, as was his right, obtained a dissolution because he held office only at the mercy of the Liberal or the Conservative party. That was the position. But in this instance we have a prime minister who sought a dissolution and a general election in October, 1925, after which he decided to continue in office. Now, under our constitutional practice he would not be granted a second dissolution, but his opponent would be sent for to form a government.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker. may I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend says, "His opponent would be called upon to form a government." I ask him, how can his opponent form a government, when the minute he assumes office he loses his seat in this House, as does any member of his party whom he may ask to join his government? There is no government to carry on except the government that is in office at the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: I hardly thought it was necessary that we should have any discussion with respect to so simple a matter of constitutional practice and procedure as that. When the Clynes amendment was carried in the British House of Commons, according to that argument there was no government; and yet Mr. Ramsay MacDonald made an arrangement by which Mr. Baldwin moved the adjournment of the House in order to enable him to form his government and carry on—just as will be done in this case—just as was done as far back as 1858 when Mr. Gladstone had to ask his friend to move that the House should be adjourned to enable him to form his government.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): Will my hon. friend kindly give us any precedent for his peculiar theory that because a prime minister has once held office, and has had a dissolution in the ordinary course, he cannot obtain another dissolution on account of a situation that arises in the House of Commons? There is no such precedent in British constitutional history.

Mr. BENNETT: On the contrary, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald received his dissolution because he had not sought a dissolution previously and obtained the will of the people; that is why. And what is more, the precedents have been reviewed at length with respect to that matter, and the rule laid down by constitutional authorities without end is that the sovereign will not within a reasonable time grant a second dissolution to one who has had a dissolution and sought the will of the electorate without obtaining a majority.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): Does my hon. friend undertake to say that he can find any precedent in British constitutional history that where a prime minister has held office for the full parliamentary term, and has obtained a dissolution in the ordinary way, thereafter he cannot obtain another dissolution on account of a situation that arises in the House of Commons?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly. It arose in the province of New Brunswick, it arose in the province of Ontario before confederation, it arose in England—and it will arise in Canada. Why, Mr. Speaker, this endeavour to bluff the mind of the Canadian people into the thought that this threat of an election over a few members in this House will have any effect upon them is unworthy of the institutions of this parliament.

Now, let us for a moment proceed. The amendment invites this House to declare that it has lost confidence in the government because it has failed to implement its promises contained in the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And for other causes.

Mr. BENNETT: And for other causes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Lots of others, too.

Mr. BENNETT: One of the other causes, I think, was apparent to most of the members of this House to-day in the speech of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell).

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Its delivery?

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps not its delivery, but its subject matter. If there was a further cause, it was the speech of the member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). Now, Mr. Speaker, twenty years or more have passed away since Alberta became a province. By the rules of this House I am precluded from discussing the terms of a measure which was to be introduced to do tardy justice to that province. In 1905 the journals of this House will indicate that the Conservative opposition at that time proposed an amendment when the province of Alberta was obtaining its constitution, by which the crown in right of the province would hold our natural resources. At that time the crown in right of the Dominion held our natural resources The Conservative opposition of that day divided the then parliament upon that issue, and they were outvoted. From that day until now the Conservative party have never ceased to demand our natural resources, never for a single day have they ceased to insist on what they conceive to be a just request, that the province of Alberta should stand upon an equality with the older provinces of this confederation with respect to the public domain. That being the position—

Mr. CAHILL: What happened to the Conservative party here in the meantime when they were in power?

Mr. BENNETT: I will come to that if my hon. friend will only possess himself in patience. But for that circumstance I would not have risen to-night. In 1911 the Conservative party came into power. In 1912 they made their first effort to deal with this matter, and before the war broke out the then Minister of Public Works (Mr. Rogers)—he sits here to-night—had proposed to the western provinces that they should receive their natural resources, and, if my memory serves me right, three years of the grant that was then paid. Mr. Scott, the Premier of Saskatchewan, together with Mr. Roblin, the Premier of Manitoba, and Mr. Rutherford, the Premier of Alberta, signed a memorandum by which they indicated that such a proposal was not acceptable to them. But the then government in the province of Alberta began to press for the resources. and you will find upon the records of this parliament declarations made by the members of parliament from Alberta, including myself—I was then a member—both in the House and outside, that we must have justice done to Alberta in that regard. I was blamed because it was said that the provincial government was a Liberal government, and that a Liberal government should not be given these resources. My answer was that it was not a question whether you had a Liberal government or a Conservative government in the province, that we had a right to those resources—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I think Your Honour ruled this afternoon that it was not in order for me to refer to the question of the transfer of the natural resources, and I paid respect to Your Honour's ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER: I was about to rise to ask the hon. member if he wanted to discuss the merits of the question or if he was only giving an historical view of it.

Mr. BENNETT: Purely historical.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is too old a parliamentarian to attempt to evade the ruling I gave this afternoon, and I know he will not do so. I have ruled that according to all the precedents, customs and usages this question must not be discussed on its merits, and I hope the hon. member will live up to those precedents.

Mr. BENNETT: I was merely reciting the historical facts, Mr. Speaker, and that is all I propose to do, because I am precluded by the rules of the House from discussing the merits of the agreement signed on the 9th of January, 1926, and which this House has not considered. I venture to direct attention to the fact that before the war broke out, negotiations had proceeded looking towards the transfer of our resources, or, at least, we will put it this way,—the placing of the resources for administrative purposes in the crown in the right of the province, instead of in the crown in the right of the Dominion. Perhaps that is a fair way to put it. I have pointed out that there was a section of our party that believed that we should not thus proceed because there was an unfriendly government in power at Edmonton. That did not detract from what I believed to be the merits of our case; and speaking for myself and others who thought similarly we continued to press the matter on the attention of the administration.

When the Union government came in, the matter proceeded further and conferences were held between the governments of the western provinces and that administration. Nothing resulted. A new government came into power in Alberta. The government then led by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart), was defeated by the Farmers' government headed by Mr. Greenfield. They opened negotiations with the federal government, and notwithstanding the fact that the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba did not share the views of the then government of Alberta, an agreement was signed on the 9th day of January, 1926.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I rise again, Mr. Speaker, to know whether or not your ruling is to be respected. The very point I sought to touch upon this afternoon was the agreement with the Saskatchewan government and the reason why certain measures were not proceded with, I was told that I was not to touch that phase of the question, which is precisely the phase that my hon. friend is leading up to at the moment.

Mr. SPEAKER: When the right hon. gentleman was speaking this afternoon I suspected that he was going to discuss the merits of the question, but when he explained that he was simply referring to the features of the situation arising out of that so-called agreement, I allowed him to continue. In other words, the ruling is that an hon. member may not, in anticipation, discuss the merits or the demerits of a question which is inscribed on the orders of the day. As regards the history of the case, I cannot object to that.

Mr. BENNETT: On the 9th of January of this year, an agreement was signed between the crown represented by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) in this House, and the government of the province of Alberta represented by its premier. That agreement was tabled; it was presented to this House. There is a resolution standing upon the order paper, and I cannot under the rules of the House discuss it further than to refer to it in that sense. But this I can say, that I promised the Premier of the province of Alberta that if that agreement were submitted to this House, I would give it my earnest support. By that I stand. I gave that promise to the Premier of Alberta, because that was a considered agreement arrived at after long negociations between the Dominion government and the province, and they had settled all the intricacies and difficulties in connection with it, and they were seeking to have it embodied in legislation by this House.

It is true that Mr. O. M. Biggar went to the province of Alberta, to the city of Edmonton, for the purpose of endeavouring to secure changes in that agreement, and it is equally true that changes were agreed upon, but as the Premier of Alberta has stated, under circumstances that did not permit him to understand properly what those changes were. So at the present moment—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman is going too far now.

Mr. BENNETT: I shall limit myself to saying this: The Premier of Alberta, standing in his place—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not out of order. I am not discussing the agreement. I am discussing merely a political fact. In that statement the Premier of Alberta made it clear that the reason why the province of Alberta did not accept the amended agreement—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. BENNETT: This has been discussed by the Minister of the Interior. I heard him say that this agreement was signed, and that the trouble was that Alberta was not living up to this agreement. I say that Alberta has always been ready and willing to live up to the agreement made on the 9th of January.

Mr. CANNON: Has my hon. friend any authority for saying so?

Mr. BENNETT: I have the authority of the premier of that province, declared in open session of the legislature, by which that legislature unanimously agreed that that agreement should be carried into effect.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. gentleman to bow to the ruling I gave. Surely he is going beyond it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: May I call attention to the fact that the chief part, if there was any part, of the address of the Minister of Agriculture was a complaint against the government of Alberta for having renegged on the agreement?

Mr. BENNETT: Surely as one who has lived in Alberta and for twenty-one years has been associated with this demand for the return of our resources, as one who has never wavered in any sense, I have the right to meet the attack made in this House by the Minister of Agriculture, from Saskatchewan, against the good faith of the province of Alberta in endeavouring to deal with this problem. Surely I have the right to make declaration on behalf of those who are not here to make it, and I am violating no rule with respect to that. I pointed out that the Premier of the province of Alberta made clear in terms that commanded the support of that legislature, unanimously, unquestionably, what had brought about the condition and the impasse that now confronts us—

1 a.m.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BENNETT: While it well may be that the question of the return of the resources may not be dealt with here because of the rules of order, I desire on behalf of the province in which I live, and in view of its struggle for twenty years to obtain control of its resources—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. gentleman will not live up to the ruling I gave this afternoon, who can? He is one of the ablest parliamentarians, and I speak simply from a sense of my duty to the House and to the public when I ask him to abide by that ruling.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I desire to say at once that I am most anxious to obey the ruling of the Chair, but as I apprehend it, the ruling in May which Your Honour read this afternoon was that regard must be had to the probability of the matter anticipated being brought before the House within a reasonable time. This would enable me at least to recount the historical incidents to which I have alluded. Then there is this further fact that the government—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is not in order in discussing a ruling given by the Chair. I have read that passage from May to which he refers, and if the hon. member will refer to a few lines preceding, he will find that May says that a matter which is inscribed on the orders of the day must not be discussed in anticipation. Contemporary with the opinion of May, I have read in Brand and Denison at least twenty-five rulings on the same point. This ruling is no invention of mine. It is not invoked for the purpose of preventing discussion. I belong to the minority, and I am for free discussion in a free parliament. I would not like to be suspected of being a czar in the chair; I am endeavouring to live up to the best precedents of the British parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, you misapprehend my observation. The gist of the matter is all contained in one paragraph. What Your Honour has just read was part of the paragraph. What I read was the end of it, that the speaker must have regard to the possibility of the matter anticipated being brought before the House within a reasonable time; and my argument at the moment is not against the ruling of the Chair but against the government, against the Prime Minister, who said yesterday that the return to Alberta of its natural resources was not to be considered this session, and who now seeks to prevent a discussion of the matter. That is what I was endeavouring to argue; I was not seeking to criticize the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is splitting hairs.

Mr. BENNETT: There are not many to split. But let us get to the point for a moment. Yesterday a question was asked about this matter by the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Davis) and the Prime Minister stated that the legislation would not be proceeded with this session. I thought the government by dropping the resolution from the order paper at once would afford the necessary facilities so that we who come from the province of Alberta might know why it is that we are refused a measure that was contemplated under the agreement of the 9th of January. That is the only reason I directed attention to the paragraph in May which I have just read. What I have recounted are the historic facts. If next session on the opening day of parliament the government should place this same motion upon the order paper that means we cannot discuss the question of the failure of Alberta to get its natural resources during the next parliament. Surely parliament is not so absolutely precluded from dealing with matters of this kind as to have its rules interposed for that purpose against the free will of the people and the desire expressed in the agreement of the 9th January last. That cannot be so. My purpose in rising to-night was merely to recite the historic facts and to say to my friends from Alberta—whether they be Liberal, or Conservative, or Progressive—that upon those who vote to-night against this amendment will rest the responsibility for the delay in our getting our natural resources. The years may pass, the month may drag into years, and these years may become two, three, four, or five; but the twenty years of effort that resulted in the framing of the agreement of the 9th of January, 1926, will be lost and gone. We who have been struggling through all these years to obtain our natural resources and were willing to support the Farmers' government of Alberta in the fight it made to obtain them are now told that this matter may not be discussed and we have no remedy. That is the position. I may not discuss the reasons, at this time, I may only indicate the facts. I make an appeal to my friends from the province of Alberta. I remind them of the long and painful struggle that took place during the course of many years and which resulted in a change of public opinion; I remind them of the crusades that were carried on in the elections of 1905 and 1909; I remind them of the change in the opinions of the leaders of the Liberal party, how they went out and told the people that they were mistaken and wrong in 1905 and 1909; how they admitted that they thought differently now and that we should have our resources; I remind them how we rejoiced in that change of heart rather than blame the Liberals for their cupidity and hypocrisy. These things have happened, and now when we are in sight of the promised land we are told that we must be like Moses, die and not see it. I ask my friends from Alberta who belong to the Progressive party how they can go back to their constituents and tell them they were precluded by the rules of the House of Commons from discussing this matter, and yet they must vote confidence in a government that has betrayed them most shamefully with respect to this transaction.

I did not intend to participate in this debate, but when I heard the observations of the Minister of Agriculture, when I heard the apologies of the Minister of the Interior, when I heard the blame that was heaped upon the government of the province of Alberta, and when I saw the attempt that was made to have it said that the government at Edmonton were responsible for the present situation I felt that although I did not belong to the party that had negotiated the terms of this agreement I must range myself on the side of the province. And having regard to the promise which I gave publicly and openly that I would support the agreement of January 9, 1926, I would be recreant to my own past history with respect to this matter, recreant to the trust reposed in me by the constituents that sent me here, if I did not rise in my place and voice a protest against the miserable subterfuge that prevents discussion of this matter and prevents the province of Alberta, perhaps for the next five or six years, from enjoying the right of administering its own natural resources as older provinces of this confederation do. That is the reason I have spoken, and I offer no apology for my action. If I have inadvertently disregarded in the slightest the ruling of the Chair this afternoon, I offer my most humble regrets, because I had no intention of doing so. My only object was to recite the facts I have mentioned, and say to my friends from Alberta that if to-night they vote confidence in this administration they must accept the responsibility of going back to their constituents and telling them that the reason Alberta has not its resources is that they trusted the government of the day and were betrayed.

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General): My answer to the speech delivered by the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) will be very short. The hon. member in the course of his remarks proclaimed that he respected the decision which the Chair gave this afternoon, that we should not discuss the question of the return of its natural resources to the province of Alberta. But every hon. member has no doubt remarked that most of the hon. gentleman's speech was directed to that question. I will bow to your decision, Mr. Speaker. I shall not follow the hon. member on the ground which he has chosen, but I will simply say, so far as the question of the natural resources of the province of Alberta are concerned, that this government will stand by the agreement entered into in 1905 and will see that the rights of both the majority and the minority in that province are respected. If the hon. member who has just spoken is willing to have an election fought on the question whether the agreement of 1905 is to be nothing but a scrap of paper, and if he wishes to abandon the engagements which have been signed, engagements which have been consecrated by the governments which carried them out for the last twenty years, he is welcome to do so. But, on the other hand, we on the other side of the House are willing to meet him any time. We do not wish, Mr. Speaker, to have in Canada any religious struggles. We do not wish to revive in this country the dissensions which existed thirty and forty years ago; belonging as we do to the Liberal party, we are in favour of respecting the rights of minorities as well as the rights of majorities.

The right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) spoke in the city of Montreal ten days ago. He addressed thousands of the citizens of my province who came to listen to him. Speaking in their own language, what did he say? He said he had become more of a Nationalist than the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa).

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker, I do not need to say for the benefit of the hon. member, but for the benefit of other members of the House, I say it as a matter of privilege, that what the hon. member says is untrue.

Mr. CANNON: We have had enough interruptions of that kind from the right hon. leader of the opposition during this session.

Every member of this House can judge for himself the meaning of the speeches delivered by the right hon. gentleman. I have read his speech carefully; I have weighed his remarks pronounced in French and I can pass judgment on them with more accuracy than most of the hon. gentlemen who sit on the other side—more of a Nationalist than the hon. member for Labelle.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has heard the denial given by the right hon. gentleman, and is bound to accept it.

Mr. CANNON: I bow to your decision, Mr. Speaker, but if the denial of the right hon. gentleman is true, the member for Labelle must have changed considerably.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CANNON: Moreover, that speech delivered in Montreal was followed by a declaration from the lips of Mr. Patenaude, who kissed with great bliss the forehead which he had denounced during the election of 1925. The spectacle we witnessed in the city of Montreal was nothing but a prelude to the comedy which we have been invited to witness in the House of Commons to-day. Reconciled with Mr. Patenaude, on a par with the hon. member for Labelle and every Nationalist in our province, the right hon. member has to make his peace with the Orangemen of his party, and how is he going to do it? His usual way, his usual method, the Meighenite in parliamentary affairs, indirectly, adroitly, throwing the religious question into the political battlefield of Canada. He has done it. Unable courageously to fight before the House of Commons the question as it should be fought, unable to come like a man—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CANNON: If hon. gentlemen are waking up they will be wider awake in a minute. Unable directly like a man to present his programme, the right hon. member has adopted this means, and I say, Mr. Speaker, that the motion should be voted down. I will explain my reasons very briefly. They are threefold. First, this amendment is not a straightforward way of placing the question before the House. If we are to divide, if we are to show differences of opinion, if we are to show divergence of thought, let the right hon. gentleman have some of his members bring the question up as it should be brought.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Can the hon. gentleman tell us how that can be done so long as the government keeps a blocking motion on the order paper?

[Mr. Cannon.]

Mr. CANNON: So far as the right hon. gentleman is concerned, he had no lessons to receive from me.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. CANNON: Secondly, the motion should be voted down because it is not straightforward, it is not fair.

An hon. MEMBER: Answer the question.

Mr. CANNON: If the hon. member who interrupts wants to make a speech, let him make it; I am making one now. The amendment says that this government has not implemented its promises contained in the Speech from the Throne.

An hon. MEMBER: That is right—none of them.

Mr. CANNON: When parliament met on the 7th of January what were the speeches delivered by members on the other side? They said that this government, in order to keep power, was delivering the whole of the country to the Progressives.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No; promising.

Mr. CANNON: That is what they said. I remember in those days the board of strategy was wavering. It had not been established on as solid a basis as it is established now. Some of our friends, the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) for instance, would get up and say: We have nothing to do with the western element, the Progressives in this House. But the ex-Solicitor General (Mr. Guthrie) was not so hard to please. He said: If the Speech from the Throne does not please the Progressive members, we will bring in one that may please them better.

We have worked for six months. We have brought in legislation, and mark my words Mr. Speaker, every piece of legislation brought in by this government has been adopted by the House of Commons. Not one of the government bills has been defeated; very few have been challenged, and to-day shall we, those who formed the majority while that legislation was being studied, turn round and say we have been wrong? Shall we, the Liberals on this side and the Progressives at the other end of the chamber, say that our labours for the last six months have been useless and should not be considered?

The right hon. gentleman, through the member who moved this amendment, says that we did not implement the Speech from the Throne. We have passed more progressive, more liberal, more radical measures during this session than have been passed for many a year. The evidence of that is to be gathered from the Tory press of this country. If we wish to judge whether the legislation which was introduced was Liberal legislation, let us peruse for a minute the reports of the Canadian press directed, influenced and controlled in a large measure by hon. gentlemen who sit opposite to me. Let us think for one moment of what the press said when the budget was being discussed. We stood for radical changes in many ways. We carried them through.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And then changed them back again.

Mr. CANNON: My right hon. friend interrupts. I have great respect for a leader of a party provided that he respects himself. I have always shown great respect for the right hon. gentleman; but if he wishes to interrupt me like a back-bencher does, I will answer him in the same way. I say that this amendment should not be carried because not only is it not straightforward, not only is it not fair, but, thirdly, it would not carry out its object.

What is the object of this amendment? It is censure of the government because the government did not implement the Speech from the Throne. Does anybody in this House outside of the dyed-in-the-wool Tories who surround the leader of the opposition believe for one moment that, were there a change in the government, the Speech from the Throne would be implemented? What measure would the right hon. gentleman if he was Prime Minister to-morrow introduce into parliament to implement the Speech from the Throne? The amendment asks that this House should vote non-confidence in the government because it did not do enough to implement the Speech from the Throne. Can we expect the right hon. gentleman, or his neighbour the ex-Minister of Finance, or his other neighbour the ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Rogers) to do anything further?

Suppose when the vote is taken the amendment carries. What will happen? Two alternatives are possible. The first is that this government would resign and that the leader of the opposition would be called upon to form a government. Let us consider this alternative as regards legislation implementing the Speech from the Throne. If to-morrow the right hon. gentleman became Prime Minster, this House would prorogue. Not another piece of legislation would pass. Any legislation which had been initiated and not completely adopted would be dropped. This parliament would cease to exist. Why so? The moment the right hon. gentleman accepted the position of Prime Minster he would cease to become a member of this House and would not be able to sit in this House. The moment he would choose his colleagues—and I hope he would choose our good friend the hon. member for West York—I am sorry to say he would disappear also. There would be in this House fifteen or sixteen empty seats. Does anybody think for one moment that we could carry on?

I hear that many appeals have been made to the Progressives by supposedly constitutional advocates carrying on one arm precedents dating back to Queen Anne and on the other memoirs telling us what Lord Beaconsfield might have said on certain occasions. Our friends who are not learned in the law were told, I understand, that should the right hon. gentleman become Prime Minister we would have no election for two years. Has anybody with a sense of humour the gall to repeat that in this House. If the right hon. gentleman became Prime Minister to-morrow he would be forced, on account of himself and his colleagues not being able to sit in this House, to bring on an election. That is common sense. I do not know what Queen Anne said about the matter. Let us take the other alternative, which is that the Prime Minister—

Mr. RYCKMAN: Which one?

Mr. CANNON: Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), and I am proud of him The Prime Minister would ask for a dissolution. Now I heard a whole lot of constitutional law this afternoon; I have heard a lot more this evening, and I am not going to go into any details. As I said many months ago, common law is ordinary common sense, and constitutional law is common sense applied to public business. This government in January was told by a majority of the House to carry on the business of Canada, and we have done so. We have brought down legislation which has met with the approval of the majority of the House of Commons, and frequently these gallant knights who have spoken to-day did not have the courage to challenge a vote. If we were defeated on this amendment we should have the right to ask for a dissolution—and we shall have it. I heard the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) put the question, "Who ever heard of a prime minister asking twice in succession for a dissolution?"

Mr. BENNETT: Not asking but getting it.

Mr. CANNON: What about Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who was in power fifteen years and carried a number of elections? Was he not granted dissolution? Let us go further, Ramsay MacDonald formed a minority government, and when he was defeated in the House after having introduced his programme he asked His Majesty for a dissolution and he got it. And the crown in England is no different from the crown in Canada, notwithstanding what the hon. member for West Calgary may say to the contrary. I am not going to quote Gladstone; I am not going to quote Disraeli; I am not going to read any books—

Mr. BENNETT: It would be better for you if you did.

Mr. CANNON: The hon. gentleman would like me to read books.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CANNON: Well, I will not follow the hon. gentleman's example and drown my thoughts in a flood of words. This government has submitted to parliament a budget which has produced in the soul of the poor, of the weak and of the downtrodden a ray of hope, and we will not allow hon. gentlemen opposite who represent nothing but the great interests, nothing but selfish ends, to form a government before the electorate of Canada is called upon to decide who shall govern the country. Let us have a vote, and if this government is sustained so much the better.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CANNON: If the government is defeated, then we will go to the country. I fancy I hear someone opposite saying, so much the better if we are defeated.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CANNON: I have no doubt a good many hon. gentlemen would be pleased to take our places, but that is a minor consideration. We are here to represent Canadian interests as a whole, and this is no time for a change of government.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CANNON: Why do I say so? In a few months there is going to be an imperial conference and the League of Nations will meet; in a few months Canada will be called upon to express her views on international problems and on imperial relations.

An hon. MEMBER: War with Turkey?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. CANNON: Hon. gentlemen opposite have shown to-day an extraordinary sympathy for their leader (Mr. Meighen), and if they desire to have that sympathy maintained I would advise them not to talk Turkey. It will hurt the right hon. gentleman. He has taken such a stand, he has spoken on the same question in so many ways, that the less we speak about that subject the better for him. We are the representatives of the Canadian people, and we want as our spokesman, as our mouthpiece, a man whose ideals are Canadian and whose aspirations are the aspirations of the majority of the House.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Davis) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not in a position to say as to the order. I think we had better take the same busines as announced for to-day, or for yesterday as it is now. I purpose taking up the resolution that appears in the order paper standing in my name with respect to the signature and ratification of treaties. I would like to be able to say that that will be the first order of business. I hope it may, but I do not wish to say so definitely.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 2.15 a.m. (Wednesday).

The House met at two o'clock.

INDUSTRIAL AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Mr. C. R. McINTOSH (North Battleford) presented the second and final report of the select standing committee on Industrial and International Relations, as follows:

Wednesday, June 16, 1926.

The select standing committee on Industrial and International Relations beg leave to present the following as their second and final report.

In the House of Commons on March 17th, the resolution, "That in the opinion of this House a wage sufficient to provide for a reasonable standard of living should constitute a legal minimum wage" was referred to the select standing committee on Industrial and International Relations for examination and report.

Your committee has held several meetings and made a careful examination of the said resolution, having regard to the labour provisions of the Treaties of Peace and the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament, and the provincial legislatures. Six witnesses in all were examined. The witnesses who appeared before your committee and the subjects respectively dealt with were:—Assistant Deputy Minister of Labour, Gerald H. Brown, who traced the history of minimum wage legislation in Canada and the contribution the federal Department of Labour was trying to make to the effective solution of the many problems arising in the realm of labour in the Dominion; W. Stuart Edwards, Deputy Minister of Justice, who gave a legal opinion on the question of jurisdiction involved in the resolution under examination; C. W. Bolton, statistician, Labour department, who took up the question of family budgets considered from the point of view of living wages; Margaret S. Gould, Research department of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employees, who further continued the discussion in a specific and detailed manner on family budgets; Albert Hewitson, departmental superintendent, Canadian Colored Cottons Limited, Cornwall, Ontario, who made a statement of the wages and conditions existing in a typical Ontario factory town; and Dr. J. W. MacMillan, Chairman of the Minimum Wage board, who explained minimum wage administration.

The labour principles embodied in the Treaty of Versailles and the other Treaties of Peace recognized the well-being physically, morally and intellectually of industrial wage earners. They are nine in number, the third of which is "The payment to the employees of a wage adequate to maintain a reasonable standard of living as this is understood in their time and country". The latter clause of the Peace Treaty was explained by Gerald H. Brown, Assistant Deputy Minister of Labour, when he gave evidence to the effect that "The labour part of the Peace Treaties opens with the declaration that if we are going to have peace in the world it must be based on social justice, and there must be a world-wide acceptance of reasonable living and working conditions, and that the principle which is enunciated in the Peace Treaties, and the principle which has already been endorsed by Canada through its acceptance of the Peace Treaties and its approval by Parliament and ratification by proper diplomatic authorities on our behalf constitute acceptance of the idea of minimum wages".

The evidence presented by Dr. MacMillan showed that the principle of the minimum wage as applied to women was working out most satisfactorily. His words, "The very convincing appeal which the Minimum Wage principle makes to the world, is of this nature; it is an assertion of the preciousness, or if you prefer sacredness; the supreme sacredness of human life—the right of the worker to live from his work". Dr. MacMillan further states that if the principle has been applied to women workers and found satisfactory there is no reason why its scope should not be extended to men. He says, "There seems to be no reason why if this principle is good for women's wages, it should not be applied at least to some classes of men's wages, as a provision that the proper type of law should first be passed and then that the proper type of administration of this law should be applied. It is to be noted in this connection that the British Columbia Legislature at its last session passed a minimum wage act for men applicable to most phases of industrial activities, and that the board appointed to carry out the act is now engaged obtaining data and evidence to enable it to fix the minimum wage for the lumbering industry, the first industry to be dealt with.

The evidence of family budgets given by Mr. Bolton and Miss Gould showed the items of family expenditures and the cost in Canada of such budgets. The evidence also showed that some workers in Canada are receiving less than will enable them to adequately maintain this standard. Such an injustice is manifestly unfair and unbusinesslike inasmuch as it costs the country much, involving, as it does, an excess of unrest, ill-health and crime.

It was stated by the Deputy Minister of Justice that according to the British North America Act legislative jurisdiction in regard to minimum wages is vested primarily in the provincial legislatures. He also quoted section 132 as follows: "The Parliament of Canada shall have all powers necessary or proper for performing the obligations of Canada or any provinces thereof as part of the British Empire, towards foreign countries, arising out of any treaty between the empire and such foreign countries". Commenting on this he said "There can be no doubt that where Canada has entered into an obligation by treaty—and in that connection I mean an association with the empire of course—within the meaning of section 132, which I have just read—I do not think there is any doubt but that parliament has power to legislate for the purpose of carrying into effect the provision of the treaty". This opinion goes to show that the British North America Act by no means contemplated industrial problems of the kind and scope to which Canadians to-day must adjust themselves.

Your committee accordingly recommend (a) That a conference of provincial and Dominion representatives intimately in touch with labour conditions throughout Canada be held in the near future to consult as to the best means to be employed of giving effect to the labour provisions of the Treaties of Peace; (b) That 10,000 copies of the present report and the evidence upon which it is based be printed, these to be distributed by the Department of Labour, and that Rule 74 be suspended in connection therewith.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

CAMERON R. McINTOSH,
Chairman.

PEACE RIVER ELECTION

MOTION THAT PETITION OF J. A. COLLINS BE READ AND RECEIVED

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to-day the motion which has stood in my name for some days:

That notwithstanding the report of the Clerk of Petitions the petition of James Arthur Collins presented to the House on the 27th day of May, 1926, be read and received.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Before my right hon. friend rises to speak on this motion I would like to get the ruling of Your Honour as to whether the motion can properly be entertained by the House. As I understand the matter the prayer of the petition is identical with the one which was held to be of a character which could not be received by the House. If that be the case, this petition is in the same category.

Mr. MEIGHEN: All I need contend is that there is certainly no rule which prevents the House from deciding itself whether a petition be read and received or not, and that is what this motion says.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): So far as I can ascertain from instances in which similar petitions have been presented to this House, in each of those instances of which there are two, only one of them being in the records of this House, His Honour the Speaker has ruled that the petition should not be accepted for reasons given by him in his ruling. Therefore it is for Your Honour to decide whether or not this petition should be received, subject of course to an appeal from your ruling as was done in regard to a similar petition a couple of weeks ago while I was not here.

Hon. GEORGE H. BOIVIN (Minister of Customs and Excise): If I understand the matter correctly it has already been decided by the Examiner of Petitions and, I think, ruled by Your Honour that the essential part of the prayer of the petition presently before the House and about to be considered in the debate on this motion is identical with the one refused by Your Honour a few weeks previously. If that be the case the present motion is nothing but a renewal of the appeal taken by the right hon. gentleman himself against your ruling when it was first made. I ask myself if this second appeal from a ruling of the Speaker in the form of a motion is in order. I beg to remind Your Honour of the well known passage in both Bourinot and May which says that a matter which has once been debated and discussed, which has once been decided by the House of Commons, cannot be revived for debate or discussion during the same session. In my humble opinion the motion which is now before the House is merely a request that the House itself decide that your ruling was wrong; in other words, that the House vote again upon a matter upon which it has already voted. I claim that that is not in order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The ground I stated first is the ground upon which I stand, namely, that there is no rule which prevents the House from deciding whether a petition be read and received or not. Moreover this petition differs from the other petition in two very important respects. It sets out a ground which was not set out in the other petition, a ground which goes to the very root of the judgment given by Your Honour in respect of the other petition, namely, which discloses, if it can be supported, that this parliament has not relegated to the courts, but on the contrary has forbidden the courts to try such a question as is raised in this petition, has disarmed and disempowered the courts so that we cannot go there and present the evidence essential to establish our case.

That ground is recited in this petition; it was not in the other petition. I cannot emphasize too strongly the fact that not only does it go to the heart, but it is the heart of the whole problem for the reason that we have nowhere else we can go. Further the petition asks that this House review the conduct of its officers and that the House apply such remedy as it sees fit, the remedy not being specified in the petition. Surely such a petition could be received; but beyond all that my contention is that a motion to read and receive a petition is in order. Any motion is in order in this House; I do not know of any motion that is not in order. An hon. member can move as he desires. The Speaker certainly can rule on the form or matter of the petition, but a member has the right to move anything he desires whether it is before the House or not. If it is not, he can put it before the House by a motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have carefully studied this question since the motion appeared on the order paper and I will now give the decision which I have reached. In this case the Right Hon. Mr. Meighen has the right to make a motion that the petition be received, which is the common form of motion in regard to public petitions, and it could also be made as a matter of privilege. The right of petitioning the House is an old and established principle to be jealously preserved.

A distinction, however, must be drawn between petitions relating to matters of public interest and those relating to controverted elections. In the former case, the right of petition is unimpaired. In the latter, it is clear that a petition complaining of the undue election of a member and questioning the right of an hon. member to his seat, cannot be received by the House, as such a petition is in conflict with the letter and spirit of the statutes respecting the trial of controverted elections. The House in this case has no jurisdiction to interfere.

The amended petition in this case has two distinct requests. The first relates to the conduct of certain electoral officers, and is unquestionably within the jurisdiction of the House. The House retains its power over its own officers, and will receive a petition that prays that the House of Commons will investigate the conduct of the Chief Electoral Officer, the deputy returning officers, or other officers, in any particular.

The second request is essentially a different matter, and a very serious proposition, that such officers shall be authorized to take such action as may be requisite to secure the return to the House of any one of the candidates at an election. There is here involved, in another form, the same controversial question as to an election which is now pending before the tribunal established by law for the decision of such questions. Parliament has never entrusted such duties to its officers. By statute the judges are to decide such matters.

Part of this prayer is within the jurisdiction of the House, and part beyond that jurisdiction. It seems to be a case where the House cannot afford any practical relief, or investigate the complaint except in a limited degree as respects its own officers. Such a petition may be ordered to lie on the table on the ground that the relief prayed for is partly within the power of the House, though not likely to be afforded.

It is for the House to judge and determine whether this petition should lie on the table and thus become one of the permanent records of the House. The House has always maintained the undoubted constitutional rights of the people to complain of grievances, and to pray for their redress, but while that is so, the House itself must take into serious consideration the question of devolving upon its officers such large responsibilities as are involved in the prayer of this petition.

I have asked the House to take this responsibility, notwithstanding that I have already ruled that the petition as first presented though differently drafted was not receivable, not because I believe that ruling to have been wrong, but for the reason that I find in Blackmore's Speakers' Decisions, 1857-1884, a case somewhat similar to that now in question. At page 238 there appears a ruling by Mr. Speaker Brand from which I quote:

> In the event of a special report from the Public Petitions committee,—

I may observe here that in the British parliament there is no officer corresponding to our Examiner of Petitions, but there is a Public Petitions committee.

> —in reference to a petition, the House, not the Speaker, decides whether it should lie upon the table.

I need not enter into details, but after a lengthy debate Mr. Speaker Brand said:

> It is for the House, and not for me, to judge and determine whether the petition now under the consideration of the House should lie upon the table, and thus become one of the permanent records of the House. The House has always maintained the undoubted constitutional rights of the people to complain of grievances, and to pray for their redress; but that right may be abused, and the question for the consideration of the House now is, whether the petitioners in the present case have not abused the right of petitioning, which they undoubtedly possess.

This is the only point on which the House is called upon to declare, and for that reason I leave the responsibility to the House.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I regret very much that owing to the action of the administration the culmination of the present question has been so long delayed, and I add to that a regret that because of my own absence—

Mr. SPEAKER: May I interrupt the right hon. member? As the debate proceeds it is possible that frequent reference will be made to the contents of the petition. The ordinary usage under the rules in the British House of Commons—there are precedents on the point—is for the petition first to be read by the Clerk of the House. See Blackmore's Speaker's Decisions, page 235, a ruling by Speaker Brand in the Tichborne case. Perhaps the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) would move that the petition be read by the Clerk.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the Clerk Assistant read the petition as follows:

To the Honourable the members of the House of Commons in parliament assembled.

The petition of the undersigned, James Arthur Collins, of Chisholm, in the province of Alberta, lumberman,

Humbly sheweth:

1. That an election was held on the 29th day of October, A.D. 1925, for the electoral district of Peace River, to elect a member to represent the said electoral district in the House of Commons of Canada.

2. That the candidates at the election were: Donald Macbeth Kennedy, William Archibald Rae, and your petitioner, James Arthur Collins.

3. That Edward Henry Sheppard was the returning officer at said election, and on the 26th day of November, A.D. 1925, declared the said Donald Macbeth Kennedy duly elected to represent the said electoral district in the fifteenth parliament of Canada.

4. That pursuant to the provisions of the Dominion Elections Act, in that behalf, a recount of the votes cast at the said election was held from the first until the eighteenth days of December, 1925, at the city of Edmonton, by His Honour Judge Mahaffy, and at the conclusion of said recount the said judge certified that 3,986 votes had been cast in favour of Donald Macbeth Kennedy; 3,944 votes had been cast in favour of William Archibald Rae; and 3,969 votes had been cast in favour of your petitioner, James Arthur Collins, and directed that the said Donald Macbeth Kennedy be declared elected to represent the said electoral district in the fifteeth parliament of Canada by a majority of seventeen votes over your petitioner.

5. That on the second day of January the said Donald Macbeth Kennedy was gazetted as the member returned for the electoral district of Peace River to serve in the House of Commons of Canada, and he has taken his seat in such House of Commons.

6. That on or about the 26th day of February, A.D. 1926, proceedings under the Controverted Elections Act were taken by one John B. Page against the said Donald Macbeth Kennedy, but no such proceedings have been taken by your petitioner, or by anyone on his behalf.

7. That at the said election, the said electoral district of Peace River was subdivided into 298 polling divisions, number four of such divisions being known as Brule Mines poll.

8. At the final recount by His Honour Judge Mahaffy, as aforesaid, showed that at Brule Mines poll, being poll number four as aforesaid, twelve votes were cast in favour of Donald Macbeth Kennedy and 127 votes in favour of William Archibald Rae, and twenty-one votes in favour of your petitioner.

9. That at least 111 electors voted for your petitioner at Brule Mines poll, No. 4, aforesaid, but through the action of the deputy returning officer, one Peter A. Robb, and other persons, to your petitioner unknown, ballots were fraudulently manipulated to produce the result mentioned in the next preceding paragraph of this petition.

10. That on or about the 18th day of January, 1926, the said Peter A. Robb, deputy returning officer, aforesaid, was charged before the Honourable Chief Justice Simmons of the trial division of the Supreme Court of Alberta.

"For that he, the said Peter A. Robb on or about the 29th day of October, A.D. 1925, at polling division No. 4 at Brule Mines in the province of Alberta, at an election held under and by virtue of the Dominion Elections Act for the election of a person to serve in the House of Commons of Canada in and for the electoral district of Peace River, in the province aforesaid, did fraudulently destroy a number of ballot papers used by voters at the time and place aforesaid.

And also for that he, the said Peter A. Robb, on or about the 29th day of October, A.D. 1925, at polling division No. 4, at Brule Mines, aforesaid, at an election held under and by virtue of the Dominion Elections Act for the election of a person to serve in the House of Commons of Canada in and for the electoral district of Peace River, did fraudulently put into the ballot box, used in connection with the said poll, papers other than the ballot papers which he, the said Peter A. Robb, was authorized by law to put in the said ballot box.

And also for that he, the said Peter A. Robb, on or about the 29th day of October, A.D. 1925, at polling division No. 4 at Brule Mines in the province of Alberta at an election under and by virtue of the Dominion Elections Act for the election of a person to serve in the House of Commons of Canada in and for the electoral district of Peace River in the province of Alberta and being a deputy returning officer at said polling division No. 4 did fraudulently put otherwise than as authorized by the said Dominion Elections Act, his initials on the back of papers purporting to be, or capable of being used as ballot papers for the said election," to which said charges the said Peter A. Robb pleaded, "Not guilty."

11. That the trial of the said Peter A. Robb commenced at Edmonton, Alberta, on Monday, the 29th day of March, 1926, before the Honourable Mr. Justice Walsh of the trial division of the Supreme Court of Alberta and a jury, and at the conclusion of the said trial on the first day of April, 1926, the said Peter A. Robb was found guilty by the said jury on all the three charges aforesaid (as amended at the said trial) and was sentenced by the Honourable Mr. Justice Walsh to imprisonment for five years in the penitentiary at Prince Albert with hard labour, for each of the said offences, such sentences to run concurrently. A certified copy of the proceedings at the said trial accompanies this petition.

12. That the evidence of a number of electors who voted at Brule Mines poll No. 4 aforesaid was given at the said trial referred to in paragraph 11 hereof: that in giving their evidence the said electors stated for whom they had voted and thereby established that the said Peter A. Robb did fraudulently destroy a number of ballot papers used by the said electors, that he, the said Peter A. Robb, did fraudulently put into a ballot box used at the said poll, papers other than the ballot papers, which he was authorized by law to put in the said ballot box, and also that he the said Peter A. Robb did fraudulently put otherwise than as authorized by the said Dominion Elections Act his initials on the back of papers purporting to be or capable of being used as ballot papers for the said election.

13. That absolutely essential evidence available to your petitioner to establish the fraudulent manipulation of ballot papers at Brule Mines poll No. 4 aforesaid is necessarily that of the said electors who voted at such poll and gave their testimony at the trial of the said Peter A. Robb.

14. That said electors who voted at Brule Mines poll No. 4 aforesaid cannot under the law be permitted to give evidence as to how they voted at the said election in proceedings under the Controverted Elections Act or in any legal proceedings other than in criminal cases.

15. That consequently there is no tribunal in the Dominion of Canada with power to make the inquiries necessary to establish the facts alleged in this petition or with jurisdiction to provide the remedy for the wrong which has been done your petitioner other than the House of Commons of Canada.

16. That the fraud and irregularities complained of herein were the fraud and irregularities of an officer or officers of the House of Commons of Canada committed prior to, at and subsequent to the taking of the vote of the electors and the closing of the said Brule Mines poll No. 4.

17. That the fraud and irregularities of the said officer or officers deprived your petitioner of his seat in the House of Commons for said electoral district of Peace River, your petitioner having at the said election held on the 29th day of October for said electoral district received more votes than did either the said Donald Macbeth Kennedy or William Archibald Rae.

Wherefore your petitioner prays that the House of Commons will investigate the conduct of the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada, the returning officer for the electoral district of Peace River, Edward Henry Sheppard aforesaid, the deputy returning officer, Peter A. Robb aforesaid, and such other officer or officers as may be necessary in connection with the establishing of a polling place at Brule Mines poll No. 4 aforesaid, and the taking of, the counting and recounting the votes cast at such poll in the electoral district of Peace River aforesaid, and that such Chief Electoral Officer, returning officer, deputy returning officer or other officer or officers be directed to take such action as may be requisite and necessary to secure the return to the House of Commons of the candidate who secured the greatest number of votes cast by the electors of the electoral district of Peace River on the 29th of October, 1925, aforesaid, and for such other and further relief as may seem meet in the premises.

And your petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

(S) JAMES ARTHUR COLLINS.

Witness:
Lyda S. Roche.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was about to express my regret that, due to absence, I was not able to move this motion as soon as I should like to have done. It is a motion which peculiarly calls for immediate decision. Hon. members will recall the debate which took place in this House some days ago. Inasmuch however as that debate was merely on the point of order, it was not one which had been thoroughly prepared in advance and such as hon. members are entitled to before taking the responsibility of so far-reaching and serious a decision as is involved in the rejection of a petition of this character. In the course of that debate, however, some consideration was given to the state of our constitution and practice as related to inquiry into matters affecting an election or post-election proceedings under the charge of officers of parliament. Several authorities were quoted with a view to showing that parliament had disrobed itself of jurisdiction not only to inquire into any matter that had some connection with an election, but of jurisdiction to receive a petition praying for relief in respect of injury brought about by officers of parliament.

The cases recited narrow down to a very limited number, and naturally they are all of a date subsequent to the passage by this parliament of our Controverted Elections Act. As everyone is aware, prior to the passing of that act in 1873, as prior to the passing of the British act at an earlier date, election petitions, that is to say, petitions going to the very character and method of the conduct of an election, were tried by special committees of this House and of the British House respectively under formulated rules. This process in course of time became not only burdensome but inappropriate, and in Britain, as here, legislation was passed which relegated this duty to the courts and for the most part, if not altogether, empowered the courts to discharge the duty so relegated. The case quoted first of all was some ruling as to the receipt of a petition which at the present time we do not need further to take into account, but which really had no relevancy to this case at all, as I will later show with the utmost plainness. Another case was quoted which showed that parliament would not consider an appeal by a litigant in a controverted elections case to have the House of Commons reverse the judgment of the court. I never for a moment would question the propriety of that decision. It also has no relevancy to this case whatever.

Then came what is known as the Baird case in 1887, and to this I hasten because it is really the controlling factor of this whole problem, and a proper understanding of the speeches made in this House in connection with the Baird case will indeed enable hon. members who come to the question dispassionately to arrive at a conclusion upon this motion and the proceedings which should follow this motion with little or no difficulty. Very able addresses were then presented to parliament, some of which have been quoted; hon. members of the Liberal party of that day argued with great ability that parliament had not relegated anything to the courts save such things as theretofore had been tried and disposed of by committees, that there were many things that parliament disposed of without the committees, and that consequently these were still within the purview of parliament. I do not need to review the discussion on that phase of the matter; I only emphasize the fact that most of the discussion took place on that point. I take the view, which I believe to be thoroughly upheld by the Baird case, that parliament has not, to express it exactly, emptied itself of jurisdiction in this matter at all; I take the view that parliament has not emptied itself of jurisdiction in respect of any election matter or any matter affecting the right of a member to sit in this House. What parliament has done is to make it the duty of the courts to exercise that jurisdiction; the courts have been empowered to do so and consequently, as expressed by Sir John Thompson in his argument on the Baird case in parliament, the task and duty was relegated to the courts. That being so parliament should not itself re-exercise that right. With Sir John Thompson's words in that respect I am in complete accord, and hon. members will later see why I take such pains to emphasize this point.

I pause to remark, although I do not need to establish it to justify or indeed compel, so far as arguments can compel, this House to pass this motion, that the point itself is of consequence as being very closely related to the merits of the motion now before parliament. I want to read the words of Sir John Thompson in this regard, and it is to be noted that his language was very carefully selected indeed. He says:

> As soon as the question has been decided as to the qualification of the person so returned, the conduct of the returning officer or the number of votes which were received, the conduct of the candidates and every other question connected with the election or with the conduct of the returning officer has been relegated to the judiciary, and the House has always declined to exercise its functions and its power to interfere.

The implication is plainly that the power still remains, but that its exercise would be a wrong constitutional practice. I need not go further than that in support of the statement that parliament has relegated to the courts not only the duty but the power to try any matter connected with elections save as to the qualifications of the elected candidate. So far as parliament has done that I do not argue that parliament should re-assume that jurisdiction. In a word, so far as the courts have power they should act, but the courts certainly have no power in respect to the qualifications of candidates; they are given no special facility so to inquire, and wherever else the courts have not power undoubtedly parliament has not only retained jurisdiction, but parliament is bound to exercise that jurisdiction. I surely do not need to further emphasize that conclusion. I take it for granted that no member of this House would for a moment sit content, with the conclusion in his mind that there was a wrong arising out of an election which the courts had no power to right and indeed no power to hear evidence upon, and which was therefore a wrong for which there was no remedy whatever. May I put that again to the House? Is there an hon. member who, after he has been convinced that there is no tribunal with power to hear and decide it save parliament, is going to still vote that parliament shall not so decide?

The point which I intend to emphasize and indeed upon which I intend to dwell altogether is one which was brought up in the later course of the debate on the point of order, but which I regret to say was not referred to by Your Honour in your judgment. It is a point which not only goes to the heart of this question but is the whole heart of it; it is the beginning and the end. If the wrong complained of by Mr. Collins in the petition read at the table of this House is a wrong into which we have empowered the courts to inquire and as to which we have empowered the courts to hear evidence and give a decision upon, then I would not be standing before this House and asking parliament to reassert its old right and re-exercise the jurisdiction which was relegated to the courts. The duty is upon me, then, to show that in respect of the wrong complained of by James Arthur Collins there is no court in the land with power to inquire into it or decide upon it, and if I show that surely I have convinced all that every member who votes to throw out the petition of Collins votes to embalm in permanency a gross and cruel injustice, because he so votes knowing there is no other tribunal empowered to provide a remedy.

What is the wrong which is alleged in the petition as having been done Collins? I would like his petition to be included at this point in my address; I do not want to delay the House by reading it as it has already been read.

> To the Honourable,
> The Members of the House of Commons,
> In Parliament Assembled.
>
> The petition of the undersigned, James Arthur Collins of Chisholm, in the province of Alberta, lumberman—
> Humbly Sheweth:
> 1. That an election was held on the 29th day of October, A.D. 1925, for the electoral district of Peace River, to elect a member to represent the said electoral district in the House of Commons of Canada.
>
> 2. That the candidates at the said election were: Donald Macbeth Kennedy, William Archibald Rae and your petitioner, James Arthur Collins.
>
> 3. That Edward Henry Sheppard was the returning officer at said election, and on the 26th day of November, A.D. 1925, declared the said Donald Macbeth Kennedy duly elected to represent the said electoral district in the fifteenth parliament of Canada.
>
> 4. That pursuant to the provisions of the Dominion Elections Act, in that behalf, a recount of the votes cast at the said election was held from the first until the eighteenth days of December, 1925, at the city of Edmonton, by His Honour Judge Mahaffy, and at the conclusion of said recount the said judge certified that 3,986 votes had been cast in favour of Donald Macbeth Kennedy; 3,944 votes had been cast in favour of William Archibald Rae and 3,969 votes had been cast in favour of your petitioner, James Arthur Collins, and directed that the said Donald Macbeth Kennedy be declared elected to represent the said electoral district in the fifteenth parliament of Canada, by a majority of seventeen votes over your petitioner.
> 5. That on the 2nd day of January, the said Donald Macbeth Kennedy was gazetted as the member returned for the electoral district of Peace River to serve in the House of Commons of Canada, and he has taken his seat in such House of Commons.

6. That on or about the 26th day of February, A.D. 1926, proceedings under the Controverted Elections Act were taken by one John B. Page against the said Donald Macbeth Kennedy, but no such proceedings have been taken by your petitioner, or by anyone on his behalf.

7. That at the said election, the said electoral district of Peace River was subdivided into 298 polling divisions, No. 4 of such divisions being known as Brule Mines poll.

8. That the final recount by His Honour Judge Mahaffy, as aforesaid, showed that at Brule Mines poll, being poll No. 4 as aforesaid, twelve votes were cast in favour of Donald Macbeth Kennedy and 127 votes in favour of William Archibald Rae and twenty-one votes in favour of your petitioner.

9. That at least 111 electors voted for your petitioner at Brule Mines poll, No. 4, aforesaid, but through the action of the deputy returning officer, one Peter A. Robb, and other persons, to your petitioner unknown, ballots were fraudulently manipulated to produce the result mentioned in the next preceding paragraph of this petition.

10. That on or about the 18th day of January, 1926, the said Peter A. Robb, deputy returning officer, aforesaid, was charged before the Honourable Chief Justice Simmons of the Trial Division of the Supreme Court of Alberta.

"For that he, the said Peter A. Robb on or about the 29th day of October, A.D. 1925, at polling division No. 4 at Brule Mines in the province of Alberta, at an election held under and by virtue of the Dominion Elections Act for the election of a person to serve in the House of Commons of Canada in and for the electoral district of Peace River, in the province aforesaid did fraudulently destroy a number of ballot papers used by voters at the time and place aforesaid.

And also for that he, the said Peter A. Robb, on or about the 29th day of October, A.D. 1925, at polling division No. 4, at Brule Mines, aforesaid, at an election held under and by virtue of the Dominion Elections Act for the election of a person to serve in the House of Commons of Canada in, and for the electoral district of Peace River, did fraudulently put into the ballot box used in connection with the said poll papers other than the ballot papers which he, the said Peter A. Robb, was authorized by law to put in the said ballot box.

And also for that he, the said Peter A. Robb, on or about the 29th day of October, A.D. 1925, at polling division No. 4, at Brule Mines in the province of Alberta at an election under and by virtue of the Dominion Elections Act for the election of a person to serve in the House of Commons of Canada in and for the electoral district of Peace River in the province of Alberta and being a deputy returning officer at said polling division, No. 4, did fraudulently put otherwise than as authorized by the said Dominion Elections Act, his initials on the back of papers purporting to be, or capable of being used as ballot papers for the said election," to which said charges, the said Peter A. Robb pleaded "Not guilty."

11. That the trial of the said Peter A. Robb commenced at Edmonton, Alberta, on Monday the 29th day of March, 1926, before the Honourable Mr. Justice Walsh of the Trial Division of the Supreme Court of Alberta and a jury, and at the conclusion of the said trial on the first day of April, 1926, the said Peter A. Robb, was found guilty by the said jury on all the three charges aforesaid (as amended at the said trial) and was sentenced by the Honourable Mr. Justice Walsh to imprisonment for five years in the penitentiary at Prince Albert with hard labour, for each of the said offences, such sentences to run concurrently. A certified copy of the proceedings at the said trial accompanies this petition.

12. That the evidence of a number of electors who voted at Brule Mines poll No. 4 aforesaid was given at the said trial referred to in paragraph 11 hereof; that in giving their evidence the said electors stated for whom they had voted and thereby established that the said Peter A. Robb did fraudulently destroy a number of ballot papers used by the said electors, that he, the said Peter A. Robb, did fraudulently put into a ballot box used at the said poll, papers other than the ballot papers which he was authorized by law to put in the said ballot box, and also that he the said Peter A. Robb did fraudulently put otherwise than as authorized by the said Dominion Elections Act his initials on the back of papers purporting to be or capable of being used as ballot papers for the said election.

13. That absolutely essential evidence available to your petitioner to establish the fraudulent manipulation of ballot papers at Brule Mines poll No. 4 aforesaid is necessarily that of the said electors who voted at such poll and gave their testimony at the trial of the said Peter A. Robb.

14. That said electors who voted at Brule Mines poll No. 4 aforesaid cannot under the law be permitted to give evidence as to how they voted at the said election in proceedings under the Controverted Elections Act or in any legal proceedings other than in criminal cases.

15. That consequently there is no tribunal in the Dominion of Canada with power to make the inquiries necessary to establish the facts alleged in this petition or with jurisdiction to provide the remedy for the wrong which has been done your petitioner other than the House of Commons of Canada.

16. That the fraud and irregularities complained of herein were the fraud and irregularities of an officer or officers of the House of Commons of Canada committed prior to, at and subsequent to the taking of the vote of the electors and the closing of the said Brule Mines poll No. 4.

17. That the fraud and irregularities of the said officer or officers deprived your petitioner of his seat in the House of Commons for said electoral district of Peace River, your petitioner having at the said election held on the 29th day of October for said electoral district received more votes than did either the said Donald Macbeth Kennedy or William Archibald Rae.

Wherefore your petitioner prays that the House of Commons will investigate the conduct of the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada, the returning officer for the electoral district of Peace River, Edward Henry Sheppard aforesaid, the deputy returning officer, Peter A. Robb aforesaid, and such other officer or officers as may be necessary in connection with the establishing of a polling place at Brule Mines poll No. 4 aforesaid, and the taking of, the counting and recounting the votes cast at such poll in the electoral district of Peace River aforesaid, and that such Chief Electoral Officer, returning officer, deputy returning officer or other officer or officers be directed to take such action as may be requisite and necessary to secure the return to the House of Commons of the candidate who secured the greatest number of votes cast by the electors of the electoral district of Peace River on the 29th of October, 1925, aforesaid, and for such other and further relief as may seem meet in the premises.

And your petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

JAMES ARTHUR COLLINS.

WITNESS:

LYDA S. ROCHE.

He was a candidate in the late election, and was held by the judge who conducted the recount—and consequently by the last court in respect of the count—to have received 3,969 votes. He had two opponents. One was William Archibald Rae, whom the recount judge found to have received 3,944 votes; the other was Donald Macbeth Kennedy, whom the recount judge found to have received 3,986 votes, and who was therefore declared to have a majority of 17 over his nearest opponent, the petitioner, James Arthur Collins. The petitioner avers, and part of the petition and attached thereto, is the judicial finding supporting the averment, that at a certain poll into which alone a judicial inquiry was made, although it might have been made anywhere, 127 votes were found to have been given for William Archibald Rae; 12 votes for Donald Macbeth Kennedy and 21 votes for James Arthur Collins. This was the Brule Mines poll No. 4. The evidence attached and part of the petition shows also that 111 voters—

Mr. LAPOINTE: What does my hon. friend mean by the evidence attached?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Because all the proceedings in the court are attached to the petition.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I rise to a point of order, then, because under the rules of the House no document of any kind can be attached to a petition.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not particular about the word. It accompanies the petition to this House. All I need to bring to the attention of parliament now is the averment in the petition.

Mr. SPEAKER: If there was an appendix to the petition, it was not brought to my notice. Bourinot, page 235, states positively that no appendices are allowed with petitions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The appendix is not essential to the case at all.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That would have been a reason to reject the petition. The petition could not have been accepted with an appendix.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then we will say it has not an appendix; we will say it has been operated on for appendicitis. We know, though, that the petition which has been read at the table avers that this fact has been judicially found at the Brule Mines poll. We know it also because I hope in a matter of this kind we take judicial account of the verdicts of our judges and the records of our courts. We know that 111 voters voted at that poll for Mr. Collins.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We do not know that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not want to retort to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) as his understudy the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) did to me yesterday. I would only suggest that his statements would be more appropriate after I am through.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If my right hon. friend will agree with me, we will never interrupt each other in the future.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would not say that. I suggest that it take the form of questions. I am quite prepared to submit to any interruption of the minister so long as I am accorded the like courtesy by hon. gentlemen opposite when I interrupt him.

Mr. MARCIL: Would the right hon. gentleman allow me a question? I understood him to say a moment ago that there was no appeal from the decision of the recount judge.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is nobody doubting the decision of the recount judge. There has been no appeal from the decision of Judge Mahaffy. The petition avers that at this poll, 111 voted for Collins. They gave evidence to that effect in a criminal prosecution against the deputy returning officer. This deputy returning officer was one Peter A. Robb. Charges were laid against him as set out in the petition, three charges in all, included in which is the allegation that he took 111 votes, that 90 of them he threw away, that he substituted in their place 90 votes for William A. Rae, and brought about the result found by Judge Mahaffy in the recount. This was the charge against Robb. This charge was tried in the criminal courts, and Robb was found guilty of all charges alleged against him. He was sentenced to five, three, and three years, respectively, in the penitentiary of Alberta for the offences so committed. He appealed against the judgment of the court on, I may say, purely technical grounds, but that is not pertinent. He lost his appeal. The court sustained the finding of the prior court wholly, and altered the sentences only technically, reducing two of the concurrent sentences from five to three years, the ultimate result being that the sentence stands at five years for the three offences, and Robb stands now irreversibly guilty.

What this offence means hon. gentlemen will grasp at a glance. It means that an officer of this House, how selected I do not need to inquire—suffice it to say that, acting as he was, he was an officer of parliament—committed the crime of theft of the most sacred thing in the possession of any citizen, committed it in 90 cases, substituted ballots himself for the goods he stole, and because he did, he placed the candidate Donald Macbeth Kennedy in advance of the candidate James Arthur Collins, and Mr. Kennedy sits in this House now as the result of the theft so committed.

I have cited these circumstances so that the House will understand the enormity of the subject matter which is before it.

Mr. HEAPS: Is it not possible that in another part of the riding a similar condition may have prevailed, only the votes went the other way, and so offset what occurred in this case?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very good, but we take what is known. If hon. members could sit in this House on the faith of conjecture, we might have just about eight million members of parliament. Hon. members do not sit in parliament because they conjecture in their minds that something may have happened. Hon. members, and I emphasize the term, sit in this parliament because they receive the majority of the votes cast. What we are inquiring into now is whether James Arthur Collins received a majority of the votes cast. The petition goes further and sets out these particulars which I crave the leave of the House to read again. At the bottom of page 3 appears the following:

3 p.m.

> That absolutely essential evidence available to your petitioner to establish the fraudulent manipulation of ballot papers at Brule Mines poll No. 4 aforesaid is necessarily that of the said electors who voted at such poll and gave their testimony at the trial of the said Peter A. Robb.

I do not think anybody will doubt that that evidence is essential, that without it there can be no success. It goes on:

> 14. That said electors who voted at Brule Mines poll No. 4 aforesaid cannot under the law be permitted to give evidence as to how they voted at the said election in proceedings under the Controverted Elections Act or in any legal proceedings other than in criminal cases.
> 15. That consequently there is no tribunal in the Dominion of Canada with power to make the inquiries necessary to establish the facts alleged in this petition or with jurisdiction to provide a remedy for the wrong which has been done your petitioner other than the House of Commons of Canada.

It is to these three paragraphs that I respectfully invite the attention of every hon. gentleman of this House. Collins avers that if he is not allowed to advance the essential evidence necessary to establish his case in the court—the evidence of the 111 men who in the criminal proceedings swore that they voted for him—he cannot possibly establish his case, and it would be nothing but a mockery for this House to stand on its dignity and say to Collins, "go to the courts," for Collins cannot produce his witnesses before the courts. Need I argue further that this evidence is essential? Do hon. members not see by the mere process of addition that though Collins might prove that the officers of this House, Mr. Robb, forged ballots himself, possibly by the nature of the paper or something he never can prove that the actual ballots cast were cast for him save by the voice on oath of those 111 men, and if Mr. Collins when he brings his 111 men and puts them in the witness box is told by the judge that he cannot ask them the question, that they cannot be allowed to give evidence, how is Mr. Collins to establish his case? It is not a matter of argument; it is only a matter of honesty of mind, supported by a little addition. Collins cannot possibly establish that he got the majority of votes in Peace River, unless there is given to him a tribunal with power to hear the evidence of the men who will swear they voted for him.

Now I proceed to inquire whether I am right in my assumption that the judge in this trial, if a trial were going to be relegated to him, could hear the evidence of the 111 men. Hon. members of the House may say, "Well they give their evidence once; would they not be ready to give it again?" I have no reason to doubt that they would. I know they gave it once, and I ask hon. members to remember that the court in which they gave their evidence was a criminal court, trying a criminal case, and this House has empowered the criminal courts to hear the evidence, but has absolutely forbidden the civil courts to hear the same evidence. I refer to chapter 6 section 22 of the Controverted Elections Act, which reads:

> No person who has voted at an election shall, in any legal proceeding questioning the election or return be required to state for whom he voted.

The ordinary layman, and indeed I fancy very good lawyers, reading that the first time would take this as the conclusion: that no witness could be compelled to give evidence. He would give to the word "required" the same meaning as "compelled." That is not the meaning, but for the moment I will assume that it is the meaning, and I make that assumption only for the purpose of argument. It is not the meaning, as I will demonstrate in a moment. Even if it were, and assuming that it is, are we to say to Mr. Collins: "You must go to a court and you must trust to the good will of your witnesses; if they are not ready to give evidence before that court, then the court cannot compel them." Would that be fair to Collins? Is he not entitled to a court which, like any other court, can compel the witnesses to give evidence in order that he may establish his right? Is not that the character of court he is entitled to? Is he to be asked to go to one which is to sit powerless, at the mercy of a hostile or any witness? I do not think any hon. member will so suggest. But I pass from that argument because it is based on a mere assumption, and the fact is that however well disposed the persons might be, they could not be heard to give the evidence, and no judge would hear it, as has been established beyond all power of argument or controversy. Where was it established. I will make this clear, not that I anticipate that any hon. member will ever seek to dispute it, but because it is necessary to complete the record. In the Haldimand case which went to the Supreme Court of Canada, Mr. Justice Strong delivered the judgment. In this case the question came up as to whether witnesses were compellable, or indeed whether they were competent to give evidence as to how they voted at an election. I invite the careful attention of the House to this judgment by Mr. Justice Strong which I am about to read:

Another case is charge number 6 in the notice of appeal, namely, the charge that the deputy returning officer at polling subdivision number 2, in the township of Aneida, improperly marked ballots received by him at the said election, from electors before depositing the said ballots in the ballot box, and thereby prevented the said ballots from being counted at the said election, and the ruling of the learned judge, rejecting the evidence on behalf of the petitioner which was tendered by him at the trial in support of the said charge:

"Nothing could be made of this charge without admitting the evidence of voters to show how they voted. This I hold cannot be done. To do so would, in my opinion, be a direct violation of the act which requires secrecy."

Section 7, of the Dominion Elections Act, enacts:

"No person who has voted at an election shall, in any legal proceeding questioning the election or return be required to state for whom he voted".

That is the very section I read a minute ago.

It is no answer to this to say that secrecy is imposed for the benefit of the voter and that he can waive it. for I hold secrecy to be imposed as an absolute rule of public policy, and that it cannot be waived. The whole purview of the law is different from the English act and the Ontario act. I am of opinion, therefore, that learned judge rightly rejected the evidence, though I may not be able to agree with the grounds he put it upon.

The judgment of the Supreme Court was that witnesses could not be compelled to answer. The judgment says that the learned judge who tried the case was right when he decided that the witnesses could not be allowed to answer, even if they wanted to. I do not need to add, save for the completion of the record, that this case has never been in any way questioned or modified anywhere in this Dominion. This decision stands as the law of Canada. It came up in the Manitoba case. I am quoting from Hansard now, because these proceedings are embalmed in Hansard, fortunately, and it is more convenient to refer to it. The hon. member for Burrard referred to the Manitoba case which came on appeal, I think, before Mr. Justice Dubuque, and the judge made the following remarks, having in mind, and specifically referring to the Haldimand case:

In the Haldimand election case, 15 Supreme Court reports, 495, it was held that, under the provisions of section 71 of the act, secrecy of the ballot is an absolute rule of public policy, and cannot be waived.

The court has to give effect to this statutory enactment, but the provision has a restrictive qualification which must not be overlooked. It says, that no person shall be required to state for whom he voted in any legal proceeding questioning the election or return. and not in any legal proceeding whatsoever. If this point had been raised in the trial of an election petition it would have to be held that that the evidence was absolutely inadmissible.

That is in a legal proceeding questioning the return.

But in this case the evidence was given in a trial on an indictment charging a criminal offence.

Just exactly as it was in the trial of Robb on an indictment charging a criminal offence.

When the witness Phillips was asked to state for which of the candidates he marked his ballot paper and voted, objection was raised to the question by the counsel for the defence on the ground that such evidence would be inconsistent with the secrecy of the ballot, and contrary to public policy. The learned chief justice, before whom the case was tried, allowed the question to be asked and answered, and it does not appear that the witness was unwilling to answer the question. There is nothing in the Dominion Elections Act, or in any other statute declaring that, in the trial of a criminal offence, such a question cannot be asked and should not be answered.

I think, therefore, that the evidence was properly received, and that the first question submitted to the court should be answered in the affirmative.

These cases clearly establish that in criminal proceedings on an indictment charging an offence against the code, not, mark you, hon. gentlemen in a proceeding in which a criminal case may come in question, but only in the criminal proceeding itself evidence can be given as to how individuals voted. Most firmly has it been held—and judges have now no option save to follow the ruling or their judgments will be reversed on appeal—that in a civil proceeding, in a proceeding questioning the return, no witness will ever be allowed to say how he has voted.

Mr. FORKE: Just for information, would the right hon. gentleman give us some idea why it should be so absolute in the one case and not in the other? The two cases seem to be similar.

Mr. MEIGHEN: All I can say in answer to the very pertinent inquiry is to give the reason given by the judges in the Supreme Court, namely that parliament in its wisdom declared that witnesses should not be required to answer and that behind the action of parliament was the necessity in the interest of public policy that the secrecy of the ballot be maintained. The judges have held that parliament has ruled that witnesses be not required to answer in order that the secrecy of the ballot may be sacred, not in order to protect the witnesses. Because of that reason which the courts have declared to be behind the action of parliament, they will not in any civil proceeding hear evidence as to how any individual has voted.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): Would evidence given at the first trial under oath be allowed at the second?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Evidence in one trial is never allowed in the other even though in the other, if it were initial evidence, it could come in. But as in the initial trial it could not come in, it never could come in by importation. I do not find fault with the question being put.

I am sorry to have to argue at such length before the House what appears to be law, but we cannot understand the far-reaching and momentous subject which we are called upon to decide unless we understand fully the state of the law on the question. I revert to the proposition which I advanced in the early part of my remarks, namely, that it is inconceivable that hon. members would vote to cast the petition of Mr. Collins into the waste paper basket and tell him curtly to go to the courts for his remedy when they know they have tied the hands of the courts and prevented them from hearing Collins' evidence. Are hon members to say to Mr. Collins: Go to the courts, when they know he will be told by the courts that he cannot give his evidence there?

Mr. WARD: Does the law as it stands forbid an elector to give evidence if he so desires?

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: Absolutely forbids him. I believe I have established that whatever else parliament may have done, whatever other questions they may have relegated to the courts and empowered the courts to hear and decide, this is one they have not. The inference would appear to be that the intention of parliament is that the courts should investigate the conduct of the election in every respect until the ballots are in the ballot box and the ballot box closed, in a word until the conduct of the election gets into the hands of officers of this House. If parliament had intended that the courts and the courts alone should review the conduct, honest or dishonest, of those officers, parliament would have empowered the courts to hear the essential evidence to enable them to make that review. Parliament has disarmed and disabled the courts from hearing the essential evidence without the production of which Mr. Collins is absolutely helpless. Parliament having done so, I ask this House: Is parliament to say with a sneer to Mr. Collins: We have nothing to do with the matter: Go before this powerless court. The government which will take that responsibility casts an aspersion upon its motives and certainly will stand forever before the people of this country as more interested in office than in right.

In all the cases, in every address, emphasized I admit much more forcibly and frequently in past years by Liberal speakers, very able and eminent Liberal lawyers in this House, emphasized though on both sides, it is declared that parliament has never for a moment relegated to anybody the question of the conduct of its own officers. Whatever parliament may have done in the way of empowering the courts to examine certain classes of conduct of its officers, undoubtedly parliament has never stripped itself of the power to examine, act upon and correct wrongs done by its officers. For hon. members to argue that parliament has not only not empowered the courts to inquire into the conduct of an officer in an election but has utterly stripped itself of power when it knows the courts have none, is simply to argue the absurd. No hon. member can justify a vote against this motion, against turning Mr. Collins from the door of this House where he seeks relief, until he is able to establish that under the law as it is to-day Mr. Collins has somewhere else to go.

On that I rest my appeal to parliament and I rest it with some confidence. I cannot conceive of the Minister of Justice, for whom as a man I have very great respect, leading this House to turn a deaf ear to the appeal of Mr. Collins when the Minister knows that Mr. Collins, though he may go to the courts, is bound to be refused redress there for the reason that they cannot hear his evidence. Consequently with much confidence I appeal to parliament to assert the jurisdiction it absolutely and undoubtedly has, a jurisdiction which I contend it has in all respects as regards elections, but which it should not exercise wherever it has empowered the courts to exercise the same. I ask parliament to reassert that jurisdiction in this case when the House knows that it not only has not empowered the courts to act and to give the remedy but has absolutely disabled them from doing so.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this question came up practically in the same form some time ago when it was not my privilege to be in the House on account of illness, but I have taken the trouble to read the debates that took place at the time. I have read also Your Honour's ruling with which I entirely agree. The same petitioner has sent in a new document which, according to the usual custom and practice, has been examined by an officer of this House who has reported as follows:

The Clerk of Petitions has the honour to report that he has examined the following petition, viz.:

Of James Arthur Collins of Chisholm, province of Alberta, lumberman; praying that the House of Commons will investigate the conduct of the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada, the returning officer for the electoral district of Peace River, the deputy returning officer, and such other officer or officers as may be necessary, in connection with the establishing of a polling place at Brule Mines, poll No. 4 aforesaid and the taking of, the counting and recounting the votes cast at such poll in the said district of Peace River, and that such Chief Electoral Officer, returning officer, deputy returning officer or other officer or officers be directed to take such action as may be requisite and necessary to secure the return to the House of Commons of the candidate who secured the greatest number of votes in the said electoral district of Peace River on the 29th of October, 1925, and finds that:

The prayer of this petition consists of two parts viz.—(1) That the House investigate the conduct of certain officials in connection with the election of a member to represent the constituency of Peace River in the House of Commons of Canada, held on the 29th October, 1925.

(2) That the House direct the proper officers to take such action as may be necessary and requisite to secure the return to the House of Commons of the candidate who secured the greatest number of votes cast by the electors of the said electoral district of Peace River on the 29th October, aforesaid.

The form of this petition and its contents so far as the first part of the prayer is concerned are within the requirements of the 75th rule, and refer only to such matters as are within the right and competency of the House to deal with, should the House desire to do so; should, however ,the course suggested in the second part of the prayer be taken by the House it would apparently have the effect of authorizing other persons to exercise a power which the House has already delegated by statute to the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts.

Apparently the first part of the prayer of this petition is only of a preliminary nature leading up to the main request as contained in the second part, consequently the prayer, considered as a whole, brings this petition within the ruling of Mr. Speaker Lemieux given on the 6th May last, in a somewhat similar case, which ruling was subsequently sustained by the House on appeal, viz, that a petition which prays for any action to be taken by the House that might involve in any respect an interference with the provisions of the Controverted Elections Act, chapter 7, R.S.C., 1906, cannot be received.

Under these circumstances I have therefore the honour to report that this petition should not be received.

Now the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) moves that the petition be received notwithstanding this report of the officer of the House, and Mr. Speaker leaves the House free to decide the question. May I first call the attention of the House to the fact that if I had cared to do so I might have raised a point of order to the discussion by my right hon. friend of what he claims to have been the proceedings held before a criminal court in the province of Alberta. The only way in which this House is seized, or can take cognizance, of such proceedings before the courts when they relate to an election, is through a report of the judges appointed under the law to inquire into these matters when such report is submitted to the Speaker.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is true with relation to controverted elections, but my hon. friend will admit, I think, that the judge in a criminal case in which an accused is on trial under indictment is neither directed nor empowered to submit any report to parliament. So that there is no way of getting the facts here.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Quite so, and we have no proof of anything apart from what is stated in the petition. I can understand that the petitioner might attach to his petition a copy of the evidence as an appendix, but under the rules of the House the petition could not have been accepted. However, I do not quarrel with my right hon. friend for having discussed the matter.

In the first part of his argument—and this simplifies and facilitates my task—the leader of the opposition has admitted that, since the change in the law relating to controverted elections, this parliament following the precedent established in Great Britain has delegated to the courts the power and the right to inquire into election matters. Undoubtedly there is some difference of opinion in the matter of interpretation, but my belief, which is founded upon good authority, upon the authority in fact of all constitutional authors who have dealt with this question, is that parliament has reserved to itself only what it has not expressly delegated to the courts in these matters relating to elections. Parliament has reserved to itself the right to inquire as to whether a proper person has been returned in answer to the writ of the House—whether a person who is qualified under the law to occupy a seat in the House has been returned to parliament.

This question has been extensively debated and while I do not intend to quote any speeches I may give some of the names and pages in Hansard of different years to show what views have been advanced in this regard. Apart from the question whether a person duly qualified has been returned to parliament, all matters affecting the election itself, the way in which it has been conducted, illegalities, frauds or anything else connected with the election, have been referred and properly referred to the courts of the land both in Canada and in Great Britain. I should like to quote here from the English authors Leigh and Le Marchant:

> Questioned—

That is the same word as appears in our own law.

> Questioned means questioned by election petition, by persons having an interest in raising the question and wishing to vindicate their own rights, and does not take away from the House of Commons their authority to decide on the eligibility of a candidate, in the event of a felon, a minor, or a woman being returned.

Those were the old days before our sisters obtained the right to sit in parliament. Surely no one will contend that my hon. friend from Peace River is either a felon or a minor, or, if the restriction were applicable in these days, a woman. The words of the statute are easily interpreted; they are not broad; they are not general in their meaning; they are not vague: from the passing of the Controverted Elections Act no election shall be questioned otherwise than in the manner provided by the act itself. When election petitions were inquired into by a committee of this House, the same safeguards, the same guarantees existed for protecting the members returned to parliament against vexatious proceedings. For example, no petition could be received without a deposit of one thousand dollars accompanying the petition. And in respect of questions arising under the Corrupt Practices Act—an act which has never been taken advantage of since its incorporation until the present session in the case of the Athabasca election—the right is given, after the expiry of the time for the filing of election petitions before the courts, to petition the Speaker to order an investigation for the appointment of a commissioner or commissioners to inquire whether corrupt practices were engaged in during the election questioned. There again the same guarantee against vexatious proceedings exists, and the gentlemen who signed the petition this year during this session of parliament, asking for an investigation into the Athabasca election, were obliged to forward at the same time to the Clerk of the House, a deposit of one thousand dollars; otherwise their petition would not have been accepted.

Does my right hon. friend mean to say that merely because some man declares in a petition that votes given for one candidate had been registered in favour of another, therefore the procedure enacted by this parliament is set aside; that that does away with all the safeguards and all the guarantees which have been properly inserted in the statute for the purpose of protecting men who are duly returned to this parliament against vexatious proceedings.

Now my right hon. friend bases his contention—and it is also the argument set forth mainly in the petition—on the fact according to him and the petitioner, which I do not dispute, that the witnesses could not be forced or even allowed before the courts to state for which candidate they registered their votes. That is perfectly true. Although the law only says virtually that no witness can be forced to declare anywhere for whom he voted at an election, the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled that this means also that witnesses can not be allowed to declare for whom they voted. If you look at the various sections of the act, Mr. Speaker, you will find that parliament has taken good care to declare, and it is the animating principle of its various provisions, that the manner in which a man has voted is a secret, that it is his sacred right to vote for whomever he pleases and nobody is entitled to know how he voted. This is for the protection of the voter. The courts have decided that it should mean also that he cannot even be allowed to say for whom he voted. My right hon. friend read that part of the judgment of Mr. Justice Strong, and the other judges took the same stand. But what is the reason why they threw it aside? Justice Strong said:

> It is no answer to this to say that secrecy is imposed for the benefit of the voter and that he can waive it, for I hold secrecy to be imposed as an absolute rule of public policy, and that it cannot be waived.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if this is ruled by the Supreme Court and by the other courts because they consider it a question of public policy, surely the same public policy would apply to the deliberations of the Privileges and Elections committee as to the proceedings before the courts.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman not admit that the very same questions have been asked and compelled to be answered before the Privileges and Elections committee?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, Sir, I do not admit that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They have.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If it is a question of public policy—and my right hon. friend himself said it was; it is the only ground for his petition—shall he claim that the public policy will disappear when this petition is submitted to the Privileges and Elections committee? Shall he claim that if a witness before that committee refuse to answer when asked for whom he voted this parliament would have the right to force him to answer? No, Sir, parliament would never have that right, because not only the statute but public policy—the ground on which my right hon. friend as well as myself base our argument —will exist there as it exists before the courts. And let me tell my right hon. friend that, after all, what was done when the inquiry on controverted elections was transferred from parliament to the courts was simply to change the judges; the rules were the same, the procedure was the same, and, as I said before, the deposits which must accompany the petition were the same. The tribunal is changed because it has been found not only in this country but in England and elsewhere that the judges of the high courts of the land are better qualified and better fitted for deciding election matters than parliament, where we have some partisanship in our dealings.

Now, Sir, so far as this petition is concerned I desire to read what Mr. Speaker Blanchet said when he gave a ruling on February 15, 1881, in the Bagot election case, because the same question, as to whether the petition might be received, was then raised before him. I am quoting from page 325 of Speakers' Decisions of the House of Commons of Canada, and I ask every member to listen to these words:

> If the petition should be received it would then be competent for any member to move that it be referred to a committee; and if such a motion were agreed to, the various allegations in the petition would constitute the order of reference by which the committee would be governed in its proceedings. In this way a door would be opened to the indiscriminate reception of petitions attacking generally the return of members, though not governed by any of those formalities necessary even in those times when the House possessed full jurisdiction over controverted elections. To grant the prayer of the petition would be to violate the general principle which lies at the basis of all the legislation adopted by the English parliament since 1868 and of the Canadian parliament since 1873, that the court alone should adjudicate on matters of controverted elections. When the law has been proved to be inadequate to provide a sufficient remedy in any case, then parliament has always come forward, as the various statutes in amendment of the act of 1874 prove, and passed the legislation necessary in the premises.
> The principle which guides parliament in such cases can be understood by reference to a statute passed in 1876. When no petition charging the existence of corrupt practices has been presented under the act for the trial of controverted elections, then twenty-five or more electors of a district can sign and present a petition in which they state that corrupt practices have prevailed—

That is what was done this session in the Athabasca election.

> —or that they have reason to believe that such practices have extensively prevailed at an election; but that petition must be accompanied by a solemn declaration under the statute in that behalf, signed by the said electors stating that their allegations are true to the best of their knowledge and belief. They must also deposit with the accountant of the House of Commons a sum of one thousand dollars. That petition must be presented within sixty days after the publication in the Canada Gazette of the return of the election if the House is sitting, or if parliament is not sitting, within fourteen days after the next meeting of parliament. Even in this case the House does not take cognizance itself of the allegations set forth in the petition. It may only present an address to the Governor General praying him to cause an inquiry to be made in such matters, and accordingly a commission of inquiry is issued with such powers as determined by statute.

All the reasons alleged by Mr. Speaker Blanchet in the Bagot case of 1881, I believe, apply to this case. There is no one of them which cannot be set forth in this case as well as in the Bagot case, and I claim that for this House to receive this petition would be to go back to the days when partisanship and political spirit were the principles animating these decisions by the committees of parliament on petitions concerning elections. We are all human; I do not claim that I am any better than anyone else. I am a partisan; I believe that the Liberal party has always worked for the benefit of Canada, and I am not ashamed to say so. I am a party man; I do not think many members of this House are not party men, and when this thing is over and the issue is not before them every one in his own mind and conscience will agree with me that it was wise and proper to have these matters investigated and decided by judges, instead of being made questions of politics before committees of this House.

May I be permitted now to read just a few words from Bourinot and from May. Bourinot, in the third edition, at page 221, says:

> The Controverted Elections Act provides that all elections shall be subject to the provisions of the act, and shall not be questioned otherwise than in accordance therewith. The courts have full jurisdiction over petitions complaining of an undue return, of undue election of a member, of no return, of a double return or of any unlawful act by any candidate not returned, by which he is alleged to become disqualified to sit in the House. Since 1894 three petitions calling in question the right of a member to his seat have been presented to parliament, but not allowed to proceed further.

Then he proceeds to enumerate the cases, and at page 225 continues as follows:

> We may come to the following conclusions from the proceedings of the Canadian and British Houses of Commons since the passage of the acts delegating to the courts jurisdiction over the trial of controverted elections: that there is no instance of a contested election having been tried, or an election return disturbed in the Commons House of either country, but that the leading members on both sides of the House—

I wish to call particular attention to this.

> —have expressed themselves most emphatically against returning to the old system, and in favour of adhering strictly to the provisions of the new laws; that the provisions of the Controverted Elections Act apply to the questioning of returns by election petitions only, and does not supersede the constitutional jurisdiction of the House in determining questions affecting the seats of its own members, not arising out of controverted elections;— that the House has always the power to inquire into the conduct of its own returning officers, and to punish them if they are adjudged guilty—

I wish to emphasize the words of Bourinot apearing on page 226:

> —that it is always regular to receive a petition setting forth a grievance and praying for remedy, provided it does not question the return of a member within the meaning of the Controverted Elections Act.

This petition against the return of the present sitting member for Peace River cannot be accepted by the House under the authorities just quoted.

Some comments were made the other day owing to the fact that the officer of the House charged with the duty of receiving the petitions, examining them and reporting, had made such a report. On this point may I quote Bourinot at page 343:

> In the House of Commons every petition is deposited in the journals office, in charge of an officer, whose duty it is to see that it is properly endorsed and in accordance with the rules of the House—in the case of any irregularity, he will state it to the House, and rule that the petition cannot be received.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

At page 584 May, speaking of petitions, says:

> A petition relating to an election but not questioning the return of the sitting member may properly be received.

If this petition had not questioned the right of the present member to sit in this House it should be received, but as the whole prayer of the petition is that an adjudication should be made by the committees of this House as to who may sit, this petition cannot be received.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I invite hon. members to read the following authorities as to the powers of parliament with regard to election petitions. Let them read the speech of the late Hon. Edward Blake, whose authority no one will question, at pages 807 and 808 of Hansard of 1875; let them read the speech of the Right Hon. R. L. Borden at page 3702 of Hansard for 1901. I think I have dealt sufficiently with this matter to show that the only authority, under the law as it is to-day, to deal with a petition in which the right of a member of parliament to his seat is questioned is the courts of the land indicated by the Controverted Elections Act. In this case there is no suggestion that the hon. member presently occupying his seat in the House is not a proper person to occupy that seat by way of qualification or otherwise. The only matter in dispute, if there is a matter in dispute, is one connected with the election itself, and under the law and under all the authorities every matter connected with the election must be left to the courts of the land to decide.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (West Calgary): I shall endeavour to discuss this matter with the least feeling and the greatest freedom from party passion possible. This is the high court of parliament, and as the high court it has been appealed to by a petitioner who claims that, by reason of the manipulation of ballots, he has been deprived of a seat to which he is entitled because a larger number of electors voted for him than voted for any other candidate. That is his position. This high court of parliament has on its legislative side divested itself of certain of its jurisdiction, and it has committed to the courts certain power and authority which it previously had the right to and did in fact exercise. That is the position at the moment.

The first question is, has this high court of parliament divested itself of the right to inquire into the subject matter of this petition? The answer to that has been so fully given by the right hon. gentleman who leads this party that I do not propose to do more than say this: It is apparent from a perusal of the authorities, as well as by mere reasoning that would govern a man in arriving at conclusions that this high court of parliament has not divested itself of the right to inquire into the circumstances attending this election. That is clear. Why? First, because there is no jurisdiction in any court of law to award Mr. Collins the seat which has been stolen from him. That is No. 1. Secondly, there is an old rule, as old as 1703, and I make apology for quoting from this precedent which is known to every lawyer and layman, that wherever there is a wrong there is a remedy. That observation was made by Chief Justice Holt in the case of Ashby against White, an action brought for damages by an elector against a sheriff who had not permitted him to vote. That principle laid down in 1703, that where there is a wrong there is a remedy, is a principle that has been applied without interruption in every court under the British flag since that time.

The second ground is the ground to which I propose to direct my attention for a moment. Is there a wrong here? And secondly, is there any remedy provided by law for that wrong?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Might I ask, just for information, whether a higher court will deal with the matter when it is still in the hands of a lower court?

Mr. BENNETT: I am very glad the hon. gentleman mentioned that, because I shall show, I think to his satisfaction, before I conclude that the lower court cannot under any circumstances deal with the subject matter of this petition. If it could, it would be there. That is the whole point that I desire to make in the second branch of my observations.

The first question then is, is there a wrong? Has a wrong been done to Collins, the petitioner? I think my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), with that sense of fairness that usually characterizes him, will admit that a very grave and serious wrong has been done to Mr. Collins. The trial judge found that wrong to be of a most serious character. Since this petition was launched in this House, Robb has carried his appeal to the appellate division of the Supreme Court of Alberta, and that court gave a unanimous judgment sustaining the conviction against Robb, and during the course of the argument a matter arose which will illustrate to this House how serious the wrong is.

Counsel for Robb was arguing that there was nothing to indicate that he had been responsible for the changing or switching of the ballots, that there was nothing to connect him with the change that had been made between the ballots as they were originally marked and the ballots as they were taken out of the ballot box. Whereupon the chief justice said that unless he could offer some excuse or reason why the ballots now produced in the court, which were the ballots counted and that elected Mr. Kennedy, did not match the counterfoils that were now in that court—and they did not—it was clear that somebody had stolen the original ballots. That goes without saying, does it not? If you have a ballot and counterfoil, and the ballot you now have does not match the counterfoil, if it is longer or wider, it is obvious that somebody has manipulated the ballots, and that proof that the ballots in the possession of the court did not match the counterfoils assisted in inducing the appellate division of the Supreme Court of Alberta to confirm the conviction unanimously, and Robb has now been conveyed to the penitentiary.

So that there is a wrong; that is clear. The wrong is this: That one Robb, at Brule Mines poll, took certain blank ballot papers and marked them with X's or crosses for Rae, thereby depriving Collins of the seat to which he was entitled.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does the hon. member argue that the court had before it evidence which showed that the ballots which should have been cast for Collins were sufficient in number to prove that the seat was stolen from Collins?

Mr. BENNETT: I thank my hon. friend, for in my next sentence I was about to say that the result of the evidence which was typewritten and placed before the court was to show conclusively to the 4 p.m. court, as it had to a jury, that the result of the ballots which had been stolen by Robb, and upon which X's or crosses had been placed for Rae, was to give the seat to Kennedy, and deprive Collins of it, because had the ballots which were properly marked for Collins, on the evidence that was before the appellate division of the Supreme Court, been counted, he had a majority of upwards of 100 votes over his nearest competitor.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Am I not right in saying that those ballots were all at one poll, that they did not cover the whole constituency?

Mr. BENNETT: I thank my hon. friend again, because it enables me to answer a question which was suggested by an observation of the hon. Minister of Justice. Nothing is clearer than that in law the hon. gentleman who has just spoken holds his seat because on the summation of the ballots cast at the election he had a majority over his opponents. Nothing is clearer than that I am here because on the summation of the ballots it was determined that I had a larger number than my opponent. In this case the ballots were summed up, and Judge Mahaffy, the district court judge, awarded the seat to Mr. Kennedy because he decided that there were 17 more ballots cast for him than for his nearest opponent. But when Robb's conduct was investigated, and there are no outstanding charges against any other person or any other poll, it was decided that by reason of the manipulation of the ballots at that poll, upwards of 100 votes that were cast in one way were counted in another, and Collins was thereby deprived of his seat. For instance, I have in my pocket a watch which I now produce. The watch presumably was honestly acquired. If it is alleged that it was not honestly acquired, proceedings for that purpose would have to be taken. The presumption of law is that with this watch in my pocket I honestly own it. The presumption of law in the return of my hon. friend is that every officer honestly did his duty, and hence he was legally and properly returned. The presumption of law in the Peace River constituency is that all the proceedings were legally and properly conducted, and if Mr. Kennedy or anybody else says that they were not, they must take proceedings to shift that presumption and show that that which the law presumes, namely that all things were properly done is wrong.

Now proceedings were taken at the instance of the Attorney General of Alberta to show that the proceedings at the Brule Mines poll were dishonest, and as a result Mr. Robb is now in penitentiary for five years. There were also charges made against the conduct of other polls, not by Mr. Kennedy or his supporters, but by Mr. Collins. An accused named Griggs was acquitted. Proceedings were also taken with respect to another poll and the accused pleaded guilty and he was sentenced to one year's imprisonment because he pleaded guilty. Mark you, that every charge that has been made in reference to the proceedings in Peace River has been investigated, and as a result of the investigations that were made judicially it appears that Mr. Collins' seat was stolen from him, because upwards of 100 ballots marked for him were taken and marked for another man and in this way the seat was stolen. When my hon. friend suggests there may have been irregularities at other points that would have brought about a different result, I am sure, with his trained mind and his experience, he will regard that, not only as not a reason but not an excuse because, until it has been determined by proper proceedings that there was anything crooked in other parts of the constituency, the law says it was done honestly, as in other constituencies where members are returned to parliament. I hope my hon. friend follows that, because it is the basis of the whole matter. It does not lie in the mouth of any man whose seat has been challenged to say, "Oh yes, but if you had investigated conditions somewhere else you would have found something wrong." The answer to that is, why did he not set the law in motion and ask the attorney general to investigate the doings at other polls? If the attorney general saw fit to institute proceedings against Robb and others, it is clear and obvious that in all likelihood he would have taken proceedings against other persons who might be alleged to have committed improper acts in that election. But none such is suggested. No one suggests, except by word of mouth, that such conditions existed elsewhere. The records of the court show that no proceedings have been taken in other places. Therefore it is clear that a great wrong has been done to Collins, the petitioner. One word as to how great that wrong against Collins may be; Chief Justice Holt, about the year 1703, dealing with an action brought by Ashby against the sheriff, White, decided that wherever there is a wrong there is a remedy. At the end of his judgment he said:

> It is a great privilege to choose such persons as are to bind a man's life and property by the laws they make.

That great privilege, which was supposed to be accorded the electors of Peace River, to choose a man to represent them in this parliament, to make laws to bind a man's life and property and to pass other laws, has been taken away from the people of the Peace River district by a man who is now in gaol. In other words, the seat has been stolen from Mr. Collins, and he has been deprived of his remedy.

I am not so much concerned about the personal wrong. That wrong deprived the man who had the right to a seat in this House of that seat, and substituted another for him. That was accomplished by the dishonest and criminal act of Robb and other parties. That is a public wrong of such a character that I do submit this parliament can hardly afford to overlook it. What is the remedy? The Minister of Justice has suggested there is a remedy in the courts of the country. If there is a remedy in the courts of the country then his answer is good and complete. Now is there a remedy in the courts of the country? Will any lawyer in this House on either side say that there is a remedy for the wrong I have referred to, which will give Mr. Collins his seat? I am not going to repeat the arguments which were advanced by my right hon. leader, much better than I could present them, but he made it clear that there is no such remedy The courts of the country may be appealed to for punishment of the criminal who stole the ballots, and they have been successfully appealed to and Robb has been convicted, but is there any remedy for the wrong done to Collins; that is the question—not the wrong done by Robb and the contravention of the criminal laws of the country, but the wrong to Collins in a public sense by depriving him of his seat here. Is there any remedy in the court? It has been suggested that there is a remedy under the Controverted Elections Act, and I have in my hand a copy of the petition filed against Kennedy by Page under the Controverted Elections Act. That petition alleges that Kennedy has been guilty of fraudulent conduct in regard to the election. It also alleges that he has failed to make a proper return of expenses under the act, and charges irregularity at the polls. It does not seek to award the seat to anybody else, but merely seeks to avoid the election; in other words, to bring about the holding of a new election in that district. That is not a remedy to Collins. That does not remedy the wrong done in a public way. The wrong that is alleged is that somebody else sits in this parliament and that the seat has been stolen from Collins, not on behalf of Kennedy, but stolen by the deputy returning officer in his effort, not to assist Kennedy, but to assist Rae and to do wrong to Collins. Mr. Kennedy does not enter into the wrong in this matter. The wrong is against Collins in favour of one of his opponents, namely, Rae, to steal the seat for Rae. That is the wrong in that respect. Let us not forget that, when you allege that the remedy in the court is ample, and that we have a right to look to the court to set it right, what is sought in the court is the other proceeding. The remedy and the relief sought are quite different. The exact language at the close of the petition is as follows:

> Wherefore your petitioner prays:
> 2. That it may be declared and found that the said respondent was and is guilty of the said several illegal acts and corrupt practices hereinbefore charged, as having been committed before, during, at and after the said election by himself and by his agents and other persons on his behalf.
> 3. That in consequence thereof, the said respondent may be adjudged disqualified and incapacitated of being elected to or sitting in the House of Commons aforesaid, or of voting at an election of a member of that House, and of holding any office in the nomination of the crown or of the Governor General in Canada.
> And your petitioner will ever pray.

It is therefore apparent that the legal proceedings which have been taken in the courts of the country afford no relief to the petitioner, Collins. If that be so, and if it is true that for every wrong there is a remedy, what is the remedy? That is the only inquiry, and the only remedy is by a parliamentary committee—none other. Need I remind you, Sir, that this House has complete control over its own membership? Need I remind you, Sir, that this House can go so far as to expel any member of the House if it can get a majority of the House to do it? Need I remind you, Sir, that Louis Riel who once occupied a seat in this House was expelled, and the member for Lincoln at one time was under threat of expulsion.

Need I remind you, Sir, that the mother of parliaments, the parliament of Australia and other parliaments have exercised the power of removing members from the House. That power does not come to them by statute. It is an inherent power which rests in this House to determine who shall and who shall not sit in this chamber, notwithstanding the votes of the electors. That matter should always be kept in mind. This House has exercised this power. When they say that this House has no power, I remind them of the inherent power of the House, the right to determine who shall sit in it, and it would be competent to-day, if a majority of the House so desired, to remove from the membership of the House any gentleman who sits here. It could only be done if the case were such as to warrant its action. I am simply pointing out that the plenary power is there and the House can exercise that jurisdiction if it so desires; there is no doubt about it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Aside from the question of the power of the House why does the hon. gentleman make the statement that it is the only way of having a wrong, or an alleged wrong, righted. Can it not be righted through the courts?

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I am coming to. My hon. friend is very kind this afternoon because he is asking questions regarding matters which I might have overlooked if I had not the benefit of his questions. I am very grateful to him for that. It is just because there is no remedy in the courts that this is the only remedy. The criminal law has been set in operation against Robb the wrongdoer; he is in the penitentiary. The criminal law affords no remedy that will give Mr. Collins his seat. There is no civil remedy with respect to that except action through the controverted elections court which will not and cannot give him his seat. That is the point I desire to make.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Can the courts void the election?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes; but voiding of the election does not give the man who received the most votes at the last election his seat. I am sure my hon. friend's sense of fairness will govern. For instance the election of my hon. friend might be voided, but the statute says that within a certain number of days proceedings have to be taken, and if they are not taken within that number of days they may not then be taken.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If the court were of opinion that the circumstances were such that a member had lost his seat, taking everything into consideration that came before them, would the court not be free to report that circumstance to parliament?

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry to say in answer to the Prime Minister that the jurisdiction of the court extends only to scrutiny and to the voiding of the seat. They can report to parliament only this: The prayer of the petition is to void the seat. They either void it or do not. If on the other hand there is a demand for a scrutiny they can count the pieces of paper and observe the marks on them. If a wrong count has been made they can correct that by substituting for the then member the member who has the most pieces of paper marked in his favour. For instance in the West Calgary election in 1921, as will be observed from the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada, a count of the vote was held. That inquiry went to the Supreme Court here. In that election it was decided that ballots marked with the figure "1" or marked with a red pencil or a blue pencil or an indelible pencil should not be counted for the petitioner in that case. The result was that, although the court so recorded and the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada was that had the intention of the electors prevailed another hon. gentleman would have been in the seat of the one who occupied it for the four years in question, they were powerless to afford a remedy. A report to parliament by judges cannot under any circumstance give the seat to Mr. Collins.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I know a report to parliament cannot give the seat, but the judge has the right to report to parliament any circumstance which he thinks they ought to be made aware of.

Mr. BENNETT: Unfortunately—and I am sure the Prime Minister will see the force of this at once—the judges cannot hear the evidence in a controverted elections case. My right hon. friend sees at once the whole trouble. He has anticipated what I was going to say.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If the seat is voided is that not the first step in righting the wrong? There is another election and the thing is then decided.

Mr. BENNETT: May I put this to my hon. friend? Does he for a single moment say that it is the first step towards righting a wrong to void a seat and bring on a new election when the seat has been stolen?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It seems to be so.

Mr. BENNETT: Let me put this in another way. If my hon. friend's goods have been stolen from him, if the thief goes to gaol for five years and if my hon. friend has not recovered back his goods does he think he is compensated when he is afforded the privilege of going out and earning enough money to buy himself a new bedroom set?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I put it in this way? If I lose my watch and finally the thief is discovered, that is the first step towards getting my watch back. It may subsequently be returned to me through due process. I may have suffered the inconvenience of losing the watch, but it is the first step towards obtaining my own again.

Mr. BENNETT: The first step towards getting back the watch that was lost, not stolen, is to prove ownership of the property.

In this instance that step was taken before Mr. Justice Walsh when 111 electors of Peace River went into the box and swore that they voted for Collins and the ballots came out marked for Rae. He proved his property.

Mr. SPENCER: Would not the best way of proving ownership of a property be to have another election?

Mr. BENNETT: Surely my hon. friend does not think the best way to prove ownership of a property is to have an auction sale.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Does the hon. member consider an election an auction sale?

Mr. BENNETT: In northern Saskatchewan that seems to have been the process and it has now moved westward to Alberta.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Elections in Saskatchewan are not conducted in the way the hon. member has suggested.

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad my hon. friend has offered his denial because I hold in my hand a volume that shows the statement I made was correct, and I am going to prove it in a moment. I want to deal with the question of the Prime Minister because I can see that the mind of this House is not partisan at the moment; it desires to do what is right and just, and the mind of the Prime Minister is also not partisan; he desires to do what is right and just. He suggests that the judges might report the circumstance of the ballots having been stolen and having been marked for Mr. Rae when in truth they were marked by the electors for Mr. Collins. But he forgot that the Supreme Court of Canada decided in the Haldimand case that in a civil proceeding it would be illegal and improper on grounds of public policy, apart from everything else, for those electors to give that testimony in that court. Therefore the judges could not make the report.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But I cannot imagine that the Controverted Elections Act was framed with a view to doing injury to anyone or to deprive parliament of having the right to redress a wrong. Section 61 of the Controverted Elections Act states:

> The trial judges may, at the same time, make a special report to the Speaker as to any matters arising in the course of the trial, an account of which ought, in their judgment, to be submitted to the House of Commons.

I cannot conceive of a judge believing, no matter what the circumstances are, that a gentleman has been deprived of his seat and another member returned in an improper way, not reporting that matter to the Speaker of the House of Commons so that it might be dealt with by parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad the Prime Minister has put it thus fairly. Surely he must realize that section 61, which enables judges to make a report, is predicated upon the report being based upon the evidence received by them. If they do not have any evidence of the stolen ballots, which evidence they cannot receive as the Prime Minister will understand under the Haldimand decision, they cannot make that report. In other words a report of the judges must be a report based upon the evidence given at the trial. That is clear. No evidence can be given at the trial as to how men voted. The Supreme Court of Canada has so held. I think it is a strange construction, but the judges say: Even though they may give evidence, we will not allow them to do so on account of the judgment in the controverted elections case. It would be an incentive to induce men to commit perjury in the heat and stress of election campaigns and under pressure of party politics. Therefore, under the decision of the Supreme court of Canada interpreting the section of the Controverted Elections Act to which we have referred, no report may be made as to how people voted. The courts can report that there are suspicious circumstances with respect to the election, but they could not report that nine, ten, fifteen, twenty or a hundred men voted one way and that the ballots were counted another, because by the decision of the Supreme Court all testimony is excluded which would go to show how electors voted. That is what I want to make clear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The law clearly seems to contemplate that in addition to the report that may be made on the evidence it is still open to the judge himself in his discretion to make a special report. Let me read the section again:

Mr. MEIGHEN: Report on what?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On any matter which he thinks should be brought to the attention of the House of Commons. Section 61 of the Controverted Elections Act reads:

> The trial judge may at the same time make a special report to the Speaker as to any matters arising in the course of the trial an account of which ought in their judgment to be submitted to the House of Commons.

Mr. BENNETT: The relevant words are "in the course of the trial", and my right hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie King) has, I think, a sufficient knowledge of the procedure of the courts to know that any matter arising in the course of a trial must be such as has been spoken to by either witnesses or counsel and arising out of the proceedings in themselves, which in this instance would be a controverted election. Evidence in this case would be submitted to show that one hundred men had voted at Brule Mine for Mr. Collins—assuming the case to be before the courts—and that their ballots had been stolen and marked for some other candidate, and the judges would decline to receive that evidence in the light of the decision of the Supreme Court. Therefore they could make no report that would assist Collins in securing his seat. That is the point I desire to make clear. There is no remedy so far as the courts are concerned.

The Prime Minister very fairly observed a moment ago that wherever there is wrong there must be a remedy. He is right. That is why I cited the case which I submitted to the consideration of the House. What is the remedy in this instance? The remedy is by petition to this parliament, and wherever it is shown by proceedings or otherwise that there is no remedy available elsewhere, parliament, which has supreme control over its own procedure and membership, will take such action as may be necessary to rectify the wrong that has been done. Let me refer the House to the Saskatchewan case which I mentioned a few days ago. In northern Saskatchewan there was held in 1905 a certain election which resulted in the return of Mr. Tyerman, and the same thing happened there that occurred in the Peace River election. Ballots were stolen and Mr. Donaldson, the aggrieved candidate, took proceedings in the criminal courts. Mr. Tyerman was convicted and Mr. Donaldson thereupon instituted proceedings at law under the Controverted Elections Act of the Northwest Territories, believing that the statute had application in the circumstances. The court, however, decided that in the transition stage under the Autonomy Act it was without jurisdiction. Mr. Donaldson petitioned the legislature. The petition was referred to the standing committee on Privileges and Elections which investigated the matter, and examined with great care various precedents. Finally there was brought in a report prepared by Mr., now Sir Frederick Haultain, Chief Justice of Saskatchewan, at that time leader of the provincial opposition, and the Hon. Mr. Justice Lamont of the Court of Appeal of Saskatchewan, then attorney general. One paragraph of that report reads:—

That Mr. Donaldson entered a petition in the Supreme Court of the North-west Territories contesting the election of Mr. Tyerman, which petition was outstanding and pending until the twelfth day of December, 1906, when the same was dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

The finding was that there had been cast for Mr. Donaldson at certain polls sufficient votes to have elected him by a comfortable majority, but that the ballots had been extracted and marked for Mr. Tyerman who consequently had been returned. The legislature of Saskatchewan thereupon, on the motion of Attorney General Lamont, seconded by Mr. Haultain, adopted a report which recommended special action in the case. Because there was no specific remedy for the wrong that had been done, except such remedy as it was within the inherent power of a British legislature to provide, the legislature of the province of Saskatchewan resolved to call to its bar the clerk of the executive council, who was instructed to strike out of the election return the name Tyerman and to substitute therefor the name Donaldson. Mr. Donaldson, therefore, was given his seat and took his place in the House.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In that case action was first taken in the courts before the matter was brought up in the legislature. Why did not Mr. Collins take action similarly, before bringing the matter up in parliament?

Mr. BENNETT: The answer is clear. Collins did cause proceedings to be taken criminally, with the result that Robb was convicted. But proceedings having been taken under the Controverted Elections Act by a Mr. Page against Mr. Kennedy it was not competent for Collins to take similar action, inasmuch as there cannot be two proceedings under the same statute with respect to the same respondent. But such proceedings as Collins did take could not give him his seat, and that is the point I make.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Was it not possible for Collins to take proceedings under the Controverted Elections Act?

Mr. BENNETT: I tried to explain to the hon. member that Mr. Collins first of all spent much time, effort and money gathering evidence and he secured the approval and consent of the attorney general to take proceedings against the wrongdoers. Before these proceedings against Robb and other wrongdoers were concluded, Mr. Page brought proceedings under the Controverted Elections Act against Mr. Kennedy, proceedings which he has now intimated his willingness to drop, if he can. That point, however, I will not stop to discuss, because we do not wish to debate any disputatious questions. But whatever may be done by Page or Collins or anyone else under the Controverted Elections Act, the fact remains that property which has been stolen will not be returned unless this House takes steps to see that it is.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Am I to understand that it was not competent for Collins to take any action whatever at any time under the Controverted Elections Act?

Mr. BENNETT: It was not competent for him to take proceedings under that act such as would secure him his seat.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is not the point.

Mr. BENNETT: It was not competent for him to take proceedings when these irregularities were discovered, because on February 24 last one Page had already brought proceedings under the act against Mr. Kennedy, and as I have already pointed two proceedings may not be brought against the same respondent with respect to the same election.

Mr. CAHAN: Is it not clear beyond a doubt that in no election proceedings could evidence be heard such as is now before this House in the petition? Even if the allegations were not struck out by the judge it would be impossible to place one scintilla of evidence before the court in support of the petition.

Mr. BENNETT: I thank my hon. friend for putting the matter so clearly. I thought I had emphasized that in answer to the right hon. Prime Minister, that had Collins brought proceedings under the Controverted Elections Act he could not produce the witnesses to prove what he proved in the criminal court, because the judge in the civil court would not receive testimony as to how men voted, that testimony could be received only in the criminal court. The Minister of Justice in his speech made that perfectly clear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But he could have taken proceedings along the lines of the Saskatchewan case.

Mr. BENNETT: No. They were the same form of proceedings in the Saskatchewan case, and if in that case they had endeavoured to ask how the men voted the same result would have followed. The reason they did not get anywhere in the Saskatchewan case was because the civil court had no jurisdiction, the transitional stage under the autonomy legislation not enabling that court to continue to deal with controverted elections, so they had to pass a new statute and establish a new court for that purpose. But the law is as stated by the attorney general, that under the Controverted Elections Act no witnesses could be called and examined as to how they voted, and therefore the judges hearing the petition were without jurisdiction or power to award the seat to the man from whom it had been stolen.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It was quite competent for him to have taken action before Page did under the Controverted Elections Act.

Mr. BENNETT: It was competent, of course, for him to do so, but he did not have his information; he did not have the evidence given by the electors and the verdict of the jury until after that date, and even if he had, those men could not have given this testimony.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. gentleman is anxious to right one wrong. I would suggest that since none of this evidence was available to Mr. Kennedy at that time, he could not have proceeded until afterwards to right the wrong against himself.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure no one would suggest that until the facts were investigated in the criminal court Mr. Kennedy had any real knowledge of what had happened. We have been fair enough to say that. But since the verdict was given, the conviction registered and Robb sentenced, not only Mr. Kennedy but all the world knows he holds the seat by stolen ballots. Of course any other proceedings, having regard to the fact that the electors could not say for whom they voted, would be nothing but a farce, as my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George has made perfectly clear.

Now, if that be the only remedy, how are you to deal with it? I should like us this afternoon to consider ourselves not on our legislative side but on our judicial side—as the high court of parliament. I put this to every hon. member: The case of Collins may be your case and mine next year; how would you feel under similar circumstances? After all, justice is justice. It has been well said that it is an attribute of the Godhead. I admit we are all prone to have strong views, that our passions sometimes sway our reason and our prejudices destroy our judgment, but I ask every member of this House this afternoon to bear in mind that we are members of the high court of parliament, the highest tribunal in the land, the court that on its legislative side makes the criminal law, and that to deny this petition should be received and referred to the committee on Privileges and Elections is to deny elemental justice to a fellow-citizen. And, Mr. Speaker, I should like to put this question to every member before he votes, as I have endeavoured to put it to myself: Would he under similar circumstances feel he was being fairly or justly dealt with if, with knowledge that his seat had been stolen from him under the conditions that prevailed in the Peace River constituency, he was not accorded the only remedy available to him, namely, the remedy of appeal to parliament? If any hon. gentleman can point out any other remedy that is available to Collins, then we have a different state of facts. But this being the only remedy, what are we to do? The hon. Minister of Justice made two or three observations in that regard that call for answer. He said: Parliament is powerless, because if we do refer the matter to the committee on Privileges and Elections, they cannot receive the testimony of witnesses, not being a criminal court. May I remind him that the mere statement carries its own answer? If it had been made by anyone less important than the Attorney General of Canada, I would use harsher words in respect to it. He said first of all: As on grounds of public policy you could not in civil proceedings receive the evidence of these witnesses as to how they voted, therefore a parliamentary committee could not. In the West Huron case a parliamentary committee received evidence and compelled witnesses to answer. Before a parliamentary committee that has been sitting during the last few weeks men have been compelled to incriminate themselves. That is the distinction between a parliamentary committee and a court of law. I remember in my first parliament seeing a man stand at the bar of this House and then sent to the tower because he had committed contempt of this high court of parliament in refusing to answer a question which he said would incriminate himself. Incrimination has nothing to do with it. Before the high court of parliament a man is bound to answer any question that is put to him. It cannot be used against him. In the parliamentary committee to which I have already referred men during the last few weeks have been compelled to answer questions incriminating themselves, because it was realized that it was a committee of the high court of parliament, and therefore it could at least enforce every law that the high court of parliament could itself make. This high court of parliament has expelled men from the House, Louis Riel and others. This high court of parliament has the right to determine whether or not Collins shall have a seat in this House, and when this matter is referred to the committee on Privileges and Elections the testimony already taken need not be taken again, the evidence was adduced before the criminal court on which his countrymen found Robb guilty. The certified evidence is there, the evidence of 111 men who went into the witness box and swore how they voted, the evidence of the ballots themselves, evidence that has been approved by the Supreme Court of Alberta on the appellate side by unanimous judgment. That judgment against Robb is predicated on the evidence of 111 witnesses. A jury of his countrymen after hearing the evidence decided that Robb was guilty. Robb himself did not dare go into the witness box. I can say that in parliament, although it could not be said by counsel for the crown in his address to the jury. Robb was convicted, and the Supreme Court of Alberta has confirmed his conviction. If parliament wants to do what was done in the Donaldson case, it can take that record with that certificate given by the Supreme Court of Alberta and read there that 111 men voted for Collins, and that their votes were marked for Rae. Then it can make a report that the Chief Electoral Officer attend at the bar of this House to amend his return and award the seat to the man who won his election as every man in this House should, by receiving the largest number of votes, but whose place is now taken by another.

Now the Minister of Justice, the Attorney General of Canada, says that a committee of parliament is powerless, and therefore there is no remedy. Daniel O'Connell once said, "Parliament is omnipotent." Parliament is supreme in this matter. If the law has failed to make provision whereby in a case of this kind the judges could hear the evidence and award the seat, then the power of this parliament—

Mr. POWER: I do not think the Minister of Justice suggested that parliament was powerless. He simply pointed out that we could not bring before the bar of the House for punishment a man who refused to divulge the secret of the ballot box.

Mr. BENNETT: I think it was put in this way; I think he said that on grounds of public policy the courts had decided that under the section a man was not only not compelled to answer as to how he voted, but that he would not be permitted to say how he voted, and that the same principle would apply in the proceedings that would take place in committee. He then read the section, but surely in reading the section he must have observed that the secrecy of the ballot was limited to a legal proceeding. Therefore that argument is without strength, because it applies only to a legal proceeding and not to this parliament or any committee of parliament. In other words, the prohibition against a man saying how he voted or against his being compelled to answer is limited to legal proceedings under section 72 of the statute.

Mr. POWER: If my hon. friend will permit me, I understand that phase of the situation and I think the Minister of Justice understood it also. In case the Minister of Justice did not point that out may I be permitted to say that it appears to me highly improper, if not ridiculous, for the parliament of Canada to bring before the bar of this House and threaten with punishment any individual who would refuse to divulge the secret of the ballot. That is the point.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend has failed to observe the language of section 226.

Mr. POWER: I am not discussing the law.

Mr. BENNETT: Section 226 is as follows:

> No person who has voted at an election shall, in any legal proceeding questioning the election or return, be required to state for whom he voted.

Now my hon. friend says we should not compel these men to tell whether they voted for Collins or Rae or Kennedy, but he overlooked the fact that we are asking nothing more than that those men who have already told how they voted should come here and tell us again.

Mr. POWER: Well then, we will suppose a certain number of ballots were improperly marked as against Kennedy. Would we have the right, before taking legal proceedings in the criminal courts, to question these men before the bar of the House?

Mr. BENNETT: Whatever may be the right of this parliament to make an initial investigation I am not concerned with; in my judgment parliament has that power, but in this case may I direct the attention of this tribunal to the fact that we only seek to take advantage of the proceedings of the courts of this country on behalf of the man who has been injured, the courts which condemned Robb to five years imprisonment for having stolen these ballots. That is all. These men who marked their ballots went into the witness box and told for whom they voted and having sworn that, all we now seek to do is to permit the use of that evidence in the committee, or to call these men here who have already sworn how they voted.

Mr. POWER: I will just ask one more question. Will my hon. friend say that he would be prepared to move, by resolution or otherwise, that a witness be punished for refusing to answer such a question before the bar of this House?

Mr. BENNETT: I have no hesitation in saying that in this case that situation could not possibly arise.

Mr. POWER: They might absolutely refuse to answer before the Privileges and Elections committee.

Mr. BENNETT: So far as I am concerned, and I can only speak for myself, I would have no hesitation in moving that they be committed.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is good Tory doctrine.

Mr. BENNETT: No, Sir; that is the doctrine of equity and justice. That is the doctrine of public policy.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is not law; that is Toryism.

Mr. BENNETT: I am very glad that we in this country are not compelled to accept the dictum of my hon. friend as to what constitutes law, although for the moment we may be compelled to take his views as to what constitutes Toryism. But let me put it this way. I would not have the slightest hesitation in saying that if, before the high court of parliament—which made the law and can unmake it; it is supreme—a witness declines to answer any question as to how he voted or otherwise he should be punished, not in order that the public policy might be vindicated but that a public wrong might have an adequate public remedy.

Mr. POWER: May I be permitted another question?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Could the committee on Privileges and Elections investigate other alleged irregularities even though they had not hitherto been before the courts?

Mr. BENNETT: The Minister of Justice this afternoon stated that parliament has delegated any matters within the purview of the Controverted Elections Act to the courts, and divested this high court of parliament of its jurisdiction. I think that is the law. But with respect to these matters that have not been delegated to the courts, those matters of which parliament has not divested itself, the inherent power and jurisdiction still remain and must be exercised in the public interest as they were in Saskatchewan and should be here if a wrong has been done for which there is no remedy.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But the Speaker was referring to certain irregularities at a particular poll. Supposing it was brought to the notice of any individual member of this House or of any citizen that there were irregularities at other polls, could the committee on Privileges and Elections consider such irregularities?

Mr. BENNETT: The answer is that this is not a remedy within the statute. If the irregularities complained of by the citizen were irregularities within the statute they must be the subject matter of judicial determination. If they were matters outside of the statute they would have to be inquired into by the committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There would be no general investigation with regard to the election.

Mr. BENNETT: There can never be a general investigation with respect to anything. That is illustrated by the fact that Mr. Kennedy's solicitors have applied for particulars, in order that they may know wherein he violated the law. The law is based upon the assumption that a man cannot meet glittering generalities but must be allowed to deal with specific matters.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am speaking of the committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. BENNETT: The committee on Privileges and Elections is a law unto itself; if a majority of that committee decide to carry on a certain investigation within the scope of its reference they undoubtedly would have the jurisdiction so to do.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But it is limited to one particular poll.

Mr. BENNETT: Absolutely, it being open to Mr. Kennedy, of course, if he so desired, to prefer other charges with respect to irregularities at other points, if he knows of them. They would then be investigated in the manner provided by law.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If it were necessary to call 115 witnesses to Ottawa to testify as to how they voted, it might be necessary to call all the voters in Peace River for the same purpose.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure no man who has cried aloud to high heaven as has the hon. member would deny a fellow citizen the right to enjoy the fruits of his efforts when they have been stolen by someone else. Surely my friend must realize that the assertion of a wrong does not constitute either evidence or proof of it, and that until such time as there is some evidence other than the mere statement to cover up the surrender of the goods that are now illegally held, you cannot predicate an argument upon it. In this case we predicate our argument upon the sworn testimony of witnesses, not determined by us but by a jury of Robb's countrymen, who found him guilty of the offence charged, which was confirmed as I have already said by the appellate division of the Supreme Court of Alberta.

Mr. WCODSWORTH: The hon. gentleman said that this parliament was a law unto itself. It seems to me the matter is still in the realm of the courts, while the hon. gentleman is asking us to transfer it to the larger arena of parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: It is because the law courts have determined finally that there has been a theft of 111 ballots that Collins petitions this parliament to undo the wrong that otherwise is without a remedy. If this parliament does what was done in Saskatchewan, and Mr. Collins is returned as the member for Peace River by an amendment of the return of the Chief Electoral Officer at the bar of this House, then, Sir, within a period of forty days after that Mr. Kennedy, or any citizen, would have the right to petition the courts of the country to declare the election void, and to take from Mr. Collins his seat if he could. I desire to make that clear.

The substitution and gazetting of Mr. Collins as the member for Peace River, as he should be, would thereupon afford any any complaining citizen the right to allege either in the courts of the country or, if necessary, in this parliament what is now alleged either by a petition under the Controverted Elections Act or by a petition to this parliament to deal with the whole situation. Let there be no misunderstanding about that. What this petition seeks in essence is this, that instead of Mr. Kennedy sitting as the member for Peace River, the man who, under the process by which we sit here, obtained his seat should occupy that seat in this parliament. That is all. Further, Mr. Speaker, there would then be accorded to Mr. Kennedy, to any citizen of Peace River, to any elector, the same right to petition against Collins as Page has now exercised against Kennedy. For forty days after Collins was put in his seat, any elector could inquire into the irregularities my hon. friend from Winnipeg complained of, under the Controverted Elections Act, and if irregularities existed, that were found to be of a criminal character such as brought Robb to the bar of justice, they too could be inquired into in the criminal courts, and if there was no adequate remedy, there could be a petition to this House, by which the wrong done to Mr. Kennedy, if any, could then be righted.

This is not a one-sided remedy. It is a reciprocal remedy. It works both ways. It affords to Mr. Collins the remedy and the right which he has won from the electors by the certificate of those who were responsible for the conduct of the election, and it affords to his opponents the same right of petition and protest against him—

Mr. POWER: Will my hon. friend allege that it is sufficient for a petitioner to come before this House, saying that he cannot obtain a remedy through the courts, to have his election inquired into by the committee on Privileges and Elections?

Mr. BENNETT: Broadly and generally the principle is that wherever there is a wrong there is a remedy, and if it is established to the satisfaction of parliament that no remedy has been provided by parliament itself within the law enacted by parliament, a petition could be received by parliament.

Mr. POWER: What is there to prevent every election being brought before the committee on Privileges and Elections, if my hon. friend's argument is correct? According to him, the only allegation necessary would be that the petitioner could not find any remedy before the courts.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely my hon. friend has not followed the petition. It makes no allegation of that sort. It alleges, and in fact it is proven and is in the records of the courts of the country, that there has been a conviction for the offence alleged. It is not mere hearsay or blind allegation.

Mr. POWER: But fundamentally my hon. friend's argument this afternoon is that Collins comes before us because he cannot find a remedy elsewhere.

Mr. BENNETT: Let me put that again. I am sure my hon. friend did not follow me. I hesitate to restate this because it was so clearly stated by my right hon. leader. If within the four corners of the Controverted Elections Act no remedy has been provided by parliament for an alleged offence, then parliament still has inherent jurisdiction over it. The extent to which parliament might exercise that power must always depend upon the merits of each particular case, but you never must confuse jurisdiction with the exercise of it. In the one instance, the power exists. The exercise of it always depends upon the facts of each particular case. I trust I have made myself clear.

Mr. POWER: I understand what my hon. friend is driving at.

Mr. BENNETT: Then I am sure my hon. friend is convinced.

Mr. POWER: No, I am not. I maintain that under my hon. friend's argument, if we create this precedent to-day, it will be sufficient for any man who complains of having lost an election to come before parliament and allege, backed by an affidavit, that ballots have been improperly marked, and then we must follow this precedent and refer the matter to the committee on Privileges and Elections. That would bring the whole matter of deciding contested elections into parliament instead of leaving it to the courts under the Controverted Elections Act.

Mr. BENNETT: No hon. gentleman who has followed the facts of this case could make any such observation as that.

Mr. POWER: That is a matter of appreciation.

Mr. BENNETT: Let me restate the proposition which the Attorney General of Canada has said is sound; so there is agreement upon it. If within the four corners of the Controverted Elections Act a remedy is provided for the wrong that has been done, then the courts, and not parliament, have jurisdiction. If, on the other hand, there is no remedy provided by the statute, this parliament has inherent power and jurisdiction to deal with the case, and in the exercise of that right regard must be had in every instance to the merits of the case as disclosed by the allegations in the petition.

Mr. POWER: In other words, my hon. friend's argument is this: It all depends on whose ox is gored.

Mr. BENNETT: Not a bit. It is because, Mr. Speaker, I still have a belief, a somewhat shaken belief, it is true, in the essential sense of fairness of my fellowmen—I will admit that I have had reason to doubt it at times—

Mr. POWER: In election matters in Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Mr. BENNETT: I am bound to say universally so far as the first province mentioned is concerned, and also as regards the northern half of the latter province, there is reason for doubting.

I still cannot believe, Mr. Speaker, that 244 members of the parliament of Canada, a governing group, speaking through its chief law officer and admitting that there is no remedy under the Controverted Elections Act for this particular case, will deny to a fellow citizen the only remedy he has, namely, the right to petition this parliament to redress his grievances. I cannot believe it. If this be sound, then what are we doing? It is only necessary to carry on, on a large scale, throughout the provinces of Canada what was done in Alberta and Saskatchewan, and which did not originate in either of those provinces but came from Ontario, as we know with respect to evidence given before the Privileges and Elections committee in this House in former days—it will only be necessary to have someone rob a ballot box to ensure the return of a member who can sit here and defy public opinion and this parliament. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), with his sense of fairness, shakes his head. What is the remedy? Name it. What other remedy is there but this House and this petition? Name it. The very fact that we are faced with this problem should in itself show hon. members where this will lead them. All you would have to do would be to go through the constituencies in a general election, say ten, fifteen or twenty, and rob enough ballot boxes—go into it on a large scale—and you would have returned to parliament men who had stolen the seats. It is admitted that we have no remedy in the court; the only remedy would be by a petition to this parliament. Then the man with the longest purse, the man who could hire the most criminals, would be able to control an election. Is the man who is able to hire the most desperadoes and thugs to have a seat in parliament? Are you putting a premium on rascality? That is what it means—nothing short of that. A vote to declare that Collins' petition shall not be considered by this House is a declaration that he has no remedy, and that this parliament puts the stamp of its approval upon the most brazen rascality one can possibly conceive of. The legislature of Saskatchewan voted unanimously against this idea and put Donaldson, a Tory, in a Liberal House in which there were only four or five Conservatives. Has this House less sense of fair play and justice than the Saskatchewan legislature?

This question must stir the conscience of every thoughtful man in the House this afternoon. I can conceive of nothing that will tend more to lower, in the mind of the public, their conception of this parliament. I read editorials in the newspapers, not all Conservative, but papers of the Liberal faith in Toronto, and elsewhere and they said, "This cannot be without some remedy." If, as has been completely shown by the right hon. leader of the opposition, supported by the Minister of Justice, and re-affirmed by myself in a halting way, these are the conclusions at which we must arrive, then let us pause before we deny the right to submit this petition to this House.

There are one or two matters that might be dealt with, but I shall not take up time to go into them now. There have been many interruptions and I have taken a much longer time than I expected to take, but the interruptions were of the most friendly kind, because I believe in the hearts of all members in this House there is a desire to do justice to their fellow men. If this parliament, with the inherent right to expel members, is going now to say that it will not exercise its inherent power to hear the petition of one whose seat has been stolen from him, are we not doing an injustice to our own sesnse of justice?

Let me say this much to the Attorney General of Canada, the Minister of Justice; if there is no remedy except this petition, is it not about time parliament amended the statute so as to provide a remedy? And since no amendment will confer upon Collins his rights, let us exercise the right which we believe should be exercised, and in fulfilment and in furtherance of the exercise of our inherent power, our jurisdiction as a High Court of Justice, let us do that which is equitable and fair, just as any one of us would expect it to be done to him if he were in a similar situation.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): The hon. member stated that because Page had instituted a petition, Collins was prevented from petitioning. I am not very conversant with this law, but will the hon. member give me authority for that?

Mr. BENNETT: What I meant by that was that while the statute does not provide a limit of one petition, the truth is that no judges will hear two petitions when they cover the same subject matter, and that, so far as Collins preferring a petition against Kennedy is concerned, it would serve no useful purpose, inasmuch as the law provides that there may be a substitution in the event of one petitioner not proceeding. But the only effect would be to void the seat; it would not afford the remedy he is entitled to, namely, a seat in the House of Commons.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): But more petitions can be preferred against him?

Mr. BENNETT: They are not prohibited, but so far as that is concerned the court is not going to try three or four petitions at a time.

Mr. LAPOINTE: All the petitions are united and tried as one.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, consolidated.

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General): The argument presented by the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) may be summed up as follows; has a wrong been committed, and if so, should parliament right that wrong? My remarks will be limited strictly to my interpretation of the law as I see it. First of all, we must not forget that we have not before us any evidence whatsoever of any of the facts mentioned by the hon. member for West Calgary. He may be a very learned lawyer, and so he is, but as every hon. member in this House knows, the word of a lawyer is not accepted as evidence before any court or before parliament. I do not say this to cast any doubt upon what my hon. friend has said; I simply point out that legally speaking we have absolutely no evidence before us, notwithstanding anything that my hon. friend may have alleged.

Mr. BENNETT: I may tell my hon. friend that accompanying the petition is a certified record of the evidence of every witness and a certificate of the court finding the prisoner guilty.

Mr. CANNON: I am coming to that. Whatever might have been said by the hon. member for West Calgary, or whatever might be said by any member in this House with reference to the election is not evidence and cannot be considered as evidence. My hon. friend says that accompanying the petition there is an appendix containing the evidence presented before the court in the criminal proceedings taken against Robb. I may say—and he cannot contradict me—that this appendix cannot be considered.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not an appendix.

Mr. CANNON: Rule 75 concerning petitions is very simple. It states that a petition cannot be accompanied by any extra document or appendix. It is so much the case and my hon. friend understood the law as I state it now so well, that he removed the appendix himself.

Mr. BENNETT: There never was an appendix.

Mr. CANNON: If it had not been removed the petition could not have been received. That is the law and my hon. friend knows it. Therefore when he is quoting the appendix he is quoting from a document which is not and cannot be before us. The only document we have legally before us and which can be considered in order to form an opinion is the petition itself, and I am coming to it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is parliament debarred, in carrying out its duties, from considering the records and decisions of our courts whether they are on the table or not?

Mr. CANNON: My right hon. friend is too good a lawyer to expect me not to give him the only obvious answer. Doubtless parliament can consider judicial records, but only when they are put before it in a legal way.

Mr. CAHAN: Is it not the bounden duty of parliament, in considering whether or not a petition shall be received, to assume from the outset that every allegation in it is true?

Mr. CANNON: That is another aspect, and I will deal with it presently. The point I am trying to make—and I think I have made it—is that actually the only thing we have before us is the petition. We do not know what may have happened in the courts of Alberta. We have heard a great deal about it, but legally none of those facts is placed before us.

I come now to the petition. To petition parliament it is not necessary to support the allegation of the petition by affidavit. If this petitioner, Collins, had petitioned under the Controverted Elections Act or under the Corrupt Practices Act, he would have had to give an oath in support of his allegations. There is no affidavit in support of this petition.

Mr. RYCKMAN: The hon. member does not think Robb is in gaol.

Mr. CANNON: I am not discussing Mr. Robb; I am discussing the petition now before the House. I am pointing out that the allegations in this petition are not even supported by affidavit. That adds considerable strength to the argument made by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) when he stated to the hon. member for West Calgary that he should be extremely careful in dealing with this matter because it would be laying down a precedent which would open the door to any petition with any allegations, no affidavit in regard to any of them being necessary.

Mr. CAHAN: From time immemorial has the Solicitor General heard of a petition being presented to parliament supported by an affidavit? From time immemorial has not every British citizen, on his own allegation and subscribing his own signature, had the right to petition parliament so long as he keeps within the proper limits?

Mr. CANNON: Certainly. The point I am making is this that a petition to parliament need not be supported by affidavit, but according to the law of the land in order to protect duly elected members of parliament, if a man wishes to contest my election or to deprive me of my seat, he has to support his allegations by an affidavit. This is a man who wishes to deprive a member of this House of his seat; he wishes to attain through a petition to parliament exactly the same objects which he would secure from a court if he would act under the electoral law. But notwithstanding the fact that he wants a seat, that he wishes to deprive a member of the House of his seat, his petition is not supported by an affidavit as it would have to be if the application were made before the courts.

Mr. CAHAN: Suppose we admit that. If the allegations of the petition are such as come within the limits prescribed for petitioning to parliament, is it not the duty of parliament to receive the petition and to refer it to the committee on Privileges and Elections, so that the very first man who would be summoned might be the petitioner, in order that he might be put on oath and cross-examined as to the verity of the allegations contained in the petition?

Mr. CANNON: That is a matter of procedure, but it is outside of the argument I am now making. The hon. member for West Calgary says: There is a wrong, and he proves the existence of the wrong by quoting from documents which are not before us. Therefore I say that we have actually no evidence of the existence of a wrong. The allegations in this petition are not proven; the fact that a man alleges in his position so and so, does not mean that the condition referred to exists. My hon. friend has enough experience in courts to know that many allegations which appear in documents do not represent the facts.

[Mr. Cannon.]

Mr. CLARK: Has the Solicitor General ever heard of a petition presented to parliament with proof of the facts appearing in the petition?

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend is not getting my point.

Mr. CLARK: Yes I am, if there is one.

Mr. CANNON: I am not saying that the man should support his petition by an affidavit. I do say that as he did not support his allegations by affidavit his allegations are supported by nothing at all; we have no evidence of the facts alleged in the petition or the facts referred to by the hon. member for West Calgary.

Mr. CLARK: What further support could be given of the facts alleged in the petition than a conviction which is of record by a criminal court and the indictment set out in the case?

Mr. CANNON: At the stage which we have now reached the records of any convictions or any court proceedings in Alberta are not and cannot be before us.

Mr. BENNETT: The indictment has been read.

Mr. CAHAN: When the House is considering whether a petition shall be received and referred for investigation, is the House not bound to assume, for the purpose of coming to that decision, the verity of every allegation contained in the petition?

Mr. CANNON: Certainly not.

Mr. CAHAN: I think so.

Mr. CANNON: On the contrary the argument made by the hon. member for West Calgary was that we should assume that during an election everything is done regularly. That assumption exists as my hon. friend will admit. Why should we reverse that assumption in favour of a man we know nothing about, who alleges in a petition that things have not been done regularly?

Mr. CAHAN: The answer is that we are not reversing it. We are referring the petition to a committee to hear the evidence and to consider whether it should be reversed or not.

Mr. CANNON: I submit first that we have no evidence of the existence of a wrong.

Mr. CAHAN: We have the petition.

Mr. CANNON: We have a petition, but it is not supported by an affidavit.

Mr. CAHAN: It is presumptive evidence.

Mr. CANNON: It is not accompanied by an appendix or any other document, and we have no other evidence of the existence of a wrong. That is my first point. And if I am right on that point I say that even if the petition were referred to a committee we could not secure further evidence. That is my second point. My contention briefly is this: first, there is no evidence; and, secondly, even if we went before the committee we could not secure evidence.

Mr. CAHAN: Why not?

Mr. CANNON: I shall try to prove that to the satisfaction of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CLARK: How was the criminal convicted if there was no evidence?

Mr. CANNON: Section 226 of the Dominion Elections Act lays down the following principle:

No person who has voted at an election shall, in any legal proceeding questioning the election or return, be required to state for whom he voted.

That is the public law of the land. My hon. friend from West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) said that in a certain case cited some witnesses were asked by the committee to indicate for whom they had voted. I have examined the record and I see that one William Roman was examined by Mr. Borden —I presume it is Sir Robert Borden—but I would point out that this took place in 1899 and that section 226 from which I have just quoted was passed the following year.

Mr. CLARK: It was there long before.

Mr. CANNON: But even though witnesses may have been questioned by that committee as to how they voted, the fact that the committee exceeded its powers in that respect does not in any way affect the underlying principle that in all legal proceedings connected with an election the sacred secrecy of the ballot shall be respected.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In criminal courts?

Mr. CANNON: My right hon. friend will immediately see the distinction. In criminal courts proceedings are taken in the public interest. They are conducted, not for the purpose of collecting money, not to right any civil wrong, not to remedy an individual grievance, but to safeguard in general the well being of the public. Criminal law is for the protection of the public.

Mr. CAHAN: Does not the same principle apply in respect of all parliamentary investigations? Is there a single exception?

Mr. CANNON: Criminal law is administered in the public interest for the protection of the community as a whole, whereas civil courts are established merely for the settling of civil disputes as between individuals in which the general public is not interested. That is the distinction.

Mr. CAHAN: And for what purpose do parliamentary courts sit?

Mr. CANNON: Parliament sits for two purposes: to meet new needs by means of new legislation, and to amend existing grievances by changing the law as it stands.

Mr. CAHAN: Did the hon. gentleman never hear of another purpose? Did he not hear that parliament is the highest court in the country and that it administers its law in its own discretion without restraint except such as it imposes upon itself?

Mr. CANNON: There is no doubt about the fact that parliament is the highest tribunal in the land, but it is incumbent upon that tribunal to respect the law and not violate it. My second contention is, therefore, that even if we were to refer the matter to a committee, in view of that principle in our election law to which I have referred, that no man shall be asked for whom he has voted, we could not add anything to what is already before us in support of this petition. In the third place, I say that even if witnesses could be heard before the committee and could be asked to state for whom they had voted, parliament would not be in a position to right the wrong if wrong exists. And why do I say that? Because parliament decided in 1873 that it would no longer have anything to do with controverted elections. Parliament took the position that it would no longer deprive any one of its members of his seat in favour of someone else, and I say therefore that even if the whole of the evidence mentioned by the hon. member for West Calgary were before a committee, parliament would not be able to give the seat to the petitioner.

Mr. CAHAN: What does the hon. gentleman mean by parliament not being "able"? Does he mean able constitutionally, within the limits of its own practice, or does he refer to the power of parliament to take such action as it might see fit?

Mr. CANNON: Parliament in a way is omnipotent, subject to the limitations of our constitution, but parliament has divested itself of certain powers which have been delegated to the courts; and one of those delegated powers is the right to decide con-troverted elections. And is not this a controverted election? No hon. member will challenge my contention that this is simply a controverted election. What does the petition itself say? The prayer of the petition asks that we should instruct our officers to take such action as may be necessary to secure the return to the House of Commons of the candidate who obtained the greatest number of votes cast by the electors in the electoral district of Peace River on October 29 last. This is simply a prayer whereby the petitioner asks us to decide a controverted election. We cannot do that; parliament fifty years ago decided it would not do so any more.

Mr. RYCKMAN: The minister made his question general. I want to say I am one who would deny that this is a controverted election under the Controverted Elections Act.

Mr. CANNON: Well, I think my hon. friend would be wrong.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I would be right.

Mr. CANNON: There is no doubt this is a controverted election.

Mr. CAHAN: What is the meaning of the term?

Mr. CANNON: Technically.

Mr. CAHAN: We are dealing with technicalities.

Mr. CANNON: So I think. Up to now, Mr. Speaker, I have tried to prove: First, that there is no evidence in support of the petition; secondly, that even if this case was referred to a committee, we could not secure evidence; and, thirdly, that even if evidence was secured and adduced, the prayer of the petitioner could not be granted.

Now I come to the last part of my argument. There is no doubt that the whole strength of the argument advanced on the other side lies in the fact that if there is a wrong existing that wrong should be remedied. There is absolutely no doubt that should this parliament be convinced that there is a wrong—and I say there is no evidence of it—this wrong, like every wrong in a British country, should be righted if possible. But their argument loses strength when it comes to the point as to whether or not another remedy exists. Their argument summed up is simply this: Collins should have the seat; the only way for him to secure that seat is to prove that he had more votes than his opponents; but he cannot prove that fact before any civil court because the law forbids the judge to listen to the evidence. I think that is the argument in a fair way. Let us examine the law on the point. Section 58—and I am not going to take the time of the House to read it—simply says that when the judges have reached a decision they make a report, and that report is sent to the Speaker. Section 61, which is the important section so far as we are concerned, provides that:

> The trial judges may, at the same time, make a special report to the Speaker—

As to what? Is there any limitation or restriction? According to the wording of the section, the report may be:

> —as to any matters arising in the course of the trial, an account of which ought, in their judgment, to be submitted to the House of Commons.

Mr. CAHAN: Would the hon. gentleman direct his attention to those words, "arising in the course of the trial?"

Mr. CANNON: Those are the words I am going to deal with. If the petitioner Collins is serious, if his friends are really in earnest and sincere, when the proceedings which have been instituted are continued before the courts—

Mr. CAHAN: But they never will be.

Mr. CANNON: Why not? This election is contested.

Mr. CAHAN: Yes, but without any intention of contesting it, possibly.

Mr. CANNON: Then anyone may substitute himself for Collins.

Mr. CAHAN: But only in the terms of the present petition.

Mr. CANNON: I will assume that my learned friend is right.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Such petitions always allege everything under the sun.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But they ask for certain things.

Mr. CANNON: Suppose I put things in as bad a light as possible. The present petitioner does not proceed, but a friend of Collins substitutes himself and proceeds with the case. This man personally or through his counsel gets up before the three judges, alleges the facts contained in the petition, and offers to prove those facts. You tell me the judges will be bound by the law, which forbids them receiving such evidences. But is not that a fact arising at the trial which the judges could report to the House? Will my learned friend contend for a minute that it is not?

Mr. CAHAN: It is a matter they might report to the House, but I suggest it is not a matter they would so report in fact, because no such allegation has ever been reported.

Mr. CANNON: That is not the point; my learned friend is getting away from the argument.

Mr. CAHAN: I am sticking very close to it.

Mr. CANNON: Yes, but keeping far enough away not to be within the circle of the real argument.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is not any.

Mr. CANNON: My argument is this. This is a fact arising at the trial, and it is possible for the three judges to make a special report. Therefore I say the whole basis of the argument of my learned friends crumbles. The only strong point is in the fact that there is an existing wrong, and no remedy for that wrong. I do not concede there is a wrong, but assuming there is one, under section 61 of the Controverted Elections Act there is a remedy to right that wrong, and that remedy should be resorted to.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman says that the judges might report the facts to the Speaker if Collins proceeded with this petition. Supposing his argument is right, and supposing the judges do what he says they might do, would not this House then be in exactly the same position as it is to-day?

Mr. CANNON: I am just coming to that. The judges make a special report to the Speaker; therefore a remedy exists.

Mr. CAHAN: No, that does not remedy it.

Mr. CANNON: Wait a minute. A remedy exists, I say, and I am going to prove it. The report is received by the Speaker. What does section 70 say?

> The Speaker shall, at the earliest practicable moment after he receives the certificates and report or reports, if any—

That includes the general or special report.

> —of the trial judges or the Supreme Court of Canada, give the necessary directions, and adopt all the proceedings necessary for confirming or altering the return.

Therefore the Speaker, upon receipt of a report, has the power to give all necessary instructions not only to confirm but to alter the report.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How in the world could he do it?

Mr. CAHAN: The judges report that counsel alleged at the trial that they were able to prove that 110 additional ballots were marked in favour of one candidate. Does my hon. friend suggest the absurdity that on this report, which is the only report they can make, the Speaker will do justice by putting Kennedy out and some other man in his place?

Mr. CANNON: I have great confidence in the fairness and prudence of the Speaker. I am of my hon. friend's opinion; I do not think the Speaker would do that; I do not think he would take it upon himself to make such a decision. But if my learned friend would only read the law concerning the matter he would see what happens then. I would like to read section 71:

> The Speaker shall, without delay, communicate to the House of Commons the determination, report and certificate of the trial judges or of the Supreme Court of Canada and his own proceedings thereon; and, when the trial judges or the Supreme Court of Canada make a special report, the House of Commons may make such order in respect to such special report as they think proper.

Is not that a remedy?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would the House of Commons then have one whit more evidence than it has to-day?

Mr. CANNON: No. My right hon. friend is right again, but we are discussing a point of law, and my argument is very simple. I say this petition should be received and that parliament should act, assuming that there is a wrong for which there is no remedy. But if on the other hand there is a remedy and if Collins can have his wrong righted anywhere else or can try to do so, let him do that first. Let him go before the courts in accordance with the provisions of the existing law and next year, if a special report is made to the House and the House is asked to decide, it will be for the wisdom and prudence of the House to take action then.

We have discussed this matter twice already. To-day I have debated it from the legal standpoint only, and in no way from a political point of view. The underlying principle in these matters is that parliament should leave to the courts the decision in all matters within the purview of the courts before we attempt to touch the administration of justice. If the citizens of Canada are to be secure in their homes; if our flag is to be respected; if our institutions are to last, legislative, judicial and executive powers must not overlap. Let the courts exhaust all their remedies, and if parliament then sees a wrong existing which has not been righted I have enough confidence in the justice of my fellow members to believe that justice will be done.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): I offer my congratulations to the Solicitor General for the manner in which he has discussed this question, and I can also congratulate other hon. members opposite. It may be remarkable and unprecedented, but it is a fact that this afternoon the House has risen to a high plane in discussing this question, and I think every idea of partisanship or prejudice has been eliminated.

To my mind the advantage of this discussion is that it brings before parliament and the country the high place held by this House. It is the highest court in the country; it is supreme and must remain supreme. It has the confidence of the country, and must retain that confidence if we are to avoid the two extremes of autocracy on the one hand and communism on the other. Therefore we are to-day asserting the supremacy of parliament in this respect, but in dealing with this issue parliament must abide by its traditions and its rules, which prescribe that any citizen of Canada who has a grievance has the right to apply to parliament for consideration and a remedy. Under our rules these petitions must be presented and printed in the Votes and Proceedings of the House when they do not contain matter in breach of the privileges of the House, and when, according to our rules and practices, they can be received. Therefore this elementary right of petitioning must be preserved if parliament in Canada is to occupy the same position in public opinion as that occupied by the English parliament in Great Britain and throughout the empire.

In presenting a petition the allegations are set forth over the signature of the petitioner, and from time immemorial parliament, in considering what disposition shall be made of that petition, has assumed and presumed that the allegations therein contained are true, for the purpose of determining the action of parliament as to the procedure which should be folowed.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): Would my hon. friend allow me a question? If that is so, why should an affidavit be necessary under section 6 of the Controverted Elections Act, and why was a petition dismissed in 1875 by Hon. James Cockburn because there was no affidavit?

At six o'clock the House took recess.

[Mr. Cannon.]

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock I was considering the matter of petitions to this House. Under the rules no affidavit can be annexed to a petition to this House; no appendix can be attached in the shape of letters, affidavits, certificates, statistical statements or documents of any character. I find that the practice is that if such an appendix appears, then by leave of the House it may be separated from the petition, and the petition is then considered on its merits. I suggest that the reason why no verification of the petition as such is required is that any member who presents to this House a petition which is fraudulent in its character, which is not signed by the parties by whom it purports to be signed, becomes personally responsible to this House and is dealt with by the House. In petitions to parliament, therefore, nothing is required but the signatures of the petitioners, at least three in number in case of a multitude, or one in case it is the petition of one single person, or signed under the seal of a corporation if it is a corporation that is the petitioner, and in such a case the House takes cognizance of the seal. Therefore the hon. Solicitor-General (Mr. Cannon) is in error in suggesting that before we consider this petition we must have some collateral evidence before us of the facts alleged in the petition. The petition, I suggest, must be taken at its face for the purposes of this discussion, and it must be taken at its face when the House comes to a decision as to whether or not it shall be received, and as to what disposal shall be made of it if and when it is received.

I notice in this House, as I have noticed in the courts of our country, a striking difference between the conception of a petition under the civil law and a petition under our English common law. Our English practice in the courts of Nova Scotia, in which I was first trained, is this: If a petition is presented to the court, the judge looks first most carefully into the allegations of the petition to ascertain whether facts are there alleged which should be the subject of consideration by the court, the prayer of the petition always being deemed a secondary matter, because the court reserves to itself the right to administer justice whether exactly in accordance with the prayer of the petition or not. In the courts of Quebec, where I have been practising for some seventeen or eighteen years, the attitude of the court is entirely different. There the court at once looks at the conclusion, and if the conclusion is not in strict accordance with the terms of the law which might be applicable, the petition is thrown out and never considered.

One also notices that in practice under the common law and in practice under the civil law there is a different attitude of mind in dealing with the trial of cases. For instance, I will put it before my confreres from the province of Quebec educated in the civil law, when a case is presented to them, they look first at the law and see what the code says, and how far it may be applicable, and then the second consideration is as to the facts. When a similar case comes before an English lawyer he looks at the facts. He does not care anything about the law at first, but having mastered the facts, he considers what law would be applicable. Those trained by the inductive process of reasoning look at this from one point of view; those trained by the deductive process look at it from an entirely different point of view, and I think that is the reason why we differ somewhat in this House in the consideration of this matter of election petitions. But the facts alleged here must for our purposes be taken as facts; no evidence can be given here. The sole question, I suggest, is as to whether those facts as alleged should be inquired into by the House through one of its standing committees.

The hon. Minister of Justice, dealing with the law under which the trial of an election petition is held under the statute, very properly says that as a matter of public policy, parliament, in enacting that statute, has declared that no elector should be called upon, in respect of such a petition, to disclose for whom he voted. But although that may be a principle of public policy applicable to trials under that statute, it does not necessarily follow that the same rule of public policy shall apply to every other proceedings whatsoever. We have in our criminal court, under the statute, a provision that no one who is accused of an offence and stands indicted before a criminal court of justice shall be called upon to make admissions in regard to his commission of the offence, but that is a rule of public policy which is not applicable to many other proceedings. That a witness cannot be compelled to give evidence which would tend to disclose a criminal act on his part is sound public policy with respect to that particular proceeding; but if that same witness is brought before other tribunals he cannot claim immunity in regard to answering interrogatories submitted to him. If he comes before a committee of this House he is bound to answer every question put to him, because it has not so far been declared by parliament, it has not so far been enacted by statute or made a rule of practice in this House, that a witness shall be permitted to refuse to answer any questions which may tend to discredit him, or tend to disclose the commission of a criminal act on his part. The hon. minister therefore, simply because he finds by special enactment in respect of one particular legal proceeding a provision to the effect that it is a rule of public policy that disclosures of a certain nature cannot be made in that proceeding, cannot properly or logically or consistently argue that in a different proceeding, before an entirely different tribunal, the witness shall have the same immunity or shall be permitted to refuse to answer.

The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Denis) pointed out that under one statute with which he was dealing, namely an act respecting inquiries into corrupt practices at elections of members of the House of Commons, it was required that the petition should be verified by affidavit and that a deposit of at least $1,000 should be made in respect to that petition, and he suggested that the provisions of chapter 8 of the Revised Statutes applied also to a petition of the nature and character of the petition now before the House. Chapter 8 on its face shows that it was enacted to provide for inquiry into corrupt practices which are alleged to have extensively prevailed in a constituency during an election, for the purpose of bringing in all those who have been parties to those widespread corrupt practices, and of eliciting the facts which may be presented to the attorney general of the province, in order that special criminal indictments may be preferred against those parties, and that they may be duly punished under the law. The provision that a petition in that case must be verified by affidavit, and that there must be a deposit of security to the extent of $1,000, applies only to the particular form of petition dealing with that particular form of inquiry. In this case, however, you look in vain to find any provision by statute, or any provision by law and practice of this House, under which any petition of any kind whatever submitted to this House must be verified by affidavit or must be accompanied by certain securities.

Mr. BROWN: What was the condition in regard to the deposit of money before parliament divested itself of the power to inquire into election protests?

Mr. CAHAN: That condition only prevailed by statute. It was not provided for by common law. We followed the English law; where it was alleged that corrupt practices had extensively prevailed we provided by statute for a general inquiry.

Mr. BROWN: Before parliament divested itself of the right to make general inquiry into the conduct of elections, in 1873 I think, these cases had been tried before committees of parliament?

Mr. CAHAN: Yes.

Mr. BROWN: In those cases, or before that time, what were the requirements in reference to a deposit?

Mr. CAHAN: On an election petition?

Mr. BROWN: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: For corrupt practices?

Mr. BROWN: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: At the time parliament relegated to the courts the trial of election petitions in which corrupt practices were alleged against a candidate or his agents, there was a provision for the payment of, I think, £200 under the English law. In this parliament we had no express provision by law, and we had no express provision in our rules of practice for a deposit being made in such a case. Therefore my suggestion is that this petition is in due form, and that in considering it we must assume that every allegation of the petition is true; certainly, we must assume that it is in proper form, except in so far as its form has been questioned by the clerk of petitions. The House is called upon to deal with it, and the proper way to deal with it is not for this House as a body to sit down and decide it this afternoon on the allegations of facts in the petition, nor should we rely entirely upon the official documents which are available to us, such as the decisions of the various courts which have tried the correlative matters due to the election in this particular constituency. The matter should be referred to a committee of the House for further consideration and report. That committee, with the legal knowledge which its individual members have, and being in a position to ascertain readily all relative facts either by admitting testimony that has been taken in the courts or by summoning witnesses to give new and additional testimony, will be in a position to report to the House as to what further action the House should take. The prayer of the petition as it stands now should not be deemed conclusive with respect to the action which might be taken by that committee or the action which might be taken by the House in its discretion subsequently.

Undoubtedly the petition does not allege on the part of the candidate or his agents corrupt practices such as may be inquired into under the ordinary petition before the court; it is remarkable in this respect that it makes no single allegation or suggestion that there were on the part of the candidate or his agents corrupt practices for which he would be responsible in an election contest. It does allege, however, that fraud was wittingly committed by an employee or officer of this House. It is in respect of an injury done, not resulting from any corrupt act by the opposing candidate or his agents; the facts set forth conclusively—and I am taking them now as they must be admitted for the purpose of this discussion—that an officer of this House committed a fraud upon those candidates, upon one surely and possibly upon two or three, and that official is responsible to this House and to no other tribunal in this country with the exception of the criminal court.

Under the ruling of the Speaker as I heard it to-day, this House is competent to consider the conduct or misconduct and the results flowing from the conduct or misconduct of its own officers. I am glad that this petition has been brought up, if for no other purpose than to elicit from His Honour the Speaker the second ruling, because it makes clear, I think, when read in parallel lines with the other, the real opinion which His Honour entertained when making his first decision. This high parliament of Canada has control of its own officers and employees, and if it desires, as it must, to preserve the integrity of our parliamentary machinery and of the well-being of parliament itself, it must never abnegate such control. When allegations of fraud are made against officers or officials who are subject to and under the direction and control only of this House through the Speaker, parliament must, to preserve its own reputation, to preserve the confidence of the entire community of this country from one end to the other, take strong measures to prevent recurrences of such frauds in the election machinery in so far as parliament has control over it. Without going any further, from that view of the matter parliament is bound to receive this petition.

It is opportune that parliament in its discretion should refer this petition to the special committee which parliament has already appointed and empowered to deal with matters of privilege of this kind. Having gone so far, if I were a member of the committee, which I am not, I would feel perfectly free before that committee, when all the facts are available, to report that parliament should take further action with regard to the matter, or that parliament should not take the action which is embodied in the prayer of the petition, or, third, that parliament should take some action which is not indicated in the prayer of the petition.

The really important matter before the House to-day is not whether this petitioner has sought the exact remedy which he should have sought, or whether one partial remedy that he suggests is within the competency and power of parliament. The real fact before this House is that one of its officers has been guilty of fraud which may have had the result of doing grave injury to one of the candidates in that contest. Parliament should examine into that, and if it cannot under the existing law find a remedy sufficient to restore his rights to the complainant in this case, that committee should report to parliament as to what action parliament should take in the future by an amendment either of the statute law or of the rules and practices of this House so as to prevent such an infamous act being perpetrated in the future under conditions of law which do not admit of any remedy being vouchsafed to the complainant. Those are very proper matters for the consideration of a parliamentary committee; but they are matters requiring such intimate knowledge of the law, such extended research, if I may say so, as not to be matters properly to be decided by this House with nothing before it but the petition, and with no evidence except the terms of the petition itself and such common knowledge as we have of occurrences in this particular constituency, reinforced by the decisions of the court, which are always available for the information of parliament.

I submit, therefore, that although it is late in the session, we would be establishing a precedent that is very injurious and prejudicial to the interests of parliament and of the electors as well if we were to declare by our voices and votes here to-night that we would deprive this complainant of his fundamental right to petition this high court of parliament in order that the facts might be elicited and if possible some remedy, incomplete though it may be under the existing law, found for him, with the larger view, however, of suggestions by that committee regarding such remedial measures by statute or by changes in the laws and practices of this House as will enable us to deal effectively with such cases in the future.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): The motion before the House asks that the petition of William Collins in connection with the election in Peace River be read and received, and Mr. Speaker has ruled that the question shall be decided by the House as it is a matter of policy.

The issues raised in this petition go to the very root of parliamentary government. They have a vital bearing upon serious questions which have come up in this parliament during the present session, and I submit that the allegations contained in the petition are quite within the four corners of the jurisdiction of this House. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think that this matter may be considered and decided by every Tom, Dick and Harry except parliament, the highest court in the land. Fortunately, however, under our British constitution, the courts are subservient to the legislature; they are the creatures of parliament. In order to interpret fully the provisions of the Controvered Elections Act, one must necessarily refer to the debates that took place at the time that act was passed, because we must read into the act what was evidently the intention of parliament in passing it. In my opinion parliament never intended to divest itself of ancient rights, prerogatives and functions which have inherent in British parliamentary government since the days of Magna Charta. The allegations of the present petition are such as cannot be ignored by this House. The party system is on trial, and upon the decision to which we come to-night on this question will depend the fate of the party system.

If such a petition as this had been presented to the British parliament I am sure no technicalities would have stood in the way. All authorities are agreed that parliament is sovereign and supreme, but the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) now tells us that parliament can afford no relief in this instance. The leader of the government (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) made eloquent references in the city of Toronto to the "historic principles of Liberalism". Yet the Minister of Justice declares in this House that a British subject, a Canadian citizen, may not look to the peoples' representatives in parliament to have a wrong remedied. Mr. Collins would have had his seat in this House had it not been for the fraudulent practices resorted to by the Liberal party to win the election. That party has employed such means in other elections as well. In the constituency of West Elgin years ago they burnt the ballots and thereby deprived the rightful member of his seat.

I would not have spoken in this debate if it were not for the fact that in my constituency a number of voters, through the culpable negligence of the revising officers and electoral officers of the government, were prevented from voting in the last election. Now where does the right of the voter come in? What becomes of the right of these ninety voters in the Peace River district who, although they are taxed like the rest of us to support the government of the country, are denied the right to representation in parliament and to an honest ballot? It is well to consider chiefly the claim of the petitioner—and his right in this case is beyond dispute, and the wrongs he suffered are a disgrace to the party system. Indeed, had it not been for the fraud practised in the election Mr. Collins would have been sitting on this side of the House, and on that memorable night, February 3rd, when the government was supported by a majority of one they would have been defeated. But they were kept in power by that extra vote cast by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) who had no right to give that vote or to be here at all.

But there is another question: Is parliament going to be free; is it a free parliament or not? Are we going to have our elections honestly conducted, or are we not? I raise this question not only in relation to the petition of Mr. Collins but in the interests of 286 electors in my constituency, returned soldiers, who were deprived of the vote in the last election. These men were in the Christie street hospital, Toronto, after having fought for civilization, many of them amputation cases; and by the negligence of the revising officer who failed to sign the affidavit required under the Elections Act, every one of the 286 lost his vote. There was nearly a riot in the hospital over it on election day. These returned soldiers, maimed and wounded, had fought and were overseas in the 1917 election and many of them could hardly move out of bed. This would have been their first opportunity of voting since the war, as they cast their ballots overseas during the war. They were anxious to vote but could not. What is to become of constitutional government if this sort of thing is to continue? Free parliaments are a myth and the right of the subject to petition is taken away.

The celebrated phrase of the Prime Minister about "the historic principles of Liberalism" means absolutely nothing, for under the present administration parliament has been reduced to the level of a county council. Far from having the jurisdiction of the highest court in the land we might as well call ourselves a county council if we cannot deal with this petition. The fact is that, with the present government in office, parliamentary practice and responsible government are utterly ignored. What are the people's representatives meeting here for if it is not to protect the interests and the liberties of the people? Talk about the historic principles of Liberalism! Why, free parliaments, honest ballots, honest elections, the right to petition, the right to deputize—these things simply do not exist to-day. Fortunately the people can petition and deputize in the ballot box. There is one means by which the people can express their opinion, and the government may depend upon it that an outraged public will show, when the time comes, what it thinks of this government and of the way it tramples on Liberal principles. A short time ago a deputation came down to this city from Oshawa, but its numbers could not intimidate the Prime Minister. He said he was not to be intimidated by numbers. Some day the hon. gentleman will realize his mistake.

There is a Liberalism which I respect, the Liberalism that goes back beyond the days of the Liberal platform of 1893, every plank of which was broken by the Liberal party when it got into office. As one of its leaders said, the platform was made to get in on but not to stand on. The word "Liberalism" as applied to hon. gentlemen opposite no more implies love of liberty than the word "Progressive" signifies a love of progress on the part of hon. gentlemen to my left. I admire Liberalism of the sort that inspired the freeholders of Buckinghamshire to mount their horses and ride into London town to defend John Hampden, and the Liberalism that prompted the miners of Cornwall to rush to the aid of Bishop Trelawney. The liberalism that withstood the tyranny of Charles Stuart, the liberalism of those Cornishmen whose great spirit Macaulay has taught us to respect—that liberalism is an altogether different thing from the so-called liberalism of gentlemen supporting this government. To-day in this hon. House we have the spectacle of the head of the government and the Minister of Justice going back on Liberal principles. What happened ninety years ago to a day to-morrow in upper Canada? In those days the grandfather of the right hon. gentleman fought for the principles of responsible government in his attempt to dissolve the family compact. I have in my hand a book which I would commend to hon. members for perusal. It is written by Charles Lindsey, a respected citizen of Toronto, and deals with the life of William Lyon Mackenzie and the struggle for responsible government in Canada. Practically the same constitutional question that we are dealing with now arose in those days, and hon. members, I have no doubt will be interested to hear this quotation:

> The feeling excited in the unbiased reader's mind as he goes over this recital,—

—the recital of the way in which Mackenzie in 1836 had been treated in being deprived of his seat, expelled, then re-elected and refused admission to the House—

> —will be no safe indication of the degree of public indignation aroused by this mockery of justice. During the week of the sham trial, petitions to the Lieutenant Governor were numerously signed, praying him to dismiss a House painted with the worst vices of judicial partiality; for the result had been foreseen by the preliminary divisions. On the day of the expulsion, a deputation from the petitioners waited upon the Governor's private secretary and informed him that next day at two o'clock a number of the petitioners would go to Government House in a body to receive His Excellency's reply. At the appointed hour nine hundred and thirty persons proceeded to fulfil their mission. They were received in the audience chamber, and a petition having been presented, they were dismissed with the studiously curt reply: "Gentlemen, I have received the petition of the inhabitants."

So you see even the Family Compact were compelled to receive a petition properly presented and to consider the prayer of the petition. The Prime Minister the other day spoke of the "historic principles of Liberalism." I do not know how those principles are to be kept alive if the subject has not the right to his ballot. Certainly it is an abuse of the historic principles of Liberalism for a voter's ballot to be taken away by the officers of this House. Professor Dicey, one of the most celebrated writers on constitutional practice, in his Law of the Constitution refers to the right to the ballot and quotes from Blackstone's commentaries on the doctrine of parliamentary sovereignty in these words:

> The power and jurisdiction of parliament, says Sir Edward Coke, is so transcendent and absolute that it cannot be confined, either for causes or persons, within any bounds. . . . It hath sovereign and uncontrollable authority in the making, confirming, enlarging, restraining, abrogating, repealing, reviving and expounding of laws, concerning matters of all possible denominations, ecclesiastical or temporal, civil, military, maritime or criminal: this being the place where that absolute despotic power, which must in all governments reside somewhere, is entrusted by the constitution of these kingdoms. All mischiefs and grievances, operations and remedies, that transcend the ordinary course of the laws, are within the reach of this extraordinary tribunal. It can regulate or new-model the succession to the crown; as was done in the reign of Henry VIII and William III. It can alter the established religion of the land; as was done in a variety of instances in the reigns of King Henry VIII and his three children. It can change and create afresh even the constitution of the kingdom and of parliaments themselves as was done by the Act of Union and the several statutes for triennial and septennial elections. It can, in short, do everything that is not naturally impossible; and therefore some have not scrupled to call its power by a figure rather too bold, the omnipotence of parliament. True it is, that what the parliament doth, no authority upon earth can undo. So that it is a matter most essential to the liberties of this kingdom that such members be delegated to this important trust as are most eminent for their probity, their fortitude and their knowledge; for it was a known apopthegm of the great lord treasurer Burleigh, "that England could never be ruined but by a parliament:" and as Sir Matthew Hale observes, this being the highest and greatest court over which none others can have jurisdiction in the kingdom, if by any means a misgovernment should any way fall upon it, the subjects of this kingdom are left without all manner of remedy. To the same purpose the president Montesquieu, though I trust too hastily, presages; that as Rome, Sparta and Carthage has lost their liberty and perished, so the constitution of England will in time lose its liberty, will perish; it will perish whenever the legislative power shall become more corrupt than the executive.

When the federal Controverted Elections Act was originally passed it was never intended that this House should divest itself of the power to regulate petitions and elections, and in fact the Court of Appeal of Ontario has decided that that act in Ontario does not take away this power from parliament—The election law creates concurrent jurisdiction. Petitions were presented by the electors of West Elgin, and read in the legislature of Ontario in 1903-04 even while the high court was sitting on controverted elections, and the legislature took action itself and forced the government to the country, where it suffered ignominious defeat. I should like to find out where the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke) and his party stand on this question, because on February 3 there was a motion made in the House to adjourn the budget debate, and the government won by a majority of one, a majority that was supplied by the hon. gentleman who comes from Peace River, and who in my opinion did not at the time have any right to the seat in view of the irregularities that took place in that constituency last October and the fraudulent means to deprive Mr. Collins of the seat. Does the hon. member for Brandon condone what was done in Peace River by election frauds and so seat here one of his party? The government hold office to-day by virtue of the vote of the hon. member for Peace River on February 3, although the majority of the electorate of Peace River who legally voted did not approve of sustaining this government. Their only resource under the circumstances is to come to this high court of parliament for redress of grievances and relief and it will either be given or the party system is done in this country.

Eminent judges in the Old Country, such as Lord Chancellor Selborne and Lord Chancellor Coleridge, and the Lord Chief Justice of Great Britain have held that while the House of Commons might have divested itself of jurisdiction over certain electoral matters, it still has the right, if it desires to exercise it, to investigate, review and correct the conduct of its own electoral officers, to find if elections have been properly conducted and to ascertain if the election return made is in accordance with the law. That was the view of Sir John Thompson, who stood for Liberal principles; that was the view of Sir Louis Davies, the Chief Justice of Canada; that was the view of Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The right of petition to parliament was established in the days of John Hampden and Bishop Trelawney and in the days of the old provinces of Canada.

The petition before the House sets out that a Liberal was appointed deputy returning officer in poll 4 and that he deliberately stole the votes of ninety voters, which had the direct effect of giving the seat to Collins' opponent. Is there not one Liberal or one Progressive in the House who will stand up for the principles of Liberalism I have referred to and which brought about the fall of the Family Compact? Is there not one Liberal or Progressive in the House who will try to accord protection to every voter in the polling booth, in order to conduct honest elections? I appeal especially to those members from Alberta, because Alberta is going to have a house cleaning unless something is done to right this wrong, as Ontario had after the West Elgin Liberal election frauds.

In conclusion I may say that under the Controverted Elections Act the office of Chief Electoral Officer was created. He is a judicial and ministerial officer, a servant not of the courts but of this parliament, and directly our officer and responsible to parliament, and it is within the power of this House to summon not only that officer to the bar of the House with all the papers connected with this election, but also the returning officer for that constituency as well as the deputy of poll 4. A trial may be held right in this chamber, or the matter may be referred to a select committee of this House. It is said that the matter is before the courts, but the courts deal only with one phase of the matter. That only deals with the petition, and does not touch the robbery of the voters at the polls, the disfranchisement of ninety voters, and the government's acceptance of the benefits of the frauds and the vote of the present member. What is the use of being a free citizen if we are going to conduct elections as they are conducted? Elections thus conducted are a farce and like those in some states across the border, with all this kind of political trickery. The Chief Electoral Officer is responsible as the head of the department for the appointment of returning officers and their deputies, and he has charge of the conduct of these elections and is responsible for all deputies. As a result of the last election the defeated candidate is sitting in this House representing the constituency of Peace River and elected by election frauds in poll 4. He has been exercising all the rights of a member of parliament while ninety men have been disfranchised and robbed of their ballots.

This gentleman holds the balance of power in the Customs committee; he has been supporting the administration consistently; his vote saved the government on February 3 on the motion to adjourn, by a majority of one, and the government has now decided to give him protection. His vote averted a dissolution of the present parliament.

The only remedy obtainable by a voter at the polls is to issue a writ against the returning officer. I remember one case I had which was tried by the late Hon. Chief Justice Falconbridge; the returning officer refused to give a voter a ballot because his name was not on the list. The voter sued the returning officer; Chief Justice Falconbridge construed the Election Act and said it was negligence on the part of the returning officer, assessing civil damages of $200 against that officer as set out in the Controverted Elections Act. But the only remedy available to voters whose names are on the list, and who are robbed, as in Peace River, of their ballots, is an appeal to this House, this the high court of parliament, the court of last resort—parliament and then the people.

As I have already said, Mr. Speaker, I would not have spoken to-night but for the fact that I believe something should be done to protect the average voter of the entire country who goes honestly to the polls to record his vote. After all, the party system is on trial to-night; there are those within that system who have not been enthusiastic about it for some time past, but with all its faults it is the best and only system of responsible government. While it has its defects it also has its merits, and do not forget that under that system you have the free right to petition parliament—and the party system has given the empire free parliaments. Not only are the two old political parties on trial to-night but the Progressive party, having accepted the benefits of a dishonest election in which ninety honest men were robbed of their votes, must also realize that they are on trial.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): There is before us a petition asking justice for an individual named Collins, but I should like to remember to-night that we must also do justice to the present member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy). I am sure it is not necessary to appeal to members of this House to vote conscientiously with regard to a question of this kind. Sometimes I am inclined to think certain members make that appeal a little too strongly, or put it in such a way that members who differ from them would be considered as not acting conscientiously.

Up to the present the discussion has been carried on very largely by legal gentlemen. Undoubtedly in purely technical legal matters they have a training which enables them to discuss such matters, and yet sometimes I am inclined to think that they can hardly see the woods for the trees; that they are so troubled with precedents of various kinds and with legal technicalities that it is a little difficult for them to discover the main, outstanding features of the case. But in any case I would remind them that those who have not had that long legal training are nevertheless forced to use their best judgment in deciding a matter of this kind. After all, we are here, not in a law court, and we are not altogether subject to the rules of procedure which there obtain.

9 p.m.

I listened very carefully to the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) and I could not but be convinced that the petitioner had a grievance, and, according to the evidence, was suffering a wrong that should be rectified. I think the hon. member showed that the petitioner had a right to appeal to parliament, at least according to the practice which at one time prevailed, further than that, that the present member for Peace River, if a wrong was done him would also have the right to appeal to parliament to rectify that wrong. But I cannot get away from the fact which has been brought out on previous occasions by the decisions of the Speaker and by some members to-day that the courts have been set up to do this very kind of work. I remember, as I recall history, that parliament used to do a great many different kinds of work that is now being done by the courts. It is all very well to say that there is a way to right every wrong, but the question is what is the best way to right that wrong? If I go out on the street and somebody steals my watch, I do not immediately rush off to parliament and petition parliament to get my watch back for me. I go to the police court, the regularly recognized agency for dealing with that kind of thing, and I lay an information before the authorities, and they proceed to endeavour to recover my watch for me. According to the information given us on the floor of this House, we have had a law enacted to deal especially with controverted elections, and we have had machinery set up to enable us to deal with that kind of thing more effectively than it could possibly be dealt with by parliament.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): But suppose the hon. member's watch had been stolen by an officer of this House; what would he do then?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I presume I should do the same thing. I do not think I would proceed to lay a petition on the table here.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think you would.

Mr. POWER: In that connection my hon. friend might refer to a theft that was carried out by officers of this House not so very long ago, and there was no petition about it.

Mr. McGIBBON: Might I suggest that they did not go to the police court either?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not think there is a member of this House but realizes very clearly that any decision that could be come to with regard to a matter of this kind in this House or in a committee of this House would be decidedly affected by partisan considerations.

Mr. CAHAN: No, no.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: My hon. friend says, "No, no," but I am not at all sure that he is right in that. I have been long enough in this House now to know that in most of the committees the legal gentlemen divide almost always according to their party alliances in matters of this kind. I do not think there is any use deceiving ourselves with regard to this matter.

Mr. McGIBBON: Has the hon. member ever voted against the government since he has been in this House?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If the hon. gentleman had been in the House for the last four years he would have found that there was frequently a vote against the government, but looking at it from his standpoint, if I had never voted against the government, that would prove to the last degree the very point I want to make, that is, that we are all more or less actuated or influenced by partisan considerations. I think that must be conceded, and if some of us happen to be friends of Mr. Kennedy—and I count myself one of his friends—I confess it would be extremely difficult for me to be a member of that committee or to be a member of this House when his action was under review; and judge absolutely on the merits of this case. I think such considerations are recognized in ordinary legal procedure, and in selecting a jury no one is accepted who has an immediate relationship to the accused.

A good deal has been made of the phrase used by the hon. member for West Calgary in the House—a receiver of stolen goods. Personally I resent that phrase. I do not think there is anything like a parallel between this case and that of the man who receives stolen goods. I do not want to argue this at any length but I would simply emphasize two points. The member for Peace River was declared elected by regularly appointed officials. This position was put on him regularly and officially; that should be remembered. It is quite true that he was one of three candidates running in that election. When the time for declaring the returns came the question was, which one of these three candidates was to take his seat in parliament. There was no time for a long delay. The returning officer had to make his declaration, and he came out definitely and took the responsibility for saying that Mr. Kennedy was to be the member for Peace River.

There is one other point. I think it is clearly understood—it has been so stated in this House again and again—that Mr. Kennedy has no option with regard to serving in this House; he has no opportunity for resigning.

Mr. McGIBBON: Does not the hon. member recall that the hon. member for Peace River said that he would not resign if he could?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite so, but my point is entirely with the first part, that he could not resign if he would. He is in a position where he is unable to resign. No doubt if it were brought to my notice that inadvertently I had in my possession goods that were stolen, I would consider it my duty to restore those goods, but I submit that it is absolutely unfair to Mr. Kennedy to say that he is in any such position as that. I have not the slightest doubt, knowing Mr. Kennedy as I do, that if it were brought to his attention or he believed that he was enjoying something to which he had no right, he would immediately give it up, and I have no doubt that in due time when the legal processes, which are so slow, will work out a little bit further we shall see Mr. Kennedy taking suitable action. I resent the frequent use of such a phrase as a receiver of stolen goods as applied to an honourable and I say an honoured member of this House.

In the meantime, let me say that the gentleman who has made this appeal, who has laid this petition, may have suffered a wrong. He may have a grievance. He could have proceeded according to the regular lines and brought his case before the courts at the very start, but he declined to take that course. I suppose he was within his rights in so doing, but in the meantime things have moved. A great many developments have taken place since that time. For instance, I hold in my hand a very lengthy document entitled:

In the Supreme Court of Alberta Judicial District of Edmonton

The Dominion Controverted Elections Act

The Petition of John Bernard of Edson, in the province of Alberta.

Let me read a few clauses:

3. That the said respondent—

That is, I take it, Mr. Kennedy:

—was by myself, by his agents and by other persons on his behalf, before, during, at and after the said election, and in connection with the said election, guilty of corrupt practices and of illegal practices,

And so on. Those are very, very serious charges directed definitely and personally against Mr. Kennedy.

Mr. CAHAN: I would like to make the suggestion that my hon. friend will notice that those allegations of corrupt practices made against Mr. Kennedy and his agents could not possibly include allegations such as are made in this petition.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not suggest that they do, but I say that this is what has taken place. Very serious allegations have been made in the Supreme Court of Alberta against Mr. Kennedy. I have read only part of clause 3. Let me read another:

4. That by reason of no polls being held in the following polls, as defined in the Notice of Grant of Poll, dated the 15th day of October, 1925, and published by the said returning officer, namely:

Poll No. 42—Horner.
Poll No. 66—Ronan.
Poll No. 67—Balm.
Poll No. 86—Padstow.
Poll No. 282—Stinking Lake.
Poll No. 288—Johnny Dore Prairie.
Poll No. 289—Little Red River.
Poll No. 290—Hay River.

The result of the said election was affected to the extent that there was in law and fact no election held in the said electoral district.

Then I come to No. 8:

That the said respondent knowingly made a false declaration respecting certain election expenses in connection with the said election, and was thereby guilty of a corrupt practice under the said acts, whereby the said respondent was and is incapacitated from serving in parliament for the said electoral district, and the said election and return of the said respondent were, and are wholly null and void.

Here is another section, No. 12, which reads:

That there were grave irregularities at Poll No. 4, Brule. Amongst other irregularities ballots marked for one candidate at the said election were switched or changed or others substituted for them marked for another candidate at the said election.

I intended to read No. 11, which is as follows:

The said respondent did knowingly induce and persuade the said official agent to make a false declaration respecting election expenses in connection with the said election and was thereby guilty of a corrupt practice under the said acts, or recognized as such by the common law of the parliament, whereby the said respondent was and is incapacitated from serving in parliament for the said electoral district and the said election and return are wholly null and void.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that these are the most serious charges imaginable. We have been told that there is nothing in the petition before the House that at all reflects upon the personal character of Mr. Kennedy, but here we have the most serious charges against his personal character—so serious that if proven he would be disqualified from becoming a member of the House.

Mr. LENNOX: The man who made the return is now in prison. Would my hon. friend accept a seat under those circumstances?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not going to say what I would do under the circumstances. I have nothing to do with it.

Mr. CAHAN: We know what my hon. friend would do.

An hon. MEMBER: Mr. Kennedy had nothing to do with it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: So far as Mr. Kennedy is concerned, he was declared elected before all the evidence came out and before any charges were made, and now he is in a position where he is incapable of doing anything else but remain here. He could not resign.

Mr. McGIBBON: He says he will not.

Mr. LENNOX: Under the law he cannot resign.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No.

Mr. LENNOX: Under the law he need not take his seat in this House. Does the hon. member approve of his sitting here?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I cannot very well see how he can resign. If he is definitely declared elected, how can he do anything else than give his services? I do not see how he can do anything else. He has taken the oath to do his duty.

Mr. LENNOX: Does my hon. friend approve of it?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If I were declared elected and took an oath to do my duty in this House, and found according to the law that it was impossible to resign, I do not think I could do anything else than serve in the House. I do not see what else could be done.

Mr. McGIBBON: Does the oath compel him to do his duty in the House?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should think it ought to.

Mr. McGIBBON: It is an oath of allegiance.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have no personal reference in my statement, but there are some who think they can take the oath and go about their private business two-thirds of the time.

Mr. McGIBBON: Did my hon. friend read the oath before he took it?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If they interpret their duties in that way, that is their affair, but some members take themselves seriously, and among those who take their work seriously is the present member for Peace River.

Mr. CAHAN: Leaving aside altogether the question as to what Mr. Kennedy should or should not do, which we all admit is a matter of personal judgment and personal conscience largely, and dealing with another point, it was an officer of parliament who declared him elected, and should not parliament take cognizance of that fact, inquire into it and see what the remedy is?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The suggestion is that an officer of parliament declared him elected and that parliament should deal with the case. I should say the officer declared him elected on the evidence which was submitted to him. That evidence was evidently not correct, and attention having been called to the incorrectness of that evidence, and the proper courts having undertaken to investigate the case, the courts should settle the matter before the officers can take any action.

Mr. CAHAN: Is the hon. member not forgetting or overlooking the fact that it was an officer of this House who switched the ballot?

Mr. BRISTOL: And he is in gaol.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I suppose it was an officer, if you can call every agent employed by the government an officer of this House. I do not know that we ordinarily speak of agents in Peace River as officers of the House.

Mr. CAHAN: Distance lends enchantment to the view.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not see what that has to do with the point I am trying to make.

An hon. MEMBER: You do not want to see.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is easy enough to say that. It seems to me that is the cheapest way possible of trying to get rid of a serious question, especially when one is honestly trying to work his way through a problem which seems to puzzle a good many lawyers in this House. I would say that the existence of this petition of which I have read several clauses, and which is now before the Supreme Court of Alberta, leaves the sitting member in an extremely awkward position. Suppose we should take action in this House, suppose Mr. Collins should be declared elected and Mr. Kennedy no longer a member of parliament, where would he be with regard to a document of this kind? I presume the petitioner in that case would withdraw the petition. Then we would have the most serious charges made against a certain member, who would have no opportunity of answering them.

Mr. FORKE: That is the very reason a member is called upon to retain his seat, because circumstances of this kind might arise: that a man who was really guilty, who was really afraid to face the court, could, by withdrawing, escape being tried in the courts for malfeasance of duty.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It seems to me that while we try to do justice to Mr. Collins who lays the petition on the table today, we should also endeavour to do justice to our sitting member, who is protected according to this regulation which prevents his resigning until the case is cleared up. According to this statement filed in the Supreme Court of Alberta there have been a great many irregularities in that constituency. In three of the polls in which there were 225 voters on the list the ballot boxes were not opened at all. In one poll, with some 40 voters on the list, the boxes were not opened at all. In four polls, with some 40 or 50 people on the list—I have not the exact number—the ballot boxes were not opened. In two polls, with some 15 or 20 on the list, the ballot boxes were not returned. There were altogether some ten polls affected, according to the statement which was given in evidence before the district court in Edmonton. Under these circumstances I think it is manifest that anybody who is fair—and our fairness has been appealed to by the hon. members opposite—will recognize that there is evidence of a good deal of irregularity in that constituency, and it is not by any means—

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the evidence of other irregularities that are not alleged in this petition?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have just given the statements of one gentleman who laid charges and those statements have been before the district court. I understand that the returning officer did not receive ballot box returns from those particular polls.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. member not know the difference between charges and evidence?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I leave the hon. gentleman to explain that; but speaking, if you will, from a legal standpoint as a layman, but as a member of this House trying to see where substantial justice lies, there is for me at least abundant evidence of very wide irregularities at those polls.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. member think there is evidence of widespread irregularities and wrong-doing by the hon. member for Peace River that is not alleged in the petition?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If the right hon. member wishes I will change the word "irregularities." I was including in the word "irregularities" the whole question of the unsatisfactory conditions of the election. I was not in that particular instance speaking of any criminal act. The very fact that in some cases ballot boxes were not opened and in others the polls themselves were not opened is evidence that a very unsatisfactory condition of affairs existed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What has that to do with this case?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It has a great deal to do with it. It has been charged that ninety votes have been switched and that Mr. Collins ought to occupy the position of member for Peace River in this House. It is quite possible, according to the evidence that is before us, that there were other votes that might have been given to Mr. Kennedy more than sufficient to compensate for those.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): And also might have been given to Mr. Collins.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: To Mr. Collins or to the third candidate.

Mr. LENNOX: If we assume for the sake of argument that there would have been a majority for Mr. Kennedy, would the hon. member approve of his sitting in this House as a member when ninety votes had been stolen?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have already tried to answer that question. I have already said that he was declared elected.

Mr. LENNOX: You are supposed to be a Christian. Be honest.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am trying to be honest and frank in the matter. I say that he having been declared elected and according to the law being unable to resign, I cannot see what other course he can take than remain seated in this House.

Under these circumstances, with the very unsatisfactory condition that prevailed at the last election, with the fact that undoubtedly according to the evidence Mr. Collins has been deprived of votes that should have been his and on the other hand that Mr. Kennedy undoubtedly ought to have had votes which he has not received, the only satisfactory way of settling this matter is by another election. I cannot see that we are going to settle the matter if we pass this motion, have the petition go before the committee on Privileges and Elections, and if it can be proved there that Mr. Collins had a right to the seat, come back to this House, have the Chief Electoral Officer called here and Mr. Collins declared the member. I do not think that is a satisfactory settlement.

It might be fair to Mr. Collins if we take into consideration a very restricted part of the evidence we have before us. It would not be fair to the sitting member and it would not be fair to the great mass of the electors of Peace River. It seems to me that we are not going to have the question satisfactorily settled until we have another election in that constituency. Under the present circumstances since the court has been set up, since action has already been taken in the courts and since there are before the courts most serious charges in which the personal honour of Mr. Kennedy is concerned, I think the best thing to do is to allow the courts to take their way and long before the next session of parliament is called we can have another election and know definitely what is the will of the electors of Peace River.

Mr. J. J. DENIS (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have tried to give this matter my keenest attention. It is true that it is not an easy question to decide, but I cannot come to any other conclusion than that the law should be followed in this matter just as it must be followed in all other matters. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) has made a very strong plea, the foundation of which is, if I understood him rightly, that an injustice has been done to Mr. Collins. That may be true or it may not. As the matter stands now we have no evidence to demonstrate whether or not injustice has been done. If we say that no injustice has been done, no argument is possible. Therefore assuming for the sake of argument that injustice has been done, we must admit that this is not the first time in the history of mankind that injustice has been done. If the law is inadequate it will not be the first time in the history of this country or of mankind that laws have been inadequate. We all know the difference between law and justice. Justice does not always follow law and law does not always follow justice. If we should base our actions on the lines of justice which changes in the minds of each individual, justice becomes impossible. Therefore all civilized nations have passed laws, having as much as possible justice for their foundation, but in many cases it has been found that law and justice do not agree.

The Dominion Elections Act and the Controverted Elections Act are just as imperfect as all other laws. Might I cite an instance of what has happened more than once? I can cite from memory the St. Hyacinthe election in 1908—and I want the right hon. gentleman to answer this—where a member had secured a majority of the votes. The voters, acting willingly and freely, had given one of the candidates a majority of the votes; but on the recount it was found that two deputy returning officers by mistake, by ignorance, for which neither the candidate who had secured the larger number of votes nor the other candidate was responsible, instead of placing their initials on the ballots had numbered them. On account of this the votes in two polls that gave a majority to the elected candidate, the candidate having the larger number of votes, were set aside.

For that reason this unfortunate candidate lost his election, the man returned being the one who had secured the minority of the votes. Was not that a flagrant injustice?—an injustice as clearly established as any wrong that may exist in the case of Mr. Collins if there is such a wrong, which of course I do not know. Certainly it was a flagrant case, and yet it was decided that the law of the land should be observed. The interpretation of the law by the courts in that case decided that the ballots for these two polls should be set aside and the candidate who had received the minority was declared elected.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In that case did not the candidate who lost those votes get everything to which he was entitled under the law?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Did Collins in this case get everything to which he was entitled under the law?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): Perhaps he did not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is the difference.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): But that is no reason why the law should be changed or interfered with in one particular case; so long as the law stands it should be applied. The law may be inadequate; I am willing to admit that. And I must confess that when I read through the Controverted Elections Act it did appear to my humble judgment to be an incomplete statute. But if the law as it stands is incomplete it is the duty of parliament to improve it; we should make it complete if it is incomplete. So long as it is the law, however, surely it ought to be followed.

Now, Collins says that he has suffered an injustice and for that reason he is coming to parliament for redress. I say, however, "You may not come to parliament, because there is a specific law that deals with your case. I go further: if it is true that you have suffered an injustice, and if the law is not comprehensive enough to meet your case, your remedy does not lie in parliament." What is the law? Section 5 of the Controverted Elections Act provides:

A petition may be presented to the court by any one or more of the following persons:

(a) A person who had a right to vote at the election to which the petition relates.

That includes electors generally. The electors are interested in the candidate of their choice and because of that interest they may submit a petition.

(b) A candidate at such election.

[Mr. Denis.]

I assume, first, that Mr. Collins was a candidate; and I assume, secondly, that he was also an elector. He had therefore the right to bring in an election petition. Why did he not do so? The hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) this afternoon in his eloquent address contended that because one Page had instituted proceedings first, therefore Mr. Collins could not do likewise. I have a great deal of admiration for the talents of the hon. gentleman but I submit he was mistaken in his law in this instance. As a matter of fact, before the close of the speech he seemed to retract what he had already said, upon a question being asked him by myself. It is in my opinion quite clear that the fact that Mr. Page had instituted election proceedings could not preclude Mr. Collins from taking the same step. I would refer the House to section 37 of the act, which meets precisely the case of several petitions being presented at the same time. This section enacts that all petitions relating to the same election shall be bracketed together and shall be tried simultaneously. It therefore recognizes beyond any question that more than one petition may be brought in with respect to the same election. Collins therefore was perfectly free to contest the election if it pleased him to do so. It would appear, however, that he did not. But even so, even if he neglected to take proceedings, his rights are unimpaired. The person who has presented his petition desires, let us say, not to proceed: under the law, if there is any reason for him to do so, Collins or any of his friends may intervene at any time. Let us see what the statute says on that point. Section 39, subsection 2, provides:

If, at the expiration of three months after such petition has been presented, the day for trial has not been fixed, any elector may, on application, be substituted for the petitioner on such terms as the court thinks fit.

It is provided elsewhere that election petitions are to be tried without delay. If the petitioner does not bring action within three months, then any elector can intervene and present a petition to the court and the court must recognize that right. Such elector may then take proceedings himself. But there is more than that in the act. Section 78 deals with the withdrawal and abatement of election petitions. Let us suppose that Mr. Page desires to abandon his petition. He cannot do so without the consent of the court; and more than that, upon his application to the court for leave to abandon the petition any elector may intervene again and take his place. Subsection 3 of section 78 reads:

On the hearing of the application for withdrawal, any person, who might have been a petitioner in respect of the election to which the petition relates, may apply to the court or trial judges to be substituted as a petitioner for the petitioner so desirous of withdrawing the petition.

I say therefore that Mr. Collins should have contested—perhaps that is not the best word to use—the election personally. But failing to do so, he still has the right to follow up the petition of Mr. Page; and if Mr. Page does not proceed, Collins can go ahead with that petition. Further, should Mr. Page seek to favour the elected candidate in any way, Mr. Collins has the right to intervene at any moment. It may be asked, what is the use of his intervening, seeing that the courts will not hear his case? —he will not be able to prove his case. That brings us to this question: If parliament in its wisdom has declared that certain evidence shall not be adduced before the courts on an election petition for the reason that it is not in the interest of public security that such evidence should be submitted, is parliament going to declare, in face of that decision. that evidence which before the courts would be inimical to public interest may be heard by parliament itself? In other words, is parliament going to say that what may not be done before the courts of justice, because it is not in the public interest that it should be done, may be done before a committee of parliament?

As I have already observed, it may be that the law as it stands is defective and does not afford the petitioner sufficient security or proper means to prove his case. All that might be true, but while the law endures we must follow it. Parliament can pass laws and rescind them, but as long as any law remains on the statute book it is the duty of parliament to respect it. In this case parliament should not receive evidence that cannot be received by a court of justice under that law.

If I understood the right hon. leader of the opposition correctly this afternoon, he said: All that could be decided on this election petition was that the election would be annulled, and if it were annulled it would be an injustice to Mr. Collins, because his right is to the seat. My answer is that section 49 of the statute provides:

On the trial of a petition under this act complaining of an undue return and claiming the seat for any person,—

As I have already said, this law is very badly drafted. It should state specifically that it is the right of a defeated candidate to claim the seat for himself. This section says so indirectly. Therefore Mr. Collins had the right to contest the election and claim the seat for himself. Having neglected to do so, is parliament obliged to come to his rescue now? I think he can still intervene on the original petition of Mr. Page.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I have a great admiration for the talents of my right hon. friend, but I think Mr. Collins might be permitted to intervene if Mr. Page does not proceed with his petition; true, he cannot intervene now. But he should have protected himself in time, and that he did not do so is not the fault of parliament. The time for presenting a petition having expired, this in fact would be a new petition asking for something absolutely foreign to the purpose of the original petition, for I take it that Mr. Page simply asked that the election be annulled. It is an unforunate situation, but Mr. Collins made it so himself.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. member permit this question? What in the world would have been the good of Mr. Collins entering a protest and claiming the seat when he knew that under the law he could not produce any evidence?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I think that is going a little too far. It was Mr. Collins' duty to do everything in his power to protect himself. Having done so, and having failed to get redress from the courts, he might have come to parliament and said: This law is inadequate, I could not get justice before the courts, and therefore I seek redress here.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. member say that before Mr. Collins should come to parliament he ought to launch himself on an obviously futile excursion in the courts, where he knows from the beginning that under the law he cannot be heard to give his evidence?

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I do not for one moment admit it is futile.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Minister of Justice admits it.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): Perhaps so. I do not know whether it is or not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is the whole point.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I am expressing my opinion, just as my right hon. friend expressed his. But even accepting his view, what is the consequence?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member is a lawyer and certainly is not dull of mind. Does he stand in his place and say he is not convinced that Mr. Collins would be forbidden to have his witnesses heard as to how they voted? He will not get up and say he has the slightest doubt about that.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I say it is the duty of Mr. Collins to go before the courts first of all and—

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member is dodging the question.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): —and after he has tried all other means without success, he might apply to parliament, although even then in my opinion he would be debarred from doing so because if by an election petition or by any other proceedings a man fails to secure redress before the courts because the law is inadequate, as in this case I would be ready to admit it is, that of itself does not give him a right to come before parliament, otherwise this parliament would be beseiged by men claiming redress because of the insufficiency of the law. On that ground they would claim a right to come here.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would not have risen but for that "hear, hear" from the Minister of Justice. Does not the hon. member see the point? We are not complaining of insufficiency of the law at all. We merely say that inasmuch as the law does not empower the courts to hear the evidence, it follows that this high court, which inherently always had the power, should exercise it.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): If the law does not permit the courts to hear the evidence, what is the matter with the law?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The law is all right.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): Then Mr. Collins has to stand by the law and make use of it, because the law was framed to meet exactly his case.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He is doing so.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): This is a case different in application but not in principle. He has lost the election, and he contends that he himself should have been declared elected, not his opponent. That is the case.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He won the election.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): He won the election, according to his contention.

Mr. MEIGHEN: According to the court's finding.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): Because he had the largest number of votes it does not mean he won the election. He won the election in fact just as the man I have already mentioned won his election.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, no.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): In other words, if winning the election means having a majority of the votes,—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Legally cast.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): —then he won the election properly. I take it for granted that the facts have been placed before us correctly. Then, just like Mr. Morin at St. Hyacinthe, he won the election because he had the majority of votes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He did not.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): He had the majority of the voters; not a majority of the legal ballots but a majority of the people.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is different.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): Yes, that is different. Is not that a flagrant injustice? That is an answer to what was said this afternoon. Hon. members asked where was the will of the people. I believe the will of the people must be respected, and the majority of the people who cast their votes were in favour of Mr. Collins. Assuming that to be right, the very same thing happened in the St. Hyacinthe case and in many other cases. The law creates injustices at times.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): In connection with this petition would not Mr. Collins have to prove that either Mr. Kennedy or his agent was guilty of some irregularity? Can he do that? Otherwise I should think the petition would be disallowed.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I think my hon. friend is in error. Any conspiracy on the part of Mr. Kennedy or anyone else which deprives Mr. Collins of his seat can be brought out.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): If you cannot establish it as having been done by Mr. Kennedy or by his agents, the petition is dismissed and Mr. Kennedy still has the seat.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): My opinion is that if any irregularity were proved, whether by Mr. Kennedy or by anyone else, the election would be annulled. From what I understood the right hon. leader of the opposition to say this afternoon, that was his contention also, although he said it could not be proved under the circumstances. That was his whole argument, but I do not know that he said that because Mr. Kennedy or his agents did not personally commit any illegality, the election could not be annulled. I think if illegality is proved on the part of any of the officials—because these officials are not the agents of Mr. Collins or Mr. Kennedy or Mr. Rae; they are electoral officials—it will be sufficient.

I do not think that is the point at issue now. The point is that Mr. Collins says, "I have a good case but I cannot prove it before the recognized courts of justice because the law will not permit me to do so." That is unfortunate, but if the law does not permit him to prove his case how can we remedy that? Why is Mr. Collins in the position of being unable to prove his case? It is because of the particular section of the law which says that you cannot force an elector to declare for whom he voted, and since you cannot do that you must conclude that the court will never know whether or not Mr. Collins had a majority, and therefore the petition cannot be maintained. I see the point; it is very unfortunate for Mr. Collins to be in that position, but that he is in such a position is not my fault or the fault of hon. members present; it is the fault of those who passed this act.

Now supposing you proceed before a committee of this House; is that committee to set aside the law and take into its hands the responsibility of saying, "True it is that before a court you cannot prove that; true it is that you cannot force these 111 men to declare for whom they voted; the law forbids it. Parliament in its wisdom has passed a law forbidding that, but we, a parliamentary committee, will go beyond the law and ask these people to give their evidence even though the law forbids." I do not think any committee of the House could do that; a committee of the House must follow the law, and I do not think any committee can go further than a court of justice can go. The difficulty, if there is one, is in the law itself and until the law is amended anyone who finds himself in the very unfortunate position of Mr. Collins will have to submit to his fate, because that is the law.

The point I am going to bring out now is one of form, and should probably have been mentioned earlier. I respectfully submit that this petition cannot be entertained by the House because it is not supported by an affidavit, and again because no deposit is made. Mr. Collins says, "If I could secure justice under that act I would not come before parliament, but I cannot do so." Parliament answers, "We can receive the petition, but we cannot give you any more privi-

10 p.m. lege than the law gives you, and under the law you are compelled first to make a deposit of $1,000 and in the next place to add to your petition an affidavit." Do hon. members realize the futility of presenting a petition to this House without an affidavit? It it were not for our faith in the word of hon. members opposite who have declared that the contents of the petition are true, that petition would be thrown into the basket. It has no meaning; it is purely and simply a declaration by somebody with no proof and no evidence in support of it. The Controverted Elections Act specifically says that an election petition must be supported by an affidavit. The reason for that is very obvious; it is that a proceeding of that kind must be a serious proceeding, and must be supported by an affidavit so that it will not be a joke and, on its face, will demonstrate the prima facie truth of the allegations. This affidavit does not here exist. Then the same law says that you must deposit $1,000, in order to prove your good faith, and in order to show that you are serious. That deposit was not made in this case. So that if this petition was received, Mr. Collins, who did not go before the courts when he should have done; Mr. Collins, who had the right himself to institute proceedings—Mr. Collins, because he has not taken care of his own interests when he should have done so, would receive better treatment before this House than the man who had looked after his own interests. I have an authority here which I quoted this afternoon. It is reported in Speakers' Decisions, by L. G. Desjardins, where at page 267 I find that on March 13, 1873, the Hon. James Cockburn, Speaker of this House, held as follows on an election petition:

> In my opinion this petition being an election petition, and not having been accompanied by the required security to answer costs, is a void petition, and cannot be made the ground work of a motion.

Therefore at that time it was incumbent upon every petitioner who wanted parliament seized of an election petition to accompany his petition with a deposit of $1,000, and failing to do that, his petition was dismissed. That law has been changed, but this provision by which the petitioner was compelled to make a deposit of $1,000 was reintroduced in the Controverted Elections Act, and therefore we have the same law on that subject to-day that we had before. What is the ground for Mr. Collins' contending that he should be put in a more favourable position before parliament than any other petitioner has been in since confederation?

I have nothing to add, Mr. Speaker. I have been strongly impressed by the arguments that Mr. Collins may be suffering an injustice; but parliament cannot place itself in the position of a tribunal. The laws of the land have been passed to give justice to the suffering. It may be that the laws are not effective; they may be unjust, unwise, and it may be that Mr. Collins is suffering under those laws, but in my humble opinion we must follow the law. Mr. Collins could have claimed the seat for himself. He could have adopted many means of redress which he failed to adopt, and because he failed to adopt them, he now comes before parliament and wants parliament to constitute itself a court of justice. I am far from being an expert in this matter; indeed, I am sorry to say that I have not studied it very deeply, but speaking in a superficial way I must admit that I cannot see how and why parliament should come to the aid of this gentleman when there is a law providing for his case. If that law is not sufficient, it is the law just the same for Mr. Collins as for everybody else, and he must submit to it. Mr. Collins can get something under that law even at this stage. He can get the election annulled. True, that will not give him the seat to which he thinks he is entitled, but he can get the election annulled, and that is about all he can get at this stage. Then another election will be held, and if the electors declare that Mr. Collins is their choice, he will be elected.

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): Before the motion is put I would like to make a few observations, although I hesitate to do so after hearing the legal talent of this House this afternoon. Of course the legal minds do not agree as to what the election laws of this country consist of, and probably they might not agree with what I have to say, but I intend to discuss this matter from a common sense standpoint. I intend to discuss it as an ordinary individual who has not had the privileges or the opportunities of studying the legal aspects of this question.

We are asked to endorse the petition presented by a man by the name of Collins, who claims that he has a right to a seat in this House for the constituency of Peace River. The Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) this afternoon established to my satisfaction that the hearing of controversies in regard to elections was taken out of the hands of parliament and put in the hands of the courts, and very wisely, I think. If we take the history of parliaments, we will find that the government in power always has a majority on the committees. Of course, conditions are changing, and things are balancing more evenly now than they used to do in the olden days on account of the group system having come into being. But I say that if we were to accept this petition and allow the seat of every member of parliament to be at the mercy of political partisanship in this country, it would be one of the greatest injustices that ever was done in any country. Parliament took these questions out of its hands itself, and put them in the hands of the courts. Why? Because governments with a majority on the committee could whitewash or persecute any man as they saw fit. I do not see any other reason why parliament should have divested itself of jurisdiction in these matters.

We are now asked to accept this petition and refer it to the committee on Privileges and Elections. From all the indications we have had in the last few days, we are in the dying days of the session. Every man almost expresses that opinion. The hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett), when the bill for the Montreal harbour loan was before the House, said that if we were not in the dying days of the session he would move that the affairs of the Montreal harbour commission be investigated by the Public Accounts committee of this House. Now if we are in the dying days of the session can any man who looks at this question from a practical viewpoint tell me what we can do before the committee on Privileges and Elections if we receive this petition?

The Solicitor General made the statement this afternoon that a man does not have to say how he voted. The only power that could compel him to divulge that probably is parliament. Suppose this petition is received, that witnesses from all over the Peace River riding are brought before the committee and they refuse to give evidence? We have nothing on the order paper for this House to be going on with. All the legislation has been passed; only a few estimates remain. What are the members of parliament going to do? If witnesses refuse to answer before the committee, a report will be made to the House, and this House will judge whether the witnesses should give evidence or not. Suppose a witness still refuses after he has been ordered to give evidence by this House; what is there for us to do? Put him in the tower. How are we going to keep him in the tower? I was in the tower the other day, and I see there are no locks on the doors, and no doors in some places; the windows are covered with canvas. How are they going to keep him there? The clock is not running.

Mr. CAHAN: Why not put him in the county gaol?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I think the suggestions offered by the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) are absolutely logical and sound. Let the courts decide the fate of the candidates in the election in the Peace River district; then if the judges who hear the case make a report to you Mr. Speaker, and you report it to the House, let the House take action next session. I feel sorry to hear the assertions and insinuations that have been made in regard to the present member for Peace River. He is not responsible for any of the irregularities referred to in the Robb case or any other case.

An hon. MEMBER: Nobody said he was.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: You will have a chance to speak when I am through. The member for Peace River has no connection with the irregularities. A number of votes are supposed to have been transferred from Collins to Rae, the result being to give Kennedy the seat. What about the ballot boxes that were never opened? How about the irregularities in the other polls? If we had a thorough investigation it would probably be discovered that there have been frauds, and irregularities in other polls. I claim that under the present circumstances the member for Peace River cannot resign according to the law, and I think that law was wisely framed. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) put the matter very tersely when he said: There are charges against the member for Peace River. If the law permitted him to resign and those charges were still pending against him, he would be placed in a very awkward position.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to allow the fate of the members of parliament to be at the mercy of partisanship—and sometimes not any too scrupulous partisanship—it is going to create a greater injustice than would result in our refusing this petition and allowing the courts to take action to decide it.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Labour): There are certain points to which I would like to refer before the debate closes. I feel that I should say a word in regard to this matter, partly because I think everything that can be said in defence of a member of this House who is not in a position to stand up in his place and defend himself should be stated by other hon. members. No man on either side of this House will contend for one moment that the gentleman who has been returned by the regular electoral officers for Peace River in the last election has not been returned in the same manner and by similar machinery to that by which all the other members of the House are returned. We start out with that as a basis of our discussion. The officers appointed by the crown have found him to be entitled to the seat for that constituency, and I must say that the onus is very strongly against anyone who asserts the contrary.

What is the object of the present petition? Hon. members will bear in mind that on the 6th of May the Speaker of this House, after a very exhaustive argument, declared that the petition which was then offered to the House should not be received. The reasons why it should not be received were put very clearly by Mr. Speaker at that time. Those reasons were perfectly correct, and I submit must have carried conviction to hon. members on all sides of the House. The reasons were that years ago this House in its wisdom decided that controverted elections, and the trial of the question as to the right of a member to hold a seat in this House, should be heard by some tribunal other than that made up of his fellow members in this House. Surely nobody here is going to argue that we should go back to the old law, in existence before the Controverted Elections Act was passed, which placed the trial of any member against whom a petition might be lodged in the hands of his friends and his opponents in this House. Nobody will argue seriously that we want to go back and make this a tribunal for trying whether or not my friend or my political opponent shall sit in this chamber or remain out of it. That is the reason why all the authorities make it abundantly clear that a petition which attacks the right of a member to hold his seat shall not be received. We can either try in this House the right of our fellows to hold a seat or we cannot. If we cannot try them, why make an abortive attempt to do so? Why receive a petition that is going to cast a reflection upon the right of any member to hold a seat in this House if we have not the right to proceed and try it out? Will any of my hon. friends argue that they desire to go back to the old system of having this House turned into an election court? Because that is what it amounts to. We got away from that years ago, and I submit, Mr. Speaker, with great respect, that this House is not going to take any steps which would mean a return to that old procedure. That is the reason why a petition which has for its object the trial of the right of any member to hold his seat in the House—apart from disqualification such as has been referred to, penal offence or anything of that kind—cannot be received here. When the petition is tendered and examined by the Clerk of Petitions, the examination is for the purpose of seeing whether or not it is a petition proper to be received. If we cannot deal with it then it should not be received.

Let us consider what the object of this petition is, I ask my hon. friends who argue that it should not be received: What does this petition ask for? It is true it complains about the conduct of the electoral officers, but what is the kernel of the whole petition? It states:

> Your petitioner prays that the House of Commons will investigate the conduct of the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada, the returning officer for the electoral district of Peace River, Edward Henry Sheppard, aforesaid, the deputy returning officer, Peter A. Robb, aforesaid, and such other officer or officers as may be necessary in connection with the establishment of a polling place at Brule Mines poll No. 4 aforesaid and the taking of, the counting and recounting the votes cast at such poll in the electoral district of Peace River aforesaid, and that such Chief Electoral Officer, returning officer, deputy returning officer or other officer or officers be directed to take such action as may be requisite and necessary to secure the return to the House of Commons of the candidate who secured the greatest number of votes cast by the electors of the electoral district of Peace River on the 29th of October, 1925, aforesaid.

That means that the petitioner asks this House to try out the question of which candidate received the greatest number of votes and who is entitled to a seat in this House. It means that if the House finds that Collins received more votes than Kennedy, the officer should be instructed to make a declaration declaring Collins and not Kennedy entitled to the seat. That is exactly what this House decided on the 6th May it could not do, and that was the reason why the petition which was then presented could not be received.

When you come to size up the arguments of hon. gentlemen who argue that this petition should be received, they say that it should be received because it asks for an inquiry into the conduct of officials who conducted the election. It is true it asks for that; but in addition and as the main part of the petition it asks that it should be found that the candidate who received the greatest number of votes should be declared elected. That means possibly that somebody who now has the seat should be put out and somebody else put in. What was the objection before to receiving the petition? It was that it violated the rules and therefore was not properly receivable. Do my hon. friends who argued on behalf of the petition which was declared bad on the sixth May, say that by tacking on to a bad petition some clauses which are good they are going to make the part of the petition which was bad on the 6th May, good now? That is what this means. It is on account of the bad parts in the petition, the parts that are not receivable, that it could not be received before. Unless the whole petition can be received, it cannot be received at all. You cannot receive part of it; if there is in that petition anything that is objectionable and cannot be received, the whole petition must be rejected.

I took care to look at the date of this petition and I find that on the outside of it is dated the 28th May, 1926, twenty-two days after the previous decision. Nobody can read this petition without realizing what the petitioner had in mind. It is quite clear, when you take the date into consideration, that the petition seeks just what I have already said—by tacking on to the objecionable part something that is unobjectionable, to get in the whole petition. That cannot be done.

A great deal has been said about the fact that in the election court you cannot try out the question of how anybody voted. The section of the act referred to is section 221, which says that no person shall be asked how he voted. What was the object of that? It was made perfectly clear by a very learned judge in the Haldimand case. I quote it in his words, which are much better than any I could see:

> As to the petitioner's claim for the seat, it must be dismissed.
> The evidence of thirty-six voters to show how they had voted for Colter at polling division, No. 2, Oneida, was properly held not admissible by the learned judge at the trial.
> Had the learned judge permitted the inquiry to have been prosecuted as the petitioner desired, it would have in effect disclosed not merely how those willing to tell had voted, but practically how every man at the poll had voted, because if out of one hundred votes fifty are found to have voted for A and fifty for B and the fifty who voted for A are called and expressing their willingness to tell do tell that they voted for him, it at once becomes known who the fifty were who voted for B.

Let us take another example where the majority in the election is small. I know my hon. friends are pursuing this very seriously with a view possibly to remedying a defect which they suggest now exists in the law. I ask them to consider this: Does any defect exist in the law as it now stands? Does any hon. member suggest that it would be in the interest of justice or of candidates who occasionally have to fight election contests to have the law changed? Supposing a man is elected by a majority of five, and supposing that at a certain poll he is credited with twenty votes and thirty people come in and say: I voted for that candidate. If that were to be allowed, in many cases where there are not many votes in a poll it would be possible to get enough electors whose names are on the lists to come in and pledge their oaths that they voted for this man and he lost his seat. That is not what the legislators intended. That is the very evil which the people who framed this act intended to avoid. The right of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) or of any other hon. member to hold his seat should not depend upon whether or not ten, fifteen or twenty people are willing to come in and swear that in a certain polling division they cast their votes in one way and the record would show that they had not been counted. That is the object of the law and it is made very clear in the decision of Mr. Justice Taschereau in the Haldimand case, volume 15, of the Supreme Court reports.

Mr. CAHAN: Do I understand my hon. friend to suppose that the purpose of the act was to make perjury in election cases effective?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No. My contention is exactly the reverse of that, and if my hon. friend were listening he would know that. The object of that section was to render perjury ineffective, but if my hon. friend had his way he would make perjury operative, for you could get enough people to come in and swear that they had voted in a particular way and the member of parliament petitioned against would not be able to hold his seat. Indeed, no member could hold his seat under such circumstances.

Mr. CAHAN: Why should that principle not apply to any ordinary civil or criminal case?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is entirely a different situation, and the principle would have been made to apply to any ordinary civil case if the framers of any act relating to such a case had taken the same view of it as was clearly taken from this statute in reference to election cases. That is the answer. There is no question about it. Is the right of any member to be jeopardized by allowing fifteen or twenty men in some polling subdivision to come and swear that they voted for his opponent when he appears to have received only ten votes?

Mr. CAHAN: If you are going to admit, as a sufficient ground for excluding evidence, the possibility of fifty men perjuring themselves, why should you not exclude all evidence of corrupt practices for fear that some five, or ten or fifty men may go into the election court and commit perjury?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I suggest that would have been a good question to have asked the framers of the act when it was being considered, and I venture to say that if such a question had been asked the answer would have been just what I have given.

Mr. CAHAN: I make the suggestion to show the utter absurdity of the hypothesis which the hon. gentleman is building up.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Well, I have been endeavouring to show, and I think I have shown, what I must say with great respect appears to me the utter and total absurdity of the position my hon. friend takes. That is the unfortunate impasse to which we come. I wonder that the hon. gentleman, with his sincere desire to do justice to the member for Peace River, should suggest that that hon. gentleman's right to sit in this House, or for that matter the right of any other hon. gentleman, should be jeopardized in the way I have indicated. If, however, that is the view my hon. friend takes, it certainly is in direct opposition to the view held by those who framed the law as is apparent in the statute itself. There is no doubt about that.

But there is another cogent reason why we should be very careful not to take the step suggested in this case. As I observed before, either we have the right to try the question or we have not. I do not think my hon. friend will assert that we have; I do not think that he and his colleagues would propose our going back to the trial of election petitions in this House. I am sure he would not contend for that. Then why on earth should they try to drag an election into this House in a way which is in contravention of the law? It is quite clear that there are certain remedies that were intended by way of appeal to this House, but I would ask hon. gentlemen, who have contended that this House might try this case, why it is that section 61 of the Controverted Elections Act was provided. Section 61 reads:

> Trial judges may, at the same time, make a special report to the Speaker as to any matters arising in the course of the trial an account of which ought, in their judgment, be submitted to the House of Commons.

And various other sections of the act show that what the framers intended was that election matters should not come before the House of Commons until they had been disposed of in the courts.

Mr. CAHAN: My hon. friend is assuming the whole case. The report which might be made by the judge could not refer to any evidence before him whatsoever; it could have reference only to the suggestion of counsel that, if the law admitted the evidence, such and such things might have been proved.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend is coming to the point which I should have reached by this time if he had waited. He refers to the right of the courts to ask electors how they had voted. That was not the intention of those who framed the act; it was expressly prohibited for the reason I have mentioned. The framers of the act desired that the sanctity of the ballot should be preserved, and it was undoubtedly apprehended that to allow electors to be examined in this way would be to nullify that object. Does my hon. friend suggest for a moment that after parliament had delegated to the courts the right to try election petitions, parliament should then undertake to deal with such matters? Section 226 of the Dominion Elections Act provides:

> No person who has voted at an election shall, in any legal proceeding questioning the election or return, be required to state for whom he voted.

If therefore the courts, to whom parliament delegated the right to try controverted elections, are expressly forbidden by parliament to ask any elector how he voted, will anyone contend that parliament, having divested itself of the right to try such cases should be at liberty to put that very question to electors?

Mr. CAHAN: Cannot my hon. friend distinguish between the proceedings in an election court dealing with allegations of corrupt practices on the part of the candidate or his agent, and entirely different proceedings before the high court of parliament or its committee dealing with frauds committed by the officials and employees of parliament? I can well understand that in relation to corrupt practices by the candidate or his agent, the court should not be allowed to inquire as to whether those corrupt practices were effective or not. But in dealing with frauds committed by an employee of parliament it is essential to ascertain whether the votes of electors in any particular polling section were given effect to or whether by such frauds as here alleged they were precluded from having effect.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend still fails to get the point.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Just a moment. The tribunal which has jurisdiction to try election petitions cannot ask any elector how he voted. My hon. friend suggests, however, that the parliament which created that tribunal, and thereby divested itself of jurisdiction in the matter, should still have the right to exercise such jurisdiction. Parliament has the right to inquire into the conduct of its electoral officers. In doing so there might be no great hardship, apart from the violation of the sanctity of the ballot, in asking electors how they voted, because the abuse I have suggested could not arise; a dozen men coming in and swearing they voted in a certain way would not affect the right of the member to hold his seat, because only the guilt or innocence of the election officers would be under review. All that parliament can try is the guilt or innocence of its officials. That is the reason we cannot receive this petition.

Mr. CAHAN: May I interrupt the hon. minister once more? I can well understand why the statute may provide, and properly provide, that you shall not inquire into how a man voted when the issue is whether the candidate or his agents were guilty of corrupt practices, because it is utterly irrelevant to that issue if a voter is corrupted. On the other issue, as to whether the officials of this parliament fraudulently switched ballots, the issue of corruption by the candidate or his agents does not enter, and it is absolutely necessary that parliament should know whether its officials have been guilty of that fraud.

Mr. RINFRET: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order, and I do so with no disrespect to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, for whom I have much esteem. But the hon. gentleman is allowed to speak only once on this motion, and therefore I do not think he is in order at all when every ten minutes he interjects short speeches into the argument of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. CAHAN: I apologize. I thought the hon. minister rather invited it by the way he advanced his argument.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have little more to say on the question, Mr. Speaker. Let me refer for a moment to the point that was sought to be made out of the Donaldson election in Saskatchewan. Parliament intervened there because the province had just been formed and, as the judges made perfectly clear at the time, the courts for the trial of those actions had not then been established.

Now, Mr. Speaker, for the various reasons I have submitted I think it is quite clear that no electors coming in and swearing how they have voted should be permitted to affect the right of a member to hold his seat. The real object of this petition is the same as that of the petition which was rejected on May 6, and therefore I say it should not be received. I urge hon. members to think very seriously before they insist that parliament should again constitute itself into a court to try election petitions and the right of their fellow-members to their seats in this House.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the vote now to be taken will register the estimation of this House of the value of decency and common justice. The debate has proceeded long, and a large number of speeches have been delivered, mostly, not unnaturally, by lawyers, but if I may again describe the character of the question we are called upon to decide, I would say it is one of the simplest, one of the plainest postulates ever laid before parliament for its verdict. There is no complication, there is nothing difficult, there is no haze; it is a matter which admits the clearest, and the simplest reasoning that the human mind could invite.

I know that members, especially able members, whether of the legal fraternity or not, can always piece together long, plausible sentences tending to bend the mind against the most obvious conclusion. I know that very often lawyers do so and have to do so in the discharge of their professional duties, when they have no case which appeals to their own sense of logic and of right. I know quite well that if a proposition were laid before this House asking us to declare that the earth is flat or that Aristotle wrote the plays of Shakespeare, there could be hon. members found here, many of them, who could tie one sentence to another, designed in the aggregate either to confuse the intellect or to bend it to some foolish conclusion. With all respect, I say this is the sum and substance of everything that has been argued against this resolution. I do not think there is any hon. member, I care not on what side of the House he sits, however biased he may be, who if he addresses his mind to the subject at all, can possibly vote in ignorance of the fundamental right on this motion, he cannot do so. Every hon. member, if he has addressed his mind to it at all and votes against this resolution, votes against it knowing he is doing a gross and cruel injustice which elsewhere can find no remedy whatever.

If hon. members opposite are right in all this argument they have presented, what is Mr. Collins going to do? Does any hon. member doubt he has been wronged? Nobody suggests he has not been wronged—grossly wronged. Does any hon. member doubt the people of Peace River have been wronged? Did they get in this House the representative they voted for under the law of the land?

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They did not. What is Peace River going to do if we vote down this motion? Mr. Collins and the constituency of Peace River are just told to go back home and take it out in weeping. We can put it in any language we like, but that is all they can do, and there never was a time when by any act of Mr. Collins he could have bettered his position, nothing in the world he could have done which would have enabled him to get redress.

I set about again to seek to drive home these very obvious facts, these very manifest truths. It is generally admitted that the form of the petition is right; Collins is before this House by petition and averring certain statements which, if true, show that he was elected on October 29 last. He does not present his evidence to this House; he is not allowed to do so. He does not send a cheque for $1,000; he does not attach an affidavit. By our rules he is not allowed to do anything of the kind; if he does so we cannot let his petition pass inside our door. I wonder if anyone would suggest that he could have done so? One has only to take the word of hon. gentlemen opposite; I think the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) or, if not, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) said nothing could be attached to a petition. All he can do is simply present his petition; nothing else is within his power. The Solicitor General nods approval; then why does the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Denis) take half an hour in this House to complain that there is no cheque and no affidavit attached, and why do some other hon. gentlemen get up and say, "We know he says all these things, but we have not the evidence"? We are not asked at this time to consider the evidence at all. The only thing asked by this House is a writ of summons. We will be asked to submit this petition to a committee, but we are not even that far yet; we cannot submit it to a committee to consider the evidence until our petition is received. We ask now only that it be received. But if there is anyone who doubts whether Collins could have done more, let him read Bourinot at page 235, where it is plainly stated that a petition must not have appendices attached thereto, whether in the shape of letters, affidavits, certificates, statistical statements or documents of any character whatever. Still we have been asked to listen to long dissertations on the failure of Collins to present a cheque for $1,000 and to do something else. It may be that afterwards, when this is before the committee, it may ask Mr. Collins to put up security. I am not arguing that now; up to the present he has done everything he can do, and all he is asking is a chance to proceed.

It has been suggested that Mr. Collins has not done everything possible; that he should have gone before the courts; that he should have entered protest, or had someone else enter a protest. Hon. members again suggest that if he forgot to do so or was remiss or neglectful in any way he should now come in under Page's petition, and seek redress in that way. If hon. gentlemen will listen it will not take five minutes to dispose of that argument, because it is nothing but sophistry. Collins could not go before the court; he could go before it, it is true; he could go in there with the certainty of being thrown out immediately. No one suggests that he could get any further; no hon. member of this House has risen to suggest that Collins could do more than go through the obvious stupid futility of presenting his protest in court, bringing his 111 witnesses and being told to go home, that they could not be heard.

The Minister of Justice distinctly admitted —and after having admitted it I was astonished when he invited this House to vote against this resolution—that no court could hear one of these 111 witnesses; they could not say a word. Then what is the sense of telling Mr. Collins he should have gone to court? Where is Mr. Collins in court if he cannot produce his witnesses and have them heard? He might as well go to the police court in Ottawa; we might as well tell him to go before a court in Jamaica. It is all humbug and mockery for anyone to say that Mr. Collins should have gone to court. Mr. Collins had the advice of his counsel, which everyone in this House admits was sound, that all he could do was get into court and get out again at the instance of the presiding judge. And does the Solicitor General say that before we can listen to any petition from Mr. Collins he should first run around that silly circle when he can get nowhere, and then come back and tell us that he went there anyway even though he got no results? What is the meaning of an argument like that? Once we admit that Collins could do nothing in court why do we tell him he should have gone to court? Will anyone answer that question?

The Solicitor General says it is true that he could not have got his witnesses in the box; he would not have been allowed to prove his case, because there is no other way of proving it except by the evidence of these witnesses. It is true he could not have done that, but the Solicitor General says he might have got a report from the judge to Mr. Speaker after it was all over. He might, and he might not. The judge is not bound to make a report. Supposing he did not; and personally I do not think he would. Supposing he did not; what would be the good of Mr. Collins going there? Are we to tell him to go there on the chance that the judge may make a report to this House? Supposing the judge does report that Collins' counsel got up and asserted in court that he would like to call these 111 witnesses to prove that they voted for Collins, adding that as judge he did not allow him to do so because under the law it was impossible. Supposing the judge does that; that is all he can do. Are we then one whit wiser than before? Not at all; we have gone around the circle and landed back at the starting place.

Mr. CANNON: Will my hon. friend allow me one question? If such a thing happens is it not a fact that this matter would then be brought before the House in the proper, regular way?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Solicitor General says that if such a thing happens it will be brought before the House, because the judge makes a report to Mr. Speaker. What can then be done? The matter will be brought before the House then for the amendment of the law, but not to help Collins; Mr. Speaker could not help Collins. Does anyone imagine that because a judge reports that a lawyer offered the evidence of 111 men who, he claimed, voted for Collins, but could get no witnesses heard, Mr. Speaker on the face of that report would say Collins should be elected? Why it might be that Mr. Speaker would think these men would not have given such evidence at all.

Mr. CANNON: What about the House?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The House might amend the law later and compel the judge to hear the evidence, but that is all the House could do.

Mr. CANNON: The law says much more than that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The law says Mr. Speaker may amend the report; certainly he may, but he will not do it unless the judge reports there is evidence upon which it should be done, and the judge cannot hear that evidence. The whole plea has been a sort of plausible sequence of sophistry in order to get some cause for delay. Delay is just as good as victory for hon. gentlemen opposite; delay is victory, and one suits as well as the other. Tell Collins to go to the court; bring his 111 witnesses; put his hand in his pocket and pay their expenses, when he knows it is just humbug and nonsense, and that perhaps the judge will make some report to this House, and we may amend the law. That would be a fine remedy for Mr. Collins, wouldn't it?

11 p.m.

Mr. CANNON: Would my right hon. friend allow me one more question?

Mr. McGIBBON: You did not allow any questions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will allow the question.

Mr. CANNON: If the House could not do more than my right hon. friend now states, why ask its members to do what they can not do according to his own interpretation of the law?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly the House then could hear the case, just as the House can hear it now. Is any hon. gentleman going to say that we were emptied of jurisdiction by our Controverted Elections Act, but that if the fellow goes to court, goes around in a blind circle, and gets back here, then our jurisdiction is restored? Why, the thing is foolish.

Another hon. gentleman says: Collins might go to court and be denied the right to produce witnesses and get them heard; that is very true, he says, but if it is true, it is "too bad." He is ready to admit that it is too bad, "but he says that Collins must put up with it because it is the law and Collins cannot get any higher than the law; and he tries to make out that we are complaining of the law. We are not complaining of the law at all. We want the law applied; we want the law applied in the only way it can be applied. What we say is this: that if Collins has a court to which he can go and produce his witnesses, then under our constitution and practice we should not hear Collins at all; but that as regards matters affecting this House if it is true as admitted that we have not given him a court, then our original jurisdiction remains and we must hear Collins appeal. Certainly if Collinst complains of the law in that it affects only his private right and does not go to the question of the election of a member of this House—for instance, his right to a horse or a house—he cannot come to parliament and expect redress in a matter of that kind. But what Collins says is: "I was elected to your parliament; I cannot show that I was elected in any court you have provided; I have come to you, to your original jurisdiction, and I say to you, inasmuch as you have not given me a court I can go to, I come to the high court of parliament itself, which from time immemorial has redressed wrongs of this kind." The law we argue for is this: That as there is nowhere else he can go to and produce his witnesses and get his testimony heard and get his verdict, he can come to this House. The only argument against such a claim in respect of an election is that we have provided him with a court. When that argument falls down because there is no court it must be admitted, of course, that the jurisdiction of this House still exists. I could go through cases one after the other, but nobody needs a case. Is anybody going to argue that a man cannot get redress from this parliament when there is no other place in the world where he can get redress, that he simply has to suffer under it; that if any officer of this House puts his hands in the dead of night into a ballot box and steals 111 ballots, destroys them, and plants 111 more of his own, the man who is the victim of that fraud has no redress at all? Is anybody going to say that?

Now I ask any hon. member to suggest in the mildest, the most modest way he can do so, what in the world Collins can do if we refuse this petition? What can he do? There is not a member will dare to suggest that there is any course open to him whatever. Hon. members who know that, when they rise from their seats on this vote, know that voting against this motion they deny to Collins the only redress he has, and they say to every deputy returning officer in this country: "You can go and defraud a candidate; you can rob him of what he earns; you can rape a constituency, and if you do you may be punished for it in the courts, but the candidate will never get redress in this Dominion of Canada."

Someone suggests that what we ought to be here for is for a change in the law. We are not complaining of the law. The law is sufficient. We want the law applied. We want admission to the only court that is left us.

Now it is argued: Oh, if you did get Collins here, he could not do anything, because if Collins came before a committee of parliament his witnesses could not be heard even there. The argument of the Minister of Justice was this: The reason voters cannot be heard before a court of law is that it is against public policy that a witness should be allowed to divulge for whom he voted, and if it is against public policy to allow him to divulge it to any court of law, he argues that it is against public policy to allow him to divulge it before a committee of this House. Let me examine that argument.

What I stated before was this, that we had a statute which provided that in any legal proceeding questioning the return of a member, a witness could not be heard to say how he voted, and that the reason the judges had held that, though the law said he could not be "required" to say how he voted, it really meant that he could not be "allowed" to say how he voted, was that the foundation of that statute was public policy, and not the privilege of the voter. Then hon. members argue from that, that if it is public policy to prevent him in a court of civil law telling how he voted, it would be public policy to prevent him telling it before a committee of this House. Maybe it would, but the fact is, we have not prevented it. All we have done is to prevent it before a court of law, because we deemed it good public policy. Very good. Then he cannot go before a court of law, but until this House says he cannot go before a committee of this House, he still can go there and give his evidence, and be compellable to do so. Do hon. members follow me? In a word, the witness is not restrained at all unless he is expressly restrained by a statute. He is not protected at all unless he is specifically protected by a statute. He is not protected and he is not restrained before a committee by any statute but only in a legal proceeding questioning a return. Nor is he restrained or protected in a criminal court—only in a legal proceeding questioning a return.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Elliott) argued that a voter was restrained from telling how he voted for fear he would commit perjury, for fear there would be quite a number—someone says the majority—who could be persuaded, suborned to come before the court and commit perjury, and thereby unseat an elected candidate. Why, what does the hon. member mean? Does he mean to suggest we have passed a law in this House which declares that no man can say how he voted for fear he might lie in saying so? That is really what the minister argued. I do not know what was in the back of his head.

We said: The law stands this way. A voter can disclose his secret in a criminal court, but not in a civil court in a proceeding questioning a return. Why? Because the secrecy of the ballot is important, but it is not so important as the prevention of crime. Therefore we compel him to reveal his secret in a criminal court. But we say there is little or nothing to be gained by his giving such evidence in a legal proceeding questioning his return sufficient to warrant letting him do so. Why? For the simple reason that everything we relegated to the courts to try in relation to elections is such that it does not matter a whit how anybody says he voted. For instance, suppose there is a charge to be tried in an election protest, that a candidate or his agent bribed a voter. How the bribed man voted is not pertinent to that issue at all. It does not matter if he voted against the way he was bribed, the election is void all the same. In a word, in all these matters relegated to the court in a civil proceeding the value of the evidence as to how the voter voted is so slight that the importance of secrecy of the ballot was greater than the value of such evidence. But in a criminal proceeding parliament naturally has resolved that the prevention of crime is of far more importance than the secrecy of the ballot, and therefore no man can protect himself and refuse to give evidence as to how he voted. The matter is entirely plain.

Wherever a question of fraud comes up, in which it is necessary to know how a man voted in order to reveal the fraud, there should be no law protecting any witness even in a civil court from declaring how he voted, and there should be no law to prevent a judge compelling him to say how he voted. You say, "Why not then amend the law?" Very well, amend the law, I do not care, but you cannot amend it to help Collins. There was the state of the law during the 40 days wherein Collins had the right to take legal action. He had to act under the law as it was: under that law he could not give his evidence to court. He had therefore no redress. He could not get anything, so all he could do was to come to this House. We could amend the law now, but that would not enable him to go to court now. Collins has done everything it was in his power to do. The only other thing he could have done was to run a futile race around the courts, knowing he would land just where he had begun, with all his expenses gone.

Was it not the Solicitor General who suggested that the witnesses could not be heard to give evidence before a committee of parliament, because the law said that for public reasons they could not give evidence in legal proceedings? A hearing before a committee of parliament, in the first place, is not a legal proceeding. I questioned my hon. friend. "Were not the witnesses giving evidence in the West Huron case asked as to how they voted?" Certainly they were, and they were compelled to answer. My hon. friend admitted that, but what was his explanation? "Oh," he said, "that was in 1897, and this law which declares they should not be compelled to give evidence was not passed until later on." But as soon as he was told from this side of the House that it had been the law for years before, he began to talk about the weather; he changed the subject. It has been the low since 1874. I have the statute here.

Mr. CANNON: This section where it is to be found now was put in in 1900, and not before.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where it is to be found now? I would like to know what the difference is just where it is found.

Mr. CANNON: It might have been in another law.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is in the Election Act, and reads:

> No person who has voted at an election shall in any legal proceeding questioning the election or return be required to state for whom he voted.

That is in the Dominion Elections Act passed in 1874. Thirty years after that act was passed witnesses were compelled to appear before the election committee of this House and disclose for whom they voted, for the manifest reason that the purity of an election is of infinitely more importance than the secrecy of the vote.

Mr. CANNON: I do not think we disagree on that point at all. I said that the clause was not in the Controverted Elections Act before 1900, and my right hon. friend is quoting from the Dominion Elections Act.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This illustrates what I said about being able to piece together sentences tending to confuse. Does it matter where it is so long as it is the law of Canada? Really I ought to thank the Solicitor General for giving such a vivid illustration of the kind of sophistry I have been seeking to expose to this House. There is the law. No man could give the evidence before 1874 in a legal proceeding, but when that law was passed and for thirty years afterward they gave evidence before a committee of the House and were compelled to do so. This disposes of the only contention made by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. CANNON: The fact that a committee would have allowed such evidence does not change the law, does it? It is a matter of interpretation and nothing else, whether I am right or whether my right hon. friend is right.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I suggest that if there had been any way of preventing those men in the West Huron case from giving their evidence, there were lawyers enough then on the Liberal side to prevent it. I do not think the Solicitor General would say that the legal lights of the day in the year 1897—and he knows who they were as well as I do—were not wise enough to protest, with that provision in the statute before them, if they had the remotest chance of success in a proceeding before the committee. It is a parliamentary proceeding; it is not a legal proceeding within the meaning of the Controverted Elections Act or of the Dominion Elections Act, and our practice for fifty years has shown my statement to be true. Therefore Collins could go before a committee of this House and could adduce his evidence. The committee could compel the witnesses to give the evidence. It is clothed with plenary power to do so, and that plenary power does not exist anywhere else.

The hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) says it will be a very dangerous precedent if we allow Collins now by petition to be heard in respect of this allegation that though elected, though he had the largest number of legal votes cast, he was defrauded by an officer of this House who stole his ballots—the hon. member says that if we allow him to come here with this petition there is nothing to hinder any candidate who loses an election in the future from coming and by stating in his petition that an officer of this House stole some of his votes, compelling our committee to hear his case. Let us inquire about that. We receive this petition and afterwards refer it to the committee. The only precedent we thus establish is this: that if a candidate avers that he got the largest number of votes, that votes were stolen from him by an officer of this House and others fraudulently substituted therefor, and refers this parliament to records of the court of the land to establish every word of his petition, then we would be bound by this precedent to receive and hear that petition. Is that a serious thing? I do not say that every time a petitioner comes and alleges, merely on his own ipse dixit, that somebody else stole his votes we should have to hear his claim, even though there is nowhere else he can go; I do not argue that point. But I say that when a man comes and points out official evidence of this kind to us, we cannot avoid looking at it. In this case Collins says: "There are the records of the court; these records are the property of parliament just as much as of the Canadian people. On these records I say that I was robbed of the seat for Peace River; my ballots were stolen by an officer of parliament." I say such a man can come to parliament and has a right to be heard. We can never in conscience deny him a hearing until we can point him to a court which is ready and able to hear his evidence.

Mr. POWER: Admitting for the sake of argument that we can give him a hearing, on his statement of facts does my right hon. friend argue that we can turn one man out of the seat and put someone else in?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Undoubtedly.

Mr. POWER: Simply because he makes evidence that in a certain court of justice somewhere or other—

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, no.

Mr. POWER: —someone misused the ballot.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No. He has to prove to the satisfaction of the committee the allegations of the petition. All he wants is the right to do so, and hon. members, one after the other, are standing up and arguing and trying to get hon. members to vote to deny him that right. The consequence of such denial is simply this, that a man, however estimable he may be, who was not elected but who is returned as elected because the returning officer accepts as true the count of a criminal although it is afterwards disclosed that the criminal made a fraudulent return, must remain in possession of that seat.

Mr. POWER: Is there in the records of the court as produced before parliament anything to show that owing to the acts of Robb, Kennedy is in the seat which should belong to Collins?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly.

Mr. POWER: What is it? That 100 men were not allowed to vote as they wanted to vote.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They were allowed to vote.

Mr. POWER: I mean the other way about.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The records show that they did vote but that our officer stole their votes from the ballot box.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. POWER: Suppose we admit that for the sake of argument. Is there in the petition anything to show that those votes having been stolen, Collins and not Kennedy should be a member of this parliament?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly, in the petition and in the returning officer's return for the election, which includes the recount by Judge Mahaffy. These show the votes that each one was found to have before this fraud was discovered. The official result of the trial of Robb, with the recount judge's finding, prove that the man who was really elected was James Arthur Collins and not the hon. gentleman who sits for that riding at all. The hon. gentleman who sits for that riding, it does not matter what we may think of his character, knows that he was not elected. He claims rightly or wrongly—and I do not care which, because it does not matter—that if other officers of the government had done their duty and got ballot boxes out into other districts, he might have been elected. Very good. Many a person might have been elected. But also he might not have been elected, and the fact is that on the votes legally cast he was not elected.

All we are asking parliament to inquire into is what was the real result of the ballots legally cast. The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Denis) says: Why, there are lots of injustices in this world. I know a poor fellow, he says, in St. Hyacinthe who got the votes all right, but they were not legally cast because the returning officer so marked them that they could be identified. That was a great injustice, he says, to that candidate. So it was. But it is not anything which the law of Canada has declared to be an injustice. The hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) was found by the courts to have obtained the largest number of votes in 1921; but the courts found as well that though the voters intended to vote for him, many did not do so; they did not vote within the meaning of our Elections Act and therefore their votes could not be legally counted. That man may suffer injustice because of the errors of another, but it is not something which this parliament has declared to be a wrong. The present hon. member for West Calgary, though he did not get all the votes intended for him in 1921, got all the votes legally cast for him. So did the gentleman referred to by the hon. member for Joliette, and that is all he is entitled to under the laws of Canada. But James Arthur Collins did not get all the votes which were legally cast for him. Of those legally cast for him 111 were stolen by our officer. We are not here asking that the votes of some people who intended to vote for Collins and who could not find the ballot, or of some others who intended to vote for him with a lead pencil and voted for him with a fountain pen, should be counted. We are asking only that votes legally cast for him under the law be counted; that there be some tribunal before which he can go and show that he was elected by votes legally cast. That is what hon. gentlemen are being invited to refuse him. Let there be no misunderstanding. There should not be the faintest confusion. Every person who rises to vote against the petition of Collins to deny him this right is simply with a cynical sneer telling Collins to go to a court whose doors he knows are barred. Every hon. gentleman who says: We will not let Collins come to parliament, declares that that man who sits to-day in parliament because of a fraud, however innocent of it he may be, because goods are stolen and only so, shall have the right to remain.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): If the law has been an injustice for the last fifty years, will the right hon. gentleman tell us why it has been tolerated?

Mr. MEIGHEN: There has been no injustice. We have not complained of the law. What we want is an application of the law.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): The right hon. gentleman states that Collins is not permitted to take his case to the court; that that is an injustice, and that is what he is complaining of.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not so long as he can come before a court that undoubtedly can try his case. If Collins is not permitted to come to parliament he certainly is not permitted to go anywhere else.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): Why was the right not given to appeal to the courts? If it was an injustice, why was it tolerated for so long?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say that it should have been given. Perhaps it should not have been given, but the fact is that it was not given. Parliament never gave it to the courts, although it may be that we should have done so. It is not the fault of Mr. Collins that we did not; but the fact that we did not give it to the courts shows that we retained it ourselves. I do not think parliament expected its officers to steal, and certainly no parliament in the good old days ever expected that if our officers stole the seat of a man honestly elected, there would ever be a parliament which would deny him access to the only place open to him competent to redress his wrong.

I do not question the good faith of the hon. member (Mr. Kennedy) who sits for that riding in the votes he gives. I do seriously question his conduct in presuming to perform the functions of a member of parliament when he knows he is a member of parliament only because of the theft and fraud of another, and that other an officer of this parliament. This officer of this parliament, selected by this government, commits a fraud by virtue of which the hon. member sits in this House, and sitting in the House thus in possession of goods stolen he consistently delivers those goods by his votes and speeches to the government of the day on whose behalf they were stolen. That he does so in good faith I do not now question; but the fact is that he does so, and because he does so this government is in office to-day. There is the situation, and I venture to say it is because of that very unique circumstance that this government struggles so desperately to retain the member for Peace River in his seat. They do not do so because of affection for the hon. member for Peace River. If they could have defeated him they would have done so. Those acting for them, though I do not say with their knowledge, tried by every device known in the realm of crime, to defeat him. No; the government's action in this respect is not out of any tender regard for the hon. member for Peace River; it is out of tender regard for themselves, for the offices they hold by virtue of the vote of an hon. member who never was elected and who to-day sits in possession of goods stolen by an officer appointed by this government. This is the situation which confronts us now. We are told: Oh, he might resign if he could. No; he said that he would not resign if he could. He cannot resign, but that does not mean that he need sit and exercise his functions. He has no right to do so. But that is not the question now. The question is, what is to be done with the Collins petition? We are told that the thing will be redressed in the long run, and we have been given a good hint of that in the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). There will come a time, he intimated, when the whole question will go back to the electors of Peace River to be settled by them.

Mr. STORK: How do you account for the theft of Skeena from myself in 1917?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have never heard of any such theft, but some red herrings can be detected while others cannot. And this is about the plainest and the strongest smelling red herring I have ever seen. We had better dispose of the matter we are considering before we drift into something else. I must admire the judgment of the hon. gentleman, because if he did not realize how desperate the case of Peace River is, his mind would not be hovering over Skeena. We have been given a hint. I say, of the sort of justice which we may expect in this case. Justice will be done in some way or other later on by reopening this seat. Well, let us look into such a proposal.

The hon. member for Winnipeg, let us say, has been elected after a hard struggle. If he had won his honours honestly and fairly, if he received the greatest number of votes, would he like, had someone else by a crime been given the seat, to be told by the party who so sits in possession that justice would be done and that this prize which had been stolen from him he would have the right to earn once more? What would he think of that? Now, who has the right to give up the Peace River seat? Is it the hon. member who now presumes to represent Peace River? Has he the right to give it up? Is it his to give up? There may be something of benevolence, there may be something of generosity, there may be even something of wisdom in giving up what one possesses; but there is nothing but sham and pretence in giving up what one does not possess. The seat of Peace River does not belong to the hon. gentleman; it is not his to surrender. Nor is that seat within the power of this government either to give or to take away.

I have heard rumours that the hon. gentleman will get the Chiltern Hundreds; that after he has served his day and generation through this session and done his full share to keep this government in office, he will get some nominal job in order that the seat may be thus vacated.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I rise to a point of order. It seems to me the leader of the opposition is going very much out of his way, and is far beside the question under discussion, when he begins to insinuate certain things affecting the honour of an hon. gentleman who is not even in the House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Needless to say there is no point of order. It would be strange indeed if every hon. gentleman could talk about the seat being vacated while I could not.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is a point of honour.

[Mr. Stork.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: Honour? What did I say against anyone's honour save that the hon. gentleman was retaining a seat which he had never won, and which he is able to enjoy because of fraud? If that is an attack upon his honour I hope he takes it to himself. I contend that there is going to be no redress either for Collins or for the people of Peace River merely by opening the seat, whether by one device or another, whether by accepting the resignation of the hon. member after the session, or by appointing him to some nominal position, or by proceeding with the Page petition. None of these means will remedy the wrongs done to Collins. Nor is it anything of that kind to which Collins is entitled. He is entitled to be where the hon. member (Mr. Kennedy) is, and then to be subject to protest if anyone wishes to lodge a protest.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The leader of the opposition said a moment ago that he had been informed or that he had knowledge that a position would be provided for the member for Peace River. The House is entitled to know where he gets that information.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have been informed that there is to be a nominal appointment made to effect the resignation. Will anyone stand up on behalf of the government and declare that this will not be done?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I stand up and say so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That shuts the door—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Take it back!

Mr. MEIGHEN: Take what back?

Some hon. MEMBERS: What you have said.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I said I was so informed and I will not take that back. I accept the Prime Minister's word that this will not be done and such assurance shuts the door on that method of proceeding. Let me see if there is any other.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not know where the right hon. gentleman got his information. I never heard anything of the kind suggested.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have accepted the Prime Minister's word, but I am going on now to inquire into what other means may be taken. Mr. Collins has been told by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Denis) that he may come in under the Page petition; and that if he succeeds with such petition, the seat will be vacated. If Collins comes in under the petition of Page all that can ever result will be the vacating of the seat. But what in the world could Collins do to secure even that result? He could do nothing. He could not produce all these witnesses whose votes were fraudulently transferred. What is the good of Collins going on with the Page petition? But even if he could produce those witnesses what would be the result then? The seat would be vacated, but would that be any remedy to Collins? He is thus told, "You won the seat; you got the majority of the votes; the seat is yours all right on the official findings. But those votes and therefore the seat were stolen from you and that which was stolen from you we will now put it at stake and give you a chance to earn it over again. Is that justice to Collins? Is it? I do not hear any answer from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth).

Someone has said it is Toryism to compel a man to give evidence before a committee of this House. Well, is it Liberalism to compel a man to do without a seat which he won? If it is Toryism to compel a man to give evidence to expose a fraud, then I stand here and boast of my Toryism.

Mr. CANNON: Does my right hon. friend think that he was a Liberal in 1917 when his party manipulated votes in many constituencies?

Mr. MEIGHEN: We have discussed the 1917 election to the heart's content of the hon. member—

Mr. POWER: You would not let us discuss it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: —and I am ready to discuss it again when it comes before the House. But when the Peace River election is under consideration those who are not afraid to discuss Peace River will stick to Peace River.

Mr. POWER: May I respectfully suggest to my right hon. friend—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. POWER: May I suggest, by way of a question, that we in referring to the 1917 election are quoting the latest precedent bearing upon the investigation of corrupt elections?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the 1917 elections had anything to do with this case it is a pity they were not quoted by hon. gentlemen when they were speaking.

Mr. POWER: We prefer to quote them when you are speaking.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know the hon. gentleman does, and I thank him for the compliment. But if he were not afraid of the effect of the speech he would not want to introduce something irrevelant.

Mr. POWER: Does the right hon. gentleman not admit the interruption?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. POWER: I think the right hon. gentleman—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: There must be no interruptions unless the member who has the floor gives his permission.

Mr. POWER: May I have the permission of the right hon. gentleman to ask a question?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will give the hon. member one more chance to come within reasonable proximity to this case.

Mr. POWER: I always knew my right hon. friend, when he was not too angry, would be kindly and courteous to other members.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. POWER: I am about to ask the question. Does he object to these little interruptions for fear they may hurt his argument and spoil the effect of his speech?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I offered the hon. gentleman another chance to come within eight years of this case, but he has failed miserably. No, interruptions never hurt an argument—

Mr. POWER: The hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) wandered two hundred years away from it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: —if those interruptions are pertinent. But if the present interruptions are intended to divert the argument from its purpose they will fail. If the hon. gentleman cannot interrupt with something that bears upon the subject the best thing he can do is to keep his seat.

Now, under the petition of Page, or under any petition that Collins might have entered, there could be no remedy in the world of any character whatever, for the wrong which has been done. Collins could not do anything to have the seat vacated, but if he could it would not be justice. It would not be justice to Collins. There is therefore no remedy before the courts; there is no remedy whatever outside this parliament. The only means by which this wrong can be redressed, this outrage as heinous as any ever perpetrated in the political history of this country, must be taken by parliament. The only place where the cause can be heard and the remedy applied is in this House. No hon. gentleman who has spoken opposite has dared to suggest that there is any effective remedy, indeed, any remedy at all anywhere else in our Dominion; and knowing there is no other remedy parliament purposes to inform Collins that he must rest under this vicious wrong. Is this gross outrage, this black brazen fraud which has been perpetrated in order to enable a government to sit in office, not to be redressed? It is for the House now to decide.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Meighen) which was negatived on the following division:

TRADE MARK AND DESIGN ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. C. W. BELL (West Hamilton) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 204, to amend the Trade Mark and Design Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): The object of this bill is to do away with the frequent forgeries and counterfeits of the union label and to protect both employers and employees who are operating with union label agreements against those who are not operating with such agreements, but who attach false or counterfeit labels to products.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, may I ask your guidance in one matter? It is my wish to move—and in that I hope I shall have the acquiescence of the Prime Minister—that this Bill may be advanced in the business of the House. Is it permissible for me to do that now, or must I do it after an interval?

Mr. SPEAKER: Under the rules an interval must elapse but, with the indulgence of the House and in view of the lateness of the presentation of the bill, the hon. gentleman might be allowed to advance the bill one step.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I think the Commissioner of Patents and Trade Marks should have an opportunity to see the measure before the government gives its consent to any rules being suspended.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

THE DOHERTY ACT—REPEAL

Mr. CHURCH:

Will the government introduce any legislation this session to repeal what is commonly known as "The Doherty Act," Revised Statutes of Canada, 1916, chapter 19, as amended in 1917, c. 30—1919, chapter 66 and 1919—2nd session, chapter 21?

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Stands.

Mr. CHURCH: May I ask when the Prime Minister will give me an answer to this very short question?

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands.

PREMIER GOLD MINING COMPANY

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

1. Is the Department of Marine and Fisheries operating a public dock at the port of Stewart, British Columbia?

2. Do the regular departmental tolls for freight crossing this dock dock apply to all shippers?

3. Does the Premier Gold Mining Company use this dock?

4. Has this company been granted permission to contruct ore bunkers on this dock or on adjoining property for the purpose of shipping ore or concentrates or other freight? If so, when?

5. Does the said Premier Gold Mining Company pay rental for this privilege, and if so on what basis and how much per annum?

6. Does the said Premier Gold Mining Company pay the same schedule of rates as are required of other shippers for shipping freight in and out over this dock?

7. Is the said Premier Gold Mining Company paying the same demurrage as is required of the public and other shippers for freight left or stored upon said dock?

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

8. Have any special concessions been granted to the said Premier Gold Mining Company in connection with this dock that differ in any way from those with which the general public have to conform? If so, what are these concessions?

Hon. Mr. CARDIN:

1. Yes.

2. Yes for freight other than the ore of the Premier Gold Mining Company.

3. Yes.

4. Yes—14th July, 1921.

5. Yes—$20 per annum for site of freight shed. $75 per annum for site of ore bunker.

6. Yes for freight other than ore. The Premier Gold Mining Company pays $400 per annum for coveying ore across the wharf.

7. Having regard to the nature and extent of the business carried on by the Premier Gold Mining Company, instructions issued in 1923 that no demurrage should be charged. No representations have been received in the meantime respecting demurrage charged against others using the wharf and further inquiry will be made.

8. Yes—The company was granted concessions to build its own freight shed on the wharf; to construct an ore bunker on the wharf property and to convey ore across the dock for which it pays the amounts set out in the answers to Nos. 5 and 6.

FISH PROPAGATION

Mr. MILLAR:

What varieties of fish propagated in hatcheries, and how many of each variety have been deposited in the the three large lakes adjacent to Fort Qu'Appelle?

Hon. Mr. CARDIN: The following varieties of fish were propagated in the federal hatcheries operated by the Department of Marine and Fisheries during the season 1925-26:—

Atlantic salmon, landlocked salmon, rainbow trout, cutthroat trout, steelhead salmon, Kamloops trout, sockeye salmon, spring salmon, cohoe salmon, pink salmon, speckled trout, whitefish, salmon trout, cisco, pickerel, brown trout, yellow perch.

In addition to the above, a few black bass and crappie fingerlings were received from the North Dakota Game and Fish Commission in exchange for pickerel eggs.

The following distributions have been made to the lakes adjacent to Fort Qu'Appelle since the hatchery at that point opened:—

Echo—Katepwe—Lebret—Sioux.

Whitefish—
1915: 1,000,000; 3,000,000; 500,000.
1916: 3,000,000; 3,000,000; 2,000,000.
1917: 8,000,000; 8,000,000; 8,497,000.
1918: 12,000,000; 10,000,000; 10,085,000.

Tullibee—
1918: 9,000.

Whitefish—
1919: 12,000,000; 12,000,000; 9,039,000.
1921: 2,575,000; 1,000,000; 1,000,000.
1922: 10,000,000; 4,000,000; 4,000,000; 4,000,000.
1923: 5,750,000; 4,000,000; 2,720,000; 4,000,000
1924: 3,525,000; 3,010,550; 1,178,000.

Cisco—
1924: 1,260,000.

Whitefish—
1925: 2,335,000; 2,000,000; 2,250,000; 3,020,000.

Pickerel—
1925: 470,000.

Perch—
1925: 1,350,000.

Cisco—
1925: 2,069,700; 500,000; 1,500,000; 1,500,000.

In addition to the above Ketepwe lake in 1923 received 315 fingerling black bass and 285 fingerling crappie, which were received from the North Dakota Fish and Game Commission in exchange for pickerel eggs.

ONION WAREHOUSE AT LEAMINGTON

Mr. GOTT:

1. To whom was the building contract let by the government for the construction of the onion warehouse at Leamington, Ontario?
2. What was the contract price?
3. Were any special stipulations contained in the contract? If so, what were the specific requirements?
4. At what point in western Ontario is another warehouse to be, or is being, constructed?
5. How much money has been expended to date on this venture and how much is proposed to be expended on completion of same?

Hon. Mr. KING (Kootenay):

1. and 2. Contract for building to J. A. E. Burrows for $12,500. Contract for crates to Zimmerman Bros. for $6,900.

3. Nothing more than was required for frame building for storage of onions.

4. Erieau, Ont., site leased from Chatham-Wallaceburg and Lake Erie Railroad Co. for 20 years at $1 per year with option of renewal for another period of 20 years on the same terms. Plans prepared for building.

5. No expenditure on Erieau warehouse. Estimated cost of building including crates, $14,000 to $15,000.

PELEE ISLAND PIER

Mr. GOTT:

1. To whom was the contract let for the construction of extension to west pier at Pelee island, Ontario, during the year 1925?
2. What was the contract price?
3. Were tenders advertised for the work?
4. If so, how many tenders were received and from whom?
5. What was the tender price submitted by each person or company?

Hon. Mr. KING (Kootenay):

1. Ed. Conroy, Peterboro, Ont.
2. $32,757.50, unit prices.
3. Yes.
4. and 5. On the first call for tenders, September, 1923, the following bids were received.

Wm. Bermingham & Son .. ..$36,979 80
W. L. Forrest .. .. .. .. .. .. 39,710 20

These tenders were considered too high, and new tenders were called for February, 1924, with the following result:

Ed. Conroy .. .. .. .. .. .. ..$32,757 50
McDougal Bros. .. .. .. .. .. 33,091 85
W. L. Forrest .. .. .. .. .. .. 36,770 00
Considine-Reid, Limited .. .. 37,096 60
Wm. Bermingham & Son .. .. 40,037 00

TARIFF ADVISORY BOARD

RECORD OF EVIDENCE FOR INFORMATION OF MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): Mr. Speaker, some days ago the Prime Minister informed the House that the matter of having the evidence given before the Tariff Advisory Board made available for hon. members was under consideration. May I ask for information now?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, such information as is printed will be available for members of the House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister say what information will be printed?

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the agitation is to have all the evidence printed. I know a number of gentlemen who are shorthand writers would like to be employed to take the evidence. I have not had a talk with the chairman of the board as to that feature, but we want to keep down the expense as much as possible, and he is insisting that such evidence as is introduced must be put in writing.

CUSTOMS REGULATIONS—AUTOMOBILES

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Customs (Mr. Boivin) whether any change is contemplated in the regulations with regard to the admission of American automobiles? As I understand it, at the present time the regulations provide that when a man comes to this country as a tourist he can bring in his car and use it for a certain length of time, but if he comes here for the purpose of looking after an investment, or perhaps making an investment, he has to place his car in a garage and not use it at all. I believe representations have been forwarded to the minister—I know I have sent some in myself—and a great many protests have been made as to the present regulations, particularly from British Columbia. It seems to me that these regulations are not reasonable,—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McQUARRIE: —and certainly they are working a hardship.

Hon. GEORGE H. BOIVIN (Minister of Customs and Excise): Mr. Speaker, no change whatever has been made in the regulations admitting automobiles temporarily since I assumed charge of the Department of Customs. During the past few weeks I have received several representations from hon. members on both sides of the House pointing out cases where, in my opinion, the present regulations worked considerable hardship on Americans desiring to enter Canada. The rule so far has been that a bona fide tourist may enter his car for thirty days, and if he desires to give a bond he may enter it for six months. It has been ruled in the department, however, and regulations have been framed, to the effect that any person coming into Canada for commercial purposes, in other words, deriving any pecuniary benefit from his visit, should not use his automobile without paying the duty thereon. As I stated a moment ago, there are a few cases where this appears to me to be a hardship, but with the stress of work in the department I have been unable so far to give due consideration to the regulations and suggest any amendment to council This, however, will be done just as soon as the session is over.

Mr. A. de WITT FOSTER (Hants-Kings): Mr. Speaker, before the minister sits down, may I ask if he will take into immediate consideration the case of a person who, having been in Canada for six or eight months, has made application to the department to have his car released from storage for a couple of weeks in order to put it in repair before starting back to the United States? Will the minister say whether or not he will allow that car to be released for repairs?

Mr. BOIVIN: That particular instance has not been brought to my attention, but if it is it will be considered on its merits and decided accordingly.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Since there is money lying idle in the Canadian banks, does not the minister think we should be protected against American investments?

CANADA SHIPPING ACT, AMENDMENT

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. A. C. CASSELMAN (Grenville-Dundas): On April 20 first reading was given to Bill No. 23, to amend the Canada Shipping Act. Can the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) tell us when we may expect to have an opportunity of moving the second reading of this bill?

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): Answering a question put to me the other day regarding contemplated amendments to the Canada Shipping Act, I said that, as we had made up our minds to introduce next session a complete revision of the act, the government did not propose to bring down any amendments this year. In view of this decision we are hardly in a position to help the hon. member advance the bill he has on the order paper.

Mr. CASSELMAN: Does the minister realize that this is the very answer that has been given for a number of years whenever amendments to the act have been proposed?

Mr. CARDIN: I do not know what answers may have been given in the past.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—ALLEGED PATRONAGE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. L. W. JOHNSTONE (Cape Breton North-Victoria): I want to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning) a question based upon a telegram I received this morning:

> Grand Narrows, C.N.R. Firms doing construction work on railway here refuse to hire men unless recommended by Liberal leader of this district.

Is the patronage system still in existence in the Department of Railways?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I have had many complaints of that nature from this side of the House and there seems to be an impression abroad among members in this quarter that the patronage system is in existence—in the hands of the party opposite. I have no knowledge of the particular instance referred to and can only reply in the words used by the president of the road before the special committee when that question was discussed: I shall be pleased to call the attention of the management of the Canadian National Railways to the particular matter to which the hon. member has referred.

Mr. MANION: In view of what the Minister of Railways has said about patronage being in the hands of this party, would he be kind enough to give me the name of someone over here whom I can approach to get appointments for some of my friends?

PELEE ISLAND CABLE AND TELEGRAPH SERVICE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. ECCLES J. GOTT (South Essex): I desire to ask a question of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. King, Kootenay) in view of the following communication I have received from Pelee island:

Dear Sir:

Pelee island is still without telegraphic or cable communication. Last week a telegram was sent to me by people who were not aware that the cable was out. It came to Leamington and was sent to the island on the steamer Pelee. It was delivered to me but the boat had left for the mainland and I could not reply. Through this service I lost a considerable amount of money and desire to lodge a complaint with you against this insulting service. I know you are not directly to blame for the inactivity of the department, but it has been stated in circles here—

Son. hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member had better put his question.

Mr. GOTT: In view of the fact that I have made representations to the minister on this particular question before,—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GOTT: —and as this is the seventeenth of June—

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. member to state his question.

Mr. GOTT: I want to know what progress has been made with repairs to the Pelee island cable; what has caused the delay; when the island will be connected with the mainland for telegraphic purposes; and further, whether, in view of the political stripe of the representative of the constituency,—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member having put his question, must not go further.

Hon. J. H. KING (Kootenay, Minister of Public Works): I would suggest that the question be put on the order paper. If the hon. member wants to get some advantage from it he had better put it in that form.

Mr. SPEAKER: That is the rule.

Mr. ROGERS: What is the explanation of the $50,000 for Escuminac harbour improvements?

Hon. J. H. KING (Kootenay, Minister of Public Works): This is a revote for the construction of 310 feet of breakwater. The contract was entered into on December 7, 1925, and the proposed construction was fully discussed in the House last year. It is intended to give the fishermen of the community some protection against storms. We had four tenders, the lowest of which, from the Burpee Construction Company, was accepted.

Mr. HANSON: Will the minister put the whole thing on Hansard?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would rather not; it would not be wise. The lowest tender was $43,991 and the highest $44,952, so that there was pretty close competition. As to the necessity for the work, I can only repeat what I said last year: it is needed in the interests of the fishermen. I am told this work will be of great benefit.

Mr. ROGERS: You had the vote last year. Why was it not gone on with?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The hon. member will know, from his experience as a minister, that we get supplies very late, usually in June or July. This is a new work of some magnitude. Plans and specifications had been prepared and the work was not let until December.

Mr. HANSON: For the benefit of the committee, I should like to give a little history of this item. In the fall of 1924 there was a by-election in the county of Northumberland, and one of the prices of the success of the government candidate on that occasion was this vote.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Oh no, no.

Mr. HANSON: The contract has been actually let and the contractor is on the ground, and this vote will have to go through. I hope the money will not be wasted. Will the minister tell me, is it still the intention to carry out the further project which involves an expenditure of $250,000? If so, I would ask him to pause and not proceed further, as I believe this expenditure will not effect the end which he has in view, laudable as it may be, for this reason; I am advised by those who know the conditions on the north shore, by competent engineers, that this work will not survive the ice conditions that prevail there. Before the minister commits the department or the government to any further expenditure I would ask him to get the opinion of one of the best engineers in his department, Mr. Gray, of the city of St. John, who knows the ground thoroughly and the conditions that obtain in that part of the country, and to ask him for a report. If Mr. Gray will report that this work can survive the ice conditions in the Northumberland straits, I will withdraw my opposition to this vote or to the project. I do not wish now to be taken as opposing the project, because the government is committed to it, the contractor is on the ground, the material is all assembled and the men must be paid for their work, but I am calling the minister's attention to the larger aspect, because this, as I understand it, is only the first vote of a very considerable expenditure, involving at least $250,000 which is a very large sum of money to spend in that particular locality, with the exposed conditions that prevail there and with the ice conditions that will always prevail. I do not think this project will be a success. If it could be made a success, if the conditions were such that this structure could stand, I would not have very much opposition to it, because those of us who live along the coast know the exposed conditions that prevail with respect to the fishermen's business, and if at a reasonable cost we can better those conditions, I do not think any man on either side of the House would be opposed to a fair expenditure of public money for that purpose. I know something about it, I have made it my business to inquire of men competent to speak and they tell me this structure will not stand the ice conditions. Has the department investigated the project from that aspect? The question of the by-election is over and gone. This vote was designed to return the government candidate in Northumberland, but failed in that respect; therefore let us drop it and view the proposition from a business standpoint. Has the minister in his record a report with respect to the effect of the ice conditions there? My opinion is that the structure will not stand the conditions prevailing in the Northumberland straits, because it is too much exposed, and there is too great danger of the ice lifting such a structure. It will not stand for three years. That is the information given to me by an engineer whose name I will be glad to give the minister, and when he sees the name I think he will be glad to sit up and take notice.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would be glad to have it.

Mr. HANSON: I will give it privately but not publicly.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): All right. I think it is unnecessary to say that this structure was undertaken and money voted for it at the last session of parliament. It has been under consideration for many years, and many representations have been made as to the necessity and desirability of the work. All that the government pledged themselves to do was to erect the present structure. I made that very plain last year during the discussion of this item. With reference to the question of whether the construction will stand or not, I may inform my hon. friend that in the case of new work of this character involving a large expenditure, the territory and the nature of the work are dealt with by the district engineer. He submits plans and his plans and the specifications go to a board of engineers in the department. Mr. Gray is the engineer in St. John. He is on the staff of engineers and if he is of the opinion that the work will not stand it is his duty as a public works engineer to advise the board. I do not think he has made any representations.

Mr. HANSON: I did not say he had.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): But the hon. member said that we should consult Mr. Gray.

Mr. HANSON: Yes.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Mr. Gray will be consulted, but the work has been before the engineering board in the department. In the case of the lower St. Lawrence where we have a tremendous quantity of ice and difficult conditions, the department has had experience, and should be able to judge whether this work is proper or not and whether it will stand. Our report is that it will stand. The contract is a good one. It is below the estimated cost of the department, and I hope the work will stand as we have been told it will. There are 1,700 or 1,800 people who will be benefited by this work, and those who know the Maritimes and the conditions there to-day will surely be in sympathy with any policy calculated to assist the people who try to make their living down by the sea.

Mr. HANSON: I am glad to hear the minister's statement that Gray will be consulted. That is all to the good.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): You have suggested it, and I have no objection to it.

Mr. HANSON: I did not think you would, because Gray is a first-class man in whom I have great confidence, and if he puts his imprimatur on this work I think it would satisfy the public mind; at all events it would satisfy me, but perhaps that does not make much difference. There is a larger aspect however. The minister stated that the government's commitment did not go beyond the one unit, and I would ask the minister to consider this matter most carefully before making any further commitment. I agree that if the work can be done, and if it will be capable of withstanding the ice conditions, then much good may come from it. If we can do anything to improve the conditions of the fishermen on that exposed work that will not be a waste of the public money, I will not oppose it. I am not questioning the good faith of the government in this action, although we all realize the inception of this transaction.

Mr. MacLAREN: There are two questions I wish to ask. First, does this vote cover the building of a wharf at Mispec in St. John county? The minister may remember that he received a petition from a very considerable number of fishermen at that point, pointing out that they had no protection in their occupation, coming and going out into the bay of Fundy. I think they asked for a small wharf which would act as a breakwater as well as a wharf. I feel that this is a real need to enable the fishermen to carry on their occupation. Would the minister inform us if there is any sum in this vote which will help to meet that need? The minister shakes his head. Will he inform us then if he has this matter under consideration, and if he is prepared to look into it with a view to putting up such a small structure?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am glad my hon. friend has mentioned this matter. It is true that there has been a petition before the department, but as my hon. friend and the members generally know, the department receives many requests for works of this character. The matter, however, will receive consideration and the work be reported on. There is nothing in the present estimates to take care of that expenditure.

Mr. MacLAREN: I hope we shall receive some favourable indication the next time the matter is brought to the attention of the minister. The other matter I wished to bring up is that of the need of protection for the fishermen at Lorneville, in the same county. That is an important centre, and the village is devoted to fishing of a valuable character. There is a pier there, but the water is very shallow so that the fishermen cannot get in for shelter for their boats and for their lives in bad weather. It is a fishing village of considerable importance, and I hope the minister can give us some assurance that there is some item in this vote which will help to meet their needs.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would say in reply to my hon. friend that the reports that have been made to the department for work at this point were made subsequent to the making up of these estimates. I think in addition to an extension of the breakwater, they are requesting also dredging, to deepen the channel at that point. The matter is before the engineering department, and is receiving consideration.

Mr. MacLAREN: I might point out to the minister that I do not think there is any application for an extension of the breakwater. I think they are asking for certain repairs. I know personally that this wharf does require repairs, but what is essential is dredging, so that the boats can get to the wharf, because at present the water is so shallow that they cannot get in there.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The repairs to the structure will amount practically to a reconstruction, because they are very heavy repairs. Minor repairs could be taken care of out of the general vote, but I understand that the dredging is the larger item, and that is being investigated.

Mr. MacLAREN: Will the minister give me some indication that he will have this matter closely followed up? I know as a matter of fact that many men imperil their lives on many occasions during the fishing season. They have not the shelter that they are fairly entitled to.

Mr. PRICE: I would direct the minister's attention to the item of $8,400 for repairs to the breakwater at Cape Bald. I would point out that the expenditure in my constituency, the county of Westmorland, does not seem to be very large in view of the requirements there. I was in hopes that the minister might be able to announce that the work of construction of a post office at Moncton would be proceeded with this year, especially in view of the fact that the net revenue received from the post office at the city of Moncton is $331,640 per annum, Moncton standing sixth in the list of revenue producers in the whole of Canada. Tenders were called for and an estimate has been made that the post office could be constructed for $205,000, or an amount considerably less than the net revenue derived from that post office in one year. I was therefore in hopes that the work would be proceeded with this year. I should like to ask if the minister has this matter under consideration, and will have this work proceeded with as soon as possible. I do not propose at this time to discuss the expenditure that was made there in connection with the purchase of that property. It was no doubt a considerable sum over and above what the property is assessed for, but I shall not criticize that at this time.

In connection with the Cape Bald breakwater, I would point out to the minister that there is a need which is really deserving of as much consideration as the repairs to the breakwater if not more, and that is an extension of the pier head at that point. The wharf is used largely as a shelter for small fishing boats and vessels that come in there for protection against the tides, and considerable loss of property has occurred there in the last few years. While the pier is of some service, it really requires an extension of at least 100 feet. This is a farming and fishing locality, largely inhabited by French-Acadian people, and they have their difficulties to meet with at that place. In view of the large revenue that is being turned into the federal treasury from my constituency, I would like some assurance from the minister that he will see that this pier head is extended this season, in order that these fishermen may have protection and their boats and motors given ample protection during the season. I am very glad to see this item for repairs, but I would like an assurance from the minister that the pier head will be extended at that point in order that better protection may be afforded.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have the advantage of personal knowledge of conditions at this point. I visited Cape Bald two years ago, and I found the breakwater in very, very bad condition. In fact, unless the necessary repairs had been made there would have been no breakwater there at all. This item of $8,400 is to complete and retain the present breakwater. I agree with my hon. friend that an extension of the pier head or front of the breakwater would be of advantage to the fishermen and give them greater shelter, but the most essential thing just now is to preserve the pier, and that is what this vote is for. The representations of my hon. friend with regard to an extension will be inquired into. I think there is something in what he says. I know the position there is very exposed, and that there are great difficulties for those who are engaged in fishing.

Mr. HANSON: What improvements are contemplated at Burton court house? This place is in my constituency and I should like to get information as to what is proposed.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is proposed to rebuild the face and outer end of each side of the wharf, from the low water level. We are doing that work in concrete. Formerly these wharves were of timber construction, but since we have taken them over we are using concrete, hoping that the work will be more of a permanent character and that there will be no need for annual repairs.

Mr. HANSON: The repairs are necessary on account of the ice?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. HANSON: I hope the experiment will be a success. Will the work be done by tender or by day labour?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is repair work, and the engineer's recommendation is that it be done by day labour.

Mr. HANSON: If the work were done by contract it would be done just as well and cost probably less. I am not going to press the point but I make that suggestion for the minister's consideration. I think he will save money by acting on it, and get just as good a job done.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend knows from his own experience that when you go to repair these old structures it is very difficult to tell what the cost will be until you take the structures down, and as you go down you find the condition, probably a little better than you anticipated or somewhat worse. We find from experience that these structures can be better repaired under the control of departmental officials than they can by contract.

Mr. BELL (St. John): Will the minister inform me whether the item of $45,000 for harbours and rivers generally includes any provision for the small structure I spoke to him about at Hopewell cape, in Albert county? I do not remember whether I spoke to the minister before this estimate was made up or not. If no provision for the purpose mentioned is made in the present vote I should like to know if the minister contemplates placing an item in the supplementary estimates?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would take it from my hon. friend's remarks that only a small expenditure is required there?

Mr. BELL (St. John): Yes.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If it is found by the engineering department that an expenditure is necessary for the maintenance of the wharf in question, it will come out of the vote of $45,000, which is at the disposal of the department to meet cases of the kind suggested by my hon. friend. We have no special item here for the Hopewell cape wharf.

Mr. ROGERS: Would the minister explain how he proposes to expend the $45,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are a few items reported by the engineering department that will be charged against this vote. At Bathurst there will be an expenditure for wharf repairs of $300; at Bayside, $250; at Bedford, $200 and at Campbellton, $300. These are deep water wharves. At Cassils, Northumberland county, it is proposed to expend $150 on wharf repairs. For Cocagne an item is noted but the amount is not stated. There is an item for Lameque, Gloucester county, but the amount is not given. In all there are probably thirty items varying in amounts from $100 to $600.

Mr. ROGERS: They are all small repairs?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. Last year the sum of $25,577 was spent for this purpose.

Mr. MacLAREN: Is there any vote for Lorneville included in these items?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No. I have the place noted here but there is no amount set out for it.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: Is there any provision for expenditure for wharf repairs at Upper Caraquet?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The item is noted but no amount is set out.

Mr. BELL (St. John): Did I understand from the minister that it is intended to proceed with the work at Hopewell cape, or that the supplementary estimates will contain a vote for the purpose? I did not quite gather whether the minister said he intended to do the work there or not.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is not included in the list I have. However, I will cause inquiries to be made and if it is a work that should come within the provision of this vote, I shall be glad if the engineers will recommend it to be done. Whatever action is taken will be on their recommendation.

Mr. BELL (St. John): Is there any provision in this estimate for the wharf at Tynemouth creek, in St. John county?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. BELL (St. John): I wonder if some reference has not been made to it by the resident engineer at St. John. There is only a small amount of work required. I understood that some recommendation had been sent into the department regarding it but the nature of the recommendation I do not know.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I shall be glad to have inquiries made. I do not happen to have the information here at present.

Mr. HANSON: Is the item of $21,000 for a wharf at Caraquet a new item, and what work is it proposed to do there?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The proposed work is close-piling the easterly face for a total length of 320 feet, the westerly or sea face at the outer end, 60 feet, and the westerly corner of the pier head, 25 feet.

Mr. HANSON: Close-piling?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, that will be done with creosoted piles, estimated to cost $19,000. There will also be required 7,500 pounds of iron at a cost of $750. For contingencies, $1,250 is provided bringing the total cost up to $21,000. It is an important structure as my hon. friend knows.

3 p.m.

Mr. ROGERS: It is a new item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is a new item for repairs. The place where the work is to be done is an important fishing settlement in New Brunswick, with a population of 5,250.

Mr. ROGERS: This structure is the main wharf at Caraquet?

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry? Carried.

Mr. HANSON: No, Mr. Chairman, not all the items. There are a few here I should like to get information about. For example Green Point, is that on the north shore?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is in Charlotte county. I think it is a revote of $16,000 and the money is required to complete the construction of a pier now under contract by Mr. Charleson.

Mr. HANSON: You are looking after that constituency well.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The member for the county needs it.

Mr. HANSON: I had a suspicion it was in Gloucester county.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): You should know

Mr. HANSON: There are many demands, of course, for public works all along the coast there? Are there any other items for expenditures in Gloucester county in this list outside of Caraquet and Green Point?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Shippigan, I think, is in Gloucester county.

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Mr. HANSON: Shippigan has never been off the estimates in the last generation. I should like to ask the minister about wharf repairs at Shediac. A large portion of the vote is a re-vote. What work was done there last year and was it carried out under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is required to complete the repairs to the wharf at Shediac. The work which is under contract to F. L. Boone, consists of closing up and filling with cribwork the first four spans at the shore end, laying a gravel covering on the shore block and the first four blocks and spans, a length of 371 feet; and renewing in creosoted timber the entire floor system of the remainder of the wharf, a length of 736.5 feet. There were six tenders, the prices varying from $16,966 to $24,454. The lowest tender was accepted. It is not necessary for me to tell my hon. friend because he knows better than I do the importance of Shediac as a community and the importance of this wharf.

Mr. HANSON: I would like to ask the minister with respect to the breakwater at Ingall's Head. This has been in the estimates, I believe, for two years. At least it was in last year and it is being revoted this year. Is it the intention of the government to let the contract for this work this year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is under Grand Harbour (Ingall's Head) breakwater. It is a revote of $25,000 to provide for the completion of the breakwater at Grand Harbour now under contract with Messrs. J. Flood and Sons, Limited.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That was in the supplementary estimates last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. HANSON: What was the contract price and the range of the tenders?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The lowest tender was by Messrs. John Flood and Sons, Limited, $21,346. The highest tender was $29,099.94. The order in council was passed on September 26, 1925.

Mr. MacLAREN: Where is Mill's Point?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Mill's Point is in Northumberland county. This amount of $23,400 is required for the completion of the work in connection with enlargement and repairs to the wharf at Mill's Point under contract by L. Doyle of Douglastown, New Brunswick.

Mr. HANSON: I would like to call the minister's attention to the absolute necessity of doing something at Castalia, Grand Manan. That is five or six miles east of Grand Harbour. I had the necessity of this impressed upon me by an experience down there last October. When the wind is blowing from the east it is absolutely necessary for the people living at Castalia to take their boats for miles down the coast in order to save them. This is not a new project; it has been before the department for many years. The expenditure was, I think, authorized at one time; indeed, if I mistake not, a small portion was built, and the matter then dropped. I do not know who is responsible for that but I would suggest that it is one of the most exposed places on the island of Grand Manan which without doubt is one of the most exposed positions along the whole bay of Fundy coast.

I would ask the minister if he would be good enough to direct his engineers on the bay of Fundy waters to look into the feasibility and the necessity of this work from the standpoint of protection to the large fishing interests at that point. They have expensive boats costing $2,000 or $3,000 and they have absolutely no harbour against easterly gales which are the prevailing winds in the fall of the year. Proprietors of fishing stands, very substantial men told me they had to send their boats for miles to a harbour further down the coast of the island; that if they did not do that they would lose their property. The Castalia people, I think, have every right to expect the building of a breakwater especially from the party to which the minister belongs. In season and out of season they have been more or less faithful supporters, sometimes greater in numbers than at others, of the Liberal party. They certainly deserve something at the hands of that party. I do not know whether that adds any weight to my plea or not, but I make it because I was convinced by the best possible evidence in the world, eye-witness evidence, in the course of a big easterly gale that detained us on the island for hours, of the necessity of something being done to protect the property of those people. The loss of one boat would wipe out the owner's savings of a life-time. It is really more necessary to do something at that point than to spend the money the minister is spending at Ingall's Head. I am not going to say anything about that. I have an opinion formed from a visit to the locality, but if that breakwater will protect property by all means let it be built if the country can afford to build it. I think however, the government would be failing in its duty if it did not do something at Castalia.

I would also like to call the attention of the minister to the necessity of extending the breakwater at North Head, Flagg's Cove. There is a good breakwater there, but it is not quite long enough. In the course of a big easterly gale with rollers coming in, the present breakwater needs another unit to protect completely shipping in that harbour. It is quite an important point where passenger steamers land. There is not the protection that there ought to be in that harbour at low water for the fishing fleet. I do not think the expenditure would be very large. I ask the minister to be good enough to look into the matter.

There is another place there, but at the moment I cannot recall where it is. I will get the information and speak to the minister with reference to it.

Mr. GRIMMER: I am in full accord with everything that has been said by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) in connection with the construction of a breakwater at Castalia. For the last four years representations have been made by myself and others to have that breakwater constructed, and the minister is fully aware of the necessity for it. Last year, if I am not mistaken, he said he would look into the matter. Has any investigation been made since then?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have received reports and what the hon. gentleman says is true. It would be better for the people of the locality if we could do this work, but this is only one of many similar requests that come to us from time to time. It has been the general wish to keep the estimates within bounds, and we have been trying to do so. Grand Manan is undoubtedly a great fishing community. The people there live practically on the sea. There is no doubt about the necessity for increased facilities, and I hope some time to be able to do something for these people.

Mr. HANSON: I do not want to enter into any controversy on the question where work should have been begun, but I do not think it should have been undertaken first at Grand Harbour because that is a good natural harbour, as the name implies. On the other hand, the Castalia shore is the most exposed on the whole island. Grand Manan is in the teeth of the Bay of Fundy, and is exposed to every wind that blows. It is not possible to build harbours on the west side, as the minister will know if he has ever been on the north channel. But on the east side there should be given a population of 3,000 people some accommodation to enable them to carry on. These people devote their entire time and attention to fishing. If the government wants to retain the population of that locality two things should be done. First of all, transportation is needed to facilitate the moving of products to market. We are negotiating with the minister's colleague in this direction and he is most sympathetic. The officials of his department know just what is required and are endeavouring to fill the bill. The second requisite, which is practically the only thing which this government can give the people, is a little protection against the elements. I will not question any expenditures for the benefit of the fishermen if those expenditures are sound from the standpoint of location and if they have any merit at all, because I do think that whatever we can do for these hardy people, who take their lives in their hands every time they go on the ocean, we should certainly do, within reasonable limits, whether in Quebec, in New Brunswick or in Nova Scotia. If you do not do something along the lines I suggest you will not be able to retain that population. The people will not stay there unless they can get some encouragement. I appeal to the judgment of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) whether I am not right The fishing population there have been rather discouraged in recent years; prices have not been good and they have not done so well. But they are living in hopes of better days and are asking the government for sympathetic consideration. I should like to see that consideration given on both sides of the House. Fishermen as a class deserve well at our hands and we should do everything we can for them within reason.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: I must commend the hon. member (Mr. Hanson) on his sense of justice and fair play. Certainly something should be done for these fishermen. There are a few items in the estimates for expenditures in my constituency, but they do not cover everything that is needed. It has often been said that these items are vote-catchers, but looking over the estimates I find that quite frequently money has gone to parts of my constituency in which I did not secure a majority. I would call the attention of the minister to the urgent need for improving conditions at Lameque on the island of Shippigan where there is a large fleet engaged exclusively in cod fishing. Last fall, a few days before the election, I was an eye-witness to a lamentable state of affairs. No fewer than seven or eight valuable fishing craft, equipped with auxiliary motor power, were crushed one against another, so that the damage was almost beyond repair. This was due to the congestion at that point. The industry has developed to such an extent that the present wharf is no longer able to cope with the great traffic. It is therefore imperative that all these structures be kept in repair and enlarged as necessity demands. I would also direct the minister's attention to the condition at Grand Anse in my constituency where owing to the fact that large sums have been required to keep other works in repair nothing has been spent in recent years, so that the wharf is now in a deplorable condition. I am afraid it will become useless unless it is very soon repaired.

So far as items relating to other parts of the province are concerned, I cordially agree with what has been said by the hon. member. Every item is absolutely necessary. For example, Escuminac is bound to become one of the most important fishing points in New Brunswick. At least 350 salmon licenses are issued there annually and the fishermen are engaged in one of the most lucrative branches of the industry. We know that salmon is becoming more and more a luxury in great demand and large shipments are made from New Brunswick to the British market. They reach the Old Country in first-class condition either chilled or frozen. In this connection a word might be said about the cold storage business. We have at Montreal a cold storage plant on which we have spent some $3,000,000. I visited the plant a few years ago and was astonished to find that there was not even a trough there to receive fresh fish. I drew the attention of the manager to the fact and he admitted that it was a most serious oversight. I have heard since that accommodation has been provided for chilling and freezing fish at the Montreal plant, and I trust the same facilities will be provided at Quebec. The fishermen of the Maritime provinces need accommodation above everything else. We need facilities to market our produce—not on the Canadian market, because we have no market in Canada our population being too small, but in the markets of the world, especially of the British Isles, central Europe and the countries to the south of the equator.

Mr. FISH: I notice a vote for Oak Point wharf repairs, $1,700. Has provision also been made for repairing the wharf at Neguac?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, the engineer recommends an expenditure of $400 or $500.

Mr. FISH: The road leading along the shore at Burnt Church needs repairing. It was protected by a log breastwork, but during a storm last season this was torn away and the road along the shore practically destroyed for several hundred feet.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Usually the roadways leading to the wharves are under provincial control. In some cases the Dominion government has assumed jurisdiction. We have no report yet from the district engineer with regard to what my hon. friend refers to. I shall be very glad to make inquiries.

Mr. FISH: I was very glad to hear the minister say he is going to consider the suggestions made by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) with regard to the Escuminac breakwater. It is true the proposal has been before the country for a number of years, but like many other proposals, although it was thought to be a good thing at the time it is not now considered to be quite so good. The fishermen down there are very doubtful with respect to it. In the first place, it is going to require very much more money. Then the distance of 310 feet will not afford much protection; certainly this will have to be extended. The fishermen say that if the gulley was dredged out they would not require the breakwater at all. It is a very rough place to build the breakwater, the bottom being of shaley rock, and it is very difficult to make fastenings hold in it. Then again, very few fishermen can get in there, and in case of a storm it is much safer and easier for them to run into the mouth of the river behind Fox island or Portage island for shelter. I would be very sorry to interfere with the expenditure of money in my county—I should like to see this money spent, and a great deal more—but I think we ought to get the fullest value in return. Our people down there feel that it would be of greater benefit to both the farmers and the fishermen, if this money and some more were put into the construction of a railway to connect with the railway at Loggieville. At present auto trucks are used to transport the fish from that section of the country up to the railway. I hope the minister will give the suggestion serious consideration before he starts in with the breakwater. As I say, I should like to see the money spent there, but at the same time I should like to see full value secured for the expenditure. I congratulate the member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud), he certainly deserves very great credit, for a little over a third of the whole estimate for New Brunswick is going into his county.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: My hon. friend is getting more for his county than I am for mine.

Mr. GRIMMER: What is the nature of the proposed expenditure of $2,700 for wharf repairs at White Head? Does it include dredging? This is necessary around the wharf.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, it is for repairs to the wharf, renewal of cap timbers, stringers and so forth, and it is recommended by the district engineer. In regard to the suggestion of my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Fish), as I said before, the Escuminac harbour is not a new work. I find that in 1910 it was recommended by Mr. Loggie, later by the Hon. J. D. Hazen in 1913, and so on down to last year, when we were advised that this work would give considerable protection to the fishermen. Before committing parliament to further expenditure we must come to the House again for the necessary funds.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What about the appropriations not required?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In all there are some twenty-five or twenty-six items where the money has not been expended and is not required this year. Would my hon. friend like to have the list placed on Hansard?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How many items are dropped?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There has been expenditure under every item.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Of the appropriations not fully required, amounting to $92,100, how much money has been spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is the list: Beaver Harbour, wharf repairs, $3,000 voted; $2,605.69 expended. Black's Harbour—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend might hand the list to Hansard and so save time.

(Following is the list referred to):

| New Brunswick | Voted | Expended |
|---|---|---|
| | $ cts. | $ cts. |
| Beaver Harbour—wharf repairs | 3,000 00 | 2,605 69 |
| Black's Harbour—reconstruction of wharf approach | 2,000 00 | 1,332 81 |
| Burnt Church—wharf repairs | 2,500 00 | 2,551 58 |

| Young's Cove—rebuilding wharf | 6,000 00 | 3,743 82 |
| | 92,100 00 | ..... |

Item agreed to.

Quebec—Harbours and rivers, $636,225.08

Mr. ROGERS: Will the minister explain the reason for the wharf extension and improvements at Cap de la Madeleine? This is an old familiar item.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Chairman, would we not get along better if you called each one of the Quebec items in turn?

The CHAIRMAN: All right. I do not know that I can pronounce all the names.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is fine vocal exercise.

Anse a Beaufils—reconstruction of and repairs to jetties, $3,200.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Carried.

Item agreed to.

Anse aux Gascons—wharf improvements, $4,000.

Mr. HANSON: Where is that?

Mr. ROGERS: That is a revote.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was the contract let, if there was a contract? When was the work put in hand?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As a matter of fact there was very little expenditure. We are asking for a revote. There has been $159 spent.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was that done?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the date.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: October or September?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I imagine August or September. October is a pretty late month for work in that district.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think it would be September and October. That I think was in the supplementaries last year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think so.

Item agreed to.

Beloeil village—reconstruction of wharf, $4,600.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The work to be done consists of rebuilding the whole work in concrete down to extreme low water level. The old cribwork structure with the stone filling will be removed to the necessary depth and width, and a reinforced concrete wall will be built all round, this wall to be four feet six inches thick at the base and twelve inches at the top. Removing old structure is estimated to cost $637.50, and concrete is estimated at about $3,240. It is proposed to do the work by contract.

Mr. ROGERS: What is the total estimate of the cost of the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is $4,600.

Mr. ROGERS: You only ask for $4,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think the item is $4,600.
