We have heard a great deal from Hon. Members on the Government side about the difficulties the credit unions, municipalities and pension funds would be in if this money were not approved. We are told how much money they will lose if they, as uninsured depositors, do not get their money. However, I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that a large part of the reason those organizations left their money on deposit in the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank was that they were assured by the Inspector General of Banks, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance that these were viable operations. When these organizations receive that kind of advice from senior Ministers and from senior public servants, who can blame them for leaving their money in those banks? In the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs back in May and June we heard from the auditors of the bank. The Bank Act requires banks to have two set of external auditors. The Canadian Commercial Bank had two of the most prestigious auditing firms in this country and, indeed, if I am not mistaken, they are international auditors with offices in many countries. The amazing thing and, to me, the most disturbing of what we have heard is that the auditors had one set of opinions about the Canadian Commercial Bank which they gave to the directors of the bank, and another set of opinions which they gave to the bank and which the bank use publicly in its annual report. What was said by the committee about the audit report to the officers and directors of the bank appears on page 17 of the report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs: The Committee asks, and I quote:

> Did the annual report of CCB for 1984 represent a fair and accurate view of the Bank's financial position at the time?

The report continues, and I quote:

> —the total size of the Bank's marginal loans revealed through the support agreement constitute sufficient evidence for the Committee to question the auditors' decision to issue an unqualified opinion.

That was done. The report continues:

> However, the auditors also knew that the financial statements approved by them would be used not only by CCB's existing shareholders, but also potential shareholders, creditors and potential creditors.

I do not have the time to quote the auditor's report to the bank directors, but many of the business practices of the bank were questioned. There were a great number of questions in committee about the fact that the bank was given an opinion by the auditors that it was a viable operation which the bank could use in its annual report.

We have to ask ourselves, Mr. Speaker, what about the directors of the bank? There were some very prestigious leaders of the business community who were directors of the bank, for instance, the former Premier of Manitoba, Mr. Sterling Lyon. What were the directors doing except taking the fees which were paid to them? Did they not have a responsibility to the depositors, to the shareholders and to the public to see that the bank was operating in a sensible and prudent way? Obviously not, Mr. Speaker, because except for a few who resigned very quietly because they were dissatisfied with the way the bank was operating, the directors simply took their money and kept quiet.

What about the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, Mr. Speaker? As I have indicated, over a period of a few years it was made responsible to pay out $1.5 billion because of the losses of the trust companies. Surely, it has a responsibility in this case. I say that the Government acted without sufficient knowledge. It ignored the offer of the chartered banks to send in their experienced personnel who could and would have looked at the real situation of the Canadian Commercial Bank and told the Government what was needed. The Government acted with haste, and without care and in an irresponsible way and we certainly are not going to support this Bill.

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), has reiterated for the past few minutes the inadequacies of the present banking system. I want to assure him that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) totally agrees with him. When our Party came into Government 13 months ago, we inherited a system which was totally inadequate. The Minister of State for Finance has put her mind to reviewing the whole mandate of the Inspector General and seeing that the system is reviewed.

I also want to suggest to my hon. friend that regional banks are extremely important to western Canada. They tend to facilitate small and medium sized businesses. Between 80 per cent and 85 per cent of jobs are created through small business and our Government is out to support jobs. Our main platform is to increase the economy and to put people back to work. The Hon. Member has to realize that regional banks are extremely important and this Government realizes that western Canada did, perhaps, suffer a great downturn when the National Energy Program was brought in by the Liberal Government in 1980. The small banks have suffered due to the National Energy Program but the new Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has incorporated the Western Accord as of last March and things are on an upturn out West. However, if we had not undergone the severe limitation of the PGRT which caused so many of our rigs to leave western Canada: Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, perhaps these banks would never have gotten into that position.

I would like to ask my hon. friend a question with respect to releasing the names of the uninsured depositors. Would he be in favour of having his personal financial status made public to Canadian citizens? Also, would he like his income tax return made public?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of questions but I will do my best to deal with them. Firt, as a resident of a western city, Winnipeg, I am all in favour of regional financial institutions. However, I only favour them if they are operated efficiently, honestly and with sound business principles. I am opposed to any financial institution which is run as sloppily, as carelessly and as dishonestly as the Canadian Commercial Bank.

The Hon. Member says that the Minister recognizes the need for a better system of regulation. I say to the Hon. Member that the Minister may say that, but the Minister is proposing a big expansion of financial institutions to let the trust companies and the insurance companies get into the banking business. The Hon. Member should note the comments made by the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) a few moments ago who pointed out that the State of New York has 300 people working in the Government department which monitors the operations of its financial institutions. I will wait with a great deal of interest but not much hope to see whether this Government, which is so determined to downsize virtually every one of its Departments, will be prepared to hire the people required to monitor our financial institutions. It was one thing to have a small monitoring agency when we had only the big five Banks. They are so powerful that even if they make some bad loans they can carry the loss. It is another thing entirely if we are going to have the kind of competition and the large number of institutions which the Hon. Member referred to. The Hon. Member also said that the Canadian Commercial Bank got into trouble because of the National Energy Program. If she reads the evidence she will know that the bank got into trouble not because of the NEP, but because of some very bad investments, including the Westlands Bank.

Today's newspapers talk about the virtual stoppage of exploration for oil and gas off the Atlantic coast. If that continues, I wonder what the spokespersons for this Government will say. They will not be able to blame that situation on the former Liberal Government because it is their Government and their policies which are in place at a time when the oil and gas exploration off the Atlantic coast is being virtually stopped.

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to clarify a couple of points with the Hon. Member. He seems to be mixing the Nova Scotia agreement with the Western Accord. They are two separate entities. One covers exploration and development on Canada Lands and the other concerns provincial lands and the two must not be mixed together. As well, he said he did not hold out much hope for a review of the banking system by the Minister. I want him to know that he should have a lot of hope because the Minister realizes that the Inspector General does not have the authority to go in and review and supervise all operations of banks which appear or might appear to be in some difficulty. He will see some changes in the Bank Act and increased activity in the area of inspection in the banking system so we can move forward and not have any further developments along these lines.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canada Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 7379).

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in this debate. I read very carefully the speech made by the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) in the House yesterday, and I did not find much of any substance.

Mr. Speaker, I did find what we call in English, and sometimes in French as well, a canard, in fact four canards. And I am not referring to the French word for a particular fowl, but to the word "canard" according to my English dictionary, where a "canard" . . .

[English]

I would like to refer to The Oxford Dictionary because it is used frequently in English in this context. It says that a canard is an absurd, extravagant rumour or report or hoax. Of course—

[Translation]

—in French the same meaning can be applied to this word, but it is also a commonly known bird—

[English]

Well, a duck will fly but I can say that the arguments put forward by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) in support of Bill C-79 will not fly. None of these canards will fly and it is for that reason that I rise to support the amendment to the Bill proposed yesterday by my Leader.

I am a little tired, and I expect you are as well, Mr. Speaker, of hearing speaker after speaker on the Tory benches rise to blame the problems of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank on the previous Government and the National Energy Program. There is truly a canard which will not fly. Canadians are too smart to swallow that kind of nonsense at this stage and I really cannot believe that deep in their heart of hearts, and I include my friend from Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow), Members opposite really think that this situation has been well managed by this Government. Nor do I think that the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, who is in this House today, thinks that this situation has been well managed by the Government. I know, Party discipline being what it is, that they will be reluctant to speak out for fear of receiving a call from the Prime Minister's Office. However, no one can accept the rationale put forward by my friend, the Minister of State for Finance. What did she tell us yesterday? She said, and I refer to page 7371 of Hansard:

> We are compensating these depositors because the situation facing these two banks reflects unique and particular circumstances.

Well, true, bad management existed but is that unique? It is not unique in the case of any financial institution which fails. Bad loans, are they unique? The only unique thing in this whole affair was the way in which the Government mismanaged the situation and made misrepresentations to the Canadian public and this House as to the viability of the banks. I refer once more to the statement made by the Minister of State for Finance in this House on March 25 of this year when she said, after the $255 million bail-out, that this bank is now a viable bank, it will be profitable in the future, and we will be repaid, as will other members of the support group, out of the future profits of the bank. That is the only thing that is unique. It was the failure of the Government to manage this situation properly and the misleading of the Canadian public and depositors who were induced to keep their deposits in the CCB.

I would like to draw attention to a telephone call we received from a gentleman who had purchased a $10,000 annuity five years ago at the Continental Trust Company. The company's accounts were frozen last June and on September 20 a liquidation was announced. Because his funds were not to be repaid within five years or less, they were not insured by the CDIC. The gentleman in question said that he would be happy to accept this, or not happy but he would accept it, probably reluctantly. He understood the terms under which he entered into this contract but he believed all Canadians were being treated the same way. Well, when he hears that uninsured depositors are being bailed out of two banks just two weeks after the Continental folded, how can he regard that as being fair and equitable? Do you suppose that that gentleman regards the circumstances of the Canadian Commercial Bank or the Northland Bank as unique and justifying that kind of treatment? I suggest not.

This speech—if I may refer to the second canard—tells us that depositors who stayed with these banks shared the Government's view that regional financial institutions can play an important role in Canada. That is why the depositors stayed with the bank and that is why we are being told that these depositors are to be bailed out. That statement is so fatuous that it should not be uttered in this House. No Canadian is going to believe that depositors stayed with this bank because they were concerned about regional banks. They were concerned about their money and they were told by the Minister in this House that their money was safe.

Seriously, Mr. Speaker, do you think that the City of Kanata, which I understand has some $7 million in one of these banks, left its money in the bank because it shared the Government's view that these regional financial institutions can play an important role? Do you think that the City of St. Catharines, Ontario, with $25 million of its taxpayers' money, did that as well? Does anyone suggest that the City of Westmount in my riding, with $2 million in the Northland Bank, left its money in on that belief? Surely this is the most extravagant canard that we have heard uttered in the House. These depositors left their money in that bank because they were told that their money was secure and that the bank was viable. Some of the shareholders may have stayed with these banks for the reasons suggested by the Minister, but the shareholders are not going to be reimbursed. Some of the debenture holders, but not all of them, may have stayed for those reasons as well. I will come to them in as few moments.

A third canard which will not fly is the statement by the Minister that our Government examined all the options at the time of the support package. I cannot say that that statement is untrue, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the options were examined, but the only sensible options were rejected and the option which was accepted was the worst of all possible worlds. Many of those options were described in some detail in the speech of my Leader yesterday. It is clear that the Minister was aware of the circumstances of the bank when she was first briefed in September 1984. There was a panic in March. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, the three great show biz events presented by the Government. The first was the First Ministers' Conference on St. Valentine's Day, then came the Shamrock Conference on St. Patrick's Day, and then the National Economic Summit on March 22. Right in the middle of that conference this financial Titanic, the CCB, struck an iceberg and started to sink.

No one was on the lookout, Mr. Speaker. The damage to the bank at that point was clearly beyond repair and it was inevitable that the CCB would go down. We were all invited to help bail it out and we did, being told that it was sound and would float. Speaking of options, Mr. Speaker, the chartered banks even offered to examine the loan portfolio of the CCB to see if the bank really could float. That offer was denied. They also suggested that the management of the bank be changed because management was clearly at the root of the difficulties of the CCB. That suggestion was also rejected. When one suggests that the various options were examined, they may have been, but it is equally true that they were rejected. The bank immediately began to sink and the bail-out of $225 million was put right down a black hole on the strength of the Minister's recommendations. Worse than that, Mr. Speaker, they tied the Northland Bank to this financial Titanic and sent them both down. That could probably have been avoided by giving the Northland Bank a support package in March and allowing the CCB to go the way it was inevitably destined to go.

We lost $225 million the first time around. We are now being asked for a further $875 million to pay off uninsured depositors. I see that Richardson Greenshields has estimated that the total loss will probably be in the neighbourhood of $2 billion. Do you know what $2 billion means, Mr. Speaker? It means that by the end of this exercise each Canadian taxpayer, of which, according to the 1982 tax returns filed, there are between 10 million and 11 million in Canada, will be required to fork up just under $200 in order to bail out the Minister and this Government from the disastrous course it set last March when it designed that support package for the CCB without knowing the facts. I am sure you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that each taxpayer can find better things to do with close to $200 of capital than to use it to pay off depositors and to bail out the Government from circumstances of its own making. To add insult to injury, we are all being asked to reach into our pockets and, blindfolded, hand that money over to depositors who present themselves for payment.

This brings me to the last canard. In his speech the Minister defends this on the ground of confidentiality. She says that to violate the confidentiality of the Bank Act would put all depositors in Canadian institutions at peril should any Government in future wish to get access to and publish that data. I heard the Member for Calgary South compound that canard by asking how you would like to have all of your financial data exposed in public. Nobody is asking for that, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

All we want to know is who are the people who will receive this generous contribution from the Canadian taxpayers? Is that asking too much? The people do not even have to identify themselves to get this free payment. I, for one, find it absolutely unbelievable that we would be asked and even forced to do that through legislation in the House. If we keep going down the path already staked out by the Minister we will be forced to hand out our savings and our money to those nameless individuals. It is quite unthinkable. It is unacceptable.

[English]

That is the reason that no sensible person could support this particular piece of legislation. How could we support this largess? This is not a case of people going to get their deposits from a bank under the provisions of the Bank Act. These people are having an ex gratia payment made to them by the taxpayers of this country. The amount of $875 billion which is being asked for here would require between $83 and $84 from every single taxpayer. That is not rational and does not even meet a test of common sense. That canard about confidentiality must be shot down as quickly as possible before it gets into flight.

• (1640)

I hope that Members of the Government side will have the courage to stand on this point and to say in caucus and to the Minister in question that this is not reasonable, fair, or sensible, that they will not accept it, and that they want an amendment to this Bill which will require any depositor who is to receive payment to be identified.

[Translation]

As I said a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, we have four canards that cannot fly in these circumstances, and it is simply a matter of being reasonable, having a full explanation in the House, and a Government willing to accept the proposed amendment. Indeed, given the circumstances, we must support the motion because the Government has yet to take a reasonable position.

[English]

Therefore, I say that this Bill either has to go back to the drawing board or be radically amended. That is the reason I stand here to speak in support of a motion which was put to the House by our Leader yesterday.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we have had the benefit of the remarks of my hon. friend who was a member of the Cabinet during the infamous period of the National Energy Policy which is really the reason why we have had to take these steps on behalf of these western regional banks.

While I do not want to ask him to apologize for that, I would ask him to enlighten us on any efforts that were made by the former Liberal administration to tighten up the regulatory process. The Hon. Member will know that the former Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance chaired a committee which recommended in 1982, some three years ago, tightening the regulatory process for banks. He will know that nothing was done, despite the fact that it was well known in financial circles that much had to be done to improve the regulatory process.

As well as having to bear the shame for the National Energy Program, the Hon. Member must bear the shame for the fact that during the time he was a member of Cabinet no action was taken by the Liberal Party to tighten the regulatory process. Although this is a rather large confessional in which to make such a statement, having seen all of the evidence and facing this embarrassment, will he not do the honourable thing and admit that during the last five years when he was a member of Cabinet the very important regulatory process was left to further ruin and ultimately led to the failure of these banks? I invite him to do the honourable thing at this time.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is speaking tongue in cheek, which is fair enough in the course of this debate. I would suggest to him that regulations can always be improved, but no banks failed while I was in Government. I suspect the reason was that whereas the regulatory mechanism might not have been as good as it should have been, the Ministers were on top of their Departments and knew what was taking place. This kind of problem would not have escaped their attention. That is a reasonable assumption to make.

However, that is not to say that the regulatory apparatus should not be improved. In fact, with the group of Ministers in Government today I suggest that the regulatory mechanisms should be tightened substantially in all departments to ensure that when those Ministers are not at the controls and do not know what is going on the bureaucracy can keep the ship of state on course.

With respect to the national energy question, I would have thought that the Hon. Member might have been one of those to stand in his place and admit that there was a monumental gaffe created and that the National Energy Program has become a whipping boy for every problem that emerges in western Canada. For Members of the Government, the National Energy Program has become the motto "Damn the CPR", recalling the old saying out West. However, before this debate became more partisan as the magnitude of this financial Titanic revealed itself, the Minister of State for Finance put the position clearly in the House. On March 25 in the House she said, speaking of the CCB, that this particular problem was triggered by something that happened within the bank's loan portfolio in California which then, of course, created problems within the organization as a whole.

That was an honest statement. That was taking the high road. I suspect that she received a call from the Prime Minister's office and subsequently I have noted that she too has leaned to the pressure to blame everything on the National Energy Program.

I believe that the Minister told us exactly as it was and is. I repeat that our Government had no bank failures and indeed the present Government probably requires a better regulatory mechanism if this kind of disaster is not to repeat itself.

[Translation]

Mr. Lanthier: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier).

Mr. Lanthier: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. There is a tripartite agreement whereby the Government side will let the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) have the floor now so that we will have two speakers in a row tomorrow. We also seek the unanimous consent of the House to let the Hon. Member sit while he delivers his speech because he has been injured.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I understand there has been agreement by all Parties in the House to make an exception to Standing Order 33 and allow the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) to remain seated. I hope he will soon be able to stand but since he has a fractured foot, we will allow him to speak from his seat.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish to thank Members of the House for giving unanimous consent to allow me to make my remarks in my place this afternoon. I understand that from the television angle I look like a midget. I assure the people of Canada that I am not. I wish to especially thank the Government Member who allowed me to make my remarks this afternoon. Tomorrow, hopefully, a cast will be put on my foot but it will lay me up for the next 72 hours.

There are some very important questions I wish to address in the course of this deabte. They go beyond a partisan approach. Bank failures and the possibility of bank failures is a serious question that we have not had to address in this country for many years. We have always assumed that our bank system was safe and sound. Over the years, Canadians have taken pride in the security of our banking system. This supposition on the part of depositors and the public of Canada, as well as Governments of all political persuasions, perhaps lulled us into a false sense of security.

Although the events of the last year have shocked all of us, I believe it should not have been a shock because the warning signs were there. We have seen a significant number of smaller financial institutions, namely trust companies, go under in the last number of years. Therefore, I dispute the statement made by the Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston), a former Minister of Finance. While he is technically correct that no bank went under when he was Minister of Finance, it is true that a number of smaller trust companies failed when his party was in power.

There had been many warning signals that our financial institutions were in trouble and the fact that some have failed warants increased regulation and support for CDIC and the office of the Inspector General of Banks. I believe that it is also true that the Inspector General of Banks requested more manpower in the past and that this was turned down by Treasury Board under the previous administration. It must accept responsibility for the sad state of affairs we are facing today.

I do not envy the position in which the Government finds itself. While the two banks in question are not among the large banks in this country, they are important as far as banks in the world are concerned. A significant number of small businesses, particularly in Calgary and Edmonton, had their funds tied up in this institution. I appreciate the difficulty in which the Government finds itself. No Government wants to see a large number of small companies and small business people going under through no fault of their own. We know as well that there is a fair number of those depositors who are not sophisticated depositors in the true sense of the word. Many of them are charitable organizations and public institutions such as municipalities, hospitals, et cetera. While we oppose the Bill, we are not adverse to helping such individuals, as well as public and quasi-public charitable institutions. My colleague, our finance critic, suggested the establishment of a special fund for hardship cases. Perhaps we should consider assisting small businesses which use banking institutions, not for the interest paid but for the services offered, such as chequing accounts and so on. Perhaps they should be given 100 per cent on their deposits.

Obviously the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank situation points out that we desperately need some policies. Is the Government to become the backer or the guarantor of last resort in every instance or in every case? If that is the case, it puts the country or the public purse in an impossible situation.

When does a Government bail out uninsured depositors and when does it not do so? It is an impossible situation. Surely we cannot bail out only the big guys and not the small guys. That is inherently unfair. During Question Period today we learned that no other Government of any country has bailed out uninsured depositors. Uninsured depositors have been bailed out, but it is the financial system or the banking system which has paid. When the Government considers options in developing a consistent policy, it has to keep the principle in mind that the financial system must cover the cost of any bail-out of uninsured depositors, not the public purse. That is one principle upon which we must insist.

After all, if the Government has to bail out uninsured depositors in the end from the public purse, we in the New Democratic Party suggest that it is about time it collected some of the profits to be made. Why should the Government pick up the losses but never have an opportunity to participate in the profits? Perhaps there should be an available fund so that credit unions, municipalities and hospital boards with excess funds for a small period of time can invest in a publicly owned and controlled deposit-like institution and not experience the risks which they obviously experienced with Northland and the Canadian Commercial Bank. To reiterate the point, if the Government is to pick up all losses, surely in heaven's name it should also have an opportunity to participate in the profit-making.

The other point to which I wanted to address myself has been addressed by a fair number of Government Members, particularly those from Alberta. They made the point in the House that the cause of the problem was the National Energy Program. I was not happy with the National Energy Program for a variety of reasons, most of which were quite different from those of the Conservative Party when it was in Opposition. However, I also felt that in many ways the NEP was a grab by the central Government of the resources of western Canada. As a western Canadian, I was not all that happy with the program. However, to blame the collapse of the CCB and the Northland Bank on the National Energy Program alone is a disservice to western Canada. Government Members, particularly those from Alberta, must recognize a few simple facts. The economic atmosphere which existed in Alberta during the oil boom was very unhealthy. The land speculation which was occurring, particularly in the cities of Edmonton and Calgary, was also unhealthy. The Province of Saskatchewan experienced a bit of a boom during that period of time, but it had a NDP Government which believed in economic planning and in Keynesian economics. Essentially it believed that in boom times some of the excess wealth should be put away for rainy days. The Government of Saskatchewan at that time did not allow the land speculation which occurred in Edmonton and in Calgary. Through the Saskatchwan Housing Corporation, that Government became involved in developing new tracts of land so that the prices of homes in Regina did not go sky-high. In that way the cost of housing and urban land in Regina was kept down, so that when the boom started to fade that province did not experience the type of bust which occurred in Edmonton and in Calgary. It was able to maintain a stable and sound economic climate in the Province of Saskatchewan. Unfortunately, in Alberta, with a gung-ho type of free enterprise system, huge profits were made when the time was ripe, but when the bust came, all the costs and social hardships ensued which are very often borne by the public.

It is ironic that these great free enterprisers from Alberta are now standing in the House, justifying a Government bail-out and insisting upon more Government regulations and inspectors. What a contradiction in terms, especially coming from those gung-ho free enterprisers out of Alberta.

The type of political atmosphere which has existed in Alberta has not been a healthy one. It has not been healthy for the country and certainly not for the Province of Alberta. The people of that province are now paying the price. Hopefully they will understand some of the political repercussions and implications of what happened. The period of time during the Alberta boom was a period in which banks and business people became greedy. They tried to increase their profits as much as they could. Their greed led to the downfall of the Canadian Commercial Bank. It is unfortunate when I hear members of the Conservative Party from Alberta indicate in the House that they have not learned that lesson. They do not attribute any of the downfall of the CCB to the bad management, the high risk loans and the type of greed which prevailed in that province at that particular time. It was that greed which led to the downfall of the Canadian Commercial Bank and of the Northland Bank. That greed was abetted by the Government of Alberta and its political philosophy or attitude which allowed a tremendous boom to occur but, when the bust occurred, which led to many shattered lives and businesses. It is a prime example of how a responsible Government involved in economic planning would have taken a different course, as we did in the Province of Saskatchewan. Yes, we had a boom, but we did not have a boom based upon greed. We did not allow the greed to send the prices of real estate sky-high. When the bad times came we had a cushion. Surely the people of Alberta, as other western Canadians who have experienced the boom and bust cycle, should have known better.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is the Hon. Member attributing this quality of greed to all people of Alberta?

Mr. de Jong: Absolutely not; no, absolutely not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On that point, I wish the Hon. Member well with his fractured foot.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING DENTAL PLAN

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of establishing a dental plan for the Canadian Armed Forces.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the rules of the House do not allow me to propose an amendment to my own motion. The motion as is there has a word missing and I would like you to seek unanimous consent of the House to add that word to my motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleagues in the House. The motion reads:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of establishing a dental plan for the Canadian Armed Forces.

I want to add the word "dependants".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed that the motion should read: "That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of establishing a dental plan for the Canadian Armed Forces dependants"?

Moved by Mr. Shields, seconded by Mr. Brightwell:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of establishing a dental plan for the Canadian Armed Forces dependants.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I want to first thank my colleagues in the House for giving me unanimous consent to add the word "dependants" because the way the original motion ran it was rather redundant. As we know all members of the Canadian Armed Forces have dental and medical plans.

It has become an issue in this past while, Mr. Speaker, particularly among dependants of the Armed Forces personnel, that they do not have access to private plans as do most others in the workforce in Canada. For example, teachers in most jurisdictions have access to a group dental plan and are able to purchase or insure their families and their children for the required dental care by joining the plans. The cost is not prohibitive. It runs approximately $15 to $20 per month.

People who have made representations to me have indicated very clearly that they are not asking the Government to pick up the tab. What they are asking the Government to do is establish a group for them, approach an insurance company on their behalf as a group so that individuals within the Armed Forces may subscribe to that by way of payroll deduction. In other words, they are not asking the Government to add to the budget of any department; they are not asking the Government to do one single thing except establish a group so that dependants of Armed Forces personnel may, by their husbands or wives payroll deductions, enrol in the dental plan. In this day and age I think we all know the difficulty and the cost of medical services and how they have gone up dramatically. In this day and age it is not uncommon to find companies that employ 37, 40 and 50 people enrolled in a dental plan on behalf of their employees. I just cite a couple of examples. There is a small school board in my riding in northeastern Alberta that has 211 families enrolled and 126 singles. They are all teachers and they are enrolled in a dental plan. The cost for the singles is around $14 a month and for the families around $35 a month. The key was that the insurance company that was approached had to have a unit to work with and this they do not have in the Armed Forces at the present time.

Another small company has 37 singles enrolled at a cost of $15 a month and 16 families at $39 a month, or slightly higher depending on the make-up of the family. TransCanada Pipelines is another much larger one. I will not quote the cost but because of its size it is significantly lower than the ones I indicated before. They have 1,480 families and 414 singles enrolled in their plan.

One can easily determine by looking at all of the Armed Forces personnel across Canada whose dependants are not covered by any dental services that it would make a very large group indeed. I think it would be very lucrative for an insurance company and many insurance companies would come forward and be quite willing to cover a plan like this if it was administered at the payroll deduction centre. Queens regulations today indicate that there is an entitlement to dental treatment. Of course all members of the Armed Forces personnel office are men. Dental care for dependants under certain circumstances does exist, for instance, in an isolated or an overseas posting. In some isolated units such as Alsask, Saskatchewan; Goose Bay, Gypsumville, Manitoba; Holberg, B.C.; Inuvik; Masset, B.C.; Mont Apica, Quebec; Senneterre, Quebec; Sioux Lookout, Ontario; and Yellowknife, NWT dental facilities are covered along with medical, for obvious reasons.

Cold Lake, a major base in my riding, was considered isolated to March 1, 1983. One can imagine the problems that existed when on March 1, 1983 Cold Lake base, which houses approximately 4,000 dependants living on the base, all of a sudden was without dental coverage. There were cases where some of the children were having orthodontic work done and they were not prepared for the bill which came in for the cost of their dental care. They were not able to get the necessary insurance coverage. There are cases documented to be by constituents where individuals, families, mothers had to leave the home where they were working and raising their children and get a job to pay a dental bill. Somehow this just does not ring properly to me. I think there is something wrong when the Department of National Defence or Treasury Board will not take the time to just set up or set in motion and set in place an organization that would allow individuals at their request to come forward and say "deduct from my monthly pay for enrollment into the dental plan". They do not ask for something for nothing. They are willing to pay for it.

I am not going to waste the time of the House on this. I think I have made myself clear. I am not asking the Government to put forward any money. I am only making a reasonable request to the Government to set up a group plan to allow members of the Armed Forces to participate in a payroll deduction plan so that their families can be protected with dental care.

Thank you Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to rise in support of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) and his motion which would provide for dental care plan for dependants of Armed Forces personnel. I am glad to support this. I am sure that there is no Member of the House who would want to oppose it. Certainly no one will want to oppose it vocally. I only hope that the Members of his own Party will support it actively by allowing this motion to come to a vote so that the House can declare itself in support of this very important motion.

I think that all Members in the House will agree that the Conservative Government has taken a bit of a beating in the last few weeks. The Hon. Member's motion gives it an opportunity to redeem itself in the eyes of the Canadian public. I commend this not only to the back-benchers but also to members of the Government. Here is the chance for the Government to take a positive, assertive role in helping to do something for the Canadian people.

I think we must recognize that the failure to include dental care in our comprehensive medicare program is something that needs to be addressed. We need dental care for more than just Armed Forces personnel, but that is a good place to begin. Back in 1964 when Chief Justice Emmett Hall drafted the report that led to medicare, he said that we had to go beyond simply paying for visits to the doctor. In his report, he said the following:

> No one would suggest that the payment of medical bills is not an important item, but it is after all but one item in the full range of health services and in any objective approach it could not be permitted to dominate the whole field.
> There are many other areas in the health service field that cry out for improvement: mental illness, retarded children, crippled children, the crippling diseases, paraplegics, the aged and infirm, dental services and drug costs.

We have not really begun to move on the basic agenda contained in Mr. Justice Emmett Hall's report. I think it is time that we did so. We should not only look at the need for dental care for Armed Forces personnel but we should move toward a comprehensive dental care program for Canadians all across the country.

It is important to realize the the need for dental care, and I would like to share with the House a few statistics regarding that need. Only 50 per cent of Canadians visit dentists annually. The fact is that children from low-income families are three times as likely to have poor teeth as those from other families. In 1979 in Ontario, 29 per cent of decayed teeth in five-year olds had not been filled. By the age of 13, 32 per cent of decayed teeth in children had not been filled. This indicates that there is a very large segment of society that is not getting even the most basic of dental care. In fact, pregnant women also tend to have poor teeth. A decade-old study done by Nutrition Canada indicated that 90 per cent of pregnant women under the age of 20 had bad teeth.

While most provinces offer some kind of denticare program, it is significant that the Provinces of Ontario and British Columbia, two of the provinces which should be among the richest Provinces of Canada, do not offer those programs. The Province of British Columbia was beginning to establish such a program when it was cut back in the name of false restraint. To restrain public spending at the expense of the dental health of children is, in my opinion, a crime.

The failure to provide adequate dental care along with our medicare program indicates that we still consider dental care to be somewhat of a fringe benefit or cosmetic option that can be taken or left alone. The feeling is that if people can afford dental care, that is fine, but if they are too poor to afford it, it is not that serious. This is a fundamental mistake. Unless there is an active program of dental care, people will pay for it with their health in later years. The emphasis should be on early detection and prevention. Healthy teeth and gums are not simply a matter of looking good but are a matter of basic health.

From my own family experience, and I am sure from the family experiences of Members on all sides of the House, I know that even orthodontic work is not simply a cosmetic matter. The need to have a healthy bite and proper spacing is something that affects basic health. Yet we know how terribly expensive orthodontic work can be. Many Members of this House wish that we were covered by some kind of a dental program to meet those needs. If this is true for Members of Parliament who have a reasonable salary, to put it in terms my fellow Members will appreciate, and if we find it difficult to pay for orthodontic work, how much more is that the case for other Canadians, many of whom are on very restricted incomes? Certainly that applies to the vast number of people in the Armed Forces.

We know that many unions have negotiated dental plans for their members and members' families. However, a very high percentage of Canadians are still not covered by any dental program, and that includes members of the Armed Forces and public servants. When other Canadians are able to negotiate programs with their employers, why is it that the Canadian Government is such a poor employer?

I am very happy to suggest that this Bill is a good beginning. Let us begin with the Armed Forces. Give the Armed Forces the opportunity to negotiate a dental plan. Let us then extend this opportunity to all federal public employees and let us work toward the day when there is a comprehensive dental program that will service the needs of all Canadians.

On that basis, I am very pleased to support the motion of the Hon. Member and I hope that it will come to a vote. I know that if it does come to a vote, it will receive the unanimous support of all Members of the House.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for bringing this motion before the House today. The motion refers to Canadian Armed Forces personnel. I understand that that was an error and that the Hon. Member means to refer to dependants of military personnel. That is a very good point indeed.

We must remember that members of the Canadian Armed Forces are consistently on the move. We know that they do not have the opportunity to settle in and form deep roots in the communities to which they are posted.

Mr. Oberle: We are going to get them root canals.

Mr. Hopkins: The Hon. Member wants to throw in a joke, but this is no joking matter. As I was saying, members of the Armed Forces are posted from place to place and each time they go to a different base, they have to find a dentist in the area who will look after their dependants. Then, two years later, they may be posted to another base and they have to go through the same process all over again.

The Canadian Armed Forces personnel themselves have had a dental plan for some time. The "Dental Treatment and Service for Dependants and other Civilians" document dealing with this matter contains one paragraph of particular interest here and is with regard to dental examination prior to posting to isolated areas. It reads as follows:

> Service members, dependants and other civilians may be located in an area where limited or no dental care is available. Prior to their departure and to ensure that they do not become an administrative burden, they will be provided with a dental examination, advised of their dental condition and of the dental care restrictions at the new location.

I believe that that is a very important provision. I share with my hon. colleagues a great admiration for all members of the Canadian Armed Forces and the important work they carry out for this nation. My Party and I feel that it is important to make every effort to ensure that our military personnel and their dependants receive every service to make their lives more enjoyable and, indeed, more comfortable. Theirs is a task which requires a great sacrifice. This is the least we can do as a nation and as a Government to show our appreciation for their dedicated service. Therefore, I support the general thrust of the motion which seeks to make available to dependants of Armed Forces personnel an adequate dental plan.

I would also like to place on the record that it is not only in cases of medical care and dental care that the dependants of Armed Forces personnel have a challenge as they move from place to place in Canada. I had the privilege of teaching in an Armed Forces high school. We had families coming and going all the time. It is very difficult for families, children and teenagers to adjust in moving from one community to another and in changing friends and schools. I think we need to have an appreciation for the other pressures and challenges which families of military personnel face. Therefore it is incumbent upon the House to look very seriously upon this motion which is before us today.

I can understand that there has been an expression of willingness on the part of the dependants who would benefit from such a plan to underwrite the costs of it to a degree. I can think of no reason to oppose such a plan. I think it is an admirable one, especially if there will be no additional drain on the federal Treasury other than through the matching of funds which are put in by dependants of military personnel. It would be a good plan for the Department of National Defence to sit down with the Department of National Health and Welfare and, indeed, with the Health Ministers from the various provinces to discuss how such plans can indeed be put into place.

While we are discussing dental plans for dependants of Armed Forces personnel, we certainly cannot overlook the fact that we have a great many civilians in Canada who are in dire need of dental care. Last week an individual who needs new dentures came into my office. He is an elderly person and cannot afford the $650 which it will set him back to pay for those dentures. There is no question that while we look upon a dental plan for dependants of the Canadian Armed Forces that we certainly must be looking at this situation across the nation as a whole. My hon. friend across the way who made the comment earlier spoke about root canals. I did not understand what he was saying in the first instance. However, I appreciate his comments in view of the statement I was making at the time.

There is a good feeling in the House with respect to the motion before us. I think there would be a good feeling in the House to look at dental plans across the nation as a whole. We citizens realize that when we have these plans someone has to pay for them. The money has to come from somewhere. I think it behooves each one of us, each and every Canadian, to realize that if we are to have this type of coverage then it would be in a contibutory fashion. The taxpayers would come in with a share of the cost, as would the provinces at the federal-provincial health level.

Canadians are fortunate to have the types of medical care plans which are in place in Canada already. With the wealth of our resources and with the human generosity which Canadians have shown with respect to looking after their neighbours and in being their brothers' keepers, there is a feeling that there are many people in Canada today who just simply cannot afford the costs of dental care. This is a very serious issue indeed. We should look at it and try to make progress in order to help these people out in the future.

I assure all interested parties that given the nature of this Government I doubt if there will be any real action taken with respect to this plan being implemented in the foreseable future. We have seen that this Government has been cutting back in many areas with respect to taxes and pension allocations relating to individual Canadians. That is no reason for it not to look at improvements and, indeed, even review the cut-backs which have taken place which affect individual Canadians. We cannot continue to cut back on personal benefits to the general public of Canada and still end up 10 years down the road with the good quality of service we have today in medical care.

It takes a great deal of diplomacy to bring about dental plans and medical care plans because they involve federal-provincial relations to thenth degree. The provincial Governments in Canada are always trying to get as much money out of the federal Treasury as they possibly can while the federal Treasury always tries to hold back as much as it can. The federal Government does not want to raise taxes which places it in the bad eye of the public. I suggest to the Hon. Member who puts forward the motion today that he has many friends who support his cause. I hope the Government is prepared to take a serious approach with respect to the implementation of a dental care plan for dependants of members of the Canadian Armed Forces and at the same time look at a national dental care plan for Canada.

As we progress as a nation, broaden our industrial base and manage our national resources better than they have ever been managed at times in the past, we will be in a better position to pay for these services. We will be in a better position to pay the Government portion for the service while at the same time retaining the medical care services which are already in place in Canada. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Department of National Defence and the Dental Association of Canada should have a very close relationship in order to overcome many of the difficulties faced by the families of our Armed Forces as a result of being moved from community to community. I would hope that all dentists across Canada would be particularly sensitive to the needs of new people moving into Canadian Armed Forces bases in Canada and that they would take those people into their offices and treat them as first-class customers while they are in the community. It is very important that we make these families feel welcome wherever they go in Canada. Of course, one of the ways of making them feel welcome is to make sure the community to which they are moved or posted has the necessary services to provide to them. In the case where these families are moved to an isolated community, I quoted the section from the DND document which explains the kinds of services which are available to them before they leave.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would simply say that the Liberal Party of Canada is very much in favour of looking into a dental plan for dependants of the Canadian Armed Forces personnel. Certainly, at the same time, we are in favour of looking at the national picture for other Canadians across this country who need that type of attention.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in the debate today. I am not surprised at the position taken by my hon. friend from the New Democratic Party. I am somewhat surprised at the position taken by my friend, the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Pembroke-Nipissing—

Mr. Hopkins: Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke.

Mr. McDermid: Well, the people in Pembroke were never last in my book but obviously the Hon. Member thinks they are. I spent three wonderful years—

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) is just trying to get in a cheap shot. It is quite traditional in this House that all Hon. Members are identified by their riding name. If the Hon. Member were really with it, having lived in Pembroke as he has for a number of years, he would have known better. He would have known the name of the riding.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, the reason I put Pembroke where I did is because I have a lot more admiration for Pembroke than the Hon. Member. I am surprised at the Hon. Member for standing up in the House and making the statement he did. I give the Hon. Member full marks. I campaigned against him many, many years ago. He was the winner and we were the losers at that particular time. He is a great supporter of the Armed Forces and I understand that. However, I am surprised that in all the years his Party was in Government I never heard him once stand in this House and suggest in Private Members' Hour—when he had all the opportunity in the world—a dental plan for the Armed Forces or for anyone else, for that matter.

Mr. Hopkins: Oh, no? Are you sure about that?

Mr. McDermid: I think the record will show that. I do not believe he has ever done so. He was first elected in 1962 or 1963—

Mr. Hopkins: No, you are wrong again, John.

Mr. McDermid: It is ancient history, anyway. We all know that. It was quite a while ago. He has been in the House for quite a number of years and has been a strong supporter of the Armed Forces, and I give him full marks for that. He has also been a strong supporter for NATO and NORAD and he gets full marks for that as well. However, for him to stand up today and all of a sudden advocate a dental plan, when he has had that opportunity for so many years in this House of Commons, I think is really pushing his credibility just a little too much.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my hon. friend who brought this Bill forward.

Mr. Hopkins: He is not here.

Mr. McDermid: He is here, don't worry. I believe the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) has a very great concern. He, like the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins)—I am glad I said it correctly; it made the Hon. Member feel better—has a genuine interest in this subject and is not afraid to stand up in the House and introduce a motion like this. I do not believe there is anyone in this House who would disagree that the Armed Forces are entitled to expect fair and equitable treatment as part of the terms and conditions under which they render service to this country.

It may be useful, to put this debate into context, Mr. Speaker, to describe to the House the general practice followed in establishing military compensation. It is essentially based on compatibility with the Public Service. This principle was established by a decision of Cabinet—I might say, a Liberal Cabinet—in October of 1971. It was reaffirmed in 1982 by the then President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of National Defence. I might remind my hon. friend that he was in the House at that time on the Government side and supported that decision.

Although military compensation is based on comparability with the Public Service, it cannot be equated precisely because there are many functions performed in the military context which do not exist in the Public Service. I believe we all agree with that. To bridge those differences, a large number of Public Service trades have been taken as standards, for pay purposes, for certain military trades. By using averaging process and projections, it is possible to arrive at a basis upon which the Treasury Board can establish military compensation on the recommendations of the Department of National Defence. This process has its good side and its bad side. I am the first to admit that. However, I believe that it is fact to say that over the years it has resulted in a compensation package which is comprehensive in its scope and is indeed fair and equitable to members of the Armed Forces as well as to their dependants.

I feel, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, that I should take this occasion to review some of the programs which are in place to provide for their welfare. First and foremost is their pension plan which ranks among the best in the country. Members of the Armed Forces have an insurance plan to protect their incomes in the event of long-term disability. The Government contributes to the cost of providing provincial health insurance for their dependants and makes available a program to cover the dependants for health costs which are not provincially insured. Members of the Armed Forces have a sound program to provide benefits for injury or death on duty, a cost-shared life insurance program and an extensive program of income supplementation which ensures the maintenance of a decent standard of living for his dependants in the event of death or disability of a member from any cause.

There are measures for the continuance of pay during a short-term illness and comprehensive programs of medical and dental services at government expense. I am not citing these few examples to suggest that members of the Armed Forces are over-protected. The programs in place are no more than are due those members in comparison with other groups and by the special nature of their duties. The purpose of giving these examples is to simply illustrate that the Armed Forces are in no sense a forgotten group in terms of their service-related benefits, nor will it ever be a forgotten group under this administration.

With that background in mind, I wish to address some of the broader issues which the Treasury Board must consider when group benefit programs of this kind are under discussion.

Treasury Board is directly responsible for the expenditure of public funds on group benefits not only for the Armed Forces but for the Public Service, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and many other groups as well; consequently, the Board cannot view a proposed change to the compensation package of any one of these groups in total isolation, but must consider the implications for all of the groups. This does not mean that a change in the benefits of one group will automatically apply to the others. Such is quite definitely not the case, because otherwise the individuality so essential to each of the groups would be lost. The ability of the employer to tailor benefits to the needs of unique groups would be seriously undermined. If that were the case, the possibility always exists that benefits which would be appropriate for one group would be applied inappropriately to another.

I said at the outset that members of the Armed Forces must be treated fairly and equitably. By the same token, employees in the Public Service and members of the RCMP must be treated fairly and equitably. Again, this does not mean that benefits must be the same for all three groups. Service in the Armed Forces and employment in the Public Service are different in many obvious ways and those differences are reflected in various ways. For example, Armed Forces members have access to a program of comprehensive dental care which is paid for by the Government.

In view of the fact that there have been discussions with union representatives concerning employees who do not benefit from a Government sponsored dental plan, it may be of interest to all Hon. Members if I were to outline recent developments in the ongoing discussions which have been taking place with Public Service unions on the dental care issue.

All Hon. Members will be aware that Public Service unions have been seeking a dental plan for a number of years, and their position has been clearly stated. Succeeding Governments have undertaken to try to ensure that public servants enjoy a compensation package which is comparable to the package in other employment sectors. That philosophy is much easier to expound that to apply. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that a goodly number of working Canadians do not have dental plans to help them with their expenses, and we should not lose sight of that fact. Nevertheless, when one examines those groups of employers which have traditionally been used as the basis for comparision, dental plans are indeed widespread.

It is important to recognize that the introduction of a dental plan will have an impact on the Government's benefit expenditures. All Hon. Members will appreciate this when I point out that, if all three groups—the Public Service and dependants of members of the Armed Forces and the RCMP—were covered by dental care plans, the potential insured population, including the families, could be well over one million persons. The actual number of plan members, if the plan were universal, would exceed 300,000. Simply for illustration, the total cost could exceed $100 million annually for a very basic plan. Now, Mr. Speaker, the Government would not pick up this entire cost, but only a share of it. Nevertheless, the potential expenditure of public funds is considerable.

It is only natural that the unions want to see a dental plan introduced on the most favourable possible terms for their members. For its part, the Government must seek the best achievable balance between its responsibility to provide a competitive benefit package and its responsibility to taxpayers to keep its over-all expenditures on Public Service benefits at at reasonable and defensible level.

This Government approached the issue in good faith. Serious negotiations were undertaken with unions in short order, and real impetus was given to the issue for the first time. These negotiations are still under way and the Government has every intention of pursuing them to a fair and responsible conclusion. Naturally there can be no guarantee of an early conclusion to the negotiations, nor can the spirit of the negotiations be betrayed by discussing the details publicly at this time. However, I am confident that they are being pursued with vigour.

We have remarked at some length on the discussions with Public Service unions. The reason I have done so is to demonstrate this Government's commitment to find a way to extend dental care to those groups which wish to have it, where it can be demonstrated that it is possible to do so, and it is warranted to do so, on the basis of comparability. At the same time, this must be achieved in a fiscally responsible way at a time when so many demands are being made, by competing priorities, on the finite resource available to the Government.

In closing, having gone through some oral surgery recently, I know the expense is large. At the same time, dentists tell me that with the new methods of teeth care and education, the normal drill and fill will almost be non-existent within the next very short period of time. Young people are today taking good care of their teeth, something which we probably neglected when we were that age. I am sure that those are your own teeth that I see smiling out at me, Mr. Speaker, and for an old football player that is amazing.

Mrs. Sparrow: Why amazing?

Mr. McDermid: He played before they used helmets—masks, sorry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Not helmets, masks!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Point of order. I would just like the Hon. Member to know that we did not need orthodontists. When we got elbows in our teeth they straightened out by themselves.

Mr. McDermid: All I am saying is that dental care is taking a new direction and most of the care is preventative. As the years go on, dentists say that the practice of dentistry will be entirely different, although it will continue to be very expensive for those who have to use it. I feel very confident that this Government, in its negotiations, will give the best possible hearing to this request by the Public Service, the RCMP and the military, and I am confident that the conclusion will be for the best for all concerned.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to deliver a few remarks with respect to my colleague's motion. I want to join with the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) in complimenting my colleague, the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins), on the continued interest he has taken in the members of the Armed Services. I know he has been interested in this subject for several years. I guess it is only recently that he felt he could put on the floor of the House of Commons motions which would benefit the Armed Services. I know he found it quite constraining when the Liberal Party over the years allowed the Armed Services to dwindle. I know he was a leader, perhaps the only one in that Party, in wanting the Armed Services to go forward. He is to be complimented because he had very little support from the Liberal Party during those long years. While we were in the wilderness, he was in his own wilderness, shall we say. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown, made reference to ongoing negotiations between the Government and the Public Service. The House will know that we have put these negotiations on a new footing. Instead of using the technique of the former Government of shouting and threatening, we are sitting down at the bargaining table and discussing the issues between employer and employee on a very reasonable and meaningful basis.

One of the things referred to is the question of a dental plan for all public servants. I am pleased to tell the House that those matters are going forward. There is no question that the cost of dental services concerns every Member of this House, whether on behalf of himself or herself or of dependants. It is a very major cost in today's society. I know that in Ontario fluoridation, although it was resisted quite strongly originally, has improved the teeth of the people who have had the benefit of it. I know for a fact that my children do not seem to go to the dentist nearly as often as I used to.

However, I have had some experience with orthodontists. As a result, I want my five children to be orthodontists because I think there is a great future for young people in that profession. I do not know whether one should refer to personal experiences, but last week my daughter had her braces removed after having worn them for some 18 months. Orthodontists do some wonderful work. Her teeth were straight and she was looking forward to going to a party the next day. I think that everyone's children should have that advantage and that is certainly on the table at the present time although I am not at liberty to say what point those negotiations have reached.

Having set the stage with those general remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about the Government's position with respect to a dental plan. I know that Members of the House are anxious to have a hard look taken at a dental plan for all people who work under federal jurisdiction. Members of the Armed Forces and all other public servants are well aware that for many other Canadians in the work force dental bills are not the problem they used to be because these employees have access, through their employers, to dental plans which pay their dental bills. It is bound to be a source of concern for members of the Armed Forces that they not only have access to dental services, but are able to pay for them. In referring to the problems of the Armed Forces my colleague made reference to physical access in that dental facilities are not available in all of the places where Armed Forces personnel are posted. We want to have that matter up-graded. At the same time as we are concerned about the physical access we must be concerned about financial access. There are dental facilities available to armed services employees at cost. We want to have that expanded.

I would like to put the entire question of a dental plan in greater perspective. I think it is fair to say that the dental plan for public servants is seen as what might be called a capping stone of an entire benefits package which the Government is working on at the present time. We know that it has become the norm among large employers and the federal Government, as a very large employer, must conform to what is being done in the non-public servant world. Many of these plans accept a large part of the responsibility for ensuring that employees have access to the programs that spread the risk, attract the employer funds, and promote the financial security of the employees who are retiring, who become ill, or who are injured on the job as well as the security of the employee's family in the event of his or her death.

I think it is fair to say that the Government of Canada has been a fair employee through the years. We would like to have an increase in that fairness in many ways and we would like to do that within the demands and constaints of the horrendous deficit that was left to us by the Liberal Party. We would do many things in terms of social benefits for all Canadians if we had not been left with the crippling deficit amassed by the Liberal Party over the last 16 years. That is a partisan view and I do not want it to interfere with a non-partisan discussion on the issue of a dental plan for dependants of armed services employees.

The Government is criticized if it is not seen to be spending taxpayers' money wisely. There is no question that to many people a dental plan put into place by the Government would be seen to be spending the money wisely. Sometimes we are damned if wo do and damned if we do not. For that reason we are taking a hard look at different types of dental plans and considering the cost. I am in a position to personally assure the House that we have discussed this matter with the interested parties and are studying it carefully to ensure that it is not only a fair plan for employees, but reasonable for the employer.

The Government has been concerned about the issues of pensions, long-term disability insurance, health insurance, and numerous other programs as well as being concerned about the question of a dental plan. The Government is ahead of the market in some ways in that it is doing more for its employees than is being done for those in private enterprise. In other areas, such as this one, we find the Government is lagging behind that which is the norm in private enterprise. It is our job to up-grade and yet not overtake such that we will be criticized by private enterprise which says that it cannot afford to do with the money it has left what the Government is trying to do with the money given it by private enterprise. That is a balancing act which all Governments have to do with public employees.

There is no question that the Government must promote dental hygiene, whether preventative methods or orthodontic work. There is no question that we are continuing the work of the previous Government with regard to promoting dental hygiene. No matter how critical I have been of the previous regime, and no matter how many opportunities it has given me, I have never been critical of its efforts with respect to dental hygiene. I would like to conclude on that point and perhaps continue the next time this matter is brought before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hour provided for the consideration of private Members' business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—MUNICIPAL SEWER IMPROVEMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, you may be aware of a very serious pollution and health problem in Metropolitan Toronto that has existed for many years. This problem has resulted in the closing of most of the beaches on the waterfront of Toronto along Lake Ontario in the last three or four summers, but it has existed for much longer. In any event, the beaches have been closed as a result of water pollution caused by raw sewage that has been flowing into Lake Ontario from the homes in Metropolitan Toronto. This has been caused by an antiquated sewer system in many parts of Metropolitan Toronto. It is a sewer system which combines both sanitary sewers with storm sewers. Of course, that means that the storm water created during a severe rain storm flows into the same sewer pipe into which sanitary sewage flows. When there is a storm, this overflows the filtration plants, floods into the rivers and streams and then pollutes the waterfront with raw sewage, causing not only a pollution problem but a severe health problem. That is particularly severe in the southern part of my riding which contains a major portion of the Borough of East York.

The problem is that the combined sewer system is antiquated. The problem can only be solved by separating the sanitary sewer system and the storm sewer system. This is being done in newer subdivisions in the newer urban areas but has not been done as yet in the older urban areas of cities because it is an extremely costly process. This problem not only results in lake pollution but in a health hazard in individual homes all over. When there is a rain storm in my riding, the combined water in the sewer pipes—some of it sanitary, some of it storm—backs up quite frequently into basements and floods those basements with raw sewage. It is quite clear that this creates an obvious health hazard.

As I said, the solution is to separate these two storm sewers, which is a costly process. The municipalities in Metropolitan Toronto have committed large sums—in fact millions of dollars—for a great many years toward separating their sewer system. The Province of Ontario has assisted in many instances as well and has provided millions of dollars.

Metropolitan Toronto, particularly a portion of my riding which includes the Borough of East York, has been looking for federal funding for a number of years. Between 1962 and 1982 we received federal funding for sewer separation problems. Unfortunately that has disappeared since 1982. The federal Government did supply funding for sewer separation programs as part of its job creation program, and I must give the former Government a great deal of credit for that, but once this funding expires, it has been made clear that there will be no extension of that program.

We need and are looking for further federal assistance in the sewer separation problem in order to eliminate pollution and the health hazard involved. I was pleased to see that last week, the National Water Policy Report recommended that there be some additional funding from the federal Government for both the municipalities and the provinces to help eliminate this problem.

Yesterday, I put a question on this subject to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), asking whether he supported the recommendations contained in the National Water Policy Report or the Pearse report, and whether he would urge the Government to contribute financially to help with local sewer improvement programs. In fact, the Minister indicated that he had met with his provincial counterparts and that they had discussed the problem and the report. There was an indication that the federal Government was prepared to consider it. As of yesterday we had an indication of hope from the Minister that some help and some support would be forthcoming. I trust that the Parliamentary Secretary this evening will be able to turn that hope into help, and give us an indication that the federal Government will agree to giving financial help for sewer improvement projects to the municipalities. I am looking forward to hearing from him in that respect.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, at the very least, I want to let the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) know that the Government, and in particular the Parliamentary Secretary, appreciate the clarity of his question and his indication of hope for federal support. I think he pointed out a problem on which we all must focus. However, with all respect, it is a problem not confined to just that area mentioned by the Hon. Member. It is a much broader problem.

According to the surveys to which the Pearse inquiry had access, about 84 per cent of the municipal population is served by sewers but only 57 per cent by some form of sewage treatment. Despite the fact that in some areas of Ontario, and in a way which affects beaches and perhaps basements—

Mr. Dingwall: Tell us about Nova Scotia.

Mr. Gurbin: Nova Scotia may well be one of the areas where there may be sewer collection but no form of sewage treatment. As was indicated by the Minister in response to a question, perhaps only 10 per cent of the sewage in eastern Canada is adequately treated. The problem is real. The problem is there. No one can deny it. The Pearse report brought it into focus for everyone to deal with.

Also it was indicated in the Pearse report that the total replacement costs of the Canadian waterworks and of the waste water system were estimated at $62 billion and $47.5 billion respectively, or approximately $3,000 per capita. That gives an indication of the financial magnitude of the problem.

In conclusion, the Minister indicated very clearly that he talked with the provincial Ministers. They are now in a position where they will come back to us at the federal level with their response to the Pearse inquiry on federal water policy. At that point in time the Ministers will be able to discuss further what position and what role the federal Government might take in the resolution of the problem.

TRADE—CANADIAN LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES. (B) GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) concerning Canadian lumber exports to the United States and the position of the Government of Canada.

By way of introduction, the whole issue of trade and trade-related matters is becoming of increasing importance to Canadians not only on the West Coast but indeed throughout Canada. Basically the thrust of my concern was that the United States Ambassador suggested in his speech in Saskatoon that Canadians in the lumber industry ought to voluntarily reduce the amount of their exports to the United States.

Some individuals in the United States Congress and others are concerned that Canada has increased relatively substantially the amount of lumber exported to the United States and as a conciliatory measure the United States suggests that we should voluntarily limit or restrict those lumber exports.

Many individuals in the industry certainly do not agree with the United States ambassador. I do not agree with what he has said and by his reply to my question the Minister has indicated as well that he does not agree with that statement. I had hoped to obtain from the Minister while questioning him, and perhaps I will now through the Parliamentary Secretary, exactly what has transpired between the Minister of State for External Affairs and the United States ambassador.

It is not sufficient, I suggest to you, that we just hear that the Minister does not agree. I think we have to know what was said by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We have to know if a diplomatic note was forwarded, the form of those representations, and whether representations were made by the Prime Minister to the President with regard to this particular issue.

It does not suffice to say that this whole matter cannot be revealed because we are now in the process of opening up general prospects for the negotiation of free trade with the United States. There are just too many jobs on the West Coast, particularly in the Province of British Columbia where unemployment is extremely high at this point in time, for the Government to provide us with such a very short answer to this very, very important problem.

I can understand that if perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs has rebuked, if you will, the United States ambassador regarding this particular issue that perhaps he does not want to say so publicly. But I think in the Canadian interests, notwithstanding the Minister's own personal affection, if you will, for the United States ambassador, we have to know what Canadian policy is, what was said on behalf of Canadians, when it was said and where it was said. These issues are of paramount importance to Canadians.

I would hope that when the Parliamentary Secretary avails himself of this opportunity to reply in respect of my concerns he will shed light on this important matter. Canadians from coast to coast will be watching and listening to what he is going to be saying on behalf of all the people of Canada. I await with great interest the Parliamentary Secretary's remarks.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question. I too am very deeply concerned about jobs.

As the former Mayor of Dollard-Des Ormeaux and a long time active worker in my community I may tell him that in the City of St. Laurent there are 78,000 jobs and every time we see protectionist elements arising in the United States, we expect that those jobs will be affected.

The United States is the single most important market for Canadian lumber producers, taking 60 per cent of all Canadian production. There has been a flurry of congressional Bills aimed at restricting Canadian lumber imports, the most important of which is legislation introduced by Congressman Sam Gibbons. In short, the Gibbons' Bill would modify U.S. countervail law to deem that a subsidy existed where Canadian stumpage prices fell short of an arbitrary U.S. benchmark.

While we continue to focus our representations on the Congress and Administration in Washington we have, since the outset, developed a comprehensive and well co-ordinated campaign of private and public diplomacy to meet this threat to continued access for Canadian softwood lumber to the U.S. market. In parallel to our forceful representations to the Congress and Administration on this issue, our consultates in the U.S. have been alerting and mobilizing U.S. interests that would be adversely affected by the imposition of trade restrictions on Canadian lumber. Many of these U.S. interests, including the National Lumber and Building Materials Dealers Association, the Manufactured Housing Institute and the National Association of Home Builders are now actively lobbying against the proposed legislation. In addition our consultates have contacted the editorial boards of major newspapers across the U.S. to set the record straight and to ensure that they are aware of the facts. This activity has already shown positive results in terms of a number of editorials in U.S. publications, including the New York Times, supportive of the Canadian position.

The Government will continue to work closely with the Canadian industry in provinces to safeguard access for Canadian softwood lumber products to the important U.S. market.

I should like to refer to a statement made by U.S. Ambassador Niles last week suggesting that the Canadian lumber industry might help to take some of the heat out of protectionist pressures in the U.S. to restrict imports of Canadian softwood lumber by voluntarily restraining its export levels to the U.S. market. My understanding is that this was a personal view expressed by the U.S. ambassador. Any such action might well have serious anti-trust implications and these are considerations which would, I am certain, be taken fully into account by the Canadian industry. I want to underline that, for its part, the Canadian Government has not been asked to negotiate a restraint arrangement nor is it prepared at this time to entertain such a possibility.

Canada stands to suffer more than any other foreign country if the U.S. Congress imposes new restrictions on imports. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is well aware of that, and that is precisely why he wrote the President of the United States with a view to exploring with the Congress—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary's time has expired.

HISTORIC SITES—GRASSY ISLAND PROJECT, N.S.

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to follow up on a question I directed to the Hon. Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) concerning a national historical project that has been identified for an area of Guysborough County in my constituency. I prefaced my question to the Minister by indicating the very severe economic circumstances in which we find ourselves in that part of Canada and I also highlighted the commitment of the Government of Canada to getting the economic show on the road in this region. Last week I identified for the Government a series of initiatives and this was one of them.

Grassy Island National Historic Site has been studied by officials of Parks Canada and a very thorough management plan has been prepared which reviews in some detail the benefits of this project. In addition to its historical significance, it has very important economic benefits in that it opens up an area of Guysborough County to the tourism industry.

Canso is a community that is at the end of a highway on a piece of land that juts out into the ocean and, for that obvious reason, it became one of our early fishing fortresses. However, today that represents a difficulty when it comes to developing the tourism industry.

This project is seen as an important catalyst to drawing tourists along the eastern shore of Nova Scotia and into the Canso area so that those in the area can develop restaurants and motel facilities and diversity the local economy, which to this point is almost totally dependent upon the fishing industry, an industry which has served Nova Scotia so well for several centuries.

The historical significance of the area is also well known to the people there. The people have embraced this project as a reflection of their identity, as a project through which they can express the great pride they have in their history and as a showcase for all Canadians. It is the site of the first fishing fortress in North America and in that respect has national significance for all Canadians. My constituents have very aggressively promoted this project for a number of decades.

I was very pleased to hear from the Minister yesterday that he as well embraces this project and has made it a personal priority. The Minister and I had the opportunity on another occasion to discuss in some detail the economic, social and historical benefits that this project will bring to my constituents. My constituents are prepared to build on their strengths, to become self-sufficient, to offer their resources and to build the jobs that we require. We are now looking to the Government to do its part in bringing forward this important initiative which is really not a costly project in the total picture. I look forward to hearing the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister in following up this matter in order that this project can get off the ground at an early date.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I wish to start by thanking the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. O'Neil) for his ongoing excellent representation in the interests of seeing the Grassy Island park come to fruition. He has described very well not only the principal factor which has attracted the federal Government to this area, but also the important local aspects in terms of the economy should we see this area proclaimed, if you will, a national historic site as soon as possible.

There are several matters which we would like to emphasize with respect to the historic aspects. While it has been indicated that this is perhaps the first fishing fortress in North America, since the 17th and 18th centuries it has been the starting point when looking back to see where our fishing industry began. It gives us an opportunity to identify that for Canadians in a number of interesting ways.

I wish to spend the next few moments talking about the items we have planned for the future, as a part of the 1983 management plan development Parks Canada, to give people an indication of what we have in store. Having already spent a major portion of the total $1.7 million allocated, we are looking forward in the near future to the construction of a visitors reception centre, the preservation and stabilization of the heritage resources, including the foundations of various domestic and commercial buildings and the earthen walls of For William Augustus, and the interpretation of Grassy Island's historical resources, both in the visitor reception centre and on the island. Artifacts recovered from the late 1970 achaeological investigations on the island will be used in the visitors centre. A boat access from the mainland to the island, including dock facilities near the visitors centre and the island, will be provided. Last, but not least, washroom and parking facilities will be provided.

These proposals add up to an exciting development package for this area. With the continued efforts of the Hon. Member who has, in fact, discussed this matter with the Minister and with departmental officials, I know we will see things unfold in this area in the reasonably near future.

The constraints we have are really two. It is clear that we are in a tight spot financially and that there is a budgetary problem with which the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has to deal in regard to capital expenditures. There is a significant effort required for the engineering and additional planning for many of these facilities. However, with the indication the Hon. Member has already received from the Minister I think he can count on this being done in the reasonably near future.

EMPLOYMENT

CLOSING OF HIGH TECHNOLOGY INDUSTRIES—IMPACT ON MONTREAL REGION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, things look pretty bleak in Montreal East. Thousands of jobs are in danger, now that Bombardier, Vickers, Gulf and other companies will have to close because three major industries in Montreal East have closed down.

The Prime Minister was supposed to create thousands of jobs as soon as he came to power. And now, a year later, they are closing down our hi-tech industries in Montreal East and thousands of jobs will be lost.

The Conservative Government has made no attempt to boost the morale of employees in the various industries who are about to lose their jobs. It had no hesitation, however, in handing over one billion dollars to Gulf and Petro-Canada, for a transaction that will take away 1,000 jobs from Montrealers.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious the Conservative leader has kept the habits he had when he was president of Iron Ore, because now he is Prime Minister of Canada, he wants to close down an industry in Montreal East.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

FUNDING OF TRANSITION HOUSES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, during Family Week it is important to consider what can be done to reduce the high incidence of family violence in Canada. One in 10 women, or about 750,000 women, will be beaten this year by their partners.

Battering another human being is a criminal offence. Doctors, police, and parliamentarians must not cover up or avoid dealing with domestic violence. Incidents must be dealt with openly, not condoned with silence. Police officers must be trained to deal with family violence and the laying of appropriate charges. Doctors must be able to recognize abuse in order to help women. Governments must provide shelter and financial assistance for battered families. Treatment groups for batterers and support groups for victims also need funding.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that the Government would take initiatives to fund more tansition houses. Yesterday the Minister responsible for the Status of Women (Mr. McLean) said that this is a number one priority. However, discussions with the provinces are not enough. Again I ask that 3 per cent of the money used for the bank bail-out be used to fund 300 new transition houses.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CANADIAN ACHIEVEMENTS—GOVERNMENT FUNDING OF EDUCATION

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, a recent article in The Toronto Star claims that, in the political world of Ottawa, science simply does not rate. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, this is not the case. Our Government is committed to encouraging scientists, universities and businesses to fulfil their research and development potential.

[Translation]

Canada is a rich country. Our population is well educated, our natural resources abundant and our industrial base is sound. If Canadians want to continue to succeed on the international market, they will have to raise the level and improve the effectiveness of their investments in research and development.

[English]

Canada's record of accomplishments in research and development is impressive, beginning with Mr. Bell's telephone in 1874 and ranging to the Canadarm of today. These achievements are a source of national pride. Encouraging further achievements poses an important challenge for the Government, for industry, and for the universities. Accordingly, the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) has identified three priority areas through which we can strenghten our ability to use our resources.

The first priority is encouraging innovation in the private sector. Second, we need a mechanism for monitoring the relevance and quality of research. The third and perhaps most important priority is education. As the Minister has said, we cannot do anything in science and technology without people. I say that we cannot hire and train the people without the necessary funding.

TERRORISM

HIJACKING OF ITALIAN CRUISE SHIP ACHILLE LAURO

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, the Italian community of Canada was both shocked and concerned at the news two days ago that terrorist commandos hijacked the Italian cruise liner Achille Lauro, already referred to as the "ship of doom", thus threatening the lives of more than 400 people, innocent victims, the most of whom are of Italian origin.

The Government of Canada strongly condemns this act of terrorism, something that cannot be condoned no matter where it occurs or the cause it is supposed to serve.

Mr. Speaker, considering the very difficult situation now facing the Italian Government, I shall, if I may, as a representative of the Italian community in Canada, express the support of our Government and of the Canadian people for the Italian Government.

We earnestly hope that the hijack victims will be promptly released, through peaceful means and not by resorting to force.

HARBOURS

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—NEED FOR REPAIRS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the House the deplorable condition of Prince Edward Island harbours. Wharves in Prince Edward Island that need immediate repair are being washed into the sea. The Government will not give an inch. It has turned a blind eye and a deaf ear toward fishermen.

To illustrate my point, on September 28 the fishermen at West Point Harbour spent the night at the wharf waiting for Hurricane Gloria to wash out their partially completed breakwater. Luckily Gloria was a spent force by the time it reached Prince Edward Island. If it had not been, the harbour and boats would have been destroyed. Even a sea turtle which swam into the harbour for protection left before morning to seek a safer haven.

In addition, a further section of wharf can no longer be used to tie up boats, another section is washing away, and pavement is sinking into the sea creating great holes in the wharf. Fishermen would have no worries if the planned wharf construction had beeen completed this year. If the Government does not act with celerity and fix the wharfs at Cape Egmont, West Point, Higgin's Wharf and many other places, the cost of repairs will increase as each day passes.

My repeated requests to the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans have not been acted upon. I fear that the plight of Island fishermen will go unnoticed even longer under the Acting Fisheries Minister (Mr. Nielsen). The Hon. Minister has so many portfolios on his plate that I am sure these concerns will be shoved aside.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) so often boasts of acting with celerity on urgent matters. The state of small craft harbours in P.E.I. is an urgent and important matter. Can the Acting Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Nielsen) not see that? I urge him to act with celerity and fix these wharves immediately.

TERRORISM

USE OF VIOLENCE IN MIDDLE EAST

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, last week Canadians were shocked and dismayed by the Israeli bombing of PLO Headquarters in Tunis. This week we have the same reaction to the PLM's hijacking of an Italian cruise ship. To the best of our knowledge no Canadians were on board the Achille Lauro when it was hijacked two days ago. However, all Canadians must join in condemning the growing cycle of terrorism and violence poisoning international relations in the Middle East.

Israel maintains that it will not give in to terrorists or bargain with black mail. We can understand that. But claiming to fight terror with terror is only another way of giving in to the terrorists—of letting them decide the rules of the game. Neither the Israelis nor the Palestinians can achieve their goals by the use of terror. Terror tactics result in a vicious circle where the innocent suffer on both sides.

We believe in the right of Israel to exist in security. We also believe in the right of the Palestinians to a homeland. Let Canadian and world opinion say very clearly that neither of these worthy goals can be achieved through the use of terrorism.

In the meantime, we join with those families and friends who hope and pray for a safe and peaceful outcome of the present crisis.

THE ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT ACHIEVEMENTS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the performance of the Canadian economy has been ever more promising since the election of the Conservative Government: close to 340,000 new jobs have been created, unemployment has gone down 1.5 per cent, inflation has been under 4 per cent over the past year, thus creating the most stable climate of confidence since 1971, and the real GNP has been rising at an annual rate of 4.1 per cent.

Indeed our performance since last year has been second to none among the seven major industrialized countries, and the confidence of investors over the past four years has been at an unprecedented level. The Bank of Canada rate has dropped from 12.38 to 8.99 per cent. The chartered banks' prime rate has decreased from 13 to 10 per cent, the lowest level in seven years. During the first eight months of 1985 bankruptcies declined by 13 per cent, retail sales rose by 10 per cent, motor vehicle sales were up by 23 per cent, the value of building permits is 17 per cent higher, and oil drilling activities have expanded by 19 per cent over the same period last year. The performance of the Canadian economy has also outranked that of the United States. The GNP and the net disposable income of individuals has grown twice as fast in Canada as in the United States.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired. The Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier).

BEAUCE EXAMPLE FOR REST OF CANADA

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, aside from the negative comments being made by the Opposition and a number of insinuations that do not always reflect the truth, the Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier) is delighted to see that increasingly, one can rely on Canadians to improve our economy. I am proud to mention, in this respect, the example being set by my riding for the rest of Canada.

One company, Les systèmes Archimède in Saint-Frédéric, signed a $6 million contract last Friday with France for the construction of 1670 modular housing units for two French villages. The company, which now employs 20 people, will increase its establishment to 90 permanent employees. Last year the company, which was established in 1981, grossed $1.3 million. This year, it expects that figure to be $8 million, and in four years probably $12 million.

The phenomenal growth of this company in the Beauce area which has already obtained international recognition, is due to the dynamic and constant efforts being made by its leaders, and that applies to many other companies in my riding. It is time for us to exploit our strengths, our potential and our skills to improve the economy of our country. The people in the towns and villages of Beauce have realized this and are acting accordingly.

In Beauce, we are not interested in so-called scandals and negative articles in the media. We are intent on improving the well-being of the people, and our energies are dedicated to economic development.

INDUSTRY

CLOSURE OF OAKVILLE SHOE MANUFACTURING PLANT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, one week ago Susan Shoe Industries of Hamilton announced the closure of its Oakville plant and the permanent lay-off of 100 employees. The decision to close this plant was directly linked to the failure of the Mulroney Government to state its policy on the extension of footwear quotas.

After the closure was announced, Susan Shoe arranged a meeting in Ottawa with its Member of Parliament and the political Minister for the Hamilton area. The owner of Susan Shoe had arranged to travel from Montreal, the president of the Canadian Union was to travel from New York, and the other company officials were to travel from Hamilton.

Yesterday, the office of the Hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek) informed Susan Shoe officials that this meeting would have to be cancelled due to an urgent family commitment which would entail a trip to Toronto. Imagine the surprise, Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Halton, the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Minister of State for Multiculturalism, was spotted at last night's Blue Jay game sitting smiling behind the Prime Minister. Amid cries of "tuna, tuna, tuna" at Exhibition Stadium, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport were striking out on the Government's promise of "jobs, jobs, jobs."

When is the Government going to start demonstrating some concern for Canada's footwear industry? While the Blue Jays won last night, the Hon. Member for Halton lost the respect of workers in Canada's footwear industry.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, confidence in the administration of justice in this country has been called into question. It is perfectly acceptable, and I would suggest accurate, for the Minister of Justice to accuse the staff in the Prime Minister's Office of not being up to scratch politically. What is not acceptable to the administration of justice is for that Minister, having made those statements—which are on tape and on the public record—to deny them later.

My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Prime Minister. Does he agree that these statements, and the subsequent denial of them by the Minister of Justice, call into question the ability of that Minister to command public respect which is sorely needed for the proper administration of our law?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the only one calling into question the administration of justice in this country that I know of is the Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition who has so far forgotten himself in his desperate quest to acquire some notoriety as Leader of the Liberal Party that he would stoop to anything.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Luckily, Mr. Speaker, I am investigating a plan for compensation for persons wrongfully convicted. And I have been wrongfully convicted by the hon. gentleman opposite.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, he has been convicted by his own words on tape.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I have a second question for the Deputy Prime Minister. Would he defend the statement made by the Minister of Justice, a statement carried on tape? After the Minister was asked if the Prime Minister was telling the truth, the Minister replied:

> He'd be crazy if he wasn't because these things are not important enough for him not to have told the truth about.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree with his Minister of Justice that the Government only tells the truth about unimportant matters?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that question is unworthy of the hon. gentleman. He is, in his usual fashion, twisting and writhing in any direction in order to elicit an answer which might accomplish the objective, which is questionable, in the form of his question. The fact is that the explanations which have been offered by the Minister of Justice are not only supportive of the truth of the statements which have been made consistently by the Prime Minister over the several weeks during which Hon. Members in the Opposiiton have been asking these questions, but are also consistent with the conclusion, as pointed out by the Justice Minister, that he has full faith in the high calibre and quality of the individuals on the Prime Minister's staff. I would suggest that—

Mr. Speaker: With respect, the answer is becoming very long.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GOVERNMENT STATEMENTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we would like to get on with the business of the country—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yes, we would love to get on with the business of the country if the Government would only get its act together and get its agenda back on track.

• (1420)

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What is the agenda, John?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Deputy Prime Minister can twist all he wants, but he is a very thorough man and he has read the transcript. He knows that the Minister of Justice was calling in to question the integrity and honesty of the Prime Minister. Therefore, if he believes in the integrity of the Government, will he ensure that, with his Leader, the Prime Minister, this Government will begin to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, and give us the complete story on these issues?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): From my observation and my personal knowledge of the Prime Minister, he has been doing nothing but that over the past several weeks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: With respect to getting our act together, Sir, we believe that we have, and I suggest that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition might wish to speak with his colleague from Shawinigan with respect to his own problems.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are going to hear from him right now.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Québec lieutenant.

Mr. Nielsen: So I really do not see any purpose in pursuing this kind of questioning. It really is not the style of the Right Hon. Member to try to lead the now defunct rat pack.

GOVERNMENT POLICY INQUIRY

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. As a former Minister of Justice, I am not very impressed by the performance of the current Minister of Justice and his buffoonery around the country.

Was the Minister of Justice enunciating government policy when he said on Monday: "Anyone, I suppose, can be tempted to shave the truth"? Is it the policy of the Government to shave the truth on important matters and just tell the truth in small matters?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. gentleman would be more impressed with the present Minister of Justice if he ever attended any of the important matters under way, such as the examination of the Divorce Bill and the Enforcement of Maintenance Orders Bill—

Some Hon. Members: Where were you?

Mr. Crosbie: —reforms never attempted by the former Minister of Justice. If, when he is not writing books, he came around to see what was happening, he might be a lot more impressed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the hon. gentleman's question, here is a four-page transcript of an interview I had on an open-line program in St. John's. The hon. gentleman and his Leader are scuttering through this transcript trying to find a word here and there on which they can pass an imputation. It is a prostitution of Question Period. It is not asking a question about public policy or what the Government is doing or not doing. It is a shameful exhibition of desperation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REPORTED ALLEGATIONS OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Was the Minister of Justice seriously stating Government policy when he said that he could only tell the truth in unimportant matters and tell lies in matters of great importance. Is it also true that there is a "bunch of dolts" in the Prime Minister Office or is the Minister of Justice a dolt?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I could say that questions from the opposite side would improve greatly if they paid greater attention to the truth, but I will not say that because it would be inappropriate parliamentary conduct and language as far as I am concerned. The Government policy, as the Hon. Member well knows, having been a Minister for many years, is that all Ministers are constrained to put everything right up front and tell the truth at all times when responding to questions from wherever they might come in the House of Commons, indeed throughout the carrying out of their responsibilities as Ministers of the Crown. That is exactly what has been done by Ministers in this Government as exemplified by the Prime Minister's conduct over the last three or four weeks.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. While the Government wants to play its secret poker game, the U.S. is busy defining the agenda on free trade talks with cultural industries and agriculture on the table, with countervail systems off the table, and with suggestions that Canadian lumber imports, for instance, should be cut back. Will the Government finally permit the Canadian people to have a clear sense of our hand in this poker game and to help us to set that bargaining agenda, or are we simply going to let the United States keep defining this game?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, through the summer the Hon. Member himself was a member of a special committee of this House and the other place which looked into this question. He will know that there have been consultations on-going with sectoral groups, unions, business, and provinces for the last several months. He will know that further discussions will begin tomorrow with provincial Ministers of Trade in Halifax to ensure that positions which Canada might put forward, in the event that there are negotiations with the United States, are positions which reflect and protect the Canadian interest and stop the serious problem we face now of Canadian jobs being threatened in industry after industry after industry. It might be good enough for the NDP to sit there and see Canadians lose jobs, but it is not good enough for us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: I would have thought, Mr. Speaker, that this kind of partisan wrangling—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: —would not merit consideration in an issue as crucial to the future of this country as these free trade talks.

Mr. Crosbie: That's the pot calling the kettle black.

Mr. Langdon: I would also remind the Minister that the committee which he talked about said that agriculture and cultural industries should not be discussed—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

OFFICIALS' DISCUSSIONS WITH INDUSTRY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that minutes are available from groups like the recording industry indicating their discussions with the Government Opposition—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! Does the Hon. Member have a question immediately please?

Mr. Langdon: Would the Minister be prepared to release minutes of all the discussions that took place this summer between his Department and groups like this particular group indicating their positions on this free trade discussion?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that would depend on whether or not there was some understanding of confidence about those conversations. Just to emphasize the importance which we in the Government assign particularly to the question of the cultural sovereignty of Canada and the role of the cultural industries, I indicated again, as recently as Friday night, my intention, in harness with my colleague, the Acting Minister of Communications, to meet again in the next couple of weeks with representatives of Canadian cultural industries. We want to ensure precisely that Canadian interests are served in any negotiations that occur. The only way that we see that we can do that is to work closely with the people who will be involved, as we have been doing, as we are doing, and as we intend to continue to do.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, that requires that Canada not be kept in the dark. Will the Minister make a commitment here in the House of Commons right now that the public position, from which the Government starts in these crucial negotiations about our future will be clearly laid out before the House of Commons within the next week so that we, as a Parliament, can debate them here in the House?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the Hon. Member is seeking. If he is seeking the publication of discussions that were on the public record, of course we will give him that. If he is seeking continued public debate of the issues in the House of Commons in consultations, of course we will do that. If he is seeking continued consultation with the cultural industries, with the provinces, with business, labour and others, of course we will continue to do that.

If he is asking us to spell out here, now, the negotiating position of Canada before we enter into negotiations, so that we would be bound to lose on issues that were communicated by way of his office, by way of this House, to the very tough negotiators with whom we are dealing on the other side, then no, I will not sell out Canada that way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FISHERIES

SALE OF CANNED TUNA—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE EXAMINATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, what is strange about this tuna affair is that the Prime Minister is not here to defend the Minister of Justice.

My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister of Justice is quoted as saying in the Tory caucus, with respect to the tuna affair, that: "The only issue that might have been brought up was the complaint that fish inspectors, that bureaucrats were out of hand". Would the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that this statement lends substance to the initial claim of the Member for Carleton-Charlotte that he raised the matter of fish inspectors at Star-Kist in the Tory caucus months ago? Is it not time to appoint a parliamentary inquiry?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): No, it is not. It is time to tell the House that what the Hon. Member has said in his preamble and question is utterly false.

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am alleging that the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte raised the question of inspectors at caucus and that the Minister of Justice has substantiated that claim by his comments yesterday.

Is it not appropriate now to appoint a parliamentary committee to review this entire matter, or is the Deputy Prime Minister going to leave open the charge of a cover-up?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that the question was repeated, against the rules of the House, I will repeat my answer. It is no. Once again I repeat the truth that was stated by the Prime Minister on so many occasions over the last three weeks, that no such thing was said in caucus, and I do not know why the Hon. Member does not accept that. It was not said and it was not raised. The Minister of Justice has said nothing inconsistent with that.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL AND NORTHLAND BANKS—HITCHMAN REPORT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. The Hitchman Report indicated to the Minister that she should consider assigning the assets of all the loans and securities of the failed banks to the six banks involved in the original bail-out. Why did the Minister of State not follow the advice that was given to her?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think the documents that have been made available to the Estey inquiry were made available in order for the inquiry to come to its own conclusions on the action taken. I would prefer not to comment on matters that are before a commission of inquiry and a noble judge.

Mr. Riis: My question had nothing to do with what is before the Estey inquiry.

MINISTER'S ACTIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): When a bank in every other western industrialized nation gets into difficulty those countries ask the financial community to come to that bank's rescue. That has worked in every other country except Canada. She knows that the Hitchman Report, Mr. Hitchman—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Riis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has a question. Since Mr. Hitchman advised the Minister to do what every other country does, why did she decide to write a blank cheque from the taxpayers of Canada instead?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, there is no blank cheque to the Canadian people. I have reiterated in the House that we have taken into account the economy of western Canada. I am surprised that the Hon. Member has totally ignored the important things we have done for western Canada, which include paying the depositors in these banks so that the money stays in that economy.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

NEWFOUNDLAND JOINT VENTURE PROJECT—FEDERAL FUNDING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Last August, in Newfoundland, the Minister announced grants totalling more than a million dollars for a joint venture involving the Prime Minister's friends and political allies, Walter Wolf, Frank Moores, and Senator Bill Doody. The Minister also said that the venture will generate $18 million in sales within five years.

Will the Canadian Government recoup its give-away to Walter Wolf since it is paying 60 per cent of the costs of this joint venture?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that question has nothing to do with the ministerial responsibilities of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Rossi: He made the announcement.

Mr. Nielsen: My colleague, the Minister of State for Science and Technology, sits on the ministerial board of economic development and can provide details. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that nothing was done with this particular contract that is in any way inconsistent with the previous practices followed by the former Government, headed by the former Prime Minister, who, I understand, was a particular friend of Mr. Wolf in this particular joint venture.

INVESTMENT INQUIRY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister who made the announcement on August 26 in Newfoundland. In his statement the Minister of Justice said that this investment of over a million dollars of Canadian money will result in 10 jobs. Is it not really just an example of the Mulroney Government—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Ms. Copps: —paying off political debts from Conservative leadership campaigns at the taxpayers' expense?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member should know that the use of phrases like "the Mulroney Government" is inappropriate. However, the question may be answered.

Ms. Copps: May I rephrase the question?

Mr. Speaker: No.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will deal with the question in a moment but I want to correct an error I made a moment ago when I referred to the former Prime Minister. It was not the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition but his predecessor who is a particular friend of Mr. Wolf.

With respect to the question, the quick answer is no, and the implications are totally untrue.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On September 9 the Prime Minister tabled in the House new conflict of interest guidelines and he promised "to adopt ethical standards worthy of the respect of the Canadian people". We are now told that hundreds of thousands of dollars in Government contracts have gone to the Prime Minister's friends, supporters, and former Tory Members of Parliament. Does the Deputy Prime Minister believe that the awarding of these contracts reflects the ethical standards worthy of the respect of the Canadian people?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by urging the Hon. Member to study the guidelines that have been tabled. That might do him and others like him a great deal of good. While I am on that subject, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the NDP were communicated with by the Prime Minister with respect of the application of certain aspects of the package that was tabled here a few days ago.

Let us take one example in that so-called package published in The Globe and Mail today, to which the Hon. Member refers. An instance is singled out where an individual has been employed by the PCO at a dollar a year. I can tell him that there have been virtually hundreds of people who have assisted me in our work on program review, who have been employed at a dollar a year. Those citizens are to be lauded for the contribution they are making to this country, rather than condemned as suggested by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Nunziata: What is at issue is the honesty, credibility, and the unimpeachable integrity of the Government.

PATRONAGE REFORM

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): When does the Government intend to keep its pre-election promise to end patronage and reform that instrument of national life?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the implications in the Hon. Member's question are quite unworthy of a response at all. However, I can tell him that this Government, in applying its standards of conduct, is applying standards that represent a substantial improvement over the past practices of the Government formed by the Party of which he is a member, and we will continue improving not only the standards but the quality of individuals who are called upon to perform services for the public in this country.

WOLF SUB-OCEAN LTD.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In the awarding of a contract to Wolf Sub-Ocean Ltd. in an amount of $362,761, will he tell the House whether a tendering process was followed and if that was the lowest tender?

● (1440)

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in fact,, there was no such contract. The matter referred to which involved Cosel-Wolf Sub-Ocean Ltd. systems was a consequence of the Canada-Newfoundland subsidiary agreement on ocean development and, as with many other millions of dollars of projects which are reviewed by the management committee under that sub-agreement, all necessary contracting procedures were followed to the letter of the law.

PROCEDURES INVOLVED

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question—

Mr. Crosbie: Why don't you cry wolf again?

Mr. Deans: Don't you talk until after you know what it is you are saying.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Are you going to sit there and babble all day?

Mr. Crosbie: Why not? You are babbling, why can't I?

An Hon. Member: Go back to sleep, John.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The Hon. Member and other Hon. Members might all please just be quiet for a while.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It just shows what happens when you try to ask a question without a preamble. I wonder if the Minister might be able to tell us, in determining the appropriateness of the procedures that were followed, were there tenders called for and was this the lowest tender?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I repeat again, there is no contract involved here. This project was funded under the Canada-Newfoundland subsidiary agreement on ocean industry development—

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Siddon: —as a joint initiative approved by a management committee representative of both the provincial Government and the federal Government, to produce jobs and economic opportunity in a province which sorely needs that economic development.

UNITED STATES CRIMINAL ELEMENTS—REQUEST FOR EXPULSION FROM CANADA

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada.

An Hon. Member: Sock it to him.

Mr. Hardey: Canada now has two American murderers enjoying our sanctuary and hospitality, having avoided justice in their own country and ours, by virtue of permissiveness in our extradition laws and treaties, and because capital punishment does not exist in Canada. Can the Minister assure the House and Canadians that our country will not become more of a haven for the worst elements in American society because of his discretion not to return fugitives when the death penalty may be imposed?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly assure the hon. gentleman that Canada is not going to become a haven for criminals who have escaped from the United States or any other jurisdiction; and the law will be carried out. In the case of Mr. Kindler, which I referred to yesterday, I am expecting to receive a brief from his solicitors shortly. They will be given a chance to make oral representations if they wish on that question before I make the decision on the matter as to whether Mr. Kindler should return without qualifications to the United States, or not. He escaped from there, having been convicted of a murder.

There is one other case which the public is much interested in, Mr. Ng, who is now under arrest in Edmonton. The United States has not yet requested extradition for that person. He is charged with offences in Alberta and he has to be tried there.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I suggest that this might be completed under Statements.

AGRICULTURE

PRAIRIE DROUGHT—TASK FORCE REPORT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. I am sure he is aware of the major farm disaster in western Canada, first of all the drought, and now the double disaster of crops under the snow.

On July 12 the Prime Minister appointed the Member for Assiniboia to head a task force on the drought. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether or not the Prime Minister's officials have informed him that this report is now completed; that it is sitting in the Prime Minister's Office; that there are recommendations? Can he tell the House why the report has not been made public, and make it public today?

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville for the question. As he knows well, the task force on drought has made recommendations, first on phase one which related to livestock, and the Government of country has responded very positively with $48 million to the farmers of western Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: In relation to the crops, the oil seeds and grains, the Hon. Member will be pleased to know that recommendations have gone to the Government. He can expect action that will be in the interests of the farmers in western Canada.

I would also like to say, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I wonder if the Deputy Prime Minister can answer my question. What the farmers want to know is when will that report be made public and does it include acreage payments to the grain farmers who have received nothing whatsoever from this Government?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And it snowed yesterday.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I think the Parliamentary Secretary has answered the Hon. Member's question fully, completely, and most ably, in the best interests of the Canadian farmer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The report which he has mentioned and which is before the Government is under active consideration, and the results of any decisions will be communicated as quickly as possible to relieve the hardships that are being caused at present in western Canada.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Did Senator Argue write that question out for you?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LAY-OFFS IN MONCTON, N.B.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

The Minister is aware that last summer over 2,000 persons marched in protest in Moncton protesting over strong rumours that CN might be closing its main railway shops in that city. At the rally the Member of Parliament for Moncton said that the Minister had given him the assurance that he would not support massive lay-offs in Moncton. Was the Minister sincere when he gave that assurance last summer, or was it just another case of a Minister saying one thing and doing another?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I presume that there are varying interpretations of what is meant by massive lay-offs. I think in the context of this statement it was considered that the representations were being made in anticipation of a total shut-down of the CN Moncton station. I assured them that that would not be the case.

I am sure the Hon. Member knows that there has been a major decline in traffic across the country. Grain traffic is down by 30 per cent. Other agricultural products traffic is down by 19 per cent. The total traffic is down by about 7 per cent or 8 per cent. Consequently when the movement of goods is not taking place, there is a reduction of work. It is because of that fact that lay-offs occurred right across the country.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): My supplementary is directed to the same Minister. A total of 225 jobs is considered massive lay-offs for the Moncton area. Can the Minister explain why the Moncton area was hit harder than the other areas in Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that CN officials who visited Moncton explained this to the people of Moncton very well. The fact is that the reductions are a clear reflection of the down-turn of the traffic that has occurred right across the country, and hopefully with the economic renewal that is occurring, these lay-offs will not continue for a long period of time. We can only hope that there will be an upturn in traffic as crops improve and as economic conditions improve.

NEWFOUNDLAND JOINT VENTURE PROJECT—FEDERAL FUNDING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Science and Technology: It follows from what he said just a moment ago about an agreement that was entered into between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland presumably, and Mr. Wolf, and involves expenditures of $362,000. Is the Minister telling us that the expenditures of large amounts of money like this can take place without any contract being signed?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I thought I had explained, and in answer to the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party, agreements of this sort come within the framework of the subsidiary agreements under the ERDA process, of which there are many subsidiary agreements in place across Canada. Their purpose is to develop new employment opportunities, particularly in areas of emerging industry and technology.

Some Hon. Members: We know that.

Mr. Siddon: This is an agreement of that sort. Its purpose is to create employment and economic advantage in a province where they are sorely needed.

Ms. Copps: Ten jobs.

METHOD OF PROVIDING FUNDING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has just admitted that the Government is expending thousands of dollars without any contract whatsoever. That is public money.

An Hon. Member: That is not what he said.

Mr. Broadbent: If the Minister is not saying that, will he tell us straight out: Was there or was there not a contract, and were bids submitted?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): More innuendo.

Mr. Broadbent: That was a question.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I have clearly stated that a contribution has been tendered by the Government of Canada under a subsidiary agreement between Canada and Newfoundland. The purpose of that subsidiary agreement is to build new employment opportunities in the area of ocean technology.

Mr. Broadbent: Now answer the question.

Mr. Siddon: There is nothing inappropriate with this approach. In fact, it is used to support worthy industrial initiatives in all parts of Canada by joint agreement between two levels of Government.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SELF GOVERNMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. A growing number of people in the Saskatchewan native and non-native communities believe that less government in the lives of Indian people will mean more self-reliance for natives and a more efficient use of public funds. What are the Minister's precise plans for the Province of Saskatchewan? Would he detail them, please?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows, the entrenchment of selfgovernment for Indian people remains the constitutional goal of the Government. With regard to non-constitutional selfgovernment, as we call it, it is my responsibility to negotiate specific models of selfgovernment. The approach is community based and tailored to the specific needs of Indian communities. That is the approach nationally, and obviously it includes the Province of Saskatchewan.

CONSEQUENCES OF MONTREAL EAST REFINERY CLOSURE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Not long ago, Montreal East first lost 1,000 jobs at Bombardier, then 650 jobs at Vickers and now Gulf has announced it is closing down its refinery, which will result in the direct loss of 450 more jobs.

My question to the Minister is as follows: What is she going to do now to keep this refinery open and protect those 450 jobs which are very important, not only to the workers themselves but to the industrial base of Montreal East? What is she going to do?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has already responded very affirmatively to the request which the Hon. Member just put forward. On the other hand, I should like to remind him that in the past year 100,000 new jobs have been created in the Province of Quebec alone; that is in one province of the country, and the Government has undertaken to stimulate that growth. It has introduced the Canadian Jobs Strategy. It is already receiving applications to introduce new job proposals. These are coming forward, and they are being approved on a daily basis.

POSSIBILITY OF 450 JOBS LOST IN MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, as usual, the Minister has failed to answer my question. She has even turned down 450 workers in Montreal East. Again I want to ask the Minister whether she is prepared to make a commitment today to protect those 450 jobs. Is she prepared to go to the same lengths for these workers as for bankrupt Canadian banks?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in all cases where there have been projected lay-offs, we have undertaken to work through the industrial adjustment service to assist people, and we have spoken on numerous occasions to different companies to assure them that the benefits package which they produce will be to the best advantage of the workers. However, I would say that the important thing is that the economy, over all, continues to be stimulated, that, with the growth of the numbers of people who are finding new jobs, is the way in which the Government stimulates and furthers the economy, indeed right across the country, but particularly in the Province of Quebec.

NEWFOUNDLAND JOINT VENTURE PROJECT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. It is a very specific one. Why did the contract go to Mr. Wolf? What process was used to select Mr. Wolf for that job for the Government of Canada?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the project in question was recommended by a committee of officials called the Management Committee. Those officials represent the Government of the Province of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada. Those officials recommend a project to their respective Ministers.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I bet.

Mr. Siddon: As a consequence those agreements—and it is the practice under the administration of all subagreements, including those with the NDP Government of the Province of Manitoba—are properly negotiated. Offers are made in accordance with all appropriate and necessary conditions, to ensure that the public interest is protected.

SELECTION OF COMPANY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. What the people and I want to know is this. After it was decided that the project would occur, how did they select Mr. Wolf to be the recipient of Government money? What process was used?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I think the nature of these questions from members of the New Democratic Party reflect the naivete of their understanding of the situation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: I dont think so, somehow.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: Naive, eh?

Mr. Speaker: Surely the Minister is entitled to give his answer with some respect and calm.

Mr. Siddon: What this project represents—

Mr. Deans: Pork.

Mr. Siddon: —as with many projects which are funded either under the Industrial and Regional Development Program or subsidiary agreements—

An Hon. Member: Oink, oink.

Mr. Siddon: —is an opportunity to develop new areas of industry and technology—

Some Hon. Members: Pay-off.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Minister, but clearly Hon. Members do not want to hear the answer.

Oral Questions

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Justice and it pertains to capital punishment. As we are now in the second year of our mandate, and in that a majority of Canadians have indicated a clear wish for capital punishment to be reinstated, will the Minister give the House some indication when we might expect to see relevant legislation brought before the House?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the longer this House continues, the more I become in favour of capital punishment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: For whom?

Mr. Crosbie: For certain people who will remain nameless.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: Resign.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, when the donkeys are finished—

An Hon. Member: Go back to the zoo.

Ms. Copps: This is the Minister of Justice!

Mr. Crosbie: During the term of this Government arrangements will be made for a free vote in the House by Parties that are allowed to be free—and some are not—on the question of capital punishment. It will be put clearly and squarely before the House for Hon. Members to decide before the next election is called.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

GULF WORKERS' JOBS IN MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. How can she possibly have the nerve to give out statistics to Gulf workers in the gallery? They are certainly not going to meet their monthly payments with the statistics dished out by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. How can she explain that her Government is doing everything it can to prevent a new buyer from acquiring the Gulf plant and saving 450 jobs? That is what they want to know!

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, unlike the former Government, we do not just stand idly by and see people go down the chute on these things. The fact is that we have been in touch with Gulf Canada. We have introduced the industrial assistance service to assist both workers in unions and those who are not in unions to make that kind of transition. We have introduced programs which will allow retraining. We have introduced programs which will allow mobility. These are the things which indeed the Government has seen fit to introduce because it is concerned about the needs of those who would be thrown out of jobs, usually by policies undertaken by the former Government.

OFFER OF TRANSFERS TO WEST OF UNILINGUAL FRANCOPHONES

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister is making statements which in fact are not true, and the workers are here to attest to that.

• (1500)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind the Hon. Member that references to the presence of someone in the gallery are entirely out of order.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that those people are here to listen to the Government's answers.

How can the Minister talk about transition when those people want to keep their jobs? And how can she explain that instead of maintaining those jobs she is urging unilingual Francophones to accept transfers to western Canada?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): It is not true, Mr. Speaker!

The Hon. Member now knows that the workers have already been assured by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that the companies will keep operating for a few months.

[English]

The Minister has already announced that she would take steps to ensure that the company remains open in the hope that there will be discussions that will allow that company to continue operating. That is something that the former Government and the Hon. Member in that Party would not have done.

REFORM OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

TABLING OF GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO THE SECOND AND THIRD REPORTS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 70(16), I have the honour to lay upon the Table two copies in both official languages of the Government's comprehensive response to the second and third reports of the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: I am tempted to get one in a hurry.

REFORM OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

SECOND AND THIRD REPORTS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE— STATEMENT OF PRESIDENT OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the document that I have just tabled is more than a comprehensive response to the second and third reports of the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons. It is a commitment fulfilled and a challenge issued.

During the last election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made the commitment that the reform of Canada's central institutions of Government would be an early priority of his administration. The Prime Minister's objective was to ensure that Government became more open and responsive to the views and requirements of all Canadians.

[Translation]

It is not surprising that in the Speech from the Throne at the opening of this Parliament the Government advocated various mechanisms to set in motion the process of a detailed review of the Government's machinery. One of its initiatives was to propose the creation of a Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons.

[English]

Under the invaluable leadership of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), the other members of the committee, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault), the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis), the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) and the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) worked together in a spirit of non-partisan co-operation that stands as a model for our deliberations in this House and its committees.

The Special Committee rose to the challenge given to it in its broad mandate and produced three substantive reports containing a wide range of proposals for reform. Those proposals touched on matters as diverse as the role of the private Member and the modernization of the procedure governing the granting of Royal Assent.

Both in the comprehensive response to the first report which I tabled last April and in the response which I have just tabled, the Government's appreciation of the substantial support for the committee's recommendations is evident. However, I would like to take this opportunity on behalf of the Government to express once again our sincere appreciation to the Hon. Member for St. John's East—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —and indeed to all the other members of the committee for their hard work and their excellent results. I am sure all Members of the House, as they have indicated by their applause today, join with me in that sincere expression of thanks.

Eleven months have now passed since the Speech from the Throne. In that period, the Government has taken several important steps to further the process of parliamentary reform. From the very first, the Government recognized the importance of parliamentary scrutiny and input into major policy initiatives and substantially increased the number of policy statements delivered by Ministers in the House. In June, I tabled a discussion paper which proposed a major change in the legislation governing the redistribution of electoral boundaries. That paper was referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections and, pursuant to the recommendations of that committee, legislation is now before the House, legislation which if passed, will limit the future growth of the House and thereby ensure that each Member has greater access to the time of the House and its committees. This is an important step because the special committee has called for smaller standing committees and this proposal can only be met in a House that is at or only slightly larger than its present size.

In addition, the Government has taken another step to bring Parliament closer to modern times by introducing legislation which acknowledges the supremacy of Parliament but which, for the first time ever, gives collective bargaining rights to House of Commons and Senate employees.

[English]

Furthermore, following the tabling of the Government's response to the first report of the special committee, the House agreed to adopt on a trial basis the vast majority of the reforms proposed in that report. As a result, the House is now experimenting with the following: one, extension of hours for ministerial statements; two, legislative committees; three, committee budgets; and four, a new, more meaningful Board of Internal Economy.

[Translation]

Last July the Prime Minister announced the establishment of a sub-committee of the Committee on Priorities and Planning to consider the question of the reform of the House. During the summer my colleagues and I examined the suggestions of the Special Committee on Reform to ensure the orderly implementation of reforms.

[English]

Today the Government has provided its response to the Second and Third reports of the special committee. In that response, we have not only indicated our support for the vast majority of the proposals contained in those reports but have, in the spirit of those reports, gone further to recommend additional measures designed to enhance or restore the role and authority of the House of Commons. For example, whereas the special committee proposed that standing committees of the House be given authority to review certain limited classes of Order in Council appointments, the Government's response goes far beyond that proposal. As the Prime Minister announced a few weeks ago, although committees will not be given the power to veto appointments, they will have the authority to review all Order in Council appointments. Furthermore, in the case of appointments to quasi-judicial bodies, committees will have the right to call nominees prior to their appointment.

This tendency to build upon the foundations laid out in the second and third reports can be found throughout our response. Indeed, Sir, it is our hope that reform will be a living and continuing process in this House. To accomplish that goal, however, we need to ensure that adequate consultation takes place between the Parties and that achievable, short-term objectives are set. It is for that reason that I have already met with my colleagues across the aisle to discuss these reforms. In fact, several of the Government responses have been adjusted to accommodate the views and suggestions of Opposition House Leaders.

In the coming weeks, I will be meeting with my counterparts again to ensure that the vigorous start which the House has made is carried forward and sees the development of a new House of Commons in the near future. Without prejudging the outcome of those discussions, it would be my hope that the reforms now before the House could be in place by the time Parliament reassembles next January.

The reforms we have proposed in our response, along with the several related initiatives such as regulation of activity by lobbyists, will shape our agenda for action in the coming months and years. This is an evolutionary change, but an important one.

[Translation]

The ultimate assessment of the strength of our democracy rests on the ability of our institutions and of all Canadians to face that challenge: as parliamentarians we will not be judged by what we do today but, in the long run, by our ability to make the institution efficient and relevant to society and its future needs.

[English]

In closing, let me call upon all of my colleagues in the House to take up the courageous road which will lead to a better House, a more effective and democratic institution and the best possible forum to ensure that our great diversity can be given legitimate expression in unity of purpose. That is our commitment and our challenge.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my parliamentary House Leader, I rise to speak on behalf of my party in reply to the Minister's statement, and considering the fact that I was advised on very short notice, not more than an hour ago, I trust the House will bear with me if I do not cover all the questions or points raised by the Minister.

That being said, we are delighted with this opportunity to join the Minister in congratulating once again the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) who provided the leadership on the Committee, with, of course, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and occasionally, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner).

[English]

The work done by the committee will be helpful to us all. I only wish the Government had taken most, if not all, its recommendations into serious consideration.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the statement by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on the Government's comprehensive response to the Second and Third Reports of the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons seems incomplete, since it fails to mention that the practice of responding to committee reports was started during the last Parliament, on the initiative of the Liberal Government of the day, to enable committees to have more impact and to receive more comprehensive responses to their reports from the Government.

Mr. Speaker, parliamentary reform is only acceptable if it is the result of a consensus reached by all parties. It is never acceptable if it is treated as a partisan issue. To have a consensus, any parliamentary reform must first be shown to have as its objective the strengthening of the democratic process, not just increasing the authority of a Government that is already too powerful, as we see it.

[English]

As an example of how Government can try to smuggle in measures of advantage to it cloaked in the guise of non-partisan reform, we see in the Minister's statement a glowing reference to his redistribution Bill. The Minister should know that the jury is still out on that measure and that there are very serious doubts in the country about how that Bill may dilute even further the principle of one man, one vote. He should know that that measure is being looked at very skeptically and that he has yet to persuade the country that it is a reform of a positive nature.

Similarly, he should know that the proposals for procedural reform will be looked at with a skeptical eye. For example, the proposal for review of appointees looks very much like a paper tiger, an expression I like to use. However, in this case I think it would be more appropriate to say that it looks like a paper tiger without teeth. The Government has yet to provide details on how it sees the system working. More important, it does not propose that committees reviewing appointments can do anything substantial about the bad choices which this Government makes. It borrows from the American system and says that all Order in Council appointments will be reviewed by the committee. The Government knows that the committee cannot do that. It is somewhat like saying that no right of veto will be accorded to committees. It is a paper tiger without teeth.

Now that the Government is proposing to adopt a broader set of reforms, Mr. Speaker, I can promise you that the Opposition will monitor very closely and critically the specific proposals that are being made.

For instance, in the comprehensive response tabled by the Government, we see a promise to agree to extend consideration of the Estimates by committees, accompanied by a condition that can or could make this reform totally meaningless.

I am thinking especially about the critical question of whether Members of Parliament should be independent from the Government when they sit in a committee or whether we should at least try to make them more indepedent. Recommendation 4.5 of the Committee states that if we want to reduce the size of standing committees and make them more independent, parliamentary secretaries should no longer sit on them.

The Government has rejected this proposal, even though we are trying to give more independence and powers to the committees. The Government insists that the parliamentary secretary, who is the assistant of the Minister, must be a member of the committee. Contrary to the committee recommendation to the effect that there be only seven members per committee, the Government says that there must be eight and adds the parliamentary secretary. I do not find this very serious, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

The entire tone of the response of the Government is, in my opinion, "If it helps us, we will do it. If it does not help us, we will see. If it slows us down, forget it". In its discussions with the opposition Parties, a greater disposition toward compromise and toward truly meaningful reform will be required of this Government.

In the brief period since the recommendations of the first report of the committee have been adopted on an experimental basis, we have already seen some areas where further adjustment will be needed.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that the Government accepted the recommendations of the first report, but on an experimental basis, without getting away from the main issue. However, as far as the recommendations contained in the second and third reports are concerned, the Government has asked for more advantages before even putting these recommendations to the test.

Mr. Speaker, we plan on meeting soon with the Government Members and the Members of the New Democratic Party to discuss the important issue of reform. We congratulate once more the committee and its chairman for having discussed the matter objectively and for making special efforts to achieve a parliamentary consensus on the whole issue of reform.

We give notice to the Government that the only road to progress in parliamentary reform is to look for a consensus amongst all interested parties.

Mr. Speaker, I shall close by congratulating once more the committee and by asking this House to guarantee the independence of the committees and to examine closely and seriously the recommendations of the committee on reform, which I consider very serious and worthy of being implemented.

[English]

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I will not be very long in dealing with this matter because it will be dealt with in much more detail some time later on. I wish to take a moment or two to make some points on matters which I think are quite important.

At the outset, I wish to congratulate the committee for its work, as did the Government House Leader and others. I know from my own experience how hard the Chairman of the committee and members of the committee have worked. I also know that it was able to do what many committees of the House of Commons are not able to do and, in fact, it was able to do what the House itself is unable to do, that is to say, work by consensus. As time passes, I hope that experience will rub off and that other Members of the House will recognize that it is better in the long run with respect to most issues to attempt to find a consensus than it is to push everyone to the wall on everything which is placed before us. Thus, I congratulate the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

I also wish to say to him that the reports over which he has presided are, in my judgment, a great move forward in the modernization of the parliamentary system. Wherever we do have disagreements—and there are two or three areas which are up for further discussion, I can say on my own behalf, and, I hope, on behalf of the others, that we will attempt on every occasion to come down four square alongside the committee. We believe that the committee did its work and did it well. I say that to all members of the committee.

There are two or three matters which puzzled me a little. These are matters which could be, perhaps, reviewed again. I note with interest that the Government House Leader has indicated that that in fact will be the process.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure the Hon. Member who chaired the committee knows, the House Leaders have in fact met on a number of occasions and have gone through the recommendations. They have looked at methods of implementation, taking into account certain of the problems which arise which have to be resolved in advance of implementation. And I am confident that over the course of the next two or three weeks, certainly in advance of the opening of the next session of this Parliament, we will have these rules in place, as we have all of the other recommendations in place which the committee recommended to the House.

I do, however, want to suggest one matter which is of major concern to me, that is, the recommendation which dealt with the question of petitions. There was a recommendation which I cannot quote verbatim but which I can paraphrase. The recommendation was that it would require a minimum of 25 persons in order to constitute a legally acceptable petition. I suggest that that is a dangerous precedent. I do think that it is the right of every individual citizen to petition his or her Parliament, and that has been the basis upon which the system has grown. If there is but one citizen someplace who feels aggrieved by the actions of his Parliament or by the results of the actions of his Parliament, he has the inalienable right to bring forward a petition and seek redress. I would be reluctant to go from that which I consider to be a very good principle to a principle which requires that a person have the support of 25 other persons in order to petition. I do not see that that is absolutely essential.

It does not seem to be too terribly onerous in a country which has a population of 25 million to find 25 persons to agree on one matter. However, a matter which is being brought to the attention of Parliament could well be a matter which affects one person directly or it may be matter about which one person feels particularly strongly. So I think I would, perhaps, beg of the House that at some point we not accept that change, well intentioned though it may be, and that we leave it as a right of every citizen to petition his or her Parliament in his or her own name asking for redress. I feel that that would make sense.

Another matter I would like to raise is one with which I know we are going to deal. We have had conversation about it and although it does not appear in the response of the Government, I am confident it is going to be dealt with when we sit down to discuss methods of implementation. It is the whole question of the numbers and definitions of committees. The Government House Leader will recall when he, the House Leader for the Official Opposition and myself gathered together one week ago tonight in the Commonwealth room to welcome a significant number of representatives of the ethnic communities of Canada as they celebrated the establishment of the ethnocultural committee. That is the committee which looks at questions directly related to ethnicity and the development of Canada in the future. We all said the same thing, that this was a much needed, long postponed initiative on the part of Government and on the part of Parliament.

It would seem passing strange that we should, one week later, indicate to that group that we do not think it is necessary, but I do not believe that that was the intent of the Government House Leader—in fact, I know it was not. It was only after consultation with him that I decided to raise this question. I believe that he and I both agree, as does the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), the House Leader for the Official Opposition, that there will be the necessity to add committees, albeit a few, to the list of committees recommended by the Committee on Reform of the House of Commons for the very reason that there are certain things which we all deem to be necessary and certainly advisable, and we should bear in mind that those committees may well have to be included, along with the others.

So I say to those who are in the ethnic community in Canada today, and who travelled all the way to Ottawa to join with us in celebrating the establishing of the committee: Fear not, it is not going to be done away with. We have already agreed to it.

As far as the balance of the recommendations are concerned, I say as delicately as I can to the Speaker that regarding recommendation No. 73, which indicates the Speaker's power to select, as well as to combine amendments at the report stage—I recognize that this is a power the Speaker has, and I say this not necessarily for the incumbent but for the future reference of others who might not be as attuned to the system as it now exists—in that selection process, great care should be exercised, if it were in fact to be utilized, to ensure that in that selection process the subject matter of the amendments are also taken into account. Not only would they have to be admissible in a technical sense but the subject matter, those areas to which the amendments address themselves, must in fact be appropriately addressed in some other way in determining whether or not there could be the removal of one or more amendments offered at the report stage to be selected by the Speaker.

In addition to that, we must recognize the political nature of the House of Commons. It may well be that for crass political reasons—and I know that rarely do we ever do anything for those reasons—it is necessary to pay recognition to the fact of whether an amendment came from the Government side of the House or from the opposition side of the House and, even more important, I believe, whether it came from the two opposition Parties jointly. In all fairness, it may be necessary to recognize that both opposition Parties have submitted similar amendments in order that both can claim credit for having pushed the Government right to the wall—which is always what we are trying to do, in any event.

I realize you might find that hard to believe, Mr. Speaker, but I am prepared to admit it because there is not another soul in the world watching this. They are all watching the Blue Jays. I feel quite confident that I can say almost anything today. There is not a single person watching us on television, I am sure. Everyone is sitting watching the Blue Jays, and at the end of the first half of the first inning, they are tied nothing each.

I am confident that we will get these changes into being by the first part of January and that we will see them working. It will not be easy. Change is difficult and we have just made some changes and I hear nothing but complaints about the way these changes are affecting people's lives. That does not mean the changes are wrong. It just means that politicians, by their very nature, resist change. That seems to be the case even with the changes to the House of Commons. However, may I say that I am looking forward to helping to implement these changes and to making sure we get the best possible results from what I consider to be an absolutely excellent series of recommendations made by a committee which worked diligently on behalf of all of us.

PETITIONS

USE OF EVIDENCE FROM SOVIET UNION BY DESCHÊNES COMMISSION

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by residents of Edmonton, Alberta, protesting the use of evidence from the Soviet Union by the Deschênes Commission of Inquiry on War Criminals. The petitioners call upon the Canadian Parliament to oppose the use of any such evidence.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Stackhouse: No, Mr. Speaker, I was hoping that on an occasion when a report about the role of the private Member was introduced, there might be an opportunity for a private Member to make a comment.

• (1530)

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the Hon. Member's sentiments, but under the rules adopted to help the private Member that is no longer possible.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present today. The first is from a group of residents of my riding, particularly the Hastings-Sunrise area. They call for reindexation of the family allowance. Its deindexation, combined with tax increases and budget handouts, has placed an extraordinary burden on families, especially on women, single parents and poor families. They call on the House of Commons to reinstate the full indexation of family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases.

The second petition is very interesting because many of the signatures are in Chinese characters. It is from residents of the Strathcona area and downtown east side of Vancouver, and they call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, in the middle of National Family Week it is my honour to present a petition from constituents in the City of Thunder Bay who protest deindexation of family allowances and other changes in our family support system. They protest the hand-outs which the Government has proposed and which represent a burden on families. They call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed by Canadians right across this land who would like to add their voice to those calling upon the Government to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind the unfair tax increases in the Budget.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 412.

[Text]

TOURIST PUBLICATIONS

Question No. 412—Mr. Robichaud:

1. In 1984, how many United States tourist publications were sold in Canada and what income accrued to the government from the 10 per cent tax?

2. (a) In 1984, how many Canadian tourist publications were sold or given away (i) in Canada (ii) abroad (b) what income accrued to the government from the 10 per cent tax?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Revenue and Regional Industrial Expansion as follows:

1 and 2. There is no mechanism to record the number of United States tourist publications sold in Canada or of Canadian tourist publications sold or distributed in Canada or abroad.

Revenue Canada advises that its own records do not differentiate between tourism literature and other forms of printed matter. Therefore, the information pertaining to the income from the 10 per cent tax on tourist publications is not available.

[Translation]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question mentioned by the Hon. President of the Privy Council has been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canada Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect to uninsured deposits, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 7379).

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to speak in support of Bill C-79, which concerns the provision of compensation to depositors of the two financial institutions, for the portion not insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. The Bill was tabled by the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) in the House on October 7 of this year.

Through this Bill, the Government intends to compensate all depositors who had invested their savings with the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, and who would not otherwise have been compensated by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. Last March, when the Government took emergency action to improve the financial situation of these institutions located in Western Canada, it made certain commitments to the depositors of these institutions, and today, it intends to meet those commitments. Last March we had created a climate of trust in these institutions, but repeated attacks by the Opposition created a climate of panic and uncertainty in the financial world, especially among small depositors and business people. Mr. Speaker, how can the Government be expected to build something solid when the Opposition, in an unprecedented way and without consideration, is constantly undermining the commitment we made to preserve those financial institutions, together with many private depositors and small businessmen, over six major chartered banks and the provincial Governments that were directly concerned. Today, we must meet the commitments we made to these people. They trusted us, and thanks to the criticism by Opposition Members, today they might have lost everything. We are going to meet our obligations to the bitter end, and the Opposition should do likewise and support the Bill, since it would not have been necessary without the Opposition's attacks on the bail-out program we proposed last March, and the consequences of those attacks. In fact, why did these financial institutions have to close their doors? I will try to define several significant developments these institutions have had to deal with in recent years.

First, the energy policy of our predecessors, who today are the Official Opposition, has had a disastrous impact on Western Canada, and it is in fact Western Canada, Mr. Speaker, which has been most severely affected by the failure of these financial institutions. The Liberal Government took a series of energy measures which resulted in a dramatic drop in oil consumption, and these measures included energy transfer policies such as programs to help people convert from oil heating to electricity and also increased taxes in this sector.

Second, rising interest rates which our predecessors merely encouraged, plus inflation which they were unable to control, both led Canadians to review their consumption habits, such as gas for motor vehicles, and so forth. This dangerous legacy we were left by the previous Government is now forcing us to take the measures before the House today. The Opposition, the Liberals, did not foresee the consequences of their actions at the time they took these economic initiatives, as a result of which today, so many people in Western Canada are facing serious economic problems.

And now, Mr. Speaker, what about the regulation of our financial institutions? As soon as it came to power last September, our Government asked for a major review of our financial institutions, since we were aware of the disastrous consequences of the regulations left to us by the previous Government. Mr. Speaker, as you know, only a few months ago we referred a green paper to the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, for the purpose of assessing the consequences of poor regulation of these financial institutions.

Last summer we heard evidence from spokesmen for most banks, trust and insurance companies to launch a basic reform to avoid the reoccurrence of such incidents in the future.

Our only regret—and there is nothing we could do about it—is that we did not come into office a year sooner, for we certainly would have been able to avoid the shutdown of the two Canadian banks which are now the subject matter of this Bill. As a result of those policies, both banks—the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank—had to cope with all kinds of problems. Unemployment increased, the market value of real estate declined, and the special nature of mortgage legislation resulted in those two institutions finding themselves stuck with boxes full of keys to houses on which they held mortgages. Homeowners were no longer able to meet their obligations. In turn the banks were unable to meet theirs.

That sums up the reasons which explain how Western Canada found itself in the midst of an economic crisis. Since we are a national Government we have to lend a hand to a region of our country, Western Canada, which finds itself in dire straits. Our duty is to help that region solve the problems it is facing. More than that, we have to assess the consequences of our action if we were to refuse to help the depositors of those two financial institutions which are now in the process of being liquidated.

Private individuals had deposits of about $27 million in the two banks, and I would suggest we cannot let them fend for themselves because there are too many of them. Nor can we forget the unions and their deposits of about $7 million. As we all know union funds come mostly from low wage workers. Are we going to ignore all those small depositors?

The problem is the same when it comes to municipalities: if we do nothing about their deposits we will be asking small depositors, people who must pay taxes on their homes, to bear the brunt of this whole affair, and we are talking about roughly $82 million.

Credit unions are in the same predicament. Religious organizations stand to lose close to $22 million. If one remembers that the money was collected cent by cent, one can imagine just how many people are involved. We cannot ignore those organizations for the sake of $22 million and it is imperative that we continue to protect them. Pension funds and small businessmen account for an additional $6 million, so all told we are looking at about $230 million which directly affect individuals in a relatively small region.

What, then, would be the cost of the measures the government would have to take in this area if we did not compensate them now? It would have to help them directly or indirectly through various social schemes, including unemployment insurance and welfare programs, which would probably cost a lot more than what we are giving now.

We can imagine what loss in income tax the government would incur if we abandoned these people to their own resources, for small businesses would probably have to close and the Government would lose major fiscal revenues; $230 million for those who have adhered to our bailout package, that is very little.

In other words, what would be the price we would have to pay to rebuild this region which is the most severely affected by these bank failures and to ensure the economic future of its people?

The $875 million provided for under this Bill is certainly a large amount of money, but it is not much in term of helping these people to operate in a recovering economy. The economic policies implemented by our Government over the past few months have already made possible the creation of some 284,000 jobs; what is more, a large number of foreign corporations which have confidence in our economy are currently negociating possible investments in Canada, which should create hundreds of thousands new jobs in this country. Also we should not forget that our policies for the past year only have reduced unemployment by 1.5 per cent to restore the steadiest climate since 1971: bank rates have been greatly reduced, automobile plants have increased their production by 23 per cent, construction has increased by 17 per cent. And if we specifically refer to the West, oil drilling companies have increased their operations by 19 per cent.

It was for all those reasons that I mentioned a while ago that if we had had the opportunity to come to power a year earlier, we would not have experienced all those consequences. We do not want to bail out the bank or the financial institution as suggested by the Opposition. They alter the facts. It is far more dramatic not to compensate the small businessmen and the ordinary Canadians who have so painfully saved.

We may not be happy today to have to pay out such a sum. However, we have to do so to protect and maintain the parliamentary spirit. It is due to the irresponsibility of the previous government that we have to pay and Canadians know it, they are not easily deceived. They know that we are paying for the administrative mistakes of the team now sitting opposite.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I support this Bill as a responsible parliamentarian and all parliamentarians either on the Government side or in the Opposition should do likewise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Are there comments or questions on the Hon. Member's speech? If not, we will resume debate with the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I heard the comments made by the Hon. Member who spoke before me. He referred to the reasons why the Government stepped in and introduced this legislation. And like all Conservative Members, he was anxious to put the blame on the previous Government.

However, Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for Longueuil (Mr. Leblanc) had taken the time to read the statmenet made by the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) in this House on March 25th, certainly he would have changed his speech, because according to a Member of this Conservative Government the Canadian Commercial Bank's difficulties were due: "to the Canadian Commercial Bank's operations in the United States and the losses incurred in the United States by that bank".

Moreover, for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Longueuil, I am going to quote what the Minister, a Conservative Minister in his Government, had to say in this House, and since I have the English text, he will allow me to read it in English. Mrs. McDougall had this to say:

● (1550)

[English]

The bank recently experienced a sharp deterioration in its U.S. loan portfolio, particularly as a result of lower oil prices. This situation significantly depressed the value of the Canadian Commercial Bank loan portfolio.

If I understand correctly the comments made by the Minister on March 25, 1985, when she announced that the Canadian Commercial Bank was having difficulties, I believe these were in the nature of the difficulties known to exist in the United States rather than difficulties facing the Canadian economy in western Canada. For sure, if the Minister who is now on the spot wants to change the speech she made on March 25, she will give us the reasons. But one thing is certain. If the Hon. Member for Longueuil (Mr. Leblanc) had read that statement made by his colleague, a Minister of his Government, he would not have made such comments.

Mr. Speaker, when dealing with Bill C-79 I have the feeling I am taking part in a demolition project, the demolition of two financial institutions, and the demolition of something which was certainly part of the pride shared by Canadians living in the Prairies and Western Canada. Because this Bill is the death sentence passed on two financial institutions, two regional banks which operated in Western Canada, even though they had operations elsewhere in this country.

What the Government is proposing is using the taxpayers' money to actually cover that part of the assets of those two banks which was in trouble. It is clear to me, according to the statements we heard from Government Members, that the cost—it is not yet known and I will come back to this—will be based on the amount of bad loans and the ability of liquidators to get the best price possible for the assets. I will also come back to this later, and refer to the Hitchman Report which seems to indicate that the Government, faced with the options outlined by the expert, chose the one that was least recommended by Mr. Hitchman himself.

What this demolition project undertaken by Bill C-79 boils down to, is that the overall cost to the Government and its agencies totals $3.3 billion. In the case of the Northland Bank, it is first a sum of $1.232 billion, which breaks down into $414 million for uninsured deposits, $318 million for insured deposits and a $500 million advance from the Bank of Canada, for a total cost of $1.232 billion with respect to just one bank.

In the case of the Canadian Commercial Bank, there will be an expenditure of $2 billion, of which $532 million will be for uninsured deposits, $275 million for insured deposits and $1.3 billion for the money advanced by the Bank of Canada, for a total of $3.332 billion.

This is a substantial amount, and it will come either from the Government directly through this bill or from the Bank of Canada, which will try to recover its losses. Whatever amount the Bank of Canada succeeds in recovering will lower the amount that the Government can recover under Bill C-79, and whether we want it or not, there will also be the amounts paid by the CDIC, which will be passed on to consumers. Instead of being a tax to be paid at income tax time, this will be passed on as additional costs for banking operations throughout the system.

What will be the real cost of this operation? That is the question, Mr. Speaker. Until now, a figure of $1 billion has been quoted. In other words, after the Government has recovered whatever it can, the net cost would be about $1 billion. For those who have examined the Hitchman Report which was tabled this morning—and I am pleased that it has finally been made public after we had been asking for it such a long time—I can point out that this report states on page 6 that the necessary reserves for bad loans in the case of the Canadian Commercial Bank would be of $1 billion. This is only for one bank. If the report is true, the cost will be $1 billion for a single bank.

How much will it cost for the Northland Bank? We do not know yet, but apparently, it will certainly be around $225 million, which means that the real cost to the Crown will not be $1 billion as we had thought until now, but more like $1.2 billion.

Mr. Speaker, we have asked the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Finance, who has the ultimate responsibility for the financial administration of this country, to provide clarification about the real cost of this operation. However, in her comments last Monday, the Minister of State for Finance candidly admitted that she had no real idea of the true cost to the taxpayers, but she certainly did not deny that this cost would exceed $1 billion.

I do not want to go over the entire speech that I made in this House during the special debate on the Northland Bank which the Chair granted to us some days ago, more specifically last week, I believe. At that time, we thought that the Minister would rise to inform us about what was happening to the second bank facing financial problems. However, nothing happened; the Minister spoke for about 20 minutes, and during all that time, she succeeded in evading the issue completely and not saying a word about the Northland Bank. Because of that, we now have no information about this financial institution. We simply know what the newspapers have reported and what we have learned in our conversations with certain officials, which is very little. Yet, the Members of Parliament are being asked to approve a Bill which requests hundreds of millions of dollars, to be paid by the Canadian taxpayers.

Hon. Members will recall that during the emergency debate, the Government was asked some very specific questions, and in particular why the Department of Finance had decided to tie together the fates of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, which amounted to giving the latter the kiss of death, and in fact simply forced it to close its doors.

Why are we now discussing Bill C-79? Why is the Government now being forced to introduce a Bill dealing with nearly $1 billion? I suggest that the basic reason goes back to last March, when the Government made a commitment, and assured the House and the people of Canada that the bail-out which was being attempted by putting up $255 million for the Canadian Commercial Bank was going to be a success, that the Bank was going to become solvent again and that depositors were not to have any fears of leaving their deposits in that financial institution of Western Canada.

Some of my constituents, Mr. Speaker, had deposits in the Canadian Commercial Bank which came due in April, one month after the bail-out operation, and hesitated to renew those deposits. They phoned the Bank of Canada, and I have the number they dialed, I even have the name of the person they talked to, and that person told them: "If you do not trust the Canadian Commercial Bank, you might as well not go to any bank at all, for they are all alike". This is the information that was given to one of my constituents who phoned the Bank of Canada to find out if the Canadian Commercial Bank was safe. The officer involved was of course not providing an answer on the basis of his own knowledge, he was passing on the Government's message, he was to all intents and purposes repeating the statements made by the Minister of Finance, the Minister of State for Finance, the Prime Minister, the Inspector of Banks and the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

Consciously or unconsciously, whether it wanted it or not, the Government misled depositors in this country who were dealing with this financial institution. They were giving information on the basis of data that were inadequate and incomplete. And now the Minister of Finance, the Minister of State (Finance) and the Prime Minister are obliged to make amends for their oversight and incompetence and to ask this House for authority to spend nearly one billion dollars to compensate depositors. It is because the Conservative Government gave false indications that taxpayers are now obliged to pay the bill. Is it normal that all Canadian taxpayers should be asked to pay for the incompetence and nonchalance of a Conservative Government that last March was more concerned with publicity, with the coverage of the Economic Summit when the Prime Minister sat on his television commentator's throne in front of Canada's business and labour world? Of course he did not want to give Canadians the bad news that a bank was going to go bankrupt. However, this desire on the part of the Prime Minister to play to the media led him to make a decision in a few hours, and the papers amply documented the process and the sequence of events to make them plausible for the public.

So a decision was made in a few minutes to avoid casting a pall on the Economic Summit, and today, the Government has to make amends and ask the House to consider a Bill that will total expenditures of nearly $1 billion. This is entirely inconceivable and irresponsible!

Mr. Speaker, today we are being asked to consider a very important Bill. In fact I do not think that within our lifetime as parliamentarians, in this Parliament, at least not until the next election, we will again be asked to vote on a Bill whose sole purpose is to spend $1 billion. It is not a social program, it is not an economic development program but just a Bill involving nearly one billion dollars.

In my view, to ask us to do that without having Mr. Justice Estey's report, to ask us to pass a piece of legislation without any indication of the causes which brought about Northland Bank's financial difficulties, as to whether that bank actually is in difficulty or concerning other aspects of its financial statements—We are now asked, yes, the Minister has the gall to ask us to rush through this Bill involving $1 billion without any information, without any data concerning Mr. Justice Estey's report, without information on the Northland Bank, without any reasonably precise information as to the value of the assets of those banks. This, Mr. Speaker, I feel is unacceptable. Coming from a Government I find it amateurish, I find it shameful to ask representatives of the people to rush this through without the basic information needed to make a judgment.

Besides, they will not give us the names of the persons or institutions to whom the money would be paid. I totally support the views expressed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) when he introduced the amendment namely that the Bill should not . . . the principle itself should not be recognized and accepted by this House if we do not have full information, total information, about whom that kind of money is going to be paid to. I think this is the minimum that could be asked from a democratic institution such as this Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to recall that another reason why we are asked to pass this Bill today is the statement made by the Minister of State (Finance) on March 29, 1985. Because on March 29, we only knew about the case and situation of the Northland Bank and Members in this House then asked the Minister of State (Finance) whether other institutions were in trouble.

The Minister had answered:

● (1600)

[English]

I would like to make it clear that other institutions are not being looked at under the circumstances that we are talking about now. I want that absolutely clear for the House, the people of Canada and the depositors in our financial institutions.

[Translation]

We had been told that no other financial institutions were in trouble. So depositors, businessmen, individuals, institutions and municipalities heard supposedly responsible people—at the very least accountable for managing public funds in this country—telling them that no other financial institutions were in a bind. Well, no wonder those institutions and those individuals continued to have faith in the Northland Bank! But now, on September 1, we find out that the Minister had not told us the truth. So today we are again forced to make up for a factual error or mismanagement, but whether we like it or not the ultimate result is the same for the taxpayers—they have to pick up the tab. They have to pick up the tab, Mr. Speaker, and there is something unfair in all this.

A few days we heard that another financial institution, Continental Trust—about which the Minister did not say a word either last March 29—has collapsed, or at least is being liquidated. The depositors? They can be found in every region of Canada even though this financial institution did most of its business in Ontario. Some of them live in Quebec City and they called me. Others are from the Montreal region and they too called me. Among others, I have received a call from Mr. Henri Jones of St-Sauveur who wants me to ask the Government to explain why the foreign banks will be reimbursed in the case of the Northland Bank and the CCB while the depositors are not being compensated in the case of the Continental Trust. How can this be logically explained?

Mr. Speaker, you are indicating that I have two minutes remaining. I shall have to condense my comments substantially. I would have liked to speak about the Hitchman Report, but as far as the Northland Bank is concerned and based on the recommendations contained in this report, I am asking the Government to postpone consideration of this Bill to see whether there would not be another solution to the problems of this bank.

I would like to suggest to the Government a four-part program the purpose of which would be to save the Northland Bank from liquidation and closure.

First, we know that the costs will be at least equal to the losses or bad loans. In one way and another, the costs will be approximately the same. Especially if we look at the Hitchman report, liquidation seems to be the least desirable solution when a bank is having this kind of problem.

First, therefore, if it is true that the potential losses exceed the assets of the shareholders in the case of the Northland Bank, which means that the assets of the shareholders are zero, I would suggest that the Government purchase for $1 and other considerations the assets of ordinary shareholders.

Second, the Government should introduce a special bill, different from this one—the money we are spending now will be lost entirely—to invest in the equity of the Northland Bank about as much as we will have to spend to cover the bad loans of the bank. How much would that cost? Between $150 million and $200 million. We are spending that much anyway.

Third, it should change, if need be, the composition of the board of directors and appoint, if necessary, a new and more competent team.

Fourth, it should guarantee the deposits in the Northland Bank for the next five years, so that depositors could regain confidence in this financial institution.

The purpose of this four-point strategy would be to bail out the Northland Bank at a cost to the Canadian taxpayers, based again on the recommendations of the Hitchman report, which would be a lot lower than the current liquidation of the assets.

This way, we would undoubtedly save money, we would at least keep some people at work and probably save for Western Canada a financial institution which did not deserve to fail.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments on the Hon. Members remarks? Debate. The Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-79 which is an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits.

I believe that when all the facts are known, when cool rational judgment prevails, the decision to assist the uninsured depositors in these financial institutions will be seen as being fair, based on all the facts that were available at that time, based upon the unique situation at that time—and I will deal with that point in a little more detail—based on the competence of the individuals who were giving information, and based on the honesty of the individuals who were giving information at that time.

I would just like to quote from the Financial Times of October 7 of this week. It says:

The Mulroney Government's decision to create a commission of inquiry to look into the failures of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank makes good sense. In fact, it will be downright healthy to remove the banking fiasco from the House of Commons, where the matter is getting blurred instead of clarified with each passing day.

In appointing Supreme Court Judge Willard Estey to head the commission, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney said "the factors affecting the situation of the two banks are complex and require thorough and dispassionate analysis."

It has become increasingly—sometimes alarmingly—clear in the weeks since the banks' critical conditions became known that neither Parliament nor a parliamentary committee would be likely to deliver the kind of "dispassionate analysis" the whole matter is begging for.

The objectives of the decision included the very strong and supportive ideal to nurture and foster the development of regional banks. Also they included the need to maintain confidence in the banking system. We have a record which is well worth defending, going back some 62 years or 63 years. As Hon. Members know, one has to be very careful in pulling the plug, so to speak, on a financial institution. It can cause a domino effect which not only ripples through the financial factor but comes down very hard on small businesses. The bottom line in terms of the total impact upon Canada could be a tremendous loss of jobs. We have a record worth protecting. I believe the record will show that we tried to act in fairness to thousands of average Canadians. These Canadians, either directly or indirectly, had a stake in the confidence of the CCB and Northland. However, as I indicated already, Mr. Justice Willard Estey has been asked to look into all aspects of the collapse of these two banks. We are hopeful—in fact, we know it because of his competence—that he will explore in depth many roles—those of the external auditors, the Inspector General of Banks, the board of directors, the audit committees of the board of directors, the senior management of the company and the government officials, both at the federal level and at two provincial levels. He will also explore the loan practices, accounting practices, insider information and conflict of interest.

I was a member of the Finance Committee. We looked in some detail at the circumstances in May and June of this year, prior to the summer recess. Based upon the information which we were given—and we were refused certain documents—we had some very clear indication at that time that the renewing of bad loans and the advancing of more funds just to pay for past due interest was not a normal, sound practice. The practice of accruing interest when the principal was not even being paid and taking it into income was not sound. The practice of changing names on accounts just to renew the account and bring it into current standing was not correct. Adding substantial fees to the balance in renewing the account was not correct. Loans made to 100 per cent of the cost, in other words no equity whatsoever in the transaction, was not correct. Spreading the cost of the goodwill in connection with the purchase of the Westland Bank, which I recall was some $18.4 million, was intended to be spread over a 40-year period.

Possibly the record will show that all participants were misled in this situation. I am speaking about information being misleading, being faulty and being incomplete. If the true level of the assistance required was $255 million at that time, that bank would be thriving today. If criminal charges are warranted, I am sure they will be instituted. If other disciplinary action is necessary against organizations or individuals, that will be taken.

I should like to talk a little about the role and the importance of regional financial institutions. The Government believes in regional banks. They are of great benefit to local men and women as well as business people, particularly small business persons. Canada is dominated by five very large banks of world class size. In contrast, the United States of America has about 13,000 banks, partly as a result of the interstate banking regulations, but the situation in that country is far different from the one here. Our five large banks have something like 7,000 to 8,000 branches in Canada. Indeed, to start up a small regional bank is not an easy task. One of the principles of making loans is to spread risk. However, when one has started in a given region, obviously there will be some concentration in that local area. If the local area happens to have a concentration of energy industries, that also goes slightly against the risk factor. Those things have to be taken into consideration. There will be some ups and downs.

We feel it is very important, regardless of whether it is western Canada, Atlantic Canada or northern Ontario, to have regional banks. In 20 years or 30 years from now there should not be a total concentration in the financial industry by five or six very large conglomerates. Timing is also important, whether one is starting up a bank or any other type of business. Also there is a little luck involved. Of course luck can be good or it can be bad. In this particular case these institutions were just getting going when a very severe recession hit the country. That was compounded by developments in western Canada, particularly in Alberta. If only very large institutions survived, what would happen to competition and to pricing? I think some bad things could happen. We have seen some early indications. For example, a Minister of the Government of Alberta spoke on television this morning and indicated that some small and medium-sized borrowers were having difficulty borrowing funds.

I should like to talk about legislation for a moment. The Liberals discussed new legislation in 1982, but no concrete action was taken. The laws of the country governing the role of insurance companies and trust companies are some 50 years outdated. My Party, after forming the Government last fall, took action very quickly. A study was commissioned of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation; it is known as the Wyman Report. It was completed in April, 1985, and it is under review. A Green Paper was also commissioned by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). It included nine principles in total. It is very interesting that the first was: improve consumer protection; the second was: strictly control self dealing; the third was: guard against conflicts of interests; and the fourth was: promote competition and efficiency. There were several other key ones as well.

The revisions to The Bank Act in 1980 created a flood of new banks. The figure rose from something like 11 to 70. However, the former Government did absolutely nothing to improve supervisory control.

I should like to deal with the background of the Canadian Commercial Bank at this point. It received its charter in July, 1975. It started business in 1976, with the opening of two offices, one in Edmonton and one in Vancouver. It decided as a strategy to specialize in loans to small and medium-sized businesses in the energy service and real estate sectors. Its rate of growth is already on record.

I have already touched upon some of the risks facing new institutions in the growing stage. However, let me get right to the very serious decision in March, 1985. The federal Government agreed to a restructuring, but there were several other very competent, very able people at the table when that package was discussed. I refer, of course, to representatives from the Alberta Government who obviously wanted to see small banks survive, representatives of the Government of British Columbia, representatives of the CDIC, very senior officers from every one of the top six banks in this country, and representatives of the federal Government including the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Inspector General of the Banks. They, in their wisdom, obtained all possible facts. As I recall, they began on a Friday evening. The deadline to make a decision was not three or six months away, it was that Monday morning.

I can still recall that the Chief Executive Officer of one of the large banks indicated at our hearings that, given the adequate, correct information available at that time, it was not unusual to make a decision of that type based on solid, hard, sound facts. Of course, part of that information is the valuation of loans, which is normally done in a competent way and over-viewed by external auditors from other areas.

There have been some hints, and I believe they are quite incorrect, that valuation is a relatively easy exercise. After all, the bank had something like 3,000 loan files. There are those who wonder why it could not have brought in 200 people to do these valuations on the weekend. It is not that simple, Mr. Speaker. Most lending officers with any experience would agree with me. One must be able to rely on the key people who supply information.

Let me give you a couple of examples of the difficulties involved in valuation, Mr. Speaker. Let us say that a file showed a piece of raw land as an asset. One cannot decide in one weekend exactly what that land is worth. It may be that it is abutting on a very profitable industrial development, but it may turn out that, according to the city plans, the trunk line sewers end there. If so, it is not going to be very valuable. In cases like that, one needs to know the city's development plans, the zoning of the property and how that property might be changed. The valuation of an industrial building, for example, cannot be determined by its number of square feet, number of bricks or tonnes of mortar. The value of a building like that is based upon the value of rentals and the cash flow. One has to have a very solid idea of the nature of the tenants and the expiry dates of leases to know what value could be placed on that building. The same criterion goes for equipment, whether it is oil rigs or construction equipment. To know the value, one must know things like the current contracts for the equipment and the income raised from those contracts. In summary, on the issue of valuation, any five experts in this country must rely upon the information they are given.

I submit that this decision had to be made in quick order. We are not discussing the possible closing of a Gulf refinery, something which one might take six months to discuss. Confidence is key to a financial institution. We could not expect to maintain confidence with people running around all over the place.

All the options were explored. I have already touched upon the people who were involved. They were very senior people and they came to a unanimous decision, based upon the information they had, to go ahead with this support package. Realizing the very unique circumstances that existed at that time and the difficult economic situation, they realized that they were dealing with the future and survival of regional banks. They also decided to try to find a marriage partner for the Northland Bank.

Once the decision was made, those involved had to speak with confidence from that point on. Some people have been critical of the statements of confidence made by the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of State for Finance and the Inspector General of Banks. Someone who would argue with that is someone who just does not know what he is talking about. Having made that decision, one does not begin to say, "I think that bank might survive", or "Maybe it will succeed". Once that decision has been made, those who have made the decision have to get behind it and do everything possible to support it.

I would like to touch briefly on the profile of the uninsured depositors. With the CCB, there were credit unions with deposits totalling $6.8 million. In other words, thousands of average Canadians had their savings in that institution. Municipalities had $41.1 million on deposit. Again at risk is the money of many Canadians. After all, a municipality receives its money through special surtaxes on property taxes or other measures. Shool boards had $3.1 million on deposit; religious organizations, $2.3 million; labour unions, $6.5 million; and hospitals, $5.2 million. The Northland Bank's depositor profile is very similar, except that charitable organizations had a total of $13.2 million on deposit.

Yes, many foreign banks were trying to help the institution survive. As well, some other large depositors were helping it to survive. We have asked members of the Opposition, without receiving any clear answer, what the criteria for choosing would be, if it would be valid to start to pick and choose which depositors should be saved, and I do not think it is valid.

Looking ahead, I think we need to get on with the new legislation, with dealing with the CDIC and with the reform of financial institutions. Clearly we must strengthen the supervisory role over banks. Clearly we must give the Minister more power to act when the alarm rings. That supervisory role has not been in place in a strong enough way.

Regarding the CDIC, we should decide what the limit of insurance should be. We need to decide if the limit should be greater than $60,000 and if there should be co-insurance. Dealing with the reform of financial institutions, there are many, many items with which we must come to grips. These include ownership limits, concentration of power, self-dealing, conflicts of interest and leverage. Should all institutions be able to leverage 20 to one or higher? The role of the financial holding company, the role of Schedule C banks and the rest are all matters with which we must come to grips in order to put in place the mechanism that will establish on an ongoing basis a proper control of financial institutions so that we can return to making the record of which we in this country have been so proud for so many years.

In summary, I have made three points. First, I believe Bill C-79 should pass so that we may assist the many unions, school boards and municipalities that stood by this bank. Second, I think we should have confidence that Mr. Justice Estey's examination will determine all the facts and whether or not there was any wrongdoing. I think it was a great move to place the matter under his stewardship.

I would like to touch briefly on the important matter of privacy. I believe Mr. Justice Estey is the one who should decide on the matter of privacy. There is a law in this country that provides for privacy for both borrowers and depositors. I think it is critical that we maintain that. Mr. Justice Estey can look at the matter of privacy to help him determine if there was any wrongdoing, but I do not think we should see a knee-jerk reaction to a law that has been in place in Canada for over 100 years.

Finally, let us get on with revising the legislation regarding the CDIC. Let us get on with the reform of the regulations governing financial institutions to prevent the recurrence of situations like the one faced by the CCB and the Northland Bank.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) on his excellent contribution to this debate and also for his outstanding work on the Finance Committee. At the end of his remarks, he touched briefly on the matter of the privacy provisions and the revealing of the identities of depositors. My personal view is that to reveal those identities would cause irreparable damage to financial institutions because most people expect that their own names and the amounts of their deposits ought indeed to remain confidential. That is basic to our deposit-taking system. Would the Hon. Member care to comment with respect to the rationale behind the comments of those who would seek to apparently destroy those privacy provisions?

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I wish, through you, to thank the Hon. Member for his question. Privacy is critically important to all individual Canadians for a number of reasons. We need to have confidence in any dealings we have that they will remain private. We have laws under our Income Tax Act which state that no person, including Members of Parliament, is permitted to have access to the income tax files of an individual unless the individual says, in writing, that access is permissible. That is important.

In the committee deliberations we spoke about the possible risks in this country of more and larger data banks being built. These data banks contain a great deal of personal information with respect to loans, income and other facts. We have some genuine concerns in this regard which will be dealt with in our recommendations with respect to tide selling, whether it is information passed on from magazine subscriptions or what have you. If these data bases contain critical information, and they will, which should be for the private and sole use of whatever individual institution the person has dealt with, be it a mortgage company or a bank, it should not be passed on the someone else. When individual Canadians take a loan from an institution, or when they make a deposit to an institution, they are doing so in keeping with the 100-year old tradition which says that if something is private it is private. Because of the regrettable problem, and it is regrettable, we should not break the principles of this long held tradition which is so important to so many Canadians.

Mr. Penner: On a comment, Mr. Speaker. I listened to the reply of the Hon. Member. I can only say that his argument with respect to privacy and confidentiality is fatuous in the extreme. We all recognize the right of confidentiality. However, when one comes to the Government of Canada and its taxpayers and asks for an ex gratia payment, is the Hon. Member saying that should be kept private? Surely, if one wants privacy and confidentiality then ones does not come with both hands out asking for an ex gratia payment. They can have their confidentiality but they will not receive their payment. They cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) wish to reply?

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has missed the point. Confidentiality and privacy must be maintained. I wish to ask the Hon. Member this rhetorical question. What does he want the particular information for? I am strongly in support of Mr. Justice Estey having the complete information available to him so that, in his wisdom and with his legal advisers, he can decide if any wrongdoing has occurred. If there has been any wrongdoing, then let him proceed with alacrity and haste. However, I do not think that such private information should be within the purview of a 20-member committee of the House or any other group. We can look at the objectives with respect to why the Hon. Member may want to have some facts, but let us face them so that we can maintain the tradition while getting on with the purpose of why they may be interesting and available to use.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has not helped the situation at all. He is talking about the Parliament of Canada which is being asked to award unspecified amounts to unspecified persons or corporations and he dares to ask: Why does the Hon. Member want this information? It is as if the Hon. Member is someone who just wandered in from the street to see what was going on and was nosy about this particular issue. That is the Parliament of Canada. Parliament is being asked to award to people whom we do not know a total of more than $1 billion. We do not even know the exact amounts. Yet, the Hon. Member dares to say that we should not ask any questions about who these people are or how much they will receive. That is nothing more or less than a downgrading of the Parliament of Canada. It is an insult to this institution. Surely, the Hon. Member ought to recognize that.

Mr. Attewell: Through you, Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member what is insulting. It was insulting to work on the Finance Committee which for five or six months held hearings across the country—and I was in attendance at practically every one of those meetings—while some Hon. Members opposite seemed to spend more time with the television cameras in Vancouver and Calgary than they did at the meeting table. Having heard all the deliberations, we now come to decide what we do about the situation. Let us deal with the report-writing stage which started last week and which met for three full days. Members of the Hon. Member's Party were in attendance at the hearings over the number of months which they took place and yet his Party did not send one of its members to help in the preparation of the report. They did not even send a message to the Chairman to explain why they would not be able to attend that critical stage of the whole process. I admire the Hon. Member who can get to his feet with his histrionics and rhetorics waving his flag. However, I wish the members of his Party would have had a little more respect. The meeting with respect to the report writing was behind the scenes. It was an in camera meeting and television cameras were not in attendance. If members of his Party had attended, then they would have had to roll up their sleeves to do some work. If they would contribute in that way, then the Hon. Member might make a little more sense as well.

In closing, I stick to my comments. I think they are valid and right for Canadians. I think if we were to take a poll of Canadians we would find them telling us to stick with it because that is what they want.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp).

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in this debate on the amendment that the House decline the giving of second reading to Bill C-79 to compensate the uninsured depositors in the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank.

The brief exchange during the last period of questions and comments has usefully disposed of the key points which the preceding speaker has made. What I would like to do in considering the question is return to some of the larger matters before us which the Government should have considered and which the Parliament of Canada has a real obligation to consider. Clearly, we have an important problem before us. We have a matter of bank failure. No one can doubt that. We have the fact of a ministerial failure, a failure by Government, which it would seem to me is equally apparent and which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should long since have recognized in providing some type of an answer.

Late last winter we saw the difficulties with respect to the Canadian Commercial Bank and a rescue package was put forward. Gradually we had a revelation of what was wrong with the situation. Then, suddenly, just before this session of Parliament resumed, it was announced that not only had the Canadian Commercial Bank fallen but the Northland Bank had fallen as well. At an earlier stage we were told that the situation could be saved. The Government put together a rescue package. Then, we had the failure. Now, we have the suggestion being made that the cause of the failure was not necessarily the mismanagement of the bank. In fact, we have heard a good deal of partisan slanging in the House with respect to the preceding Government's policies being responsible for the difficulties which have arisen.

Whatever the source of the problem may have been, the reality is that the Government's supervision of the financial system of Canada has been inadequate, which has led to the taxpayers of Canada being faced with the need to pay hundreds of millions of dollars. In fact, when this Bill becomes an act, if it does, it will mean a cost of $875 million. It is possible that the cost of this liquidation will be a lot more than that. The Deposit Insurance Corporation, which is responsible for the insured depositors up to $60,000 under the existing law, is $1.2 billion in the red. If there is to be rapid repayment to the insured depositors of their $420 million, it is quite possible that the taxpayers will have to advance that money, if they don't end up to be actually responsible for it. They policy this Government is following will put us over the $1 billion mark in its attempt to clean up the mess which has developed in these two banks.

I would like to say something about how that situation developed. I am talking in terms of the economic difficulties of the early 1980s. The high interest rates forced on us by the Americans were just as hard on us as any policies followed by the Canadian Government. Those high interest rates slowed down economic activity in this country.

The failure of these banks is because of a long history of arbitrary power held by Canadian banks. They have refused to be subject to inspection by any public authority. In fact, there is a very long history of the banks of Canada saying "We will take care of ourselves. You stay out of it". One can go back to the time of the last bank failure in the early 1920s, and find, quite interestingly, that the bankers held to the position they had always held back to the beginning of the century and earlier, that they would take care of themselves, their investors, shareholders and depositors. The public authorities had to stay out of it. Back in those days, one banker, H. C. McLeod of the Bank of Nova Scotia, argued that there should in fact be inspection of the banks but he did not really get very far. The system of inspection which gradually evolved with the Inspector General of Banks is, I believe, recognized by all of us to be inadequate. Given such a situation, which I think the last Government knew about, and which is certainly no secret to the present Government, there should have been the most anxious care taken when it became clear that there were difficulties in some of the banks. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) should have immediately looked at this situation when the present Government assumed power.

The arbitrary power of the banks, incidentally, Mr. Speaker, is very well exemplified in their opposition to organization by their workers. This is the situation in Toronto at the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce where its workers are attempting to achieve recognition and negotiate a first agreement. The attempts of the banks, not just in Toronto but across the country, to prevent the workers from exercising their right of association, which the Charter of Rights and Freedoms has attempted to establish for Canadians in all their varied circumstances, is a good illustration of how the banks today will still have it their own way and the devil take the hindmost. It does not seem to matter whether the issue involves overworked and underpaid workers, or the taxpayers of the country who must face the consequences of abusive power and irresponsible lending and the bank failures which result from that.

The matter of the irresponsibility of the Ministers involved is quite vital to the confidence of Canadians generally, and of the people in our financial institutions, in our Government. It seems to me that there is no choice but to say that the Department of Finance, whether under the Minister of Finance or under the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) acted irresponsibly in this situation. Whatever the causes of the difficulties may have been, the fact that a bail-out package was put together so quickly, and others were sucked into it, that guarantees were given and then the institutions were allowed to go on about their business for several months before it became clear what the situation was, allows one to conclude that the responsibility which the Minister of Finance should have exercised was entirely lacking.

It is laudable, after 62 years of no bank failure in this country, to be determined not to let the first one occur at this early point in a new Government's life. However, it is not laudable to think that the statements of the bank were accepted. If the Minister of Finance had known anything of Canadian banking history, he would have realized that these institutions got into difficulties sometimes because their officers and executive were irresponsible and loaned money on assets which were not sufficient and they were prepared to play fast and loose with the books. One would have thought that anyone with any measure of prudence when faced with this situation would have decided that a very close look should be taken. I am not particularly impressed when the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) argues that it takes a great deal of expertise to assess the quality of land, buildings or what have you, because it is not really the buildings or land which are the banks' assets, it is the loans which have been incurred by others which are owed to the bank. It should not take a very long time to consider the payment record on those loans and determine whether in fact they are solid assets.

It seems to me that a relatively small group of people, given the free run of the bank, as they should have had that weekend, would have discovered pretty quickly that there were all kinds of supposed assets on which payment was not forthcoming, assets which would have to be drastically written down if not tossed out completely. It is precisely out the failure of the Department of Finance, and its officials, to ensure that that kind of review was taken that a profound difficulty arose. Instead, the Government put together a package and tried to assure Canadians that this institution was safe, and it is that action which Ministers and private Members support as responsible action. Once the Government had involved itself in that way, it would feel politically and, at the very least, morally responsible for the institution. The taxpayers of Canada face the abominable result. They face a situation in which the existence of a Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is inadequate to solve the problem. They face a situation in which the Government thinks it has no choice but to turn to them to provide the funds to cover these enormous deposits which the insurance would not cover.

Therefore, it is in fact the failure of the Minister of Finance and of the Minister of State for Finance and their officials. They the Ministers, of course, are the persons responsible to this Parliament. It is their failure to ensure that what they were doing was properly done. It is their failure, once they had involved themselves, to ensure that what they were presuming to guarantee would in fact continue to stand which has created a situation in which $1 billion, give or take, and who knows how much more by the time the banks have been liquidated, is going to come out of the pockets of the taxpayers of Canada.

The Minister of Finance is preoccupied with deficit reduction. He is very concerned about reducing the call on the lenders of Canada. Yet he faces a situation in which his deficit is increased by $1 billion. What does that do to create confidence in this Government which presumed to be so business-like? There have been appalling failures in regulation, in supervision and in the responsibilities of the Department of Finance. If we did not have such a shabby Government, Mr. Speaker, as it appears to be these days, with the departure of some Ministers while others—admittedly higher in the Cabinet pecking order—continue on, we would surely have had happen what, in the long traditions of Parliament, is the only honourable course. The Minister of Finance would have given up his position, would have said, "If I am compelled by the mistakes I made last winter to demand $1 billion from the Canadian taxpayers, I have to go". The Prime Minister would then have to find someone who could renew the confidence of the Canadian people in the Government, the House of Commons, these persons in the Canadian financial system and throughout our society. The Prime Minister should have long since asked for the Minister's resignation. He should have found himself a Minister of Finance who was not such a babe in the woods, who recognized the importance of his job and that it was just not a matter of trying to reduce the deficit he is responsible for, but that the institutions of the Government, and the financial and economic institutions of the country have to be maintained in their proper way.

When, because of the irresponsibility of this Government, the taxpayers face a Bill to totalling $1 billion, what are they to do? It will be three years before the next election but I do not imagine they are going to forget these things. If the ladies and gentlemen to the number of 211 who came here thought they would reign on for some indefinite period, I suspect that the further back one goes the more doubt there must be about this piling up of mistakes and irresponsibility on the part of Ministers. One can only hope that because of the wisdom gained through contemplating the next election we will see some measure of responsibility.

This Bill does not deserve to be passed. The taxpayers of this country do not deserve to pay the Bill. If they have to pay it, they demand that responsibility be exercised by the Prime Minister. They demand that the Minister of Finance go and that we get someone we can really trust.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt. I would like to advise all Members that from now on speeches will be limited to 10 minutes without questions or comments.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak in the debate on Bill C-79. I was disappointed in the paucity of verisimilitude displayed by the previous speaker. I am also disappointed in a newspaper which used to portray itself as one of Canada's great newspapers, my own city's Edmonton Journal, which said in an editorial on October 2:

> By trying to blame the Liberals for the collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, the government shows it is bankrupt of any sense of responsibility for its actions.

We have an example here of responsibility to small depositors, credit unions, and charitable organizations across Canada. We have a demonstration of responsibility not only to western Canada but to all parts of this country. Come election time I think that responsibility and its exercise will be recognized in the most positive fashion.

We have as well a responsibility in some way to redress the wrongs whereby, due to the National Energy Program, $17 billion were sucked, sumped and siphoned out of the economy of western Canada. To compound that indignity by siphoning another $1 billion out of the western economy would be the most grievous fault, immoral, unethical and wrong politically. We could have slimed out of it, I suppose, but we face our responsibilities. We do not slime as others might have done.

Western banks will some day grow and thrive and we hope that time of healing will arrive soon. There are some nascent western banks now which we hope will weather this storm. We hope that a new atmosphere of trust can be built on the solid plan which is before us in Bill C-79. The consequences, had these banks gone under in March, would have been absolutely devastating to western Canada.

Why should we compensate the uninsured depositors? That is the first question that has to be answered. As the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) has said many times in this House and outside, we are compensating these ordinary Canadians because the situation facing the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank reflects unique and particular circumstances. These two banks accounted for less than 1 per cent of the total assets of the Canadian banking system. However, they provided important support to economic activity in western Canada at a critical time.

A word now, Mr. Speaker, about the context in which these banks grew. The western economy grew rapidly because of the energy boom in the late 1970s. During that boom capital was short in Alberta, and the new banks recognized their opportunity to supply the demand. Because of the boom conditions the banks depended mainly on the energy, real estate and construction sectors which were growing most rapidly. That is the context in which the banks fell. No one in Alberta or in western Canada, or indeed anywhere in Canada except perhaps the cabal which perpetrated the NEP upon us, predicted the critical recession which hit in the early 1980s and came to its nadir in 1982. No one could predict the depth of that depression, for that is what it was in Alberta, from which the western economies have still not recovered. To a large extent that depression was imposed on the western economies by the national Government in the form of the NEP. This policy gravely destabilized the economic situation in western Canada and it came at the same time as major fluctuations in world energy market conditions and the U.S. deregulation of gas prices. Alberta and the other energy producing provinces experienced much uncertainty and loss of confidence in the oil and gas industry, and consequently in the real estate industry, especially regarding investment. These were, of course, the very sectors upon which the CCB and the Northland Bank depended.

I would like to make reference, if I may, to the remarks of the distinguished Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) made in this House on October 7. That gentleman said, and he was referring to September 1 and September 9 when Parliament reconvened:

> We on this side of the House were conned that time. We were conned. The chartered banks were sucked in.

Earlier in the same speech he also said:

> That bank was badly managed from its inception.

The question that remains is: If the bank was badly managed, where was the right hon. gentleman's Party for the first seven or eight years of its life? Where were they?

Mr. Taylor: He was where he is right now, out of the House.

Mr. Edwards: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said that the Official Opposition supported the emergency procedures, the bail-out if you like, because it was told the bank was experiencing a few temporary problems due to some questionable management decisions. The bail-out, Mr. Speaker, was designed to be successful and render the bank solvent and viable once again. That was the basis for our Government's decision at that time. The western Canadian economy was far less stable than was thought at that time. That is not the whole explanation for the collapse of these banks, but that is for Mr. Justice Estey to decide. However, it must not be underestimated in any discussion of the banks' failure. The economy of Alberta in particular is still suffering the effects of the NEP. According to figures from the Conference Board and Statistics Canada, the unemployment rate in Alberta, which rose from 3.9 per cent in 1979 to 10.8 per cent in 1983, is down slightly this year but it still stood at 9.7 per cent last August. Housing starts numbered 39,947 in 1979 and fell to 17,000 in 1983, and the Conference Board forecast for 1985 is a mere 5,900. Clearly this sector has not recovered from the devastation of the NEP. Some further statistics. In the construction industry the value of work purchased in millions of dollars went from a peak of 14,491 in 1981 to 9,674 in 1984. The Conference Board forecast for this year is 10,835. The real estate industry is still in a serious slump. There are sales going on in the residential field but the prices are bottoming out. While the average value for a Multiple Listing System transaction reached $106,788 in 1981, in the second quarter of 1985 it was down to $79,053, the lowest in a decade.

What is the responsibility of the Government in this whole situation? It has to be to recognize that the blame for the collapse of these banks cannot be placed squarely on any one Party. Our bank regulatory system certainly needs improvement. I think the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) detailed that for us. The CCB's loan portfolio was in a more serious condition than was made apparent in March. The support package did not entirely succeed in restoring market confidence in the CCB and deposits eroded steadily. As the Minister of State for Finance said, those who kept their deposits in these western banks during the depression helped to cushion the serious impact of the recession on western Canadians. As the Minister of State has also said, unless those depositors are compensated quickly, their losses will result in job lay-offs.

The uninsured depositors of these banks include provincial Governments, municipalities, Government agencies, colleges, hospitals, individuals, small businesses, small financial institutions, Canadian and, yes indeed, foreign banks, investment dealers, and credit union centrals. The Government depended on the support of the depositors who continued to participate in the effort to preserve the viability of an important financial institution.

At stake is a larger element of credibility. The long-term larger issue has to do with our credibility world-wide. Much can be made of the inter-relationship of the banking system of Canada with that of the world. We have to recognize that the Government of Canada must send a strong signal to the rest of the world that banking in Canada is safe. This legislation does a great deal to drive that point home. I notice that the Federal Reserve Board of the United States has said that it will increase the frequency of bank examinations and make other changes to strengthen bank supervision. That is another country where these difficulties are being recognized and met head on.

I would like to say a few words about the responsibility factor of the Government. The Member from Thunder Bay appears not to have confidence in the Cabinet Ministers responsible for this decision and this legislation. I would like to go on record saying that I have nothing but the highest admiration for the steadfastness, serenity, consistency and candour of the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) of this country. For that reason, I am speaking in support of this Bill as an Edmontonian, an Albertan, and a Canadian. It is time to stand in defence of our banking system, of regional banks, and of Bill C-79 which will restore confidence and bring justice and equity to the ordinary people of Canada.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, as has been mentioned on several occasions in the House, it was only last March that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) stood in her place and gave the House unequivocal assurances. She said in effect that if Parliament would approve an aid package, a bail-out for the Canadian Commercial Bank of $225 million, all Members of the House could be assured of several things. First, she said that they could be assured that the bank would then become viable. Second, she said that in short order the bank would become profitable and, third, that in due course the money that the Government had advanced would be returned to the Government so that the taxpayers would not be out of pocket in the long run. Finally, she said that by doing this we would ensure that other banks would be protected from failure.

These assurances were given and my Party accepted them in good faith. Among the reasons that we did so is that my Party believes in the decentralization of the banking system. We believe that well-managed, well-run, competently administered regional banks are good for Canada. There is no question that they are needed. However, the corollary is that badly run banks, trust companies, credit unions, or any other financial institutions deserve no support whatsoever and certainly deserve no special consideration from the Parliament of Canada.

Let us talk about good management. We now all have copies of the report by George C. Hitchman. On page 3 he said that he advised Mr. McLaughlan, President of the Canadian Commercial Bank, that moving a bad loan to a new name and showing it as a good loan was unacceptable. Well, Mr. Speaker, so much for well run or badly managed regional banks. The Minister of State for Finance gave the House assurances which were backed up by her senior colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), himself. Those Ministers have been proven wrong. Now that we are faced with Bill C-79, my Party says, "Fool me once, shame on you; fool me twice, shame on me". That is why we will not support Bill C-79.

The incompetence that has been demonstrated in this bank fiasco goes well beyond the two Ministers in question. It involves the entire Government and that is frightening. When the Minister of State for Finance was asked whether the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had interfered and caused her and the Minister of Finance to act against their better judgment she replied that it was a collective decision. That is an admission that in dealing with this matter and making a $1 billion blunder the entire Government of Canada revealed its lack of competence and that it does not possess good judgment. That is the issue with respect to Bill C-79. The Canadian people and Parliamentarians are not being fooled at all by hiding the truth behind some far-fetched and phoney reference to the National Energy Program or the lack of concern for regional financial institutions or the lack of caring about western Canada. We can all see through that guise.

This bank failure fiasco is the most distressing and most disturbing public issue perhaps in this century, certainly within the time of my generation. This fiasco is costing Canadian taxpayers $1 billion. It is a $1 billion error at a time when there is little money available for genuine needs in this country. There is no money for expanding regional development programs or for all the direct job creation that we ought to have. There is not enough money to help the farmers. Laid-off workers who have lost their jobs as a result of plant closures have to spend their precious severance pay before they can draw unemployment insurance benefits. There is not enough money for foreign aid. There is no money to help native communities by giving them such basic things as a good supply of drinking water or the means to deal with sewage treatment. There is not enough money for any of those genuine needs, yet Parliament is being asked to provide $1 billion for uninsured depositors. Most of that money will go to foreign banks, Canadian banks, corporations, and other wealthy individuals.

There is one simple principle that I subscribe to which is shared by members of my Party and that is that we should help first those who need it most. Bill C-79 is the reverse of that, it says to help first those who need it least. I know that some of my friends on the Government benches have already asked and would want to ask again what is to become of those charitable organizations, those poor municipalities, those small credit unions, and those pension funds. Let us clear up that issue. First of all, most of the payout will not go to those organizations at all. It will go to the foreign banks, Canadian banks, well-to-do corporations and wealthy depositors.

Second, we know that in cases of genuine need as a result of this or any other bank failure, the Government could be generous with the full support of Parliament and the bill would be much less than a billion dollars. Where hardship can be shown, help can be extend. There would be no problem because Canadians would expect no less of the Government and no less of Parliament.

However, I expect that in this list of depositors there would be very few who would fall into that category. Take, for example, the concern some Members have expressed for pension funds. Let us remember that nothing at all is being done for pension fund shareholders. They are at the end of the line and will, in all likelihood, get nothing.

Bill C-79 cannot be justified or rationalized on the basis of helping the poor, the needy or destitute. Bill C-79 is not a "little guy's" Bill. This bank fiasco issue can be understood in these terms: very big Government, the Government of Canada, new and inexperienced, became mixed up in the complexities of the financial world and got its fingers burned along with some of its well-to-do friends. Bill C-79 is not really a Bill to help anyone, it is a Bill to bail out the Government at taxpayers' expense. It is a Bill to save the Government from acute embarrassment caused by its inexperience and incompetence.

What we have seen in this bank fiasco issue is serious and grave mismanagement on the part of the Government of Canada. My constituents would be outraged with me if I were to vote in favour of Bill C-79.

While talking to my constituents in the last while, I have been saying that we must reduce our demands. We are living in a time of rising Government deficits and we must focus our attention on needs and may have to postpone our wants. Bill C-79 is not a needs Bill. It is a Government face-saving Bill.

Canadians are rapidly beginning to see that what is in charge and control here in Ottawa is incompetence. This bank failure fiasco will continue to haunt the Government until the dying days, just a few years hence. Parliament has been fooled. Its traditions have been trampled. There has been bad judgment and mismanagement. There has been a monumental bungling.

Now, the taxpayers of Canada are asked to dig down and fork out at least a billion dollars and perhaps more. Bill C-79 must be stopped dead in its tracks. That is my position and the position of my Party. When Canadians once again go into the polling booth, most of them will say that that was their position too.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, as a western member of the Finance Committee, I am glad to enter debate on Bill C-79 because I believe it is of particular importance to western Canada.

In March of this year, in good faith and based on available regulatory information, an attempt was made to preserve the viability of the Canadian Commercial Bank. That western regional-based financial institution, like all others in the western region, suffered considerable hardship as a result of global inflation and the disastrous effects of the National Energy Program. That program chased billions of dollars in investment out of Canada. It was a program of confiscation without compensation. It robbed Alberta of its vitality and caused serious ripple effects in the neighbouring provinces of British Columbia and my own Saskatchewan.

It should, therefore, be no great surprise that real estate values collapsed, along with other energy related assets in western Canada. The western based institutions, with a heavy loan concentration in energy and real estate, suffered a considerable erosion of their own security portfolios. In 1980, that security may have been fairly valued at 100 cents but today it is valued at perhaps 30 cents. The fate of those institutions that lent 50 cents or 60 cents on the dollar, on the face of that security, is quite evident.

The prime cause of failure of all of these western regional institutions, be they Canadian Commercial, Northland, Pioneer Trust, Western Capital Trust, Northwest or some of the credit unions, is quite clear. It was the tremendous loss of asset value owing to that infamous National Energy Program.

The Liberal Opposition whose policies caused these difficulties now seek, incredible as it may seem, to castigate the Government for an earnest attempt to preserve the integrity of the financial system and its western Canadian institutions. Had the Government allowed CCB to fail back in March, imagine the fuss, the hue and cry, the weeping and wailing and recrimination from the Opposition. The Government would have been categorized, quite properly, as being insensitive to western Canada. We would have displayed that same uncaring attitude to western Canada that characterized the previous administration.

The Opposition Parties, correctly I believe, agreed to the efforts to save CCB. Admittedly, with 20/20 hindsight, it now appears that attempt was doomed for two reasons about which neither the Government nor the Opposition was aware. The first was the run on deposits and the other was the eroded state of the loan portfolio. The key to this is the loan asset values—a faulty foundation which collapsed the financial house.

Why was more information not readily available? It now appears that the regulatory system was at fault. The rules for reporting, inspection, enforcement and supervision of the financial institutions are grossly deficient for today's marketplace. Some of these rules date back 60 or 70 years. They permit double counting of capital and the reporting of loan interest arrears in a way which make the loans appear current. They permit the taking of income on phoney restructuring deals, self-dealing and the milking of CDIC.

Most financial institutions are well run and well managed by competent and capable people. However, there are exceptions and today's rules require updating to deal with the unscrupulous. The financial community has shifted from the days of the clerk with the quill pen and green visor to the modern age of computers and electronic processing of information. It is an age in which even national boundaries mean little. We are now living in a global economy and the rules pertaining to the changing circumstances must be rewritten and codified.

It may be asked why this was not done earlier. I suggest that such a question be directed to the previous Government whose survivors now pretend to be in some state of anxiety over this Bill, one which enables payment to the depositors of these institutions who listened in good faith and lent their support to the rescue attempt. The Official Opposition, when in power for the previous 20 years, not only laid the seeds for destruction of these western institutions, not only destroyed Canadian unity, but also had the opportunity to write new rules and regulations for the conduct, management and governance of the institution. Did they do so? No. They failed in the area of financial regulation just as they failed in the energy sector and in every other way. They left our Government with a mess of monumental proportions and now stand in the House, apparently without shame, seeking to shift the blame for their mismanagement and inadequacies, their lack of concern and squalid performance.

They seek to load all this baggage on a new Government which noted the need to reform the regulations of the institutions from the day it took office. Our Government announced its intention to do so last November. During the winter, the Government developed a discussion paper—the Green Paper on the Regulation of Institutions which was issued in the spring. This Green Paper has been studied almost daily by the Finance Committee. Extensive hearings have been held and its report is now being formulated. That report will lead to new legislation that will update and modernize regulations and provide means for inspection, supervision and enforcement. It will provide for sanctions and penalties for self-dealing and conflicts. That report will deal with deposit insurance and hopefully signal a new era in federal financial regulations so that all Canadians will know the rules and limits and adhere to them.

Clearly, the Government has paid more attention to the financial institutions in the past 12 months than the previous Government did in 20 years. The Government is committed to national reconciliation and economic renewal. The rescue attempt was part of that process. So too is this Bill which should now be read a second time and sent to committee.

Some of the questions being raised by Members do not appear to be related to the principle of the Bill. I believe that the committee is the appropriate place to deal with some of those questions. We must remember that it is the principle of Bill C-79 that ought to concern us today.

The Bill is intended to do something that is not without precedent in our system. Just last spring we were dealing with another Bill which did very much the same thing for depositors in Pioneer Trust. At that time I do not recall any prolonged call for the names of the individual depositors who were to receive reimbursement for the uninsured portions of their deposits. When we look at the contents of this Bill we must be struck by the element of simple justice that it contains. It offers an unusual but appropriate solution for the problems faced by many people in western Canada.

I know that some members of the Official Opposition may find it difficult to relate to the problems of western Canada but this Government considers it a priority and a duty to respond to legitimate calls made on it from all parts of the country.

What is the solution? Clearly the solution is to move to reimburse the uninsured depositors.

Mr. Deans: No, it is not.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): The Minister of State made the very point on Monday, when she spoke to this Bill, that its provisions were not to be taken as precedents. The provisions are unusual but they are also appropriate to a particular situation, and they meet reasonable expectations of those most intimately involved with the present problem, the depositors.

Although this point of view has been dismissed by the Opposition I think it is important as we look at this matter to remember why many of the individuals and small businesses are involved at all in the affairs of CCB. After the events of last March it would be unreasonable to have expected individual depositors to conclude that the bank was unsound and to have removed their deposits. Indeed, fairly clearly the federal Government, the chartered banks and the two provinces which participated in the rescue package did not want depositors to withdraw.

It may well be that if there were a way to differentiate between depositors as to those who were sophisticated enough to take a chance, knowing their options, that they could be excluded from the Bill. However, there would still remain those who trusted the words and actions of two levels of Government and the chartered banks. Such depositors, by and large, are those who do not have the facilities to make complicated judgments about banks. They are people who have savings, perhaps after a lifetime of hard work, which they left in the CCB on the apparent recommendation of the Government.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, it appears that some Hon. Members are suggesting that there is no urgency about helping these people out of a problem which they did not create themselves.

As for the option of reimbursing some depositors, but not all, I find it hard to believe that this could be seriously entertained by anyone. It could not be done by class of depositor without singling out one or two groups of institutions for discriminatory treatment. Would we send the message that foreign banks could not expect equal treatment? Would we tell labour unions or pension plans that they are not to expect the same treament that we propose for individuals and small businesses?

I see no advantage to anyone in keeping this Bill from committee. There is urgency in the matter, and I ask all Hon. Members to agree to give this Bill second reading, and let the committee start its work. Thank you.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by saying that I am sick up to here listening to the Conservatives try to tell the public that somehow or other the legitimate objections that have been raised to this Bill have something to do with an anti-western feeling.

Mr. Mazankowski: Right on.

Mr. Deans: I am fed up with it. It is wrong, and to continue to say it is an abomination on Parliament.

Mr. Mazankowski: You are certainly not going to get any western sympathy.

Mr. Deans: Let me put it quite bluntly—

Mr. Mazankowski: You do it every day.

Mr. Deans: This attempt by this ragtag group sitting over here to try to convince Canadians that somehow or other because we are concerned about the Government of Canada spending, inappropriately I might say, something in the order of $3 billion is somehow to be considered as anti-western Canada is a shame on the Conservative Party and not on the rest of the Parliament.

Mr. Siddon: What about the depositors?

Mr. Deans: Let me deal with the problem as I see it. This is not an east versus west problem. This is a large bank versus small bank problem. There is not a small bank in this country that is not now suffering because of the economic policies pursued by the right wing Liberal and now Conservative Governments that have ruled this country since its inception.

Mr. Gurbin: You ought to know, you put them in.

Mr. Deans: Let me tell you about this. Do you know why this bank is in trouble? Large banks, the big ones, the Royal, the Bank of Montreal, the Imperial Bank of Commerce and the others can afford to loan money at lower interest rates. Why? They can afford to do it because they are able to cream off the best possible customers. They get the first crack at the best customers. Small banks on the other hand, in order to lure depositors, offer higher interest rates on deposit. Nobody disagrees with that, I hope. However, in giving higher interest rates for deposits they must charge higher rates for loans. The best customers are not prepared to pay the higher interest rate for loans so the small banks therefore have to settle for less than the most affluent, less than the best, risks.

What they end up doing, and these banks are good examples, and there are others, is loaning money to people who are a higher risk. The end result of that is that they have a much higher risk portfolio, and the chance therefore of failure when you carry the highest of the high risk portfolios is clearly more evident. That is the problem in the banking system, that the big banks get the best and the smaller institutions have to take what is inevitably a much higher risk portfolio. It has nothing to do with east and west. It happens all across the country. So for God's sake start dealing with the reality. I am offended when this kind of ridiculous argument is proffered by certain people that somehow or other because you do not happen to live in Calgary that you do not understand the problems of a Calgary businessman, or you do not understand the problems of a Calgary home owner, or you do not know what it is like to be unemployed in Calgary.

Mr. Mazankowski: You don't understand it.

Mr. Deans: Damn it all, it is no different being unemployed in Calgary, my friend—

Mr. Mazankowski: You are full of nonsense.

Mr. Deans: —than it is to be unemployed in St. John's, than it is to be unemployed in Halifax, than it is to be unemployed in Hamilton. If you cannot find a job it makes no difference where you live.

Mr. Mazankowski: You don't know anything about Alberta.

Mr. Deans: And that is the trouble with these people.

Mr. Mazankowski: You know nothing about Alberta and spare us the pomposity.

Mr. Deans: Let me go back a bit to the early part of the 1980s, for the benefit of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) who likes to shout but does not like to listen.

Mr. Mazankowski: I don't have to listen to your nonsense.

Mr. Deans: Back in the 1980s when interest rates were up in the high teens and reaching into the low twenties, back in the 1980s when we were saying to the then Government—

Mr. Mazankowski: Sanctimonious pomposity.

Mr. Deans: —that a serious economic problem was being brought about in a variety of different sectors of the economy and that unless the Government moved in to protect those sectors by bringing interest rates down there were going to be bankruptcies in almost every single area, the Conservatives together with the Liberals said nothing could be done about it.

We argued that there had to be measures taken to bring the interest rates down in order that home owners who were on the verge of losing their homes because they could not afford to pay the 20 per cent and 21 percent being asked by the banks. When we said that the Government should move to protect those individuals from losing everything they had worked for, the Tories joined with the Liberals and said nothing could be done about it.

When we said that small business people in every community, including in western Canada, were facing difficulty as a result of very high interest rates, that they could not afford to carry the merchandise and when they could afford to carry the merchandise they could not find markets because there was unemployment in much larger numbers than they could anticipate, and we said to them that the banks were taking unfair advantage of those people by charging them in the high teens and low twenties for the necessary moneys to carry on their businesses, and forcing them into bankruptcy, we said to the Conservatives, join with us in a battle to bring down interest rates. They said nothing could be done.

When the farmers were outside here complaining about the fact that they could not keep their family farms because the interest rates were so high that they could not meet their commitments, they could not even pay their feed costs; they could not pay their seed costs; could not pay the costs of running the farms, and when we said to the Government of the day back in 1982 and 1983 that we needed to bring down interest rates in order to save those individuals, the Conservatives joined with the Liberals and said nothing could be done about it.

If nothing could be done for the people losing their homes, their businesses and their farms, if nothing could be done for the 1.5 million unemployed people who were losing everything for which they had ever worked, why is it that, because of a few friends who happen to be in the banking industry, the Conservative Party, now that it is the Government of Canada, can find $3 billion to bail them out?

Mr. Siddon: Why is the steam coming out?

Mr. Deans: I will tell the Hon. Minister why the steam is coming out. I am sick and tired of listening to the garbage which is being spewed across the floor of the House by certain Hon. Members who do not know what happened in the period leading up to this Parliament. The problem with which we are now dealing stems from the time when the Conservative Party, in Opposition, refused to join with us in a battle against high interest rates. I remember the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), as the then opposition finance critic, standing at a podium in Montreal when high interest rates were the issue of the day and saying that if they were the Government, they would not do anything much different, that what the Liberals were doing was really all that could be done. After driving people out of their homes, off their farms and out of business, after failing to recognize what it was like when unemployment insurance ran out and there was not a penny available, there is no way to convince me that I should acquiesce and rush this Bill through to committee or that I should hurry it through so that this money can be paid. Small depositors are covered to $60,000 immediately. I say to the Conservatives that those depositors who need it will get their $60,000.

Mr. Siddon: How about the municipalities?

Mr. Deans: The municipalities are well covered by the provinces, at least those in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Siddon: What about British Columbia?

Mr. Deans: I cannot answer for the Social Credit Government of British Columbia. I mean, it is anachronism.

Mr. Siddon: What about Manitoba?

Mr. Deans: Let us deal with reality. The fact of the matter is that we are being asked to say to those people for whom nothing could be done when the banks were ripping them off right, left and centre, that they should dig into their pockets after having lost everything they own and pay higher taxes to give the banks their money. I want to say, with only one minute remaining, no way. Those same banks sat and looked into the eyes of people who were crying because they were losing everything. Those same banks said to them: "We cannot help you because the banking practice demands that we have adequate collateral for a loan. Since you do not have it, you will have to lose your farm; we will sell off everything you own". When those same banks are crying at my doorstep and asking me to help them, I say to hell with them.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I am now being provided with an opportunity to speak on Bill C-79 and the amendment thereto. The Government is asking us to appropriate $875 million, to be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. In more simple terms, it is asking us to pay $875 million out of the pockets of taxpayers. I am speaking in support of the amendment of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), which makes clear that we on this side of the House in the Official Opposition wish to decline to give second reading to a Bill that in effect does not give us any idea as to whom these funds are being given. We have been denied the right to know the identity of the recipients of this money.

Traditionally, at least in the British tradition, in the Mother of Parliaments, for century upon century, the House of Commons has been responsible for the raising and spending of funds. It is our right and our privilege to say that and to do that as the Parliament. In the Parliament of Canada it is the duty of every one of us, whether on the Government benches or on this side of the House, to demand to know where the taxpayers' money is going. Every Member of the House should not allow a Bill to be passed which in effect writes out a blank cheque. This is a general observation but if for no other reason than principle alone, we have reason to say that we will not pass this Bill. We also have further reasons to be doubtful about the wisdom of passing it.

We remember with great anguish and disappointment last March that when the Canadian Commercial Bank was experiencing difficulties, the Government came to Parliament and proposed that Parliament participate in a $255 millon bail-out. We were urged to participate in it. We were assured by the Government that it had to be done quickly, that time was a factor, and that we had to pass it so that others would not suffer. Having listened to the promises made, we were also assured by this Government which claims competence that the $255 million bail-out would in fact set the situation straight or set the bank up in a sound or solid condition, and that from then on we could look to a good future. That was back in March when we were told that all would be well. However, what we did not know and what the Government did not tell us was that many people in the Department of Finance had grave doubts about the package and about whether they had enough information to make an assessment or to recommend to the Parliament of Canada that it should participate in a $255 million bail-out package. The more we read, the more we learn and as more layers of the onion are peeled, we discover that the Government knew very little about the situation at that time. As time went on it began to discover that perhaps 30 cents on the dollar was the worth of the bank and that things were not well. Many of the players involved were wondering about whether they had enough information. The Government of Canada did not tell us the truth. It did not tell us what these other people were saying. It did not breathe a word of doubt, but it assured us that all would be well. It was bad judgment, which means that billions of dollars will be ultimately spent by the Government to buy its way out of its mistakes. Of course it is now saying to us that we should look after the depositors in these banks, that we should put up this $875 million to pay 100 cents on the dollar back to the depositors.

We are not talking in every case about depositors who have their life savings in these banks. Those with their life savings are at least protected up to $60,000. For example, if such a person has $60,000 in some kind of deposit account and another $60,000 in an RRSP, he or she might be protected up to the $120,000. No, it is not the little person who is being hurt. In fact, it is those who gambled their money in order to obtain high interest rates. We are being asked to protect depositors but, interestingly enough, the Government has not asked us to think about the shareholders. Why, I have to ask myself, in the name of morality, common sense and decency, is the Government making two categories of people? One category is the depositors who are protected up to $60,000 and the other is the shareholders who are not protected. It could be that some people became shareholders in these banks and put up their life savings thinking that such banks were good investments. The Government has once again failed to show intelligence and common sense. There is a double standard here. The depositors are treated one way and the sharehoolders another.

We are being asked to put up this money. The Government is not giving any money to the shareholders but it wants to give money to all the depositors. We want to see a list of these depositors. The Government wants us to take the taxpayers' money and pay it out to a list of faceless people and faceless international banks, corporations and speculators. It wants us to pay them with the taxpayers' money and it will not even tell us their names.

Those who simply want to collect their $60,000 need not tell us their names. However, why should we be paying in some cases over $1 million to an individual without knowing who that individual is? Why should we be paying millions of dollars to faceless organizations about which we know nothing? Members of Parliament are to write out a blank cheque made out to "To Whom It May Concern". I suggest that we have a bigger responsibility than that and we have a right, as the Leader of the Opposition has said, to demand of the Government a list of the names of these depositors.

Indeed, after looking back over what has happened and seeing the circumstances under which we were initially sucked into this bail-out scheme, I have to say that once bitten, twice shy. The Government assured us that everything was all right but we saw that things did not go as well as it promised. We saw that the Government did not take the time to allow bank executives, experts and auditors to look over the situation facing the Canadian Commercial Bank but told us that everything was fine. We certainly do not believe any longer that the Government has the trust and confidence that is required in order for us to vote for an $885 million blank cheque payable to unknown depositors.

When asking why the Government did this, I am afraid that we would have to come to some negative conclusions. We would have to come to the conclusion that the Government asked us to become involved in this scheme for political reasons or perhaps to help out its friends but not because it knew the facts.

There has been much said about the deficit. Through the last Budget, we were told that the Government had to make certain cuts including billions of dollars worth of cuts in the education of young people. In fact, cuts to the old age pensions were proposed as were cuts to the family allowances, yet the Government can apparently afford to spend billions of dollars to bail out faceless depositors in a bank. The rich get richer. Their money is protected. The poor get poorer. They can lose their money and they can be reduced to further poverty. That is acceptable to the Government.

I do not see the deficit being refuced. I see the deficit rising because of the incompetence of the Government and its inability to deal properly with the problem of the Canadian Commercial Bank. I appeal to members of the Conservative Party to give to every Member of the House a list of the depositors so that we will not be asked to write out a blank cheque, something which is contrary to all traditions.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it is for a tragic instance of the irresponsibility of this Government that we have to debate this Bill today. When I was elected, I little thought that we would see so quickly and completely a retreat from Tory principles as enunciated during the election campaign, but this is exemplified by the Bill before us today.

It does not surprise me that there are few members of the Government present in the House. Who would want to hear of the terrible record of the Government? It does not surprise me that they are sitting far apart and not speaking to one another. If they were speaking to one another, it could only be in terms of the abnegation of everything for which they campaigned as represented by this Bill.

I believe that the $875 million for which we are being asked to bail out the two failed banks is simply a down payment. We have it on the Minister's authority that this does not represent the final bill. Not only that but we have heard one of the most incredible statements I have ever heard a Minister make in this or any other democratically elected assembly. The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) has said:

—I want to make it perfectly clear that it is not the Government's intention to set a precedent in compensating uninsured depositors in our financial institutions.

With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, that is horse feathers and absolute nonsense. Every bankruptcy is a tragedy for the people involved. Every bankruptcy involves unique circumstances and unique situations. For the Minister to suggest that she is not setting a precedent is, with all due respect, unbelievable and I cannot believe that she does not recognize that that statement cannot be true.

The fact is that through this bail-out we are being called upon to authorize today, the Government is setting a precedent and avery dangerous one. Forgotten is the election rhetoric about freeing the free enterprise system and about opening Canada up for job creation. We are now looking at a bail-out of such gigantic proportions and such cataclysmic effects on the budgetary accounts of the country that it is almost worthy of a Liberal Government rather than a Progressive Conservative Government.

The sort of bail-out at which we are looking is unprecedented both in its amount and in its purpose. As well, it is unpredecented in the circumstances that led to the Government considering its necessity. It would appear from the legislation that has been tabled in the House that the Government has been hijacked. It would appear that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his ever-diminishing ruling circle are merely Liberals who got into the Conservative Party just like the worm got into the apple and ate it out from the inside. They are saying to themselves, "Look what the other guys did for their corporate cronies. We had better show them that we can do just as well by our friends as the previous Government did by its friends". That would appear to me to be the entire motivation behind this Bill.

Much has been said from the Government benches. I am glad to see that Government members have enough self-respect to have now fallen silent. Much has been said about this Bill being for the protection of ordinary Canadians. I have not heard one argument that could sustain such an impertinent, nonsensical statement as that. Let us face the facts. We are not looking at mass unemployment as we might be if we were dealing with a manufacturing concern going bankrupt. We are looking at losses distributed right through the economy affecting people who ought to have known enough to verify the integrity, stability and strength of a financial institution before they put a penny into it, let alone the sort of sums that have been mentioned.

We are indeed being asked to sign a blank cheque because we are being asked to bail out a whole range of depositors who should have known better. These depositors include sophisticated investors, foreign banks, municipalities, provincial Governments, credit unions and smaller investors, the largest number of which should have and I believe did have access to the sort of information that would have warned them. For example, the City of Hull, whose manager spoke on the radio yesterday, sounded the warning which should have gone off in a lot of brains in Canada's financial community.

Notwithstanding the fact that the $60,000 will be paid to all depositors, with respect to insured portions, we are prepared to look at funding for those depositors who will undergo real hardship if this bail-out does not take place. However, a blank cheque in addition to the deficit of Canada or an increase in taxes for the people of Canada to pay for this bail-out—no, never, that is something that the Progressive Conservative Government should blush at introducing in the House, given the election rhetoric with which we were inundated during the last election campaign. I think it is worth repeating that the $60,000 sum is the statutory limit. If the Government goes ahead with its plan to pay depositors for investments above the $60,000-limit, where will the insurance industry in Canada be? What is the point in insuring against any form of risk?

Where is the morality in doing so? If one is big enough, powerful enough and well connected through the executive dating service which has flourished in Ottawa under this Government, then one can go and cry on one's big brother's shoulder and receive the sort of bail-out which Hon. Members know is frankly not to be available.

I recall having listened to Conservative candidates, those who are now Ministers and he who is now Prime Minister over television during the last campaign. They said in all tones of voice, but always with an evident facade of sincerity, that this type of action, this bail-out, was not to be contemplated by the Government of Canada if they were ever to form it. I for one very much regret the day they did form it. This country will, in time, almost unanimously regret the day when they did form it. Let us face facts. We are not talking about widows' savings in this instance, nor are we talking about persons being reduced to ruin. We are not talking about the type of misery which a great financial loss can impose upon a single individual because, with good sense, we have the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation insuring deposits of individuals up to $60,000. Frankly, if it were not for the obvious lack of attention which the Government paid to this dossier over the summer, we would not now be facing the consequences of the improperly structured bail-out package which was put together last March.

Much has been made by the Government of the fact that these are both western financial institutions which were, indeed, adversely affected by the collapse of the western economy brought on by certain aspects of the National Energy Program introduced by the previous administration. I think that is something which is worthy of consideration and examination. We should say that apart from the unfortunates who are employees of the said banks, the losses, will be spread across Canada—rather, not the losses but the costs the Government will impose upon the country by this breath-takingly irresponsible piece of legislation. We have not heard one single spokesperson from the Government side speak about whether the $1 billion, or whatever it adds up to, is to be raised by taxation or whether it is to be raised by further borrowing. That is a clear dereliction of the Government's duty, along with its concealing of the list of depositors. They are also concealing from the people on which side of the ledger the bill will come down. Is it to be by a further augmentation of the deficit? One of the main planks in the Conservative campaign platform was that it would not raise the deficit. Will the Government increases taxes on the people of Canada when every inclination it has shown thus far is that it will try to hold the line with respect to taxation by cutting benefits to the elderly and the poor while paying off some of its supporters through numerous and sundry tax breaks and incentives such as the $500,000 capital gains exemption?

Mr. Speaker, my time is up, which is just as well because my breath is almost exhausted from the indignation and outrage which I feel at this most irresponsible action by the Government.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I was going to say that I am pleased to rise in my place today. However, if I said that I would be misleading the House right off the bat. I am not pleased. I am irate. I am upset. I am disappointed. I wish to get a few things off my chest.

I wish to remind the House that we speak today on the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) to Bill C-79 which the Government has put forward to bail out its corporate buddies. The amendment indicates that the House declines to give second reading to a Bill, the principle of which is to permit payments of large, but unspecified amounts of public moneys—not the Government's money, not my money, not the money of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) or the money of the Cabinet but the taxpayers' money. We decline to pay out in a blind, deaf and dumb fashion without any knowledge of where the dollars are going and to whom they are going. The process of doing that in a blind, deaf and dumb manner reduces not only the right of Parliament—I don't give a damn about Parliament's right—but the responsibility of Parliament to be accountable for taxpayers' dollars. That is the first responsibility of any Opposition in a parliamentary system. It is an adversary system. They separate us by two sword lengths to keep us apart because it gets heated at times. However, we are not here because we want to spend our days nit-picking over departmental expenditures. It is our responsibility to be the public watchdog of the taxpayers' purse. We are being asked to spend handsome sums from that purse with no accountability whatsoever as to where and how that money is to be spent.

I have been in my riding in recent days. I have had an opportunity during those days to spend some time talking to people who understand the notion of taking a risk. These people understand the concept of having the right to succeed. They also understand the concept of having the right to fail and expecting no one to pick them up. I met a small contractor in the Bay of Islands in the great riding of Humber-Port-au-Port-St. Barbe who spent 15 years putting together a family business. He performed various work around the west coast of Newfoundland. In the middle of a contract he had a bank step in and call a demand loan. When the bank called the loan he saw 15 years of sweat, hard work, hope and aspiration crumble before his very eyes.

I had a chance to talk to a fisherman on the great northern peninsula. This man has been fishing for 30 years. This year the fish just did not come to the great northern peninsula. We do not know why but it was a miserable season. That fisherman got four or five weeks of fishing in this year. He knows that in two weeks he will have to make his annual boat payment. He cannot make it because he has had a miserable year. They are going to call his loan, grab his boat, and he will not be a fisherman anymore. He is sad and disappointed and his aspirations have been crushed.

I talked to a small businessman in the town of Deer Lake who, together with his wife, mortgaged his house and went into the furniture business. They did a subcontract job for a large contractor. They spent several hundreds of thousands of dollars installing kitchen cabinets in an apartment building. But they did not get paid for the subcontract because the major contractor, who had the job, was in financial trouble. It ends up that the fellow who made no mistakes, who had done nothing wrong, is going to go under because the bank is calling his loan. And he is sad, disappointed and his dreams have been crushed.

Not one of these people, be it the fisherman, the small contractor or the furniture maker, who have had their lifesavings taken away from them have asked the Government of Canada to bail them out; nor has the Government of Canada offered to bail out these three people. We live in a system where we all have the right to take risks. We all have the right, or at least the opportunity, to succeed beyond our wildest dreams, but if we fall on our face and go broke, if we make a mistake, we must face the consequences.

It is more than I can swallow to know that honest, hard-working Canadians who have invested their time and capital and a good part of their lives in ventures and who, for whatever reason, have failed, have failed in silence, and no one has offered to bail them out, yet when a bank which is involved in bad lending practices, which is riddled with poor management, fails, we find that deposits of over $60,000 are going to be bailed out by the Government of Canada. The Government is going to step in and give them all this money, 60 per cent of which will not even stay in western Canada. I am tired of hearing this line that the bail-out is an attempt to help western Canada. Sixty per cent of the funds will not even stay in western Canada. It is a bail-out of large corporations. These people want the right to make $1 million but do not want the right to fail. They want the Governement to provide a cushion for them.

Every Prime Minister has to wear two hats. The first hat is a political hat. He puts that hat on when he is involved in an election campaign and goes out to stir up the troops, to inspire the team, to address the people, to sell his message, to garner support. That is his political hat. The other hat the Prime Minister must wear is that of chief executive officer. He is the man who is in charge, who is minding the store and looking after the taxpayers' purse. He is the man who makes the intelligent, rational, responsible and defensible decisions. This Government has a Prime Minister who has only one hat. It is his political hat. He has lost the hat of chief executive officer. He does not know where it is and neither do his Ministers.

A political decision was made by the Prime Minister last spring in the middle of an economic summit. He would not allow a bank to fail and ruin his television image. We could not have the veneer which was being developed scratched. We could not have a blip on an otherwise well managed media campaign. As a result, the people of Canada are being asked to pay nearly $1 billion blindly to people whom the Government refuses to identify to Hon. Members of this House.

I serve notice on the Government that this Bill will not be supported by the Liberal Party. We will have no part of bailing out incompetence in the bail-out of the banks. We will stand as often as we can to make the case and drive home the point, to convince the people of Canada to rise up and be heard. The people of Canada must speak their minds and tell the Government that they do not accept this kind of irresponsible action.

We do not seem to have a quorum in this House, Mr. Speaker. Would you call a quorum?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We do not have a quorum. Ring the bells—

[English]

Mr. Gauthier: Ring the bells.

Mr. Tobin: Ring the bells.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I find there is now a quorum. We will continue with debate.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, may I humbly suggest to the Chair that if the Government can afford $875 million to bail out unknown people, it ought to be able to find a couple of dollars to give a key to the gentleman down at the end of the room so he can ring the bell when the Speaker directs him to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in this debate which deals with fairness, with how we treat banking institutions in this country and how clearly under this Government there are two classes; there are those which Government will help and there are those which it will not.

Ever since this Government was elected, Mr. Speaker, we have heard that we do not have the money to do the kinds of things we should be doing as a society. We are told that we do not have the money to continue to ensure that family allowances are fully indexed to the cost of inflation. We do not, it seems, have the money to ensure that, for example—while the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is here—the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority can retain its assets and make improvements in order to keep tolls and fees down. As a result, we are now seeing the development of some difficulties. However, we do have enough money to bail out two banks. Whether it is $1 billion, $2 billion or $3 billion, only time will tell. But the reality is that it will cost the taxpayers of this country a large amount of their hard-earned dollars—their tax dollars—to pay for this decision of the Government of Canada.

Ironically, Mr. Speaker, I would suspect that those individuals who are being bailed out—and I suppose there are some 96 individual depositors between the two banks—are those who have the ability to hire accountants and lawyers so that they can get out of paying income taxes. Those 96 individuals will receive somewhere in the neighbourhood of $13 million. That is a small amount when compared to the over-all amount of money. But these are individuals, some of whom, on their own, have over $1 million on deposit. I question whether we, as a society, should be bailing out people with that kind of money at a time when we are desperately in need of housing facilities and we have soup kitchens in various communities. I think very clearly our priorities are all wrong, Mr. Speaker. They are wrong when we send in excess of $112 million across our borders to bail out foreign banks.

I really do not understand why the Government has taken this approach when other financial institutions have gone under and their depositors were not protected over and above the amount of $60,000. I have had some of those depositors call my office and question the fairness of this Government.

One individual, who had spent years putting money aside for retirement, had a deposit of $66,000 in one of those institutions which went under. He got the $60,000 but not the extra $6,000. For him it is a matter of principle as well as the money, and he is frustrated and angry that the Government is bailing out these two financial institutions but not the one he was involved in. He does not believe it is fair, and neither do I.

As I looked at this situation I asked myself what else this money could be used for. My riding and that of the adjoining riding, Thunder Bay-Nipigon, comprise about 113,000 people. If we spread that $1 billion among those people it would be a very nice little Christmas present, $9,000 per individual. We could say the same for any community in Canada. They would have more money to spend on consumer goods and they would pay more taxes. There are many innovative ways we could use that money. The way this Government has established its priorities in the bailing out of these two banks is inappropriate, and that is why I would be more than happy to join my colleagues in voting against this Bill, and to continue speaking against it through all stages.

The question has been raised concerning municipalities and the provinces and the money they had on deposit in these banks. While I appreciate the situation they may be in, I think it is a warning to municipalities and provinces to be careful about what they do with their taxpayers' money. They should not put it into risky situations. Rather, they should ensure that the money is in an institution which will not only continue to pay interest but continue to be viable. Therefore, I suggest to the Government that it would be wise to reconsider this attempt regardless of whether or not we get the names of the people involved. I do not believe in principle that we should be supporting this bail-out.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, since the end of the summer recess, all we have heard about in the House is scandals and the integrity of the Prime Minister's word.

Mr. Speaker, today again, Bill C-79 refers to one of the biggest scandals we have had since the Progressive Conservative Government came to power. Mr. Speaker, I have before me two Bills, C-79 and C-70. I think it would be useful to explain to each Member of this House what these two Bills entail. First, Bill C-70, whose purpose is to de-index family allowances and which affects 3 million families in Canada, and then Bill—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I realize the Hon. Member probably wants to draw a parallel between the two Bills, but I may remind him that he is to speak mainly to Bill C-79.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, on the amendment now before the House and Bill C-79—I am getting there—Bills C-70 and C-79 are related to financial questions and in fact, concern sums of money that the Government wants to take from the Canadian taxpayer.

Referring back to my bill on de-indexing family allowances, the Government is taking away $55 million from 3 million families. In Bill C-79, the Government is taking one billion dollars in taxpayers's money and giving it to a hundred friends of the Progressive Conservative Party. Mr. Speaker, just think, one billion dollars in taxpayers' money to compensate people who had $60,000 and more in a bank account. I do not think there is a single constituent in Montreal-Sainte-Marie who will get compensation. I do not think there is a single constituent from Montreal East, for that matter.

Mr. Gauthier: And not from Ottawa-Vanier either!

Mr. Malépart: And not from Ottawa-Vanier either. And I am convinced . . . Even the Hon. Member for Laval says: There is nobody from Laval, and I am convinced that these people with deposits of $60,000 or more are people who know the banking system very well. They are not just someone who hit the jackpot in a lottery. These are people who are supposed to be economic experts, people who advise this brilliant Conservative Government, and they played a risky game. Even administrators of pension funds and people administering municipal funds took a risk to get more money. And just because they lost, the Progressive Conservative Government wants us to compensate the incompetent.

The authorities of the City of Montreal had money in one of those two banks, but as soon as they saw there were problems, as serious administrators they withdrew their money. These people behaved responsibly to their municipality and to the taxpayer.

Ever since this Conservative Government came into office, Mr. Speaker, it has led the attack against senior citizens, sick people and families with children. Now, all of a sudden, we are expected to feel sorry for people who had $60,000 or more in their bank accounts. Looking over the figures, can you imagine, two individuals each had $1 million! A $1 million bank account, how hard pressed can one be! It is really pitiful to see the 211 Conservative Members rush to the rescue of millionnaires. Worse still, they want a blank cheque but the people involved will remain anonymous. It is unacceptable, and the population will not stand still and watch a Government, regardless of its political persuasion, mismanage so ineptly the money of Canadian taxpayers.

Eastern Montreal residents have to cope with major problems, but the Conservative Government does not even lift a finger. A $100 million loan guarantee would be needed to save jobs in eastern Montreal, at Gulf among others. The Conservative Government says no because of the deficit. But some of its pals are caught. The Government does not want to reveal the names of people who had $1 million or $500,000, there are two; people who had $400,000, one of them, and 1,100 with $99,000. If we had the names and compared them with the list of those who contributed to the election fund, we might have surprises! If the Progressive Conservative Party does not have anything to hide, then it should open its books. Why hide the names? The bank presidents said to the Conservative Government: If anyone is to be repaid with taxpayers' money, he should be honest enough to put his name on the application. Anybody who does not want his name to be made public should simply refuse any financial assistance from the Government, Mr. Speaker.

But no; suddenly, all those Conservative Members must save their friends who have millions of dollars. At the same time they are introducing a motion for closure to prevent Members from expressing the views of mothers raising children. They tell those mothers: "Well, you will lose $22, but that is only $22". They cannot make both ends meet. But the poor fellow who had a million, do not expect me to believe this is all he had. And if he was stupid enough to put all his money in one banking institution, well, he deserved what he got, because he knew very well he was not insured above $60,000. They would like us to believe that there were small pension funds there. But when it comes to shareholders, are they not looking after them?

Mr. Speaker, there is something fishy about this Bill. It is this Conservative Government's irresponsibility and incompetence. I can understand why the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is not in his place here and prefers to sit in a stadium watching the Blue Jays. He is more than fed up with his Ministers' incompetence and his own, Mr. Speaker.

Never, no never will the Liberal Party, let alone the people of Quebec, accept that the Quebec taxpayers' money be used to save Government friends in a western province. When we in Quebec had problems with the Quebec banking system, not one single Tory Member then in Opposition rose to help Quebec. Not a single one! Not one Tory Member ever thought of it. No, Mr. Speaker.

In open-line programs in the Eastern Townships, in the Sherbrooke area, people are saying: "When we had problems, we accepted our responsibilities". If banking institutions have trouble in another province, let the people there accept their responsibilities! If unwise municipal managers risked their taxpayers' money, Mr. Speaker, they should be fired because of their incompetence. Unfortunately, it cannot be done immediately with this Conservative Government. But the time will come, yes, in 1988.

Mr. Speaker, there is another point I would like to make, the impact of this Conservative Government's positions. In connection with the Child Tax Credit, what would be the difference if some 15 people had $60,000 or $70,000 in a bank, the Government will ask all Canadian taxpayers to bail these poor pitiful people out. At the same time, it will introduce a bill to the effect that a family with a $26,330 income is considered a rich family, according to Tory standards. Then, it turns around and says that a family with 3 children where both the father and mother work, the income ceiling will be reduced from $26,000 to $23,000, so that these families, come next year, will loose $400. A family with one child earning $25,000 will loose $125.

Tory members, including the Boy from Baie Comeau, would like us to adopt this bill to compensate two guys with a million dollars in a bank account on the backs of Canadian mothers.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I am going to vote against this Bill, no matter whether or not the Government provides us with the names of the depositors.

I should like to remind you—and I will end on this—that when the Government first introduced a legislation to bail out or try to bail out the two banks, I abstained from voting, because I knew the Government was misleading us. Now I know for sure, Mr. Speaker, and you can bet your last dollar that I am going to vote against Bill C-79. If Tory members, including the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) who is here and considered competent, had the guts, the convictions and the honesty, they would call on the Government to tear up Bill C-79 to protect the $55 million belonging to our Canadian mothers with dependent children.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-79 is the Government Bill to allow reimbursement of the uninsured deposits at the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank.

However, the Leader of the Opposition moved the following amendment:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "that" and by substituting the following:
> This House declines to give second reading to a Bill, the principle of which is to permit payments of large, but unspecified amounts of public monies to unspecified persons or corporations, thereby sustantially denigrating parliamentary accountability for expenditure of public funds.

Mr. Speaker, the Government states that its decision was based on the best information available at the time. Why did the Government reject the offer made by the banks to have a complete audit of the Canadian Commercial Bank? Why did the support group rely on the information which the Canadian Commercial Bank alone agreed to make available?

Mr. Speaker, the decision to bail out the bank was based on political factors. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is personally responsible for this decision. The crisis of the Canadian Commercial Bank occurred at the time of the National Economic Summit, and therefore at a time when the bankruptcy of a bank would have had serious consequences.

Mr. Speaker, when my Hon. colleague for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) responded to the statement made by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) announcing the bankruptcy of the Northland Bank last week, he asked for the resignation of both the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State for Finance.

Mr. Speaker, for my part, I shall go even further. I am also asking for the resignation of the Prime Minister because he is the major culprit. He is the one who, to be able to watch himself on TV, urged everyone to make a settlement with a bank which was forced to go bankrupt six months later.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill aims at allowing the reimbursement of ininsured deposits, or in other words, deposits—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but he may continue his speech the next time this Bill is debated in the House of Commons.

It being 6.27 p.m., the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.27 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Dick) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among all Parties and there is agreement to move to tabling of documents as the first item today, by unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) indicating his agreement?

Mr. Deans: Yes, Mr. Speaker. There have been discussions along that line and it is agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I also understand there have been some negotiations and there is consent to do that right now.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, by unanimous consent, the House will proceed to tabling of documents.

COMMUNICATIONS AND CULTURE

PRESENTATION OF SECOND REPORT OF SUB-COMMITTEE OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON COMMUNICATIONS AND CULTURE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the second report of the Sub-committee of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture relating to the Revision of Copyright, in both official languages. Your Sub-Committee has adopted this report, including 137 recommendations, and, in accordance with Standing Order 70(16), requests that the Government make a comprehensive response to this report.

[Editor's Note: For above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I take it that what in fact was sought was unanimous consent to go to the presentation of reports.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 7379).

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Just before the adjournment of the House yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I was saying that the purpose of this Bill is to refund uninsured deposits, meaning those exceeding the $60,000 insurable limit. According to the Government, people who in good faith deposited their money with the Canadian Commercial Bank because they relied on Government guarantees should not be penalized.

Mr. Speaker, did the Government give guarantees? If so, why does it not tell the House about them? Since Canadian taxpayers will have to repay the depositors, our responsibility towards those taxpayers is to find out who will get the money. The Bill provides that depositors must file an application to get their money back, so we can expect to know who they are, sooner or later. Therefore, since we are being asked to adopt the Bill now, it is quite reasonable that we should be given that information right away.

Passage of this Bill will cost the Canadian taxpayers nearly $1 billion. This is a very large amount especially for a Government which pretends to be money concious and which says that it cannot afford to pay family allowances or to maintain social housing, energy, investment of environmental programs, and the list goes on.

Mr. Speaker, last spring, while we were discussing the bail out of this bank, we also amended the Small Businesses Loans Act. In that case also, changes were made because the Government could not afford certain loans. Now, the small businessman must pay 1 per cent on his small business loan and provide an 85 per cent guarantee while the Government used to provide a 100 per cent guarantee.

Now, the Government is asking us to provide full reimbursement, or a 100 per cent guarantee, to these depositors whose names we do not even know.

[English]

The fact is that we have seen the failutre of two western banks which were accredited to the international sphere as being sound and viable institutions in the financial forum. To see their lose credibility face is rather upsetting for everyone involved, especially the depositors who are questioning the return of their deposits. Today, we are being asked by the governing Party to agree to a Bill without having all the information before us. I must say that we will not fall into a blind-eye policy. It is evident that the unsecured depositors must apply in order to receive reimbursement; so why tell us who they are? Is the Government trying to hide something? Is there some type of cover-up?

On March 25, 1985, the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) said in the House, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the House that an agreement was reached this morning to provide the Canadian Commercial Bank with an infusion of capital which will ensure the long-term viability of this Edmonton-based bank. The agreement is a co-operative effort which brings together three Governments, six banks, and the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to provide a support package which will enable this bank to remain viable, thereby protecting the interests of small and medium-sized business in western Canada.

What happened six months later? This bank was supposed to be viable after the pouring into it of $250 million.

On March 28, 1985, the same Minister stated in this House:

> Our concern as the federal Government must also extend beyond western Canada. We want to make sure that a ripple in the financial system does not spread from coast to coast and beyond, to overseas markets. The Government must also be concerned with the effect a failure might have on the stability, security and confidence of the entire financial system.

Mr. Speaker, since the summer of 1984, the Progressive Conservative Party has been repeating that we need confidence! Yet, one year later, what kind of confidence is there? Two banks have gone bankrupt.

Once more, I quote the Minister, who said:

> By addressing the present matter quickly, we are guarding against a potential erosion of confidence in our financial system both at home and abroad. This decisive action is evidence that our financial institutions are safe for depositors.

Now, six months later, it is no longer safe for depositors, and to save face the Government is asking us to reimburse the depositors without giving us the names of those who are owed all this money.

The question all Canadians are asking today is this: Why does the Government not want to provide names? I would like to conclude my comments by saying that the Government might say that it is to protect banking confidentiality, but this matter is no longer confidential as the bank has gone bankrupt. When you go bankrupt, you have to give all the names. I shall therefore vote against this Bill because the Government does not want to provide us with names.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Beaches.

Mr. Keeper: It is Winnipeg North Centre, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Excuse me, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would be a bit disturbed with respect to being transferred to a riding in Toronto. At any rate, it is a pleasure to be able to enter into this debate under whatever designation. We only have a short time to contribute to this debate, Mr. Speaker, but there are significant points which need to be made. First, I think the public's attention with regard to this legislation to bail out these banks must be focused on the hearings which are going on right now and the press reports which are beginning to emerge.

For example, there was an analysis in The Globe and Mail today with regard to the Hitchman Report. The facts are coming out now with regard to the condition of the bank when the Government moved in to bail it out. The reports are pretty damning. While I cannot go into all the details, I believe we should take note of a couple of points. First, the Hitchman Report found that the files in these banks were in a mess, so even in terms of the basic keeping of information, they were in trouble. Second, senior officiers and directors endorsed questionable loans and the executives really did not understand the seriousness of the difficulty they were in as a financial institution. So the facts are beginning to come out and the picture is pretty dismal and disastrous.

These facts are crucially important right now because when the Government originally moved to try to prop up these banks, it did not have the facts. That is a tragedy. The Government espouses a commitment to the market-place. It claims to be a good economic manager, to know something about the economy and to be rescuing the Canadian economy from its present troubles and bringing about prosperity. But when it comes to dealing with two relatively small institutions in that sector of the economy, it has demonstrated complete and utter incompetence. The Canadian people are becoming aware that the Government is economically incompetent.

The Government rushed in to prop up these banks without having full understanding of their financial situation. That is why several months later it had to pull the plug. When the Government first stepped in, it was as if it stepped into a dark room without turning on the lights. It walked in where wiser men feared to tread. It rushed ahead without knowing what it was doing and it did this in order to try to preserve its public image of good economic managers. It tried to preserve the picture of a Government which was taking this country into prosperity. In fact, the Government shot itself in the foot.

The facts are coming out now about just what a terrible mess these banks were in, which shows that the Government acted in a situation without knowing what it was doing.

There are a few key points I want to make, Mr. Speaker. We are talking here about $875 million of the public's money to bail out uninsured depositors in these two banks. Everyone here could think of many useful ways of using $875 million other than as a worthless gesture in trying to rescue a couple of banks which were bankrupt in the first place. Let us contrast the way this Government is treating banks and the way it treats ordinary workers. When the banks came knocking on the door saying they were in trouble and wanted access to the public Treasury, the doors were thrown wide open. The Government, without adequate information, acted in support of the banks. Contrast that with the lack of concern shown by the Government for the people who work in the banks. I am thinking specifically right now of the workers who have organized a union in the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce and who are struggling desperately to get a first and fair contract. Do we see any action by this Government to help that union? Not at all. All we get is utter silence. However, when the executives of these banks ask for assistance, the treasure house is opened and the money is just shovelled out.

The people who work in the CIBC Visa Centre have organized a union and are seeking a fair contract. They would like to have the support of the Government in that endeavour. We pride ourselves in this country on fairness, justice and freedom of association, all of which underpin collective bargaining in this country. Yet these workers are faced with a management which is offering a contract with no wage increases to employees who earn on the average $12 an hour. The bank has put forward the proposition that it should be able to reduce hours of work whenever it suits the bank and at the same time insist that part-time workers receive no overtime or shift premium, partial benefits or pension. Do we hear anything from the Government about that? Does the Government say to the banks that if it is going to support them financially they should treat their workers fairly? No, all we get from the Government side is utter silence.

The bank, in its offer to these workers, wants compulsory overtime and the right to fire an employee who has taken a part-time job elsewhere. The bank wants a contract under which employees would not take cases involving discrimination to the Human Rights Commission. Do we hear any outrage from the Government over the fact that the bank dares to offer that kind of contract to ordinary Canadians? The bank wants contract language which would exempt it from the provisions of the Canada Labour Code governing technological change. It also wants to be exempt from just cause provisions of a collective agreement.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I want to make the point that when the bank executives came to the Government, it reacted very quickly and gave its full support to the banks. However, when workers are struggling for a fair and just contract, the Government is silent. It is important for the Government to realize that it is demonstrating not only the unfairness of the way in which it treats the elite of this country relative to ordinary Canadians, but it has also demonstrated to ordinary Canadians its incompetence in economic affairs. If it had simply done a little homework it would have known what a terrible financial mess this bank was in. The facts of the bankruptcies of the Canadian Commercial Bank are coming to light now and Canadians can now judge the Government and the folly of its actions.

It is time for the Government to wake up, to withdraw this legislation, and to make good use of the $875 million of public money that it is throwing away in a useless gesture to bail out uninsured depositors. The Government should have been prudent in the first place and acted on the full facts. If it had done so it would not now find itself in the situation of having to pour taxpayers' dollars down the drain at a time when there is great need for public money to be spent on daycare and employment programs.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak in the debate on Bill C-79. Unfortunately, the ten minutes I have this morning are less than adequate to describe to the House the incompetence shown by the Conservative Government in this matter. I would like to recall the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) in an attempt to inject some common sense in a debate into which we have been drawn by the Conservatives. My leader proposed that the House decline to give second reading to this Bill because its principle is to permit payments of large but unspecified amounts of public monies to unspecified persons or corporations. I think it must be the first time in the history of the Parliament of Canada that a Government is asking parliamentarians to vote on a blank cheque of this size. We are talking about $875 million, to be taken from public funds provided by all Canadian taxpayers to compensate a few wealthy corporations and individuals in our society that normally would not be entitled to compensation.

The Liberal Party is opposed to this Bill, and that is why we presented this amendment. The Bill should not be passed by this House because it substantially denigrates parliamentary accountability for expenditure of public funds. The previous speaker clearly indicated how these $875 million could better spent. However, I will not dwell on this aspect, except to add that this morning, after reading the papers and the testimony of that experienced banker, Mr. George Hitchman, we realized how seriously the Government had misled the Members of this House and the people of Canada throughout this debate.

The initial explanations that were given—

• (1125)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I would like to draw the attention of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and the House to the fact that there is at this moment a commission of inquiry that is supposed to determine certain questions and that has received a rather broad mandate. I realize this is a difficult matter to rule on for the Chair, and I would ask you to be patient, but there are a certain number of issues which cannot be appropriately raised or dealt with in this debate. I am therefore asking all the Members of this House to be careful or to choose their words wisely in the course of this debate.

Mr. Ouellet: I can understand the Chair's and the Government's unwillingness to deal with the Government's incompetence, which was clearly demonstrated in this morning's newspapers which reported Mr. George Hitchman's testimony. I should like to quote from a newspaper clipping which clearly states that the Government in this matter could have acted quite differently. What we know is that a scheme to save the Commercial Bank of Canada was proposed to the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) and was turned down by the Government. So we are far from the truth when we are told that the failure of this bank in Western Canada has been caused by the energy crisis. As you certainly remember, Mr. Speaker, that is the excuse the Tory Government used at the beginning of this mess. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) have told us. If the Commercial Bank of Canada has failed, it is because of the energy policy of the previous Liberal administration.

But we know now that if that bank has failed, it was only because it was badly administered, because its directors authorized bad loans and because of utter mismanagement. When a scheme was proposed to bail out this bank, this Tory Government chose to turn it down. If the Commercial Bank of Canada failed, therefore, we can reasonably say that it was partly because this Government turned down at the time a scheme to bail it out.

The Northland Bank is a second bank which is also in trouble. During this debate, my colleague the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has put forward a plan to save this bank. I hope all Members on the Government side will consider this proposal, because this second bank in Western Canada could be saved if the bail-out plan put forward by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides were to be accepted. When we are told that banks are now going bankrupt, Mr. Speaker, my response is this: if those banks go bankrupt it is because this Conservative Government has been intent on applying a political solution rather than an economic solution to that financial crisis which we are now going through. This is perfectly plain.

I will quote from an editorial written by Mr. Frédéric Wagnière and published in La Presse on September 11, 1985. This is what he wrote:

> By arranging the bail-out of the Commercial Bank in March, the Government did wrong, it made a disastrous goof.
> Ottawa misjudged the situation: the Government underestimated the amount of capital needed to save the Commercial Bank, and it overestimated the banks' willingness to save a competitor. That error in judgment is serious, and it is important that in the future, the Government, the Bank of Canada and the Inspector General of Banks should show a better understanding of our banking system.

And he concludes with the following remarks:

> The Mulroney Government wanted to save a fledgling financial institution in a part of the country which finds it very hard to get over the impact of the depression.

So he said.

> They overreacted by referring to a crisis of confidence in the banking system that only existed in their own imagination.
> They will now have to live with the uncertainty which they themselves created.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the situation. It is clear. That journalist described it in a few words. We could have saved those banks had the Government acted more sensibly and more efficiently.

The Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) who introduced the Bill is not even here now, so I will refrain from making the charge I intended against her. I simply submit I have found her incompetent, irresponsible, and throughout the days that followed that bank fiasco, she has shown indescribable arrogance and self-complacency.

Today as we are told that a third bank is having problems, I think it is essential that the Government should assume its responsibilities and tell all Canadians that our banking system is strong, that it can overcome trials, that in spite of a few mistakes, the Government will learn from the painful lesson it was taught this summer, and will see that the situation is corrected to prevent any other bankruptcy in our banking system.

What I find totally incredible is that the Government is asking us to reimburse $875 million or so to persons unknown, to unidentified individuals and corporations. You know, Mr. Speaker, that under the current legislation, a small depositor who invests in a bank can be protected up to $60,000. Before concluding my comments, I would like to say this. The small depositors do not need the Bill now being considered. But who needs it then? The people who invested a few million dollars in that bank venture and are now sheltered under the cloak of anonymity by the Progressive Conservative Government. In my opinion, this is unacceptable, unfair, unspeakable and I shall vote against the Bill.

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to participate in the debate on this amendment to the bank bail-out Bill of Barbara's. The amendment proposed is correct, just, and fair. It says we ought not to proceed with second reading of this Bill, and I agree with that. Can we not have faith anymore in Conservatives being truly Conservative? Have they distroyed the confidence of the Canadian electorate that Conservatives would really act like Conservatives? Why can't Conservatives be true to their ideology? I know that Members over there have said they are red Tories and blue Tories, and some have even said they are "suppositories". But can they not maintain a basic Conservative principle, a principle which I heard all about during the last election and over the eight years I was here? They criticized the Liberals for it. They said the Government should stay out of business; it is free enterprise which is going to build Canada and we have to get the Government off the backs of business. The Government should not be involved in business. The business of business is business. So what do we have in Bill C-79? What are they proposing? What they are proposing is to insert themselves into the bankruptcy process.

We have a process whereby there is deposit insurance and depositors are insured up to $60,000. The Conservatives are proposing to go beyond that. They are saying to the business people, the large corporations of this country, you took a risk when you went after the high interest rates that the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank offered, but it does not matter. We will insure that risk as well. It is all right to chase after the higher return. We will take the risk out of business.

In my riding two years ago when the major employer closed down for nine months, workers lost their homes. They lost their homes because they could not make the mortgage payments and no bank and no Government came to bail them out. Not one.

In this particular instance we have the spectacle of a Conservative Government wedded to the free market free enterprise concept and then running in to bail out its buddies from Bay Street and Wall Street.

An Hon. Member: And maybe Saint-Jacques.

Mr. Rodriguez: And maybe Saint-Jacques, the Hon. Member says. I accept the argument that some Conservative Members over there use that some of these depositors are municipalities like Kanata, some are hospitals and some are western credit unions. But why don't we apply the old Conservative truism that we pay on the basis of need? Why don't we apply a bail-out on a means test basis? Let the Citibank, the Chase Manhattan, Barclay's Bank, The Bank of Tokyo or The Bank of Singapore demonstrate a need. If they can prove that they need the 121 odd million dollars which have now been guaranteed by the Government, we would consider paying them. Why not apply the same principle which they were advocating for old age pensioners and for family allowances? Why not apply that to the Government's corporate friends? I suggest that Members opposite do that and not come in here and ask holus-bolus for a bail-out.

As well, this Bill is premature, because we now have a judicial inquiry into the whole collapse and bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. Mr. Justice Estey is now conducting a judicial inquiry, and there are some very serious questions which need to be cleared up. One is the role of the Inspector General of Banks. What is his role, what is his function? What regulatory powers does he have and how does he use them? What is the role of the Bank of Canada in this mess? After all, it was the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Bouey the fourteenth, who was phoning The Globe and Mail at the time of the original bail-out last March and saying, oh, well, the CCB is a viable bank. What is his role in all this? What is the role of the Government in this whole mess? After all, it is the same Government which has put forward a Green Paper to deregulate the banking industry and allow the creation of all sorts of Schedule C banks. She wants to open it up now, to deregulate it, as if we did not have enough problems. Back in May, I believe it was, the Minister who approached Mr. Hitchman and asked him to go on the Board of directors of the Canadian Commercial Bank. He said: "No, I do not know enough about this bank and its loan practices; I would not think of doing that". In fact, that should have been a signal for the Government to take a good, hard look at the operations of that particular bank.

As we go through this judicial inquiry, all sorts of very serious questions are being raised. We require answers to those questions. What was the role of the Inspector General of Banks? What was the role of the Governor of the Bank of Canada? What was the role of the Government? What was the role of the auditors who were supposed to audit the banks? As a matter of fact, the auditors are quoted in Mr. Hitchman's Report as saying that the Canadian Commercial Bank was not as conservative in its loan practices as they would have liked. What was the role of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)? What was the role of the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall)? These questions must be answered before Parliament can open up the Treasury doors and shovel out some 800-odd million dollars. That is just a down payment; the prospect is that this amount could run to $2 billion before it is all over. Parliament has a responsibility. When it spends taxpayers' money, it has to account for it. We, as Members of Parliament, are no wiser today about the smelly business in the Canadian Commercial Bank fiasco than we were about the tuna affair. The Government should not proceed with the Bill at this particular point. As I said, we need the answers to those questions. It would be wise to hoist the Bill until we have received the report of the judicial inquiry.

The matter becomes more curious as we go. For example, in this morning's edition of The Globe and Mail, we see the Minister of State for Finance or the Government running off to persuade banks to support the Mercantile Bank. It is like a house of cards. We now have the Government doing exactly what it did last spring. It is encouraging the banks and provincial Governments to support a shaky situation. The same situation is developing with the Mercantile Bank. According to The Globe and Mail this morning, "Ottawa persuaded banks to support Mercantile". Taxpayers need some answers. Parliament needs some answers. This Bill should not be proceeded with until we have received answers to the questions which we have raised in the House.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I am rising in opposition to Bill C-79 which, as Hon. Members know, is a Bill to reimburse depositors with over $60,000 in the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. I am doing so because, as other Hon. Members have said, we are being asked to reimburse people who have not been identified. We do not know who they are.

It is very strange. We are being asked to vote for a Bill which is requesting between $800 million and $1 billion. On the one hand, the Government says that it believes in parliamentary reform, that Members of Parliament should be more involved in the process, that there should be a stronger committee system and so on. On the other hand, it asks us, as representatives of the Canadian people, to vote on this large sum of money without telling us who will receive it. We do not know whether they are foreign entrepreneurs, American, European or Japanese. We do not know even if they are large Canadian entrepreneurs. Entrepreneurs enter the market-place knowing that they have to take risks and knowing that the CDIC only insures deposits up to $60,000. These people put their money in the Canadian Commercial Bank because they would receive a benefit; a higher rate of interest, in certain cases. They took those risks as entrepreneurs. They knew about the CDIC limit of $60,000. We presume that there are large corporations involved, but we do not really know for sure. We are being asked to bail out these people by a Government which says that we must rely more and more upon the free market system.

As my hon. colleague who spoke earlier said, there is a certain ambivalence in the Conservative Party. That Party came to power and said that we must return to the free market system, that we should let the free market system be the ruling principle in business and economic matters. However, when we are faced with the bankruptcy of the Canadian Commercial Bank—and very likely, although it is not clear, a large number of corporate entrepreneurs are involved—the rules of the game change and we are asked to bail it out. This sets a very serious precedent for other situations of a similar nature which might arise.

Perhaps there would be some justification for helping small credit unions that are depositors, small municipalities or small pension funds, but we do not know how many credit unions or small municipalities are involved. In fact, we do not know how many large corporations are involved. We are being asked to sign a blank cheque of nearly $1 billion without the necessary information being given to us. We are supposed to represent Canadians in the spending of taxpayers' money, and we are being asked to write a blank cheque for the Government.

Last March, when the Government came to us and asked us to vote for a Bill, it was a crisis situation. I was led to believe that it was putting before us something which had been solidly researched, that the Government had done its homework, and that its proposals in March to bail out the Canadian Commercial Bank would put that bank back on its feet and make it profitable for shareholders and depositors. We took the word of the Ministers involved and of the Government that they had done their homework and that we had to vote quickly in order to put that bank back on its feet. We voted for it, but we were misled by the Ministers involved. They did not do the audit which was necessary. They did not accept the advice of people who knew quite a bit about the situation. The Ministers did not participate in many of the negotiations which led to the bail-out package. We have the impression that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and certain Members of the Government and of the Cabinet were willing to put forward the bail-out proposal at any cost, just to save face, in the hope—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am very sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), who is a well experienced Member of the House. I remind the Hon. Member, as I did the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), that the Chair is in a very difficult position today in this debate. A royal commission of inquiry is proceeding on this very issue. The general principle remains the same, that there is liberty of debate in the House, but in this specific case there is also a royal commission which has as its mandate to investigate the whole matter. We are in a difficult position today. I remind all Hon. Members of the House not to refer to what the commission has, as its mandate, to investigate and not to prejudice the ultimate decision of this royal commission of inquiry.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I can only respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that your limiting debate in this way means that what the Government is doing is a farce and the freedom of speech of the House of Commons is being impaired.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): To make it clear, there are precedents on this very issue. To simplify what I am trying to say today, there is a royal commission of inquiry that has the mandate to look into this matter, to hear evidence and to submit a report. In view of this, it would not be appropriate for Members of the House, in the context of this mandate, to prejudge or, if I could use the expression, to jump the gun on the conclusions of the report. Since the commission has received this mandate, let us let it go on with its work. Therefore, I am asking Hon. Members to be careful. I do take into account the fact that in general it is a principle of this House that we do have liberty of speech.

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis, on the same point of order, I presume?

Mr. Prud'homme: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to submit, with respect, before the Chair draws any conclusions, that if this Bill is adopted, and it will be, despite the speeches of the Opposition and no matter how my Opposition colleagues vote, it will eventually have to be referred to a parliamentary committee. Does the Chair mean that a parliamentary committee responsible for considering a Bill referred to it by Parliament for consideration after second reading and that will have to go to work right away, would have to be limited in scope because there is a royal commission of inquiry as well? I find that absolutely incredible . . . and you are getting close to a sub judice, since you called my colleague to order twice. Therefore, with all due respect, I find it rather hard to believe that just because there is a royal commission of inquiry, practically everything becomes sub judice, and that while in Quorum, which we get daily, the first page tells us exactly what happened yesterday, Parliament should be deprived of its duty to consider a Bill that is before the House. The Government introduced the Bill, not the Opposition. The Government asked for a commission of inquiry, not a royal commission of inquiry, but it was the Government that asked for and set up this commission. So I submit, with respect, since I know you have a legal mind and I think we should discuss this, that it was the Government's decision to introduce a Bill. It also decided to submit the entire matter to a Justice of the Supreme Court, and now we are being told here in the House, although it was in all the papers this morning, that the Members of the House of Commons, who have a mandate to consider a Bill introduced by the Government, may not allude to what is happening somewhere else—

I do not know how the Chair intends to decide or rule on this matter, but with respect, Mr. Speaker, I think that my colleagues should be allowed to continue their present approach to this debate, without considering what is happening elsewhere.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I shall, if I may, attempt a reply after listening with great interest to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), who, as usual, has submitted arguments that reflect his experience in this House. Perhaps I may remind the House that I am somewhat reluctant to rise today and call Members to order on this question. I repeat that this is a very difficult situation for the Chair.

You are asking me a question indirectly, and since you mentioned my legal mind, I would like to inform the House that the Chair is not in the habit of making obiter dicta on questions that arise in the House, not on this matter or any other matter. Furthermore, we have the following situation: a commission of inquiry is considering a matter and will eventually have to submit recommendations. What we are asking the Members of this House today, and I suppose we cannot impose the same conditions on the media to which you referred, is that Hon. Members who have certain responsibilities and must observe certain traditions and rules refrain from prejudging the conclusions or recommendations yet to be made by the commission of inquiry, in other words, refrain from conducting a parallel inquiry. That is the main thing, and that is why I intervened in the debate. The general principle remains the same: you have the right to discuss the matter.

Certainly, there is a Bill before the House. That is clear. You have the right to discuss the matter, but you are being asked to be careful in your references to the commission of inquiry which has started its proceedings. I hope this has clarified the matter once and for all.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier), to be fair, also on a point of order.

Mr. Lanthier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I did not object until now, for the debate was proceeding normally. However, in addition to your remarks which we fully endorse, perhaps the Hon. Member ought to be reminded that we are now on the amendment. I do not think he has been speaking directly to the amendment, he appears to be more interested in the main motion. I was called to order the day before yesterday, supposedly because the debate was on the amendment, nothing else. Perhaps he too should be called to order.

[English]

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. First, I think it should be clarified that the Estey Commission is a judicial inquiry and not a royal commission. Second, there has been a tradition in the House that despite the fact that the Government may wish to refer a very controversial item to a committee, the Opposition is still allowed during Question Period to put questions on the same matter.

Furthermore, and I do not say this with any malice, I think it is very important that those who are in the chair have some discussion prior to the beginning of the debate so that they have a common point of view. I would refer you to Hansard of the previous two days, Mr. Speaker. Believe me, Hon. Members of the House on both sides have not been inhibited from discussing the matter in the way that you are suggesting this Hon. Member must be inhibited at this time. I think it is very important that those who are going to be sitting in the chair understand exactly what the terms of reference will be and how we in opposition will be allowed to debate the matter. This is very confusing to all of us.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I rise because I was once counsel to a royal commission which was looking into a controversial point and of course there were questions put in the House at the same time. I am personally very symptathetic to the Chair. I think in principle the Chair is right. However, the Chair is in an almost impossible position because this is a controversial matter on which a commission, judicial or royal, is sitting. We are debating the same matter. Of course, we have to approve the expenses regarding the matter. I think we all appreciate that.

I think that the Chair is going in the right direction in terms of setting out the parameters of the debate. With respect, Mr. Speaker, the debate is fairly wide open, but as you pointed out, references to the Estey Commission which would lead to the possibility of prejudicing its conclusions would be out of order. I think Members have to take a broad approach regarding the general issue but restrict themselves from actually referring to the Estey Commission and making specific recommendations to it. If they want to do that, they should appear before the Estey Commission. I believe that those broad parameters are acceptable to the House.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I am resuming the debate that was interrupted by the points of order and your own attempt to call me to order. I might say that I appreciate the fact that there is a judicial commission looking into this matter. However, this Bill is also before the House and we have to vote on it. There is a certain overlap in the subject matter covered by the Bill and the subject matter of the judicial inquiry. The points I am trying to make are important for the debate because the Government is asking us to support a Bill which is a second attempt to deal with the Canadian Commercial Bank situation. I have to put on the record the fact that I am opposing this Bill at this time because we were misled the last time. I do not intend to be taken in twice. I have to put the facts on the record with respect to that point.

Finally, I would like to make it clear that under our constitutional system the Parliament of Canada is the supreme court of this land. There is nothing else which is more sovereign or more supreme under our Constitution than Parliament. We are not subject or limited in any way to any judicial inquiry or any royal commission. I do not want to suggest in any way that the commission be pre-empted from doing any work that it should do. However, I intend to put on the record as fully as possible in the short time that I have all arguments which relate to this Bill.

I have said that I felt we were misled the last time and I gave some examples with respect to that point. I also wish to say that the reason we were willing to believe the Government the last time was that we were told it supports regional banks. It was under Liberal Governments that several of these regional banks were set up. We think all the arguments for regional banks are good ones. It is not right to have westerners running to Toronto and Montreal for approval of loans and so on. I think that is wrong. In this country there is certainly a place for regional banks and we are in support of that. We went for the first bail-out on the information given to us, but we found out it was wrong. Again, I ask: Why did the bail-out group not consult the Canadian Commercial Bank's external auditors? Why did the bail-out group not look at the minutes of the Canadian Commercial Bank audit committee? Why did the Government and the Minister turn down the banks' offer of a full audit of the bank's books? I could go on asking questions.

What is interesting about this whole question is that if there was one thing that the Canadian people expected from a Conservative Government it was good economic management. We did not expect this Government to be strong on social policy. We did not expect it to be strong on foreign affairs or other matters; but we thought it would be a good economic manager. However, before us we have a situation in which the Government was sloppy. The Ministers were sloppy. They were negligent. They did not perform the audits required, nor did they do their homework. They were cynical and smug about the whole issue. They did everything quickly and they asked us to vote for something. They asked the Canadian people to support something without doing the work which is required of responsible Ministers when a great deal of taxpayers' money is involved. What is damning about this whole issue is that the Ministers did it quickly without the work that should have been done in the first place. They did it sloppily, negligently and carelessly and now they are being asked to bail them out again.

The other question to consider is: Where will all this end? We are talking about between $800 million and $1 billion. If we accept the precedent that we must bail out depositors who are depositing over $60,000, where will it end? Is this just more ad hockery? Is this another situation in which there is no consistent policy on the part of the Government?

I do not intend to give a blank cheque to the Government. I will not ask the Canadian people to support any Bill which would give a blank cheque to the Government. I want to reach outside Parliament because it seems that with the large majority which this Government has, and with only 70 Members in opposition, the only way we can change the Government's mind is to appeal over its head to the people of Canada as we did with respect to the Bill to deindex old age pensions. I beg Canadians to look closely at this matter. I ask: What does this do to our priorities? The Government is asking us to spend $800 million on this matter. How does that line up with other matters such as family benefits, certain environmental questions, assistance to our native people and a great many other important matters which have to be undertaken in the country? Is this really where we should put $800 million or $1 billion? I say no; but I ask Canadians and our journalists to focus attention on these issues so that we can bring pressure to bear on the large group of Government Members who seem not to be saying very much in opposition to this very important question, even in contradiction to their own principles of free enterprise and the free market system. They are willing to violate that principle in this case because it is politically expedient to do so.

We will vote in favour of the amendment put forward by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). We will not vote in favour of the Bill because we are not receiving the information we want. We do not know who will be the beneficiaries of this Bill. We feel it is contrary to all the principles of parliamentary responsibility to support a Bill such as the one before us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me as the next Member to speak in this debate. The amendment presented states that this House declines to give second reading, that is, approval in principle, to a Bill, the principle of which is to permit payments of large, but unspecified amounts of public moneys to unspecified persons or corporations, thereby substantially denigrating parliamentary accountability for expenditure of public funds. I think it is a good amendment. I will vote in favour of it and I wish to tell Hon. Members why.

Before I do that, I would like to address some remarks covered by the press this week. I am referring to remarks made in Vancouver by Mr. Edward Kaiser who is the Chairman of the Bank of British Columbia. Mr. Kaiser registered his concern with respect to the whole issue before us, he being the chairman of a small western Canadian bank. He criticized parliamentarians for attacking the Government on this issue. As a Member of Parliament from Vancouver where that bank is based, I would like to spend a few moments addressing Mr. Kaiser's remarks. I wish to say to him and to the House through you, Mr. Speaker, that I agree with him and I disagree with him. I wish to tell the House why.

I agree with him in the sense that it is pretty clear that we need to have some stability and confidence re-established in the Canadian banking system, especially the regional banking system which, as the previous participant in the debate expressed in his speech, is very important for the economic viability of the country, especially for the western Canadian region. Like Mr. Kaiser I, too, am unhappy with the rumours about the liquidity of the Bank of British Columbia, the Mercantile Bank of Canada and the Continental Bank. I wish to say to Mr. Kaiser that we have not been saying that there are problems with those banks. As far as I know there are no problems being experienced by those banks, especially the Bank of British Columbia which, I understand, is in an excellent position. I used to have an account in Mr. Kaiser's bank. When I return next week to Vancouver I tell Mr. Kaiser that I will place a little bit of the little money I have—being a Scotsman I don't have that much and I am careful with where I put it—in his bank to show my good faith in the Bank of British Columbia. I think it is a strong and important bank. I want Mr. Kaiser to understand that we are saying that.

I also want Mr. Kaiser to understand that our job here in the House is to ensure that the Canadian banking system is working. When one looks at the fact that we are being asked to spend $1 billion to bail out another bank—and we bailed one out a few months ago—and when we look at some of the evidence upon which I will comment later, about the banking system and banking practices in Canada, then it seems to me it is worth doing this job. It is a job which the Opposition is undertaking, not with relish. We do not want people removing money from their bank accounts. We want a strong Canadian banking system. We want a strong economy in western Canada.

I wish to buttress what I have been saying with an article from The Globe and Mail. I will just read the first paragraph. It says:

> The long-awaited Hitchman report on the Canadian Commercial Bank paints a damning portrait of a financial organization in which the files were a mess, senior officers and directors alike endorsed questionable loans and executives did not know how serious their problems were.

I will not go into the details of that. I only raise it to show that it is our job in the Opposition to ensure that these inadequacies with respect to the banking system will not happen again. It is our job to put the Government on the hot seat in order that it will respond. The Government has a problem in a general way. It was giving very soothing assurances through Government regulators that these two western banks were in good shape. Contrast that, Mr. Speaker, with what is coming out in the Hitchman Report. The Government gave the word of the Governor of the Bank of Canada earlier on this year when it first bailed out the Canadian Commercial Bank. The argument the Government makes, I suppose, is that it agreed that these banks would be okay and, therefore, when the banks finally collapsed, it should morally and ethically bail out the depositors, not just for the $60,000 for which they were insured, but for the full amount of their deposits. That, of course, is unusual in the free market system where when people invest they take risks and if they lose, they lose, and if they gain, they gain. But the Government feels morally and ethically bound to bail out these banks, and that is one of the central parts of this debate today.

The second argument the Government would make, I suppose, is that it has to bail out these banks to the full extent of the deposits in order to ensure the stability of the banking system, which is the greater goal. I would think that these are the two main arguments of the Government and I would say they are false and dangerous arguments.

What do the people say in my riding? A 58 year old labourer who is unemployed asks, "Are you going to bail me out of my mortgage situation?" Someone else who is unemployed asks, "Are you going to bail me out? I don't have any money and I can't get another job". I know of a bank employee who was fired after 30 years of working for the bank because she had a nervous breakdown. Did the bank bail her out? Did it provide an early retirement and look after her? No, it just got rid of her. Ordinary Canadians look at these situations and ask, "Who is getting bailed out?" By and large, as far as we can figure out, after a lot of effort on the part of the Opposition and stonewalling on the part of the Government, we are bailing out foreign banks. We are giving a lot of money to foreign banks and to rich people. There may be a few poor people who could use their life savings and so on and perhaps we should establish a hardship fund for those people. But by and large these foreign banks do not need a hardship fund. The large Canadian banks are making lots of money presently and have in the last decade. We do not have to bail them out in this situation.

There is a feeling amongst the ordinary Canadians in my riding that there is a tremendous inequality here. Why should we bail out these people when we do not even know who they are? And we have evidence that we are basically bailing out foreign banks. The ordinary Canadians say that that is not fair. So I say to the Government, with respect to its argument, that it has to do this to keep the stability of the banking system that we must reform the banking system. We have to create a better regulated banking system. Some of the practices which were revealed by the Hitchman Report will be reported on in greater detail, such as speculative real estate loans, loans to companies in California and loans which were bad in the beginning and so on. We have to change the system which allows those things to happen.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) said in the House that she inherited this terrible system. I am distressed when the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Andre) stands up and blames it all on the National Energy Program and on us for supporting that program. We in the New Democratic Party did not support the National Energy Program. I have the votes here to prove it. That is a myth. I ask Hon. Members to take a look at the record and the votes. The National Energy Program hurt western Canada, that is true, but at the same time Alberta's problem is that it had a boom and bust situation. There was a boom and bust situation going on in the American oil industry at the same time. These banks were investing in real estate. They were going down to California to invest, and that did not have anything to do with the National Energy Program. It is simple to blame the National Energy Program and to say that we are somehow anti-West because we feel we must look into the bail-out of these banks, but that is a red herring.

I would like to say in summation, Mr. Speaker, that we in the Opposition will not be fooled a second time. We are not going to agree to this bail-out. We were fooled with the first bail-out but we will not be fooled with this bail-out. If the Government asks the ordinary Canadians it will find out that they do not like bailing out foreign banks and real estate speculators. We are prepared to keep this debate going and to resist this legislation as much as we can. I tell Mr. Kaiser in summation that he should look at the Opposition's role in that respect. I will send him a copy of my speech and if I get a chance to speak again in this debate, I will read his reply into the record.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) presented a motion which I will read slowly so that we can all understand exactly what it states, and I quote:

This House declines to give second reading to a Bill, the principle of which is to permit payments of large, but unspecified amounts of public moneys to unspecified persons or corporations, thereby substantially denigrating parliamentary accountability for expenditure of public funds.

I have not heard any Hon. Member speaking about what unites all of us here in this Chamber, and that is, the great tradition of the British parliamentary system. What we see at this time is a slow erosion of one of the best political systems, the Canadian parliamentary system which is based upon the British parliamentary system. The basic principle of the British parliamentary system is accountability. But the Government is asking us to vote blindly certain sums of money to unspecified persons or corporations. That is totally against the principles of this parliamentary system.

It is the duty of the Canadian Government to justify every expenditure of money. It is the duty of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and the other Opposition Party to oppose this Bill if we do not know what the money will be used for or who will receive it.

I will not, Mr. Speaker, talk about the event which took place yesterday in court. Mr. Hitchman was the first witness and others will come along and say something else so I do not want to prejudge anything, but he clearly said yesterday that the real subject matter was not what we were told in recent weeks. My colleague and friend—the name of his riding is so long I would rather say the Hon. Warren Allmand, but the rules say that I must say my colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East—said many of the things I wanted to say so I will not repeat them except to say that we were, in our evaluation, fooled once. There is a proverb, and my colleague from the NDP just said it, that we will not be fooled again. We all know the proverb that says, you can fool me once and shame on you, but if you fool me twice, shame on me. I can tell you that the Opposition will not, without fighting to the very last minute, be fooled twice.

You have heard recently, and my very good friend the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself said, that the Opposition is against the interest of the West. I think my friend from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East very clearly said that we created these western banks and we were very pleased and proud, and no one is going to say that we are happy to see them in difficulty. We created them because we believe that everyone should have an equal share, not in the wealth of this country but in the decision-making power centre, and that is why it was so important to have these two banks and other financial institutions created in the West. It was in the interests, first, of the West, but of course also in those of the majority of Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we do not think we should vote blindly, and for the benefit of my French-speaking colleagues and our viewers I want to repeat the motion of the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), the Leader of the Liberal Party, the Leader of the Official Opposition. As he said to the House, we maintain that:

—this House declines to give second reading to a Bill, the principle of which is to permit payments of large, but unspecified amounts of public monies—

—and I emphasize this—

—to unspecified persons or corporations, thereby substantially denigrating Parliamentary accountability—

Mr. Speaker, how can I explain, how can the Ministers and Government Members, how can we Members of the Official Opposition and of the New Democratic Party explain to our constituents that we are about to vote blindly on a piece of legislation whose economic impact will be far-reaching? We are talking about at least $875 million to be paid to people whom we do not even know, foreign banks, American banks which are not even prepared to cooperate with Canada and tell us how such deposits could have been made with those branches and those banks. They want to keep us in the dark, but the Government is getting ready to pay them huge amounts of money.

Have we thought for a moment what we could do with that money? What can we tell other Canadians who call us to ask: Listen, I made a bad investment recently, the deal went sour. Now that precedents are about to be created, will the Government come to my rescue? How do we answer those people?

What can we tell them? I might say that the present legislation is sound, it was introduced by the previous Government. All those who have savings of less than $60,000 can sleep tight, they are fully insured. But the others who were prepared to take a chance and invest millions of dollars because the yield was better are having second thoughts now that things are going badly. They expect the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) and the Prime Minister to come to their rescue, because everything goes these days, a real free for all. I see my colleague is smiling, but the fact is that we do not know what to expect next, anything can happen when the truth is hidden. Who are those people who pleaded with the Minister of Finance to have this Bill adopted? Who are those big wheels, those rich people? We can believe anything. Who pleaded with the Prime Minister who said to him: "Save us, we wanted to run a risk but things turned out badly, now please save us!" I remember that when the Opposition parties requested an emergency debate on the disasters befalling both those banks, the Government flatly refused. More than five Members opposite having risen and asked for a vote, the bells rang for a few moments and suddenly the Government changed its mind and asked us not to proceed with a vote because they would allow that emergency debate. We refused, we asked for a vote and the Minister of Finance as well as the Minister of State (Finance) after having said there was no emergency that afternoon, cringed and voted with the Opposition saying that there was cause indeed for an emergency debate.

We then saw the Minister of Finance leaving this House not to return; we saw the Minister of State (Finance) engaging in debate while she should have quieted the fears, because a Minister of Finance in Canada should not be as partisan as some of us may sometimes be. She was there to comfort us but that evening she delivered one of the worst partisan speeches that I have ever heard from a Minister of Finance during my 22 years as a member of Parliament.

I would then say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Opposition is not in the mood to vote blindly for that Bill. We will continue to demand, Mr. Speaker, by all possible means at our disposal under our Standing Orders, we will continue to demand——demand, not request, but demand from this Government that we want to know to whom we are giving this money. People wish to know. The electors, the Canadian voters, are requesting us to fight in this House and not blindly vote sums of money to unknown people, unspecified corporations or persons. You can be assured, Mr. Speaker, that we are not going to rest and let this Bill go without fighting with every means at our disposal.

[English]

Depositors Compensation

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few comments on Bill C-79 which provides for a bail-out of incompetence in these banks and in the Conservative Government. To be specific, we are dealing right now with an amendment which says that we do not give consent to second reading of this Bill. However, it is important to remember just what we are discussing here. We are discussing a bail-out which will cost some $875 million of taxpayers' money to pay depositors who had more than $60,000 on deposit at either the Canadian Commercial Bank or the Northland Bank. We must remember that depositors of up to $60,000 are fully covered by the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation and those who have more on deposit are covered for the first $60,000. Very few of the people in my riding will ever have more than $60,000 on deposit in any bank.

• (1230)

Upon looking at the very incomplete figures that have been provided through the profile of depositors in these two banks, we find that this Bill is far from helping the little people of Canada. Seventy per cent of the funds will go to Canadian banks, foreign banks, investment dealers, large corporations, and provincial Governments. We must remember that this Bill does not deal with the needs of ordinary Canadians who, if they are lucky enough to have any money in the bank at all, very seldom have more than $60,000 on deposit. The $875 million which is called for in Bill C-79 amounts to asking every man, woman, and child in Canada to pay over $30. I apply that figure to my riding and ask what could be done with an additional $3 million in that area in terms of job creation and economic stimulus and in terms of helping community groups which are trying to develop alternate economic strategies in the face of the massive collapse of the economy which took place in British Columbia over the last two or three years.

Thirty dollars for every person on Vancouver Island would amount to $15 million. For the last year we have been thinking of the proposal of the Vancouver Island mayors that the federal Government should contribute to the $22.5 million forestry program that they have suggested. They feel that that program would provide jobs today and tomorrow, would ensure our forestry resource base, and would work toward a solid economy for that region. That program has been endorsed by the provincial Government, although that Government has not contributed any money to it. The Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) in the Conservative Government says that it is a good program, although he has only given the magnificent sum of $1 toward it. This money would really help the economy but, instead, the people of Vancouver Island are being asked to pay their share of this national bill for two incompetent banks. Instead of money coming on to Vancouver Island to help revive the economy, an extra $15 million is going off the island to bail out the incompetence of the banks and of the Government.

I respect your request, Mr. Speaker, that we be cautious and prudent in reference to the Estey Commission which is dealing with this subject. However, I want to emphasize that the Government has put both yourself as Speaker, and us, as Members of Parliament, in a very difficult position by proceeding with a Bill with which we so strongly disagree at the same time as the subject matter is referred to the Estey Commission. Your request, Mr. Speaker, that we be very cautious and prudent in referring to some of these matters gives a point to the amendment that we are discussing, namely, that we not give agreement to second reading at the present time.

I have no desire to prejudice the results of the Estey commission, but I think that some of the initial evidence that has been heard by that commission is most relevant to our debate on Bill C-79. We on this side would be most remiss if we did not bring that to the attention of the Canadian public. Hon. Members opposite should pay particular attention to some of that evidence, and I would like to see some of them on their feet, either defending it or asking questions of the Government. I am sure that in the ridings of all Hon. Members opposite the preponderance of people are facing very difficult times. How do they square their consciences with going into their ridings and saying that they will be taking $30 from every man, woman, and child to bail out a couple of incompetent banks because the Government made a mistake last month? I would like to hear some Conservatives saying what they think about this Bill.

Yesterday there was evidence presented to the Estey inquiry by Mr. Hitchman, whose report was made available to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) on August 12. That report gave a very clear picture of a bank that did not know what it was doing, and when it did know what it was doing it was doing things wrongly. I would like to read very briefly from a summary of things contained in this report on the bank. It says that:

—almost half of the Edmonton-based CCB's loans may have been worthless at the end of May, even after a March rescue organized by the federal Government had taken $255 million of bad loans off the CCB's books.

Of the $2.4 billion in loans on the CCB's books, the retired bankers said, either $910 million or $1.06 billion—depending on which calculation is used—should be written off.

But they quoted CCB President Gerald McLaughlan as telling them in July that the bank was planning to make provisions for loan losses of only $45 million this year. In its last annual report, a year ago, the CCB allowed for only $14.8 million in loan losses.

The Hitchman Report says that these problems did not arise in the last little while but, rather, some of these loans were problem loans the day they were made. The summary continues:

During the same seven-month period from October to May, non-earning loans—those on which the CCB was not collecting interest—rose from $147.8 million, 6.26 per cent of its loans outstanding, to a staggering $458.2 million, 19.31 per cent of the total. Of the 84 loan accounts reviewed by Mr. Hitchman and his colleagues, 28 had no financial statements attached, 11 had financial statements more than a year old and the other 45 included financial statements, but lacked enough detail to make a proper assessment of the loans. Only Canadian loans were studied, since there were no files in Canada for any of the CCB's loans in the United States.

The report pointed to some of the unacceptable practices. It said:

It was also unacceptable to collect past due interest and provide for future interest payments simply by increasing the amount of the loan and to collect a fee on such loans, subsequently including such fees in the bank's profits and raising the amount of the loan.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, this is a picture of both incompetence and some rather cute practices on the part of the bank. This report was in the hands of the Minister in August, but she took no action until the Labour Day weekend. Now we are being asked to approve this Bill, which will require $30 from every man, woman, and child in Canada. An $875 million bail-out for that kind of incompetence is not something that we can agree to.

I have received letters referring to this kind of bail-out as a betrayal of Conservative principles. It certainly is that. I contrast that with the treatment of people on Vancouver Island who invested in Victoria Mortgage Corporation which was incorporated under British Columbia law. When that failed, they had no deposit insurance because it was not registered with the Deposit Insurance Corporation. Yet, because the people who invested in Victoria Mortgage are relatively unsophisticated investors, they lose everything. The people we are talking about, who invested in CCB, had over $60,000 invested. They should have known better. However, we are rushing to provide a bail-out of $875 million for them. Nothing is being done for other people, like those with the Victoria Mortgage Corporation. The contrast is unacceptable. We find the Bill unacceptable.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I also want to speak for a few minutes on Bill C-79. First, I wish to say that ten-minutes speeches on such an important subject seem too short in my view.

My leader, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), has moved the following amendment in the House:

This House declines to give second reading to a Bill, the principle of which is to permit payments of large, but unspecified amounts of public monies to unspecified persons or corporations, thereby substantially denigrating parliamentary accountability for expenditure of public funds.

First, Mr. Speaker, this amendment describes very clearly the position of the Liberal Party of Canada, which is to oppose this legislation, since a reasoned amendment such as this one objects to the very principle of a bill. We oppose this bill because what the Government is essentially asking us to do is to agree to a blank cheque of $875 million which would then be shared among a large number of depositors, even though we do not know their names or the amounts each one would receive.

Government Members are still hiding behind the confidentiality provisions of the Bank Act.

I must point out, Mr. Speaker, that the Official Opposition has at no time before, neither in the House of Commons nor elsewhere asked for publication of the names of the depositors or the amounts of the deposits in any bank in Canada. We are making this request now because this is a quite abnormal situation. As the representatives of the people, we simply want to do our duty which is to know where this money is going, how it will be sent and why.

Mr. Speaker, we are faced with a liquidation situation. The Government has therefore decided to do with a bank what creditors do with a business which is having problems and can no longer repay its debts. A bank in liquidation is like a business which is going bankrupt, and in such a case, the creditor who wishes to recover part of the money he is owed must make an application and expect this name to be published. This is always the case. We therefore suggest that, in abnormal conditions such as a bank liquidation, the Government has no choice but to provide Parliament with the names of all depositors who wish to be reimbursed and the amounts they will claim.

Why are we faced with liquidation? Because the Government made a wrong decision and decided to overlook the recommendations of the Hitchman report the Government itself had asked a great expert in the Canadian banking situation to prepare. Mr. Hitchman had examined the various options open to the Government. Of course, there was liquidation, but there was another solution he found much more logical and which he recommended, but it was unfortunately not the one chosen by the Government. As concerns liquidation, Mr. Hitchman did not recommend it and pointed out two dangers of such an action. First, the cost would be very high, and these are his exact words:

[English]

"The cost is unknown now but will be a very large sum of money". The phrase "very large sum" is printed in block letters in his report. He also went on to say that if the Government chose the liquidation route, "We would be dependent on the ability and the resources of people in the liquidators' organizations who have no experience in liquidating assets of a bank in Canada".

This means that this Government, in spite of the warnings given by the expert who had been asked to report, has chosen to override his recommendations and done the opposite of what Mr. Hitchman had recommended. Because actually Mr. Hitchman recommended a two-point plan. First, the assets, other securities and loan portfolio should be assigned to the six chartered banks, and divided among them in order that they may manage them. The Government has chosen not to follow that recommendation.

Also, Mr. Hitchman suggested the setting up of a task force with genuine powers, the responsibility of which would be, first, to take over complete control of the operations of the Canadian Commercial Bank, to dispose of the remaining assets and to report every month to the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall). Also, he recommended that an investigation conducted concerning the operations of the Canadian Commercial Bank, with a report to the Minister of State (Finance). How is it, Mr. Speaker, that the Government, after hiring such a recognized expert as Mr. Hitchman, decided to override his recommendations, to come before Parliament and ask for a $875 million blank cheque, with the idea that we, Opposition Members, were going to forfeit all our responsibilities, which are to monitor public expenditures?

In fact, I am asking these questions, Mr. Speaker: What are this Government's priorities? Are they concerned with helping those who are most in need? This is not clear to me, from the measures the Government has put forward until now. Are its priorities, for instance, concerned with helping families in need? This does not seem to be the case, because they intend to deindex family allowances. They even intended to deindex old age security pensions. And they only backed down when there was a public out cry. Do they intend to prevent job losses that are occurring throughout Canada, and most tragically now in the East End of Montreal, where the industrial base is being eroded? No, Mr. Speaker, those do not seem to be the priorities of this Government which stated only two days ago, through the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mrs. Carney), that it was not ready to help Motoco buy the Gulf refinery, an operation which would save 450 jobs.

In fact, the Government's priorities seem to be to compensate large depositors, the ones with deposits exceeding $60,000, because all the smaller depositors are already reimbursed under the Deposit Insurance Act.

In fact, what I think the Government is trying to do is to conceal its previous errors. The Government, which arranged a poor bail-out program that has actually flopped, is now cornered. They were scared to do what they had to do, which was to follow Mr. Hitchman's advice. It would have required a lot more courage, a lot more competence from the Government, to ensure for months on end the day-to-day monitoring of a faltering bank, and thereby to protect all its depositors and by the same token the average taxpayer of Canada who would not have had to contribute such large amounts as this Government is now getting ready to pay out. The reason is the Government goofed beyond measure when it arranged that rescue package, and is afraid of following the appropriate recommendation, which is to keep the Canadian Commercial Bank in operation, to ask chartered banks to continue their support and extend their technical help to the Canadian Commercial Bank. It was this same Government that turned down an offer by the chartered banks to inspect the loan portfolio of the Canadian Commercial Bank. It was an ill-considered rescue package, and with the legislation now before us, history is repeating itself.

It is no surprise, Mr. Speaker, that on this side of the House, we are unwilling to accept the legislation put forward by this Government. It is an ill-conceived Bill. We are going to fight against it, and we are committed on behalf of the Canadian people to ask here and now a number of questions from the Government. Why did they not follow the recommendations presented to them? Why did the Government choose the winding-up route, which was considered as most dangerous by the expert, Mr. Hitchman? The Government will have to answer all those questions before they can expect the Official Opposition to give their support and allow them to sign a $875 million blank cheque. We will not accept that, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat unwillingly that I take part in this debate which, as my colleague the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) pointed out, is breaking with all Parliamentary traditions. How is it that we are called upon today to deal with Bill C-79, Mr. Speaker? I feel it is important to remind the House of the events which have culminated in this colossal fiasco.

Last March, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gave the House every assurance that the Commercial Bank of Canada could and would be saved. Based on these assurances, Hon. Members on this side of the House decided to go along with the Government, because they felt it was necessary to save this institution and because they thought these three individuals had done their homework.

You can imagine just how surprised we were when we realized a few months later that, not satisfied with lying deliberately to the House, the Government had failed to do its homework and created a mess which will cost Canadian taxpayers an arm and a leg.

Mr. Speaker, we have learned, to our dismay, that the Minister of State (Finance) has put together a package to bail out the bank without even checking the bank's books. We have learned also that at the height of the crisis, the Minister of State (Finance) has failed to keep abreast of the new developments, preferring to go to Europe at a time when $1 billion in our taxpayers' money was in jeopardy. In my opinion, this was the epitomy of irresponsibility!

An Hon. Member: Absolutely!

Mr. Lapierre: Today, the House is being called upon to make up for the blunder of the Minister of State (Finance) by asking the Canadian people to spend $875 million.

An Hon. Member: That is outright incompetence!

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, that is certainly the biggest bill Canadians have ever had or will ever have to foot to save the skin of an incompetent minister. If you listened to what they are saying throughout the land, you would realize that they are not at all happy with the part they have to play in this cover-up operation and the contribution they will have to make at the end of the line.

Mr. Speaker, we know that these decisions were made hastily—

Mr. Prud'homme: The Government panicked.

Mr. Lapierre: We know the Prime Minister was too busy taking care of his image at the Economic Summit to spend time on this particular question which has now come before the House. Mr. Speaker, what is the Prime Minister asking us to do today? What is the Minister of State (Finance) asking us to do? They are asking us to save their skins, and to spend $875 million, not for the little guy but for depositors who had more than $60,000 in the bank, for depositors who knew that deposit insurance would cover the first $60,000 and who decided to take a risk in order to get a better rate of interest.

Mr. Speaker, today, this Government has the nerve to ask Canadian taxpayers to please save these money bags! Mr. Speaker, it is a little like telling the Minister of State (Finance) to go to Las Vegas and if she played for money and lost, not to worry—the Government would pay the bill. Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what the Minister of State (Finance) is asking us to do today. In fact, what she is asking is even more incredible, namely that we give her a blank cheque. Last March she told us: "Just trust me, I'll save the bank", and today she is telling us: "Trust me, I am going to make payments as I see fit". We all find this rather alarming, Mr. Speaker. Why should taxpayers trust a Minister who deceived them once before, and tell her: Sure, we will give you a blank cheque for $875 million and you can give the money to whomever you want.

Mr. Speaker, this is . . . My hon. friend says that is the price you pay for incompetence. I must say it is a very high price. In fact, it is hard to imagine what $875 million represents. Well, you could build 15,000 homes and buy 100,000 cars with $875 million. Mr. Speaker, that amount of money would pay for all kinds of projects in ridings throughout Quebec.

I see the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) is in the House, and I am sure that he would prefer the money to be used to support projects in his riding. I am sure the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault), whose riding needs funds for highway construction and that sort of thing cannot vote in favour of given away $875 million to anonymous recipients. Mr. Speaker, I know that you yourself have projects you are concerned about and that you will not approve this particular priority of this Government.

Mr. Speaker, I think we have here an example of glaring incompetence, and we must ask ourselves: What duties does me have as the administrator of public property and public funds? Does this Government have the right to use taxpayers' money to compensate a minority that is better off than the average taxpayer in this country? Is it morally correct to take money out of the pocket of the small taxpayer and give it to somebody else who already has more than $60,000 in a bank account? In my judgment, Mr. Speaker, that can only be done by someone whose conscience is asleep or who has something to hide. Never in this Parliament have we heard of a Government asking the House for a blank cheque. I doubt whether a responsible Member would agree to give the Government a blank cheque. For instance, I know that the Hon. Member for Drummond would never sign such a blank cheque in his own business dealings. Knowing his business acumen and his sense of equity, I would expect him to oppose this measure.

We are creating an unbelievable precedent, for I am sure you too have read this morning's newspaper reports about other institutions being in trouble. We have all heard the interview given this morning by the Parliament Secretary to the Minister of State (Finance). He told the people of Quebec and the people of Canada that they should not depend on the banks. People used to say that the banks were as sturdy as a rock—

An Hon. Member: Who said that?

Mr. Lapierre: The Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier). One has to wonder. He said that this morning. Can you imagine! Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary himself has reservations about the credibility of our banking institutions. In his capacity he attends all Department briefings and has access to data unavailable to the House. Mr. Speaker, I am worried after hearing such a categorical statement from him. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that you have conveyed to your constituents the wise advice of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State (Finance), to the Minister of Finance, because when an authorized spokesman for the Government questions the soundness of our banks, I am concerned. I have dutifully conveyed the message to my constituents following that interview.

I think Bill C-79 cannot be allowed to go through subsequent stages. I do not think we can support that Bill and all Members of Parliament, even Government Members, should listen to their conscience and assume their responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, accountability exists in public affairs. We are asked to give up that principle and I hope that during the discussions which will go on and on for months, because Canadians will never accept . . . and we hope that they will convince the Government that they are not ready to sacrifice themselves.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m., the House took recess.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

FRENCH TESTING IN PACIFIC CONDEMNED

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, on the subject of nuclear tests it is interesting to note that, of the 1,507 nuclear tests so far, India has held one; China, 29; the United Kingdom, 38; the Soviet Union, 556; and the United States of America, 756. The proposed nuclear test in the Pacific to be conducted by France any day will be the 128th nuclear test by France.

It would be difficult to find one Member of the House who supports nuclear tests or, indeed, one Canadian who would have any positive feeling for the impending test by France. Therefore, I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to speak up for all Canadians and register publicly Canada's strong disapproval with the French Government, and indeed rejection of the proposed nuclear test in the Pacific. It is sheer lunacy to proceed with a 128th nuclear blast, which ultimately contaminates the environment, driven by a senseless race for more destructive power, mindless of the long-term consequences and danger to mankind and the ecology.

These are the reasons we have to speak up as a nation every time a nuclear test is planned. The record of 1,507 nuclear tests so far—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCOME TAX REBATE DISCOUNTING—PROTEST CAMPAIGN

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, today the National Anti-Poverty Organization is blitzing Parliament Hill to advise Members of Parliament and the media of its concern about income tax discounting. Its campaign is not a new one. The organization brought the attention of the former Liberal Government to this pernicious practice, and it has been calling upon the Conservative Government since the day it was elected to take steps to stop this rip-off of some of the poorest people in Canada of their income tax refunds.

It is the poor people who feel they cannot wait for a month or two to obtain their income tax refunds. They go to tax discounters who take a very substantial fee off the top for giving them their refunds. Among those who are hurt the most are those people who obtain almost their entire refund from the child tax credit.

It has been estimated that tax refunders obtain $20 million of the $41 million which they earn per year from people who cash in their child tax credit. The Government of Quebec and the Government of the United States have forbidden that practice; they passed legislation prohibiting discounting. I call upon the Government to stop this practice—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

NATIONAL FAMILY WEEK

IMPORTANCE OF THE FAMILY

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to underline an event we are celebrating for the first time in Canada, National Family Week.

It must be recognized that the family is an important concept for Canadian men and women. The family is the basis of our society, our starting point in life and the focus of our growing environment. It is within the family that we learn about sharing, love and compassion.

Mr. Speaker, during National Family Week, we must also realize that the family faces all sorts of challenges in our society. Yet, it is a delicate entity in need of protection. The family is the most precious institution of our society. The family is a cell, and its members take care of their children and are proud of them. They are proud of their growth and their success. Mr. Speaker, we rarely recognize the value of the most important cell in our society, one which is at the very root of our personal and collective development.

This week is an appropriate occasion for all Canadian men and women to do some personal reflection on the important contribution of the family to our society.

REFORM OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRIME MINISTER'S COMMITMENT

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House focused its attention on the Government's comprehensive response to the second and third reports of the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons. Well deserved recognition was given to the work of the chairman and members of that committee. I should like to take a moment to add recognition of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for the active interest which he took in the work of that committee from the time it was convened until it reported. Without his commitment, it might well have not been formed as a committee. Without his commitment, its reports might well have not been implemented.

It is part of our tradition and our Constitution that our Prime Minister is a Member of Parliament. Some Prime Ministers throughout history have taken more interest in Parliament than others. I pay this brief tribute to acknowledge the work of the Prime Minister who involved himself actively in the work of his fellow Members of Parliament.

WOMEN

DIGNITY AND ECONOMIC EQUALITY

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who stated last weekend that he had done more in one year for the pride and the economic equality of women than all previous Governments—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Pépin: Not at all!—and who challenged anyone to contradict him. This is what I am about to do.

I shall be practical and honest. Very few things have been done by the Progressive Conservative Government for women, beginning with the percentage of women appointed to important positions, which is about 20 percent.

In my opinion, the meeting of Conservative women last weekend was very significant in this regard. There was no mention of the Divorce Bill, the Prostitution Bill, the deindexing of family allowances and the reduction in the grants for Planned Parenthood, and so on.

The Prime Minister seems to forget that he is no longer in the Opposition and that promises are no longer enough. What women really do not need are promises of studies!

In this regard, the Conservative women have nothing to complain about. They have been promised a task force on daycare centres, on the victims of criminal acts, family violence and sexual aggression, and on child pornography.

I would like to point out to my colleagues opposite, and more especially to the Prime Minister, that there are already tons of reports on these matters, including the Badgley and Fraser reports—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but here time has expired. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

BANKS AND BANKING

COLLAPSE OF WESTERN BANKS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, day after day we hear Conservative Members make speeches or statements about what caused the problems with the banking system, or at least with the two banks in western Canada, statements which I contend are false.

The problem in the western Canada banking system has nothing to do with an east-west division. The problem in the banking system in the West has to do with the size of the banks and the management of the banks which have gone under. It is about time Conservative Members recognized that and started speaking out on the more serious problems which in fact confront the people of western Canada. What about the forestry workers who were ignored by the Liberals and abandoned by the Conservatives? What about the grain farmers who have faced tremendous problems as a result of drought and are being ignored by the Conservatives? What about the hog producers who have been crippled by U.S. barriers to trade and abandoned by the Conservatives?

It is not just crimes of omission. For six months the Government has blamed the collapse of the CCB and the Northland Bank on past Governments. Canadians listened to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as they berated the western economy. That was not the finding of Mr. Hitchman. The Canadian Commercial Bank suffered, not because of the western economy but because of bad management which was allowed to continue even after this particular situation was brought to the attention of various Ministers—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MINISTER'S EXCELLENT WORK

Mr. Fernand Ladouceur (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is in order today in this House to underline in a special way the outstanding job done by the Minister for External Affairs on the occasion of the Canadian Government participation in a feasibility study on the hydro-electric project to develop three gorges in China.

When this Government speaks about creating jobs, about giving back Canadian men and women their pride of belonging, about implementing a policy of opening up this country to the world, here we have an initiative all of us have reason to be proud of. Such an exchange of expertise and know-all held specially by Quebecers could not better reflect a climate of mutual trust, a spirit of co-operation between the various partners to the building of gigantic works that certainly will justify our pride.

Mr. Speaker, let us stop this small-time politicking and let us look up to the future. Let us join in implementing a blueprint of society for which we all have been given a mandate by the Canadian people.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR PREFERENCE FOR MONTREAL REGION

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun-Saint-Paul): Mr. Speaker, the entire population of Quebec is currently following the negotiations going on with respect to the establishment in that Province of the Toyota and Hyundai corporations assembly plants.

Quebec buys close to a third of all the cars imported in Canada and deserves the utmost consideration in the decisions that will be made.

My constituents of Verdun-Saint-Paul, and Quebecers in general who are well-informed consumers, are anxious to play a much more important role in the automotive industry. Over the coming years they will remember the companies that will have invested in the vitality of Quebec. Our province no longer has to show its mettle in the area of high technology, and the worldwide success of Bombardier equipment is an eloquent proof.

Both Toyota and Hyundai are expected in Quebec. Those two corporations could restore a desirable balance with Ontario, where traditionally the big automotive corporations have located.

At a time when the East End of Montreal is going through a difficult period as far as its refineries are concerned, when many skilled workers are wondering about the future, it would be advisable to immediately revive Montreal's industry with such projects, thereby creating jobs that are vital to the area.

TERRORISM

MURDER OF HANDICAPPED AMERICAN BY CRUISE SHIP HIJACKERS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, in sadness we learned today of the murder of a handicapped American Jew, Mr. Leon Klinghoffer, an innocent traveller. It is these ongoing personal tragedies and the taking of human life that revolt people of good will. We learned today that the Palestinian hijackers of the Italian ship who murdered this man in cold blood and surrendered to Egyptian authorities have been released. We learned that these hijackers and murderers have been turned over to PLO leader Yasser Arafat.

There has been an escalation of violence in the world since the murder at Munich of the 10 Israeli athletes in 1972. Terrorism has become a strategic weapon. Violent acts by the PLO cause grief, continued hatred, and disrupt the peace process in the Middle East. The PLO cannot be trusted. It has no responsible, universally accepted leader, notwithstanding Mr. Arafact's claim to the contrary. The United Nations continues to clothe his murderous activities in the aura of respectability.

Now is the time for the civilized world to deny sanctuary to murderers and hijackers and to unite against terrorists. Now is the time to deny safe haven and denounce those countries which give succour to terrorists. The world must isolate these states like the pariahs they harbour.

FISHERIES

CONSTRUCTION OF FISHERIES RESEARCH COMPLEX IN WEST VANCOUVER

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, as we all look forward to the Thanksgiving weekend, I am delighted that the residents of West Vancouver and the fishing community of British Columbia will have something special for which to be thankful. Today, on behalf of the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, I was delighted to announce that tenders will be called for the construction of a new fisheries research complex in West Vancouver. The Government's decision to proceed with this $8 million project shows its commitment to scientific research, to fisheries enhancement, and to economic development in the West.

Since the late 1960s dedicated research scientists have carried out a wide variety of fisheries research activities at the West Vancouver site, contributing significantly to salmon enhancement, aquaculture, habitat protection, and lake enrichment. They have worked in overcrowded, temporary facilities on the site of one of the first buildings on the North Shore, a fish cannery, which was built about 1891. Needless to say, the construction of these new facilities will provide much needed employment in the Lower Mainland area, reinforcing the Government's support of economic activity in British Columbia.

The work of the fisheries research scientists in West Vancouver has won international acclaim. Now, with new adequate facilities, they will be able to enhance further their contribution to maintaining healthy, vibrant commercial and sports fishing activities on the West Coast.

THE MINISTRY

MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, from time to time the House deals with issues that transcend partisan politics. I am pleased to deal with one of those issues this afternoon, and I am sure all Conservative Members of Parliament will join with me.

I rise in defence of our poor, bedevilled, beleaguered, befuddled Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie). He is being assailed by the media, by cartoonists, and now by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), all for telling the truth. He is no hangashore. All he said was that the Prime Minister's staff cannot smell political danger.

Can a Minister speak with more candour? What was his reward? It was a tongue-lashing from the Prime Minister who was acting in his Orwellian capacity as Minister of Doublespeak. Senior officials who are always correct said that the Prime Minister read him the riot act and chewed him out, all of this in front of his colleagues.

The poor Minister desperately needs our help. He emerged befuddled, confused and redfaced, and put his tongue in reverse. All of a sudden, black became white, Thursday became Monday, tuna became trout, and the Blue Jays became the Maple Leafs. Is it not time the Prime Minister left this poor man in peace? Is it not time he accepted his resignation as Minister of Truth?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

MERCANTILE AND CONTINENTAL BANKS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. I must say that we have come to a time when Canada requires firm direction. Until now, the members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition did not believe that it was in the country's national interest to require a statement by the Minister regarding the Mercantile and Continental Banks. However, today's media reports compel us to question the Minister. I have given the Minister advance notice of my question. Can the Minister inform the House of the true state of affairs at this time of the Mercantile Bank and the Continental Bank?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, there are and have been many rumours floating around, many of them unsubstantiated. I do not comment on individual institutions like the Mercantile Bank. The Mercantile Bank itself made a statement this morning.

I would like to point out to Hon. Members and to the people of the country that Canada has one of the best banking systems in the world. It is recognized as such internationally and it is recognized as such domestically. It has served us well for a hundred years, and it is continuing to do so. I think this is reflected in the fact that today the prime interest rate moved down to 8.85 per cent, its lowest level since—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: Confidence is being maintained within the banking system.

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY'S ALLEGED RADIO COMMENTS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to repeat my question, for the Minister has failed to answer it. But in view of the circumstances, I shall not compound her distress.

However, my question to the Minister is this: Because she certainly feels as I do that hon. members should do their utmost to maintain confidence in the Canadian banking system, could she possibly ask the Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance to abstain from comments such as those he made this morning on the radio to the effect that Canadians have now lost confidence in our banking system?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as a representation. I repeat for the House and for the people of Canada that our system remains stable and deserves the confidence of the people of this House and of Canada.

MINISTER'S ATTENDANCE AT INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND MEETINGS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Speaking of the current banking situation in Canada the Minister of Finance said in this House on September 30, as reported in Hansard, and I quote:

—the Minister of Finance is in charge. The Minister of Finance is watching very closely over the things which are happening today . . . the Minister will continue to take those responsibilities very seriously.

The Minister has been away, albeit at an important meeting of the International Monetary Fund in Seoul where he had to make a set speech. While the situation in the banking world has continued to deteriorate in his absence, and considering the fact that he has general responsibility for banking and financial institutions in this country, why is he not here dealing with this situation directly?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition answered his own question when he pointed out to Hon. Members that the Minister of Finance is attending very important meetings of the IMF in Seoul. I spoke with the Minister of Finance last night. I am sure he is in constant touch—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I bet you told him to come home.

Mr. Nielsen: —in this world of the telephone which, as the right hon. gentleman once pointed out to me, does, in fact, exist. So, we are in close touch. I know that he is also in close touch with the Minister of State for Finance.

I would simply like to draw the attention of the right hon. gentleman to the words of the Minister of State for Finance who said just now that Canada has one of the finest banking systems in the world.

DIFFICULTIES OF CERTAIN INSTITUTIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the current situation, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance himself should be here in Canada. My question is for the Minister of State (Finance).

Apparently, she is supposed to have taken charge of the Commercial Bank of Canada on March 25 of this year. How is it that the bank continued to make questionable loans, as George Hitchman clearly indicated in his testimony yesterday? Why did the Minister not put an end to these unsound practices of the bank? Why did she wait three months before appointing Mr. Hitchman? Finally, why did she not even reply in July to Mr. Hitchman's interim report?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated in the House previously that the Inspector General was in the Canadian Commercial Bank in the spring—

Mr. Deans: Doing what?

Mrs. McDougall: —performing his statutory functions.

Mr. Orlikow: That is not what Hitchman said.

Mrs. McDougall: I have indicated previously that during that period of time I was approaching people to become directors of the bank and Mr. Hitchman arrived to augment the team which was led by the Inspector General in assessing the valuation of the CCB's portfolio.

ADMINISTRATION OF CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Hitchman's report and his testimony yesterday before the Estey Commission make it quite clear that, in his view, the failure of the bank was not the fault of the economy or of the National Energy Program. It was the fault of bad management and lack of supervision. Why did the Minister not supervise the administration of that bank once she took control in the month of March?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the House that this matter is before an inquiry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: That is why the inquiry was established. It was established to find all the facts.

Mr. Rodriguez: To hide behind it.

Mrs. McDougall: I have indicated to the House previously on many occasions the events surrounding the hiring of Mr. Hitchman.

STATE OF MERCANTILE BANK

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it has already been noted that the Minister of Finance is not in the House. I would like to point out that the Prime Minister, who has not been here now six days out of nine, is not in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. We have just heard from the Minister her expression of confidence is another bank. Given the importance of ministerial and prime ministerial responsibility to our whole banking system, will the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House whether or not the circumstances surrounding the state of the Mercantile Bank have been brought to the attention of the Prime Minister?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, naturally, I would fully expect that that has happened. However, the hon. gentleman should not lead Members of the House and the public to believe that he has not been fully apprised of these matters, since it is my understanding that the Minister of State for Finance went out of her way today to brief him, as well as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, in the hope that irresponsible questioning from opposition Members—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: You are irresponsible.

Mr. Nielsen: —would not undermine confidence in the banking system in this country in which we have full confidence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, if Members on the other side of the House were doing their jobs the country would not be in such a mess.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Finance with respect to the question of ministerial responsibility. Will she explain why she was fiddling while the banks and the Canadian taxpayers were burning for three months after the Government took action on the Canadian Commercial Bank? Why did she wait a full three months to appoint someone to deal with this serious question involving hundreds of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have explained in committee and in the House the sequence of events in the spring which led up to the hiring of Mr. Hitchman. The matter is before a judicial inquiry. It will not be helpful to the outcome of that inquiry if we have a blow-by-blow comment on every remark which is made at the hearing.

BANK'S LOAN PRACTICES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is in this House and not before an inquiry that the Minister has to answer to the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Since the Minister refused to do it about the earlier period leading up to the appointment of Mr. Hitchman, I ask her why, after she received the report, was nothing done? She received an interim report and nothing was done for two weeks. Nothing was done for many weeks, during which period of time the bank continued to make millions of dollars of irresponsible loans. Why did the Minister not act?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the action taken on September 1 was thoroughly responsible based on all the information, of which Mr. Hitchman's report was one part, which came to me during that period of time. The inquiry is the place where all the acts will be determined.

I am accountable to this House. I have been in the past and I will continue to be in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S LETTER TO SHAREHOLDER

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. The Minister has told us that although she was out of the country for all of July she was in touch with her officials by telephone. The Minister's office received an interim report from Mr. Hitchman at the end of July. Will the Minister tell the House, since she knew the state of affairs at the Canadian Commercial Bank, how she can justify writing to a shareholder on August 9—three days before the final Hitchman Report—stating that she believed the Government's action on March 25 had ensured the long-term viability of the bank?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have told the Hosue previously that during the month of August we were examining all possibilities for the Canadian Commercial Bank. I stand by what I said.

POSITION OF SHAREHOLDERS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, since the Government's Bill providing for ex gratia payments to the CCB's uninsured depositors indicates that the Government feels some responsibility for the statements and promises it made, does the Minister consider that her letter creates a comparable obligation to the shareholders?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I stand by my earlier statement that we took all appropriate action leading up to the closing of the bank. The bank remained open in August as we considered all the possibilities.

MINISTER'S STATEMENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of State for Finance. The Minister's own envoy, Mr. Hitchman, advised her that it was the state of the management and mangement practices which caused the collapse of the CCB. Would the Minister, then, immediately stop damaging the reputation of all western based institutions with the politically expedient excuses which she gives us day after day?

• (1430)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We're trying to stop you from doing the damage.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the reason there is a judicial inquiry is to deal with the facts of this situation throughout the whole series of events leading to the unfortunate closing of these two banks. Our banking system remains strong and there is nothing irresponsible about what I have said. We are continuing to stand by our banking system, as we have in the past, and the confidence in that system continues.

STATE OF WESTERN ECONOMY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance whose own envoy indicated that the problem was management, not the state of the western economy. Will the Minister and her colleagues stop bad-mouthing the state of the western economy—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The evidence will bear it out.

Mr. Riis: —and start talking positively about what is going on in western Canada? Give those financial institutions a chance.

Mr. Jelinek: What was the question?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to talk confidently about the western economy. Thanks to this Government and thanks to the Western Accord—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: —there have been more jobs created in the western economy in the last six months and it is recovering. As I have said in this House before, that is a priority of this Government.

SHIPBUILDING

CONSTRUCTION OF FRIGATES IN MONTREAL

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. I learned this morning from the President of the Vickers employees' union that, unfortunately, the company had advised him that the decision was final and that the contract for the frigates which had been awarded first to the Montreal area would go to Lévis. Moreover, the company has advised workers of the possible closing of the plant. Could the Minister confirm that he missed the boat this time around?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the House two days ago that this whole matter was under review. I have met with the union. Appropriate representations have been made. Its concern is very legitimate.

Mr. Gauthier: Jobs.

Mr. McInnes: On the other hand, I have also met with the vice-president of Vickers and we are still awaiting a legal opinion. We may not have any latitude to intervene at all. However, I assure the Hon. Member that we are aware of the concerns of the union and we will do what is appropriate in the circumstances having regard to our contractual obligations.

SITUATION IN EAST-END MONTREAL—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Minister is daydreaming.

The company has just advised its employees that the decision is final, and the Minister would like us to believe that he is still working at it. Would the Minister recognize that his meeting with the company was a failure, and what is he planning to do to save these jobs in east-end Montreal?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that no firm decision has been made on behalf of the Government.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): That we know.

Mr. McInnes: The real question is: Has the Government the opportunity to intervene? It may be a matter of contract between the parties in question. That is why I am still awaiting legal advice.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—HITCHMAN REPORT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. How long does the Deputy Prime Minister think it should have taken the Department of Finance to discover the massive mismangement of the Canadian Commercial Bank on which Mr. George Hitchman has reported?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we are embarked on a highly questionable procedure here with this kind of question—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —coming from the Opposition, which deals with a matter that is under the scrutiny of Mr. Justice Estey who is heading up a commission to inquire into all of the facts.

Mr. Broadbent: It's a ministerial responsibility.

Mr. Nielsen: I would suggest that it would be hardly productive to examine the evidence flowing from the commission on a day-by-day basis, to subject it to scrutiny here, at the same time as it is receiving an impartial—

Mr. Rodriguez: Where is your responsibility?

Mr. Nielsen: —objective, professional scrutiny by a highly respected jurist.

Mr. Penner: That's a lot of nonsense, and you know it.

PUBLIC CONFIDENCE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, how can the Canadian people ever have confidence again—

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): —in Ministers of Finance whose mistakes have saddled them with a $1 billion bill?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Keeper: Boy, you're arrogant.

Mr. Murta: Stand up and say that.

Mr. Taylor: Show a few manners.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this kind of question is exactly the kind of question which should not be dealt with in this House at this time. We are attempting to come up with all the facts—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Cover up.

Mrs. McDougall: —on the unique situations involving those two banks. In the meantime, we have taken a number of steps around the inspection and regulatory climate in other banks, and I can assure this House that the Ministers of the Crown are totally responsible and acting in a responsible way with regard to the banking system.

Mr. Broadbent: That's what you said in March.

INDUSTRY

IMPORTANCE OF KEEPING GULF IN MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, but in the absence of the Minister, perhaps I may direct my question to the Minister of State (Small Businesses).

The Minister is probably aware of the fact that some 450 jobs may be lost in east-end Montreal because of the Gulf refinery shutdown.

Is the Minister prepared to guarantee, on behalf of the Government, that any companies interested in buying the refinery will be given the same opportunities by the Government as the Reichmann brothers were given when they purchased Gulf?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources answered this question last week. The Government said that the refinery belongs to the Reichmann brothers, who can sell it to whom they see fit, and the Government will not interfere. The decision is up to the Reichmanns.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER FULFIL RESPONSIBILITIES

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, this is a totally unsatisfactory answer from a Minister who has a responsibility to small-and medium-sized businesses in Canada. I had expected him to inform the House that he would try and obtain the same conditions for small companies that his Government is prepared to provide for big corporations. Does he intend to act responsibly?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, the Government has acted responsibly. It has asked for time to find a buyer, and a postponement was granted by the Reichmanns. We know exactly what is happening, and we are helping the process along so that the company can be sold.

CLOSING OF PLANTS IN SAINT-JEAN AND VALLEYFIELD, QUE.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Small Businesses) and has to do with the Domtex plants in Saint-Jean and Valleyfield.

Earlier this week the Minister said he would make sure that jobs are maintained and the plants kept open, but the company stated through its public relations officials that its decision is irrevocable. Is it really irrevocable, and is the Government committed to keeping the 850 workers affected by the shutdown of those two plants?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, that is the same question I was asked two days ago when I said I had met with the president of Dominion Textile Limited in my office Monday night. The decision is not final and discussions are going on. Mr. Speaker, I also said that it is a private company, so the management can do as they please. The Canadian Government is working with the company to find a solution.

POSSIBILITY OF LAY-OFFS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday my leader and I met with representatives of the company and of the Sherbrook Domtex Union, and it is obvious that the company, the unions, the workers and the Textile and Clothing Board support . . .

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the Government prepared to unveil future quotas to protect textile production in this country?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, that policy is now under consideration. A lot of work is being done concerning the textile policy and answer will be given when we are ready to announce the policy.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REFUSE USE OF SUBSTITUTES FOR MILK POWDER

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. As he will know, an excellent milk bread is now made in Quebec thanks to the action taken by the Fédération des producteurs de lait du Québec to increase the nutritional quality of bread and use the surplus of powdered milk. My question is therefore as follows.

Can the Minister now assure the Members of this House that he will never authorize the use of natural substitutes for milk powder, such as legumes, chick peas, beans and so on, in the baking of enriched bread?

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the question and I share the Hon. Member's concern, particularly as expressed by the dairy farmers of Canada. If a substitute product of this kind were used it could lead to losses to the industry of $1.5 billion. The Hon. Member can rest assured that I will be making some recommendations to the Department of Health and Welfare because the final decision will be made by Food and Drug—

Mr. Speaker: I think the Minister has answered the question.

EMPLOYMENT

LOSS OF JOBS IN MONTREAL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Contrary to what she told us yesterday, neither the Minister of Energy, the Minister of Supply and Services nor the Minister of State for Small Businesses will make any commitment to save those jobs in the East End of Montreal at Vickers, Bombardier and Gulf, and now Domtex.

When the Minister spoke yesterday of a new job strategy program—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Allmand: Is she telling this House that she and her colleagues have accepted the closing of these plants, and their only solution is to retrain already skilled workers and relocate them to some other place? Is that her only solution?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in fact I did make a mistake yesterday when I said that 100,000 new jobs had been created in the Province of Quebec since this time one year ago. It is 185,000 new jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I would like to advise the Hon. Member that the Canadian Jobs Strategy, and employment opportunities and training connected thereto, will continue to offer opportunities for employment for people right across the country, and certainly in the Province of Quebec.

Mr. Allmand: What the Minister has just said is no comfort to the 2,000 workers in the East End of Montreal and the 1.3 million Canadians still unemployed. No comfort at all.

JOB-CREATION PROGRAM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I have examined the Minister's program. Can she show me any part of that program which will keep those plants open and save those jobs? Just show me one part that will do that.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, a representative of a Party which took great delight in closing down one plant after another, including oil refineries over a period of years, has very little to speak about. The Canadian Jobs Strategy, I can tell him, with its emphasis on job development, job entry and skills investment for those whose jobs are threatened, will indeed help people who are either unemployed presently or whose jobs are threatened.

Mr. Ouellet: Full of words but no jobs.

PRAIRIE DROUGHT—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture, whom we welcome back from his trip to the Soviet Union because the House has been awaiting for some time the Government's decision on what it is going to do about the report prepared by the Hon. Member for Assiniboia. That Member made a recommendation to Cabinet some weeks ago. Will the Minister now take the opportunity to announce what the acreage payment will be for western farmers who were hurt by the drought? Will it be in accordance with the recommendation by those farmers to the Hon. Member for Assiniboia?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Assiniboia, for doing an excellent job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: He has worked very industriously.

Mr. Ouellet: Watch it, he will get your job.

Mr. Wise: He has stayed on schedule and brought forth—

Mr. Nystrom: Back to Russia.

Mr. Wise: —two recommendations, and I can assure the Hon. Member that there has not been one day lost throughout this whole process. The report has been received and is being prepared in the form of a memorandum to be presented to Cabinet a week from Tuesday.

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister explain to the House why we have to wait months and months for an answer to the problems of western farmers when one weekend is enough to answer the problem of a bank collapsing? Why do farmers have to stand in line while banks get immediate attention?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows some of the problems associated with bringing together a report and making recommendations.

Mr. Broadbent: Forty-eight hours for the banks.

Mr. Wise: If we had brought forth a recommendation four weeks ago, it would have been inappropriate and inaccurate because the Hon. Member knows we have had a great deal of rainfall since that time. Even if we had brought forth the report perhaps today, we do not know how long the snow is going to last out there either.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MEMBER FOR FUNDY-ROYAL

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last Monday the Minister of Justice criticized the staff in the Prime Minister's Office. He said they were not politically astute. We all know, of course, that was later denied. It has now been reported today that in a telephone conversation with radio CJCW in Sussex, the Hon. Member for Fundy Royal supported the Minister of Justice's original statements, saying that they were interesting and legitimate.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree with the statement by the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal and his Minister of Justice that the staff in the Prime Minister's Office are not politically astute, or should we expect yet another retraction from a Member?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nunziata: We love you, John. Keep it up.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the radio program to which the Hon. Member refers—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Have you heard it?

Mr. Nielsen: —but—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Frith: Erik, it is d-o-l-t.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nielsen: But from his own account I can see nothing inconsistent with either—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —that which has been said by the Minister of Justice, myself, or himself.

Mr. Crosbie: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, can he tell this House why so many of his Members of Parliament continue to issue statements regarding this matter only to trip over their words and retract them? How can the Deputy Prime Minister justify the Hon. Member for Fundy Royal supporting the statements of the Minister of Justice after the Prime Minister told that Minister to retract and change his story? What is going on?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member may wish to make a statement tomorrow, but that is clearly not a question of ministerial responsibility.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

AMOUNT OF FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. What luck has the Minister had over the summer months in convincing his Cabinet colleagues that the skimming off of $30 million from the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority will have a very negative effect on the movement of bulk commodities from western Canada to an export position in Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes? What luck has he had in convincing his colleagues to leave that money where it is in the next fiscal year?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there has been a tremendous downturn in traffic on the Seaway, something in the order of 27 per cent to 29 per cent. That has had a very devastating impact on its financial performance. As well, I think the Hon. Member knows that we have had to engage in a very expensive maintenance program with respect to bridge repairs and things of that nature. Taking all these things into consideration, this matter is currently under review.

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF TOLLS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's response. That is the first positive indication we have had something will be done for the Seaway.

Given the growing support in the industry, and now from the head of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority himself, for a full public review of Seaway tolls and charges, would the Minister be prepared to indicate whether his Government supports that review at this time?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that is an issue with which clearly the Standing Committee on Transport could be seized. I do not think I would have any objection to reviewing the operations of the Seaway, including the matter of tolls. I think the Hon. Member is aware that tolls are established in consultation with the United States. I would certainly welcome any suggestions or mechanisms that Hon. Members may put forth to improve the viability and performance of the Seaway.

CHILDREN

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH NATIONAL CENTRE FOR MISSING CHILDREN

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. The Minister is aware that last week this House talked out a Private Member's Bill dealing with the matter of locating missing children. He is also aware that last year the United States established an information centre called the National Centre for Missing Children, to co-ordinate information concerning missing children in the United States. Will the Minister advise the House whether he would be prepared to consider establishing a similar centre for missing children in Canada?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): What about missing Ministers?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member appreciates the fact that this has already been the most productive year in the Department of Justice in the last 20 years. I will not, of course, outline the many pieces of legislation that we have produced or had this House enact.

In connection with the specifics of his question, which is the first one today on a public policy issue, I will advise the Hon. Member that the RCMP have a centralized computer system and that they are already doing much work in this area. My hon. colleague, the Solicitor General, would be better able to enlighten the Hon. Member, but they are exploring the feasibility of establishing such a national registry. I thank the Hon. Member for his interest and his promotion of the concept.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PLIGHT OF LUBICAN INDIAN BAND IN ALBERTA

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The all-Party report on Indian self-government tabled in 1983 made particular reference to the distressing situation of the Lubicon Indian Band in Alberta. The way of life and the economy of that band have been virtually destroyed by development activity which has taken place there. Last winter the Minister appointed E. Davie Fulton to make an inquiry into this situation. Is the Minister prepared today to table any and all reports that the Hon. E. Davie Fulton has made concerning the situation of the Lubicon Lake Indian Band?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question and ask him for some patience on the matter. I spoke with Mr. Fulton yesterday, and also with Mr. Pahl. Mr. Fulton, of course, is mediating the matter between the two levels of Government and the Indian people involved. He wants to make a further report to me. I expect that that report will be helpful and I ask for the Hon. Member's patience in the matter.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to be patient, but the Lubicon Indian Band is today facing the real possibility of extinction. Can the Minister give this House the assurance that before the end of next week there will be some positive announcements based on the recommendations of the Hon. E. Davie Fulton?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite right, the Lubicon Lake matter has been a running sore in this country for 45 years. I have had it under my own advisement and have been attempting to do something about it for the last three months. I expect that we will have a positive statement; I certainly hope so.

SASKATCHEWAN INDIAN NATIONS LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I have a copy of a telegram sent to the Government House Leader and another telegram sent to the Minister of Indian Affairs from Sol Sanderson, the President of the Saskatchewan Federation of Indians. It requests an answer by tomorrow to the request that they discuss with the Minister the request for a grant for $250,000 to help operate the Saskatchewan Indian Nations Legislative Assembly. Apparently most of the bands in Saskatchewan have telexed the Minister. Can the Minister provide us with an answer today since their internal deadline is tomorrow and it is important they know whether or not this funding will be forthcoming?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. The matter of funding for this conference is under review under my own advisement and that of the Department. Up until this time in the fiscal year 1984-85 almost $1.5 million has been expended for the FSIN for matters of this sort. I have the request, the Department is reviewing it, and an answer will be forthcoming.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SINKING OF TRAWLER, THE LADY MARJORIE

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence. The Chronicle-Herald of Halifax issued today reports:

A leaked Canadian Coast Guard report has vindicated the Canadian Navy of its April 28 shelling and sinking of the trawler Lady Marjorie—

I think all Members of the House are aware of the case of Walter Theriault and the difficulties he has suffered as a result of the event. Will the Associate Minister of National Defence confirm whether there is such a Coast Guard report and, if it does vindicate the Navy, will he please temper justice with mercy and honour the claim of Walter Theriault?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe my colleague, the Associate Minister of National Defence, answered similar questions not long ago. The matter is the subject of an inquiry which is complete and hopefully a detailed response will be forthcoming in the very near future.

WOLF SUB-OCEAN LTD.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Science and Technology. Yesterday the Minister stated that the Walter Wolf give-away of $363,000 was standard procedure, that the final decision was made by a joint federal-provincial committee and, to quote the Minister, "there are no other companies in Atlantic Canada capable of undertaking such a project". Does the Minister stand by those statements?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in fact, the proposal that came to the Economic Development Board operated by my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, contained only one recommendation, and that was that this particular project be supported. To my knowledge there were no other proposals and no other firms whch had been submitting such proposals.

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO PROVINCIAL OFFICIALS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): How does the Minister explain statements reported today in Canadian Press from officials in Premier Brian Peckford's office who have stated that five other companies applied for the same moneys and that the final decision was made by the federal Government with all federal Government money and no involvement from Newfoundlanders?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the spokespersons for the Government of Newfoundland are entitled to say what they wish. The facts are, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: Retract.

Mr. Siddon: Are the opposition Members prepared to hear the answer, Mr. Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Ouellet: We love it.

Mr. Siddon: The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the decision which was forwarded to the federal Minister was taken by a committee of public servants drawn from the Governments of Newfoundland and Canada under the terms of the subsidiary agreement on ocean industry development, and there was only one recommendation forthcoming from that committee of civil servants to this Government.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—HITCHMAN REPORT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Why did she not accept the recommendations for action proposed by George Hitchman with regard to the Canadian Commercial Bank given to her Ministry at the end of July?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have told the House time and time again that we considered every option, including Mr. Hitchman's recommendation, before the final decision was reached on the Canadian Commercial Bank. I am sure that Mr. Justice Estey will ask the same question and will get the same answer when we get this into that forum.

Mr. Deans: I am sure that Justice Estey will do an excellent job. The question I have, however, is for the Minister, not for Justice Estey.

MINISTER'S ACTION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Is there any good and valid reason why the Minister did not accept the recommendations for action offered by George Hitchman after he had analysed the conditions of the bank and presented his interim report at the end of July?

Mr. Rodriguez: Only you can answer that question.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Yes.

Mr. Deans: Well, supplementary!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You have to think about your question.

Mr. Deans: Barbara, sometimes you can be too cute by half.

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

RETENTION OF IMPORT QUOTAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Small Businesses. According to a survey by Decima Research, 82 percent of Canadians are in favour of a five-year quota system to guarantee Canadian shoe manufacturers access to 50 percent of the domestic market. Will the Government believe its favourite survey firm Decima, which has stated that two out of three Canadians think it is more important to protect jobs in Canada than to bring about any price reductions? Will the Government announce that the quotas will be maintained?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I am happy to see the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou in the House today. We had not seen him for a month and a half.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such comments are not allowed.

Mr. Bissonnette: Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou that the policy of the Government for the shoe industry is still under review. It should be made public soon.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Wednesday, October 9, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I recognize that consultations are still under way with respect to the business for the coming week. However, I thought I should formally pose the question in that regard to get a confirmation of the situation from the Government House Leader.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition is quite right. We are now in the process of consultations with respect to the order of business for the course of next week. I hope to be in a position, therefore, to complete these consultations with both Parties and come back to the House possibly before the conclusion of Government business for the purpose of announcing the business.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

ORDER OF REFERENCE OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there is an order that would receive the unanimous approval of the House for adoption. There have been consultations between the Parties with respect to the following order:

That, notwithstanding the order of reference on Tuesday, March 5, 1985, the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be empowered to report its findings on the subject matter of that order no later than Friday, October 25, 1985.

The effect of this is an extension of the reporting date for that committee from October 15. That has the support of all Parties.

Mr. Speaker: Is there agreement to the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

CHANGES TO FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the people of the riding of Central Nova who submit a petition indicating their opposition to the Government's intention to remove full indexation of family allowances and to make changes to the child tax credit system. They ask that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) reverse his plans as outlined in the May 23 Budget.

I also rise to present a petition on behalf of people from Edmonton, Nickel Belt and Sudbury who are also opposed to these proposals to deindex the family allowance.

In addition, I rise to present a petition on behalf of the people of Regina, represented by the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn), who indicate as well that they are opposed to the removal of the full indexation provisions of the family allowance and the changes to the child tax credit system.

I also rise to present a petition on behalf of people who live in the riding of Western Arctic who are also opposed to the Government's intention to remove full indexation provisions of the family allowance.

I also have petitions from the people of Winnipeg and Saskatoon who also express their displeasure.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, since this is Family Week, I am privileged to present to this House a petition signed by fathers and mothers from my constituency of Montreal-Papineau.

In these petitions, the Government is asked to restore full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit. This is just plain social unjustice, and they regret the unfortunate effects this measure would have if it were not amended. The Government should back—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! Surely the Hon. Member is well aware that all that is allowed is a short summary.

Mr. Ouellet: I was concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I believe they are concluded.

REINSTATEMENT OF ISABEL GOLIGHER

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of a number of members of the United Automobile, Aerospace, Agricultural Implement Workers of America who demand that Isabel Goligher be either reinstated to her former job or given an alternate position of equal status and pay with all benefits and that Isabel Goligher's reputation be cleared of the false allegations of lesbianism and that she receive written appologies from all parties concerned.

I have a second petition from the Public Service Alliance of Canada concerning the same matter. This union demands that Isabel Goligher be reinstated by the Government of Canada with all pay and benefits, retroactive to the date she was forced to resign.

CHANGES TO FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from the citizenss of the Guelph and Waterloo region who state that in the opinion of your petitioners, the recent federal Budget policy to deindex family allowances is clearly an attack on the working poor and poor alike, and as a result strongly urge the Government of Canada to restore full indexation of family allowances.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition from a number of residents of the City of Vancouver who also ask that the proposal to deindex family allowances be withdrawn. They point out also that the changes recommended in the child tax credit will make even the poorest families worse off by the year 1990.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to present to this House a petition signed by a dozen constituents of Ottawa West asking the House to reconsider the Government's measure aimed at deindexing family allowances and the child tax credit and to restore full indexation of both programs.

[English]

I also have a petition from two dozen residents of Etobicoke, North York and Weston who state in their petitition that it is both immoral and inconceivable that the Government is asking families to make sacrifices during National Family Week, but at the same time can find $1 billion to save Canadian Commercial Bank depositors having $60,000 and more. They ask that the full indexing of family allowances and the child tax credit be re-established.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a large number of British Columbians who are of the opinion that the deindexation of family allowance and the massixe cut-backs in public commitment to child benefits are an unfair attack on women and families with children, especially single-parent mothers, and therefore call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of a number of constituents in Burnaby who are concerned about the plan to cut back on the full indexation of family allowances and to cut back on the public commitment to child benefits. They call upon the Government to reinstate full indexation of family allowances and rescind the most unfair tax increases.

Petitions

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a petition from a number of women from the ridings of Vancouver East and Vancouver Kingsway, who point out that the deindexation of the universal family allowance and the massive cut-backs in the public commitment to child benefits are an unfair attack on women and families with children, especially single-parent mothers. They point out that the Government has prepared a billion dollar bail-out for the banks but has cut back on these family benefits.

REINSTATEMENT OF ISABEL GOLIGHER

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by some 350 residents of the Maritime Provinces as well as the area around London. They demand that Isabel Goligher be reinstated to her former job or given an alternate position of equal status and pay and that she be given pay and benefits retroactive to the date that she was forced to resign.

CHANGES TO FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present to the House a petition signed by a number of citizens, mostly from the City of Montreal, who ask the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and rescind the unfair tax increases.

● (1510)

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have here a petition stating that in the opinion of the petitioners deindexing family allowances is an unfair attack against women, especially women who are single-parent mothers with children.

Your petitioners ask that full indexation of family allowances be restored.

[English]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of Toronto and to point out to the House that a proposed deindexation of the family allowance hurts the poorest people the most and is inconsistent with the generosity of the Government in its great donations to the rich through capital gains, all exemptions and through the billions of dollars given to the banks and the oil companies. Therefore, they ask that the House should reverse the action and restore full indexation of family allowance.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I bring to your attention on behalf of the people of Ottawa, Ontario their concern that the Government of Canada in its recent Budget intends to remove the full indexation provisions of the family allowance and make changes in the child tax credit which will cut in 1987, $55 million in benefits for 3.5 million Canadian families.

And Mr. Speaker I draw to your attention that those individuals from Sudbury, Ontario, are requesting the reinstatement of the full indexation of family allowances and child tax credit because they feel that those cuts are unacceptable.

[English]

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I too am pleased to place before the House a number of petitions, two are from York West, one submitted by Carlos Adam and one by Mario Pin; and one is from Etobicoke from Mr. Gino Lenorduzzi. These petitions ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government to restore full indexation of the family allowance and child tax credit and to eliminate a regressive budget measure which would take away from families a total of $55 million by 1987.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition that was circulated by Mr. Ottavio Marchi of Muir Avenue in the City of North York. This petition, signed by a number of petitioners, asks the Government of Canada to restore full indexation to the family allowance and the child tax credit.

REINSTATEMENT OF ISABEL GOLIGHER

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a large number of petitions from the people in the London, Tillsonburg and St. Thomas area in support of Isabel Goligher recommending that she be reinstated to her position or that alternative employment in the federal Government be found for her. Some of the petitions come from United Automobile Aerospace Workers and others are from other citizens. I might add that a large number of people in support of Isabel Goligher demonstrated on Saturday to show their support and to urge an independent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is dealing with petitions, I presume, not announcing the demonstration. Does she have further petitions?

Ms. McDonald: I have a very large number of petitions and I am giving you a very succinct rendition of a large amount of support for Isabel Goligher.

DEINDEXATION OF SOCIAL SECURITY PROGRAMS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): I have one further petition on behalf of a number of Vancouver residents who are protesting the deindexation in the Budget and wish to have full indexing of all of these social programs. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

REINSTATEMENT OF ISABEL GOLIGHER

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition on behalf of over 100 residents of the London area who demand justice now for Isabel Goligher and ask that she be reinstated to her former job, or be given an alternative position of equal status and pay in London with the Government of Canada.

CHANGES TO FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to present a petition on behalf of constituents protesting the decision to deindex the universal family allowance and to make other changes in taxes and in family benefits which will by 1990 reduce the benefits for all Canadian families, even the poorest. These petitioners call on the Parliament of Canada to reconsider and again to index fully the family allowance.

REINSTATEMENT OF ISABEL GOLIGHER

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to present before the House a petition signed by nearly 200 citizens of Canada supporting the reinstatement of Isabel Goligher.

FERRY SERVICES AND RATES

Question No. 417—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Were ferry rates increased following the budget cuts and, if so, by what percentage?

2. In 1985, will ferry services be (a) abolished (b) increased (c) decreased in the Maritimes?

3. How many passengers used ferries in (a) 1983 (b) 1984?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes, by about 15 per cent. Some decreases were implemented as well, affecting senior citizen and certain tourist traffic.

2. In 1985, ferry service levels in the maritime provinces will be essentially the same as in 1984 with the exception of the CN Marine Yarmouth, N.S./Bar Harbor, Maine service which will see a somewhat lower level of frequency during the winter months when demand is down considerably.

3. The number of passengers using the East Coast ferry service subsidized by the federal Government was 2,879,000 passengers in 1983 and 2,881,000 passengers in 1984.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The question as enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canada Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect to uninsured deposits, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 7379).

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to have the opportunity to speak on the battered bank bail-out Bill. This whole operation of bailing out the bank is almost incomprehensible to a layman. Many people across Canada take risks in their daily work. Every time a farmer plants a crop he takes a risk. He knows that there is a possibility that he will lose his investment. Every banker who makes a loan takes a risk. He knows that there is a possibility that that loan will not be repaid. The banks justify their interest charges by saying that they are taking a risk, may lose that money, and therefore must charge interest at a rate which will compensate them over the years. The banks recognize, just as well as the farmer does, that they may not be able to reclaim their investment on a particular loan. As the farmer does, they should prepare for the eventuality of not having that loan repaid.

The Canadian Commercial Bank obviously was not prepared to lose the money that was loaned and, over the years, was not prepared to back up those wrong decisions. This is not a matter of a farmer planting a crop and then being affected by the weather or by the conditions of that particular year. This is a bank which took a risk and by its bad judgment is now faced with the loss of those moneys loaned.

Why did they make those loans, Mr. Speaker? Obviously the purpose was to make more money. If we are to believe the reports which have been made, they made those loans knowing that they were providing that money at great risk. They made those loans without the kind of production we usually expect of an investment. For example, when a farmer spends money on his crop, he expects to produce something of value. When one purchases something at a store, one expects something of value in return. These banks made these loans and they expected money in return without producing anything. I think that statement sums up the whole situation.

The western world has now reached the stage in the control and development of its economy where financing has become the most important part of any project. It does not make any sense. It is not a logical approach to the economy. The Government and its cohorts made much of trusting the market system. They suggested that by trusting the market system they could guarantee growth and prosperity. Obviously their confidence is often misplaced. In this particular case it was grossly misplaced. A dependence upon financing also involves a dependence upon the greed of people and organizations to work. The financial market system depends upon the greed of people. The greed of the Canadian Commercial Bank pushed it to make unsecured loans. In order to obtain money for those loans, the bank appealed to the greed of depositors by offering a point or two higher interest rate than was available on the general market. The actions of the bank and of the depositors were based upon greed, that is, they wanted to obtain more than they should have expected to obtain. This had a destabilizing effect and contributed to the downfall of the bank.

At one time a person went out to make a fortune or to earn a living by producing something. Apparently those days have gone. Now one makes a fortune by lending money and depending upon the greed of other people. We have reached a stage in our economy today when money is more important than production. We have been manipulated by the financial institutions to the point where production has become more dependent upon money than upon work. In any enterprise today, be it farming, small business or construction, it is seldom that the entrepreneur will make more profit than the bank or financial institution which lent the money in the first place. This seems to be backward. When the money-lender is the only person who is guaranteed profit in an enterprise, we are depending far too much upon money.

Even now as we in the House look into the downfall of the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank, we should be looking at the basic financial structure of Canada. The values of the country have been changed to the point where production has less value than money and where it is possible to make money without any production. That was wrong when I was growing up, and it is wrong today.

Thus far almost $1 billion is being touted as the total amount necessary to bail out the depositors in the two banks. The Government has suggested that it will give only $48 million or one-twentieth of the bail-out amount to western farmers who find themselves in a disastrous situation because of drought. Who are the winners and who are the losers in this bail-out Bill? The borrowers and depositors are the winners; the losers are the taxpayers and to some extent the shareholders. Obviously someone will get this money. I hope that in the judicial investigation or elsewhere we will find out where the bail-out money is to go. Perhaps we require a list of borrowers as well as a list of depositors, so that Canadians will know not only who is being repaid but who obtained money in the first place.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-79. In this morning's edition of The Globe and Mail there was a report about the Canadian Commercial Bank which was headlined "CCB report describes bank in chaos". A more appropriate definition of what has occurred would be: "CCB report describes a Government in chaos".

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) have mismanaged the affairs of these two banks. As a direct result of that political mismanagement, we are here today debating this Bill. The Minister stated that the purpose of this particular piece of legislation was to assist or bail out individuals who are uninsured depositors in the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. This Bill is an attempt to bail out two incompetent Ministers. The record speaks for itself in respect of what transpired in terms of these two banks.

We have been told today that we have a responsibility as parliamentarians to bail out uninsured depositors. Canadians are asking, as we in the Opposition are asking: Who are these people to whom Canadian taxpayers will have to pay $875 million? It is incumbent upon the Government, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance to tell us and the people of Canada specifically who these people are.

Hon. Members know that depositors with less than $60,000 are insured; they are protected. Those with deposits of up to $60,000 are protected by law. Through this particular piece of legislation, the Government is asking that we bail out others who have on deposit in excess of $60,000. Why should we do that? Why should Canadians have to bail out individuals who have in excess of $60,000 on deposit in those two banks? The Minister has said it is because we have a moral obligation to do so.

Indeed, the Government might have a moral obligation. The Minister told the people of Canada, including those depositors, that the banks were on a solid footing and that, as a result of the bail-out made earlier this year, the banks were solvent and would survive. She was wrong. The Government was wrong. The Minister of Finance, the Minister of State for Finance and indeed the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and others misled the House. I am not suggesting that they misled the House deliberately but indeed they misled the House by saying that the banks would be sound if we supported the bail-out package. They were wrong.

Government Members told us that based on the best information available at the time, the bail-out would help the banks and the banks would survive. What information was available to the Government? We asked the two Ministers involved and the Prime Minister what information they had to give the undertaking to the Opposition and to the depositors of these two banks that the banks would survive. The fact is that they did not have full information. Were they negligent in not obtaining all the information that was necessary to make such a crucial decision affecting so many Canadians?

Where was the Minister of State for Finance? A few short days ago, the Minister of State for Finance admitted to the House that she was not in Canada during the month of July, a crucial month in the unfortunate history of these two banks and the Government's involvement in them. What could possibly be more important than being in Canada to monitor the situation? We have been told that she was vacationing somewhere in Europe and indeed she told us that she was in telephone contact with officials. That is not good enough. We expect a Minister of the Crown who is responsible and accountable for the banks of Canada to be here in Canada when an issue of such importance and magnitude arises. No, the Minister had other priorities. Her vacation was more important than the issue of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank.

Where is the Minister of Finance? I can appreciate that the rules of the House dictate that Hon. Members cannot comment on the absence of a particular Member from the House. I am not going to comment on the fact that the Minister has been absent from the House but I would like to comment on the fact that the Minister is not in Canada. He has gone to some meeting in Europe. Some would argue that it is an important meeting of the IMF, but I would suggest to Hon. Members opposite and to the Minister that this issue is far more important than a meeting of the IMF in Europe. The Minister should be here in the House of Commons to answer questions put by opposition Members. He should be here to be held accountable for what is happening.

We heard today that the Government is getting a little fidgety about questions asked in this House. The Government has suggested that because the Estey Commission has been mandated to investigate the affairs surrounding the collapse of these two banks, opposition Members should not be asking questions. I submit that it is our right as members of the Opposition to ask questions and to hold Ministers accountable for their actions.

We were told today by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) that the Minister of State for Finance sent a letter to a shareholder indicating that the banks in question would be on a solid footing. That was an undertaking made by a Minister. If the Government feels that it has a moral obligation based on statements it made with respect to the uninsured depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, does it not believe it has an obligation to the shareholders of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank? After all, the shareholders were given the same irresponsible undertaking and assurance by the Minister that the banks would be solvent. As a result of that undertaking, I suspect, certain shareholders of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank continued to hold shares in those banks. Does the Government not feel that it has a moral obligation to the shareholders as well?

I began my discussion today by suggesting that we are seeing a Government in chaos. Indeed it is a Government in chaos. Canadians are asking who controls the finances of our country. The banking industry has been shaken by the collapse of these two banks and we are now told that a third bank may be in trouble. I would suggest that it is as a result of the incompetence of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance that the banking industry is in trouble. Had they taken appropriate action in the early stages, the collapse of these two banks might have been avoided and Canadians would not be asked to pay out $875 million to uninsured depositors. We in Her Majesty's Loyal and Official Opposition are not prepared to give the Government a blank cheque.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has moved an amendment which reads as follows:

> This House declines to give second reading to a Bill, the principle of which is to permit payments of large, but unspecified amounts of public moneys to unspecified persons or corporations, thereby substantially denigrating parliamentary accountability for expenditure of public funds.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to indicate on behalf of my constituents of York South-Weston that Canadians condemn the Government for its mismanagement of this particular matter. We hold the Government accountable for the failure of these two banks.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise to address Bill C-79, an appalling measure that is before us today. The Canadian taxpayers are being asked to spend $875 million to bail out the uninsured depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. Canadians are quite scandalized that they should be asked to pay out this kind of money when the names of the individuals and corporations affected are not to be revealed. This runs entirely contrary to principles of accountability and it is entirely unacceptable.

We are very concerned about the financial priorities the Government is displaying in this bail-out Bill. We are concerned that the Government can find nearly $1 billion to make this pay-out, and indeed, by the time the pay-outs are finished, the sum may well be above $1 billion. We are concerned that the Government can suddenly find this amount of money when in its May Budget it proposed that old age pensions should be deindexed. We had to fight the Government on that measure, as we are currently fighting it with respect to the deindexation of the family allowance, a measure that would save approximately $200 million this year. The Government does not have that amount of money for child support programs because they are of low priority. Yet, it has nearly $1 billion, and possibly more, to pay out individuals, corporations, foreign banks, rich municipalities, large organizations and sophisticated investors who knew what they were doing. It can find money for these types of purposes which are surely less important than support of our social programs.

This is a matter which shows the Government at its most incompetent and its most negligent. The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) has tried to blame previous Liberal Governments—and perhaps the blame should be shared—for the lack of improvement and the lack of attention to inspection procedures which would have made it possible to determine the failures of these two banks before a bail-out of this size would be needed. While I admit that perhaps some of the blame should be shared, I do not think that the explanation which the Minister of State for Finance has offered is remotely adequate enough. Certainly, all the blame cannot be placed where the Government wishes to place it. It is clear that the Government acted with insufficient information and that it did not obtain the information which it should have obtained.

Last March, it took the matter much too lightly when it announced its bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank. At that time depositors were told that the situation was solved and that with a certain modest sum of money the bank would survive. Indeed, right into the month of August the Minister of State for Finance was writing letters to inquirers stating that the long-term viability of the bank had been ensured and that it was in fine financial condition and that there was no need for concern. Simultaneouly, the major chartered banks were withdrawing their money, as were other investors, making it necessary for the Bank of Canada to infuse more money just to keep the bank going. It was one of the arrangements of the bail-out that the Bank of Canada would come to its rescue as there was a run on its deposits. Indeed, there was a run on its deposits and an enormous amount of taxpayers' money has gone into the continuing operations of these two banks under bad management and with large numbers of loans which were not viable. The whole mess was allowed to continue so that the bail-out with which we are now faced is considerably greater than it would have been if the Government had taken some responsibility and found the information it needed last March to come up with a more prudent decision at that time.

Let us consider the situation in which the Canadian Commercial Bank finds itself. It is a fairly young financial institution, having been incorporated in 1975 in Edmonton. Its loan portfolio was primarily western and very much in the risk sector. It was in the field of construction, real estate and energy. Of course, one does not have to be very experienced in business, or in the economy, to know that these are sectors which are vulnerable to economic turn-around. Therefore, when there was a set-back in the energy field, that had an impact on the related fields of real estate and construction. When companies began to fold in the energy sector it meant the decline of the whole business sector. If construction is hit, people lose their jobs and move out of the province. As real estate markets are hit, people who once wanted to buy or build sell and leave for greener pastures. Here is a bank which very imprudently concentrated in a highly vulnerable area and did not learn its lessons in that area. It now wants the Canadian taxpayer to pay for its imprudent decisions.

Before us we have a further complication which, indeed, is a very sad one. The Canadian Commercial Bank bought into an American bank in California which was in a similar field with similar weaknesses. Initially, it bought a 40 per cent interest of the Westland Bank. When that bank ran into financial difficulty the CCB bought the bank outright, supposedly to protect its investment. However, the Westland Bank had precisely the same type of over-concentration in vulnerable areas. Thus, we see the irony in western Canada when a set-back is experienced in the economy. They send their money out to purchase in an area which has precisely the same problems and is vulnerable to precisely the same economic downturns as the Alberta economy has been faced with. The failure of the California bank has certainly had an impact on the parent company in Alberta.

All of these difficulties did not just happen in July or August. They did not happen after the bank was bailed out in the first instance. This is information which was available. However, what we find is that the Government in setting the course which it did in March to bail out the Canadian Commercial Bank did so without obtaining full information. An estimate of bad loans or high risk loans was grossly under-estimated. It need not have been. It was simply that it did not require the information to be provided at the time. A hasty decision was made and, unfortunately, it was the wrong one.

I would like to read a statement made by the auditors of the Canadian Commercial Bank which they made in their appearance before the Finance Committee. It states:

> A review of the annual reports and financial statements of the bank for the past three years clearly indicates a trend of declining net income, a rapidly escalating loss experience on loans coupled with very substantial increases in the total of non-earning loans and the percentage of non-earning loans to total loans.

In other words, information for a period of three years preceding the failure of the bank was like writing on the wall. What are non-earning loans? They are mistaken loans, loans that should not have been made. This information was in place but the Government did not insist that it be obtained and reviewed. It did not insist that an accurate estimate be made of the extent of the bad loans, the number of them or the bad decision making involved in them.

While we oppose the over-all bail-out, let me say that there is reason for the establishment of a hardship fund. There is reason to bail-out individuals and some groups which deposited their money, unsophisticated investors who certainly did not have any inside information and who would be particularly hurt. We think on a case-by-case basis these hardship interests should be considered. We are very much opposed to a blanket bail-out with no names attached. We oppose hard-earned taxpayer's money going to bail out foreign banks, large corporations and municipalities. This is an improper way for Parliament to be using taxpayers' money. We are profoundly opposed to this Bill.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in participating in the debate on Bill C-79 one cannot refrain from commenting with respect to the conclusion which is emerging throughout the country in the minds of many Canadians who follow the activities and accidents of this Government. The Bill before us should actually be called the "Incompetence Bill" of the Government of Canada in 1985. As such, it would receive five stars in any competition to determine the inability of a Bill to deal with the public's interest. We are debating today an amendment put forward by our Leader in which we urge this House to decline to give second reading to this Bill because the principle of the Bill is to permit payments of large but unspecified amounts of public monies to unspecified persons or corporations, thereby substantially denigrating parliamentary accountability for expenditure of public funds. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment is a perfectly legitimate amendment. It is consistent and falls squarely within the prerogative and traditions of Parliament. To be asked to permit payments of substantial sums blindly, so to speak, without the knowledge of who are the recipients, is a measure which would offend any parliamentarian worth his or her salt and would be deeply resented no matter what Party is in opposition. I am certain that the Conservative Party, if it was in opposition, would oppose this Bill tooth and nail, just as we are doing today. I wonder, therefore, how on earth this situation developed, considering the assurances which were given to us only six months ago in this House by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). On March 25 she is reported in Hansard as stating:

We are satisfied that this Bank is now a viable Bank, that it will be profitable in the future, that we will be repaid as will other members of the support group out of the future profits of the Bank.

This was an undertaking. It was a clear statement. It was not conditional and there was no hedging about it. On the same occasion, on March 25, the Minister of State for Finance went on to say, and I quote:

This particular problem was triggered by something that happened within the bank's loan portfolio in California which then of course created problems with the organization as a whole.

The Minister did not, on that occasion, thank God, bring in the red herring of the National Energy Program as did some of her colleagues. She just identified the source of the problem. That was the position of the Minister at that time. The problem was not the bad economy in western Canada, nor was it the National Energy Program, it was the bank itself. The bank had invested very heavily, not in Canada but in Texas and California, into loans directed at the oil and gas industry. I am happy the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) is in the House today to hear this because I believe this Bill has relevance to her efforts in Canada as well.

Mr. Della Noce: She is here just for you.

Mr. Caccia: I am very touched by that fact. The bank's investments were also directed to real estate in Texas and California. Six months ago we were given one set of assurances and six months later we must face a Bill which demands a phenomenal sum of money from the taxpayers of Canada without knowing who will be the recipients of the funds. The fact is that in March the Government made a political decision without searching and digging for the necessary facts. It made a decision based on partial information and it decided to do so because it felt that that was the political thing to do at the time. The Government cannot deny the fact that if it had made the effort to dig for the information, it would have been able to use it. However, the information was not used and by deciding not to use that information, it could not look at the facts. It disregarded a valuable tool which would probably have prompted this Government to make quite a different decision.

I was very impressed, Mr. Speaker, with the alternative course of action put forward in the course of this debate by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). He put forward a four-pronged approach by way of an alternative Bill. He recommended, among other things, that an investment be made in the equity of the Northland Bank and that, in his opinion, this should amount to $150 million to $200 million, and that the composition of the Board of Directors be changed to a more competent team. He also recommended that the Government of Canada guarantee the deposits in the Northland Bank for the next five years so that the depositors could regain confidence in this financial institution. I thought this was a rather constructive effort on the part of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides as he attempted to come to grips with this situation. He also put on record the fact that it is extremely difficult for us in this House of Commons to debate Bill C-79—the Progressive Conservative incompetence Bill—while at the same time the Estey Commission is trying to get to the facts which this Parliament does not as yet have. This exercise becomes even more difficult because it is, first, clouded by political incompetence and, second, it is carried out without full knowledge of all the facts. The Estey Commission exercise is taking place at the same time outside of this building in another place in an attempt to provide information to the public, and to the politicians, in order for them to do a proper job. For all of these reasons, Mr. Speaker, we have moved this amendment. It is highly reasonable that in order to approve the expenditure of $875 million, every Member of Parliament should know how these funds are to be expended. That is the basic thrust of our amendment and I commend it to you, Mr. Speaker, for your consideration, and that of the Government.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am glad for the chance to speak against Bill C-79. It is called the Financial Institution Depositors Compensation Act but everyone knows it simply as the tax bail-out Bill. This Bill is both unfair and destructive. People can accept something which is unfair if it is really needed and good for the country. People can accept something which perhaps costs the country a little bit but which creates a situation which is more fair. However, this is both unfair and destructive to the country.

We are being asked to approve an expenditure of $875 million now, and there is every reason to think that this is only the start. The Government will tell us how much more later on. What is notably unfair about it is that this money goes mostly to the very big depositors. These depositors looked around for a high interest rate and found it in this bank which was making questionable loans in order to get a high return. It turns out that for many months before last March there were suspicions in the banking community that the Canadian Commercial Bank was not operating in a prudent way. Yet the big banks, which should have and probably did know better because that is their business, took the risk and put their money in figuring: heads I win, tails you lose. If the CCB does all right, they get the profit. If not, they ask the Government and the taxpayers to pay their loss. That is where we are now.

Let us look at some of the CCB depositors. There was more than $108 million on deposit from foreign banks. There was $65 million on deposit from Canadian Schedule A and Schedule B banks. There was $1 million on deposit from trust companies. There was $56 million from investment dealers and brokers, and $51 million from other corporations. These outfits can stand to lose money better than the average worker or small business person. They can stand to lose it, not easily but better than most Canadians can, and they are also the ones who knew best what a risk they were running. By their own standards, they ought to pay for that risk because they demanded the profit that comes with the risk. When we ask these institutions why they take 6 per cent more interest on the money they lend out than they have to pay on the money they borrow, they say that is because of the risk. Now they have the profit for the risk but they want the taxpayers to bear the risk. That is what is unfair.

It is also very unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that some other groups have put a good deal of money into this bank. I do not think they should have. The credit unions deposited $67 million. Municipal Governments deposited $30 million. Provincial Governments deposited $69 million. That is either taxpayers' money or the deposits of small business people and workers. That money should not have been put at risk. We used to have a principle that when money like that was in effect placed in someone's care, such as a municipal or provincial Government, credit union or union pension fund, it should be invested carefully. They should not take risk with what is essentially other people's money, particularly that of ordinary working people who cannot afford to lose it and who do not have any means of participating in the decision-making involved. However, that was a small part of the portfolio. In fact, between 40 per cent and 50 per cent of the total deposits were from Canadian and foreign banks. This situation is principally a rip-off by the banks who are happy to devour the carcass of one of their brothers and get the taxpayers to pay as much as possible of the risk that they take.

It is unfortunate in another way as well. There is a very interesting situation which illustrates the unfairness. The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce has forced hundreds of its employees at its Visa Centre to go out on strike. It refuses to bargain in good faith and follow the 20th century concept of honest labour relations with its employees when they organize a union. This is one of the banks which is going to get money from the taxpayers, including those employees it has forced out on strike. They are being forced to subsidize an employer who refuses to let them have normal union rights. It may be only two or three hundred people but it symbolizes the policy of not only the CIBC but of banks in general. They are very hostile to working people and small business people in this country. In fact, it is the working people and small business people who are being asked to shell out a total of $1 billion and it will soon be more than that, primarily to help the rich. That is what is unfair.

What is it that is destructive? There are many ways this money could be better spent. What does giving $108 million to foreign banks do for the Canadian working people who will have to pay it in the form of taxes? The banks do not pay much in taxes. Some years they do not pay any taxes at all, they get a rebate. If they make less than $200 million or $300 million they cry poor and get a tax rebate. Why should the taxpayer be foreced to pay $108 million to foreign banks? Indeed, why should working people be forced be forced to pay more than $100 million to Canadian banks over and above the donations already made over the years through a tax system rigged in favour of the banks? What if, for example, this money was spent on building homes? We need them. The Government says it has to cut back, and it did cut $29 million in the Budget for this purpose. Here is $1 billion which would easily build 20,000 homes and that would be a great deal better. It would employ unemployed construction workers and house people who the Government knows lack decent housing. We also know that the drinking water of Lake Ontario is dangerously polluted. The Government of the United States and, to some extent, the Government of Canada have allowed industry to dump their poisonous wastes into the Niagara River or on the land beside the river where it soon runs into the river. That is what we are getting in Lake Ontario. That is what they are drinking tonight throughout Metropolitan Toronto and many, many other communities around the lake. There are ways of reducing those poisons. There is new technology for purifying water but it costs money. The Government could do this but it says we do not have the money, and that is false. The Government does have the money. It has the money to go a long way toward purifying the water in Lake Ontario for millions and millions of people. Yet it refuses to spend the money in that way because it would rather give it to its friends in the banking system.

This is an unfair Bill, Mr. Speaker. It is destructive, it promotes unemployment in Canada, and prevents us from doing the things we need to do. It can provide housing and clean up the drinking water through which we can be poisoned by cancer-causing chemicals which industry has put in the water. I fully support the amendment of our Liberal colleagues and I hope this Bill will never see third reading.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 46, it is my duty to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby)—National Defence—(a) Compensation for sinking of the Lady Marjorie; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Consumer Affairs—(a) Discounting of income tax refunds. (b) Request that practice be banned.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 7379).

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am very pleased on behalf of my Party to rise and address Bill C-79. As Members have stated before, it is basically a Bill to bail out the two banks which we have been debating for a number of months in this Chamber, namely, the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. Specifically stated, this Government is asking this Parliament, and this Party specifically, of course, to grant it a blank cheque to the tune of $875 million to pay for uninsured depositors of over $60,000. It would seem to me and, as I have learned from discussing this issue with constituents on the weekend, it would seem to constituents in York West, that the logical thing to do with respect to this Bill would be, at the very least, to tell this Parliament, and through this Parliament Canadians from one coast to another, who is going to be receiving this money. Yet, the Government comes to this Chamber and will not tell us where the money is going, just that we should co-sign the cheque and that we will be told later. Of course, Mr. Speaker, the individuals involved will have to make an application for reimbursement and their names will then become public. The Government is asking Parliament to put the cart before the horse.

The Government goes on to say that if the Opposition Parties do not co-sign this $875 million cheque we will be against individuals, perhaps farmers, or some municipalities which must legitimately be reimbursed by Parliament. This Party is not prepared to say that we should not help the harder hit individuals on a case-by-case basis. However, if we were prepared to support that type of philosophy it would seem logical and appropriate that Parliament would be able to take a look at those individuals to determine whether we should be studying them on a case-by-case basis. However, the Government is not prepared to give us the names and the sources.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) rises in her place and says that we have a moral obligation to sign this cheque. What a perverse sense of definition, Mr. Speaker! The Minister of State bases her claim on morality. We on this side of the House ask where the morality was on March 25 when that Minister got up in her place and assured Parliament and the Canadian population at large that the Government knew what it was doing, that it had the appropriate information to lend the bail-out package which the House agreed to on March 25. I ask you today, based on the information that we have and on the inquiry information that is leaking out day after day, where the morality was on March 25 when that Minister assured the House that those banks would be viable if we approved the package. Now, Mr. Speaker, if we do not co-sign this blank cheque we are somehow going to be immoral about the entire affair.

Where was the morality of the Government when it knew about the mismanagement of the banks and continued to ask for support through Parliament? What about the bad administration and the 25 per cent of loans which were determined to be very risky and very poor in judgment and the poor documentation of the banks? Where was the morality of the Government, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and the Minister of State for Finance when they did not tell this House and Canadians about the mismanagement? Where was the morality in not allowing this House to set up its own parliamentary committee to investigate those two banks and any other banking matters? Where was the morality of not allowing Parliamentarians to delve into the facts, to take a look at the depositors, to look at how much money individuals or farmers or municipalities had on deposit with those particular banks?

Where was the morality, Mr. Speaker, in hiding the political fortunes of the Minister of State for Finance, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself by running to a Supreme Court Justice to have him take a look at the entire affair? Mr. Speaker, I do not say that to begrudge the integrity of any Supreme Court Justice, but because the individuals across the country have voted for the 282 men and women here Parliament has a moral obligation and a right to look into these questions without having to have a request through an outside body, let alone a judicial body, to look into what is purely and basically a politically motivated decision coming from the top of the Government.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, where is the morality in denying this Parliament a committee and where is the morality in refusing to get up during Question Period and answer questions genuinely asked, and in simply refusing to answer by saying that there is an inquiry? What are we doing here, Mr. Speaker? Why do these Ministers and the Prime Minister continue to come to Question Period if that is the type of answer that they are going to provide Canadians through this Chamber? Why bother at all, Mr. Speaker?

Where was the morality of the Budget that was introduced? They say that if we do not sign this blank cheque it will be immoral, yet the Government supposedly did not have the money, until Canadians made it change the policy to allow indexation for our senior citizens. In May it was saying that senior citizens had to help bring down the deficit and it was trying to legitimately justify something that could not be justified. It was the seniors of this country who forced the Government to reverse its perverse sense of logic absolutely lacking in morality.

Where is the morality in the deindexation of family allowances? It tried it with seniors and did not succeed so now the Government is hitting the mothers and children of the country. The Government says it has to remove indexation because it does not have the money in the coffer, yet it has the morality to turn around and ask for billions of dollars to bail out these banks. Where was the morality in the Budget which provided that as a result of all taxes, hidden and unhidden, by 1990 a family earning $15,000 to $20,000 is going to face a 36 per cent increase while a person earning $200,000 is going to face a 2 per cent increase? Where is the morality in that, Mr. Speaker? Yet the Minister of State comes to us today and tells us to sign the $875 million cheque. Is she serious? Is the Government serious? Canadians are laughing at the Government. It is unfortunate that Canadians are laughing at a serious and very delicate issue, but they are laughing at the incompetence of the Government.

Where was the morality in eliminating the RHOSP programs that allowed young Canadian families to buy homes? They removed the RHOSP because Canada could not afford it, but now Canada can afford billions of dollars for these banks. There are small businessmen which cannot get the assistance of the federal Government to compete internationally with Germany, Great Britain and Japan because we do not have the money to subsidize contract negotiations. Two specific companies lost contracts because they did not have the financial backing of the Government.

I detest profoundly, as do my constituents, when the Government and the Minister of State for Finance say that if we do not sign the $875 million cheque we are immoral. I submit to you with all due respect, Mr. Speaker, that the actions and decisions leading to the fiasco of these banks is a reflection of the immorality that sits on the other side of the House. It is for that good reason that I am supporting the amendment put forward this morning by my Leader.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I was quite intrigued by the argument presented by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) who questions the morality of the Government in this bail-out. While I suppose an argument can be made for a lack of morality, I do not know whether one could deem it immorality. Perhaps amorality is a much more likely and appropriate term since it is evident that the Government engages in rather too little thought to deliberately do something immoral. It is a Government of ineptitude. It is a Government that, on the evidence, does not give careful consideration to what it does.

We know that Hallowe'en is approaching and as it approaches we begin to think in terms of masquerades. Certainly from all that we have seen over the last few weeks, we see a group of people who are masquerading as a Government. They are pretending and seem to trip from one error to another, one pratfall to another with their masks hiding their true stupidity.

The other day we engaged in a brief discussion in this Chamber in examining what is transpiring within the context of what purports to be the Conservative philosophy. I believe it is worth repeating a couple of points raised at that time. As a result of its election, this Government has certainly dramatically encouraged the free enterprisers—especially those on the extreme right wing—to visit upon us all the slogans of the Darwinian notion of free market enterprise. These include the notion that we should get Government out of the board rooms of Canada, unleash free enterprise and get the Government off the backs of business people. It is a notion that there should be virtually no intervention on the part of the Government and that we should encourage risk taking because it is a tremendous stimulus to creativity and inventiveness. The very notion that one might lose is the process which encourages innovative approaches to economic development and growth.

Now we see a Government that is prepared to spend the money that belongs to ordinary Canadians, many of whom are suffering immeasurably in the present economic context, to pay for the losses of those who must have assumed by virtue of the return that they sought that there was a risk.

As my colleague, the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), has indicated, the differential between the cost of borrowing and the interest paid to depositors reflects that kind of risk. However, that risk has completely disappeared. Suddenly the Government is no longr interested in risk or a free enterprise economy without Government intervention. Now, the Government must rush in where I suggest others might have feared to tread. The Government's action has clearly denied its philosophy or shown us clearly that the philosophy was not as it was described at all. The Government is not opposed to welfare, it is just that the target is different.

It would have been at least tolerable to see this inconsistency in all of this debate, but as we have heard consistently in the debate, the Government says that all of this mess—it can be described as nothing else but an incompetently derived mess—is caused by an awful conspiracy on the part of the East to do in the West and that the National Energy Program was part of that conspiration action.

The Government would have us believe that one need not examine the issues here. One only has to make sure that enough money is poured into these two banks to demonstrate that the Government is not against the West.

The fact is that the Hitchman Report and any other number of facts would have demonstrated the utter fallaciousness, if not the malevolence of that argument. That argument is the moral equivalent of racism. It is divisive, inappropriate and diverts us from looking at the real issues.

The real issues stem from the fact that a number of factors may have made it difficult to survive in the recessionary period during which the downfall of the banks was initiated. However, to suggest that the Liberals are responsible for the failure of the Northland Bank, as has been implied by the arguments inferred from the Government side, is so bizarre as to suggest that indeed perhaps there are elements of immorality in this situation. Mr. Hitchman has pointed out that any close examination of the practices of the Canadian Commercial Bank would have exposed sloppiness and ineptitude, if not crookedness. None of this was revealed.

When I think about the machinations surrounding this bank bail-out, I am reminded of a peom about the blind man and the elephant. Let me read the first verse of the poem, which is familiar to many people:

> It was six men of Indostan
> To learning much inclined,
> Who went to see the elephant
> (Though all of them were blind),
> That each by observation
> Might satisfy his mind.

Of course, one blind man touched the elephant and thought it might be a tree, another thought it was a a snake and so on. This is analogous to the Inspector General of Banks looking at the CCB, the auditors looking at the CCB and Governor Bouey looking at the CCB, as well as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) looking at the CCB. The result with which we are all familiar reminds us of the last verse of the poem which states:

> So, oft in theologic wars
> The disputants, I ween,
> Rail on in utter ignorance
> Of what each other mean,
> And prate about an elephant
> Not one of them has seen!

Indeed, no one saw the bank. They poured money into the bank without ever seeing it. Mr. Hitchman has pointed out what should have been seen in the bank.

People in this country are suffering from inhumane tax measures directed at children. Let me cite one more quotation. It is very interesting in the present context. It states, "The Government can find hundreds of millions of dollars for bail-outs but the same Government refuses to allow our badly underfunded education system the money it needs to produce the highly trained manpower this country needs. Those are strange priorities, bizarre in the extreme". A Conservative said that, referring to a bail-out which is ant sized as compared to the elephant in this instance.

What is disturbing about this situation is that the Government talked about eliminating the deficit but now we see the spectacle of $1 billion being taken away from the taxpayers, which could have met the needs of ordinary Canadians, to bail out the Government and those involved in the bank as a result of their stupidity. This amendment must be passed.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, although not a financial expert, I thought it was my duty to take part in this debate where it concerns the motion by my leader to amend the motion on Bill C-79. I think the Bill should have been split in two, the purpose of the first part being to reimburse according to law, deposits not exceeding $60,000, and the second part would have been called Part II, for gamblers, because as far as amounts over and above $60,000 are concerned, only gamblers or people taking risks deposited their money with the Canadian Commercial Bank.

I simply want to say there is a matter of principle at stake here. We have said that the prestige of our banks has not been affected. However, as far as the public is concerned, a crack has appeared in the solid structure of our banks. We all know that money is a sensitive matter. When people say that a bank is in bad shape, the first thing you know, depositors are withdrawing their savings.

If we consider this for a while, we realize that our Canadian banking institutions have always been strong and sound, with a formidable reputation and one of the best banking systems in the world. I am sure that our bankers, who have always worked quietly and unassumingly, will be able to repair this crack in the prestige of our Canadian banking system.

I may add that the Government has a duty to provide for regular inspection of our banks. In fact, that is why we have a system with inspectors who see to it that banking operations are carried out in a normal way that is beneficial to the public. In this particular case we are talking about new banks, and I want to refer more specifically to the Canadian Commercial Bank which was established in 1975. I think the Government had a duty to provide more and closer supervision than it did in the case of other institutions with an established reputation and the stability that is typical of our Canadian banking system. If we refer to Hansard when the bank was created in 1975, we find the following description of the bank's activities, in the Senate Debates:

> They will specialize—
> —the branches of this Bank—
> —their lending in higher yielding business loans, resource financing, real estate financing, term loans, loans to small businesses, and the like.

And also the following:

The risk that is sometimes associated with these assets will be minimized by close, specialized management and forms of insurance, such as mortgage insurance.

Mr. Speaker, with hindsight, it would appear that management was poor. That is why I am saying that perhaps this particular bank, like the Northland Bank, should have been the object of closer monitoring since it was a new bank. Ten years in the life of a bank is not very long, Mr. Speaker, but now we know what can happen: with assets of $40 million it ended up in a $4 billion-plus bankruptcy. Again I refer to the history of the creation of the bank in 1975. After the sponsors made their statements to convince the Senate that the Bill ought to be adopted, Senator Heath asked a very relevant question, and I quote:

Is there any provision for a restriction on the percentage of shares that can be owned or controlled by individual, corporate or government shareholders?

Here is Senator Hays' answer:

This will be a private bank, and its innovators would like to see, as principal shareholders, Canadian institutions, primarily pension plans. There may be 25 such institutions, each holding 4 per cent of the shares. There are laws to ensure percentage of holdings.

So no provision was made for shares held by individuals. Senator Molson found it rather strange—he still had a sharp mind with respect to financial matters—that the sponsor of the Bill would react like that, so he asked:

When my honourable friend says it will be a "wholesale" bank, does he mean there will be no phase of its activities that deals with the ordinary, small individual; that there will be no banking for the ordinary, small operator or depositor? I am not quite clear about the term "wholesale" in this case.

So there is the crux of the problem, Mr. Speaker, and that is what led to the collapse of the bank. It is unfortunate that at that time some senators managed, so to speak, to dig the grave of the bank even before it was born. For this reason, the various Governments should have paid a special attention to this bank from the start, since the basic principles were, should I say, perverted. According to a basic economic rule, the higher the yield, the higher the risk. All those institutions, organizations or Governments which had invested in this bank more then $60,000 wanted to make more money. It was high-risk capital, therefore, which should be excluded from this Bill, at least until we are advised of the names of those who will benefit from the Government's generosity.

The City of Hull, which is part of my own riding, had invested $12 million in this banking institution. Do you know why? Simply because it wanted to get more interest on its investment. In other words, it took a risk, and the people are going to suffer, but in the end they are likely to punish those they had elected not to risk the capital entrusted to them but to protect it. The duty of any appointed or elected administration of a public organization, municipality or group is to make sure that the invesments he or she makes on behalf of the community are secure investments and not high-risk ones. That is precisely the point I am trying to make and that is why I will support this amendment, together with my colleagues, so that we do not waste the taxpayers' money to compensate those gamblers who invested more than the $60,000 limit of insured deposits.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on Bill C-79 which is a proposal by the Government to bail-out a major bank in the country.

• (1640)

Before this debate began, before this issue was raised in the House of Commons, I, like most other Canadians, never gave too much thought to the banking industry. This debate has been a particular eye-opener for me and for average Canadians who are not involved in the field of high finances in their daily lives.

For example, I always considered the Inspector General of Banks to be just that. I always had the vision of some person who was high in authority and was in fact a general, in the sense that his main role would be to police the operations of the banking industry. It has come to light during this debate that the Inspector General of Banks has a total staff of some eight people to police the expenditures and investments of billions of dollars of ordinary Canadians' money. If we examine what the Inspector General and his staff of eight people are required to do, we find that they are financed and paid for by the banks. In other words, the banks are paying the Inspector General and his eight inspectors to police themselves. This may be one of the reasons that we find ourselves in the kind of difficulty with which we are faced today.

It must be realized that we are talking about a first instalment only. The House is being asked to provide a first instalment of $875 million of taxpayers' money. This money is not for people who invested or saved $1,000 in a bank account or even $5,000 or $6,000. All those people will be covered under depositors' insurance for investments up to $60,000. We are talking about $875 million of taxpayers' money, and 70 per cent of that amount will be directed to large corporations and foreign banks. We are talking about people who are used to high risk investments in the banking and financial industry. They knew what the risks were before putting money in. Having known that risk, they are now not prepared to absorb it. It looks as if the Government, in this Bill, fully supports what these corporations and foreign banks are demanding of Canadian taxpayers. It is totally unfair. What makes it doubly unfair is that the Government will not even tell us who are these people, making the argument that the information is confidential and that confidentiality would be harmed if Canadian taxpayers were told to whom they were paying this money. The Government argues legalities. Legalities or no legalities, Canadian taxpayers are entitled to that information.

As a Member of Parliament, I represent a constituency that does not have an over-abundance of rich people. My constituents work extremely hard for their money. They are fully entitled to that information so that they can make a judgment on whether or not the payment of $875 million is actually justified. What they have told me is that they do not see the justification for it and certainly do not accept the argument of the Government that depositors have to be protected both in name and in their investments. In fact, people have written to me on other issues and have made comparisons. When the Government decided to reduce the deficit, it made the argument that senior citizens were prepared to support its effort to do so by accepting the deindexation of their Old Age Security. The Government made the argument that senior citizens would accept that for the sake of the national economy. If I recall correctly, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tagged on to that argument that as soon as the economy improved, the Government would try to move to improve pensions. I find it passing strange that the Government could put up that kind of argument in defence of attacking senior citizens, but could not put up the same one when it came to protecting foreign banks and large corporations. It had absolutely no difficulty reaching into the taxpayers' purse overnight to find $875 million as a first instalment, and the Government will come along later with a request for another several hundred million dollars for foreign banks and large corporations. The Government attempted to attack senior citizens until they said that enough was enough and made it back off. In addition, it proposed a reduction in transfer payments to the provinces for the provision of medicare and post-secondary education to the tune of $2 billion over the next five years or six years. What is the Government's argument for doing that? It is because the deficit is too large. It has to reduce the deficit, and it believes that the only way to do it is by going after people who are sick and who need assistance and by going after students who need assistance to attend university. That is how the Government wants to reduce the deficit, but it does not make the same argument when it comes to banks and corporations.

Mr. Riis: What about family allowances?

Mr. Young: We know what the Government is trying to do to the family allowances. It is attacking families, women and children who are a major resource to the future of Canada. It has no compunctions in that regard, but it feels sorry for the corporations and for the foreign banks and goes out of its way to protect them.

There is a housing crisis in Canada. There are people in Metropolitan Toronto and elsewhere who cannot find decent, affordable housing. What is the Government doing about that? It is cutting back in the funding for housing under CMHC programs. If the Government was elected by Canadians to represent their best interest, it sure has a funny way of carrying out that mandate. If there is a shortage of affordable, adequate, good housing, surely the Government should be finding the money to stimulate housing growth in the public sector. It would not only provide a socially useful purpose; it would provide jobs. The more jobs created, the better the economy. It is general knowledge that for every job created in housing construction, another three to four jobs are created in spin-off industries, such as electrical manufacturing, appliance manufacturing, plumbing and housing materials. We could create many jobs in Canada if there was a political will to do it. The money is there. There is $875 million for the corporations and foreign banks, but there ain't any money for ordinary Canadians who need financial support at the present time.

In my remaining minute, let me indicate that I was a member of the Standing Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped which produced a report containing 130 recommendations. To my knowledge the Government has hardly acted on any of them. The total amount of money required to implement every one of those recommendations would be less than 1 per cent of the total expenditure in the social services budget. If the Government seriously wanted to do something in the best interest of Canadians, and if it had the political will to do so, then that is the direction it would take. It would stop chumming with the banks and corporations and take into account the severe hardship which exists for many Canadians and do something about it.

[Translation]

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I lend my support today to an amendment moved by the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, Mr. John Turner, the Member of Parliament for Vancouver Quadra.

Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to read this amendment:

This House declines to give second reading to a Bill, the principle of which is to permit payments of large, but unspecified amounts of public moneys to unspecified persons or corporations, thereby substantially denigrating parliamentary accountability for expenditure of public funds.

What are the important words in this amendment, Mr. Speaker? These words are, and I quote:

—large, but unspecified amounts—

I repeat, large, but unspecified amounts. Mr. Speaker, we are being asked to give blindly $875 million, and probably even more eventually.

In my humble opinion, it is shocking that, because of the lack of concern, the negligence and the incompetence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), Member for Etobicoke Centre, and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), Member for St. Paul's, the Government wants to bleed ordinary people, workers and small wage-earners.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment also says the following:

—to unspecified persons or corporations—

● (1650)

I would like to know which Conservative Member, which Government Member, in his own private business, would give a blank cheque to a company before seeing what he will be getting in return. Mr. Speaker, I think that this shows total incompetence. It is unacceptable. The Ministers have the audacity to ask us for an enormous blank cheque. As I have said, Mr. Speaker, I would very much like to see a Member on the other side make out a blank cheque to any business whatsoever without knowing what he will get for it. Canadians have the right to know where these $875 million are going.

How can we explain to the Canadian people what is going on? Who asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for this Bill? What does the Bill introduced by the Minister of State for Finance hide? Mr. Speaker, has the Government examined what this will mean for the economy of our country? What will be the consequences of all this? The Ministers ask us to trust them. But what are we trusting them to do? We are signing what? We are paying out to whom? Who are the people, who are the corporations to whom we will be giving the money? Mr. Speaker, let me tell you that on this side of the House, we no longer have any confidence in this Government. We no longer have any confidence in its bad managers. We no longer have any confidence in this Progressive Conservative Government that is replete with incompetence people on that side of the House. Moreover, they are keeping from us the names of the beneficiaries, of those who will be receiving those $875 million, of those who will be receiving all that money. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that since that money belongs to the Canadian people, to every Canadian man and woman, we all are entitled to know, you Tory gentlemen, where you are going to put those $875 million.

Imagine for a moment what we could do . . . Madam Minister, you could pay attention, this will be of much interest to you also. Anyway, you were just elected in this House. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, what we could do with that money. Let us for a moment turn our mind to our senior citizens, let us consider for a moment the family allowances. Let us remember our poor mothers you want to deprive of their money, and think of the de-indexing of family allowances. Think of our senior citizens. They wanted to clip their wings off recently, cutting down part of the indexation. Think of senior citizens, of artists living on very small salaries.

Think also, and I am sorry the Minister of State (Small Businesses) (Mr. Bissonnette) is not in this House, yes, think a little, Mr. Minister, about the small and medium-sized businesses you claim you want to help. Instead of paying out those $875 million to people, to businesses the names of which you refuse to disclose . . . Are you hiding something, you Tories? Are you afraid to tell us whom this money will be going to? To people in the Montreal East End, to Quebecers, to Canadians of both sexes? Everyone has the right to know to whom you want to give those $875 million. Have you thought a little of the people working for Vickers, for Gulf Canada, for Bombardier to whom you may want to make other proposals?

Therefore, as a Member of this House, when I am asked to sign a blank cheque for $875 million, my reaction is I would even forbid those who are close to me, my children, my wife, and everyone else to sign a blank cheque to anyone. You have no right to do that, gentlemen!

The Government House Leader is looking at me and laughing. I will ask him this question: In your own business would you sign a blank cheque for goods to be delivered without knowing who will make the delivery and to whom the cheque should go? I would therefore ask you gentlemen to be more conscientious and responsible. I think you are mature enough. You were called upon as a result of an election to represent your constituents. Have you taken a poll in your constituency to learn how many persons are ready to sign a blank cheque for $875 million?

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is rising and seems quite surprised. Now, Mr. Minister, I ask you personally: Are you ready to sign a blank cheque? You are pointing at me, but you only have to nod to say that you would sign a blank cheque and I think you will then be told that you lack maturity.

There is not one responsible indidivual in this House who would dare to sign a blank cheque, whatever the amount, payable to anybody . . . I see that you are giving me the signal, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you.

Finally, I would ask all my colleagues to support the amendment introduced by the Leader of the Opposition, the Right Hon. John Turner.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that there have been consultations among the representatives of the Parties of the House and that it has not been possible to reach an agreement pursuant to Standing Order 82 or 83 with regard to the allocation of time to the second reading stage of Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits. Therefore, at the next sitting of the House it is my intention to propose the following motion pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 84:

That, in relation to Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the said Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of Government Business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I think that what we have just heard is an absolute disgrace. At a time when such a matter is before a judicial inquiry, costing the taxpayers of Canada in excess of $1 billion, to think that we are not—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Gauthier: Another phoney point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would not have termed the point of order of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) a phoney point of order, just an improper point of order.

I rise, as I indicated I would earlier this day, to announce the business of the House for the next week.

Mr. Prud'homme: We should not even listen to you after what you have just said.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the reality is that we have legislation which we would like to deal with. Tomorrow it is my intention to call as the first item of business a report from the Senate on a Bill with respect to amendments to the Criminal Code concerning pari-mutuels. Your Honour will recall, as will Members of the House, that this Bill received all three readings in the House. There has been an amendment proposed in the Senate which the Government is prepared to accept. I understand from my discussions with representatives of the opposition Parties that they are agreeable to dealing with that amendment. It is proposed as the first item of business for tomorrow in order that it can be passed and that the Bill can be prepared for Royal Assent.

Second, there is a Bill with respect to the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories with respect to certain ordinances as has been reported, without amendment, from the committee. I believe there would be a disposition to deal with that Bill as the second item of business and to deal with the report stage and third reading tomorrow so that the matter can be referred to the other place for consideration.

Finally, for tomorrow, the Bill with respect to the salary adjustment for the Governor General, Lieutenants-Governor and judges will be called as the third item of business for debate. Hopefully, the matter can be given second reading so that the committee can consider the provisions of the Bill.

Next week the sequence of Bills to follow would be Bill C-75, a Bill relating to amendments to the Canada Shipping Act, followed by the Bill with respect to employment equity, followed by the Bill with respect to the dissolution of Canagrex.

That is the sequence of legislation which we can look forward to in the course of next week. As I have indicated on previous occasions, we will be monitoring the progress and we will continue our consultations with opposition House Leaders and if there is any change I will make an announcement at the earliest possible date.

Business of the House

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader has just indicated the business he wants to call for tomorrow and next week. Particularly with respect to tomorrow, I wish to say that while there have been consultations earlier today with respect to what business might be called tomorrow, these consultations took place before we knew that the Government House Leader would rise in his place this afternoon and move a motion of closure to choke off debate on a measure for which the Government wishes to hand out $1 billion of taxpayers' money to a number of unidentified people, likely unworthy millionaire friends of the Government. I say on behalf of the Canadian people that this is a shocking move. The legislation which the Government wants to call tomorrow is worthy legislation; but none of the Bills are as important as the Bill to bail out the uninsured depositors with $1 billion of taxpayers' funds. The Government should be ashamed of itself for trying to choke off debate on that Bill without adequate debate. The Government is moving a motion for a $1 billion cover-up—

Ms. Copps: Muzzle.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): It is a $1 billion muzzle. Surely, it will be called to account by the Canadian people for this effort to choke off debate when it should be leaving debate before this House so that this matter can be properly explored, understood and defeated.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the representation made by the House Leader of the Official Opposition. Indeed, he will confirm that we have had discussions about the Bill which were unsuccessful, as I indicated in my remarks, with respect to limiting the debate on the second reading stage of the Bill concerning the CCB. The hon. gentleman will be the first to acknowledge and appreciate the fact that this will not spell the end of debate by any means. This is just the beginning. We have had over eight hours of debate on this matter at the second reading stage. There will be an opportunity to refer the matter to committee where it can be examined in detail. There is also the report stage and the third reading stage when the matter will come back before the House after the committee stage. I am sure Hon. Members opposite will realize by that time that there are many small people out there who are depositors in this institution, people in western Canada who will want an indication from the Opposition that they have an interest in the situation. There are credit unions, municipalities and people of all walks of life who are involved and who want to know that the Government of Canada—

Ms. Copps: They want answers from the Government. On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I cannot recognize the Hon. Member—

Ms. Copps: It is a point of order with respect to the business question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) on the business question.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I have just heard the Government House Leader state that there is no new information that can be brought forward. There are a number of Members on all sides of the House, including myself—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I wish to confirm that, indeed, discussions did take place with my Party's House Leader. There was agreement with respect to the nature and flow of business in the order as presented by the Government House Leader. Since the time allocation motion has been introduced, will the Government House Leader indicate that while it is prepared to muzzle the discussion at this particular stage that it will provide full opportunity once this matter reaches the legislative committee to ensure that all the appropriate witnesses can appear and be questioned by Members from all sides of the table?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I will answer those matters which fall within my jurisdiction. Obviously, the sequence of business has been discussed with the House Leaders so we do have an indication of the business for tomorrow. With respect to the procedure on second reading, it is hard for me to comment except to say that the Hon. Member will be the first to acknowledge that there will be a reasonable examination of this matter in committee. That has been the practice of our Government with respect to all legislation.

• (1710)

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, once more the House Leader of the Government is making arrangements with the House Leaders. It is his right, of course, to announce the legislation for tomorrow so we are not taken by surprise, so we know what is going to be discussed. That is fair. However, he should give us more than a few hours' notice when he again intends to call Bill C-79. There are people who want to speak on the Bill and they may be out of town on legitimate political business. I submit to you, Sir, with a Bill of such importance there must be long and careful debate. I have spoken with my House Leader. He is not aware when the Government House Leader intends to again call the Bill.

As an Hon. Member of this House who has spoken only 10 minutes this morning and who has a great interest in this Bill like every other Hon. Member, I would like to participate in the debate. I know my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) would like to participate in the debate but she may now be cut off. There are other Hon. Members who would like to participate. They do not want to be taken by surprise.

Would the Government House Leader tell us when he intends to call that Bill?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There has been a question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the representation of the Hon. Member. He will understand that it is not a question of calling the Bill, it is a question of having the motion brought forward with respect to time allocation.

I try to give reasonable and adequate notice of all of the intentions of the Government with respect to moving these Bills forward, as I have in the past. I can only reiterate the fact that there are a lot of opportunities for further discussion of this Bill. This is not the end of the Bill. The Hon. Member's protestation would be effective if we were ending the discussion, but we are not. We are only in the midst of discussion of this Bill. We still have the committee stage, the report stage, third reading stage and I think by that time there will have been adequate opportunity for the proper examination of the legislation.

I am simply appealing to Hon. Members to keep this matter in perspective. I assure them that in bringing forward legislation we like to ensure that there is a reasonable opportunity for participation in debate. We have extended the debate all this week. We are now going into committee where there will be a possibility of having a thorough examination clause by clause. Ultimately the Bill will come back to the floor of the House and there will be an opportunity for the Hon. Member, I suppose, to address himself to this legislation again.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I would like to point out to the House that the Government seems to be using closure for Bills when it wants to impose its authority.

Yesterday in the House, the Minister tabled the comprehensive response to the Second and Third Reports, and said: "We are in favour of parliamentary reform". I submit to the Minister that parliamentary reform means that parliamentarians are able to participate fully in debate and are not gagged by the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.13 o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

ADVISABILITY OF DECLARING CANADA A NUCLEAR ARMS FREE ZONE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of declaring Canada a nuclear arms free zone by prohibiting the deployment, testing, construction and transportation of nuclear weapons and associated equipment through and within Canada, the export of goods and materials for use in the construciton and deployment of nuclear arms and further, the Government should encourage cities, provinces and states throughout the world to undertake similar action.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the terrible potential of nuclear weapons entered into the public consciousness shortly after the first atomic bomb was dropped on the Japanese cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Never before had human beings unleashed such a powerful and concentrated form of destruction. Since that time, when the nuclear arsenal was very small, nuclear fire power has grown so that now it is estimated that there are more than 50,000 weapons in existence globally with a total explosive power equal to 1.5 million times that of the bomb which devastated Hiroshima. Every year the nuclear arsenal grows in destructiveness and sophistication.

Even if we pass this resolution, we will not solve the problem overnight. Canada is not a superpower. Canada does not have the ability to unilaterally end the arms race. However, as a middle power, with a well respected reputation as a peace keeper, Canada does have a role to play in preventing nuclear war.

Nuclear war is what is at stake here. I am not being melodramatic when I say what we have to worry about is the survival of the earth. If nuclear weapons are ever used, it will mean the complete destruction of human society. Some theorists talk about a limited or winable nuclear war. In my view, Mr. Speaker, this is pure folly and I believe it is understood as that by most people. The solution is not to develop better weapons to ensure our side will win in any conflict but to ensure that the stockpile of nuclear armaments is never used.

The destructive capability of nuclear weapons is well known. The missiles all over the world are posed and ready. There is little question that any nuclear engagement would surely escalate so that major population centres across the world would suffer severe damage. It is estimated that in an all-out nuclear war, 1,150,000,000 people would die and 1.1 billion people would be injured. These numbers would be considerably increased as the effects of radiation took their toll.

Those injured would not have access to medical help because the bulk of our medical facilities and personal are in the areas targeted by nuclear missiles. As it was put in an article in the United Nations Chronicle, and I quote:

The whole infrastructure required for dealing with serious injuries—operating rooms, nurses, blood, antibiotics, drugs, water supplies, electricity, telephones, heating, transport services—would be in disarray.

It goes on to state that those not killed or injured by the blast would be the victims of radiation.

It was not until 1962 that researchers discovered the existence of the phenomenon called electromagnetic pulse. It is a surge of electromagnetic energy caused by a nuclear explosion which disables telephones, radio, television, computers, radar systems and power grids. According to Princeton University physicist Daniel L. Stein, writing in the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, and I quote:

Even if permanently damaged, computer memories would be erased, digital systems might process incorrect signals, trajectories of missiles in flight could be altered, and power outages might occur.

The electromagnetic pulse means that there would be even less chance of a partial nuclear war being possible because with the failure of electronic communications across the world, who could be able to order a stop to the attack or counter-attack?

This is an example of the unknowns which we must face in the nuclear age. The power we are dealing with in nuclear weapons is awesome and irreversible but it is also largely unknown.

Another example is the recently discovered and widely discussed concept of nuclear winter. Even a much smaller number of nuclear devices than could be expected, say, in an all-out nuclear conflict, would cause serious environmental damage, making the earth a very inhospitable place. Aside from the short-term effects of nuclear blast and thermal waves, survivors would face extreme cold, water shortages, lack of food and fuel, heavy burden of radiation and pollutants, diseases and severe physilogical stress, all in twilight and darkness.

Another study released in January of this year by the Royal Society of Canada, on the environmental impact of nuclear war, concluded that a nuclear exchange between the superpowers would probably destroy Canadian agriculture even if no Canadian targets were bombed. It is frightening to think that this was nearly 40 years ago, after the development of nuclear weapons technology and before this particular effect became widely known. That makes me wonder what other results so far unimagined are going to be discovered.

There is no doubt that this escalation of the arms race has heightened the fears of not only Canadians but of people around the world that the threat of a nuclear exchange is indeed a real threat. All of this at a time when we should be developing programs to assist people around the world to live a better life is unforgivable. Moneys and other resources we put toward the arms race are money and resources which we cannot dedicate to providing safe drinking water to everyone in the world, eliminating illiteracy, improving health and developing agricultural resources. The United Nations sponsored a three-year study of the linkage between disarmament and development by 27 experts from every area of the world. The group concluded in its 1981 report that the world has a choice. It can continue to pursue the arms race or it can move with deliberate speed toward a more sustainable economic and political order, but it cannot do both. The arms race and economic development are in a competitive relationship. Even the Brandt Report emphasized that one-half of 1 per cent of one year's military expenditures would pay for all the farm equipment needed to increase food production and approach self-sufficiency in food deficient, low-income countries by 1990.

In the developed world, military expenditures are often defended because of the alleged jobs they create. Everyone should know that in fact military spending is one of the least effective ways of providing people with employment. One of the supposed advantages of Canadian involvement in the Strategic Defence Initiative is its job creation potential. Any serious look at this proposal would show that in this area, as in many others, the SDI proposal is a bad one. Studies have shown that, in comparison to other uses of the same money, military spending is one of the least effective ways to stimulate job creation. U.S. Labour Department figures show that 28,000 jobs are created for every $1 billion spent on military procurement. That same amount would create 32,000 jobs if spent for public transit, 57,000 jobs if spent for personal consumption, or 71,000 jobs if spent on education. For those workers presently working in arms production, the solution is the conversion of those facilities to non-military and socially useful production. Obviously this cannot be done overnight and not without considerable research, but it is something the Government will be forced to consider over time.

As I said earlier, the proposal to make Canada a nuclear arms free zone will not solve all the world's problems with regard to the nuclear threat. It is, however, an appropriate response for Canada as a middle power in the world with a considerable reputation as a peace-keeper. By bringing about the aims of this resolution we would enhance Canada's reputation and prestige on the world stage and set an example for other countries.

After considerable controversy, Mr. Speaker, the previous Government acquiesced to U.S. requests to test the Cruise missile. The Conservatives, while in Opposition and now in Government, supported this decision. We in the NDP have opposed this testing all along. Canada has a considerable arms industry. Some manufacturers are involved in nuclear weapons technology. Litton Industries, which is working on the guidance system for the cruise missile, springs to mind. Several U.S. weapons with the potential to be nuclear armed when deployed were and are being tested at the Canadian Maritime Experimental and Test Range at Nanoose Bay on Vancouver Island. Included among these weapons is an anti-submarine rocket. This rocket is fired from surface ships, weighs half a ton and consists of a rocket motor and either a MK 46 torpedo or a nuclear depth bomb of one kiloton. With a range of six miles, this weapon is the primary anti-submarine warfare weapon of U.S. frigates, destroyers and some cruisers. It has been the U.S. military's policy to neither confirm nor deny whether American vessels visiting Nanoose and other bases in Canada carry nuclear weapons. Our Government is content to leave it at that. Along with many other Canadians, I say that is not good enough. The intent of this resolution would prevent visiting vessels from carrying nuclear arms.

For over a year the Nanoose Conversion Campaign has had a peace camp at Nanoose to arouse public awareness about the possibility of submarines carrying nuclear arms. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The-Islands (Mr. Manly), has raised the issue of whether visiting U.S. submarines at Nanoose Bay and Esquimalt are armed with nuclear-tipped Tomahawk cruise missiles. He has presented petitions to the House from people opposed to these vessels which are possibly armed with nuclear weapons. The Tomahawk has a range of 1,350 miles and, according to William M. Arkin, Director of the Arms Race and Nuclear Weapons Research Project of the Institute for Policy Studies in Washington, D.C., it is the nuclear weapon most likely to be in on the start of both World War III and World War IV. To quote Arkin a little further, the Tomahawk can also, the Navy believes, contribute to fighting a controlled and limited nuclear war. This concept is absurd and Canada should let the Americans know we think so. One way would be to forbid nuclear-armed Tomahawks in Canadian waters. The Canada-U.S. agreement for the base at Nanoose expires in April, 1986. Needless to say, this agreement should not be renewed. There are other examples of Canadian nuclear involvement. Our Department of Energy, Mines and Resources gathers gravitational data in the Arctic which is used to improve the accuracy and the counter-force capability of U.S. ballistic missiles. The Government recently came forward with its decision on star wars. Because of widespread and strong opposition to the Canadian participation in SDI, the Government declined the U.S. Government's invitation to participate directly in SDI research. It left the door open, however, for the participation of, and even grants and subsidies to, Canadian companies.

There has been considerable debate on the star wars issue in Canada. The NDP has come out solidly against the proposal. The theory of deterrence in nuclear strategy holds that because the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. have the ability to destroy each other, the threatened use of this ability in a retaliatory strike prevents one superpower from attacking the other. Although it is possible to question and challenge deterrence from a number of perspectives, no one in political or military power has advocated abandoning deterrence. The concern has been of technological advance which could give one side a momentary advantage over the other. Star wars is just that sort of destabilizing technology. Foreign policy, defence and strategic thinking would move from seeing nuclear weapons as an unthinkable retaliatory force, to nuclear war as a useable, potentially successful tool of international and military policy. According to the former U.S. Ambassador to the UN, George Ball, the SDI announcement in March, 1983, was "one of the most irresponsible acts by any head of state in modern times".

There are a number of reasons why star wars would not work. It is dangerous because it is the abandonment of deterrence by the United States. Star Wars will be destabilizing, dangerous, costly and will never be able to make the United States safe from a nuclear attack.

• (1730)

Discussion of the concept of a nuclear weapons free zone has a long history in some parts of the world. In Canada the legislature of the Province of Manitoba passed a resolution declaring that province a nuclear weapons free zone. Over 80 municipalities in Canada have declared themselves nuclear weapons free zones. Last year nearly half a million Canadians signed a peace petition calling for, among other things, a nuclear weapons free zone in Canada.

The final report of the United Nations Special Session on Disarmament in 1978 declared that "the establishment of nuclear weapons free zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among states in the region concerned constitutes an important disarmament initiative. The process of establishing such zones should be encouraged with the ultimate objective of achieving a world free of nuclear weapons".

This is an area in which Canada can play a responsible role in reducing nuclear tension. There is already an international agreement signed in 1967 prohibiting nuclear weapons in Latin America. In the Nordic countries proposals for a nuclear weapons free zone has become one of the most debated foreign policy initiatives. In 1983 the Finnish President discussed the prospect with then Soviet Prime Minister Andropov who declared that the Soviet Union was willing to discuss the possibility of including the Baltic Sea in such a zone. The discussions are a long way from being settled on this issue, but that this debate is even taking place is a hopeful sign.

The possibility of a nuclear free zone in the Balkans has been discussed by Bulgaria, Greece, Romania, Yugoslavia and Turkey. Progress has been limited in these multilateral talks, but the concept is frequently discussed in bilateral talks among the Balkan countries. According to Nikos Andrikos, a special counselor to Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou, one must be optimistic that the denuclearization of the Balkans will soon become a reality.

The South Pacific is another area that is proposed as a nuclear free zone. In August of 1984, the leaders of the 13 member states of the South Pacific Forum endorsed an Australian proposal to establish a nuclear free zone in the region. There are some substantial differences of opinions between these states, but despite these differences they have been able to give their initial agreement to proceed based on the Australian formula.

It is time for Canada to take the initiative in this area. Canada has viewed its options too narrowly and has not been willing to take an independent enough foreign policy position. I do not agree with those who say that taking a more independent course will lessen the stability of the world. Making Canada a nuclear weapons free zone will set an example for others in the world and will be a concrete step toward making the world a safe place.

I hope that Members on the Government side do not opt to talk this resolution out as is often the case, but will take a realistic and humanistic view of this resolution and agree to have it referred to committee where witnesses can appear to give testimony and where we will be able to listen to the views of ordinary Canadians who are extremely concerned and becoming increasingly so about this particular issue.

Finally, if the Government were to adopt a more mature attitude toward matters such as this, we could provide an awful lot of good to people who are less advantaged than us throughout the world. We could use the moneys we are spending on armament build-ups to serve that purpose. I hope that the Government Members have listened to me. I know that my good friend the Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) has. I can see it in his eyes and I know that he will be persuading the Members on that side of the House to come around to my point of view.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I consider it an honour and privilege to be able to speak on this subject this afternoon. When we discuss humane and realistic approaches, the position which Canada has taken with regard to human rights in the world today is the position we took when we went to the Soviet Union with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and is a continuation of the position that we have taken in South Africa with regard to apartheid. We have taken this position with dignity and force in Central America and I look forward to being involved with human rights wherever there are people who suffer. For me it is an honour to be able to speak on this particular subject.

Last March 18 the House had a full debate on Bill C-218, an Act to declare Canada a Nuclear Weapons Free Zone. Today we are asked to debate the question of declaring Canada a nuclear arms free zone which would prohibit the deployment, testing, construction and transportation of nuclear weapons and associate equipment through and within Canada and the export of goods and materials for use in the construction and deployment of nuclear arms. From my point of view, there is no difference in substance between a nuclear weapons free zone and a nuclear arms free zone. This being the case, although the Government position on this matter has not changed between March 18 and today, this is a good opportunity to repeat certain aspects of our policy on nuclear weapons free or nuclear arms free zones.

On June 30, 1984 Canada removed the last remaining nuclear-tipped Genie air-to-air missiles which were to be used in wartime in an air defence role by Canadian CF-101 Voodoo interceptors. The air defence role has now been taken over by CF-18 aircraft which can do the same job using conventional weapons systems only. There are no nuclear weapons stationed on Canadian soil which is not the case, however, for at least eight of 16 members of NATO. Overflight of American aircraft with nuclear weapons, or port visits by nuclear-powered war ships, some of which may bear nuclear weapons, were they to occur, would do so only with the express permission of the Canadian Government. The same consultations and permission would be required for the deployment of any other nuclear weapons within Canadian territory.

Thus, while in some respects Canada may be regarded as a de facto nuclear weapons free zone following the withdrawal of the last nuclear capable aircraft from service with the Canadian Armed Forces, we continue to participate fully in the defence alliance, NATO, which employs a nuclear deterrent. Accordingly, possible comparisons with the practices of other countries which are not members of NATO are not particularly valid.

Canada is a member of the North Atlantic Alliance and has now been for more than 36 years. We joined the Alliance because we believed in the concept of collective security—a united effort to deter aggression or to counter it should conflict occur. There were many advantages to such an Alliance. However, the most telling advantages were then, and continue to be, the united strength which accrued to the Alliance enabling it to resist undue external political and military pressure to reduce the cost of defence by dispersing the burden of armaments among the member states.

Similarly, NATO has enabled the West to speak with a unified voice on critical issues of international security and to pursue the progressive development of east-west relations in a coherent fashion. It is an invaluable forum for nations such as Canada to express their views and to exert a constructive and moderating influence on the policy directions taken by the western powers in their relations vis-à-vis the East Bloc.

However, while Canada enjoys the collective security and influence given by membership in NATO, Canada also recognizes the need to share the burden of this collective security. It should be noted here that no NATO country has declared itself unilaterally a nuclear weapons free zone. As a point of clarification, Iceland has not declared itself a nuclear weapons free zone as has been erroneously reported in some news media. The Icelandic Parliament, in its resolution of last May, simply reiterated its old policy that no nuclear weapons be situated in Iceland without the prior consent of Icelandic authorities. The Icelandic Parliament has also envisaged that its Foreign Affairs Committee explore possible participation and further discussions of a nuclear weapons free zone in northern Europe encompassing an area from Greenland to the Ural Mountains.

The proposal to make Canada a nuclear arms free zone might have the effect of prohibiting the testing of the cruise missile in Canada. The decision by the previous Government to allow the United States to test unarmed air launched cruise missiles in Canada was seen as consistent with that Government's support for NATO's two-track policy which led to the deployment of ground-launched cruise and Pershing II missiles in several NATO European countries. This Government decided to allow the United States to continue with its testing program because it believes that the cruise missile is an essential element in the global balance of deterrence and is part of the western response to the modernization by the Soviet Union of its offensive and defensive nuclear systems during the 1970s. This Soviet modernization continues into the 1980s.

It must also be remembered that NATO has had to rely on nuclear weapons to overcome the potential threat present in the great preponderance of Warsaw Pact conventional forces. It would not be in NATO's interest to give up the option of the possible use of nuclear weapons as a deterrent should the Warsaw Pact forces ever contemplate an attack on the West. At the same time, however, it should be noted that NATO upholds the United Nations Charter which lays down that all members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means and that there be no use of force—any force—against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state.

The proposal would also prohibit the construction of any components of nuclear weapons in Canada. Regarding Canadian co-operation in the production of U.S. cruise missiles, Litton Systems Canada Limited was awarded the subcontract by the U.S. Department of Defence through its parent company in the United States, Litton Industries, to produce a portion of the inertial guidance system for the cruise missile. Litton's participation in a small part of the cruise missile vehicle program should not be taken as a change in Canadian policies instituted at the end of the 1960s to divest our armed forces of a nuclear weapon capability. It is, however, consistent with joint defence efforts with our NATO allies who rely in part on the maintenance of a credible nuclear deterrent in the face of the growing military threat from hostile forces.

The proposal before us today also calls for the Government to encourage cities, provinces and states throughout the world also to become nuclear weapons free zones. While someone else will speak on the question of regional nuclear weapons free zones, I would like to comment on the question of Canadian cities and provinces declaring themselves nuclear weapon free zones. We recognize that there is an important symbolic value in the declaration of a nuclear weapons free zone as an expression of the desire of mankind to be free from the threat of nuclear war. However, any responsible Government must look at the real implications of what a nuclear weapons free zone means from the point of view of security.

The Hon. Member has reminded us that there are over 50,000 nuclear weapons stockpiled, 90 per cent of them in the United States and Soviet Union with the other 10 per cent dispersed throughout the United Kingdom, France and China. There may be other countries with that same capability.

I remind the hon. gentleman that some 40 years ago, before the advent of the first nuclear weapon, mankind found ways of destroying tens of millions of lives during the Second World War. In another war, some 70 years ago, many others died. There were no nuclear weapons.

There is no doubt that the world today is subjected to strains and tensions that are unique in modern history. Humanity is faced with the awful alternatives of seeking a process to reduce international tensions or creeping to the brink of nuclear devastation. Therefore, we must all be heartened with the upcoming meeting between President Reagan and Secretary-

General Gorbachev in Geneva. That is where the issue should be discussed and where we may see hope and inspiration. We all hope that ways can be found to reduce nuclear and conventional weapons. This can be achieved when speaking together as friends with confidence in each other. Hopefully we can begin to lay down those arms that have destroyed so many lives. What a useless waste of mankind.

It is a difficult subject to address but I can say that it is a subject which is very dear to me. I have had immediate members of my family lose their lives in battle. We do not want to see that repeated with our grandchildren. We are at a point in history where we will not survive nuclear confrontation, nor can we afford a conventional war that might lead to the ultimate countdown.

Nuclear weapons cannot be disinvented. They are a terrifying reality which political leadership must seek to constrain. Yet, a failure to incorporate a credible nuclear component within NATO's over-all strategy would be an invitation to nuclear blackmail with consequences too terrible to contemplate. In this sense, the real question before us is how we can best achieve policies which will reduce the recourse to nuclear weapons in Europe and elsewhere. Our Party has approached this through three fundamental principles. Canada's foreign policy should rest on a bipartisan search for consensus. The cornerstone of our security is NATO solidarity and only through strengthening the non-nuclear deterrent can we reduce the present reliance on nuclear weapons.

In April, 1969, Prime Minister Trudeau unilaterally cut our NATO commitment in half, saying that Canada had no foreign policy of any importance except that which flowed from NATO and this was a false perspective for any country. Under that Prime Minister, defence spending as a percentage of Gross National Product had been cut by 30 per cent. This policy of wilful neglect of our contribution to the collective security of our alliance has led to a situation in which Canada spends less per capita on defence than any other nation in the NATO alliance, with the exception of Luxembourg.

The Hon. Member who presented the resolution today comes from a Party that would also want to remove us from NATO. He would pull us back from an alliance to which we are a party. We very much support that alliance and believe it is a cornerstone for peace. He wants us to bring our people home and shake that foundation.

This pattern of neglect of the conventional deterrent has damaged our reputation for reliability among our allies. Such neglect of a conventional deterrent has also contributed to an over reliance on nuclear weapons. A determined effort must be made to reduce our present dependence on a possible use of nuclear weapons by substantially improving the conventional component of our defence. We believe that the overwhelming majority of Canadians are prepared to accept this approach. That is why they gave us that overwhelming mandate on that famous day in September, 1984. That is how our Government plans to act.

I am glad that my hon. friend raised the issue of aid because that is a subject that is very dear to all of us who work in External Affairs. It is probably one of our proudest accomplishments. We contributed some $1.8 billion in the last Budget to an aid program which is always geared to improving the quality of life for people whom we intend to help. It is never tied to political considerations, but based strictly on technical grounds. Whether it is Central America or elsewhere, we want to do what we can to improve the social and economic conditions of the people whom we are trying to help. We believe that is the basis for removing confrontation. We know that it will encourage people to talk to each other. Currently, there are many countries in the world whose young people are trained to do only one thing—to fight. They know no other end or no other approach. We have attempted to go to those areas to build programs that will give them a usefulness. Through this means I believe they will come to understand that by improving their quality of live they can build a better world for all of their citizens.

I will be an important moment when President Reagan and Secretary-General Gorbachev talk. There are many issues on the table, including nuclear weapons, Strategic Defence Initiatives and many other issues. As long as there is conversation and consultation, we can look forward to another generation of peace and tranquility. The last 40 years has not been bad for most of us.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this motion is being debated for the second time and that it is triggering a number of intense and committed interventions on every side of the House, I wonder whether it would not be the better approach to allow it to go to committee for full debate which would give it an opportunity to be fully examined by all interested Parties. It has an outlook and breadth of scope that, in consideration of the present international climate, deserves the full intention of all interested parliamentarians. It is with that thought in mind that I would urge the Government not to talk it out and not to put up other speakers but allow it to go through.

Therefore I will refrain from making the intervention I intended to make so as to give a signal to the Government that we would like very much to see this motion go to committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on a subject that is very important to me: nuclear deterrence and a Canada without nuclear arms. The formidable power conferred by nuclear energy has probably created the greatest dilemma of this century. One of nature's powers which man is now only starting to learn to control, this power is neither good nor evil. Solar energy, another form of nuclear fusion, is essential to life on this planet. If it is misused in nuclear arms, atomic energy may well put an end to humanity as we know it today. Controlled nuclear energy can help man in his daily life. It can cure diseases or be a source of destruction. How we use it will determine whether this kind of energy is good or evil.

Nuclear arms exist already, and we cannot make them disappear that easily. We know that one of the goals of Canada's foreign policy is, and has been for a long time, the ultimate elimination of all nuclear arms. Books such as The Fate of the Earth by Johnathan Schell, films like If You Love This Planet and the television special The Day After have given millions of people in the Western world a horrifying picture of the effects of a nuclear conflict. No one can seriously doubt the outcome of such a war. The debate on limited nuclear war and whether a nuclear war could be won is purely theoretical. Our conclusion must be that a nuclear war cannot be won and that it would be disastrous to this planet.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the threat of nuclear war still exists, and will continue to exist as long as man knows how to manufacture nuclear arms. Technology cannot be completely eliminated. We can only attenuate its impact. And what can governments do to diminish this threat?

One of the main things Canada or any other country can do for its people is to protect them against such a threat. And the best way to do so is for the countries concerned to negotiate balanced and verifiable agreements on armament and disarmament control. Progress has been made but much remains to be done. And until this task has been accomplished, the principal guarantee for Canada's security and that of its allies must lie in a deterrence policy.

The fundamental principle of deterrence is quite simple: we must ensure that a potential aggressor knows that if he attacks us, the price he will have to pay will be so high that no conceivable objective could justify doing so. Of course this is not the ideal way to ensure one's security, but it is the only realistic approach available in the present circumstances, and it has served us well for nearly 40 years, despite the problems in East-West relations. Mr. Speaker, we must continue to support this principle while seeking a better solution.

Declaring Canada a nuclear arms free zone would do absolutely nothing to diminish the threat of nuclear war to Canadians. Does anyone really believe that Canadian cities would no longer be a target for nuclear arms if we were to declare this country a nuclear arms free zone? At the same time our withdrawal from NATO might force us to triple or quadruple our defence budget, if only to maintain our present level of security.

Although it has adopted a deterrent policy with respect to NATO, the Canadian Government has not given up its objective to reduce the nuclear arms arsenal to the lowest level possible through verifiable disarmament and arms control agreements. That is one of the major aspects of our policy on security. Canada is an active participant in the activities of the United Nations and of the Geneva disarmament conference, not to mention the Vienna discussions on mutual and balanced force reductions. As a NATO member we are also party to the organization's consultations on the nuclear forces reduction negotiations. As you know, Mr. Speaker, Canada is also represented at the Stockholm conference on confidence and security measures and on European disarmament. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) stated before the United Nations last September, and I quote:

"—I offer Canada's encouragement and support in our quest for the climate of confidence required to conclude disarmament agreements. However frustrated we may feel, we must never fail in our determination to build a world wide security system based on a decrease rather than an increase in weaponry. If stronger political will is necessary, let us indeed show such political will, particularly on the eve of 1986 which has been proclaimed the Year of International Peace... Canada will continue playing an active role in all multilateral representations and contributing even more to restore confidence. In that respect Canada has set up an action program for the second phase of the current disarmament decade. Through this program we will double our efforts to improve the verification processes necessary to ensure compliance with the existing agreements.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me this opportunity to make a statement on this issue.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-77, an Act to amend the Criminal Code in relation to pari-mutuel betting, an amendment to which concurrence of this House is desired.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

ORDER OF REFERENCE OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. President of the Privy Council on a point of order.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. Earlier this day I brought forward a motion by unanimous consent with respect to the extension of time for the report of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs with respect to equality of rights. There was a technical error in that motion inasmuch as I had referred to the date of the original order of reference incorrectly. I have had a chance to speak to Memberes of the other Parties and I think you will find there will be unanimous consent to correct the motion for extension to show the original order of reference as Friday, June 28, 1985.

Mr. Kaplan: As a Member of the Justice Committee I can report that that is our agreement. We have agreed to an extension and although the Government seemed incapable of drafting one, they have corrected it and we are prepared to support it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the Hon. President of the Privy Council correcting the original motion. Is there unanimous consent to accept the correction?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—COMPENSATION FOR SINKING OF THE LADY MARJORIE

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, my purpose in rising this evening is to present to the House once again the claim of Walter Theriault in respect of the sinking of the Lady Marjorie on April 28, 1985. I think I should begin by pointing out to the House that one of the most ancient rights of Canadians is to present their case to the House of Commons. I have no hesitation—and I make no apology—in bringing to this national Chamber the case of one person who feels aggrieved under the laws of Canada and indeed by the officers of the Government of Canada.

I should explain that the incident which gave rise to Mr. Theriault's claim arose in the following way. His fishing trawler, the Lady Marjorie, was proceeding off the coast of Nova Scotia in the course of fishing and developed some difficulty. As a result of that difficulty over a period of a few days, the crew who were of a relatively young age decided to abandon the fishing trawler and at that point summoned assistance.

The vessel most readily available to provide assistance was the H.M.C.S. Nipigon, a destroyer which was part of the naval fleet of the Maritime Command. Therein the difficulty arose. I will not pretend to know the facts which transpired between the abandonment of the fishing vessel, Lady Marjorie, by its crew and the sinking which resulted from the gunfire of the H.M.C.S. Nipigon, but the end result was that the ship was a total loss; it was sunk.

One would hope and think that in this modern world, a world in which Government respects the rights and duties of individuals and of the collective society, this kind of case could be worked out in fairness to all concerned, considering the might and the power of the Government of Canada, on the one hand, and the difficulties faced by an ordinary Nova Scotia fisherman and owner of a fishing trawler, on the other hand. However, that has not been the case.

I think this is what prompted my colleague, the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau), to raise the case in the House of Commons on May 2, 1985, when he questioned the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) in respect of the advancement of the claim of Walter Theriault resulting from the loss of the Lady Marjorie.

At that point in time it was indicated by the Minister—and it has been repeated many times in the public press and by other media—that the sinking resulted from a decision that the Lady Marjorie constituted a hazard to navigation and had to be disposed of in the manner in which it was disposed of, that is to say, sunk.

The House of Commons plays no role in the arbitration of that kind of dispute, but it plays a role in the area of justice for all Canadians. That is what I sought by raising a question on September 25, 1985, and I do so again this evening in the House of Commons. What I seek for Mr. Walter Theriault, his family and all those involved in the operation of the fishing vessel, Lady Marjorie, is justice from the Government of Canada and from the officers of the Government of Canada.

I say this because of a report today in The Chronicle Herald of Halifax indicating that the board of inquiry, apparently commissioned to inquire into the events which led to the sinking of the Lady Marjorie, has concluded that there was no fault on the part of the Canadian Navy. Presumably that might result in a decision by the Government of Canada or the relevant Minister to deny any claim or responsibility to Walter Theriault. That would be an unfortunate decision at this point in time because Mr. Theriault faces the following difficulties. The insurers of the vessel, Lady Marjorie, say that the vessel was not in danger, could have continued afloat, and could have been salvaged. They deny any claim of the onwer, Mr. Theriault, on that ground. Apparently the advisers to the Government and the Canadian Navy indicated that the ship was about to sink, was a danger to navigation and could not be salvaged and therefore it was right and proper to carrying out its destruction by sinking and on that grounds deny any liability.

Mr. Theriault is between the proverbial rock and a hard place. On the one hand the insurers have refused payment because the ship was salvageable. On the other hand, the Canadian Government refuses assistance because the ship was a total loss.

How is this difficulty going to be worked out? I am afraid I do not know, but I call upon the Government to work toward some resolution, and I am not the only one to do so. On September 16, 1985, an editorial in The Daily News, a newspaper that circulates in the Halifax area, quite properly asked the question, "Will somebody please help Mr. Theriault?" I shall quote very briefly from that editorial:

> Hindsight is fine in saying the Nipigon should have stood by the vessel until towing arrangements were made, and we are sure that the gunfire decision was not made lightly. But now it is clear it was made wrongly.

I do not necessarily agree with that conclusion but I do agree with this proposition: the Lady Marjorie has been lost to Mr. Theriault and his family and they are on the brink of bankruptcy as a result of the loss. Somebody should assist them, either the insurance company or the Government. I ask the Government to intervene directly and resolve this matter to the satisfaction of the Theriault family.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to agree with the Hon. Member regarding his ancient right to represent the problems of his constituents in the House of Commons. I hope it is not only an ancient right but a present right and a continuing right for many generations to come. I would like to confirm that not only has the Hon. Member done his duty and represented his people ably in the House of Commons but in addition to that he has made very direct recommendations to all those concerned including the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) and the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Andre) in his attempt to find a resolution to this problem on behalf of his constituent.

As the Hon. Member is probably aware, the Department of National Defence, because of its concern, did set up a board of inquiry to investigate the circumstances surrounding this unfortunate incident. The Ministry of Transport has also carried out investigations which are being prepared by the Marine Casualty Investigations Branch of the Coast Guard. In so far as the Department of National Defence Board of Inquiry is concerned, the Hon. Member will be pleased to know that the inquiry has now been completed. I understand that the Ministry of Transport has yet to finalize its report but it should be made available to the public in the very near future.

The legal representative of the Lady Marjorie's owners has been in touch with DND's legal agent, the Department of Justice. I understand that intensive discussions on the subject are ongoing. I share the Hon. Member's concern that this matter be dealt with as expeditiously as possible. It is important, however, that this matter be dealt with in the most proper and deliberate way to ensure thoroughness and that justice and equity will be served. This will ensure that the important elements concerning the specific circumstances of the sinking and the legal implications are thoroughly worked out and that the appropriate action therefore follows.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—DISCOUNTING OF INCOME TAX REFUNDS. (B) REQUEST THAT PRACTICE BE BANNED

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, today there was a media and Member of Parliament information briefing by the National Anti-Poverty Organization with regard to income tax discounting, a practice which is growing at an alarming rate. The position of the National Anti-Poverty Organization is one which is supported by organizations as diverse as the Co-operative Association for Family Economy in Quebec, the Consumer's Association of Canada and the National Working Group on the Economy and Poverty of the United Church of Canada.

These anti-poverty, consumer and church groups want the abolition of tax discounting. They want that because they realize that tax discounting is now permitted and encouraged by an Act passed in 1978 by the then Liberal Government. The Tax Rebate Discounting Act of 1978 was brought into effect because it was believed that with no legislation people, particularly poor peole, were paying exhorbitant rates for small amounts of money. The Act of 1978 set the maximum rate of interest which could be charged at 15 per cent. We are talking about a rate of interest which does not last for a year. It lasts for four, five or eight weeks, after which time people would receive their income tax rebate. Therefore, the actual rate of interest calculated on an annual basis is probably closer to 100 per cent than it is to the 15 per cent permitted by the Act.

We know now that almost two-thirds of those people who used the tax discount in 1984 had incomes of $8,000 or less. Yet, the same people, of whom there are now almost 400,000 were entitled to $274 million in refunds, or an average of $714 each. For a fairly simple paper work task, the tax discounters have been picking up an average of $170 for each transaction, according to the administration of the Tax Rebate Discounting Act in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Department, as keeper of statistics on tax discounting, has defined the problem as being far too much of poor people's money being diverted into the hands of what are usurious lenders officially brought into being and permitted to operate by this legislation.

Since the problem is quite clear and since the people most adversely affected are people who very frequently get all or almost of their tax discount as a result of a child tax credit, it seems to us that what the Government should do is simply repeal the Act. After all, this was a Liberal Act and it was in Liberal times that organizations such as those I have mentioned started to call upon the Government to repeal the Act in order to prohibit tax discounting.

The Hon. Member who preceded me as spokesperson for the New Democratic Party on consumer and corporate affairs called on Liberal Governments to repeal the Act. Since the Liberals have been in opposition, members of their Party have called on the Government to repeal the Act. I have frequently called upon the Minister to repeal the Act.

The child tax credit system this year will deliver $367 to each person receiving that credit, a payment which will rise to $524 in 1988. By the Government's own reckoning, almost $20 million of the $41 million taken by discounters in 1984 came from the child tax credit. Why do we permit this to take place? I wonder what the Auditor General would think of this misuse of funds voted by Parliament. Far worse, how can the poorest of Canadians afford to give up this kind of money? They are forced to do it because the Government legislation permits it and the slow processing of income tax returns sees to it that they try to get their money quickly.

I ask the Government to act. We have been raising this question, as have the organizations I have mentioned, almost from the day this Government was formed. The studies which the Minister has promised have gone on almost from the time the Government took office. There were studies carried out by the Liberal Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. If this Government can bring in legislation to pay out $1 billion to depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, surely it can deal with this. The Minister has promised studies. He has consulted with the provinces. I understand that the Ministers of Consumers Affairs of all the provinces have agreed that the discounting of the child tax credit, at least, should be probited. That is not all that organizations such as NAPO have been calling for, but at least that would be a beginning. I therefore say to the Minister to stop dithering, get on with the job and bring in legislation to repeal the Act which has permitted this tax discounting.

The Minister says there are problems. I say to the Minister that the Province of Quebec has prohibited tax discounting and the United States, with the most pro-business Government the country has had in 50 years, has prohibited tax discounting. I say to the Minister to stop dithering and bring in a proposal which can be passed by Parliament quickly. I ask him to bring in legislation which would prohibit income tax discounting before the next income tax year. We have had enough of studies. We have had enough of waiting. Let the Minister show some concern for the consumer. After all, he is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté).

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Tax Rebate Discounting Act is to protect the interest of taxpayers who give up their rights to anticipated tax refunds in order to receive immediate cash. The statute was enacted in 1978 at the urging of the provincial Governments. Prior to 1978, the discounting business was unregulated and discounters often charged rates of 40 per cent or 50 per cent of the value of the refund. The legislation now limits the legal discount rate to 15 per cent. Thus, Canadians who wish to receive immediate cash can freely choose to patronize a legitimate discounter without fear of having to pay the "loan shark" rates previously charged.

Nevertheless, some conditions have changed significantly since 1978, and this Government must determine whether the protection given by the Tax Rebate Discounting Act is still appropriate. For that reason, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) began dealing with the question early this year by initiating extensive consultation and study.

A major step in this process of consultation was the release of a discussion paper on discounting in June of this year. This paper was made available to the general public. In fact, copies were sent to all Members of Parliament. In addition, a number of interested parties were invited to respond to the Minister and to meet with him personally.

A special conference of representatives of major interested social welfare groups, discounters and business groups was held in August. The issue was on the agenda of the federal-provincial Territorial Conference of Ministers of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in September in Manitoba.

Contrary to the assertion of the Hon. Member, outlawing tax rebate discounting is not universally accepted as the solution to the problems associated with discounting. The Hon. Member surely appreciates that the discounting issue involves considerations of social policy, economic policy, federal-provincial relations and interdepartmental co-ordination. The intention of the Minister is to ensure an appropriate balance between the values represented by the market-place economy and freedom of choice, on the one hand, and the need for consumer protection on the other. This House can expect an indication soon of any adjustments which need to be made in order to maintain that balance.

In summary, the answer to the Hon. Member's question is simply that the tax rebate discount in question is being dealt with at this very moment and in the proper fashion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now to have been adopted. Accordingly the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.20 p.m.

MINES AND MINING

CYPRUS ANVIL MINE IN FARO, YUKON

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, for years the Cyprus Anvil Mine in Faro, Yukon, was a mainstay of the territorial economy. Between 1970 and 1982, when it was in full production, the mine provided close to 700 jobs and represented about 40 per cent of the Yukon economy. In 1982, when metal prices fell, Dome Mines announced a shutdown at Faro. The Liberal Government of the day moved to soften the blow and helped finance a strip-mining project which employed 250 workers. This initiative helped keep the mine viable. With some urgent action by the present Government, it is still possible to prevent Faro, Yukon, from becoming another Schefferville.

The company which has agreed to buy the mine awaits certain Government decisions, lower power rates, and other financial considerations. The Yukon winter is fast approaching. The company's plans to resume mining and milling operations this year become less attainable with each day's delay. Negotiations with the smelters have to begin soon. The opportunity to reopen this mine will be lost unless decisions are made quickly.

The Government has hundreds of millions of dollars for bailing out badly managed banks. Reopening the Cyprus Anvil Mine means 500 jobs for Yukon. Yukon needs those jobs.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—VIOLATIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, every month in Guatemala 80 to 90 people disappear. The Group for Mutual Assistance for Families of the Disappeared, or GAM, seeks information on disappeared family members. However, in March, President Mejia Victores said: "To take steps toward the reappearance alive of the disappeared is a subversive act".

Subsequently, two of GAM's leaders were tortured and murdered. One had his chest and skull bashed in and his tongue removed. In the other case, the death squads pulled out the fingernails of a two-year-old child before murdering the child with his mother. In spite of such torture and intimidation, GAM persists in its demand that the Government account for the missing family members. Each Friday it holds a vigil for this purpose.

GAM worries that the November 3 election will lead to a situation even worse than that prevailing today. It fears the military might try to clean out the clandestine prisons before it transfers power. Alternatively, it fears the new administration might use the election to close the books on the problem of the disappeared and say: "That is a problem of the previous Government. It has nothing to do with us".

In the name of humanity and justice, GAM asks us to demand that the present Guatemalan Government give a full accounting of the disappeared people before the election.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CLOSURE OF LAKELAND, MAN., POST OFFICE

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, the citizens of Lakeland, Manitoba, no longer have a post office as of September 27. Canada Post closed it down because costs exceeded revenues by less than $70 per week. I received notice of the closure on August 16, and I tried in vain to obtain a stay of execution so that I could study the situation fully. Canada Post told me that the people involved had been consulted and understood the closure. The people were told, not consulted, about the September closure, and they were told by three officials travelling in three separate cars, the cost of which could have kept their post office open for several weeks.

As of September 30, Lakeland people must travel as far as 30 miles to pick up their mail. "No problem", says Canada Post. "The people have to travel many miles to buy groceries anyway, so they can travel that far to get their mail". Does Canada Post use this same logic as it continues with free door-to-door delivery for millions of urban Canadians?

Customers in small towns and in the farm community are losing services at an alarming rate, while at the same time Canada Post continues with expensive delivery in our cities. I suggest that a modest user fee for door-to-door service should be instituted, perhaps the same amount that small-town people pay for post office box rentals.

I quote from a letter to me from Canada Post:

You can appreciate the difficulty of our decision in these situations, where we seek to maintain acceptable levels of service while at the same time reducing our deficit.

Acceptable levels of service are not being maintained, and rural Canadians are subsidizing city mail service as Canada Post takes the path of least resistance in deficit reduction.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

CREATION OF REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT BOUNDARIES

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, the constituents in my riding of Nunatsiaq are extremely concerned that discussions to date aiming for agreement on a political boundary have regrettably been inconclusive due to certain unacceptable preconditions set by the west.

The media have added fuel to the fire as in the case of the editor of the Edmonton Journal, through the CBC Northern Network, referring to the Nunavut Constitutional Conference as a "tin pot banana republic" run by "tin pot dictators". Canadians in the south are forced fed with trivia on what has been happening in Coppermine, such as the press being kicked out of strategy sessions. The reason why the press had been kicked out was because it has been doing all the negotiating for the Western Constitutional Forum.

The continued pressures of fast paced economic and social change in the Arctic regions dictate an urgent need for the creation of a new, more responsive and representative Government. A boundary which includes Beaufort and Kitikmeot regions is fundamental to the survival of the distinct Inuit people occupying the coastal Arctic who share a common culture and unique way of life with the eastern Arctic.

STATEMENTS BY MEMBER FOR FUNDY-ROYAL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, finally the Conservatives have found their man of steel. The Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett) has criticized the Prime Minister's Office and has said he will not retract. Lesser men such as the Conservative national director, the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain), the Conservatives in Frontenac riding, and even the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) have bent in the face of powerful winds blowing from the Prime Minister's Office. But not the Hon. Member from Fundy-Royal.

Earlier this week we awarded the winner for the "retraction of the week" award. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) deserves an award for "the apology of the week". The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) has the "bail-out of the week" award. The New Brunswick Tory Members of Parliament deserve the "I wasn't at that meeting" award. The campaign buses in Frontenac deserve a "mystery campaign expense of the week" award. Tuna remains the "fish of the week".

Mr. Hitchman deserves the "truth of the week" award for contradicting the Government's statement on the cause of bank failures. It is impossible, Mr. Speaker, to award the "junket of the week" award. The "Taiwan ten", the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. McLean), the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), and the former Minister of Defence are all in contention for that award. The Mercantile and the Continental are trying to avoid yet another award. It is obvious that this Government deserves the "one term Government" award.

SECTORAL IMPROVEMENT STATISTICS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, Canadians tell me they are not particularly interested in tuna fish or speculation as to who might have said what to whom. Canadians gave the Government a mandate to deal with basic bread and butter economic issues: jobs, interest rates, and inflation. That is what they want to hear about.

In just one year, despite inheriting a mess of unprecedented magnitude, this Government has done more for economic renewal than any Government in history. In my Province of Saskatchewan 13,000 more people are employed. The unemployment rate is down to 6.8 per cent. Nationally, there are 300,000 more Canadians at work and 180,000 fewer unemployed. The jobless rate has fallen from 11.6 per cent to 10.1 per cent, the lowest since May of 1982. Housing starts are up 29 per cent, retail sales up 10 per cent, and new manufacturing orders are up 13 per cent.

The Bank of Canada rate on election day was 12.38 per cent and this week it stands at 8.85 per cent. That is the lowest level in seven years. The prime rate has fallen to 10 per cent. Inflation remains steady at or below 4 per cent, the lowest since 1971.

These are hard economic facts which provide clear evidence that the Government's deficit reduction measures are working. The dark cloud is lifting. Canadians have every right to feel good and confident about the economy and, indeed, the future of this nation.

THANKSGIVING CONVERSATIONS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, in light of the strong performance of the Canadian economy since last fall, let me suggest to you some conversations which I expect will take place among Canadian families as they enjoy their Thanksgiving dinners this weekend.

In Trois-Rivières, Suzanne runs into the dining room exclaiming:

[Translation]

"Mother, I got a job and I am starting on Tuesday." "Very good!"—

[English]

—says her mother. "Why, I just read this morning that 175,000 more women are working this year in Canada than last year. I am glad you are one more; it shows the federal Government Canadian Jobs Strategy Program is really paying off."

In a high-rise apartment in Toronto, Elspeth says to her husband as they sip their coffee: "Darling, why don't we go house hunting tomorrow? Interest rates are down three points from a year ago, the lowest in seven years. We can finally afford to carry a mortgage." "You're right," her husband Tom replies, "and with housing starts up 29 per cent I know we will find what we want and finally make our dream come true. It will be great for the kids to have their own home."

In Vancouver, Jane Alexander announces to her family as they sit down in front of a golden turkey: "Well, I am going ahead with that plant expansion. New orders are up 13 per cent. Export markets are really opening up in the Pacific Rim. We will be hiring 100 more employees. A big step, but now is the time."

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

COPYRIGHT

REVIEW COMMITTEE'S REPORT—FUTURE PERSPECTIVES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Revision of Copyright tabled its report yesterday in which it advocates the establishment of a Charter of Rights for Creators.

The Copyright Act has not been the subject of significant changes for over 60 years. The time for change is now.

[English]

The question now is: Is the Government prepared to act quickly? Will it bring in a Bill by February as was promised in the press conference yesterday on this report? The arts and culture community badly needs this new legislation and I hope we will not see the same stalling of which the previous Government was guilty.

The next question to answer is: How much is it going to cost and how much of the granting of new rights will benefit the Canadian cultural community? Conservative Members have been quick to dismiss the problem of an outflow of scarce cultural dollars to the United States. Will the Conservative Government ensure the $100 million cut from cultural budgets in Canada will be restored before there is any increased outflow of funds to the U.S.? Or will the Government see to it that President Reagan gets the money he demanded at the Shamrock Summit so it will not go to the Canadian arts community?

These are the questions that the Canadian cultural community needs to have answered. Is the Government going to act now for artists? Will it act fast? Will it advance the interests of the Canadian cultural community?

FISHERIES

SALE OF CANNED TUNA

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the Prime Minister is here. Perhaps he can answer my questions. As Canadians are preparing their Thanksgiving dinners the Government's incompetence has served us up another tuna fish surprise. Although on Friday, September 20; on Monday, September 23, and on Tuesday, September 24, the Prime Minister promised the people that all rancid tuna would immediately be taken off the shelves, is it not true that his incompetence may allow that rancid tuna back on the shelves across Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for the question. I would have thought it would have come from the Leader of the Opposition but, of course, he is absent again. Every time I come to the House he is gone, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: You're not here very often. Three times out of nine days. That's a cheap shot, Mulroney.

Mr. Mulroney: A cheap shot? An offended virgin from the Liberals, of all things.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I think the Right Hon. Prime Minister knows that mention of the absence of another Member is not allowed.

Mr. Mulroney: I accept that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you very much.

Mr. Mulroney: I would have thought that my hon. friend would be interested in the fact that it was announced at seven o'clock this morning that 304,000 new jobs have been created by this Government in one year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: As of this morning unemployment is at its lowest level in three and one half years in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We have reduced unemployment by 1.5 percentage points in 12 months, and youth unemployment, which interests the Hon. Member, has been decreased by 2.2 per cent in one year.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Gauthier: Is this a press conference?

Mr. Mulroney: This, Mr. Speaker, is great news for Canada.

Ms. Copps: The Prime Minister found out what interested the people at the Toronto Blue Jays game when they cried out "tuna, tuna, tuna" in light of his Government's incompetent handling of this issue.

GOVERNMENT'S COMPETENCE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As you know, on September 24, the Prime Minister assured Canadians, in his most mellifluous tones: "We are so competent that when this matter was brought to the attention of the Prime Minister of Canada, he immediately took action on behalf of the consumers and citizens of Canada". And look at what happened!

How can he talk about competence when on TV we still hear about the tuna problem that still exists Canadian markets?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I beg to differ with the Hon. Member. It is true that I went to the Blue Jays baseball game. I was given a tremendous standing ovation by the spectators, unlike—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: And that isn't bad for a Montrealer who has been an Expo fan all these years! It says a lot for national unity and harmony.

In any case, the Hon. Member does not seem to be the least bit interested this morning in the real concerns of Canadian men and women, and the fact that today, interest rates have reached their lowest level in seven years, that in the past twelve months 304,000 new jobs were created in Canada, that confidence is increasing and that the economy is growing from day to day. That is the kind of news the people in Quebec want to know about.

[English]

REQUEST FOR DESTRUCTION OF CANS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada want to know why, almost three weeks after the Prime Minister promised in the House that the tuna would be taken off Canadian shelves, it has not been categorically removed and why there has not been an order to destroy that million cans of rancid tuna. Will the Prime Minister promise in the House today that he will issue an order to destroy the million cans of rancid tuna so that fishery jobs and Canadian consumers can finally rest easy?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have accepted our responsibility and I have responded fully in regard to this important matter. Those questions have all been answered. If my hon. friend thinks that that is the preoccupation of Canadians, she has another thing coming, because it is economic renewal, and job creation, and national reconciliation.

• (1120)

Mr. Mulroney: I will get into it later on, but I have touched briefly on job creation and economic news that impacts so favourably on our country. Let me just make this point. In terms of national reconciliation—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot allow that.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TAIWAN—NATIONAL DAY CELEBRATION—MINISTER'S ATTENDANCE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. This morning the Prime Minister stated that his Government's policy toward the People's Republic of China was the same as the Trudeau policy.

It is well known that a number of his Ministers, before they became Ministers, were in favour of establishing direct diplomatic relations directly with Taiwan, and opposed the Trudeau policy on China. Was the Prime Minister unaware of the fact that one of his Ministers, publicly and officially last week, celebrated National Day with the Taiwan Government?

Miss MacDonald: What about Boudria?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on certain occasions I have indicated to the House, to the Premier of China and the President of China the fact that the intention of this Government is to pursue the policy set out by my predecessor, Mr. Trudeau, with which I agree. We have honoured that in all circumstances.

I believe that what should be pointed out is that the Hon. Member for Glengary-Prescott-Russell, "Mr. Virtue", is over in Taiwan right now, so I am told.

Mr. Gauthier: With seven Tories.

Mr. Mulroney: Perhaps that should be looked into by the former Solicitor General as he begins his inquiries into other people's virtue.

Mr. Kaplan: There is an important difference between the responsibility of a Member and a Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MINISTER'S CONDUCT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Does the Prime Minister believe it is compatible with that policy, which he said he supported, for one of his Ministers to behave in that way?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has given me the assurance that that is not the case. The Minister has conducted himself consistent with the policy that has been set out by myself. It is not inconsistent at all with the policy articulated by Mr. Trudeau in regard to this very important relationship that we have and which I do not think will be mortally damaged although it could happen with the presence of the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell in Taiwan.

MERCANTILE BANK—INVOLVEMENT OF MAJOR CHARTERED BANKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. There is a report in the press today concerning the involvement of the chartered banks in new financial arrangements with the Mercantile Bank. The essence of this report is that the Government of Canada will be underwriting the involvement, or guaranteeing the involvement of the chartered banks in this new arrangement, to the extent of $2 billion. The same point was made by a vice-president of the Bank of Nova Scotia in a French television program last night. Will the Prime Minister tell us if this is the case and if this was a Cabinet decision?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will understand and hopefully support me when I say that in these circumstances I ought to limit my remarks to the following. The Canadian banking system is widely regarded as one of the finest and most outstanding systems in the world. It is one that has commanded high regard and respect for the manner in which it has been administered.

I indicated earlier today that from time to time any system, including the best, can have blips. There have been some difficulties, as there have been in the United States of America, for example, with a number of bankruptcies of some of their banks this year. I acknowledge that the systems are different, but there is no reason at all to have anything but strong confidence and pride in the integrity of the Canadian banking system.

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the Prime Minister that I have said words to that effect recently myself. However, as Leader of an opposition Party, I also have a responsibility to ensure that when public funds are being expended or used as a guarantee, the people of Canada have a right to know that. I am sure that the Prime Minister would agree.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My question has nothing to do with the immediate circumstances of the Mercantile Bank, which I recognize to be quite different from two other banks with which we have had a less pleasant experience.

• (1125)

Has the Government of Canada entered into any kind of financial arrangement with the chartered banks, in writing or otherwise, that would put up public guarantees to the extent of some $2 billion for any financial arrangements in which the Government is involved with the Mercantile Bank?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Bank of Canada has ongoing arrangements with all of the banks, arrangements which vary and change from time to time. The main thrust of the activity of the Bank of Canada in these circumstances is to sustain confidence and the strong feelings of support that people have in regard to our banking system. That is a feeling that is widely held not only in Canada but around the world. I believe that Canadian chartered banks are regarded with envy for the manner in which they have been managed and conducted over very many years.

Any announcement in regard to a particular arrangement could best be discussed, and I hope my friend would agree, at the judicial inquiry headed by Mr. Justice Estey where a degree of serenity and objectivity will allow people to make value judgments.

REPORTED GOVERNMENT GUARANTEE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, with respect, the inquiry to which the Prime Minister refers has absolutely nothing to do with the Mercantile Bank. According to André Bisson, the vice-president of the Bank of Nova Scotia, there has been an additional commitment or, to use his words, "en garantie totale" provided by the Government of Canada in new financial arrangements involving the chartered banks and the Mercantile Bank. Has the Government of Canada offered such a guarantee?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I saw the comments made by Mr. André Bisson, First Vice-President and Director General of the Bank of Nova Scotia in Quebec, when he was interviewed last night on Le Point. I think he mentioned that the Government's actions were entirely appropriate, and I can assure my hon. friend that intervention or action by the Bank of Canada in circumstances of this kind is appropriate and will be disclosed in due time.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

GOVERNMENT INITIATIVES

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Could the Minister indicate to the House what initiatives she has taken to promote employment equity for women, aboriginal people, the disabled, and visible minorities?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there are two major initiatives which the Government has taken. One is to introduce legislation into the House regarding employment equity and equal opportunity for women and minority groups in the workforce, legislation which will require the private sector and the public sector to make employment equity a reality.

The second major step that we have taken is to make sure that employment equity is central to our Canadian Jobs Strategy and that the programs under the Canadian Jobs Strategy must take into consideration the needs of women and minority groups. The first of those programs, Challenge '85, was experienced this summer and 52 per cent of the people employed were women.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—MINISTER'S LETTER TO SHAREHOLDER

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. The Minister did not answer the question I asked her yesterday, so I put it again. Her letter of August 9 to the Canadian Commercial Bank shareholder, Mr. Reg Kendrick, assured him of the bank's long-term viability. Does the Minister not consider this misleading and an inducement to Mr. Kendrick and the other shareholders to hold on to their shares?

[Translation]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House that seven years ago, a Minister in the Liberal Government said, and I quote:

—he will also recall that at the very beginning, before the Commission started its proceedings and I took up my duties, I said I did not intend to comment on the issues as they were examined by the Commission.

● (1130)

MINISTERIAL STATEMENTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, that really is outrageous. Mr. Kendrick listened to the Minister in August, and on September 1 he lost his money. How can the Government justify blocking debate on its $875 million Bill to make secret payments to depositors over and above the $60,000 which they will receive from deposit insurance, while taking no responsibility for shareholders who were misled by Ministers' statements?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I do not think anyone has been misled by any statements which I have made. What is happening at the moment is that we have a debate in the Chamber which will lead into committee where we will discuss this issue in full. We have a judicial inquiry under Mr. Justice Estey, which is discussing this issue in full. In addition, we have a forum in the parliamentary lobby every day, and questions in the House every day.

My answers have been forthright and consistent and will be carried on before the inquiry and in the debate in the House.

FISHERIES

SALE OF CANNED TUNA

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Fisheries. Last evening there was a story which seems to indicate that the Star-Kist tuna operation has in the past ignored the orders of fisheries inspectors and retailed, in one form or another, fish products which were considered to be unsuitable. What can the Minister say now about the potential for the recalled tuna to be reintroduced to the market? Is it going to be, or is it not?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member, as I have already answered on September 19, I believe, there will be a proposal put before Cabinet next week in respect to the entire range of food inspection services, an action which should have been taken, to my way of thinking at any rate, many years ago.

INSPECTION OF RECALLED CANS OF TUNA

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, after that is all done, what is to happen to the recalled tuna which we are now led to believe may well be put back on the shelves?

Can the Minister answer in one way or another? Is it his understanding that that tuna is now being reinspected with the possibility of it being reintroduced to the market-place? If so, what guarantee can be given to Canadian consumers that the inspection process will be adequate?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think I should assure the Canadian public, since the fears are being re-aroused in their hearts by questions like the one put by the Hon. Member, that nothing will be hitting the shelves—

Mr. Deans: Forgive me for being concerned.

Mr. Nielsen: —of any market which is not of proper quality and which is not fully consistent with the highest possible standards of health and safety.

Having said that, I saw the same story to which the Hon. Member referred. I have asked for a specific and immediate review of those circumstances to ensure that health and safety standards of the highest possible quality are met. This does not detract for a moment from the specific action which the Government is taking concerning the Cabinet consideration of all food inspection services that is so long overdue.

PART-TIME JOBS INQUIRY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Today the statistics indicate that full-time employment in September dropped by 24,000 jobs, mostly among women and youth, while part-time employment increased by 47,000 jobs. Is this what the Prime Minister meant when he promised jobs, jobs—that he would replace full-time jobs with low-paying, part-time jobs? Is that what his Government is promising 2,000 full-time skilled workers at Bombardier, Vickers and Gulf in Montreal? Is he trying to give them some part-time jobs? Is that his policy?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday or the day before, my hon. friend raised the problem of Montreal East, a serious problem which we intend to look into. But Quebecers also know perfectly well that within a year this Government has been able to reduce unemployment in Quebec by 1.3 per cent, which is a formidable accomplishment.

In Canada, 304,000 new jobs have been created. This morning, the unemployment rate reached its lowest level in three and a half years: a 1.5 per cent drop in unemployment, and a 2.2 per cent drop in youth unemployment. This is good news for Canada. Why are the Liberals always upset when we have good news for this country?

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, while plants are closing and there are still 1.3 million unemployed people, the Prime Minister is smuggly patting himself on the back. When will he take seriously the criticism levelled against his Government's programs by 55 groups and individuals who attended his Economic Summit, indicating that the employment programs in the Budget are not working? As is proved by this morning's statistics, we are moving from full-time jobs to part-time jobs.

Mr. Gormley: That is not right.

Mr. Allmand: It is right; read the statistics.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, he is ashamed. I can understand; even a Liberal would be mortified by a statement like that.

Mr. Allmand: Part-time jobs.

Mr. Mulroney: The fact is that 304,000 new jobs were created in a year. Bank of Canada interest rates dropped 3 percentage points.

Mr. Allmand: Part-time.

Mr. Mulroney: Consumer spending is up 10 per cent. Motor vehicle sales are up 23 per cent. The CPI is at its lowest level since 1971. Bankruptcies are down 13 per cent.

Mr. Gauthier: Two banks have gone under.

Mr. Mulroney: Oil and gas activity is up 19 per cent.

Mr. Gauthier: Two Ministers are shot.

Mr. Mulroney: Manufacturing orders have risen by 13 per cent. That is solid economic progress.

An Hon. Member: Two banks have gone down the drain.

Ms. Copps: I can understand why he only shows up on Friday.

Mr. Nystrom: Tuna sales are down, Brian.

MERCANTILE BANK—SUPPORT PACKAGE INQUIRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It concerns his response to my Leader's question regarding the nature of the assurances which the Government has given the banks involved in the support package to the Mercantile. Is the support which is being provided and offered by the Government in the form of guarantees by the Government of Canada or by the Bank of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I have fully responded to that in the circumstances. I have indicated the extent to which the Bank of Canada is and has been in the past, over many years, helpful to some of our institutions, as my hon. friend would wish it to be. That continues to be the policy. Of course the banking system remains very strong and an instrument of pride.

WAR CRIMINALS

DESTRUCTION OF IMMIGRATION FILES

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, after raising the matter outside the House, I am surprised that no opposition Member raised a question about the allegations made that certain Department of Immigration records were destroyed just before an RCMP investigation was to take place in respect of them. My question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Has she received an explanation of this matter from her departmental officials?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question of the destruction of the files was raised by the Hon. Member for York Centre before the Deschênes Commission. I wondered why he had not raised it with his colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, during whose term of office those files which he brought into question would have been destroyed. Also, he could have looked through his own Party archives to the time when Mackenzie King was Prime Minister to see what might have taken place during that period of time.

What is important to note in this very critical issue is that the Conservative Government took the steps to appoint the Deschênes Commission to look into all aspects of possibilities of Nazi wartime criminals in this country. That commission is doing a very comprehensive job of coming to the major problems that may exist in this area.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION FROM DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): My supplementary question is the same as my initial question. I wonder if the Minister has received an explanation from her departmental officials respecting the destruction of those files.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have asked the officials to look into this whole matter and report to me. I know that during the month of July of 1984 when the Hon. Member for York Centre was then the Solicitor General—

Mr. Crosbie: And doing nothing.

Miss MacDonald: —a report was sent to his officials by the Department of Employment and Immigration—

Mr. Speaker: Order, I am sorry, the question was answered.

Miss MacDonald: Dealing with that whole question.

Mr. Crosbie: And he did nothing about it.

Mr. Caccia: That is not true.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

COST OF MINISTER'S AFRICAN TRAVELS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and it concerns the continuous waste of public funds by his high flying Ministers. We have reports this morning that the former Secretary of State for Immigration, his wife, and a political aide spent well over $100,000 in public funds using Government aircraft for a one-month safari in Africa. My question to the Prime Minister is as follows. Given that this cost is five times the regular aircraft commercial cost, did the Prime Minister know about this trip in advance, did he approve of it, and, if he does not, is he prepared in this House today to condone this senseless and irresponsible abuse of taxpayers' dollars?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the trip in question was approved, as is appropriate, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the reasons being that the Minister was going to attend a very important conference on women's rights, at the end of the UN Decade for Women, in Nairobi. Because the Minister had vast experience as a missionary in Africa and had developed very close friendships with many people both in and out of Governments it was decided that prior to the Commonwealth meeting it would be appropriate for him to visit a number of states, including a number of heads of state, which he did, for private and formal meetings as well in regard to Canada's position at the Commonwealth, our aid programs and so on.

The Minister of State for Immigration, then the Secretary of State, fulfilled very important responsibilities in a very noble way.

I can point out to my hon. friend, as it bears on the question, that I have asked for a report and analysis of ministerial aircraft utilization from year to year. From the last year of the Liberal administration and our first year in Government it is now down 37.5 per cent.

REQUEST THAT EXPENSE VOUCHERS BE TABLED

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): The Prime Minister claims that the Minister went to this Nairobi conference. I agree, but that was only a small portion of the one-month safari trip of this Minister. My question for this Prime Minister is if he is prepared to justify the trip for one month for these three individuals, is he prepared to table in this House and make public all documents referring to the expenses of these three individuals, which may amount to some $200,000 when accommodation, entertainment, and food costs are counted up?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is long enough. Order, please.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that anybody who knows the Hon. Minister of State for Immigration would know that he would undertake—as I say, in his earlier career he was a Minister of the church working in Africa where he acquired very important knowledge.

Ms. Copps: Congratulations.

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East says congratulations. I think Mr. McLean should be congratulated on his outstanding career.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchi: What about the taxpayers?

Mr. Mulroney: He asks about the taxpayers. In point of fact, under this Government, in this year, the total hours used were 21.3 per cent less than under the Liberal administration.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and it does concern the new Ulysses of the Cabinet on his Panafrican odyssey. In view of the fact that the Government jet travel alone cost in excess of $90,000 how can the Prime Minister justify that expenditure when in fact, if the Minister had used commercial travel, the cost would have been a fraction of that?

Mr. Speaker: That is the same question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, come on.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister may answer if he wishes but the Member is in fact asking the same question that has already been asked. Does the Hon. Member have a supplementary question?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect I did not ask the same question. I would like the Prime Minister to respond specifically to the question of whether he could not have used commercial jets rather than the very expensive and less fuel efficient JetStar Government aircraft.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The answer, Mr. Speaker is in all reasonableness, no.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary question.

GOVERNMENT EXAMPLE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): My supplementary question is this. Does the Prime Minister not think that a Government which preaches restraint to the Canadian public ought to give an example—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Rodriguez: —of such restraint?

Mr. Speaker: No. Order. That question is clearly not supplementary.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques.

Take your seat.

Mr. Rodriguez: No, I won't sit down.

Mr. Speaker: I invite the Hon. Member to sit down.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: I beg your pardon? The Hon. Member was given two questions. I thought he had a supplementary for a third. I had already indicated that the first one was repetitive and I found the final one just as repetitive. Therefore I ruled it out of order. Would the Hon. Member—

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry but I won't sit down. I won't sit down.

Mr. Speaker: I name the Member.

Mr. Rodriguez: You are not the one to decide whether my question is repetitive or not.

Mr. Speaker: I name the Member. I have no choice.

Mr. Rodriguez: He was standing to answer the question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. order. I invite the Hon. Member to resume his seat.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Then I name the Member.

Mr. Rodriguez: No, I will not. I have asked a supplementary question and I am asking—

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Rodriguez: —to indicate to the Canadian public—

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: No, with regret, no. I am sorry, no. I invited the Member to sit down. I invite him now to remain in his seat.

Mr. Rodriguez: No, I will not.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member shooses to disregard the authority of the Chair. I have no choice under the circumstances but to name the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

Some Hon. Members: Out! Out!

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I am entitled to explain.

Mr. Speaker: Order. No, you are not, with regret.

I indicate to the Hon. Member that he now has one option and that is to resume his seat. That is his option and that is all. I therefore invite the Hon. Member to resume his seat.

Mr. Rodriguez: I have asked a supplementary question which is a very important supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I invite the Hon. Member to resume his—

Mr. Rodriguez: I am not going to sit down, I am sorry.

Mr. Speaker: The I have no choice but to name the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, and that is that.

Mr. Rodriguez: I'm not leaving, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry.

Mr. Crosbie: Haul him out.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by—

Mr. Speaker: Prior to that, there is a technical point I will introduce. I invite the Member on his own to withdraw. I invite the Hon. Member to withdraw from the House on his own.

An Hon. Member: He is not going to withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore I have no choice. The Hon. President of the Privy Council.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I therefore, according to tradition am obliged to move this motion—

Mr. Althouse: I know you are crying.

Mr. Hnatyshyn:

That the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt be suspended from the servce of the House for the remainder of this day's sitting.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is as follows. Mr. Hnatyshyn, seconded by Mr. Nielsen, moves:

That the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt be suspended from the service of the House for the remainder of this day's sitting.

All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Speaker: The Chair should advise the House that I have been advised that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt wishes to speak pursuant to Beauchesne's Citation 25(2). It is a very unusual procedure, in terms of its occurrence. Let me cite it to the House:

When a Member is named, he has the right to make a statement to the House and should then withdraw while the House makes its judgment.

The Hon. Member wishes to avail himself of his right.

Mr. Rodriguez: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by saying that I regret that this whole situation has come to this point. However, I want to explain that when I saw the employment statistics this morning with respect to my riding showing it to have the second highest unemployment rate in the country and then read of the Minister of State for Immigration spending over $100,000 in a one month odyssey around Africa, I decided to come to the House and ask why the Minister could not have taken a commercial aircraft which would have cost a fraction of the over $90,000 that the Government JetStar cost to take him on the trip. That was my concern.

This was motivated by the fact that whenever I go to federal Government agencies and ask for make-work projects to deal with the unemployment in my riding, I am told that the federal Government is in restraint and that it cannot afford it. Therefore, that was what motivated my questions to the Prime Minister.

I am really regretful of the fact that it has come to this situation.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt wish the House to take that as withdrawing his earlier refusal of the authority? Is that what the Hon. Member wishes the House to hear?

Mr. Rodriguez: From the moment I came to Canada I have never regretted standing up for what I think to have been the right action. Therefore, I do not want you to take it that I was withdrawing anything.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, may I remind the Hon. Member of the rest of the citation of Beauchesne with regard to his right to make a statement. It indicates that the Member, having made that statement, should withdraw from the House while the House resolves the question.

And Mr. Rodriguez having withdrawn:

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Hnatyshyn, seconded by Mr. Nielsen, moved:

That the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt be suspended from the service of the House for the remainder of the day's sitting.

The House divided on the motion which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

I am in receipt of a notice of a desire to raise a question of privilege arising out of Question Period from the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED MISLEADING INTERPRETATION OF FACTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise on a question of privilege arising out of Question Period. During Question Period, questions were asked about the evidence before the Deschênes Commission. My objection is that my ability to function effectively as a Member of Parliament is affected by the constant efforts of members of the Government who mischaracterize the evidence before the Deschênes Commission.

In the case of the Estey Commission, Government Members insist on leaving matters to the Commissioner. In the case of the Deschênes Commission, which is reviewing matters for which I was responsible as a Minister, they are constantly writing the report of the Commissioner in this House and writing it based on their own false and misleading interpretation of what is happening before that commission and what happened in the ministry of the Solicitor General in the period of time for which I was responsible for the ministry.

Point of Order—Mr. de Cotret

Government Members should withdraw these efforts to mischaracterize the records so that I may function effectively during Question Period. Today, they went so far in their interventions as to tell me what questions I should ask. It is my busienss what questions I should ask and they have no right to be telling me what I should be doing here in the House.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has made his representations. I think he will understand that I can find in no way that his privileges as a Member have been breached. Therefore, I cannot find that there has been a prima facie case made for a question of privilege.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions with the exception of 10 presented by Hon. Members on Thursday, October 10, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petitions presented by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) and the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) do not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

CORRECTION OF ANSWER GIVEN DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On October 8, in response to a question put by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), I referred to last November's program reduction exercise and the House will recall that the numbers I mentioned at that time were from given memory. I have now been provided with the figures and I would like to set the record straight.

Last November a decision was made to reduce the growth planned by the previous Government for 1985-86 by some 1,300 person years. Because of vacancies and attrition, only 725 indeterminate employees were directly affected. Almost 700 of them were redeployed within the Public Service. Approximately 30 were actually laid off and all of them were entitled to a priority for placement for one year.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. It is a well established practice of this House that "Late show" questions are allowed. At that time the person putting the question and the Minister answering the question can further elaborate on that question.

I absolutely reject the precedent the Minister is setting today. I do not think Ministers can, outside of the normal Question Period or the "Late Show", make that kind of statement. I have a "Late Show" question to ask and I would still like to ask that question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member raises a point. There have been practices in the past where Ministers have corrected an answer that they gave in Question Period in which they had made minor slips. Those have been treated as points of personal explanation. I take it that that was the practice this Minister was adopting, but I would sympathize with the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier. He will continue to be able to ask his "Late Show" question.

Perhaps I might suggest that in future when Ministers wish to do this, they might make a distinction between something which is a point of personal clarification that is minor and something which is not. Perhaps in future, other Ministers may avail themselves of an opportunity to make a statement under Statement by Ministers and that would give them the right to respond when a matter is that detailed.

CHANGES TO FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition from a number of citizens resident in Toronto. These citizens are concerned that the Government's decision to enter legislation that will reduce the family allowance payment will hurt primarily low-income people. This is in conjunction with other new taxes which will hurt primarily low-income people and with tax benefits that go primarily to the rich in Canada. Therefore, the petitioners urge that the House of Commons should reinstate the full indexation of family allowances and rescind the unfair tax increases.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by several people from the ridings of Gatineau, Ottawa Centre, Nepean-Carleton, Ottawa-Vanier and Ottawa West asking the Government to reconsider its policies and its legislation and to restore full indexation to the family allowance and child tax credit because budget measures will take away $55 million in family benefits from ordinary Canadians.

● (1250)

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of residents of Winnipeg. They point out that the deindexation of family allowances is an attack on women and children, especially on single-parent families, and that the amount of family allowance which even the poorest families receive after 1990 will be decreased. They call upon the Government to restore full indexation of family allowances.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 389.

[Text]

BANK NOTES

Question No. 389—Mr. Riis:

Is the Government planning to issue newly designed bank notes and, if so, on what dates?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): The Bank of Canada, under Section 21 of its Act, has the responsibility of arranging for the issue of banknotes. The form and material of the notes are subject to the approval of the Minister of Finance. Four series of banknotes have been introduced since the Bank of Canada was established. These are dated 1935, 1937, 1954 and for the latest series, the various denominations have dates from 1969 through 1975, depending on the year that the particular denomination was printed for the first time. Two denominations of the current series, the $5 and the $20 notes, were revised in 1979.

The Bank of Canada maintains an extensive program of research into banknotes with a view to maintaining and improving upon the high standards of the banknote issue. In recent years this has involved work on such aspects of banknotes as additional anti-counterfeiting features, features to help the visually impaired and blind, and techniques to increase the durability of notes. This highly technical work takes considerable time and involves several stages of preparation and review before a final decision to produce a new series can be made.

Once a final decision has been made to introduce a new series, to circulate alongside existing banknotes, an announcement will be made which will explain the reasons for any changes in advance of issue. Also, all practical information, including information on timing, will be supplied to help Canadians become familiar with the new series.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CONDOMINIUM ORDINANCE VALIDATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-73, an Act to validate certain ordinances of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, as reported (without amendment) from the legislative committee, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I have been involved with this question both as an MLA and as an MP for a good ten years. It is strictly a technicality conflict between the condominium ordinances of the Northwest Territories and Yukon and the federal Land Titles Act. No one is opposed to it. In fact, I have yet to meet one person who would be against allowing the Legislatures of the two Territories in question to make enactments dealing with condominiums. My faith today in the parliamentary system has been somewhat restored. After 10 years of work on this issue, it would appear that we are getting through the last hurdle as far as the House of Commons is concerned. The matter now has only to be dealt with in the other place.

This morning I am filling in for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) who unfortunately is absent. I have in my possession a prepared speech. I have never given one in the House of Commons before.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nickerson: These words should have been uttered by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. However, if the House will bear with me, I will try to give a prepared speech.

Today I ask Hon. Members to turn their attention again to Bill C-73, an Act to validate the condominium ordinances of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories. It is a matter of serious concern to the residents and the Governments of these two northern Territories. Following second reading on September 26, the Bill was referred to the special parliamentary legislative Committee, which reported it back to the House on October 7. The Bill now has the unanimous support of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the special parliamentary legislative committee. For this support I am grateful, since it confirms my belief and feeling that this legislation is truly required and will be a benefit and a convenience for those people who have chosen to make Canada's North their home; those who have made a commitment to that part of Canada which, to be honest, requires in many ways a higher degree of willingness to accept the challenges of nature, location and geography than in the other areas of our great country.

Today I do not intend to belabour the facts giving rise to the Bill—the extreme housing shortages in parts of the North, the desire of the people there for affordable housing which they can call their own and the deficiencies of the Land Titles Act with respect to condominiums. These were well covered at second reading. However, I will address myself to certain concerns raised by Hon. Members which, while somewhat peripheral to the technical aspects of the Bill, have a certain relevance.

The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) raised concerns regarding the possible conversion of existing rental units to condominiums and referred to a similar situation when the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was mayor of Toronto. I assure the Hon. Member that the Minister shall express his concern on this point to the Governments of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. It must be emphasized, however, that this is a matter entirely within the legislative prerogatives of those Governments and that the ordinances are territorial ordinances. It would not be in the interests of the Government, as a condition of introducing and supporting the Bill, to dictate to those Governments the terms and conditions which they must place in their own legislation. They are freely elected representatives of the people of the Territories, and I can assume nothing else but that their only concern is the well-being of the people they represent. This viewpoint represents not only the constitutional position of the territorial Governments but the sincere commitment of the Government of Canada to the devolution of powers and responsibilities to the territorial Governments and the people they represent.

The Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), at second reading, raised the question of conflict between federal and territorial legislation. It is not really a matter of conflict but a matter of federal legislation not being quite current. The federal legislation has simply not kept pace with the times and, as presently written, cannot accommodate what is contemplated by the condominium ordinances. The present Bill will overcome this legal technicality. The Minister has introduced the Bill to ensure that federal legislation, no matter how inadvertently or unintentionally, does not stand in the way of territorial initiatives in areas where those Governments have legislative responsibility.

I referred a few moments ago to devolution. This is an ongoing process placing under scrutiny all matters in the Territories for which the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and other federal Government departments exercise jurisdiction over subject matters which are or may be more appropriately assumed by the territorial Governments. Rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that the ways and means of ensuring local control of land titles registration are part of these in-depth studies.

Before concluding, I should like to express my appreciation once again for the continuing support of the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk), the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the members of the two committees for their very helpful recommendations and suggestions. Therefore, I strongly recommend to all Hon. Members the passage of the Bill. Those were the words which the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development would have spoken had he been present.

Finally, I should like to express my personal thanks for all the assistance by Hon. Members on both sides of the House, in particular the Hon. Member for Spadina, the housing critic for the New Democratic Party, and the official opposition critic for Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who is about to speak next.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We resume debate on Bill C-73 with the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner).

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I and the members of my Party support Bill C-73 without any hesitation or reservation of any kind.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This is an important speech we are going to hear now.

Mr. Penner: This is an important speech.

This matter has been contemplated for a long while and before making any comments on the Bill itself I think it would be appropriate for me to recognize the hard work of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). He introduced a Bill on this very same matter and the House saw fit to refer the subject matter of that Bill to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

In the standing committee the result of the deliberation on that Bill was to bring forth a unanimous recommendation that the Government act post haste to validate a territorial ordinance which was designed to ease the serious accommodation shortage in the Northwest Territories, and particularly in the City of Yellowknife where, according to testimony that the committee received from the mayor of that city, there is today a zero per cent vacancy rate. We were all alarmed and shocked by the rising costs of accommodation in that city.

I think the standing committee also deserves credit for the manner in which it acted. It acted with dispatch. It endorsed federal action and did so last May 28. The only thing that is surprising to me is that an uncomplicated Bill such as this, dealing with a technical matter, was not dealt with before the summer recess. This resulted in a loss of the advantage of the summer construction season, and that is certainly very regrettable. The Government knew that this Bill had unanimous support, and that a genuine, demonstrated need existed. It is very difficult for parliamentarians—and I know the Member for Western Arctic is equally frustrated—to understand why winter will be approaching before this Bill is passed. I do not think we can now expect to see the necessary construction beginning until late spring.

In giving our thanks it is probably also correct to thank the legislative committee for the way in which it handled this matter so quickly, under the able chairmanship of my good and honourable friend, the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle).

Before resuming my seat let me just place this Bill in some context so that all Hon. Members will know and the citizens of Canada will understand what we are doing and why we are doing it. All the property registration in the two Territories north of 60 is governed by a federal statute which is called the Land Titles Act. That Act goes back to 1894. Of course, in 1894 parliamentarians in this House of Commons did not foresee or envisage something called condominiums.

It was in the late 1960s that the two territorial Legislative Assemblies passed ordinances to register condominiums. Having done so, they were advised that they were probably in conflict with the federal statute, the Land Tittles Act. When northerners talk about the continuation of a colonial regime, this could be cited as an example. Life north of 60 is still extensively and rigidly governed by Ottawa and this creates a great deal of resentment and frustration among northerners. We who have been members of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development for many years have heard recitations of this hostility and this frustration repeated over and over again. Yet so little seems to be happening in recognizing the capabilities and the responsibilities of northerners to manage and direct their own affairs. They really do not need Ottawa breathing down their necks, looking over their shoulders and holding their hands. They can look after their affairs very well, and the Member for Western Arctic who served for a long period of time and with distinction in the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories knows that much better than I do. The previous Government did bring in a Bill to deal with this matter. It was going to repeal the whole of the Land Titles Act, and at first blush that seems to make eminently good sense. Again for reasons that Members of Parliament cannot understand that Bill died on the Order Paper. It was not passed.

The present Government received advice that it would probably be well to delay or postpone the repealing of the Land Titles Act until there is a full settlement of the comprehensive aboriginal claims in the North. I really cannot argue with that. It seems to make good sense. It was probably good advice that the Government received. But we do need to get on with the settlement of these outstanding aboriginal claims in the North.

Much in the way of development in northern Canada is being delayed because these aboriginal claims remain outstanding and unsettled. In fact the Macdonald Royal Commission drew attention to the fact that this matter should be dealt with as quickly as possible. The Minister, in recognition of this, is now trying to put together a new claims policy. He wants to take out some of the impediments in the former policy, which caused more settlements to be blocked than were allowed. Once those aboriginal claims are settled, then I think the door will be opened for what we call devolution. That simply means the transfer of powers and responsibilities from Ottawa to the two territorial Governments and their Legislative Assemblies in the North.

I wish to refer to the MacDonald Commission again. The commission said that this process of devolution, this transfer of powers and responsibilities to the North, should get under way quickly and that all provincial-like powers should be transferred to the North within a period of five years. Again, I would like to tell my hon. friends how frustrating it has been for those of us who sit on the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development each year when we examine the Estimates. We have confirmation that the policy of devolution exists, not only with this Government but with the previous Government and with administrations before that. Yet, we ask: How much devolution has there been? The answer is: Precious little. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) can correct me if I am wrong but I think the last time some control was transferred it was over co-operatives and place names. It was something as small as that. More recently, there has been some transfer of responsibility over the forestry sector, which is encouraging. It can be seen how slowly things move.

We still have a very large Department in Ottawa of more than 800 person-years which is responsible in some way which is never very clear to anyone for administering the North from afar. All of these federal public servants in the northern development part of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are stepping on the toes of territorial public servants who are every bit as competent as those here in Ottawa. It does not make one more competent to be a federal public servant. It does not mean that the federal public servant is one notch above provincial or territorial public servants. These public servants are stepping on the toes of territorial public servants. They are also bumping head-to-head with other federal public servants who are working vigorously on their own projects in the North. I am speaking of public servants from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Departments of the Environment, Energy, Mines and Resources and Transport Canada. Thus, if one visits the North it would be difficult to meet someone who is not some type of public servant. In order to find a real northerner one has to search around.

There are so many public servants that certainly devolution ought to mean that responsibility of the northern development part of the Department could be easily and quickly transferred to the North. If the Government wishes to save some money, if it is really serious about cutting the deficit, then it should look very hard at the northern development part of that Department and reduce it significantly. It could be done without causing any hardship or any serious difficulty to anyone in the North of whom I am aware.

I would like to give one example of the problems that we seem to be having with the policy of devolution. A few years ago the standing committee established a subcommittee, as the Hon. Member for Western Arctic will remember since he served on it. He proved to be very helpful because of his engineering background. We looked at the Northern Canada Power Commission wanting to know whether or not we really needed a federal Crown Corporation to supervise the production and distribution of power in all of northern Canada. In a province such as Ontario there are municipalities that can quite ably handle the matter. We came to the conclusion that there could be territorial power commissions which could handle the matter quite well, provided there was some continuing transfer of funds to assist the power rates paid by those people who live in isolated areas and who rely upon diesel fuel for the generation of electrical power. That was our conclusion. It was a long time ago. At this moment I cannot remember the year we tabled the report in Parliament, but I know that the Northern Canada Power Commission still exists. It still has its headquarters in Edmonton and not in the real North, north of 60. So far nothing has happened but we all await some action.

I conclude by saying that it is my urgent hope that the legislation which is before us will make possible more affordable housing to residents of northern Canada. We recognize that a Bill such as the one before us can be handled competently by northern legislators who are responsible to their electorates. It is a small, technical matter for the Parliament of Canada to be dealing with. It is really an item which is not on the national agenda. However, it has important ramifications for the North, as we have been reminded by other speakers.

Once the Bill is passed, the territorial Governments will be able to proceed with legislation or ordinances which they passed some 15 years ago. Can we really comprehend that? Some 15 years ago they decided they should act and they have had to wait since that time to have certain ordinances validated by the Parliament of Canada. Does that not illustrate that it is time for Ottawa to let go and allow northerners to conduct and manage their own affairs?

The Minister has promised that there will be action with regard to devolution. We want to believe that. All members of the standing committee will want to see some real and concrete results during the lifetime of this Parliament. Those results will certainly have my full support.

Condominium Ordinance Validation Act

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak in support of Bill C-73. I agree with the Hon. Members who spoke before me that it seems to be long overdue. That is to say, the people of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon decided 15 years ago through their legislators to have a condominium ordinance. It was in technical conflict with the Land Titles Act of the federal Government, which had been passed nearly a century before, before condominiums were even thought of. However, for whatever reason, it has taken 15 years to come this far in removing that technical barrier.

Like the previous speakers, I have not heard of anyone who opposes the principle of this Bill. However, there is a problem associated with it which is not a matter of principle. In fact, if this Bill does open the way for the creation of more housing in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon it will certainly be a useful Bill. I am not convinced that we will have any sudden action with respect to it. Perhaps some people will say there was a time five years ago which would have been more favourable. What I understand is taking place at least in some parts of the Territories, particularly in Yellowknife, is that there is not a good financial situation for building condominiums and, perhaps, for building anything. It is expensive to build in that part of the country. Much of the housing which is being built is being constructed with federal subsidies. I think these subsidies are right and necessary. Whether or not they will be available for condominiums is not yet clear to me. Other Hon. Members may have a better view with respect to that issue.

The irony is that very few people living in the Northwest Territories are likely to benefit from this legislation. The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly), when he was speaking to this Bill on second reading, gave some of the recognized statistics with respect to the gross shortage of housing and the gross over-crowding among the Indian people of the Northwest Territories. Very few, if any, of those people will be in a position to buy a condominium. They are not likely to be seen as potential customers for those who would invest in building a condominium. There is probably a very small potential market for condominiums there and, from talking with some of the people in Yellowknife, my impression is that the market has been shrinking of late as opposed to expanding. So this Bill may not have an effect for several years and when it does have an effect, it is likely to be of no benefit at all to a very large number of the people in the North who badly need housing.

Condominium housing is not the solution for low income or moderate income people whether they live in the Northwest Territories or in Toronto. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands, mentioned on second reading, and I in fact had the opportunity to raise it in committee, that in Ontario we have had experience with condominium legislation. It was passed in the late 1960s, I am not sure whether it was 1967 or 1968, and was no doubt much like the condominium legislation in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. But we found that when things were going well and the builders were building rental and condominium apartments, no serious squeeze was felt. But since the early 1970s, in many parts of southern Ontario, certainly from Windsor to Kingston, building has dried up, not totally, but the situation is serious, particularly with respect to the building of rental apartments. In fact, in the middle of 1972, there was a downturn of investment in rental apartments in southern Ontario. Rents started to shoot up shockingly and in 1973 and 1974, there were 25 per cent, 30 per cent, 45 per cent increases for little or no reason. The landlord perhaps put on a coat of paint and said he had to pay the cost of the paint. Nobody believed that. It was simply that the industry decided that there should be a shortage of rental accommodation and, therefore, landlords were able to force rents up exorbitantly. The result of that, of course, was that rent control, for the first time in anyone's memory, became a major election issue in the Ontario election of 1975. The reigning Government at that time said no to rent controls and continued to do so until the day after the election when it found itself to be a minority Government. We then got rent control in Ontario.

Now, of course, the industry would like to rewrite history. It tells us that the reason for the shortage of apartments is the rent control legislation, but in fact that is false. It is a complete reversal of the truth. The fact is that it was the shortage of apartments which forced the unusual step of rent control in peacetime. We had rent control in wartime and some people thought we would never see it in peacetime. But the industry forced it on us.

Because of the rent control situation there was pressure on some apartment owners to find a way out of this. They decided to convert their buildings into condominiums, sell them off and spend their money out west or in buying up Florida or New York, which some of the large real estate companies in Toronto are busy doing. The legislation in Ontario provides that the municipality shall have power to approve or disapprove, allow or disallow a conversion from a rental building to a condominium. Toronto City Council did exercise that power because of the great need of the people in Toronto for rental accommodation. Toronto adopted a policy statement that there should be no conversions from rental apartments to condominiums so long as the vacancy rate was below 2 per cent. It did make some exceptions. It said that if the rents are already so high that only the rich are renting, it might as well let the rich buy them if they want to. However, for most apartment buildings there was to be no conversions until the vacancy rate rose above 2 per cent. In the last 15 years that has never happened in Toronto.

On the basis of that experience, I would suggest that the Legislatures of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon take note of what has happened and guard against the loss of rental accommodation. I believe there are only about 504 rental units in the larger apartment buildings in the City of Yellowknife. Actually, there are 700 units publicly owned and leased, but only 500 units in the private market. I am sure it would be a great hardship for many people in Yellowknife if those 500 units were to be converted to condominiums. The Legislatures have the power to prevent that. I believe the Legislature of the Northwest Territories is meeting next week. I do not know about the Legislature of the Yukon. In principle, the Legislatures have the power to prevent this conversion or, if they wish, they can share that power with the municipalities. But they should simply recognize that below a certain vacancy rate it is not in the public interest to eliminate rental accommodation. The vacancy rate in Yellowknife is worse, from a tenant's point of view, than the vacancy rate in Toronto has ever been. It is zero. There are no apartments to rent in Yellowknife so I have been told by knowledgeable people. This would be a poor time to turf out tenants because the owner wants to sell the apartment as a condominium and the tenant does not have the money to buy it.

I urge, therefore, the Legislatures of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories to profit from the experience in places like Toronto. In spite of the policy of the Ontario legislation, Toronto in 10 years or 15 years lost 1,800 rental units. Some of them were very expensive and, therefore, perhaps, it was no loss in a practical way. But some of them were units which had been rented to people who could not afford to buy them as condominiums. I believe the municipalities of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon should take warning from Toronto.

I agree with the two previous speakers and the Minister that this is a decision which belongs to the people in the Legislatures of the Territories. It is correct to pass this problem on to them as it is without attempting to amend it here. We should leave to them the responsibility to resolve that problem. However, I do recommend that they look at the experience not only of Toronto but in a good many other cities in the south where tenants have been very hard pressed by the loss of rental units. That being said, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to approve the legislation. I hope that the serious shortage of decent and affordable housing in the two Territories will be relieved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved the second reading of, and concurrence in, an amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-77, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (pari-mutuel betting).

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up too much time of the House. I just want to give a brief explanation as to why we are dealing with this matter at this particular time.

This amendment results from a decision taken by the Department of Justice and enshrines in legislation a long-standing practice of the race-track division of Agriculture Canada. The existing regulations delegate to the director of the race-track division the authority to approve changes in the percentage deducted and retained from each dollar bet up to a maximum amount set by the Minister and the race-track division regulation. It was the opinion of PCO lawyers that the existing words in the subclause were inadequate to allow for such delegation. Thus, this amendment will allow for the delegation of the authority to approve the association percentage up to a maximum set by the Minister. The Department concluded that this amendment was needed for clarification, thereby removing any doubt about the delegation of authority to the director of the race-track division.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me say on behalf of my fellow Liberal Members of Parliament that we are familiar with the amendment. I have reviewed it and it is satisfactory to us. We are glad to see this amendment to the Bill. I might just add that I had the honour to serve as co-Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments and it pleased me very much to see the attention being paid by the Government to ensure that enabling legislation of this sort adequately states the power it conveys. Although one could have argued that the power already existed by virtue of the larger regulation-making power given in the legislation, it is always better in cases where it can be done to specify clearly the discretion being awarded, in this case to an official in the Minister's Department.

I am glad this step has been taken and I am glad to support the Bill. I hope it is proclaimed shortly so that race-tracks across the country as well as the agricultural industry can have the benefits it provides.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say on behalf of the New Democratic Party that, having consulted very carefully with our members in the other place, we, too, agree with this amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, amendment read the second time and concurred in.

The Governor General's Act

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-78, an Act to amend the Governor General's Act, the Governor General's Retiring Annuity Act, the Salaries Act and the Judges Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to commend to Members of this honourable House Bill C-78, an Act to amend the Governor General's Act, the Governor General's Retiring Annuity Act, the Salaries Act and the Judges Act. Just to start things off, the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) will not be speaking in this debate so I wish to touch first on the changes this Bill provides with reference to the emoluments of the Governor General and the Lieutenant-Governor. The salary of the Governor General of Canada was fixed at Confederation at 10,000 pounds sterling. In 1931 it was converted from sterling to $48,666.63 and has remained at that level until today. The salary is, however, tax-free. If this Bill is passed by the House, the Governor General's salary would be increased to $70,000, which I think is clearly more appropriate for the occupant of that office. In addition, there is a slight amendment to the Governor General's Retiring Annuity Act.

The Lieutenant-Governors have had their salaries revised by statute only three times since 1867; in 1952, 1975 and again in 1983. Without going into too much detail, this Bill would increase the salary of all Lieutenant-Governors to $69,000 a year as of January 1, 1985. Their present salary is $44,100. However, those salaries are taxable rather than not taxable which is true of the Governor General. I think there will be no hesitation by Members of the House in approving these salary increases for both Her Excellency the Governor General and for the Lieutenant-Governors who today are, by and large, not persons of any substantial wealth and who therefore need to have a reasonable salary if they are to occupy those offices. Of course, that reminds me that the new Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario happens to be a former colleague of ours in the person of His Excellency Lincoln Alexander, so I hope Linc will be pleased with this presentation I am making here today.

Mr. Robinson: He wrote the Bill.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is a merit increase.

Mr. Crosbie: Just before getting into subject matter of the increases we propose for the judiciary, I want to outline the context within which the judiciary is operating in our system. We have had a very productive year in the area of justice, the most productive, I would say, in many years, since September, 1984. This House passed Bill C-14, the Foreign Extraterritorial Measures Act. The Opposition when it was in Government had a similar Act lying around for several years but could do nothing with it. We have now passed that legislation, which puts Canada in a position where we have some weapons at our disposal to use if there are any threats to our sovereignty through interference with the operation of Canadian law through another state such as the U.S. trying to apply its influence in an extraterritorial manner.

The House has also passed amendments with respect to the Ontario and Manitoba courts, namely, Bill C-3 and Bill C-61. We have made major amendments to the Criminal Code through the Criminal Law Amendment Act known as Bill C-18. That will be proclaimed on December 2 of this year. These are major amendments, particularly regarding impaired and drunken driving. That measure will be proclaimed three weeks ahead of the Christmas season. There will be an intense campaign to make the provisions of the Bill well known at the end of November, and of course there are a great many other amendments included in that legislation.

The House enacted the Charter Conformity Bill, which will be proclaimed on October 15. We prepared a discussion paper on equality. We appointed a subcommittee of the House Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to consider this discussion paper on issues raised by the coming into force of the equality provisions of the Charter on April 17. That committee is going to report, I believe, on October 25. As a result of its report we will have to respond to its recommendations and findings. There will be another charter conformity Bill arising out of the subcommittee's report as soon as time permits it to be prepared.

Bills C-47 and C-48 are now before a committee of the House. They are the new Divorce Act and the Bill for family orders enforcement which are about to be studied at the clause by clause stage. I believe that those two pieces of legislation will have a greater effect on Canadian life than any other legislation which will be enacted in the House during this Parliament. This is not the time to go into the details, but the family orders enforcement Bill includes an effecitve national system for the enforcement of maintenance and custody orders, the lack of which has been a national scandal for some years.

Bill C-49 is legislation to deal with the problem of street soliciting and is now before a legislative committee and should be passed through the House before the end of November. That legislation deals with a major public nuisance and decaptures the streets of the cities of this country for the ordinary law-abiding citizen. That legislation deals with a problem which has existed since 1978 about which the predecessor Government dithered and twittered around and did nothing.

Bill C-78 deals with the issue of compensation for judges. Every three years there must be a report by an independent commission on what should be done about judges' compensation and emoluments. There was such a report produced over two years ago, about a year before the Official Opposition was defeated last year. Unfortunately, no effective action was taken and we are now dealing with that matter, the details of which I will give in a few moments.

In the area of justice, during the last year we have entered into a mutual legal assistance treaty with the United States in order that both countries can be more effective in attempting to deal with crime and in assisting one another in the battle against crime. There will be legislation forthcoming in the House in the next few months for the implementation of that treaty. We have adopted a policy of compensation for wrongfully convicted and imprisoned persons. Our predecessor Government refused to deal with that problem. It refused to join with the provinces and the provinces were forced to compensate such persons on their own. The federal Government has paid half of the compensation which the Province of Nova Scotia agreed to pay to Mr. Marshall who was found to be wrongfully convicted and imprisoned. We have advised British Columbia that we will do the same in connection with the Fox case there.

There is before the House a resolution on reform of the Senate. As time permits, we will see what becomes of that. We have introduced a new policy in the Charter Challenges Program which was announced a week or two ago. It provides $9 million over the next three years to assist women, the handicapped, and other persons who may wish to take advantage of the equality clauses of the new Charter in worthy cases of national importance. Who is to be assisted and to what extent will be decided by a board of competent people independent of the Government.

We have established the Deschênes Commission to deal with the question of whether there are any war criminals or persons reasonably suspected of being war criminals in Canada today or whether there have been any such people here in the past. We have, therefore, taken some action on that very sore and important question as the commission is now sitting.

These are just some of the highlights of the actions taken on the justice scene in the last year. This is only a warm-up compared to what I hope to have before the House in the course of the next year.

We will have to deal with the question of the Constitution, pornography, hate literature, child abuse, the Badgely and Fraser Reports, and, hopefully, our response to those through legislation will be put before the House in the new year. I am ascribing a high priority to the question of mental disorder and the criminal law. This area badly needs reform. I intend to have legislation dealing with that subject before the House this fall. As I mentioned earlier, there will be another Charter conformity Bill and mutual legal assistance treaty legislation.

This fall most important legislation will be placed before the House dealing with the application of Canadian laws to the off-shore, the Off-shore Laws Extension Act. This is particularly important because of our determination to establish clearly the fact that Canada has sovereignty in the Arctic and northern regions of this country. For the first time in many years decisive action in that respect is being taken. There will be legislation coming before the House dealing with the implementation of the Atlantic Accord in the energy area between Canada and Newfoundland. There will be legislation forthcoming dealing with important amendments to the Supreme Court Act. There will be legislation proposed dealing with the question of tax appeals amending the Tax Court of Canada Act and the Income Tax Act.

There will be Criminal Code amendments suggested, Mr. Speaker, in the area of contempt of court, the jury, theft and fraud, vandalism and arson, and dealing with the question of proceeds from crime. There will be a new Bill coming before the House in the next few months proposing amendments to the Federal Court Act and the Crown Liability Act.

I intend to assign a high priority to the question of changes in the process of the appointment of judges. We have had a report from a committee of the Canadian Bar Association which, of course, we will consider in the course of deciding how we are going to change the process to ensure that there are improvements in it. I also intend to deal with the question of judicial independence and the reports which have been made in that area in order that it be not only a fact that our judiciary is independent, but that it be apparent that we have an independent judiciary. There will be some changes in the criminal legal aid area and initiatives in the area of the victims of crime.

We will have to deal, of course, during the course of the next several years, with changes to the Constitution, particularly, hopefully, in connection with the endorsement of the Constitution by the Province of Quebec. There are amendments to be suggested in connection with Newfoundland Pentecostal schools. Of course, there will have to be changes in connection with aboriginal rights and it is very likely that changes will have to be considered in connection with the upper House.

This is the general context of the framework of the past 12 months in the field of justice and our prospects for the next several years. I am hoping that Members of the House will have an opportunity to deal with all of these matters in such a way that progress will be achieved in all areas within the next two years. If we can make progress at the rate of that achieved in the last year, it will certainly be an astonishing three years in the area of social justice.

This brings me to the subject of the judiciary. If we are to have social justice and if this framework is to work and these reforms are to be carried out satisfactorily, we must have an independent and able judiciary. We must have a judicial system which attracts people to become judges. As a matter of interest, Mr. Speaker, we have 793 Section 96 judges. That is, there are 793 federal judges appointed by the Government of Canada. Eighty-two of them are supernumerary judges and 711 are in the active category. Of course, the supernumerary judges hear cases as well, but not on a full-time basis. As another point of interest, I point out that since the Government took office it has made 68 new appointments, seven judges have been elevated to higher courts, and six have been transferred. The total number of appointments in the last year was 81. The total expenditure on salaries for our judges in the last fiscal year ending May 31, 1985, was $64,893,806.40. The total expenditure this year, if there are no changes based on the judges presently holding office, is projected to be $70,992,-539.53. If this Bill is enacted, we would add $9,580,710 to salaries for the present fiscal year. There would be an increase of $136,000 for conference allowances and an increase of $141,500 for the representation allowances. The increase in salaries and allowances would be $9,858,200.

It is interesting to note also that of the total number of judges, 231 are county or district judges and of the total number of judges as of September 1—this has changed slightly since then—41 are women. Obviously, there are too few female judges and this is an area to which we must and will give high priority. It is only being held back by the fact that women in large numbers have only joined the legal profession in the last 10 or 15 years. Since one must be in practice for at least 10 years before becoming a judge, this, at the moment, limits the number of available women to become judges. However, it is a high priority for us to increase the number of female judges in this country as rapidly as possible.

To operate this whole system we need judges who are intelligent, who have ability, who are hard working, independent and understanding. We need judges who are humane, literate, discerning and who are well disposed and humble. That is a great attribute of a judge. There are not too many humble judges but I strongly recommend it to members of the judiciary. They should be polite and caring. These are the kinds of judges that we want to encourage on the benches of our country. They will not be encouraged there unless we make sure that their working conditions and emoluments are attractive to them. Whether we like it or not, we must face the fact that lawyers can do very well in their own practices without going to the bench. In fact, those who are not failures—because there are always some failures in any profession—do much better by staying in private practice than they can ever do on the bench. When we consider what we pay judges, we must make the comparison to what they can earn in private life if we are to attract them to the bench. They have families and other needs to look after.

Mr. Keeper: Go to the bench, John.

Mr. Crosbie: John is not going to the bench. John has no intention of going to the bench. There are too many other things to be done before I go to the bench.

Mr. Keeper: Do it for your family.

Mr. Crosbie: If I ever do go to the bench, it would be the great bench in the sky. Perhaps that is the only bench I will go to.

Let me give some details with respect to the judiciary.

Mr. Keeper: Get those dolts off the bench.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman said to get the dolts off the bench.

Mr. Robinson: The dolts out of the PMO.

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Member had better watch it or I will call him and his Party une bande de cruches, which means, of course, a bunch of dolts. It is not widely known that I am bilingual.

Unfortunately, we cannot delegate the task, and the Constitution imposes upon Parliament the duty to fix and provide the salaries, allowances and pensions of the federally appointed judiciary. It is a difficult duty. It may have seemed straightforward back in 1867, but it is a difficult task.

We must balance the needs and expectations of our judiciary with our own responsibility to see that the money of the taxpayers of Canada is used wisely and to the best effect. However, we are not allowed to pass this duty off to anyone else. By virtue of the wording of Section 100, it cannot be delegated to any other body. It is a duty that is often found to be embarrassing and distasteful to Parliament and members of the judiciary because it results in public debate upon the remuneration of men and women who may be subjected, as a result, to generalized abuse but who, by their offices, are denied the privilege of public reply. Our judges cannot reply themselves when they are criticized here or anywhere else. Therefore, it is my duty as Minister of Justice to attempt to act on their behalf and be a public voice for them.

The fact that all of this must be done by Parliament itself carries with it the danger of politicizing judicial compensation issues, and unless the levels of compensation are reviewed at regular intervals there is also the danger of inequity and unfairness to the judiciary if their salaries and benefits are permitted to fall behind on the basis of leading economic indicators.

There has been erosion in judicial salaries since 1981, when an indexing formula was first provided to cushion the effects of inflation between parliamentary reviews. As I mentioned earlier, there is provision now for triennial commissions to review the adequacy of judicial salaries and benefits.

Mr. Otto Lang, a former Liberal Minister of Justice, two years ago reported on judges' salaries and benefits and that report was tabled in Parliament. At its 1985 annual meeting, the Canadian Bar Association passed a resolution deploring the delay in dealing with the Lang Report and calling for its implementation forthwith. We regret the serious delay, but I believe that we did not cause it.

We also have a mandate for fiscal restraint and to protect the nation's economic interests. As a result of that mandate, we are not going to accept fully, at this time, the Lang Commission's recommendations. We have sought to arrive at salary levels which will adequately compensate the judiciary, while recognizing the fact that we are in a position of fiscal restraint and are attempting to achieve economic recovery. Incidentally, it is good to see from the economic figures announced today that there is a drop in the unemployment rate and a drop in the interest rate. We now have the lowest interest rate in seven years, I believe. We are on the road to economic recovery. When the froth of insidious suggestions and when the cesspool of slanderous imputations is removed from the surface of the House of Commons, we can see the real progress that is being made in this country in the last 12 months.

We were fortunate in the past to attract practitioners to the bench who considered the judicial appointments not only a great honour but also a public duty. Those appointees were usually senior lawyers. When they came to the bench they had wide experience and a mature and reflective outlook on legal and social issues. Those personages were usually financially secure and could leave the rigours of practice and its returns in favour for what was then a more sedate pace of life on the bench. However, believe me, the pace of life on the bench today is no longer sedate. It is not a sinecure to be appointed a judge. Everywhere I have gone in the country, judges are among the hardest working. It is not a holiday. It is not entering into a pleasant retirement. Joining the judiciary is entering into a life of rigorous work. The work that they do is of tremendous importance.

Now, with the Constitution and new Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the judges of this country are in the trenches when it comes to determining what kind of society we will have in the future. In the last three years we have transferred tremendous powers to them. Now we must make sure that we have people at the bench who are more than suited to exercise those tremendous powers over us and our descendants.

The judiciary is still dedicated to public service. I repeat that life on the bench is the same as an active practice with the bar. The case loads in all of our courts have increased dramatically. The trend since 1975 has been to appoint younger men and women. Throughout the first half of this century the average age at appointment was 55, but it has fallen to 49. Far more judges have been appointed in their late thirties or early forties.

Much of our success in making judicial appointments has come because we are trying to consult broadly within the legal and judicial communities in making the appointments. I have mentioned that we will be reviewing the judicial appointment process. I intend to recommend major changes. However, the responsibility for judicial appointments will still remain with the Government of Canada and we do not intend to delegate that responsibility to anyone else, no matter what reports come in from wherever recommending that. The process can certainly be improved, though. Of course, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has announced that he has asked me to review the process and to recommend changes.

There will be full consultations in connection with these proposed changes with provincial Attorneys General, Chief Justices, the Canadian Bar Association and other interested groups. The McKelvey Committee Report will be considered by the CDA at its winter council meeting in February.

It is obvious that we must have very high standards on the bench. Their position within our constitutional framework provides that members of the judiciary have a greater and greater influence on the lives of us all. They will determine the shape of our society for generations. If they are to carry out that great task, we have to ensure that they are adequately compensated for this onerous and essential duty.

Judges are just as vulnerable to economic concerns as the rest of us. As the age of appointment has fallen, the men and women on the bench have become less concerned about the hereafter, the retirement package, and are more concerned with the here and now, their salaries. Because they are younger appointees, they do not have the financial resources behind them that would permit them the luxury of indifference to their cash flow. Younger judges have younger families and they have to make adequate provision for them. I am surprised by the number of people approached by me or on my behalf to become judges who have said no because they have children who are going to university or have other heavy responsibilities and do not feel that they can afford to sit on the bench.

I know judicial salaries are high by the standards of the average Canadian but they are not exceptional when measured against the professional incomes lawyers can expect to enjoy at the Bar and they are not even exceptional when measured against senior public sector salaries. One must have at least 10 years at the Bar to be appointed. Once one has 10 years at the Bar in private practice, one should be enjoying his or her best earning years. Therefore, judicial salaries must be appropriate to those circumstances.

The present salary of a provincial superior court judge, the judge with which we are most familiar, was $93,800 as of April 1, 1985. This Bill proposes to increase that salary to $105,000. The Lang Commission made its recommendation using 1975 salary levels for the judiciary, applying the full industrial composite index and allowing for a cap of 6 per cent and 5 per cent in 1983 and 1984. Following that formula, the salary recommended by the Commission would have come to $119,000. If we adjust its recommendation to take into account not the inflation it expected but the actual rate of change, then the salary in accordance with that formula would be $114,000. The salary that we are recommending is $9,000 less for a puisne superior court or supreme court judge than the recommendation of the Lang Commission.

As I said earlier, it is not possible for us to provide salaries in the order of these recommended by Mr. Lang at the present time. However, we know that compensation must be adjusted because we have to take into account the erosion of judicial salaries by inflation and other pressures since 1975. We consider the figure of $105,000 to be just and equitable in the circumstances. Whether or not the salaries we have proposed are adequate will be examined again next year because we have to appoint the next statutory review commission in 1986. By the way, the Commission will be asked to pay special attention to the question of what changes there should be made to judicial pensions.

The salary of $105,000 was determined by restoring the relativity that existed in 1975 between judicial salaries and those of the most senior classification of Deputy Ministers, the DM3 level. I do not want to deal with all of the salaries because we issued a release with all the details. However, the salary of the Chief Justice of Canada would be fixed at $135,000 under this Bill and other categories of the judiciary would be scaled downward accordingly.

With respect to county and district court judges, the Lang Commission recommended that the difference in salary between a county court judge and a superior court judge should not exceed $5,000. We have accepted that suggestion. There are four provinces in which there are still county and district courts, Ontario, Nova Scotia, British Columbia and Newfoundland. Since the jurisdiction of those courts is not that much different from the jurisdiction of superior courts, the present differential of $6,900 will be reduced to $5,000. Under this Bill, for example, a puisne district court judge or county court judge will receive $100,000 per year which, incidentally, is $14,000 less than that suggested by the Lang Commission. Of course, the chief justices will receive somewhat more than the puisne judges. A puisne judge of the Supreme Court of Canada will receive $124,200. As I said, a judge of a superior court will receive $105,000 and a judge of a county court will receive $100,000.

The Bill also deals with certain judicial allowances. A representational allowance is provided to chief justices and other senior judges to defray expenses incurred in hosting or attending functions of an official or semi-official nature in their capacity as heads of the court. That allowance is also provided to the puisne judges of the Supreme Court of Canada and to the senior judges of the Supreme Courts of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. We will double that allowance from its current levels to $10,000 for the Chief Justice of Canada, $7,000 for the Chief Justice of the Federal Court and the chief justices of each of the provinces and $5,000 for all other judges entitled to that benefit.

The Lang Commission had recommended that the ceiling on this allowance be removed and that all certified expenses be reimbursed. Rather than doing that, we are extending the benefit of this allowance in certain cases so that expenses incurred by spouses can be defrayed as well. We felt that when a chief justice attends a Government or other official function on behalf of the court, it is usually expected that he or she be accompanied by his or her spouse. At the present time, there is no authority for reimbursing expenses incurred by reason of attendance of spouses and we propose to permit reimbursement out of the representation allowance for such expenses. That, in my view, is only fair.

I believe that spouses should not be forgotten, whether they are male or female, and I am pleased that we are making this change. By the way, several years ago a report pointed out that in the External Affairs Department, the wives of diplomats and the like should be paid a salary. That is a principle which I thought was a reasonable one in view of the kind of life they lead and the kind of work they do without pay at the present time. As part of that kind of experience—

Mr. Robinson: What about Jane?

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, I believe Jane should be paid a high salary for travelling expenses. However, I have not had her at any staff meetings. I never know when she is going to barge in, mind you. I hope that she is not watching me.

The terms of the removal allowance will also be broadened by the Bill. There is now a removal allowance available to reimburse judges required to move their place of residence on appointment to the bench or when they are subsequently reassigned. We are going to extend that allowance to permit payment of such expenses in two special cases affecting the administration of justice in the north. If the Bill is passed by the House, a judge who resigns or retires from the Supreme Court of the Yukon or of the Northwest Territories—and I am glad to see that both Hon. Members are present this afternoon—and if it is the judge's wish to relocate in one of the 10 provinces, he will be paid a removal allowance which will cover reasonable moving and related expenses.

The same benefit will be extended to the surviving spouse and children of a northern judge who dies in office, if the judge's surviving dependants decide to relocate in one of the provinces. However, this benefit is conditional upon the judge having been appointed to a northern court while being a resident of one of the provinces. These amendments are proposed in recognition of the special circumstances which exist in the North.

Finally, the conference allowance will also be increased. That allowance is now based upon a multiplier of $350 per judge on a court, with a minimum per court of $3,000. The purpose of it is to meet expenses incurred by judges in attending conferences, meetings and seminars which promote efficiency or uniformity in the courts or improvements in the quality of judicial service in the courts. We are suggesting a new multiplier of $500 per judge, with a minimum of $5,000 per court, as a response to increased travel costs since the allowance was last adjusted. We are not proposing any change at this time to the conference allowance of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, which will remain at $1,000 per judge.

We cannot over-emphasize the importance of the judiciary to our system. We must strive, not only to secure the best legal talent available for the bench, but to compensate our judges adequately for the enerous and vital tasks which they undertake on our behalf. We think that we are proposing a fair and equitable approach to the issue of judicial compensation and allowances. They may be less generous than many in the judiciary had hoped and less generous than those advocated by the Lang Commission, but I think there are valid reasons to say that it is not possible to implement the Commission's recommendations in full. Judges are subject to the same economic realities as you and I, Mr. Speaker. Within the limits imposed by the need for restraint, I think that these amendments will go a long way toward improving judicial remuneration and the quality of life on the bench. This is why I am happy to move the Bill today.

In conclusion, I should like to return to the kinds of characteristics we need in judges. We need intelligence and ability. They have to be hard working. We cannot have lazy louts on the bench any longer. They have to be independent and understanding. They have to be humane, literate, discerning, well disposed and humble. By the way, this reminds me of myself. Perhaps I should go to the bench; perhaps that is the only solution. They have to be well disposed, humble, polite and caring. It is not easy to find people of that nature. I look upon our judges today, as a result of recent constitutional changes, as voyageurs—and I did not say voyeurs—in a new legal frontier, exploring the frontier of the Charter. I look upon them as the coureurs de bois, the people who portaged and explored Canada in canoes, people such as Radisson, Des Groseilliers and others. Our judges are penetrating unknown territory. It would be very unwise for us to have a short-sighted attitude and sound to the general public as if we are paying judges tremendous salaries—and I think they are tremendous salaries—or to arouse envy among the public. The comparison is to what they can make if they do not go on the bench. We want the best, we want more women and we want more representatives of ethnic communities on the bench. We want a good mixture on the bench for this exploration; they are the new voyageurs. Who knows how they will interpret the Charter of Rights and Freedoms or what they will think it means? If any of us have to come before a court, we will want to have the best on the bench, and we will only have the best on the bench if we not only respect them but pay them well.

I thank my hon. colleagues in the Official Opposition and in the New Democratic Party who I believe will co-operate in seeing that the Bill goes to committee relatively quickly, like sort of today or, if not, the next day. The legislation will make these payments retroactive to April 1, but I hope we will not keep the judiciary on tenterhooks for the next several months and that we will give reasonably swift treatment to the Bill which I commend to the House as being a reasonable compromise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by admitting that I had underestimated the Minister. I came to the House today thinking that his remarks would perhaps take five minutes to make and knowing that the Bill was heading for the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and that we would be able to examine it further there. However, upon listening to the length of his speech, I reflected upon the fact that he came from Newfoundland. In Newfoundland they try to say things well and, by and large, they do so. I do not know if that is a total explanation of it. Also I recognized, as I listened to his speech, that he was bound to set the record straight, as he saw it, and to try to demonstrate the terrible record in the justice field of the former Government, as well as the excellent record of his own Government in the brief one year it has been in office. I do not want to take the bait on any of his misstatements, no doubt through a lack of full examination and study of the Liberal record. I commend the Liberal record to him. I have to say for my part that I am disappointed that few things have been done in the area of justice in the year. However, I welcome the things which have been done. They were mostly bits and pieces of Bills on the Order Paper which would have proceeded during the last Parliament if only the Opposition of that day had been as co-operative as the Opposition of this day is intending to be, certainly in relation to legislation which we started. I thought, as he continued on and on, that even a Minister wanting to set the record straight would not have taken that long to try to do it. Then we found out the real reason for the speech being what it was, and I guess the real reason was that Jane was listening. I am glad that the wife of the Minister takes a considerable interest in her husband's work to listen that long, it being that full of baloney and hot air. I certainly want Jane to know that I enjoy her husband's speeches very much and I enjoy his presence in the House. I hope he stays out of trouble long enough to bring in even a small proportion of the many good things not yet delivered but promised. I hope Esterelke is listening, by the way.

I have little to say on the subject of the piece of legislation before us. It is a Bill to raise salaries, pensions and other related benefits. I endorse fully what the Minister said about the importance of the bench to a society which is animated, as is ours, by the rule of law and which wants to give absolute reality to the rhetoric that emerges from the House about our commitment to a society where all citizens truly have access to the judicial process. We want good judges.

My friend has offered himself as a candidate for the bench today. I hope he will not go until a lot of that good legislation about which he talked is brought forward and is made into law. However, since he raised the subject, I want to add a note about a type of judge who is needed and was not mentioned by my hon. friend. The record of the last year shows a lack of sensitivity to this criterion. As the judicial arm of the public administration of Canada has gained more and more authority by the passage of laws which have been referred to it and by the passage, in particular, of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, in addition to all the fine qualities mentioned by the Minister, we should add a greater reflection in the bench of the population nature of society. For example, he spoke about women. I was disappointed to hear him say that he could not find many good women to appoint to the bench now. He explained that only lawyers can be appointed and far less than half the lawyers in the country today are women. I still think, in spite of what the Minister said, and my own experience is that women can now be found to be appointed to the bench. This ought to be a more positive goal of the Minister than he indicated.

I recently tabled a question on the Order Paper which I had hoped would be answered by today. I asked how many of the 68 judges named by this Government are women. The reason I asked the question is that my sense of it is that since the election there are fewer women appointed to the bench, in proportion, than there were. I am very proud that in the former Liberal Government a substantial proportion were women. I have asked for the actual facts and when they are available I think they will show a falling off of the appointment of women to the bench. The Minister says he is in favour of it. He says that he cannot find enough good candidates, and I think that he is wrong. I hope that he will take another look at it.

I want to indicate that it is not only women who ought to be represented more on the bench. There are other groups in the country whose views ought to animate the judiciary in Canada. Minority groups have very proud and able lawyers among their communities who ought to be elevated to the bench as much as possible, as a priority, I am indicating, not just as a coincidence, in order to achieve a judiciary which truly comes from the people of Canada, in addition to having all of the other qualities my friend mentioned and with which I very much agree.

Mr. Speaker, I will reserve my comments about particular provisions until we reach committee. I can tell you that the Liberals will not hold up this Bill. We are in favour of this increase. We recognize and note that it is not everything that was recommended by the independent outsider who reviewed the qualifications for judges, but it is an improvement. My sense of it is that it is an improvement that will make it easier for good people to accept when they are invited to become judges. On this side of the House we are all in favour of that.

As I said it was a very long speech by the Minister. He covered a lot of subjects that I could challenge but that is almost always the case with that Minister when he is on his feet. So far as second reading is concerned, I will simply note on behalf of our Party our approval in principle of the Bill.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to speak on Bill C-78 which has as its primary objective a rather substantial increase in the salary of the federal judiciary. As well it would increase the salaries of the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governors of Canada.

I do not intend to comment with respect to the proposed increases in salary of the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governors as I understand that the last time those salaries were increased was back in the 1800s, and it is probably about time that we had another look at that. Certainly we on this side are not prepared to storm the barricades with respect to those proposals contained in the Bill.

I had the honour of taking part in a similar debate, that is with respect to judicial compensation, some four years ago. That was on what was then Bill C-34, at a time when rather substantial increases once again were being proposed in the salaries of members of the federal judiciary. The previous occasion on which salaries had been increased was in 1977.

In March of 1981 the approximately 750 federally appointed members of the judiciary, and here of course we are talking about country and district court judges in those provinces in which there still is a country and district court, I believe Ontario, British Columbia and Nova Scotia; Supreme Court judges; Court of Appeal judges; Federal Court; Federal Court of Appeal; the Tax Court and the highest court in Canada, the Supreme Court of Canada, a substantial pay raise which was in fact retroactive to April 1 of 1980.

At the same time as we passed that Bill there was provision made for annual cost of living increases which were based on a percentage. I believe there was a maximum of 7 per cent in the cost of living. Finally, that Bill made provision for an independent commission to study the whole range of compensation and benefits offered to members of the federal judiciary.

In 1983 the first such commission was appointed. It was chaired by a former Liberal Cabinet Minister, Otto Lang, former Minister of Justice in fact, and that committee met and recommended some very substantial increases in salaries for the federally appointed judiciary. They reported in October of 1983 and recommended salary increases ranging from 26 per cent to 36 per cent, very significant increases. At the same time they recommended eliminating any contributions by federally appointed judges to their very generous pension plan.

The question of contributions to their pension plans by federally appointed judges has been a sticky and controversial one and indeed in the previous Bill the Minister of Justice had proposed eliminating contributions by those judges to their pension plans. However, in the face of strong opposition from my colleagues in the New Democratic Party, as well as from the then Official Opposition, the Conservative Party, the Minister of Justice withdrew those provisions and appointed a special commission, as a bit of a face saving gesture, to look into that whole area.

The suggestion was made that somehow by requiring judges to contribute to their pension plan the way all other Canadians contribute to their pension plans we were in some way attacking the independence of the judiciary. I have the report of the special committee that looked into this whole question which was chaired by Mr. Jean de Grandpré and which included Mr. Jack Birkenshaw and Mr. Jack Munro. That report made an astonishing suggestion. They said, and I am quoting from the report:

> —there exists a subtle but real relationship between the annuity benefits provided by law for the judges and the quality, competence and independence of the judiciary in Canada.

Clearly any such suggestion that the requirement for judges to contribute to their own pension plan is in some way linked to the independence of the judiciary is completely without foundation. I was pleased to note that even the report of the Lang Commission quickly put the lie to that particular suggestion. I quote again from the Lang Commission:

> We do not consider the issue of contributions to annuities as in any way affecting the independence of the judiciary.

I suggest that that is certainly the only appropriate approach to that particular question.

I was pleased to note that despite the recommendatoin both of the de Granpre committee and the Lang Commission that they did not in fact include in this Bill provisions to elimiante contributions by federally appointed judges to their very generous pension plans.

I want to put the Government clearly on notice that our position on this issue remains the same today as it was four years ago. We will vigorously oppose any Bill which is brought forward to eliminate contributions by judges to their pension plans. That is not to say, however, that there are not deficiencies in the current provisions for pension plans for members of the federal judiciary.

I will refer to the report of the Lang Commission which noted that it had been made aware of at least one recent case in which a judge, after holding an office for over 10 years but less than 15, had resigned his office and was thereby disentitled from receiving any benefit, apart from the return of his contributions. The Commission said that was unfair and we in this Party agree that it is unfair. It went on to recommend that a judge with no final qualification for retirement should be entitled to a partial annuity after completing 10 years of service on the bench. That is a recommendation which was repeated by the committee chaired by Louis-Philippe de Grandpré on the independence of the judiciary in Canada. That committee recommended, as the Lang Commission had done, that there should be changes made in the eligibility in vesting requirements for pensions of the members of the federal judiciary. I would note that one outstanding former judge and lawyer, a man who has contributed a great deal not only to the development of jurisprudence but to human rights in this country, and I am speaking of Thomas Berger, is one of those who is affected by this present inequity in the provisions for judges' pensions. I hope that the Government is prepared to move forward on an early basis to make the changes necessary in this particular area.

Parliament is called upon to consider the question of the level of judges' salaries by virtue of the provisions of the British North America Act. Section 100 of the BNA Act requires Parliament and no other body to establish the level of salaries, allowances and pensions of judges who are appointed by the federal Government. Those payments are established by way of amendments to the Judges Act which come before this House from time to time. I believe the time has come to consider seriously whether this is in fact the most appropriate way to approach the sensitive question of what is an appropriate level of judicial compensation. I suggest that the House of Commons Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs may want to consider the advisability of looking into other approaches to the method of fixing judicial compensation.

I emphasize that the final decision with respect to the level of such compensation must clearly be made by Parliament. However, it may well be that there are other methods for arriving at an appropriate level of such compensation. For example, in the State of New South Wales in Australia there is a provision whereby an independent remuneration tribunal is empowered to address the issue of salaries for the judiciary, among other federally-appointed individuals. The tribunal reports to Parliament and unless there is a specific objection to its recommendations by 50 per cent of the Members of Parliament after the passage of a certain period of time the recommendations become law. That is the negative resolution means of proceeding. I suggest, without endorsing that particular proposal in any way, that the time has come for us to examine alternatives which remove the direct link between those of us in Parliament and the judiciary when it comes time to fix levels of salary.

I wish to make it clear that we reject the argument that it is necessary to substantially increase the level of salaries for federally-appointed judges in order to ensure that the best people are appointed to the bench. I suggest it is totally without foundation to advocate, as does the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), that we increase the level of salaries in order that those people who are already making $150,000 or $200,000 would then be in a position to accept appointments to the bench. We do not want a bench which is appointed on the basis of those individuals who will accept a position which pays a great deal of money. In fact, even the report of the Canadian Bar Association on the independence of the judiciary, the committee to which I referred earlier chaired by Louis-Philippe de Grandpré, stated the following:

> —it is neither necessary nor desirable to establish judicial salaries at such a level as to match the judges' earnings before appointment to the bench. The most obvious reason for this is that such a policy would tend to attract people to the bench for purely financial reasons. The sort of person who would accept a position on the bench because it paid well is not the sort of person who would make the best judge. Rather, the sort of person we would wish to see on the bench are those who appreciate the honour of being a judge and who see as part of their reward the satisfaction of serving society on the bench.

I suggest that is a more appropriate approach to the question of what is adequate judicial compensation. The suggestion that somehow the best people are those who are making the most money is one that we in the New Democratic Party reject. There are many outstanding members of the bar who, in fact, are making salaries well below those which are currently being paid to members of the federal judiciary. In looking at the level of judicial compensation we have to consider as well the fact that there is a very generous annuity plan which should be included in any assessment of the level of compensation. Lawyers who are working in the area of public interest advocacy, lawyers who do a great deal of legal aid work and those involved in poverty law are not necessarily the best paid. They do not make as much money as corporate lawyers, for example. Nor do they make as much money as tax lawyers. However, that does not mean they are not eminently qualified to serve on the bench of this country.

I would note as well that by this bench-mark, as suggested by the Minister of Justice, senior members of the bar would presumably be unwilling to serve in Parliament because we are paid even less than members of the federal judiciary. The suggestion that the quality of representation, either on the bench or in Parliament, is directly linked to the level of compensation is one which I find invidious and without any foundation in substance.

My colleague from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) asks why there are so many lawyers in Parliament. I think that that perhaps is a question he may want to address in the context of his speech.

Stanley Knowles, the former Member for Winnipeg North Centre, spoke in 1981 when a Bill dealing with judges' salaries was before Parliament. I think it is appropriate that I remind the House what Stanley Knowles had to say with respect to judges' salaries. I might say that he said the same thing with respect to the salary of Members of Parliament. Stanley Knowles said this:

> Most of our senior citizens, and this means most of the 2 million people over the age of 65, are struggling at or just below the poverty line. We have many others, particularly women, in the 55 to 65 age bracket, those unattached who would be well off if they could get up to the poverty line who are having a difficult time—
> I cannot bring myself to believe that it is the right thing in the face of these problems to keep on giving massive increases to those who are at the top—
> I still think, if I may go back that far, that there was something to the idea in Edward Bellamy's "Looking Backward", who said that those who had to do the dirtiest and the meanest jobs should get paid more than those who had the privilege of doing the delightful and the enjoyable jobs.

There is considerable substance to what my good friend and former colleague Stanley Knowles had to say on the occasion of the debate on judges' salaries in 1981. There is a great deal of job satisfaction in the work of a federally-appointed judge. There can be no greater honour bestowed upon a member of the bar than to be called upon to serve as a member of the federal judiciary. I think that the level of status within the community, the degree of respect, as well as the existing salary levels are certainly adequate.

I would note as well that there is a built-in percentage increase already in the Judges Act. When we deal with percentage increases on salaries which are already up around $100,000 what we are doing is increasing the gap between rich and poor. At a time when the Government is talking about allocating scarce resources efficiently, I have to ask myself whether it is really appropriate for us symbolically, if in no other way, to add to the salaries of those who are already at the top at the same time as this Government is cutting back on family allowances. I have to question the priorities of a Government which is prepared to move forward in this way. I have to question the priorities of a Government which tables a Bill to substantially increase the salaries of federally appointed judges at the same time as it tables a Bill to remove full indexation of old age pensions, a proposal which was turned back only as a result of the collective will, determination and energy of senior citizens right across this country.

It is my view and that of my colleagues in the NDP that this is not the time for this increase. I emphasize again that we do not in any way dispute the vital role played by the judiciary in Canada. What we do question is whether it is necessary to significantly increase these salaries in order to attract the finest legal minds to the bench. The argument is made that senior lawyers are paid well in excess of what members of the federal judiciary are paid. In fact, the Lang Commission included a table in its report which would appear to document that. It noted, for example, in 1981 that the average income of a lawyer who had been practising for 10 years, in the third quartile of the profession, was $95,269. Certainly those lawyers are not underpaid by any stretch of the imagination. Once again we have to ask ourselves as a society whether it is not the case that the gap between rich and poor is too great, that it is too great between those who have and those who have not, and whether we, as a society, should be moving to narrow those income inequities instead of broadening them as this Bill would do.

The Lang Commission as well made a rather sad plea on behalf of members of the federal judiciary. It said that for many judges, particularly those in the large urban centres, and in areas with a high cost of living, cash flow is an increasing problem. I think all of us will shed a tear or two for the federal members of the judiciary for whom cash flow is a problem when we note that the bottom salary of these individuals as of April 1 of this year was $86,900. I do not think we have to shed too many tears, although I am sure it must be a struggle for them to survive on $86,900 a year. I am sure the cash flow must be a difficult problem but I suggest there are literally millions of Canadians who are struggling to get by on salaries far below those suggested by the Lang Commission as inadequate. Indeed, the current level of salaries is from $86,900 for a judge of the County Court up to $117,800 for the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada. I suggest that range of salaries will not in any way lead to financial hardship. Quite frankly, it will not in any way act as a deterrent to those who generally want to serve on the bench. I suggest that if someone turns down an appointment to the bench because they are making $90,000 or $100,000 a year, we have to ask ourselves whether that is an individual we really want on the bench in Canada today. If someone is prepared to say no to a salary like that, despite the fact that the position itself brings honour and prestige and, indeed, is the pinnacle of any lawyer's career, do we really want him on the bench?

I would like to deal for a moment with another area of fundamental importance to this whole question. That is, the nature of the appointments process. Quite frankly, I would have hoped that, instead of bringing a Bill forward to deal with judges' salaries, this Government would have brought forward a Bill to deal with the question of the method of appointment of judges. The Canadian Bar Association recently issued a report called The Appointment of Judges in Canada. This excellent committee, chaired by Neil McKelvey, interviewed literally hundreds of people and came to the conclusion that there has been a long history of political patronage appointments to the bench by both major Parties in Canada. The committee noted that although there had been some commendable exceptions, the practice of appointing the Party faithful to the bench has been all too common. Those were the words of a reputable committee of the CBA which suggested very clearly that political patronage has played an excessive role in the appointment of members of the federal bench. It went on to add that that does not in any way mean that those who were appointed were incompetent because they happen to be of a particular political persuasion. However, what it does mean is that we are not appointing judges on the basis of quality and ability; we are appointing them on the basis of their political stripe.

The committee said that in the light of political appointments, continued public confidence in the integrity of the Canadian justice system cannot simply be assumed. There is cynicism concerning the appointment of judges and this cynicism must be allayed if public confidence in the legal system is to be maintained. The committee went on to say that the process of the appointment of judges tended to vary widely from province to province. For example, in the Province of British Columbia, Quebec, the Ontario Court of Appeal and the High Court, the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon, political favouritism has not had a significant influence on appointments. Speaking as a Member of Parliament from British Columbia, certainly that has been my sense of the nature of appointments to the federal bench in British Columbia. Political appointments have not been a significant problem there, although there certainly have not been an excessive number of lawyers who happen to be New Democrats appointed to the bench. However, the committee goes on to note that in Alberta, Manitoba, Newfoundland and in Ontario county and district court appointments, political favouritism has been a significant but not dominant consideration. Finally, in the most damning portion of this report, the committee says that in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan, political favouritism has been a dominant, although not the sole, consideration. Most appointees have been active supporters of the Party in power. That is a pretty stinging indictment of the method of appointment of judges in Canada today. I suggest that rather than focusing on the level of salaries we should, as a Parliament, be looking very seriously at the mehthod of appointment. This is particularly important at a time when the role of the judiciary has been significantly enhanced. The Charter of Rights, of course, has been in effect since 1982. The equality rights section of the Charter has been in effect since April 17 of this year. Members of the federal judiciary are going to be called upon to make fundamental decisions which will in many cases shape the fabric of this nation in the future.

I suggest that to continue with a method of appointment of judges which is clearly flawed and, in too many instances, based on partisan political factors, does a great disservice to the people of Canada. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, as well, that we look very seriously at the recommendation made by the CBA for an independent appointments process. I happen to believe that we should not reject as quickly as they do the suggestion of a role for Parliament in scrutinizing appointments to the federal judiciary. A similar role was played by American legislators, elected representatives. I suggest that we want to look very carefully at the implications of that in the Canadian political and parliamentary context.

As the Canadian Bar noted, Mr. Speaker, the primary cause for concern, the support of a particular Party, is totally irrelevant to whether a person is qualified to be a judge. Another concern they noted is that where political favouritism exists, supporters of Opposition Parties are frequently not given serious consideration as candidates for the bench. Those who support no Party at all are also often excluded. They go on to suggest that the system may produce appointments of unqualified people, those whose only qualifications are friendship with the Party in power or one of its Ministers. They also suggest that even if political affiliation may be a minor consideration, patronage and judicial appointments can become a means of managing a political Party. Finally, they raise two other major concerns. Now that increasing numbers of Charter cases are coming before Canadian courts, some involving review of political decisions, and of course the Supreme Court of Canada has indeed held that Cabinet decisions can be reviewed, as in the cruise missile case, Governments might try to stack the courts with people of their own ideological persuasion in an effort to influence the outcome of decisions on contentious social issues. Finally, and this is a very important factor, even if political favouritism is reduced or eliminated in judicial appointments, if the public perceives that it exists, public confidence in the judicial system is effectively undermined. The committee goes on to make a number of suggestions for reform and I believe many of them should be looked at by the Government on a priority basis.

There are a number of other issues of concern with respect to the question of the judiciary in Canada. I was recently most disappointed with the decision of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to call upon a justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, Justice Willard Estey, to conduct the investigation into the Government's mishandling of the CCB and Northland Bank fiascos. I believe the Chief Justice of Canada, Brian Dickson, very clearly and eloquently urged the Government as recently as last month to be very cautious before calling upon judges to embark upon commissions of inquiry. At a time when the Supreme Court of Canada has a very heavy workload before it, I believe the Prime Minister made a serious mistake in taking away an albeit outstanding member of that bench and asking him to conduct this commission of inquiry. I hope the Government in future will heed the concern of the Chief Justice of Canada and others in not appointing such individuals. On this point I would note that the de Grandpré Commission on the independence of the judiciary was very clear and explicit. It said:

> The Committee . . . is not in favour of judges sitting on commissions of inquiry except in those cases where the nature of the matter under investigation makes the choice of a judge as commissioner particularly appropriate. Time spent away from the bench sitting on commissions of inquiry tends to reduce the independence of the individual judge involved and of the bench generally. The most obvious problem is the absence of the judge from the bench. A greater burden is placed on the other judges of a court when one is absent for a substantial period, and the work of the absent judge may suffer.

Therefore, I think this is an appropriate occasion to draw to the attention of the Government my concern about weakening the bench by making these kinds of appointments. I suggest as well that we look very seriously at the fact that access to our courts is becoming increasingly restricted. This is the result of serious but-backs in legal aid programs all across Canada. This has the effect of creating a justice system in which there is full accessibility only to those who can afford to go before the courts. We in this Party have always spoken out strongly for full and equal access to the courts. I suggest it is incumbent upon both the federal and provincial Governments to provide all necessary resources to ensure that legal aid programs, both civil and criminal, are adequately funded. They are not adequately funded today and that can very easily lead to a system in which there is justice for the rich but not for the poor.

The Minister of Justice touched upon in particular the question of appointments of women. While some progress has been made, I think it is only appropriate to draw to the attention of this House and Canadians the fact that until this Government came into power not one woman had been appointed by a Conservative Government in the history of Canada. Not one woman by any Conservative Government since 1867. That is a pretty disgraceful record. However, I am pleased to note that the Government has started, albeit slowly, to appoint more women to the federal bench. However, I suggest there is no shortage of qualified women at this point and if ever there were a need for strong and effective affirmative action, it is in this area. The time has come for qualified and capable women to be appointed to the federal bench and I hope the rate of such appointments will increase very significantly.

In conclusion, I want to again emphasize the importance of the task now before Parliament in being called upon to determine an appropriate level of compensation for members of the federal judiciary. At the same time I want to underscore our concern that judges should not be appointed on the basis of how much money they are going to be making. They should be appointed on their willingness to serve and accept this very important position. In many ways there can be no greater honour for a member of the bar than to be called upon to serve as a member of the judiciary. It is a difficult job and one which by and large in this country is done very well. I know that most of us who are members of the legal profession in British Columbia have the greatest confidence in and respect for our federally-appointed judges at all levels. I think it is important that we take the opportunity, when this Bill gets to committee, to look very carefully at some of the questions raised today regarding appointments to the federal judiciary and access to the courts, and look very seriously at whether it is an appropriate time for us to be increasing salaries of judges at the federal level as proposed by this Government. We in this Party are opposing this Bill at second reading and I know my colleagues will be taking an opportunity to speak at greater length today and in the days which lie ahead.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I see that this Bill is not going through today but that will not be on my account because I am going to finish my remarks before four o'clock. I am not going to involve myself in the argument as to whether or not a judge can scrimp by on the present salary of $95,000 and whether he really needs that extra $10,000 at a time when others in society are being asked to cut back on their expectations. I am not going to involve myself in the argument about whether or not the general level of compensation in the legal profession is too high in relation to other people in society for the type of work they do. What I am going to do is speak specifically about Clause 6 in the Bill which deals with the removal allowances paid to judges in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. There is a good reason why you need that allowance. Judges in those jurisdictions usually come from elsewhere. However, I would like to point out that this only applies to judges who are originally from and retire to one of the 10 provinces. It occurs to me that there might well be a case where a judge originally from the Yukon goes to the Northwest Territories, or the reverse, and he or she ought to be entitled to the same removal allowance as judges originating in and returning to the south.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). Does the Hon. Member wish to call it four o'clock? The Hon. Member will have the floor the next time this matter is debated.

Mr. Keeper: Yes, call it four o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well.

It being four o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ADVISABILITY OF PROMOTING INDIAN SELF-GOVERNMENT

The House resumed from Friday, February 15, 1985, consideration of the motion of Mr. Penner:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of promoting Indian self-government by:

1. Announcing support for an affirmative policy of constitutional recognition of aboriginal self-government;

2. Pursuing actively, a bilateral process of discussion with representatives of first nations on such issues as self-government, natives claims and the elimination of the extinguishment policy; and

3. Introducing legislation to recognition first nations self-government which should be developed by means of a joint process and utilization of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) on a point of order.

Mr. Penner: Am I being recognized for debate, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member for Cochrane-Superior has already spoken on this matter. Of course, if he speaks now, that will close the debate. Are there other Members who wish to speak?

Mr. Tupper: Yes.

Mr. Keeper: Yes.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, on a point of order, the Member for Cochrane-Superior.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, the motion that I put on the Order Paper on February 15 of this year has now been before the House on several occasions. If Members will examine the motion carefully they will recognize that to a very extensive degree, almost entirely, this has become—

Mr. Dick: That's debate.

Mr. Penner: It is not debate, it is a point of order. It has become the policy of the Government. The point I want to make, on a point of order, is simply that it is the intention of the Government to bring in a closure motion next week on Bill C-79 which involves the expenditure of some $800 million. I would like to ask, on a point of order—

Mr. Dick: Order. That's not a point of order.

Mr. Penner: Will the Parliamentary Secretary please listen for a moment—

Mr. Dick: Get to the point.

Mr. Penner: —instead of shouting so that no one can be heard?

Mr. Dick: Get to the point.

Mr. Penner: The point is simply the following: Will the Parliamentary Secretary consider allowing debate to stop now and having this motion come to a division next week?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Penner: Will he recognize what that will do?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. There may be personal discussions but, unfortunately, this is not a point of order.

Mr. Penner: Well, this certainly is a point of order because it is how we conduct our business and how we conduct our business is a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I cannot allow it as a point of order.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to finish the last part of my point of order and then the Speaker will see that it is a point of order. By allowing this motion to come to a division we will in fact be getting behind the Minister and saying that Parliament supports the Minister in his program. We will be getting behind the Indian people and saying that we are aware of their aspirations and that we, as a Parliament, are behind them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Penner: That is the point and the reason we should proceed to division now instead of debating any longer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair does not consider that to be a point of order. The Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Tupper) has the floor for debate.

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to rise this afternoon on behalf of the constituents of Nepean-Carleton to provide Members of the House with my analysis of the Private Members' motion which is before us. I think we all want to compliment our colleague, the Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) for his interest in native peoples, many of whom live in northern Canada and many of whom are his constituents. He has approached this subject in the House with a great deal of sincerity and integrity and he is to be complimented on that. I took the time today to read his speech of December 4 in the House when he introduced this motion. He ended his presentation that day by noting that these very important, sensitive, and difficult issues have to be addressed. I compliment him for that.

As I look at his motion which we are considering today I see that the Member for Cochrane-Superior is asking the Government to consider promoting Indian self-government by taking action in specified areas. Indian self-government, as I understand it, is intended to do the following four things: to enhance community control and decision-making; to recognize the diverse needs, traditions and cultures of those it serves; to enable Indian people to provide for Governments accountable to them rather than to the federal bureaucracy; and to establish future economic self-reliance for Indian people.

Aboriginal peoples have a historical view of this land prior to European exploration and colonization. It was inhabited by many different indigenous people who came from various geographic areas and eventually inhabited North America. These people were organized into political entities and groupings based on common language, culture, and history. These diverse communities were self-sufficient. Their economies were based variously on hunting, fishing, agriculture, gathering, and trading. Those economies depended upon the climate, forest cover, availability of game and good fishing, etc.

Over the years our native peoples were segregated onto reserve lands. The evolution of technology, the development of economies based upon manufactured products, and the dissemination of the tribes through disease disabled their traditional economic system. Many of these problems relate back to the Indian Act of 1876. Through the treaty-making process the Indians believed that their economic base would be protected or enhanced. Non-Indians saw the treaties as an extinguishment of Indian rights with the acceptance of a defined land base and government programs such as education and medical services.

Over the years various Governments have tried to stimulate economic growth in the aboriginal community. There have been some notable successes witnessed in many communities. The failures occur mainly because we have tried to impose our concept of business practices and economies on to the native peoples. The statistics tell the story. On every count aboriginal people suffered by comparison with the rest of Canadian society, even in comparison to adjacent non-native communities. They have less education, live in lower standard housing, and suffer from more health problems. This all leads to a continuous cycle of poverty and dependence, a cycle which this Government is anxious for those peoples to break out of. Changes in the economic prospects of aboriginal people will not come about easily. Movement must take place on a number of fronts simultaneously. This will not happen overnight, but we are starting now.

To be more specific, the educational levels of native peoples have historically been less than that of non-natives. Forty-four per cent of the Indian population have less than grade nine education compared to 22 per cent of the rest of the population. Fortunately, there are some signs of change in this area. A significantly larger number of young Indians are achieving higher levels of education than were achieved in their parents' generation. Enrolment in post-secondary schools, especially in management, administrative and related programs, between 1979 and 1983 increased by 63 per cent. Enrolment in architectural, engineering and related programs in 1982 to 1984 increased four times over that in 1979 and 1980.

The view of Indian people, which view the Government supports, is that economic development is linked to self-government. I am confident that the Member for Cochrane-Superior would agree with this hypothesis. Both are necessary to achieve the common goal of increased self-reliance. Therefore, we are moving in the direction of economic control being transferred to Indian peoples. Because of the diversity of the Indian nations, a wide range of possibilities must be and will be accommodated. This takes time.

We are currently working on a number of initiatives which will assist Indian people in breaking their dependency cycle and in moving toward economic self-reliance and self-sufficiency.

For example, in confirmation of the Government's commitment to improve the quality of life of Indian people through economic development, we have announced a $24 million fund for an Indian community human resource development strategy program. This program is based on the principle that a successful human resource strategy must be tailored to the needs of the community. Communities will be encouraged to assume full responsibility for the development and implementation of their own strategies.

In July it was announced that a fund of $11 million would be made available for the implementation of the Indian fisherman's economic development program designed to stabilize the participation levels of Métis people in the West Coast fishing industry.

We are currently working in close co-operation with the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion to pursue, through various tripartite agreements with the provinces and native people, the development of specific program initiatives that take into account the needs and circumstances of native communities. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) has announced that he is exploring a means of introducing new funding arrangements for Indian bands and tribal councils. Such funding arrangements would enable them to decide how best to meet their people's needs and to set their own priorities in view of their local conditions.

The need for other changes is fully recognized. As has been said before, we must find a way in these times of restraint and fiscal responsibility to provide a level of funding sufficient so that First Nation's communities can receive levels of service on a par with other Canadians in other parts of Canada which will allow them to become healthy and productive communities. This can only be done when funds can be expended in accord with their own values and under their own control.

The economic revitalization of this country is a major goal of the Government. This revitalization is clearly needed for our aboriginal people as well as for other citizens. The Government has made a commitment that Canada's native peoples will be part of the process of building a national economic consensus. It is absolutely essential that we provide an environment in which our native peoples find their true role in our society. We want them to enhance their educational opportunities in their own communities, to enhance their social opportunities, their business interests and their total well-being so that they can contribute in their own way and in their fullest way to the fabric of Canadian society.

We have a great deal to do in working for them. Naturally, we want them to work within their own councils. Beyond that, however, they must take their place in the framework of our great Confederation. I believe it is the hope of every Member of the House and every Canadian that as we move through the 1980s we will be able to enhance the economic and social well-being of native peoples who have such a great tradition and form such a great part of Canadian and North American heritage.

The Government is looking for new approaches to replace the policies that have failed our native people so badly in the past. It is talking to aboriginal peoples and seeking their views. I know that we can succeed in establishing the new relationship that is so vital to the enhancement of their place in our society. Together we can make a better future for native persons.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in speaking briefly in this debate, I want to make it clear that our Party supports this resolution. It aligns itself very well with the aspirations and needs of Indian people. The resolution begins by calling upon the Government to make an affirmative policy of constitutional recognition of aboriginal rights and points out that the Government could accomplish a great deal through a bilateral process of negotiation with First Nations' government. Finally, it indicates that the Government should be introducing legislation that would recognize First Nations' self-government.

My Party and I support this resolution because it brings these aspirations and hopes of aboriginal peoples directly to the attention of the Government. While it will not be easy, Indian self-government will be achieved. I hope that we take many steps toward that goal during our lifetime.

Indian self-government must be achieved because it is the lack of self-government and self-determination which has caused native people to end up at the bottom of the totem pole. The inability of the Indian people and Indian communities to make decisions about their needs and find solutions to their problems has resulted in low levels of education in Indian communities, high levels of alcoholism, violence and extremely high unemployment. Present conditions are enough reason to move toward Indian self-government.

History will show that the symptoms of today's conditions began when their right to self-determination was taken away. When European people first stepped foot on this continent in an attempt to establish communities here, it was the Indian people who came to their aid and taught them the ways to survive on this continent. There was greater equality later on during the fur trade between the trappers and merchants. At that time there was a mutually beneficial relationship between the Indians and European people. This mutually beneficial relationship between European and native people on this continent has been destroyed as a result of the undermining of the traditional native economy and the changing political process which left Indian political organizations with very little power or influence.

We must recognize that Indian self-government is the proper solution. Canadians were made aware of this fact by the parliamentary committee which produced the report on Indian self-government entitled "Indian Self-government in Canada: A Report of the Special Committee of the House of Commons". My colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), who was the chairman of that committee, deserves special recognition.

He and the other members of the committee deserve special recognition. They spoke and listened to Indian leaders right across the country. When they wrote their report, they demonstrated that they had in fact listened because the report reflected something that had been said by Indian people for many years: quite simply, that if there is going to be any real resolution to the problems that face Indian people, it is the Indian people who are going to have to fashion and implement the solution. The way to assure that that can be done by structuring the political process in a way that allows Indian people self-government.

In a country like Canada which in the past has been traumatized by threats of separatist movements, notions like self-government can throw fear into the hearts of many. It is necessary for Canadians to appreciate the need for self-government and what is meant by self-government and to appreciate that it is possible to negotiate self-government and still maintain a national unity.

I would like to pay particular tribute to those Hon. Members who served on the special parliamentary committee and issued the report on Indian self-government because they demonstrated that Parliament can serve a useful, worthwhile function and that it can take hold of a complex and difficult problem which has been unsolvable throughout the last 100 years of our history and come up with intelligent, reasonable and workable solutions. Having demonstrated that Parliament can work, we now need a real demonstration that Government can work.

It is not only Indian people who are cynical about the Government. In large measure, the whole of the Canadian public is cynical about the Government because Governments have so often promised so much and delivered so little. This matter provides a real opportunity for the Government of the day to live up to its promise and to demonstrate that Governments can serve people.

The cynicism that exists in the Indian community is based upon painful experience and has resulted in the fact that while this report on Indian self-government came from the Indian community, a number of Indian people have opposed its recommendations and concepts primarily because they no longer trust the political process and public authority. They feel that anything that comes from a parliamentary or Government source is bound to be flawed and detrimental to the interests of the Indian community. We have a long way to go toward building the trust that must exist between the Canadian Government and Indian communities in order to allow the negotiations that will result in Indian self-government.

There is some value to going through the agony, trouble and work that would be involved in establishing Indian self-government in this country. By achieving Indian self-government, we could aid human dignity. That Indian people face the conditions they do today is an affront to human dignity. By negotiating Indian self-government, we would show that we are no longer willing to tolerate the kinds of social and economic conditions under which Indian people live and that we would no longer tolerate the affront to human dignity that those conditions represent.

The benefits of Indian self-government would accrue not only to Indian people. Certainly Indian self-government would lead to a better life for Indian people and it would lead to the development of Indian communities and individuals. As well, it would be of benefit to the entire nation because as one segment of the community flourishes, we all benefit. As one flower in the garden blossoms, the beauty of the entire garden is enhanced.

As we demonstrate that it is possible for this nation to negotiate and create Indian self-government, a measure of democracy, we could also extend that same kind of negotiation in other directions. There are many other communities in this country that feel powerless and are cynical about the promise of democracy. If we could demonstrate that we are capable of putting in place a democratic system for Indian people, then we could do that with regard to other groups and communities as well.

The resolution brought forward by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior is a historic resolution. It is a real step forward in the progress of the Indian people of this country and in the building of national unity. I would call upon the Government to take very seriously the concept of Indian self-government and to seek all ways possible to achieve it in reality without simply speaking of it in rhetorical terms.

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) on the interest he has shown here today for our native communities, an interest that was apparent before, both in the proceedings of the parliamentary committee and in this House. The Hon. Member may be aware that my riding too has a native population that is very much present, very community-oriented, and that also wants to evolve towards a certain form of self-determination.

In the motion presented by the Hon. Member, he is asking the Government to support the adoption of an affirmative policy of constitutional recognition of aboriginal self-government. In this respect, Mr. Speaker, I would like to recall, first of all, that at the First Ministers' Conference on constitutional issues concerning native peoples, held on April 2 and 3, 1985, the Government indicated that it was entirely in favour of adopting a Bill to amend the Constitution, to recognize and affirm the right of aboriginal peoples to self-government within the Canadian confederation.

In his preliminary speech, the Prime Minister indicated that, like other Canadians, Indians, Inuit and Metis must be able to take responsibility for their own affairs by setting their own priorities and establishing their own programs. They also must have a guarantee that their cultural and linguistic background and traditions will be respected. "The key to the changes that are necessary . . ." said the Prime Minister, " . . . is to grant (native people) self-government within the Canadian confederation".

Mr. Speaker, he also recognized and accepted the desire of native peoples to have their rights, which are unique, enshrined in the supreme law of the land, in order to protect these rights against any legislative interference. The federal Government has demonstrated its commitment to providing constitutional protection for native rights in the amending proposal tabled at the conference, in which we find the following elements:

The recognition and affirmation of the right of native peoples to self-government within the Canadian confederation, provided these rights are set forth in agreements negotiated and approved by the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislative assemblies concerned;

● (1630)

Second, a commitment by the federal and provincial governments to conducting negotiations with native peoples on the issue of self-government, in accordance with their respective jurisdictions, while providing for participation by territorial governments if necessary.

I am sure I do not have to remind Hon. Members that the Constitution Act, 1982, contains a constitutional amending formula requiring the agreement of two-thirds of the provinces whose total population is equal to at least half of the population of the country. Furthermore, Section 37 of the Constitution Act provides for participation by representatives of the Indians, Inuit and Metis, and of both territories, in the process of determining native rights.

Obviously, it is not easy to reach an agreement when there are so many parties with such vastly diverging interests. However, the federal Government, by playing the role of moderator as well as tabling a detailed and innovative amending proposal, has helped to create the requisite framework for discussion and reaching an acceptable compromise.

The initial reaction of native participants was that although the amending proposal did not go far enough, considering the provisions they wanted to see in the Constitution, it was nevertheless a good starting point for discussion.

Among the provinces, reactions varied from unqualified support for the federal Government's proposal to outright rejection. The proposal was supported by five provinces: Ontario, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan admitted that it responded to many of their concerns. However, Nova Scotia would have preferred a more precise definition of self-government, while Saskatchewan was concerned about the nature of commitments that were not clearly defined and the risk of court challenges. British Columbia and Alberta were opposed to the proposal. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), who played a major role at the Constitutional Conference, chaired meetings held in camera on the evening of the first day and the following morning, in an attempt to try and develop a constitutional amending proposal that would be acceptable to all parties. The struggle to find a common ground that would make it possible to reach a compromise was a long and difficult one.

The federal Government's new proposal, reflecting Saskatchewan's compromise, was tabled around noon on the second day. It differed from the initial proposal in that, first of all, the commitment concerning the negotiating process was withdrawn from the amending proposal and included in the agreement. Second, the approval of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislative assemblies concerned would be necessary to conclude any agreement on self-government. Third, a provision was added to the amending proposal to protect native people against any measure that would repeal of infringe on their rights, including their rights to self-government.

The new provisions of the Accord included, among other things, the right to appear before the First Ministers' conference and present progress reports on the negotiations as well as proposed amendments to the Constitution with respect to self-government, an item which was to be on the agenda of the following conference of First Ministers on constitutional matters concerning aboriginal peoples.

This new proposition gave rise to various reactions from the provinces and the organizations of aboriginal peoples, from rejection in certain cases—because it did not go far enough—to conditional acceptance in other cases.

British Columbia tabled a counterproposition. Some provinces stated they would not take position until the aboriginal groups had expressed their views, and the Inuit Committee on National Issues said it would announce its opinion only after further consultations with other Inuit people. The Native Council of Canada and the Métis National Council both expressed conditional support for the new proposition, whereas the Assembly of First Nations rejected it outright even though it endorsed the initiative taken by the Government.

Just so the representatives would have time to consult with their aboriginal brothers, more ministerial meetings were held last June 6 and 7 to continue the discussions. At the time the federal Government indicated its willingness to support any proposition deemed acceptable to the other parties.

However it soon became obvious that it would be impossible to reach an immediate consensus to adopt a proposed amendment.

We were disappointed but not discouraged by the outcome, if only because it had been possible to reach agreement on more issues than ever before. What matters now is to provide unequivocal evidence that self-government is a viable concept in Canada. The constitutional process is therefore still ongoing as we wait for the 1987 conference.

In the meantime, mechanisms other than the constitutional process are being set up to show that the Government does indeed take the necessary steps in this field.

Earlier, the Hon. Member mentioned a host of programs that have been made available to native peoples and should be seen as a transitional measure, to help them until such time as native rights can again be enshrined in the Constitution.

However, I believe that the federal Government's commitment to recognition of aboriginal self-government in the Constitution has been made abundantly clear, and that is why we are asking all Canadians to give their elected representatives the support they need to enact this draft amendment.

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments this afternoon particularly on the motion and generally on the question of Indian self-government. I should like to begin by being as partisan as I am going to be in this debate and by paying tribute to the Hon. Member who moved this motion, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). If a certain Prime Minister in a previous Government had been more well-intentioned in his thinking, he would have named this Member as the Minister of Indian Affairs, and a great number of the difficulties encountered by Indian people would not have been encountered to the extent that they were. I pay tribute to him for his invaluable work both on the subcommittee report on self-government and for his continuing work in the House of Commons. He deserves our thanks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gormley: I feel qualified in some respects to speak about Indian self-government, in that my constituency of The Battlefords-Meadowlake has some 19 Indian reservations. Approximately 22 per cent of the electors or citizens in my constituency are of native ancestry. These people feel very strongly about the need for self-government and are supportive in principle of the move of our Government as it continues toward genuine native self-government.

As was mentioned by the previous Hon. Member who spoke, many interpretations were given, at the First Ministers' meeting and at other conferences, about what precisely was self-government. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) is working with a large number of native constituencies, provincial Governments and other native organizations toward specifically defining self-government. However, the general principle is one which I think all Hon. Members of the House can support, to the extent that the Minister has been working hard to bring self-government to reality.

There is a historical need for Indian self-government. The very principle of a Government ending the 20th century with a specific Department which deals with the running of people's lives, namely the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, is no longer acceptable. There is no doubt that that institution has long passed its time. A very necessary, historical point must be mentioned first—the native people of Canada must be the people who control their own destiny. For that reason it is crucial for us to move toward the position of self-government and to continue to move at a rate which will see the Hon. Minister, as he said, as the last Minister of Indian Affairs. This is his desire. I think it is the desire of all Members of this House.

I had the opportunity to speak recently to a native economic development conference. I spoke at that time about the need to couple the move to self-government with many other areas of concern of native people. Economic development is the most prominent of those concerns, of course, and this is being acknowledged by native people in my constituency of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake as a movement away from what they have seen, within the framework of this very parternalistic Department of Indian Affairs mechanism, as a hand-out mentality. When they look back on the years of reliance on the Department of Indian Affairs they see that economic development has not worked. Quite simply, the approach of the Government in handing out amounts of money to people, perpetuating a sense of reliance on the Government, is a system which is doomed to fail. These native investors and businessmen and businesswomen now see economic development as a self-sustained, self-driving sort of entrepreneurship. These people see that genuine economic development will only come as native people begin to govern themselves.

The process of devolution of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and of many of the other roles that the federal Government plays is a request long held by native people in my constituency. Presently across the spending range of the Government of Canada there is almost $3 billion annually spent through 11 different Government Departments on native people and native programs. Understandably the native community and the non-native taxpaying community share many of the same frustrations, and the frustration quite simply is, are we getting value for our money? I don't mean this as an aspersion upon the urban community of Canada but I travel to larger Canadian cities and I do sense there is a very profound misunderstanding of the way in which funds are administered to native peoples.

One only need drive, as I do, thousands of miles a year from reserve to reserve to see that with a consistency that is alarming, and I use the word shocking, that native people have a standard of health that is below that of non-native more urbanized Canadians; a standard of education that is lower and certainly a standard of housing which is sub-standard. The taxpayer says the Government is spending almost $3 billion a year on all of these programs so surely the native people must be getting at least enough money, if not more than that which they are entitled to. That is not true, Mr. Speaker. One only needs to see the standard of living in those Indian reservations and it will be obvious that the money is not finding its way to the rightful people who should be benefiting from that money, namely the Indian men, women and children of Canada.

There is a latent frustration, which is coming ever more to the surface, by the native community, saying that band by band, local Indian community by Indian community these people are not able to enjoy a standard of living in the commitment that the Government of Canada has made to them.

On the other hand, the taxpaying non-native person says, how much more money should the Government be spending. The answer is clear that a great deal of this money is lost, if I may use that term, in administration. Of the vast mechanism that we call the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, administration within the native community in the very large native umbrella organizations is not, in my humble opinion, representing the aspirations, the desires, the goals, the ideals of the average person on the reserve as well as the local chief and council, or the local tribal council or district chiefs association would be representating their concerns.

We have two large mechanisms within the native community first and, second, within the Department of Indian Affairs that on an administrative basis are consuming vast amounts of money and I think not providing the service to native people that could be provided at their own grass roots level.

The answer is clearly to begin to devolve this process and move toward genuine self-government. A system of self-government as I would envisage it would see the political, the economic and the economic development opportunity resting with those people who best know their community. The local chiefs, the tribal councils, the organizations of district chiefs are the groups that know about the true needs in the native community and are better set to administer it politically and certainly, an important aspect, financially.

If one looks at the present move toward self-government I think that we should pay tribute for a moment to the present Minister. I cannot speak with any scientific accuracy, but certainly by the experience of watching the Minister travel, he has logged more miles than many Ministers in the Department of Indian Affairs have done in the past. An important aspect of what our Minister has done is this concern that he has shown for the local band, the local native community. I know in my Province of Saskatchewan where we have 69 Indian bands we have seen this Minister visit the province several times in his first year of office, and that first year is a difficult time for any Minister. The Minister made this endeavour to talk with native people in individual bands in their own communities.

An Hon. Member speaking earlier mentioned the First Ministers' Conference on Native Affairs and Indian Self-Government and the disappointment felt by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who came closer than any Minister has come in the past as a First Minister to secure a specific commitment on behalf of the Governments of Canada to entrenching the need for self-government in the Constitution.

The Prime Minister, the Minister of Indian Affairs, their colleague the Minister of Health have all spoken clearly for the need to have Indian people control their own destinies, and I think that is a tribute to what this Government is doing.

As a Member in the last session of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development I had the honour to work extensively on Bill C-31 which was a historic day for native women and for those who had lost their status as treaty Indian people. This was a Bill that, like self-government, had long been desired. It has been talked about for a long time. I think it is significant that it is the first major piece of legislation by which the Minister of Indian Affairs chose to right a historic wrong that affected our native people.

I know there are other Members who would like to speak today so I will wind up my remarks by saying that the move to self-government is truly upon us. It makes sense, first and most importantly, for the native communities. Like any people who aspire to control their own destiny are well deserving—I should not use the term right, it was a right long ago for people to control their own lives—but, for lack of a better word, these people are now ready. They want that right to be able to control their own lives and their own communities.

The larger question of responsibility also rests with the native people who say they want full responsibility for housing, education, economic development and health. These are matters that should no longer be administered from afar by a large weighty Government bureaucracy. Similarly there is a feeling I think in the rest of Canada that self-government is a proposal that will begin to give true autonomy to the native community and therefore a more efficient use of not only the funds but the expertise and the political development between the Government of Canada and the Governments of first nations. I fully applaud our Minister of Indian Affairs for undertaking the initiative that he has thus far and I know that he will have the support of all Members of the House as he moves toward constitutional self-government and the areas of non-constitutional self-government. I know that all Members will join with me in supporting our government's proposals, our government's move and push towards full self-government for native people.

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin, with permission of the House, by congratulating the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley), who has just spoken, for a thoughtful, well informed and sensitive discussion of what is a very, very important issue. I also think it is exceedingly important, as those who have preceded me, to comment upon the dedication of the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) for whom this has been an interest and a concern—perhaps even a mission—for many, many years. It is largely to his credit that the issue is before us now. I know that all Members of the House recognize the contribution of an individual Member and, quite frankly, I think what the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior has demonstrated to us is the ability of a so-called back-bencher, a so-called ordinary Member of the House of Commons, to make a significant contribution. He is to be commended. I think many of us hope to use him as a model in the years to come.

The issue which is before us is an important one. Yet, in many ways it is a difficult one, particularly for those Canadians who have not had the opportunity to have any type of direct and intimate experience with the Canadian Indian community. I have had a reasonably close association within the community in two ways for which I am pleased. First, as a Canadian historian, and although I do not pretend to be an expert in Canadian Indian history, I have paid a considerable amount of attention to the history of the Canadian Indians and their relationship with other Canadians. Second, I have had the distinction in the past to have taught a number of Indian students at the university level in the early 1960s when many of our education programs for Canadian Indians at the university level were just beginning.

I became very aware at that point in time, as a result of that experience, of some of the tremendous difficulties faced by young and not so young Canadian Indians who were seeking to improve upon their own economic and educational positions. I became aware as I visited them in their reserves and taught them in their own northern communities of the incredible disadvantages which they faced and of which many other Canadians were largely unaware.

I would like to take this opportunity to share with the Members of the House one of my first intimate experiences with a young Indian lad. I think he was probably about 18 at the time. He had been brought to the college residence where I happened to be the Dean. This chap was trying to break new ground by continuing on in an educational program at a time when he was very much a part of a minority. He was trying to finish his high school. Unfortunately, there were no others within that high school community who were of Indian ancestry. This young person who had been supported by the President of Brandon College, as it then was, and which is now Brandon University, had been selected because he had remarkable artistic talents. He was doing well as a high school scholar. Unfortunately, to my dismay, he did not return from the Christmas vacation.

Because I had grown fond of this young man, whose name is Cecil, I went to seek him out in his home. That was my first real genuine introduction to the living conditions to which other Members have referred. I found him in a cabin not too far from Portage La Prairie in the Province of Manitoba. I found him with some difficulty because he was living with his grandmother. I went and spoke to him about why he should return to school and why he should make his contribution.

It seems to me that the goal of self government, the topic which we are addressing today, is to a large degree dependent upon the likes of Cecil attaining an education and assuming a role of leadership within the native community. Cecil was reluctant to talk about why he had not come back to the residence and to school. We sat in the kitchen of the two-room cabin and I, with all the enthusiasm and naiveté of a 27-year old white Canadian who knew little of what he was talking about, tried to explain to this young man how important it was for him to carry on with his education. Cecil did not talk a great deal. However, he finally said that he wanted to come back but there were many reasons why he could not. He explained to me that he was there to chop wood. He was chopping the wood because there was no one else in his family who was able to chop it in order to keep the fires lit. This was the month of January, although I have forgotten the year. His sisters and brothers had been and were being raised by his grandmother who was ill and not present at the time. Neither his father nor mother were available to carry on with their parental responsibilities. Thus, young Cecil, who wished to be an artist and to become educated like other white Canadians, who wished to play a role in society, felt that his responsibilities as an elder member of the family required him to drop out of school and return home.

We talked and talked for a long time. I even reached the point where I offered to help cut the wood, although that was obviously a short-term solution. What he finally did was bring me a poem which he had written. The poem was about a young Indian lad who had a brother. The brother had become ill. The family in the poem lived on the reserve, which is certainly a tragic by-product in many ways of our Canadian history. The brother in the poem had tried to get some help for his younger brother who was seriously ill. He had called a doctor by walking to a phone since there was no telephone in the home. The doctor would not come to the reserve. The only solution was for the young Indian lad in the poem to take his sick brother to the doctor, which he began to do, according to the story outlined in the poem. It was wintertime and he trudged across the snow-covered fields of Manitoba carrying his ailing brother in search of medical assistance.

As I read to the bottom of the poem the story revealed that the young brother had died in the arms of the older brother. After I had finished reading the poem I looked up at Cecil who was sitting there in the cabin with me. After a few moments of hesitation he said to me that he was the elder brother in the poem. He had given me his own autobiography. As I thought about what I had read I realized just how inadequate my own comprehension was of the lot of the life which that young individual faced.

I realize that when we talk about the history of the Canadian Indian who lives on the reserve and when we look at some of the statistics we find it exceedingly difficult, perhaps impossible, to fully realize the incredible barrier experienced by such Canadians.

Cecil came back to college, although I am not sure whether he finished his high school education. I do know that he went on and participated in some of the other Government programs that were available. I see him from time to time when I am home in my riding. Today, he is an ordinary Canadian. He lives not too far from the constituency which I represent. I see him in the City of Brandon. He has a family and is self-supporting. He will not be a person of any particular distinction because I think he has failed to develop his artistic skills. However, he is carrying on as a self-supporting Canadian citizen.

It seems to me that what we are attempting to do and what we are hoping will happen is that people such as Cecil, who were in many ways victims of a highly paternalistic governmental system developed in Canada after the 1870s, and particularly after the tragic event of the 1885 rebellion, will slowly but surely evolve to recover the concepts of self-government and self-sufficiency.

When the whites first arrived the Canadian Indians were a self-governing people. I look forward to the day when they will return to that same position.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time allotted for Private Members' Business has now expired.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S ACT

The House resumed from Friday, October 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-78, an Act to amend the Governor General's Act, the Governor General's Retiring Annuity Act, the Salaries Act and the Judges Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, this is principally a Bill to increase judges' salaries, as well as those of the Governor General and Lieutenant-Governors. It refers as well to pensions along with salaries. What I want to speak about, however, is the salaries of judges. As the Government itself notes, notwithstanding this Bill it has put forward, there is the problem of spending restraint.

What we have here is a proposed raise in salaries for the judges retroactive to April 1 of this year. For example, the chief Justice of the Supreme Court is now receiving $117,000 annually with a cost of living adjustment capped at 7 per cent. His salary goes up by 7 per cent or the cost of living each year, whichever is less. At present inflation is less than 7 per cent but it will go up by 3 per cent or 4 per cent next year no doubt. However, this Bill proposes that his salary be increased to $135,000 retroactive to April 1, and I understand the cost of living increase would continue. The salaries of other judges of the court go up from $108,400 to $124,000, again retroactive to April 1. In the Superior Court, the Chief Justice now gets $101,800 and that will be increased to $113,900. Puisne judges will have an increase to $105,000. The chief judge of a district or county court will receive $108,900 and the salaries of other judges, now at $86,900, will increase to $100,000. In addition there is what is called the representation allowance. Judges are sometimes called upon to act in a public way and travel, and most of them are allowed up to $5,000 for representation costs. That will now be doubled to $10,000.

There are, Mr. Speaker, somewhere between 700 and 800 judges covered by this Bill. That, of course, is not a very large number in a country of 25 million so it can be argued that the money involved is not a great amount. It is not like the $1 billion being paid to bail out the banks. It is not like the $1 billion being given to the oil companies. However, there is a principle involved, that of restraint. These increases amount to 12 per cent or 15 per cent. That is a remarkably large increase compared to what almost every other public servant receives. It is a remarkably large increase compared to what ordinary wage earners and professional people in private employment receive. It is a shockingly large increase when compared with what is happening to people on mother's allowance.

Now, we are told that there is a problem. The judges have a problem which requires special consideration. They have a cash flow problem. I understand they need to spend more than they receive and therefore they have a cash flow problem. This problem is very easy to understand. A great many people in the country have the same problem. For example, there are millions of mothers in this land, whose income is only a small fraction of that of the judges, who have cash flow problems. There are thousands of mothers in my riding of Spadina who receive the family allowance and have cash flow problems. They have it every day when they go to the grocery store and every month when they pay the rent. Of course they are not the only ones, but I mention them particularly because the Government has decided that this country is so poor that it must reduce the effective income that mothers receive from mother's allowance by 3 per cent every year.

There are others who are affected less directly. For example, many people need legal aid but the budgets for legal aid offices are being cut back or, at best, frozen rather than increased in accordance with the cash flow problems of the lawyers and other workers in those legal aid offices. They would like a little more money to pay the higher prices because they have a cash flow problem. Of course, that does not fall directly under federal jurisdiction, but some of the problems that require people to use legal aid are under federal jurisdiction.

For example, people come to my office who have immigration problems with the federal Government. They may be getting a raw deal through a mistake or perhaps through a bias in the administration. They may need the services of a lawyer, but very often new immigrants cannot afford that and must go to legal aid. There they run into these people with the cash flow problems. Both the legal aid clinics and the people who work there have that problem and it makes it difficult for them to give service to the people who need legal aid in order to argue their case before the immigration commission.

People who have trouble with unemployment insurance have difficulty getting legal aid because of the cash flow problem of the legal aid clinic. The same applies to pensioners. It occasionally happens that a pensioner cannot get his or her problem resolved, even with the help of an MP or another helpful person on a voluntary basis, and must get a lawyer. Once again they run into a cash flow problem.

Now that the grape boycott has been launched in Parliament today there will be some difficulties between boycotters and stores. There may be some controversies arising out of that and there may be some people who will need legal aid to defend themselves against an over-hasty charge laid by the police who are trying to keep order on the picket line. They will come to the legal aid clinics and find that there is a cash flow problem.

My point, Mr. Speaker, is that just about everyone of whom I have heard has a cash flow problem. I do not know whether the President of the Bank of Montreal has a personal cash flow problem because he has not told me, but the people who come to my office have cash flow problems and most of them receive only a quarter or an eighth of the income that judges now receive. Therefore, I think that their cash flow problems are much more serious than those of the judges.

My Party and I feel that this is not the right time to give the judges such a big raise. It may be that in times of affluence we can give them a little more, but at this time of restraint when we are cutting back family allowances and so many of the programs which help ordinary working people, all of whom have cash flow problems, it is not right to be raising the pay of judges by the astonishing amount of 12 or 15 per cent retroactive for nearly a whole year. For instance, if the Government were persuaded by the public of Canada to withdraw its legislation that will reduce the family allowance that is available to mothers, as it wisely did in June with respect to pensions, and if it withdrew other forms of taxation, such as increased sales tax, which bears so heavily on working people, I think there would be a better environment and a better public attitude within which to increase the judges' pay by this or some other amount. However, I suggest it would seem monstrously unfair to do so at this time.

While I am not a lawyer, I would suggest that it seems unjust to give an extra large increase to people who already have more while we are taking away from the people who already have less. We know that there is a saying in the gospels that, "To those that have shall be given and from those that have not shall be taken away" but whatever that means, that was meant to be the action of God, not the action of this Parliament. On the basis of our Charter, we certainly cannot find any justification for taking money away from mothers on family allowances and giving it to judges who already earn five or even ten times as much.

If the Government wished to amend this Bill so that the judges' salaries would increase according to the cost of living minus 3 per cent, I and I believe other Mmeber of my Party would be willing to take a very fresh look at it. I am not sure that the cost of living or Consumer Price Index will be this year perhaps 3.5 per cent, but if that is the case the judges would receive the same increase as mothers, that is, 0.5 per cent. I suggest that most people would consider that to be reasonably fair. While it may be a perfect solution for mothers or judges, most people would agree that it would be fair.

Furthermore, since judges are in the business of justice, I hope even they would suggest that it would be a just decision, especially since some of the judges are women and perhaps mothers. I hope even they would suggest to the Government that a just compromise would be that judges' pay not be increased as proposed but rise each year by an amount equal to the Consumer Price Index minus 3 per cent so long as that is the formula being applied to the mothers of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Mr. Crosbie, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn moves that Bill C-78, An Act to amend the Governor General's Act, The Governor General's Retiring Annuity Act, the Salaries Act and the Judges Act, be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-75, An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the amendments which are contained in Bill C-75 which I am introducing today will reaffirm the Canada Shipping Act as the principal Act of Parliament dealing with safety of shipping, the preservation of life at sea and the protection of the marine environment in Canadian waters and fishing zones. The last time major amendments were made to the Canada Shipping Act was in 1971. These dealt specifically with pollution from ships. The Liberal Government of the day was jolted into taking stopgap measures by the tragic events surrounding the break up of the Arrow. As all Hon. Members will know, there is considerable demand for and widespread interest in these amendments by all sectors of the marine industry and the maritime bar. For example, there is an immediate requirement for amendments to the Canada Shipping Act to enhance safety at sea; to enable Canada to deal more effectively with matters associated with marine pollution; to allow for the Government to consider charging for certain Coast Guard services; and to give effect to important international marine conventions, such as the 1978 Protocol to the Safety of Life at Sea Convention, the Convention of Standards of Training, Certification and Watchkeeping for Seafarers and the Convention for Prevention of Pollution from Ships. Most Hon. Members will be aware that Canada has been unable to ratify and hence become a party to these conventions because of not having the necessary enabling legislation.

In layman's terms, apart from those amendments of an administrative nature, what I am proposing today relates principally to health, safety, recovery of costs and financial protection for individuals, all of which are of concern to everyone associated with maritime transportation and trade in Canada. As well, the two items announced last year as part of the Government's restraint program are included in this legislation.

First, in order to avoid unnecessary duplication of ship inspections, the amendments will enable the delegation of routine inspection of ships to classification societies. This of course will be done in accordance with our regulations. Safety equipment will continue to be inspected by the Coast Guard. This will amount to a cost saving of some $200,000 annually.

Second, amendments are also included which would permit the option of transferring the provisions of port warden services to the private sector. If this option is exercised, cargoes will continue to be loaded and inspected in accordance with the regulations made under the Act, but the actual inspections would be carried out by private sector surveyors.

Another very important provision provides for the enabling authority for the recovery of certain Coast Guard expenses for services such as ice-breaking, escort services and aids to navigation.

Perhaps, in introducing this provision, it is necessary to take a few minutes to elaborate on the services which I have mentioned. I am sure Hon. Members on both sides of the House may be somewhat amazed at the depth and breadth of Coast Guard activities presently provided at virtually no charge to the maritime community. The Coast Guard provides a multiplicity of services to the marine sector. These include a sophisticated system of aids to navigation; radio aids and maintenance of ship channels; ship movement systems, such as the vessel traffic services and a network of radio stations; and ice-breaking services for commercial shipping, flood control and support of arctic operations. The Coast Guard is the principal marine component for search and rescue operations, with particular emphasis upon the safety of pleasure craft through education on boating safety and regulatory activities which encompass the safety of shipping, including the examination and certification of personnel, the licensing and registration of vessels, and the inspection of ships and their cargoes. Additionally, the Coast Guard deals with pollution clean-up from marine-related sources and other marine emergencies.

The Coast Guard operates from bases in five regions across Canada. In support of its functions, it deploys a fleet of 86 vessels ranging from major ice-breakers to shore-based search and rescue lifeboats, some 34 helicopters, four hovercraft and one aircraft, plus a number of inshore rescue boats and various sized work boats.

The total operating and capital costs, including administrative costs, in the 1985-86 fiscal year for the Coast Guard are in the region of $824 million. This includes costs of $368 million for aids to navigation; $74 million for ship movement systems and services; $177 million for ice-breaking, Arctic and ship support services; $62 million for marine search and rescue; $37 million for regulatory activities including marine emergencies; and $72 million for public ports and harbours.

I would like to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian Coast Guard is a vital component of the marine transportation system, contributing to the safe and expeditious movement of shipping and, most important, the safety of life at sea.

I would like to make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that the introduction of charges for certain Coast Guard services and the concept of privatizing the port warden services would only proceed after consultation with interested parties in the public and private sectors. I will be directing my Department to establish a consultative committee, mandated to meet with groups across the country, including shipowners and their representatives; unions, shippers and shipper-groups, fishermen and their associations, and other representatives of the marine industry and users of the marine infrastructure.

Let me turn now to other details of the Bill. The amendments will provide for clear authority for vessel traffic zones and the procedures to be followed by ships in or about to enter such zones. The Bill also provides for the designation of marine traffic administrators and delineates the circumstances under which they may issue directions to ships in Canadian waters.

I would emphasize here that there is no intention to undermine or take away the authority of masters or pilots but instead, to work with these professionals to enhance the safety and integrity of the existing system.

There would be no additional financial expenditures, public or private, associated with vessel traffic services, as these systems are already in place.

Experience in administering Part XX, the pollution section of the existing Act, which was prepared on an urgent basis as a sequel to the Arrow disaster of 1970, has revealed serious faults and omissions, and these amendments aim to correct those faults and omissions. Further, through a lack of enabling legislation, Canada has been unable to implement and obtain the advantage of the assured compensation provided by two international conventions: the 1969 International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage, and the 1971 International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage.

These amendments, Mr. Speaker, therefore provide not only improvements in pollution prevention from ships and the arrangements for clean-up, but also a greatly improved scheme of liability and compensation for the victims of oil pollution damage.

For instance, if a 60,000-ton laden tanker importing crude into Canada experienced a spill today, the owner of that ship would be required to make approximately $8.7 million available to pay compensation for pollution damage; that is to say, the maximum amount available would be $8.7 million, plus any moneys that there might be in the maritime pollution claims fund. The balance of that domestic fund is currently approximately $110 million. On the other hand, there would be assured compensation of $60 million from the two aforementioned international conventions and $100 million from the maritime pollution claims fund.

Improvements are to be made to the maritime pollution claims fund, which will be renamed the ship source oil pollution fund, whereby small claimants, such as fishermen and resort owners, will in future be able to claim directly against that fund.

Compensation for a ship other than a laden tanker will be at least $100 million, provided from the Canadian fund.

Within a similar context, Mr. Speaker, the powers of pollution prevention officers to board ships will be modified to conform to the inspection provisions of the International Pollution Convention. They will also be authorized to delineate emergency zones and to control traffic within those zones and, in cases where there is the likelihood of a spill, order any ship to move or to proceed as directed, and also, for purposes of prosecution, to obtain samples of pollutants from ships without first having to obtain a search warrant.

Additionally, to comply with the recommendation of the Auditor General, designated officials will be empowered to enter premises to inspect the books and financial records of contributors to our own domestic oil spill compensation fund.

Included in these amendments providing for discretionary authority for officials, the Board of Steamship Inspection would be able to permit adoption of equivalent standards in respect of such items as the structural strength of ships and equipment or exemption from regulations where this may be deemed desirable or appropriate. The board would also be empowered to prescribe interim standards for the carriage of dangerous goods in bulk for new substances for which standards do not exist and where time does not permit the making of a regulation.

With reference to dangerous goods, Hon. Members may wish to note that the amendments will provide for more effective regulation of the carriage by sea of dangerous goods in bulk by bringing the provisions of the Act into line with the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act. Bulk cargoes will continue to be regulated under the Canada Shipping Act while packaged goods will in future be regulated on a multimodal basis under the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act.

With respect to safety at sea, the amendments will promote safety and more efficient navigation. For instance, they will enable the introduction of new and improved standards for the training and certification of seafarers including, very importantly, special qualifications for service on ships such as oil and chemical tankers and mobile offshore drilling units. I think Hon. Members only have to recall the tragic events of the Ocean Ranger, the Hudson Transport and the Cartiercliffe Hall to understand the importance of this amendment which will enable the adoption of recommendations on safety training, made by these formal investigations. There will be some additional cost to both industry and Government in undertaking this training but this must be balanced against the benefits in terms of safety and environmental protection.

Specifically, the cost of training in respect to seafarers of the industry would be in the magnitude of $24 million over the next five years and for employees on civilian government ships it would be in the magnitude of some $4.8 million over the same five-year period. The cost for employees on government ships will be absorbed by appropriate Departments such as the Departments of Transport, Fisheries and Oceans, National Defence and Public Works, and of course the cost to the private sector will be absorbed by the individual firms. It is far easier to put a dollar figure on the cost of training and prevention than it is to estimate the price we may pay in loss of lives and irretractable damage to the environment if we do not proceed in this area.

With respect to ship integrity, particular standards for the construction and equipment of mobile offshore drilling units and special purpose ships have been adopted internationally. These amendments will enable Canada to implement these standards. As well, the amendments provide for the implementation of the 1978 Protocol on Tanker Safety and the 1974 Safety of Life at Sea Convention regarding such matters as inspections, steering gear, fire protection and navigational equipment.

In addition to the foregoing, there are a number of other amendments relating to dynamically supported craft such as air cushion vehicles, tonnage measurement, abolition of hard labour as a penalty under the Act, restricted application of rules and regulations, the recording of Government ships in the shipping registry and a provision that would enable foreign flag ships to be exempted from the prohibitory provisions of the Act relating to the coasting trade when suitable Canadian ships are not available. This latter provision has been in place since 1973 and is retained as an interim measure for use until such time as a separate coasting trade Act is developed, a point I shall address later in my remarks.

It should be noted that the Bill is drafted to permit the regulation of matters relating to drill ships and structures, their construction and equipment and training and certification of personnel on board while actively engaged in exploration and exploitation on Canada Lands to be regulated under the Canada Oil and Gas Act. At all other times, these vessels will be regulated under the Canada Shipping Act.

I am sure Hon. Members would appreciate my referring to other aspects of marine-related legislation mentioned in my recent discussion paper on economic regulatory reform entitled Freedom to Move. The Shipping Conferences Exemption Act, 1979, was extended for a further year by the Government and now expires on March 31, 1986. I am anxious that some of the uncertainty surrouding the future of this subject be dispelled as soon as possible since proposed revisions to the legislation in one form or another have been under discussion for some time now both by the previous Liberal administration and by this Government. I therefore propose to present a revised shipping conferences exemption Bill to Parliament separate from and ahead of revisions to the National Transportation Act with the hope that Parliament will dispose of the subject before the most recent extension to the Shipping Conferences Exemption Act of 1979 expires.

A further item referred to in Freedom to Move that I intend to put before Parliament before the new National Transportation Act is introduced is a Bill concerning amendments to the previously mentioned Coasting Trade Act of Canada. I should explain that coasting trade provisions are now covered under Part XV of the present Canada Shipping Act, and indeed the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act which I am proposing do in fact contain an amendment to Part XV, which is necessary to correct a technical problem which is of some concern. However, the amendment is only there to remove any doubts about the legality of existing practices.

Consistent with Freedom to Move, the new coasting trade Bill will, among other things, extend the jurisdiction to 200 nautical miles or to the limit of the continental shelf, whichever is greater. It will expand the scope of the act to include all commercial marine activities except fishing, yet it will still retain a waiver system to allow foreign flag ships to satisfy temporary requirements.

Last, Freedom to Move made references to the Inland Water Freight Rates Act and the Transport Act. I propose to deal with the future of both of these pieces of legislation when the new National Transportation Act is introduced to Parliament some time early next year.

It is more important at this particular time that the House deal expeditiously with what I am proposing today. As I said earlier, the Canada Shipping Act is the principal Act of Parliament dealing with the safety of shipping, the preservation of life and the protection of the marine environment in Canadian waters and fishing zones. As outlined, it deals with such diverse matters as vessel ownership, tonnage measurement, certification and training of seafarers, construction and equipment of ships, safe navigation, civil liability, cargoes, the prevention of pollution from ships and compensation for the victims of oil pollution damage. Its provisions ensure that all ships entering Canadian waters and using our ports comply with standards that provide a high degree of safety and efficiency.

These amendments, which have taken considerable time to develop, have been widely discussed and generally endorsed by all interest groups including ship owners, shipbuilders and repairers, trade unions, the oil industry, fishing interests and other agencies of Government. I believe the Bill goes a long way toward modernizing an outdated piece of legislation and making it responsive to today's needs.

Canada is fortunate to have a solid reputation within the international maritime community. In fact, I am proud to note for Hon. Members that Mr. Bill O'Neil, the President of the St. Lawrence Seaway, was the first Canadian elected as Chairman of the Council of the U.N. International Maritime Organization in 1979. He was subsequently re-elected to this position in both 1981 and 1983.

Let me reiterate to the House that there are approximately 12 major international conventions and codes that Canda cannot effect until these amendments are passed. The maritime community, both at home and abroad, awaits these amendments to bring this legislation governing the seafaring trade into 1986 and beyond. This legislation will re-establish Canada's credibility in the marine sector. I therefore call upon all Hon. Members to give expeditious pasage to this Bill.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in looking at this Bill, which is quite an elaborate piece of legislation that cannot be absorbed very quickly, my impression of which I would like to speak today is that the Government of Canada is expecting a growing volume of year-round oil tanker shipping in Arctic waters. I will address the subject of the Arctic in the next few minutes. As well, the Minister has given a much broader and more comprehensive perspective to the Bill than the one I will develop.

The reality of the South is one thing and the reality of the North is another. It seems to me that the Minister needs to be sensitized to some of the realities of the North in view of the fact that by amending the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, this Bill spells bad news for northern people and the northern areas of the country from an environmental point of view. I would like to provide the Minister with some background on this. He has referred to the groups with which he has consulted or intends to consult. He did not make a reference, at least I did not hear him make any reference to the native people. I would like to refer him to some documentation of which his Department ought to be aware, beginning with the Lancaster Sound regional study of November of 1983. It is a document which embodies a public review. It consists of public consultation, and I will just put on the record a few selected passages because they seem to be quite relevant to this Bill which will generate growing volumes of year-round tanker shipping in the Arctic. George Eckalook, speaking on behalf of the Resolute Bay Settlement Council, stated:

—the settlement wants Lancaster Sound to stay in its present state and not be touched at all. The people of the settlement want to protect the environment, they want to learn more, to consider the possibility of parks, and to wait for the Nunavut land claims settlement. They are concerned about the possible use of icebreaking ships moving through the Sound during the winter and are frightened by the possible explosion of natural gas being carried by these ships.

Sampson Akpaleapik, a student in grade nine at the Takijualuk School in Pond Inlet, expressed on the same occasion an opinion that, and I quote:

—if there was an oil spill in the Sound the fish would suffocate. The narwhals, seals, and other sea animals would die out. If there was an oil spill, the marine currents would spread the oil rapidly killing the animals that the whales, seals, and walruses eat. Even if there was no oil spill, the noise of the ships' engines would scare the animals away.

Maggie Allooloo, speaking on behalf of the Development Review Committee of the Hamlet Council of Pond Inlet, stated emphatically and I quote:

—the Council does not want development of non-renewable resources at this time. Even with planning, heavy controls, and strict regulations, the Development Review Committee feels that activity associated with non-renewable resource development would grow beyond what the environment and the people could tolerate. The Committee is in favour of option two as outlined in the Green Paper, and after land claims are settled, the final decisions on the National Park in the area could be worked out.

Charlie Inuarak, speaking on behalf of the Baffin Region Inuit Association, reviewed the association's positions with respect to conservation, uncertainty about impacts, and the narrow definition that equates national interest to Canada's energy supply. He stated:

The key question for BRIA is: do we choose to put the Lancaster Sound Region at risk? In response, BRIA contends that if we are serious about the principle of the maintenance of biological productivity and environmental quality, then no hydrocarbon activities should be allowed to proceed in the Lancaster Sound Region.

You can appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that the Lancaster Sound would be right smack in the middle of many of these shipping movements if they were to take place. I am sure you, Mr. Speaker, and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), have seen the beauty and richness of that ecological body of water and you are aware of how fragile it is and how much it represents one of the last unique resources of this particular quality in the entire globe.

In the same document, a position was taken by the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee, of which, I am sure, the Minister is familiar, as an organization with which he intends to consult or has consulted. The report reads as follows, first:

That the moratorium on exploratory drilling and year round shipping be continued until a satisfactory regional planning process and a northern conversation policy are in place;

Second:

That the establishment of a planning process recognize the political development and land claim initiatives which are now taking place in the Northwest Territories.

And third:

That all immediate decisions regarding Lancaster Sound be made in line with the general principles that CARC developed in 1979.

We have here, Mr. Speaker, an input from North by people who live there are who follow developments such as the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee which really seems to be expressing a viewpoint which is diametrically opposite to the direction in which this Government intends to go. I can only express profound disappointment in the absence so far of consultations with the organizations of the North and also with the Inuit Tapirisats and with the territorial Governments as well as, perhaps, Environment Canada or the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

I believe it is essential, Mr. Speaker, that a thorough consultation, which has not taken place up to now, be part and parcel of the examination of the Bill after second reading so as to allow input from the people in the areas affected and the consideration of lifestyles and cultures which are going to be affected if this Bill goes through and eventually leads to growing volumes of year-round oil and tanker shipping.

There has been a draft Green Paper on Lancaster Sound and the North. There has been Lancaster Sound regional study. There has also been a Green Paper on the Lancaster Sound region 1980-2000. It is basically this Green Paper I would like to be sure the Minister is familiar with. It needs to be examined in the light of the main thrust of this Bill, which is to increase liability and compensation and to destroy the ecology and lifestyle in the North by the tanker traffic which will inevitably lead to serious consequences.

I am told that the Inuit Tapirisats Organization feels very strongly about any activity which would contemplate tanker movement through Lancaster Sound, and that the public hearings so far did determine an attitude which rejected that notion. The Inuit Tapirisats, as an organization and as individuals, would be simply outraged, if, after second reading, consultations had not taken place in committee and a decision made.

I realize that will be a very difficult situation to resolve by the Minister in the application of this Bill if he intends, as it is my assumption he does, to increase the volume of year-round tanker shipping in the Arctic. That will mean that once again we will have imposed our values and our economic goals on a culture which so far has managed to survive under very difficult circumstances and in a very fragile ecological set-up. Basically, this tends to reject our exploitation of the natural resources in the way we do it as a white society. There is a very strong commitment to finding ways of exploiting our renewable resources, but certainly in my experience there is a rejection of the exploitation of oil and gas in a manner which will cause damage to the environment which no amount of compensation can adequately repair. We all know the beauty of Lancaster Sound and I can hardly imagine anyone in his right mind who would want to see any damage caused to that beautiful body of water. It is one of the most striking of its kind in the world, and increasing liability and compensation from present levels to the highest amount any Government could afford is not really coming to grips with the important ecological and cultural question before us, namely whether we want to move into that environment and pollute it. Regardless of the good intentions and the prevention schemes which may be in place, cleaning up marine pollution in the Arctic is virtually impossible once the damage is done. It is difficult to do that even in our climate and latitude, as our experience off the Atlantic coast some 10 years ago has shown. It is virtually impossible to do it in our Arctic areas once the spill has taken place.

It is therefore necessary to bring this to the attention of the Minister of Transport and ensure that he has the support of his colleague, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), as well as the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie). He has to ensure that a proposal of this kind also has the full support and understanding of the territorial Governments. Beyond that, the bottom line is that he has to have the support of the native people in the regions affected. My impression is that, by and large, the native communities in the North would reject the notion of a year-round oil tanker route for the reasons I have already identified by way of quotations from the Lancaster Sound Regional Study produced by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Evidently the attitude of people up there is one that rejects any activity which would have the potential to damage permanently the ecology and the environment per se.

I urge the Minister to travel to and consult with the people in communities like Pond Inlet and Tuktoyaktuk and Grise Ford and others in order to see with his own eyes the ecological reality. Standing in the North and looking south gives you a perspective quite different from that of standing here in this House and looking North. I am sure that if he were to do that, he would have profound doubts about the advisability of using this Bill to increase year-round oil tanker traffic.

The reason I raise these questions is that I know the Minister is a democrat, he listens to people and he wants to be fully informed about the implications of any measure he brings to Parliament, not just from the perspective of the industrialized South but from that of the North. My impression is that if we were to tap the oil and gas resources of the North, we could get the support of the native people there if we did it by land, if we were to do it by way of pipelines, which are operated under strict controls, well-regulated and environmentally safe. That is where the thrust has been for some time. But when it comes to the alternative of doing it by sea where the possibility of an accidental spill is increased many, many times, then we are talking a completely different approach. This can only be fully understood if you stand, for example, on a hill in Pond Inlet and look out over Lancaster Sound. This is unique water body, ecologically speaking one of the richest in the world. Then try to envisage a tanker route moving through that part of our Arctic. It is unthinkable. Therefore, I submit that we should be extremely careful in laying the foundations for such an initiative which would have such profound consequences on the lifestyle and ecological riches of our North.

The main thrust of this intervention on my part today is to impress upon the Minister and the Government the absolute necessity of thorough consultations with the native people. It is of the greatest importance that this Bill be explained to them. It is difficult for us to fathom it in all its details here today, and one can only imagine what difficulty it poses to people who live several thousand miles away. It is important that the Bill be understood, because a one-page press release cannot do justice to a Bill which runs some 106 pages and which contains a very important chapter on pollution prevention and control and which has politically, I suspect, some profound and long-term implications. Therefore, the Minister of Transport and his Government owe this House as well as the affected communities a thorough explanation as to what the long-term policy of this Government is in relation to year-round oil tanker traffic in Arctic waters. This is the basic policy direction which has to be understood on second reading of Bill C-75.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise to speak on Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act, among others. I do so in my role as my Party's spokesperson for marine activities and, in particular, for the St. Lawrence Seaway. While this Act is basically an effort to bring the marine industry into the twentieth century, I believe it has one serious flaw. Before I get to that, I would like to say that the matters raised by the Government in this Bill are extremely important. I agree with the Minister that we should move them through the House and committee as quickly as possible. However, we may have some difficulty with this one flaw.

Bill C-75 takes the former Government's user-pay philosophy for the St. Lawrence Seaway and expands it into the Conservative Government's philosophy for cost recovery on the remainder of the marine industry in Canada. Clause 4 of this Act gives the Government the power to require that any amount up to 100 per cent of the cost of providing Coast Guard services be passed on to the users. It is important to this debate, Mr. Speaker, that I read the clause that I am so concerned about. It reads:

> 3.1(1) For the purpose of defraying the cost of navigational services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard, the Governor in Council may make regulations respecting charges relating to those services, including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, aids to navigation, dredging, vessel traffic services, ice breaking services and escorting services.
> (2) Charges may be imposed pursuant to subsection (1) in relation to any ship or vessel, regardless of whether the Canadian Coast Guard actually provides a navigational service to that particular ship or vessel.

Those are fairly broad powers given to the Minister of Transportation (Mr. Mazankowski) and Cabinet. I want you to understand, Mr. Speaker, that regardless of my comments and those of my colleagues who will follow me, this Bill does have considerable support. In fact, this particular clause has support in every country that competes with Canada in the world market for sales of grain, coal, potash, and other bulk commodities. They support the Bill because they know that the imposition of yet another user-fee policy will make Canada and Canadian exports less competitive on the world market. They know that such a policy will make our grains more expensive, that our potash will increase in price, and that it may put some of our producers out of business over the long term. If you like, Mr. Speaker, they welcome a permanent elimination of their competition.

It was with no surprise, Mr. Speaker, that I discovered this particular clause in the Bill. It was clear from this past spring's federal Budget that the Conservative Government was going to pursue the Liberal Government's cost recovery philosophy. The decision by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to skim $30 million from the assets of the St. Lawrence Seaway Corporation was a clear indication that Seaway tolls would have to rise. I would, however, like to acknowledge and congratulate the Minister of Transportation for having indicated in the House last week that that matter was under review. It is clear that he has an understanding of the needs of the Seaway and the marine industry and is prepared to go to bat for them at the Cabinet level. I encourage him to continue to do so.

I am not surprised that the Government is following the Liberal's philosophy of user-pay. I am, however, disappointed that the Government would bury this clause in this particular Bill, which otherwise, as I mentioned before, is, on the whole, worthy, albeit long overdue, legislation. However, I am not surprised. Although I am surprised that the Minister of Transportation would allow his name to be associated with this particular Bill. When I used to watch Parliament while I was trying to get here I heard the words that the Minister himself used to chastise his predecessor, Otto Lang, on this subject. He said:

> Consider the record when it comes to fulfilling the commitments which were made. What has become of those sweeping plans, those radical departures from past methods, those comprehensive programs we heard so much about? What became of the idea of world leadership in transportation? We can probably summarize all this in one phrase: all we have received following these lofty promises amount to nothing more than the Otto Lang user-pay concept.

I go back further into history to June 16, 1958. The Speaker of the House was the then Member of Parliament for Niagara Falls, Mr. W. L. Houck. He was quoting history. Back in 1934, Mr. Speaker, there was a full debate in this House on the motion that all goods shipped through canals owned and operated by the Government of Canada be subject to taxation.

In speaking against the motion, the Hon. R. J. Manion, MP for Fort William from 1917 to 1940—which riding was the predecessor of the riding of Thunder Bay-Atikokan which I now hold—former Leader of the Conservative Party and, at the time, Minister of Railways and Canals, stated in part:

> In regard to the Panama, Suez, and Manchester Canals, it is true that they collect tolls. We must realize, however, that the conditions under which these canals are operated are altogether different from those existing in connection with Canadian canals. The Manchester Canal is a private commercial enterprise, whereas in Canada our canals are national. Then the Suez Canal is operated by a privately owned company. True, the Panama Canal is publicly owned and operated, but we must remember this important point: The difference between the Suez, the Panama and our Canadian canals is that no vessel owner is forced to use either the Suez or the Panama.
> On the other hand, in Canada we have no alternative water route from the western grain fields, unless one wishes to use the railways from the head of the lakes. As has already been pointed out, however, the railroad would be so much higher that it would not be possible in the marketing of grain. It is important that we should have the lowest possible rates in order that we may compete with countries whose grain fields are closer to the seaboards than are the fields of Canada.

Those words, Mr. Speaker, were no more true in 1933 or 1958 than they are today. In fact, those same words have been echoed by industry spokesmen over the last year as they have warned the Government that it has put the Seaway on the road to ruin. It is perfectly clear that when we increase transportation costs, whether by increases in fuel costs, taxes, tolls, labour, or materials, those costs ripple through the economy.

The transportation company itself is affected in that it is less able to compete, particularly against other modes, for the movement of, in this case, bulk commodities. The producer, whose products are no longer as competitive in the domestic and foreign market, is directly impacted upon. Due to declining demands for the goods that workers handle, they have less employment and, therefore, less income to spend on consumer goods. Canada as a nation is affected because of a reduction in exports and, therefore, a shift in the balance of payments, because of a reduction in income and corporate tax paid, and because of an increase in the cost of income support programs such as unemployment insurance and welfare that must be paid out to support those laid off workers.

In 1958, the MP for Welland, another riding in this country which has a very direct relationship to marine industry, Mr. W. H. McMillan, said as follows:

> As Members of Parliament, we should be interested in the costs of vessel operation in so far as they relate to the cost of moving cargo. We should consider what effect this cost may have on industry generally, on agriculture and commerce. We should be interested in the shipping industry because of the thousands of men who are engaged as seamen and because of the shipbuilders and suppliers, in the same way that we should be interested in the welfare of Canada generally.
> I have often read that 40 per cent of our workmen depend for their livelihood on our foreign trade, and I believe that if we are to have a continuing prosperity in this country we must have an expanding trade. The St. Lawrence River and the Great Lakes basin, which extends to the very heart of our continent, a distance of 2,900 miles to the sea, are Canada's greatest single outlet to the markets of Europe, the eastern coast of the United States and South America. Much of the trade between Canada and the United States goes across this route. It is the most economical transportation system in the world and, because of its economy, it has helped to build our country. It has helped our farmers to market their wheat in highly competitive markets, even though that wheat is grown thousands of miles from the seaports. It has also helped our industry to assemble raw materials to manufacture products and to enter competitive markets. Today this water transportation system is becoming even more important to the economy of Canada because of the prospective shipping of large tonnages of iron ore from Quebec and Labrador to steel centres along the Great Lakes in both Canada and the United States.

The following also was stated:

> One must agree that ultimately tolls are always paid by the consumer, whether he knows it or not. They are included in the cost of transportation and eventually wind up in the price charged for the product. In the case of our basic materials the added cost of transportation through tolls increases in proportion to the number of processes through which the material passes before it finally goes off the dealers' shelves. It is thus cheaper, to say nothing of less painful, for all of us to pay for waterway improvements just once through taxes rather than repeatedly through the higher prices which would result from tolls on the Welland Canal.

That is a final quote from Mr. W. L. Houck, the M.P. for Niagara Falls.

I have a final quote in this series, dated March 12, 1959. It is from a gentleman well known to the House and to you, Mr. Speaker. He is still a Member of Parliament. The then Minister of Transport, the present Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) said:

—this great inland water way will become operative with the opening of the navigation season this year and we have every reason to look forward to the material increase in the volume of shipping using these facilities. This should be of great assistance to the development of the commerce of this country as whole, and should enable goods produced in Canada to become more competitive in world markets. We look forward to the whole economy of Canada benfiting with the opening of this great Seaway project.

Although it is geographically located in the centre of Canada, clearly it is a national asset and should be treated as such. Throughout this debate my colleagues and I will try to put before the House our concerns over the negative impacts of this particular clause. We want to talk about its impact on the commercial fishing industry on the West Coast and the East Coast. We do not believe that those borderline operations can withstand another cost. We want to talk about the impact on recreational boaters as well as the boating industry itself.

Most specifically, we want to deal with its impact on commercial shipping throughout our nation. This will not only hurt the Seaway but will negatively impact on Churchill, Prince Rupert, Vancouver, Saint John, Halifax, Baie Comeau and Port Cartier. Each port and port community in this country will be affected by this Bill. The impact will be severe and nowhere will it be more severe than in the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence system. In fact, I would go so far as to say that when taken in conjunction with other Government action to increase cost recovery, this legislation will kill the Seaway as a viable transportation entity.

In this respect, it is important not to look at the cost recovery measures in this Bill in isolation. We cannot just focus on Clause 4 of Bill C-75; we must look at it in the context of Seaway tolls, Seaway fees and pilotage fees. The Minister knows well, as does his parliamentary assistant, that the industry is howling about the cost increases that they are already facing through the proposed changes to the Laurentian Pilotage Authority as well as their fear that the Minister will not be able to replace the $30 million in the Seaway Authority.

As evidenced by this Bill, it is quite clear that the Government intends to follow this path of cost recovery. Just a few days ago in The Globe and Mail, a paper that is read occasionally by some Members in the House, an aid to the Minister of Transport is quoted as saying:

We're going to make Crown corporations stand on their own two feet . . . The users of the Seaway are going to have to pay most of the cost of the service they get.

Assuming that he was speaking on behalf of the Minister, it is unfortunate that he made such a statement because that kind of approach is not positive for the country and is certainly not positive for the Seaway. This Act gives the Government the power to recover the cost of services that are now provided or will be provided by the Canadian Coast Guard, regardless of whether those services are used by a particular vessel. These services include dredging, ice-breaking, the provision of navigational aids and the provision of ship escort services.

This clause in no way indicates the total extent of that cost recovery. Is it to be 10 per cent, 25 per cent, 50 per cent or even 100 per cent or more? It is my understanding that officials at the Thunder Bay Harbour Commission and officials from the Coast Guard have been in negotiation over dredging services for the Port of Thunder Bay all summer. They have been told that the Coast Guard wants to recover 100 per cent of the cost of dredging services within the harbour of the Port of Thunder Bay. Those charges, while levied against the Harbour Commission, will be passed on to the shipper who will pass them on to the producers. Therefore, everyone loses in that cycle.

There are a number of industries whose products are shipped through Thunder Bay and the rest of the Seaway. Their margin is so slim that they are negotiating and competing for pennies and barely able to make anything above the cost of labour. They are competing this way in order to keep in business because they recognize their value not only to the communities where their production originates but to the communities along the Seaway as a result of shipping those goods.

The vast majority of commodities that move through Thunder Bay into the Seaway originate in western Canada. In 1984 alone, 16.6 million tonnes of grain, 2.8 million tonnes of coal and 1.8 million tonnes of potash from as far away as British Columbia was shipped to eastern and foreign markets via Thunder Bay and the Seaway. In fact, in recent years the amount of coal and potash moving through the eastern gate of the Prairies has been on the increase, aided in part by the efficiencies of the Seaway itself. Each year, the Seaway generates $3 billion of economic activity for the ports on both sides of this international waterway.

According to the President of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, Mr. William O'Neil, the Seaway was built, "To serve the grain industry which is now a $6 billion earner of foreign exchange".

Undeniably, the Seaway is uniquely cost efficient for moving transportation intensive bulk products. For less than half the cost of rail, western grain can be loaded on to bulk carriers and shipped from Thunder Bay to eastern ports. Canada's key grain and steel industries demand a low cost bulk system to move their high volume products. The 3,200 kilometres of Seaway is an irreplaceable artery for these industries. Since its completion, the Seaway has moved well over a billion tonnes of cargo. In 1985, the Seaway handled 54 million tonnes through its Welland Canal and 47.4 million through its Montreal-Lake Ontario section. Today, the Port of Thunder Bay ships in excess of 23 million tonnes a year and is responsible for a third of the Seaway's traffic.

According to Robert J. Paterson, Executive Vice-President of NM Paterson and Sons Limited of Thunder Bay, on average, a ship will carry a tonne of cargo 125 per cent farther on a unit of fuel oil than a train, and seven times farther than a truck. Therefore, dollars and cents notwithstanding, in terms of our natural resources it makes more sense to encourage shipments by water.

The head of the grainhandlers in Thunder Bay, Frank Mazur, stated in one of their publications:

We have a world-class seaport on a world-class waterway. Our work force is one of the most productive in the world.

When most Canadians think of grain, they probably think about the infamous Crows Nest Pass rate debate that was held in the House and across the Prairies a few years ago. I think the underlying message derived from that debate is that there is a belief in this country that the movement of a commodity like grain must be subsidized because our grain fields are so far from export positions compared to other countries whose ports are 30 miles to 40 miles away. They recognize that we must do something to overcome those obstacles. Perhaps they also recognize that we must ensure that new obstacles are not put into place which prevent products from going to market. Quite honestly, Clause 4 of Bill C-75 puts a very serious obstacle in the way of grain and other bulk commodities being competitive on the world market.

● (1220)

Mr. Donald S. Rothwell, President of the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association, recently said:

> The Lakes-Seaway system must get competitive again, in a viciously price conscious world. In an environment where a quarter of a cent per tonne can make a difference, no cost is so insignificant it is inconsequential.
> Lower costs are mandatory if traffic is to increase to the point where the Seaway's very stringent cost recovery mandate is to make any economic sense at all . . . Ill-conceived increases in user fees could be counter-productive and result in lower gross revenue to the Government while inflicting serious damage on industries that are already badly wounded by the economic downturn of the early eighties.

The Minister spoke earlier about wanting, once the Bill was passed, to go forth and seek opinions as to what the industry had to say about cost recovery. I respectfully suggest that it should be the other way around. He should have listened to the industry which has been saying for quite some time that it is concerned about the move to cost recovery. Mr. George J. Ryan, President of the Lakes Carriers Association, said:

> User charges will wreak havoc on the Great Lakes transportation system and send shock waves through the whole economy. Great Lakes shipping has prevailed through the recession and preserved its assets for better times to come, but user charges could well be the death-knell of this proud industry.

In part, a publication of the Thunder Bay Harbour Commission read:

> Excessive tolls have all but driven away the lucrative "general" or "manufactured" cargoes that plied the system in the sixties and seventies. If our Government transfer the costs for Seaway maintenance to the ports, the Seaway will be priced out of business.

Also, Robert J. Paterson from NM Paterson and Sons said:

> The user pay cost recovery concept has an obvious political attraction for Government, but its implementation can have severe consequences in efficiency. Fuel surcharges and Seaway user fees pose a serious threat to ship owners and shippers. Private industry is intuitively wary of Government charging back costs when the level of the costs is not subject to the disciplines of the market. We, in the Seaway, are being penalized for being as efficient as we are . . . The Seaway should be treated like every other transportation mode in this country.

If we look at the highways are railroads of our nation, can we really say that they are being charged full cost recovery for their use? I doubt it. I would be very pleased to see a cost comparison, if the Minister happens to have one, showing the various subsidy levels by mode. Then we could take a look at the impact, particularly as it relates to the marine industry. Also Mr. Paterson said:

> A greater percentage of the running of the Seaway should be picked up by the general public simply because the Seaway positively affects every citizen of Canada.

During the years of bumper crops in the Prairies or an abundance of grain sales, everyone is happy and everyone is working; grain is moving east, west and north to Churchill. However, during poor years such as last year the inequities or the system become more apparent. The 1984-85 crop was one of the worst in at least six years, if not longer, with a decline of some three million tonnes over previous years. Despite a commitment in the House by the Minister of State For Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), the crop failure was not shared equally throughout the system. For instance, the Port of Prince Rupert saw its throughput decline by 26 per cent; Churchill, by 31 per cent; and Thunder Bay, by 29 per cent. On the other hand, Vancouver was down only 14 per cent over the previous year. While Vancouver was thankfully at full employment last summer, at the Port of Thunder Bay over 1,200 men and women in the grain handling and grain transportation industry were out of work. It was not only in Thunder Bay. Throughout the length of the Seaway, grain handlers and sailors were out of work last summer. The International Seafarers Union estimated that 2,500 of its members were laid off.

If we examine some of the eastern ports downstream, we have a better idea of the trickle effect throughout the country. In two ports in the riding of Manicouagan—and, Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are familiar with the person who represents it—47.5 per cent of the workforce in the elevators was laid off last summer; in Halifax, 41 per cent; in Saint John, 70 per cent; in Quebec City, 29 per cent; in Trois-Rivières, 12 per cent; and in Sorel, 60 per cent. Although those percentages are high, the numbers on a broad scale are fairly low. For instance, at Port Cartier, 47 people were laid off and at Baie Comeau 46 people were laid off. Those are smaller communities, and the effect is much greater than in larger centres. Certainly it is important for those 46 and 47 people who were out of work and did not have to be out of work. We estimate that approximately 3,900 people along the Seaway were out of work. When I say "along the Seaway", I am extending it into Manitoba and its rail workers, tradesmen and those at CN shops. People all through the system were out of work because of that inequity. Approximately 51 per cent of the industry was shut down. I suspect—and perhaps the Minister will be able to enlighten us about this later today—that because of the accident, which has shut down the Seaway for a length of time that no one is prepared to estimate, and I can understand the difficulty in doing it, we may see the situation occur again quite quickly where a large number of Canadians are out of work. The trickle down effect is also very severe. It not only affects those people working in the industry, but also those who provide services to them and whose consumer goods they buy.

The American port at Duluth conducted a study a few years ago which found that for every job directly related to the grain industry, there were 2.57 jobs elsewhere in the community. If we look at last summer's unemployment figures, we are talking about 14,000 people who were directly affected by these lay-offs. The cost to UIC alone, if those people were unfortunately laid off for a year, would be $200 million.

At the present time it costs anywher from $23 to $28 per tonne more to move grain through the Seaway to an export position than it does to move it to Vancouver. We are already in a situation where we cannot compete with our western brethren in the Port of Vancouver. The addition of cost recovery measures would in effect be applied unevenly because Vancouver does not have a requirement for ice-breaking whereas Churchill, Thunder Bay and other ports on the Seaway system do. It makes the gap even worse. This is the kind of thing about which I am concerned, as are my colleagues and the industry. This Bill is pushing up that cost.

● (1230)

I have spoken a fair bit about grain and the Port of Thunder Bay, and as well I have touched on some of the ports downstream of Thunder Bay in terms of their unemployment situation this past summer. I should like to continue on that theme for a little longer. Over the summer, Members tend to spend a lot of time in their ridings talking with people, and this past summer I took the opportunity to spend a lot of my time with the people involved in the grain transportation industry. I met with most of the managers of the grain elevators in Thunder Bay and spoke with the managers of the elevators in the eastern part of the system by telephone. As well, I met with the rail superintendents and with the Grain Transportation Authority staff—all in an effort to understand a little more about the movement of grains. And quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I found, on going into it, that my knowledge was very limited. I suspect that most Canadians do not have an appreciation of the nature of the grain industry, both in terms of pricing and competition and how grain moves.

I honestly did not know the relationship between the Port of Thunder Bay and the ten bay ports along the Great Lakes and the Ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières, Baie-Comeau, Port-Cartier, Halifax, and St. John's. It was through the research that I did this past summer that I was able to get a much better understanding of the system, and I would like to share some of that with you.

As most Members of the House know, when grain or any other bulk commodity moves from western Canada through the St. Lawrence Seaway, it can be picked up by an ocean-going vessel at Thunder Bay—and that is one of the reasons the Seaway was built some 26 years ago—or it can go on a laker for downstream transference to another elevator or directly on to an ocean-going ship.

About 16 per cent of the grain coming through Thunder Bay goes directly on to a "salty." The remainder is distributed throughout the system through the 32 elevators in 18 communities, stretching from Collingwood to Halifax.

For example, 37 per cent of the grain handled in Thunder Bay is handled in the two ports of Manicouagan, Port-Cartier and Baie-Comeau. The ports of Halifax and St. John's handle 2 per cent each; Quebec City, 15 per cent; Trois-Rivières, 7 per cent; Sorel, 7 per cent; Montreal, 12 per cent; and then approximately 18 per cent is handled by the ten bay ports.

I said in committee last year that when the West gets sick, Thunder Bay catches pneumonia. Well, if Thunder Bay catches pneumonia, those germs are spread all the way downstream, because the economies of all of the other port communites go up and down with the economy of Thunder Bay.

I mentioned a few moments ago, Mr. Speaker, the competitive aspect. I should like to give the House an idea of what we are up against in the grain industry in terms of competition. This is part and parcel of what we are dealing with, because the higher the fees, the less competitive we will be as a country.

The Manitoba Government conducted a study from 1972 to 1981 comparing the subsidies for grain prevailing in the European Economic Community, the United States and Canada, the three of which, in combination, handled four-fifths of the world's export grain market during that period, a value of (U.S.) $15 billion.

The report produced as a result of that study contained the following statement:

> The question at hand is less one of whether in the absence of subsidies everywhere world grain prices would be lower (they would, and so would government expenditures, and hopefully taxes), but rather what is the likely consequence if one grain-exporting nation reduces subsidies unilaterally. Undoubtedly, its grain production and (very likely) exports would decline.

The study group found that, during that 10-year period, our subsidies averaged about 4 per cent, compared to 8.6 per cent in the United States and 10.5 per cent in the EEC. When they examined the year-to-year levels of proportional subsidies, they found a striking difference between Canada and the U.S. On Canadian wheat, for example, subsidies ranged from a low of 2.2 per cent in 1973 to a high of 5 per cent in 1972. In the United States, on the other hand, the variation was much more pronounced, with wheat subsidies as low as 0.8 per cent in 1974 and as high as 22.5 per cent in 1977.

And this clearly reflects the nature of the U.S. grains support programs. U.S. wheat, on average, received $11.41 per tonne in subsidy; Canadian wheat, $6.35; and the EEC, $19.96.

Mr. Speaker, I have the feeling, given the signal you are making, that I am going to have to share my notes with some of my colleagues so that they can continue the arguments in respect of this issue—

Mr. Gauthier: With unanimous consent, you could go on.

Mr. Angus: The Hon. Member suggests that I could try to get unanimous consent. I am not sure that the House is willing to provide that.

Some Hon. Members: Sure, sure.

Mr. Angus: Let me go on for a bit and we will see what happens.

Mr. Speaker, Clause 4 of the Bill is crucial to the viability of my community in the long term and to port communities all along the Seaway. It is crucial to the Port of Churchill and as well to the West Coast ports, particularly the ports of Prince Rupert and Vancouver, and to the maritime ports of Atlantic Canada.

If the user fees are increased to 100 per cent of the cost of the service, Canada would be much less competitive on world markets. Fewer of our products would move offshore.

In the light of that, I would ask the Minister to reconsider the whole concept. The Minister indicated to the House last week that he would have no objection to the question of the tolls and fees to be charged by the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority being discussed by the Standing Committee on Transport. What I would like to see happen is for the Minister to remove voluntarily Clause 4 from the Bill and refer it and all other user fees in the marine industry to the Standing Committee on Transport so that the philosophical aspect can be dealt with. In that way we can have hearings focusing on the impact of user fees on marine transportation.

That would allow this Bill to go through in the expedient manner that he has asked for. In that way the positive aspects of the Bill can be put in place, as they most appropriately should be, with the controversial element removed from the Bill, thus giving us an opportunity to examine that issue with the industry, with the users, with the workers. In that way we can take a good hard look at the whole question of the cost of using the Seaway system and the costs of using our ports. It also will allow us to work with the United States in doing these things in concert.

I should like to hear from the Minister whether or not he has received the agreement of the U.S. officials that they will be moving ahead with their cost recovery in respect of the operation of U.S. ports and whether or not this is a matching duo of operations that we have here, or whether Canada is going on its own in this respect.

And if Canada is going on its own, what is the impact within the St. Lawrence Seaway system? Will a lot more of our bulk commodities go to the United States by rail through Minneapolis and Duluth, or to Chicago? There is already potash going by rail from western Canada to Chicago, instead of coming by rail to Thunder Bay and then by water from Thunder Bay to Chicago.

Mr. Speaker, you as a westerner knows, as do all Members of this House, that we cannot hurt our commodity exports. We are involved in a very vicious fight in world markets.

I should like to conclude by asking the Minister once again to pull Clause 4 out of the Bill. I have been advised that I do not have the ability to move an amendment to have Clause 4 removed from the Bill, and so I would ask the Minister to do so in the interest of maintaining a viable shipping industry in this country.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House for your patience.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker,—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

An Hon. Member: Oh no!

Mr. Baker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had not—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I should just like to remind Hon. Members that we are now in the second phase of Standing Order 36(2), which calls for 20-minute speeches, followed by a 10-minute question and comment period.

Mr. Baker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To be quite honest with you, I was not intending to say very much concerning this Bill—

Mr. Mazankowski: Prove it.

An Hon. Member: You now have a full glass of water.

• (1240)

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I might point out to the House that there are perhaps two things wrong with this Bill. The first is what is in it and the second is what is not in it.

The Hon. Member who just spoke was talking about Clause 4 of the Bill. Perhaps I could elaborate on it a little bit. This clause gives the Governor in Council the authority to make regulations respecting charges relating to services including aids to navigation, dredging, vessel traffic services, ice-breaking services and escorting services. The full implication of that will not become evident until this Government with its massive majority passes this Bill and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), under an obligation to the Treasury Board and the Cabinet, imposes the said charges as outlined in this Bill.

If this Bill passes, we can imagine that the following situation will arise: say that a fishing boat is out in the Atlantic 100 miles off the coast of Canada. Perhaps this boat has engine trouble, is stuck in the ice and needs to call the Coast Guard. The captain of the boat will first have to check to find out how much that will cost him. As well, when boats go out in the spring, ice-breakers normally precede them so that the vessels can be allowed out. That is not the responsibility of the Coast Guard as outlined in its regulations. However, it has always done so over the years because it was of assistance to the fishermen and their communities. All of a sudden, the Coast Guard will have to charge for the time of the ice-breaker. The Minister of Transport knows how much it costs to operate an ice-breaker for just one hour. It is quite a considerable cost. Because of this legislation, the Minister of Transport will be able to impose charges on Canadian fishermen.

Let us not forget that we should never discourage fishermen from checking with the weather office to find out what the weather will be like and we should never discourage them from asking for assistance if they need it. This particular clause of the Bill gives the Minister or the Cabinet the authority to impose these charges which have never before been imposed.

Quite frankly, I would warn the Minister of Transport that he should check the Terms of Union between the Province of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada. I can assure the Minister that the Terms of Union indicate that these services will be provided without charge. In fact, through the Terms of Union, it becomes an obligation of the Government of Canada to provide these services free to Newfoundlanders. How can there be an Act of Parliament that gives the Governor in Council the authority to impose these charges? It is absolutely contradictory to the Terms of Union between the Province of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada.

Through this same clause, the Government will now be able to charge for dredging. That is quite something. Who is it going to charge? It is going to charge the provincial Governments, the boat owners or the fish plants and the industries? The dredging of a harbour is done for the use of the public, not only for the use of pleasure craft as pointed out by the Hon. Member a few moments ago. It is done for working people. How is the Government going to charge for this? Obviously it is to be done in the name of cost recovery. Perhaps the Department of Transport and the Department of Public Works which is selling its dredging machines will charge the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, another federal Government Department. Certainly these Departments cannot charge the public of Canada as this clause suggests.

The final point mentioned in this clause is escorting services. Why is the Government of Canada so anxious to charge a boat owner for being escorted into port if he has trouble at sea? A poor fellow with problems with his engine is going to be charged for the time it takes a federal government vessel to bring him into port. That should not be allowed to happen. That is ridiculous. The Minister might say that he will never do that but he wants the legislative authorization to do it. He should not have that legislative authorization.

The second part of Clause 4 is rather interesting. It reads:

Charges may be imposed pursuant to subsection (1) in relation to any ship or vessel, regardless of whether the Canadian Coast Guard actually provides a navigational service to that particular ship or vessel.

That is an interesting clause. Can you imagine charging someone for something you did not do, Mr. Speaker? Perhaps that part of the clause exists so that a boat owner may be charged if his engine starts while the Coast Guard vessel is on its way to get him.

Clause 4 goes on to indicate that interest may be charged on the amount outstanding from time to time. I would say that this clause is directed particularly at fishermen from eastern Canada. The Government can eventually bring fishermen to court on interest charges owed for help given in 1980. The clause also gives to the court authorization to collect the fee owing plus any charges owing. That is an incredible affront to the fishermen of eastern Canada.

At the same time as the Government with its massive majority, through the Department of National Revenue, is trying to make deals with every fisherman from Newfoundland for the repayment of some $14 million, the federal improvement loans that were guaranteed by the Government of Canada through the banks will no longer be honoured by the Government. On top of that, there is now to be a system of charging fishermen for other things. This will affect fishermen from British Columbia to Newfoundland.

Fishermen are now receiving notices from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans saying that loans made back in the late 1970s and early 1980s will no longer be guaranteed for a three-year period. On top of that comes this legislation.

Another very interesting part of Clause 4 indicates the following:

The Minister may enter into an agreement with the government of any province or any agency thereof for the collection of charges,—

Why would the federal Government enter into such an agreement with a provincial Government? The only reason I can see is that many of the services provided relate to provincial transportation systems like ferry systems. Although it is not normally its function, the Coast Guard provides ice-breaking services in British Columbia, Quebec and Newfoundland. There can now be a charge for that service. This clause enables the federal Government to enter into an agreement with the provincial Governments for the collection of those fees. Actually, the charges will be paid by the general public which travels to many islands off the Canadian coast.

As far as Clause 4 is concerned, it would contravene the Terms of Union between the Newfoundland Government and the federal Government if it can be enacted on the approval of the Newfoundland Government. It would not surprise me, from the way this Government gets along with the Newfoundland Government, to see that approval granted. Everything this Government does is approved by the Newfoundland Government. There are no disagreements. Everything is hunky-dory. The two Government are like peas in a pod. No matter what this Government does, it is agreed to by the Newfoundland Government. Perhaps it will get the agreement of the Newfouland Government to enact this, although I believe it is against the Terms of Union between the Province of Newfounland and the federal Government. That is what is in the Bill, Mr. Speaker, as far as absolute error of judgment on the part of the Minister of Transport is concerned who is being forced to do this by the Treasury Board.

What is not in the Bill, Mr. Speaker? Bill C-75 reads:

An Act to amend the Canadian Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Water Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof.

I will tell you what is not in the Bill, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Transport in introducing this Bill talked about the amendments which were being made as far as the safety of seafarers, workers and ships is concerned. The biggest disaster in Canadian shipping history in the past 10 years was the sinking of the Ocean Ranger. There was a royal commission which presented its reports to the federal Government and the Government said it was going to implement this and that recommendation. It announced it was going to increase search and rescue in St. John's, Newfoundland. But all it did, Mr. Speaker, was to steal a helicopter from my riding. The Government stole a helicopter from Gander Search and Rescue and put it in St. John's to take care of the offshore. Then it found a fixed wing aircraft somewhere, either in Nova Scotia or in New Brunswick, and stuck that down there, and that was the Government's improvement in search and rescue service.

The Government said it made certain structural changes. It claimed it got together with the Newfoundland regulatory authority to achieve some sort of unity in its regulations. You see, Mr. Speaker, there were Newfoundland Government regulations, federal Government regulations under the Canada Shipping Act, the Canada Oil and Gas Lands Act and the Newfoundland Oil Directorate regulations. Then there were the U.S. shipping regulations. All of them came together in the case of the sinking of the Ocean Ranger and in the subsequent examination. An incredible number of recommendations were made by the royal commission.

This Bill talks about the Canada Shipping Act and the Oil and Gas Production Conservation Act. I would venture to say, Mr. Speaker, that the key recommendations made by the royal commission are not being followed in this particular Bill. The Minister said in his opening remarks that he was going to bring in further amendments later on next fall. But that is not good enough. Even when those changes are brought in, I just wonder whether or not the Government of Canada will actually do anything to prevent a similar disaster from occurring again.

When we read the Ocean Ranger report, we are struck by one fundamental fact. In examining the entire sequence of events, it boils down to the fact that there were people in the water who could not be rescued. That is incredible, Mr. Speaker. Most people who heard about the Ocean Ranger disaster actually believed that everyone was drowned in the rig and that the rescue vessels went out to look for them and could not find anyone. That is not correct. There were people who actually were in boats, in the water, and they could not be rescued. It is rather shocking to read that section of the report which talked about 20 or 30 men in a life boat, going towards this stand-by rescue ship, in waves up to 80 feet high, the men all shouting, and the rescue boat actually throwing a line to the vessel and trying it on to the rescue boat. There were 20 or 30 people alive in the boat and not one of them ever came ashore. Not one of them ever got into the rescue ship. We have to ask ourselves, Mr. Speaker, what was wrong.

When we look at the report we discover that what was wrong was that there were no regulations—and there still are none—under the Canada Shipping Act because it has no jurisdiction. It should have jurisdiction and it should be spelled out in this Bill but there is no regulation concerning the type of vessel which is used as a stand-by vessel for certain rescue purposes. The people could not get over the side of the rescue vessel because of the way the vessel was built. Those people could not get over the side because there was no mechanism to take them over the side, even if the boat had been built differently. We have this incredible disaster of 20 or 30 men in a boat, trying to get aboard a rescue ship and not being able to do so because there were no facilities on board, according to Canadian law or any other law, to make these rescue ships capable of saving the people who were in the ocean.

According to the reports there were men floating around with life jackets on in the middle of the night, with lights on, and they could not be saved. The Search and Rescue helicopters came out and they could not save them. That is the bottom line, Mr. Speaker. And the Government of Canada after receiving that report should have sat down with the Canada Shipping Act, with all of the regulatory bodies, and asked itself how it could prevent this from happening again. The federal Government should have sat down with the Newfoundland Government—

Mr. Forrestall: Three are 12 amendments, for God's sake.

Mr. Baker: The Hon. gentleman should read these reports and find out how many amendments were recommended. The Minister said he was going to bring in legislation with respect to extending the jurisdiction out to that area. As I was saying before I was so rudely interrupted, the federal Government should have sat down with the Government of Newfoundland. I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary will agree with what I am about to say. The regulations of the Newfoundland Government stated that there had to be x number of Newfoundlanders hired right off the bat in every branch of that operation offshore. And even before the disaster took place, there should have been some co-ordination as to where these people should be, who they should be and how we define the occupations. But paramount in the minds of both Governments should have been the question, what were the recommendations of the royal commission on the Ocean Ranger marine disaster as it relates to the Canada Shipping Act and to the other Acts with which we are dealing today.

The Minister brings a Bill into this House today amending the Canada Shipping Act but does not adopt the most important recommendation of the royal commission, which was to give some jurisdiction to that area. The Minister tells us he is going to bring it in next fall and I suppose it is better late than never but I wonder what the extent of his amendment will be. The Minister says he is now going to charge everyone for using rescue ships. Shame! He is going to charge people for using an ice breaker or rescue ship to meet a long liner. That is absolutely incredible.

You are about to cut me off, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's time has expired. He will still have 10 minutes for questions or comments after three o'clock.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m., the House took recess.

FERRIES

REDUCTION IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND SERVICE

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the Prince Edward Island Truckers Associations is hopping mad. As of today, October 15, Northumberland Ferries Limited is tying up the M.V. Confederation for the winter. Reducing the number of runs between Wood Islands and Caribou, Nova Scotia, means a weaker link in our connection to the mainland. Businesses which transport goods on and off the Island do not need this. They are already at a competitive disadvantage with the Atlantic counterparts because of the ferries. Line-ups and long delays are not uncommon for Islanders who depend upon the ferries. Reducing the number of ferries just adds to those problems.

We need a consistent, reliable ferry service on Prince Edward Island. We do not need fewer crossings at a time when potato farmers are busy shipping their crop to markets in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. Farmers do not have extra winter storage space. They count on getting their early crop to market in October and November.

This move does not help our farmers who are once again facing a bleak year. Potato prices have hit rock botton. P.E.I. farmers are getting 1.5 cents per pound, which is 4.5 cents per pound below the cost of production. They also depend on the ferries to bring in lime from Nova Scotia. The P.E.I. Government brings in salt from Nova Scotia for our highways. These are just a few examples of those who will be seriously inconvenienced by one less ferry on that run.

Northumberland Ferries Limited would operate the M. V. Confederation with two crews until late November if the Government would approve this necessary sailing and provide the funding.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

CALIFORNIA GRAPES—BOYCOTT CAMPAIGN

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, Cesar Chavez, Leader of the United Farmworkers of America, met with Members of Parliament today as part of his nation-wide tour, gathering support for a renewed boycott of California table grapes. At this meeting Members of Parliament from all three political Parties officially signed a pledge to join and support the boycott. I hope all Members of this House will take the lead in encouraging Canadians to support this cause.

We are asking Americans to enforce the law enacted in 1975 to allow farmworkers the right to unionize. Grape workers continue to be fired, coerced and abused by the corporate grape growers, and there have even been two union leaders killed. The boycott is also aimed at forcing grape growers to drop the use of pesticides which are dangerous to the workers, their families, and consumers.

To quote Cesar Chavez: "Farmworkers will never again be treated like agricultural implements to be used and discarded. We have tasted freedom and dignity, and we will fight to the end before we give it up. We have come too far and we have too much further to go to give up now!"

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ALBERTA—PREMIER LOUGHEED'S RETIREMENT—CHOICE OF HON. DON GETTY AS SUCCESSOR

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, it was a great weekend in Alberta. Thousands gathered in Edmonton to thank Premier Peter Lougheed and his wife Jeanne for years of dedicated service to Alberta and Canada. His record stands out conspicuously throughout our Dominion. His administration improved health services for all of the people, with emphasis on those for the mentally retarded. His program gave eastern Canadians oil and gas at prices which cost Alberta millions of dollars. He was a great Albertan and a great Canadian, and this House now wishes him and his wife many more years of happiness.

His replacement, Don Getty, who was raised in Montreal, educated in Ontario, went west with Margaret, his wife, in 1950 and chose Alberta as his home, was chosen as Alberta's next Premier. Flanked by his two opponents, either one of whom would have been an excellent Premier, Don Getty declared: "I'm happy to have you on my team". Thousands cheered. "We're going to listen to the grassroots", he continued. He will give agriculture and jobs top priority. "I will not soon forget the National Energy Program that crushed our growth and derailed our economy", he cried to the thunderous applause of the people.

A strong Alberta means a strong Canada, and Don Getty, a real man with high principles, will make sure Alberta's voice is heard and respected. He will add strength and teamwork to the national P.C. determination to build a strong and united nation. Long live Premier-elect Don Getty?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE COMMONWEALTH

SUCCESS OF COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION CONFERENCE

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the House that the 31st Conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association held recently was a complete and resounding success. Held from October 2 to October 11 in Regina and Saskatoon, it attracted 250 delegates from 46 countries around the world. In representing some 10,000 parliamentarians and one billion people, the delegates worked to bring each country closer together toward the common good of mankind.

Amid the fabulous panorama that is Saskatchewan, many of the world's ills were discussed by this group of international legislators. Apartheid, drug abuse, electoral law practices, the debt crisis, and international currency fluctuations were but a few of the important problems under scrutiny at the Conference.

The image of modern-day parliamentarians was also investigated, and it was concluded that the M.P. must be more mindful of his or her commitment to constituents, rather than seeking to enhance his or her own image. We are the watchdog for the people, and although we are obliged to have some Party interests, they should not be at the expense of the people we represent. Those responsible for setting the agenda for this Conference are to be warmly congratulated. In this time of fractious relations between some countries, conferences such as this are the cement of international relations.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN CAPE BRETON, N.S.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today under the provisions of Standing Order 22 to express my concern in the hope that the Government will take some action regarding the high unemployment rate on the Island of Cape Breton. On Friday Statistics Canada reported that this area had the highest unemployment in all of Canada.

One of the actions taken by the Government since it came to power was to close down two heavy water plants in Cape Breton, thereby throwing 750 people out of work. The Government has refused to provide much needed money for the Sysco modernization fund, previously agreed to by the provincial Conservative Government and the federal Liberal Government. The Government has terminated the decentralization program which would have provided a couple of hundred jobs in the City of Sydney. It has also made major cut-backs to the CBC budget, thereby nullifying its efforts in that area of Canada. It has also terminated the expansion of the coal industry on the Island.

All this Government has done is appoint an advisory committee, which has made 34 recommendations to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), which would pump in excess of $600 million into the economy of the Island for the fiscal year 1985-86. I hope that the Minister responsible, as well as the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), will take their responsibilities quite seriously and move on these recommendations forthwith. There is high unemployment in the construction and fishing industries, and—

Mr. Speaker: I have to advise the Hon. Member his time has expired.

HOUSING

SOCIAL HOUSING—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, as more and more Canadians fall below the poverty line, the Tory Government is moving to reduce its commitment to ensuring that all Canadians have equal access to decent, affordable housing. For a year now, the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) responsible for housing, has carried on closed-door negotiations with selected groups concerning changes to the federal housing program.

Provincial Governments and others have leaked information showing that the consistent direction of the Minister's negotiations is toward handing over to the provinces much of the responsibility for social housing traditionally belonging to the federal Government. However, groups representing users of social housing, such as co-ops, tenants, and unions, along with Members of Parliament, have been excluded from these discussions with the Minister for many months. Recently in a letter to the Minister the Canadian Labour Congress demanded that he stop these secret and one-sided negotiations until he has put on the table some clear proposals and invited everyone in the public to comment.

Does the Minister intend to opt out of all social housing programs? If not, which ones? Will he maintain and enforce standards of housing supply in all provinces and territories? Will he reaffirm the federal Government's commitment to funding assistance to all parts of Canada for rent geared to income housing, co-op and non-profit housing, native peoples' housing, and home owners' mortgages?

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

BANKS AND BANKING

MONITORING OF BANKING INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, the collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank did not set off the chain reaction Opposition Members were predicting.

However, Mr. Speaker, we should consider those two unfortunate events as an opportunity to take stock of the situation and introduce mechanisms that will preclude further occurrence of this kind in Canada's economy.

About sixty new banks have been established in recent years. Relevant legislation was never passed and was not in place to anticipate the results we have seen in recent weeks.

On the basis of those events, our Government has ample justification for adopting new provisions to strengthen the supervision of our banking institutions.

Mr. Speaker, we must conclude that the efforts of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) as well as the solidarity shown by our major banks last week were successful in stemming the incipient psychological panic that might have harmed two more banks for purely artificial reasons.

● (1410)

Congratulations to the Minister of Finance, the Minister of State for Finance and our major banks!

Depositors can stop worrying and our banks will continue to be safe and secure for both Canadians and non-Canadians.

TRADE

SUPPORT FOR CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on September 26 the Prime Minister made a historic announcement to express Canada's interest in pursuing a new trade agreement with the United States. Trade has been critical to the livelihood of Canada. One-third of what we produce is exported, yet our share of world trade is declining, and this means a loss of jobs.

We want to turn this trend around, Mr. Speaker. My Government's highest priority is job creation through economic renewal. I applaud the Government for this courageous initiative which is not without risks. The Macdonald Commission on the economy said: "Instead of weaknesses, we found substantial areas of strength in Canadian manufacturing. Canada has proved its industrial capacity at the level of the individual firm and the subsector, even in sectors that normally run a deficit in U.S. trade. Thus Canada would be likely to achieve substantial benefits from more open trade, even in our manufacturing sectors".

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association recently stated that more than 475,000 new manufacturing jobs have been created in Canada over the past 20 years and that all but a handful can be attributed to our expanding export trade. It is clear that we must negotiate with the U.S. to find special and direct means of securing and enhancing the $155 billion of trade which we enjoy with the United States.

SUGGESTIONS FOR AMENDMENT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the Young Offenders Act. This piece of legislation came into effect during the last Parliament, part of it in 1982 and another part about a year ago. I consider it, as I believe most Canadians do, to be a great reform and it had the unanimous support of this Parliament when it was passed. However, I certainly would not want to give the impression that I think the legislation is perfect. I know that there have been some criticisms of it, but a lot of them are not well founded. They are really as a result of problems created by provincial Governments failing to implement the parts of the legislation which are under their jurisdiction. However, if some of the interpretations of the courts which have heard certain cases are right, they indeed suggest that the law should be amended.

The Government has had two Solicitors General now, both of whom have indicated that they are studying the law and consulting with the provinces about it. I think it is time for that process to be completed in order that full public confidence in that legislation can be established. I think that the present Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) should let the House and the Canadian people know what shortcomings he sees in the legislation. If there are any, he should introduce amendments to correct that legislation.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—EFFECT ON FORESTS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, acid rain and other air contaminants have been killing some forests in the eastern United States as suddenly and drastically as they have wreaked havoc on the famous Black Forest in Germany, according to American scientists. Dr. Hans Marten, senior adviser to the Canadian Acid Rain Research Program, said such findings in the United States are very worrisome for Canada.

Though the effects on our forest, have been minimal when compared to the deterioration of the forests in the Adirondacks, our stands of maple are showing symptoms of decline. Over the past several years there has been a serious decline in the production of maple syrup. Research indicates that there is a direct correlation between the increase in acid rain and the decrease in maple syrup production.

The maple syrup sugar industry is a component of our economy upon which hundreds of jobs depend in areas where it is produced. Maple syrup is part of our culture and our history. It marks the coming of spring. The Government must do everything possible to solve the acid rain problem or we will lose not only our forests and lakes, but also part of our heritage.

FULL-TIME AND PART-TIME JOB STATISTICS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I was going to address my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, but I will address it to the Minister of Finance. The unemployment statistics released on Friday clearly indicate that there has been a decline, by 24,000, in full-time jobs, and an increase, by 47,000 in part-time jobs which, by the way, has been an ongoing trend for several months. Will the Minister explain to the House why his Government is so willing to accept this exchange of low paying part-time jobs for full-time jobs? Is that what his leader meant when he was promising "jobs, jobs, jobs" during the election campaign?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, at the time of the election we promised 300,000 "jobs, jobs, jobs". That is pretty good for a full year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We would have been happier if they had been full-time jobs, but I ask the Member to cast his mind back. About three months ago there was a sharp increase in full-time jobs and a drop in part-time jobs. I do not recall the Member asking a question at that time.

EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The trend has been toward a greater percentage of part-time jobs. Those statistics released on Friday indicated that the 24,000 full-time jobs which were lost were almost entirely those of women. Of the 47,000 new part-time jobs, 45,000 were taken up by women. Why is the Minister and her Government satisfied with having women move from full-time jobs to low-paying part-time jobs? Is that what she promises to the women of this country?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the continuing trend has been toward a decrease in unemployment for the last six months.

Mr. Allmand: Part-time jobs.

Miss MacDonald: That has been an ongoing decrease.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: With regard to part-time employees, Mr. Speaker, we have found, through analysing this situation and questioning people about it, that those who are seeking part-time work are doing so in large measure because they also want to return to school and to training.

Ms. Mitchell: Come on.

Miss MacDonald: For that very reason, Mr. Speaker, we introduced,—

Ms. Mitchell: You know better than that.

Miss MacDonald: —for the first time, training allowances for people who are working part-time. That applies particularly to women who will benefit under this new program.

WALLACE REPORT INQUIRY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has now confirmed that she is willing to live with this very bad trend away from full-time work to part-time work. If she is willing to accept that, when is she going to announce the implementation of the recommendations of the Wallace Report on part-time work which would guarantee pensions and other important fringe benefits for part-time workers?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, we have implemented training allowances for those who are working part-time and who are attending school or training programs part time. That became beneficial for 21,000 people in the last month and for some 170,000 over the last year. Those people are able to improve their situation because they are now able to enroll in part-time training and to benefit themselves by becoming more productive as a result of that training and the training allowances they now receive.

EMPLOYMENT

SITUATION IN MONTREAL

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Regarding unemployment, our major concern in Quebec is that Montreal's industrial base is being eroded to the point of no return, and that the Government is doing very little to stop the process.

The Minister of State (Transport) has refused to make a commitment to provide locomotive contracts for Bombardier. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has refused to guarantee funding for Motoco to purchase Gulf, which would protect jobs. I therefore wish to ask the Minister whether she is relying on her part-time employment policy to replace the thousands of full-time jobs now being lost in the east end of Montreal.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to say that the number of jobs created in Montreal last year was over 50,000.

• (1420)

IMPORTANCE OF CREATING FULL-TIME JOBS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister fails to realize that part-time jobs are being created while every day, full-time jobs are being lost. I would like to ask the Minister to come down from her ivory tower and explain to the House whether she has a specific plan to stop the erosion of Montreal East's industrial base. If she does, could she provide details of that plan now and right away?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say I often have a chance to visit Montreal, and from time to time I spend a few weekends in Montreal to discuss the problems of the unemployed with certain people in that city, and I intend to continue to do so.

APARTHEID

POLICY ON SANCTIONS AGAINST SOUTH AFRICA

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. How can Canada take a strong position on economic sanctions against South Africa at the Commonwealth Conference this week and persuade the United Kingdom to take a strong position when its own policy is so weak, when it supports only voluntary sanctions that business appears to be ignoring entirely and that require no economic sacrifice on our part?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, not only do I not agree with the Hon. Members, characterization of the policy of the Government of Canada on South Africa, she did not agree with it when I announced that policy some two or three weeks ago.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I encouraged the Minister in his policy statement several weeks ago and urged him to see that the private sector went along with the intentions of the Government of Canada. The private sector, as the Minister knows, is totally ignoring the policy of the Government of Canada. An instance in British Columbia came to light the other day.

Will he restore the credibility of his position on sanctions against South Africa by admitting that the voluntary process is not working and we will turn to mandatory economic sanctions?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it may be that some Members of the House are so committed, as a matter of principle, to state action as against voluntary action that they will not give the voluntary process a chance to work. The evidence is that there has been remarkable voluntary support by the business community, by the labour community and other Canadians for the position that has been taken by the Government of Canada with respect to South Africa.

The Hon. Member makes general reference to a particular case in British Columbia. I presume that is the one she raised with me in the House the other day. By now she should have received a letter from me indicating the full details and background of that case which indicate that, in effect, there is no inconsistency with the policy of the Government of Canada. There is no danger of the export of Canadian computers to a sensitive industry in South Africa. That will not occur.

Ms. Jewett: Yes, I was referring to that exact MacDonald Dettwiler case. However, I did not want to take the time to go into it here.

IMPLEMENTATION OF POLICY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): The fact is that the Government did not object to what MacDonald Dettwiler was doing. It did not ask it to postpone or call off the trip from the branch of Armscor in South Africa trying to do business with a Canadian firm. In fact the Minister did not object.

I ask the Minister to stop kidding us about objecting. He does not object. Will he now object to Canadian business doing business with South Africa? Will he admit that it should not be doing business with South Africa? Will he encourage sanctions at the Commonwealth Conference?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for a case that the Hon. Member did not want to raise in the House of Commons, she is pursuing it with considerable vigour and considerable inaccuracy. She knows the facts. I gave her the facts in a letter. She must have them in her hands.

Ms. Jewett: I do indeed.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): She knows that the policy announced by the Government of Canada would stop the export of that kind of computer to South Africa.

Ms. Jewett: There is no policy at all.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That was not the case before our policy was introduced. That is the case now.

BANKS AND BANKING

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF MERCANTILE BANK SITUATION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Finance is in the House, I would like to ask him a question about the Mercantile Bank. It is common knowledge that the Government's incompetence in its abortive attempt to rescue the Canadian Commercial Bank has led to liquidity problems at the Mercantile Bank, for one, and considering what we are reading in the newspapers, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, who said before leaving on a trip that he was completely in control of the situation, what is actually happening at the Mercantile Bank.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has a specific question I would be happy to respond. However, the Hon. Member can read the newspapers. He knows that statements have been made by the Mercantile Bank. It is making these statements as a private sector institution, and I will let those statements stand on their own.

FUTURE OF MERCANTILE BANK

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. As I understand it, the future of Canada's banking system no longer concerns the Minister and it is up to the financial institutions to make decisions that will affect thousands of depositors. What is the real situation today at the Mercantile Bank? For instance, does the Minister of Finance agree with the suggested amalgmation with Citibank and its Canadian branch, to make it a Schedule B bank?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, now that the Hon. Member has put a specific question, I will give him an answer. He is speculating on the result of some actions that might be forthcoming from the decisions being taken by the Mercantile Bank. That is speculation at this point in time and I caution him not to jump to conclusions based on speculation arising out of street talk.

POSSIBLE TAKEOVER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. He will be well aware that a United States merger firm has been commissioned to find a buyer for the Mercantile Bank. Is he prepared to suspend the provisons of the Bank Act to allow a foreign bank to take over this small Canadian regional bank?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would give the Hon. Member the same response. He is reading the papers and drawing some conclusions out of speculation that is arising from rumours. I ask and caution him not to draw any conclusions arising out of that speculation.

BANK ACT PROVISIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am asking the Minister for the policy of the Government. We have been told time and again that the Bank Act cannot be changed in order to provide us with a list of depositors. However, we now discover that to enable a foreign bank like Citibank to take over Mercantile, it would require ignoring the provisions of the Bank Act. Is the Minister of Finance prepared to ignore the provisions of the Bank Act to allow this acquisition to take place?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): First, Mr. Speaker, what acquisition are we talking about? As I said in my previous answer, the Hon. Member is responding to speculation that is coming out of rumours on the street. The Hon. Member should know that there are many rumours floating around these days and some of them are totally untrue.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—MINISTER'S LETTER TO SHAREHOLDER

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. On August 9, having received the interim Hitchman Report, the Minister wrote to a shareholder of the Canadian Commercial Bank, saying: "The liquidity requirements of the CCB are being met by the Bank of Canada. Such liquidity will be continued . . . until full confidence in the bank is restored". Will the Minister tell the House why the Government flip-flopped and closed the bank two weeks later?

• (1430)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, there was no flip-flop.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: I have told the Hon. Member before that all facts will be coming forward in a judicial inquiry and that other facts will be coming forward in committee on the Bill which is now before the House. When those facts become available, I suggest the Hon. Member will be quite pleased.

MINISTER'S ASSURANCES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The assurances of the Minister of State for Finance on August 9 were unequivocal. Shareholders and depositors alike hung in because of them. Why, then, did the Government not live up to these assurances?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, has responded quite adequately to that question. At that time she said that the liquidity of that bank would be maintained. It was maintained until we took the decision on Labour Day weekend that the bank was no longer viable. I am sure the Hon. Member would agree with me and say that we should not maintain in existence a bank which is no longer viable.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

WELLAND CANAL BLOCKAGE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns the unfortunate accident on the Welland Canal. How long is it estimated that the canal and the system will be shut down? More important, given that the President of the Seaway Authority indicated that the Seaway is beginning to show its age, what steps will the Minister and the Government take to ensure that the canal, as well as other structures along the Seaway, will remain structurally sound and therefore safe?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I am not in the position as of now to give the Hon. Member the kind of information he wants. The extent of the damage is still being assessed. I will be meeting with the president of the Seaway this afternoon. There are four engineers and contractors on site. I expect to have a preliminary report this afternoon. As well, the president of the Seaway Authority will be meeting with the users tomorrow to discuss further actions. Perhaps by that time we will have a better idea of the extent of the damage and the length of time which will be required to repair Lock No. 7.

CONDITION OF LOCKS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, setting the accident aside, is the Minister prepared to commit the necessary capital funds to ensure that all locks remain in a usable condition for the next 20 years?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly like to give the Hon. Member that assurance, but I am sure he would understand that it would be premature for me to undertake what he is suggesting. I urge him to wait for an accurate assessment of the damage. I will be glad to confer with him upon ascertainment of those facts.

INCOME TAX

TAXATION OF FARMERS' INCOME

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. As the Minister knows, western Canadian grain producers often receive cash advances in the fall and grain is subsequently delivered in the next taxation year to cover the cash advances. As there is some confusion on this point among Canadian farmers, could the Minister clarify which is taxable? Is it the cash advance that is taxable, or is it the grain which is delivered the next taxation year?

Hon. Elmer M. McKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of my colleague and the House, the Department's position is that for taxation year 1985 and subsequent taxation years, farmers are only required to report proceeds from the sale of crops in the year in which the sales actually take place. The 1985 Farmers' Guide, which will be available in December, will clearly set this out to remove any uncertainty that presently exists.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY—STABILIZATION PAYMENTS INQUIRY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns the desperate state of the Canadian sugar-beet industry and a stabilization payment for the 1983 crop year. For the first time in 60 years there is no crop due to market conditions. The Minister indicated in a letter a couple of weeks ago that there would be no stabilization payment for 1983, yet the Government House Leader in the Senate indicated last week that the matter would go before Cabinet for a decision. Could he indicate which decision will prevail, which one is factual, and which one is retractable?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that the Government is very concerned about the future of the sugar-beet industry, particularly in view of the fact that we have growers left in only three provinces. The Hon. Member should know that we took immediate action to provide some financial incentive to the producers of the three provinces. It was not picked up by the Province of Alberta. However, as he knows as well, Cabinet is giving very active consideration to further assistance for the industry. At this point in time I am not in a position to indicate to him exactly what the final decision will be.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister explain why he has cancelled five meetings since the first of the year with sugar-beet producer groups? Could he clarify exactly whether or not a 1983 crop year stabilization payment will be made? The Minister has indicated that it will not be made, and the Government House Leader in the Senate has indicated that this matter is up for consideration by Cabinet. Can he indicate whether or not a stabilization payment will be made for the 1983 crop year?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether there was some misunderstanding or misinterpretation of my remarks. I cannot recall at any time ever giving an indication that a 1983 payment would not be made.

Mr. Foster: I have it in a letter.

Mr. Wise: At the moment it is being considered in the over-all package which would provide some benefit to ensure the retention of the sugar-beet industry.

CANADIAN DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

DIVESTITURE COMMITTEE MEMBERS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Three of the seven members of the CDIC divestiture committee are tied to the Brascan group, the company which is trying to buy 15 per cent of the Canada Development Corporation. Will the Minister request that these three members resign in view of the conflict of interest their Branscan ties create for a body which is shaping how the CDC is to be privatized?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor, rather than ask for resignations, I ask him to identify for the House where exactly the alleged conflict of interest exists. If he cannot identify that conflict of interest, he should resign himself.

MANAGEMENT DEBATE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I simply hope the Minister will do likewise if I demonstrate this conflict of interest.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: We have a conflict publicly between CDC and CDIC about the independence of CDC management. Why can the Minister not see that allowing CDIC to debate in public with CDC is very much a conflict of interest, when three of the members of the CDIC divestiture committee are key players in the Brascan group which is trying to take over CDC?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again in answer to the Hon. Member, one wonders should we have entrusted to such Members our legislative committee procedure? The fact is that witnesses appeared before the committee and discussed exactly what the Hon. Member is raising in the House. Rather than be responsive to such an open approach, the Hon. member suggests that the mere fact they entered into the discussion to which he alluded indicates a conflict of interest. What absolutely tommy-rot!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TAIWAN—NATIONAL DAY CELEBRATION—MINISTER'S ATTENDANCE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform this House who authorized the Minister of National Revenue to represent the Canadian Government at the National Day celebration of Taiwan?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question of authorization for a Minister to attend a domestic event in Canada is really not at issue.

An Hon. Member: A multicultural event.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The precaution taken by the Minister of National Revenue was to check with the appropriate Department of Government, the Ministry of State for Multiculturalism, which assured him that the group sponsoring the meeting was a group which represented a broad cross-section of Canadians of different origin.

REPUBLIC OF CHINA—CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister explain to the House why there was no one in this Government who could inform the Minister in question that it was the National Day of Formosa, and furthermore, does the Minister intend to send apologies to the Government of the People's Republic of China?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no need for sending apologies to the Government of the People's Republic of China or any other government. In fact, direct contract was made by the representative of the Government of China with the Canadian Government. There were no representations from the Government of the People's Republic of China. It is a matter of position. It is not a matter that concerns relations between Canada and China. If the Liberal Member still wants to stir up a controversy where there is none, well that is up to the Liberal Party, but there is no basis for the allegations made by the Hon. Member for Bay Street.

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. References by one side to Members on some basis other than their constituencies are just as out of order as references from the other side misnaming Ministers.

Let me suggest to all Members that the practice be stopped by both sides.

INDUSTRY

DONAHUE REQUEST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Is the Government prepared to accede to the request by the Donahue Company in Clermont, near Quebec City, for a subsidy of $16 million to help the company modernize its facilities and thus maintain some 300 jobs in the face of international competition?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question from the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Centre I can only tell him that, in due course, if it appears appropriate to provide such assistance to the company he has referred to, it will of course be done. In the meantime the Government has no advice to offer the Hon. Member on this particular matter.

MAINTENANCE OF QUEBEC'S POSITION IN NEWSPRINT PRODUCTION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): My supplementary is as follows: Does the Government believe it is important for Quebec to maintain its position on the world market as a producer of newsprint? If so, is the Government prepared to provide some leadership in this area and find a way to modernize Donahue, or are you going to let this matter deteriorate until all the people of Quebec start putting pressure on the Government as they did in the Domtar case?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows the circumstances surrounding the Donahue plant: the provincial Government involvement and the involvement of The New York Times. If he were to take the opportunity quietly to weigh all of the circumstances, he might frame his question in a different way.

TRADE

RESTRICTION ON ENTRY OF CANADIAN TECHNICIANS TO UNITED STATES TO SERVICE EQUIPMENT SOLD TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for External Trade.

As a result of charges brought before the courts in California, Canadian workers and technicians may no longer enter the United States to instal and repair Canadian commercial and industrial equipment.

In my riding, Verville Incorporated, whose main customers are in the United States, cannot send its technicians to service their equipment.

Does the Minister intend to take the necessary action to clear up a situation that is causing a crisis in our Canadian industry?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that where a contract was entered into prior to August 28, 1985, technicians will continue to enter the United States without any problem.

With respect to those contracts entered into subsequent to August 28, 1985, as a result of representations to the Attorney General of the United States, an appeal has been launched for a temporary staying order to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, and we expect a decision on that this week.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST THAT REFUGEES DETAINED IN MONTREAL BE RELEASED

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Three weeks ago, departmental officials promised to facilitate the release of a number of refugees in Montreal who have been under detention for several months, without cause, and now that promise has been withdrawn, on the pretext that the refugees would fail to appear at their inquiry.

Could the Minister inform the House whether she intends to make use of her discretionary powers to have these people released as soon as possible?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there are ongoing discussions between the officials and the individuals concerned in the City of Montreal. I shall take notice of the Hon. Member's representations for the Minister of State for Immigration.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I said in my earlier response, I shall take the representations of the Hon. Member to the Minister of State for Immigration.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY

CLOSING OF TEXTILE PLANTS AT SAINT-JEAN AND VALLEYFIELD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Last week, the Minister of State for Small Businesses informed the House that the closing of textile plants at Saint-Jean and Valleyfield was a matter that concerned the private sector and not the federal Government. My question, Mr. Speaker, is as follows:

Is the Government going to act responsibly and become involved in this decision, since it has already invested $2.6 million in modernizing these plants?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the Hon. Member, let me say that I feel that he has read something additional into my colleague's answer of last week.

I listened to the answer most attentively, and I think he gave a full and fair answer to the question that was put to him.

Ms. Jewett: In other words, he doesn't know.

[Translation]

EMPLOYMENT—IMPORTANCE OF GOVERNMENT AID

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): In that case, Mr. Speaker, would the Minister not agree that this Government funding, and I mentioned $2.6 million, would justify the Government's intervening to ensure that the 850 workers in these industries are not laid off?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again in answer to the Hon. Member, let me say I think it is totally wrong to read into what my hon. colleague said last week that in some way there is not concern on the part of the federal Government in this regard. We have been having ongoing discussions with management concerning this matter and with the provincial Governments.

We have indicated that we want to work out, not just for the short term but for the longer term, an appropriate textile policy in Canada to ensure the viability, not just of such plants as the Hon. Member has referred to, but the industry in general.

What we would really appreciate is a little more co-operation from his Party in this connection.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

TRADE

TEXTILE INDUSTRY IN NOVA SCOTIA—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. Last Thursday the Minister made the statement that in Nova Scotia there was no textile industry. In fact, Mr. Speaker, there are 3,000 Nova Scotians employed in the textile industry.

Will the Minister indicate to the House how Canadians in that province can expect a fair deal from the Government's handling of the free trade issue, when one of the Ministers charged with the responsibility of that file has made such an irresponsible and incompetent statement?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to admit that I was in error in making that statement.

• (1450)

Mr. Kelleher: There is indeed a vibrant textile industry in Nova Scotia. I certainly apologize to our former Leader, Mr. Stanfield, and his family business.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelleher: I certainly apologize to my friends in Nova Scotia and the Hon. Members from that province.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his partial apology.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: Would he apologize to the workers in Yarmouth, in Bridgetown, in Windsor—

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Dingwall: Would the Minister give his personal assurances to the workers in Windsor, Truro, Yarmouth and Bridgetown that their economic interests will be treated equitably and fairly in all subsequent talks on the free trade issue?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

CO-OPERATIVES

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO TASK FORCE REPORT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister responsible for co-operatives, a Minister who undoubtedly does not need to be told that this week has been designated National Co-operative Week. The Government has been in office more than a year but has not yet issued a response to A Co-operative Development Strategy for Canada. What can the Minister tell us about plans to issue a substantial response to that report which was issued in May, 1984?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. Co-operatives truly are an important part of the Canadian economy.

In direct answer to the Hon. Member's question, we have been working very closely with the co-operative sector developing a response to the task force report. I am happy to have the chance to announce that on Friday the federal Government will be hosting the first ever federal-provincial meeting of Co-operative Ministers in Regina as a way of getting input from the provinces into what precisely should be our response to the task force report.

REQUEST THAT CO-ORDINATING AGENCY BE ESTABLISHED

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, meetings are useful as far as they go but mechanisms are far more important. Does the Minister have plans to create a substantial co-ordinating agency within Government to bring the various activities of Government together to ensure that there really is a co-operative development strategy operating with the encouragement of the Government?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, we are interested in doing whatever we can to assist the co-operative sector to develop and have a fair chance at Government programs just like every other sector. We have worked very closely with the co-operative sector and it has been my experience that it has been much more impressed with a good response than a quick response. It is my understanding that it is not at all interested in having another layer of bureaucracy. It is interested in having programs that are co-ordinated and do the best for the co-operative sector. That is exactly what the Government intends to do.

EXTERNAL AID

MEDICAL IMMUNIZATION OF CHILDREN—CANADIAN COMMONWEALTH INITIATIVE

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for External Relations. We understand that the Prime Minister, in a speech to the Commonwealth Press Union this morning, has pledged $25 million over the next five years to assist developing Commonwealth countries to achieve total immunization of their children by the year 1990. Would the Minister tell the House what the projected scope and benefits of this initiative will be? In particular, given the past commitment of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to increased non governmental organizations' involvement in foreign affairs, will NGOs be expected to play a role in this latest initiative?

Ms. Jewett: That's a plant if there ever was one.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the NGOs will indeed have a major role to play within this immunization campaign, whose objective is to immunize all children throughout the world by 1990. I am proud to be administering this program, through CIDA.

As Hon. Members are no doubt aware, tomorrow, October 16, marks the tenth anniversary of the eradication of smallpox. Our Prime Minister and his Government have announced a $25 million immunization program over five years, which annually will save the lives of five million children suffering from these diseases—

NATIONAL REVENUE

GULF TAKEOVER—TAX RULING

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Does the Minister agree that Canadians are entitled to know exactly how much money they have contributed in order to facilitate the acquisition of Gulf Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would assume that that is a question that the Hon. Member would like to answer himself. I think I know what he is driving at here. There has been speculation about a tax ruling and the Hon. Member knows, as a tax lawyers, that neither I nor the Minister of National Revenue are allowed to comment on particulars of a tax ruling according to the law. If the Hon. Member is asking me to break the law, then I would like him to say that.

AMOUNT INVOLVED

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister telling us that disclosing the amounts involved in the ruling is breaking the law without disclosing the ruling itself? He said that he would not disclose the ruling. He has said that a number of times in the House, as has the Prime Minister and others. I am simply asking the Minister to tell us how much money was involved in the ruling so that Canadians will know how much they have contributed.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I put the same question to the Hon. Member that I put in my previous response. If he is asking me to break the law, let him say so. If he wants to have the law changed, let him make a proposal to change the law. Right now, under the law of Canada, neither I nor anyone else, as the Hon. Member knows as a former tax lawyer, would be able to comment specifically about any tax ruling, whether it relate to the Hon. Member as an individual taxpayer or to any corporation as a corporate taxpayer.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. I think the people of Nova Scotia will accept his apology with regard to the remarks he made while he was in the province. However, how can the people of Canada feel confident about a Government negotiating on their behalf when it makes such a fundamental error?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already answered the question. I believe that my apology stands and I have given my assurance that the industry will certainly be given every consideration in whatever negotiations take place between Canada and the United States.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Would the Minister's gaffe of last week not make it further necessary for Canadians to know exactly that position the Government is taking into the negotiations? Is that not something all Canadians must know?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that most of Friday in Halifax was taken up discussing with the provinces their involvement in these negotiations. I am satisfied that the provinces feel that they will be fully consulted, and that will certainly take care of the problem to which the Hon. Member has referred.

MINISTER'S AFRICAN JOURNEY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and relates to the one-month African safari taken by the former Secretary of State. With regard to the $100,000 cost of Government aircraft alone, the Minister said the following over the weekend:

> I would do exactly the same. I make no apology whatsoever.

I find this statement not only arrogant but callous and immoral. Does the Deputy Prime Minister support the Minister's profligate spending habits? Does he not agree that it would have been preferable and more humane to give $80,000 to the relief agencies in Africa that are helping Africans overcome the battle against famine? Does the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that that would have been the moral solution?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I answered a similar question last week. I would point out to the Hon. Member that he is the last person to be speaking about a matter such as this, being a supporter of a Party which was previously in Government and expended 37.5 per cent more on government aircraft than this Government in a comparable year. That is a statistic that I would like the Hon. Member to explain regarding the operations of the previous Government.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

• (1500)

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the only shame is for the Deputy Prime Minister not to have the courage—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

REQUEST THAT TRAVEL DOCUMENTS BE TABLED

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, if he is talking about courage and legitimacy, if he has the moral courage and obligation to table in this House all documents referring to the expenses not only of the Minister, but of his wife and aide, while they were trucking across Africa for one month? Let Canadians decide if those expenditures were legitimate or illegitimate. Does the Deputy Prime Minister have the courage?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of courage. If the Hon. Member paid the same attention to processes which are available to him and to the general public in order to obtain that information which is freely available, as he did the Question Period today when speaking of aid to foreign countries—he seems to have completely missed the $25 million which has been expended on global immunization programs in favour of the kind of questions he is asking—he would find that the information is available. The Hon. Member should know the processes to obtain it.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports from Standing, Special or Legislative Committees. Tabling of documents. Statements by Ministers.

I take it Hon. Members have just noticed that we have gone through three items, have they?

Mr. Gauthier: We didn't hear you.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will now revert back. I am trying to make a small point today, if I may. Neither the Minister, who is waiting to table a report nor the Hon. Member who is waiting to present a report, could hear the item being called, even though it is amplified. That is not their fault, it is the fault of the rest of the House.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by people from Prince Edward Island in which they state that the deduction of pension benefits from the unemployment insurance benefits would seriously interfere with the efforts of the employees and the community to create employment via early retirement pension packages. In their petition, the petitioners ask that all retired employees keep their pension benefits and receive their unemployment insurance benefits without deduction of pension income.

PROPOSED CHANGES TO YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition gathered by citizens of Surrey-White Rock-North Delta who are concerned about the effects of the young offenders' legislation. They are concerned enough to have gathered 9,000 names. They point out the need to address problems of the ages of the young offender, that Section 11 should be re-examined, clearly defined and changed, that the statement to "person in authority" be more clearly defined, made uninational and changed; that Section 7(3) relating to custody should be subjected to a commission for study and to make recommendations, that the judicial system treat offenders and offences as serious and impose stiffer sentencing, and that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition signed by a number of residents from across northern Ontario who attended a recent

New Democratic Party Northernary Council meeting in Thunder Bay. They call upon the Government to reverse itself on the question of deindexation for family allowances.

I have the honour to table also a petition circulated by a constituent of mine, calling for the reinstatement of full indexing of family allowances and signed by over 171 residents of my riding.

PROPOSED REPLACEMENT OF LORD'S DAY ACT

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from the congregation of Annesley United Church, Markdale, Ontario, in my riding of Grey-Simcoe. The petitioners would like to see legislation passed to replace the Lord's Day Act which the Supreme Court of Canada has declared unconstitutional, and provide for one pause day in seven for the sake of family life and to provide the opportunity for those who want to worship to attend worship together.

IMPACT OF U.S. LEGISLATION ON CANADIAN LUMBER INDUSTRY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table at this time a petition signed principally by residents of Dryden, Ontario, who are concerned about the possible impact of the Gibbons Bill and other protectionist legislation and the effect it would have on Canadian softwood exports to the United States. They are concerned that the Government of Canada is not taking adequate steps to deal with the consequences of that softwood lumber protectionist legislation.

CHANGES TO FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND CHILD TAX CREDIT PROGRAMS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of my constituents and other residents of notherwestern Ontario. These petitioners protest the Government decision to deindex the family allowance and point out that the changes in the child tax credit will not be adequate to offset what so that by 1990, as things stand, even the poorest families will be worse off than they would be if the present system were to continue.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY PROPOSED ACTION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present also a petition on behalf of former employees of CP Rail who protest that the company has plans to do away with their lifetime pass privileges and to replace that with an unnegotiated health care plan. They were promised that they would have these passes throughout their lifetime and they bitterly oppose the action which is proposed by the Canadian Pacific Railway.

EFFECT OF U.S. LEGISLATION ON CANADIAN LUMBER INDUSTRY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by residents of Dryden, Ontario, who call upon Parliament to make its best efforts in persuading the United States Congress not to pass legislation which would adversely affect Canada's softwood lumber industry.

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-79

On the Order: Government Notices of Motions:

Oct 10, 1985—The President of the Privy Council: That, in relation to Bill C-79, An Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the said Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of Government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Section (2) of Standing Order 26, this Government Notice of Motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under the Government Orders at the next sitting of the House.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like at this time to move concurrence in the third report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, presented earlier this day.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 167, 366 and 379.

[Text]

FUTURE OF VOODOO AIRCRAFT

Question No. 167—Mr. Stackhouse:

What will happen to the Voodoo aircraft with the acceptance of the CF-18 into the Canadian Forces inventory?

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): As of December 31, 1984 when the CF-101 Voodoo was deactivated, the fleet totalled 48, comprising 16 flyable and 32 non-flyable aircraft. One aircraft will remain flying for the next two years in support of a special project. Twenty-three are being retained for non-flying technical training and support roles. The remaining 24 aircraft have either already been positioned for display or are in the process of being allocated for display at military bases, federal and public museums, communities and veterans' organizations.

NORTH WARNING SYSTEM

Question No. 366—Mr. Caccia:

1. Will the Government undertake assessments of the environmental impact of the North Warning System plans across the Canadian North?

2. Who is responsible for the environmental aspects of the plans?

3. Will native concerns and those of civilian experts on the Arctic environment be heard and, if so, in what manner?

4. Will North Warning System sites be on unsurrendered native lands and, if so (a) what provisions have been made for informing the owners of these lands (b) has any agreement been sought and/or obtained and (i) if so, under what conditions (ii) if not, for what reason?

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes, although final locations for the Short Range Radar (SRR) have not been finalized, initial screening has been carried out in conjunction with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (DIAND). Once site locations are confirmed environmental assessments will be carried out.

2. The Department of National Defence (DND) is responsible for the environmental aspects of the plan. The Federal Environmental Assessment Review Process (Order in Council, June 21, 1984) will apply. DND will seek the advice and guidance of DIAND and the Department of the Environment (DOE) throughout the process.

3. Yes, community consultations will be held and site visits will be made during the preparation of the environmental assessments. Upon completion, the report(s) will be made public, and anyone can make interventions for consideration by the Department.

4. Some North Warning System sites may be on lands where aboriginal claims have been or are being negotiated. The Department will keep the native negotiating bodies and individual communities apprised of project details. Discussions on conditions for land use and occupancy and environmental protection will be part of that information process.

CANADIAN FORCES SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNT

Question No. 379—Mr. McKinnon:

1. On March 31 (a) 1981 (b) 1982 (c) 1983 (d) 1984, what total amount was at the credit of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account?

2. During (a) 1981 (b) 1982 (c) 1983 (d) 1984, what rate of interest did the Government pay for the use of this money?

3. What amount of interest was credited to the Account during the fiscal year ended March 31 (a) 1981 (b) 1982 (c) 1983 (d) 1984?

4. For each of the above fiscal years, what was the total amount (a) paid into the Account by service personnel (b) paid from the Account?

5. What portion of the amounts paid into the Account for each of the above years, represents contributions towards indexation of the Fund?

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. The amount of credit in the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (CFSA) for the years in question are as follows:

2. The Government paid interest on this money at the following rates:

(a) 8.3708 per cent.

(b) 9.0423 per cent.

(c) 9.8963 per cent.

(d) 10.1417 per cent.

3. The following amounts of interest were credited to the CFSA:

(a) $479,806,539.

(d) $932,496,074.

4. (a) For the years in question service members paid the following amount into the account:

(a) $ 80,056,222.

(d) $113,166,394.

(b) The amount paid from the account for the years in question is as follows:

(a) $280,886,649.

5. Members' contributions shown in 4(a) are paid into the Canadian Forces' Superannuation Account for provision of basic pensions. Indexation of basic pensions requires additional contributions (1 per cent of salary) by members and are paid into the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account (SRBA). Contributions to the SRBA for the above years were:

(a) $14,738,376.

(d) $21,182,091.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: When the House adjourned there was a period of questions and comments following the speech of the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-75. I was most interested in the remarks and comments of my hon. friend from Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), when he mentioned to the House that Clause 4 of Bill C-75 reads as follows:

> For the purpose of defraying the cost of navigational services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard, the Governor in Council may make regulations respecting charges relating to those services, including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, aids to navigation, dredging, vessel traffic services, ice breaking services and escorting services.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the explanatory note says, and this is very straightforward:

> New. This amendment would provide the authority for the Coast Guard to recover the cost of providing navigational services.

[English]

As was brought to our attention by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), this Bill means that boat owners, more specifically fishermen, could be charged certain fees which today they do not have to pay. Fees could be charged for, say, urgent situations where a boat is unable to proceed because of difficulty with its engines. There could be a lot of such difficult situations and the fishermen would have to cope also with an additional cost to their operation. Can the Hon. Member explain further his views on this important clause and tell us how the fishermen of his riding, which I understand he visited recently, feel about this clause?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, let me make it perfectly clear what this Bill means. I will give the Hon. Member an example. Right now at this very minute there is no such charge in place if a fellow wants to leave a harbour and go fishing. What this Bill would do is to enable the Government of Canada to impose a charge to dredge the harbour this fisherman is leaving from. It enables the Government to charge for the use of an ice-breaker so that fishermen can get out in early spring. Not only that, if he uses Marine Radio, which is a navigational aid as such, then the Government of Canada could charge him for that. Suppose his propeller breaks while he is out at sea. He needs assistance to be brought back into port. The Government of Canada can charge him for escorting his boat back into port. Isn't this incredible? That is in Clause 4 and that is what is wrong with this Bill.

It was not enough for the Government of Canada to turn around last winter and impose a charge on all Canadians who phone the weather office. Here we have a fisherman or boat owner who is not going to want to check on the weather because he has to pay for it, and he is going to wonder whether he should really go out early in the spring to fish because he is going to be charged to have the ice in the harbour broken up. He is going to hesitate to phone Marine Radio because he is going to be charged for that.

Mr. Tobin: In a life-threatening situation.

Mr. Baker: Yes. Here he is with problems in his motor 100 miles out in the ocean and he will hesitate to phone the Coast Guard.

This Bill is an absolute affront to all boat owners in Canada. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) is in his place today and I am sure that he will check the Terms of Union between Canada and Newfoundland because I believe, from my reading of that document, that this Bill violates the Terms of Union. It says that this service will be provided by the Government of Canada. Not for a charge; it will be provided in a continuing fashion. All in all, as the hon. gentleman pointed out, this clause in the Bill is absolutely disastrous for the fishermen in all of Canada, on the East Coast or the West Coast.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, the implication of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) are, of course, that it is the Government's intention to charge 100 per cent of the cost. There is no intention of doing that whatsoever. It would be against the great traditions of this House and successive Governments over the lifetime of our country to attempt to do that. What we are attempting to do is to put in place enabling legislation to recover some of these costs. We presently recover about 2.4 per cent of marine costs. Who does the Hon. Member think is paying for it now?

Mr. Gauthier: All taxpayers.

Mr. Forrestall: Who pays for the dredging of the harbour? There is no harbour in Ottawa-Vanier.

Mr. Gauthier: That does not matter.

Mr. Forrestall: But you pay for it.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes.

Mr. Forrestall: So why don't the users of harbours, the ones who benefit directly, begin to pay a little bit more?

Mr. Gauthier: I can't believe you, Michael.

Mr. Tobin: I am going to send this speech back home.

Mr. Forrestall: Another comment which should be made, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Tobin: Who pays for the Ottawa airport? Not the people in small fishing harbours. They do not use it but who pays for it? The taxpayer.

Mr. Forrestall: The air services, for the Hon. Member's edification, recover about 35 per cent or 36 per cent of their cost. If we are to continue the level of service which is enjoyed by fishermen and small craft owners, not to mention the commercial services and bulk carriers, then funds have to be found to maintain navigational aids, dredging and ice clearance.

Mr. Tobin: Who pays for the National Capital Commission?

Mr. Forrestall: Money has to be found and where does the Hon. Member think the money is coming from? He knows that this Government is obliged to pursue deficit reduction. This is what we are doing. When the Hon. Member or any Hon. Member rises in this Chamber and suggests that through Bill C-75 the Government is attempting to recover 100 per cent of these costs, he is misleading the people in the Chamber and the people in the country.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Forrestall), who obviously knows the Government's policy, is saying it is not going to charge 100 per cent of the cost. I wonder whether it is 99 per cent, 98 per cent, 50 per cent, 10 per cent, or 2 per cent of the cost of an ice-breaker. An ice-breaker costs about $1,000 an hour. What is the cost to the people of Canada? He talks about saving money. The Government did not think about saving money when it recently allocated $1 billion for the bail-out of certain uninsured depositors in a bank. It did not think about saving money when it spent over $10 million to put a communications system in the Prime Minister's office. It did not think about saving money when it increased the staff by 54 per cent to 120 people.

That argument does not apply in this case when we are talking about our primary producers, safety at sea, and trying to assist poor fishermen in the country at this time of the year. That argument just does not hold any water at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated. The Hon. Member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception (Mr. Johnson) on debate.

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista-Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to speak on Bill C-75 I would like to say that I believe that most of the amendments contained in this Bill are long overdue and I certainly hope that the Bill will be given quick passage by the House. I feel that all Canadian seafarers and all seafarers who ply Canadian waters will be glad to hear of the emphasis in this Bill on safety at sea. As well as enhancing safety at sea, this Bill will enable Canada to deal more effectively with matters associated with the prevention and clean-up of marine pollution and will provide an improved scheme for attributing liability and paying compensation for all pollution damage caused by ships at sea. In addition, Mr. Speaker, the amendments will enable Canada to ratify a number of important international maritime conventions which we have been unable to do because of the lack of enabling legislation.

I believe that Canadians can and should be proud of the Canadian Coast Guard as it presently exists. This Bill has been drafted to allow the introduction of additional Coast Guard services such as aids to navigation, ice-breaking and dredging.

I am sure that Hon. Members will appreciate my reference to the fact that most of the amendments put forth in this Bill have been discussed in public hearings across Canada. I have personally discussed some of the amendments as far back as 1983. Hearings have been held across Canada from St. John's to Vancouver over the last few years. You can see, Mr. Speaker, that industry has been consulted on the amendments put forward in this Bill and has been given the opportunity to have in-put in them.

As with all legislation, I am sure that there are those who will find fault with this Bill, as the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) has already done. I feel confident that the Government will move quickly to make additional amendments to the Canada Shipping Act if and when they become necessary. As I have already said, the amendments in this Bill have been a long time coming and the Bill should be given speedy passage.

This morning the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate referred to the Ocean Ranger disaster. I am sure that all of us who know of that disaster were deeply touched by it. The Hon. Member failed to say that his Party was in Government at the time of that disaster. It should have moved quickly at that time to bring in the regulations to which he referred this morning. However, it did not do that. He also failed to point out that Bill C-75 will improve construction and equipment standards of mobile off-shore drilling units such as the Ocean Ranger.

I should point out that this Bill provides for the recovery of costs for certain services that are now provided for without charge by the Canadian Coast Guard. It does not set out what the charges will be and I believe that the Government will be discussing the proposed charges fully with industry before any charges are implemented. I say that, Mr. Speaker, because, unlike the previous administration, this Government believes in and practises consultation.

There are many reasons why the amendments in Bill C-75 are put forward. I think we all agree that there is an urgent need to amend the Canada Shipping Act. For several years we have been trying to implement a maritime code in Canada. I do not believe that we can go on without passing amendments to allow the Government to take the necessary action with regard to the construction of ships and to having master's and seaman's certificates improved and modernized. This Bill will also provide for the implementation of the International Maritime Organization convention for the standard of training and for the introduction of medical examinations for seafarers. At the present time I believe that the only medical requirement for anyone obtaining a certificate as a master, mate, or engineer on a ship is to have an eye examination. At times the lives of thousands of people depend on the physical and mental ability of those in charge. The requirement for periodic medical check-ups for officers on ships is long overdue.

I spoke earlier about construction equipment and certification provisions for ships. One of those which will be important is the code for the construction of equipment and ships carrying liquefied gases in bulk and those carrying dangerous cargoes. With regard to the disaster to which I have already referred, I hope that more stingent regulations will be brought in for the construction of drilling rigs and so on. I have to agree with the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate that the Bill may not go far enough. With oil exploration and development about to take place off the east coast of Canada, there should be more detailed legislation setting out what type of ship should be used. In particular, the legislation should make it compulsory to have ships, other than the traditional supply vessels, standing by the oil rigs. We should follow the example of the United Kingdom, Norway and other countries and make it compulsory to have those stand-by ships in place. I believe the Bill should take that into consideration.

Although the charges have not been set out in this legislation, I am sure that as people from the Department of Transport consult with ship owners and operators in Canada, any increases that must be imposed to recover some of the costs will be modest.

Mr. Henderson: My question for the Hon. Member who just spoke concerns Clause 4 of Bill C-75. That clause explains the purpose of adding more revenues through user fees.

First, I want to draw to the Hon. Member's attention the situation that will be faced by my Province of Prince Edward Island with regard to ice-breaking as a result of Clause 4. As he knows, agriculture is the main industry in Prince Edward Island and potatoes are the primary product grown there. The Hon. Member, being a former sea captain, is aware of the ice conditions in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Northumberland Strait during the winter, when there are two and a half to three months of virtual freeze up. At that time we must rely heavily upon ice-breaking services to ship our produce—mainly potatoes—to market.

Prince Edward Island is a seed growing area. It probably grows the best seed potatoes in the world. In my six years in this place, representing the riding of Egmont, I have been asked by producers and shippers of potatoes on several occasions to obtain the services of an ice-breaker in order to allow vessels in and out of Summerside harbour from where approximately 85 per cent of all potatoes grown on P.E.I. are shipped. The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) stated that it costs approximately $1,000 an hour for ice-breaking services. The Hon. Member who just spoke stated that although the regulations would be in the legislation, the user fees may or may not be imposed. I want to tell the Hon. Member that with respect to legislation that is passed, it is too late to close the barn door after the horse has been stolen. Whether it is the present Minister, a Minister of the Government which may follow, or any other Government, if difficult economic times arise, this legislation would be in place and could suddenly become an avenue through which revenues could be taken by a Government. That is why I do not like Clause 4. If the Government does not intend to impose user fees it should say so and delete this Clause. It is too open-ended.

Let me explain the current situation facing the potato industry in my province. The cost of production of potatoes is a bare minimum of 5 cents per pound. The cost to potato farmers at the farmyard f.o.b. is 1.5 cents per pound. Since the farmer is already losing 3.5 cents a pound, how much longer can the agricultural industry survive? If the cost of ice-breaking services, dredging services and those other services which usually come from general revenue are added, the cost will probably be up to 6.5 cents a pound.

How does the Hon. Member believe his Government will use Clause 4 once this legislation is passed?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, first I would point out to the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) that I stated at the beginning of my remarks that I believe most of the amendments were long overdue. I did not say that I agreed with everything in Bill C-75. I pointed out that it would be almost impossible for any legislation that is introduced to be perfect. There will be those in any nation who will find some faults in their legislation.

Let me point out to the Hon. Member that I know of cases where ice-breaker services have been called upon not to provide ice-breaking services but to have fuel or food put on board vessels. That is why I am not entirely opposed to Clause 4. I think the Government should recover the costs of those services that are provided to put fuel or food on a vessel. I do not believe that charges for ice-breaking services in the Maritimes, whether it is Newfoundland, P.E.I., Sydney harbour or Cape Breton or the St. Lawrence River will be made if it is to enable ships to carry on the commerce of this country and ship exports to other countries or bring produce from one province to another.

I am quite familiar with the Hon. Member's Province of Prince Edward Island. I have shipped a good many loads of spuds from that province. Sometimes I have had to put heaters in the hold to raise the temperature before loading the potatoes because they would freeze before we got the hatches back on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I rise to join in this debate on Bill C-75 with decidedly mixed feelings. The debate has already focused on some of the strengths of this Bill as well as some of its weaknesses. It is worth taking a few moments to consider the contributions this Bill will make to the statute law of this country as it deals with an important part of our transportation system, specifically the support and regulation of shipping in the waters of this country.

The Government has often given us the impression that regulation is detrimental. The former Liberal Minister of Transport actually created the impression as well that deregulation would be the direction of the future.

It is good to see legislation which recognizes those matters of life and death, safety, prevention of pollution and so on, for which the Bill provides. It is also good to see that the Government recognizes there are situations in which regulation is quite essential and provides us with a Bill which makes provision for these areas. Since we are honoured this afternoon to have the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) listening to the debate, surely it would not be inappropriate for me, as a member of one of the opposition caucuses, to commend him for that. I trust that all movements in the deregulation policy of the Government will be carried out with regard for the safety of travellers and for the safety of the environment. Surely the changes will not be carried through in any blind pursuit of some principle without regard for the environment and for people who work in the industry as well as those who travel on aircraft, trains, buses or whatever, for whom the Minister of Transport has responsibility.

Recognizing that the process of deregulation has been judicially handled in this particular area by the Minister, I also recognize that the Bill contains a variety of provisions which is long overdue. I suspect that it would not be unfair, although it may have been a more extreme case, to compare this Bill with the Aeronautics Act which we considered some time ago. There were significant revisions and amendments to update legislation largely dated back to the inter-war years, which makes it more than a half-century ago. Surely the preceding Liberal Government was not very concerned about the infrastructure or transportation system of the country or about legislative provisions for it. If at times I am inclined to say nasty things about this particular Government in terms of the slowness with which it arrives at initiatives for us to consider, some of these matters deserve to be recognized as more than just housekeeping legislation because they in fact update legislation which provides for our basic transportation system.

The most unfavourable part of the Bill before us is the particular provision which has already received a great deal of attention, the provision which would enable the Minister or the Government to institute a cost recovery system against our shippers for Coast Guard services. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus) already recognized the very real danger that those particular charges could only be part of an increased loading of cost on the transportation system, particularly in the St. Lawrence Seaway, with which shippers may be faced in 1986 and years thereafter. We recognize that particular possibility and consider the importance of the transportation system to Canada. It is important to northwestern Ontario and to the great City of Thunder Bay to which I want to devote a little of my attention this afternoon. We have real reason for concern about part of the Bill and powerful reason for asking the Minister to reconsider Clause 4 and give up the idea of any kind of cost recovery.

After all, it is in a time of recession, at the very least, that this proposal comes before us. There are enough Canadians facing situations which seem to be ones of depression. I recognize that it is tempting for a Minister to contemplate some possibility of recovering costs in terms of his contribution to the deficit reduction program of the Government. However, there is such a thing as short-sighted reduction which makes Canadian industries even less competitive than they might be in other circumstances, which reduces economic activity in the country, and which ends up increasing the deficit by loading other costs on to the Consolidated Revenue Fund, particularly the cost of unemployment insurance and the loss of revenue, whether it be individual income tax or corporate income tax. Those particular dangers require careful calculation before one is ready to undertake anything of the sort the Minister is seeking authorization to do. Simply, it is very easy to undertake such measures as these for reasons which are a little more than ideological but are regarded as important matters of principle and, in the process, to act against the national interest of the country.

The Canadian nation was not built upon cost recovery. It was not built upon the expansion of market opportunities for their own sake. Surely it was built upon and found expression in policies designed to enlarge opportunities, frequently by putting costs on the Consolidated Revenue Fund and by carrying out investments which would be justified if the country were to be seen in over-all corporate terms. I am referring to social investments which made it possible for people to settle in the Canadian West and in that process improve the land, grow grain and find a market for it. For me, being from Thunder Bay, to talk about the importance of the western settlement, land improvement and wheat production, is simply to recognize the fact that the most important trade through the Port of Thunder Bay is the trade in grain. In 1984, the most important product which went through the Port was grain, for a total of 16.6 million metric tons. That total is evidence of the extent to which the Port of Thunder Bay is a junction between western grain growers and shippers on the Great Lakes moving grain toward domestic markets to the East, and, even more so, on the export markets beyond the North American continent.

If I compare the quantity of grain moved with the amount of coal which went through the port at 2.78 million metric tons, one has a real indication of the dominance of the grain trade in that port. Also it helps one to appreciate the way in which great terminal elevators dominate the lakeshore along the bay and provide the point of linkage between trains from the West and vessels from the East.

The importance of the grain trade is not only a matter of the business done in Thunder Bay. After last year's decline of 25 per cent from the preceding year, this year we have a further decline of 40 per cent in grain movement. For weeks and months during the summer-time practically nothing happened in the port and hundreds of elevator workers were laid off. Some were laid off for more than a year. They realized, as it went into the summer and continued into the fall, that it was unlikely they would be called back for the moment and perhaps never called back again. We have a daily experience with those circumstances. I visited the Port Arthur Shipbuilding company and talked with managers and workers there. I was told how very slow business was this year. When ships are not moving, they do not have the good fortune to move grain nor do they have the bad fortune for them, to rub bottom at various points and to suffer other minor damage which make it possible for that company to do its jobs in ship repair.

As a result, employment at the shipyards falls off sharply, and in one area after another the same is true. The Seafarers' International Union is talking in terms of 2,500 of its members not being at work this year, and both CN Rail and CP Rail have laid people off.

We are experiencing what can happen when factors go against an industry. Initially we were told that the decline in the grain crop in the West was to blame. However, we also have anxiety about the cost factors that make it less attractive to ship through the Port of Thunder Bay, thus leading to these effects in the Port of Thunder Bay and in ports all along the system, including the Port of Montréal and beyond.

At point after point the factors that slow the movement of grain and of other freight through the Great Lakes system have a serious effect on employment and business activities. It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan, and I feel, as I am sure others do, so deeply the necessity of asking the Minister of Transport, to reconsider Clause 4 of the Bill. Our desire is to prevent any possibility of additional costs being added to the use of the system.

The centennial of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway is almost upon us, and in the case of the St. Lawrence Seaway we have a system that is nearing the 30-year mark now—which, incidentally, might underscore the damage suffered as a result of the collapse of part of the wall of a lock in the Welland Canal system, a point which was pursued briefly in Question Period earlier this afternoon. It is clear that we need not only to undertake every measure to reduce the costs on the system but to invest the money to ensure that the system is in first class condition.

We speak readily these days about things being "world class" and "state of the art," and so forth. Well, the canals on this system have been around for quite a while. The Welland Canal, of course, is rich in history, the first construction having taken place in the late 1820s, with a series of reconstructions and expansions following as one canaly system has succeeded another.

I do not mean to suggest to the Minister that we need yet another Welland Canal built—although, given the size of vessels today, that is a topic that is perhaps worth thinking about. In recession circumstances, I do not suppose that the Minister wants to contemplate such a project. Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, we have to ensure that the system is as efficient as it can be and that the costs to the carriers are kept down. Those are the important points that I wish to note critically about this Bill. Clause 4 presents some very dangerous prospects for the shippers, a perilous possibility for the Government to act upon.

Perhaps I could now say something about the second largest trade done through the Port of Thunder Bay, the trade in coal. The figures in respect of the trade in coal underscore the importance of keeping costs down to the various industries in Canada and in fact to Canadians generally, as I shall demonstrate in a moment. I note, Mr. Speaker, that the second largest trade in 1984 done through the Port of Thunder Bay was that in coal, with a shade over 2.75 million tonnes passing through the Port of Thunder Bay. As Canadians who know their economic geography are well aware, Canada has been most unfortunate in terms of the location of its energy resources vis-à-vis the centres of industry in this country.

J. B. Brebner, in his mid-1940s publication dealing with Canadian-American industry—a publication which became in fact a study of the North Atlantic Triangle—pointed out something that we Canadians can so easily forget, that being the reality that the Americans have with iron ore at the upper end of the lakes and coal just south of the central lakes, or lower lakes, if you will, and that incredible transportation system linking the two. It is, after all, on that reality that American industrial might for 100 years was built. That reality led to the building of the great Rockefeller fleet and others to carry the iron ore to the areas of the coal deposits, which in turn led to the establishment of the great steel mills, the automobile industry, and so forth. Those were the factors that helped make America the industrial power that it is.

Where were we Canadians? Well, we had our centres of population in the St. Lawrence Valley/Lower Great Lakes region. We had our small iron ore deposits on the Canadian side of the international boundary. But where was the coal? Well, the coal, of course, was off in Cape Breton and in other places in the Atlantic region and in the Rocky Mountains and on Vancouver Island. Given that the coal was to be found at the far reaches of the country and the iron ore in the centre, it became difficult to build up industry. As we all here appreciate, the ore is hauled to the coal. One does not, as a rule, haul the coal great distances, only to burn it up at its destination.

The remarkable fact since the mid-1970s is that it has proved feasible, to some extent, to move coal from the Rocky Mountains and the lignite deposits of eastern Saskatchewan eastward across the Prairies and the northwestern Ontario part of the Shield and then on to the lakes and down the lakes to industrial users in Sault Ste Marie and Hamilton and on to the thermal generating plants of Ontario Hydro.

The fact that it has become possible to do that is a remarkable achievement. It is, in its way, a small revolution, if you will, and certainly a remarkable addition to the potential economic geography of this country. However, the necessity, of course, is to keep costs down. Ontario Hydro would be quite happy to burn a good deal of western Canadian coal, particularly when one considers that it is coal that is low in sulphur, thereby producing far less of the acid rain-producing emissions which result from the burning of American coal. That particular feature is one that is well worth noting. After all, it was just this afternoon that a Government private Member was spotlighting the dangers from acid rain, emphasizing the importance of dealing with this menace.

As anyone who is exploring this topic these days realizes, it is only in the last year or two that the consequences of acid rain have become so very obvious. Large numbers of trees have been lost in the forests of Europe and the forests of the Appalachian Mountains. Prior to that time, it was thought that it would be years before the consequences of acid rain would be obvious in the forests of this continent and the forests of northern Europe, and now suddenly we find that there are large numbers of trees that are unable, as a result of the acid rain emissions, to survive the diseases that beset them, leading to the loss of many of our trees.

In the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, anything that will make it possible for Ontario Hydro to move to a level of 50 or 55 per cent of Canadian coal being burned in its furnaces in order to generate electricity is something that should be undertaken. The challenges, of course, are quite real. American coal is all too close at hand on the other side of the lakes. The cost of moving American coal to the generating stations of Ontario Hydro is in the $2-a-tonne range. When Ontario Hydro faces a cost of moving Canadian coal to its plants in the $7-a-tonne range, it undoubtedly becomes a matter of significance.

It is in such circumstances that we surely want to do everything we can to ensure that costs are kept down and that the St. Lawrence Seaway can to continue operate effectively in providing the transportation means needed for the various resources of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I know you have a limit to your patience. Thank you for having given me this opportunity to ask the Minister to think very carefully about Clause 4 in terms of its removal from the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We will now entertain questions or comments on the remarks of the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

• (1600)

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. colleague if he could advise us as to the impact of Clause 4 on the forest-based industries, not only in northwestern Ontario from where we both come but in Quebec, other parts of Ontario and perhaps even British Columbia. Will this have an adverse effect on its competitiveness in the world pulp, newsprint and lumber markets? Perhaps the Hon. Member could advise us as to his understanding of the situation.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan, for that good question. In responding to it, I think immediately of the extent to which the American lumber producers, in their efforts to meet the Canadian competition, experienced difficulties because of the Jones Act which requires that cargoes which move between American ports and do a coasting trade be carried in American bottoms. That creates cost disadvantages because, as has been shown in Canada, the Government has rejected any possibility of a deep-sea marine policy, although I must say—and this may cut against my own argument—that I wish that we in Canada had something similar to the Jones Act making it possible to build up, on the basis of our large export trade, a Canadian merchant marine. The question that we are debating this afternoon regarding the viability of industries is at the very heart of that particular question.

My colleague has given me the opportunity to point out that if the movement of forest products from this country was affected by increased costs, there would be very unfortunate consequences for the industry. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) came to northwestern Ontario two or three weeks ago to discuss with us the dangers facing lumber producers. At that point, we were thinking primarily of lumber producers being faced with the prospect of Congressional action which could put countervailing duties against Canadian lumber products or take even more drastic forms like the Gibbon Bill. When we spoke to people in the industry, we found that they were underscoring the closeness with which they had to cut their costs and the fact that they were making very little money when trees are being cut 200 miles from the mill and trucks have to go back and forth. That 400-mile round trip creates an incredible cost.

I might note, since it was one of the most interesting days in the early part of this parliamentary Session, that when we were debating last December the question of sales and excise tax increases, there was a most interesting debate on the question of a reduction in the rebate on the fuel tax for fuel used by the forestry industry not only for equipment but for transportation. I am sure you would agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that one of the reasons the combined Opposition defeated the Government on a voice vote that auspicious Wednesday afternoon was that a number of private government Members were convinced along with us that the sales tax should not apply to fuel being used by logging trucks operating on the roads.

The Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) spoke with some passion on this particular matter that day and he was only one of the private government Members who felt strongly along with my colleagues and particularly my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan, about that point. That is a little bit of parliamentary history illustrating the same point we are discussing today.

Where we can avoid costs, let us find the means to do so in order to ensure that the industries remain valiable, employment is maintained and profits continue to be made. After all, we do need some kind of a base for taxation, and let a New Democrat say so occasionally.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 46, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Income Tax—Introduction of minimum tax; the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell)—Customs and Excise—Planned reductions in inspection personnel; the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker)—Fisheries (a) Refinancing of Fishery Products International (b) Company's social responsibility.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA SHIPPING ACT, ARCTIC WATERS POLLUTION PREVENTION ACT, MARITIME CODE ACT, AND THE OIL AND GAS PRODUCTION AND CONSERVATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate today in the discussion on Bill C-75, the Canada Shipping Act. Let me say at the outset that I agree with the Hon. Member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception (Mr. Johnson) who indicated that there are many amendments contained in this Bill that are long overdue, much needed and proper. Having said that, let me also say that in some very important ways, this piece of legislation is more noteworthy for what is not contained within it than for what is.

Nearly four years ago on February 15, 1982, the drilling rig Ocean Ranger went down off the coast of my home province and took with it 84 lives. Among those 84 lives were 69 Canadians and 56 fellow Newfoundlanders. One of the ways the Government of the day, in conjunction with the Government of Newfoundland, reacted after some weeks and months to that tragic disaster was to commission a joint federal-provincial royal commission to examine the circumstances that led up to the disastrous night of February 15, 1982, to examine the regulations that were in place at the time of the disaster to see if they were sufficient and to examine the safety standards and practices that were employed at the time of that disaster.

The royal commission to which I referred produced a very comprehensive and excellent report. It was detailed, it uncovered every stone and it looked at every facet of the events leading up to this marine disaster. The report was passionate in its approach and committed to preventing such occurrences from happening again. I am told that it was a $15 million exercise.

The commissioners made some very specific recommendations to the Minister of Transport and tabled a report in August, 1984, about a month before the last election. They made some very specific recommendations to the Government of Canada, recommendations that they hoped would be contained within pending changes to the Canada Shipping Act, the Bill that is before us today.

While I will acknowledge that some of the recommendations made have been included in Bill C-75, the single most important recommendation has not been adopted in Bill C-75. I am sure it will astound Members of this House to know that when an oil rig operates 200 miles offshore the regulations contained in the Canada Shipping Act do not apply to that oil rig. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) under the Canada Shipping Act has no authority over the operation of that rig under that Act when it operates 200 miles offshore. One of the primary recommendations contained in this report was that the Shipping Act be changed and the provisions of the act encompass rigs operating offshore. That has not been done, Mr. Speaker. Words, discussions, and policy formulation and debate in this palatial Chamber seldom resembles the reality of the real world. For example, our agricultural policies seldom resemble the impact on farmers in western Canada. The fishery policy seldom resembles the impact it has on fishermen in Atlantic Canada. When we talk about safety regulations and a royal commission, nothing we say here makes us truly undestand why it is important that the Government of Canada under the Shipping Act regulate rigs operating offshore. I would like to refer to the report of the royal commission so that we know what we are talking about and why we are insisting that the Shipping Act govern and police the operation of rigs offshore. Most people believe that the Ocean Ranger went down with 84 men, that no on really got off the rig. They believe we do not know what happened but that is not true, Mr. Speaker.

A supply vessel called the Seaforth Highlander at 2.32 o'clock a.m. on February 15, 1982, reported a lifeboat to be alongside. Inside the lifeboat lights were on and men who had got off the Ocean Ranger could be seen moving about. Some of the men were bailing through the port and starboard sides. The sound of the seas and wind made voice communication between the lifeboat and the seamen on the after deck impossible. On the after deck a seaman attempted to throw a Samson rope to the lifeboat but it was blown away from its target. He then threw a line with a life ring attached to a man in the aft hatch of the small capsulized lifeboat. The man, clinging for his life, caught the line and attached it to the canopy of the lifeboat. He tied the other end of the line to the cat rail on the port side of the Seaforth Highlander, the supply vessel.

When this was happening, seven or eight of the men in the lifeboat emerged into the port gunwell. These men were wearing hard hats and work vests or life preservers. Some were lightly clad and others wore heavier clothing. The lifeboat began to roll slowly to port away from the Seaforth Highlander and within seconds it capsized, throwing the men who had been standing on the port gunwale into the sea and snapping the lines which had attached to the Seaforth Highlander.

As the men from the lifeboat spilled into the sea, the water in the immediate area was illuminated by the lights attached to the life preservers. The lifeboat had completely capsized. The time was 2.38 o'clock a.m.

That is what we are talking about, Mr. Speaker. We are not talking about the bureaucracy. We are not talking about red tape. We are talking about the lives of people who go to sea.

We are talking about the lives of men who managed to escape that floating coffin on February 15, 1982, the Ocean Ranger, the men who managed to get into the capsulized raft but who were unable to be rescued. Why? The report goes on to tell us that the supply boat, despite the courage and determination of the men on it, was ill equipped to bring a capsule alongside. It was ill equipped to provide any assistance. Even though they had a line on that capsule which had men in it, alive, it was not able to rescue those men.

The report recommended as well that the Government, through the Canada Shipping Act, provide regulations for the construction and operation of those supply vessels. That is not contained in the Minister's legislation, Bill C-75. I therefore say to the Minister who tells us that he will make further changes next fall, I absolutely guarantee to the Minister that if he will make the appropriate changes as recommended by the royal commission now, he will have no trouble as far as this Party is concerned, the Liberal Party, in having this legislation moved quickly and speedily through the House of Commons.

I know that every Member of Parliament, no matter on what side of this House he sits and no matter what Party he represents, feels exactly as I do and as strongly as I do. Offshore exploration is an area which is still relatively new but it is an area where we have Canadian men and women putting their lives at risk in order to harness that resource from the sea in the most dramatic and difficult conditions in the word. We want to ensure that every possible action is taken by the Government of Canada to guarantee the health and safety of our people. I know, and the people who work the rig know, that there is no fail safe system. They go to sea in those kinds of weather conditions, doing that kind of work, putting life and limb at risk. They know that no one can give them guarantees. But surely to God, Mr. Speaker, we can give them the very best facilities, regulations and equipment that money, technology and political will can provide. That is what we ask of the Minister today.

We ask the Minister to go further than he has and we tell him that if he is prepared to go further, this legislation will receive speedy approval from the Official Opposition in this House and that this Minister will be applauded. I know he has some difficulty. I know there is some bureaucratic in-fighting and there is some difficulty with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, in particular, COGLA, which believes its regulations apply when a rig is operating at sea. However, we are not going to let bureaucratic in-fighting or empire building stand in the way of our responsibility to those citizens who make their living from the sea.

There is another measure contained in this Act which I would like to address. Section 4, charges relating to navigational services, has already been mentioned by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) and I know by other Hon. Members who have spoken on Bill C-75. You would need to have more nerve than a bad toothache to include that particular section in Bill C-75 at this time. More nerve than a toothache, Mr. Speaker. This is incredible. The Canadian shipping industry at this moment is in deep trouble and on its back. We already have one major company being operated by a bank, and the Minister knows it. We have one or two more which, before this year is out, are liable to join their crippled friend in being operated by a bank or receiver as well. Yet the Minister includes in this legislation a measure to impose on that industry what is, I submit, an unreasonable hardship. This at a time when you have a ship in the Welland Canal looking like the Conservative Party, frozen in suspended animation; unable to move forward, backward or sideways. This at a time when the credibility of the St. Lawrence Seaway is seriously endangered. For two years in a row the system has broken down because preventative maintenance is not being done.

● (1620)

Mr. Mazankowski: Because of Liberal neglect! Why don't you say it?

Mr. Tobin: Because preventative maintenance is not being done because you are trying to balance the books—

Mr. Mazankowski: Boy, have you got a lot of nerve.

Mr. Tobin: —in a way that bites off your nose to spite your face. The Minister knows that if he drives a car year in and year out and does not take it in and do at least the normal maintenance, rotate the tires, check the brakes and change the oil, that car is going to break down. Yet another car, properly maintained, tires rotated, oil changed regularly, will run for a heck of a long time. We were providing good constructive maintenance on the St. Lawrence Seaway when we were in power but this Government is trying to drive the Authority right to the wall. The Authority has a $30 million surplus. That is not well-known because all you ever hear is that the Authority will have an $11 million deficit this year. The Government does not know whether it is going to bail the Seaway out. The Government will not let the Authority have access to the $30 million it built up in surplus, either to pay off its debt or do preventative maintenance. That is the problem.

The Seaway saves Canadian farmers $10 per tonne compared to what it would cost to move grain by other methods. It is estimated that in the 26 years the Seaway has been in place, it has saved grain farmers a total of 2 billion. That Seaway is absolutely incredibly important for farmers, iron ore mines, those who are left, not having been shut down during the tenure of the current Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). It is important to people at Stelco producing steel. Yet this Government treats it as if it were an old bus. It has aged a little bit and it is letting it run itself into the ground. This is the exact same approach being taken with the Newfoundland Railway. The Government does not have the political courage to say that it wants to scrap the railway in Newfoundland so it is taking away maintenance dollars and letting it run itself into the ground. Eventually it will tell Newfoundlanders that it is run down, no good and let's close it down. Well, if the Government is not careful that is exactly the kind of situation we will find on the St. Lawrence Seaway. I know my friend from the NDP has raised this matter a number of times during the last few weeks and he is absolutely correct. The Government is being penny-wise and pound-folish.

I simply want to say again to the Minister, having spent $15 million over a couple of years in order to come up with the most intensive and exhaustive examination of conditions affecting the operation of rigs in the offshore, having made specific recommendations to the Minister, and despite the bureaucratic difficulties he has, despite the in-fighting which may occur among bureaucrats because the Minister is certainly not a man who would be distracted from doing the right thing because of bureaucratic in-fighting, would he not please reconsider and stand in his place and provide us with amendments which would reflect the spirit of the recommendations made by the royal commission on the Ocean Ranger marine disaster? Will he not do that? If he does, I can assure him that we in the Liberal Party, and I would not be surprised if the same applies to the other Party represented in this House, will do everything in our power to see that this Bill receives the speedy passage it deserves. That is always providing that we have made up our minds here that Canada should use all her technology and whatever of her wealth is necessary to give those people at sea in hazardous conditions every possible chance at survival.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, as someone who has a son on one of those rigs, I assure the Hon. Member that he does not have a corner on concern for these people. It is shared by all of us from our part of the country. I want to direct my comments, because the Hon. Member's observations are important, to advise the House of where we stand, in part, on the recommendations of Mr. Justice Hickman. As has been indicated, the first phase of the report was tabled in August of 1984 and it contained 66 recommendations directed at Government and industry. They dealt with drilling rig design, evacuation systems, certification and training of crew, search and rescue, among others. Some 80 per cent of those recommendations are either fully or partially implemented. The remaining 20 per cent require legislative authority to implement. That is what this process is all about. The recommendations contained in the more detailed report, some three volumes, require legislative change or Government-industry agreement after very close consultation.

The Hon. Member and others have said that this Bill does not address the Ocean Ranger report. In Bill C-75 we are dealing with safety at sea, standards of training and certification of seafarers, and we are dealing with greater capacity for the Board of Steamship Inspections to assure themselves and the Canadian public of the safety of the rigs. We deal with construction and equipment. We require the implementation of certain conventions and codes, some of which have been hanging around since 1969. That is about 15 or 16 years ago. For the edification of the House, these include the 1969 International Convention on Tonnage and Measurement of Ships. The International Convention on Standards of Training, the certification of watchkeeping certificate for seafarers; and the 1978 protocol to the 1974 International Convention of Safety of Life at Sea. Then we have the 1975 International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution and the 1958 Seafarers' Identity Document Convention. We have also included the 1969 International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage and the 1971 International Convention on the Establishment of the Fund for Compensation of Oil Pollution Damage. Among the codes that are even more pertinent are the code for the construction of equipment of ships carrying liquefied gases in bulk, the code for existing ships carrying liquefied gases other than in bulk, the code for the construction and equipment of ships carrying dangerous chemicals, and the code for the construction and equipment of mobile off-shore drilling units, the very thing which must be ratified before Canada can implement the regulations.

I ask the Hon. Member where in this Bill, if he has read it, he got the impression that Bill C-75 is not attempting to address the very real concerns which he raised, almost blatantly, and, I suggest, with perhaps not as much regard as he should have for the families of those who have been lost.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the last words of the Member opposite. I hope he will stand in his place and apologize for them.

Mr. Forrestall: Oh, come on.

Mr. Tobin: I am serious. I pointed out at the beginning of my remarks that no Member of this House had a monopoly on concern for people off-shore. I have stated repeatedly—and I wish the Member would read the "blues"—that every Member has a concern—

Mr. Forrestall: Stop trading on their misfortune.

Mr. Tobin: I have to tell you, sir—

Mr. Forrestall: You are trading on their misfortune and you should be ashamed.

Mr. Tobin: The comments that the Hon. Member has just made are not worthy of his reponsibility as a Member of Parliament and are certainly not worthy of his responsibility as a Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. I will also say that they are not worthy of an honourable man. I will say no more, Mr. Speaker. When I speak in this House on the Ocean Ranger and the Ocean Ranger disaster, I speak as a Member of Parliament from Newfoundland who is concerned about all 84 people who went down on that rig. There were two people from my riding who went down on that rig and I do not want my sincerity questioned by any Member.

Mr. Forrestall: You are trading on it and you know it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I appreciate the comments being made and the exchange which is taking place. We are touching on a very serious incident which happened and I hope that Hon. Members on both sides will cool it, shall I say, and let us get on with the debate.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, if this is not the place to talk about it, I don't know what is. The Hon. Member says that 80 per cent of the recommendations have been implemented or partially implemented. I congratulate the Government, as I have in the past, for implementing those recommendations which it has. However, some of the so-called partially implemented recommendations are very much partial. The Government says that it has met a recommendation that a helicopter base be established in St. John's by temporarily stationing a helicopter from time to time in St. John's. That is not the recommendation of the commission on the Ocean Ranger. That recommendation has not been met as the Government claims it has.

I would like to see a report card from the royal commission which would tell us how many of these so-called recommendations the Government believes it has met have indeed been met, in the minds of the Ocean Ranger commissioners. The commission said that there ought to be a full-time helicopter facility established in St. John's. The Government says that it has met that recommendation by moving a helicopter from Gander into St. John's from time to time. That is not meeting the recommendation of the royal commission. The Parliamentary Secretary, the Minister, and the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) know that. The Member is very knowledgeable about this matter. He knows that everyone in Newfoundland knows it.

People are questioning the very nature and type of the helicopter which is currently being used. People are questioning whether this vehicle is proper and sufficient for use in off-shore weather and icing conditions. We are still using those same helicopters with no publicly expressed intention to replace them with more modern and efficient aircraft. That indicates that the spirit of the recommendations are not being met. The means for getting off the rig when it is listing or in a stormy sea is a couple of slings which drop a capsule over the side. That is the same means which was in place on February 15, 1982. That indicates that the spirit of the recommendations have not been met.

That is all I am saying, Mr. Speaker. It has nothing to do with partisan politics. It has to do with doing the best we can by using the technology that is available in this country and the money that is available to the Government to make the best possible system. I have said that no system can guarantee the safety of anyone on a rig but, by God, we should do our best. If the Parliamentary Secretary wants to call into question anyone's sincerity in raising this matter in the House, then he is out of touch. I give him the opportunity to apologize for that comment. I would not accuse any Member—

Mr. Forrestall: You just did.

Mr. Tobin: I would not accuse any Member—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Tobin: —in a natural disaster of this kind—

Mr. Forrestall: You're trading on the misery of those families and you know it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The period for questions and comments is now terminated. I would like to recognize the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie).

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I was not planning to get involved in this particular debate, but since the matter of the Ocean Ranger has come up I thought that I would speak about it for a few moments because I am taking an obvious interest in ensuring that the recommendations with regard to the Ocean Ranger are implemented in so far as they can be. The final report of the commission on the Ocean Ranger which was headed by Chief Justice Hickman of Newfoundland was only received in July if my memory serves me right. That report is now under intense scrutiny by various departments of the Government, including the Department of Transport, in order to decide how many of the recommendations can be effected. Since I am a Member from Newfoundland I am taking a particular interest in that period.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I met last Friday with the chairman of the committee of officials which is dealing with the report. The legislation which is now before the House deals with revisions and changes to the Canada Shipping Act. As we all know, it is not, nor will it be, the only legislation which applies to Canada's off-shore areas. I would like to assure the Members of this House, and through this House anyone who might be watching or interested from Newfoundland and Labrador, that the recommendations of the Ocean Ranger commission are going to be implemented wherever possible and wherever the Government considers that these recommendations would bring about improvement which are possible and can reasonably be made in connection with off-shore safety of Canada. The Government will certainly make clear its position on each recommendation which it feels it cannot or should not accept and on each recommendation which will only be partially accepted or partially implemented. Nothing less would be satisfactory.

I am pleased that the hon. gentleman has brought up this subject as it is a most important one. I know that some of his rhetoric is just that. He likes to expound with some vigour and as a young MP he is coming along. He is certainly able to fill this Chamber with the rotundities of his views, if that is the right wording.

Mr. Nystrom: The new John Crosbie.

Mr. Crosbie: Being in Opposition, he can now do that and exercise himself with considerable indignation whereas in former times he had to remain silent. One can understand that he is somewhat like the steam kettle that has been on the boil all day with a wooden plug in the bung-hole. Having come from Government and into Opposition of course the bung-hole has sprung and all the steam is pushing out. We welcome it. Of course, often the hon. gentleman does not make more sense than a bung-hole.

• (1640)

Mr. Nystrom: What hole?

Mr. Crosbie: Bung-hole. It is a kind of hole that you would not understand, coming from Saskatchewan.

Returning to the point, I would ask the hon. gentleman to remember that when the Ocean Ranger tragedy occurred in 1982, it occurred when our predecessor Government had been in power for some 20 years. It is obvious from the circumstances that surrounded that incident, certainly as later found by the royal commission, that some peculiar situations had been allowed to develop about which people had not been made aware. Most of this has been clearly pointed out in the report of the Ocean Ranger. Hopefully it is not a situation that will ever occur again but we have to be vigilant to make sure that it does not occur again.

The Ocean Ranger commission consisted of six members. As I recall, three were nominated by the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador and three were nominated by the Government of Canada. Both Governments jointly shared the expenses of that commission. However, this is primarily within the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada and it has a responsibility to see that these recommendations are carried out except where a conclusion is reached that a recommendation is not the right one.

In addition to the fact that the legislation and regulations that pertained in 1982, at the time of this occurrence, were regulations that were implemented under a legislative regime for which the hon. gentlemen opposite had been responsible for some 20 years, I would point out that there have been considerable improvements brought about in the situation since this Government assumed office. The Hon. Member mentioned one of those improvements but only did so to denigrate it. It is the stationing of National Defence search and rescue helicopters in St. John's during the winter period, which is the period of greatest danger for offshore operations. That commenced last year under the aegis of this Government.

For years, when we were in opposition in the House, our protests and cries that the search and rescue facilities in Newfoundland were inadequate were completely ignored by the Government of the day, which is the Government to which the Hon. Member belonged. There have already been considerable improvements brought about in search and rescue for the offshore just through the stationing of helicopters in the St. John's area in the winter-time. They are not in Gander or Prince Edward Island or Halifax or some areas where it will take them hours to get to the scene of the trouble, if trouble occurs. Although more improvement is needed, there has already been a great deal of improvement in that direction. Better equipped helicopters, reflecting the latest state-of-the-art technology, are needed in this location, certainly during the winter period but preferably all year.

I do not intend to make a lengthy intervention here today, except to say that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is well aware of these problems. He has done more in his few short months as Minister of Transport to overcome transportation problems in Newfoundland and elsewhere than any other in our history. He only had eight months in his last reincarnation. He has had 13 months so far, this time. He is well aware of the problems and well aware, as far as his jurisdiction is concerned, of what must be done to overcome these problems. As long as we have a person of his calibre and interest occupying this position, we do not need to worry about what will happen to the Ocean Ranger report. That report will be implemented and any aspects of it that the Government concludes are not suitable for recommendation will certainly be made public.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and then a question. First, let me say that I agree with the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) that the Minister of Transport is indeed a man unusually possessed with a high degree of intelligence, ability, wisdom and knowledge in this industry. I think he is a man of integrity. I do not question that. It is because I believe he has those qualities that I appeal to him to move more quickly and not wait until next fall with respect to the recommendations contained within the Ocean Ranger report.

Let me say with respect to the Member for St. John's West, that I agree with just about everything he said with the exception of his comments about the bung-hole. Even though I agree with everything he said, I tremble somewhat in fear because I am expecting a retraction to be issued at any moment. I do not know if he cleared those comments with the PMO first.

The Hon. Member said that conditions were not as good as they should have been in 1982 when the previous Government was in power. He is right. They were not. If the Hon. Member checks the record in Hansard for 1982 and 1983, or checks the public record as far as press clippings are concerned in Newfoundland, he will find that that is exactly what I was saying as a Member of the Government about the provisions made by the Government in 1982 and 1983. They were not good enough.

I recall that one of the most disturbing incidents at that time was that two levels of Government were having a political fight about safety regulations while the rigs were operating. One Government threatened to close down the drilling season while the federal Government said it would not allow that to be done. It was a political football that was being kicked back and forth in a very partisan way. If the Hon. Member checks the record, he will see that I was asking at that time for an interim report from the royal commission. In fact, I asked questions in the House of the Minister of Transport as well as in public through the press for an interim report so that we could resolve at least some question of safety rather than let the matter become nothing but a political football.

If the Hon. Member for St. John's West is consistent he will check the record and find that out. The fact of the matter is that we did not have a report in 1982 or 1983. However, since August, 1984, we have had the most exhaustive report of a royal commission. The fact that it was not available before is not an excuse for the past. It does not forgive inaction by Governments of any stripe, including Liberal, if there was inaction in past years. However, we never had a report.

The fact that we have that report now is why I ask the Minister of Transport to take this opportunity to encompass within Bill C-75 the recommendations of the royal commission, particularly as it affects his jurisdiction under the Canada Shipping Act to police the operation of these rigs when they are stationary and at sea.

I ask the Member for St. John's West, in good faith, if he is satisfied that the temporary stationing of the helicopter from Gander meets the specific recommendation of the royal commission. Is he satisfied with that as the Member for St. John's West and, more important, as a Newfoundland Cabinet Minister?

Second, will he tell us whether any initiative is under way by the Government to examine what new types of equipment with respect to SAR helicopters might be more appropriate for this kind of offshore duty than the aircraft that is currently being used? There is wide ranging debate as to whether or not this current vehicle is appropraite for the conditions offshore.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I do not know about retractions. I never recall having retracted anything that I have said, not even in recent days. Therefore, I am not familiar at all with retractions. I do not know what the Hon. Member is referring to in that respect.

Perhaps the hon. gentleman was being accurate. I will have to accept his word for it if he says that in 1982 and 1983 he went on the record as to the need for improvements in offshore search and rescue capabilities and other needs in Newfoundland.

I also remember that he was aiding and abetting the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who is now the External Affairs critic for the Official Opposition, in his efforts to crush the province and force it to submit to the Government of Canada and accept what it was offering the Province of Newfoundland by way of an oil and gas agreement at that time. Of course that agreement was one which would have put complete authority and control over all offshore activities into the hands of the Government of Canada.

• (1650)

I well remember when the Ocean Ranger tragedy occurred the disgraceful appearance of the Government of Canada attempting to prevent the Government of Newfoundland from appointing a commission of inquiry to look into the matter and trying to beat it to the punch by appointing its own commission. I remember well the unsavoury fracas which occurred until wiser heads persuaded the Government of Canada to pay some attention to the province, to do the decent thing and to appoint a commission which would have representatives of both Governments. That is the kind of thing I remember. The then Government of Canada did not care much about what was happening in the offshore insofar as safety or the conduct of the offshore was concerned. It was interested in who would control it, who would have the power, how it could best crush Newfoundland and Labrador, and how it could prevent another Alberta from arising on the East Coast of Canada, as it visualized it. That was its concern at that time, not helicopters or equipment on helicopters—

Mr. Tobin: On a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member can rise on a point of order, a supplementary question or a comment.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I put the same two questions to the Hon. Minister again. Obviously he is using partisan rhetoric to try to avoid my questions. My question was twofold. Is the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) satisfied—

Mr. Crosbie: That is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It is not a point of order, but the Hon. Member wants to direct a supplementary question to the Minister. Is the Minister finished?

Mr. Crosbie: Could I answer his original question?

Mr. Tobin: There are two questions; answer them.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I could either ignore answering his supplementary questions or ignore answering his original questions. I choose, at the moment, to ignore answering his original questions. I will ignore his supplementary questions later.

Mr. Tobin: Why are you afraid to answer them?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I was interrupted—

Mr. Tobin: Answer them.

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Member claims to have asked a question. What I heard was a harangue, followed perhaps by a question.

Mr. Tobin: Hansard will record my original two questions, and Hansard will record that you are afraid to answer them.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman is irrepressible in the venting which he wants to do through his bung-hole at this particular moment. With respect to the question of helicopters, I believe, as I said in my earlier remarks, that we should have state of the art helicopters with the latest in search and rescue techniques and equipment stationed in St. John's, Newfoundland, in order to provide maximum search and rescue capabilities and safety features, particularly during the winter season. That is what is required. The Government of Canada is looking at all options and how they can best be accomplished.

We are looking at the recommendations of the Ocean Ranger commission. Some of them would involve quite massive changes and, therefore, decisions could not be made overnight. For example, there was a recommendation that the search and rescue work should be conducted by a new, independent agency, not by a Department of Government which has other responsibilities, such as DND. That would be a very considerable change involving some intricate questions as to whether all the equipment of such an agency would be dedicated for that one purpose, how it would affect present arrangements and the like. All these matters are under intensive scrutiny now, and certainly that will be decided within the next several months; three or four months at the latest. Other matters which are not quite that intricate or where the involvement of Government in the changes would not be so massive will be decided much quicker. I know that the Minister of Energy, and the Minister responsible in Newfoundland will be giving a report this fall on just what has happened to all these recommendations to date.

I have forgotten the second question, but just to answer—

Mr. Tobin: Are you satisfied with temporary placement in St. John's?

Mr. Crosbie: That is an improvement over the condition which applied beforehand.

Mr. Tobin: Yes, it is.

Mr. Crosbie: However, I could not say that I was satisfied with just that. I would like to see the new arrangements made permanent and better equipment used. That is what we have to work toward.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I do not plan to say too much, so that this Bill can proceed. However, I have a few comments to make regarding Bill C-75. My concerns focus around 16 items in the Bill. I will start by going through them one at a time.

The first one primarily concerns the suggestion or implication that user fees will be applied to commercial shipping. Most likely this is where costs will be imposed on the grandest scale. As a western Canadian Member of Parliament, I am concerned about added costs to central Canada in potential coal contracts with Alberta and British Columbia. Mr. Speaker, I know you are familiar with the study by the Alberta and Ontario joint task force on coal, being a Member from the fine Province of Alberta. The task force shed a great deal of light on Seaway transportation costs, particularly as they impact upon the matter of coal.

In 1978, in my own province, the Byron Creek collieries started looking at the exportation of coal from British Columbia to central Canada, to be used primarily by power facilities in Ontario. Aside from it being a Canadian product producing jobs in western Canada, not to mention the jobs which would be created throughout the transportation system, western coal is of particular interest because of the role it plays in acid rain and the fact that its sulphur content is so much lower than that coming from the United States of America. It has a significant role to play in the future, particularly with Ontario Hydro generating stations. Like many of our problems in Canada, our unfortunate fluke of geography results in it being a considerable distance from market. That is the essence of my first concern. The imposition of additional commercial shipping fees put the possibility of a western Canadian coal link with central Canadian demands simply that much further into the future. For example, a cost-quality comparison indicates that in Canadian dollars per tonne, the maritime transportation component shows an average cost of $2 per tonne for American coal compared with $7 per tonne for Canadian coal. Obviously any increase in Seaway tolls for indirectly or directly related Coast Guard services will only make the gap between the cost of American coal and the cost of Canadian coal larger and therefore reduce the competitiveness of western Canadian coal. Hon. Members from western Canada have repeatedly raised this matter as something into which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) should look very seriously, in terms of keeping costs to a minimum to facilitate the exportation of western coal into central Canada. If currently contracted Hydro Ontario purchases are any indication, western Canadian coal could increase to 50 per cent or 55 per cent of Hydro's total coal supply by 1990. The opportunities for increased sales of western Canadian coal to Ontario Hydro will of course depend upon the availability of a competitive product.

The fact that western Canadian coal is of low sulphur content ought to be a factor in encouraging the Government to consider some subsidies in respect of the transportating of that coal from western Canada into the Central Canadian basin—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member, on Bill C-75, will have 15 minutes for his speech, plus 10 minutes for questions and comments, when the Bill next comes up in the House.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed with the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

ENERGY

ADVISABILITY OF PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION OF OCTANE ENHANCERS

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent) moved:

That, the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works be empowered to study the feasibility of recommending the production and distribution for sale to the motoring public of Canada, through its Crown agency, Petro-Canada, gasoline blended with the octane enhancers ethanol (3 per cent) and methanol (5 per cent) for the purposes of:

1. removing the additive of lead concentrates and MMT (Methylycylopentadienyl Mangenese Tricarbonyl) from currently-marketed gasolines;

2. creating an expanding market for Canada-grown corn;

3. utilizing the existing sources and known reserves of natural gas; and

4. reducing the importation of light crude oil products currently used in gasoline production.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion proposes a government initiative of far-reaching importance to Canadians and one which would result in extensive economic and environmental benefits both in the short and long terms, providing the type of stimulus that can only come from a major national staple industry.

Energy and environmental issues are of paramount importance to the world community, of which Canada is a part. These issues touch each part of our land in such a way that individual national interests are inseparable from mankind's global interests. Each day we become more and more committed to the development and discovery of energy sources to meet the needs of our nation's growing population. These needs represent an important part of the progressive lifestyle of our citizens, and the lifestyle of our citizens reflects the well-being of Canada.

At the same time, we are equally committed to a national and international program to clean up, maintain and protect our environment. The proper and controlled uses of energy sources are recognized as essential to any environmental protection efforts.

Our principal environmental pollutants, particularly those released into the atmosphere, emanate from energy sources used by industry and in transportation. And, of course, today we are dealing with the pollution problems arising from transportation.

We all know how seriously the federal and provincial Governments of Canada view the environmental clean-up program. The recent conference on acid rain held in Minett, Ontario, certainly demonstrated these concerns in a most impressive way. I think this is one of the most important issues of our time and our generation. It is we who must solve the environmental pollution problems, while there is still time.

As simple as it may sound, it is the combustion engine that is the major problem resulting in pollutants in our atmosphere. The constant release of vast quantities of nitrous oxides into the atmosphere over extensive regions of the globe has brought us to the critical juncture where we have no choice but to take drastic steps to control air pollution. Over the last several years, there has been a major effort to reduce the lead content in gasolines, both in Canada and the United States, as a major part of this clean-up thrust.

In the United States the Environmental Protection Agency has been the leader in these efforts, even to the point of promoting what are called "lead credits'; that is, federal subsidies to petroleum producers for taking the lead out of their products. It is a program that has been largely successful. Lead as an octane enhancer has been on the way out for the last three years, and with it the injurious effects on the environment and on people. We in Canada have been a little slower in the move to phase out lead in gasoline, but there is a move in that direction.

What about the so-called "lead-free" gasolines? In Canada, lead-free gas is known as MMT, a manganese compound, Mr. Speaker, which is another heavy metal. It is added to gasoline as an octane enhancer. While MMT has a high octane rating, it is highly flammable and can cause irritation to the skin and eyes. High concentrations of it can cause headaches, dizziness, and even unconsciousness.

MMT vapours are known to travel considerable distances to ignition sources and cause a flashback. The hazards of MMT to people and to the environment are therefore obvious. In the United States, MMT has been effectively prohibited since 1977 because of federal regulations which only permit a quantity of 0.0685 grams per gallon to be used in any gasoline blend. MMT is also prohibited in Europe. So, it has to go also in Canada, and as soon as possible.

The removal of lead and of MMT from gasoline as octane enhancers leads naturally to the question of their replacement. Where do we go to find a replacement source? What are the global aspects, economically, of such a possible replacement? My motion answers these questions. When Canada meets U.S. and, indeed, world standards for lead and MMT concentrations, something else must supply the needed octane enhancement. Clean-burning alcohols are ideally suited for this purpose. My motion proposes the federally-sponsored production of an ethanol-methanol blended gasoline for Canada, known as EM gasoline.

A blend of 92 per cent gasoline, 5 per cent methanol and 3 per cent ethanol creates a satisfactory octane requirement. Again, that is a blend of 92 per cent gasoline, 5 per cent methanol—sometimes known as wood alcohol—and 3 per cent ethanol—and that is the happy stuff, Mr. Speaker. The combination of the alcohols making up 8 per cent of the fuel will cost no more than the gasoline it replaces, and maybe less, and these alcohols will not damage the environment.

Both methanol and ethanol are home-grown products. Methanol is derived from methane, or natural gas, of which Canada has an abundant supply, and ethanol is a renewable fuel alcohol produced from grains, particularly grain corn, though it can also be produced from cull potatoes, from the east, or forestry by-products in the West.

Let us get right into the cost factors of this EM concept of octane enhancement. The idea of alcohol for this purpose has been around for a number of years, usually in the form of a straight 10 per cent ethanol blend with gasoline, which is known as gasohol, a product used commonly in the United States. It has gained the reputation of being unable to quite compete with petroleum-based fuels, but in Canada, we have natural gas and lots of it. With it we can produce methanol for nearly one-half the cost of gasoline. It can be produced at 16 cents to 18 cents per litre while the cost of producing gasoline is about 31 cents per litre. Methanol is the key to introducing clean-burning, affordable alcohols into our gasoline blends.

There are three modern western plants already producing methanol. One such plant is Alberta Gas Chemical Co. at Medicine Hat, Alberta. The two others are Canadian Celanese in Edmonton and Kitimat, British Columbia. These factories were built during the heyday of export markets. Presently, the domestic market is quite small. I am told by reliable sources that if these plants were put into high gear, they could produce enough methanol for all the gasoline blend requirements in Canada. No megaprojects need be considered, just efficient, job-creating, production increases with natural gas as a source.

I am sure Hon. Members are asking themselves at this point why we need ethanol if methanol can be produced far cheaper. Today's cost of producing ethanol is, I believe, about 50 cents per litre. Methanol requires a co-solvent to keep it properly mixed in gasoline, particularly in cold wheather. Ethanol is a co-solvent that will do the job. There are other co-solvents such as isobutyl alcohol and isopropanol, both derived from petrochemical feed stock. However, ethanol comes from a renewable source and it is now unmistakably clear that the price of petroleum and petrochemical products, regardless of technological advances in the field, can only go in one direction and that is up.

Since 1977, petrochemical products have shown a continuous price increase and it is the opinion of the economists, based on long-term supply and demand stituations, that the cost of petrochemical resources versus renewable resources will meet at a certain point. I have a graph which shows absolutely and inevitably that the costs will meet and even forecasts the meeting point to occur some time in 1991. Right now, though, ethanol does cost more to produce than gasoline.

The success story of gasohol in the U.S., where five billion U.S. gallons of blended gasoline consisting of 10 per cent ethanol and 90 per cent gasoline are sold annually, means that its production is supported by federal and state incentives. This tax is justified by the tremendous boost to agriculture it provides, particularly to corn producers in Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois and Ohio. If fuel ethanol is to be used or developed in Canada, it will be with a blend of ethanol and low-cost methanol, known as EM fuel. This would require no subsidy by the taxpayer. We would simply tap into our abundant supply of natural gas. The 8 per cent portion of the combined ethanol and methanol in a litre of blended gasoline would cost 2.40 cents. The gasoline it would replace would cost 2.48 cents. The alcohol mixture is cheaper than the gasoline it replaces. It should be emphasized that no changes will be needed in automobiles for them to use EM gas and that all warranties would cover the use of EM fuels.

Companies like St. Lawrence Reactors Ltd. and Commercial Alcohol Ltd. in Montreal which are presently producing ethanol are eagerly working on technology in conjunction with the Canadian Renewable Fuels Association. They are ready to construct new plants as soon as a market appears to be forming. Again, no megaprojects will be required. Plants will simply appear where renewable resources are available. Representatives of these companies are telling me that they expect to significantly reduce the cost of producing ethanol in the future. However, the cost of EM fuel to which I just referred is based on today's prices, and even these figures indicate a favourable cost structure.

What does EM fuel mean? It means a cleaner environment and an opportunity for Canada to match U.S. gasoline standards for lead and MMT. This will surely strengthen Canadian credibility in discussions on acid rain and other environmental issues. That alone should be enough to put this motion before a committee. Further, the utilization of Canadian-produced renewable fuel source will involve the use of Ontario corn plus other agricultural and forestry by-products.

I come from Ontario, and there we think of corn as being a renewable source for ethanol. The production of 350 million litres of fuel ethanol in Ontario would require about 35 million bushels of corn. That corresponds to the average offshore sales of corn in recent years. As well, wet mill processing of corn yields corn gluten meal which is 60 per cent protein and highly prized in the poultry industry as well as corn gluten feed which is 21 per cent protein and used in the cattle industry.

Consider the potential for job creation, Mr. Speaker. Unlike petroleum refining which requires relatively few employees, grain handling and processing industries are more labour intensive. Expanded ethanol production would create literally thousands of jobs.

Finally, while Canada is again a net exporter of heavy crude oil, it is a significant importer of light crudes which are used for gasoline production. An 8 per cent reduction in the total Canadian requirement would have a major effect in reducing this import demand.

I ask my colleagues on all sides of the House to support this motion. There are only minimal adjustments to be addressed and once those are addressed we can stop using lead and MMT as an octane enhancer because the alternative can be readily available. We have a tremendous opportunity to capitalize on our Canadian resources. The time to move is now.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Kent (Mr. Hardey) for bringing this motion before the House today. It is a very thought-provoking motion and one that has the potential to do a great deal not only for the consumers of this country but for the agricultural industry and the energy sector.

In looking at this question, I feel that the thought that must be uppermost in our minds is caution. There are many things we must consider when looking at the use of methanol and ethanol as octane enhancers in gasoline. This does not mean that we should not take a very serious look at the blend as an alternative fuel but we must use caution. I express concern mainly because methanol can cause problems such as vapour lock, layer separation and unusual wear on engine parts. That is not to say that these things cannot be overcome by thoughtful utilization and I believe this is going to be part of the interesting feature of studying this whole question. Although this is widely believed to happen only when methanol is used in heavy doses, the fact is that a vehicle's fuel system can be harmed and that is the main reason the automobile industry has had some hesitation in using this product widely. Also, Mr. Speaker, and more importantly, the long term effects of its use are not known at the present time. We must be very careful when we are dealing with the health of the Canadian consumer. Even if this Government does forget this fact from time to time, as we have seen very recently, the health of Canadians must be uppermost in our minds.

The automobile industry has allowed to a maximum of 5 per cent the use of methanol, which is the amount we are discussing here. Although the use of this blend could remove the additive of lead concentrates and MMT, which, of course, would be of great benefit to the environment, there remains one important question. What are the long term effects of this blending on the Canadian environment? We could—and I hope you will forgive the pun, Mr. Speaker—be adding fuel to the fire with regard to putting harmful substances into the environment. We must also face the fact that removing MMT from gasoline would be the last thing the industry wants. MMT is easy and much cheaper as an octane additive. If there is a chance that methanol can harm car parts, not to mention people, we must ask ourselves if there is not another alternative. That is not to throw water on this very important question because I, as well as the Hon. Member for Kent see this as a very important alternative.

I am glad the Hon. Member brought this subject forward and his motion to present this to the Standing Committee on Natural Resources and Public Works will give us an opportunity to look at this question. I think we have to look at the facts and the present data which is available to us through RDC, Research and Development and Consulting Ltd. which shows that the blend of 5 per cent methanol and 3 per cent ethanol and 92 per cent gasoline lies within the satisfactory operating region for Reid vapour pressure or RVP. RVP is simply the vapour pressure of a fuel at 37.8 degree Celsius. It is used to measure the fuel volatility and, of course, fuel volatility must be controlled between suitable limits to provide proper operation in an internal combustion engine.

At the lower end, some volatility must be present to allow starting in cold temperatures and, at the upper end, too much volatility can cause vapour lock. I mentioned the problem with methanol when exposed to very high temperatures.

The Canadian General Standards Board allows for three levels of RVP, a summer grade, a winter grade and an intermediate grade. Through studies on this particular gasoline blend, it was found that this blend would have the vapour pressure and volatility characteristics suitable for the area of western Ontario. The study suggeted that motorists using this fuel would not experience vapour lock problems.

What about the other areas of our country, Mr. Speaker? Winters can get very cold in some parts of this country. Another problem with this blend of gasoline is drivability during warm up. I know that anyone who has had the distinct pleasure of sitting in a cold car waiting for it to warm up would find that an annoying problem.

These may be simple questions which have no bearing on the ultimate need to change to a blend such as this, but once again these are questions which are worth studying and worth answering because they are questions, Mr. Speaker, which are going to be asked of us who will be debating this very important issue.

The fact that this blend consumes less energy per mile is very significant. It does help to reduce our need for imported light crude oil products, and after the OPEC shocks to the western world, that is a very welcome option. Canada does have huge reserves of feed stocks from which methanol can be produced and it would create an expanding market for Canadian corn producers. With the situation in the agricultural industry at the present time, I think it is very important to be able to provide a blend which would be suitable to the motorist, to the environment and would be helpful to the Canadian public, and at the same time, it would be of benefit to the agricultural industry, which is something that would be very attractive indeed.

We must also look, Mr. Speaker, at what this type of blend will do for the consumer. Bob Chislett of Sunoco, who has joined with Alberta Gas Chemical Ltd. in test-marketing the blended fuel says that the consumer benefit. I believe that is very significant. Mr. Chislett says that the higher octane rating can help stop engine knock and in winter can reduce gasline freeze-up. It also burns more cleanly, which of course reduces the emissions going into our atmosphere.

However, the consumer does not get any break with lower prices. The reason for this is not because of the blend so much as it depends upon the price at which it is offered to the Canadian public. If recent history repeats itself, there is a very great reluctance to reduce fuel oil prices. Of course, there is also the high cost of the co-solvent which must be present in this blend and which at present comes from the United States.

The Ontario Government is waiving the tax on the methanol portion of the fuel, but the consumer will not feel it because of the increased cost in producing the blend. So there are many advantages to this blend of gasoline, advantages which we must consider, especially in view of the fact that lead additives are being phased down in our gasoline products from .77 grams per litre to .29 grams per litre by 1988. Therefore, we have no choice. We must find other octane enhancers, but in looking at those alternate fuels, we must also look at the history of the product. In 1976, the Canadian Society of Chemical Engineers and the Canadian Society of Mechanical Engineers concluded at a symposium that methanol may have better use as a replacement for liquefied petroleum gas in gas turbines. There would be fewer problems and application could be in areas such as electrical generation in rural communities for grain drying. We must look at their reservations, even though it was back in 1976. They were still reservations held by a very important and learned body.

We must be sure before we approve anything that our children will not regret our choice in future years. I must stress here, Mr. Speaker, that we must have an open mind in looking at this question, not because we do not see the benefits of what is before us today but because of the importance of the decision and because of the great utility of the product on which we would be passing judgment and which we would be analysing. If the effects were detrimental in any small fashion whatsoever, it could have serious consequences in the years ahead.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the Standing Committee on Natural Resources and Public Works should have the opportunity to study the question more carefully, to invite members of the industry who are involved in the production of this blend and to hear from members of the auto industry who have some reservations about the blend, and of course, to hear experts on the environment.

We must realize that this blend of gasoline is widely used in other parts of the world, in West Germany, Brazil and in the United States. It is imperative that we look at what it means for Canada, and especially for the future health of Canadians.

I request, Mr. Speaker, as does the Hon. Member who presented this motion, that the question be referred to the Standing Committee in order that we can fully understand the implications and consequences of our decisions. We will then be in a better position to pass judgment and make a more informed decision about the use and possibilities of this very important fuel for our country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) from a standing position.

• (1730)

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the doctors have put a cast on me and I am able to hop around and stand and face you and bow, Sir.

It is a pleasure to enter the debate on this private Members' resolution. I think it is a good one and the suggestion that it should go to committee makes a heck of a lot of sense. All of us recognize that alternate energy sources are important. We are living in a fool's paradise if we believe the energy crisis is over. All we have is some time in which we can get our house in order, so to speak. We do not have an energy or oil crisis now because of general economic conditions and because more oil and gas fields have been developed in the last number of years. However, we all know that oil and gas are not renewable resources. They are finite resources. Eventually mankind will have to face the fact that we have run out of these precious resources. To do nothing would be criminal. It would be socially irresponsible for any Government to claim that there is no longer an energy crisis and therefore we do not have to do any further research into alternate forms of energy. Regardless of what political Party is in power, any Government which took that attitude would be socially irresponsible. As I mentioned before, common sense tells you that at some stage down the line we will again be facing shortages of oil. The resolution in front of us makes sense from that point of view.

It also makes sense from the environmental point of view. A few years ago, I believe in 1983, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency reported on the greenhouse effect. That report stated that this greenhouse effect will be felt and seen within a 15 to 20 year period. Airborne carbon particles will cover the globe and trap the earth's heat within the atmosphere causing major climatic and environmental changes which will have tremendous effect on the world as we know it today. At that time I asked the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources if he considered this report to be a serious one and would he give the same type of grants and incentives to developing alternate energy sources as he was providing to the oil companies. He pooh-poohed the idea. He suggested there was no linkage between the greenhouse effect and the grants and subsidies we were giving to the oil industry, particularly for drilling for oil in the Beaufort and along the Atlantic coast. Well, a good case can be made that all forms of energy research receive the same type of grants, incentives and tax breaks. I really wonder whether Government can determine what type of technology is developed through its taxation and grant programs. It seems as well that there was a degree of social irresponsibility when on the one hand we have some of the best scientists in the world warning us about the greenhouse effect, and on the other hand another arm of Government is promoting the very thing which will cause the greenhouse effect.

I found it unfortunate that at the beginning of this Government's mandate it chose to counsel some of the important work that the National Research Council was doing into alternate energy. At that time, in front of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) stated that: "In many cases, after some 10 years of funding, it has become evident that, particularly in the areas of solar and wind energy, the return on that investment was not evident". I have expressed before in this House the sentiment that new forms of energy do take a long time to develop and make economically viable. As such, I have to disagree with the Minister when he says that 10 years is enough. I have pointed out previously that nuclear energy took 30 years of research and development before it became economically viable. Even now, there is a good question whether it is still economically viable.

I really do not have much more to add to the debate, Mr. Speaker. I think the mover and the spokesperson from the Liberal Party have covered many of the points I was going to raise. I will not repeat what they have said other than to indicate that we in the NDP support the resolution. We hope that the standing committee will seriously consider this motion. We welcome as well the establishment of a committee, which I understood was announced last week, to deal with hydrogen. Hydrogen is my choice for the ideal fuel. It is the cleanest fuel. Its only by-product is water vapour. Considering the warnings we have received about the greenhouse effect, I believe the fuel of the future is hydrogen. That was the conclusion of a special committee of Members of this House a few years ago. Their chief recommendation was that we begin to change Canada to a country which is based and dependent upon hydrogen. I would like to see hydrogen added to this list but it is my understanding that a committee has been struck to investigate the potential of hydrogen and the state of art of that technology. Therefore, I will accept the resolution as is, although I understand that the Government speaker after me will introduce a minor amendment which we will support as well.

In conclusion, we support this private Members' resolution and congratulate him because he will be one of the few lucky ones to see this resolution actually pass this House and not be talked out.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to congratulate my good friend, the Hon. Member for Kent (Mr. Hardey) for introducing this very thoughtful motion. It is something that I know the committee concerned with natural resources is anxious to get its teeth into for an in depth study. If I might, I want to for a few moments talk about this well intentioned motion and introduce one concern that I have which will cause me to, with your permission, introduce an amendment at the end of my remarks.

The one area that I am concerned about in the motion is that the federal Government should direct Petro-Canada. We all know that the federal Government has no authority to direct Petro-Canada to take the lead in the production and distribution of gasoline blended with octane enhancers. Petro-Canada is an autonomous company in pursuit of commercial goals, and such a federal directive could be interpreted as interventionist. Nevertheless, it is interesting to note that, without any federal prompting, Petro-Canada has been conducting studies on the use of methanol and ethanol extenders. I will be introducing an amendment a little later to that effect.

Octane Enhancers

I would like to deal with this motion as three distinct issues; the first relating to the removal of lead and MMT, the second focusing on addition of alcohols, and the third on the role of Petro-Canada. I would first like to discuss the removal of lead and MMT.

Approximately 50 per cent of Canada's vehicles use leaded gasoline while the rest use unleaded gasoline which is required for vehicles fitted with catalytic converters to reduce exhaust emissions. There has been considerable concern over lead emissions from vehicles that use leaded gasoline. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is responsible for regulating lead under the Clean Air Act. As of January 1, 1987 allowable lead levels will be reduced to .29 grams per litre from .72 grams per litre. No further reductions have been announced and I believe that any additional decrease in allowable levels will be based on a full assessment of related economic and health factors.

Such an assessment will take into account the findings of the Commission on Lead in the Environment headed by the Royal Society of Canada which is soliciting views and information from all interested parties in Canada. This commission will present a preliminary report to the Minister of the Environment later this fall with a final report scheduled for release in the fall of 1986.

In the interim, the Canadian Government is carefully monitoring developments in the United States relating to the lead issue. In that country allowable lead levels will decrease in 1986 to .03 grams per litre. In addition to these reductions, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has also proposed that, in due course, lead be banned completely. This proposal is rooted in the suspected health hazard of lead emissions as well as in the misfueling issue whereby cheaper leaded fuel is used in cars designed for unleaded gasoline resulting in damage to emission control devices.

MMT in the quantities currently used in Canada is not a health hazard. It is banned in the United States because American officials suspect that MMT contributes to increased exhaust emissions. The Minister of the Environment is currently examining the use of MMT in Canada. In a decision to change current use of MMT in this country—the only reason I am saying MMT is that I cannot pronounce the big words that it represents. I could spell them but I will not. They are very long and even for an old radio announcer they are tough to pronounce.

The use of MMT in this country would be based on a full assessment of economic factors and emission requirements. One factor in this assessment will be the adoption in 1988 of emission standards for light duty vehicles that match those in the United States. These more stringent emission standards may be difficult to meet if continued use of MMT is permitted. That would be in the future.

I would like to move along to the area of additions of alcohols to fuels. Lead and MMT are linked to ethanol and methanol because all four increase the octane or "anti-knock" ratings of gasoline. Octane is an important property of gasoline and refiners must absorb costs to ensure their gasolines met octane requirements, obviously in as cost-effective a way as possible. Lead has been the cheapest, and therefore the preferred way to raise octane. As lead use decreases due to the reduction in permissible levels and to the increasing use of unleaded gasoline, refiners must adopt other means of raising octane. Options range from switching additives such as MMT and alcohols to modifying refinery processes.

However, new processes may require large capital expenditures and may increase oil consumption. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources holds the view that the alcohol-ethers option could be the attractive one for Canada for the reasons cited by the Hon. Member for Kent in his motion. Alcohols and ethers are made from domestic resources like natural gas and biomass that are abundant and could reduce light oil imports. Preliminary studies show economic benefits could stem from their production and use.

The Hon. Member refers specifically to corn which would be used to make ethanol and natural gas which would be used to make methanol. At this time I would like to report to the House that the Ontario Corn Producers' Association which is headquartered in Guelph has made representation to me as have a number of other associations interested in this production. The Ontario Corn Producers' Association has 25,000 members and it has written a letter to thank members of the Government for their support which permitted advance payments for crops. The Ontario Corn Producers' very kindly lauded the Government for its action and said how important this is for them. They wrote us all a thank you letter. In this business we do not get too many thank you letters, so I just wanted to put on record today that the Ontario Corn Producers' Association recognized the good work of the Government in its Department of Agriculture through some of the advance payments that were made permitting them to receive some cash while the harvest is being brought in in October and November. I got a little off the subject, but I did want to publicly thank the Ontario Corn Producers' for recognizing our good work.

While the Government is very interested in promoting increased use of domestic resources, it believes that market forces should determine which is most economic. It may be inappropriate to favour one resource over another. In particular, different feedstocks such as other cereals, wood, and liquefied petroleum gases could pay a role in the production of alcohols for gasoline blending.

There is some extensive testing on alcohol-gasoline blends going on. I could discuss these but I think the committee will go into great detail in examining this entire matter. It has a very wide scope and a number of excellent witnesses can be called before the committee to consider all aspects of this proposal from auto manufacturers to the Ontario Corn Producers' Association and Celanese Canada Inc. I know that our friends at St. Lawrence Starch are interested in making a presentation to the committee. There are a number of groups that will be called before the committee to give evidence. We are very pleased about that.

I would like to briefly discuss the role of Petro-Canada in connection with Motion No. 218. Petro-Canada has done a considerable amount of work in evaluating the potential of octane enhancers, especially methanol. It has conducted several joint studies on methanol with Celanese Canada Inc., the most recent of which was managed by the Ontario Research Foundation and involved 60 vehicles being driven in typical owner-operator situations. The results of these initial studies indicate to Petro-Canada that there are still some unresolved concerns over the use of alcohol blends in Canada. It is also not clear that the sale of these blends would be financially advantageous to the company. Again, those who have been involved in this research would make excellent witnesses before the committee. I am sure that the chairperson will be happy to call these witnesses in order that we may have the benefit of their advice. I might also point out that through the recent Gulf acquisition, the research facility at Sheridan Park in Mississauga has now been obtained. Of course, we have been assured that broadened fuel research can take place there.

● (1750)

The Government believes that Petro-Canada should compete in the market-place on the same basis as all other oil companies. This means that Petro-Canada will receive no special support from Government. It also means that the managers of Petro-Canada must be free to make management decisions based on their best assessment of market demands. If these fuels prove to be commercially and socially attractive, we believe that Petro-Canada will want to take a lead role in marketing them.

However, the present wording of the motion limits the feasibility of producing and distributing for sale these additives through its Crown agency, Petro-Canada. If this is found to be beneficial for Canada, I believe that all companies dealing in these products should be included in this. Therefore, I move:

That the motion be amended by deleting the words "through its Crown agency, Petro-Canada".

The remaining words in the motion should remain.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. McDermid) agreed to.

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in support of the motion. Let me begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for Kent (Mr. Hardey) for presenting a very timely motion to the House.

In the time remaining, I would like to concentrate on a certain portion of this proposal. Needless to say, we all recognize the importance of a proposal which has the possibility of producing a new petroleum product which would mean less acid rain emission. We also recognize the importance of providing an alternative fuel source, bearing in mind that petroleum resources are naturally limited.

What is of particular interest to me is the possibility that this study and the use of this particular fuel supply can provide an alternative market for agricultural products. I want to talk particularly about an experiment which is currently under way in the Province of Manitoba and on the Prairies. It involves a company by the name of Mohawk which, since 1982, has been selling a product called gasohol in the Province of Manitoba. Since 1984 it has been providing a product in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan by the name of EM Gasohol.

It is of particular interest to us in the Province of Manitoba that Mohawk is producing the ethanol which is the key product of gasohol in the neighbouring constituency of Portage-Marquette in the community of Minnedosa. It is of particular interest this year that Mohawk at this plant is able to take advantage of and make use of agricultural products which have been severely damaged by bad harvest conditions. For example, in the fall of 1982 there was a severe frost which affected the corn crop. Mohawk was able to make use of that corn, even though it was damaged. It found an important economic use, regardless of its quality.

Since then, in the same plant in Minnedosa, the company has been experimenting with the use of sprouted barley, sprouted rye crop and considering the possibility of making use of feed wheats which, unfortunately, will be far too available this fall.

I also understand that there is a possibility that the company can make use of waste cheese whey. Should this experiment prove to be successful, we might have the ability in western Canada, if not all of Canada, to develop a domestic market. All of us who are concerned about the future of agriculture in Canada are very conscious of the fact that we have been too dependent on export markets for our agricultural products. Anything that we can do to increase domestic markets, particularly alternate domestic markets, is very clearly to our advantage.

You come from the great Province of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, and many Members come from western Canada. They are intrigued by the possibility of making use of scrub poplar as well as scrub spruce as a source of alternative supply.

Therefore, the economic advantages are extremely interesting. For those who may not have had an opportunity to make use of this particular product, as a casual customer I believe the market acceptability of gasahol is improving with the passage of time. However, I must confess that the automobile which I drive back and forth to the airport in Winnipeg is of such vintage that I cannot tell whether or not it is performing better when I use gasahol. However, others tell me that it is so.

Furthermore, the fact that this product has a built-in antifreeze is certainly of some advantage to those of us in western Canada during the winter. Although the time allotted for this subject is not as much as it should be. I look forward to this subject being referred to committee. However, I think you will find, Mr. Speaker, that there is an inclination in the House that prior to calling it 6 o'clock the motion as amended will be accepted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the motion, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been made.

INCOME TAX—INTRODUCTION OF MINIMUM TAX

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, during the last election campaign many concerns were pointed out to me. However, one of the major concerns was the question of fairness of our income tax system. While many people were concerned about the complexity of the income tax system, the key concern relating to income tax was one of fairness and whether or not everyone paid some income tax. The real issue revolves around the concern that some high-income earners are not paying any income tax at all.

• (1800)

The Department of National Revenue, in its statistics, pointed out that some 5,500 people earning $50,000 or more per year paid no income tax whatsoever. In addition, it pointed out that even more than 5,500 people earning $50,000 per year paid 10 per cent or less of their income in income tax.

There are those people who feel there is nothing wrong, that there are good and legitimate reasons for high-income earners not paying income tax. They point out, for example, those people who make charitable donations which go toward good purposes. There are other reasons for people not paying income tax, the dividend tax credit being one. That provision is in the Income Tax Act to encourage Canadians to invest in taxable Canadian corporations. The provision respecting contributions to RRSPs is included in the Income Tax Act to encourage people to contribue to their own retirement, not to rely solely on the state to provide their pensions. Business and farm losses are deductible from income and result in no income tax being paid. Of course there is a very valid social reason, the fact that many people have to pay support payments to former spouses, separated spouses or children living separate and apart from them.

Notwithstanding these legitimate reasons, most people are concerned about the fact that some people do not pay income tax while the vast majority, probably earning less money, have to pay a very substantial proportion of their income in taxes to the Government. They feel that this is unfair and that perhaps they should be looking for ways of getting around having to pay any taxes. Of course there is potential for income tax cheating and for the creation of an underground economy where people deal in cash or deal in trading kind for kind so that there will be no income to report or taxes to pay.

As a result of the concern about high-income earners paying very little or no income tax, there was the great debate of the last election campaign when the Leaders of all three political Parties expressed their concerns about it. Most Canadians were pleased when the then Leader of the Official Opposition, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), indicated that he was in favour of bringing in a minimum income tax. In fact, he said that it should be a very handsome tax to be paid by large-income earners who were paying very little or no income tax.

There was a good deal of disappointment when, on May 23, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) did not introduce a minimum income tax. Of course, while he did introduce one to take effect immediately, he indicating that there would be a minimum income tax to take effect on January 1, 1986. At the same time the Minister released a discussion paper outlining certain alternatives for such a tax. There were three alternatives outlined in that discussion paper.

• (1805)

The first, as you will remember, Mr. Speaker, was the alternative minimum tax, which would involve two calculations of one's income tax, with the larger amount representing the taxes payable.

The second alternative was the add-on minimum tax, which would see an amount added where the taxes payable fall short of a certain level. In those instances where no taxes are payable, a minimum tax would be applied.

The third alternative would see a limit placed on the tax deductions available. Under that option, the full lump sum of deductions would not be available to taxpayers. Rather, only a portion of the tax deductions that we now have would be allowed.

In one of these ways there would be a minimum tax paid, but its form was a matter left open for discussion and decision.

Since that time the Minister of Finance has consulted with the provinces, and apparently all of the provinces are agreed that there should be a minimum tax. The question remaining has to do with its form and the income level at which it will commence. Will it be the $30,000 level as it the case under the American system, or the $50,000 level that the NDP has suggested?

I am hoping that tonight we will hear from the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Dick) the details of this minimum tax and exactly when it will be announced. But realistically, Mr. Speaker—and I see him shaking his head in the negative—I know that that is not going to happen; that probably we will just hear, "In due course, it will be announced".

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on this issue. In my view, the minimum tax represents a very important development in improving the basic fairness of the tax system. The discussion paper on the minimum tax, tabled in the last Budget, presented three possible options for a minimum tax; an alternative minimum tax (AMT), an add-on minimum tax, and a limit on tax preferences (LTP).

Under the AMT option, a separate and alternative tax structure to the regular income tax would be established. The AMT would have its own tax rate which would be applied on an expanded income base.

The second option, the add-on minimum tax, would effectively serve as an additional levy on the use of a specified list of preference items above a certain exemption level.

Finally, the LTP option would place a limit on the use of specified tax preferences within the operation of the existing income tax system. For example, preference deductions and exemptions could be disallowed to the extent that they exceed a certain percentage of total income, with no disallowance if they are less than a specified dollar amount. A similar limit would be placed on the use of preference credits.

The Hon. Member's question concerns the exemption that will be provided under a minimum tax. In this regard, it is important to recognize that under each of the three possible options, the exemption operates in a distinctly different way. For example, under the AMT option the exemption level relates directly to the income of the individual. On the other hand, under the add-on approach or the LTP option, the exemption level applies to the amount of preference deductions and credits claimed by the individual. As a result, the exemption levels under the add-on and LTP options would not need to be similar to those under the alternative minimum tax option to provide the same relief to lower income individuals.

I should also note that for the LTP option two separate exemptions would be required, one for deductions and exemptions, and the other for tax credits.

One can see from these examples that the appropriate exemption levels will vary depending on the form of minimum tax structure that is chosen. I should add that the exemption level will also depend on the preference items that are included in the base for the minimum tax.

For example, if personal exemptions are allowed as a deduction from an AMT tax base, the general exemption level would not have to be as high as it would be if personal exemptions were excluded in the minimum tax calculation. Similarly, under an add-on tax or an LTP, the broader the list of tax preferences included under the minimum tax, the higher the exemption level should be.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has received a number of submissions on the minimum tax from interested parties. Recently the Minister met with his counterparts from the provinces and discussed the minimum tax options with them. These consultations have been very helpful in the analysis of the possible options.

At this time, the form of minimum tax, as well as the level of exemption and the breadth of the base of the tax, are still under consideration. However, I am sure that an announcement covering the Hon. Member's question will be made in the future, and certainly in time to introduce a minimum tax on January 1, 1986, as promised.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Dick) that his time has expired.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE—PLANNED REDUCTIONS IN INSPECTION PERSONNEL

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, September 24, I asked the Minister of National Revenue about the proposed cut in Customs and Excise jobs which are planned over the next five years in connection with the planned centralization of the examination of international parcel mail.

• (1810)

Many of the residents of my riding of Don Valley East are very concerned about the problems of drugs and pornography. While I strongly applaud the Minister's initiative to do his share in reducing the size and cost of Government in this country, I would like his assurance that the rigid control that we require in order to reduce the illegal importation of drugs and pornography will be improved through this process and not in any way weakened.

I do want to share a few thoughts about my reasons for applauding the Minister for his share in helping reduce the size of Government. I believe the proposed cuts amount to about 8 per cent of the total. Individual Ministers can, as this Minister has, show leadership and do their share in reducing the size of Government. Canadians right across the nation are very concerned not only about the size of the federal Government but about the sizes of the various provincial and municipal Governments. Individual Members like myself can help with committee work and by offering ideas and suggestions to the various Ministries.

Deficits are a relatively recent phenomenon in this country. In the last 10 or 15 years, every year in succession has shown an ever-increasing deficit to the point where our cumulative debt is now well over $200 billion. I regret to project this, but by 1988, just three years from now, the total debt will likely be around the $300 billion mark.

I applaud the Minister for his action but I do want to talk about the risks that might be inherent in the steps that he is taking. Just before I do that, may I just highlight again the size of the bureaucracy in Ottawa? A recent article in a local newspaper highlighted a number of such instances. Let me cite two or three of them.

The Canadian International Development Agency in 1970 had one president and three vice-presidents. In 1985, 15 years later, the same agency has one president, one senior vice-president and 10 vice-presidents. Agriculture Canada, in 1970, had one Deputy Minister and three Assistant Deputy Ministers. Today, in 1985, it has one Deputy Minister, one Associate Deputy Minister, one senior ADM and six ADMs. Even the Government's watchdog agency, the office of the Auditor General, has seen costs mushroom and grow. In 1970, that agency had one Auditor General and one assistant. Today, it has one Auditor General, three Deputy Auditor Generals and 12 assistant Auditor Generals.

I have had over 30 years of experience in a financial institution and my experience is that when one wants to cut costs, it must be done together with cutting back on the number of jobs in one's own agency. Again, I applaud the Minister for what he is doing, as the people of Canada are looking for this type of leadership.

My main area of concern is the harmful and insidious impact of drugs and violent pornography on this country and how they are eroding the values of our social and family lives, the cornerstone of our great country. I can speak with first-hand knowledge of the terrible use of drugs which goes on at several local high schools and shopping plazas in Don Valley East. The local police are almost perplexed about what to do with the drug problem that exists.

During the election campaign of 1984, I attended at a housing development during the supper hour. At 11.30 that night a man telephoned me from that housing development. He was worried and asked if we could not do something to help reduce the drug trafficking problem in that local housing development. He told us that while he was talking to a few youths drug trading was going on just a few feet from him. I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, that in no way should the action of the Minister create any increased risk of extra drugs in this country.

Just to comment on the terrible problem of violent pornography in this country, it has spread now to the video tape machines in this country. I attended with my wife a symposium on private violence several months ago in Toronto. We were disgusted with the type of hard-core violent pornography which exists in this country today, and through the leadership of agencies such as the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay), the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Beatty) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) I am very hopeful that this terrible problem can be reduced in this country.

Let me just close by saying that while I applaud the Minister very strongly for his initiative in doing his part to reduce the cost of Government in this country, I just ask for his assurance that it in no way will increase the problem of violent pornography in this country and the use of drugs.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, the Government's restraint program, as initially described in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in November 1984, and reaffirmed in the budget of May 1985, requires that the Public Service be reduced by 15,000 person-years over the next five years. In support of this over-all Government initiative, Federal Departments were asked by Treasury Board to develop plans whereby their person-year base would be substantially reduced over the next five years.

In compliance with this request, The Department of Customs and Excise developed a departmental plan which will lead to a reduction in person-years from a 1985 figure of 10,148 to 9,292 by 1990, a total decrease of 856 person-years. These reductions will be implemented in accordance with specific targets which have been established for each year of the five year period. This plan will be submitted to Treasury Board for approval this month.

In approaching this task, the department selected measures that would allow it to streamline its operations, improve productivity and, where possible, transfer operations to the private sector. None of these reductions will effect the department's capability to carry out its mandate, including the interception of pornography and illegal drugs coming into Canada.

The postal improvement project was established to achieve significant resource reductions in customs' postal operations. A pilot test will be conducted in the Montreal region beginning in October. National implementation is scheduled for April 1986 if the evaluation of the project demonstrates that the new postal system is successful.

The purpose of centralizing the examination of international mail would be to improve service to the public while substantially reducing cost by streamlining customs mail processing operations. Customs' ability to screen the mail entering Canada will not be affected by this centralization. Customs inspectors will continue to examine the mail, assess duty and taxes owing and prohibit the entrance of such goods as drugs, pornography and firearms. Customs processing of international mail will be concentrated in 12 centres, thus alleviating Canada Post's routine concerns, because over 99 per cent of international mail entering Canada will pass through these 12 centres. Furthermore, the concentration will enable Customs and Canada Post to eliminate a considerable amount of double handling of dutiable mail. Recipients of dutiable mail will no longer have to visit Customs offices to collect their goods.

• (1820)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary's time has expired.

FISHERIES—REFINANCING OF FISHERY PRODUCTS INTERNATIONAL. (B) COMPANY'S SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, a couple of days ago I asked the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), presently the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, with responsibilities as well for several other Government Departments, a question relating to the restructuring of Fisheries Products International. I asked him what guarantees would be given to the communities where the Government claimed plants would be disposed of over a three-year period in Newfoundland. He stood in his place and said that I was twisting the facts and raising undue alarm in these communities.

In my supplementary I pointed out that even the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) had made exactly the same statement that same afternoon. We all wanted to know the answer. He then passed it to the Minister responsible for small business who stood up and gave what I call the typical non-answer we get from the Government these days. He said absolutely nothing. That is why I wanted to deal with this question this evening. I note that the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif) has been designated to answer the question, she being the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I am sure I will hear a lot more common sense from that Hon. Member than I would from the Deputy Prime Minister, as I am sure you will agree, Mr. Speaker.

The Government has said, and there is no sense in denying it, that 15 fish plants in Newfoundland will be disposed of over a three-year period. That is serious because it involves 15 communities. For the record, let me give the House the names of those communities and the number of jobs involved. We have the Port aux Basques fish plant with 414 employees; we have the Rose Blanche fish plant with 170 employees; and the St. Lawrence fish plant with 102 employees. These plants are to be closed down and disposed of. We have the Charleston plant with 649 employees; the Fermeuse with 218 employees; the Twillingate plant in my riding with 404 employees; the Englee plant with 270 employees; and the Cow Head plant with 39 employees. Then we get down to the plants which are leased to Fisheries Products International. We have the plant at Flower's Cove with 110 employees, the Anchor Pointnplant with 113 employees, the Great Harbour Deep plant with 39 employees, the Bridgeport plant with 49 employees, the Black Tickle plant with 68 employees, the Williams Harbour plant with 39 employees, and the Bide Arm plant with 79 employees. Why did the Minister not release this list when he announced the disposition of these plants? This adds up to 2,775 employees, and that is, at the low point in the fishing season, and not counting part-time staff. We are talking here about a total of 5,000 jobs in Newfoundland.

This is a very important matter which has really not sunk home for the people in Newfoundland, but I am sure it will very soon because there is no other employment in these communities. The Government has already said these are unprofitable plants. Just imagine, putting fish plants on sale and saying they are unprofitable. The Government says the equipment is not up to date and the plants cannot operate economically, yet it expects someone to come along and buy them. This is an absolute violation of an agreement made when Fisheries Products International was created. The Newfoundland Government and this federal Government said no fish plants would close. Now we have this incredible figure of 2,775 employees who are going to lose their jobs over the next three years.

You can see, Mr. Speaker, why I have raised this question here. In fact, if there were not so many important things going on in this Chamber and so many embarrassements for this Government which we have to delve into, I would be up on my feet every single day in this Chamber about this matter. In my riding alone some 550 employees are going to lose their jobs due to this restructuring. I am sure that the Parliamentary Secretary will at least shed some light on this agreement that has been made and will at least give us some hope for the future, certainly more than the Deputy Prime Minister would give.

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am always pleased to answer my colleague, the Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), and I am not embarrassed at all by his question.

I would like to remind him that the two Government shareholders of Fishery Products International Ltd. have jointly approved the business plan of FPI and have agreed to share an additional equity investment of $105 million. The plan anticipates earning a return on the investment, paying dividends to shareholders, profit-sharing with employees, returning plants to the private sector and creating a modern viable fish harvesting-processing-marketing operation. The new investment will permit FPI's management to achieve its goal of commercial viability and privatization. It completes the restructuring process begun in 1983.

Following the initial investments by the shareholders as part of the restructuring process, the company was plagued with a number of unforeseen events including a delay in appointment of a new senior management team and an eight-month strike by trawlermen. The impact of these problems on operating profits was aggravated by very poor cod product prices until recently and by the disappointing in-shore fishery in 1984 and 1985. With these extraordinary problems now in the past and the new equity investment the company's management team now in place can deal more effectively with economic downturns. They have set forth a program to exploit market opportunities and to respond promptly to changing circumstances.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in its commercial plan the company has provided for the disposal of fifteen plants within the next two years, to achieve its goals of profitability and privatization. However, FPI intends to operate all these plants during the two-year period, and no decision has been made to close any of the plants the company intends to sell.

The plants that are now sold will be assessed in FPI's 1988 commercial plan in terms of their overall production at that time. The purpose of privatization is to restructure FPI and not to diminish the status of these plants. FPI does not intend to reduce its efforts regarding their operations. In addition, capital expenditures will be made, if necessary to keep the plants open. Prospective buyers will have to provide a firm operating plan to ensure that the plants have a realistic future in the industry.

In its petition on countervailing duties submitted to the U.S. Department of Commerce, the task force on North Atlantic fisheries indicated that the Government's investment in the Atlantic fisheries constituted a subsidy. There is some apprehension that this investment would give further weight to this argument.

[English]

We do not feel that this is the case, Mr. Speaker. In the past the United States has regarded Government equity investment as a subsidy in cases where there was no expectation of a commercial rate of return on the investment. The original 1983 investment was made on the basis of adequate returns forecast. As noted, there has as yet been no return due largely to unusual circumstances which could not be foreseen in 1983. A reasonable rate of return is expected on the investment being made now and on all the funds invested.

FPI's management and board of directors are aware that no further investment will be made and that they must manage the company with the resources in hand. There is no question of continuing equity infusions which could be considered a subsidy.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we now have to admit that the Government did not live up to its formal commitment to promote a full employment policy.

In his Budget statement the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had publicly expressed full confidence in the private sector. The election of a new Conservative Government was expected to create such a climate of confidence among businessmen that the unemployment problem was going to disappear altogether.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the reality is something else again. The Conservative Government shirked its responsibilities, deeming it preferable to rely on companies to create jobs. The only thing we can see today is that plants are closing down one after another: Bombardier, Vickers, CSF Smelting, CSW Foundry, Gulf, Dominion Bridge and Dominion Textile are all black marks and proof positive that the Conservatives have reneged on their promises.

This morning, textile and clothing industry workers met with our Quebec Liberal caucus and told us that the pending shutdown of Dominion Textile plants at Saint-Jean and Valleyfield is a hard blow to them. We deplore such inaction on the part of the Government, for it will swell the ranks of the unemployed in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the Hon. Member that his allotted time has expired. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

[English]

PENSIONS

EFFECT OF BUDGET'S PROVISIONS ON REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the more closely one examines the Budget of last May the clearer it becomes that the Budget's provisions help the wealthy and large corporations at the expense of low income Canadians, the elderly, the young, and the disabled. While allowing high income earners to reduce taxes through greatly increased Registered Retirement Savings Plan contributions, the Government will take money out of the pockets of Canadians trying to survive on pensions, even from those receiving disability pensions.

The Budget proposes to restrict the rollovers of pension incomes into RRSPs. This means that those forced into early retirement or those on disability pensions will not have the option of sheltering a small part of their minimal income for the future. These people are not wealthy individuals. Putting money aside for the future means a loss in their present standard of living. The Government wants to tax them on those savings but it offers a bonanza to those earning far above the Canadian average.

The Government had the good political sense to withdraw its unfair attack on senior citizens' well-deserved pensions, but it is obvious that the same Budget treats the rich very well. Mr. Speaker, it is time that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) withdrew that Budget and brought in one that treats ordinary Canadians in the same manner that the rich are now being treated.

THE LATE SHANE VAUDRIN

LESSONS FROM THREE-YEAR-OLD'S LIFE AND DEATH

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, last Friday at Pittsburg Children's Hospital a tough little three-year-old boy passed away. Shane Vaudrin of Nanaimo died just a day after undergoing his third liver transplant. The new organ failed and infection had set in. On September 5 Shane had received his first liver transplant. On October 1 he underwent a second transplant operation. Despite the best efforts of his doctors, the third organ was rejected as well. Throughout his ordeal his parents, Claude and Cleo Vaudrin, were at his side, often going without sleep for three days at a time.

I rise today not just to say goodbye to Nanaimo's little hero. I want to acknowledge the people of central Vancouver Island, and indeed across Canada, who contributed to Shane's fund which made the care he received possible.

In particular, the House should note the special efforts of Marlene Siegrist of Nanaimo who fell in love with Shane's newspaper photo and became the co-ordinator of the Show You Care Society. She and her fellow citizens organized special events to raise tens of thousands of dollars so that Shane could travel to the Children's Hospital in Pittsburgh.

Perhaps the finest tribute to Shane Vaudrin came from the Hospital staff who said: "The Vaudrins are very fine people and Shane is a dear little boy. He's very easy to love, and that has made things very hard for all of us here when we know he isn't doing well". Mr. Speaker, he did do well. He showed us more spirit than any three-year-old could show. His brief life touched us all.

WAR MEASURES ACT

FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY OF INVOCATION

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, this is an important anniversary in Canadian history. Exactly 15 years ago today at four o'clock in the morning the Government of Canada imposed the War Measures Act. Under its Draconian provisions hundreds of Canadians were deprived of their basic civil liberties and detained without charge. This was an unprecedented move in peacetime. There can be no more serious threat to democratic institutions than to deprive citizens unnecessarily of their basic rights. If there were compelling reasons for the Government's actions, we have not heard them.

At the time the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) stated, as was reported in Hansard: "It is my hope that some day the full details of the intelligence upon which the Government acted can be made public, because until that day comes the people of Canada will not be able fully to appraise the course of action which has been taken by the Government". I hope that "some day" is today. I call upon the Leader of the Opposition to make public the information upon which he acted. Canadians have been waiting 15 years for answers. Mr. Speaker, I believe 15 years is long enough.

ENERGY

DEREGULATION—EFFECT ON CONSUMER PRICES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) very proudly states that she has made all those oil men in Calgary rich again, but she has done precious little for the consumer. Remember last spring when she predicted that by decontrolling the oil industry a climate would be set for lower prices for consumers? Prices are falling in all areas of the world except in Canada, and the Canadian consumer can look forward to even more price increases. Not only has the Government added two cents a litre to the price of gas since the Budget, but when we greet the New Year we can expect to pay two more cents on a litre.

The Government has gone out of its way to make sure consumers do not settle for just tax increases. No way! Since Petro-Canada has purchased Gulf it will effectively mean the end of price wars in Canada. That is because Petro-Canada will be closing dozens of Gulf stations in order to boost its profits, because that is what the Government has told it to do. You could say they are putting their energy into squeezing the last cent out of the consumers' pockets.

It gets worse. The ever-generous multinational oil companies, in a move to express their gratitude to the Canadian people, are trying to introduce rack pricing. This means absolutely no chance of a price war because the retailer will not be able to afford any price cutting, so the consumer is put on the rack to see if any spare change falls out. Yes, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources can say that those rich oil men owe her a debt of thanks. The consumers—well, they are just not as grateful.

WAR MEASURES ACT

FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY OF INVOCATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, fifteen years ago on October 16, 1970, the Liberal Government, supported by the Conservatives, invoked exceptional powers under the War Measures Act. New Democratic Party Members objected to a reaction that was grossly exaggerated, considering the danger that actually existed. Hundreds of men and women in Quebec were arrested during the night and unjustly detained, like many Canadian citizens of Japanese origin during the Second World War were at the time, under the same Act. The Liberals have never revealed what the basis was for their decision.

On April 4, 1984, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) asked the following question:

> I wonder if the Minister of Justice would tell us whether it is his intention to continue to keep secret the information which Mr. Turner kept secret 14 years ago.

The Conservatives are now in power, but they too are keeping secret the information they asked for so often. And they also promised us several times they would amend the War Measures Act to make it less of a threat to Canadian citizens. Nevertheless, the legislation remains identical to what it was in 1970.

Furthermore, although Members of the present Government have often taken a stand against the Emergency Planning Order adopted by the Liberals in 1981, the Order is still in effect today.

The threat of another October 1970 is still a possibility. The Government should protect the rights and freedoms of its citizens—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault).

EMPLOYMENT

ROLE OF SMALL BUSINESS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the present Government recognizes the major role played by small businesses in innovative economic growth and job creation.

To promote the availability of capital for small businesses, the Government has announced a number of measures including the capital gains tax exemption, increased availability of capital from pension funds and registered retirement savings plans, and tax incentives for labour-sponsored venture capital funds.

The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) has set up a supplier awareness program to help small businesses acquire a larger share of public sector purchasing.

Small- and medium-sized businesses involved in research and development will receive a full and immediate refund of the tax credit which they earn on their first $2 million of research and development.

Thanks to the changes in RRSPs announced in the Budget, private sector entrepreneurs will now be able to manoeuver in order to plan for their retirement as adequately as other Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, small business is said to be responsible for most of the new jobs created in Canada in recent years. By trying to encourage small business, the present Government is helping to create jobs and stimulate the economy.

THE ECONOMY

SITUATION IN QUEBEC

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Since the September 4, 1984 election, Mr. Speaker, Quebecers have witnessed a considerable improvement in their province's economic situation as a result of the new climate of co-operation which followed our predecessors' confrontation approach.

Last week Statistics Canada confirmed that our Government's economic renewal and job creation initiatives have given encouraging results. The Bank of Canada rate has dropped 3.53 per cent since the election and now stands at 8.35 per cent, the lowest in seven years. The 4 per cent inflation rate, practically unchanged in over a year, has created the most stable climate since 1971. Those figures show conclusively that, since we took office, Canadian men and women have been more confident in the future. That was the sentiment expressed to me by community groups of the riding of Chambly when we met recently.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, all such signs clearly show that, unlike those of our prodecessors, our 1984 election campaign promises were not empty words. Once again our Government has lived up to its commitments.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

EXCLUSION OF WOMEN FROM COMBAT DUTY

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the right wing of the Tory Party has emitted its first scream against women in the Armed Forces. One Tory M.P. has said, "Certainly there are jobs that women can do but not in combat". Another has said that three of his brothers served in the trenches but "I certainly would not want my sister there". The point is that it is for the sister to decide. If equality means anything, women have the right to decide whether they go in the trenches or anywhere else.

The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) has not even attempted to justify the current policy of excluding women from combat. We can only hope that the strident and Neanderthal right wing of the Tory Party will not carry the day and that the Government will move quickly to implement the recommendations of a parliamentary committee and make all trades and occupations in the Armed Forces open to women.

EMPLOYMENT

SITUATION IN MONTREAL AND EASTERN TOWNSHIPS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Employment and Immigration admitted she had no concrete plan to revive the industrial base of Montreal East. Does the Minister intend to convince her Government colleagues they should stop dragging their feet about the problems facing employees at Bombardier, Vickers and the Gulf refinery? Is she also going to convince the Prime Minister to keep the promises he made to textile workers in the Eastern Townships?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Member is ignoring the exceptional upsurge of employment in the Montreal area. The employment rate in Montreal is rising faster than in Quebec and Canada. Since we came to power about 51,000 jobs have been created in Montreal, and I am very proud of this perfomance. It is better than the Liberal Party's record.

SALE OF GULF REFINERY—GOVERNMENT'S HANDLING OF ISSUE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, these are very vague answers to specific questions.

Does the Minister of Employment and Immigration intend to convince the Prime Minister to provide a loan guarantee for the purchase of the Gulf refinery in Montreal East? Does the Minister intend to make her colleagues understand that it is entirely unfair to provide a billion-dollar tax exemption for the people who purchased Gulf, while at the same time refusing to allocate resources to help employees keep their jobs?

Does this mean everything for the big corporations and nothing for the worker?—

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Member seems to want to disparage what has been taking place in Montreal. In the last year some 51,000 new jobs have been created in Montreal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: What is more, the community of Montreal is confident that that kind of record will continue as it sees growth in the transportation sector, in the communications sector, and in other sectors throughout Montreal.

Mr. Ouellet: What a farce.

Miss MacDonald: The Leader of the Opposition would like to disparage that kind of growth, but he cannot ignore, Sir, that it is a fact.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RECALL PROMISES FOR PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that is no help to the workers in the company I just mentioned. I would like to ask a supplementary.

In Sherbrooke on July 26, 1984, the Prime Minister promised to maintain jobs in the textile and clothing industry in the Eastern Townships, in Quebec. Does the Minister intend to remind the Prime Minister to keep his promises, especially when this morning, we were informed that Domtex will be closing down two of its plants three months from now?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have, indeed, been keeping our promises.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: We promised jobs. There have been more than 300,000 new jobs created in Canada since we came to office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Two hundred and fourteen thousand of those jobs have been full-time, Mr. Speaker, 70,000 part-time. When the Liberals served their last full year in office, full-time jobs decreased, not increased.

Mr. Gauthier: Three hundred and forty thousand, Flora.

REQUEST THAT MONTREAL EAST BE DESIGNATED DEPRESSED AREA

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday in Montreal, a citizens' committee was set up to help save 5,000 jobs in Montreal East. Is the Minister willing to urge the Prime Minister to designate Montreal East as a depressed area, so that businesses and workers can take advantage of the benefits of programs for designated areas?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, since this Government came to power, the number of jobs in the oil industry has increased by more than 7 per cent, and we are working with the private sector to maintain this trend.

[English]

We will do that, as we have done it with various firms. We are working with the private sector. We are giving time to allow for various private sector offers to come forward. That has happened in the case of Gulf Canada. It has happened in the case of the textile industry. We will continue to work with the private sector to ensure that increase continues.

CITIZENS' COMMITTEE AND UNION CHAIRMEN—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is not answering the question. When 5,000 workers are about to lose their jobs, figures and statistics will not pay their grocery bills.

The Minister has a lot of courage, so would she care to come along next Monday and meet the citizens' committee and union chairmen? Is she ready and does she have the courage to come to this meeting and give the same silly answers she is giving now?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party has always lacked confidence in the Montreal area, in the province of Quebec and even in Canada!

[English]

It really is a shame that the Liberal Opposition lacks such confidence in the country that it cannot recognize that in the last year 300,000 new jobs were created. Some 51,000 new jobs were created in the City of Montreal, and almost 100,000 new jobs were created in the Province of Quebec. That is a record to be proud of.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL AND NORTHLAND BANKS—BANK OF CANADA LOSS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who is well aware that the Bank of Canada has received less than 2 per cent of the total liquidity package that it provided for the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, leaving a balance of $1.291 billion, and increasing by an interest loss in excess of $10 million per month.

What assurances can the Minister give the House and the people of Canada, knowing that it has already cost taxpayers $1 billion, that the final bail-out package for the Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland will not be $2 billion, or perhaps even $3 billion? What assurances can he give?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is using outrageously exaggerated figures. He knows what the Bill is before the House. The Minister of State for Finance has indicated that there will be recoveries on the sale of assets on the unwinding of the loans which are in place right now. This will reduce the amount in the Bill to a lesser amount as it occurs over the next couple of years.

EFFECT OF LOSS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that it will take at least a couple of years or many more years, likely, for all the assets to be disposed of and to return at least a portion of that $1.3 billion to the central bank.

Knowing that this incredible cost has to be picked up by the Bank of Canada, at least in the short run, and by the Canadian economy as well, what will be the effect of this outstanding balance of $1.291 billion, increasing at $10 million per month in lost interest, on interest rates, inflation, and monetary policy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the liquidator has already received some funds back on the liquidation of assets, so the recovery is starting right now. However, in response to the Hon. Member's question, the economy has been growing at the rate of 4 per cent per annum. That is pretty good, I should say. The inflation rate is less than 4 per cent, and 300,000 jobs have been created. As my colleague has said, 70 per cent of those jobs are full-time jobs. Investment in the country has been increasing at 20 per cent per annum. Housing starts are growing at the rate of 170,000 per annum. I could go on and on.

INQUIRY ABOUT POSSIBLE CONSEQUENCES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that there is an opportunity to make statements of that kind. I will ask him my question again. When he made the original decision to provide the liquidity from the central bank, and when he knows that it is costing in excess of $1 billion, what effect will the pay-back to the central bank over many years, costing us hundreds of millions of dollars in lost interest charges, have on the interest rate policy, the monetary policy, and on inflation, knowing that someone has to make up the difference in both the short and long run?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is not listening to the answers to questions. I indicated to him that the amount it will cost taxpayers will be less than the amount which is in the Bill before the House right now. As he knows, that amount is less than $1 billion. The premise on which the first part of his question is based is dead wrong, as are all the premises on which the Hon. Member bases his questions.

● (1425)

On the matter of interest rates, why does the Hon. Member suggest that interest rates should be rising at all? Interest rates have come down three percentage points in the last 12 months to the lowest level we have seen since 1978. Surely the Hon. Member should be congratulating the Government for getting interest rates down.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT FULFIL PROMISES

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

There are now 755 people, 755 workers in Salaberry and Saint-Jean who were advised yesterday that they would be losing their jobs in June 1986. The reason behind the shutdown is a massive and uncontrolled increase in imports. Could the Minister inform the House whether her Government intends to act on the promises made by its Leader on July 26 in Sherbrooke, to save these 755 jobs?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that, thanks to representations made by the Members from Drummondville and Sherbrooke in the House of Commons, my colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, has been looking at this question and examining it very closely. Hon. Members of the Conservative Party who are interested in the textile industry and the future of this industry have indeed been bringing their representations to the Cabinet and that is why the matter is under consideration.

PROSPECTS FOR OTHER WORKERS IN SAME SECTOR

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Minister knows perfectly well that her colleague has been looking at the matter for months without any concrete results and that the axe has just fallen on two major industries. She is now referring to Drummondville, Sherbrooke and Magog where, in fact, workers are wondering whether they are next on the list. Could the Minister give these workers the assurance that they will not meet the same fate as their fellow workers in Saint-Jean and Valleyfield because of her Government's inaction?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am quite happy—

Mr. Ouellet: Quite confused!

Miss MacDonald —to undertake to discuss the matter with my colleague and also with Conservative Members who are very concerned about this matter and are making representations to our Cabinet colleague.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

BASEBALL WORLD SERIES—LIMITED USE OF CANADIAN BROADCASTING PERSONNEL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister knows very well that the Toronto Blue Jays will be off to the World Series after tonight's game.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: She is also aware that traditionally, for events that are jointly televised by Canadian and American networks, there has always been a 50-50 crew-sharing arrangement between the two countries.

Can the Minister tell the House why she has agreed to let ABC Television televise the World Series games from Toronto using hardly any Canadian personnel and, once the Series has switched back to either St. Louis or Los Angeles, using no Canadian personnel? Does the Minister not believe in creating more Canadian jobs, and does she not believe in equality between the two nations? Can she tell the House why she struck out?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that we are aware of the situation. ABC is doing the broadcasts in accordance with Section 19(1)(f) of the regulations which allows for ABC crews to enter Canada without the need of employment authorization. The Hon. Member will understands that there is a reciprocal arrangement which in turn permits Canadian crews to enter the United States to report on Canadian news events.

CLASSIFICATION AS NEWS EVENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister then explain to the House why he and/or the Minister of Employment and Immigration accepted an interpretation from their officials indicating that the World Series is a news event rather than an entertainment event, the guidelines of which would have allowed for more Canadian participation in the production of that particular Series? Why did they listen to their officials and have it classified as a news event rather than an entertainment event?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest that it is one of the largest news events in Canadian history.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

Mr. McLean: Happily, it will reach both news and entertainment audiences. We believe it will be very positive entertainment and news for Canada.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

CAPE BRETON—CAPITAL WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Cape Breton Advisory Committee appointed by the Government following the closure of the two heavy water plants reports that there is unemployment in excess of 50 per cent in some communities. It has recommended the immediate implementation of a capital works program in 1985-86. In view of the fact that there is available a list of projects totalling $600 million, will the Minister indicate to the House when this program will be implemented and how much money will be forthcoming?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member has raised the question. I enjoy telling the House of the progress being made in Cape Breton. The report of the advisory committee includes no less than 34 recommendations and, as the Hon. Member has correctly indicated, it does suggest certain spending commitments which it would like to see the federal Government and the provincial Governments undertake. I know that the Hon. Member and Members of the House will be pleased to learn that I have been discussing the matter with the Premier of Nova Scotia. Within weeks, we certainly anticipate being able to come out with some important concrete results and answers to which I am sure the Hon. Member will give his support.

REQUEST FOR EARLY ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. I ask the Minister is it fair for Canadians in this particular region to wait for such an extended period of time for some form of financial assistance when, in fact, the Government has jumped into the bail-out of two western banks and uninsured depositors, and when it has provided a tax haven in the amount of $1 billion for Gulf? Will the Minister stand in his place today and make an affirmative announcement with regard to this particular program?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, surely the Hon. Member does not have such a short memory as to forget that the people of Cape Breton waited 15 years under the former Government for some meaningful help with respect to their unemployment situation. The fact is unemployment went up during the past decade.

Mr. Dingwall: Do not mislead the House.

Mr. Stevens: Give us a little time to make sure we can obtain some permanent jobs for the area so that the people can live in a much more viable condition than the Liberals left them in.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—MINISTER'S COMMITTEE STATEMENT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare who talks about the importance of families while taking away their benefits. Will the Minister confirm publicly what he indicated in committee yesterday, namely, that he has no plans to reindex family allowances even if the economy improves, and that by 1990 this will mean that he will have taken over $1 billion from families as the family allowance is devalued?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the question from a member of the Opposition who attended the committee meeting yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Where were the Liberals?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I give her the same answer as I gave her yesterday. As the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Employment and Immigration have said today, economic trends are improving, which is a good sign. She should rejoice with us and other Canadians with respect to this happening. As the developments continue further, obviously this Government and its members will be looking to other social programs to be put forward to the House.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF CHILD TAX CREDIT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the Minister aware that the child tax credit is going to be reduced by de-indexation, just like family allowances? How can the Minister claim that temporary increases in the child tax credit will replace family allowances, when both are going to be reduced?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has read the Budget and Bill C-70 she will have seen that the child tax credit will be increased. I suggest she look at those figures.

FISHERIES

TEMPORARY CLOSURE OF NEW BRUNSWICK FISH PLANT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Fisheries. The latest announcement is that the Star-Kist plant in St. Andrews, New Brunswick, will be closing down temporarily, throwing over 400 people out of work. This is no surprise in light of the way the Government has handled the whole tuna issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Henderson: Will the Acting Minister of Fisheries tell the House about the Government's involvement with the Star-Kist plant concerning these problems? What are he and his Government doing to protect these 400 jobs? What is the Government doing to get that plant into full production?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: What a hypocrite.

An Hon. Member: Both sides of the fence again.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the temporary lay-offs should come as no surprise to the Hon. Member. My information is that the temporary lay-offs which have been announced by the company are similar to temporary lay-offs which have occurred from year to year over time in the past.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE EXAMINATION

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that this whole affair has put a cast on the total fishing industry, will the Acting Minister of Fisheries instruct the members of his Party who sit on the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry to put the affair on its agenda in order to study it in depth and hear witnesses, so that once and for all the issue can be resolved to the satisfaction of the industry?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Minister may want to answer the question. However, I think the Hon. Member is asking a question with regard to committee agendas, which is really not a House of Commons question.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I cannot disallow the question and then allow an answer. That is not fair.

BRITISH COLUMBIA SOCKEYE SALMON RUN

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Acting Minister of Fisheries. As he knows, well in excess of one million sockeye could have been harvested from the Babine run in British Columbia and are now going to waste as a result of federal policy. Will the Minister explain why his Government has continued to refuse to allow commercial, native and sports harvesting of these stocks despite repeated requests to harvest the excess which is surplus?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the accusation, as embedded in the preamble to the question, and the question are both unfair and untrue. What has actually happened is the realization of the highly successful first phase of the Salmonid Enhancement Program which has resulted in increased stocks. Now, in the name of progress, we should be moving on to phase two as quickly as possible.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is food for thought for the same Minister. Will the Minister explain what kind of Government would place one million cans of rancid tuna on the market and at the same time refuse to allow British Columbians the right to catch food for Canada and the world—some $20 million worth? Will he explain why it should be illegal to possess salmon—

[Editor's Note: Where upon Mr. Fulton crossed the floor and placed a salmon on the Prime Minister's desk.]

Some Hon. Members: Order, Order.

Mr. Andre: Kick him out!

Mr. La Salle: Very intelligent!

Some Hon. Members: Out, out.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member should know better.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Kick him out!

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The Hon. Member should know better. He will now please rise in his place and apologize to the House.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly prepared to apologize.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you. That is that.

Mr. Fulton: I think that—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

An Hon. Member: Stupid!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is the only time a fish has more brains than a Member.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

FUTURE OF PRAIRIE WILDLIFE INTERPRETATION CENTRE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the environment and, specifically, the Prairie Wildlife Interpretation Centre in southwestern Saskatchewan. This centre was one of five which was subject to spending restraints last year. The centre operated last summer under the joint auspices of the Governments of Saskatchewan and Canada. Can the House be informed as to the future of the Prairie Wildlife Interpretation Centre?

• (1440)

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will be interested to know that the Minister of the Environment will have at his disposal within two weeks an assessment of how the Wildlife Centre functioned last summer under the arrangements that were made for its temporary operation. He should also know that the Government intends to ensure that this Centre remains open and serves the public. We would like to thank the Hon. Member for his representations and his concern, and we hope he will take some encouragement from the fact that similar centres across Canada, in British Columbia, Ontario, and Quebec, have remained open under similar circumstances.

AGRICULTURE

SASKATCHEWAN FARMERS' LOSSES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and concerns the rapidly deteriorating situation in western Canada. Last summer's drought and a wet harvest this fall are driving realized net farm incomes in Saskatchewan well below $5,000. Every night on television we see farms being auctioned off the RCMP escorting young farmers off their farms.

On September 10 the Minister said that he would have a report within two weeks. Can he give any hope to these young farmers who are losing their farms? Can he say if a decision has been made regarding an acreage payment to these farmers in western Canada?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member has been in the House in the last few days. I recall having this question posed by a member of the NDP. I indicated to him, I believe earlier this week, that the committee, under the leadership of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Assiniboia, had brought forth its recommendations with respect to Phase II, which included recommendations for compensation payments concerning crop losses. I also indicated that that submission was going to Cabinet, and that would be next Tuesday.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, it was five weeks ago that the Minister indicated that report would be provided to him. Is he willing to stand in his place today and make a commitment that there will be a payment of up to $50 per seeded acre as recommended by the Leader of the Opposition, the western wheat pools and many responsible farm organizations in western Canada? Can he give any hope to these young farmers who will be losing their farms this fall?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that the Hon. Member would have a greater knowledge and understanding of the problems of the agricultural industry. One of the prime reasons for holding back was the recommendation of the committee itself in view of the fact that deteriorating weather conditions developed again. Therefore, any decision made prior thereto would simply be inaccurate, insufficient, and premature.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES INQUIRY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last June he told the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada regarding the replacement of the Petroleum Incentives Program: "I should caution you, we are interested in moving very much to a market-oriented system, with a minimum of tax incentives." Why have the Minister and the Government taken a position of only minimum incentives? Why have they cancelled the PIP grants, refused to offer a replacement, and sabotaged thousands of jobs in Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, and the Beaufort?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, here we have another example of overblown rhetoric. No one has said that we refused to put in a replacement for the PIP grants. The Minister herself said quite recently that this is under active review between herself and myself and we hope to have a decision very soon. I would also say, in response to the first part of the overblown rhetoric in his question, that the proposal we will be putting forward will be world competitive.

REQUEST FOR NEW PROGRAM

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I was using the Minister's own words in that question. If he has changed his mind, will he stand in his place and confirm that he will put into effect a substantial replacement for the PIP grants and that it will be announced before November 1, as requested by the Premier of Nova Scotia and IPAC? Or is this just going to go on indefinitely and be yet another broken Tory election promise?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I could stand in my place here for the next two hours and talk about the election promises we have kept.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is another example of how the Hon. Member is way offside.

As I indicated in my previous answer, we are going to have a replacement for this program which will be competitive with other regimes in the world. If the Hon. Member would just have a little patience, he might not be too dissatisfied with what he sees.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATES—SPREAD BETWEEN CREDIT CARD CHARGES AND BANK RATE

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The bank rate has made an encouraging decline since early September, but the spread between that rate and the rate the banks charge the public has widened. The interest charges of most credit card companies in which banks take an active interest have not changed very much in the past two years. What moral suasion will the Minister consider to encourage these institutions to bring their lending rates more in line with what they are paying for money?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct. We have seen a substantial drop in interest rates, some 300 bases points over the past 12 months. We have the prime rate now at 10 per cent, the lowest level it has been since, I believe, 1978.

Mr. Riis: We are talking about spreads, Michael.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I know the NDP are very pleased, judging by the response the Hon. Member is giving me now to that information.

We have watched as the spread between the prime rate and the Treasury Bill rate has widened and narrowed. This is something that will happen from time to time. Earlier this year the prime rate and the T-Bill rate were very close together. They have now widened, but I am sure that market forces will bring them together again and I know the banks are very conscious of that.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

LITIGATION INVOLVING POLICY ADVISER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On October 2 a Statement of Claim was filed in the Supreme Court of Ontario against Mr. Fred Doucet, senior policy adviser to the Prime Minister. Given the Government's pending discussion of a replacement for the PIP grants and further offshore development, does the Minister not think it would be prudent for Mr. Doucet to step aside from his sensitive duties in the Prime Minister's Office while this suit is before the courts?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): What would be prudent and proper, Sir, is for Members not to ask questions which interfere in the judicial process when a matter is before the courts.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): She was not talking about the merits.

Mr. Nielsen: That is where it is.

Mr. Andre: It is a civil suit.

Mr. Nielsen: To say nothing of the fact that the subject matter of her question has nothing to do with ministerial responsibility here.

SALE OF SHARES—PRIVATE OFFERING MEMORANDUM

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, Mr. Doucet is not a Minister, he is a senior adviser in the Prime Minister's Office. In a private offering memorandum, when Mr. Fred Doucet was peddling East Coast Energy shares across Nova Scotia, he stated: "The company—"

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Supplementary question, please.

Ms. Copps: My question relates to the Government because in the memorandum—I am asking the Minister, does he not think that there is a question in the minds of the public when a now senior adviser to the Prime Minister stated at that time that: "The company intends to conduct itself vis-à-vis Government so as to optimize benefits to the shareholders. The ownership of E.C.E.L. is structured so that every considered attempt can be made to obtain as many of the advantages as possible from these and other relevant—"

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I really am astonished that the Hon. Member—

An Hon. Member: What is the date of that memorandum?

Mr. Nielsen: —got as far as she did with that kind of question, which in itself explains the traditional rule against raising matters which are sub judice. Using her immunity she has made a statement just now which is the proper jurisdiction of a court and a judge to decide. The "blues" will show that the Hon. Member has accused one of the litigants of peddling shares in some company or other, which in itself is an accusation which she should not have made, and which should not been allowed to be made in the House under the guise of Question Period.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1450)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Maybe you want to rework your question.

Mr. Crosbie: Why don't you get a lawyer?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order!

Mr. Crosbie: We want some order!

Mr. Young: Thank you, John.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

TRANSPORT

RESTRUCTURING OF TRANSPORT CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

In view of rumours we have been hearing for some time that thousands of jobs are going to be cut at Transport Canada, that local activities will be consolidated and moved to regional offices, in Quebec that would mean they would be located in Quebec City, and considering the fact the House was expecting a statement by the Minister yesterday, when is the Minister going to announce his restructuration plan for Transport Canada, put an end to all these rumours, and reassure the workers of this Department?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, much of the innuendo, fear, and anxiety is being perpetuated by Members like the one who has just asked the question. I think it is very clear that in the November statement and in the Budget attempts were being made to reduce the overhead and, as much as possible, the cost of operations within the Department of Transport, and to ensure that we can provide adequate service to all regions of the country. A commitment was also made to ensure that there would be greater regional participation. I would be very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to elaborate further as I am appearing before the Standing Committee on Transport. If the Member attends there I will be very glad to give him a full explanation of all the details.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I am not comforted by that answer. Every time the Minister of Transport tells me that I am paranoid, the next day exactly what I had feared would happen, happens.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mayer: Baloney.

An Hon. Member: So who's going to win the game tonight?

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): I want to ask the Minister of Transport to answer the question and to make an announcement to clear up, for employees of Transport Canada and everyone else who is concerned about the reorganization of that Department, just exactly what is going on. When are we going to find out?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the Member would try to ascertain the facts and stop going around the country spreading fear, anxiety, and innuendo—

Mr. Blaikie: I generally have the facts.

Mr. Mazankowski: If he chooses to come to the standing committee tomorrow I will be very glad to answer in detail any questions that he has.

WAR MEASURES ACT

REASONS FOR INVOCATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, 15 years ago today, on one of the blackest nights for civil liberties in Canadian history, Pierre Trudeau and John Turner proclaimed the War Measures Act.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The last time they spoke to each other.

Mr. Robinson: In view of the fact that the Act remains unchanged on the books today and the documentation underlying this shameful decision remains secret, when will the Government repeal this repressive legislation used against innocent Quebecers and Japanese Canadians? When, Mr. Speaker, will John Turner finally come clean with Canadians as to why this was imposed?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! This practice of referring to Members by name must stop.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in my view, subject as always to your correction of course, it does not lie within the ministerial responsibility of myself or the Government to account for the words or actions of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice and is, word for word, identical to a question asked by the present Secretary of State for External Affairs to the previous Minister of Justice. "Will the Minister of Justice reveal to Parliament the reasons that the Government introduced the War Measures Act in 1970 and make public the information kept secret by John Turner so that Canadians can—"

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Robinson: That was the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Robinson: I'm quoting the question.

Mr. Blaikie: It's a quote.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Keeper: He can quote.

Mr. Speaker: Having asked the Member specifically to stop referring to Members by name, he persists. I must, therefore, go to the next Member. The Hon. Member for York West.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TAIWAN—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for External Affairs, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister of State for External Affairs has stated that the Government's policy is not officially diplomatically to recognize Taiwan. Yet the Minister of State for Multiculturalism said yesterday: "Any Cabinet Minister should be able to appear at events organized by supporters of Taiwan".

This represents an obvious and serious faux pas in the policy of the Government.

Mr. Crosbie: Never mind the speeches.

Mr. Marchi: How does the Deputy Prime Minister reconcile the official line, as articulated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, with the attitude of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism who recently authorized the Minister of National Revenue to attend the celebration of Taiwan's National Day?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it seems to have been overlooked by the questioner that the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, the Member for Richmond Wolfe, and the Senator for De la Valliere are all members of his Party and all are participating in that trip to Taiwan.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Didn't he get invited?

Mr. Crosbie: Where is Boudria?

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, how the Government of Taiwan spends its money is none of my damn business.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Siddon: He said it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Member has a question, I am sure.

Mr. Marchi: I am concerned about the policy of this Government, not that of the Government of Taiwan.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, how does the Deputy Prime Minister reconcile the difference in policy? Where does he draw the line with respect to ministerial discretion in a very important and delicate foreign policy issue? What is the policy, who is in charge, and where is the consistency?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Government vis-à-vis the Chinese Government was very eloquently, ably, and fully stated by the Prime Minister in response to questions that were put to him at his press conference last Friday morning.

Mr. Hovdebo: Not in the House.

Mr. Nielsen: In the event that the Member did not view that press conference, or in the event that he is not up to date, I might point out to him that the policy being followed by this Government with respect to mainland China is the same as the policy of the Government which he supported when it was on this side of the House.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. No doubt the Minister was enthusiastic about last Friday's announcement of the national unemployment rate dropping to 10.1 per cent, the lowest level in the last three years. Can the Minister tell us what steps the Government will be taking during the next few months in order to reduce the unemployment rate to an even lower level?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, indeed, as the Hon. Member has pointed out, the unemployment rate came down last Friday to 10.1 per cent, the lowest level since March of 1982. We are not satisfied with that, of course, and we will be working to ensure that the rate comes down lower. We know that there will be fluctuations in the rate. However, we are encouraged by the predictions of the Conference Board of Canada that the unemployment rate for next year will be down to 9.7 per cent. In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, we have undertaken a new Canadian Jobs Strategy which will provide employment and training for some 400,000 Canadians who would not otherwise have a chance for jobs.

HOUSING

FUTURE OF GREYMAC APARTMENT UNITS IN TORONTO

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance responsible for the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation. In view of today's news about the Greymac properties, will the Minister assure this House that no sale of the 10,000-plus Greymac apartment units in Toronto will be permitted until the Minister has consulted Toronto City Council about a likely conflict with the stated policy against Toronto's by-law which restricts conversion of rental apartments to condominiums?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with the Hon. Member's position with regard to the shortage of rental accommodation in Toronto. As he knows, this issue is before the courts and in the hands of the CDIC. I would be very happy to inquire into it for him.

• (1500)

REQUEST THAT TENANTS BE OFFERED PURCHASE OPTION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister cannot give us that assurance, can she assure us that before the apartments are offered for condominiums the tenants will first be offered the option of buying the buildings as co-operatives or non-profit corporations at the low end of market price?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, it is the job of the liquidator and the CDIC to maximize the return. My understanding is that there have been a number of consultations with tenants in a variety of these buildings and I am sure that the solution will resolve some of these difficult issues.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NIELSEN'S ANSWER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) attempted to plead the sub judice rule to avoid answering a very relevant question which you had accepted. I suggest that he was abusing that rule in order to avoid dealing with a difficult subject.

The sub judice convention is set out in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition and it very clearly does not apply to this situation. There is no criminal matter being discussed. There is a civil matter, but even in a civil matter the lawsuit is only at the stage of pleadings.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. If the Hon. Member reads further in Beauchesne he will find that that practice is a convention of the House, not a rule of the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, will the Government House Leader put on the record of the House the business for today and tomorrow? I know that it has been communicated to House Leaders through the usual channels but I think it would be helpful if it were on the record of the House.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to announce publicly the business for today and tomorrow. Hon. Members will know that there is an item in Government Orders with respect to Bill C-79 concerning the CCB and Northland Banks and a Government motion with respect to time allocation. I had communicated earlier this week to determine whether a time at the beginning of the week would be convenient to proceed with this item. After discussions with the Opposition House Leaders, I have decided to have this matter come forward tomorrow morning as the first item of business.

I should also mention that there will be a Ways and Means Motion with respect to the Excise Tax Act on which I will want to move concurrence tomorrow after we have dealt with the matter of time allocation.

The sequence of the order of business in which we are now engaged will continue. In other words, it is my intention to carry on with discussion of the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act, followed by the legislation respecting employment equity and, as the third item in that trio, the Bill respecting Canagrex.

PETITIONS

CHANGES TO FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT PROGRAMS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of citizens, most of whom live in the Vancouver region, asking that family allowances by fully reindexed and that unfair tax increases, which will put a further burden on families, particularly low-income families, be rescinded.

Petitions

SETTLEMENT OF CASES AT FORT ALEXANDER

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of teachers from Manitoba. The undersigned wish to express their disappointment at the actions of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which prevented the settlement of the Fort Alexander situation by the Canadian Labour Relations Board and the Federal Court.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to intervene on behalf of their four colleagues who are obeying the law but are being penalized by an employer who continues to flout the law.

CHANGES TO FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT PROGRAMS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to present a petition from a number of individuals from Brighton, Ontario. Those petitioners state that the deindexation of the universal family allowance is an unfair attack on women and families, and further state that the attack will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that other tax increases in the May Budget will place an unfair burden on low and middle income earners.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure of presenting a petition on behalf of a large number of residents of the City of Kamloops, British Columbia, who are of the opinion that the deindexation of the universal family allowance and the massive cut-backs in the public commitment to child benefits are an unfair attack on women and families with children, especially single mothers, and call upon the Government to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and rescind the unfair tax increases of the last Budget.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by many residents of Edmonton, Alberta. The petition protests the change to the Unemployment Insurance Act which would see pension income being used as earned income for unemployment insurance purposes. The petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that all retired employees keep their pension benefits and receive their unemployment insurance benefits without deduction of pension income.

CHANGES TO FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT PROGRAMS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of residents of my riding in Ottawa and from the City of Hull, protesting the deindexation of the universal family allowance and stating that the poorest families will be worse off by 1990 with the measures that the Government has proposed.

My petitioners object to the inequities under which banks are bailed out to the tune of a billion dollars while family allowances are cut back. They call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and rescind the unfair tax increases.

FREE VOTE ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition today on behalf of those groups, associations and independent groups across Canada who are asking for a free vote in the House on capital punishment. There are 21,875 signatures, which makes a total of 190,125 Canadians who are asking that the House consider a free vote on capital punishment and that the issue be brought to the floor of the House as soon as possible.

DEINDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my first petition concerns family allowances. The petitioners point out that the deindexation of family allowances will cost even the poorest families money following the year 1990. The deindexation of family allowances, along with tax changes, will hurt middle income Canadians.

INTERRUPTION IN POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): My second petition concerns the postal service. It comes from a number of residents of my riding, specifically the Laurence Apartments at 75 Yong Street who indicate that postal service was interrupted this summer for a number of days and, for a period of time, up to a week and a half and state that this is intolerable.

RESTORATION OF FULL INDEXATION TO FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of petitioners from the Province of Nova Scotia who call upon the Government to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and rescind the unfair tax increases.

CHANGES TO FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT PROGRAMS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions from the Toronto area as well as some from Saskatoon concerning family allowance. The petitioners point out that the family allowance deindexation will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that even the poorest families will be worse off by 1990 and fall further and further behind.

These petitioners call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind unfair tax increases.

I have a similar set of petitions on family allowance, pointing out that the accelerating cut-backs in child benefits, on top of sales and excise tax increases, place an extraordinary burden on middle and low income households. These petitioners call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance.

DND—PAMPHLETS FOR PUBLIC EDUCATION

Question No. 194—Mr. Stackhouse:

1. In (a) 1982 (b) 1983, how many pamphlets were published by the Department of National Defence for the purpose of public education?

2. How many were distributed and on what subjects?

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) 1982—31; (b) 1983—31.

2. See below.

1982

Subject Matter	Number of Pamphlets	Distribution
Medical Insurance Plans, Medical Benefits, Retirement Benefits	4	230,000

IMPACT OF GASOLINE PRICES ON TOURIST TRENDS

Question No. 424—Mr. Robichaud:

Were studies undertaken on the impact of gasoline prices upon tourist trends and (a) if so (i) what were they (ii) did they reveal a relationship between gasoline prices and tourist trends in Canada and, if so, by how many percentage points will the number of US tourists decrease when the federal tax on gasoline increases by 1 per cent and from what source are these figures derived (b) if not (i) for what reason (ii) on what date will the Department commission such a study?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Tourism)): Tourism Canada did a study in 1984 isolating the impact of gasoline prices on automobile travel to and from Canada and the U.S., using the Tourism Canada forecasting model. The results indicated that a 1 per cent increase in Canadian gasoline prices, with U.S. prices held constant, would have little impact on overnight visitors, resulting in changes of only 0.2 per cent.

The 1 per cent price increase would have more impact on the relatively low spending same day automobile travel, with the price increase estimated to increase same day Canadian exits to the U.S. by 1 per cent and decrease same day U.S. automobile visits to Canada by 1 per cent.

A Tourism Industry Association of Canada study has come up with similar results.

Tourism Canada is not considering another such study at present.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

ORDER OF REFERENCE OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as you know, I am a very popular Member of this House. When you called the item Motions, I was in full discussion with at least six or seven of my colleagues from around the House. May I ask the indulgence of the House to return to Motions because I have an Order that has met the approval of all Parties? I think you will find an inclination of the House to accept this motion by unanimous consent, without debate. May I have the concurrence of the House to revert to Motions, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Does the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) have the unanimous consent of the House to revert to Motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the order is as follows:

That, notwithstanding its order of reference dated Tuesday, February 26, 1985, it be an instruction to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs that it empower any subcommittee studying the status of equality rights under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, to report its findings with respect thereto, directly to the House of Commons.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, just on a matter of clarification, I am sorry I did not ask before, but I was busy too—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Talking to me.

Mr. Deans: I was talking to you, that is exactly right.

What is this significance of the words, "Empower any subcommittee"? It is "the subcommittee", is it not? There is one subcommittee?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I take it back. Yes.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: With that correction, the House has heard the terms of the motion. Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, October 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to make a few comments on Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof. This is a very large Bill, Sir. There is an awful lot in it and I must say some of it is long overdue. Some of the clauses in this Bill will improve our navigation systems. However, I am going to relate my comments specifically to Clause 4 of the Bill as it relates to the imposition, if you will, of user fees.

In the past six months, we have been involved in our Fisheries Committee with the fact that there is not enough money in the small craft harbours budget to repair the wharves, piers and the harbours in this great country of ours. Last night we were told by officials that after engineering costs were taken out by the Department of Public Works there was just a little over $50 million in that budget for all the wharves and harbours in Canada. That includes our marinas in Quebec and Ontario, the commercial fishery of the West Coast, the sports fishery and the pleasure craft in British Columbia, the commercial fishery in the Atlantic Canada as well as the recreational users in that area.

Here we are with a Bill before us today that says that if improvements are to be made to our wharves and harbours, then there is a provision for this Government to pass on those user fees, I suppose, to the user.

I mentioned briefly yesterday what effect that will have in one port in particular in my Province of Prince Edward Island, namely Summerside. We ship about 85 per cent of all potato production from Prince Edward Island through Summerside. Prince Edward Island is basically an exporter of seed potatoes. I say without qualification that we grow the best seed potatoes in the world, so it is a very important industry to PEI.

The harbour of Summerside gets sanded up periodically because there is sand up and down the coast. If a major storm occurs from either the southwest or the northwest, the harbour can be completely filled with sand at any given time. It does not happen very often, but right now we have dredging operations going on.

The previous Government okayed a deep water berth for Summerside. This project was approved after much arm-twisting by myself and others and the new Government has seen fit to carry on with the project.

We have another problem. Vessels that come to Summerside to take on a cargo of potatoes for Argentina, Portugal, Algeria or wherever have to be refrigerated vessels. While they may have 17 to 22 feet at high tide, at low tide there is a shortfall of seven to eight feet. All the piping for the refrigerated units is in the keel and along the hull of the ship. When the loaded vessels are tied up they cannot sit on the bottom or damage to the equipment will occur.

Every five to six years around the Queen's Wharf in Summerside, dredging has to take place. Sometimes it is okay to use cranes on the wharf itself but at other times you need have to have a suction of a clam dredge, a very expensive proposition. As a result, the users, and in this case the users would be the vessel owners, would have to charge a lot more for the use of their vessel to the shipper in order for them to maintain their costs and show a small profit.

I should like to refer to another issue of concern. In the winter-time, communities alongside the Gulf of St. Lawrence and along the Northumberland Straits, whether it be Summerside, Charlottetown, Georgetown or Surrey, are ice-bound. Normally by the middle of January we find that ice-breakers from the Department of Transport are required to clear a path for vessels either to enter or to exit from those harbours. Over the past six years I have had problems trying to obtain the services of an ice-breaker when a vessel has been loaded and is ready to leave port for its destination. I have always maintained that the Government does not have adequate ice-breaking facilities in Canada, certainly in Atlantic Canada and in northern Canada. Not only will we find ourselves with a scarcity of good ice-breaking services, we will have to pay the cost of those services if the Bill is passed.

What would happen if the Bill were passed into law today and the Government decided to charge a fee? We do not know how much that fee would be, if in fact it were to charge one. If it will not do so, why would it include that clause in the Bill? Whether it is done now, six months down the road or 10 years down the road, this particular provision would allow the Government to do that. This Government, this Minister or indeed any Government or Minister who may follow could at some point in time impose a fee under this legislation.

In any event, on Monday of this week, I was told that the price of potatoes in Prince Edward Island, f.o.b. at the farmgate, was 1.5 cents per pound and that the cost of production was at least 5 cents per pound. At this point in time producers are losing roughly 3.5 cents per pound on every pound of potatoes produced. What will be the effect of the costs resulting from this legislation as well as the inspection fees which the Government has placed upon potato producers as one of its main efforts to obtain more revenue? If this legislation is passed, in my province, at the very least, 50 per cent of the farmers would be driven into bankruptcy. That may be the case this year without this piece of legislation being on the books. Therefore, I have great difficulty with the Bill, certainly with this particular clause.

Other areas of the fishing industry will certainly be affected by moorage fees, wharfage fees and so on. I wonder how the users will be charged, in that many fishermen do not necessarily tie up alongside the wharf. They tie vessel to vessel to vessel because harbours are not large enough to permit every vessel to have its own moorage at its own dockside. Certainly that is true in my own province. I suspect that that is the case in many areas in the Provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick as well. If the Government goes ahead with the user-pay philosophy, how will it identify just exactly who is the user? I believe it was the Minister who suggested before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, in reply to a question posed by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), that as long as a vessel came into the harbour it would be subject to moorage fees, even if there was nothing to tie up to. I stand to be corrected, but I think it was the version of the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. That presents another fear for the people whom I represent.

I am sure the situation would be the same for a number of other ports in Atlantic Canada, in British Columbia and in the North. Many similar situations will arise. In Newfoundland I suspect that probably 95 per cent of its ports would be or could be affected by this piece of legislation.

I have heard Hon. Members opposite say that they will not be imposing user fees. Perhaps the Minister will reply to that. However, my response to them would be: "If you are not going to do it, why include it in the legislation?" It may not be the Minister's intention to have user-fees, to charge for ice-breaking services, to charge for aids to navigation, to charge for vessel traffic services or to charge for escorting services. If it is not his intention, why is the Minister trying to bootleg the legislation through the House? If he decides on the issue, we could have an open debate on it in Parliament.

I propose to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate, the following amendment:

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and by substituting the following:

"Bill C-75 not be read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence".

I move that amendment because I want to find out from the Government what user fees or other fees for ice-breaking services could be charged under this legislation. As a Member of Parliament, I represent my province to the best of my ability. We are proud of our agricultural industry in Prince Edward Island, specifically the potato industry. Therefore, I require more answers than what I have received from the Government, from the Minister and from Hon. Members opposite up to this point in time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the amendment. The debate will now be on the amendment.

Mr. Forrestall: Questions and comments?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will recognize the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) on questions and comments.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member. I know that he is sincerely concerned about some of the difficulties to which he alluded in respect of potato producers and fishermen. I can assure him that the comments coming from that side of the House are not going unnoticed.

● (1530)

The Hon. Member indicated that he felt there was a need for more ice-breaking services and perhaps that is true. Currently, something in the order of $180 million is spent annually on ice-breaking services for which there is no cost recovery. Is the Hon. Member saying that these kinds of ice-breaking services should be provided absolutely free even to foreign vessels escorted by Canadian icebreakers? Is that really the position of the Hon. Member's Party?

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the question put by the Minister. I moved this amendment so I can get some clarification on what the Government is trying to do. What I am trying to say is that the potato industry on Prince Edward Island is in competition with the State of Maine which has ice-free harbours year round. Indeed, the Province of Prince Edward Island is in competition with the Province of New Brunswick, the producers of which can ship out of Saint John harbour because it is basically ice-free and does not need ice-breaking services. If we are to compete and maintain the industry, there must be some form of equalization. The Government must recognize the geographic realities of our country. Therefore, ice-breaking services in Labrador, the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Northumberland Straits are imperative, even if they are for a foreign vessel which is picking up a product from Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland or New Brunswick. I think that the Government and this legislation does not recognize the uniqueness of certain parts of Atlantic Canada and certain parts of the North. That is all I am trying to say. This Bill puts the agricultural community of Prince Edward Island at a total disadvantage at a time when, heaven knows, it does not need to be at any further disadvantage.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, with respect, the Hon. Member skated around the question. Is he saying that it is the position of his Party that ice-breaking services, in all cases, whether it be for a Canadian vessel or a foreign vessel, should be provided absolutely free of charge?

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I did not skate around the question. I think the Minister is trying to throw a red herring in here. I tried to indicate to the Minister that not all foreign vessels in Canadian waters are there for the total benefit of that foreign country. The Minister knows that Canada has no merchant fleet and we have to rely on foreign vessels to take our product out of the country for export purposes. As well, some oil tankers are not registered in Canada but have to come into certain ports and harbours to bring in oil supplies. If these tankers had to pay for ice-breaking services, would that cost not be added on to the cost of the product? This Government is supposed to be a business-oriented Government. It would be foolhardy, I would think, for any Member of this House to decide that a foreign vessel should operate in Canadian waters at a deficit.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to prolong this, but I think the Hon. Member knows that all forms of transportation are subsidized and have some measure of cost recovery. In the case of the marine sector, we are talking about something like $824 million being spent annually providing navigational, ice-breaking and other related services while cost recovery is something in the order of 2.5 per cent. Does the Hon. Member think that this is fair?

We are hearing from Members on the other side that we should treat all modes of transportation fairly. The air and rail modes are recovering a much larger percentage of their costs than the marine mode which literally recovers nothing whatsoever. It seems to me that that is somewhat unfair.

The Hon. Member should not try for one minute to suggest that this Bill is proposing 100 per cent cost recovery. I wish Hon. Members of the opposite side would not take this to the extreme. There is flexibility in this Bill. We are committed to discussing areas for which there could be some reasonable cost recovery, which may very well in turn generate some efficiencies within the system. To suggest that we are talking about 100 per cent cost recovery for the provision of these services is really exaggerating the point to the extreme.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, this is the first little titbit of information I have received. At least we now know that there will not be 100 per cent cost recovery. Will the Minister rise in his place today to tell us just exactly what that cost recovery will be? We now know that it will not be 100 per cent. Will it be 99 per cent, 80 per cent, 60 per cent, 50 per cent or 5 per cent? These are the things we want to know. We are not buying a pig in a poke and we will not sign a blank cheque for this Minister or any other Minister. I do not think that the Hon. Minister would expect us to do so. We have to represent our constituents in a faithful manner. We have to be honest with them so we have to know, when people ask me what it will cost them to ship their potatoes next year, what the Government's intentions are.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I rise to make an observation. It is incredible to listen to the Minister of Transport compare the charges contained in this Bill with charges for the air mode and other modes of transportation. I would like to point out to the Minister that we are not talking about transportation of people. We are not talking about ships that intend to ply their way down south for a winter vacation. We are talking about transportation that is a necessity, not a choice. The people to whom we are referring do not have any choice. Either they go by boat or they do not go. The Minister's analogy is absolutely ridiculous.

The Minister has stuck in this thing about foreigners. He has said that we should not let foreigners get away with anything. Do we see anything in this Bill that talks about foreigners? There is nothing there at all. If the Minister means to charge only foreigners, then he should put it in the Bill. The Minister's original analogy which compared this mode with the air transportation mode certainly signals to me that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) really does not understand the icebreaker services in eastern Canada.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) if he would not agree that the questions he has addressed and the other questions that have been raised must best be answered in a committee and that the faster we get the Bill into committee the better it will be?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who moved the motion is identified by this Party as the Hon. Member from Prince Edward Island. He represents that province ably in this Parliament. In this particular case, he is standing up for the people of Prince Edward Island and is making sure that the Government does not impose charges on the potato growers and primary producers of this country.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity on the Canada Shipping Act or, as it now happens, to speak on the hoist motion. One might think that a person from the middle of the Prairies would have little knowledge of or interest in shipping and the Shipping Act.

Mr. Mazankowski: Probably a lot more than what we heard from over there.

● (1540)

Mr. Hovdebo: All Canadians must be concerned about how goods are moved in Canada. Canada is a country dependent upon trade—some people would say too much so. We must be sure that regulations which control the movement of goods in and out of Canada do not impose a burden, making it more difficult for us to be involved in trade by forcing organizations such as transportation companies to pay more, thereby discouraging them to use the available facilities. The Bill seems to do just that. It decreases the possible use of facilities. In many ways the Bill proposes what is necessary to be done. It establishes regulations which will increase safety and encourage the use of facilities. However, there is one exception. I refer to the cost recovery clause in this particular Bill upon which I will comment later.

What I wish to comment on at the beginning is the Government's responsibility with regard to this type of situation. First, it is the responsibility of the Government to keep the shipping lanes open in order that they can be used by domestic or foreign shippers. The St. Lawrence Seaway is presently inoperable because of the collapse of part of the walls of the Welland Canal which is blocking Lock 7. This could be said to have been just an accident. However, it would be interesting to look into the reasons behind the closing of the Welland Canal. This blockage is costing shipping companies approximately $20 million a day. Who is responsible for the fact that the Welland Canal is not open to shipping? No doubt the cost of $20 million a day will be passed on in some form or another to the people using the canal. In this case a great deal of the cost will be passed on to the farmers who are shipping grain through the canal.

Over the years the Government has been collecting fees for the use of the Welland Canal and the St. Lawrence Seaway. In the case of the St. Lawrence Seaway it has put aside $30 million or more which is to be used for maintenance of the Seaway. The same has been done with respect to the Welland Canal. This means that the Department of Transport recognizes the need to have money in place for maintenance. Therefore, the Department must take some responsibility for the closure in that it has not done the type of maintenance which would have made it less likely.

To a question put to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) the other day one of my colleagues received an unsatisfactory answer in that the Minister did not indicate that the Government is willing to spend the money which is available for maintenance. It will not take the $30 million which it has taken out of capital from the Seaway and spend it on maintenance, which will prevent closings such as those which have taken place in the past. This is the key issue in the Bill. It is dealt with in Clause 4. The rest of the Bill establishes acceptable regulations for shipping and is needed legislation which should have been put in place quite some time ago, as I understand from my colleagues who know a little more about the subject. Clause 4 is enabling legislation which would allow the Department of Transport to recover the costs for what have been considered a national responsibility in the past.

It is the user-pay philosophy in the Bill which we in the Opposition challenge. When service becomes the responsibility of the user and ceases to be the responsibility of the nation, then we have to look at exactly how it will be paid for and who will be paying for it. The user-pay philosophy needs close scrutiny by the Government and by Parliament because its application can have a tremendous effect on the viability of many industries in Canada. If the user-pay philosophy is applied to all services which are now provided partially or in full by the Government, what effect will that have on the type of services which we have available in Canada? I am not speaking only of transportation in this case. The user-pay philosophy can be applied to all types of services. For instance, what type of services would we have if a user-pay philosophy were established for health care? Should only the sick pay for health care or should we all be concerned with respect to the health of the nation? What about sanitation? Should only those people who have need of water and sewer services pay for them? Should those services be recognized as a responsibility of the nation? What about roads and communication services? These are areas in which Canada has taken a national responsibility to provide the service and where user-pay has not been a factor.

Traditionally, transportation has been one of the areas in which the Government has provided the infrastructure and its use has been either free or partially free. Roads are generally paid for by taxes. Signs, markings for intersections and road lighting are usually paid for by municipalities which provide the services. There are only a few cases in which tolls are applied to recover some of the costs. The railways were basically paid for and established by the Government. Freight has been almost continuously—and still is to some extent—subsidized by the Government. We continue to depend upon this type of structure although the Government has not given any indication that it will return to the Crow rate which it helped remove.

Mr. Mazankowski: Neither are you.

Mr. Hovdebo: Air travel is an area which has been traditionally paid for by Governments. Consequently, air transportation has developed in the country because the Government has taken that type of responsibility. Areas which have been traditionally paid for by the Government in the marine industry include navigational aids, dredging, ice-breakers, lock operations on canals and so on.

What will happen to these services and our country if we impose a user-pay philosophy on the transportation system? In looking at this subject perhaps we could consider when it would be possible for the Government to implement a user-pay philosophy. When does it become illogical to have a user-pay philosophy and who should make the decisions with respect to it? Had the user-fee philosophy been applied to transportation across Canada over the years, many parts of Canada would be inaccessible today. Our road, rail and air transportation system would not have been extended to many of our communities. Many of the Members in this House come from and represent those communities. Many of the industries in those communities would not be viable today if the user-pay philosophy in transportation had been in place. Mines and farms would not have been developed and operating today. It is particularly important to recognize that most of our North would still be the wilderness it was in 100 years ago if the Government had established a use-pay philosophy in 1885.

My predecessor from Prince Albert, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, during his time as Prime Minister, established a policy which was well received across northern Canada. It was called the Roads to Resources policy. It was very far-sighted, but the Liberal Opposition under Pearson at that time scoffed and called it a policy of highways from igloo to igloo. However, those highways are today the main routes to the development of much of northern Canada. That development would not have occurred had the Diefenbaker Government established a user-pay policy. Northern Canada is still reaping the benefits of that nationalistic policy of Mr. Diefenbaker. However, this Conservative Government is showing itself to be almost anti-nationalistic, anti-development, in its policy. It goes against what the Diefenbaker Government stood for and did in its term in office.

If the user-pay philosophy is put into place it will have the effect of turning back the clock. Even now the increases in freight rates imposed by the Liberal Government and maintained by this Government are making farming in certain areas of the Prairies, particularly grain farming, unviable. If this Bill is passed, the St. Lawrence Seaway may become unviable in the very near future. The Seaway has many requirements for which the Government has accepted responsibility in the past. If we were to increase Seaway tolls a great deal, the time would come when use of the Seaway would drop. Even now it has dropped considerably, that is, 27 per cent over the last year. This kind of an increase in tolls will affect not only the people who work on the Seaway, but the industries which depend on the Seaway to get their goods to market. Canadian ports may become less desirable for export use. And those costs to the already increasing freight costs, and farming, particularly grain and meat production, become less viable in many parts of the country. Canada is so dependent on trade, and the movement of our products so basic to the survival of many industries, that any increase in transportation costs, however slight, will make many Canadian products uncompetitive on world markets. In international markets the difference between getting and losing a contract is sometimes as little as one-half cent per tonne. It seems a small amount, but when millions of tonnes are involved it can make quite a difference to a bid price.

This Bill, Mr. Speaker, and particularly Clause 4, will have an impact which has not been properly weighed by this Government. It will have a social as well as an economic impact. If we start closing farms and sawmills across the country, this small clause will have a national emotional impact. Transportation has traditionally been a service which united Canada. The migration of people across this country was made possible by our transportation system. Therefore, this user-pay philosophy will affect the basic structure of this country to an extent we are unable to recognize at this point in time. Right now there is some semblance of equality between the regions of this country and their ability to produce and sell goods on the world market. Each time you increase the cost of transporting those goods you decrease their competitiveness. You decrease the viability of a particular industry.

Therefore, I appeal to the Government to accept the motion for a six-month hoist and take a good look at the effect this Bill, in particular Clause 4, will have. I appeal to the Government to change the Bill so that it is possible for Canadian industry to export as much as it possibly can and develop as many foreign markets as it possibly can. If they approach it in that way, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the House will pass the Bill quickly and allow the good parts of it to be put in place so that shipping would be safer and better across Canada.

• (1600)

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I know that there is a temptation for Members to try to associate the $30 million surplus in the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority account with the fact that it may have some impact upon the level of maintenance. I want to clarify that because I think the Member who just spoke clearly left that impression. I can assure him, as I have been assured by the management of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, that there has been no cutback in the level of maintenance and service that has been required over the last number of years. As a matter of fact, the maintenance that was deemed necessary and appropriate has been carried out. I think Hon. Members should know that. They should not try to feast upon a misadventure for short-term political gain because I do not think it serves the best interests of the Seaway and it does very little to enhance credibility and confidence within the Seaway.

For the information of the Hon. Member, this year $26.6 million was appropriated for maintenance. Last year that amount was $33.8 million. It was a little higher due to the fact that some extensive repairs were done to the bridges as a result of the Valleyfield bridge breakdown and the repair of other bridges. In 1983-84 the expenditure for maintenance amounted to $24.1 million. In 1982-83 it was $19.9 million, in 1981-82 it was $19.3 million, and in 1980-81 it was $18.6 million.

The Hon. Member implied in his comments that maintenance expenditures were decreasing and that there was insufficient funding for maintenance. That is certainly not correct. As a matter of fact, the amount of money appropriated for maintenance has been increasing each year. Officials at the Seaway Authority have assured me that at no time have they spared expenditures in terms of maintaining the integrity and effectiveness of the Seaway system. I think it is important for all Members to know that and they should keep that in mind when commenting on this. No one like a breakdown; it is not good for the system and it is certainly not good for Canada.

I can assure Members that a contract has been awarded today to Canron to brace and stabilize the wall. Mr. O'Neil, the President of the Seaway Authority, is meeting with the other general contractors right now to determine who will be awarded the job for the repairs. It was not a collapsed wall, but a blow-out. Until such time as we can determine the cause accurately, I think it would be best to leave the speculation to someone who is more of an authority on that than I am.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. He got so wrapped up in his words about user-pay that I gathered from his comments that he had come to the point of saying that all transportation services are a service and, therefore, should be provided free. I really do not understand the rationale. Surely in the marine sector, as in the other sectors of transportation, there is always an element of cost recovery. Is the Member suggesting that we should have a level of cost recovery for the air mode, the surface mode, the rail mode, and literally a policy of no cost recovery in the marine mode?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I accept the Minister's explanation of the maintenance since he is obviously more knowledgeable about it than I am, it being his responsibility. I would like to say, however, that I would much rather have that $30 million go to reduce the Seaway rates—or at least have them frozen for another couple of years—than to have it used to reduce the deficit. It was money paid in by the users and it should be given back to them.

With regard to the user-pay philosophy of the Government, as a westerner the Minister must recognize that if we do not have some equality of transportation costs we will eventually eliminate the viability of a portion of the industry operating in the West. Had we had equality of transportation costs across the country rather than this concentration—

Mr. Mazankowski: That's exactly what we are trying to do.

Mr. Hovdebo: If we had had equality of transportation costs across the country, we would not have a concentration of industry in the "golden triangle". That is what we had hoped to do. Many countries—Argentina for example—do not charge for the transportation of grain. Perhaps we could be a little more selective. There are certain things which require assistance in order to remain competitive on the world market, and agricultural products are among them. The main use of the railways and the Seaway is for transportation of those agricultural products. Agricultural products bring in more than half of our foreign exchange, which is a benefit to all Canadians. Therefore, it would seem quite logical to provide, if necessary, free transportation for grain to keep people involved in farming and producing.

I recognize that a certain amount of cost recovery has been going on for a long time, but is it necessary to increase it? Maybe we should be taking it off the others if they are increasing. Maybe transportation should be a free service. Maybe that would make it possible for parts of Canada, which are not going to survive under the present policy of the Government, to survive.

I know I am exaggerating the possibilities in this case, but I am doing that for a reason. If we are going to spread the population across the country in the next 100 years in order that the extremities can be populated and can survive, we must deal with the inequities in costs of transportation. Those costs are based on geography rather than on anything else. Why do we not start looking at the possibility of having lower instead of higher freight rates? Prince Edward Island could sell its potatoes at a profit if it did not have such high transportation costs. Maybe that is necessary in order to have a viable industry in many parts of this country.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) explained the purpose of Clause 4 and introduced a motion that the Bill be read a second time six months hence. The way that he feels about Clause 4, I imagine that it should not be read a second time at all, even six years hence.

However, Clause 4 is quite clear and I do not believe it is necessary for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to try to evade the issue. The clause clearly states that for the purpose of defraying the cost of navigational services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard, the Governor in Council—the Minister and the Cabinet—may make regulations respecting charges relating to those services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard. What services are we talking about? The clause goes on to state, "... without limiting the generality of the foregoing...". The Government is giving the broadest interpretation, but these services include navigation, dredging, vessel traffic services, ice-breaking services and escorting services.

The second part of the clause goes on to say that even if the services were not actually performed, the Canadian Coast Guard probably could still charge for that service. The rationale behind that, of course, is that when the Coast Guard is called to perform a service it can still charge for that service even if it is no longer required.

The clause goes on to point out that interest will be charged on late payments. It gives the Government in Council—the Minister of Transport—the right to impose that charge with interest. Furthermore, the Government can go to court to collect that payment. It also gives the Government the right to enter into agreements with provincial administrations.

On the hand the Minister say that this clause does not really mean anything but, on the other hand, he asks why these people should not have to pay. That is absolute nonsense. Think of what you may be confronted with in your own riding, Mr. Speaker, if Hibernia came on stream in the future and they had to bring in oil to service the Petromont refineries. What about those who must pay for ice-breaking services out of the Quebec region?

The Minister of Transport is suggesting that he will balance costs on the basis of where Canadians live. For example, anyone who needs an ice-breaker for their port will have to pay for that. If you happen to live in northern Newfoundland, Labrador or on Prince Edward Island and your fish business, potato business or any other business requires an ice-breaker during the winter, you will have to pay for it. What is the function of the Government of Canada today, according to that logic? Why not pass all of these services on to private enterprise? The Minister is suggesting that everyone should move south. He is asking, why should they not have to pay to have the Coast Guard send an ice-breaker to dig out a ferry run for ferries that service islands? The Minister and the Government must realize that we live on islands. I have constituents who live on islands and they pay a price for living on islands. The price of living there is that transportation is in doubt at various times of the year.

However, the Government wants to turn around now and say that they will have to pay for breaking up that ice in their port. It is telling those who have a fish business and employ people during the winter that they should pay now to have an ice-breaker come in. There are certain ports that service pulp and paper mills, such as the Port of Botwood, that are open year round. According to this Bill, the Minister is saying that there should be a charge to keep that port open year round. If you use that logic, quite obviously it would be much cheaper for a shipper to move his entire operations to a port that never has any ice.

That is strange logic coming from a Government that promised so much prior to the election campaign. It promised better ice-breaking facilities for eastern Canada. It promised better ice-breakers. However, when it came to power, in its first financial statement, the Coast Guard was included in a cut of $51 million among other services such as aids to navigation. That was the first act that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) imposed on the Minister of Transport. Now the Minister must attempt to show the Cabinet that he is attempting to recover costs by introducing user fees.

There is no question that this clause should not be included in the Bill. It will not be included in the Bill if the Hon. Member for Egmont has anything to do with it. The Hon. Member mentioned that this is a particularly bad Bill in which to include such a clause. He spoke about fishermen and farmers. It was not too long ago when the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans stood in this Chamber and announced an increase in moorage fees, the fee to tie up a boat at a wharf that was built with government money. It was not long ago that the Government announced an increase in the cost of insurance on boats. First, it tried to eliminate that scheme and then it tried to privatize it. No private company in Canada would even consider this scheme. This insurance scheme was devised by the Government of Canada because no private insurance firm would ever offer the insurance. The Government turned around and tripled the rates.

However, not content with that, it took another look at its Crown corporation, Fisheries Products International—to which a lot of ice-breaking services have been provided on the north coast of Newfoundland—and made an announcement that would essentially get rid of 15 fish plants in Newfoundland. It did not mention the number of employees affected by this announcement, but it will sell these plants. It has not said what will happen to those fish plants if they are not sold.

There is a total of 2,775 employees involved in those fish plants. Fishermen and employees in those plants do not know what they will be doing two years from now.

Not content with that, the Government took further steps with respect to the Department of National Revenue. It has changed its policy so that there are no more third-party demands. What does that mean?

Mr. Forrestall: What does this have to do with the Bill?

Mr. Baker: The hon. gentleman asks me what this has to do with the Bill. Obviously, it deals with the amendment by the Hon. Member for Egmont to the clause dealing with charges to be levied. Will the Government charge the Government of Newfoundland, the Government of Prince Edward Island or the people who ordered the ice-breaker? Will it charge the boat owners? Will it charge the entire population of the province on a percentage basis? Obviously, the Government will charge those who need the ice-breaking services.

The people whom the Government will have to charge for navigational aids, ice-breaking services and dredging are those who need that service. Those people are primarily fishermen in Newfoundland. Who else needs to have a harbour dredged if it is not the very people who want to move goods and services through that port?

If dredging is required in Twillingate harbour in Newfoundland, whom will the Government charge? Is it going to charge the fish plant that uses the harbour? Is it going to charge the fishermen whose boats have to use the harbour? Is it going to charge the town council? There is no more free dredging under this Bill if the intent of the Bill is carried through, Mr. Speaker. There is no more free dredging by Transport Canada or by Public Works. Public Works cannot do the dredging because it has just sold or is selling its dredging machines for the sake of passing the work over to private enterprise.

Perhaps the most serious part of this Bill is the part we have not really dealt with, namely, aids to navigation. There will be a charge for aids to navigation. Now we will have a cost recovery on aids to navigation. That is a pretty serious matter, Mr. Speaker. As the Hon. Member for Egmont pointed out, with everything else coming down around everybody's ears, what a time to be saying we are now going to think about charging for ice-breaker services!

The fishery in Newfoundland is an absolute and total disaster. There are full-time fishermen going to the welfare office, yet, here we are telling them they have to pay for their phone calls to the weather office—I forgot that one. That is a good subject we have talked about in this Chamber—now that there will be a charge for navigational aids. Insurance on boats has just been upped. In some harbours the cost of tying up to a wharf has been upped three times. There has been an increase in the marine service centre fees. These people have been nailed through National Revenue. The fishery is an absolute disaster, and now the Government of Canada is bringing in a Bill to charge for dredging the harbour and for getting an ice-breaker to come in during the spring. Not only that, but if you have to be escorted or the company boat has to be escorted, there will be a charge for that as well. That is all in the same Bill. It is incredible to be telling fishermen of Newfoundland or the farmers of Prince Edward Island under which you are bringing a Bill into this Chamber that perhaps they will be charged for that service.

Just to drive this home to the Minister of Transport, does he know what most fishermen do now in the spring before they order an ice-breaker, Mr. Speaker? They get out their chain-saws. They dig out a channel with long chain-saws, the big ones, the three foot and two foot blades, and they dig away and cut big blocks around their boats. They lift up the blocks, and they use dynamite. Often Members in this Chamber get phone calls from fishermen asking whether there is any way to get the Government to pay for the dynamite. There is no way the Government will pay for the dynamite.

One time the Government of Newfoundland did pay for the dynamite. But that is after using the chain-saw to get the block of ice out. You work day and night until you get your boat a certain distance into the harbour. The rest of the boats are behind. I hear an Hon. Member on the other side. He is going to learn something if he will just listen. At that point out in the harbour they then call the Coast Guard to bring the ice-breaker. If they have to pay for the ice-breaker—

Mr. Foster: And the chain-saw.

Mr. Baker: —the Hon. Member said "and the chain-saw", that is right. The gas in the chain-saw is not cheap since this Government took over. I can assure you Sir, what the hon. gentleman is suggesting is that these fellows will be out there for six months cutting their way through the ice because there will be no ice-breaker. They cannot afford to pay for the cost of an ice-breaker to come in to their harbours and dig the harbours out.

Mr. Mazankowski: Can they afford to pay for the gas for the ice-breaker?

Mr. Baker: The hon. gentleman is asking me if they can pay for the gas in the ice-breaker. I know what the cost of an ice-breaker is. I can tell you that it is a pretty big cost. It is an incredible cost to operate a ice-breaker. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. Mazankowski: Can they pay for half of it?

Mr. Baker: The Government of Canada should pay the whole cost. These fishermen should not have to pay for the cost, neither should the companies have to pay for the cost of the ice-breakers. I doubt whether the Minister of Transport in outlining this Bill made reference to Clause 4.

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, I did.

Mr. Baker: He is nodding that he did. He did not talk about how much they were going to charge. He did not say, "Well, we might charge them. We might or we might not". He simply outlined what was in this Bill. Later on during exchanges in the House he said, "Isn't it correct that people should have to pay for those services?"

The people of Canada pay for those services when they pay income tax. That is when they pay for these services. They should not have to pay for these services because of geography or where they live. They are paying enough now to the Government of Canada. They should not have to pay any more. Even to suggest in this Bill giving the Government of Canada the authority to levy a fee for such a thing is absolutely outrageous. It is just the same as when the former Minister of the Environment stood up and announced that she was going to charge people to phone the weather office.

All along we can see what the Government is doing to the fishermen. It is saying, "Look, hesitate before you phone the weather office because you have to pay. Hesitate before you phone the Coast Guard because you are going to have to pay. If you are out in a storm 100 miles off the coast, hesitate before you phone the Coast Guard because you may have to pay". You may have to pay; you may not have to pay.

By bringing in this Bill the possibility is there that people will have to pay. The Minister of Transport should realize that the Coast Guard in Canada today performs functions not required to be performed in the regulations. It is not the Coast Guard's responsibility to go into harbours. It is not the Coast Guard's written responsibility. It is not the Coast Guard's written responsibility to provide back-up for ferry systems to islands off the coast of Canada and off the coast of Newfoundland, but the Coast Guard does it as a matter of course. With the restrictions being placed on the coast Guard by this Government and by the President of the Treasury Board and now by this Bill, a lot of these services will disappear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions and comments? There being no questions and comments, we will resume debate. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell).

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to speak briefly to the legislation before us. I have a particular interest whenever there is legislation relating to shipping because the Port of Vancouver is surrounded by my riding, that of Vancouver East. Many people in Vancouver East earn their livelihood in port, shipping or fishing related activities.

I want to concentrate on the aspects of this Bill that appear to have some real implications for the people of B.C. We have heard many speakers talking about the East and the Seaway area. I would like to concentrate on some of the aspects of the Bill that may, and I underline "may", have an implication for those in British Columbia. I say "may" because this Bill is pretty vague. It is heard to know exactly what the impact will be. It is enabling legislation which in some ways is good, but for some areas like the St. Lawrence Seaway, as my colleagues have pointed out, it could spell real disaster. Perhaps certain sections need to have more specifics and more teeth added.

Many aspects of the Bill, we feel, are a step in the right direction, although we would have liked to have seen policies spelled out in more detail.

● (1630)

It is a change from the deregulation policy of the Progressive Conservative Party and also of the Liberal Party. This Bill seems to provide opportunity for more regulation rather than for deregulation, which seems to be the transportation policy of the Government for all modes of transportation.

Mr. Forrestall: Better regulation.

Ms. Mitchell: We hope it will be better regulation, but not necessarily. That is one point we want clarified and made more specific. I am glad to see that it at least provides for some regulation regarding the impact of hazardous products carried by shipping vessels. However, we would have liked these measures spelled out more specifically.

I have a particular concern about this matter, as do people living around the Port of Vancouver. We live within an area which is faced with a very explosive situation on land, at sea and sometimes in the air where there are major transfers of goods, some of which are very dangerous products. We would have liked the safety measures spelled out in more detail. I appeal to the Minister to look at the matter and to give us more assurances that there will be a review of the safety provisions or the lack thereof, and that there will be changes to tighten up the protections.

The Bill enables the Governor in Council to make regulations to ensure public safety, but few details are spelled out. Safety in terms of the transportation of dangerous cargoes is a very major concern, as I have said, in the Port of Vancouver. I should like to mention one example of this. Two or three times a year there is a Japan-bound ship which goes quiety through the Port of Vancouver, with its hold full of liquid petroleum gas. It is a 40,000 tonne tanker and it carries highly explosive propane. It goes under the second narrowest bridge where there is a lot of shipping. When people take a good look at this situation, they realize that it is a very explosive and dangerous one, but it is only one of many vessels which carry dangerous goods.

Apparently there has been no consultation with concerned groups in the development of this piece of legislation. The Government spent most of last year talking about how it intended to consult with all affected groups before making changes and bringing in new legislation. Yet every time we look at a piece of legislation, it seems that there has been no consultation with the groups directly affected. We are sincere about wanting to know what people around the Port of Vancouver think about the Bill. We telephoned fishing vessel owners, and they had not heard that there was a Bill. They were very surprised, very concerned and wanted to know what was in it. Also we telephoned the fishermen's union, and we were told the same thing. We telephoned the ILWU, the longshoremen's union, and it had not heard about the Bill. Of course, many of its members are unemployed; approximately 2,000 of its casuals are unable to obtain work. It wanted to know immediately what impact the Bill would have upon shipping costs and its eventual impact on the jobs of its members. We also telephoned the office of the Mayor of Vancouver which has a special economic committee that is very concerned about shipping and shipping-related matters. They did not know anything about the Bill. In addition we telephoned the Vancouver Waterfront Coalition. I think this coalition is a good development. It includes most community groups representing neighbourhoods along the Vancouver side of the port. It also includes all maritime unions. It is a very strong coalition. It has been looking at all aspects of the port, particularly its impact upon surrounding communities and jobs. That coalition had not heard anything; it had not heard a word about the Bill. Why was it not consulted? Also we contacted the Pacific Coast Maritime Council, a council of all maritime unions concerned with all of British Columbia, not just the Vancouver area. It had not heard about it. Even some of the officials at the Port of Vancouver whom we contacted did not know that the Bill was being brought forward. What kind of consultation is this? Surely it is important to let these groups know that a Bill is coming forward. Hopefully it makes sense to have these groups involved in consultations both before the Bill is brought in and when it is before committee.

However, none of these groups had heard about it. We are disappointed in that.

I should like to talk a little about cost recovery for Coast Guard services, a part of the Bill which is of considerable concern to people right across Canada. I was very interested in the remarks of Hon. Members from the eastern coast and from the St. Lawrence Seaway area in this regard. Of course, we in British Columbia are very concerned as well. As I understand the Bill, the Conservatives are imposing a user-pay philosophy, a philosophy which was initiated by the Liberals. It is implicit in the Bill that shipping companies and vessel owners will have to pay for the cost of Coast Guard services. This seems to be ridiculous. The Clauses in the Bill are very vague, and it is difficult to predict the exact impact. However, my Party and I challenge very strongly the principle. My Party has always challenged user-pay policies relating to essential services for which all taxpayers should be paying because the services benefit all taxpayers. Clause 4 would require cost recovery for Coast Guard services. For example, this could have a serious impact upon people in the fishing industry, upon commercial shipping and subsequently upon the costs of activities in the Port of Vancouver and upon the costs of consumer goods.

Currently, the Coast Guard costs $824 million per year. Most of us would agree—certainly those of us from my part of Canada—that we need a vastly improved Coast Guard service. It needs to be improved; it needs to be expanded, particularly the inadequate search and rescue services along the coasts. Many Hon. Members will recall a very serious incident last spring wherein there was no adequate prediction of an approaching storm. There was some satellite information, but there was no accurate prediction of the storm. Off the Queen Charlotte Islands there was a major disaster. A number of vessels went down and there was a loss of lives. This happens all too often on that coast. We need improved weather services as well as Coast Guard services.

I think it is important to look again—and I would like the Minister's view on it—at having weather ships off the coast. I know weather ships cost money. If they are out there, they should be paid for by all of us through our taxes; it should not only be charged back to the boats using the weather information.

If there are increased costs for Coast Guard services, we know that the costs will be charged to the vessel owners, the shipping companies, the Port of Vancouver and so on. This ultimately will increase shipping costs. I should like to talk about it because it is a very real concern to those of us on the West Coast. It is really a desperate situation for the Port of Vancouver to remain competitive with American ports and in international trade. Of course this is basic to our whole trade in the Pacific Rim. We are very concerned about any added costs. It is very difficult to compete even now. The Port of Vancouver must have every advantage from the Government and from all of us in Canada, not just those people in British Columbia. This port serves all western Canada, and it must have every advantage if it is to be able to compete with the Port of Seattle and with the Port of Bellingham.

I would like to tell the House of a new development of which I just heard recently, a pretty threatening kind of development which again illustrates how very important it is to help the Port of Vancouver to be as competitive as possible. I learned through an article in Vancouver's The Province of last week that the Port of Bellingham has bought a 13.3 hectare property next to the Canadian border to serve traffic bypassing Vancouver. It is said that this land is near Sumas, and has been bought for $400,000 and is expected to be awarded foreign trade zone status by the U.S. Government by the spring of 1986. This facility would receive truck and trailer deliveries of cargo from both the U.S. and Canada. Of course, this foreign trade zone which would operate at reduced costs like a free trade zone would allow its trans-shipment centre to function as a free port.

Traffic sought by the Port of Bellingham for its new facility could include the transfer to a Canadian railway for onward delivery to eastern Canada, thus avoiding the Port of Vancouver all together, of Japanese goods coming into Canada. The people who are developing this port admitted that its chief aim will be to serve shippers who wish to avoid the Port of Vancouver.

Mr. Siddon: Why?

Ms. Mitchell: I see that one of the Ministers who happens to be from the Lower Mainland is present. I would be very interested to hear him comment on this matter. Perhaps he knows some more about it. I should think he would agree that this poses a tremendous threat to the Port of Vancouver. I raise this matter because competition is very tough. We in Vancouver need to have every advantage.

While speaking of the Port of Vancouver, I would like to remind the Minister of something. I must admit—and sometimes it is pretty hard to admit this—that we thought that the Government had a pretty good policy on shipping. As I recall, during the 1979 election campaign, Conservative Members were even talking about a merchant marine. Perhaps my friends across the way could substantiate that. We have not heard anything about it, however, since they have been in power. That is something about which I would like to hear more.

When the new structure, the Canada Ports Corporation, was established to replace the National Harbours Board and the system was changed through decentralization under local port corporations, we expected to have an efficient, decentralized and autonomous operation in Vancouver. That was particularly relevant for Vancouver because there is enough income to upgrade facilities without having to wait for six months for approval from Ottawa. We did not like the way the boards were appointed politically, and I notice that the Conservative Government has continued to make patronage appointments to the board of the corporation. However, we were pleased with the idea that ports would be decentralized, become relevant to the region and hopefully become more efficiently managed.

When members of my Party were making inquiries about this Bill, we heard some complaints indicating that the new Government has influenced the ports policy. I thought that the central Government was to have a hands-off policy, but apparently that is not so. In particular, the Conservative Government has changed leasing practices. As a result, there is considerable confusion and there have been delays. We of course had had enough of this under the old Liberal policy. I would ask the Minister to check into this matter and see that the Government will not leave the short-term subleasing to companies that are on the port rather than have them under the control of the port itself. Each company, of course, has a very special vested interest. We are particularly concerned that the use of all land around the port should be in the best interests of the entire community, including the residential communities surrounding the port.

The new board of the Port Corporation has been in place for some time now. It would seem to me that it is now time to review what is happening in the Port of Vancouver in view of these challenges from the South.

I would like to return to the question of dangerous goods. I would refer to a very significant report that was made in 1983 by a man called Joseph Marsten who was a federal public servant in marine planning and whose report entitled Danger, Chemical Cargoes in Port, illustrated many concerns that he had as a professional about the Port of Vancouver. I think that this report is relevant to this Bill which deals with hazardous products.

Mr. Marsten listed all of the very dangerous products that go through the Port of Vancouver including ethylene-dichloride which is a component of the plastics industry, chlorine which is used for the pulp and paper industry and is shipped up the coast, LPGs and propane exported to Japan for fuel and methanol which is used in the petrochemical and plastic industries and is also exported to Japan. He indicated that people do not realize the extent to which these products are present within the harbour and that assorted chemicals have come to Vancouver by rail and barge.

Because of Expo '86, we are pleased to see that there has been a recent move of the rail transfer of dangerous goods by land from downtown Vancouver to outside greater Vancouver itself. This is long overdue and my constituents are very grateful for this move.

I am sorry that I do not have more time to talk about its details, but the study to which I referred substantiates the fact that the standards in the Port of Vancouver are very low. Again, I would ask for an update on this report and I would ask for regulations in this Bill specifying in much greater detail the kind of safety measures that are needed. We need strong enforcement measures so that we are not living with the threat of dangerous cargo going through our ports.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I noted that the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) drew attention to the potential plight of the Port of Vancouver arising from the recently announced proposal to create a new port of entry at Bellingham just immediately south of the Canadian border which would presumably allow offshore shipping companies to gain access to Canadian markets not through the Port of Vancouver but through a nearby port operating under United States jurisdiction. The Hon. Member made reference to the fact that this proposed American port would operate as a free port or an economic free zone of some sort.

Perhaps I might ask the Hon. Member if she and other members of the New Democratic Party believe in the concept of a free port or an economic free zone. Second, perhaps the Hon. Member could explain why it is that this proposed U.S. port which I agree will represent a considerable threat to West Coast Shipping interests and the Port of Vancouver would indeed pose a threat. In other words, does she feel that it will operate at a lower cost per unit volume of commodities shipped than the Port of Vancouver? If so, why would the cost be so much lower in this nearby port? How does she feel the proposed Bill and the amendment to the Bill proposed by the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) will affect this competitive situation?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister knows only too well, I am a Member of Parliament from the riding of Vancouver East and the new Democratic critic for social policy and women's issues. The matter before us is not directly related to those areas for which I am my Party's critic.

• (1650)

If I may digress for a moment, I meant to say that the Bill has sexist language in it and we will have to change that. That is a Conservative approach to such matters.

Getting back to the field of shipping, in which I am not an expert, I know what the Minister is getting at. I also know that he supports the Social Credit Government of British Columbia which is why he asks this underhanded question.

Mr. Siddon: It is a fair question.

Ms. Mitchell: He wants the type of free econmic zones in British Columbia which would give the freedom to exploit workers and women and do away with unions. The high-tech field, which he is supposed to be in charge of, is one of the worst fields for doing that. If he is looking at this situation as a model for his Ministry, then I say that he is in for a great deal of trouble in British Columbia. I think that is really what he is aiming at.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member has either not heard my questions clearly or she has misunderstood them. I was not making any statement as to my own disposition with respect to the question of an economic free zone concept or the free port concept. However, I noted in the announcement of this new and potentially damaging initiative in Washington State that it was claimed that it would allow commodities to enter Canada on a much lower per unit cost basis and that these goods would be delivered to market areas, presumably in eastern Canada, by way of entry through Washington State. I asked the Hon. Member if she had some comment with respect to the view of the NDP on free ports and the question of whether there is any good reason why a port operating in Washington State should be more price-competitive than the Port of Vancouver, part of which is encompassed in the Hon. Member's riding. I would expect that she would be somewhat knowledgeable with respect to the operations of the Port of Vancouver since part of it is encompassed within her riding.

Ms. Mitchell: Of course I am.

Mr. Siddon: I understand that the amendment before the House proposes to suspend the debate on this measure for six months. If that were to take place, then what will that do for the status of the Port of Vancouver in the eyes of offshore shippers?

I am also advised by way of the announcement dealing with the new port in Bellingham that, in fact, it is the frustration with the delays at the Port of Vancouver, as well as the fact of higher operating costs, which has encouraged the location of a port in the United States so close to our city and so close to the major and important Port of Vancouver.

Could the Hon. Member answer these questions? Is the NDP in favour of free ports? Why is it cheaper to bring products into Canada through a port in Washington State than through our own Port of Vancouver, part of which is in the Hon. Member's riding?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, I do not have any profound specialization in this area. I do know that the Port of Vancouver has been struggling and that there are many, many reasons for those struggles. One of the reasons—and I wish my colleague from the Prairies were here to expound on it—is that there is sometimes a difficulty in transferring grains to ships. We have seen ships paying demurrage costs in the port. When I checked into the matter I found many complex reasons why this has taken place, not the least of which is the complex type of specialized grains which we have which have to go into different containers for transportation.

I mentioned earlier an administrative delay in some circumstances in the Port of Vancouver. I mentioned the method of contracting out leases which I understand is the new method in which this Government has had a hand.

There is also the matter of labour costs. There is no question about that. If the Minister is saying that we should not have trade unions—

Mr. Siddon: I did not say that.

Ms. Mitchell: —and that workers on the waterfront should not have decent wages, then let us hear him say that since that is what he is implying.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Ms. Mitchell: I do not know a great deal about free ports, as I have already mentioned. This is a proposal about which I heard just last week. I think that would be a major concern.

Mr. Siddon: Would you support it?

Ms. Mitchell: We are for fair trade and not free trade, as the Conservatives are. We are for fair ports and efficiently run, decentralized Canadian ports with a Canadian board supplying a great many Canadian jobs, especially in Vancouver East.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member spoke about her concern with respect to the movement of dangerous goods. If I understood her correctly, she left the House with the impression that there was nothing of substance in the Bill with respect to the movement of dangerous goods. I would ask the Hon. Member to examine the Bill again and look at Clauses 44 and 52. In looking at those clauses she will find that there are amendments contained therein which will in fact provide for more effective regulation of the movement of dangerous goods by sea. This is consistent with the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act in the area of packaged commodities. Bulk cargoes will continue to be regulated under the Canada Shipping Act. I suggest that if the Hon. Member were to look again at the Bill she would find that there are some fairly effective amendments in it which I believe will achieve the purposes to which she has alluded.

I believe I heard the Hon. Member say that there was insufficient consultation with respect to this measure. If there ever was a Bill which involved long, drawn-out efforts to consult with all players, then this is clearly one of them. The trade unions were consulted, as were the ship owners, ship builders and ship repairers, the oil industry and the fishing industry. Because of the Bill's importance, its widespread implications and the fact that there are some 12 protocols and conventions to which Canada could not become a party, this Bill necessitated that type of dialogue. I can assure the Hon. Member that type of dialogue did take place.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, because I do not think the Minister was in the House when I mentioned this fact, I would like to point out to him that someone in my office called a number of groups in the Vancouver area, and I listed them. He will be able to read that in Hansard tomorrow. Not one of these groups knew about the Bill which is being debated today. I would be very happy to see the safety sections reviewed by some of these groups. I congratulate the Minister for taking up those measures. What I was saying is that we feel there could be more specifics in the Bill in other areas.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have a chance to speak on Bill C-75 because there is a great deal happening at the present time with shipping in the St. Lawrence Seaway system. The motion with respect to giving a six month hoist to the Bill concerns Clause 4 which would amend Section 3.1(1) of the Act. It would give the Government the power to charge user fees for the provision of navigational aids, dredging, vessel traffic services, ice-breaking services and escorting services. As the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) and the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) mentioned, these are services which the federal Government, the Coast Guard and the Department of Transport have traditionally paid for. At a time when our potato producers in P.E.I. are receiving one cent or two cents a pound less than what it costs to produce them, for the Government to move in and charge for ice-breaking services in order to open those ports in P.E.I. is just incredible. The same can be said for ice-breaking services in Newfoundland so that fishing vessels can get an early start in the spring. It is just incredible that the Government is imposing fees for navigational aids and ice-breaking services. This winter we are facing not only the worst disaster for western agriculture since perhaps the 1930s because of the drought last summer and the damp weather this fall, but it comes at a time when crop prices are adequate. Adequate prices but poor yields. Now the Government wants to impose charges for ice-breaking in the St. Lawrence and on the Great Lakes, and that is unbelievable.

I point that out because not only is there a great likelihood that the Government will have to provide ice-breaking services later this fall and early in the winter, but also because of the seriousness of the crop situation. Not only are farmers losing their farms, they are applying for welfare. Every night we see on television farms being auctioned off and the RCMP hustling the farmers off their land. This is all being done by a Tory Government. The earnings of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool for 1985-86 will be down as much as 50 per cent from 1984-85. The Alberta Wheat Pool expects that its 1985-86 earnings will be down as much as 74 per cent from 1984-85. Statistics Canada's most recent estimate, which was released in July of this year and certainly things have deteriorated since then, said that the 1985 realized net farm income in Manitoba was $299 million, down 15 per cent. In Saskatchewan it was $693 million, down 32 per cent. In Alberta it was $437 million, down 24 per cent. We are looking at an over-all decrease of 15 per cent in July. That will probably get worse because of the very wet harvest season which will result not only in many crops not being taken off, but those that are will have substantially reduced grades which cannot even be sold in international markets.

I would also point out that, in addition to this disaster in western Canada, we have had major damage to Lock 7, I believe, in the Welland Canal. A few days ago the Seaway Authority said it would take three weeks to fix, and I understand it will now be more than a month. There are 32 vessels backed up behind that lock and if that grain has to be shipped by rail, it will mean an additional cost of $10 to $15 a tonne for the producer. These vessels are sitting idle, laying off their crews and this Government is sitting on its hands and trying to impose new user fees for ice-breaking and navigational aids. If the provincial Governments can provide highways and signs and all the rest of it, then surely the Department of Transport should be able to provide navigational aids. What is going to happen if the Minister does not provide proper navigational aids for the Soo Locks? A lot of people do not realize that the Soo Locks handle more shipping than the Suez and Panama Canals put together. If the Coast Guard does not provide the proper navigational aids for the Soo Locks and out into Whitefish Bay and there is a marine disaster, what will the Minister do, throw up his hands and say that they did not pay for the aids so if they have a shipwreck it is their problem? Navigational aids are the responsibility of the federal Government and it is unthinkable for the Government not to provide them. This clause in the Act should be withdrawn.

Neither is it reasonable for the Government to charge the shipping industry for these services. If you look at the 330 Tory promises during the election campaign, you will see that one promise was to upgrade navigational aids and systems to ensure increased marine safety.

Mr. Mazankowski: Right.

Mr. Foster: I do not see any provision in there for charging for that service.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Foster: Surely that is breaking faith with the Canadian people.

Mr. Mazankowski: You are unreal. You cannot even say that with a straight face.

Mr. Foster: There is no provision in the promise for charging for these services. I defy any of the Members opposite to say that they said they were going to charge for these services. They said only that they were going to provide upgraded navigational aids and systems to ensure increased marine safety. They said nothing about charging for it. They also talked about improved search and rescue. I have not heard the Minister get around to doing that. If he is going to provide increased search and rescue services, is he going to charge for it? Does the person who is in serious danger have to pay to be rescued? We are talking about $1,000 an hour for ice-breaking services so it is a very expensive business.

The 20 promises with regard to transportation include an undertaking to conduct a review of CN Marine ferry services to guarantee that they are equitable and not damaging to the competitiveness of local industries with particular reference to tourism. As I recall, Mr. Speaker, the provisions of black Thursday, November 8, 1984 when the Government lowered the boom on Atlantic Canada, were to increase the charges on marine transportation in Atlantic Canada. Now they not only want to increase those charges, as they did on black Thursday, but they want to charge for ice-breaking in those harbours in Atlantic Canada and to charge even for the navigational aids. It is unbelievable that this Bill provides for such horrendous charges on Canadian maritime activities.

I hope that the Minister will withdraw that section or give a commitment that he will not be charging. I think it is entirely possible that we may have to extend the navigation season because I think it is going to take a lot longer than the Minister has been indicating to remedy the serious damage which has occurred in the Welland Canal. I think the Minister will have to make a commitment not to charge the people whose ships are delayed in getting through the Welland Canal for ice-breaking. Surely that would be most unfair. That may be the reason he is trying to rush this Bill through the House, but I certainly hope it is not.

Navigational aids are not only involved in commercial shipping but in recreational boating as well. The north channel of Lake Huron is one of the best recreational boating areas in the world. It rivals the British Virgin Islands in the Caribbean and the sailing and cruising areas in the Aegean Sea. Those navigational aids are not only important, but essential. I do not know who the Minister will charge for navigational aids in the north channel, but I do know that it will be very unfair.

We are already feeling the impact of the Tory Government. It has cut back on our mobile surveillance group under customs. We had a year round customs service for Manitoulin Island servicing the airport, harbours, and ports for north channel communities such as Blind River. In that way people were able to phone to clear customs, but that has been cut out. We see in this Bill that there will be a service charge for the provision of navigational aids.

This transportation manifesto of the Tory Party talks in terms of providing ferry and navigational services in an attempt to enhance tourism. We have not seen that because there has been no commitment to improving those harbours or navigational aids in the north channel of Lake Huron. I do not say that simply as an Opposition member. When the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans appeared before the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry last spring practically every Member of Parliament from the Lake Huron area pressed for improved harbour facilities for recreational boating because it is a multimillion dollar industry. I certainly hope that the Minister will withdraw the provision for charging for navigational aids, just as he should withdraw the provision with regard to dredging. We have to spend millions of dollars maintaining those main shipping lanes through the St. Marys River. It is inconceivable that the Minister is going to charge for dredging those channels or for providing ice-breaking services in those areas.

The Minister's area, just as every other area, has suffered tremendously due to the crop situation. There has been at least a $2 billion loss of revenue to western grain farmers. I hope the Minister will not impose extra charges for ice-breaking and navigational aids in the Seaway. If he really wants to help the grain industry and western agriculture he will give an indication almost immediately that he is going to withdraw these provisions from the Bill.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to talk a bit about this Bill, particularly in relation to the Province of Quebec. First, I would like to inform the House of the rather disturbing news that the Welland Canal blockage will continue for at least a week before we will learn to what extent the damage will continue to interfere with traffic. Apparently a contract has been let to Canron Incorporated to stabilize the lock walls. That must be done before the lock can be drained and then it will be possible to find out how long the Seaway will be closed and how much it will cost to fix the damage. The Seaway Authority does anticipate that the Seaway will open again before the end of the season which is about eight weeks away. Given this crisis, which obviously was not anticipated last spring, it seems to me that the Government's plan to take $30 million out of the coffers of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and to force it to come begging to Treasury Board for the expenditures which may be required to repair the Welland Canal, is a very short-sighted policy which should be resisted.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the shipping companies and the producers whose products move via the Seaway, which is the major channel for navigation in eastern Canada, have been repeatedly warned of tool increases of 25 or 30 per cent next year. They are quaking in their boots at the suggestion in Bill C-75 that there may be further increases because of the proposal of the Minister that the costs of navigational aids, dredging and ice-breaking will be levied on a full recovery basis to ships traversing Canadian waterways, regardless of whether they make direct use of those particular services.

We really have not one Bill but two, Mr. Speaker. One Bill is extremely long and technical. As I am not a spokesperson on this particular area, I would not presume to speak too knowledgeably about all of the aspects of pollution regulations and that kind of thing. I hope that consultation has taken place but I was disturbed to learn that perhaps it has not. It is clear from the Minister's statement that this part of the Bill, which makes up about 99 per cent of its clauses, is apparently required in order to enable Canada to come into accordance with international pollution control and other international agreements.

The remainder of the Bill which has provoked members of my Party to express grave concern provides for cost recovery. Clause 4 provides enabling legislation to allow the Government to recover the cost of navigational services provided by the Coast Guard. This Clause concerns my Party and I because it amounts to a blank cheque which the industry is being asked to write for the Government. The cost recovery principle has been actively and almost ardently proposed by certain members of the Progressive Conservative Party. The industry does not know what this means except that it knows that the cost of Coast Guard services is estimated at between $130 million and $180 million a year.

One of the major concerns among shippers and the affected industries is that the allocation of those costs, if that is what the Government intends to do, will be done almost inevitably on a very arbitrary basis. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Epp), estimates that Seaway tolls may in fact double on grain ships moving down from Thunder Bay because of this particular measure. In addition, the Seaway itself has been talking about a 25 per cent increase in tolls for next year. The American Seaway Authority is opposed to any such change, perhaps because it has reserves while the reserves are being taken away from the Canadian Seaway Authority.

The demand for Seaway services is in decline, as reflected in the cargo traffic which was down some 20 per cent last year and 20 per cent the year before. This is not particularly the fault of the Seaway but due to changing market conditions from when the Seaway was established in the 1950s. It does not take much wit or wisdom to realize that this is not a time to be rushing in with substantial increases in the cost of service. There is a very grave risk of having a downward spiral in which each increase in cost leads to a further decline in the demand. Therefore, costs must be spead over a smaller base of use which means that the cost continues to go up until the cost will be virtually infinite on the last remaining ship to use the Great Lakes waterway and the St. Lawrence Seaway.

I am sure that the Minister does not intend to go down in history as the Minister who killed ocean navigation and Great Lakes freight navigation but that in fact could be the ultimate consequence of a policy of full-cost recovery as it is being proposed by the Government.

Let me remind the House of a number of statements made by the Government when it was campaigning for office prior to the September 4 election. In its Prince Albert declaration of July 5, 1984, the present Government stated quite explicitly that it would immediately examine ways and means to provide improved services and equitable rates in consultation with grain producers who were discriminated against geographically. This would include those grain producers who use the Thunder Bay route.

The Government talked about the need for the federal Government and the railways to continued to provide a special low rate to assist producers who are competing with subsidized grain export nations. Again, it does not take a lot of perspicacity to recognize that this is the situation we are facing this year. It has been a difficulty year for grain exports. Countries like China which have been traditional buyers of Canadian grain are themselves beginning to export and we are facing a situation where there is cut-throat competition from the United States and other grain producing nations. Certainly, there is substantial suspicion that there are very major subsidies involved. Our grain industry, particularly the growing sector, has had little or no subsidy throughout its history.

In July, 1984, the Government stated that producers must be guaranteed an efficient cost-effective and reliable transportation system. While there may be two definitions for "cost-effective", the Government believes that it means full cost recovery. However, if full cost recovery means that the grain is simply bottled up in the Prairies and not shipped because it cannot compete on the world market, then it seems to be a damn fool idea, particularly in view of the desperate problems of world hunger in Asia and particularly on the Continent of Africa.

The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and those of his frame of mind within the Cabinet have adopted the theory invented by Milton Friedman. Will the Government simply apply this theory in the area of ocean navigation and navigational aids and thereby sharply cut Canada's shipments to the world of grain export which amount to $6 billion a year? Is that what the Government intended? Is that the legacy which the Minister wants to leave?

I strongly urge him to consider deleting Clause 4 which calls for cost recovery on navigational aids and other services provided by the Coast Guard. If he wishes to have that matter become the subject of consultation, let him do so and bring it back as a separate Bill if he is still convinced that something must be done. In other words, let us separate the technical and pollution control aspects of this Bill from the cost aspect of the Bill. Essentially, this measure is two bills in one package.

I question the Minister's comment that his Ministry has consulted widely with respect to this Bill. Too often the Government, like its predecessor, has gone through the semblance of consultation without bothering to listen to what people were telling it. According to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan, the consultations he has had have demonstrated widespread concern about taking money away from the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. There was widespread concern about the proposals to allocate all of the costs of the Coast Guard to navigation because of the impact that may be felt by the shipping industry, which is extremely important for us in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on Bill C-75, and more particularly on the need for a strategy concerning the use of our maritime channels. I am referring specifically to eastern Canada because I represent a constituency along the Quebec border, through which runs one of Canada's canals, the Rideau Canal, which gives my constituents access to the whole world if their craft are small enough to ply the canal. It is not a commercial canal by any means, but still we are aware of the fact that there is a link between the world and the heart of my riding in downtown Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, the Province of Quebec now has a secretariat for the development of the St. Lawrence. The Province of Ontario recently set up a royal commission on the St. Lawrence Seaway and shipping on the Great Lakes. Our country's two central provinces have begun to show concern over the fact that the resources of the Seaway as well as those of the St. Lawrence River and of the Great Lakes have been practically ignored in planning and regional and industrial development projects.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the Province of Quebec for giving serious consideration to the way it is going to use such a major resource as the St. Lawrence River. You have the port of Montreal and the port of Quebec City, two major Canadian ports, and all along the St. Lawrence River there are very important industrial sites which offer opportunities for the industrial development of the entire Province of Quebec, but it is indeed a resource which until now has been underexploited by the province and the country. As far as I know, to this day the Canadian Government has never had an industrial transport strategy on the use of those resources.

● (1730)

Mr. Speaker, we Members of the New Democratic Party are fully aware of the fact that the City of Montreal is an international centre, a world centre of transport and communications. Because of its location on the North American continent, Montreal is the place where head offices of transport companies such as Air Canada, Canadian National Railways and Canadian Pacific are found. It is also the site of Canada's largest harbour because, traditionally, it has been the Canadian maritime trade gateway, besides being the turntable of our railways. Its airports—Mirabel and Dorval—make it a world communications centre as evidenced by the fact that several major communications companies like Bell Canada and Teleglobe Canada are located in Montreal, as is the International Air Transport Association.

So we have to wonder whether the Government is prepared to promote the development of Montreal through a municipal, regional, provincial and national strategy which would indeed make the city a world transportation and communications centre.

I would suggest that it is the kind of strategy we must implement, but what do we see? We see, for instance, that although the new Port of Montreal is autonomous in relation to the Canada Ports Corporation, it still depends entirely on the federal Government. There is no input on the executive board from the Province of Quebec, no real input from the people and municipalities that depend on the port, no concept of a strategy for using the resources, including buildings and other facilities, of the Port of Montreal for the industrial and strategic development of the City of Montreal and the general area.

Mr. Speaker, the same could be said as far as the province of Quebec is concerned. It is interesting to note that the PQ Government in Quebec has had very little to say about the fact that during the eight years the PQ has been in power, two of the major ports in the province of Quebec have remained under control of the federal Government, and also that nothing has been done by the PQ Government to provide for a partnership system, under which both Governments, the Quebec provincial Government and the Canadian Government, would share responsibility for these important resources in the St. Lawrence River.

Mr. Speaker, instead of seeing the St. Lawrence as a major national resource, this Government has decided to levy charges on navigation and shipping in the St. Lawrence River which may become very high and very costly. There is a serious risk that this may further reduce shipping, which is so important for the province of Quebec and Eastern Canada in general.

Mr. Speaker, because of the physical geography of our country, the cost of maintaining the Coast Guard in Eastern Canada is higher than it is in Western Canada, or rather, British Columbia. If we levy charges to cover the cost of maintaining the Coast Guard in Eastern Canada, for instance, this may well create even greater disadvantages than the problems we already have now and which we are experiencing, for instance, with the Seaway.

I think the Minister should explain how we can expect shipping to develop on the St. Lawrence Seaway if we increase the charges for the Seaway by 25 to 30 per cent and introduce a full cost-recovery system which is apparently being proposed by the Government in Clause 4 of this Bill.

Mr. Speaker, I think we have an abundance of examples to show it does not make sense to recover the total cost from users of our transportation facilities. Furthermore, we must consider the history of this country, and the fact that the location of our cities and towns, our regions and industries, has often been an accident of history. It is a fact of life and we cannot get around it. For instance, are we going to say that in future, we can no longer provide ferry services for the residents of Prince Edward Island because costs have become too high and the Government wants to recover the full cost? I do not think the last passenger to use the lighthouse and ferry services between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick should be forced to pay the entire cost of navigational aids, and so forth.

Is that the Government's position? Well, they will say: Maybe not, because we do have a constitutional obligation. In any case, the same problems exist in the rest of Canada, and especially in the province of Quebec and perhaps also in Ontario.

My colleague from Northern Ontario pointed out that if navigation charges were levied on small pleasure boats in the northern canal near Lake Superior, these boats would be doomed to extinction because nobody would be able to pay the requisite fee. If we apply the same principle to the Rideau Canal, the result could well be the same. We might see a time when this canal, which is very important in recreational terms, would be hardly used because of the charges levied by the Government, thanks to the principles of Mr. Stevens and the Minister of Transport, of Economics, who want all costs to be borne by users.

[English]

This principle which is to put forward full cost recovery ignores a great deal of history. It ignores that initially in the development of our country the St. Lawrence was the only highway we had. Settlements along the St. Lawrence in Quebec, dating back to 1642 or thereabouts, were located there because the only way one could get around was by boat, coasting from one location to another. I do not think that in 1640 people anticipated the current Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) would be coming along with Clause 4 of Bill C-75 requiring that the full cost of those navigational aids of ice-breaker services and that kind of thing should be imposed—

Mr. Forrestall: It doesn't require it.

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member says it does not require it but the Hon. Member should know perfectly well—and I hope he rises during the opportunity for comments—that we are giving an open door to the ministry to apply these charges. What about a port on which a fish packing plant in a small Gaspé village depended? It could cost $100,000 a year, according to the Ministry's allocation of costs, to send ice-breakers up and down the coast of that village in the winter-time. It could happen that boats never come into the village and the winter-time but they would during the spring, the summer and the fall. They would nevertheless be charged an allocated cost for ice-breaking service which they never used, which is permitted in Clause 4 as it is written here. That is why I and my Party are suggesting at the very least that that section be taken out, that the premise be referred to a standing committee of the House of Commons. We changed the rules to look at situations like that to see whether there is not a better way of accomplishing what the Government wants. Alternatively, in order to establish, as I suspect, the idea is a bum idea in the first place and it should not be proceeded with in its current form.

I would hate to see this Government go down in history as the Government that closed up ports in Newfoundland because of the full cost recovery principle, as the Government that closed down villages in the Gaspé because of the full cost recovery principle, as the Government that closed down villages, ports and services in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) riding of Manicouagan because of the full cost recovery principle. That is what is under-way right here, Mr. Speaker.

My colleagues have pointed out the very substantial link—

Mr. Forrestall: It is your imagination.

Mr. Cassidy: —between the Port of Thunder Bay and the grain elevators in the Prime Minister's riding of Manicouagan. They have pointed out that the full cost recovery principle, which jeopardizes grain shipments and jobs in Thunder Bay also jeopardizes jobs in the Prime Minister's riding. Everybody knows there are not enough jobs to go around in that area because of the number of other industries which the Prime Minister himself has shut down or have been shut down since he went into politics on an elected basis.

Perhaps I can appeal to Government Members on the basis of "Don't do it Brian". Do not put the Prime Minister in a situation where he has to make special pleadings to the Minister of Transport in order to keep the industries in his riding from being shut down because the Minister of Transport, aided by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion wants to apply the full cost recovery principle. Take this clause out of the Bill. Allow us to think about it separately and then the technical parts of these amendments to the Canada Shipping Act can go forward.

My time is almost up, but I want to make a final comment to reiterate what I said in French. The St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes are an extraordinary national asset for Canadians. They have not been seen in that way in the past. They should be in the future. It is time that the Government of Canada took the lead which has now been demonstrated by the secretariat for la mise en valeur du St-Laurent in the Province of Quebec, and looked at this resource as an opportunity, not as a problem. I regret very much that the Government is looking on navigational areas of Canada not as an opportunity but simply as a milk cow to be milked until navigation is brought to a grinding halt.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on Bill C-75. I should first like to make a comment on a point which the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) already touched upon. He mentioned in his speech that the Bill does not include drilling rigs in Hibernia, in Venture or off the coasts of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. It may well be that this was not intended, and I say that understanding the particular point. It may not be that this is the place for comprehensive rules and regulations dealing with drilling rigs. However, it is a matter at which the Minister must look very soon.

Hon. Members on all sides of the House were saddened by the tragedy of the Ocean Ranger. Some of us realize that the recommendations of the commission were very good ones. Of course most of them cannot be implemented overnight, but we must keep in mind the importance of this particular tragedy. We must be absolutely certain that it does not happen again. I hope we will have before the House something more substantial regarding drilling rigs and safety precautions than we have seen in the past. Hopefully it will be coming very shortly.

The Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) moved a motion, and I must say that we agree with him. He stated his reasons, and I have reasons of great concern to me and to the area which I represent. The Minister knows my area. He is familiar with the transportation, shipping and unemployment problems of that area. I must say, in fairness to him, that he has not been unsympathetic to many of the things I discussed with him. As we are discussing the Bill and the motion of the Hon. Member for Egmont at this point in time, I should like to mention some points. Clause 4 indicates that there will be charges for aids to navigation, dredging, vessel traffic services, ice-breaking services and escort services. I will not touch that last one. The Minister can explain exactly what is meant in the Bill by "escort services". However, I feel that it will be very difficult for shippers on the Atlantic Coast to meet these charges. I do not know whether the Department has thought out exactly how it will work these charges, upon whom they will be laid or exactly where the burden will fall. As the House knows, the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada has been faced with some difficulties. The difficulty faced by the shipping industry was mentioned by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). Where will this burden fall? If it falls in the wrong way, if it falls on shippers, fishermen and people who can least afford to bear this burden, it will have a very severe impact upon Atlantic Canada. Atlantic Canada will have one of the most difficult winters it has ever experienced this year. This section will not do much for the morale of that region.

Clause 4 of the Bill refers to Section 3.1. In particular, the new Section 3.1(2) reads as follows:

Charges may be imposed pursuant to subsection (1) in relation to any ship or vessel, regardless of whether the Canadian Coast Guard actually provides a navigational service to that particular ship or vessel.

That is a very arbitrary provision. What exactly will it mean? Can charges be laid arbitrarily, regardless of any service provided? Who will be adjudicating this? Who will say who will pay? If I seem skeptical, I think I have a reason for it. Hon. Members of the House have a reason to be skeptical. We have seen what VIA Rail has had to endure at the hands of Canadian National. It was charged for things which Canadian National wrote off and had no right to charge. It made charges and retroactive charges for whatever it wanted to charge. One would think, in this day and age, that these things could not occur. This subsection is very volatile and dangerous. We do not really know what in fact it will mean or what the ramifications will be.

Also the new Section 3.1(3) indicates that interest can be charged on outstanding accounts. The parties to be charged, unless this can be clarified to my satisfaction, will be the ones who may not be able to afford it. They are being told that if they do not pay on time, if their catches are not sufficient that they can pay it or if their shipping company is in jeopardy and they cannot bear the charges, they will not only be taken to court but will have interest placed on top of it. Not only will companies be put in jeopardy; they will also be told that they will be charged interest and taken to court.

Will there be any phasing of these charges? Will there be no charges one day, followed by charges the next day? I think these questions are very important ones. Fishermen and shippers should know the answers to these questions. Is there an appeal procedure? Is there an arbitration procedure? Is there someone in the Department who can hear grievances in this regard and perhaps give rulings without having to go to court? Will things be made easier for people who have to withstand these charges?

Mr. Mazankowski: Fairness above all else.

Mr. MacLellan: I appreciate the Minister's comment in that regard. If it were left up to him, that probably would be the case.

Mr. Siddon: He is the Minister.

Mr. MacLellan: A Minister does not always know what is going on in his Department.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacLellan: Let me say that he will be the first one. If he has to spend time calculating whose charges are justified and whose charges are not, he will be a very, very busy man, doing that along with everything else for which he is responsible.

I should like to refer to a ferry service which is very important to my area, that of CN Marine. It is a major employer, and there have been severe reductions in employment over recent years. When the new vessel comes into service—

Mr. Mazankowski: There were 1,200 before I came on the scene.

Mr. MacLellan: —there will be further reductions. What will the imposition of costs for aids to navigation, dredging and vessel traffic services do to CN Marine? Granted, this is a Crown corporation. Is the Government going to impose costs for these services on CN Marine? CN Marine is already paid a large subsidy to maintain the service it provides. On top of this, will the Government now charge CN Marine the costs for what it is providing under Clause 4 of this Bill? If so, that will help to literally bury the CN ferry service. On the one hand, imposing the cost of the services provided on top of the subsidy that already exists and on the other hand through user-pay theories that are running rampant throughout the Government at the present time to increase charges for the use of the service will drive everyone to direct water transportation from Halifax and Montreal.

• (1750)

Let us look at the situation as it exists right now. Direct water transportation from Montreal to St. John's is provided by a private company but it is subsidized. The private company receives the subsidy and the subsidy it receives helps it to provide the service between Montreal and St. John's which takes business away from CN Marine, the Government's own Crown corporation. This means that CN Marine will make less money and it will have to receive a higher subsidy.

We have not seen anything come from the Government on shipping as it applies to Atlantic Canada that is reasonable. Why should we believe anything reasonable will come out of this Bill? We have not received any indication that anything reasonable will come out out of it. From history and from this Act, we have not seen that there will be a reasonable interpretation placed upon the shipping problmes of Atlantic Canada.

Until we get some indication of reasonableness, how can we support this particular clause? It has been said by others that there are a great many good provisions in this Bill. That is true. However, there are a great many questions and concerns about this Bill.

I have a concern regarding ice-breaking. In Sydney Harbour, there is a problem with ice-breaking in the spring of the year. If a ferry going from North Sydney to Newfoundland gets stuck, as has happened in the past, the ice-breakers have to free that vessel. Are charges then going to be imposed upon the CN Marine service? If the ice-breakers are stationed in Sydney Harbour for weeks in anticipation of vessels being stuck in the ice, is that cause to charge CN Marine? There can be no arbitration. The Coast Guard can charge whomsoever it pleases, whether it helps them or not. The Coast Guard can be on standby for weeks and the standby charges are actually attributed to the vessels which may or may not be caught in the ice. This is a loaded gun pointed at the Government's own Crown corporation, and this concerns me greatly. It is unfair.

We in Atlantic Canada were just beginning to rediscover shipping. In the early days before Confederation, Atlantic Canada was one of the most successful parts of British North America. After Confederation, the banks that began in Nova Scotia invested 19 out of every 20 Nova Scotian dollars they received in central Canada. At that time, it was the shipping industry to the West Indies and the northeastern United States that was the bread and butter of Atlantic Canada. We are now beginning to realize that and are hoping to get back into shipping in a bigger way. However, we are going to be stumped by the provisions of this Bill.

If we are going to develop any kind of industry in Atlantic Canada, we have to utilize the cheaper means of shipping. Atlantic Canada is in tide water and shipping goods is much cheaper than sending them by truck or train. However, this Bill will be a real kick in the teeth not only to the shipping and transportation industries but to the entire concept of regional development in Atlantic Canada.

What is the next step? Is the Government going to charge truckers for the use of snow-ploughs on the highways? That may sound ridiculous to some Hon. Members. It is no more ridiculous than charging the ships in Atlantic Canada for ice-breaking.

Mr. Forrestall: But it recovers 85 per cent of its cost.

Mr. MacLellan: If this were to be applied equally, provinces would charge trucking companies for snow-plough services. Fair is fair.

We are not only talking about the industry, we are talking about people. The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) has been very concerned about people in the transportation industry in his own region who have lost their jobs. The Hon. Member knows what it is like when someone employed by CN Marine or CN Rail loses his job. I am not talking about young people who have been employed by CN for only two months. I am talking about people who have 10, 15 or 20 years of seniority and have worked for these Crown corporations for a long time. These people still have mortgages on their homes and their children have grown up and are attending university, a very expensive proposition. Not only that, these people have lived in the same communities all their lives. If a person has worked and lived in North Sydney for 20 years and is phased out of his job, and if he is offered another job in Moose Jaw, Montreal or Moncton, that person should be excused if he does not jump up and down in glee. There must be an understanding of that kind of a situation.

This reflex action of laying people off from the CN system has to stop. Often they are laid off without any benefits. In some cases there are pre-retirement leave plans but in most cases there are not and often some employees do not even have pension plans. This is a very serious situation about which I am very concerned.

We are not talking about wealth shippers when dealing with the Canada Ports Corporation. We are talking about shippers who may have financial difficulties. We are talking about fishermen and we are talking about anyone who uses the water, according to this Bill. It is an alarming Bill and one that must be studied in much greater depth before we do something very damaging, the repercussions of which will be very severe in Atlantic Canada for many years to come.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is one minute to six. May I call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-79

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. Lanthier:

That, in relation to Bill C-79, An Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the said Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to seek your advice. Is it appropriate for the Minister to move this motion without having another Minister second it? Is it appropriate, for example, for the Parliamentary Secretary to do that?

Mr. Speaker: The practice is to have two Ministers move and second a motion when there are two Ministers in the House. There is nothing inappropriate about another Member seconding the motion.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words to begin this debate to underline a couple of points that Members can reaffirm while debating this motion.

Essentially, this motion concerns this second reading stage of the Bill with respect to reimbursement of uninsured depositors. This is not a time allocation to conclude the consideration of this legislation by any means. Indeed, at second reading we have had essentially a week of debate on the floor of the House of Commons. We are now at the stage in our procedures when the rules have reduced speeches to 10 minute interventions as opposed to the normal interventions of 20 minutes plus time for questions. Therefore, there has been a full and ample opportunity for Members to make known their positions on the principle of the Bill.

I only want to make a couple of points with respect to the matter of this legislation going forward to a committee. We have heard much about committee consideration of this legislation and related matters concerning banking in Canada. This is a specific proposal put forward by the Government of Canada with respect to reimbursement of uninsured depositors. At this point, after a full day of debate at second reading, the legislative committee will have an opportunity to examine the clauses of the Bill.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) has in fact provided and given an undertaking to provide the fullest information possible with respect to the nature of the payments that will be made. I believe she has already tabled a list of the various categories of persons and corporations that will be subject to this legislation and eligible to apply for reimbursement.

As Hon. Members will know and as the general public will understand, there are different stages for legislation proceeding through the House. One involves a discussion which I believe has taken place for a good and sufficient time on the floor of the House, concerning the principle of the Bill. We then move to the legislative committee where there is clause by clause consideration of that legislation by Members who are interested. They have then a full opportunity to examine the provisions of the Bill. Following that, there is what is known as the report stage, and ultimately third reading of the legislation on the floor of the House of Commons.

Nothing could be more reasonable than to provide a reasonable opportunity for debate on the floor of the House of Commons, to have this matter go forward for full consideration in the legislative committee, and then to have the Bill come back to the floor of the House of Commons.

I remind you that we have other items of legislation waiting to come to the floor of the House of Commons. These include the initiative of the Government with respect to employment equity which will, for the first time in Canadian history, move toward bringing a sense of equity in this country for such people as women and the disabled. The time in the House of Commons could be spent debating other important pieces of legislation such as the Canada Shipping Act, Canagrex and Bills arising from the Budget.

I believe that we have had a good debate and have heard the representations made by members of the Opposition. It is most certainly a fact that there has been ample opportunity for members of the Opposition in particular to put their point of view forward. The Government has demonstrated a sense of fairness by its action and it is time for us to move forward to the next step.

I suggest that this is an eminently sensible motion which I am sure will receive the support, if there is a vote at the end of this debate, of all Members of the House, including members of the Opposition.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Leader of the Government was serious about the comments he was making, but it is a dark day for the Canadian parliamentary system when we have before the House a Bill that will swallow nearly one billion dollars of taxpayers' money, and the House and its Members have only the few days they are allowed to take part in the debate. I think we can safely conclude this is a wholesale attack against parliamentary democracy, and it is shameful!

The Government is going to use its crushing majority to gag the Opposition and keep it from continuing debate on a Bill which, as I just said, will involve spending millions of dollars—in fact, nearly one billion dollars. This fiasco, which is going to cost Canadian taxpayers a lot of money, is due to the almost puerile incompetence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) and, especially, of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), since he made the final decision last March which resulted in the fiasco we are seeing today.

With this motion of closure, parliamentarians are being forced to vote on a Bill without having the minimum of information they require.

As a result of this motion, the House of Commons will be asked to vote on a Bill that will reimburse all depositors with deposits of $60,000 or more at the Northland Bank or the Canadian Commercial Bank. And we will have to do that and ask taxpayers to pay for this Government fiasco, without having Judge Estey's report.

Mr. Speaker, in this House we have been asking and urging the Government to set up a parliamentary committee to investigate who was particularly responsible for this fiasco. This request was denied. The Government appointed Mr. Justice Estey to hold an inquiry and behold, we are being asked to vote on a Bill without even having received the report of the Commission of Inquiry chaired by Judge Estey.

Furthermore, we are being asked to approve a Bill, and the Government is choking off debate to force a vote, when we do not even know to whom these sums of money will be paid. Is it normal to ask the people's elected representatives to vote on Bill C-79, which will provide compensation to six people in Canada, six individuals, not companies, six people in Canada who are going to share the sum of $3.8 billion—

Mr. Bernier: Give us their names!

Mr. Garneau: —that is exactly . . . I don't know who said: Give us their names. Maybe that shining light, the Hon. Member for Beauce. Well, that is exactly what we want to know. It is up to you to name them, not us. You have the information.

Mr. Speaker, six people are going to share approximately three billion 700 million dollars, and Members are being asked to vote blindly? At the Northland Bank, Mr. Speaker, nine people in Canada are going to share four million 900 thousand dollars. Why? It is the Government's responsibility to inform Members who these people are. These are not the people who invest small amounts. These are people who know what they are doing and who have a million dollars? Why should we ask mothers and workers in factories in Sherbrooke to pay more taxes to reimburse these people, whose names we don't even know?

And so we are being gagged. We will have to vote on this Bill without getting any specific and official information tabled in this House on the Northland Bank. I dare my colleagues, I dare those who are going to raise both hands to kill the Northland Bank, to say whether they have had any official information on the Northland Bank. Do we know the amount of bad loans? Do we know what minimum reserves were necessary for this bank to continue its operations? We have none of this information, and yet we are being asked to vote in a couple of hours and are being obliged to do so as a result of this motion of closure, which is an outrage to our parliamentary democracy. In fact, the reason closure is being imposed today, putting an end to a debate that lasted only a few days, is to cover up the fact the Government's incompetence will cost taxpayers nearly one billion dollars.

Mr. Speaker, without this closure motion to put an end to the second reading debate on Bill C-79, the Opposition could have shown that the taxpayers will have to pay $1 billion because the Government, and especially the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance, waited three months, from March 25 to June 25, before appointing someone to investigate the value of the assets of the Canadian Commercial Bank. This morning, the Globe and Mail carried an interview with the president of the Royal Bank, who is also president of the Canadian Payments Association, and if I may, I would like to quote part of his comments:

• (1115)

[English]

Mr. Taylor said that on more than one or two occasions after the March 25 bail-out the chartered banks had conversations with either Finance Minister Michael Wilson or Minister of State for Finance Barbara McDougall, or both, requesting that a comprehensive audit of the CCB's entire loan portfolio be carried out.

"There were references and discussion about the fact that this inspection did not take place," Mr. Taylor said in noting that it was not until June 25 that a comprehensive examination of the CCB assets began.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the bankers had advised the Government. However, Mr. Hitchman was asked to prepare a report only on June 25. He got to work with two other people and presented a preliminary report less than a month later. What did this preliminary report say? It told the Minister that a task force should be appointed to administer the bank and make the major decisions because Mr. Hitchman had of course noted that the doubtful loan practices were being continued. What happened to the Hitchman preliminary report? It was put in a drawer and nothing was done about it. This shows the incompetence and the lack of concern of a Minister who spent part of the summer in Paris and who, on her return, wrote letters to the shareholders telling them that it was all right to keep their money in the bank. Those letters are dated August 9, 1985. On August 14, a report said that the bank was no longer viable, or rather this happened as early as August 12, but two days went by before the Minister read this report since, according to her, she saw it on August 14.

Mr. Speaker, this shows an unparalleled incompetence and lack of concern. Why is it that a Minister who authorized the selling of a few cans of tainted tuna has resigned, that another Minister who had problems with his electoral expenditures has resigned, while a Minister who will cost $1 billion to the Canadian taxpayers is still sitting comfortably in her seat, as is the Minister of Finance? In addition, we are being muzzled to prevent us from discussing this Bill and telling the Canadian people that the incompetence of the Government has not only killed the Canadian Commercial Bank, but also caused the Northland Bank to close its doors, its employees to lose their jobs and an important financial institution in Western Canada to disappear in spite of all the work that was done to establish regional banks in the West.

In an earlier speech, I had suggested a four-point plan to save the Northland Bank. If closure had not been imposed, we might have succeeded in convincing the Government to accept this plan. If need be, we would have attached a small blue card to the document and sent it to the Cabinet, as, apparently, such a card shows that a document has been checked by a Conservative. When it has not been checked by a Conservative, there is no little blue card. So, perhaps someone on the Conservative side could have been found and asked to put his little blue card on, and this might have saved the Northland Bank which did not deserve to close down. And certainly if it has come down to this, it is because of the Government's incompetence and indifference.

Mr. Speaker, in this matter—

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis) on a point of order.

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member refers to blue cards, this is irrelevant. I would ask him to stick to the rule of relevance.

Mr. Garneau: Would the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis) be ready to use her little blue card, and give her OLC to the possibility for the Government to withdraw its closure motion in order to allow for a more detailed examination of the Northland Bank situation? Of course, she is only a backbencher. Maybe she does not know about the little blue cards. But Cabinet Ministers know about those little blue cards.

Mr. Speaker, in this legislation we see double standards being used. The foreign banks are reimbursed, but the chartered banks which were involved in the bail-out attempt are not. Mr. Speaker, this is grossly unfair, as we could have shown, if such a democracy-wise contemptible motion of closure had not been introduced. They have the gall to suggest this is in order to put forth other prices of legislation. Mr. Speaker, we are not the ones responsible for this CCB and Northland Bank fiasco. This Government is responsible. It should take the blame and table action accordingly. They sent two banks down the drain, and now they tell us: "Hurry up, clean up that mess! Get it out of this House, so the Canadian people will not see it on their television screens, so they will not see how incompetent we are. Let us try and cover that up in future tax increases." Mr. Speaker, I submit this is utterly unacceptable, undemocratic for a Government to use its majority to force a motion of closure through only a few days after the second reading of the Bill has been moved, in order to hide its incompetence.

• (1120)

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the members of the New Democratic Party are going to vote against this time allocation motion. We oppose this motion, as we oppose Bill C-79. We oppose a gag on the debate, Mr. Speaker, because the full reasons for this bail-out are not yet known. They are not forthcoming from this Government. We know little about who will be reimbursed, notwithstanding that some of the individuals and companies involved will be receiving very large amounts of money.

We know very little about the reason the Northland Bank is being treated in the same way as the Canadian Commercial Bank. We now have a great deal of information about the Canadian Commercial Bank. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, based on the information received as a result of the hearings of the Finance Committee held in May and June, we believe that the Government should have acted then and not waited until September.

Mr. Speaker, the passage of this motion would ensure that the debate on this Bill in the House will cease very quickly. It has been suggested that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have been hiding behind the skirt of the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs.

McDougall). That is not so, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of State for Finance is now hiding behind Mr. Justice Estey's robes. That is no improvement. In fact, it is a good deal worse in terms of parliamentary accountability and the responsibility of a Minister for the field for which that Minister is responsible.

Mr. Speaker, since I last spoke on Bill C-79 a number of suspicions of mine have been made dramatically clear. The tabling of the Hitchman Report has laid bare the deficiencies—and, in fact, the total inability—of our inspection system, our monitoring system in ensuring a sound banking system.

Mr. Speaker, there is now very little truth to the claim that Canada has one of the best banking systems in the world, a claim which has been made repeatedly by the Ministers of this Government and by the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

The Hitchman Report has highlighted many of the failures and deficiencies in our system of inspection. It is little wonder that the Government was reluctant to release it.

Members of the House will know that I sat on the Finance Committee throughout its examination of the Canadian Commercial Bank in May and June of this year. The committee heard from all of the principals at that time: the President of the Canadian Commercial Bank, the auditors of the Canadian Commercial Bank, the Inspector General of Banks, and the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

It is obvious from a reading of the Hitchman Report how dishonest, how deceitful, and how shallow so much of the testimony and the advice the committee got at that time was.

Mr. Speaker, the scrutiny which we and all Canadians thought was inherent in our monitoring of the banking system turned out to be simply second and third-hand assurances on the part of the Inspector General of Banks and the Governor of the Bank of Canada, two individuals who essentially took the word of management. What the Hitchman Report shows is that the Canadian Commercial Bank management acted foolishly in its lending practices and continued to act foolishly even after the bank was bailed out last June. This happened even though we had every right to expect that after the bail-out in March, the Inspector General would inaugurate the kind of inspection system which he ought to have had in place all along.

● (1125)

I suggest to Hon. Members that they could read no more scathing an indictment of our financial system and its monitoring than that provided by an editorial which appeared in the Financial Times of October 14. If I might be permitted to quote from that assessment, the editorial reads in part:

> The findings of the 71-year-old ex-deputy chairman of the Bank of Nova Scotia as he delved into the chaotic mess of loan files at the CCB were in turn profound, startling and devastating.
> Above all, they indicated that Hitchman seemed to be alone among countless bank officers, directors, external auditors and federal regulators in having the right nose for the job.
> If there was any doubt before the release of Hitchman's report as to the inadequacy of the Inspector General's office in policing the CCB case, there is not a shred of doubt now.
> Nor was the performance of the CCB's external auditors anything to rave about. Hitchman's testimony raised grave questions about the role and judgment of the auditors who seemed as ready as the Inspector General's office to accept, lap-dog fashion, management's word on almost everything.

That editorial refers to a pretty comprehensive list of those with responsibility. It is very similar to the list that the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and I compiled when we issued an NDP addendum to the Finance Committee's report. Here is what we said on June 12:

> If the CCB experience points out anything it is the deficiencies of the present system in which persons with direct responsibilities including bank officers, bank directors, bank auditors, external auditors, bank investment underwriters and government monitors, including the Inspector General of Banks and the Governor of the Bank of Canada, all failed to locate serious difficulties in CCB operations so as to expose and correct them before that bank virtually drifted into bankruptcy. Independent of anything else in the Green Paper discussion paper, there must be an immediate and comprehensive updating and revitalization of this sytem if the savings of Canadians are to be protected as they must be against mismanagement and conflicts of interest by officials of financial institutions.

That is what we said in June, Mr. Speaker. The advice we gave and the conclusions the Minister of State for Finance should have drawn from the hearings which were held by the Finance Committee in May and June were not heeded. Despite the Minister's hands-on direction of the CCB, we got the same old stuff. Here is how the Financial Times describes the new CCB in operation after the $250-million bail-out which was supposed to make the bank a viable operation again:

> In mid-July, after CCB president Gerald McLaughlan had assured Hitchman the bank was devoting its energy to collecting on old loans instead of pursuing new business, the CCB loan committee recommended two new loans of $15 million each.
> Both loans were to be made to brand new companies whose capital value was—

Get this, Mr. Speaker:

> —$1 each. One of the $15-million loans was for a 10-year term, to bear interest at 10% or prime plus a half. Yet CCB would have had to pay 12% to raise the funds to be lent out—costing the bank an additional $5 million. The real estate which the loan would purchase had been valued at $9 million.

● (1130)

Where was the Inspector General of Banks? Where was the Governor of the Bank of Canada who, on a number of occasions, said that the CCB was a viable operation? It is quite clear that those with the ultimate responsibility for protecting the people of Canada were remiss. The Minister of Finance, the Minister of State for Finance, the Inspector General of Banks, the Governor of the Bank of Canada and all the Ministers concerned must take full responsibility. Their failure to act when they should have acted and their failure to require the Inspector General of Banks to perform the job he was supposed to perform will cost the people of Canada billions of dollars.

The failure of the Canadian Commercial Bank has contributed to the failure of the Northland Bank and has placed a number of other regional and smaller banks under extreme pressure. This failure has made the people of Canada question the soundness of the Canadian banking system, which is something the country simply cannot afford. Because we believe the Government has failed miserably in its duty we propose to vote against this Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, earlier today the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) expressed astonishment about our parliamentary leader's lack of seriousness. Well, I too am astonished that the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides—who is aware of his reputation as a former banker and who at one time was a heavyweight in another Government—would continue to play on the nerves of Canadians and accuse the banks of being short of cash. The Member for Laval-des-Rapides must know, because he was once in the limelight, that his attitude can only create more problems for the banking community. Has he become incompetent, or did he lie to the people when he stated that the British Columbia bank had a serious cash flow problem which could also have an impact on the Continental Bank of Canada? The ultimate result was that the various bank branch managers had to explain to their major depositors that everything was just fine. Senior management like the vice presidents of the two banks had to tell the Canadian public that it was not true, that neither bank was beset by cash flow problems.

It would seem that the Member for Laval-des-Rapides and his colleagues have one goal in mind—make it look like the Canadian banking system is on the ropes. Of course! Then they can blame the Government. That is why they want to keep the pot boiling and push the panic button so that Canadians will have no idea which way to turn. We know they may still be reeling, but this is right up their alley and they probably would not hesitate to sink right along with our banking system and ruin Canada's economy because they simply cannot get over the fact that they were turfed out of office on September 4, 1984.

I am sorry to see that one Member is not here this morning—the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) is probably in his Bay Street office—but I would have liked him to take part in this debate, considering the fact that he had a hand in creating the problem we are facing today.

The number of Canadian banks went up to 70 under the previous administration, and some of those institutions are also experiencing difficulties. The Liberals did not bother to introduce appropriate legislation to avoid the problems with which we must come to grips.

Let it be said that most of those problems can be traced back to the National Energy Program, of which one of the main architects was the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice. That is how the Liberals created a Canada-wide paper empire, a house of cards which was bound to collapse because it was structured on the basis of negotiated oil prices which did not take the law of supply and demand into account. That is how the ensuing policy led to a climate on confrontation with the provinces. The cash-starved Liberals sought to impose daily taxes on our entire oil industry. Their eyes, Mr. Speaker, were bigger than their belly. They defied the economic rules. And today those same Liberals are telling us that we are going to spend . . . they suggest $1 billion to compensate some depositors for the funds on deposit with the Northland and the Commercial Bank of Canada. The Liberals know that the amount involved does not come to $875 million. They know that businesses which make deposits . . . there is an economic factor to be taken into consideration. They pay taxes on that amount and they know quite well that the net cost is going to $470 million which is quite a difference from $1 billion.

The Liberals have incurred such costs, that they raised the deficit to $200 billion during the last decades and always for the sake of economic costs.

Mr. Speaker, it must be noted that if we decide to compensate depositors, it is because there are among them community, religious, and charitable organizations, savings funds, unions, school boards, small and medium-sized businesses, individuals, cities and municipalities. We do not know what could be the consequences of our not taking action with respect to those banks. The Liberals must think that they took the decisive step a few years ago but, unfortunately, we now have to face the problems.

We are also told that foreign banks will be reimbursed. An amount of $113 million has been mentioned. We know that the two banks involved have assets which amount to one per cent of all assets in the Canadian banking system. All of the figures are not available, Mr. Speaker, but we can easily make a very conservative projection with a small "c". If $113 million equal one per cent of the assets, then 11.3 billion will equal the entire assets. This probably means that foreign banks have deposits for at least $11.3 billion in Canadian banks. If we do not solve the problem of our $113 million, foreign banks could very well withdraw their $11.3 billion due to a lack of confidence in our banking system and in our Government. We cannot accept that, because if we figure out 10 per cent revenue on $11.3 billion, it would come up to $1 billion.

Finally, those foreign banks are investors in our small and medium-sized businesses. Their investments represent the operating capital of thousands of Canadian businesses which, should these foreign deposits be withdrawn, would have to look elsewhere for their cash flow.

The Liberals keep repeating this $1 billion figure. We say $470 million. Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind Liberal members of the mistakes they made before the Canadian people figured them out. For instance, the $125 million they invested in Consolidated Computer with no return whatsoever. Also, the $15 million which they invested in the small CCM business without any accountability. Also, the $32 million they wasted in the Maislin mess. Not to mention the $125 million they wasted on Massey Fergusson.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) that I did not interrupt the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) during his speech and ask him to show me the same courtesy. Hon. Members should show their consideration for their colleagues by not interrupting them. Liberal members should teach that lesson of elementary courtesy to each other and to their backbenchers.

I should like to mention also the $1 billion they wasted in the de Havilland fiasco. And finally, the biggest waste of them all, the $2.1 billion they invested in Canadair. This means that the Liberals wasted altogether a total of $3.5 billion during the last few years they were in power. Their past record is so lousy that they are not in a position to tell us what to do, Mr. Speaker.

Our Government is proposing a solution for our Western banks. The Liberals proposed nothing when the Caisse d'entraide économique were faced with similar problems in the province of Quebec. Just as so many ostriches, Mr. Speaker, they buried their heads in the sand. They prefered not to see the problem. They ignored it. I am well aware that the Caisses were under provincial jurisdiction, but the Liberals could have tried to help them just as we are trying to help these Western banks, for we feel that this country extends from the Atlantic to the Pacific. They will be responsible for any delay in adopting this legislation. The House is going to adopt it in spite of them and I want them to stop all these innuendoes about the so-called failure of the Canadian banking system.

I urge the NDP, if it wants to maintain its footing in Western Canada, to support this legislation.

• (1140)

[English]

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, this House is being asked to agree to a motion which will choke off debate on second reading of one of the most important Bills which will ever come before this House under this Government or any other Government. Yet we have had only four days of debate, less than 11 hours, to discuss this Bill which asks Parliament on behalf of the Canadian taxpayer to approve the expenditures of $827 million—almost $1 billion.

The Government House Leader did not give any persuasive reasons why the House should accept this motion to gag Members of Parliament and to cut off debate on this Bill.

[Translation]

And certainly the Conservative Member who just finished his speech did not provide any arguments to support the situation and convince us to adopt this motion. He referred to the National Energy Program, but the Hitchman Report has pointed out that the National Energy Program had no connection with the problems of the Canadian Commercial Bank, none at all! The Hitchman Report clearly indicates that the banks' problems were related to bad management by the banks and not at all to the National Energy Program.

The Conservative Member was complaining about the deficit but wants the House to support a measure that would add one billion dollars to that deficit. The total bill for this bank fiasco will add not just one but three billion dollars to the deficit, and the Conservative Member wants the House to support this motion and this Bill? The Hon. Member also referred to measures to help certain Canadian companies survive, but these Canadian companies were known to the public. They were known to Canadian taxpayers. And now, the Hon. Member and his colleagues want to keep secret the identity of those who will be saved by the legislation being provided by the Conservatives!

[English]

The principle of this Bill is that almost $1 billion of the taxpayers' money should be spent to reimburse people whose identities will be kept secret. That is so contrary to a basic principle of parliamentary Government that we must oppose this motion and we must oppose this Bill. A few days ago, Mr. Speaker, the House of Commons published a book entitled House of Commons Précis of Procedure, under the authority of the Clerk of the House of Commons. On page 61 is found the following, and I quote:

> Second reading is the most important stage in the passage of a bill. It is then that the principle and object of the bill are debated and either accepted or rejected.

The Conservatives want to choke off debate after less than four days or 11 hours of debate on what is understood to be the most important stage in the passage of the Bill. This Bill is shocking. It is contrary to the basic concept of a parliamentary Government that money should not be voted unless we know for what and for whom this money is to be spent.

It is obvious, and not just from this motion, that the Government wants to hustle its problem away from the spotlight of Parliament as quickly and as fully as possible. At the beginning of September when the Government announced the failure of the Canadian Commercial Bank—the first failure of a bank in 63 years, and it happened under a Conservative Government—it said it was going to set up a joint committee of the House and Senate to look into the matter. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that we are not only going to do that, but we are going to televise the proceedings. However, as soon as the dimensions of the fiasco which was brought about by the Conservatives, became clear, and as soon as the dimensions of the responsibility of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and the Prime Minister himself became more and more evident, the Conservatives suddenly began to cool off, saying, "Perhaps we should not have a joint committee. Perhaps a committee of the House would be important enough". And when we began to try to ensure that the committee would work so that we would have the information we require, the Conservatives backed off again and in one day, all of a sudden, a royal commission of inquiry was set up. A royal commission can certainly be very useful but it is not going to be proceeded with under the lights of the television cameras. Radio reporters will not be there and there will not be the scrutiny of the elected representatives of the people. So it is obvious the Conservatives have something they want to hide from the scrutiny of the elected representatives of the Canadian people.

This motion to choke off debate on this Bill is further evidence of the Government's desire to move away from the platform of Parliament so that we cannot debate this incredible fiasco involving the failure of two banks within a month, and the resulting expenditure of close to $1 billion—actually $3 billion altogether. The Government wants to have this Bill passed without Canadians knowing for whom and to whom almost $1 billion of their money is going. The Government has given no convincing or persuasive arguments either in law, morality or in fact as to why this money should be spent without the elected representatives of the Canadian people knowing to whom this money will be paid. After all, we are not dealing with the ordinary situation in which when a bank is operating such that its depositors are entitled to have confidentiality in the ordinary course of business. These banks have failed. They are not under the Bank Act. One can say that there are no such banks in existence. We are dealing with claims in a bankruptcy and when there are claims in a bankruptcy the people who want to be reimbursed for moneys owing to them have to come forward and make their names public.

The principle of this Bill is that the money should be spent without this information being given to the elected representatives of the Canadian people. I ask in this House, as I have asked before, what are the Conservatives hiding? Who are they trying to protect? Why are they afraid of giving these names? The Government has not given any answers. It cannot give the answers without further confirming its own incompetence and its own responsibility for this incredible fiasco. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I say, in the interests of parliamentary Government but, more important, in the interests of the sound expenditure of almost $1 billion of taxpayers' money and, in general, in the interests of sound management of our financial system, that this motion must be defeated. Then we must go on to defeat this Bill. If we do not do that, we will damage parliamentary Government, we will damage the pocketbooks of 25 million Canadians and we will leave a stain on the whole concept of parliamentary Government and on the basic principle that if the taxpayers' money is to be spent, we must know who is going to receive that money.

This motion must be defeated and then we must go on to defeat this thoroughly bad Bill.

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian concerned about the recent problems involving the CCB and the Northland Bank, I rise in this House today to lend my support to Bill C-79, an Act respecting provision of compensation to depositors in those institutions and the CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation.

What we are proposing is simply to compensate uninsured depositors in these institutions, nothing more and nothing less. Many of those who have been criticizing this action seem to lack a complete understanding of the devasting effort governmental inaction would have. As the Member for Sarnia-Lambton I have seen the problems this situation has caused. It has affected my community as well as many others, small and large. I refuse to stand by the wayside and do absolutely nothing for the municipalities, small business owners, colleges, and credit unions in my riding. To do so would be a grave error.

The Minister has stated clearly and emphaticaly, Mr. Speaker, that in taking this action it is not the Government's intent to set a precedent. This is a unique and isolated case. Nothing like it has happened in the past 66 years. What is more important, these are financial institutions which supported western Canada's economy. However, the fact that nothing like this has ever happened in the past is not to say that problems did not exist. Last week on the CBC a former Liberal Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in the last Government, admitted that his Government was well aware of the problems concerning the regulation of financial institutions, yet what did it do? Absolutely nothing. That Government stood by for 16 years and watched. It did not act to try to strengthen the financial climate of this country. It had 16 years in which to do something while we had only six months, and we have already done more in that time than the Liberals ever did. Certainly the circumstances of the past few months amply demonstrate the need for reform in this area. This Government is committed to regulatory reform and we so indicated in the Throne Speech, the Budget, the Wyman Committee, and in the discussion paper on financial institutions. We have acted in four very concise and distinct areas, and this is a record to be proud of.

We in this House have had more than ample debate on this Bill and the entire issue surrounding it. Yet there are some who will cry that we are stifling them, not allowing Members enough time to speak out. I would like to offer some facts which will disprove those allegations. We have had four full days of debate. During this time 51 Members have addressed this issue. What is more important, over 80 per cent of those Members were in the Opposition. It is obvious that this indicates there has been more than a fair chance for all sides in the House to participate in this debate. Each day of delay means financial hardship and uncertainty, not for those of us in the House but for many Canadians who want only to have their fears alleviated.

What has been somehow forgotten or ignored by the Opposition in the debate on this issue is the depositors we are attempting to help. We are trying to help the municipalities who have over $41 million on deposit in these institutions, small businesses, charitable organizations, credit unions, labour unions, hospitals, colleges and, in particular, ordinary individual Canadians. I am somewhat concerned to hear Opposition Members whose ridings contain credit unions, speaking against this Bill. It seems odd to hear the Leader of the Opposition and the NDP make an issue of wealthy foreign banks who, it would seem from what they have said, are the only ones to benefit from this Bill. I say it is time they stopped fooling the Canadian public and started being concerned, as we are, with the backbone of these banks, the small depositors. It also seems very odd that the Opposition wants a list of depositors made public, a list which would name the municipalities and credit unions in their ridings. Those Members do not seem to be too concerned about the plight of those depositors.

Bill C-79 responds to a very particular set of circumstances. We are doing this because we recognized in March, as we recognize now, the importance of these banks to that economy. The western economy was flourishing as a result of the energy boom. Real estate values increased tremendously. Oil and gas prices were stable. That economy was particularly vibrant and booming, it seemed nothing could go wrong. However, such was not the case. In the early 1980s, westerners witnessed the creation of the National Energy Program, a "gift" of the previous Liberal Government. They watched the NEP burst this bubble of economic prosperity. It had a devastating effect on employment, housing, and investment in the energy sector, all of which are critical elements of the western economy. World energy prices bottomed out and the economy of Alberta rapidly declined.

Intricately entwined in this situation were these two financial institutions, as well as others. They suffered just as other sectors of the economy suffered over the last five years due to inept Liberal economic policies. This Bill, Mr. Speaker, is the product of such policies. We are attempting to alleviate the serious economic impact which would result if we did nothing, thus forcing municipalities, credit unions, charities and small businesses to absorb the loss of their deposits in excess of $60,000. I am sure all Members are aware of the impact on these organizations and the people we serve if we were to do nothing. It is a sure thing that many of them would be in serious financial difficulties. We are speaking of a domino effect involving lay-offs, permanent job loss and business and bank failures. We have a responsibility to these people because they participated with us in an attempt to save these institutions back in March.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we bear an onerous responsibility. The easy way out would be to say no to these municipalities and tell them to raise their taxes. It would be easy to say no to the credit union members and tell them to go work for another five years and save again what they have lost. But we do not believe that is what should be done. We believe what we are doing is right and that we should support those Canadians who need support in this time of need.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James) said that there were four days, 11 hours of debate on second reading of Bill C-79. Indeed, there were 51 Members who spoke during second reading of Bill C-79. He said that the vast majority of those were from the Opposition. The purpose of second reading is to debate the Bill in principle. I do not believe that we have been given the reasons behind Bill C-79, which is to bail out uninsured depositors over $60,000. The Member rose to make a 10 minute speech on a time allocation motion.

The fact that 51 Members out of 282 Members in this Chamber have spoken means that less than 20 per cent of Members of Parliament have spoken on the question of putting up a billion dollars of taxpayers' money to bail out people who took a risk.

They put their money in the Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank because of their belief in that Conservative-honoured principle of risk taking. They deposited their money there because they could get a little more interest than they could from the other five banks. The very basis of Conservative ideology is risk taking. The Conservatives preach that the free market and free enterprise system is what will make this country work. However, in one fell swoop, they swallowed themselves whole like an anaconda. One of the Hon. Members on the Government side suddenly found tongue to lend his voice and rose to speak on this closure motion. He said that the Liberals bailed out de Havilland, Canadair and Massey-Ferguson. Why are the Conservatives following in the footsteps of the Liberals? The answer is that they are exactly the same. There is really no difference between them. The Bobbsey Twins from Bay Street strike again. I will call them the "Siamese Twins of Bay Street".

The other argument I heard today is that we must save these small depositors in order to prevent a domino effect. I suggest that the Conservatives should apply the same principle that they attempted to apply earlier this year with respect to old age pensions and other social security systems. Why does it not use a means test on those who are seeking bail-out relief? If it can be proved that an operation will go down the tubes without this bail-out from the Government, the Government could apply that means test and reimburse these depositors on the basis of their needs. Furthermore, depending on their need, this reimbursement could vary up to 100 per cent beyond the $60,000.

When the Conservatives were in opposition and the Liberals introduced closure motions from time to time, they were the ones whose voices were raised the loudest. They complained that the Liberal Government was trying to choke debate and smother free speech in the House of Commons by denying the rights of Members of Parliament to participate in debate.

Now that the Conservatives are in Government, the shoe is on the other foot. I believe this is the third or fourth time since September 4 that a closure motion has been introduced in the House. Although the Government has a massive majority of 211 Members, with 70 Members sitting in the Opposition, it is using a sledge hammer to open a peanut. What fear forces the Government to bring this great might of 211 Members to bear on 70 opposition Members? Why is the Government so suspicious and furtive? Not only does it want to deny opposition Members of the House an opportunity to speak, I suspect that it had a muzzle on its own Members when Bill C-79 was before the House for debate in principle. I suspect that the Minister of State, "billion dollar Barbara", and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) put a muzzle on them. Now that we are debating a time allocation motion, those Members will find voice, stand up and make 10 minute maiden speeches.

The Government is afraid because there are certain questions being raised. It has established the Estey Commission. After thoroughly investigating the collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, Mr. Justice Estey will make a report to Parliament. Why must we quickly pass Bill C-79 to provide a bail-out of up to a billion dollars when we do not know all the facts or have a report which clearly indicates where the responsibilities lie in this whole fiasco? Serious questions remain unanswered. Who will get the bail-out? The Government has named certain categories of those eligible for a bail-out. Among them are foreign banks and their Canadian subsidiaries, which will get some $147 million. Another poor little group that will receive a bail-out is the lottery corporations. They have $34 million invested in the Canadian Commercial Bank. That is a group that should understand risk and what it means to take a gamble. They will get back all of their $34 million.

I believe that the odds were against the Canadian taxpayers when the Government stepped in to bail out foreign banks, the Canadian subsidiaries and lottery corporations. I seriously suggest that the principle of a means test ought to be applied in this case. No one wants to hurt the little credit union that is in jeopardy. If such companies can prove that they have a need, let them get paid. That principle was established for the old age pension program. However, I believe that the Chase Manhattan Bank, Citicorp, the Bank of Hong Kong and the Bank of Japan would have to go a long way to prove need in order to have the Canadian taxpayers bail them out.

Closure motions present a dangerous precedent and it is beginning to be used on a regular basis by a majority Government in the House of Commons. It is a dangerous principle to use this measure to cut off the opposition Parties. It seems to me that the Government has something to hide.

Conservative Members should oppose such a time allocation motion on this Bill. It strikes at the very heart of democracy. The Government is asking taxpayers to pay money, yet their representation in the House is being denied as a result of this closure motion. I appeal to all true Tories not to let their House Leader lead them to believe that they must use might and force to crush the Opposition. There is no haste required to bail out these uninsured depositors. I think we would be wise to defeat this motion for closure and continue debate on Bill C-79. It may mean that we must hoist the Bill until we receive the Estey Commission Report so that we can then decide what to do. That is the way we should proceed, Mr. Speaker. We should not bow to the pressure from these 211 Tories. Might or right, Mr. Speaker, not might is right.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I join this debate in opposition to a motion put forward by the Government House Leader which will choke off the debate on the bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank.

It is a pretty sad day for Parliament when the Government chooses to limit debate on the question of approving close to $1 billion to be paid to the uninsured of those banks. We, in Parliament, have an obligation to our constituents and to the population generally to review all the various proposals and monetary expenditures of the Government of Canada.

I believe very strongly it is implicit that when moneys are spent by the national Government, whether they be spent on a provincial or joint federal-provincial project, spent pursuant to an item of a Crown corporation, spent in the form of a direct grant or transfer to an individual or a particular organization, Parliament ought to know where the money is going. It is not sufficient, in my view, for the Government to refuse to tell Parliament who will be receiving the money as a result of the passage of this legislation.

The Government has been less than candid, Mr. Speaker. It has provided categories of individuals who may or may not receive money, but the Government has not told us which individuals or foreign corporations, nor has the Government told us the amount they will receive. The Government has not given us the reasons either.

The Government has not disclosed the documentation, the memorandum of understanding, if you will, between the various individuals who borrowed money and who are now seeking to be bailed out. I think it is wrong to be bailing out these banks, Mr. Speaker.

The money could be better spent helping Canadians. It could be used to increase job opportunities, to provide a host of services requested of this Parliament and of previous Parliaments. I think of money for the maritime feed freight assistance and moneys for job creation in my own constituency and in other less fortunate regions of the country. I think of substantial moneys that could be made available for small craft harbours, ensuring a viable fishing industry as well as ensuring jobs for thousands of Canadians. I think of the forestry industry in British Columbia. I think of the drought in western Canada. I think of financial assistance to individuals for daycare facilities. There are many areas where money is needed.

Surely there is a better way that the national Government can spend in excess of $800 million. Surely the Government does not want to sign a blank cheque for two banks. There has to be an obligation, and a fundamental obligation on behalf of the Government, before it makes those payments, that the names of the individuals be laid before Parliament.

This request is not to abuse those who will eventually receive moneys from the Government, but Parliament and the people should know where the money is going.

It is very peculiar after only 11 hours of debate that approximately only 22 per cent of the Members of this Parliament have spoken in this debate. Now the Government has chosen to cut off debate and to cut it off completely.

This is the first time in about 62 or 63 years that a bank has gone under. That in itself would suggest to me that the importance of the subject matter is deserving of careful scrutiny, not only by opposition Members but by Government Members. I do not wish to impute motives to members of the Government, but it is rather strange that many, if not most, have been extremely silent, silent with regard to the entire substance of the issue, particularly with the naming of the uninsured depositors and those who will receive moneys.

Let us look at what has taken place. Early in the process the Government said we would have a special joint committee of both Houses of Parliament. We started out being told that the hearing would be televised. Then we were told we would have a parliamentary committee of the House of Commons. Finally, on a weekend, upon returning from our constituencies, we learned that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had made a decision to appoint a very prominent Canadian to head a judicial inquiry concerning the collapse of the two banks.

What do we have now? There will be no televised hearing. There will be no parliamentary scrutiny of the facts surrounding the collapse of the banks. Why the change, Mr. Speaker? What has the Government got to hide? Why the cover-up? Those are questions Canadians are asking parliamentarians. Those are the questions being talked about on a regular basis by Canadians. If we are to provide $875 million, why is Parliament being denied the right and the opportunity to peruse in great detail the individuals and the corporations who will receive that money?

It is not right, and it is not in the best interests of parliamentary democracy to terminate debate on a money Bill of the magnitude of this one, of approximately $1 billion. Information is being withheld, and I suggest it is being withheld wrongly from Parliament.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), can stand in her place and say she has a legal opinion that perhaps it is not in the best interests to release that information. I do not have to inform you, Mr. Speaker, that the rock of democracy in this country is the Parliament of Canada. Parliament ought to know and ought to be given information directly from the Minister of State for Finance. The Minister of Finance is not here for this debate, probably with good justification. He is hiding. He does not want to participate.

Mr. Clinch: Order.

Mr. Beatty: He is out looking for John Turner.

Mr. Dingwall: The Minister of Finance does not want to participate in this debate. He knows that his incompetence has been demonstrated on numerous occasions. He is not here to defend nor to lead the Government—

Mr. Clinch: Order.

Mr. Dingwall: —with regard to this particular issue.

Mr. Clinch: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Reference to Members' absence or presence in the House is not parliamentary. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), I am sure, is well aware of that.

Mr. Beatty: Particularly when benches on his side are empty.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Clinch) is quite right and the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) knows that also.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the suggestion of my hon. colleague. The Minister's absence has been noted by other Members in this Chamber. We know he is not here, but I indicated that there might be good justification for that.

● (1220)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The period of 10 minutes is now over, one way or another, and this may settle the issue.

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on the motion before the House today, both as a westerner and as a businessman who dealt with the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank in Saskatoon. I would be interested in giving the House of Commons the national perspective with regard to this motion.

I dealt with these two banks because they offered excellent service. They were aggressive banks and, in particular, began to demonstrate that western capital formation would benefit the region of Canada in which I lived. I do not think anyone in the House can disagree with that.

Many people are asking, including many of my constituents, why these two banks collapsed in western Canada. The two banks appeared to be well on their way to success and to taking a firm hold in our western economy. It seems to me that banks do not fall overnight; there has to be good reason. Recent evidence suggested that there was bad management in the bank. That is possible. I do not think the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) can look over the shoulders of these people all the time. However, there is another point which caused those banks to collapse. When the western economy was prospering, individuals, corporations, large and small companies, were making investment decisions based upon a current buoyant economy in western Canada. People were buying homes and automobiles, people were building office buildings and warehouses, based upon the rules which they had before them from the former Liberal Government. When the national energy policy was introduced, it was the death-knell not only for western Canada and those businesses, but for many businesses right across the country.

Many of the things which happen in western Canada, as we all know, are good for eastern Canada, particularly in the automotive sector. In order to get my point across, I should like to make a comparison. Can we imagine what would happen if our national Government were suddenly to pull the rug out from under the automotive industry? Not only would there be regional bank collapses, but chances are that there would be some major bank collapses. That is precisely what happened in western Canada—the very source of the drive behind our economy was suddenly stopped.

What about those people who say that something should have been done about the banks earlier? I remind the Liberal Party that in 1980 it allowed the banks to expand seven times, from 11 banks to 70 banks, but it forgot to make adjustments to the regulations and regulatory agencies which controlled the banks. That is something the Minister of State for Finance is coming to grips with in our new Government.

In accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(a), I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the House continue to sit between one o'clock p.m. and two o'clock p.m. this day, for the purpose of continuing consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn.

If I could carry on with my remarks to complete my 10-minute presentation—

Mr. Deans: Wait a minute.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion of the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) is made according to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(a) and Standing Order 9(4)(b), which provides:

In putting the question on such motion, the Speaker shall ask those Members who object to rise in their places. If twenty-five or more Members then rise, the motion shall be deemed to have been withdrawn, otherwise, the motion shall have been adopted.

I find the motion to be in order. Those Members who object will please rise in their places.

And fewer than 25 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion is therefore deemed adopted.

Motion (Mr. Ravis) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House is of course to cut off debate on second reading of this particular Bill. The official position of opposition Members is that in tabling the Bill in the House, the Government of Canada should at least say who will receive the money; in other words, those people who have deposits of more than $60,000. I do not know why—and I suppose no one in Canada apart from the Conservative Government knows why—the Government will not make public those names.

Mr. Dingwall: Cover-up.

Mr. Baker: That is exactly what it is. I should like to go back to the previous statements of the Government. For example, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who is in charge of this particular piece of legislation, through the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), indicated the following in the Budget:

And it challenges Canadians by rewarding success, not subsidizing effort.

In another portion of the Budget, he said:

—incentive that allows individual Canadians to decide where to put their money . . . This is central to our philosophy. The decisions should and will be made by individuals across Canada, not by politicians or public servants here in Ottawa.

In another part of the Budget, he said:

In keeping with the philosophy of greater reliance on market incentives, the Government is moving to reduce the use of grants and other subsidies.

Prior to the election, Members of the so-called great Conservative Government were quoted as saying:

It will be a Government open to public scrutiny—

They went on to say:

We will run an open, honest and accountable national Government. We will rebuild Canadians' trust in the federal Government by ensuring parliamentary accountability.

As if that were not bad enough, we have a closure motion before the House. What did the Conservatives say prior to the election? They said the following about Liberals: "They have no respect for our institutions; measures are rammed through Parliament by closure on debate". Mr. Speaker, what a contradiction by a political Party after taking office!

● (1230)

Of paramount importance in this debate is the fact that we have over $800 million being paid out to depositors in the Canadian Commercial Bank in the position of having more than $60,000 in deposits, and those depositors will not be identified. I repeat, over $800 million!

Mr. Speaker, that is quite something given the fact that we have today fishermen in my Province of Newfoundland without sufficient stamps to collect unemployment insurance benefits for the winter and farmers in western Canada who have been driven to the welfare office. The average farm family income in most sections of central and western Canada stands at about $5,000.

With all of these natural disasters occurring in this country, with people for the first time in their lives turning to the welfare system, the Government of Canada introduces a Bill in this Chamber to reimburse deposits over the $60,000 CDIC ceiling, and it is proposed that those moneys be reimbursed without naming the individuals and companies involved.

Mr. Speaker, what kind of Government is that? What kind of Government would allow 20,000 to 30,000 primary producers in eastern Canada, our fishermen and fish plant workers, to go on this year without sufficient earnings to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits for the winter?

Mr. Rodriguez: A Tory Government.

Mr. Baker: What kind of Government would introduce such a Bill and then turn around and say that it is going to wait until Christmas before it decides whether or not to do anything to help our fishermen and farmers?

Mr. Speaker, the obvious answer to that question is that only a truly Tory Government could carry through on that kind of philosophy and that kind of contradiction.

The Government recently announced in this Chamber that it would no longer guarantee fisheries improvement loans with the banks. Those loans were taken out in the late 1970s and early 1980s. It will no longer guarantee those loans to individual fishermen, and our fishermen are now being taken to court and having their possessions seized. It will no longer support those guarantees. Yet that same Government comes along with a Bill to reimburse those with deposits in the Canadian Commercial Bank in excess of $60,000. We are talking about rich people here. Some of those who will benefit from this Bill are millionaires.

Of course, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation guarantees deposits of up to $60,000. But now the Government of Canada turns around and says that while it is not going to name any of those who will benefit, it will reimburse those individuals and companies which had deposits in the Canadian Commercial Bank in excess of $60,000, together with any interest that would have been earned up to a certain point in time.

Mr. Rodriguez: A money-back guarantee.

Mr. Baker: A money-back guarantee, yes. Mr. Speaker, that certainly is not acceptable to the Canadian people. We have, on the one hand, a Government that refuses to guarantee the loans of fishermen because the banks went over a certain limit and, on the other, a Government that is willing to reimburse those who had over $60,000 in deposits, and they are willing to give all that money back to these individuals and companies without even telling the Canadian public who they are.

Just imagine how a fisherman with nothing at all in the bank feels! When the farmer in western Canada or the fisherman in Newfoundland goes to the welfare office to apply for benefits, one of the first questions asked relates to how much money that individual has in the bank, and if there is any money in the bank, that money has to be spent before that individual can qualify for benefits. A farmer or fisherman applying for welfare cannot even have money in a child's bank account, money earmarked for that child's education.

The Government is saying to our fishermen that it will no longer guarantee their loans with the banks; that because the loans have gone over a certain limit, the courts will now be permitted to seize their property. It is saying that it can no longer support a guarantee that it put in writing seven years ago. And yet that same Government is now proposing to pay off millionaires in respect of a situation where there was no guarantee. There was no guarantee to reimburse those people for potential losses as there was in the case of loans under the Fisheries Improvement Program. Yet here we have the Government of Canada proposing to spend over $800 million to reimburse the depositors in the Canadian Commercial Bank. And we hear: "What's $800 million?"

In giving an account of the problems of the banking sector in this Chamber, the Government Members toss around figures. We hear: "Oh, it's only a billion." They never come clean; they never say how much everything costs.

The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is broke, and has been since the PCs took office. It is about $900 million in the red.

An Hon. Member: You are treading on delicate ground.

Mr. Baker: The hon. gentleman says that I am treading on delicate ground. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation will have to borrow from the Bank of Canada and as a result of that borrowing rates on deposit insurance will increase.

But there is still money, Mr. Speaker, coming from the Government of Canada. A billion dollars here or there does not really matter. But only for a certain class of people. For the poor farmer, the poor fisherman, the poor logger, the people who keep this country going—much more so, Mr. Speaker, than do Members of Parliament or a great many other professions—there is no money. Mr. Speaker, we want to know to whom this money is being given. Once we have that information, we will decide whether or not they should get it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned about the bank bail-out Bill, and I am particularly concerned with the fact that the Government is now proposing that there be a limit to the debate on this measure, thereby not allowing for adequate discussion of the subject.

Canadians are increasingly concerned about the security of their banking institutions. We have had in the news word of the possible failure of the Mercantile Bank, with talk of a merger or buy-out of it in order to save it from difficulties. The failure of the Northland Bank followed, in rapid succession, the failure of the Canadian Commercial Bank.

We are very concerned about some of the implications of these failures, and particularly that of the Canadian Commercial Bank, the biggest bank failure we have had to date. Canadians have cause to ponder how their institutions are being run.

For a year preceding the failure of the Canadian Commercial Bank, the president of that bank was an American who was resident in California. We have to wonder who is tending the shop.

We have been presented with an appalling list of erroneous, inadequate, and imprudent banking practices, including lending practices and decisions about the areas in which loans would be made by that bank, and that situation prevailed for a considerable period of time.

For the last entire year of that bank's history, it did not have a president who was at home guarding the interests of Canadian depositors and shareholders.

It is the Canadian taxpayer who is now going to have to pay as a result of the imprudent decisions taken by these people. And we do not have the answers yet. We do not know who it is that we are being asked to spend all of this bail-out money for. We do not know yet the extent to which the California operations of the Canadian Commercial Bank led to its overall failure. We do know that a lot of money went from the Canadian Commercial Bank to its supposed branch plant, its bought-out bank in California; but it is not clear which was the head office and which was the branch plant. To what extent was the Canadian Commercial Bank, in effect, acting as the branch plant and taking the losses for a bank in California?

We have a Progressive Conservative Government that acted far too hastily in making the original decision for a bail-out. It did not have adequate information in March, when it made this decision. It simply hoped that the figures given it about the long-term viability of that bank would be accurate. However, it became painfully obvious this past summer that the problems of the Canadian Commercial Bank were far more fundamental than had been revealed up to that point. Certainly it was up to the Government at the time of the bank bail-out to look into the long-term viability of the bank and not simply to indulge in wishful thinking which led it to believe that the bank could be turned around and made profitable and solvent again.

We have to wonder why a merger with one of the chartered banks was not considered at that time rather than rushing into a bail-out which turned out to be extremely costly to the Canadian taxpayers. We have to wonder what kind of personality problems on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) might play a part in this. Perhaps the loss of face involved in a bank failure under a new Conservative Government when banking institutions had been sound for many years is something the Prime Minister did not want. Perhaps he did not want to have a bank failure appear as a blot on his record. Perhaps that is why a hasty bail-out was carried out rather than taking more time to look at the options and come up with a solution that might have worked in the long term. We do not know if such a solution would have worked, but we do know that the decision was taken prematurely.

We still have questions about the discussions the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had with the heads of the large chartered banks. We have heard reports indicating that the banks were getting information which made them take their money out of the bank. Certainly we do have information indicating that it was largely the banks that did take their deposits out of the Canadian Commercial Bank after the bail-out when they began to realize that the bail-out had been an unwise, stop-gap measure and that eventually the music would have to be faced.

When looking at the deposits of the Canadian Commercial Bank, we see that at the end of January before the bail-out, the Government of Canada had $15.5 million on deposit. After the bail-out it still had roughly the same amount of money, $14.4 million, on deposit at the bank. The provinces had $45 million on deposit before the bail-out and $45 million on deposit after the bail-out. However, the banks had $641.8 million on deposit before the bail-out, but by the end of June, they had $267.2 million on deposit. There was a very substantial reduction in deposits on the part of other banks. They began to see the writing on the wall and to understand that the bail-out had been a short-term measure and was not going to solve the problem of the bank.

Before the bail-out, individuals had $410.1 million on deposit and after the bail-out they had $308.5 million on deposit. Certainly some individuals knew or had the wisdom to assess the situation correctly in time to get their money out of the bank.

Who is going to benefit from this massive bail-out? It will be the uninsured depositors who have uninsured deposits above the limit of $60,000. Let us take a look at precisely who these people are. We do not have their names although we would like to. However, we can look at the categories of individuals and corporations involved. Since that is the best information we have, that is what we have to examine. Banks had $200 million left on deposit with the CCB. Corporations had $140 million, credit unions had $130 million, investment dealers had $110 million, and the provinces had $165 million. Municipalities had $82 million on deposit and individuals had $27 million on deposit. Regarding the latter two categories, there is much more cause for concern.

Members of the New Democratic Party have recommended that there should be compensation for those who have been badly hurt by this failure and were not in a position to know better. Less sophisticated investors would have been innocent in this kind of situation and unable to protect their own interests. However, in the case of the chartered banks, major corporations, investment dealers and indeed the provinces, this kind of excuse simply does not hold. We consider it absolutely unconscionable for there to be a blanket bail-out, and indeed a bail-out without names attached. We find it unconscionable that taxpayers' money should be used in this wholly unaccountable way.

As well, we have some concerns about the role played by the Bank of Canada in this procedure. Part of the arrangement made at the time of the bail-out last March was for the Bank of Canada to infuse funds into the Canadian Commercial Bank. It was to lend the Canadian Commercial Bank any amount of money that was needed to make up for short-term losses in deposits. Of course, as word began to get around and people began to figure out the situation, there was a short-term loss in deposits, particularly because of the chartered banks and some investment corporations.

The money that was lent to the Canadian Commercial Bank by the Bank of Canada amounted to $1.3 billion. This money was supposed to have been secured against the assets of the bank, but it is not clear what security this entails. If the assets are not worth very much, that is not very good security. At this point, it is possible that the assets of the bank are going to be worth only half of their book value at the time these advances were made. Thus, it is possible that the bail-out, which amounts to $875 million at the moment, could go well over the billion-dollar mark. That is a very substantial amount of money.

What is $1 billion worth to this Government? I think that that is a question that members of my Party have been asking a great deal. It is shocking that the Conservative Government could easily find $1 billion, and perhaps even more if necessary, for a bank bail-out while it has not been able to find that kind of money for old age pensioners, family allowance recipients, the users of child tax credits and those who benefit from social programs. The amount of money the Government proposes to save on its child support programs this year is one-fifth of $1 billion. In other words, the Government can find five times as much money for a bank bail-out as it can for supporting Canadian children. We know that one in five Canadian children lives under the poverty line.

An amount of $1 billion spent on arts and culture would be an enormous infusion of funds to that area. This year, there were cut-backs of $100 million in arts and culture, yet the Government can find $1 billion for the banks. In short, the bail-out amounts to 10 times as much money as the Government decided to cut out of the area of arts and culture, an area which could do so much to build our country and bring good jobs to Canadians.

In conclusion, I am very concerned about the amount of money involved in this bail-out and about the fact that we are not receiving the names of those involved. There is no accountability to the public and this is money that could be so much better spent in so many other priority areas.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak in this debate. I and many of my colleagues did not speak during the original debate in order to give a full opportunity to members of the Opposition to put their points on the record. Therefore, within the context of this debate on time allocation, I would like to put a few points on the record with respect to the Bill that is before us.

I think it is important that we have on the record some remarks made by Conservative Members of Parliament from the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Parry: Otto, take him out to the ball game.

Mr. Lewis: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. There is some babble from across the way. Perhaps the Hon. Member could put that in writing. It is a real shame to see members of the NDP, who should be supporting pension funds, universities and small credit unions, reacting in this way. One would have thought that members of the NDP, particularly with their strong western representation—

Mr. Rodriguez: Let's have a means test.

Mr. Cassidy: Let's hear it for foreign banks.

Mr. Lewis: I thought they wanted to support western Canadians.

Mr. Cassidy: Those poor, benighted orphans of capitalism.

Mr. Lewis: I think it is a shame to hear members of the NDP shouting against what we are trying to do, which is to support first, the Province of Alberta and the people of Alberta who invested in these banks and, second—

Mr. Rodriguez: Like Peter Pocklington.

Mr. Lewis: —the regional banking system. I wish to refer specifically to the recession and what it, propagated, promulgated and assisted by the NDP and the Liberal Party, did to the Province of Alberta. We know that in Canada as a whole we had problems. However, the recession in the West was heightened by the efforts of the Liberal Party and heightened by the implementation of the national energy policy supported by the NDP. Everyone in this House knows, and it should go on the record, that the NDP and the Liberals heightened the depression out west. We in Ontario are fortunate. Our economy has rebounded. We have a resilient economy, despite the fact that we now have an accord between the socialists and the Liberals in Ontario.

• (1250)

What the Conservative Party is doing is to support the bank and trying to strengthen the economy of the West. It is a shame that western members of the New Democratic Party are against the economy of the West. It is a shame that the western members of the New Democratic Party are against strengthening the economy of the West.

Mr. Cassidy: Your Government is giving money to the foreign banks.

Mr. Lewis: Let us talk about the foreign banks. The credibility of the Hon. Member—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Cassidy: These people are being paid from taxpayers' money.

Mr. Rodriguez: Poor westerners.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I hate to interrupt the Hon. Members. It seems that I keep hearing things.

Mr. Fulton: Not Mackenzie King voices!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It could be from the same source. However, I would appreciate it if Members from all sides of the House would keep the tone down and let the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary finish his speech.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Did I hear you correctly suggesting that it was the spirits which surrounded Mackenzie King which led the Government to bring in this bail-out Bill?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): No. From what I keep hearing from a certain part of the House, I am under the impression that sometimes Hon. Members from a certain part of the House may be under the influence of spirits of either one kind or the other.

The point I am trying to make is that I think all Members of the House would appreciate it if the Hon. Member were allowed to finish his speech. We have a certain number of problems hearing him because of all the noise.

Mr. Beatty: Because of the spirit of exchange.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I woke up Hon. Members opposite. However, I think you, Sir, may have put them at ease.

I wish to talk about the regional banking system and what it means to the country. In the 1970s, the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party supported an extension of the banking system to give regional banks an opportunity. We know that the socialists would like to nationalize the banks; but at least we in the two stronger Parties in the country want to give the regional banks an opportunity. Thus, we gave them that opportunity and they invested out west. They invested in the energy industry and all matters connected with it, despite the problems which they faced.

Mr. Rodriguez: How can you say that with a straight face?

Mr. Lewis: When these regional banks went out and attracted deposits, they attracted them from municipalities, colleges, universities and pension funds. In supporting the concept of regional banks and in paying back those depositors we are simply supporting the concept of a regional banking system. It is an absolute shame that members of the New Democratic Party—and I appreciate there are not too many Liberals out west—purport to represent the West.

Mr. Gauthier: There are plenty of Liberals out west.

Mr. Lewis: It is a shame that the members of the New Democratic Party are against the regional banking system and want to squash that system.

Mr. Orlikow: We are for an honest banking system.

Mr. Cassidy: You won't bail out farmers!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) would not know a farmer if he saw one.

Mr. Cassidy: I have them in my riding.

Mr. Lewis: The farmers would laugh at the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre. They laughed at the Hon. Member when he was leader of the New Democratic Party in Ontario. He got laughed out of the provincial Legislature, and he is fast working at being laughed out of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: You're being laughed at right now.

Mr. Lewis: What the whole matter boils down to is the fact that we as a federal Government have supported, in the past, the transfer of billions of dollars to the Atlantic provinces because we believe in strengthening the entire country. We have invested $1 billion in the aircraft industry in Quebec to help that particular area of Quebec. We have assisted the eastern banks with the Dome refinancing. We built the St. Lawrence Seaway. In this country we believe in regionalization and in helping those areas which need help the most. I am sorry that the New Democratic Party does not believe in that type of thing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: I am sorry that the New Democratic Party, with all its western representation, with all its members from Saskatchewan—

Mr. Rodriguez: Whose Bill is this?

Mr. Lewis: —and Manitoba, does not believe in regional banks.

Mr. Rodriguez: You killed the banks.

Mr. Lewis: I notice that there are not too many of those Members in the House today. Perhaps Hon. Members opposite should ask them how they feel about the big five. Maybe Hon. Members in the House should ask their colleagues who are not here today—

Mr. Rodriguez: You ask Barbara, you killed the banks.

Mr. Lewis: —how they feel about the big five and what sort of support they have for them.

I wish to close by saying that we believe our banking system in Canada is sound and stable. The steps we are taking in repaying the depositors are being taken to support the banking system. The members of the New Democratic Party and the Liberals are fighting the paying back of deposits made by hospitals, municipalities—

Mr. Gauthier: Uninsured depositors.

Mr. Lewis: —pension funds and universities. I think Hon. Members opposite should go and ask those universities—

Mr. Gauthier: Cover-up, that is what we are opposing.

Mr. Lewis: —how they feel about the delay. Every day the passage of this Bill is delayed, interest which would be paid to those hospitals and pension funds is delayed.

Mr. Gauthier: Tell us who they are.

Mr. Rodriguez: Who are they?

Mr. Lewis: Hon. Members opposite can have that on their consciences if they like. They can go out and campaign the next time around and say: "Yes. I delayed passage of the Bill because I did not want you to get your interest payments". If Hon. Members opposite wish to do that, then I invite them to go ahead. I notice there are no western Members here making those type of speeches. They are leaving it to their fellow Members from Ontario. Where are the western Members? I ask Hon. Members opposite, where are their western colleagues? How come they are not in the House? They are embarrassed by what their colleagues from Ontario are doing to them.

Mr. Rodriguez: Where are the risk-takers?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, mine was a very carefully prepared speech—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: I became somewhat excited by the complete lack of responsibility shown by my colleagues across the way. I appreciate having had the opportunity to contribute to this debate.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some confusion with respect to what the Bill before us is all about.

An Hon. Member: You are confused.

Mr. Hopkins: I would like to set Hon. Members straight. Bill C-79 is an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, as my hon. friend from Ottawa-Vanier pointed out to the previous speaker.

The previous speaker said that he had a well prepared speech. I would hate to hear one that is not prepared.

I would like to straighten out another matter as well. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) also spoke in this debate. He said: "We Conservatives are talking about $470 million while the Opposition is talking about a $1 billion bail-out." I think it behooves the Conservative Government at least to have its members read a Bill before they get up in the House to speak about it. Clause 16 of the Government's Bill reads as follows:

> There is hereby appropriated, for the purposes of this Act eight hundred and seventy-five million dollars to be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund from time to time as required.

Yet, the Hon. Member stands up and says: "We Conservatives are talking about $470 million." How phoney can one get?

I would like to put another fact on the record. No list of depositors has been granted to the Members of this House before the Bill came before it for discussion. Indeed, no list was granted before the time allocation motion was moved.

We have no information with respect to the Northland Bank. I would remind all Hon. Members of the House that we as Members of Parliament sit here because we must be accountable to the taxpayers of the country. We do not sit in the House to vote blindly for something which is not explained in principle nor, indeed, spelled out as being a Bill with respect to uninsured depositors in these banks.

I would also remind the Government that it was a Bill of the Liberal Government presented approximately five years ago which raised the limit on insured loans in the banks of Canada from $20,000 to $60,000. This Government now comes in and, holus-bolus, takes in everyone. All of us must be accountable to the taxpayers of this country and I hope that Hon. Members of this Government are prepared to go out into their own constituencies and explain to the senior citizens and those families with children why their tax deductibility was taken away from them. I hope those Hon. Members can explain why they are bailing out the rich and the wealthy.

● (1300)

Where is that great theory of Tory individual enterprise? We heard all of those speeches in the previous Parliament about investment and about the need to give people the chance to invest and take their risks.

Mr. Gauthier: Open Government.

Mr. Hopkins: Open Government. There is no risk here whatsoever. The Government's buddies get into trouble, and what does it do? It bails them out using the tax dollars taken out of the pockets of the little people. We are in the midst of debating one of the most difficult issues to hit the banking system in Canadian history, probably since the time of the railway scandal back in the 1870s.

The Government has tried to cut the senior citizens back in the name of economy, and it is going to be reminded of that day in and day out. The Government lifted $170 million out of one of the best high-tech industries we have in Canada, namely, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. For what? Where is the money, Mr. Speaker? Is that $170 million now being used to bail out the friends of the Tory Party of Canada?

I was quite interested during this debate to listen to Hon. Members of the Conservative Party talk about the terrible Opposition which is trying to drag out this debate and that they had to bring in closure. I remember, as I am sure other Hon. Members do, that in previous years when previous Governments would bring in limitation on debate, there would be the biggest screaming on earth from the Opposition. Is it not strange how the Tory philosophy changes now that those Hon. Members sit on the Government side of the House? It now becomes very worth while to bring in closure on debate. I remember sitting in one of those fine seats on the government side a few years ago when we, as a Government, brought in limitation on debate. The Opposition at that time stood up and sang "O Canada". They were not in very good voice but they sang it. I suppose they think that if we were really a responsible Opposition, we would stand up and sing "O Canada" hoping that we can save Canada from this Tory Government.

Mr. Lewis: Spare us.

Mr. Hopkins: Hon. Members on the Government side are trying their best to drive home the fact that this is a western Canadian issue. This is a Canadian issue which affects every Canadian from coast to coast. When the Government tries to regionalize issues such as this, what it is trying to do is to balkanize Canada.

Mr. Gauthier: That's right.

Mr. Hopkins: That is what it is trying to do with this financial situation today. We heard all kinds of promises, Mr. Speaker, in the last election campaign. We were told about the wonderful things this Government was going to do. Now the Government says it cannot do these things because there is no money. Yet we have enough money to bail out a bank at the rate of $1 billion. There is nothing to it, Mr. Speaker, even though some of the Government's own Members do not even know the amount of money which is involved in this Bill. The Conservative Government is trying to blame the Liberals for the regulatory system which is in place in Canada today. If the regulatory system is so bad in the banking industry in Canada, why then did the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) tell people to invest their money in the Canadian Commercial Bank because it was one of the greatest things since sliced bread? What it is doing here today in this Bill—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Hopkins: —is not only bailing out its rich friends but it is bailing out the Minister of Finance—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Hopkins: —the Minister of State for Finance and the Prime Minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Gauthier: Good speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am happy to know that from the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

It being 1.05 o'clock p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House, under the provisions of Standing Order 84, have expired. Accordingly, under the terms of the Standing Order, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the motion.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea?

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Call in the Members.

During the ringing of the bells:

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in connection with the vote. This vote is being taken after the House accepted the request of the Government for extended hours. I question whether the bells, under the circumstances, should ring for only 15 minutes rather than, in accordance with, the usual practice, ring until both the Government and Opposition Whips are ready to come in.

I say this because we are not dealing with a situation within the fixed time provided for by the rules. We are under extended hours and, therefore, I submit to you, Sir, that the bells should not cease ringing automatically 15 minutes after the call of the vote.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much receiving some forwarning from the Opposition House Leader of his intention to raise this question. If I can refer you to Standing Order 9.(4), Mr. Speaker, with respect to extending hours, this motion is intended to extend:

—a sitting through a lunch or dinner hour or beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of considering a specified item of business or a stage or stages thereof—

We are not entering into a new stage or into a new consideration of the debate by any means but we are simply continuing on with respect to the debate which is presently before the House. It does not introduce any new dimension with respect to the debate; it is only to conclude the debate. Therefore, it is my submission to you, Sir, that the provision with respect to the limited bell of 15 minutes does apply in this instance and it would apply in the course of the debate under normal circumstances, a new element not having been introduced into this matter.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is related but somewhat different. I do not understand how we can be debating a point of order while the bells are ringing. It is quite clear that all business in the House ceases when the bells start to ring.

Mr. Fulton: Then you had better sit down.

Mr. Deans: As my colleague says, I should not even be standing. But while I am on my feet, let me make one point. I believe that the extension of the hours takes us beyond the normal hour, that the rule for the debate of two hours is that normally it was considered to be a debate during the ordinary sitting hours of the House. Therefore, the length of the bell is at the discretion of the party Whips rather than a 15 minute bell as set out in the Standing Orders under normal circumstances.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I would like to point out to the Chair that the amount of time taken for this debate should not in any way affect your decision with respect to the fifteen-minute rule.

● (1310)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Section 84 of the Standing Orders seems to clearly indicate that the bell rings for a period of 15 minutes, and although I can understand the point made by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), it may be a question he would like to bring up with the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Procedures and Organization.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hnatyshyn), which was agreed to on the following division:

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 22

[English]

EDUCATION

FUNDING OF UNIVERSITY RESEARCH

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the universities of the country are absolutely vital to Canada's social, cultural, and economic development. The development of an educated citizenry, the provision of highly qualified manpower and the advancement and application of knowledge through research and development activities, are but some of the crucial services which the universities provide to Canada and to Canadians. Yet the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Ministers seem to be doing almost everything in their power to destabilize the university system.

The "Nielsen task force" is conducting a secret inquiry that may be used to condone future cut-backs in federal support for post-secondary education. The federal granting councils have not been given the funds which are essential to the maintenance of the research infrastructure in the universities. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) wants to cut transfers to the provinces. When, by how much, and from which program, he won't say. Yet this is the Government which supposedly ushered in the era of openness and co-operation with the provinces.

It is time for the federal Government to come clean with the universities. The future of our nation depends on it.

CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

DEPENDENCY OF POOR PEOPLE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, most Canadians have come to believe that because of the improvement and extension of our social welfare programs, Canadians in need, those who are hungry or do not have clothing, have their needs met by one of the federal, provincial or municipal programs. Unfortunately, that has not happened in recent years. An increasing number of people are finding that to obtain food and clothing, they now have to depend upon charitable organizations.

Recently the Anglican Church issued a report showing that 200,000 people in Vancouver depend upon charitable food banks. A recent report on the National News on CBC reported a similar situation for farm families in Saskatchewan.

I call upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to meet with his provincial colleagues to establish a task force to see what is the situation, how many people are in need, and how many people are not having their basic necessities met through Government programs, and to plan to meet those needs through Government support rather than through charitable sources.

TOURISM

IMPORTANCE TO THE ECONOMY

Mr. Fernand Ladouceur (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, there is a sector in Canada which deserves our particular attention because of its economic impact and the jobs it generates.

This particular sector injects nearly $20 billion in our economy, it employs over 600,000 people and it covers 60,000 businesses located across Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I am referring to our tourist industry, a sector which should be given the status it deserves, in addition to our recognition of its dynamic role in our economy.

Last week, I had the pleasure of attending the National Conference on Tourism Tomorrow, with more than 300 participants from the tourist industry, including the private sector and the various levels of government. The conference reflected this Government's commitment to co-operation, consultation, research and consensus, and more specifically, its commitment to preparing consistent policies for the development of this industry. Once again, the conference came across as tangible proof of our Government's will to demonstrate to all Canadians the importance of sensible participation in developing reality-oriented policies.

CO-OPERATIVES

FIRST MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, this is National Co-op Week in Canada. It is a significant week for Canadians when one considers that 43 per cent of all Canadians over 18 years of age belong to at least one co-op. In my home Province of Saskatchewan, 78 per cent of the adult population belongs to at least one co-op. Therefore it is appropriate that the highlight of National Co-op Week, an historic, first-ever meeting of federal and provincial Ministers responsible for co-operatives will take place tomorrow in Regina.

Co-ops are a mainstay of Canada's economy and society. In effect they form a third sector of the economy. There are financial, agricultural, housing, consumer, retail, energy, artistic, and manufacturing co-ops, to name just a few. Co-operatives are active in local, domestic, and international markets. Co-operative management education is a new and rapidly expanding field in many universities across Canada, including the University of Saskatchewan in my own riding of Saskatoon East.

My hon. colleague, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), who is also responsible for Canadian co-operatives, has developed an excellent rapport with co-ops from coast to coast. They know that our Government recognizes, appreciates, and wholeheartedly supports the essential jobs and services which co-ops contribute to our economy. I wish my hon. colleague every success in the meeting with his provincial counterparts.

PETRO-CANADA

OPPOSITION TO ACQUISITION OF GULF

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the dishes are flying in the Tory kitchen, and Canadians are justifiably upset with the Government.

I should like to read a letter which I just received from a person living in Calgary who, by mistake, thought that I was a Tory Member of Parliament. Heaven forbid that that would ever happen. It reads:

> I am returning my sustaining membership card in the PC Party, suitably mutilated in the form of a double cross to protest the hypocritical action recently taken by the Government to further expand commercial activities by approving Petro Can's purchase of Gulf's marketing department.
> Despite trying to mask your actions in a cloak of Canadianism, the issue is simple. The Government or its Crown corporations has no more business selling gasoline than it does selling groceries—
>
> You have broken faith with those who voted for and supported the PCs as a party of free enterprise. The question now is: Are you honest enough to admit making a mistake, and are you courageous enough to reverse the action?—

Have you any political principle besides getting elected and holding power?—
Sincerely,

"THE BLUE JAYS HAVE STRUCK OUT!"

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I read the following with my deepest apology to Ernest Lawrence Thayer, wherever he may be:

It looked extremely rocky for the Blue Jay nine that day;
The score stood three to three with one game left to play.
So, when Barfield died at second, and Johnston did the same,
A pallor wreathed the features of the patrons of the game.

A straggling few got up to go, leaving there the rest,
With that hope which springs eternal within the human breast.
For they thought: "If only the Blue Jays could get a whack at that",
They'd put even money now, with the Blue Jays at the bat.

Then from the gladdened multitude went up a joyous yell—
It rumbled in the mountaintops, it rattled in the dell;
It struck upon the hillside and rebounded on the flat;
The Blue Jays, the mighty Blue Jays, were advancing to the bat.

But they left their men on second; and also first and third;
Bobby stood a-watching, to see what had occurred,
And there they stayed for time and time again;
Bobby's face grew stern and cold; his muscles began to strain.

Oh somewhere in this favoured land the sun is shining bright;
The band is playing somewhere, and somewhere hearts are light;
And somewhere men are laughing, and somewhere children shout,
But there is no joy in Hog Town: The Blue Jays have struck out.

THE ECONOMY

VITALITY OF ECONOMY IN RIDING OF ARGENTEUIL-PAPINEAU

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, our friends opposite must have been very disappointed upon reading in the papers this morning that our Government has maintained its popularity ratings and still has the confidence of the majority of Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Bourgault: This kind of success is not achieved by scandal-mongering or verbal fireworks. It is based on the facts of our Canadian economy today, and that is what the people wanted on September 4, 1984.

Mr. Speaker, in Argenteuil-Papineau, in my riding, three new industries will be opening very shortly, creating over 160 permanent jobs. Boverre and Faro Dentaire, of Italian origin, will create 58 and 54 permanent jobs, respectively, and invest over $17 million. Nora, a mineral water bottling plant, will create 48 permanent jobs with $8 million invested.

Mr. Speaker, these are only a few examples of the economic vitality of my riding, and I am sure that the new employment programs introduced by our Government will help give hundreds of Canadian unemployed workers, especially youth and women, an opportunity to acquire experience and find permanent and satifsying employment.

Mr. Speaker, the people judge a Government by its acts and intentions, not by the partisan critique exercised by my friends opposite.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

TRIP BY LIBERAL MEMBERS TO TAIWAN

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, Conservative Party MPs have a long tradition of accepting freebee trips to countries such as South Korea, South Africa, and Taiwan. But what about the Liberals? On Tuesday—

Ms. Copps: What about Soviet Union? What about Ed Broadbent's visit to the Soviet Union? What about Ed?

Mr. Rodriguez: On Tuesday night, two Liberal MPs, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) and the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif), returned from their own all-expenses-paid junket to Taiwan. Mr. Speaker, while it may not have cost those two MPs a cent to spend ten days in Taiwan, there is indeed a price to pay. In the last two years Canadian wheat sales to the China that Canada recognizes were valued at $1.3 billion. Was it worth risking the future of Canadian wheat exports to China for ten days in Taiwan?

What kind of signal is the Liberal Party sending to the Government of China when it authorizes its MPs to accept freebee low-road-to-Formosa junkets?

Is the Liberal Party prepared to endorse the view of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell that the Taiwanese Government, a Government which does not allow opposition Parties to campaign in elections, is, and I quote, "a very good, very progressive, very open government"?

And finally, Mr. Speaker, what about the textile workers who live in the riding of the Liberal MP for Richmond-Wolfe? What price will they pay when their own MP would rather accept an all-expenses-paid trip to Taiwan than to stand up and defend Canadian jobs against sweatshop textile imports from countries like Taiwan?

Mr. Speaker, the Rat Pack is not dead; it is on sabbatical in Taiwan.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

RHOSP—QUEBEC DECISION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, last May 23 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced that contributions to a registered home ownership savings plan (RHOSP) would no longer qualify for preferential tax treatment. Contributors were thus able to withdraw their accumulated funds and spend them as they saw fit without any tax liability.

Over $2 billion could and still can be freed for injection into new activities likely to create jobs and stimulate home construction and consumption.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Government of Quebec has yet to make its regulations consistent with those of the federal Government, as the other provinces did. It goes without saying that the Quebec decision prevents people from spending funds accumulated under the plan, creates a prejudice, and deprives Quebecers of a potential $300 million purchasing power, whereas the rest of the country stands to benefit from the injection of available funds into the economy.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the Minister of Finance to review the matter and put pressure to bear on his provincial colleague, or to take steps to enable the residents of Quebec, and particularly those of the riding of Lotbinière, to take full advantage of the initiative of our Government.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT'S INDECISION—CONSEQUENCES FOR MONTREAL EAST

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, it is saddening to see some Conservative Members gloat over their popularity while 5,000 Montreal East workers are on the verge of losing their jobs because of the indecision of the Mulroney Government.

Mr. Speaker, it is saddening to note that their first decision—they were concerned over the image of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) whose priority was to save face—was to waste $56 million of the taxpayers' money to change the colour of our military uniforms.

Mr. Speaker, I plead with all Members to put pressure on the Conservative Government and find solutions to avoid the Canadian Vickers shutdown. The solution is quite simple: let the Prime Minister assume his responsibilities, grab the phone and tell the president of the company to stick to the provisions of the previous contract.

With respect to the Gulf refinery, Mr. Speaker, again the issue is quite simple: the Prime Minister ought to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to give any prospective buyer of the Montreal East Gulf refinery the full benefit of the kind of credit the Reichman brothers had when they bought the whole Gulf refinery complex.

Mr. Speaker, in the case of Bombardier, Laforge and other Montreal East industries, again the Prime Minister need only ask his VIA Rail and CN pal to award contracts for 25 to 40 locomotives to be manufactured in Montreal East, and this way we—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his allotted time has expired.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL REVENUE

GULF TAKEOVER TAX RULING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

For a number of weeks my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount, and I have been trying to get to the root of the $1 billion tax largesse to participants in the Gulf Canada deal.

This morning in an interview published in The Globe and Mail, the former Deputy Minister of Finance, Marshall Cohen, had the following to say about that deal:

> A couple of times it came up in . . . Priorities and Planning—

And as you know, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister presides over that committee.

However, at his press conference last Friday the Prime Minister of Canada said about this $1 billion tax ruling, and I quote his words:

> I can only assume, because there was no involvement by me or anyone else nor would there be in a revenue ruling, that the officers of the Department of Revenue passed judgment—

My question for the Deputy Prime Minister is: Did the Prime Minister and the senior Ministers of the Government who participate in the Priorities and Planning Committee discuss and review the whole Gulf Canada deal, including the tax ruling that now appears to be a part of that deal? And what was the Prime Minister referring to last Friday when he said that neither he nor any of his senior Ministers knew anything about the deal; that it was only the Minister of National Revenue?

Could the Deputy Prime Minister try to reconcile those two statements?

An Hon. Member: They are irreconcilable.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is the responsibility of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to reconcile the preamble to his question and the question itself.

As a former Cabinet Minister he knows that there is a process under law whereby these tax rulings are made; that they are made by the Department of National Revenue. Certainly, if he wishes to direct questions to the Minister of National Revenue, I am sure that that Minister can explain the process to him—a process which I am sure he understands—in more detail. But he knows, or should know, that there is no consideration or review of those tax rulings in any Cabinet process.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Deputy Prime Minister is telling me that this matter was not discussed in the Priorities and Planning Committee. Yet the former Deputy Minister of Finance has said it was and that he left the room so as not to participate in the discussion.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO FORMER DEPUTY MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Let me direct a question to the Minister of Finance. The Prime Minister also made it clear in his press conference last Friday that neither he or any senior Minister—presumably the Minister of Finance—knew anything about that $1 billion tax ruling.

Mr. Cohen is quoted in The Globe and Mail this morning as saying that the Minister of Finance relieved him of that specific situation because of a potential conflict of interest and that the Minister of Finance dealt with it, to use Mr. Cohen's words, on a "hands-on, day in day out" basis.

My question for the Minister of Finance is: Didn't he deal with that particular tax ruling? Didn't he instruct the Minister of National Revenue, after a Priorities and Planning Committee decision, that that was part of the Gulf assets purchase?

An Hon. Member: Come on!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What is the real story here? Don't be funny about this, because I can tell you that this is a very serious matter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to read the article very carefully. Mr. Cohen was talking about the Gulf-O&Y deal. The matter of the acquisition of Gulf Canada by O&Y was discussed, and was discussed at some length because of the importance of that deal.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REVIEW

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we have been stonewalled by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance for weeks. I am going to put a question, within the rules, to the Chairman of the Finance Committee, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South.

I want to ask the Chairman of the Finance Committee whether he would agree to convene that committee for the purpose of reviewing this whole matter of the Gulf Canada acquisition by O&Y and call before that committee all the participants in the deal. Those participants can then produce their own tax rulings. It would not go against the Income Tax Act. They could produce their respective rulings. The committee could then call before it the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Revenue, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the Prime Minister.

Would he do that?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: And don't look to Mike for the answer.

Mr. Speaker: I have a little difficulty with the question. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that questions to committee chairmen are supposed to be about matters before the committee.

An Hon. Member: Oh, come on!

Mr. Speaker: Questions are supposed to be about matters that are before the committee. That is the limit.

I suggest, in the circumstances, that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition may wish to rephrase his question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have made my point to the chairman of that committee. He knows what he can do.

• (1420)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Member will know that the matter has been answered more than adequately by the Minister of Finance and the Deputy Prime Minister.

We in this Government have gone overboard to make sure that parliamentarians have a full opportunity to debate important and real issues, not the phony issues the Leader of the Opposition is raising with respect to this deal.

ROLE OF ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTER

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, in light of Mr. Cohen's revelations, I did not think that the Minister of Finance would stonewall us. In response to what the Minister just said, Mr. Cohen has said that the Minister was advised that the Gulf takeover was handled by the Minister of Finance and David Weyman, the Assistant Deputy Minister responsible for tax policy. Is the Minister telling us that the Assistant Deputy Minister responsible for tax policy was not concerned with a tax ruling made by the Government of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if there was any tax ruling, that tax ruling was handled by the Department of National Revenue, the Department which has responsibility for this matter under the law. The Hon. Member knows the nature of that law because he himself is a tax lawyer.

[Translation]

Mr. Johnston: That is irrelevant to the question, Mr. Speaker.

SALE OF GULF—ROLE PLAYED BY CABINET PRIORITIES COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): I would like to continue with a very simple question. Did the Priorities and Planning Committee consider the tax ruling given in the Gulf transaction? Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Stonewall!

Mr. Foster: Check with the PMO.

Ms. Copps: Check with Barbara.

Mr. Nielsen: Essentially that is the same question that was put by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. The hon. gentleman asked if the tax ruling was considered in P and P and I have answered that question.

Ms. Copps: What's the answer?

Mr. Nielsen: The Hon. Member, as a former Cabinet Minister, should know that questions of that nature are subject to a process under law which is administered—

Mr. Gauthier: Cover up.

Mr. Nielsen: —by the Department of National Revenue. Perhaps it would be a bit more fruitful if Hon. Members would direct questions regarding that process, if they are in doubt about it, to the Minister of National Revenue.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—ROLE OF PROVINCES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade who is telling the provinces that they will have to surrender some of their power to free trade negotiators. Does the Minister not understand that there is a federal system of Government in this country? Will he commit the Government to respect fully the rights of the provinces as these negotiations go forward?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the House and the Hon. Member that the Minister is well aware of the rights of the provinces and their exclusive jurisdiction in certain areas. If the provinces wish it, and only with their consent, would the chief negotiator act on their behalf. There has never been nor will there ever be any suggestion of coercion on the part of this Government with respect to those rights which lie exclusively with the provinces.

AGRICULTURAL SUPPORT PROGRAMS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in fact the Minister seems to be pushing the provinces rather than persuading them. Will the Minister agree that no provincial agricultural loans and price-support programs, to use those as an example, will be given up in negotiations without the provinces being able to veto any such concession on the part of the federal negotiators?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult at this time to defend a position or a negotiating stance when we have not as yet even commenced negotiations. In any event, even if it is the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal Government, the provinces will be fully involved and fully consulted before any decision whatsoever will be made.

REQUEST FOR PROVINCIAL VETO

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is avoiding the question as he avoided it last week at the provincial Trade Ministers' Conference. I put the question to him again. Last week the provincial Ministers told the Minister that they did not want the agricultural sector to be included in the bargaining. Will the Minister give a clear and precise commitment that there will be no concessions given by the federal Government without the provinces having the right to veto those concessions where they affect provincial rights and responsibilities?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, let me make it quite clear that in those areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, obviously the provinces have, in effect, a right of veto. In those areas where the federal Government has exclusive jurisdiction, before taking any position or negotiating anything with the United States, the provinces will be fully consulted and heard.

EMPLOYMENT

VULNERABILITY OF MONTREAL REGION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

For some time now, we have been trying to make the Minister aware of the fact that Montreal's industrial base is being eroded beyond the point of no return. The Minister has been saying that 51,000 jobs were created in Montreal during the past year. Today, however, we are informed by Statistics Canada that it was only 39,000 jobs, Mr. Speaker, and that the number of unemployed has increased by more than 1,000.

I therefore want to ask the Minister to do the honourable thing and, first of all, correct her statement on the number of jobs created in Montreal, and above all, to explain how she intends to prevent the impending disaster, in other words, the 5,000 jobs that will be lost very shortly unless the Government overcomes its inertia and does something about it.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in September 1982, the unemployment rate in Montreal was over 13 per cent. Today, it has dropped to 11 per cent. There has, therefore, been a drop in the unemployment rate.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member whether he was asking questions in the House in 1982, when the unemployment rate was so high. The answer is no. He remained silent.

Mr. Speaker, we will be investing $200 million this year in Montreal, to create jobs for the men and women of that city.

SITUATION IN MONTREAL

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister can twist and turn the statistics any way she likes. She can ignore the fact that the jobs that were created are part-time jobs. However, there is one question she has been constantly evading and that is, whether she could inform the House what her specific plan is to prevent the impending disaster in Montreal. Two hundred thousand dollars is not enough to save 5,000 jobs that will be lost unless the Government wakes up and does something about it.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Excuse me, Mr. Speaker. It is not $200,000 but $200 million.

Mr. Speaker, between 1980 and 1984, more than 225 companies closed their doors in Canada, and 50,000 Canadians lost their jobs during that period. This was a tragedy.

• (1430)

[English]

It is for that reason that we have changed the ad hoc measures which the former Government took. When it saw 225 companies closing their doors what did it do? Nothing. We have changed in order to prepare long-term—

Mr. Speaker: The Minister may want to complete this under Statements by Ministers.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

WELLAND CANAL LOCK BLOCKAGE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It concerns the Seaway blockage. Given that the reputation of Canada as a shipper which can be counted upon for the supply of a number of bulk commodities in the world market is precarious, to say the least, and given the second major mishap in less than 13 months—so serious in fact that some American authorities are calling for a takeover of the operation of the Seaway—will the Minister advise the House what action his Government is prepared to take to prevent future mishaps which can bring the Seaway to its knees?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority is acting with all due dispatch to get the Seaway operational again. A contract has been awarded to Canron for the stabilizing of the wall. Another contract has been awarded to Pitts Engineering Construction. A contract has been awarded to Acres International Limited, a firm of consulting engineers in Niagara Falls to determine the cause of the blow-out.

I think it is rather interesting to note that both the Shipping Federation of Canada and the Dominion Marine Association, which are major users of the Seaway, said that they were satisfied that neither the accident last year nor this year could have been prevented.

FUTURE VIABILITY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is basically the same question. What exactly is the Government prepared to do on the rest of the Seaway to ensure that in future years it remains viable and that there will not be accidents due to the deterioration of the walls or the locks?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first, we are not sure at this point in time whether the walls are in a deteriorated condition. This was a blow-out. I think the Hon. Member would expect me to ascertain the facts, which is precisely why we have appointed a consulting engineer to determine the specific cause of the accident. We will take action thereafter.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, I direct my question to the Minister for International Trade.

Last November 29 the Government told the House it would announce its textile policy in the coming months. On May 1, 1985 Government spokesmen again told us about a major plan to restructure the textile industry. Eleven months later, no plan has yet been announced, hundreds of jobs are being lost, and what I want to know from the Minister is this: Is the Government waiting for the textile industry to disappear before announcing its plan?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reassure the hon. gentleman that this Government has every intention of doing everything it can for the textile industry so that it will be able to survive. I can tell the Hon. Member that a group of Ministers are presently working on this program. We hope to be able to discuss the matter in the next short while in Cabinet and announce a textile policy which will be of benefit not only to the industry but to all of Canada.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER INTENDS TO STOP GRANT TO TEXTILE PLANTS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, plants are closing down and 755 textile workers will apply for unemployment insurance in the next two months.

Here is what I want to know from the Minister: Does he intend to stop the $6 million grant to Dominion Textile to upgrade two plants scheduled to close down in June? Will he spend taxpayers' money on plants which will no longer be in operation in a few months?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that particular question under advisement. I am not familiar with the payment to Dominion Textile. That is a matter under the purview of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I will have the matter brought to his attention and we will see that a reply is made.

Oral Questions

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

MINISTER'S ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Last month in Halifax he announced to a closed meeting his decision to reduce the amount which the provinces would receive under present legislation with regard to transfer payments. The Minister knows that that is money used for medicare, post-secondary education and other provincial programs. Will the Minister confirm to Canadians that that indeed was his announcement?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know from where the Hon. Member would have obtained that information. However, what I would say to him is that there were no specific amounts mentioned. In the Budget speech of last May I mentioned that the growth rate would be reduced so that there could be savings of $2 billion from what would have been the case had the previous growth rate continued. The amounts which will be paid to the provinces will bear the same percentage of program spending in 1990-91 as they bear in the current fiscal year. Thus, the provincial share of federal government spending will remain the same.

IMPACT ON PROVINCES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. He has not answered my question.

There was no indication in the Budget that there would be a cut next year with respect to the transfer payments. Will he admit that that indeed is the case? Will he finally give the public the amounts which are involved? It is a serious matter. Why not come clean?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I indicated in the announcement I made with respect to the $2 billion saving that it would start in the next fiscal year.

Mr. Murphy: That is not in your Budget. Your Budget has nothing.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Will the Hon. Member let me answer his question? He says it is an important one. I would like him to listen to the answer.

The savings will commence next year. However, there was no discussion at the meeting in Halifax with respect to the amounts which will be saved. Another meeting will be held within the next few weeks. At that time I would expect to have some agreement with the provinces in regard to what the amount will be.

Oral Questions

CANADA POST CORPORATION

HOME DELIVERY GUIDELINES

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post. My question pertains to the subject of home delivery. Many people who live in newly constructed homes have found to their dismay that they do not qualify for home delivery under the new guidelines set down by Canada Post. Is the Minister willing to reconsider the position of the Post Office in this regard?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I understand the Hon. Member's concern. I would like to tell him that last June Canada Post announced its intention to expand its services to the Canadian people. As the Hon. Member knows, the Marchment Commission is examining the benefit of expanding this type of service. As soon as we have its recommendations, which should be sometime in November, we will deal with them.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC ON TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister tell this House whether the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) asked the Premier of Quebec, Mr. Johnson, when he met him last week, to transfer the jurisdiction over certain economic areas to the Federal Government, in order to be able to reach an agreement with the Government of the United States?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker.

SUMMONING OF CONSTITUTIONAL ASSEMBLY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, could the Deputy Prime Minister assure this House that such a request will not be made to the Provinces before a constitutional assembly is called, in order for the provincial powers to be transferred to the Canadian Government in a legal way?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can give no such assurance to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Gauthier: You should.

Mr. Nielsen: The Whip of the Official Opposition says I should. Of course I should not. In view of the absence of any urgency the question would be more appropriately put when the Prime Minister is back in the House.

Mr. Gauthier: The official zipper!

PETRO-CANADA

ISSUANCE OF AUDITING CONTRACT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance in the absence of the Prime Minister. It concerns the fact that Petro-Canada is switching its auditing account to a large American-based accounting firm. This is an account reportedly worth up to approximately $2 million annually. In the interests of keeping jobs in Canada will the Minister assure the House that all major accounting firms in Canada were first approached by Petro-Canada? Can he tell the House why the decision was made to give this rather lucrative contract to an American-based firm?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am at a bit of a loss as to why the question was put to me. However, I will bring it to the attention of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and she will get back to the Hon. Member.

● (1440)

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is, obviously, the Minister of Finance, and these things go through an NOC.

ELECTION CONTRIBUTION INQUIRY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Can the Minister confirm that the real reason the Arthur Anderson Company received this contract is that it reportedly contributed over $100,000 to the Conservative election campaign last year? Is that the real reason this contract did not go to some major Canadian-based accounting firm?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is grovelling in the gutter.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There is no basis upon which he should make that allegation. However, as I said in my previous response, I will bring the substance of the Hon. Member's question to the attention of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and she will get back to him.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

ISSUANCE OF CONTRACT TO RICHMOND INDIVIDUAL

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Science and Technology. The Bulletin of Business Opportunities of September 12 revealed that the Department of Science and Technology entered into a contract with a certain J. P. White of Richmond in the amount of $176,500. The contract has since been cancelled and the individual has been hired by the Minister on his exempt staff. Would the Minister tell the House if public tenders were called when the contract was originally awarded? And why was the contract subsequently cancelled?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I believe the ultimate question would be more appropriately placed with the Minister who is responsible for contracting, that is, the Minister of Supply and Services. However, it is my understanding that the contract was entered into by the Deputy in my Ministry. It has now been terminated and, as the Hon. Member correctly states, Mr. White has been employed on my personal staff.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, what we obviously have is a case of political patronage.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Question.

Mr. Berger: And the Minister backtracked when he feared the consequences.

Mr. Crosbie: Question.

Mr. Berger: The Government always seems able to justify spending more money—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Berger: —on public relations.

FUNDING OF SCIENCE COUNCIL OF CANADA

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Rather than spend this money on public relations, will he agree to give the exact amount of $176,500 to the Science Council of Canada so that it can, among other things, rehire two librarians whom it had to lay off when the Minister cut its budget in half?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that the Science Council of Canada is doing some outstanding work for this Government—

Mr. Gauthier: We know that.

Mr. Orlikow: No thanks to you.

Mr. Siddon: —in response to specific questions which have been addressed to it in recent months, and in fact no such amount of money is to be expended in any event. So the Hon. Member obviously does not have a legitimate grievance.

DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

REDUCTION IN STAFFING

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Is the Minister aware of a departmental memo in her Department which indicates that 325 person years are to be cut from the staff of Canada Employment and Immigration across Canada? And can she explain how the pledge of the Minister of Finance of minimum disruption to the public will be achieved when there are 325 fewer CEIC employees to provide service to unemployed Canadians?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the service to unemployed Canadians by the staff of CEIC continues to be at the very high level. I can assure the Hon. Member that that will continue to be so. Any reduction in the staff will largely be taken care of through attrition and through recycling within the Department, and I can assure the Hon. Member that he and those persons employed in the Department do not have a great deal of cause for concern.

PROVISION OF SERVICES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister not aware that for the last several years Hon. Members of this Party have had complaints from CEIC employees about the pressure put upon them, and complaints from the unemployed about receiving service from Canada Employment Centres? How can the necessary improvements in those centres be achieved when the Ministry is cutting 325 jobs because of Wilson's cut-backs?

Mr. Crosbie: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the staff of the CEIC is indeed concerned about the services which it offers to those who are unemployed. That is why they make such a very real effort—one which every one in this House should recognize—in order to provide those services.

Yes, the operations in the Department are being streamlined, but as I said, this is being done in such a way as to cause the least possible dislocation and disruption in services.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION—AMERICAN CHEMICAL WASTE DUMPS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment and it concerns his meeting this morning with the administrator of the United States Environmental Protection Agency, and their discussions relating to the chemical waste dumps along the American side of the Niagara River. Would the Minister advise the House if the proposals put to him today included a provision for the actual removal and destruction of the toxic wastes in those dumps, or whether it included just retaining the toxic wastes in their present location?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct. I met this morning with the head of the United States Environmental Protection Agency, Mr. Lee Thomas, whom I am happy to welcome to the House this afternoon.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Order.

Mr. McMillan: He tabled for the Department of the Environment and for myself, in particular, the most extensive proposed action plan from the U.S. Government to the Canadian Government on any specific environmental issue in the recollection of any of my officials. The plan, which I have only now received and have yet to have a chance to read in detail, covers every facet of the clean-up of the pollutants to which the Hon. Member referred—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Order.

Mr. McMillan: —including the possibility of extraction and elimination.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

TRANSFER PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Next week during National Universities Week across this country, instead of celebrating, professors and students will be racked with uncertainty. At the recent meeting of federal and provincial Ministers of Finance, this Government announced that not only will it stand by its unilateral budget decision to reduce $2 billion from expected federal transfer payments to the provinces, but that these cuts to the transfer payments will begin next year instead of in 1990.

Does this not mean that this Government, instead of taking away $2 billion from the provinces by 1990, is really taking away up to $6 billion by starting right away in 1986?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it very clear to the Hon. Member that these are not cuts. They are reductions in the growth rate.

Ms. Jewett: Oh, what a euphemism.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The growth rate will still be substantial. There will still be billions of dollars which will be transferred to the provinces for the very worth-while programs in health and post-secondary education.

Ms. Jewett: You are just muddying the waters.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As I indicated in response to a previous question, the per cent of federal Government spending which is transferred to the provinces will not be changed. It will stay at the current level throughout this whole period. So I caution the Hon. Member not to misinterpret this matter and cast doubts in the minds of the people who are interested in these programs.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, obviously the $6 billion figure has not been denied.

SIZE OF PAYMENTS—EFFECT ON PROGRAMS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): If the Minister is not going to confirm what the provincial Ministers of Finance heard, and what his own Department said, perhaps he can at least tell us whether the provincial losses of $6 billion caused by the Government will be spread across the whole system, across the board, or will there be targets of either medicare, post-secondary education or welfare? Which one is going to get the axe?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there will be no program which will get the axe. That is the point I am making. The amounts which will be transferred by the federal Government to all of these programs will be increasing year after year in accordance with the directions which I set out in the Budget. The growth rate will fall but there will still be substantial amounts of money. No decisions have been taken as to what programs would be affected. That will be the subject of further discussions between the federal and provincial Ministers of Finance.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

AMERICAN CHEMICAL DUMPS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment and concerns whether or not a clean-up of the four worst dumps is involved in the action plan presented by Mr. Thomas to the Minister today.

Given the reluctance expressed by Mr. Thomas when asked direct questions about whether or not the extraction and destruction of the chemicals in those four dumps would be forthcoming, can the Minister indicate, if that is the American position, whether he finds that acceptable? Does the Government find it acceptable that the Americans are not willing to proceed directly to dig up and destroy the toxic chemicals in those dumps?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have no particular brief to carry for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. They can pretty well defend themselves. My interest, which is the same as that of the Hon. Member, is to clean up the Niagara River. I received a voluminous action plan from the head of the EPA which covers everything from enforcement, to compliance, to tightening up standards for toxic chemicals, to monitoring and surveillance. I have not had a chance to pass final judgment on the American position. I will do so with equal measures of criticism and fairness and I hope that the Hon. Member will be equally open-minded in his assessment.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that when Mr. Thomas was questioned about extraction and destruction he said that is something they were considering, but they were also considering alternatives. I am asking the Minister if that possible position by the Americans is acceptable to him or is he going to hold to the view, one which I am sure all Canadians take when it comes to our drinking water supply, that these dumps need to be cleaned right out and the toxic chemicals destroyed?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, there can be no doubt about the position of the Department of the Environment and the Government of Canada. Our preferred option is for extraction and elimination of the offending toxins. It is not simply to contain. We recognize this approach is going to cost billions of dollars. We as a Government are committed to linking arms with the Americans, the State of New York, the U.S. Government, and the Province of Ontario toward that end. The Hon. Member can be assured that our position on this subject will not change.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER SEAWAY

WELLAND CANAL BLOCKAGE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. He is aware that we have suffered the most disastrous crop in many, many years in western Canada, driving farm incomes well below the poverty line in many cases. Now we have the Welland Canal blocked and over 70 ships, many carrying grain to our customers overseas, are backed up in the system.

Is the Minister willing to make a commitment today that the Seaway will remain open until our contractual obligations are discharged as soon as the lock is repaired, or conversely, to pay the cost of shipping this grain by rail from Thunder Bay to the lower St. Lawrence ports, which I understand will cost something like $15 a tonne extra? I ask this because of the large Russian order of 3.5 million tonnes which have to be—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is very long.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I certainly share the Hon. Member's concern. However, I think he would agree that it would be premature to make that sort of a decision at this time. We have no way of determining with any degree of accuracy how long the Seaway will be tied up. I ask the Member to be patient for three or four more days so we can do the initial assessment, and then we will be in a position to determine the time it will take to get the Seaway operational again. If there are any contingency arrangements which have to be made, we will consider them at that time.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I just pointed out that this is an urgent matter for the western farmers. They have to know whether the Government is going to stand behind them in this disastrous situation.

Last May the Government took $30 million away from the Seaway Authority. This—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member had a very long first question. Does he have a supplementary?

Mr. Foster: As I indicated, the Government took some $30 million. I wonder if—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

NATIONAL REVENUE

GULF TAKEOVER—TAX RULING

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Is it his position that during the several times the question of the Gulf-O&Y-PetroCan deal was discussed by the P and P Committee, the decision on the tax ruling was never brought to that committee's attention?

Some Hon. Members: Oh!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a lack of understanding on the part of some Members who are surprised that I would be answering this question. I do so as vice-chairman of that committee of Cabinet. I can tell the Hon. Member, as he knows, that it would be totally inappropriate for me to be telling the House, or anyone else, what discussions go on in that or any other Cabinet committee. If he is interested in the process, with respect to the making of tax rulings, there is a Minister responsible for that in the House to whom he can direct his questions.

ROLE OF ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Finance who probably is the only one of the two who might know the answer. Did David Wyman, the Assistant Deputy Minister responsible for tax policy, bring to his attention that there was a request for a pre-tax ruling regarding the Gulf-O&Y-PetroCan transaction?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is aware, as my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, has mentioned, that I cannot, and neither can he nor any member of the Government, discuss any particular tax ruling.

Mr. Deans: I am asking if you were told.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is a matter which must be dealt with between the taxpayer and the Department of National Revenue.

PROPOSED PRAIRIE AND NORTHERN RIVER RESEARCH CENTRE

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment and concerns the recently released report of the inquiry on federal water policy. The report recommends that the National Hydrology Institute, currently in the final stages of construction in Saskatoon, become a Prairie and Northern River Research Centre. Could the Minister assure the House that this recommendation will be given serious consideration to ensure adequate provision for agricultural and fresh water research in western Canada?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, Dr. Pearse and his fellow commissioners made a very strong case for the centre of excellence to which the Hon. Member referred. I am looking at the recommendation with considerable sympathy. For that purpose, and others, I have established an inter-departmental task force to look at the report in its total context. In that connection I will be reviewing the recommendation to which the Hon. Member has made reference.

TRANSPORT

NEED TO ESTABLISH "BUY CANADIAN" POLICY

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Is the Minister aware that 130 workers in the CSW ironworks, in the East End of Montreal, have been laid off over the last few days? Moreover, does he realize that such layoffs will go on as long as his Government has no 'Buy Canadian" policy in the transportation industry?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I met with the president of the union very recently, last week that is, and we are looking at the situation very closely. Indeed, the company over the last few years has been significantly reducing its labour force, but there is still hope for the coming months, and we are looking at all company orders to see whether in fact there is substitution from Canadian production in Montreal to production abroad, namely in Australia, as has indeed been said.

PURCHASE OF ROLLING STOCK WHEELS IN CANADA

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the Minister has finally accepted to meet those workers, who had been asking for a meeting for well over three months.

Will the Minister contact the Canadian railways to ensure that they buy rolling stock wheels made in Canada rather than in Brazil?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, that matter also was examined with the union president, and I must state I myself did not wait three months before meeting him. I met him immediately, that is during the week he came to my constituency office.

As far as Brazilian-made wheels are concerned, this is an item I am examining, to find out exactly how pertinent that matter could be.

SOCIAL SECURITY

CHILD TAX CREDIT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns his contention in the House yesterday that the child tax credit is not going to be deindexed. Has the Minister had a chance to look at the Budget papers where it clearly states that in 1989 the child tax credit will be deindexed? Or is he announcing something which will be very welcome indeed, a new policy that since the Budget the Government has had a change of heart and will not be deindexing the child tax credit?

● (1500)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): If the Member recalls her question and my answer yesterday, I did not refer to the deindexation at all. I said in my answer to her that the child tax credit would go up and in fact does in the first two years.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary.

SITUATION IN 1994

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Yes, it is going up, but will the Minister confirm that it will be going down and will be deindexed so that by 1994 the child tax credit will be worth less in constant dollars than it is today?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I repeat my answer from yesterday and today. It is going up for the first two years, as I pointed out to her.

Ms. McDonald: Tell us when it is going down.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I will report to her, if she comes to committee—where we will welcome her—that as the economy improves, and the indications are that the economy is improving under the leadership of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I am sure that she welcomes those developments. As the Government looks at those trends and a new social policy obviously comes forward, I am sure she would want to support that.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, what business does the Government House Leader intend to call for tomorrow and next week?

Mr. Prud'homme: He will change it.

Committee Reports

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the distinguished Member, who intervenes, knows that when I make changes, I usually do so at the request of the opposition Parties in order to accommodate them because of their attendance in the House.

Today we will be dealing with motions for concurrence with respect to the excise tax Ways and Means motions. The sequence of Bills will be the same as this week. I hope that we will make progress on Bill C-75 with respect to the Canada Shipping Act. Following that, there is Bill C-62, the legislation concerning employment equity, and Bill C-42 respecting Canagrex. It is my intention to follow that sequence through the rest of today and tomorrow.

Next week we will continue with that sequence, although I would indicate to the House that on Tuesday next it is my intention to call Bill C-79 for the final day of debate with respect to second reading and any motions associated with the second reading of that legislation so that that matter may go to committee.

Other Bills will be forthcoming. Legislation will be introduced with respect to amendments to the Criminal Code concerning lotteries. Obviously, there will also be a Bill concerning the Excise Tax Act. These Bills will be brought forward and I will consult further with the opposition Parties in that respect, depending on the progress we make. Hopefully we will make good prgress on the items we are considering now. I only want to reserve the option of beginning to discuss the Excise Tax Act sometime next week, possibly Monday. However, I will give the earliest possible notice concerning the House business, after consultations with my colleagues, the opposition House Leaders. If there is any alteration to that sequence, first there will be consultation with Opposition House. Leaders and an announcement on the floor of the House at the first opportunity.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 193 and 420.

[Text]

ABORTIONS REPORTED BY HOSPITALS IN CANADA

Question No. 193—Mr. Stackhouse:

In (a) 1980 (b) 1981 (c) 1982 (d) 1983, how many abortions were reported by hospitals in Canada?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Health and Welfare and National Defence as follows:

The number of therapeutic abortions reported by non-military hospitals in Canada is as follows:

Year	Number of Abortions
(a) 1980	65,855
(b) 1981	65,127
(c) 1982	66,319
(d) 1983	61,800

For the years 1980 to 1983 inclusive, there were no abortions performed in DND hospitals.

AIRPORT TAX

Question No. 420—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Did the Government increase the airport tax by 1 per cent in November, 1984 and, if so (a) what income accrued to the Government between November and December 31, 1984 (b) what income is forecasted for 1985?

2. How many persons travelled by aircraft in Canada between January 1 and March 31 (a) 1983 (b) 1984 (c) 1985?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): 1. The 1 per cent increase in the Air Transportation Tax that went into effect April 1, 1985 was announced in the November 8, 1984 federal economic statement. The additional revenues expected to be generated in the fiscal year 1985/86 by these measures amount to $34.6 million.

2. (a) Between January 1 and March 31, 1983 there were 9,562,700 passengers enplaned and deplaned at the top 30 Canadian airports. (b) For the same period in 1984, based on preliminary information, there were 10,594,300 passengers. (c) 1985 statistics are not yet available.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, it has now been over a year since the secret meeting between the former Solicitor General and Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick. Over seven months ago I put a series of questions on the Order Paper, specifically Question No. 296. I have asked on a number of occasions when I might be receiving a reply to those questions.

I want to put the question again to the Parliamentary Secretary or to the Solicitor General. Will they advise me and the House when answers might be forthcoming to those questions on the Order Paper? Will they provide a status report? As I indicated, it has been over seven months. Surely that is sufficient time to answer the questions.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that those questions are being given the attention they deserve and will be answered soon.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: This is not the Question Period. There is no supplementary.

Mr. Nunziata: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: What is the Hon. Member's point of order?

Mr. Nunziata: On a number of occasions I have asked the Parliamentary Secretary when I might receive answers to those questions and he has risen repeatedly and said, "Soon, soon". With the greatest of respect, Mr. Speaker, at least he could have the common courtesy of indicating precisely when we might get answers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member knows that the practice is to allow a question and an answer, and that is the end of it.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have Question No. 386 on the Order Paper, dated May 31, 1985, dealing with the important question of pensions in the Public Service of Canada. I think it is imperative that Members of Parliament be given the information as soon as possible. It has been six months now. I am sure that the Government has that information because it is dealing with the unions. Why can he not get the information?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that this matter is indeed the subject of discussions between the various unions and the Government and his question wil be answered soon.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, October 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Henderson (p. 7687).

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to speak on Bill C-75 and to deal with some of the questions of impact on not only the ridings which directly border the Seaway but also the inland ridings. Perhaps some of the Members who represent these inland ridings do not realize the impact that the proposed amendments will have on them.

Primarily, as has been mentioned, the Bill addresses the question of marine transportation and pollution. There are several amendments in the Bill which are necessary to bring the Act and Canada's shipping practices into line with international procedures, some of which are imposed by agreement to which Canada subscribes. Most of the Bill deals with such matters as licensing and certification of personnel. There are new regulations contained in the Bill, which I am sure all Members of the House would welcome given the disastrous impacts of maritime pollution, with respect to such matters as the transportation of hazardous cargoes and the prevention and clean-up of pollution among which, of course, the principal fear is oil spills.

The Bill provides new regulatory powers, something which we can only look at with a little puzzlement since we have heard the Government's declared intention to abandon regulation of the transportation industries to a large degree. Yet, the Bill proposes some instruments which will enable further regulations. Indeed, the Bill goes a lot further in that respect. In it there are some rather insidious clauses which I believe run counter to the very notion of responsibility in a Crown corporation and which, indeed, run counter to some sound commercial practices which should otherwise be applied.

Clause 4 of the Bill constitutes enabling legislation to allow the Government to recover the costs of navigational services provided by the Coast Guard. This is a development at which the House should look very carefully. I hope it will receive a great deal of study in committee since it would place powers in the hands of the Government which I believe could well be detrimental to the entire Seaway system and, indeed, to the entire system of bulk goods transportation in Canada.

Under this legislation the Government would have the right to recover costs involved with such services as setting and maintaining marker buoys, providing radar and Loran-C, vessel traffic services, ice-breaking, escorting services and dredging. According to the latest Estimates the cost of providing these services is in the range of $136 million to $191 million. The amount to be recovered is not indicated anywhere in the Bill which is before us. Indeed, the sort of recovery which might be imposed could go from the sublime to the ridiculous.

I remember when I was younger I read a book on an American adventurer of the 1920s and 1930s, Mr. Richard Halliday. One of his stunts, shall we say, in those days was that he would swim the entire length of the Panama Canal. He did so and recorded that at one lock he was charged a fee of a 36 cents to swim through it. That was the lockage charge for a swimmer through the Panama Canal. One would hope that the Government does not intend to go to that level of detail. However, there is nothing in the Act which would prevent it from doing so. As the Act presently provides, costs could be imposed on any nature of vessels which could run the gamut from canoes right up to the largest vessels capable of using the Seaway system.

Over the past few years we have seen some of the dissension, confusion and resistance which has been generated within the aviation community as the Government has moved to impose all manner of tariffs and user charges upon members of the general aviation community. During those same years there has been a marked decrease in the amount of pleasure flying and in the amount of general aviation carried on in Canada. That is not something which can be merely blamed upon the recessionary trends of the period since we have no way of disaggregating those trends from the trend of these nuisance fees which raise the cost of operations and which impose considerations upon users of smaller craft which could well lead to them abandoning the use of such systems.

What about fishing boats? What about when a fishing boat ties up on the East Coast at one of our docks to unload the catch which is becoming increasingly uneconomic to bring home to port? Will the vessel be visited by a government collector at that time? Will we see disputes over tying up and retying when someone brings a boat into dock and then for some reason or another moves it, not for a fishing voyage, and brings it back again? What sort of costs will be imposed as a result of this Bill? Regrettably, the Bill is silent as to the nature of the costs which could be imposed under it.

We realize that the bulk of charges would fall on commercial shipping. I point out the potential problems with respect to pleasure boats and fishing boats by way of a supplement to the main argument which is based on the impact on commercial shipping on the Seaway system, within Canada and from Canadian ports generally. If we were to see a cost recovery factor of any significant degree imposed by way of increases to Seaway tolls and tariffs, then there would be a readjustment within Canada's freight system. In this way we would see a realignment of freight movements. There would be a tendency for freight movements to move west rather than east. There may be Hon. Members in the House from the West who would say that this is not such a bad thing. However, I point out to them that there are some significant problems with western routes in Canada. Also, the act of realignment could produce as many negative results for these Members' ridings and their constituents as could the positive benefits which would flow therefrom.

The costs which could be imposed as a result of this legislation could easily make the St. Lawrence Seaway nonviable. We could see an increase in tolls leading to a loss of revenue as shipping freight moves through other routes significantly, of course, in a westerly direction. We could see a reduction in traffic on top of the reduction which has already occurred. Something which surprised me, Mr. Speaker, when I first read it, is that cargo traffic on the Seaway last year was down 27 per cent from the previous year, which was itself down 20 per cent from the high in 1977. What that tells us, Mr. Speaker, is that we have a major national transport infrastructure resource which is being under-utilized to a very significant degree.

For example, even if we postulate that the Seaway was running at 85 per cent of capacity in 1977—which, I for one, feel is hardly likely—that would mean that today it is running at somewhere around 50 per cent of capacity. Surely, with the national investment in the Seaway, we should be looking not to reduce utilization but to increase utilization in order to amatorize those costs over a greater number of users.

With respect to the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act, I believe it will come as no surprise to you, Mr. Speaker, if I raise again the question of the Budget raid which was carried out on the Seaway's contingency fund, and the indignation this drew from the industry at the time. The Government, of course, does have powers over Crown corporations and over the cash reserves and balances of Crown corporations. However, looking at that raid from a purely business point of view, we have to say that it was carried out in a most ill-advised fashion. As we have seen from the events of recent weeks, there is a very definite need for a contingency fund in the St. Lawrence Seaway because contingency type occurrences arise. Things happen like collapses at docks, dock breakages and bank slippage on canal portions of the Seaway.

It seems to me that the way in which the Government has announced to the public of Canada these measures leaves a lot to be desired. I hold in my hand the press release of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) concerning the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act. I, for one, can find no reference in that press release to the fact that the Canada Shipping Act amendments empower the Government to proceed much as it would like by regulation to collect whatever fees in the St. Lawrence Seaway it felt it needed for other purposes, or that it felt the traffic would bear. What the traffic will bear in reality is not very much in the way of an increase.

That money was earmarked for capital improvements on the Seaway, particularly on the Welland Canal, and now it has gone back into the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The Government is using it, of course, for such worthy, noble and laudable purposes—and I hope no Hon. Member of this House misses the sarcasm—as bailing out banks in a way in which outrages business sense far more, even, than the initial scoop of the $30 million.

I would like us to examine for a few minutes the theoretical basis under which transport infrastructure is funded. We fund transport infrastructure from general revenues for several reasons. There is the reason of public benefit; and the belief that a transportation system offers benefits to a country over and above the simple economic benefits of easier routes which are cheaper to travel and service. There is the role of the transportation system in ensuring the circulation of dollars within a country and of enabling the buyers and sellers to get together and the goods to flow and the services to move. This must be done in the most efficient fashion possible in order that the economic imperatives of production, sourcing and demand can be met.

There is, of course, the straight economic development theory which states that the more goods which flow between two given points, the more wealth is created and the more employment will result. We also fund infrastructural transportation services from general revenues from motives of efficiency of collection because it is not worth sending out a bill which costs $1.50 in order to collect a service charge of $1.30. Those figures, of course, refer to the take-off and landing of a light aircraft but there are parallels and equivalent situations which could well arise in the charging of fees at docks and wharves and fees for lockage, and so on.

I feel there is something seriously lacking in the arguments of the Government in its attempt to show the economic basis of the disire to recover considerably more revenue from the St.

Lawrence Seaway. We have not had any information which tells us the St. Lawrence Seaway is subsidized to a greater per cent than other forms of transportation networks. We have not seen anything to indicate that there will be, as a result of this legislation, any form of mode neutrality in the allocation of transport infrastructural subsidies. We have not seen any cost benefit analysis of raising the tariffs and fees by 10 per cent, 15 per cent or 25 per cent or whatever the Government has in mind. We do not know what the Government has in mind and, indeed, it seems to me that the Government does not know what the Government has in mind.

We have not seen any economic modelling to show what will happen to the transportation flows of bulk commodities if these costs are imposed on the Seaway. There are sophisticated tools which are available to the Government. There are people who are expert in the use and application of these tools, but we have not seen anything to suggest that the Government has applied these tools to any form of analysis of the sort of charges which could be envisaged under the Act.

Every ledger, after all, Mr. Speaker, has two sides. The Government is looking at the imposition of charges and we have not been presented with any information as to how the increase of those charges might affect revenues. We also have not been given any indication as to what the Government plans to do with the $30 million it lifted. We have had no indication as to whether it is being used to reduce taxes which, of course, was something the Budget did for those of us who have the good fortune to be wealthy. We have no indication as to whether it was applied to reduce the deficit or put into a policy reserve to be used for such purposes as the bank bail-out which is going to cost so much to Canadian taxpayers and which is going to have such a harmful effect on job creation in this country from coast to coast. We have no indication as to what the Government plans to do with the money either definitely taken or notionally generated.

I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that the powers which this legislation allows the Government are the sort of powers which Government policy makers love to have. Government policy makers love to have the sort of flexibility, as they term it—that sweet and innocuous word—so they might be able to impose the charges where and when they felt was appropriate.

There was a statement made by an aide to the Minister of Transport who said, "We are going to make Crown corporations stand on their own two feet". That sort of imagery and language, Mr. Speaker, surely is both outdated and inappropriate in terms of a national utility like the St. Lawrence Seaway. It is not a question of making Crown corporations stand on their own two feet. It is surely more a question of giving Crown corporations the legislative and regulatory environment, the framework and the regulations which can enable them to make intelligent and economical decisions in the national interests. That would give them the opportunity to stand on their own two feet which this legislation manifestly does not do.

Heaven only knows how the Government is going to track who uses navigational aids and to what degree. These services are as fundamental to the operation of the maritime transportation network as the salting, ploughing, and repairing of roads is to our highway network. Let the Government not be seen to be taking steps which are going to unfairly penalize one mode of transportation with economic consequences which will result in dislocation, unemployment and a great reduction in the utilization of that national utility, the St. Lawrence Seaway system.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 46, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—Public Service—(a) Career planning for employees facing lay-offs. (b) Job security; the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)—Social security—Request for clarification of child tax credit.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Henderson (p. 7687).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member believes that users should pay some portion of the cost of a transportation service? If so, does he have any figures in mind?

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to believe that the Minister of Transport believes he can find a Member in this Chamber who does not believe that users should pay some portion of the cost of the transportation system. The answer to his question is, of course, yes. The answer to his second question is that I did not have a specific figure in mind. My belief is that in the allocation of the cost of a transportation network there should be a degree of mode neutrality; i.e. whether one looks at the infrastructure which supports an air transportation network or the road transportation network or, in this case, the Seaway transportation network, or indeed a rail transportation network, there should be a degree of commonality in the level to which these are subsidized, bearing in mind of course the degree to which they are used. My belief, based on previous experience and, indeed, on previous meetings with the Minister, although many years ago, is that it is probably the railroad which recovers the largest percentage of its costs at present.

I simply say to the Minister that the question of a targeted percentage is really something that I should be asking him to put before this House so that we can make a judgment. By way of a comment, I would certainly welcome hearing from him if there are such figures.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's answer. I think he answered it honestly. Yesterday, one of his colleagues suggested that these transportation services should be free. There should not be a user fee. So we have a contradiction within the NDP.

The Hon. Member alluded to the fact that the rail sector probably recovers the greatest percentage of its costs. Currently, in the marine mode, the recovery is somewhere from 2.5 per cent to 4 per cent. Would he consider that to be fair?

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, first the Minister will permit me to doubt whether a Member on this side made a specific statement that the provision of service should be absolutely free. Second, I am sure that he would accept as my answer that I would be very interested indeed to see any figures which suggest that the cost recovery of any service was as low as 2.5 per cent to 4 per cent.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is.

Mr. Parry: One thing that I am aware of from my own experience, and I appreciate that this may not fall under the Minister's responsibility, is that of small craft harbours, of which there are a number in my riding, and I would be very surprised if that facet of the marine mode was recovering such a low percentage—

Mr. Mazankowski: It is.

Mr. Parry: —of the cost of operation because my own observations have indeed been quite the contrary.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member checks he will find that the range of figures I quoted is correct. Furthermore, if he doubts my word about the interpretation of what one of my colleagues said, he might want to read Hansard at page 7691 where the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) said:

> I recognize that a certain amount of cost recovery has been going on for a long time, but is it necessary to increase it? Maybe we should be taking it off the others if they are increasing. Maybe transportation should be a free service.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, without getting into a question of nickels and dimes—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: You are involved in more than nickels and dimes.

Mr. Parry: —the use of the term "maybe" surely indicates the presentation of an argument on an entirely hypothetical basis. Maybe the Minister should examine whether transportation services should be—

Mr. McKnight: Now it is Party policy.

Mr. Parry: —provided free. Maybe the Minister should ignore representations from people like myself who suggest it is a good idea to recover some portion of the cost. Indeed, if the recovery is only in the order of 2.5 per cent, maybe it would be a worthwhile question to ask whether that recovery was worth the cost of collecting it. I point out that any statement that contains the word "maybe" cannot be treated as a categorical enunciation of policy.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to speak to the amendment moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson). The Hon. Member moved an amendment to Bill C-75, requesting that consideration of this Bill be postponed six months to give the Minister more time to reconsider certain aspects of Bill C-75 which had aroused considerable concern among many people in the Maritime Provinces, who are faced with major problems in the fisheries and potato-growing industries.

The House is aware that some of my colleagues from the Maritimes have spoken to point out that some aspects of Bill C-75 seem to infringe seriously on the agreement concluded by the Government of Canada and the Province of Newfoundland. This particular aspect was raised by the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

I have not heard the Minister clarify this particular issue. According to my hon. friend from Newfoundland, when the people of Newfoundland voted in favour of entering Confederation, commitments were made by the federal authorities on behalf of Canada to provide a certain number of services free of charge to the people of Newfoundland. However, Bill C-75 provides certain transportation fees for the people of Newfoundland.

I do not know whether the Minister has had time to examine the speech or comments made by my hon. friend in the House earlier this week, but I believe that the matter of the agreements—

Mr. Speaker, the Minister tells me that he listened very carefully to the comments of my colleague from Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe. I think that the point made about the possibility of betraying this part of the union agreement is a major one which should be clarified as soon as possible.

● (1620)

I also think it is important that the Minister consider the remarks made by my hon. friend from Davenport (Mr. Caccia), who mentioned quite a number of concerns shared by those who are concerned about environmental protection in Canada. I think we must ensure that the environment is protected, especially in the remote areas of Canada's North. Our country, and we cannot say it often enough, borders not only on the Pacific and the Atlantic but also on the Arctic Ocean. Clearly, since navigation in Canada's North is becoming increasingly important, we must ensure that every possible precaution is taken to prevent ecological and environmental disasters.

I think that my colleague from the Maritimes, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), spoke very eloquently about the difficulties facing the marine industry and its ever growing responsibility for an ever larger share of the operating costs. My colleague from Gander-Twillingate explained in no uncertain terms that, at the very moment the industry is in the doldrums, the Conservative Government is just about to charge for services which might be provided by the Department of Transport and levy fees whose impact might be serious enough to push the industry into bankruptcy. As my colleague from Gander-Twillingate pointed out, this is hardly the time to levy an additional surtax on an industry which is already in a bind.

I am therefore in favour of the six-month hoist motion with respect to this Bill, just so the Minister will have time to reconsider the issue and enlighten us on the dire consequences the adoption of this measure might have on the Maritimes.

I would suggest there is another factor which we ought to take into consideration and which I think would justify the six-month hoist. All Hon. Members know that as a result of an investigation on the tragic Ocean Ranger incident, a commission of inquiry has examined the consequences of this tragedy and made a number of recommendations. The recommendations were made public last July. By mid-summer the Minister and his officials had been made aware of those recommendations.

Here we are, in early October, some three months later, and the Minister has just introduced this very important measure. Just by looking at the thickness of Bill C-75 one can readily see that it has to be an important measure. It amends the Canada Shipping Act as well as the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act, and the Gas Production and Conservation Act. Now I think we could justifiably expect the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to implement with that Bill the recommendations put forth as a result of the Ocean Ranger tragedy.

Indeed, my colleague from Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe has said how sorry he was that the main recommendation put forth by that board of inquiry was not to be found in the Bill, namely that the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act be amended so that they apply to drilling rigs located more than 200 miles offshore. The Minister has told us of course that he will come back in a few months with further amendments to the legislation which would take into account the entire recommendations made by the board.

I also take to witness the transport Minister's colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), another representative from Newfoundland, who intervened in that debate to say that he wanted to assure the people of Newfoundland that the recommendations put forth in connection with the Ocean Ranger would be implemented, that as a Minister in the cabinet and a representative of Newfoundland, he would see that all those recommendations are approved. He recalled that the board of inquiry chaired by Chief Justice Hickman of Newfoundland had submitted its final report which several departments, among them the Department of Transport, were now considering, in order to decide how many would be implemented. The Minister of Justice stated in concluding that as a representative of Newfoundland, the matter was of great interest to him.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that the Minister of Justice is right. The report of Mr. Justice Hickman is very important and should be the subject matter of Bill C-75. That is why the proposal made by my colleague from Egmont (Mr. Henderson) to defer for six months the discussion of this legislation is quite relevant. It would allow the Minister and his Cabinet colleagues to study in depth all the recommendations of the Hickman Report, and to come back with a comprehensive legislation that would deal with all the items that should be examined and considered by the Government concerning such a tragedy that should not be allowed to repeat itself. I think that Members on both sides of the House will agree with me that that kind of tragedy should not be allowed to recur, and the Government has a responsibility to take, within the shortest time frame possible, the steps needed to prevent such future tragedies.

I would like briefly to recall that my colleagues from the Maritimes are especially concerned with the impact of the legislation on their constituents. What is of particular concern to them is Clause 4. If you will allow me to quote one paragraph from Clause 4, I think you will understand how important it would be for the Minister to take another six months to review its terms. Clause 4 gives the Government authority to impose charges relating to navigational services upon any users of aids to navigation, dredging, vessel traffic services, ice breaking services and escorting services.

But where I do not understand the implications of the legislation, is this: if the Government wants to collect money from those who use such services, that is a decision it can take and for which it can endorse full responsibility.

However, Paragraph 3(2), Clause 4, provides, and I quote:

(2) Charges may be imposed pursuant to sub-section (1) in relation to any ship or vessel, regardless of whether the Canadian Coast Guard actually provides a navigational service to that particular ship or vessel.

● (1630)

I wonder if the Minister or his Parliamentary Secretary who is listening closely to my comments has grasped the full implications of that section. In other terms, the Government through this Bill not only wants to impose user fees for a service on people who would use the help and support of the Department of Transport but even where they do not use the service or the Department's help. Simply by reason of their sailing in Canadian waters would those people also have to pay those fees.

In my opinion, this clause is quite unfair, if not totally absurd. It is one thing to charge people for using a service, but quite another to want to charge people for not using it.

I therefore believe that this aspect of Clause 4 must be changed.

Another point, Mr. Speaker, that I want to call to your attention concerns the next paragraph in the bill, which can be found on page 5. This provision is totally unacceptable and I think that the Minister should take his responsibilities. Indeed, Subsection 3 of Clause 4 states the following:

Where a charge imposed pursuant to this section is not paid as provided in the regulations made under subsection (1), interest may be charged on the amount from time to time outstanding, at a rate fixed by the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the users of aids to navigation, dredging, vessel traffic services, ice-breaking services and escorting services would feel much better if the Minister of Transport himself made his own recommendations to the Governor in Council.

Why would the Minister of Transport, who is in the House at this time listening to me, not take this responsibility himself? The shipping industry would feel much more comfortable if these charges were imposed by himself rather than by the Minister of Finance. I believe that the Minister should think about this.

We all know, Mr. Speaker, that there have been major cutbacks in the Department of Transport. It has to make its own contribution to the reduction of the national debt. I know that the Minister of Transport is not alone to be bled white and that many of his colleagues in other Departments also have to cut back on their expenditures.

However, I do not believe that it is wise, at a time when our shipping industry is in difficulty in Canada, to impose these additional charges notwithstanding the approval or decision of the Minister of Finance.

All these are good reasons why the bill should be hoisted for six months, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member care to comment that Clause 4 of this Bill, while brought forward by a Conservative Government, is a continuation of long-standing policy by the former Liberal administration to impose user fees and cost recovery mandates on a number of services provided by the Government of Canada?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to answer my hon. colleague. The concept of user pay has been the topic of a number of debates in the past, but it has never been the subject of legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: I admit that it has been the target of much pushing by officials of the Department of Transport. I know that some of my former colleagues publicly advocated this concept. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that it was never, although it was known to be a preferred option by some of my colleagues in Cabinet, implemented as Government policy. Therefore I regret sincerely—

Mr. Mazankowski: You have difficulty saying that with a straight face.

Mr. Ouellet: —that the new Government with a new Minister of Transport has jumped so quickly on the band-wagon prevailing in some quarters and is now trying to impose such a heavy burden on the users of our very good Maritime system.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member tell the House whether he believes that users should be charged any portion of the costs required to maintain the marine system and infrastructure in Canada? If so, what percentage?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, let me tell the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) that if I were in his place the first thing I would insist upon is that whatever charges there may be would be presented by me, as the Minister of Transport, and they would not be imposed on me, my Department and the users by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). That is the first element of my answer. I hope the Minister will accept my suggestion and amend the Bill accordingly to make sure that he, as Minister of Transport, will do that. After discussing the matter with his clientele, he would be in a better position to arrive at appropriate fees that could be levied in some cases.

● (1640)

In answer to the Hon. Minister, I want to tell him that in some cases I would agree with some charges, but in other cases I think it is totally irresponsible and unacceptable to charge them. Some of my colleagues, in speaking previously in this debate, indicated that because of the regional aspect and the remote areas of our country some services are given by only one client under very difficult conditions. To charge these users additional fees would be to exploit the Canadian population. In some cases the users could pass on additional charges to their customers. However, in many cases the additional burden cannot be passed on to customers and it becomes an impediment to continuing to give service.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I have a further question for the Hon. Member. I am sure he is aware that something in the order of $824 million is being spent in the provision of that service. The cost recovery is something in the order of 2.5 per cent. Does he consider that to be an example of exploitation?

Also the Hon. Member indicated that he was prepared to accept that there should be costs for some services which are rendered. One of the reasons that provision in the Bill is rather broad at this stage of the game is to allow the committee to examine it in detail and to hear what the users have to say. If the Hon. Member reads my speech, he would find that I indicated very clearly that there would be nothing imposed without the fullest of consultation with the users, as a matter of fact, in an attempt to try to explore an arrangement or mechanism for the collection of some fees. Hon. Members across the way have been talking in terms of 100 per cent cost recovery. There is no transportation system which functions on 100 per cent cost recovery, and the Hon. Member knows it. I appreciate his remarks in this regard, but I think it is an area at which the committee can look in some detail. Then perhaps we can tighten up that portion of the legislation in a way that charges could be levied with some degree of accuracy and perhaps more clearly defined.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the comment of the Minister when he acknowledged that any charge would not be imposed without proper consultation. Also I welcome his willingness to have the committee look at the Bill clause by clause and to devote the necessary time to consult with users. Indeed, I look forward to reaching that stage in committee. Some of the people who will be affected by these new charges could appear and indeed indicate their fear and their requirement not to be strangulated.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity to comment on this Bill which will amend the Canada Shipping Act, in particular, and certain other related Acts as well.

There is a port in Toronto. I am not sure whether the Hon. Minister is that well acquainted with eastern Canada, but we do have a port in Toronto, and the port is in fact part of the Seaway. Of course the port was there before the Seaway. But, it is of concern to the City of Toronto whether that Seaway traffic declines or not, and a certain slice of the prosperity of the City of Toronto depends on the maintenance of the Seaway traffic. While the revenues go properly to the federal Government, there is all the indirect revenue that comes to the commerce and industry of the city.

We notice from the letter of the Minister of October 1, 1984, in response to correspondence that he had regarding this, he makes a pledge. This is October 1, 1984, and he says: "I have asked by officials to defer any increases in the Seaway tolls pending a complete analysis of the Seaway's future needs and its importance to Canada's economy". It seems as though, having made that pledge a year ago, and having that pledge in fact enthusiastically accepted by his correspondents in the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association who welcomed that kind of a challenge—it would appear that his conclusion must have been that the Seaway is of little importance in the economy of Canada. The actions that he is proposing appear to envisage the disappearance of the Seaway rather than its maintenance, and that is what gives us concern in Toronto.

Shipping has been decreasing over the past year or two, especially since the tolls were increased, and now the reserve is to be taken away. It is very interesting that just at the time the reserve is taken away, there is a collapse in the Welland Canal. In response to a question a couple of days ago, the Minister explained clearly that he could not tell us anything about what was going to be done about that collapse. In fact, the Seaway took over the obligations of the Welland Canal and has thereby provided a good deal of revenue to the federal Government that was not coming before. The Welland Canal was being subsidized by the federal Government to the tune of perhaps $30 million but, now that it is incorporated into the Seaway, the Government is free of that expense. But, the Government nevertheless decided not to allow the money that had been paid in by the shipping industries as a reserve against trouble to be any longer available in the accounts of the Seaway. It looks as if that may have been a very unwise decision.

Toronto is at present a considerable transportation centre not only for shipping, that is for water shipping, but for rail and for road and for air. There is a long-range danger—and I do not mean in hundreds of years; I mean in years, in a decade or so—a long-range danger of not only Toronto but a good many other cities on the Canadian side of the border losing out to the American systems of transportation which in some cases are very highly subsidized by the American Government.

The Hon. Minister said recently that there was no system which is 100 per cent subsidized. That may be true, but I am sure he is aware of the information given by the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association a year ago to the effect that the United States administration continues to support 100 per cent recovery of all operations and maintenance costs as well as capital expenditures. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that this applies, for example, to the Mississippi waterway. What we are faced with is the prospect of the $2.5 billion industry of shipping Canada's grains to the East through the Seaway being diverted—all or part—to the Mississippi waterway.

● (1650)

Of course, if our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) can charm President Reagan sufficiently by singing "Irish Eyes are Smiling", perhaps he will be able to persuade President Reagan that that is unfair competition and, in the spirit of free trade, President Reagan will no longer allow the Mississippi waterway to be subsidized, no longer allow it to compete with the St. Lawrence Seaway. Perhaps. Before additional charges are laid on the users of the St. Lawrence Seaway, I would hope that that proposition would become a treaty, would be signed by the President and approved by all of the states of the United States which may have a voice in the matter. Until then, I think it is unwise to add to the $25,000 or so that it costs to ship a load of grain from the Lakehead through the St. Lawrence system.

There have been a good many documented objections presented by the people most directly concerned, and I see nothing wrong with that. I wish to refer, in part, to a letter from one of my colleagues in which he points out one of the difficulties that appears to have been overlooked by the Hon. Minister. It is in the letter of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp), at page 5 where he talks about the danger of the grain going to the south. What he points out here is that the St. Lawrence Seaway is the only inland water system in the world that has a cost recovery mandate. He refers to what has been mentioned already, the fact that the Mississippi River system and the 60-mile long Houston Canal system are 100 per cent subsidized by the American Government's Army Corps of Engineers.

There is a good deal of other documentation that has been presented to the Minister and which is before the committee to show that it is hazardous to try to claim 100 per cent recovery from this system, especially at a time of declining traffic and, therefore, declining revenue. It is particularly hazardous to apply discriminately—that is to say, to apply unevenly—the principle of cost recovery.

The Minister quotes the figure of 2 per cent to 4 per cent recovery at present. However, I believe it is a fact that in the cost he is including the amortization of the cost of the Seaway. Yet, the Minister represents a Party which, a century ago, was happy to have the Canadian Pacific Railroad built with no recovery of the cost. The Canadian Pacific Railroad has never been obliged to repay the capital cost, to repay the millions of acres of land, to repay all of the valuable mines, to repay all of the other valuable considerations which it received from the then Conservative Government and its successors in order to build a railroad across Canada. This was accepted by the Canadian people and paid by the Canadian people because our forebears believe we needed a railway to span this country.

I have not heard yet that it is seriously contended by the Government that it will reach back into history and recover the capital cost of building the Canadian Pacific Railroad. If we do hear that suggestion from this Government, we will be hearing a word or two from the CPR President, I am sure, and I am sure his donations to future election campaigns of the Progressive Conservative Party will be in jeopardy.

It is very unreasonable to sock the Seaway for the cost of building the Seaway when it is in competition with both Canadian carriers such as Canadian Pacific Railroad and American carriers such as the Mississippi River system which do not have to pay the capital costs. In the case of the Mississipi River system, not even the maintenance costs are paid.

If the United States considers it worthwhile to provide the Mississippi system as, in effect, a public utility, without charging full-recovery cost to individual users, then it seems a foolish piece of dogmatism, a foolish piece of doctrinaire capitalist dogmatism, to insist that this particular system, the Seaway, must pay full-recovery cost.

The city I represent, Toronto—I represent a good part of it, including a part that is right on the Seaway—has paid, directly and indirectly, a good deal of costs—the capital costs and the operating costs—of the Seaway. However, I do not think that there was sufficient consultation with places like the City of Toronto and the other ports on the Seaway before Clause 4 was slid into the Bill.

According to the press statement of the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), the purpose of the Bill is simply to make improvements regarding pollution and things like that. The press statement neglected to mention the principle of cost recovery, full or partial, further cost recovery, but we have in fact Clause 4, which reads:

> The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after Section 3 thereof, the following section:
> "3.1 For the purpose of defraying the cost of navigational services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard, the Governor in Council may make regulations respecting charges relating to those services, including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, aids to navigation, dredging, vessel traffic services, ice breaking services and escorting services.

Mr. Speaker, that is wide open. Given the philosophy that has been reiterated this afternoon by the Hon. Minister, cities like Toronto and shippers such as the ones that have corresponded with us have good reason to worry about what will happen if this law takes effect, if this law is passed and put into force.

Rather than saying that we should trust the Minister and trust any committees that may be set up to do the suitable thing and not to overcharge where it would cause damage to the economy, I think those questions ought to be looked at first. I think the whole matter should be deferred until the Minister can bring forward much more realistic fears as to which costs he thinks ought to be recovered and which of the users he thinks can generally be expected to pay those costs.

If he simply slaps the charges on or delegates to some committee, some officials, the job of slapping charges on and companies go under because they cannot compete at the higher rates with the American routes and those companies then disappear from the scene, it will be very hard, if not impossible, to recover the shipping industry in Canada.

I think it would be a mistake for this Parliament to adopt this Bill in anything like its present form. There are some good things in the Bill, such as those advertised by the Minister in his press release. Certain regulations are introduced, notwithstanding the anti-regulation philosophy which the Minister exhibits in other areas, but the matter of these charges threatens the existence of the industry, Mr. Speaker. There will be no charges if there is no industry. I think the Hon. Minister ought to be willing to see a halt in the processing of this Bill until there has been much more careful investigation into the costs that it is necessary to charge and into the users which are genuinely capable of paying those costs without going under.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being 5 o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

COMMUNICATIONS AND CULTURE

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING SUB-COMMITTEE ON CBC

Mr. Edouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve) moved that the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture establish a sub-committee for the purposes of reviewing the management of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the matter of the Corporation's programming:

1. That the sub-committee be empowered to hire professional and support staff;

2. That the sub-committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place in Canada for the purpose of visiting the Corporation's facilities;

3. That the sub-committee report back to the House directly; and

4. That the sub-committee be granted all necessary powers to undertake a comprehensive review of CBC's management and programming.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this motion is to deal with the problems at the CBC. Canadians across the country are all complaining about attitudes, management and programming at the CBC. I therefore think it is our duty to raise this matter today and to ask the Government to establish a sub-committee, first of all for the purpose of reviewing management and programming at the CBC. Of course, people will say this is political interference. Well, we have reached the point where our only choice is to take a hands-on approach.

The CBC costs Canadian taxpayers the astronomical sum of nearly one billion dollars annually. When will we have a Government with the courage and the will to change this state of affairs?

The House will recall that some years ago, even the Prime Minister at the time, the Right Hon. Mr. Trudeau, said that he was going to shut down the CBC. This problem has been around for a long time, and nobody does anything, says anything or changes anything. It is time we took charge, Mr. Speaker, that we set up a sub-committee of the people's democratically elected representatives, Canadian citizens who are here in the House, today, Mr. Speaker, representatives of the people who ask and insist that changes be made at the CBC. Something must be done.

You know, we have conservatories across the country where young musicians are trained for their future careers. At the CBC, whose prime objective is to promote Canadian culture . . . You watch television, Mr. Speaker, like the rest of us, like all Canadians, and we always see the same people, the same faces, the same group. There is a small clique there . . . Mr. Juneau has completely lost control. He has no authority whatsoever. There is a small clique of friends who produce programs and travel all over the world. They work with their performers here and there, and on top of that they are paid by the CBC to do programming. Not bad, eh!

That is why we are always looking at the the same individuals, the same faces. What are we going to do with our young musicians, our young singers and our old artists who are practically starving?They always use the same people, the same individuals. When they need someone to play the part of an old man they give him a wig and tell him: "Here you go, you play old man Gamache because you belong to the gang, you are one of the boys".

So it is, Mr. Speaker, and the Auditor General of Canada himself said that the worst management can be found in the CBC. Even today's papers report Mr. Juneau as saying that the CBC is in a dramatic situation. Dramatic it is! I would not know who should be blamed for this dramatic situation, but he is right there, he is the man in charge.

Here is what I read in Le Devoir this morning: Former President Johnson really shocked members of the seminar when he explained how "the national dream, created fifty years ago when the Canadian broadcasting system was established, has become a national disgrace". Those are the words of former CBC President Johnson, as reported in Le Devoir this morning!

Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives can certainly not be held responsible for that mess. The Liberal regime lasted long enough, we know better.

Mr. Rossi: You have been there for a year and a half, Edouard, so what have you done?

Mr. Desrosiers: If anyone ought to be aware of those problems, it has to be the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

Mr. Rossi: I am aware.

Mr. Desrosiers: You were in that Government. You supported all those policies. And when did you stand up to defend your Italian friends, the great Italian artists we have in Canada? When did you rise in the House to speak up for those people? They have every right to promote their culture in this country—

Mr. Rossi: We have not seen you for a month. Do not say anything, you are not in a position to speak up, you have not been in the House for a whole month!

Mr. Desrosiers: Yes, my dear, we know you. We know your kind . . . You have been here for quite a long time as the member for Bourassa. As I said, seldom have you stood up in the House to fight for the Italian artists within your community. I challenge you to quote a single instance where you made representations on behalf of the great many Italian artists in this country.

Mr. Rossi: I rise in this House more often than you come to this place.

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I suggest it is important for all Hon. Members to look into the CBC problem, a serious problem which, I feel, should not exist. Mr. Juneau who thinks he is the big boss is responsible for it. He is responsible for this situation. I wonder why he is clinging to power. He should resign. He has completely lost control over the CBC.

As recently as this morning, one could read in the Le Devoir newspaper:

Mr. Pierre Juneau, the President of the CBC, warned the Sauvageau-Caplan task force on radio-broadcasting in Canada not to try and draw a red herring the way previous commissions did over the past 30 years—

The Liberal party was in power 30 years ago. They have been in power for the past 100 years. For a whole century, Mr. Speaker! And now Mr. Juneau would like us to come up with "instant miracles" to cure the ills of the CBC. How could we deal seriously with a man who is in charge of CBC and who is seeking "instant miracles"? Do you not find him somewhat strange?

Anyway, I feel it is important:

1. That the sub-committee be empowered to hire professional and support staff;

2. That the sub-committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place in Canada for the purpose of visiting the Corporations' facilities;

3. That the sub-committee report back to the House directly; and

4. That the sub-committee be granted all necessary powers to undertake a comprehensive review of CBC's management and programming.

There are reasons for the cuts, Mr. Speaker. There was a shameful waste at the CBC. There are 19 stories too many in the CBC building. Five of them are completely empty. There is nothing in there.

I think it is about time the Government look into this responsibly, because it is the Canadian taxpayers who are footing the bill. This waste has to stop.

I now ask you to support my motion so that we may regain control of the CBC, develop serious guidelines for programming, really promote our true Canadian culture and let our various ethnic groups, such as the Italians, the Greeks, the Japanese, the Chinese, and so on, make their presence felt. We never see them on the CBC. Never! The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) knows this. We have very talented artists of Italian descent in Canada, but we never see them on the CBC.

One of my friends who is Black is an excellent singer. He has never been given a job by the CBC. He is Black and he has no right to belong to our culture! Yet, he was born here in Canada and is a good Canadian. However, he is never given a job. When did you ever see a Black man on the CBC? Everyone watches it!

Mr. Speaker, this is another proof that it is time for our Government to establish this subcommittee to review the management and programming of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

• (1710)

[English]

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to address the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers). I would like to call attention to the fact that in his motion he calls for the review of the management of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the matter of the corporation's programming.

It was recently brought to my attention that the Hon. Member on March 29, 1985, brought a different motion to the attention of the House. In that motion he called for the House to dissolve the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and to terminate the present mandate for all members of the corporation's Board of Directors. It was an even more sweeping decision which he asked us to make at that time. He asked that we completely eliminate the CBC.

In order to give the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve the benefit of the doubt, perhaps he was unaware of the previous studies which have been made by commissions throughout the years with respect to monitoring the work of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and its budget. I cannot see how he could have been unaware of the commission appointed by the former Minister of Communications, the Hon. Member for Frontenac (Mr. Masse), since on May 8 of this year the former Minister set up a commission. In setting up the commission he had a number of interesting words to say. He said that in carrying out the review it would not duplicate what has already been done but will build on work carried out previously such as that of the federal cultural policy review committee, the Applebaum-Hébert Commission and other recent broadcasting policies and initiatives of his Department.

In his press release, the former Minister of Communications stated that he would be presenting the task force recommendations to Cabinet. He said that this would be followed by the tabling of a White Paper in the House of Commons. He said that the White Paper would be considered by a parliamentary committee where formal discussions will take place.

Again, to give the Hon. Member the benefit of the doubt, perhaps he drafted his motion before May 8, before his former Minister's press release which set out the creation of a new task force. As we all know that task force was to deal with a great many matters. I would like to bring to the attention of the House the mandate of the Caplan-Sauvageau task force which reads as follows:

—make recommendations to the Minister of Communications on an industrial and cultural strategy to govern the future evolution of the Canadian broadcasting system through the remainder of this century, recognizing the importance of broadcasting to Canadian life. The strategy will take full account of the overall social and economic goals of the government, of government policies and priorities, including the need for fiscal restraint, increased reliance on private sector initiatives and federal-provincial co-operation, and of the policies of the government in other related economic and cultural sectors.

I would like to continue the quotation of the former Minister with respect to the appointment of the Caplan-Sauvageau task force which states:

It will also take full account of the challenges and opportunities in the increasingly competitive broadcasting environment presented by ongoing technological developments.

The long and short of the matter is that the rather wordy mandate of the task force is that it has to deal with the entire sphere of public broadcasting in Canada. Included in the terms of reference is consideration of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

I would like to point out to Hon. Members that the motion before us is duplicative. It is a waste of time for this House to consider. It is unnecessary and pointless. Why? As I said at the outset, frequent commissions and reviews have been set up to which the former Minister paid tribute. I refer to the Applebaum-Hébert Report and many other reports prior to that. Also, the Hon. Member proposes a move which would duplicate the work of the committee which his former Minister established.

I would like to call the attention of the House to the fact that implementation of the Hon. Member's motion would cost real money. It would involve an excessive waste of taxpayers' money.

I would like to direct Hon. Members to what the Hon. Member proposes in his motion. It states:

That the sub-committee be empowered to hire professional and support staff;

I would suggest to Hon. Members that that would cost real money. Second, he proposes:

That the sub-committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place in Canada for the purpose of visiting the Corporation's facilities;

That is merely a euphemism for going on junkets across the country in order to obtain information which would cost real money. In this case I wonder why the former Minister would have appointed the Caplan-Sauvageau task force to do exactly what the Hon. Member proposes. I suggest this is a complete duplication of what his own Party is already doing. To hire a professional support staff, which was included by the mover of this motion, is something which reminds me—and I do not want him to think I am being purely partisan—that our Tory friends seem to have no shame about wasting public funds while they try to deindex seniors and family benefits, pay off bank loans which are not good and provide capital gains for the wealthy. The Government certainly knows how to suggest ideas for the wasting of the taxpayers' money, and here is more evidence of that.

● (1720)

One of the chief concerns I feel we should have about this motion is that the approach of the Tory surgeons is first to cut or amputate and then diagnose the patient. Last fall the CBC budget was cut and the survival of Canadian culture was at one and the same time threatened. The Government was clearly taking a chance that our air waves might be filled with American programming because the Budget cuts inevitably will affect Canadian content programming and our ability to reach rural and remote Canada. Our national identity depends on our cultural identity. Yet by these cuts, the national dream of the Canadian identity is under attack.

The CBC is an important factor in defending our culture. It is as important today as the railway was, and is, to keep our country united. Yet this Government saw fit to make the enormous cuts of $85 million and more. The outcry, of course, from Canadians was tremendous. They were indignant at these cuts because they know the cultural industry is one of the best job creation industries in Canada. Critics of the cut-backs which have been imposed on the CBC, and on other arts and cultural councils, have argued that Canada's cultural industries employ as many people as agriculture. In 1981 it had revenues of almost $8 billion and a payroll of $2.5 billion. Employment in cultural industries rose 74 per cent between 1971 and 1981 as compared to 39 per cent growth in the economy as a whole. It is six times more efficient, by the way, in job creation, than the manufacturing sector.

In stressing the impact of federal aid, critics point out that for every one dollar received from Ottawa, the cultural industry generates almost $5 from other sources. Yet while other industries were cut by 3 per cent, culture was cut by 5 per cent. At a time when Canadians are concerned about cultural sovereignty and unemployment is high, Government support for Canadian programming and for artists and performers is being reduced. For the half a century the CBC has been on the air waves, it has made it possible for Canadian writers, film makers and artists to make a living in this country rather than going south of the border. It has created a Canadian identity and has produced programs which commercial stations would not likely produce. Because of the recent cuts, the CBC may be seriously weakened as a national service. It may not be able to continue to broadcast in two languages, run two television and four radio networks, a northern service, an international service and a parliamentary channel.

I do not want to take away the right of my hon. friend to criticize the CBC for whatever reason he wishes. No doubt there are areas where improvements could be made following his suggestions and those of other people from across this country. I am sure that all of us want to monitor and express our personal opinions about the CBC, and how to improve the service, in any way we wish. The Hon. Member suggeted on March 29 that we eliminate the CBC. He now suggests that we have a duplicative committee to cross this country at the taxpayers' expense to "reinvent the wheel", to once again examine the CBC. That seems to me to be quite unrealistic.

We have to be concerned about the cuts which were made by this Government to the budgets of the CBC and other cultural organizations. It is interesting now to see that the former Minister of Communications, the Hon. Member for Frontenac has had a conversion on the road to Damascus. He speaks now of cultural sovereignty. He sets himself up to say he is going to be a champion of that cultural sovereignty, that he will defend it to the death. His successor has also indicated his defence of our sovereignty. But we cannot defend the sovereignty unless we have a budget and if we cut the budget we are going to cut the sovereignty. It is as simple as that. We should not destroy the infrastructure of those organizations which have been the hallmark and the bulwark of our strength and solidity as a nation. If we are going to make sure we have cultural sovereignty, then we should not cut the CBC and we should not cut culture. Anything else is lip service and empty hypocrisy.

Let us hope, indeed, that it was a conversion on the road to Damascus. Let us hope that the Minister of Communications, in Cabinet and everywhere he can, will stand up and be counted. Let us hope he will face up to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in order to ensure this country is defended in terms of its cultural sovereignty and in terms of developing jobs for Canadians in the area where more jobs can be created than in any other sector of this country.

The statement released by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) on November 8, 1984, on the Government's expenditure and program review, contained a number of significant funding cuts for cultural agencies. Particularly hard hit is the CBC. The nature and degree of these cuts, and the subsequent statements by the Minister, indicate a substantially different approach to cultural policy than under the previous Government. The Applebaum-Hébert report on cultural policy recommended in 1982 the maintenance of an arm's length relationship between cultural industries and Government but continued Government consultation and funding.

During the 1984 election campaign, the Conservative Party indicated a commitment to the arm's length principle, as well as to maintaining funding for agencies and councils in line with inflation. That is what the Conservative Party said. However, in 1984 cuts were announced to the CBC, the Canada Council, the CRTC, the Department of Communications and the National Film Board. The former Minister of Communications, the Hon. Member for Frontenac, announced in a press release on November 15 of last year that three consultants were being assigned "to participate on my behalf" in the Budget restraint exercise at the CBC. At this time the Minister also indicated his plans to conduct "a fundamental review of the corporation's mandate, role and activities". In an interview which was published in The Globe and Mail he stated that his Government intends to question "the traditional arm's length relationship with cultural agencies as well as the primary role of the CBC".

● (1730)

He stressed the Department's responsibility to set cultural policy and he doubted whether the CBC should continue to account for two-thirds of all the money the federal Government spends to support cultural activities. It does seem, Mr. Speaker, as if they are a bit confused over there in the Tory benches. They are going to have cultural sovereignty and an arm's length relationship with the CBC, yet the Minister proceeded to put his commissars into the CBC and he was questioning whether there should be an arm's length policy. It seems as if the ship is going in every direction. It is this kind of confusion which of course leaves all of us a bit nervous because if there is that much confusion in these and so many other policies, then people cannot plan ahead. They cannot really rely upon this Government to defend our sovereignty. This even puts into grave question the ability of this Government to negotiate with the United States over matters which relate to books and publishing and communications and so on. If the Government cannot elucidate and elaborate on a policy and stick with it regarding the CBC, how can we assume that it will know where it is going when it comes to negotiating in areas where we cannot afford to make a mistake?

This member of the Conservative Party is also proposing a subcommittee with the aim of dangerously interfering as politicians with the long-standing Liberal Government policy of an arm's length relationship with the CBC. Indeed, the Consumer's Association of Canada said that limiting Cabinet power to issue directions to matters of broad public policy is what they wish. Rightly so. The Cabinet should not be able to interfere in the specific programming of the CBC. The Member moving this motion is from Quebec and he must certainly be aware of the special role that the CBC plays in providing French-language broadcasting not only in Quebec but in other areas of Canada where there is a demand, indeed a great need for it. Does the Hon. Member not realize that the CBC is vital to our national interests and must have the budget and freedom to program appropriately? Does he wish his committee to interfere with these national interests? How can he assure us that this interference by politicians which he is suggesting will not dangerously politicize the CBC so that it will no longer be able to provide its vital service to this country?

[Translation]

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like first to turn away completely from the irresponsible attack launched by the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) against the CBC. There are occasions and reasons for criticizing the Corporation. We must not be blind supporters of the CBC, and I will have negative comments to make, but we should use a balanced approach. We have to mention both the good and the bad points, because the CBC deserves to be commended even for some of its triumphs.

What are the facts? The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is serving large section of the globe. There are two TV networks in both official languages, and four radio networks also in both official languages, and in AM and FM. There is the Northern service broadcasting programs in several native languages in addition to our two official languages, and there is a universally recognized international service.

The CBC costs less per program, per program hour than any other national network in the world. It is difficult to have comparisons made with private Canadian networks, because they do not produce much of their programs. They buy programs mainly from the United States.

[English]

Therefore, the record of the CBC with regard to cost efficiency and with regard to serving this enormous country of ours is actually very, very good and we can be proud of that. We can be proud, too, of the quality of many of the programs and specials which the CBC produces. We think of Chautauqua Girl, Charley Grant's War and The Nature of Things, a program which is sold all over the world, and the lesson is very clear. When the CBC has adequate funds to do the job, it does it very, very well and we as Canadians can be very proud.

I do agree that a re-examination of the CBC is needed. This is precisely what is happening already with the task force on broadcast policy. Quite correctly, this task force is examining not only the CBC but the private broadcasters as well. We have a national broadcasting system which includes the public sector and the private sector, and the private sector broadcasting has been notoriously negligent in producing Canadian programs. If we want an improvement and we want to see a more vital Canadian culture, it is to the private sector that we have to look to make an enormous change to improve the development of Canadian programs. Canadian programming has come almost entirely from the public sector and because we are going to have to depend on that public sector, we need a strong CBC. But we also need a re-examination of both sectors and it is quite clear that for the kinds of improvements we need from the CBC, we have to spend more money. Where I think the CBC most deserves criticism, and I want to spend a little time on this because these facts are still not sufficiently well known, and it is a subject which the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) did not mention, is the exclusion of coverage of women's issues and events, and the relegation of women in the CBC to roles largely outside the production, direction, and management capacities. This is a subject about which the women's movement in Canada has been complaining, as well as articulating and documenting in great detail, for a large number of years.

The first intervention by the women's movement concerning the CBC came in 1974, more than 10 years ago, and the CBC ignored it. The second intervention, which was joined with an intervention on CTV, and many other groups joined in as well, came in 1978 at the CRTC hearings. At that time the corporation decided that it had to respond to the criticism and it invited representatives of women's organizations to meetings with senior management. These were extremely interesting meetings and at the end the Corporation came up with a so-called plan of action where it was going to reform its act. I have documentation from a 1978 CBC task force on the status of women, its recommendations and implementation. There is a list of concrete measures to improve coverage of women's issues and events, to include women in drama, news, public affairs, sports, children's programs, indeed all the programming on the CBC, to improve women's opportunities to get into non-traditional roles and to rise in the corporation. Unfortunately the CBC has not acted on these recommendations. This has not been a plan of action, it has been a plan of inaction. It has been a plan on paper, not one in reality. Therefore, we have women's organizations, including employees of the CBC itself, across the country in all of the networks complaining that they have been excluded, that they are not being given fair and adequate attention. Now that we have a Charter of Rights which guarantees equality to both sexes, this situation is not only reprehensible, it is indeed illegal. This is not just the privilege of a male management, old fashioned and traditional, which wishes to have the CBC remain a boys' club. This is illegal now. Women have legal equality with men and this exclusion from our major public network is totally reprehensible. Let me refer to what women within the Corporation are saying. This brief was prepared.

● (1740)

[Translation]

—a preliminary brief submitted to the Board of Inquiry on Employment Equality by the CBC's reporters union. This is a presentation to the Abella Commission, and at that time the CBC was one Crown Corporation that had a so-called action plan. But the results of that plan were something else, and I quote:

> We believe there is general discrimination against women within the CBC at all levels. For instance, there are very few, if any, women in managerial positions, or in traditionally male-dominated areas such as the sports department.
> We have found that women were systematically underpaid compared with their male colleagues for absolutely identical work. We also have found that the majority of women worked as researchers or research assistants, while the majority of men worked as reporters and interviewers, or M.C's, which are better-appreciated jobs within the CBC.
>
> We tried to learn whether those salary differentials were based on objective and rational considerations such as experience or education. Or whether, on the other hand, individual hiring negotiation practices and the absence of established criteria did not awaken old sexist discriminatory reflexes at the employer level.

[English]

This brief was brought out in 1983 but nothing has changed since then. I have a reply from the President of the Corporation to a representative of another women's organization about their so-called plan of action. Let me cite from this reply as well:

[Translation]

> The Corporation is proud of having launched one of the first, and also one of the most successful Equal Opportunity Programs for women in this country. However, you will certainly agree with me that, despite all that has been accomplished over the last 8 years, the situation of women generally has not advanced as it should have.

This is sheer hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker, on the part of the President of the CBC, Mr. Juneau, when he says such things, because he has done nothing to put that plan of action in effect. And he goes on:

> This is the reason why we have decided to launch as soon as the next financial year a revitalized affirmative action program. This program will be provided with specific targets which management will have to reach.

It is the same plan of action as developed in 1979. We had such a plan, but the CBC did not implement the basis of the plan set up six years ago.

It will include a complete review of our salary scales to guarantee the application of the principle of equal salary for work of an equal value throughout the Corporation.

And he goes on with the same nonsense about his plan of action.

[English]

This is yet another example.

What is the situation in terms of what we see on the air right now? The Corporation was required to monitor its own programming. There is monitoring from 1981 and 1982. Another study was conducted as a result of the CRTC Task Force on Sex Stereotyping in the Media and MediaWatch has also done some monitoring.

The results are well worth citing for consideration of the House. In television news, women are very seriously under-represented where 77 per cent of news readers and 79 per cent of reporters are men. In television news, 85 per cent of all interviewees are men; female experts were invisible as 91 per cent of experts were men; 70 per cent of the people in the street were men and 84 per cent were eyewitnesses. Even when interviewing ordinary citizens on the street, they cannot find any women because of the traditional view that men are important and only men constitute news or public affairs. The interviewers and the interviewees are men.

In radio news, 86 per cent of people interviewed were men; female experts were almost non-existent as 92 per cent of experts were men; 55 per cent of people in the street were men and 79 per cent of eyewitnesses were men. These are recent statistics and this situation is inexcusable. It shows that the Corporation has not mended its ways and still consists of a complacent group of very sexist men who are quite content to abide by the old club rules, despite the fact that we have a Charter of Rights and a commitment, I believe from all Parties in the House, to improve chances for women and admit women as equal partners with men in the political, economic and cultural life of this country.

The CBC has been scandalously deficient in addressing this. I could go on to comment on many other policies. For instance, it has a policy for the portrayal of women in programming. It also has policies on hiring in which there is an affirmative action program which states that in job areas where women are under-represented and two job candidates are equally qualified, the woman is given the advantage. That is nonsense because it never happens. When we follow up on a complaint that women are being discriminated against we are told that no qualified women applied. We are told that not one qualified woman applied in the 150 applications. That is hardly believable in areas where there are large numbers of well qualified women.

In fact, there is an affirmative action plan and the CBC has not shown that it is serious about applying that plan. We have legitimate reason to criticize the CBC but the question is how to address the problem. I do not believe that a parliamentary committee is the correct way to deal with this issue. The CBC should take this matter seriously because recommendations have been made to the task force on broadcasting about this issue and many others. The task force must be scrupulously careful to bring forward concrete measures that both the Corporation and private sector broadcasting can adopt to ensure that women are shown as the equal members of Canadian society that we are.

It is unnecessary to establish a new committee and incur the expenses for travelling across the country. The task force on broadcast policy just completed its tour of the country during the summer. I presented a brief to that task force along with other people and organizations. That task force will be presenting its recommendations and a report will go to the committee. That will provide another opportunity for input, using the means we already have at our disposal without the additional expense and energy to all of those organizations which would have to repeat what they said to that task force.

In conclusion, many of the problems facing the CBC today could be solved with more money. Additional Canadian programming, especially children's programming, drama and entertainment, require more money. It costs money in order to have Canadian content for prime time entertainment viewing.

It is obvious that it is more expensive to produce a program than to buy it from the United States. The American corporations can produce their high budget programs and sell them all over the world at a small fraction of their production costs. We are subject to this dumping, as it is called in any other sector of the economy. We cannot stop it by raising a curtain to prevent programs from coming in. We can only compete by producing our own programs, and that is expensive. However, if we care about Canadian culture we will ensure that measures are taken so that the programs are produced. That is the way to fight for the survival of our culture.

• (1750)

In concluding, I want to salute the work done by the partisans, the friends of the CBC, who are being constructive and enthusiastic critics representing the grass roots of Canada. After all, these were the people who demanded the CBC in the first place. If the CBC has grown distant from its roots, these people are speaking up now. That is welcome and we should be listening to the criticisms they and our citizens are making. These are constructive criticisms and are well within the concern that we all share, which is to have a strong Canadian culture.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to rise to address the motion put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) about the establishment of a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture for the purposes of reviewing the management of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the matter of the Corporation's programming.

I must congratulate the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve for the uncanny timeliness of his private Members' motion. Even as we speak, Mr. Speaker, several Members of the Progressive Conservative Government are meeting with the special task force to review Canadian Broadcasting policy. The Hon. Member will know that Mr. Gerald Caplan and his co-chairman, Mr. Florian Sauvageau, along with a distinguished group of communicators, are spending nine months crossing the country, consulting with all sectors of the Canadian economy and discussing with a wide range of interested groups and individuals matters relating to the future of Canada's broadcasting system, which will bring about the first fundamental review of Canadian broadcasting in 15 years. My hon. friend can see how this debate can only contribute to the information gathering process of the task force on broadcasting. In that regard, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) and the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) for some of their very timely and constructive remarks. Although I cannot agree with everything that was said, I do appreciate their contributions.

That being said, I can say on behalf of the acting Minister of Communications that he is interested in the proposal of my colleague.

The process for the recent revision to the Broadcast Program Development Fund and for the review of French language television services was undertaken in December, 1984. This clearly illustrates that the ministry is always interested in contributions to the ongoing dialogue in the evaluation and development of broadcasting policy. It is in this light that I see the motion placed before us.

To suggest that the affairs of the "Holy Mother Corporation" have most Members of this House writhing in an earthly hell from time to time is something of an understatement, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, Members on this side frequently get apoplectic about the CBCs daily programming and management practices, and so it is not surprising to see motions, such as this one, recommending the implementation of extreme and extraordinary measures to examine the CBC.

There are two immediate responses that I would offer the Hon. Member in connection with his motion. The first is that whatever our concerns and complaints, no matter how much we castigate, slam and damn the CBC, I am one Member of Parliament who fervently believes in the viability and continued existence of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It was after all, a Progressive Conservative Government which created the CBC in the 1930s. It will not be under a Progressive Conservative Government that we will see the CBC dismantled or put up for sale. Second, I would say to my hon. friend that this is a time for fiscal and economic restraint.

The acting Minister of Communications, following the lead of his immediate predecessor, the Hon. Member for Frontenac (Mr. Masse) is working on the Government's review of the communication portfolio and the future of broadcasting in particular. If we were not undertaking such a complete review, and if the special task force on broadcasting was not at this very moment carefully examining the future role of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in the over-all context of this country's broadcasting system, then the need perceived by the Hon. Member to establish a subcommittee, such as the one he described, could easily be confirmed. In such a case, it might well be useful for it to have a broader mandate such as to suggest ways and means to determine the optimum support and allocation of resources to cultural activities in the communications portfolio, while paying special attention to the role and activities of the private sector and provincial Government in the cultural development of the country.

I must oppose this motion, Mr. Speaker. Our Government, whose first goal is the reduction of the deficit, would probably find the establishment of such a committee, as described by my colleague, too onerous. It would also be duplication of work done by the Auditor General of Canada, who performed a comprehensive audit of the CBC in 1982-83, and by work that will be done by the task force on broadcasting policy whose establishment the former Minister of Communications had announced before the Hon. Member brought this motion forward for debate at this time.

May I remind this House of the size of the CBC? The CBC English-language division is made up of 31 AM radio station, 15 FM stations and 18 television stations. In addition, 15 AM radio stations and 26 television stations are under an affiliation contract with the CBC. The French-language service groups, 15 AM radio stations, six FM radio stations and 13 television stations, while seven AM radio stations and five private television stations are in affiliation. Simply put, the CBC has over 150 broadcasting facilities. To this we must add the CBC northern services, CBC international, this parliamentary channel and all other related activities.

How expensive would it be, I ask the Hon. Member, to visit the large number of CBC facilities spread throughout the country, especially if a group of persons were involved? Would it be prudent to hire additional experts and knowledgeable support staff when the Government is trying right now to control its own expenditures of personnel and already has people in place to study relevant issues in the entire broadcasting industry? Would it not be easier for the Standing Committee to request from the CBC the numerous studies it has commissioned itself?

I could go on, Mr. Speaker, but what I want to make clear is that expenditures such as these must be clearly justified. Is it really the case with this proposal? Can we believe, I ask the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, that we really need another committee to scrutinize the operations of the CBC? Frankly, there are other ways to satisfy the Member's need for current information about the CBC. What immediately comes to mind is the CBC's parliamentary services. This service was instituted to answer the questions Members could have regarding the activities of the CBC. Any Member can use it for his or her benefit.

As for visiting CBC facilities, I suggest that Members of this House might wish to visit CBC facilities located in their constituencies. If there are no studios in their areas, I am sure that a visit could be arranged to the Ottawa studios.

What I want to emphasize is that there does exist simpler and less onerous ways than the creation of another committee to review the CBC's activities. It is not as though the CBC operates by itself year after year without reporting to Parliament. Every year the Minister tables the CBC's annual report, to which is attached a financial report certified by the Auditor General of Canada.

Furthermore, officials of the Department of Communications are in constant contact with the CBC on all aspects of its activities as they relate to public inquiries directed to the Minister as well as to the development of communications and culture for Canada in both the domestic and international spheres.

May I remind this House that CBC reports to Parliament through the Minister of Communications and that the Minister of Communications exerts control over expenditure levels of the CBC by making recommendations to the Treasury Board on proposed program expenditure levels of the Corporation? The Minister also makes recommendations to the Governor in Council regarding remuneration and pension benefits, and must approve all CBC by-laws concerning such matters.

● (1800)

As well, the corporation's capital budget is approved by the Governor in Council upon recommendation of the Minister of Communications, the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board.

In addition, every year the President of the CBC appears before the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture and provides the members with the opportunity to question the CBC's achievement of its objectives as well as its operations. As for the review of the CBC programming service, it is normally done on a regular basis—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary.

Adjournment Debate

PUBLIC SERVICE (A) CAREER PLANNING FOR EMPLOYEES FACING LAYOFFS. (B) JOB SECURITY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the question I wish to raise this evening in the adjournment debate is further to a question put in the House on October 8, 1985, reported at page 7455 of Hansard, which deals with an important and timely subject, namely, jobs in the Public Service of Canada and the burning issue of job cuts in the public service.

For some time now, Mr. Speaker, both in the media and here in the House, there has been constant talk of the many cuts made by the Conservative Government in the Public Service of Canada. For instance, a few weeks ago we were informed of 3,000 layoffs at Canada Post, 5,000 at Transport Canada, 1,150 at Customs and most recently, in referring to the 1,500 jobs cut within his own department, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) stated in this House on October 3, as reported at page 7297 of Hansard, and I quote:

> We want the 1,500 jobs and more for Indian people, not federal bureaucrats.

On October 8, I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) what kind of career planning he had in mind for public servants affected by these arbitrary cutbacks, cutbacks based on certain percentages and involving numbers as high as 15,000 jobs over 15 years, a decision we find absolutely cruel and hard to accept. I asked him whether he had a plan to help these public servants retrain and find other jobs within the Public Service of Canada. The Minister answered, as reported at page 7455 of Hansard of October 8, 1985, and I quote again:

> Regarding workforce adjustment policies as well as most of the other commitments we have undertaken vis-à-vis the unions, we have worked out a policy that provides for the kind of pre-notice, retraining and recycling within the Public Service that will minimize the adjustment of these workers to an obviously difficult situation.

Mr. Speaker, the House will also recall that not so long ago, it was October 8, hardly a week ago, I asked the President of the Treasury Board whether those same public servants laid off in accordance with his program of employee cutbacks, a program which, and I say it again, was arbitrary, would be put on a priority list and whether they would get the support and help of the Public Service Commission in finding a job within the Government's departments and agencies.

The Minister gave me the assurance that everything was being done to help them find jobs within the public service, that notice periods had been negotiated with the unions to provide for the most complete retraining available, and that, and these are the Minister's own words, out of 3,000 public servants laid off since November 1984, only 130 had not yet been recycled.

Mr. Speaker, this matter seemed to me to be important because it affects a great many civil servants who are concerned about their future in the Federal Civil Service. I was somewhat skeptical when the Minister said in the House that all but 130-odd employees out of about 3,000 had been recycled within the Public Service. I believe the Minister realized that he had made a mistake, because he rose on a point of order in the House three days later, specifically on October 11, and indicated he wanted to correct some misinformation he had provided to the House on October 8 in reply to a question from the Hon. Member from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), and I quote:

> Last November a decision was made to reduce the growth planned by the previous Government for 1985-86 by some 1,300 person years. Because of vacancies and attrition, only 725 indeterminate employees were directly affected. Almost 700 of them were dereployed within the Public Service. Approximately 30 were actually laid off and all of them were entitled to a priority for placement for one year.

On a Point of Order which was not really one, the Minister corrected a statement which he had made in the House on October 8.

● (1805)

[English]

Because the Minister answered in that way on October 8 last I made inquiries of the Public Service Commission in respect of these employees who were declared surplus. I requested the statistics in connection with this matter, and I was provided with a document dated October 10, 1985 from the Staffing Priorities and Complaints Centre.

This document states that 1,972 employees were declared surplus during the period September 1, 1984 to September 30, 1985. Of that number, 766 were removed from the system for a number of reasons, including priority status of one year expired, resignations, retirement, death, status rescinded or reappointments.

Of those who are still on the priority list, 296 were laid off and 910 were considered surplus, bringing us to the 1,206 employees who still are on the priority list and who have to find jobs. Of those, 253 have chosen not to exercise their priority entitlement. This is in the document dated October 10, 1985. The total number of reappointments being 673, that means that only 34 per cent of the employees who were either laid off or declared surplus were redeployed.

Those are the actual figures to September 30, 1985. They do not include the 1,500 employees of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or the 300 maintenance workers under the Department of Public Works—and these are mainly women—who have been told that they will get their pink slips on April 1, 1986. Nor does it include the numerous public servants who have been laid off or declared surplus since October 1, 1985.

When the Minister said in the House on October 11, 1985 that he had been provided with the figures and wanted to set the record straight, I believe he did not have the record straight. I believe his Parliamentary Secretary should now set the record straight once and for all. Give us the complete facts with reference to this lay-off program of the Government.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I know my hon. colleague is concerned for his constituents, the public servants, and I know, too, that he does not want to indulge in any scare tactics. He has applauded our efforts in handling this matter in the most professional, responsible and fair method possible. I want to thank my hon. friend for putting the facts in connection with this program on the record.

There are some 1,972 employees affected. However, we have done our best to redeploy as many of these people as possible. I only received the figures as he read them out. It seems to me that we still have a lot of time to realize positive results on the efforts we are making.

When we announced in the May 23 Budget that we were going to reduce Treasury Board controlled person-years, we put the emphasis on the word "attrition". We said in the Budget papers that efforts will be made to achieve these reductions through attrition wherever possible. We have a reasonable record in redeploying these people through attrition. The Hon. Member indicated that some 1,000 people had retired. That was the whole idea of the attrition policy. We realize that people retire, decide for one reason or other that they want to go on to other things, or die unexpectedly. That is why we have been focusing on attrition and redeployment as a fair and responsible way to handle what everyone knows is a problem for the Government, the deficit.

● (1810)

The Hon. Member will know that prior to declaring any employee surplus all Departments are expected to redeploy as many as possible of the affected employees within the Department including retraining where this is necessary. When a surplus is declared, employees are usually given six-months' notice. I would point out that the official minimum notice period is four months but the Government has decided to give six months' notice to people who are being laid off. On being declared surplus, these employees are immediately entitled to a priority for placement in vacant positions in the Public Service for which they are qualified or could become qualified through retraining. If surplus employees accept a lower paying job, their salaries are protected for a year.

We appreciate that this is a delicate matter but there does not appear to be long lines of people pounding at our doors saying that they have been mistreated. I think that in itself speaks to the treatment they have received. If my hon. colleague can show any instances of us not being fair, I request that he bring them to my personal attention.

SOCIAL SECURITY—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF CHILD TAX CREDIT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, on October 16 I raised a very important question regarding family allowances and the child tax credit. The Government has been feeding us the line that its increase in the child tax credit will make up for the unfortunate decrease in the family allowances.

On October 16, I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) if he was aware that the child tax credit itself was to be deindexed so that the so-called replacement would be a very temporary one indeed. In reply, I received a denial of the problem, and a rather rude denial at that. Let me quote from the Minister's response:

Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has read the Budget and Bill C-70 she will have seen that the child tax credit will be increased. I suggest she look at those figures.

This rather smug put-down is totally unwarranted. Bill C-70 has nothing to do with the child tax credit. It deals with the deindexation of the family allowances. The child tax credit is not even mentioned in it. I did look at the Budget papers and I will quote from them:

The child tax credit will be indexed to increase in the CPI in excess of three percentage points.

This is found under the section entitled "Taxation Year 1989 and Subsequent Years". This is a polite, euphemistic way of saying that from 1989 on there will be a deindexation of the child tax credit. That is, the indexing for the cost of living will only be in excess of 3 per cent, so that every year from 1989 on the child tax credit will lose 3 per cent of its value, just like the family allowances.

[Translation]

The sad truth is that the Government will reduce those three child assistance social programs. First to go will be the family allowances, as of January 1, 1986. Next will be the child tax exemption, and this cutback will take effect the following year. Finally it will be the child tax credit. It is true that the child tax credit will be increased, but only on a temporary basis. The child tax credit is now worth $384 a year for each child. It will go up for a while, but in the case of families eligible for the full tax credit, meaning low income families, in nine years the tax credit will be worth less than it is worth now.

If we add up family allowances and the child tax credit we find out that, beginning in 1991, those families will be getting less Government assistance than they do now, including the poorest families in Canada, where one child out of five lives under the threshold of poverty, yet even those families are under attack by the Conservative Government. I am ashamed to say this is the situation in a country as wealthy as Canada!

What does deindexing mean? It means a loss in value. Families will receive a check because the Government does not dare eliminate the child assistance program just like that. Unfortunately, the monthly family allowance check will not buy much. Its value will have been cut nearly by half within 20 years. In current dollars, it would represent about $17.50 a month per child.

The child tax credit will be worth the equivalent of $276 in 20 years compared with the present amount of $384.

[English]

The Government of Canada, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare are not being honest with the people of Canada when they say that the family allowance reductions will be replaced and that the poorest families will be better off with its programs. It is simply not true. All families are being attacked. Even the poorest families will be worse off with the deindexation measures. There will be a decline year after year in the value of our social programs. Fewer families will be eligible for receipt of the child tax credit, which is another point the Government is reluctant to make. Fewer families will qualify for whole or partial aid, thanks to deindexation. This is a serious matter. It is important for the people of Canada to speak up now to oppose this drastic Draconian government measure of attack on the families of Canada.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to reply to the noble question asked to the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) last October 16 and repeated this evening by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), who wondered whether the minister of family and welfare was aware of the fact that the child tax credit would be reduced by so-called deindexing.

First, I wish to repeat that the first objective of the restructuring of family tax benefits undertaken by the Government as announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in our Budget last May is to ensure that these benefits and any benefit increases will be directed at those who really need them. Under the restructuring or readjustment of family tax benefits which will be phased in over the next three years, the child tax credit will effectively increase from $384 in 1985 to $524 in 1988.

Indeed, in 1986, the tax credit will be increased by $70 and it will then increase by $35 a year during the next two years. Consequently, to insure that these very necessary increases will be directed towards the most needy families, the annual income level above which the tax credit will begin to decrease will be lowered from $26,330 to $23,500 for the 1986 fiscal year.

However, in cases where the inflation rate would be too high, the effective value of that tax benefit might decrease, as a result of a limited indexation. It is very important at this point to remind all Hon. Members that when tabling his budget last May, our able Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated, and I quote:

[English]

The Government will review the inadequacy of payments in light of future circumstances and will increase them as resources will permit

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if and when those increased opportunities materialize, I am confident, as I am aware of the Minister of Finance's social concerns, that available funds will be adequately channeled through a system of family tax benefits, based on an improved principle that will take into account not only the level of income but the social objective of providing more effective assistance, on the basis of actual need, to the families that are the most in need.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

EMPLOYMENT

IMPORTANCE OF SMALL- AND MEDIUM-SIZED BUSINESSES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I rejoice over the Canadian Federation of Independent Business announcement that 250,000 jobs will be created by Canadian small businesses in 1985.

The announcement is related to several factors. The number of new jobs might be three times as high had the Conservative Government completely abolished the capital gains tax, provided such gains would be invested in small- and medium-sized businesses.

The $500,000 exemption advocated by the Conservative Government will not channel investments towards job-creating small- and medium-sized businesses. The new owner of an apartment building does not create a single job, yet the seller is entitled to a tax exemption.

The odd job this Conservative measure might create will not be an adequate substitute for the thousands of other jobs we lose every day as a result of the Conservative Government's lack of leadership.

Montreal East is a telling example—5,000 jobs lost within a few days.

[English]

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I think I should draw the attention of the House to a wonderful letter that has come to me. The letter goes on for three pages about the terrible things which the Conservative Government has done, and, by golly, it is all true. Right here, you can see the letter has been signed by the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), the Leader of the Opposition. He is inviting me to join the Liberals. One of the reasons he said I should join is because the Tories have "saddled Canadians with a hodge-podge of backward sales taxes and surcharges likely to cost the typical Canadian family thousands of dollars over the years ahead".

But, wait a minute. Does my memory fail me, or was it the Liberals who brought in that sales tax increase in the first place? Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it was in Marc Lalonde's 1983 Budget that the Minister of Finance announced a "special recovery tax". The major effect of that 1 per cent sales tax increase, which the Conservatives opposed and then introduced last year, was to take a billion dollars out of the economy and slow down any recovery which might have provided jobs for Canadians.

Well, it seems the Liberals have seen a light on the road to Damascus, and are now writing to thousands of Canadians calling the sales tax increases backward.

The Leader of the Opposition writes a great letter. But perhaps, just perhaps, the next time he writes to Canadians he will be honest enough to point out that the programs he was criticizing were introduced first by Liberals.

Mr. Speaker: I must tell the Hon. Member that his time has expired. The Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier).

THE ECONOMY

IMPROVEMENT SINCE GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, over the 12-month period ended in September 1985, 304,000 more Canadians found gainful employment, and the unemployment rate dropped from 11.6 to 10.1 per cent during that time. The New Democratic Party does not even mention it.

The Bank of Canada prime rate decreased by 3.53 per cent since the election and now stands at 8.85 per cent, a seven-year low. Mortgage rates are down 2.5 per cent to the current level of 11.75 per cent. The Grits are tight-lipped about it.

Over the first seven months of 1985 the value of building permits rose by 17 per cent over the same period the year before. The New Democratic Party has nothing to say about that.

The 4 per cent inflation rate has remained practically unchanged for over a year. The Liberals are silent.

Over the first eight months of 1985 there were 13 per cent fewer bankruptcies as compared with the same period the year before. The Liberals have nothing to say.

S.O. 22

Last month's construction starts were 29 per cent higher than in September 1984. The New Democratic Party will not even acknowledge it.

Mr. Speaker, investors have regained confidence, consumer spending is up, prices have levelled off, manufacturers' orders are on the rise, and the performance of our economy puts us ahead of our American neighbours.

We will continue to work because we were elected to improve the living conditions of Canadians. We will let the Opposition talk about phoney scandals and patronage abuse, for that is their negative approach and they should know better.

STATUS OF WOMEN

RECIPIENTS OF PERSONS AWARDS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, today, on the occasion of Persons Day, tribute is said to the five Alberta women who led the fight for women's recognition as persons in 1929.

Last night six contemporary Canadian women, who have dedicated their lives to the ideals espoused by the Alberta five, were honoured at Rideau Hall as the recipients of this year's Persons Awards.

They are: Grace Hartman, a founding member of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women—Grace became the first woman president of a major Canadian union; Marguerite Bergeron-Tremblay, whose long-standing involvement in Le Cercle Des Fermières, La Fédération des Femmes du Québec, MATCH, and Amnesty International is evidence of her commitment to the betterment of women in Canada and around the world; Nazla Dane, a guiding force behind the Canadian Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs and its former president—Nazla was an early proponent of equal pay for work of equal value and of non-traditional careers for women; Gemma Pelletier Caron, long active in promoting the interests of Francophone women in New Brunswick, she founded La Fédération des Dames d'Acadie; Pearl Steen, who combined her involvement in the Vancouver community with 30 years of activity with the National Council of Women, including its national presidency; and Evelyn O'Bomaswin-Lamirance, a founding member and president of L'Association des Femmes Autochtones du Québec, who has worked tirelessly to promote the rights of native women.

These six remarkable Canadian women are worhty successors to the standard of strength and commitment set by Emily Murphy—

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Member that her time has expired. The Hon. Member for Outremont.

SOCIAL SECURITY

DEINDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, today on the anniversary of the Person Case, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the unconscionable manoeuvring by the Progressive Conservative Government against groups that are fighting de-indexation of family allowances.

Hearings by the Legislative Committee on Bill C-70 were to be held until November 22, but that has now been moved up to November 5. This is an obvious attempt to gag pressure groups by preventing them from coming or by limiting their preparation time.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the Legislative Committee is refusing to hear comments by a pan-Canadian coalition against de-indexation of family allowances, which has now been established. This coalition consists of more than 80 groups including women's groups, unions, catholic parents, people working in daycare centres, and so forth. The Legislative Committee is ignoring the coalition and trying to give it as little hearing as possible. It is true that the Progressive Conservative Government was put in a difficult position by the de-indexing of Old Age Security pensions, and the parallel with family allowances is so obvious that my hon. colleagues opposite are running scared.

Let there be no mistake: Canadian men and women are not at all pleased with the Conservative Government's social policies. Neither the elderly nor women nor families appreciate them.

WOMEN

STATUS OF WOMEN—SEARCH FOR EQUALITY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, 56 years ago, the Privy Council of Great Britain recognized Canadian women as persons. However, women have yet to achieve equality in Canada. There are still laws to be amended and programs to be set up before full equality of both sexes is achieved in our economy, in politics and the arts.

The courts have a role to play. Unfortunately, some judges are following the example of the Supreme Court of Canada which in 1929 decided that Canadian women were not persons. I am thinking of the discrimination against Justine Blainey, who was excluded from a hockey team, despite the support of her teammates and her coach, because an Ontario court decided that discrimination in sports was acceptable.

We are also seeing this year a loss of economic rights by women as a result of de-indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit. Equal sharing in pension benefits has yet to be achieved by women.

[English]

In short, for women to be fully and genuinely equal persons in Canada, we have much work yet to accomplish, and the work of this House must be a good part of it.

THE ECONOMY

GROWTH IN STRENGTH

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, the Economic Council of Canada sees good times ahead. The Canadian economy has been showing growing signs of strength since the election of the Progressive Conservative Government in September, 1984. Employment is up—304,000 new jobs have been created. Interest rates are down. Investor confidence is strengthening. Consumer spending is rising. Prices are stable. Bankruptcies are down. The Canadian economy is outperforming the American economy. Our Gross National Product is up 4.1 per cent. Unemployment is the lowest in many years; it is down to 10.1 per cent. Youth unemployment has fallen to 16.1 per cent. The Bank of Canada rate is down to 8.7 per cent. At the time of the election it was 12.7 per cent. It is at its lowest level in many years. Housing starts are up.

In general, the Government has created a climate of confidence in Canada because of such achievements as the Western Accord and the Atlantic Accord.

Mr. Skelly: What about the weather?

An Hon. Member: It is sunny.

Mr. Kindy: We in the Conservative Party have confidence in Canada.

WOMEN

FIGHT FOR EQUALITY—ROLE PLAYED BY CERTAIN CANADIAN WOMEN

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, on October 18, 1929, after a lengthy legal battle Canadian women were granted the status of "person". On the fifty-sixth anniversary of this event which marks a milestone in the struggle of women for equal rights and opportunities, we honour the memory of five Alberta women who presented a petition requesting those rights.

In the Person Case, they asked that Section 24 of the British North America Act be interpreted in such a way that the words "qualified Persons" would also apply to women. The implications of the decision were immense. In fact, without a favourable interpretation, women could not be called to the Senate and were thus prevented from participating fully in our parliamentary system of government.

The "famous five"—Emily Murphy, Nellie McClung, Louise McKinney, Irene Parlby and Henrietta Muir Edwards—took their case to the Supreme Court of Canada, expecting a favourable decision. Nine months later, the Supreme Court ruled against their petition, thus dashing their hopes.

However, the "famous five" were stubborn and decided to appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in London, the court of last resort for Canada at the time.

October 18, 1929 was a red-letter day for Canadian women. On that date, after four days of deliberations, the British Chancellor, Lord Sankey, declared that Section 24 included members of the male and female sex—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but her time has expired.

THE PRESS

ARTICLE'S DESCRIPTION OF EDMONTON CONDEMNED

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of all eastern Canadians to apologize to the people of Edmonton for the untrue, intemperate, and uncalled for description of their fair city as a "used building lot" in The New York Times.

As a new Member of Parliament I saw Edmonton for the first time last fall and was incredibly impressed, not only with the natural beauty of the city but also with the cosmopolitan flavour of a city that has managed a graceful combination of old and new.

As a Hamiltonian who often faces disparaging comments about my city from outsiders who have never taken up the challenge of visiting Hamilton, I want to say to the people of Edmonton that Mordecai Richler does not speak for eastern Canada.

Your city is a beautiful one and one that deserves applause, not derision.

This kind of internecine squabbling in The New York Times does nothing to enhance the interests of our great country as a whole, nor of beautiful cities like Edmonton.

Mayor Decore, hold your head high. As for The New York Times, we want equal time to tell the Americans "like it really is".

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL REVENUE

GULF TAKEOVER TAX RULING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I reflected on his replies to my questions about the Gulf Canada deal yesterday, and I am far from being convinced.

I ask him again to respond to my question, and it is this. The former Deputy Minister of Finance, Marshall Cohen, has said that the whole Gulf deal was discussed by the Priorities and Planning Committee, a committee presided over by the Prime Minister of Canada.

An integral part of that deal must have been the tax exemption of up to $1 billion. Obviously, that matter must have been discussed at the same time.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada really sticking to his position yesterday that the Prime Minister of this country, who presides over that committee, a committee which discussed the Gulf deal on several occasions, did not know of this $1 billion tax exemption?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, my response has to be the same as that given yesterday.

The right hon. gentleman used two phrases in his question which obviously constitute conclusions, and I am speaking of his use of the phrase "he must have known" and the phrase "it must have been a part of the discussions".

Those are conclusions that he reaches on the basis of a newspaper article. My answer of yesterday remains valid. In addition to that, he has the Prime Minister's own words at a press conference held last Friday.

[Translation]

REPORTED ALLEGATIONS OF FORMER DEPUTY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we also have the words of the former Deputy Minister of Finance.

It was not a matter of routine, as alleged by the Minister of Finance and the Deputy Prime Minister. It was an exemption, it was a tax ruling for one billion dollars. It is obvious from the comments of the former Deputy Minister of Finance—it was not an article but a special interview—that the matter was discussed in the Canadian Cabinet, presided over by the Prime Minister.

Is the Deputy Minister . . . the Deputy Prime Minister, repeating that neither the Minister of Finance, who is responsible for the country's tax system, nor the Prime Minister of Canada were aware of this one-billion-dollar exemption?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I answered the question yesterday as well, and I shall do so again.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows full well that it is totally improper for me to be discussing, in the House, discussions that take place in Cabinet, even to the extent of discussing what items may or may not be on the agenda. He knows that that is the practice.

He also knows that there is a process that is applicable within the Department of National Revenue with respect to the tax treatment of individuals, or firms, or corporations in situations such as this. He knows that there is a process by which advance rulings are given, and the appropriate Minister to report to the House with respect to that process is the Minister of National Revenue.

PREPARATION OF BUDGET—RETENTION OF FORMER DEPUTY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The Deputy Prime Minister is straining my faith in his words by suggesting to me that a $1 billion tax exemption was a routine matter, handled by the Department of National Revenue. That goes right beyond what the former Deputy Minister of Finance has said quite clearly in that article.

The question that I have for the Deputy Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, is: once the former Deputy Minister of Finance had approached the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance to tell them that he had received a job offer from a major Canadian company in the month of February, why was that—

Mr. Gormley: Is there a question here?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yes, there is. If you will hold on, you will get it.

An Hon. Member: We are waiting.

Mr. Gauthier: The $1 billion question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why did the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister retain that Deputy Minister for the preparation of a Budget, and for the preparation of a lot of tax measures affecting the oil and gas industry and other measures relating to that company? Why was that Deputy Minister retained for the preparation of a Budget after that information was given to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance?

• (1120)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the question is in two parts and I will answer both. With respect to the first part of the question concerning the allegation which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition insists upon making, the press conference of last Friday given by the Prime Minister put it in these words, and I am reading from a transcript of that press conference:

> I can only assume, because there was no involvement by me or anyone else nor would there be in a revenue ruling, that the officers of the Department of Revenue passed judgment on a given situation pursuant to legislation and regulations that have passed the House of Commons.

Even that transcripted verbatim record of the Prime Minister's words has not found its way accurately into the press accounts upon which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is basing his questions. He should take, his questions to the appropriate Department. He knows that as does his colleague who is here today and is interested in the matter.

With respect to the last part of the question concerning Mr. Cohen's continuation as Deputy Minister of Finance, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has press accounts of Mr. Cohen's explanation with respect to how he treated his offer of employment. I would suggest that if the right hon. gentleman has any charge to make against Mr. Cohen with respect to conflict of interest, he knows the process through which he should proceed in order to give any effect to that kind of charge.

STATEMENT MADE BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I think we are beginning to flush the truth out of hiding bit by bit.

Mr. Gormley: You deserve so much credit.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you. My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister of Finance told the House, as reported at page 7726 of Hansard, that the matter of the acquisition of Gulf Canada by O&Y was discussed, and was discussed at some length because of the importance of that deal. Judging from his earlier response, is the Deputy Prime Minister telling us that it was inappropriate for the Minister of Finance to be that forthcoming with the House yesterday? Is he saying that it was not discussed in P and P at all?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am simply telling the hon. gentleman, as he well knows, and as he would answer if he were answering questions on behalf of the Ministry of which he was at one time the Minister, that it is improper for a Minister of the Crown to discuss, in response to questions in or outside the House of Commons, the subject matter of discussions that occur in Cabinet committee or in Cabinet. The Hon. Member knows that.

AUTHORIZATION FOR ISSUING TAX RULING

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I would take it from that that the Deputy Prime Minister is telling us that the Minister of Finance was off base yesterday when he told us what was discussed in P and P. Quite beyond that, since the Deputy Prime Minister has quoted the Prime Minister's press conference, is he telling us that the management of the financial affairs of Canada have deteriorated to a point where the Minister of National Revenue can authorize a tax expenditure of $1 billion without any Cabinet input and without any input from P and P?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is simply trying to establish what he and the Leader of his Party failed to establish yesterday, and what the Leader of his Party has tried to establish again today. They are trying to get a member of the Government to (a), say there was a ruling, and (b), discuss the details of that ruling. As he knows, that is against the law. The law prevents that information from being disclosed. They both know that. There is a process which can be explored with the Minister of National Revenue. The reason they did not explore it yesterday or today is because they know full well what that process is, as they know full well that it is improper for me to answer in detail.

REVIEW OF TAX LEGISLATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. It concerns the latest boondoggle give-away to Gulf Oil. Once the ruling was made by the tax Department did the Minister of State for Finance or the Minister of Finance instruct their officials to look at the appropriateness of this specific tax legislation which allowed $1 billion to slip into the pockets of wealthy Canadians?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have indicated in the House many times that tax policy is always under review. We have produced a paper on corporate tax reform. We have changed the arrangements surrounding the SRDTs. It is an ongoing process.

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. In view of the fact that it was the Liberals who set this sumptuous table and the Tories who have served up this gourmet meal for Gulf Canada, can the Government tell ordinary Canadians, who would like to know, when this rip-off will come to an end?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think what the Hon. Member is ignoring in his whole line of questioning is what has been happening to the economy of Canada as a result of this Government's policies. The role of my colleague, the Minister of Finance, has led to the lowest inflation rate and the greatest increase in the number of jobs we have seen in the country in years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

CONTINUATION OF PRACTICE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. In view of the fact that Canadians and Parliament have no knowledge of how this deal was worked, can the Minister tell us whether this type of billion dollar give-away is going to go on and on and on?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it is going to go on and on and on, just as will the improvement in Canadian economic conditions.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Chairman of the Finance Committee with respect to the current business of his committee. Will he schedule meetings immediately to hear the Minister of Finance and other relevant Ministers and officials on the Olympia & York-Gulf tax deal in the context of studying the many documents tabled in the House and, therefore, permanently referred to his committee for consideration? I ask this question in view of the fact that he expressed his interest in holding such hearings in a television interview yesterday.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I would be delighted to call a meeting of the steering committee of the Finance Committee after we complete our current concerns with the Green Paper.

I might say in passing that it would be good to have the finance critic of the Liberal Party at a steering committee meeting.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Once in a while.

Mr. Blenkarn: Indeed, it would be good to have Liberal Party members in attendance at meetings more often.

I would be delighted to look into the matter along with the other many matters which are permanently referred to the committee.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Chairman for his forthright answer. His ministerial colleagues could learn something from him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT STEERING COMMITTEE BE CONVENED

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Chairman of the Finance Committee if he will undertake to call a steering committee meeting next week in order to schedule the hearings in question to take place within the next 10 days. I can assure him that if he does that there will be Liberals at the steering committee meeting, and certainly at the committee hearings.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to do that. Indeed, I will be meeting with the Finance Committee on Tuesday for a meeting which has been called for 9.30, again at 3.30, and again at 8.00 p.m. It will probably meet on Wednesday afternoon for the whole afternoon, and Wednesday evening, perhaps for the whole evening. We will get together. I am sure that the Liberal finance critic and the New Democratic Party finance critic can get together with the other members of the steering committee and myself and we can come up with a new proposal—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Blenkarn: I would certainly hope that I will have the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was afraid that answer might go on as long as the meetings.

• (1130)

REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE AMENDED

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. It is not her responsibility that we have a tax system which is riddled with loopholes for large corporations to make these rip-offs of the ordinary taxpayer. But is the Minister prepared here in the House today to make a commitment to the Canadian people that this kind of escape hatch for large corporations and wealthy people will be closed, in order to prevent this kind of thing in the future?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered this question before. The commitment of this Government is to create jobs in this country and to create growth in future economic conditions. If my friend had read the report today of the Economic Council of Canada, he would have seen that the projections under this Government over the next two or three years are better than they have been in a decade.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, clearly the Minister has had too much practice in not answering questions in the bank debate.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Let me ask the Minister again if she really believes that the continued existence of this kind of law, which permits $1 billion in tax revenue to escape from the Canadian people, makes sense to the ordinary person in this country? Or is it not simply a rip-off for the corporate sector which is impossible to justify?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, what I believe is that this Government is committed to creating jobs. We have done that and will continue to do so throughout the economic and financial policies we have introduced. I think that that is what the Canadian people want from us. They want jobs and they want growth.

EMPLOYMENT

LOSS OF JOBS IN MONTREAL EAST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is becoming increasingly obvious that the Minister has no specific plans for stopping the massive loss of jobs in Montreal. Two days ago, she misled the House about the unemployment statistics for Montreal, and yesterday, she tried to reassure Montreal workers by claiming that her temporary job creation and retraining programs, which were announced in June, would be sufficient to stop the massive loss of jobs in their city.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister to be perfectly frank and admit to the House that the amounts to which she referred yesterday will be utterly useless in preventing the massive loss of jobs in Montreal East, a subject that has been raised in the House for many days.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, our concern is for the people who are unemployed or who are threatened with job loss. I mentioned yesterday that we would be spending some $200 million in the region of Montreal to provide people with training and with job opportunities so that they can be at work in the future. That amount is an increase over the amount which was spent last year. Whether or not it will be sufficient, we will see as the year goes on. Certainly, under the new Canadian Jobs Strategy there is a flexibility to look at the projects as they come forward to see whether or not they are sufficient, and to adjust them accordingly. That is what we will be doing, Mr. Speaker, so that the individuals concerned are given every possible opportunity.

[Translation]

NEED FOR CREATION OF FULL-TIME JOBS IN MONTREAL

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

This clever verbiage is all very interesting, but the Minister is refraining from any confirmation of what we would like to hear, namely that these programs will contain some specific mechanisms to prevent the loss of jobs at Bombardier, 1,000 jobs at Vickers and losses at several other companies that are part of the industrial base of Montreal and which we have mentioned.

Why does the Minister keep on proposing temporary jobs, which will only reinforce the trend we see in the statistics and which are utterly useless to the thousands of people who are going to lose their jobs very shortly unless this Government wakes up?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in the last five years there were some 225 plant closings in Canada. That is a tragedy because it affected thousands of people who lost jobs. We don't want to see that continue. No matter where it is, in Montreal, in Newfoundland, in British Columbia or in northern Ontario, we don't want to see that continue. As a result, the training and job creation programs we have introduced are training people, not for further employment but for continuing employment. That applies to all of those people who live in the area of Montreal East, as it applies to people in other parts of the country. That is our concern, and that is what we will be devoting our time and attention to achieve.

STATUS OF WOMEN

APPOINTEE TO ADVISORY COUNCIL

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the status of women. Recently the Minister appointed the Vice-President of Public Relations of the Toronto Dominion Bank to the Board of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women. In view of the fact that banks are among the worst employers of women in Canada and are denying women their right under the Canada Labour Code to collective bargaining, what possible justification can the Minister have for appointing a senior member of the banking fraternity to be an advocate for women's rights on the Advisory Council?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration) and Minister Responsible for the Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that appointees to the Advisory Council not only come from backgrounds which are of concern to women—and access in this area, as the Hon. Member rightly points out, is a matter of concern—but the Advisory Council, as the Hon. Member knows, is made up of people with a wide section of career backgrounds across the country. The background and experience of that mix will be valuable. I believe it will be a two-way experience within the Advisory Council.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I don't really think the Advisory Council needs to have people who will require treatment experience.

BANK'S TREATMENT OF FEMALE EMPLOYEES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Is the Minister aware that the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce in a labour dispute at the VISA Centre has offered women bank workers no wage increases, reduced hours of work, no part-time benefits, no protection from technological change, and no grievance procedures? Will the Minister undertake to meet with these VISA workers as soon as possible so that they may pass on their concerns?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration) and Minister Responsible for the Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate, as the Hon. Member knows, that one of the reasons we have introduced the employment equity package, for which we are seeking support from all sides of the House, is for the very reason she raises. I will look forward to the Hon. Member's support to ensure that we bring this important legislation before the House.

PATENTS

IMPORTANCE OF UNIVERSITIES' CONTRIBUTION TO PHARMACEUTICAL DISCOVERIES

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

The recommendations contained in the report of the Eastman Commission on the pharmaceutical industry failed to deal with the role of our universities in the manufacture of products.

Could the Minister assure the House that the present review of the Patent Act will recognize the fundamental contribution of the universities in the area of pharmaceutical discoveries?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, since the tabling of the Eastman report, we have received of course many representations from various universities and our officials are compiling their concerns and views on a continuing basis.

I can assure my colleague that those views will be taken into consideration when we start drawing up our policy for the review of the Patent Act, especially as far as the pharmaceutical industry is concerned.

MINORITIES

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PRESENT REPORT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Secretary of State, but in his absence I will direct it to the Acting Minister.

A few years ago the Secretary of State sponsored a study on the situation of linguistic minorities in Canada—at my request, I might add. People in every Canadian province were asked about the situation of minority groups with respect to education as well as access to the courts and Government services. In a speech delivered last May 10 the then Secretary of State announced or stated that the study of Professor Pierre Boucher was complete.

Considering the priority of the case of minorities and the fact that the capital city of Ottawa is today the site of a conference on the theme "Minorities, the time for solutions", can the Minister comment on this and even table the report for everyone to read?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State is absent and I should think he is attending the conference mentioned by the Hon. Member. I take note of the question and I am sure he will provide a complete answer upon his return. I know he is extremely interested in this matter and that the report is under active consideration by the Secretary of State.

BUDGET INCREASES FOR OFFICIAL LANGUAGES GROUPS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Given the priority of the matter and the Minister's interest, would she confirm that the Foucher report recommends an increase in the budget of official languages minority groups so they will be in a better position to defend their rights in the provinces?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I did not have an opportunity to delve into this file. I take note of the question and I am sure the Secretary of State will answer the Hon. Member as soon as possible.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROMOTION OF PEACE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence.

As the Minister is aware, many thousands of Quebecers will walk Saturday through the streets of Quebec City, Montreal, Rimouski, Baie Comeau, Rouyn, Hull, Sherbrooke, Trois-Rivières and Chicoutimi, and will ask that the Government of Canada allocate the cost of one F-18 fighter, or $62 million, to the Peace Movement in order to further the cause of peace through international aid and reconversion projects.

Can the Minister today assure this House that he will be sympathetic to such a daring project in favour of peace?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Defence is charged with maintaining sufficient military forces and equipment to meet our obligations to NATO and NORAD. We are fulfilling that responsibility to the best of our abilities, and will continue to do so.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

AMENDMENTS REQUESTED

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The Young Offenders Act was a major change in the juvenile justice system but, inevitably, the need for some legislative amendments has arisen. Will the Minister bring forward the necessary amendments to make that law effective, or is he content to allow it to become a political football by not responding to the changes that are needed?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I may have missed something, but was the hon. gentleman who posed the question not the Solicitor General? If he thought there were problems with the Act, why did he not amend the Act while he was Solicitor General?

The answer to his question is certainly yes, where there are problems in the Act I intend to amend it. In the meantime I intend to hold full consultations with professionals who are involved in the field and with the provinces to ensure that when we bring a package forward it will be a comprehensive one which meets the needs of Canadians.

REQUEST FOR EARLY INTRODUCTION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, while I agree that it might be desirable to have discussions that lead to comprehensive amendments being brought forward, some of the changes that are required are now the subject of a consensus among Attorneys General of the provinces and the Ministers knows that. Why will he not at least bring forward—

Mr. Crosbie: You didn't listen to them.

Mr. Kaplan: —the minimum number of changes which have emerged as being necessary now that the law is in effect, in order to make that law work and avoid it becoming the political football which it seems it is becoming due to his inaction and failure to bring in amendments?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if there is a Solicitor General who is starting to listen to the provinces, that is certainly something new since the retirement of the hon. gentleman who has posed the question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I fully intend to have consultations with the provinces and with people in the private sector who are involved in the treatment field for young offenders, and with the police and others. I think it would be worth while to ensure that when we bring a package forward it is comprehensive and deals with all of the problems in order to ensure that we do not nickel and dime the Act to death with a series of ill thought out amendments. One commitment that I certainly do make is that, unlike the hon. gentleman during his tenure as Solicitor General, I intend to listen and to consult.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PEACE

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET MOVEMENT FOR PEACE REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, since both our Ministers responsible for External Affairs are on duty elsewhere, and since I have a supplementary to the question put by the Hon. Member for Spadina, perhaps I could direct mine to the Deputy Prime Minister.

In view of the obvious importance of promoting peace through all possible means, will he recommend to his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to at least meet with the representatives of the Peace Movement, Mrs. Claire Bonenfant, Mrs. Francine Fournier and Bishop Adolphe Proulx?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly bring the suggestion made by the Hon. Member to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he returns. I would draw his attention, however, to the fact that was only very recently that the Prime Minister met personally with members of the peace movement here in Ottawa.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PLIGHT OF UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I had originally planned to ask a question about the unemployment problems faced by the fishermen in Newfoundland who have not worked enough this year. However, I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. In answer to the Member for Essex-Windsor she said that she can find more billions of dollars as the economy improves. Why can the Government not find more billions of dollars for workers who are unemployed? Why can those fishermen not get jobs? Why are there bank bail-outs, tax write-offs, et cetera? Why are there not jobs?

Mr. Crosbie: Sit down, you nitwit.

Miss MacDonald: Why don't you ask me about that?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am truly amazed that members of the Official Opposition and the NDP are not joining the Economic Council of Canada in congratulating the Minister of Finance on his Budget, and are not telling the people of this country about the growth predictions of the Economic Council of Canada which call for consistent growth over the next decade, which means jobs for Canadians. The Economic Council of Canada is looking for a lower unemployment rate than we have had in years—well below what it is now. That is its forecast, not mine. Aren't you listening?

GOVERNMENT PRIORITIES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would rather listen to the workers in Thompson who were told yesterday that they will be losing jobs. I would rather listen to the fishermen who cannot get money from the Government.

Mr. Crosbie: Order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Murphy: Where are the Government's priorities? Why is it not looking after those people instead of bailing out the banks and giving tax write-offs, costing $1 billion, to corporations?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the jobs that have been created have been created consistently by this Government over the past year by working with the private sector and taking fiscal responsibility. Read the report of the Economic Council of Canada. The rate of job growth is going to continue, Mr. Speaker.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

REQUEST FOR PROGRAM TO UPGRADE LOCKS

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Transport. The failure of Lock 7 on the Welland Canal in the City of Thorold in my riding of Welland has caused substantial financial loss to the Seaway and the users of it. Would the Minister consider an early implementation of a program of upgrading the lock system, such as the super lock proposal of 1973, for which land has already been expropriated or, as an alternative, the construction of the twinning of Lock 7 in the City of Thorold and Lock 1 in the City of St. Catharines?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question. He will surely appreciate the fact that it is important for us to determine the cause of the blow-out problem that we have in the St. Lawrence Seaway, and only then to take the appropriate measures. We are obviously very concerned about the present situation. We want our system to remain as efficient as possible in order that we may continue to enjoy the high quality of service we have had in the St. Lawrence Seaway for 25 years.

THE ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and is with regard to political patronage.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: In its first year in office the Government has appointed one person every three hours, 24 hours a day.

Mr. Gormley: Which flight are you on this week?

Mr. Boudria: The same flight as Bob Coates. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us when he intends to reform the institution of patronage as was announced by the Prime Minister on September 9? In the last 10 days there have been 145 appointments, which is one appointment every two hours instead of one every three hours. Where is the reform from the Government?

Mr. Rodriguez: Look who's talking.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to welcome the Hon. Member back—

Mr. Boudria: I'm glad to be back. I missed you.

Mr. Nielsen: —to Canada after his exotic journeys. I would like to draw his attention to the fact that, if my recollection is correct, there are some 2,600 GIC appointments made every year. It is a simple matter of mathematics to figure out how many appointments were made in the 20 years that the Party which he supports was in Government.

• (1150)

Half of the population are probably Conservative, and the other half have other political allegiances. If the Hon. Member were doing his job properly, instead of whining about appointments that are made he would be making recommendations to the Government with respect to those whom he would like to see appointed to these various agencies.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE CERTAIN APPOINTMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

The Prime Minister said in his statement of September 9 that he would immediately choose, through the Government Leader in the House, to establish a scrutiny committee for Governor in Council appointments. One and a half months have elapsed since he said that. Could he tell us when the committee will be appointed to scrutinize those Conservative nominations?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to answer the Hon. Member? As he knows, only last week I made the response on behalf of the Government with respect to the whole question of scrutiny of appointments made by the Government. It was a rather exciting and dramatic initiative as well.

I want to tell the Hon. Member that we have gone further than the recommendations on reform made by the distinguished committee of the House of Commons. We will allow for the provision for scrutiny of all Order in Council appointments. There is no restriction. If only we had this provision during the Liberal years, just imagine what fun we could have had in the Opposition.

COPYRIGHT

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications. He will know that the arts community is anxiously awaiting implementation of a large number of recommendations in the report on copyright revision. Will the Parliamentary Secretary give the Government's assurance that there will be legislation before the House by February, as promised?

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. lady for her question. The report on copyright, which reflects the recommendations made by the Subcommittee on Revision of Copyright, of which the hon. lady was a member, will be made available to the Government.

The Government will give those 137 recommendations its consideration. At the appropriate time the Government will introduce legislation. I hope that legislation could be introduced in the House of Commons, subject to negotiations with the House Leaders of other Parties, at the earliest possible moment.

ARTS FUNDING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, would the Parliamentary Secretary give the assurance that there will be a restoration in the cut-backs to art funding before there will be any new outflow of funds as a result of the recommendations of the Subcommittee on Revision of Copyright?

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. lady will realize that this is a matter of Government policy. The Acting Minister of Communications will be in the House next week and I will be happy to draw his attention to the Hon. Member's question.

STATUS OF WOMEN

METHODS OF CONTRACEPTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for the Status of Women. Last September, we learned that CIDA was providing half a million dollars to the International Federation for Family Life Promotion. The purpose of this organization is to provide services in natural family planning to developing countries. Why did the Government choose to support the least effective method of contraception for the women of the Third World? Does this reflect an ideological preference of the Government for natural contraception rather than for other means of contraception?

[English]

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know, one of the priorities of the Government and CIDA is women in development projects. My colleague, the Minister for External Relations, who has the responsibility for CIDA, is not in the House. However, I will take notice of the Hon. Member's question and see that she gets a response.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT DOES NOT LEAVE CHOICE TO WOMEN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary was going to be addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but I shall also ask it to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. I would like to know why the Minister and the Government have reduced the budgets of organizations which promote all methods of contraception in Canada, such as Planned Parenthood, and why they have increased the amounts allocated to organizations which favour natural means of contraception. Why does the Conservative Government not leave it up to women to choose their own methods of contraception and why does it subsidize mostly the organizations which favour natural methods?

[English]

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member and indicate that this matter has been brought to my attention. I have raised the matter with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, including the concerns expressed by women's groups and other concerned citizens across the country. Once again, I will see that the Hon. Member's question is brought to the attention of my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

NATIONAL REVENUE

USE MADE OF SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH TAX CREDIT

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Last spring the Deputy Minister of National Revenue confirmed the scandalous abuse of the Scientific Research Tax Credit initiated by the previous Government. I have been advised that this $200 million program may now cost the taxpayers of Canada $3 billion.

Will the Minister advise the House if $2.8 billion overspending estimate is accurate? Furthermore, what is the status of the investigation of one of the largest Liberal scandals in the history of that Government?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague has pointed out, this Scientific Research Tax Credit was introduced by the previous Government. We acted to put an end to this particular drain on the Treasury. The losses have been substantial, but it is premature at this stage to give an exact amount.

I can assure the House and the Hon. Member that my officials are closely monitoring the Scientific Research Tax Credit program and its aftermath. In due course the results will be reported to the appropriate committee.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

SIZE OF DEPARTMENTAL BUDGET

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Science and Technology and of the President of the Treasury Board, I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Much important work of the Science Council of Canada was cancelled when its budget was cut in half by the Government. The Treasury Board has refused to confirm that the budget of the Ministry of State for Science and Technology has been increased by the same amount that was cut from the Science Council of Canada—some $2.5 million, or 38 person years. Will the Minister confirm whether such an increase, or indeed any increase, in the budget of the Ministry of State for Science and Technology has been approved by the Government?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that kind of specific and detailed information is normally requested on the Order Paper. However, I seem to recall that the Minister of State for Science and Technology has answered that question in the House before. If it is not satisfactory to the Hon. Member, he could raise it in the Adjournment Debate.

In the meantime, I will take notice of his question and ensure that the Minister is made aware of it when he returns.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, how can the Deputy Prime Minister justify raping a consultative body like the Science Council of Canada while bloating the Government's bureaucracy at a time of restraint? How can he justify such a power grab by the Minister?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the question is designed on a basic assumption that is false. The short answer is that I cannot condone his use of the term "rape" in any way, shape, or form.

FINANCE

REFORM OF TAX SYSTEM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Given the large holes in the tax system that permitted nearly $3 billion in research and development tax avoidance in the previous Liberal Budget, and given the $1 billion tax that has been avoided during the Gulf takeover, why has the Government not given higher priority to reform of the Canadian tax system?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this is the first Government in years that has made any real commitment to tax reform. This is the Government that brought the SRTC'S under control; this is the Government that is producing a minimum tax, and this is the Government that is undertaking corporate tax reform. Considering what we have done in a year, what has been happening for the last 25 years?

CORPORATE TAX REFORM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I could point out to the Minister that something over $4 billion has been lost in the last year and a half, during the period that the Government was in charge. Why has the reform on corporate tax not come much quicker? Why were there not stop-gap measures put in place?

• (1200)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this Government has moved consistently on tax policy, and we have made a number of changes. We will continue to do this, as I have indicated to prior questioners.

Mr. Althouse: Such as?

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by Hon. Members on Thursday, October 17, 1985 meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

STATUS OF WOMEN

WOMEN'S ACHIEVEMENTS—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF STATE (IMMIGRATION)

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join with Members of the House on behalf of the Government to pay tribute to five Canadian women, Nellie McClung, Emily Murphy, Louise McKinney, Irene Parlby and Henrietta Muir Edwards.

It was through their strength of will in challenging an interpretation of the British North America Act that 56 years ago today Canadian women were recognized as persons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McLean: As a result, women gained the right to be appointed to the Senate and thus to participate fully in our parliamentary system of Government.

[Translation]

Today, eleven women sit in the Senate, twenty-seven are Members of the House, including six Ministers, and our Head of State is a woman.

[English]

But women's representation in Government is only one measure of what Canadian women have achieved, Mr. Speaker.

Women have proven their ability, commitment and stamina in every field of endeavour, in industry, the professions, the public sector, the arts, academia, in community work and the voluntary sector.

In business, women are making significant inroads. Women now make up 30 per cent of business owners in Canada, a growth of more than 20 per cent since the mid-1960s. I was particularly heartened by the results of a recent Canadian Federation of Independent Business survey, which showed that 42.6 per cent of women employed by Canadian small businesses hold management positions.

But women's struggle for equality is far from over. Women cannot be truly equal if the employer they approach for a job, or the bank manager they ask for a loan, or the coach of their child's hockey team possesses outdated notions of what women can do or, what is worse, what women should or should not do. Women cannot be equal while their career potential is hindered by the lack of affordable quality daycare and if in their older years they are dogged by the insecurity of an inadequate pension system. They cannot aspire to equality if they are left by men to battle for their rights by themselves.

My Government will not leave women to struggle alone. We have made a commitment to integrate women's concerns in all aspects of our policy formulation. We need only look to the two major economic conferences held earlier this year—the First Minister's Conference in February and the National Economic Summit in March—to see evidence of this commitment. For the first time ever, the special concerns of women received full prominence at the discussion table.

Since then, Mr. Speaker, we have undertaken an active program of legislative and policy changes. Our employment equity legislation is leading the way to improve the status of women in the workplace. We have focused on the needs of women in the redesign of our job creation and training programs. We have improved pensions for women to make them more equitable. We have outlawed the discriminatory aspects of the Indian Act, making it possible for 16,000 native women to regain band membership and status.

[Translation]

In the coming months we will deal with other problems of direct interest to women, among them the need to continue our concerted efforts to help women who are victims of family violence.

[English]

In these and many other areas, we are showing strong evidence of our commitment to the goal of full equality for women. This year marks the culmination of the United Nations Decade For Women dedicated to equality, development and peace. As a result of the activities of the last 10 years, there is now a much greater awareness of women's situations, greater advocacy of their rights and greater understanding of their contributions and concerns in Canada and in the rest of the world. The decade has firmly demonstrated that the integration of women in all aspects of society is essential, both for the advancement of women themselves and for the development of society as a whole.

We are now about to embark on the implementation of one of the most significant legacies of the decade for women, the forward-looking strategies that came out of that decade. These strategies, as Members of the House will know, were adopted at the United Nations World Conference on Women in Nairobi three months ago by an unprecedented consensus, a consensus that had eluded the two previous conferences in Mexico City and Copenhagen.

With the forward-looking strategies, all member states of the United Nations have, for the first time in history, pledged themselves to implement a set of strategies designed to enable women to participate fully in all aspects of society. They are, in effect, a blueprint for progress on women's issues for the rest of this century. The strategies are a tool women can use to encourage and indeed, I would suggest, demand Government action on their behalf.

It was my honour, Mr. Speaker, to lead the Canadian delegation at the World Conference on Women in Nairobi last July. I was pleased to have on the delegation representatives from a broad range of groups involved in the status of women, federal, provincial and territorial Ministers, Members of this House from all Parties, representatives of non-governmental women's groups and federal Government officials. I believe Canada played a key role both at the Nairobi Conference and in the crucial preparatory period preceding it. I think we can take credit as a nation, as a Parliament and as Canadians because, in addition to being heavily involved in drafting strategies, Canada proposed several key resolutions, including a precedent-setting resolution supporting the rights of indigenous women.

As well, Canada was the lead country in calling for a precedent-setting meeting of Commonwealth Ministers for women's affairs. This meeting took place just prior to the Nairobi Conference. It was once again an opportunity for preparatory work for the present meetings going on between heads of Commonwealth Governments.

Now as we begin to implement the forward-looking strategies within Canada, we must continue to increase the efforts we have already begun in a number of areas. As a first step, I am working with my Cabinet colleagues to discuss how the strategies can be implemented within each of their areas of responsibility. As well, yesterday I convened a special meeting of provincial and territorial Ministers responsible for the Status of Women. Our discussions focused on ways in which the forward looking strategies apply within each of the jurisdictions within our nation. I will distribute this document widely, especially to women's groups. Indeed, I would suggest that the Nairobi strategies are required reading for all women and men who believe in Canada's future.

These forward-looking strategies need some interpretation. They comprise over 370 paragraphs divided into five broad sections dealing with equality, development, peace, areas of concerns and international and regional co-operation. Each section identifies obstacles to progress, basic strategies to overcome those obstacles and a range of measures for the implementation of basic strategies, many in areas not traditionally considered as women's issues. For example, in areas of energy, environment and transportation.

Some of the concrete measures proposed in this broad, global, forward-looking strategy, in the document from the World Government meeting to Governments, call for things which are close to home to Canadians. For example, I think of the resolution for an assessment of the impact of economic development policies on women, of the elimination of sexual harassment in the workplace, of the measures to reduce negative effects of technological change on women, of the health care which is accessible and available to women, of the increased attention to the need for girls and women to receive education in science and technology, of the integration of women's needs and views in the design and planning of homes and communities, and of the promotion of women's roles as owners and operators of transportation. The list goes on. Far from being some kind of esoteric, international statement, it comes directly into the lives of Canadians and of Canadian women.

My Government is firmly convinced that women's concerns must be integrated in all of our ongoing policy work in order to remove or reduce any impact on men and women before decisions are made. In putting the forward-looking strategies into practice in Canada, our initial emphasis will be on the continuation of our economic integration strategy for women.

[Translation]

This strategy was the mainstay of the commitments we made in the Speech from the Throne. Through legislation and by setting an example we have already begun to meet these commitments.

[English]

Last night, we honoured six Canadian women at the seventh annual Persons Awards Ceremony—Grace Hartman, Marguerite Bergeron-Tremblay, Nazla Dane, Evelyn O'Bomsawin-Lamirande, Gemma Pelletier Caron and Pearl Steen. All these women have had long histories of involvement in activities to improve the status of women within their own communities and across Canada. Their actions echo Nellie McClung's vision of women's role, as she expressed it in 1910, when she said:

> Women set the standards for the world, and it is for the women of Canada to set the standards high.

As elected representatives, we have a responsibility to create the conditions which will enable Canadian women, on an equal basis with men, to pursue their ambitions, realize their potential and discharge their full responsibilities in all spheres of society. I invite colleagues in the House to join with us in this high purpose.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to pay tribute to some of the winners of the Persons Awards for 1985. After 50 years of oblivion, this award is now being given in recognition of extraordinary contributions to the quality of life of women in Canada.

Marguerite Bergeron-Tremblay and Evelyn O'Bomsawin-Lamirande are honouring us today with their presence in the gallery.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Pépin: Mrs. Bergeron-Tremblay is a militant of long standing and has been active in the Lac-Saint-Jean area. She has worked with the Cercle des Fermières and the Fédération des Femmes du Québec, to name just a few.

Mrs. O'Bomsawin-Lamirande has worked unstintingly for the cause of native women. She was among those who fought for the repeal of discriminatory provisions in the Indian Act.

An award also went to Grace Harman, who has worked for women in the labour movement, not a traditional area for women to be active in! Mrs. Hartman has been President of the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

Emma Pelletier-Caron, who also received an award, has been involved in many community actions in Acadia and collaborated on a collection of biographical sketches of 100 exceptional Acadian women.

Finally, Pearl Steen took up the cause of pushing for legislative change to improve the status of women. Mrs. Steen has been President of the Council of Women, among other duties.

Mr. Speaker, I find it significant that a decision was made to give the Persons Award to five women instead of just one. We must remember that in the twenties, five women protested the fact that they were not persons before the law. As was said earlier by the Minister responsible for the Status of Women (Mr. McLean), that meant they could not become lawyers or judges or sit in the Senate.

Today, 50 years later, we should not only take a lesson from the courage and perseverance of Emily Murphy and her four companions, but we should also realize the importance of joint action in the struggle for women's rights.

The women of the Eighties have understood this very well. The women's movement has made great progress in 15 years, and although today's movement is not as noisy as the movement of the Sixties and Seventies, the fact remains that it is very effective. The progress made by the movement is irreversible, and those who see it only as a passing fad should think again.

Today I would like to point out some of the causes being championed by the women's movement. Despite the good faith expressed a few minutes ago by the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, I believe the Conservative Government should not be too quick to brag about being on the side of women. The employment equity legislation introduced by the government does not satisfy Canadian women at all. As a matter of fact, it does not satisfy either the handicapped, the natives and the visible minorities, the other three target groups which it was meant to help.

Bill C-62 does not provide for any employment equity program which would be compulsory, although all similar programs on a voluntary basis have proven ineffective time and again. Only compulsory programs are likely to succeed, something of which Canadians women are wearing themselves out trying to convince a Government which will not listen.

Canadian women are also waiting anxiously for the Katie Cooke Task Force's report on day care centers. I am aware that the Prime Minister promised quite recently to set up another task force to study the day care center situation. But why reinvent the wheel? Why not use instead Mrs. Cooke's report, her findings, the many briefs which were submitted to her as well as the many research papers on which the report was based.

As for prostitution, all the Government could introduce was tiny Bill C-49, dealing with soliciting, when what women really needed was a complete reform. I am not the only one to say so, Mr. Speaker, for the Fraser Commission has concluded likewise.

On September 25, the Conservative Government announced a new and expanded litigant assistance program to help people who want to institute proceedings under Sections 15, 28 and 29 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. But instead of distributing the funds among the various organizations representing Canadian women, the native, the handicapped and the visible minorities, it gave all the money to the Canadian Council on Social Development.

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing against the Canadian Social Development Council, but we have to be realistic. Funds are allocated on a case by case basis and the same battles will be fought twice, which will mean a waste of money and energies, and this is not what women wanted. If the Conservative Government had put aside part of this amount for the women's legal action and education fund, some kind of action plan could have been developed for women, but perhaps the Government is somewhat afraid of organized women's movements.

Today, the Minister responsible for the Status of Women has lauded the organized action of women 50 years ago, but it is different when comes the time to recognize in practice the organized action of women today and provide assistance for the battles they are fighting now.

I would like to speak about the fight of Canadian women against the deindexing of family allowances, Mr. Speaker. The Government is attacking family allowances and we have to realize that this is the only check received by a great many Canadian women, namely all those who stay at home to take care of their children. Is this the message of the Conservative Government to Canadian families, that it wants to make the task of raising children even more difficult than it is?

I hope that the Conservative Government will realize in time the mistake it is making by cancelling the full indexation of family allowances in the years to come.

In closing, I would like to point out that today's women have different objectives than those of their sisters of the twenties, but that their battles are just as urgent.

Women in the eighties must effect a major restructuring of the labour market and the family. This must be done on a collective, not an individual basis.

The real battles to be fought are those which will guarantee the economic survival of women and which concern daycare services, part-time work and parental leave.

I invite the Conservative Government and all the Members of this House to reflect on this and to support this fight as it will make the lives of each one of us better.

● (1220)

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, we in the New Demoratic Party join in the tribute to the outstanding Canadian women who pioneered the fight for equality and who won the right for us to be recognized as persons 56 years ago.

We warmly congratulate the women who received Persons Awards last night on behalf of many Canadian women. In particular, we congratulate Grace Hartman, Marguerite Bergeron-Tremblay, Nazla Dane, Evelyn O'Bomsawin-Lamirande, Gemma Pelletier-Caron and Pearl Steen.

Women continue to struggle for a better life for themselves, for their sisters, and for their daughters. We have learned that change will not come as a gift. We must continue to speak out against injustices, demand equal opportunities, and organize so that many voices will be heard.

Canada did play an important role at the UN Decade of Women Conference held in Nairobi, where forward-looking strategies were adopted to guide us to the year 2000.

Women in Canada cannot achieve equality in a vacuum. We must join with our sisters and brothers around the world to achieve equality, peace, and development.

But the starting place to achieve these goals is right here at home. We have now achieved a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but now text cases must be litigated. Women are disappointed that the Government has ignored their requests for direct financing for Charter litigation cases. This funding is essential to ensure independent selection and timing and to win these test cases on behalf of women generally.

Economic equality is basic to the resolution of all inequalities facing women. Feminization of poverty has escalated; older women are destitute. And the Government's answer is to cut the indexation of social benefits, and in particular the indexation of family allowances.

Some Hon. Members: Shameful; shameful!

Ms. Mitchell: Canadian women still earn only 60 per cent of the salaries of men. They carry double burdens at home and in the workplace. They work primarily in underpaid job ghettos and are now being forced more and more into part-time jobs.

Regrettably, the Government has ignored many of the recommendations of the Abella Commission, which proposed mandatory employment equity in the federal sector. Voluntary programs with no enforcement mechanisms will not achieve the reforms which women demand as their right.

To achieve equal opportunities in the workplace, women also must have accessible and affordable daycare. We look forward to early and positive action in this area, as was promised by the Progressive Conservative Government.

Mr. Speaker, the Nairobi experience reminded us that practical development programs operated by and for women are essential, both here at home and in developing countries. Poor women, immigrant women, farm women, northern women and battered women must have access to resources and mutual help if they are to overcome the difficult burdens that they carry.

Madam Margaretta Papandreou, who headed the Greek delegation in Nairobi, moved us all when she said:

> We women are a rising force in society. We must fill the ranks of the worldwide mass peace movement and we must at the same time move into the centres of decision-making where our voices, where our insticts for protecting life, where our concern for human rights can become the dominant forces in affecting the future of the planet and the future of humanity.

Mr. Speaker, the women of Canada are not merely persons. We are people with passion, pride and increasing power to work for a better world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS

CHANGES TO FAMILY ALLOWANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which follows appropriately on the comments just made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). It is the petition of 306 people in Essex county and Windsor, from the following communities: Windsor, Amherstburg, Oldcastle, Tecumseh, Essex, Woodslee, Cottam, Belle River, Kingsville, Maidstone, Leamington, Emeryville, Lasalle, Puce, McGregor, Ruthven, St. Clair Beach, and Harrow.

In each case, the petitioners are conveying their stern sense of opposition to the changes being undertaken by this Government to the Family Allowance Program. They are putting in a call for tax fairness as an alternative.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my petition is also very appropriate on this day, Persons Day. it relates to family allowances. In their petition the people say that the cut-back in family allowances and the tax increases are inequitable and unbearable in the face of budget hand-outs such as a half a million dollars in tax-free capital gains, greater RRSP deductions for high-income recipients, billions of dollars in hand-outs to the oil companies, and a $1 billion bail-out of the banks.

Mr. Speaker, the people presenting this petition humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate the full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Mr. Speaker, this is obviously something that should be done on Persons Day.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from Canadians in the Vancouver area calling on the Government to rescind the deindexation proposals for family allowances. They call for the cut-back in family allowance and other benefits, which will amount to some $600 million by 1990, to be reversed.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of people in Vancouver and Burnaby in respect of the deindexation of family allowance benefits. The deindexation proposal, combined with tax increases, places an extraordinary burden on families.

The petition calls upon the House of Commons of Canada to reinstate the full indexation of family allowances and rescind the unfair tax increases that are hurting families.

An Hon. Member: Do it now!

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise to present a petition submitted by residents of Vancouver, Burnaby and North Vancouver, calling upon the Government to turn back on its measures to grant bail-outs and to provide incentives and loopholes through the tax system and to concentrate, instead, on the needs of Canadian children and families by reinstating full indexation in respect of the universal Family Allowance Program.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Finance) moved to introduce Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 234 and 309.

Order Paper Questions

[Text]

SURVIVOR BENEFITS

Question No. 234—Mr. Howie:

From January 1, 1984, to date, how many women are receiving survivor benefits as widows of (a) war veterans (b) retired armed forces personnel (c) retired members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (d) retired public servants?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence, Solicitor General, Treasury Board and Veterans Affairs as follows:

(a) The statistics maintained on survivor benefits do not differentiate between widows and widowers. As a result, the Department of Veterans Affairs cannot answer the question as formulated.

However, they can ascertain that most recipients of survivor benefits are women (the vast majority of veterans being men) and that the total number of recipients as of January 1985 was as follows:

War Veterans Allowance/Civilian War Allowance	34,719
War Disability Pension—Canadian Pension Commission	42,037
Persons receiving both	2,845

(b) There are two accounts maintained for surviving spouses eligible for benefits under the Defence Services Pension Continuation Act (DSPCA) or under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act (CFSA).

As of February 1, 1985 they were as follows:

Defence Services Pension Continuation Act (DSPCA)	827
Canadian Forces Superannuation Act (CFSA)	8667

(c) In so far as the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is concerned, as of January 31, 1985 the following widows pensions were in payment:

RCMP Superannuation Act	334
RCMP Pension Continuation Act	105
RCMP Pension Continuation Act—Part IV	134

There are, in addition, 43 widows pensions in payment under the Pension Act. It is quite probable that in most, but not necessarily all of these cases that an RCMP Superannuation Act pension is also in payment.

SERVICES AND SUBSIDIES TO BUSINESS STUDY TEAM

Question No. 309—Mr. Gagliano:

Are Mr. John Wynne of the Plumbers and Pipefitters Unions, Local 170, Burnaby, B.C. and Mr. Tom O'Sullivan of the PCO., members of the Deputy Prime Minister's mixed study team on Services and Subsidies to Business and, if so, what are their qualifications?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The Team has completed its work and has been disbanded however, Mr. Wynne and Mr. O'Sullivan were indeed members of this Team. Mr. Wynne has had experience in chairing and participating in negotiating committees for major contracts, investment of union funds, and the maintenance and operation of a budget in excess of $1 million per year. Mr. O'Sullivan was an exchange officer with the Australian Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet, with the Canadian Privy Council Office. He has a wide range of experience in the economic and policy areas.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I rise again to ask about Question No. 296 which appears on the Order Paper. As I indicated yesterday, it has been over a year since the secret meeting between Premier Hatfield and the former Solicitor General took place. I also indicated yesterday that my particular question was put on the Order Paper some seven months ago.

I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether it is the intention of the Government to withhold the answering of those questions until after the provincial election in the Province of New Brunswick to avoid any possible embarrassment to Premier Hatfield.

● (1230)

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, that is certainly not the intention of the Government. I happened to be here yesterday when the Hon. Member asked exactly the same question. I assure the Hon. Member that the answer will be given as soon as it is available.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, October 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Henderson (p. 7687).

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand that there were a few minutes left in the question and comment period following the remarks of the previous speaker. Are there any questions or comments?

Prior to resuming debate, may I inform the House that because of the ministerial Statement, consideration of Government Orders will be extended by 24 minutes this day. Therefore, Private Members' hour will begin at 4.24 p.m.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) would like to speak on this Bill and that he must speak before one o'clock in order to meet other commitments. I would be prepared to yield to him if I could be recognized as the first speaker from my Party at two o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the House is happy with that arrangement without in any way admitting to setting a precedent in an American concept called yielding.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, as a Member from the Province of Manitoba which has a very substantial interest in the movement of grain which is produced in Manitoba and as a Member from the City of Winnipeg which plays such an important role in the rail system of this country by which many residents of my constituency are employed, I feel that I ought to make a few comments about this Bill. Bill C-75 amends several Acts having to do with marine transportation and pollution caused by shipping. Primarily, however, it amends the Canada Shipping Act.

We can support some of the provisions of this Bill. The licensing and certification of personnel aboard vessels, an up-dated inspection procedure, new regulations governing the transport of hazardous cargoes and the prevention and cleaning up of pollution and particularly oil spills caused by ships are all provisions which we can support. Some of these provisions, and particularly the ones dealing with oil spills and transportation of hazardous cargoes, are long overdue. However, there is one clause of the Bill, and we believe it to be the most important clause in the Bill, which we much oppose, that is, the clause dealing with cost recovery.

According to the latest estimates, the cost of providing the services to which the clause refers is anywhere from $136 million to close to $200 million. As it now stands, these costs could be imposed generally on all vessels regardless of whether or not they use these services. This could include everything from pleasure boats to super tankers, but it is pretty obvious to us that it is most likely that most of the costs, if not all of them, will be imposed upon commercial shippers. This would have very significant ramifications in a number of areas.

I am sure Hon. Members will realize, if they think about the history of the St. Lawrence Seaway, that the Seaway was conceived and promoted by Canadians and the Canadian Government and was for many years opposed by very important interests in the United States including the railways. It took many years for the American Government to agree to co-operate in the establishment of the St. Lawrence Seaway.

The Seaway was built with the idea that it would make possible the movement of grain from Canadian and American mid-western producing provinces and states to world markets at reduced rates and would make possible the movement of iron ore from Quebec to the industrial heartland of Canada and the United States where at that time the steel industry was in operation. From the time when the Seaway was established in the 1950s until the early 1980s, that concept worked very well. However, the situation has changed dramatically.

Hon. Members know that the production and sale of iron ore from Quebec has come to a virtual stop. Certainly it has been reduced dramatically. As well, Hon. Members know that the shipment of grain from western Canada through Thunder Bay and other ports along the St. Lawrence Seaway has, for a variety of reasons, decreased substantially. As a result, if we proceed with this cost-recovery program, the costs will not be absorbed by the shippers but will be transferred to the producers and therefore to the consumers. This would naturally affect the price and competitiveness of Canadian exports and particularly the price which would be received by Canadian producers of grain.

Additional shipping costs from Canada would encourage Canadian shippers to make more use of American ports. Because U.S. cargo movement through the St. Lawrence Seaway must go through Canadian waters, this would also be a deterrent not only to Canadian shippers but to American shippers. I will try to deal with another aspect of that problem in a few moments.

This last year, cargo traffic on the St. Lawrence Seaway was down by 27 per cent from the previous year and shipments that year were down by 20 per cent from 1977's high. Grain traffic is also down substantially. As of the middle of September, it was down by 41 per cent from the corresponding period last year. To a large extent, that is due to the drought which occurred and, more recently, as a result of the rain and snow which has brought harvesting in many parts of western Canada to a virtual standstill.

This drop in traffic has resulted in much of the Canadian merchant fleet having to remain tied up. In July and August about 40 per cent of our merchant fleet was not operating. The Seafarers International Union estimated at that time that about 2,500 of its members were laid off and there were major lay-offs for grain handlers, particularly at Thunder Bay. Thus, about 51 per cent of the grain handling and transportation industries on and about the seaways were adversely affected. According to a study done for the Port of Duluth, for every job in the grain industry there were 2.5 spin-off jobs in the community. If this projection is used for Canada, we are looking at the possible long-term loss of about 14,000 jobs, at time when we have 1.25 million unemployed Canadian workers.

The point I am making is that the workers in shipping companies operating on the Great Lakes seaway system and the Seaway itself are already at the breaking point. They simply cannot absorb more reduction in traffic. Nor can they absorb the increased costs which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is proposing and which will come into effect if this Bill is passed.

The mandate of the St. Lawrence Seaway as was originally spelled out insisted upon full cost recovery. Over the past years the Seaway was able to build up a contingency fund of approximately $30 million. When the fund was set up it was intended that it be used in those years when the Seaway lost money in order to meet the cost recovery mandate. However, in this spring's Budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who has been able to find billions of dollars for big business and corporations through various tax give-aways and loopholes, decided he would take that $30 million surplus. He absconded with the money in order to help reduce the deficit. As a result, the Seaway must look elsewhere for funds to allow it to fully recover the costs of its operations. This means in all likelihood that the Seaway will have to increase its tolls next year. The tolls have been frozen for the past two years in order to help shippers survive with declining revenues. As a result it is felt that once the tolls are removed the increase will be substantial. Given that no improvement in the situation on the Seaway is projected for the next year, a substantial increase in tolls will have a severe and adverse effect. As a result of reduced traffic and, therefore, reduced revenues, the St. Lawrence Seaway, as well as the workers, shipping companies and communities who depend on transportation will be in serious trouble.

The case which I have been making is not merely a case which is being made by members of the New Democratic Party for partisan political reasons. The case I have been making has received support from the Dominion Marine Association, which represents most of the vessel owners on the Great Lakes seaway; the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association, which represents many of the shippers, users and communities along the seaway, including companies such as Stelco, Ontario Hydro, Cargill, the three prairie wheat pools, Dofasco, Iron Ore Company; the Seafarers International Union, which represents those workers on ships of whom so many are unemployed; the Brotherhood of Railway, Airline & Steamship Clerks, who represent the grain handlers of Thunder Bay, many of whom are unemployed and have been for some considerable time; and the Public Service Alliance of Canada which represents grain inspectors.

We say that what the Government is proposing will affect not just Thunder Bay but a whole series of cities and towns from Thunder Bay to the Province of Quebec. Apart from Thunder Bay in which 60 per cent of the grain handlers are unemployed, and apart from the seamen, of whom 50 per cent are now unemployed, there is Port-Cartier, in which 50 per cent of the people who work in the grain trade are now unemployed. In Baie-Comeau, 45 per cent of the workers are unemployed; in Manicouagan, 93 per cent of the workers are unemployed; in Halifax, 25 per cent of the workers are unemployed; in Saint John, 35 per cent of the workers are unemployed; in Quebec City, 31 per cent of the workers are unemployed; and in Sorel, 26 per cent of the workers are unemployed. That is the situation as it stands, which points out how serious it is for so many of the communities from Thunder Bay right through to the eastern part of Quebec.

It seems to us that what the Government is proposing is, in fact, contrary to the promises made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). In July of 1984 the present Prime Minister, in the Prince Albert declaration, made a number of commitments as to what a Progressive Conservative Government would do in respect of this type of question. I would like to put on the record some of the words which the Prime Minister said when he was the Leader of the Opposition. He said:

> A Progressive Conservative government will immediately examine ways and means to provide improved services and equitable rates in consultation with grain producers who are discriminated against geographically.

Grain companies, both private and co-operative, have expressed their opposition to what is proposed in the Bill which is before us. The former Leader of the Opposition also said:

> The federal government and the railways must continue to provide a special low rate . . . to assist producers competing with subsidized grain export nations.

What has happened to that commitment? We know, for example—and I mention it now because my allotted time may expire before I come to the point where I wish to deal with this matter separately—that in the United States, through the Corps of Army Engineers, the American Government has spent hundreds of millions of dollars—indeed, billions of dollars—in making the Mississippi River and the Houston Canal capable of moving grain and other products from Minneapolis right down to the Gulf of Mexico. It did that virtually no user charges at all.

Thus, if we increase the costs of shipping on the St. Lawrence Seaway, more and more grain from the mid-western United States which previously moved through Duluth and the St. Lawrence Seaway to the Atlantic Ocean will obviously move down the Mississippi River because it is so highly subsidized. Indeed, I remind Hon. Members that when we were discussing this matter at the time when the Liberal Government brought in its legislation to wipe out the special transportation subsidizies provided for the shipment of grain through the Crow Rate agreement, we warned that not only would the American grain move increasingly down the Mississippi but that with deregulation we will see a time in the not too distant future when Canadian grain will be shipped to Minneapolis and then down the Mississippi with its highly subsidized rates.

● (1250)

The producers were promised by the Prime Minister in the Prince Albert declaration that there would be an efficient, cost effective and reliable grain transportation system. But if we are going to have increasing users' fees apply to the shipments on the St. Lawrence Seaway, there will not be a cost effective transportation system on the St. Lawrence for western grain.

In August of 1984 the Prime Minister addressed the Empire and Canadian Clubs in Toronto in which he said, and I quote:

> A Progressive Conservative Government will freeze existing freight rates paid by producers from any further increase pending the results of the legislation's review mechanism into producers' ability to pay.

What has happened to that promise, Mr. Speaker? If the cost of shipping through the St. Lawrence Seaway is raised dramatically as, obviously, it will be, and since the price we ask for Canadian grain must be competitive with the price charged by other producers, those increased costs will again be passed on to the producers of grain. It seems obvious to us that in this legislation the Government has forgotten or intends to ignore the promise made by the Prime Minister.

It is the intention of our Party to oppose this Bill and to vote against it. We would urge the Government to consider cancelling all tolls or fee increases initiated or planned during the 1985-86 fiscal year, and to cancel the transference of $30 million from the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority to the Consolidated Revenue Fund in the 1986-87 fiscal year. That is what we propose for the immediate presence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, since it is almost the time at which we adjourn for lunch, would the House agree that we call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I shall now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 12.54 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, while nowhere in Bill C-75, which we are debating today, does not specifically say, it nevertheless signals, as I think Members who read it carefully will agree, that there will be a growing volume of oil tanker shipping on a year-round basis in Arctic waters. Of course that is built on a policy statement that was made in the House on September 10 by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who said, as reported on page 6463 of Hansard, the following:

> The policy of the Government is also to encourage the development of the navigation in Canadian Arctic waters. Our goal is to make the Northwest Passage a reality for Canadians and foreign shipping as a Canadian waterway.

That is the policy statement and it is quite true that the Minister went on to talk about concern for the preservation of the environment and the welfare of the Inuit and other inhabitants. It is on those two points, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to make some observations and express some concerns about Bill C-75.

The main route for this oil tanker traffic in the Arctic will be the Northwest Passage. Members will be aware that this is an environmentally sensitive region. In January of 1982 a Green Paper on Lancaster Sound was issued. Members will know that this is an area on the shores of the Northwest Passage inhabited by a community of Inuit. That Green Paper, produced by the Department, said as follows:

> There are a number of particularly important or biologically sensitive suites within the Lancaster Sound region, which are unprotected at this time . . . If the shipment of oil through the Northwest Passage takes place, then the potential for oil spills will exist: The environmental consequences of a large spill could be catastrophic.

I want to admit that the Government has shown some modest awareness and concern for this reality. In February of 1985, for example, the then Minister of Supply and Services, who is now the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Andre) issued a press release announcing that $1.2 million was going to be spent to conduct a hydrographic survey in Arnott Strait. The Minister indicated:

> The over-the-ice survey will map a safe shipping lane for possible tanker traffic in an area close to the North Magnetic Pole—the Arnott Strait lies between Cameron Island and Ile Vanier in the high Arctic.

The Minister went on to say:

> The Government recognizes the possible danger to the ecology caused by tanker traffic navigation in high Arctic water.

He said:

> I'm convinced that this survey will help avert shipping accidents, which lead to costly spillage cleanup and threats to the ecology. As well it will build confidence in the feasibility of moving crude oil southward from northern Arctic regions.

I think members of the Government know that with any means at all at our disposal we cannot prevent an oil spill from taking place. If there is going to be an increased volume of oil tanker traffic through the Northwest Passage, we can be almost certain that at this time, with the technology that we have and without considerably more research and development, there is a very good likelihood of an environmental disaster taking place.

Bill C-75 is telling us that oil tankers will be utilizing the waterways at an accelerated pace. The Bill informs us that the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act is going to take second place to other provisions of the Canada Shipping Act. It says that where a convention ship is involved—and I will explain in a moment what a convention ship is—other parts of the Canada Shipping Act will prevail over the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act. In the terms of the Bill itself a convention ship means:

> a sea-going ship, wherever registered, carrying, in bulk as cargo, crude oil, fuel oil, heavy diesel oil, lubricating oil, whale oil or any other persistent oil;

I believe that this major decision which has been taken very recently by the Government to use oil tankers in the high Arctic ought to have been much more fully debated than it has been until now. I believe that the most careful and cautious concern has to be given to the people for whom this region is home. I am talking, Sir, about the Inuit people of Canada. I wonder how serious the Government really is about opening up Arctic routes to year-round oil tanker shipping and about protecting that sensitive ecology and delicate environment. In September, 1985, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) sent a letter of congratulations to Panarctic Oils on the first commercial shipment of crude oil from Canada's Arctic. She said:

● (1410)

> After 17 years in the north, you and your company have proven that it is possible to ship crude oil from above the Arctic Circle with the maximum regard for the environment, and to the protection of the northern ecology.
> More than that, however, the Bent Horn shipment by both the M.V. Arctic and the Imperial Bedford has helped to confirm Canada's jurisdiction over the Northwest Passage.

There were some observers of that particular shipment who had other views and concerns. Some were Members of the House and others were journalists who specialize in this area. One of them, Marian Stinson, writing in The Globe and Mail, made this comment:

> The federal Government has relaxed the regulations for environmental protection for this season to enable Panarctic to get the oil to market in the south.
> A Coast Guard icebreaker will accompany the M.V. Arctic to compensate for the fact that the upgrading of the tanker has not been completed to meet the standards required for severe ice conditions—
> Because the oil will move through Lancaster Sound, which is biologically one of the richest areas in the Arctic, future large-scale deliveries of hydro-carbons could have serious environmental implications. The economy of the Inuit who live in the area is based on hunting on the ice, and any increase in traffic could affect their livelihood.

We know that the M.V. Arctic made it. We also know that the Government played Russian roulette to some extent in this situation because it issued an Order in Council on July 25 in which it amended certain regulations of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act to make it possible for that vessel to carry a shipment of oil from Bent Horn to Montreal.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) congratulated Panarctic. However, we must recognize that this vessel did not meet the safety regulations of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act. In congratulating the company, the two Ministers said that this indicates that Canadians are determined to exploit their northern resources. I believe that there is an alarming aspect to this situation. I find it alarming if exploitation will take precedence over environmental concerns. I find it alarming if the legitimate claims of the Inuit people of Canada are being ignored in this policy decision.

The Inuit people, through their organizations, are very much aware of what is taking place. They have been concerned about this since as long as ago as May 3, 1982 when a memorandum was prepared for the Inuit Tapirisat Board of Directors.

In that memorandum they indicated the need for an effective campaign against Dome Petroleum's year round Arctic oil tanker proposals. The memorandum said:

This opposition is consistent with the Inuit position now being voiced at the National Energy Board review of the Arctic Pilot Project, namely, year-round Arctic tankers pose an unacceptable threat to the marine environment and marine-based Inuit renewable resource economy. Unresolved Inuit land claims and oil tanker spills form an additional basis for opposition.

I believe that Bill C-75 is an indication, along with the others I have mentioned this afternoon, that apart from expressions of concern the Government is not giving sufficient attention to the Inuit survival in the North or prevention of pollution in the Arctic.

Just this past week, the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada issued a resolution for the public. It stated:

Whereas, This past summer, The American ship the Polar Sea, went through the North West Passage without seeking permission from the Canadian government;

Whereas, In 1953, some Inuit were moved to Resolute Bay and Grise Fjord by the Canadian government and the presence of these Inuit have been used to support the claim of the Canadian government to the High Arctic Islands;

Whereas, The Inuit lands and the Inuit living there should not be ignored by any government;

Whereas, The statement made by the Rt. Hon. Joe Clark, Minister for External Affairs in the House of Commons, as to what Canada will do with regard to protecting Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic includes legislation, military activity, marine transport and cooperation with the Americans; but does not include cooperation with Inuit, settlement of Inuit claims including the offshore; or the recognition that Inuit rights and environmental concerns are the root of Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic;

Therefore be it resolved that, ITC call on the Canadian government to recognize the relationship between Inuit and Canadian Sovereignty; to fully disclose to Inuit the nature and scope of Canadian and American military activity; and to enter into a working relationship with Canadian Inuit with respect to the development of comprehensive Arctic policy which will take into account Inuit concerns for survival and for the protection of the Arctic environment.

A second aspect of this same resolution concerning high Arctic development impact states:

Whereas, people in the Eastern Arctic already see changes in animal distribution and behaviour due to industry and shipping now, and they know more industrial activity and shipping will have effects on wildlife and on the environment, and

Whereas, ITC supports fully the efforts of the High Arctic Development Impact Zone Society in making the government of Canada and the government of the Northwest Territories aware of these concerns,

Therefore be it resolved that, ITC call on the government of Canada and the government of the Northwest Territories to hold public hearings in the High Arctic communities to determine the impact of development and shipping, and to work with the High Arctic Development Impact Zone Society and Inuit Tapirisat of Canada to develop regulations and controls for shipping in Northwest Passage.

One can see immediately that the Inuit are not standing in opposition to resource development or in opposition at all to any kind of shipping. However, they want to be included as part of this development by being consulted.

I want to make it clear to the House that I am not advancing the argument that there should be no northern resource development. Nor am I saying that no hydrocarbons should ever be taken from any of the Arctic seas. However, I want to remind the House that in July, 1984, after three years of study through a public review process, the Beaufort Sea Environmental Assessment Panel issued a report and I believe its conclusions ought to be considered with great care by Members of the House and the Government when proposing Bill C-75.

That panel concluded that Arctic oil and gas production and transportation can proceed, but subject to stringent terms and conditions to protect the northern environment and to strengthen northern society.

The panel went on to say that energy transportation issues were of crucial interest to the panel. The report states that a small-diameter oil pipeline could be built through the Mackenzie Valley. The panel also concluded that a natural gas pipeline could be built only if the impacts on local communities would be no more than would be associated with small scale development.

On the question of Arctic tanker traffic, the panel concluded that tankers not be allowed to carry oil through the Northwest Passage to East Coast refineries until after successful completion of a Government research and preparation stage, followed by an experimental program using two Class 10 ice-breaking tankers under specified conditions.

Central to the theme of the report is the panel's insistence that northerners play a major role in energy development projects.

These matters are not spelled out in detail anywhere in Bill C-75. The Bill has created much concern among Canada's northern Inuit people. Zebedee Nungak, the co-Chairman of the Inuit Committee on National Issues, said this past week:

● (1420)

The Government can ill afford to ignore our interests and concerns.

That is my position, Mr. Speaker, and it is the position of my Party. From that point of view we are going to give Bill C-75 the closest and most careful scrutiny when the Bill is referred to the legislative committee for clause by clause study. We hope the committee will not neglect to call before it the Inuit leaders of Canada in order to hear their concerns first hand.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a very brief question. I want to reassure the very distinguished and learned member of our Chamber with respect to native affairs and our north. He has been a very valuable Member of this Chamber over a long period of time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: His views are to be listened to because they are given in some degree of sincerity. I want to tell the Hon. Member that the very observations he has placed on the record this afternoon are of deep concern to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and to other ministries in Government, as he is aware.

We would like very much to move this matter into committee where some of the concerns, not only the Hon. Member but which other Members of the Chamber have been expressing over the last two or three days, can be delved into.

Could the Hon. Member comment on how we might best address the concerns that he, his colleague the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus) and others have expressed? Should we deal with it in the standing committee, or is the legislative committee itself perhaps a forum that would be adequate?

Mr. Penner: I want to accept the words of the Parliamentary Secretary that the Minister and the Government are fully cognizant of all of the environmental issues related to oil tanker shipping through the Northwest Passage and that they are as sensitive as it is possible to be to the Inuit people who call that home. They have unsettled claims and legitimate concerns about their traditional way of life. Increased shipping could disrupt that traditional way of life and even result over time in the extinction of a very proud, noble and able people who inhabit an inhospitable environment and therefore have earned the admiration of people around the world for what they do. I want to believe all of that on behalf of the Government. I will be looking for evidence that it is real.

As to which committee, the standing committee or the legislative committee, carries out the work of the House of Commons after this reading of the Bill does not matter to me. It is important that members who sit on the committee are prepared to listen to the Inuit leaders of Canada.

I would think, Mr. Speaker, that the Parliamentary Secretary may want to consider having members of the legislative committee visit certain selected Inuit communities to see first-hand why these concerns are so valid, that it is not mere rhetoric on the part of Inuit leaders. They are not simply trying to attract attention to themselves or cause difficulty. Their concerns are legitimate. This would allow members of the committee to emphathize with the Inuit people about these concerns. My suggestion is first to listen to the leaders and, second, Committee members perhaps should go to some communities.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member on time frame. In looking at this Bill, all Members of the House will agree that it is a plan within Transport Canada for marine routing as well as regulatory plans directly related north of 60 and also south of 60. There are some good things involved in it, such as safety measures and so on.

The Hon. Member touched on the Beaufort panel recommendations on the completion of scientific evaluation which are to provide two Class 10 icebreaking tankers and so on. Concerning the time frame, the Hon. Member touched on some interesting matters that for decades have been going on between the Government of Canada, the Inuit and other native people north of 60 concerning claims. A great deal of scientific effort has gone into the Beaufort panel and into looking at Polar Bear Pass, Lancaster Sound etc.

What kind of time frame does the Hon. Member think is reasonable to complete the claims? What about the aboriginal people north of 60? As I said to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) he soundly planted the flag of Canada upon their backs in terms of sovereignty. What time frame would it take realistically to complete the comprehensive claim process? We have to involve the native people and northern Governments in setting aside those zones of incredible ecological sensitivity, such as Lancaster Sound and other areas. We just do not have an industrial marine routing plan here where various ice densities are considered. We have to deal with the proximity to Cameron Island and to the various Beaufort fields. We have to deal with the best routing systems either to the Pacific Rim, to Europe or to other areas of the world. How long would it take to implement those things? We have a great body of scientific information. Would it not be more proper for this House to complete the comprehensive claims and to put in place a protection system for those ecological zones north of 60 so we can advise not only northerners but Canadians generally that this kind of a routing system is soundly based?

Many Members of this House tend to forget that the area north of 60 is one of the globe's greatest and most profound deserts. It has very small oases of biological activity and if you do not protect those now in the early considerations of various routes, we may well lose a great global resource through disasters that could beset us.

I know my question is complex, but in terms of the cart, we have the cart here now but it seems to be well in front of some very important moral, legal and ecological considerations that have to be put in place. I am interested in the Hon. Member's well researched views on what kind of a time frame this House should be considering to implement those other phases before this actually becomes a reality?

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I think one of the regrettable aspects of Bill C-75 is that in dealing in some very necessary ways with navigational concerns with the southern and the northern waters, they are taken together in the same Bill and dealt with in precisely the same way. I think the Hon. Member probably would agree with me that the northern waters ought to be taken out of Bill C-75. This Bill should not apply to northern waters. We should be awaiting settlement of claims. Settlement of claims is long over due. I think there has been an unconscionable delay in settling those claims. However, the Minister is to announce at the end of November a new claims policy, and I hope that claims policy will remove certain existing impediments that delayed the settlement of claims. Those impediments are well known to Members who served on the Standing Committee and who know about Arctic problems. They must be taken out, and then we could move very swiftly to the settlement of those claims. Certainly that would involve extensive mechanisms or arrangements for consultations on the environment.

• (1430)

I conclude my answer by reminding Hon. Members that the Macdonald Royal Commission indicated that the movement toward a settlement of comprehensive claims should be accelerated. Unfortunately, that commission put another obstacle in the way and said that political aspects should be separated out. I think that was naive and unrealistic. Before the life of this Parliament concludes, I would hope that all or most of those comprehensive claims could be settled. That would be my timetable.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it was the presentation of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) which prompted me to rise in my place this afternoon. The Hon. Member is opposed to the Bill. I cannot quite understand why that would be the case. Obviously a good deal of thought has gone into it, not only by the present Government but by the previous one. It has been many years since a major amendment has been made to the Canada Shipping Act. I am sure that all the ideas, many of which are of an administrative nature and a technical nature, included in the Bill were not thought up in the last 12 months. My suspicion is that what we have here is a distillation of ideas that have come forward over the period of many years. It is only with the new Government that the deciding factor has been there to present this to Parliament and to make some movement on these important issues. Undoubtedly the previous Government restricted itself to the collection of these ideas, and for that we should be thankful.

The presentation of the Hon. Member for Davenport was similar in many ways to that of the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). However, I must admit that the Hon. Member who last spoke was a little more realistic in his approach to life; he was not dead against the Bill, on account of some of the things he said. Sometimes it is evident that the degree of realism in matters affecting the North directly decreases proportionate to the distance from Toronto. It is sometimes surprising—and this is something which we in the North are quite used to—that those good people from Toronto are quite willing to tell us how we should conduct our affairs and run our lives.

I see the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) who is an expert on northern housing. He would like to tell us how to run our housing policy. However, I cannot be too critical of him because in the recent past he has been extremely helpful.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Heap: I would hope the Hon. Member would not neglect to mention that he thanked me for my intervention.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Nickerson: I certainly did thank the Hon. Member for Spadina for his intervention in the question of condominiums in the Northwest Territories. As I said before, he and his colleagues in his Party have been extremely helpful, maybe much more helpful than his colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), who would tell us how to administer the system of justice in the North.

Mr. Heap: You are an expert on that.

Mr. Nickerson: I certainly am, I certainly am. I have had a lot of experience with judicial affairs in the recent past, and I am very satisfied with the way that the judicial system operates in the North.

What we have to realize with respect to shipping in the North is that it already exists. General merchandise is already shipped into the North by vessels. In particular, oil and petroleum products are shipped in. The M.V. Bedford recently hauled out, after trans-shipment from the M.V. Arctic, the first commercial cargo of oil produced in the Arctic. It had brought in refined products from refineries back east. This is a common occurrence. It happens every day. It is not something new. The Northwest Passage is not some pristine wilderness which has never seen a vessel or has never been touched by the hand of man. The people whom I represent and whom the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) represents tell us that they want rules and regulations established pursuant to the Canada Shipping Act and to the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, which will ensure that existing shipping and any new shipping likely to occur in the future is done in the safest possible manner. They themselves and their loved ones work on those boats. What could be more natural than to want working conditions to be as safe as possible in waters which on occasion can be quite hazardous? The people there are concerned with the possibility of oil spills. They want legislation such as that envisaged in Bill C-75, which will do the utmost possible to ensure that spills do not occur and, if they do, to ensure that there is proper mechanisms for the clean-up of spills and for compensation or the payment of the clean-up process. That is what they want, and that it what is in the Bill. It is unbelievable that the Hon. Member for Davenport should rise and say that we should not proceed with the Bill, that somehow all shipping in the North has to cease. That type of attitude might get him elected in downtown Toronto, but it certainly would not get him elected in Nunatsiaq or the Western Arctic.

For example, the Hon. Member for Davenport specifically referred to the transportation of natural gas. This Bill ensures that the international conventions into which Canada has entered, dealing with the design and construction of natural gas carrying vessels, are put into effect. That is not the case at the present time, and this is precisely what the Bill would do. Therefore, we should support the Bill, get it through the House and have these highly technical matters dealt with by a competent legislative committee.

I want to dwell for some time on Clause 4 of the Bill, the one which has probably caused most of the debate in the House. It is permissive. It allows the Minister, should he wish, to collect certain fees for certain services rendered by the Coast Guard in respect of ice-breaking, for instance, and of other services rendered to the shipping community by the Government of Canada.

I understand some of the concern of Members from certain parts of the country where there is a likelihood of fees being substantially raised. However, we have had the assurance of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) that this will not be done in an irrational way. If fee increases are to be made, they will be done in a manner which does not cause such a hefty blow to the users of those services that they themselves will no longer be able to operate their businesses.

Recently in my constituency I have had some experience with this in respect of aviation, not in respect of shipping. Were the Minister of Transport to be in the House, I would bring this to his attention. Perhaps he could adopt the policy stated here with regard to shipping fees for those involved in aviation. For example, the new terminals at the Whitehorse and Inuvik airports were built as part of the Liberal election campaign under the process whereby they borrowed the next year's capital funds and built structures immediately before the election. The rental fees for space in those terminals have been increased to such an extent, up to tenfold in some instances, that it has become prohibitive for people to rent space anymore. That is one example where this policy of moderation might be brought into effect.

The question of the services and subsidies provided by the Government to the shipping sector and other modes of transportation is one I would like to think about aloud for a moment.

If I were the owner of a stevedoring or warehousing company in Montreal, I would want the ice breakers to clear the St. Lawrence Seaway, and I would make the argument that that was in the national interest and that the user of that service ought not to be required to pay for it. At the same time, I would probably argue against subsidies to the railways that go from Montreal to eastern Canada, servicing the ports of Saint John or Halifax.

It is only natural, given human nature, that that would be the case. Obviously, it would be to the maximum advantage of the person in Montreal in that circumstance to have that service rendered at no cost.

Conversely, if I were in the same position in Halifax or Fredericton, I would make the argument that we should retain the subsidies on freight rates and that those who are provided with ice breaker support in the St. Lawrence Seaway should be required to pay for it. That would be the most advantageous situation for the individual in Halifax or Fredericton.

I think we have to allow the Minister of Transport to engage in a system which would see subsidies reduced over a period of time, with the cost of such services as ice breaking being passed on to the user at something close to the actual cost of providing the service.

Surely that which is best for Canada as a whole is what should govern. Taking the interests of Canada as a whole as opposed to the specific interests in Montreal or Halifax, the system that should be in place for the transport of Canadian goods to export markets is that which is the most cost effective, the system that would be to maximum Canadian general advantage, and the way to arrive at the most cost-efficient system is to take into account the cost to the shipper, the cost to the supplier of the transport, and the cost to the Canadian taxpayer.

In order that Canadian goods can compete in world markets, we have to be as effective and as efficient as possible on a national basis.

Still on Clause 4, I have a few comments to make with respect to the Northwest Passage as it might exist many years from now.

I, too, share the view of the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) that the Northwest Passage should continue to see a growth in the amount of shipping. I see it, at some point in time, being used as a regular through-waterway for vessels orginating in Europe en route to Asia.

If that is to happen and if that shipping is to be conducted in a safe and environmentally sound manner, it will require considerable services of a nature usually provided by Government, such as ice breaking services and navigational aids, and there will be a cost attached to that.

Shippers using the Panama Canal are quite prepared to pay a toll, and so it should be for shippers using the Northwest Passage—which I hope would be open to peaceful navigation for vessels of all nations, with the only requirement being that they meet the necessary safety and environmental requirements.

It would make sense to levy a toll on vessels using that route which is more or less equivalent to the cost that the Government bears in enabling the route to be used.

I talked earlier about doing things to national advantage, about the necessity to do things in the most efficient way from a national perspective. Stepping back and taking the global perspective, surely the most cost-effective way of shipping goods from one continent to another would be to the best advantage of all mankind.

If the tolls for both the Panama Canal and the Northwest Passage meet the user-pay principle, then that route which is the most cost-effective will be chosen by world shippers, with the result that everybody in the world will benefit. And if at some point in time, as I believe will be the case, the Northwest Passage becomes competitive with other sea routes, then Canada, too, will benefit, not only as a shipper on that route but also as a provider of services for vessels using that route.

The last point I want to make this afternoon, Mr. Speaker—and this, again, is contained to some extent within the Bill—relates to the way in which the Canadian Coast Guard sets up its various regions.

At present, part of the North is looked after by Montreal and part is run out of Winnipeg or Edmonton. What is needed, or will be needed very shortly, is a separate northern region for the Coast Guard. But the Canadian Coast Guard and the Department of Transport are well aware of this need. What I am trying to do this afternoon is to give them a little more encouragement in a policy that they have been pursuing for a number of years, both under the present Government and the previous Government.

That northern region of the Canadian Coast Guard exists already in embryonic form. It is under the very able directorship of an individual by the name of Carol Stephenson. It is my hope that this will continue and that it will become a full region within the operations of the Canadian Coast Guard.

Thank you very much for your kind indulgence, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Fulton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Hon. Member a similar question to that which I put to the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), and it is this: does he not agree that comprehensive aboriginal claims north of 60 should be resolved and that there should be a delineation of those zones where there should either be no access for freight traffic or access under limited conditions because of the biological nature of those areas?

Does he not think that those two steps should be completed before some of the operational potential that is contained within Bill C-75 is put into play?

The reason I ask the question is that the comprehensive claims process is one that has dragged on for many years. A great deal of effort has been expended by many Canadians in evaluating the sensitive zones north of 60. Some of the studies are not yet completed. The reason, of course, is to ensure that those shipping routes that are used in the future are those which result in the absolute minimum impact on those areas.

Does he not think that those two matters should be addressed and implemented before we see the kinds of routings that would be operationally possible under this Bill put into play?

Mr. Nickerson: If the Hon. Member, Sir, has looked at the Bill, he will know that contained within it is the concept of Vessel Traffic Service Zones, and that will in part, if not in total, address the concerns he has raised.

If he is asking me whether second reading of the Bill should await the settlement of all aboriginal claims, or the aboriginal claims in that part of the country in which he is most interested at the present time, my answer is "no".

Shipping in all regions of Canada is important. I do not think we should delay the second reading of this Bill until there is an answer to every outstanding little problem. What is contemplated in the Bill is a provision to make regulations on a zone-by-zone basis, and certainly that will eliminate some of the problems.

It should be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that the people who are pushing hardest for a settlement of the land claims in the Arctic, particularly in the Inuit area, are the very people who use the petroleum products shipped into that region for use in their ski-doos and for heating their houses.

Those people tell me that while they want those petroleum products shipped into the region—they like to live in warm houses as opposed to cold igloos—they want it done in a manner that minimizes the danger to health and the danger of the environment.

It is for that reason that the people who live in that region, I am sure, would like to see us proceed with this legislation in a speedy manner.

• (1450)

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Member. The Hon. Member will be aware that the previous administration halted between two opinions, whether there should be enhanced oil tanker shipment or whether there should be more pipeline construction. A policy was never developed one way or the other. The waiting game was being played by acquiring more data and information. Now we have a clearly delineated policy. In Arctic waters and through the Northwest Passage, there will now be increased year-round oil tanker shipment. That is the policy of the Government as enunciated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and supported by this Bill.

The leaders of the Inuit people in the North have put forward the proposition that they have not been involved in this major policy development. As my hon. friend just reminded the House, there are some very major issues still outstanding, among them the settlement of those claims and political rights in the North. Perhaps the Hon. Member could advise the House if he as a northerner is satisfied that every effort to have a full measure of consultation has been made.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior is undoubtedly aware of the great number of consultations that have already taken place. In his opening remarks, he referred to the Lancaster Sound studies. I do not know how many public meetings took place while that study was being compiled. The Beaufort Sea environmental impact group has spent months and months soliciting views on oil and gas development in the North. There has been a lot of opportunity for consultation and public input. Much of what was said in those public hearings was that people wanted better shipping regulations and better environmental protection measures. The people were concerned with compensation aspects arising out of possible spills and this is precisely what is contained in this Bill.

I am not saying that there could not be improvements of a technical nature made to the Bill. That will undoubtedly occur when we get to committee. I know that the committee will call as many witnesses as possible.

I would like to make one comment with respect to the policy enunciated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is not quite the way the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior puts it. There is no way that any Hon. Member can say that there will be more oil traffic through the North. It is likely that a bigger population will lead to more oil traffic. It is also likely, as a result of what appears to be a very successful exportation of oil from Bent Horn this summer, that there will be more crude oil coming out. However, the Government cannot say that that will happen. That will depend upon the economics of the situation and what the world price of oil will be.

The policy of the Government is that on the basis of the expectation that there will be increased traffic and particularly tanker traffic in the North, the Government asserts its sovereignty over those waters and will make provision for the safe development of that traffic if it occurs which in all likelihood it will.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, after listening to some Hon. Members speaking on this Bill, one would be almost left with the impression that no studies have been done in the Arctic and that native people have not been consulted. I know that that is not true. I am not here this afternoon to sponsor the oil companies, but I know that even without being told to do so by the Government, the oil companies, in anticipation of carrying out oil exploration in the Arctic, have voluntarily asked native groups to go on board the ships that have been carrying out the environmental studies. In fact, I have been in command of ships myself when there have been native groups on board. I have been in the Eastern Arctic in all of the months of the year except March carrying out environmental studies. Some of the things that I hear being said today in an attempt to hold up this Bill are pure nonsense.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to speak on Bill C-75 and I will certainly touch on the points made by the captain in a few moments. First I would like to deal with the expectations of many Members of the House following the speech made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) regarding the Polar Sea incident. I think we expected that quite a different tack would be taken.

We learned from the Manhattan incident and the passage of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act that a very strong statement was being made by Canada. Bill C-75 is doing through the back door what the Government would not do through the front door. The sovereign potential of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act is being diluted by making all kinds of regulatory changes to it that the Government would not dare bring forward for open debate in the House.

The exemptions in this Bill are incredible because what should be done by law is being done almost entirely by regulation. I see that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister is here today. When he and his colleagues were in opposition, they pilloried the then Liberal Government for doing exactly what is being done in this Bill. This Bill is riddled with the powers of the Governor General and with ministerial discretion to regulate after the fact what should already be in the Bill, something which the House has not learned to expect but often sees.

I am interested that an Hon. Member from north of 60 would not even touch on the approach taken toward compensating those who are affected by oil spills. This Bill forces the litigant to prove damage, something which has been widely discussed for many years in committee and in the House. Once again, the onus will be on the fishermen, the Inuit and northern people to obtain standing before a regulatory agency and prove reasonable costs and damages, not actual costs and damages. They have to be able actually to prove those costs. I think it is something the House has to look at very carefully. We should reverse that onus so that it is not the victim who has to prove the damage and the costs involved. Rather, the onus should be on the parties involved in causing the pollution.

Before dealing with this Trojan Horse Bill, I would like to touch on the matter of cost recovery in the transportation field. I believe the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) should be dealing with this today because I understand there is a meeting on this matter in Victoria this afternoon. In terms of Clause 4, this exemplifies what I will be bringing forward in my remarks when I speak of how this Bill affects shipping within all Canadian waters. I am speaking of the drydock at Esquimalt, B.C. which at present is earmarked for sale by the Government but brings to the people of Esquimalt over $26 million per year. The Government now wishes to dispose of this facility largely because of a $1 million loss reported for 1984.

I would like to deal with cost recovery on that point. While I can understand a decrease in business due to the state of the economy, there seems to have been no attempt to promote the services of this dock to the shipping industry. In fact, the Government has been throwing away business which has come to it. The Minister seems to rely upon private sector middlemen to attract business to the dock and allow those companies to make the profit while the public, again, keeps the deficits.

For example, there is a crane at the Esquimalt dry dock for which the Government charges $8 to $9 an hour to operate. The Government pays the operator $14 an hour. The same type of crane in Portland costs $35 an hour U.S. plus labour and materials. The largest crane in Esquimalt is charged out at $80 an hour, while a comparable unit in Portland brings in $150 an hour, with an additional charge per ton, plus labour and materials with a four-hour minimum.

I am told that even as we speak now Canada is losing a major maintenance contract to the Americans. This is not because of service or price but because of government disinterest in keeping the facility viable. This is a contract to maintain and repair some 30 Polish fishing vessels which, interestingly enough, fish in Canadian waters and take our fish. That contract could be ours for the asking except that the Department of National Defence has stalled closing the deal for some imagined security problem. It is not that we have said no to the contract, we have not given an answer at all. This $2.5 million contract has been floating between DND and Transport Canada while the Americans have been actively seeking the business. I am also told that an announcement could come as early as Monday that the Polish fleet will pull out and give the contract to Coos Bay, Oregon instead of Esquimalt because the Government has deliberately frustrated the deal. It would seem as though the Government does not want this facility to make money or at least break even.

What we are debating here today is cost recovery on Coast Guard services for Canadians while not even attempting to manage wisely Government projects such as this one. How much will we have to recover on navigational aids to cover the costs of this business to Esquimalt and to the Government of Canada? If the Minister is successful in running this facility into the ground to support his argument to sell it off, who will buy it and at what price? The dock's estimated value is $50 million. Why would any of the principal users of the facility want to buy what they can already have for next to nothing? If we sell it for less than $50 million, what new cost recovery scheme will the Minister bring forward to compensate the people of Canada? Or if the dock is closed altogether in March of next year, as planned by Transport Canada, how much more will we have to recover? That is a good example of what we see throughout the Bill which is before us in terms of user-pay.

Let us take a look at the Bill. I can certainly speak for the Port of Prince Rupert, the Port of Stewart and the Port of Kitimat in terms of Clause 3.1. I will tell Hon. Members what those ports will tell the Minister when he goes out to visit them. I would like to read the Clause because it is an important one. We have to look at it carefully. It states:

For the purpose of defraying the cost of navigational services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard, the Governor in Council may make regulations respecting charges relating to those services, including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member has been here long enough to realize that under Beauchesne's Fifth Edition Citation No. 732 we are debating second reading of this Bill. The Bill should be debated in principle and not clause by clause. I hope that the Hon. Member will take that into consideration in recommencing his speech.

Mr. Fulton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The points which are in the clause are key to the general thrust of the Bill. It would add costs for aids to navigation, dredging, vessel traffic services, ice-breaking services and escorting services. It is estimated that in the neighbourhood of $200 million will be tacked on to the backs of pleasure craft operators, fishing vessel operators and general shippers. With respect to ports such as Prince Rupert, it is already suffering a dramatic loss in throughput. This is because Transport Canada has not managed to bring Prince Rupert Grain No. 1 back on line. In adding the types of costs which are being discussed in that clause on the fishing fleet we are expecting a $100 million buy-back. Where is that? If more and more costs are to be added on to industies which are already in difficulty, we will find out what the real implications of user-pay are.

Let us look at what the Minister had to say about the Bill on September 25. There was great expectation in the House and in the country at that time regarding sovereignty. Bill C-75 was seen as a Bill which would strengthen sovereignty. In fact, it has diluted the potential in terms of the sovereign Bill of the Arctic Waters Marine Prevention Control Act. Members opposite know that well. If they do not believe it then they should speak to people in External Affairs who are aware of what the implications of diluting our legislation north of 60 will be.

I would like to point to the six international maritime conventions which are to be added. There is the 1973 International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships and its 1978 Protocol. There is the 1978 protocol to the 1974 convention with respect to the safety of life at sea; the 1978 standards of training certification and watchkeeping for seafarers; the 1969 International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage; the 1971 Fund Convention; and also the International Maritime Organization Codes for specialized ships carrying oil, gas and chemical cargoes.

I would like to point out just how far afield the Government has gone with this Bill. It has taken six international maritime conventions and placed them in the Bill. I think Hon. Members opposite would be pleased to address why Crown vessels are specifically exempted should they get into some kind of difficulty and cause a spill north of 60. The onus for damage always returns to the individual, whether we are talking about the coast of B.C., the east coast maritime areas or north of 60. It is the individual who is hurt. Many of these are very poor people. They cannot afford to find their way into the courts and to have consultants prepare studies in relation to the damage and so on.

The Bill is very broad. It includes everything from new definitions for air cushioned vehicles to what to do with a stowaway. There are some good clauses with respect to safety. I was pleased to see the provision for new inspection procedures and so on. However, the adding of charges for navigational services is not going to go down well in the country. I would encourage the Minister to speak to some of those people who are knowledgeable with respect to how this can change shipping patterns and what the implications will be for our indigenous fleets of both fishing vessels and pleasure craft.

Ministerial exemptions are dealt with in Section 134 of the Act. I will not dig right into the section since I accept your advice with respect to going into the specific clauses of the Bill, Mr. Speaker. The Benthorn project is an example once again in which ministerial discretion, exemption and regulation was utilized for the Cameron Island project to bring oil down this summer. It was through Order in Council that that particular vessel was exempted from operating in those ice conditions. The same theme of exemptive powers finds its way throughout the Bill. The Bill which is before us is similar to saying to the Minister of Transport: "You can do whatever you want, wherever you want, however you want, under whatever circumstances you want. Whenever you feel like doing it, pass some regulations." This is Trojan Horse legislation. It is the type of legislation which government Members fought against when they sat in opposition. They could see that the interests of the individual, the little Canadian, were the ones which would be beaten around. It means that the big oil companies can knock on the door of the Minister of Transport and say: "We cannot comply with that particular zoning which Environment Canada, the Government of the Northwest Territories, the Inuit or whoever say they are concerned with." The oil companies will say: "We have to have this routing. We have this window for accessing those ice conditions and we cannot go with all the other stuff." The Minister has taken all these powers upon himself. Knowing the man it surprises me. I think the bureaucracy have channelled this legislation up to him and they have decided that since it cannot get 8, 10 or 12 Bills through, which is how many it should be, it will push Bill C-75 through.

The Bill is all over the ballpark. It goes from air cushioned vehicles to very basic sovereign questions. It is similar to the backing down we saw from the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I complimented him in the House. I honestly meant it with respect to the moves he was taking. He said: "We will construct a $500 million world-class state-of-the-art ice-breaker." Some two days later at a press conference the Minister spoke about an ice-breaking tanker. He practically read the press release of Panarctic. In the House he said that he would strengthen various pieces of legislation. The first matter I expect we would have learned in the world of international law from the Georges Bank experience is what type of laws we should be putting in place. Not only should we strengthen the demarcation lines in the high Arctic so that those would be internal waters, but we should strengthen the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, so that should a vessel like the Polar Sea re-enter Canadian internal waters, there could be a sufficient penalty. How many Members of the Government know that if the Polar Sea goes in after we pass this piece of legislation, the most we can do as a country is impose a $100,000 fine? What an outstanding piece of legislation this is. I expected some really tough-minded legislation which included a shell clause which not only allowed, but required, a Canadian Coast Guard to bring vessels back into port which attempted to enter Canada's internal waters without full open agreement and the accompaniment through Canadian northern waters by a class 10 state of the art ice-breaker.

I believe that I, as an Hon. Member, at the very least, misunderstood what direction the Secretary of State for External Affairs was taking. I had great expectations that we were going to see sovereignty and the high Arctic protected. The Minister planted the Canadian flag on the back of the Inuit and said the reason we have sovereignty in the high Arctic islands is because of the presence of aboriginal people who have been there since time immemorial. However, there has been no movement on that front. At the very least,in terms of debate and legislative committee time, we should be looking at how to complete the comprehensive claim process and how to realistically and properly deal with the important scientific components which were properly raised by my friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). We cannot now simply run head long into industrial projects after all the effort of public process. I see the Hon. Member for the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). He probably thinks that it was just an interesting exercise in public relations to have the Beaufort panel, to have that many Canadians volunteer their time to address the very real and sincere interests of this globe.

A large-scale oil blow-out in the high Arctic could change the entire weather patterns of this entire globe. We are not just talking about a few dribs and drabs of oil washing ashore, a few seals getting their skins dirty, a few fish dying or a few hunters being displaced. Some of the most serious global atmospheric questions have to be answered. As it stands now, this kind of legislation would certainly receive a good round of applause in the boardrooms of the oil companies in Calgary. They would say, "Right on. You finally put in place what we need to expedite at the lowest possible cost". I think the surveys which have been taken in this country over the years demonstrate that one of the highest priorities there is among Canadians is the protection of the environment and its utilization. Canadians are prepared to see certain higher costs in order that plans can be implemented with some kind of long-term forward thinking vision so that those areas of great sensitivity are not unduly and unnecessarily damaged.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I found interesting the comments from the Government side on the powers to make regulations in relation to hazardous cargoes. One would think that after all of the studies done by this Chamber on the transportation and management of hazardous materials in terms of rail and rubber, surely we would see the implementation of them as legislation rather than regulation.

I have raised many times in this House the fact that we still have very large tonnage quantities of military explosives being loaded on the Prince Rupert waterfront. There have been many requests for some kind of proper handling and management of those military explosives or in the alternative, shipping them in U.S. military bottoms from the southern U.S. north, but do we have it in this legislation? No. We find once again the Governor in Council may make regulations, and that is throughout the Bill. When we talk about parliamentary reform and when the Government brings legislation forward to be turned into law, we in this Chamber should not be asked to simply vote for or against these kinds of Trojan horse Bills which are scattered about.

The Governor in Council may make regulations to implement the pollution convention. What is that going to mean to northerners if and when there is a spill? What about people on the West Coast if a ship is to break up? What about Newfoundland? There are many questions which must be answered by the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. There are questions and comments for 10 minutes.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, just before the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) rose to give his excellent speech, one of the Government supporters was exercised about the fact that we were debating Bill C-75 in principle. We have not been debating it very long. I just wonder if the Hon. Member is really suggesting that there should not be a second reading debate? I think it was a curious intervention on his part.

However, the substance of the Hon. Member's remarks was that all kinds of studies have been done and the Hon. Member for the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) made exactly the same point. No one has argued to the contrary. Of course, there have been studies done. Two paramount studies have been mentioned by several Hon. Members. One study is the Lancaster Sound study, which was extensive and indepth, and the other was the Beaufort Environmental Assessment Review Panel—which has the unfortunate designation of BEARP—which is one of the most significant studies. It was a three-year study which, in my view, ought to carry a considerable amount of weight in the decision-making by this Government.

My question to the Hon. Member for Skeena is with respect to those studies and any other studies of which he is aware. What are his views as to what reservations or cautions are pointed to regarding unrestricted enhanced oil tanker shipping through the Arctic waters of the Northwest Passage?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The point was raised earlier with regard to all of the studies which have been done. It is quite true that there have been a large number of studies, particularly in terms of the Arctic. The problem is that almost none of the recommendations have been implemented. The studies have been the basic building block to bring this Chamber to a position where we in fact could make intelligent, sound, reasonable and scientifically based decisions in implementing them as legislation.

I am sure that many native people were on vessels in the Arctic, that they came on board and talked about environmental studies and so on. One of the reasons there is so much cynicism, particularly north of 60, is that there are a lot of bureaucrats, scientists, a lot of studies and public hearings, and although that process is good because it helps northerners and Canadians generally to come to certain conclusions, we are not carrying forward what we should, the step beyond, which is to implement, in the interest of northerners, of Canada and of the world, sound procedures. I do not think we can just charge head on without taking into very serious account what publicly funded panels such as the Beaufort Environmental Review Panel recommended in terms of having two class 10 ice-breaking tankers in order to ensure that if one was bound in ice, there would be an opportunity for assistance. I believe many people tend to think of the Arctic as just a great area which is ice bound a lot of the time, which is cold and windy and we do not really need to worry about it. It is a desert, Mr. Speaker, and it is a very profoundly sensitive desert. Large pools of black material in an area of 24-hour a day sunlight where the accompanying environment is principally white, water or a bit of rock, is a situation which scientists around the world are only just now setting their minds to in terms of what the implications would be. I do not think we can just run willy-nilly into these kinds of situations, Mr. Speaker. Surely there is enough depth in this Chamber to allow us to address the very real environmental, scientific and aboriginal concerns rather than casting them aside saying that we have studied them to death already.

• (1520)

Mrs. Blais-Grenier: Mr. Speaker, I will start with a very brief comment and then I have a question. I am very happy indeed that the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) has recognized the very real and important improvements that are brought about through the safety measures and standards in this legislation. I can assure the Member that our consultation was very wide. We consulted a variety of groups and interested parties. We were seeking some information from the Hon. Member's Party and we did not get a complete answer. I would like to know, as would my colleague the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), what percentage of the cost of transportation users should pay if he believes in that.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to address that because no one from the Department of Transport ever contacted me with regard to my responsibilities for northern development.

Mrs. Blais-Grenier: We asked you in the House.

Mr. Fulton: To make the record clear, I am saying that I was never requested either to study or to prepare that kind of a response.

With regard to user-pay, in terms of the fishing industry, the shipping of wheat and so on, there is already an abundance of money paid in either directly through the economy or through the production and export of those commodities. Therefore, to ask a fisherman having his vessel rescued off the coast of Prince Rupert to pay to be escorted back into the port by a Coast Guard vessel is absolutely ridiculous. I would encourage Government Members to give speeches in Prince Rupert explaining why they think that kind of user-pay approach should be applied.

One of the points made by the Member for Western Arctic with regard to the accompaniment of vessels by a Canadian Coast Guard ice-breaker must be addressed by the House. That is a very, very costly process. I would agree that the users of that type of service, which incurs an enormous direct cost onto the Crown of Canada, should be considered. The committee should look at that carefully. It should consider which other routings are being competed with and what the real costs are. I was demonstrated last year that many pleasure craft operators, fishermen, tugboat operators and shippers off the coast of British Columbia did not get adequate weather information in advance. I cannot imagine why those people would be asked to pay for Coast Guard escorts back into port. This year alone the fishing industry in British Columbia will provide over $500 million to the Canadian economy. I cannot see sticking fishermen with the costs of navigational aids.

Mrs. Blais-Grenier: Mr. Speaker, I am still in the dark here. From reading Hansard it seems to me that there is some discrepancy in the positions alluded to by various Members of the NDP on the question of user fees and the portion that should be paid by the user. We were never able to get a straight answer on that. With regard to weather forecasting services, I am sure that the Member is aware that that is within the realm of another Department.

Mr. Fulton: That is precisely my point, Mr. Speaker. The Government has provided no background documentation on user-pay. The Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) is saying that the NDP should be writing the policy for the Government. I would be glad to write the Government's policy on shipping in the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act and so on. If the Minister wants to divorce weather services from navigational aids, I think she is dreaming in Technicolor.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about the comments of the Hon. Member with regard to the environment and the concerns he has expressed with regard to this Act and its effect on the environment in the Arctic. I would ask the Member to consider the historical background of the petroleum and mining industries operating in the Arctic from the late 1970s to the present. I ask him to consider Dome, Imperial, the operation of Little Cornwallis at Polaris and how the shipping industry has evolved. Surely the Member will recognize that those vessels are equipped to handle the kind of environment in which they operate. If they cannot handle that kind of environment they do not operate in it. Surely he must recognize that legislation dealing with this issue today is new legislation. Surely he realizes that the Environmental Contaminants Act, for example, must be upgraded as well as the Ocean Dumping Control Act. However, you do not bring Parliament and this Act to a halt just to satisfy one element of concern.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, if the Member had listened to the beginning of my speech—

Mr. Brisco: I did.

Mr. Fulton: —he would have heard that I said that I recognize that this is a marine routing and regulatory piece of legislation. I am saying, though, that there are all kinds of other matters that should be addressed at the same time by the House.

Mr. Brisco: They will be.

Mr. Fulton: I do not think they are going to be. I see no reason to believe that the Minister responsible for Northern Development (Mr. Crombie), the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) or any of the other Ministers involved will be bringing anything forward because they have made no suggestion, publicly or privately, that they are prepared to deal with comprehensive claims in an urgent manner or to deal with the setting up of environmental zones in terms of the Arctic.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. If the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) will forgive me, we have already extended the time by a couple of minutes. I would now like to carry on with debate. Before I recognize the next Hon. Member, I would like to remind the House that this will be the last 20-minute speech with a question and comment period provided for under Section 36(2). After that all speeches will be 10 minutes. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Canada Shipping Act

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to make a few comments about Bill C-75 which is presently being debated at second reading stage. My friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson), moved an amendment to hoist this Bill for a period of six months. I would like to reiterate to the House the reasons my hon. colleague moved that particular amendment. Specifically, Mr. Speaker, there was a very serious concern about Clause 4 in this Bill. I would like to go through that clause in a few moments and indicate the reasons why this particular clause is of such a fundamental nature that it must be eliminated from this piece of legislation.

As a member of the Committee on Transport I had the pleasure of travelling to western Canada earlier this year. The main purpose of that particular visit was to study twin-tracking with the CN line in British Columbia. As part of that trip the members of the committee had the opportunity to see firsthand the Canadian Coast Guard facilities on the Pacific Coast, especially those in Vancouver and Prince Rupert. I would like to indicate how impressed I was with the facilities that are provided by the Canadian Coast Guard in western Canada.

In effect, this particular clause would give the Coast Guard the authority to recover the cost of providing navigational services. As the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) indicated, that would mean, in effect, an additional $200 million that users of commercial vehicles and pleasures boats would be required to pay. Until now, it was the responsibility of the federal Government to pay for all of the services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard.

• (1530)

Under Clause 4, the Government is proposing to institute a user-pay scheme in order to facilitate full recovery of the costs of the Canadian Coast Guard. I believe that is fundamentally wrong because it is compromising safety. It is requiring Canadians to pay for services that would ensure the highest standard of safety on our coastal waters in all other services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard.

Being a Member from an urban riding in Metropolitan Toronto, one might ask why I would be concerned about the Canadian Coast Guard and what impact it may have on Metropolitan Toronto. I inquired of officials at the Canadian Coast Guard what facilities and services they provided in the Great Lakes and specifically in Lake Ontario. I was informed that the Canadian Coast Guard provides a number of services in the Great Lakes, specifically Lake Ontario. They provide search and rescue vessels in the Great Lakes and manage and operate two ice-breakers from Prescott west—the Griffon and the Simcoe. They service a rescue co-ordination centre at Trenton as well as providing the services from the marine radio centre. Therefore, the Coast Guard indeed provide some very essential services for people from Metropolitan Toronto who use the lake either for pleasure or business.

What impact will this Clause have on those people and others who make use of boats and vessels in other parts of Canada? I believe it is fundamentally wrong for the Government to charge those individuals for these services that are provided. That is why we in the opposition have moved an amendment to hoist this legislation. I want to assure Hon. Members opposite that if this particular Clause is deleted from Bill C-75, other parts of this legislation will receive favourable consideration by this side of the House.

Let me briefly comment on the Bill itself. As the Hon. Member for Skeena pointed out, this Bill which contains over 100 pages is a Trojan Horse piece of legislation. This is an omnibus Bill. I would remind Members opposite of the position they took with respect to what they believed was omnibus legislation tabled by the previous Liberal administration, specifically a Criminal Code amendment Bill which the opposition argued was omnibus legislation. It provided for a great many amendments to the Criminal Code and when Members opposite were in opposition they stood to say that it was wrong to deal with so many matters in one piece of legislation because it was was a disservice to the matter being addressed. Now that they are in Government we can see the blatant hypocrisy of the Hon. Members opposite. When they were in opposition they made one argument but now that they are in Government they do another—

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe the word "hypocrisy", used directly as the Hon. Member for York South-Weston has just used it, has been found to be unparliamentary in the past in the House and I would ask for your ruling on the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I was deeply in thought listening to the Hon. Member's speech and I do not recall if he used the word in that form. However, let us carry on with the debate. I will look at the "blues" and make a ruling on Monday.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The Hon. Member opposite knows perfectly well that there is no rule or part of any rule that says an Hon. Member cannot say that hypocrisy has occurred. Hypocrisy is a reality in life and it occurs. However, Beauchesne says that it is not parliamentary to call another Member and refer specifically to another Member as a hypocrite. That is quite a different matter than dealing generally with an issue and saying it is a hypocritical approach. There is no point of order there at all, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate the Hon. Member's comment. I believe it was said in that context. However, I would like to look at the "blues". If there is a problem I will naturally ask the Hon. Member to withdraw and I know that he will.

Mr. Nunziata: You are quite right, Mr. Speaker. I would withdraw and I fully recognize parliamentary rules that preclude me from calling individual Members hypocrites. Although that is what I feel and would like to say so in the House, I recognize that I cannot. Therefore, I will not call the Hon. Members opposite hypocrites. I would like to say that hypocrisy has occurred. I would suggest to the Hon. Member who raised the point of order that if the shoe fits, wear it. If he recognized that he has been a hypocrite, so be it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Here we go. I know it is Friday afternoon and Members have done very well for the last few hours. I hope we may continue debate. We will make a ruling on Monday if it is necessary.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, let me return to my submission with respect to Bill C-75. The point I was making before being interrupted is that this is an omnibus piece of legislation. Members opposite argued against such legislation when they were in opposition but have decided to support it now that they are in Government for a short period of time.

We in the Official Opposition are opposed to this omnibus legislation. This Bill deals with far too many matters to properly deal with the subject of this legislation. If the Government is truly concerned about the measures addressed in this 120 page Bill, it would introduce separate pieces of legislation to deal with the varied subjects contained within Bill C-75.

I have already indicated that Clause 4 is fundamentally wrong. I was somewhat amused to hear the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), the former Minister of the Environment, commenting about user-pay. Members will recall that when she was the Minister of the Environment, before her demotion to Minister of State for Transport, she tried to institute user-pay for calls to the weather office. She wanted those who required services of the weather office to pay for that service. As Members on this side of the House argued, this was a disincentive to individuals to call the weather office and would serve to compromise safety in that respect. Now, the Minister in her new portfolio, supports a piece of legislation that would provide for full recovery of services—

Mr. McLean: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is it in order for the Hon. Member to comment on previous responsibilities of the Minister? It is my understanding that the debate concerns this Bill and the Minister's responsibilities at this moment.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that what he is talking about is directing questions to Ministers about previous responsibilities. It has nothing at all to do with debate whereby one comments on actions taken by a Minister in any capacity as long as it identified with the Government. There is no point of order there at all. That is just wasting the time of the House.

● (1540)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Penner: These spurious points of order have to stop.

Mr. Dick: Poor little Nunziata.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I have found no points of order. I would like Hon. Members to carry on with the debate. the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) has the floor. I have not deducted any of his time. Let us carry on please.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, these repeated interruptions by Members opposite only serve to make me more determined to make the points I wish to make more forcefully. It is quite clear that Members opposite are very sensitive and embarrassed about this piece of legislation by the action they are taking. For that reason they are continually interrupting my submission. I ask them to be patient, to listen and to wait for their opportunities after I have concluded by remarks and then ask me questions or comment on my speech.

Before I was interrupted by the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. McLean) I was saying that we have a Minister of State for Transport who has a particular philosophy. That particular philosophy is users should pay, notwithstanding the fact that safety might be compromised on the high seas or on the Great Lakes. One can recognize and appreciate that philosophy because she is a Conservative. Conservatives believe in free enterprise and user-pay, regardless of the consequences.

This is the same Government that tried to reduce the deficit on the backs of the disadvantaged of our society and tried to deindex senior citizens' pensions. This is the same Government that is deindexing family allowances. Now we find that all in the name of reducing that almighty deficit it is prepared to compromise safety. I challenge the Minister and all Hon. Members opposite to prove me wrong, to prove that the introduction of user-pay concerning Coast Guard facilities will not compromise safety.

We, as parliamentarians, have a responsibility to ensure the highest degree of safety for those using waters within our jurisdiction. What this Government is doing is compromising that safety. I would like to articulate the reasons. I refer to Clause 4 of the Bill and with your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I shall quote Clause 4 and then begin to dissect the clause to indicate why this clause flaws the whole Bill. It reads:

> For the purpose of defraying the cost of navigational services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard, the Governor in Council may make regulations respecting charges relating to those services, including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, aids to navigation, dredging, vessel traffic services, icebreaking services and escorting services.

What does that mean, Mr. Speaker? I would like to tell you what it means. My interpretation is that if a person sailing on Lake Ontario encounters some difficulty, the boat capsizes requiring the Coast Guard to rescue an individual or individuals who may be drowning as a result of the accident, this Government is saying to those people making the SOS that it must be on the basis of COD, cash on delivery. In other words, if you want to be safe, you have to pay. If you do not pay, you might not be saved.

If I were involved in that situation and I knew that I might have to pay for a Canadian Coast Guard boat to rescue me, I might think twice—

An Hon. Member: You said it.

Mr. Nunziata: —and others might think twice before issuing the SOS. Hon. Members opposite laugh, indicating their callousness and lack of sensitivity with respect to the very serious ramifications of this provision in the Bill. This Bill will require an individual in distress to pay for that service. If they do not pay, this Bill provides in Clause 4(3) that interest may be charged for that service. That is totally and absolutely unacceptable.

What else does this piece of legislation say, specifically Clause 4? It says that ships and vessels have to pay for navigational services. What are navigational services, Mr. Speaker? They include lighthouses on both coasts, search and rescue and a number of other services provided by the Coast Guard. Rather than levying or charging individuals, Clause 4(2), reads:

> Charges may be imposed pursuant to subsection (1) in relation to any ship or vessel, regardless of whether the Canadian Coast Guard actually provides a navigational service to that particular ship or vessel.

What does that mean? The Government is attempting to implement user-pay with respect to Coast Guard services and in Clause 4(2) it says that regardless of whether a person requires the services or calls upon the Canadian Coast Guard to provide any particular service, that person will still have to pay part of the $200 million which the Canadian Government has heretofore paid for that essential service. Is that fair, Mr. Speaker? We say it is fair that everyone should pay. Canadians generally should pay for safety and health. We believe it is wrong when it comes to the question of health and safety to require an individual to pay for that service. Rather than spreading the cost of a high standard of safety across the country to all Canadians, what this Government is doing is imposing that cost specifically on the owners of any ship or vessel regardless of whether they may or may not require the services of the Canadian Coast Guard. Someone who is in a canoe on Lake Ontario would have to pay a fee even though that person may not require the services of the Canadian Coast Guard on Lake Ontario. We do not know what the fee is, but it will be a fee nonetheless. Each and every individual using a ship or vessel in Canadian waters will have to pay a fee. That is wrong.

I hope Members opposite will recognize how fundamentally wrong this clause is and delete it from the legislation. We on this side of the House are not prepared to endanger the lives of the users of Canadian waters.

I note, Mr. Speaker, you are indicating that my time is up. On that point, there were several interruptions by Members opposite. I hope you have not subtracted that time from me.

I regret I cannot speak longer on this legislation. I would simply ask the Minister of State for Transport to take another good, hard look at this piece of legislation and recognize what will happen in reality if it is passed.

• (1550)

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I should like to comment on the remarks of the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) with regard to the user-pay principle on which he launched a spurious and shallow argument. I am delighted he made a speech today because I will send it to every member of the Coast Guard in British Columbia whom I know—and I know several of them—and say that this is the kind of attitude, thinking and logic applied by Liberal Members to that principle. Those men often lay their lives on the line. He suggested that they would grab a man by the arm in deep, ice-cold water in the Pacific Ocean and say: "Buster, that's going to cost you a quarter first. If you don't pay, I will let go of our arm". I think it needs to be on the record very clearly that I find that kind of statement completely reprehensible.

Before he says anything more on this point, what does he have to say about the user-pay principle which his Government applied to airports, airlines and civilian air fleets in Canada? What does he have to say—and it might be the most useful comment he makes—about the user-pay principle which his Government in its depth of wisdom removed, the pay toilet?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member was concerned about my submission in respect of a person who may be drowning. I was simply dramatizing the point. Of course that would not happen. If he took my comments seriously, certainly it would lead one to make a conclusion about the shallowness of his intellect. Of course they would not do it. I have the utmost respect for individuals who serve in the Canadian Coast Guard. As I indicated in my submission, I was extremely impressed with the quality of services which they provided.

When I spoke with them during my visit to western Canada, they indicated how concerned they were about the Government not providing sufficient money for them to provide the services they want to provide. They took the Government to task for trying to cut back in order to reduce the deficit about which it is so paranoid. Individuals in the Canadian Coast Guard do a tremendous job.

When the Hon. Member distributes my speech to the several members of the Canadian Coast Guard with whom he may be familiar, I should like him to ask them for their comments with regard to whether or not they support the user-pay concept. I suspect that the Coast Guard does not support that concept. When he distributes my speech, I ask him to ask for comments on the whole question.

At this point I ask the Government whether it consulted with the Coast Guard before it inserted this particular section in the legislation. Government Members told us about a year ago that they were ushering in a new era of consultation and national reconciliation, that they intended to talk with people before they introduced legislation. Time and time again over the last year we have found with regard to legislation and the Budget in particular that there was no consultation at all. I suspect, with regard to this Bill, that there was a total lack of consultation with those people immediately and directly involved with the subject matter raised in this legislation.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I have just a couple of comments and perhaps a question. Hon. Members opposite have been talking about full recovery. Once again I draw to their attention the comments of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) earlier in the debate. As reported at page 7744 of Hansard, in an exchange between the Minister and the transport critic for the Official Opposition, the Minister said:

> Hon. Members across the way have been talking in terms of 100 per cent cost recovery. There is no transportation system which functions on 100 per cent recovery, and the Hon. Member knows it.

Since I think it is important to the users of the services about whom we are talking, on the question of cost recovery, as reported at page 7619 of Hansard, the Minister said:

> I will be directing my Department to establish a consultative committee, mandated to meet with groups across the country, including shipowners and their representatives; unions, shippers and shipper-groups, fishermen and their associations, and other representatives of the marine industry and users of the marine infrastructure.

This will take place before any changes are in fact made. There is no intention to even approach 100 per cent cost recovery. The New Democratic Party has it on a "maybe" basis now that we should attempt to recover no costs. The Official Opposition admits that there is a need to recover some. Again I point out that the level of cost recovery on the maritime side is running about 2.4 per cent. For other modes of transport, the user pays a greater share. In no case whatsoever do the users of transportation services within the aegis of the federal Government pay 100 per cent. It just simply would not work.

To reiterate that, there is no question about it, and the suggestion that it is otherwise is erroneous and misleading and does a disservice to good legislation or good law. To suggest that what we are trying to do with the Bill is to recover 100 per cent of the cost of transportation services is simply not true. There is no intention of doing it.

If we are to bring deficit spending under some degree of control, there is an onus or responsibility to increase revenues—and we do that in several ways—to lower the deficit. However, we do not do it, as has been suggested in the last two days or three days by several Members opposite, by attempting to enforce 100 per cent recovery in the marine mode, for example, of the $824 million that we spend annually. The 2.4 per cent might be a figure which could be increased to 3 per cent, 4 per cent, or 5 per cent. Is that exploitation? Is that onerous? Will that bring our economy crashing around the maritime heels? I do not think so, and I honestly think the Hon. Member would not share in that at all.

I must agree with the Hon. Member's observations with regard to the excellence of the service provided by the Canadian Coast Guard. I compliment him on having made those remarks. Can we have this Bill by 4.20 o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated.

Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) on debate, I remind him that under the provisions of Standing Order 36(2) we are now in the 10-minute period with no questions or comments.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, after listening to some of the previous speakers on behalf of the Government, I wonder what legislation we are really speaking about. I realize that I only have a few minutes. I will deal with the legislation momentarily. In doing my research on this legislation, I had occasion to read the Government's press release in connection with this Bill, Press Release No. 143/85, issued on September 25, 1985.

• (1600)

In that press release, the Minister states that these amendments "will enhance safety at sea, enable Canada to deal more effectively with matters associated with the prevention and clean-up of marine pollution, and provide for a much improved scheme of liability and compensation for oil pollution damage caused by ships." The press release goes on:

> Further changes relate to new sea training standards, improvement of navigational safety and efficiency, vessel traffic services and specialized vessel construction and equipment standards.

It then goes on to talk about various international maritime conventions. What is interesting, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that in the press release announcing these amendments, the Government hid the fact that it was going into a cost-recovery program, a user-pay program. I think that that is an indictment against this Bill. It is one of the problems that we in this House have with the Bill.

Previous speakers on behalf of the New Democratic Party have talked about the fact that there is nothing in this Bill to explain how the Government is going to recover some of its costs in operating our ports and the Seaway. That, Mr. Speaker, scares a lot of us, and particularly me, representing, as I do, those who live and work at the Port of Churchill.

We want to know exactly what this Government is going to do before we pass legislation. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Forrestall) has been in this House for many, many years and he knows that we have, as have the Conservatives themselves when in opposition, spoken against vague legislation. We have said that where the Government has a given intent, that intent should be clear in the legislation; that if there are areas of concern, those should be dealt with in the actual legislation. That is not happening, Mr. Speaker.

As I mentioned in opening, the fact that the Government did not even mention the matter of cost recovery in the press release announcing these amendments indicates that it is not coming clean with the Canadian public. I think all of us can accept that there should be some level of cost recovery. I think that that is an acceptable position for the Government to take. However, I think that we in this House and those using our ports and waterways must have more information before this legislation is allowed to pass. For that reason. I certainly support the hoist motion that is before us at this time.

The present situation in respect of the Port of Churchill is a clear example as to why we are concerned that the Government be clear in terms of what it is doing. In the spring of 1984, the Government of Manitoba and the Government of Canada signed an agreement in respect of the development of the Port of Churchill. That agreement involved such things as dust control at the elevators run by the companies, work on dredges, and work on the development of some tugs for that particular port. The agreement goes on to talk about other improvements in terms of rail commitment to rolling stock, and so forth.

The Province of Manitoba has lived up to its end of that agreement. The federal Government has not. From the answers to the questions that I asked of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) on this last week in the House, it became very evident that this Government has not yet decided whether or not to live up to that agreement.

That agreement is important to the people of the Port of Churchill. It is important to the people who work in the communities along the CN line, whether they be in Gillam, Le Pas, or in communities in Saskatchewan. It is important to the farmers of Saskatchewan and Alberta who ship their grains through that port, and yet this Government is not living up to its word to abide by that agreement, an agreement that was signed between the federal Government and the Province of Manitoba.

As I said earlier, the province is doing its work. It is putting into place the hydro line to the Port of Churchill and the other work that it committed itself to do. The federal Government—and I realize that the agreement was signed by a previous Government—is not living up to that agreement.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in the House that his Government, this new Conservative Government, would live up to federal-provincial agreements already in place; that it would not "rig" those agreements. He said that the Government would live up to those agreements, and that is not happening with the Port of Churchill Agreement. The fact that that agreement is not being lived up to, the fact that the work is not being done, the fact that the Treasury Board submissions are sitting on the desk of the Minister of Transport and not moving from there all relate directly to this Bill. If in this Bill the Government is going to be establishing some type of user-pay plan, then I think we have to know what that is before we pass it.

We have an agreement setting out what the federal Government is supposed to be doing in the Port of Churchill, and it is not doing that. We now have a piece of legislation pursuant to which, if passed, the Government will be able to charge the users of that port and other ports for certain work that is done in connection with those ports. Is the Government going to charge the work that was promised and should have already taken place in the Port of Churchill against future users of that port? Is that something the Government is contemplating? We do not know that.

The Government is not acting on what it should be acting on. If it finally does act and gets around to doing what it should have done already in the Port of Churchill, will the costs for that work be charged to future users of the port, thereby decreasing demand for use of that port? We do not know that, and that is something which we as Members of the House and others concerned about the Port of Churchill, should know. I raise that particular concern, not only because I represent that riding but because so many members of the Progressive Conservative Party have spoken about that particular port in the past.

Many Members will remember that the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. Murta), the Hon. Member for Lisgar, was in charge of a grain transportation study for the previous Conservative Government, the Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark). At that time the Hon. Member was quoted in the Winnipeg Free Press as saying that the Port of Churchill was a "luxury which we could not afford".

An Hon. Member: And it is not even luxurious.

Mr. Murphy: That Member is now in the Cabinet, presumably representing the Province of Manitoba. What is his attitude now with regard to that port? We do not know. Since making that study on behalf of the Progressive Conservative caucus, he has been completely silent about that port.

In addition, we have the chief Conservative Whip, the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook), who has also got up in this House and spoken against that port. As well, we have the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone). There are a number of Conservatives that I can quote, Mr. Chairman, who are—

An Hon. Member: If you speak in favour of no cost at all, does that make you a communist?

Mr. Murphy: That is the kind of remark we have come to expect. I am speaking about this Bill and this port. If you want to talk about something else, get up on your feet and do it.

When I was talking about the plight of farmers in western Canada, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot is quoted in Hansard as saying: "What's Churchill got to do with grain?" That kind of attitude by a Conservative Cabinet Minister, by the Conservative Chief Whip, by an agriculture representative from western Canada is sufficient reason for me to stand up in this House and say that I cannot accept this Bill the way it stands.

We in this House have the right, and I have said this before—and Progressive Conservative Members, including the loudmouth over there who has spoken, used to demand this right when in opposition—to know what the proposed legislation will do. When in opposition, the present Government Members took the position that proposed legislation should make clear what the Government wants to do and how it is going to do it. This Bill does not do that in the very important area of how this Government is going to recover the costs involved from the shippers and other consumers of Canada's ports and waterways. This Government does not even have the honesty to indicate that that particular clause is in the legislation. I received this press release, and other Members of the House must have received the same press release from the Minister of Transport and it does not even acknowledge that there is a clause in the Bill dealing with cost recovery or with the user-pay philosophy.

Why not come clean? I am sure that this press release was sent out to the users of Canada's ports; I am sure that this press release was sent out to all Government agencies dealing with transportation and port authorities and I suspect it was sent out to shippers. Why didn't it tell the truth? And if it didn't tell the truth, how can we trust this Government to make regulations that will benefit those who will be using our ports in the future?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I have made my point quite clearly.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to say a few words on this Bill. First I should say that I will not use the word "hypocrite". I will not call any hon. gentleman in this House a hypocrite. However, I remember that in 1974 and 1975 when a former Minister of Transport, as a matter of Government policy, brought in user-pay, I would say without using that unmparliamentary word that the Conservatives were just as vociferous as we were in opposing that. Of course, for the past year I have had to watch the spectacle of Conservatives making speeches that Liberals made a year and a half ago while Liberals are making speeches that Conservatives made a year and a half ago. Wihout using that unparliamentary word, I leave the matter for the consideration of all Hon. Members.

Transportation costs in a country with our kind of geography, climate and thin and widely scattered population should be a relatively neutral factor so that we do not discriminate against people because of where they happen to live or because of where they happen to manufacture, produce, ship or receive their goods. That is why in Canada, more so than in western European countries which are small and densely populated, it is required, because of our history, and no matter which Party is in power, that general tax revenues cover the costs of instrastructure like navigational aids, air traffic control, weather forecasting and the like. Those are public utilities and everyone has to use them both directly and indirectly.

I accept the word of the Parliamentary Secretary because I do not think even the Government is so stupid that it would try to get 100 per cent cost recovery. However, to think that there can be any significant increase in cost recovery under the user-pay principle in order to fight the deficit without harming the people and our competitiveness with the United States is to be dreaming in Technicolor. I do not know of any charges imposed by the U.S. Coast Guard, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers or the American weather services. They do not make any charges and the United States has a lot more people, money and things to move than Canada.

If it is logical to impose a nominal user-pay charge on navigational aids, weather forecasting, lighthouse services and the like, then I submit that it is equally logical to impose a nominal user-pay charge on traffic lights, stop signs and pedestrian crosswalks. If it is logical to have that sort of principle in place in legislation or as a matter of government policy, then it would be logical to have some competition in the market-place. There should be more than one outfit making weather forecasts and providing navigational aids. The users could then pick and choose according to the rates that are being charged. We know that that would not work, so there is a fundamental fallacy in the principle of user pay. Whether we are dealing with a nominal charge or with maximizing cost recovery to as great an extent as possible, the principle is self-defeating.

If we begin to impose additional charges on a port like Vancouver which has enough trouble as it is what with competing with Bellingham, Portland and Seattle just a few miles to the South, we will send the shipping to the southern ports. If costs are increased, no matter how nominally, for ports like Halifax, Saint John and Montreal, the ports on the northeast coast of the United States will be only too happy to take the business away from Canadian ports. The ramifications of that principle do not apply only to marine traffic. They then flow through to rail transport from Atlantic Canada and Montreal to central Canada and the Mid-West United States. We will lose that to the United States as well. It seems to me that the Government needs to take another look at that clause of the Bill. In fact, six months would be enough time for the Government to do that.

There is one thing about this particular legislation that we like. We are now creating legislation that deals with pollution control and the environment in Arctic Canada and this serves as an additional notice to the entire world and particularly the United States that those are our national waters and not an international passageway. It allows us to strengthen our case.

The provisions regarding certification and pollution regulation are generally good. No doubt, my colleagues from Thunder Bay and Skeena will have some amendments to move in committee that will strengthen those provisions. It is all very well to have those regulations enshrined in legislation, but if we do not have the capacity to enforce them, we become a laughing-stock in the international community. We do not have the capacity to enforce even the minimal regulations that now exist. We need more inspectors and we need more people stationed in the Arctic. I would suggest the use of an Armed Forces brigade that would be rotated every two or three months. We should give the members of our Armed Forces some experience in cold weather. After all, Canada is an Arctic country.

Mr. Andre: You can get cold-weather experience in southern Canada.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, I know you can get it in downtown Regina as well. However, in terms of our national sovereignty, the presence of members of our Armed Forces who are being trained in the military and in environmental issues and pollution control will be of benefit.

The Department of Transport and the Department of the Environment will need a greater capacity to deal with this than they have at present. That means spending more money. However, that is the kind of expenditure about which the people of Canada will not complain. They will be only too happy, even if it increases the deficit for a short period of time, to agree to that kind of extra expenditure.

I hope the Government will take a second look at this and do some more thinking about it. I also hope that Government Members will return to the arguments they made in 1974 and 1975 when they kicked the heck out of the Liberal Government for bringing in this fundamental policy of a national Government, a policy which is being continued in spades by the Progressive Conservatives.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cooper): The Hon. Member's time has expired.

• (1620)

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to enter into this debate. There is an interesting question with respect to whether or not the Coast Guard station in my constituency is the most southerly in Canada. I think it probably is. Partly for that reason I felt it important to add my voice to the concerns which have been raised by some of my colleagues with respect to the introduction of user-pay principles in the provision of Coast Guard services.

Coast Guard services with respect to my constituency are of special and particular concern because of their connection with the tourist industry. The tourist industry has been identified by local economic development groups as the area in which we see economic expansion and job growth in our community. In fact, we find a great many people who come across the inland waterways in the Essex County area to take advantage of tourist opportunities on the Canadian side, both in Lake St. Clair and in the Detroit River. I fear that if we institute a system of fees which could be applied to pleasure boats this could become a serious disincentive to those people who make the choice to take advantage of the tourist facilities on our side of the water system in which people have invested.

I raise a point which has been stressed by my colleague from Regina with respect to philosophically questioning the idea of user-pay. I think it is fair to say that in the country we have a history of transportation infrastructure which is in place and which was built by the community for the community. It is something which has contributed to the development of our country. At this stage in our history the putting into effect of an alien principle, a principle outside of our traditions, needs to be closely examined. We cannot examine the matter closely with respect to this Bill because the details of how the user-pay principle would be implemented are not spelled out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cooper): It being 4.20 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wondered if the Government House Leader or his representative could tell us what legislation this House will be looking forward to studying on Monday at 11 o'clock.

Mr. Dick: I will make a personal report to the Hon. Member in a few minutes, Mr. Speaker.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

NATIONAL HYMN ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills) moved that Bill C-224, an Act respecting the national hymn of Canada be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour to rise today to speak in favour of my own Private Member's Bill which is entitled the National Hymn Act.

Private Members' Hour is a process which to some of us is absolutely critical in terms of parliamentary legislative life since many of us come here and are not able to participate actively and constructively in many dimensions of that life. Private Members' Hour is ours. I genuinely appreciate the process. Personally, I am even more delighted that the Government has indicated it is prepared to see the subject matter of this Bill referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. Other Hon. Members will agree with me that that in itself is a major victory since for years and years we were not able to have our Private Member's Bills move on in the process. However, as the reform of Parliament moves forward we will come to play an increasingly more significant role in the legislative life of the nation. That will only be for the good of the nation, and I thank the Government for agreeing to the process.

In terms of the Bill I wish to commend Dr. Kenneth Hicken, a professor at the University of Lethbridge, whom I suppose is also somewhat frustrated by the process since it was in February of 1984 that he approached me with respect to a national hymn. It was not before the House until February of 1985 when it received first reading. Today, it is being dealt with in terms of second reading and reference to a standing committee. We who are involved in the legislative process realize that is not a long time, but for a private citizen it seems like forever. I am sure he will be pleased that this Bill is moving on.

I would also like to commend Dr. Gaston Renaud, another professor from the University of Lethbridge who translated the hymn into French. Thus, it is a beautiful bilingual national hymn.

As Hon. Members become more familiar with the hymn and once it is referred to committee, they may find it to be appropriate as a national hymn for Canada. I realize that in the committee other songs will be considered to fill the role of a national hymn for the country. While the hymn which is being considered now may not be selected as the national hymn for Canada, Dr. Hicken deserves an incredible amount of credit for commencing the process.

Some object to the idea of Canada having a national hymn. I disagree with that. In the public life of a nation it is these types of national symbols which can see a nation through bad times as well as good. We have a national anthem which is for great patriotic events and July 1, celebrations where the country is happy. However, it is good to have a hymn to handle the crises in our nation. After all, we will face crises as we go on. Perhaps a national hymn would be appropriate for the death of leading Canadians and more appropriately sung than the national anthem. I believe it is a valid idea. I do not intend to speak any more because I wish to hear from other Members of the House in order that they can put their Parties' views forward.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to speak in the debate on Bill C-224, an Act respecting the national hymn of Canada. It is a great honour for me to speak on the Bill which was introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), for whom I have nothing but the greatest respect. It is also appropriate to congratulate the Hon. Member for introducing this important Bill since it gave me the chance to explore the question of national symbols as I sought to inform myself for this discussion. I might mention that in my research I had the good fortune to come across the transcript of a broadcast interview carried out by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and, as it happens, it was with the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills.

I would like to say at the outset that I thought it was admirably candid of the Hon. Member to acknowledge the fact that the inspiration for the hymn came not from him but from one of his constituents, Dr. Kenneth Hicken, a professor at the University of Lethbridge. He composed the music and wrote the lyrics. It was translated into French by another University of Lethbridge professor, Dr. Gaston R. Renaud. His admission came in response to a question which I suspect is common to many Canadians, namely, why do we need a national hymn in this country? The Hon. Member replied in these words, and I quote:

● (1630)

> Well, I think Dr. Hicken hit the nail on the head when this country's come through some real tough times . . . and so he simply decided that what he needed, in view of the moral situation of the country, and the East-West antipathies, and the French-English problems . . . that we needed to have a national hymn to remind us that there's more to living than just our own lives—

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, when Professor Hicken got to thinking about the need for a national hymn, he sat down and composed one.

In that CBC interview, the Hon. Member suggested that for very special, solemn occasions—particularly if the Queen were here—Canada could have what he called a triad of God Save the Queen, our national anthem, O Canada, and the national hymn. He suggested its use would be limited to times of national crisis when we are trying to bring people together. A national emergency, perhaps, or wartime, would be an appropriately important time to have a national hymn. He went on to say that while our national anthem is excellent, and the proposed hymn is in no way intended to supplant it, there are occasions where you would want something more solemn, something along the lines of when the Americans employ their hymn America the Beautiful. It would, he said, be a kind of companion to the national anthem.

The Hon. Member said he is pleasantly surprised at the number of people who support the idea of a national hymn and indicated that while he is proud of the Hicken hymn, he feels that, if the Government and Parliament favour the principle of a national hymn, it might be well to open the matter to a country-wide submission of hymns. He foresaw a sort of hymn-writing competition, and it is here that I am strongly in agreement with the Hon. Member. I am one who is enormously stirred by the strains of O Canada sung sincerely, and I trust Canadians of whatever descent will never cease to respond with pride to our anthem.

A national anthem, like a national flag, is an important external symbol of nationhood. I had the pleasure, as a back-bencher in a previous Parliament, of introducing a Private Members' Bill to have O Canada recognized as Canada's official national anthem. Of course, as a back-bencher in the Opposition that did not happen, but I had the honour of being the official spokesman for the Conservative Party. The Government of the day brought in legislation which finally brought the idea to fruition.

I feel, however, that the words to O Canada have not been publicized enough and a lot more should be done. I also feel the need for more songs celebating our land. It is at this point that I would venture to offer a refinement to my hon. colleague. Would he agree that a national competition to write songs about Canada would be a very beneficial exercise and that they need not have a religious connotation in the way of a national hymn?

We all recognize that about one third of our fellow Canadians are of a lineage other than native—French or Anglo-Celt—and that, consequently, a number of our fellow citizens follow religious beliefs which would not necessarily square with the sentiments of a conventional hymn.

As I mentioned earlier, I have taken the opportunity to look into the question of national symbols and how they have evolved. We have a wealth of symbols, all of which play an important role in our life. They represent and project a image of our country, they provide a link with our heritage and give us a feeling of continuity and serve to give each of us a concept of our identity. The history of the maple leaf as a Canadian emblem is almost as long as that of the beaver. It has been stated that the maple leaf was considered as an emblem as early as 1700. For years the maple leaf has been used as a symbol and identity mark for regimental badges of the Canadian forces. Since 1965 it has been part of our national flag. The beaver, which portrays diligence and hard work, was used as an emblem by the Huron Indians and first appeared as a heraldic symbol of Canada on a coat of arms granted in 1633.

Symbols have the capacity of expressing varied and often complex ideas through imagery. The symbolism of flags, emblems and coats of arms reflect the ideologies, history, beliefs and aspirations of a nation's people. I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that a nation's symbols must truly reflect the nation as it is, and as it is perceived by its people, or at least the overwhelming majority of them.

It would be a brave individual who would attempt to define a consensus on the matter of national symbols. Alas, he or she would have to wrestle with the perennial Canadian problem of identity. I came across an interesting letter recently in the Toronto Daily Star. The writer was dealing with the multicultural quality of our society and wrote that there are some 70 languages in use now in Ontario and that more than 50 per cent of Metro-Toronto's population is from outside the country. The letter dealt with the problem of Canadian identity and noted that Canadians often refer critically to the "over-developed America flag-waving brand of nationalism". He said, "This rah-rahing has served the U.S. very well, thank you. Maybe it is this fervency we are actually looking for". Which brings me, Mr. Speaker, back to my thesis. I wish to support the spirit of this Bill, but more, I wish to support the observation of its sponsor that we ought to encourage a national competition. My preference would be for a competition to write songs to glorify our country, to sing the praises of Canada and its regions and not specifically in the form of a hymn.

I am not sure whether the entire populace should be turned loose on this kind of contest or whether it should be an invitational competition among the known top song-writers of the country, people like Gordon Lightfoot, Bobby Gimby, and others. After all, we have produced a wealth of Canadian musical talent from Oscar Peterson and Joni Mitchell to Anne Murray and Hank Snow. As someone said, Mr. Speaker, we are not short of symbols which remind us that we live in a unique country and that we have a heritage which we treasure. We are, however, short of musical symbols, and the Hon. Member's Bill, while contemplating a national hymn, has much merit in requiring that we give thought to music to celebrate our nation. It is in this spirit, Mr. Speaker, that I move:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-224, An Act respecting the national hymn of Canada, be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject-matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cooper): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Heap: May I speak to this motion, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cooper): The Hon. Member may speak to the motion.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): The motion, I believe, is a practical motion and I would not, of course, wish to oppose it. However, since this was scheduled for debate, I do wish to make some comments on both the substance of the motion as it has now been moved and on the only example which illustrates the possible content of the motion which is before us. If this is going to be discussed in committee, I would hope that Members of the Committee would take into account certain matters which are illustrated in the hymn we have here, for example, the word "native" as in "our native land". Canada is my native land. It is my mother and father's native land and the native land of some others of my ancestors. However, it is not the native land of most of the people who live in my constituency in the usual sense of the word. There are also the aboriginal peoples of Canada for whom it has, perhaps—I do not really know—an ironic twist. They are not in a sense any more native than someone who is born here but they are aware of the historic division between themselves and us over this issue. So that I would hope that the committee would look—if it's going to choose a hymn—would look for one that steers clear of that kind of difficulty. There's another type of difficulty altogether in the word "thee" and the word "thou". "We raise our thanks to—God for thee". This is a usage which is beginning to disappear, at least in the English language. I don't wish to comment on the French usage, but to the extent that a song of this sort may be used in English, we have to consider the fact that the word "thee" has changed its meaning over the last four centuries in this sense; although it still is used to address a single person rather than a group which we address by "you", it is almost never used now except to address God. In the time of Queen Elizabeth I of England it was used very often to address any person. Since that time there was an attempt to continue that usage in English by people such as the Quakers who considered that to address a person as "thee" or "thou" was very properly intimate and that one should talk to members of one's family, to close friends and to God as "thee" or "thou" as grammar might indicate. However, the big majority, a very great majority of the users of English now use "you" to address even the closest members of the family. "Thee" or "thou" is very little used for intimacy or for the individual relationship.

So what happens then in the English language when we use "thee" or "thou" to address God we put him away off in the sky. We put him farther away than anybody else. Instead of the usage, for example, that we have in the King James Bible, which used Elizabethan English, and which also said in the psalm that God is closer then breathing, closer to me than my own breath, a very strong sense of intimacy with God notwithstanding his power. Now this word "thee" and the word "thou" put him off at the far end of the universe. That I regret. There are many people now who are changing the words of hymns and prayers in English so as no longer to push God away by addressing him as of "thee" or "thou".

Another change that is becoming much more common is to try to write our hymns in a way that does not exclude half the human race from being of the same sex as God, does not call God exclusively "him" or "he". I see some people smile at that but I don't find generally the women in my church smiling at that as though that were a silly idea. I find there is a strong feeling amongst many of the women and men in the Anglican Church that we should find ways of addressing ourselves to God through word symbols that do not separate earthly men and women, do not make God exclusively male. I would hope that if we were to choose any hymn such as this for Canada we would bear that in mind.

I have one other concern with this particular hymn and that is that there seems to be really very little content to it except a kind of self-congratulation put into the language of the worship of God, that we're so glad that God has done such a good job of making Canada a good country and us good people and it's not clear whether he's the lucky one or we're the lucky ones.

This is a problem that has bedevilled—I use that word advisedly—has bedevilled worshippers certainly throughout the known history of the Jewish religion and the Christian religion and probably, for all I know, in the other religions of the world as well and amongst the people who conscientiously try to avoid any religious attachment. The form in which we find it in what Christians all the Old Testament is most clearly where the prophets preach against idolatry. Idolatry in their day was not a funny little superstitious use of images of stone or something like that. That was only the form of it. The idolatry of their day was a matter of the glorification of the state and the identifying of the state with the deity and that if you are against the state you are against God and that if you worship God in any way that's a little bit different from what the state provides then you should be killed.

Now, there were different opinions as there were switches of power during those centuries in the area we now call Palestine—different opinions about who was the state and who got to say what's the truth about God and just how people are going to worship him or her. And they had, as it happens, a long tradition of thousands of years behind them already as seeing God as both male and female. That became a very bitter fight in itself. So I think we have to be very careful about a plan to impose on the people of Canada, by some kind of statement of authority, a hymn which identifies God with the Canadian state because the Canadian state imposed the hymn.

It is said we need one because we only use O Canada for great occasions. In fact, I find O Canada used on many, many occasions and I still find God Save the Queen used on many occasions. I don't think we have been lacking in some way to express patriotism in a conventional religious mode. However, if a lack is felt, if we need still another hymn, I see no objection in principle to having it, but I'm very uneasy at the idea that we should try to have a kind of imposed or enforced unity among us by using a hymn as a peptalk.

When I was in high school and university we had pep rallies, we had freshmen initiation, we had the usual horseplay and so on and it could be endured then because we were just kids, or almost kids. But I would like to leave that behind me as an adult and not engage in sort of pep rallies and peptalks, not treat the worship of God as a way, as it were, of trying to hypnotize ourselves into believing that we all agree on everything, we have no divisions and no struggles among us. That, for example, if that is the picture some people have that we have no divisions and no struggles, it might be untrue to our present scene, but it certainly would be untrue to the Jewish and Christian tradition from which I for one come. Therefore, I have learned over the years what I didn't think about so much in my youth, I learned to respect the concept of the separation of church and state. I have my Christian faith. In fact I'm a priest of the Anglican church, but I don't want to push my religion on anybody else, not even by saying, "Everybody stand up and sing this hymn because it's our national hymn".

The history of Israel, and for that matter the history of the Christian church, shows that Christians have had, from time to time, the gravest heart searchings about the state, about the territorial Government, about the human authority, and there are times when Christians have had to rebel against the state. We can all find them in past history. It gets a little touchier when we look into the modern century, but in past history it can't be disagreed with. So I would favour the idea of having this opened up in a committee discussion and I would hope that a variety of songs might be considered. I have one—I don't have the full text here, I only have the chorus. It's a poem—

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Sing it.

Mr. Heap: Well, if the mover of the motion will sing his song I'll sing mine, but I don't want to give the Speaker a problem with Beauchesne. There is probably something in Beauchesne about that. But this is a poem by the late Joe Wallace who was a poet of Nova Scotia, I think Cape Breton perhaps. I stand to be corrected on that. He was a miner.

• (1650)

The chorus of his poem is this, "O Canada, O promised land, this is the dream our fathers planned; and though the rich have ravaged you, we swear to make that dream come true". I would hope that would be considered as well.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-224, an Act respecting the National Hymn of Canada.

This Bill, and I quote:

—would provide Canadians with a national hymn in both official languages and could be used on occasions of a sacred or patriotic nature.

Mr. Speaker, I would like my views to be read into the record, so that the committee examining the amendment to this Bill will be able to consider my comments in future debates on this question.

Needless to say, I agree entirely with the reasons behind this Bill. To love one's country is a legitimate and noble sentiment that all the Members of this House who are dedicated to the well-being of this country can understand and share. It would, in fact, be moving to see the members of a community give free rein to this feeling by singing together a solemn national hymn.

This hymn could forge one more link in our national unity. It is a fact that we need certain links to maintain our unity. But what theme could be the inspiration for this hymn? With what theme could each and everyone of us be expected to identify?

Unlike most countries, we cannot say that we have a homogeneous culture. With the exception of a small minority, the people living in Canada today were not born here or at least their parents were not born here. In fact, a very considerable part of the population of Canada was born under foreign skies.

As geographers keep telling us, the physical characteristics of this continent make it entirely appropriate for trade to flow in a north-south direction. It would have been entirely logical to see Canada absorbed by the States south of the border, which would have made it unnecessary to create artificial barriers to the natural flow of trade and transportation. But we knew what we wanted, and struggling against time and tide, we have progressed along our narrow strip of intermittently populated land, from one far-off ocean to another.

And how did we manage to do this? By the only means Canada had to populate its vast territory: immigration.

We can read the following in the foreword to a book published under the title: The Last Best West and written by Jean Bruce at the request of the Multiculturalism Branch of the Department of the Secretary of State. It is a history of how the Canadian West was colonized, illustrated with many photographs from that time.

"As the great tide of settlers surged into Canada in the years 1896-1914, to claim the free homesteads advertised by the government, immigration officers laboured to record a bewildering variety of nationalities, languages and occupations."

"Inevitably, the breakdown was somewhat arbitrary and rough. "Austrian" immigrants included Germans, Bohemians, Moravians, Slovaks, Ruthenians, Slovenes, Servians, Croats, Roumanians and Magyars. "Russians" were often actually Jews and Germans, sometimes Lithuanians and Poles. Occasionally, "German" meant only that the settler had sailed from Hamburg."

Incoming "Americans" came, in fact, from diverse backgrounds. Language was a major problem, and sometimes it was compounded by illiteracy. Harried immigration officers often wrote their own crude approximation of difficult names upon the entry forms, and many immigrants used that version in the years that followed, and passed it on to their descendants. The variety of newcomers was infinite.

The period from 1897 to 1914 marked a turning point in the history of Canadian immigration. During that short period of eighteen years, Canada received more immigrants than during its entire previous history. During that period, more than three million immigrants landed on our soil to find a home. About 1,250,000 were from the British Isles, 1,000,000 from the United States, 800,000 from Continental Europe and 20,000 from the Orient, including India.

Mr. Speaker, one may conclude from this picture that these immigrants who came from all parts of the world were for the most part white Caucasians. However, we were not all white or Protestant or Catholic. Canada has had a Chinese community, for instance, for over 125 years, and we can say that the members of that community have contributed to a very large and profitable extent to the development of some of our large cities, especially in economic terms. They have made distinguished careers in many disciplines including the arts, science and the liberal professions. In Canada they have managed to preserve their language and a large part of their cultural heritage. How many are Christians, agnostics or members of other denominations? I have not the faintest idea.

Arabs as well settled in Canada a long time ago. In fact the first Arabs landed here over a century ago, and many more have since come to Canada from various Arab countries, so much so that a number of Canadian cities are now home to industrious Arab communities. The Arab community easily blended in with the Canadian people and, as it has done for thousands of years, it made a generous contribution to the western world. In mathematics for instance, the famous Arabic numerals are still in use the world over. The wealth of Greek philosophy, the mainstay of contemporary western thinking, was set aside during the Dark ages and would probably be forgotten by now had Islamic theologians not made painstaking research in the major libraries of Moorish Spain. Even in Canada the Arab community has been able to preserve its ancestral culture. In that case, however, the main religion of this group is well known, as evidenced by the many mosques we can see here in Ottawa and elsewhere throughout Canada.

A relatively recent phenomenon attests to the generous conscience of Canadians. Mr. Speaker, I am referring to the poor unfortunate people who were chased right out of the bloodied lands of Southeast Asia, the Boat People as they came to be known. Those human beings of strong character had to live through experiences they did not deserve, but they were brought here in great numbers to live within our heart-warming and generous society where they were provided with the means to build a new and happy life for themselves. And they are proving to us that, humanitarian considerations aside, it was a sound investment for Canada.

In short, Canada is a genuine multicultural society—an amazing discovery for those who have never thought of our country in such terms. But the fact is that one third of Canadians are not of native, English or French ancestry. Their number is growing, just as the multiplicity of their countries of origin is widening, just as their numerous contributions to the growth and well-being of our country are increasing.

This trend is ever more apparent in our urban centres, and it is a reality which has significant consequences for all of us. Strictly speaking, Canada's diversity cannot properly be defined as a mosaic. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, a mosaic brings to mind a static and unchanging image, whereas the make-up of the Canadian population does change from day to day. I would suggest it would be more accurate to say kaleidoscope, reflecting as it does ever varied, ever new and ever dynamic patterns, with all the challenges such a situation represents for us elected representatives of the people.

• (1700)

The Federal Government believes that the people are indeed Canada's finest resources. We believe also that our wealth is based not only on a wide variety of resource industries such as fisheries, forestries, mining, and vast agricultural lands such as those found in my great riding of Argenteuil-Papineau, but also on the diversity of our human resources, which are a major factor in the enrichment of our multicultural society.

The bottom line is that multiculturalism represents for every Canadian man and woman his or her country, people and culture.

To return to my question, what common theme could we use to conjure up a collective ideal? We have a number of symbols which are readily understandable and acceptable. The beaver is first and foremost in my mind. This industrious little animal, even though it is often a source of headaches for many landowners because of the dams which it builds and which flood farmlands and woodlots, is a perfect example of unremitting effort. The maple leaf, which is represented on our national flag, is also quite distinctive. It calls to mind our huge forests which were used to build our first settlements and, thanks to its simple and easily recognized design, makes for a great national symbol.

For quite a long time now these two symbols have been universally associated with Canada. They have no trait which would characterize this or that culture in particular. They are perfect and could be readily accepted by the Canadian people as a whole. Beside dedication to work which is a trait often associated with the beaver, they embody no idea or ideal which would require a careful scrutiny.

Such is not the case of the new hymn. I share the feelings which it expresses. But I do so simply because I am a Christian. But there certainly are a great many good and loyal Canadians who are not Christian. Their freedom of religion is guaranteed by our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Our National Anthem is part of our heritage and it has been more and more popular for over a century. And few people really object to the verse "il sait porter la croix". But to impose outright a new hymn which has not stood the test of years to a great many people whose freedom of religion is guaranteed by the Constitution would certainly not contribute to the unity of the Canadian people.

[English]

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to participate in the debate on the motion presently before the House. I would like to begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) for his initiative. I also congratulate Dr. Kenneth Hicken the composer and Dr. Renaud the translator of the hymn. This hymn as well as others should be considered by the committee when it looks into this important matter of national symbols and a national hymn. This subject has caused some difficulty in Canadian history, perhaps one with which we have not always been comfortable.

I remember reading an article by a professor at Queen's University, I believe in 1958, who asked the rhetorical question, is that anyone in this country who noticed or is interested in the fact that although Canada is unquestionably an independent country we do not seem to have the usual national symbols characteristic of an independent country?

In 1958 we did not have an official national anthem. We did not have an official or a distinctive Canadian flag. That situation gradually changed. A consensus developed on both issues, the national flag and the anthem, less so in the former case. The flag debate was a very emotional debate in 1965 and I believe a very difficult one.

I grew up in the 1960s. Only just a few years after the flag sitting at the right hand of you, Mr. Speaker, became our national flag everyone accepted it, yet it had been the centre of so much controversy and debate.

O Canada is a fairly old tune in Canadian history. Its acceptance as our national anthem came gradually for many people. As a child in Niagara Falls in kindergarden in the late 1950s in the first song we were taught on the first day of school was God Save The Queen. I remember seeing a hockey game in Detroit. The U.S. and Canadian national anthems were played as part of tradition. I heard O Canada and I was curious. Why would they not be playing God Save The Queen? My father pointed out to me that O Canada was more distinctive of Canada and it was appropriate in international fora for O Canada to be played.

In the last four years of public school both O Canada and God Save The Queen were played every morning. By the time I got to high school in 1967 only O Canada was played.

I have noted that the subject of O Canada being our national anthem has been in committee since 1968. I have a feeling, because of the controversy surrounding the debate on the national flag that parliamentarians lacked the impetus to get going on making O Canada official. By 1980, Parliament caught up with history, so to speak, and granted what was described as legal status to a heart-felt tradition. I believe the Bill went through with discussion but no dissent. There were certain problems that people perceived with the words of O Canada and, although it was proclaimed in 1980, Parliament had been looking at the question of O Canada and its words since 1967.

The committee issued its report in February, 1968 and unanimously recommended that the Government immediately adopt O Canada as our national anthem. In its recommendation, the committee slightly modified the original words as writtten by Judge Robert Stanley Weir, who I believe later became a chief justice of Canada. The original French was not changed. I feel that those who speak and understand French have an advantage when it comes to O Canada. As far as I know, there was no particular controversy with the French words. The controversy seemed to be about Robert Stanley Weir's words. Accordingly the committee, in its wisdom, adjusted slightly the words of O Canada at that time. As I said, when it was passed, there was no dissent.

• (1710)

When O Canada officially became our country's national anthem, the then Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, the late Hon. Walter Baker, suggested that everyone in the House should stand and sing O Canada. I am sure it must have been a very moving moment in the history of this Chamber. The national anthem was proclaimed on July 1 and was sung for the first time in the Dominion Day ceremonies of 1980.

I mentioned earlier that the words were slightly altered. It was felt that in the original words there was a little too much repetition and that they leaned too heavily on the words "stand on guard for thee". I believe that line was in the song five times and with repetitions was repeated fifteen times. I think there was some justification for changing it. It was modified slightly.

At the time people really questioned all the words. They asked the question: For what are we standing on guard? Pundits were quick to point out the decline in Canada's military status, but I always felt that the words did not have a strict military meaning. I always felt that "stand on guard for thee" was just an expression of people's love for country. At the same time, when the military or the security of the country was called into question Canadians did stand on guard. In fact, going back to the War of 1812, and before, there have always been people who have fought for this land and were alsays there when Canada needed them. Therefore, as I said, because of the repetition there were some minor adjustments.

Other words were suggested, but those which were accepted changed "keep Canada glorious and free" to "God keep our land". I like that change. Certainly it was in accord with my own philosophy that I hoped God would protect the country which I loved. At the same time I appreciate the fact that there are those people who have a different conception of what God is and what God should be. When the committee looks at this, I hope it has sensitivity to the views of other people. I would be the first one to say that perhaps we will never reach a complete consensus on the words of O Canada. My guess is that when the committee looks at it and tries to decide on a national hymn, it will not be universally accepted.

It is the same with the national anthems of other countries. For example, if Americans sat down today to write a new national anthem I am sure it would not have the militaristic flavour of the present one. I think national anthems or hymns must be looked at in the context in which they were written. The Star-Spangled Banner was written during the British attack on Baltimore in the War of 1812, and of course reflects that.

This is one of the problems I have with continually making changes to the English version of O Canada. Surely the man who wrote the words considered O Canada to be a work of art. I have some difficulty with the idea that we should keep revising and updating them to current thinking. There is probably no committee of the House of Representatives of the United States cleaning up some of the language in The Star-Spangled Banner and getting rid of some of the militarism which is not quite in keeping with the standards of American society today.

The situation is the same with God Save The Queen. It was written at a particular time in British history. People have generally accepted its words.

When I talk about further changes to O Canada, most people indicate that they had enough trouble learning the old ones and ask us to leave it alone. I appreciate that there are people who have some difficulty with it. If I were to give any advice to the people who will sit down to review this question, it would be to ask them to look at the concept of a national hymn. I think it is a good idea.

These symbols of Canadian identity have been inspirations. They are something to which people feel very close. In the case of our flag, for instance, people feel a warmth about it. Someone mentioned a stirring when the words of O Canada are sung, so I believe there is a place for a national hymn. However, there will never be unanimous agreement on a particular hymn or the idea that there should be a hymn. As far as possible the committee should be sensitive to the concerns of people when it actually makes a choice.

Before resuming my seat, I should like to conclude by congratulating my colleagues for their initiative in this regard.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I commend Hon. Members who have spoken to the Bill this afternoon. I am sure Hon. Members will agree that if anyone else speaks, the motion will be killed and effectively the Bill will be killed. Therefore I ask of you, Mr. Speaker, to put the motion now in your fine style.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cooper): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Stewart) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cooper): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cooper): Accordingly, the order is discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cooper): It being after five o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5.18 p.m.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, October 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Henderson (p. 7687).

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is an excellent way to start the week by once again pointing out to the Government that Bill C-75, in particular Clause 4 thereof, will severely hurt a number of communities, ports and industries in the country. For example, we know that things are not quite as good as they used to be in the forest-based industry. They are marginally successful but are subject to every fluctuation in the market-place. If Clause 4 of Bill C-75 goes through and adds any amount to the cost of water-borne transport of raw pulp, newsprint and wood products, we will see additional lay-offs in the forest-based industry. We will see some companies finding themselves in situations where they have to shut down for a period of time. We may find the major employer of communities ceasing to exist. Once again I ask the Government to reconsider Clause 4.

My preference would have been to have the Government set aside this clause and refer it to the Standing Committee on Transport, the body under the new rules which deals with philosophical matters. The remainder of the Bill could be left to go to a legislative committee. The Government has worked on the specifics for a number of years. I gather from discussions on Friday with workers involved in plying the Great Lakes and the oceans that these specifics have been in the works for some years. Let us set aside the clause, the principle of which has really not had the benefit of public discussion or in-depth consultation with the industries affected.

If the clause gets to committee, there will be a host of individuals, groups, companies and communities knocking at our door and presenting a case that this is a mistake, that this clause should not go forward because it will hurt them. Harbour commissions, municipalities, pulp and paper companies, wood product companies, potash companies, iron ore companies, shipping companies, elevator companies and grain producers—every one of them will be affected by the Bill.

While we do not know at this point in time what percentage of the cost of providing Coast Guard services will be passed back, and although the Minister provided us with a total budgetary figure, we know, for example, that this year in Thunder Bay the Coast Guard has been negotiating with the Harbour Commission for 100 per cent cost recovery for dredging services within the Thunder Bay harbour. If that is an indication of what we have to look forward to and if this clause goes forth, clearly, as was suggested by those in the industry, the Government cost of using the Seaway alone will double. We have to add to that our current security problems in the system where in 13 months two major incidents have blocked the Seaway, making our reputation in world markets questionable in terms of our ability to deliver on time.

We also have to add the $30 million which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) proposed to remove from the assets of the Seaway Authority in the 1986-87 fiscal year, along with indications by the head of the Seaway Authority that that will bring about an increase in Seaway tolls of 25 per cent to 30 per cent. As well we have to add the push by the Laurentian Pilotage Authority for increases which, depending on whom one talks with, range anywhere from 12 per cent to 43 per cent for one year. We will price the Seaway out of business. The whole question of cost recovery of user-fees on the Seaway and in the ports should be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport for full and comprehensive discussion with those affected. Once the Government has had the opportunity to review the information, it can then make a determination as to the cost benefit of such a policy. Then we will know, before any legislative implementation, what the impact will be, what it will do to pulp and paper producers and what it will do to farmers. Let us have everything up front ahead of time, before we introduce this kind of legislation.

Last Thursday in the House, the Minister was questioning one of my colleagues with regard to the level of current cost recovery. I believe it was indicated that somewhere between 2 per cent and 4 per cent of the current cost of Coast Guard services are recovered by the Government. He was asking if that was a fair relationship, something like 4 to 80.

• (1110)

This cannot be dealt with in isolation. The other Government imposed costs of the Seaway that are borne by the users, for example, have to be examined at the same time. The Seaway has operated under a mandate of full cost recovery for 26 years so its costs, tolls, fees and charges have to be put in with the cost of the Coast Guard services, because the bottom line is that it will first be paid by the industry, that is, those who move the products, but ultimately it will be paid for either by the producer or by the consumer. We have to examine the impact on those two bodies.

The concept of user-pay is not a new one. It has been around for many, many years. I find it ironic that what was put in by a Liberal Government is now being pursued by a Conservative Government. Then, again, we have always suggested that there is not that much difference between the two. I think it is unfortunate that they have seen fit to follow in this manner.

I would like to wrap up my comments by asking once again if the Minister would agree to withdraw this particular clause because, quite frankly, if he does not we will be spending many, many hours and many days in the legislative committee dealing with Clause 4 and perhaps not giving full discussion to the other very important clauses within the Bill.

I would encourage the Government to withdraw the request for expediency in dealing with this Act so as to ensure the ability of focusing properly on the Bill. I thank you for the time you allowed me, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is the following. Mr. Henderson, seconded by Mr. Baker, moved:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-75, An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence".

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment please say yeas.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the amendment lost.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Henderson) negatived.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Now that we are back on the Bill again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on Bill C-75. One of the things that I note about this Bill is that it is an omnibus kind of Bill, the kind of Bill that the Conservatives used to take strenuous exception to when they were in opposition but now seem to find very little trouble proposing when they are on the government side.

This is a Bill which deals with things as diverse as the Coast Guard—

Mr. Mazankowski: We want the legislative committee to do its job.

Mr. Althouse: —and the question of Seaway tolls. It is the question of the Seaway tolls on which I want to spend most of the time of my remarks because they affect the part of the country that I come from probably more than any other aspect of this particular legislative proposal.

• (1115)

Since its inception, the Seaway has attempted to operate on the basis of cost recovery but it has been recognized that in order to recover costs, one must take cognizance of volume as well as of price. Over the past number of years, there has been a dramatic reduction in volume of cargo on the Seaway and so the Government seems to be proposing to offset that with a dramatic increase in price. I submit that that will only exacerbate the situation rather than improve it.

The Seaway has a surplus of funds used to take care of emergencies or depreciation and repairs. In fact, a good chunk of that $30 million that has been set aside for such emergencies will be required to repair the Welland Canal, which, as we know, has collapsed on one side recently and has forced all shipping on the Seaway to terminate until repairs can be made. That the Government is attempting to do away with this surplus is reminicent of the move made by the Conservative Government of Saskatchewan shortly after it took office in 1981. Prior to that time, hospitals and senior citizens' homes had such surplus funds set aside to repair windows and roofs on the buildings for which they were responsible. The new Government insisted on absorbing all of those funds into operating expenses and by the simple expedient of cutting back provincial grants to those facilities until such time as the surplus was used up. These facilities were then faced with the prospect of having to replace rotted windows or roofs that had begun to leak without any surplus set aside to do so. They had to lobby the Government for loans to make the necessary repairs, repairs which had been taken into consideration before they were forced to dispose of those surplus funds by the Government.

What is being proposed here is similar to that situation. Funds that would normally be set aside for normal wear and tear on the Seaway will be gradually absorbed and the Seaway will be forced to finance on a day-to-day basis using higher fees. The higher fees will affect not only the ability of those in my region to export grain east through the Seaway but it will have an even heavier impact on those people who work for the Seaway and who live in the towns and communities surrounding it. Literally thousands of jobs will be lost as traffic begins to taper off.

We have seen, partly because of the reduced demand for steel, a limited volume of traffic going up the Seaway carrying iron ore. As Hon. Members know, the bread and butter, so to speak, of the Seaway has been grain carried in ships going downstream with the ships coming back full of iron ore to service the steel industry in central Canada and the heartland of the United States. When iron ore shipments tapered off because of the decreased demand for steel, the cost of the entire trip, both downstream and upstream, had to fall on the grain shipments. Therefore, charges for shipping grain had to be increased since there was no back-haul. The shippers had to charge more money to move the grain and now they are faced with a fairly large increase in the lockage fees imposed on those who use the Seaway. Higher lockage fees combined with higher shipping fees and with the increases to railway tariffs that we will see as the Crow rate is phased out means that farmers and grain companies will be looking twice at using the Seaway because of its cost. It is becoming too expensive to use in comparison with shipping through Vancouver, Prince Rupert or even Churchill. In fact, some companies have projected that as the provisions of the Crow rate diminish and the actual rates paid by farmers to railways increase in very short order we will be at a point where it will be cheaper for western Canadian farmers to ship their grain south through New Orleans than it will be to ship it through eastern Canadian ports. That will cause the freezing of jobs which now exist in the Seaway. It will also mean that Canadian shipping will virtually disappear.

● (1120)

I remind Members of the House that the only Canadian component of shipping which we have in the country exists in the freshwater area. I am referring to the Seaway ships and lakers which form the biggest component of our shipping facilities. With the proposals contained in the Bill before us we are kicking in the teeth that last bit of shipping ability which the country has.

I am suggesting we delay the passage of the Bill. I suggest that the Government use the time to rethink its proposals with respect to the Seaway tolls. We will be opposing the proposals which are in the Bill. We suggest that all Members of the House support us in this move because it will mean a great deal to prairie farmers to maintain the current level of Seaway tolls in order to keep the Seaway going. This move recognizes that the declining volumes which have occurred are probably temporary and that other sectors of the economy will again use the Seaway. The volume times the price will result in a full cost recovery one more time and the Seaway will once again become viable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is the following one. Mr. Mazankowski, seconded by Mr. Merrithew, moves that Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Mazankowski), which was agreed to on the following division.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed, from Thursday, October 3, consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to speak to Bill C-62.

The objectives of this Bill, which are to promote employment equity for women, visible minorities, the handicapped and native peoples, are excellent and they have my full support. However, I am opposed to the Bill because it does not contain the necessary mechanisms to achieve the objectives with which the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) claims to provide this Bill.

With the many pressure groups representing women and the three other classes of people mentioned earlier and covered by Bill C-62, I believe it is fundamental that a Bill promoting employment equity should contain effective implementation mechanisms, specific time frames and penalties. Suppose we look at Bill C-62 in further detail.

Clause 5 provides that "on or before June 1, 1988 and on or before June 1 of each year thereafter, every employer shall file with the Minister a report in respect of the immediately preceding calendar year containing information in accordance with prescribed instructions" regarding the four groups covered by Bill C-62, indicating the industrial sector, occupational groups, salary ranges and number of employees hired.

Nowhere do we find a concrete application of the main purpose of the Act as described in Clause 2, which provides that:

> The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the work place so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfilment of that goal, to ameliorate the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada.

As far as the main purpose of the Bill is concerned, the Progressive Conservative Government has failed to provide any penalty for companies that fail to comply. It merely asks for a report on the status of those of their employees who belong to the four groups in question. If employers fail to file this report, then they may be fined.

However, Mr. Speaker, with or without a report, employers will still be able to stray from employment equity objectives without being penalized in any way.

Bill C-62 claims to be a response to the Abella Report published last fall. Judge Rosalie Abella had a mandate to investigate employment opportunities for women, native peoples, the handicapped and visible minorities within Crown corporations and certain corporations that are wholly-owned by the federal Government.

[English]

Among the most interesting conclusions of the Abella Report, three enforcement models were proposed to ensure the development of employment equity guidelines. Each of those rely on a specific organism to monitor employment equity—either the Canadian Human Rights Commission, the Canadian Labour Market and Productivity Centre or some other organization of the same calibre.

Judge Abella recommended contract compliance for companies doing business with the federal Government and promoted equal pay for work of equal value. She recommended that training programs be developed in consultation with local advisory panels, and concluded that a major barrier to equality in the workplace for women was the absence of affordable child care of adequate quality.

[Translation]

The Bill has failed to take into account several of the recommendations made by Judge Abella, and we can expect the four groups concerned by this Bill to be very disappointed about the voluntary aspect of employment equity programs.

Whatever the Minister of Employment and Immigration may say and claim, employment equity will remain no more than a concept for quite some time. The absence of penalties in the Bill is tantamount to making these programs voluntary, and women on the labour market need legislation to give them their rightful place.

Judge Abella has explained in her report that voluntary employment equity programs are practically useless, and she had the figures to prove it. In 1983, 40 per cent of federal public service employees were women, but they held only 5.4 per cent of management positions. This state of affairs had led the previous Liberal Government to announce in June 1983 the introduction of a compulsory affirmative action program in the federal public service and Crown corporations, a program that the representative for Treasury Board promised to continue in his statement made on March 8 of this year.

The Macdonald Commission is an enthusiastic supporter of affirmative action. According to the commissioners, affirmative action programs can offset the cumulative impact of the discriminatory practices of the past. In this context characterized by inherent inequalities, measures to benefit a given group have to be taken so as to restore equal opportunities. Affirmative action programs would enable women and other groups to acquire such experience, vocational training, confidence and responsibilities as would eventually make affirmative action unnecessary. As the members of the Royal Commission on the Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada quite properly point out, affirmative action tackles the issue of systemic discrimination.

● (1200)

[English]

I would like to say a few words about contract compliance. According to Judge Abella, it was proven to be an effective incentive for changing discriminatory employment practices in the United States.

Contract compliance is a difficult program to monitor effectively, but it is, nonetheless, an essential one if the Government is serious about implementing employment equity.

During the 1984 election campaign, the Leader of the Conservative Party had promised the moon to women. He said that he would insist that private companies doing business with the federal Government be required to adopt the principle of equal pay for work of equal value. He also said that he would stand for affirmative action.

In March, 1984, the Tory Leader said: "We will ask all companies seeking to provide services to the Government of Canada to show us, as part of their tendering responsibilities, how many people would be hired to fulfil those contracts. There is nothing alien about that. It is just good old business sense".

Is it true that it is good old business sense, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

As recently as last week Quebec's Conseil du patronat came out against the employment equity program. In a brief submitted to the federal Government the Conseil du patronat states that affirmative action leads to arbitrary conditions and economic chaos. I wonder then where is the rationale behind the argument that using the full potential of the female labour force is good for business. I would be tempted to suggest that it is invoked only to decide what type of work women will do, but not their salaries.

To maintain the contractual obligation, the Tories had painted in glowing colours the advantages of that notion to women, native people, the handicapped and visible minorities when they were the Opposition, but now that they are in office they are dragging their feet. In early July, when a lot of Canadian men and women were on holidays, it was announced—contrary to what had been promised concerning the contractual obligation—that the federal Government would no longer request companies dealing with Ottawa to provide their affirmative action plans before contracts were awarded. We learned that the Government would expect only an employer's statement that he is in favour of the principle of equal opportunity for both men and women, nothing more for the time being. That is a far cry from the Abella report recommendation which went so far as to urge that the Canadian organization responsible for ensuring respect for equal employment opportunity in the sector regulated by the federal Government be also asked to monitor the contractual obligation in the private sector.

Well, there is no such provision in Bill C-62. As I emphasized a few moments ago, the lack of an implementation mechanism is so patently obvious that the measure we are discussing today is worthless.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to recall the reactions of some politically independent groups and individuals to Bill C-62. At the meeting organized by the Federal caucus of conservative women from the Montreal area on employment equity last March 27, labour sociologist Evelyne Tardy from the UQAM stated that employment equity legislation must have some bite if it is to be effective.

I have received a great many phone calls from women's groups who are concerned about the little political will shown by the Conservative Government as regards employment equity. Indeed, within the next few days, many women's groups will be reacting vigorously to this Bill. My objections correspond to those of the groups representing the four categories involved. The lack of any enforcement mechanism, a time frame and penalties will make Bill C-62 completely ineffective.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Hudon).

Mr. Hudon: I have a comment, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member said that we had not fulfilled the promises made during the electoral campaign. I would like to point out that the House of Commons had long awaited a Bill on employment equity. You were President of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, and to my knowledge, no Bill dealing with the status of women and their rightful place on the labour market was introduced in the House of Commons at that time. I do not understand why, just because you later became a candidate in the elections, you can say that we have done nothing. You did nothing for five years!

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is confusing apples and oranges.

I simply want to remind my colleague that, when I was President of the Advisory Council, I put pressure on the Government to urge it to do something. It was then that the Abella Commission was established and its report was presented to the Government, to your Government, and it was certainly up to the Conservative Government to act. During the electoral campaign, the Prime Minister made a public commitment to implement legislation in this regard and to recognize the concept of equal pay for work of equal value. It was not our party, but your own which made the commitment to implement the Abella report. I did my job as President of the Council and I am now doing my job as a Member of Parliament.

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, the principle of equal pay for equal work is reflected in the legislation on equal rights. This principle is already being applied. Second, if you are saying, and this is also related to other interventions, that the previous Government had established an inquiry commission, you should not now be saying that we are doing nothing when we have created inquiry commissions ourselves. We have done a lot in this area.

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to remind you that this Commission was appointed by the Liberal Government. The Abella Report was submitted to your Government and you were asked to implement it. But during the election campaign, your Government committed itself to providing good jobs for women in the work place. Now, this legislation of yours is toothless. It is all very well to suggest that you want women to have their place, but you have provided for no penalty whatsoever. My impression is that three years down the road you will review your legislation, and you will see what you will have to do. Therefore, I am sorry, but we expect more than that from this Government.

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my hon. colleague. I am sure she would like to remind the House that the Abella Commission, which was set up by a Liberal Government, only reported—

Miss MacDonald: After 15 years.

Mr. Allmand: —after the Conservative Government came to power. Consequently she will want to remind the House that it was not inaction to introduce legislation until that commission reported.

• (1210)

An Hon. Member: Why didn't you do that while you were in government?

Mr. Allmand: Perhaps because we appointed a Royal commission.

Miss MacDonald: After 15 years of inaction.

Mr. Allmand: Like the Tories, Mr. Speaker, we believe in consulting. We would have to go a long way to consult as much as this Government does because it is consulting on daycare when there is already a commission on daycare which has reported. It would consult over and over again until the cows came home.

I would like to ask my hon. colleague whether she would not like to remind the House that it was a Liberal Government that appointed a royal commission on the status of women; that it was a Liberal Government that established the Human Rights Commission, that it was a Liberal Government that introduced and had the Charter of Rights and Freedoms passed often against Tory opposition; that it was a Liberal Government—

An Hon. Member: How about all those patronage appointments?

Mr. Allmand: —that introduced Section 15 of the Charter.

Miss MacDonald: And who voted against Section 28?

Mr. Allmand: Maybe she would like to remind the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary of some of these things.

[Translation]

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, indeed, I would very much like to remind my colleague of all that the Liberal Government has done for women. But coming back to the question he asked me when he said it was up to us to do something.

The Abella Report was submitted to the Conservatives who during the election campaign promised to do something and said that women would be a priority. When we add up what this Conservative Government has been doing over the last year, we find it is not so rosy, especially when we look at this kind of legislation. We were expecting something much better than what you have put forward. When we compare the measures that have been introduced with the promises made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), we get the impression that they do not come from the same people.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, if we recall what the Liberal Government has done . . . May we also remind all Members and everyone in this House that under the Liberal administration, women were earning a mere 60 per cent of men's salaries. Under the Liberals, women stayed within the employment ghetto of services, they worked in clerical jobs. Under the Liberals also, women remained in poverty, and this applies to the whole period in which Liberals were in Government. The fact that women earned much less than men remained almost unchanged.

That is how we see the performance of the Liberal administration over the past 20 years.

[English]

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, this is another classic example of promises made and promises broken by the Conservative Government. We all know the promises that were made during the election campaign. For the benefit of the Minister and other Hon. Members opposite I would like to remind them of the promises they made during that election campaign, in their thirst for power. My colleague, the Hon. Member for the riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), has compiled a list of those promises. One of the promises made was that, if elected, the Conservative Government would make the federal Public Service a model to be followed with regard to the equality of women in the workplace; that it would implement an effective affirmative action program with adequate control monitoring and evaluation mechanisms, et cetera. In their thirst for power the Conservatives went on to promise the women of Canada that, if elected, they would support the concept of equal pay for work of equal value. Where are those promises?

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Nunziata: What we have been given is a Bill that illustrates the blatant hypocrisy of Members opposite, including the Minister. Promises were made during the election campaign but a Bill has been presented to the women of Canada that falls far, far short of what was promised during the election campaign. For example, where are the sanctions in this Bill? Where is the provision for equal pay for work of equal value? Where are the adequate controls? This legislation is a farce in comparison to what the Government Members promised during the election campaign, yet they can stand up and speak to the women of Canada and tell them that this Government is a Government of unimpeachable integrity.

I would suggest, based on the promises made during the election campaign and the action that has followed from this Minister and this Government, that one could seriously question the credibility and the honesty of this Government.

There is no question about that, because if they were true to their word and if they held true to the women of Canada, they would have implemented and followed through on the promises they made.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, this Bill represents another addition to the human rights legislation that has been enacted by Parliament over the years. It is basically designed to deal with discrimination. I think we will all admit that discrimination is and will continue to be a very difficult subject to deal with.

Discrimination comes in many forms. It can be overt, it can be blatant discrimination.

An Hon. Member: It comes out in Tory forms.

Mr. Nicholson: It can also take on some very, very subtle forms. The world as a whole, I believe, has made considerable progress in eliminating many of the signs of overt and blatant discrimination, but it still remains in various parts of the world. South Africa immediately comes to mind when we see the blatant, systemic and legislated discrimination against visible minorities.

That is why I was particularly pleased when I saw the results of the Commonwealth Conference in the Bahamas. I saw on television last night our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who speaks up not just for human rights within Canada but for human rights throughout the world. To that extent, the agreement that came out of the Commonwealth Conference last night remains a foreign policy triumph and one that every person who worries about human rights should be very proud of. But, within our country, I say we have made considerable progress over the years. When I first went to law school I was told of the provisions of the Magna Carta and other legislation that we inherited from Britain, of constitutional guarantees that protected our freedoms. I also saw many examples throughout the years in Canadian history where perhaps our human rights were not being protected and that required legislation. I remember a case that was decided by the Supreme Court of Canada that shocked me to the point that I never forgot, it and when I had the privilege of being asked to speak on Bill C-62 I immediately remembered that as a blatant example of why and how legislation was necessary.

I refer to the case of Frederick Christie, the Appellant and The York Corporation, the respondent. It was reported in 1940 Supreme Court Reports, at page 139. It is a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. It refers to a situation which happened in the Province of Quebec concerning contract law. I believe those principles equally applied across the country. This particular case dealt with a situation that took place in Montreal.

I would like to read just a little bit from the headnote, which is a synopsis of the case. As is required by persons in the legal profession, I have satisfied myself that the headnote accurately reflects the facts of the case and the reasons for its decision. I think it is very illuminating, when we talk about human rights legislation and the need for it in Canada, just to think of how far we have come. Here is what the headnote of this particular case said:

> The appellant, who is a negro, entered a tavern owned and operated by the respondent in the City of Montreal and asked to be served a glass of beer; but the servants of the respondent refused him for the sole reason that they had been instructed not to serve coloured persons. The appellant brought action for damages for the humiliation he suffered. The respondent alleged that in giving such instructions it was acting within its rights; that its business was a private enterprise for gain and that, in acting as it did, it was merely protecting its business interests.

Those were the facts of the case. Here is what the Supreme Court of Canada said:

> The general principle of the law of Quebec is that of complete freedom of commerce. Any merchant is free to deal as he may choose with any individual member of the public. It is not a question of motives or reasons for deciding to deal or not to deal: he is free to do either.

● (1220)

In 1940, it was perfectly correct under Canadian law for the individual who walked into the tavern in the Montreal Forum and asked for a glass of beer to be refused. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, this matter went to the highest court in the country and it was turned down. The need for action is there and I think we have made tremendous progress.

Regarding the introduction of the Canadian Bill of Rights, the Human Rights Act and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, it is always well and good to have the theory that Parliament will protect our rights, but sometimes Parliament has been remiss in enacting legislation to change the law where it blatantly discriminates against individuals. It is with the blatant kind of discrimination that we have made progress.

There is another kind of discrimination which Bill C-62 is trying to address, and that is, the very subtle forms of discrimination, forms of discrimination that are very hard to pin down.

It is the sort of discrimination that I believe all of us have experienced in our lifetime.

When I was in law school at the University of Windsor, I had many colleagues who were women and were applying at the same time as I was for articling jobs. Many of them told us how difficult it was for them to obtain jobs. This was borne out by reports done by the Law Society of Upper Canada indicating that even with comparable marks, when men and women applied for articling jobs and, after the bar admissions course, when they applied for work as full-time lawyers, women had more difficulty in obtaining jobs. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that that is a form of discrimination. It is systemic discrimination and it is discrimination that is very difficult to pinpoint.

I experienced the same sort of thing a number of summers ago when I worked for Canada Manpower for Students, as it was then called. Employers would let on to me that they wanted a man for this job or a woman for that job. They would indicate that they wanted a particular sex or particular type of person to do a particular job. I was pleased that in 1977, the Government of Canada would not participate overtly or covertly in any discriminatory practices. However, what would happen in these cases is that when I sent employers referrals that would have been unsatisfactory to them, there was always some sort of excuse made. In this day and age, employers are smart enough not to say blatantly that they do not want a person because of race, handicaps or sex. They have gotten too smart for that. They discriminate in other very subtle ways. Therefore, I believe that this legislation is part of the response of the Government to that type of discrimination within federal jurisdiction.

When looking at the provisions of this Bill, I was very pleased to find that it will require all employers within the federal jurisdiction with 100 or more employes to take steps to remove employment barriers and eliminate discrimination in the workplace. This applies to Crown corporations and private sector companies doing business with the Government. It asks those employers to identify and eliminate those practices that result in discrimination against designated groups including women, aboriginal people, people with disabilities and visible minorities. As a case in point, I remember visiting a plant a number of years ago at which there were no women employees. I inquired of the manager why this was so, and he responded by saying that it was because the employees required to have locker facilities and showers and that it would be very expensive to provide alternative facilities for women. In 1977, someone was saying that to me. I think that that is an example of what we are talking about when we are discussing the removal of barriers and impediments to the hiring of people in designated groups.

In addition, the Bill asks employers to institute policies and practices to achieve a degree of representation in various positions proportionate to the numbers of people from designated groups in the workplace. This legislation does not set quotas which would indicate that employers must hire a certain percentage of employees from designated groups. This is because circumstances change from area to area continuously. In 1967, when the University of Windsor law school opened its doors, there was only one woman out of 150 students. By the time I arrived at the law school in 1974, approximately 35 per cent of the students were women. It is my understanding that that proportion of women to men is increasing all the time. It would be very difficult to determine a quota for the hiring of a minority at any given point in time. As we know, very often when quotas are imposed, those quotas become the maximum. The discrimination we are trying to eliminate would reassert itself again.

I am pleased that the Bill requires those employees covered by it to report in a detailed fashion to the federal Government regarding their progress on the programs they have instituted. Beginning in January 1987, these programs must be in place and the employers will have to report to the Government on or before June 1, 1988. I believe that that is a reasonable amount of time for them to get their systems in place. However, it signals that when this Bill gets through Parliament, employers are going to have to begin thinking in terms of its provisions and will have to get their acts together.

The reports to which I have referred will have to be detailed, and I am pleased about that as well. The reports will have to indicate the number of people from designated groups who are being hired or are on staff, their occupations and the salaries which they are receiving. I think it is very important to do this. It will make it very easy for us to see if the people from designated groups are all employed at the bottom salary levels. We will be able to ensure that employers will not get away with simply having the number of people on staff; they will have to pay them the right salaries as well. The public and the Government will have access to this data, and where it becomes obvious that there is discrimination against women, native people, disabled persons and visible minorities, the Government will be in a better position to respond.

As the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) pointed out, it is now possible for the first time for the Human Rights Commission not only to respond to complaints but to initiate action. I was particularly pleased that she indicated that she realizes that there will be a great burden placed upon the resources of the Human Rights Commission and she has therefore given us her assurance that she will undertake to see that it has the resources it needs to do the job that it will be called upon to do by this legislation.

I believe that this Bill is firmly based on the concept of fairness. The concept of fairness is one which is characteristic of the Canadian people and it is something for which we are known abroad. We are known for the even-handed approach that we take to matters outside our country as well as matters within our country. I believe Canadians support the idea of employment equity because they recognize that this country is made up of so many different groups and individuals that we have to be sure that Canada's economic benefits are shared equally and fairly. We know that the groups to which this Bill referred had not in the past shared equally and fairly.

I have said that this Bill is about fairness, but it also makes sense for another reason. Employment equity makes good economic and business sense. Discrimination against certain groups hurts business. It does not make sense because it means that employers are choosing qualified people from a smaller pool. They are eliminating people who would be qualified for the job for arbitrary reasons.

I should point out as well that this is just one of several initiatives taken by the federal Government to promote employment equity. The Government itself is committed to implementing employment equity in the Public Service. This is a process which is being undertaken at the present time and is in addition to Bill C-62. The Government will require contractors to implement employment equity. This will apply to businesses with 100 or more employees bidding on contracts worth $200,000 or more. These businesses will be required to sign declarations of action stating that they will implement employment equity. If they do not live up to their commitment they will be denied the opportunity of competing for future Government business. It is estimated that this particular provision will cover approximately 500 major Canadian corporations employing in excess of 500,000 people.

I would like to deal with the sanctions for not reporting which are contained in the Bill. For those persons who come within the purview of the Bill and who do not report there will be a fine imposed which will not exceed $50,000. I am pleased with the level set. When I was practising law I often found that the fines provided for in government regulations and laws were never more than $1,000 or $2,000. In my opinion those amounts of money merely provide a licence to do whatever the Government is prohibiting. Thus, I believe the provision of a $50,000 fine is a clear indication to the courts that the Government means to get tough in this area.

In conclusion I would like to say that the Bill before us has gone further than we have in the past in this particular area. The Bill recognizes, as we recognize, that there are difficulties in eliminating discrimination. However, that does not change the Government's resolve to try to do something about it. The Minister of Employment and Immigration called this a bold move when she spoke in this House on October 3. Indeed it is. I think it is one which is welcomed by Canadians, notwithstanding some of the criticism which we have heard from the backbenches of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party. It is good legislation. It demonstrates the Government's intention in this area. As the Minister of Employment and Immigration said on October 3: "We are committed to nothing less than a society of equal opportunity."

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy).

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I was quite intrigued by the intervention of the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) who said that he has had considerable experience with discrimination having observed the effects of discrimination on women as a worker with Canada Manpower. Perhaps that explains how he is able to defend a Bill which does nothing in terms of affirmative action and nothing with respect to employment equity. Perhaps that explains how he is capable of condemning those who have appreciably more insight into what such a Bill should be expected to accomplish on behalf of those who have experienced discrimination. That the Hon. Member can say that this Bill does one thing in terms of employment equity is an insult to the women, minorities and the disabled in the country who have experienced discrimination not as observers but as victims of it. I want the Hon. Member to explain to me how I, other blacks in the country and native groups who have been in the country for centuries are expected to accept his experience as a basis of judgment for an inadequate Bill which does not contain penalties for those who impose discrimination upon significant portions of our population and who, in terms of their experience, can consider those actions as nothing less than a crime.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the members of the Democratic Party can pound their desks and shout and scream in this Chamber. However, that does not change the fact one iota that this Bill is excellent legislation. It is legislation which is supported by the people in my riding. They are people who have been discriminated against. They have written to me expressing their feelings. To dismiss the Bill as doing nothing is simply doing a disservice to the Bill and to the House. I believe it does a disservice to the constituents of the Hon. Member who are looking forward to the implementation of this legislation.

We are taking action in this area, along with other pieces of legislation. I believe that is one thing which the two opposition Parties would like to forget. They would like to believe this action is being taken in isolation and that there are no other laws which pertain to this area. For instance, they continue to say that there is no enforcement mechanism. They have been told half a dozen times in the Chamber that the Human Rights Commission will be put in a position where it can respond. Information will be made public and the commission will be able to take steps. After hearing some of the speeches on the subject my guess is that they do not want to hear what I have to say. They do not want to respond to it. They say that they look only within the four corners of the Bill and that there are no reporting requirements.

Mr. Cassidy: That is what the courts do, and you know it.

Mr. Nicholson: They say that it goes to a certain extent and that is it. They seem to take the position that the Human Rights Act has been repealed and that there is no Canadian Bill of Rights or Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This is legislation which must be taken into consideration. As I said at the outset of my remarks, the Bill before us is part of the human rights legislation. It is a part of a number of Bills on which we have made progress.

I was not refused a glass of beer at the Montreal Forum in 1940. I was not even born at that time. However, throughout my life I was taught by my family, in the schools I attended and the churches I attended to be sensitive and that wherever discrimination exists I should root it out even if I am not a victim of it. Because I am not the victim of discrimination does that mean I am not entitled to speak on the subject? I reject that point of view, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nicholson: I have as much right as any Canadian to speak on the subject of discrimination, which is why I am pleased and honoured that the Minister of Employment and Immigration asked me to speak on the historic piece of legislation which is before us. I have lived my whole life in pursuit of that endeavour. That is why I was pleased when I worked for Canada Manpower to convey the fact that the Government does not condone or participate in covert or overt discrimination with respect to any person.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. If the Bill is as welcome as he says it is, then why did we have in Ottawa last week a coalition of the target groups: women, the handicapped and visible minorities lobbying with Members of Parliament to oppose the Bill? Among that coalition were representatives from NAC, the national women's organization, which asked us to oppose the Bill and to oppose it with all our might unless very substantial amendments were put forward. Can the Hon. Member explain why these groups were asking Members of Parliament to oppose the Bill if it is so welcome?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, on every issue and every Bill which comes before the committees upon which I sit there are always people who will say that it does not go far enough or that it goes too far. I think that most people believe in the legislation we have introduced. They say that it is just about where it should be. They say that this is a reasonable approach to difficult problems. With respect to the Bill which is before us there is no exception. If the Hon. Member would like to visit my office, I would be pleased to show him letters from concerned individuals in my riding who have approached me on this subject and who have indicated to me that they are pleased that after years of not having any legislation of this type the matter is now before Parliament. They have told me that they are looking forward to giving their views when the matter goes to committee. I would welcome, as I am sure the committee would, opinions from a whole spectrum of people with respect to this important piece of legislation.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I listened intently to the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson). It would seem he is trying to promote the fact that he has a monopoly on virtue. I would like to tell him that that is not the case.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchi: If he feels as he does about this Bill, then I would like to ask him some straightforward questions. Why is the Hon. Member opposed to mandatory programs as opposed to voluntary ones? Is he opposed to an independent enforcement mechanism being put in place rather than forcing the Human Rights Commission, where it has the jurisdiction, to deal with questions respecting whether or not it should be performing the work of legislating employment equity?

• (1240)

The fact is that the Human Rights Commission often is a reactionary body which deals with cases and complaints on a one-to-one basis. Would the Hon. Member not believe that an enforcement agency, to go along with a national employment equity program, would be more in tune with the needs and aspirations of the four-targeted groups which have been calling for this Government to introduce legislation? Why is the Hon. Member opposed to mandatory programs rather than voluntary programs which reports from Toronto clearly indicate are not working? And why is the Hon. Member opposed to an independent, co-operative and fully competent enforcement agency?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, first of all, in accordance with the provisions of this Bill, there is nothing voluntary about it at all. It is mandatory. I believe I pointed out that very stringent penalties can be imposed on those individuals or corporations who do not comply witht reporting requirements.

The Hon. Member asked why we do not set up a competent group. The Human Rights Commission is very competent to deal with these things. The Minister in her speech on October 3 indicated that she realized that there will be an increased burden on the Human Rights Commission, and up to this point it has, for the most part, just responded to complaints. I think that is part of the public record. We all know that that is the case. At the same time, the Minister said, while realizing that that is the case, we must realize also that the Human Rights Commission is well set up for this sort of program and initiative. She has indicated, and given her word, that it will be given the resources in view of the increased burden. I am very pleased with that.

With respect to the Hon. Member's comments about targeted groups, I indicated that this was just one piece of legislation and that there are other pieces of legislation before this Parliament which equally concern women and other groups. I think, for instance, of the Divorce Act. I cannot tell you how many people want to see a new Divorce Act in this country, but I have to tell them, in all honesty, that it is members of the Liberal Party who are holding it up. If the Hon. Member wants to talk about who is doing something for women and other groups, he should talk about the divorce Bill and these other pieces of legislation because those Hon. Members are the ones with mud on their faces as far as holding up legislation is concerned. I can tell this House and my constituents that it is the members of the Liberal Party who do not want to see women get a fair shake under a new Divorce Act.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to ask the Hon. Member a question after listening to his excellent speech on this subject. I am sure that the Hon. Member is aware, as are other Hon. Members of the House, that in her report, Judge Abella made a number of recommendations with regard to enforcement structures, one of which, Model 4, was based upon the subsequent activities of the Canadian Human Rights Commission as the enforcement agency which would see that the employment equity provisions are put into effect. That was one of the recommendations she made in her report.

I am sure that the Hon. Member knows that the choice of the mechanism made by the Government in looking at Judge Abella's recommendations was to select the Canadian Human Rights Commission, which is already well established, and which will be given additional means of carrying out the enforcement mechanism. That is the way the Government has chosen and it will indeed provide the enforcement which is necessary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is over. We will resume debate.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment about this Bill and I would like to say that I am happy the Minister is in the House at this time, although I am not happy about the Bill which is before us. There will be a lot of speeches like the speech made by the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) which will laud the Minister and tell us what a step forward this legislation is, much in the same way as the Minister responsible for the Status of Women said in the press release a few months ago that the Government was providing leadership in the assault on the under-training, under-employment and the outright exclusion of women, native peoples and the visible minorities through this Bill.

What I want to say right now, Mr. Speaker, is that there will be more hokum and hypocrisy heard in this House from Hon. Members of the Government Party in relation to this Bill than we have heard since the Government took power. I am very concerned about that because some pretty strong promises were made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during the election campaign, before he formed the Government, which indicated a commitment to equity in employment for women. He also made a commitment to the concept of equality. Those commitments are now not worth the paper they were written on.

This is a bad Bill, Mr. Speaker, because it gives a semblance of action without the reality. It is a bad Bill because it does not do anything specific to help those people who are the victims of discrimination. And it is a bad Bill because after the Bill has been in force for two, three or four years, and five or 10 years after that, we will still have the situation which prevailed 20 years ago and prevails today in terms of employment in Canada. That is, if one is white and male, one will be privileged in terms of employment. If one is female, or a member of a visible minority, or one of Canada's native peoples, or if one is handicapped, then discrimination is going to continue and not just minor discrimination—if one can categorize discrimination—but massive discrimination which all of the groups I have mentioned at a disadvantage.

When we talk about the minorities, let us be specific. If we put those minorities all together, we are talking about 60 per cent of the population of Canada. That 60 per cent of the population which falls into those categories is suffering constant discrimination right now. They suffer discrimination because they are not allowed to do certain jobs. That is certainly true for women. They suffer discrimination because they are shut off at the point at which they apply for a job, before they even have a chance to be considered. They suffer discrimination because they cannot take the first step up the ladder, let alone be in a position to receive promotion in order to get seniority and hold senior positions. This is a situation which has prevailed for far too long.

My colleagues and I have talked about this Bill and we will continue to do so because we believe it is a rotten Bill. It is rotten because the only requirement in the Bill is that, commencing in about two years' time, employers under federal jurisdiction will be required to submit reports on the numerical quantums of who is getting what within their particular workplace. There is a substantial fine if they do not submit a report. However, the enforcement is in fact, I presume, only at the hands of the RCMP. And that is only if someone has access to the correct figures and knows that the employer is not giving the correct figures and blows the whistle. There are a lot of questions which could be asked as to whether or not that would take place.

I am reminded of what happens in the Soviet Union where employers, organizations or companies, submit reports on their achievement of the national plan. Those reports can be entirely fictitious and there is not a heck of a lot anyone can do about it. In fact, they continue to report about fanthom factories and production. I am afraid that we may well have fanthom employment equity in this country, that is, that employers will produce figures which indicate that they are making a certain amount of progress and those figures will in fact be entirely fictitious.

I note, in the discussion paper which was distributed back in June, that the Government has all kinds of questions about what information can be made public. Federally regulated companies will only have to report on a national basis in many cases so that particular discrimination which takes place in a particular branch in a province or region will not be exposed. Because of the desire to protect confidentiality many items of information will in fact be excluded and it will not be possible, therefore, for employees of a particular company to know what is happening in that particular company under the material which is to be published according to the Act.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no requirement that where workers have a union, the union will in fact have any input into ensuring that even the minimal requirement in this Bill, which is the reporting mechanism, is in fact adequately and fairly carried out. The real weakness of the Bill, of course, is Section 4 which states that employers shall implement employment equity. Those are bold words and many Members of the Government will talk to those bold words during the course of this particular debate, but the requirement of implementing employment equity is backed by absolutely no enforcement mechanism, at all.

If the Minister intended the Canadian Human Rights Commission to enforce Section 4, then she and the Government should have put that in the Bill, and indicated how it was going to take place. That did not occur and I know from bitter experience, as do many other people, including the Hon. Member who just spoke and who is himself a lawyer, that when the courts come to interpret legislation, an intervention from the Minister saying that the Human Rights Commission is going to look after this does not carry any weight at all. The courts have to look at the legislation itself. Contrast this flimsy document, Bill C-62, with the degree to which the Government moved in the Bill we voted on a few moments ago, amendments to the Canada Shipping Act, which is a substantial effort to provide for regulation and safety in a matter which has traditionally been of concern to the Government. Perhaps that much detail is not the route to go in this case, but it seems to me that to put forward something this flimsy is not defensible at all.

● (1250)

Clause 4 says that employees should identify and eliminate practices which result in employment barriers against persons in the designated groups. There is nothing wrong with that and my Party agrees with it. We agree with the recommendation of the Abella Commission which said essentially the same thing, that there should be an affirmative action program in every federally-regulated company in order to eliminate existing barriers and ensure representation from people who have suffered discrimination in the past. The Bill says that the employer shall institute positive policies which will ensure that persons in designated groups achieve a reasonable degree of representation. Again, I do not disagree with that at all. What I do disagree with is the total lack of a mechanism to ensure that that clause is implemented or enforced in any particular way. I want to give an example of research into the discrimination which takes place on an ongoing and chronic basis. This happens to have been done in Toronto, a city which has been held up by many people as an example of a multicultural, multiracial community, not only in Canada but in many other countries around the world. The Minister will be aware of the research carried out by York University under the auspices of the Urban Alliance on Race Relations and the Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto. The research involved job applicants whe were as similar as humanly possible regarding their work experience, education, employment history and the like. These people contacted some 200 employers while looking for jobs. There were 201 jobs tested by application in person. The only difference between them was that half were black and half were white. Half the applicants were black, half were white, with 36 jobs offered to the white applicants and nine to the black. In another 38 cases, blacks were treated differently from the whites. For example, one applicant went in looking for a restaurant job. He was told the manager would be with him in a minute. He was given an application form, allowed to fill it out, and told he would probably be called for a second interview. Another applicant of similar age and experience went into the same restaurant on the same day. He was told the manager was not in. He was given an application form and sent away, having been told that if he wanted to send it in, that was okay. He was given no further encouragement and no indication a second interview would be forthcoming. The difference is that the applicant who was given the brush-off was black and the applicant who was treated courteously, helpfully and with interest by the manager was white. Similar results occurred when these people applied for jobs over the telephone. In the case of blacks, they had a 64 per cent chance of getting through the telephone screening procedure. That is, they got 13 interviews out of every 20 calls. The white people who called got 17 interviews for every 20 calls. When you broke it down their chances of getting a job were three times as good as those of the blacks.

My question is this. Let us suppose we are talking about federally-regulated companies, because obviously the federal Government has to set an example for the provincial sector and cannot regulate directly. How do those practices come under the purview of Bill C-62? The plain answer is: not at all. There is no means to do so. I suppose, some three or four years after the discrimination took place, a black applicant, whom, I suppose, the Minister expects to have the time, information and resources to do it, can go and talk to a community newspaper or The Toronto Star and say: Did you know that four years ago I was turned down for a job and it looks as though this particular employer is employing less than his share of blacks? Let us be realistic, Mr. Speaker. That is no result at all. In the meantime, that black person has had to hustle to find a way of earning a living and frankly does not have the time to go back. What does he have to do? Pursue it with the Human Rights Commission? Pursue it in the courts? That is ridiculous. There is literally no way that discrimination against blacks, Indians, native people, Pakistanis or other visible minorities, or women, can be caught up with, given the mechanisms in this Bill. However, the Minister has the effrontery, along with members of her Party, to get up and say what a wonderful job we are doing. The Abella Commission said quite explicitly that if you are going to have affirmative action it has to be matched with enforcement mechanisms. It said that this has to be done if we are serious about providing equality.

[Translation]

I would like to say a few words about the status of women, Mr. Speaker, because women are continuing to suffer discrimination in the work place. Women work, for instance, in restaurants, in various service sectors and in stores, and they are found mostly in jobs that pay far less than jobs held by men.

For instance, in the public service, about 38 per cent of female employees earn less than $20,000, while among male employees, the ratio is only 11 per cent. Real discrimination exists in the federal Government, and nothing has happened to change the situation since the new Government was elected.

Mr. Speaker, if we consider what is happening to women in job creation programs . . . I just had a conversation with the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin), regarding the discrimination that existed under the Liberal Government in job creation programs. Only 20 per cent of available jobs were given to women, despite the fact that they represented 42 per cent of the labour force in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, very little has changed under the new Government. One million women will be affected by technological change in the next six years. Women will be affected in a variety of ways, but nothing has been done in Bill C-62 to help with their training.

We, on our side, believe that since women represent 42 per cent of the labour force in Canada, they should be able to benefit from 42 per cent of the funds for training made available by the federal Government. However, Mr. Speaker, that was not the case under the Liberal Government, and again, nothing has changed sufficiently under the new Government now in power.

In 1981, for instance, women represented only 5 per cent of all apprentices. They had 5 per cent of the entire apprenticeship sector in Canada, and almost all these apprenticeships were for hairdressing. And if we leave out jobs in the service sector, women represented only one half of one per cent of all apprentices in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, this kind of discrimination is continuing. The Government cannot solve this problem with a Bill that contains no provision for ensuring that the good intentions of this legislation are implemented and reinforced.

In her report Judge Rosalie Abella quite clearly recommended an enforcement mechanism. According to her there has to be more than a mere process to count how many individuals in each category have jobs if ever women, minority groups, ethnic groups and disabled persons are to achieve equality. An enforcement mechanism is what we need.

We know what the objective is, Mr. Speaker, and the Minister's statement that the Canadian Human Rights Commission will ensure compliance with the law is woefully inadequate because the Bill does not contain a provision concerning the mechanism required to make certain that employment equity will be fully respected in the public sector.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I intend to continue my remarks after the oral questions period.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

THE LATE ALFRED ROULEAU

EXPRESSION OF CONDOLENCES TO FAMILY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Over the weekend, Mr. Speaker, we were saddened to learn the death of Mr. Alfred Rouleau. Today I want to pay homage to this outstanding Canadian, this outstanding Quebecer who throughout his active life promoted the economic development of Quebec, particularly by playing the leading role in the establishment of the Desjardins life insurance company. He was company president for about ten years, then became president of the entire Desjardins caisses populaires movement which, under his leadership, expanded rapidly.

After retiring a few years ago, Mr. Rouleau continued to show much interest in charitable organizations and acted as consultant and guest speaker in various organizations.

His life accomplishments will be highlighted by people who are undoubtedly better qualified than I am.

I had the pleasure of working with him during a few years and, in my name and on behalf of the members of my Party, I want to extend to the family of Mr. Rouleau our heartfelt condolences in their bereavement, and remind all Canadians that they have also lost a fellow citizen who had been awarded the Order of Canada.

SOCIAL SECURITY

ADVANTAGES FOR FAMILIES

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Today, Mr. Speaker, I would like to elaborate on the proposed family allowances amendments.

Hon. Members must keep in mind that Bill C-70 is part and parcel of the changes to the child benefit system.

[English]

Perhaps it is for this reason that the opposition Parties have chosen to ignore the child benefit system in its entirety. I quote from an editorial which appeared in The Globe and Mail on September 18 which states:

"The NDP and the Liberals portray this as the cavalier act of a Dickensian regime. They do not draw attention to other changes in the child benefit system that will substantially increase tax credits aimed at the needy . . . , and reduce tax exemptions that favour the wealthy.

My constituents also question the veracity of the Opposition. Changes to the child benefit system were announced in the May Budget. They include three proposals which will ensure that maximum benefits are received by those most in need. One change is the modification of the indexation of family allowances to the consumer price index where increases in these payments will be made when the CPI exceeds three per cent. The second proposal will increase the child tax credit by 36 per cent for a total of $140 per child over the next three years. The credit will rise from $384 in 1985 to $524 in 1988. The final proposal will reduce the existing tax exemptions by almost half from $710 to $380. The new amount of $380 will equal—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

THE MINISTRY

MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to stand in my place and publicly congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie). On the weekend, in a rare moment of candor, in a burst of honesty tantamount to a death-bed confession, the Minister of Justice stood up and said: "I wasn't as astute as I should be". We in the Opposition have been saying that for many, many years since he left our Party and crossed the floor to join the Conservative Party.

That was an amazing confession, Mr. Speaker. It was an amazing admission coming from a man with such unimpeachable integrity. I am sure his sons are proud today knowing that their father stood up and admitted that he wasn't as politically astute as he could have been. I am sure that those Conservative delegates who voted at the leadership convention are saying to themselves today: "We weren't as astute as we could have been. We could have had JC as a leader: a man with unimpeachable integrity".

Other Ministers would do well by emulating the Minister of Justice, by standing up in their places and telling the people of Canada that they were not as astute as they could have been. The former Solicitor General could stand up in his place and say—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS—PRESERVATION OF SOUTH MORESBY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, for more than a decade proposals to preserve the South Moresby area of the Queen Charlotte Islands have been before the Legislatures of British Columbia and Canada. For six years the Environmental Land Use Committee of the B.C. Cabinet has intentionally stalled the issue with the resulting confrontation of forest harvesting versus park status.

It is well known among professional foresters that the forest lands of the Queen Charlottes are being liquidated without the slightest concern for sustained yield or long-term employment stability. All three federal political Parties are firmly on record endorsing the preservation of South Moresby. However, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Cabinet have fueled the confrontation and controversy by failing to address the legitimate economic and environmental concerns that have been raised.

In a desperate bid for confrontation, the politically incompetent Social Credit administration has once again set up a panel to hide behind and to stall and confuse the issue while logging proceeds. yes, Mr. Speaker, the Socreds have publicly stated that forestry is a sunset industry in B.C., but the lack of political will by this House to preserve Canada's Galapagos and our nation's forests will not be easily forgotten. The result is no sustained yield, no sustainable process for protecting areas of national significance, and an island community sorely hurt by a vicious controversy.

SMALL BUSINESS

PRESENT AND FUTURE EXPANSION

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, this is Small Business Week across Canada and recent reports give small businessmen much to celebrate. The Economic Council of Canada predicts that over the next ten years the economy will grow by 3.5 per cent after inflation, unemployment will decline to 7.5 per cent, and inflation will fall further to 3.4 per cent. I am pleased and proud to note that employment in my own city of Saskatoon dropped in September by 20 per cent over August figures to 9 per cent. Unemployment in the Province of Saskatchewan is now at 7.5 per cent, the lowest rate in Canada.

Most encouraging of all to Canadians, however, are the results of a survey of 10,000 members of the Federation of Independent Business released last week. The results show that 35 per cent of small businesses in Canada increased in size over the first half of the year, and that 30 per cent plan to expand in the second half of the year. This means that the 10,000 respondents alone will have created 20,000 new jobs by the end of this year. When you consider that small and medium-sized firms account for more than 95 per cent of the more than one million Canadian firms, it is easy to see why independent businesses are the key to Canada's economic security.

I have been a small-businessman, Mr. Speaker, and I know what these positive trends mean. They mean that businessmen have confidence in the economy and want to invest in it. No Government can make people invest in an economy that is not sound, but government can take steps to strengthen the economy and provide a sound investment climate to encourage businesses to expand.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

AIRPORTS

LONDON, ONT.—SIZE OF CONTROL ZONE

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, one year ago representatives from the London Ontario Air Traffic Controllers and London Air Operators flew to Ottawa where I met with them to discuss the future of the control zone leading into the London airport. They told me why they felt the Government should not proceed with its plans to reduce the ten-mile control zone around that airport to a five-mile zone. Their views, which expressed concern with safety, are worthy of very careful consideration because, in my view, the situation at that airport is unique. The following are the safety concerns on which both operators and controllers concur.

The first is the safety of flight over the city. A Department of Transport report admits that there is a very heavy mix of traffic over that airport. Second, there is great concern over the safety of instrument flight aircraft mixed with visual flight aircraft and the tower's ability to control their movement within five miles. In essence, Mr. Speaker, what is needed is the segregation of a relatively high volume of VFR traffic from IFR traffic arrival-departure paths in the London area.

The London air traffic control zone has a fine safety record. A delicate balance has been struck in the past. The 10-mile radius has provided that balance, and I must ask why we would change it now, with unknown consequences.

ENERGY

HEAVY OIL UPGRADER—RISK EVALUATION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): You know, Mr. Speaker, sometimes you have to pat yourself on the back because nobody else will. That is exactly what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) did last spring. Since the thousands of jobs promised in the Western Accord were not materializing, she decided to take credit for the jobs the Liberals had created. Last May the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tabled a list of projects she claimed were only made possible as a result of the Western Accord. The funny thing is, Mr. Speaker, many of those projects were in the works long before she called herself the Minister of Energy.

One of these projects was the Husky bi-provincial upgrader. She said it would mean $3.2 billion in investment and 3,300 person years of employment. Now the Government has decided to review its commitment to the project. The former Liberal Government had pledged to back the upgrader with a $780 million loan guarantee and another $50 million in grants to help defray construction costs. Now the Government is doing a risk evaluation of the project.

• (1410)

Why, when the Minister was taking credit for the project, did she not do a risk evaluation at that time? As the Saskatchewan Energy Minister has said: "The review should have been completed in June." And further: "The upgrader is being built for the next 25 years. It doesn't make sense to make decisions based on present oil prices".

Husky still believes in this project; so do the provinces. But the Government is doing a review. Last May it was happy to pat itself on the back for a job well done. But it is like I said, Mr. Speaker, sometimes you have to pat yourself on the back because nobody else will.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

ENERGY

SUNCOR—DEREGULATION OF NATURAL GAS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on two current energy issues. First, Suncor. If I were the Ontario Government I would not sell Suncor. Why buy at the top of the market and sell at the bottom?

Look at what the Reichmanns did in New York. They bought real estate when people were writing off the Big Apple. Recently they bought Gulf's upstream assets because they know, as Ontario should know, that by the 1990s world conventional supplies of crude oil will be seriously depleted and concentrated in the Middle East. The tar sands will be worth a fortune.

Second, the Minister of Energy (Miss Carney), in my view, should not forget the interests of consumers and small producers as she negotiates the deregulation of natural gas. She should break up the monopoly that TransCanada Pipelines has over contracts in transportation. She should keep the 25 year rule on gas reserves, and she should remember her promise solicited in this House of Commons that Canadians should not pay more for our natural gas than Americans.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, Opposition Members often bring lists to the House of constituents who are against some Bill or regulation our Government has introduced.

S.O. 22

Today, Mr. Speaker, I am going to tell you the true story of a constituent who has six children, from fifteen years old down to fourteen months. She is now receiving $466.23 per month in family allowances—$387.20 from the federal Government and $79.03 from the provincial Government. With a gross income of $37,571.00 and $29,103.00 in expenses, this family, which raises beef, is certainly not rich. However, it approves and supports our Government in its decision to amend the 1973 legislation on family allowances.

Mr. Speaker, why does my constituent approve of our position? First of all, because we are maintaining the program's universality. Second, because her overall income will increase, considering the number of children and her net income. Third, because she knows that any reduction in her allowances will not depend on the Government but on her income from the farm will increase, which she earnestly hope will be the case.

In my constituent's view, the State must help families, and that is what we intend to go on doing.

SMALL BUSINESS

IMPORTANCE TO ECONOMY AND JOB CREATION

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, this is Small Business Week in Canada. As a small-business person, I have spoken on several occasions in this House and elsewhere on the importance of the small business community to the economic fabric of Canada. Small businesses are estimated to employ three-quarters of all Canadians in the workforce.

A few days ago the Canadian Federation of Independent Business released the results of a survey of their members. This survey, when extrapolated, indicates some 240,000 net new jobs were created by the independent sectors in the first six months of this year.

The combined employment and investment plans of small businesses for the second half of the year are very optimistic. Employment growth of nearly 5 per cent is anticipated in the second half of the year, which would translate into some 170,000 net new jobs by the sector.

More impressive is the expected acceleration of spending plans. The current survey indicated that more than four out of every 10 firms plan an increase in investment, and more than five out of 10 indicate they would expect to expand their business.

Confidence within the small business community is growing at an exciting rate. Businessmen have a growing confidence in Canada, and are responding to the efforts of a Government which recognizes the importance of the small business community.

This Government understands the requirements of the business community and continues to bring forward initiatives that provice encouragement, stimulus, and confidence in the business sector. It, in turn, is responding in a dramatic way with new jobs.

BANKS AND BANKING

RESTRUCTURING PROPOSALS MADE BY BANKS EXPERIENCING DIFFICULTY—GOVERNMENT ATTITUDE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, this morning we were informed that last fall, the president of the Mercantile Bank had asked the Government for permission to restructure its operations.

Last week I was also informed that last November, the Northland Bank had made a similar request to the Progressive Conservative Government.

My question is quite simple. Did the Government discourage the attempts of these two banks to restructure their operations? If so, why?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I understand from Mr. Davidson himself of the Mercantile Bank that these conversations were part of ongoing informal discussions that he and other banks have with the Inspector General of Banks. They were going on not only on last November, but are held on a regular basis.

[Translation]

NORTHLAND BANK—FACTORS INFLUENCING GOVERNMENT'S DECISION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in the case of the Northland Bank, there was a similar request. And if approval for restructuring their operations was not forthcoming last fall, it was because their situation must have been pretty good.

I would therefore ask the Minister: What happened between November 1984 and September 1985 to make the Government suddenly pull the plug and put the Northland Bank under liquidation, since the Minister said herself, from her seat, on March 29, that no other banks were in difficulty?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have answered this sort of question in this House before. The Inspector General is in constant touch with these banks and the actions he took were deemed appropriate at the time when problems were brought to his attention, or if he brought problems to the attention of the banks.

Mr. Deans: By whom?

[Translation]

DEVELOPMENT OF NORTHLAND BANK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, that was not a particularly smart answer on the part of the Minister. Good grief! On March 29 she told the House that no banks were in difficulty. We know that a request for restructuring operations was set aside in November 1984. What suddenly brought about the decision to remove the Northland Bank's every chance of surviving and expanding?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think the reason we have a judicial inquiry is so that all the facts around the Northland Bank and all the facts around the CCB will be brought out in context for the public's attention. I think the Hon. Member will be satisfied when the inquiry is completed, that the Government acted appropriately.

CERTIFICATES OF TERM DEPOSITS IN U.S. CURRENCY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of State for Finance. Although the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation does not ensure deposits in foreign currency, some branches of the Canadian Commercial Bank issued certificates of term deposit in U.S. currency, on which was clearly printed that the deposits were fully insured by CDIC. Will the Minister tell the House how many such certificates were issued, and when she became aware of the practice?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to look into the matter. It is in the hands of the curator at the moment.

This issue came up at the time of Pioneer Trust, I am sure the Hon. Member will recall. At that time I instructed the CDIC to get in touch with all member institutions and ensure that wherever this practice was going on that it be stopped.

DEFINITION OF UNINSURED DEPOSITORS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my information is that there are hundreds of depositors involved. Since these depositors were misled, can the Minister tell us whether they are included among the uninsured depositors covered in the Bill before the House, or is the Minister recommending another solution for them?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before the House defines depositors as the word is defined in the CDIC Act, and that is the legislation under debate at the moment.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL REVENUE

GULF TAKEOVER—REVIEW OF TAX LEGISLATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In recent days there has been considerable dispute as to which Ministers were involved in making decisions concerning the Olympia and York takeover of Gulf. What has not been disputed is the existence of a tax law that makes this possible, a tax provision known affectionately in industry as "The Little Egypt Bump", which has been in existence since 1971. He, as Minister, has done a careful review of this tax loophole. Will he have something to say to the House of Commons about his decision following that review?

• (1420)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, I have addressed the problem of tax expenditures which might be subject to question as to whether or not they are appropriate within the Income Tax Act. I have taken action on the scientific research tax credits, the carve-outs, as well as three or four items which were in the last Budget. All these matters are under ongoing review.

Indeed, this past summer I issued a booklet entitled Cost of Selective Tax Measures, which hopefully will give rise to some debate on the appropriateness of similar types of tax expenditures.

CORPORATE TAX—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada are interested in some action on tax fairness, not just debate. I have a question arising from information which was provided on Friday. On the one hand we learned from Statistics Canada that the share of taxes paid by corporations in Canada is at an all time low, at least for the period of the last 10 years. At the same time the Minister of State for Finance said that the tax provision which makes the kinds of benefits possible that Olympia and York got in the Gulf deal was "going to go on and on and on". Will the Government take action now to remove that particular loophole to ensure that corporations pay their share of taxes?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my previous answer, what the Canadian people are getting now in action, not just debate. We have taken specific action on a number of similar items. All these things are under constant review and will continue to be under constant review, and decisions will be taken. I would caution the Hon. Member, though, when using these statistics, that there are a number of companies which are still suffering, and suffering quite severely, from the depression of 1981-82, which caused this low tax position of Canadian corporations.

USE OF CORPORATE TAX PROVISION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has taken action all right; the taxes on the average Canadian have gone up and the taxes on corporations have gone down. What about a reversal of those priorities? Will the Minister confirm that this "Little Egypt Bump" tax provision, which has been there since 1971, has been used at least six times during the lifetime of the previous Government and the present Government to provide millions of dollars in giveaways to corporations? Is he prepared to table in the House the exact data, not for particular companies, but the cumulative figures which will show how much average Canadian taxpayers have lost because corporations have gained unfairly?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is misleading Canadians. I would like him to reflect back on the Budget where there is a surtax on corporations and a capital tax on banks in order to have some degree of fairness and balance in the approach we have taken to addressing the deficit problem. With regard to the specific information for which the Hon. Member is asking, I will have to take a look to see what would be available.

ESTEY COMMISSION—REPRESENTATION FOR OPPOSITION PARTIES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Both he and the Minister of State for Finance keep talking about the importance of the Estey Commission when it comes to dealing with Northland and Canadian Commercial Bank matters. Therefore, will the Minister of Finance agree that the Government will provide funds for each opposition Party to have counsel at all hearings of the Estey Commission, so that the matter can be properly gone into and disclosed?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a question which he raised with me previously. I have indicated that I appreciate the representation on the part of opposition Parties. Quite frankly I hoped to respond to him in a more official way, but the answer is no.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Government House Leader. The Government of Canada, the Bank of Canada, the Inspector General of Banks and the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation are all represented at public expense at the hearings of that commission. Why is the Government afraid to have counsel there on behalf of both opposition Parties to ensure, on behalf of the public, that all relevant question will be asked? What is the Government trying to hide? What is it afraid of?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to trivialize the question. The fact is that we would have hoped for more on the floor of the House of Commons rather than having counsel retained for the opposition Parties.

The Hon. Member will understand that there are certain precedents in respect of standing before the commision. In the case of any group, I simply say that it is a question of making application to the Commission with regard to standing. However, the normal practice has been that they will pay their own legal expenses in connection with such an inquiry.

NATIONAL REVENUE

CONSEQUENCES OF TAX SHELTER ACCORDED REICHMANN BROTHERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Finance.

Would he be prepared to admit, as we in the New Democratic Party assert, that the tax shelter provided for the Reichmann brothers did not create a single job and that, on the contrary, it may have even resulted in the loss of jobs in Montreal East?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it astounds me that a question coming from that Hon. Member would criticize the fact that Canadianization of the oil and gas industry should increase by over 4.5 percentage points. That will create jobs. It will create a more independent Canadian-owned entity. It will save Gulf from being merged with Chevron and from being totally submerged by Chevron. Surely these things should cause the Hon. Member to stand and shout from the highest mountain that this has been good for Canada.

CREATION OF JOBS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Other than Mickey Cohen, the former architect of the National Energy Program, and some tax accountants, who got jobs out of this $1 billion tax boondoggle giveway? Can he name anyone who got jobs other than Mickey Cohen and some tax accountants?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I said, I am astounded that these questions should come from the Hon. Member. It will lead to a stronger oil and gas industry. It will save jobs which would have been lost had there been a merger between Chevron and Gulf Oil. It will lead to a greater degree of exploration activity in the offshore.

Surely these are good things for Canada. The Hon. Member should take his negative attitudes away from here and start congratulating the Government for doing something which his Party has been encouraging us to do the whole time we have been in office.

MINES AND MINING

ASBESTOS—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines who believes that the Government is wasting taxpayers' money by removing asbestos from Government buildings. It relates to his statement of two weeks ago:

> It really is upsetting that I can't get the message through more quickly to stop wasting government money.

Obviously he was not telephoning the Prime Minister's Office. Has the Minister made any progress since this expression of frustration was made some two weeks ago?

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, as Minister of State for Mines in the Government, I have an interest in all mining activities across the country. In this particular instance, the asbestos industry has been the victim of continuing concern which new scientific evidence has indicated is no longer a basis for judgment. Canada's approach to the use of asbestos is controlled use and ensured safety for workers, which is fully supported by the workers in the industry. With regard to Government programs to minimize the cost of correction of earlier policies, these are under way.

HEALTH INQUIRY

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Does he agree with the Minister of State for Mines that one can safely ingest asbestos?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member reflects on the answer of the Minister of State for Mines, I am sure he will realize that the words used in his question were not the ones used by the Minister. When we take a look at the matter of safety in mining and the manufacturing of chrysotile asbestos, all of us are fully aware that the standards accepted by various Departments of Government are rigorous and have to be maintained.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

PROVISION OF DAYCARE FACILITIES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last June the Minister of State for Finance told a women's economic conference that daycare is the most pressing and the most critical issue preventing women from achieving economic equality. Does the Minister of Finance agree with his colleague's statement?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: Just say yes, Jake.

Mr. Deans: Are you really the Minister of Finance?

Ms. Mitchell: Are you the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, the matter of the importance that this Government places on daycare and its proper financing is an ongoing one. The Member will also note, for example, that the number of spaces that have been opened in the last year, in this Government's first year, has accelerated. If she takes a look at the figures supplied by CMHC, she will find that substantiated as well. Members of this House, and especially of this Party, have encouraged the Government to seek whatever means, both private and public, to maintain and to increase the number of spaces.

GOVERNMENT FINANCING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Will the real Minister of Finance please answer this one? If there is to be any improvement in daycare the federal Government must take on a leadership role with direct financing. I think the Minister previously indicated what the Government's position was.

Will the Minister of Finance make a commitment today that he will begin planning now for the establishment of a daycare fund in his next Budget? Let us plan now so we will get it in this time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, has indicated very clearly the priority that we put on the provision of daycare and the insistence of society on our developing more places for daycare. This is something on which we will continue to work hard.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION—UNITED STATES CLEAN-UP PLAN

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment who has had time to study the American plan for the clean-up of the toxic chemical mess along the Niagara River, submitted to him last week.

Will the Minister tell us now whether the plan contains stiff controls on the polluting industries on the American side and, secondly, whether specific funds have been allocated for the incineration of toxic chemicals from the dump sites along the Niagara River?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am puzzled as to why the Hon. Member would ask that question because within minutes of my receipt of the relevant report, not having seen the report, not even having been provided with a digest of it, the Hon. Member shot off a news communique, dated October 17, answering the very question he purports to put to me in good faith today. He said there are no funds, no monitorings, no research, no plans for, as he put it, the "so-called" Niagara River clean-up. I suggest to him that he do what I am doing, which is taking the time to reflect on the issue methodically before making categorcal pronouncements ex cathedra.

CONTENTS OF PLAN

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): The health of six and one-half million Canadians who depend on the quality of that water is more important than the rhetoric in which the Minister is engaging today. Will the Minister give the facts to the House and tell us what are the specific amounts of money attached to that plan, whether there are control measures attached to it, and whether the municipalities on the American side will be given the funds to clean up, by way of sewer controls, the mess that is taking place daily in those shared international waters?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks for the facts. The facts are that he was Minister of the Environment for 12 months. His Party was in control of the affairs of this country, including my Department, for a quarter of a century, practically without interruption, and during all that time nothing was done. This Government is committed to doing something and it is going to do it.

EDUCATION

FEDERAL TRANSFER PAYMENTS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Since 1977 the provincial contribution to post-secondary education has fallen from about 30 per cent to 20 per cent and there has been a deterioration in total funding, quality, and accessibility, to the extent that most think there is a need for increased funding both federally and provincially.

Will the Secretary of State, for the benefit of those observing National Universities Week, explain how cumulative cuts totalling $6 billion to $7 billion by 1990, in the escalator for transfer of payments to the provinces, will impact upon the universities and colleges of the country?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): With respect to the level of contributions paid to the provinces, Mr. Speaker, the May Budget of the Minister of Finance contained very specific figures which were recently communicated to the provinces by the Minister of Finance. As to the first part of the question, I am sure the Hon. Member can understand my reluctance to comment on the quality of education in the various provinces, for I do not think it is my role. As to the second part, the Hon. Member presupposes cutbacks which do not exist. We have conveyed the financial figures to the provinces and they are perfectly free to analyze them. The Minister of Finance is keeping in touch with them. I am quite confident that the matter will be resolved, as will other questions related to education.

[English]

PROVINCES' CONTRIBUTIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I find it extraordinary that the Secretary of State, whose responsibility is colleges and universities, has not thought about the matter, as revealed in his answer. I would like him to tell me how he believes that it is going to be possible to convince the provinces to increase their contributions to post-secondary education if at the same time the federal Government is proposing extensive cuts in transfer payments which may total $6 billion to $7 billion by 1990.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, my responsibilities do not extend to colleges and universities. I am accountable to the federal Government and must ensure that the quality of education meets the requirements the federal Government may set. Again I say to the Hon. Member—and I told him so this morning—that education and the funds provided by the provinces do fall within their jurisdiction. In 1977 it was decided to make an unconditional transfer of the funds to the provincial Governments. That was done and we honour that commitment. As to the other process we have to undertake with respect to education assessment, we will do so on the basis of the educational funds earmarked by the provinces—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

WELLAND CANAL BLOCKAGE—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SHIPPING SEASON

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, due to the serious situation caused by the blow-out of lock 7 on the Welland Canal, in my riding, and the fact that repairs to that lock were hampered over the weekend because of the heavy rains, would the Minister give consideration to a further extension to what he has already announced of the shipping season? Will he also give consideration to the two proposals for upgrading the locks which I mentioned in this House on Friday?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that the Seaway will operate as long as weather permits.

On the broader question I have had some preliminary discussions with Mr. O'Neil, the president of the Seaway Authority, with a view to determining ways and means of more accurately identifying any potential problem areas in the future and, secondly, to consider ways and means of adequate and effective contingencies in the event of a breakdown and, thirdly, other ways and means of improving the over-all operation of the Seaway and thereby restoring confidence both here in Canada and abroad. However, our first and foremost priority is to get the Seaway operational and we are working around the clock to accomplish that target.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCOME TAX DISCOUNTERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Last year, income tax discounting companies kept over $41 million in tax refunds, and of this amount, $20 million came from the tax child credit. There are now over 1,000 offices operated by these loans sharks and we have been asking for action in this regard for over a year.

Why has the Minister not done anything yet? Why does he allow our needy, of whom the majority are women, to be exploited in this way? Why—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I shall try to reply very briefly. As I stated last week, we completed our consultations a few weeks ago. We are now preparing recommendations which will be submitted to the Cabinet shortly.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may ask a short supplementary.

[English]

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, the National Anti-Poverty Organization has urged the Minister to outlaw tax discounting completely and we have been asking for that for a year now.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: In light of the increase—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Burnaby.

LABOUR

WAGES OF AIRPORT SECURITY PERSONNEL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour.

The Minister will be aware that, at the Dorval, Mirabel and Quebec airports, the security officers, who all come under Federal jurisdiction, are paid $4 an hour while others under provincial jurisdiction are paid $5.80 an hour in accordance with provincial legislation.

How can the Minister accept on the one hand that people in charge of passenger security be so underpaid, and on the other hand that there be such a difference in the wages paid to workers doing essentially the same job?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, the wages at the airports to which he has referred are set by a collective bargaining process and are negotiated between the two parties. Regarding the minimum wage and its effect, that is under consideration within the Department.

[Translation]

WAGE PARITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the same Minister.

Does the Minister recall having told his colleague, the Minister of Public Works, that he would consider introducing a bill to amend the Fair Wages Act in February so that these officers may have wage parity with their provincial colleagues, and if so, what is he waiting for?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I understood the Hon. Member's question, he was asking if there is parity between the provincial minimum wages and the federal minimum wage. Consideration is being given to the federal minimum wage. Right now it is still above that of two provincial jurisdictions and we will consider the options available to the Government.

LAW REFORM

IMPOSITION OF PRISON SENTENCES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General will know that last week at a Conference on the Administration of Justice, the President of the Law Reform Commission of Canada called for the abolition of minimum sentences, the abolition of time off for good behaviour, and the abolition of the parole system. As well, he suggested that we should substitute for that a system of bench-mark sentences. Can the Solicitor General tell us if he agrees with those proposals and will he tell us if he would consider introducing those on a trial basis before calling for the vote on capital punishment?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is too long.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I know an easy question when I hear one. I believe the Hon. Member was referring to a paper which was produced by Mr. Justice Allen Linden, one of over 100 representations currently being studied by the Canadian Sentencing Commission. I can indicate that, regarding mandatory supervision, over which a number of concerns have been expressed, there is legislation before the House right now to clean up some of the present abuses.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PRODUCTION OF CANADIAN PROGRAMS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): My question is for the Acting Minister of Communications.

Mr. Marchi: They are all acting.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Finestone: According to reports from the CBC and Radio Canada, reductions to their budgets have seriously affected their ability to produce Canadian programs, thereby jeopardizing Canadian cultural sovereignty. Will the Minister explain to the House how, in spite of last year's $85 million cut, the loss of 1,430 jobs, and now an additional $55 million that the CBC says will have to be cut, he thinks that these corporations will be able to maintain their current and planned schedule of made-in-Canada programs?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the CBC received at the preceding stages of the budget from the Government the same consideration as all the other Crown corporations. About the warning given by the President of the CBC, I have indicated that this was something which had been announced in the May budget, that I would personally have to meet with the President, and that in my view, it was not useful to discuss the CBC budget now. We will do so in November, at which time we will be able to determine the parameters.

[English]

PRODUCTION OF LOCAL PROGRAMS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister please explain how the sechdule of made-in-Canada programs will continue to be met without reducing local programming and broadcasting in places like Windsor, Ontario, and Labrador City, Newfoundland?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not quite get the point the Hon. Member is trying to make . . . for there is no evidence that 10 years ago when you were the Government and when there were no cuts, at a time when as a matter of fact there probably should have been cuts, there was on the network a greater proportion of made-in-Canada programs than there is today. There is really no direct connection. There is no evidence that there is a direct connection between the cuts which have been made and the reduction in the proportion of made-in-Canada programs on the network. Absolutely no evidence. Many other factors should be also taken into account, and we will look into them when we deal with this issue at a later date.

WELLAND CANAL BLOCKAGE—EFFECT ON WORKERS' INCOME

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. As the Minister knows, the shutdown of the Welland Canal has placed thousands of men and women in this country out of work after a very difficult summer during which many of them were laid off because of the grain trade difficulties. Does the Minister believe that these workers should be penalized because of this incident, which morally was the responsibility of the Government? Will the Minister bring in measures to compensate these workers for their loss of pay?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the major preoccupation of the Government and all Hon. Members should be the determination of the precise cause of the accident, the repairing of the canal, and the restoration of normal operations. Anything beyond that is mere hypothesis and speculation. Surely there are disruptions from time to time when there is a mechanical breakdown.

I am encouraged by the Canadian Wheat Board's chief commissioner who indicated that, as far as he is concerned, there will be no resultant loss in sales. So while there may be a delay in the movement of grain until such time as normal operations are restored, I do not anticipate any long-term bad effects.

WORKERS' ELIGIBILITY FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): The Minister must be aware that many of the workers who were put out of work last week are a few weeks short of having the necessary weeks for reinstatement of unemployment insurance claims. Why should these workers have to suffer a loss of pay because of an accident which was not their fault? While the repairs are being undertaken why does the Government of Canada not move to compensate them for their loss of income?

• (1450)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I understand the Hon. Member visited the site. Perhaps he can tell me what the precise cause of the accident was since I am not aware of it. I do not know that it was the Government's fault or some other person's fault. If he has that information perhaps he should lay it on us. He is assuming that this was the Government's fault. It is an occurence which takes place when there is a mechanical operation. When we have determined the results, perhaps we can consider some of the points raised by the Hon. Member.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY—PLIGHT OF FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. However, in his absence I will put it to the Minister of State for Forestry. My question concerns a stabilization payment for the sugar-beet industry, especially the industry in southern Alberta where the industry was wiped out this year. On September 27, in a letter to me, the Minister said that there was no funding available due to lack of funds in the federal Government. Yet, last Friday, he made a $90 million payment available to the tobacco industry. Can the Minister explain why there were no funds on September 27 for sugar-beet producers and on October 18 there was $90 million available? Can he tell me where is the equity?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly love to answer the question. However, in the absence of the Minister I shall take the question as notice. I will certainly draw it to his attention.

REQUEST FOR STABILIZATION PAYMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, while the Minister is doing that I hope he will also note that in a press release last Friday the Minister said he was making this $90 million available because of the critical marketing situation. This is a critical situation for the sugar-beet producers as well. I ask that the Government make an immediate decision to proceed with a stabilization payment this year.

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I will draw that matter to the Minister's attention as well.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

FEDERAL TRANSFER PAYMENTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last Thursday in the House in answer to a question which I asked him he indicated that in the May 23 Budget he had indicated that transfer payments to the provinces would be cut in the next fiscal year, that is, 1986-87. Will the Minister now stand up and confirm that that was not correct and that the Budget Papers presented by him did not indicate any reduction in transfer payments for the period 1986-87?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that that was the answer I gave to the question last week. In response to another question I confirmed to the Hon. Member that the reduction in the growth rate of federal-provincial transfers would commence April 1, 1986. With respect to the questions he is posing here I caution him to recognize the fact that the percentage of money which will be spent on federal-provincial transfers in 1990-91 will be the same percentage of money as is being spent this year.

ELECTION PROMISE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is put to the same Minister. The Minister said that the Government will be making those transfers in the next fiscal year. He said that that was contained in the Budget. It was not. Nor was it in the Budget Papers presented by the Minister.

Does the Conservative Party stand by its election promise with respect to returning to the 1977 funding formula for post-secondary education? Will the Government keep that promise? Or, as indicated by the follow-up to the Budget with respect to transfer payments, will it break that promise as well?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, at a meeting with the Finance Ministers in Halifax in September we had a useful discussion of this whole question of federal-provincial transfers. We will be having two more meetings at least before the end of the year at which we will be discussing this matter further. I think that at these meetings the Finance Ministers will bring forward their views on how they feel the money should be allocated to the provinces.

FOOTWEAR IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. In that the removal of footwear quotas would reduce prices for consumers, free retailers from complex administrative problems, prevent retaliatory trade measures and stimulate our manufacturers to new levels of productivity and employment, when will the Government announce its policy with respect to these quotas?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to tell the Hon. Member, who has made representations with respect to this matter earlier, that we are progressing very well with respect to the footwear industry. I am hopeful that we will be able to announce the Government's policy shortly.

PUBLIC WORKS

LAY-OFFS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works.

The Minister is aware that not long ago, it was announced that 270 general maintenance workers had received pink slips announcing they would be laid off effective next April. The Minister is also aware that most of the employees affected by this layoff are employed in federal post offices.

Could the Minister inform the House why maintenance workers were chosen as the target for employee cutbacks? Why strike at the bottom instead of at management, and could the Minister inform the House whether this is an austerity measure, in other words, a measure to try and reduce the deficit by striking at those who are less well off, in lower paying jobs?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is not at all our intention to strike at those who are less well off. It is clear that we have services to offer at Canada Post, and it is also clear, and I wish the Hon. Member would realize this, that several experiments at Public Works have resulted in savings, in terms of the private sector. In this case, the people have been advised, they have six months to think about their notice, and they will also be able to find the same kind of work in the private sector.

JOB SECURITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Could the Minister give the House the assurance that in his Department, the Department of Public Works, he will inform workers responsible for general maintenance in buildings that Canadians use most often, that their jobs are guaranteed and that their jobs are secure today?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we have identified about 500 people at Public Works. A certain percentage of that number may be reclassified in other areas, and they have six months to do that. There are also those people to whom the Hon. Member referred earlier, who are working for the post offices, and we hope that these people will be able to get new jobs through the contracts which we will be offering to the private sector.

So I think that with their experience, these people will always be needed to take care of maintenance services at our offices.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

PROJECTED LAY-OFFS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Has the Minister succeeded in blocking Treasury Board's demands to cut 1,152 Customs and Excise staff over the next five years? If not, can the Minister explain how his Ministry intends to respect the guarantee of the Minister of Finance with respect to there being a minimum disruption to the public when 11 per cent of Customs and Excise staff are being fired?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I respect the relevance of my hon. friend's question. However, with respect, the figures he quotes are not accurate. Our Department will do everything it can to retrain and to take into account the best interests of the workers. It is not a question of blocking anything; it is a question of trying to expedite our Government's policy and doing it in as humane and equitable a way as possible.

EFFECT ON SERVICE TO PUBLIC

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister saying that my figures are inaccurate because they are too low and that, in fact, more people will go on this lay-off and retraining route? Can the Minister say to the Government: look at how much tax revenue will be lost by these cut-backs and how much illegal pornography and illegal drugs will come into the country because of these cut-backs and how there will be much greater delays for passengers because of these cut-backs in an essential service to Canadians?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is that the figures quoted by the Hon. Member are not accurate. It is not on the low side that they are not accurate. The other factors he mentions are certainly factors which have to be taken into consideration and we are doing that. We are determined that the interests of the public will not suffer and that the interests of all of the employees will be safeguarded to the greatest extent possible.

EDUCATION

FUNDING OF UNIVERSITIES

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last week the progressive Liberal Government of Ontario announced that an additional $50 million will be given to that province's universities in the next school year in order to help correct the chronic problem of university under-funding. Given that initiative and considering that this week is National Universities Week, will the Minister tell us that the Government of Canada is willing to do its share to correct the chronic problem of university under-funding?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member has been listening to the responses which I have been giving to other Hon. Members. The Government of Canada will be increasing significantly the amount of money which will be spent by the federal Government in federal-provincial transfers, in which post-secondary education and health care are the two major areas. The premise to the Hon. Member's question is wrong.

● (1500)

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I have been listening very closely to the Minister's answers, but they say more than they don't say.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Hear, hear!

FUTURE FUNDING

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has announced that he will cut transfer payments to the provinces, or reduce the rate of increase. Can the Minister assure us that these cuts, or these reductions in increases, will not make post-secondary education and university education suffer?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I replied earlier to our colleague that the provinces assumed responsibility for allocating funds to universities and post-secondary institutions. We make the transfer payments to the provinces, and they make the decisions. We cannot guarantee, as the Federal Government, that these funds will be increased or reduced. On a number of occasions, the Minister has indicated that the transfers were being made to the provinces. It is the provinces and not the Federal Government which decide where the money will go. We cannot . . . We do not assume the provinces' responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Friday, October 18, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, before I present my petitions, I have a question of privilege. As my colleague was asking—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Just for form's sake, perhaps the Hon. Member would like to rise on his question of privilege, and I will recognize him, if that is his wish.

Mr. Waddell: The point of privilege is that as my colleague was asking a question, the Government House Leader called across to us on this side of the House that we should shave or resign, and—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that it is not the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who may have a question of privilege.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT PROGRAMS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of people in Vancouver. It is with respect to the Government's policy of deindexing the family allowances. These petitioners oppose this and have requested that I present this petition.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, petitions are still coming in from all parts of Canada asking that the House of Commons reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and rescind the unfair tax increases which are such a burden on families. This petition is from the people of Vancouver, British Columbia.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition presented by Joseph Edwards in the riding of York West. He and his co-signatories ask that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) restore full indexation to the family allowance and child tax credit and rescind the budget measure which will take away $55 million in family benefits by 1987.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed by people from Leaf Rapids, Manitoba. The petition talks about the fact that the Government is deducting the pension benefits from the unemployment insurance benefits which would seriously interfere with the efforts of employees and the community to create employment by giving early retirement pension packages. The petitioners ask that all retired employees be allowed to keep their pension benefits and receive their unemployment insurance benefits without deduction of pension income.

I may point out that Leaf Rapids is one of the communities where early retirement has become a necessity.

VIA RAIL PASSES

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the Moose Jaw CP Rail Pensioners and Pioneer Association, protesting the fact that CP Rail is taking their VIA Rail passes away. The ask that CP Rail immediately reinstate their VIA Rail passes.

DEINDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT PROGRAMS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from several residents of Quebec. They state that the deindexation of the universal family allowance is an unfair attack on women and families, and further state that this attack will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that other tax increases which were in the May Budget will place an unfair burden on low and middle income earners.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 142 and 329.

[Text]

UNIFORMS OF CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Question No. 142—Mrs. Killens:

1. With reference to the article which appeared in the December 10, 1984 issue of the Ottawa Citizen concerning the Gallup poll on new uniforms for members of the Armed Forces, does the Minister of National Defence intend to take into account the opinion of the Canadian people who do not wish that $36 million be spent for such purposes?

2. Is the project already under way and (a) if so (i) will the old uniforms be reinstated or will new uniforms be designed (ii) who will be responsible for designing the uniforms (iii) will the Canadian people be informed of the developments of the project and, if so, on what date (b) if not, will the Minister guarantee the Canadian taxpayer that it will be completed within the estimated costs and deadline?

3. Will tenders be called for providing the new uniforms and, if so, on what date will the call for tenders be made public?

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. The project to introduce new uniforms is under way having received both departmental and governmental approval.

2. (a)(i) The uniforms will not be identical to those worn prior to unification. While certain traditional and international features have been retained these uniforms will be distinctively Canadian.

(ii) A committee of senior DND officials headed by the Assistant Deputy Minister (Personnel) was charged by the Chief of the Defence Staff (CDS) with the preparation of design proposals. The final designs were reviewed by Armed Forces Council and approved by the CDS.

(iii) The Canadian people will be informed of the developments of the project as they are communicated to members of the Canadian Forces.

(b) Not applicable.

3. Some tenders have been called already, and all tenders are expected to be called by March 31, 1986.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES—COST OF NEW UNIFORMS

Question No. 329—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What amount is the Department of National Defence planning to spend on new uniforms for the Canadian Armed Forces?

2. Will the uniforms be purchased from Canadian owned companies or companies operating in Canada?

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence):

1. The Department of National Defence is planning to spend an amount not exceeding $56 million. (a) $36 million over three years for new uniforms; (b) $20 million which was approved by the former Government for summer uniforms will now be spent on the purchase of the new uniforms.

2. With a minor exception for braid used in the manufacture of rank insignia, which is not manufactured in Canada, all fabrics and uniform components will be purchased from Canadian owned companies or companies operating in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Dick: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): In the minutes which remain to me, I would like to continue with our objections to Bill C-62. I would like to cite Judge Abella herself who stated quite explicitly that a voluntary program with a mandatory reporting requirement is nonetheless voluntary in the absence of a requirement to remedy the discriminatory practices disclosed by the information reported. One cannot put it much clearer than that, Mr. Speaker. If we have a voluntary program, then it does not matter how mandatory the reporting of it will be, it is still a voluntary program.

I had the occasion to examine the review by Leah Cohen, a consultant to the Department of the Secretary of State, the Human Rights Directorate, on the question of affirmative action in Canada after 10 years. What Miss Cohen found out was that universally and overwhelmingly the people who have been concerned with employment equity for women say that voluntary programs simply have not worked, have not proven to be effective. For example, the federal Government itself has had a voluntary program through the Canada Employment Insurance Commission which has existed for the last 10 years, and only 5 per cent of the businesses which have been approached have actually instituted agreements. In Ontario, where I was previously a member of the Legislature, the same thing prevailed. The voluntary approach which was put in place by a Conservative Government did not work and all the exhortations to business were simply ineffective.

We are being asked, Mr. Speaker, to believe that Bill C-62, which is a slender, thin, paltry Bill, will somehow lead private businesses to do what they have not been prepared to do over the course of the last few years. If this is true with respect to affirmative action for women, it is equally true in terms of action for the handicapped, the visible minorities and for our native peoples.

You would expect that a certain amount of action within the Government would have been taken, but the Government of Canada has not been effective. Yet the voluntary approach—and presumably something more than that was being followed within the Government—did not apply. We cannot have a Bill with no enforcement. Bill C-62 does not provide for enforcement. The Minister's words about enforcement by the Canadian Human Rights Commission are hollow. They are meaningless. They will be respected by no court of law. The fact that handicapped people do not get jobs in the private sector and that our native peoples do not get jobs even within the Government of Canada and the fact that women continue to receive only 60 per cent of the pay men receive—women are grossly over-represented and grossly under-represented in the service sector in terms of management and good jobs—is witness to how far we have to go and to the need for effective action.

In my opinion, and in the opinion of the New Democratic Party, effective action means that, as the Abella Report stated, there has to be an enforcement mechanism. We have to get tough and we have to be realistic. We cannot expect people to do voluntarily what they have failed to do over the last half a century. That is why our Party believes that Bill C-62 is fundamentally flawed and is totally inadequate to meet the needs for equality in the workplace for all Canadians now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State (Mrs. Landry) for a question or comment.

Mrs. Landry: Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply to my colleague that this will be the first time that data is available to measure the progress made. In my opinion, this is the difference with this Bill which will mean that we no longer need any compulsory program.

I also want to tell something else to the Hon. Member. As concerns the progress made by our Government, especially as concerns the promotion of women, our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recently indicated, quite rightly, that our first objective was to increase from 15 to 30 per cent the representation of women on Federal boards and that we have already reached two-thirds of this objective after one year in power.

I therefore believe, Mr. Speaker, that we are being quite consistent in keeping our promises.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, we already have the latest data. We have had them since the report of the royal inquiry commission on the status of women was published in 1965-66. We already have the data. Each year, we can see that women earn less than two-thirds the salaries of men.

We also know that, at the Federal Government, for instance, while the employable handicapped, make up 5 per cent of the Canadian population, only .5 per cent of public servants are handicapped.

We have figures which show that, while the native people represent 4 per cent of the Canadian population, less than 2 per cent are employed in the Public Service. We have figures which show that, at the Federal Government, 60 per cent of women occupy low paying support positions.

These are the statistics we now have. It is therefore not necessary to wait another 4, 5, 6, 10 or 20 years until more data is submitted by various businesses under Bill C-62.

[English]

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague to elaborate somewhat on the fact that the Canadian Human Rights Commission has not been established as an enforcement agency, as well as on the general lack of enforcement agencies so far as this Bill is concerned.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that Human Rights Commissions across this country have generally responded on a case-by-case basis to individual complaints. If an individual said he was badly treated and not accepted for a job, the employer, if he is federally-regulated, may well say that this particular individual was not qualified. You have to look at the systemic discrimination, and to do that you need to look at the whole picture. However, according to the Government, we will have to wait for years until the facts begin to roll in. It is extremely difficult for a Human Rights Commission to come in after the fact, and even then presumably it tells the employer that it is about time he put in an effective affirmative action program and that he should come back in five years' time and show the commission that it is working. That does not resolve the problem, for example, of black or Indo-Pakistani Canadians applying for jobs in the Toronto area with one-third to one-half the chance of getting a job as white Anglo-Saxon males. If you take a case before the Human Rights Commission it is extremely difficult, costly, exhausting and, as we saw in the case of a Liberal Member of Parliament, it can be extremely time consuming and put the person concerned out on the line in the sense of public exposure. Surely something better than that is required. While the Human Rights Commission has resolved a few questions related to equal pay for work of equal value, it has worked with glacial speed. It did not have the resources nor the commitment to apply the law in that particular case, and there is no evidence that it will apply a law which does not even name its enforcement agency.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Hon. Member that this morning he was questioning my colleague, the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin), regarding what the Liberals had or had not done for equality for women. Does the Hon. Member recall the discussion surrounding Article 28 of the Charter? If he does, he may remember that it was the NDP Government of Saskatchewan, for one, which was against the equality provisions for women at that time. Is he also aware that the Province of Manitoba, under an NDP Government, was, at least up until lately, one of the few provincial jurisdictions which did not have equal pay for work of equal value legislation for provincial employees?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to the new Liberal Government in Ontario backing away from its commitment to equal pay for work of equal value. I had the privilege this morning of meeting with members of the daycare coalition and they pointed out that even if it is not yet enough, the number of daycare places per one thousands kids in Manitoba represents the highest proportion of any jurisdiction in Canada. I think that is a tribute to the concern of the NDP Government there regarding that question.

I recall well the point that my friend refers to. I recall in particular that the political leadership which was needed to ensure an equality section for women in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms did not come from the former Government led by the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau. It was not until women across the country rose up in arms, formed a network and met in Room 200 in the West Block and began to lobby like crazy that finally the federal Government got going and wrote it into the Charter of Rights. It is instructive to know that despite the fact that some things were done by the previous Government regarding equality for women, the Government did not have it in its heart to insist that it be a part of the draft Charter of Rights from the moment it became public.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I always thought that the NDP said that our country was a partnership between federal and provincial Governments. I now hear the Hon. Member say that the federal Government should have moved, presumably unilaterally, without the consent of the NDP Government of Saskatchewan which did not want equality provisions for women in the Constitution at that time. Is that what the Hon. Member is telling me?

Mr. Cassidy: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the specific events. Perhaps the Hon. Member and his colleague who spoke this morning have access to what happened behind the scenes but I do not. I do know that the process of constitution-making involves a great deal of bargaining and negotiation. I recall that the Government of Saskatchewan, with the support of my Party, insisted that the special provisions relating to provincial rights in matters of resources were written in during these negotiations. If the Liberal Party wants to claim it is so Simon-pure, I would point out that when the Trudeau Government came to power women earned about 60 per cent of what men earned, and when the Liberal Government was defeated 16 years later—the situation was still about the same. There had not been any appreciable progress. If the Liberals had been concerned about this question they would have put it on the agenda, made it a public issue, and ensured that, whether it was Davis or Buchanan or any other Premier who was resisting, equality for women was written into the first draft of the Charter rather than added after very substantial lobbying by women that took place across Canada.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this extremely important debate on Bill C-62. It is important at the outset to ask why it is necessary for this Government, indeed any Government, to bring forward legislation concerning employment equity. The answer is quite simple. It is because there is no equity, fairness or justice in employment in Canada. It is incumbent upon parliamentarians, federal and provincial, to do what we can in our respective jurisdictions to obviate the inequities which have existed for so long in employment in Canada.

I would like to indicate at the outset that we in the Liberal Party support Bill C-62 in principle. We have fought long and hard for the concept of employment equity. We recognize the inequities which exist in Canada today. We are fully committed to achieving a high degree of equity in the workplace recognizing, of course, the jurisdiction that we have as parliamentarians. Parliament has the jurisdiction to deal with federal agencies, federal Departments, and federally incorporated organizations. We are limited, to a certain extent, because of the breakdown in jurisdiction between the federal Parliament and the provincial legislatures. Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, there is a lot that this Parliament can do within its own jurisdiction in terms of achieving the equity which we all desire.

• (1520)

Several years ago, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Government recognized a problem and decided that definitive action was necessary in order to do what it could to eliminate whatever inequities existed. The previous Liberal Government appointed a royal commission headed by Judge Rosalie Abella. That commission was established by the Liberal Government and its establishment announced on June 27, 1983. The terms of reference establishing that commission required the commission to explore the most efficient, effective and equitable means of promoting equality in employment for four groups. Those four groups are women, native people, disabled persons, and visible minorities, because it was recognized that when one speaks of employment inequity in the workplace those who are victims are generally people in those four designated groups. The commission was also mandated to inquire specifically into the employment practices of 11 designated Crown and government-owned corporations.

The commissioner went away and, as a result of many hours of discussion and listening to many, many groups across the country, Judge Abella tabled her report earlier this year. We in her Majesty's Loyal Opposition applauded Judge Abella at the time and we continue to do so. A number of very important recommendations were made by Judge Abella. I am sorry to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservative Government has not seen fit to adopt, in full, her recommendations. In our view, had the Government exercised its jurisdiction and adopted in full the recommendations of the Abella Commission, we would be a long distance down the road toward employment equity in this country. However, instead of adopting the recommendations, the Government has opted to present to us for debate here today a Bill entitled, "An Act respecting employment equity". This Bill has been criticized, not only by the Liberal Opposition here in Parliament, but by women's organizations across this great land, by aborignal groups, by groups representing disabled persons, and by other groups representing the ethnic and visible minorities in Canada.

One could ask why they would criticize a Bill which purports to obviate employment inequities which exist in the workplace today in Canada. Well, the major objection to this piece of legislation is that the Bill is not strong enough. It has no teeth in that no sanctions exist in this Bill to ensure that those employers who, for whatever reason, decide not to honour the spirit and the letter of this law are punished. That appears to be the major objection that has been levied against this Bill by people in all groups, especially the organizations representing the women of Canada.

The first recommendation of the Abella Commission was that:

> All federally regulated employers should be required by legislation to implement employment equity. Measures to eliminate discriminatory employment barriers and practices should be referred to as employment equity, rather than as affirmative action.

The second recommendation of the commission was that:

> Employment equity legislation should have three major components:

These components would work together to ensure an adequate and forceful piece of legislation. The first component of employment equity legislation would be that there be a mandatory, as opposed to passive, requirement that employers implement employment equity. Employers, as defined by the Act, should be required by law to implement employment equity. The second component for achieving employment equity is that there be:

> (b) a requirement that employers collect and annually file data, by designated group, on the participation rates, occupational distribution, and income levels of employees in their workforces;

The third and most important component, if one is serious about employment equity, is that there be:

> (c) an enforcement mechanism.

I have gone through this Bill with a fine-tooth comb, Mr. Speaker—and Hon. Members will appreciate that I require a fine-tooth comb—and there is nothing in here with respect to sanctions or an enforcement mechanism. It is all voluntary.

Mr. Boudria: Unbelievable. The Tories did that?

Mr. Nunziata: Indeed they did. Mr. Speaker, I think we can quite justifiably ask how serious the Government is with respect to employment equity, or have we seen the rednecks in the Conservative caucus win the day and impact on the Government's decision? It is to be noted that there are those, few as they may be, in the Conservative caucus who agree with us that full employment equity must be obtained. Although there may be few, it is obvious that the right-wingers, if you will, in the Conservative caucus had a major role to play in the drafting of this particular piece of legislation.

To that, Mr. Speaker, I say, shame on the Government, for a number of reasons. The first is the promises it made during the last election campaign. It made a lot of them and over the last year we have seen a lot of those promises being broken. We have taken the Government to task for some of the major promises that it made and broke. I need not at this point, Mr. Speaker, reiterate all the broken promises such as the attempt to deindex senior citizens' pensions notwithstanding the fact that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) in Sherbrooke, Quebec in July of 1984 stood on the election platform and said to the gathered, and through them to all senior citizens in Canada, "Elect me, Brian Mulroney, as Prime Minister of Canada and I promise to each and every one of you full indexation of your pensions". That is the promise he made and that is the promise he tried to break. Had it not been for the Liberal Opposition in Parliament and public opinion, that promise would have been broken. That was a paramount promise, a sacred trust of the Government. The Government made other promises specifically with reference to employment equity.

Permit me the opportunity to review some of the promises that the Government made with respect to women's issues, as they were called during the last election campaign. My hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for the federal riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) must be commended for putting together a collection of 338 commitments made by the Tory Government in the last election campaign. My colleague from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell has documented all of those promises so that we, and Canadians generally, will be able to judge the honesty and integrity of this Government by the action it takes, as a Government, in comparison to the promises made during the last election campaign. Let me tell Members sitting opposite and any Canadian who wishes a copy of this promise book to call the office of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, who will be pleased to present them with a copy. I especially urge Hon. Members opposite to get a copy of the promises which the Progressive Conservative Party made and the leader of the Tories made during the last election campaign. It will be provided at no cost whatsoever.

• (1530)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Order. That is totally irrelevant to the Bill.

Mr. Nunziata: What were those promises with respect to employment equity, Mr. Speaker, to get back to the substance of my discourse? Let me quote a very important promise which the Tories made, and promised in their thirst for power during the last election campaign. They said that they would "make the federal Public Service a model to be followed with regard to the equality of women in the workplace".

Mr. Boudria: The Tories promised that?

Mr. Nunziata: Yes, they did. The Tories call Bill C-62 a model. I call it a model of hypocrisy. It is a model of how this Government made promises and is breaching them one by one. The Tories went on during that election campaign, desperate for power—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Listen to who is talking.

Mr. Nunziata: —and said to the women of Canada that if you vote for us—Progressive Conservatives—people with unimpeachable integrity—"we promise to implement an effective affirmative action program with adequate control, monitoring and evaluation mechanisms within the federal Public Service, its agencies and Crown corporations". Let me repeat, "and evaluation mechanisms with adequate control."

Where are the controls in Bill C-62? Where are those mechanisms? The Tories said "We promise to support the concept of equal pay for work of equal value and to ensure that it is enforced in the federally-controlled and regulated sectors." Those are the promises, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Boudria: Broken promises.

Mr. Nunziata: We looked at the promises. Then we pick up Bill C-62 and say to ourselves "Well, the Prime Minister keeps saying that he is full of unimpeachable integrity, let us see how much integrity the Prime Minister, the Minister and the Conservative Government have."

We go through this legislation to see how those promises are being carried through. But, Mr. Speaker, you can go through this Bill time and time again and you will not find what the Tories promised. What you will find instead is an extremely weak response to the very drastic need for employment equity. This would seriously leave one to question the commitment of this Government to the whole concept of employment equity.

The Bill is flawed for some major reasons. There are no sanctions in the Bill. It is not strong enough. The Bill does not apply to everyone or to every organization within federal jurisdiction. Those are the main criticisms. They are paramount and fundamental criticisms with respect to employment equity.

I spoke to a Conservative Member of my concerns on the lack of sanctions in the Bill. That Member said, "Well, there may not be any sanctions but we trust big business. It will do as it is told. We have faith in private enterprise, free enterprise. Notwithstanding the fact that profit is the motive—"

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Who is the Member?

Mr. Nunziata: I would prefer not to name the Member.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Then do not refer to him.

Mr. Nunziata: If he will come behind the curtains I will be pleased to tell the Hon. Member who it is. I was told that lack of sanctions was not a concern.

The Conservatives went on to say that Section 115, I believe, of the Criminal Code would apply. If there is a breach of a federal statute, an individual or a corporation could subject themselves to a criminal offence. There is that section in the Criminal Code of Canada which says that if any federal statute is breached, then that person could be subject to a summary conviction. If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, why would the Government in its wisdom not insert some other teeth in this Bill rather than resorting to the criminal law? I am sure those Members across the aisle who believe that business is the end all and be all would be a bit concerned that some of their business colleagues might be jailed if they did not adhere to suggestions. That is all they are, suggesting in this Bill, concerning employment equity.

There are other major problems in the Bill. I note that I have five minutes remaining and it is with regret that I have only five minutes because I have a lot to say on this important piece of legislation. If you look at the purpose of this Bill and read Clause 2, it is a real mouthful. Let me quote:

> The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the workplace so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfillment of that goal, to ameliorate the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada by giving effect to the principle that employment equity means more than treating persons in the same way but also requires special measures and the accommodation of differences.

What does all that mean?

Mr. Boudria: The Minister probably does not know.

Mr. Nunziata: What does all that mean, Mr. Speaker? Indeed, many hours of debate at committee will centre on what this clause means because it is a mouthful. I indicated at the beginning of my remarks what I believe is the necessity for employment equity. It talks of equity. It indicates four designated groups. We have women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority. What are the problems with respect to the definition? We all know what a woman is, Mr. Speaker. No problem. What, for example, is an aboriginal person? That is not defined in the Bill. I invite Members opposite to provide me with a definition.

Mr. Hudon: It is here.

Mr. Nunziata: The Hon. Member opposite holds up a copy of the Abella report. I have read it and reread it. It would appear Hon. Members have the report. The definition has to be in the Bill. Another designated group is persons with disabilities. What does that mean?

Mr. Towers: Liberals.

Mr. Nunziata: Is the Hon. Member opposite who wears glasses considered to be a person with a disability? According to many people, people who are near or far-sighted have a disability. Does a disability mean that you walk with a limp or you have some other form of disability? It does not define what a person with a disability is in this Bill. I note, that I have but a minute to go in my discussions, Mr. Speaker. There are problems concerning definitions.

● (1540)

It is indicative of where the Government is headed when it presents us with a piece of poorly drafted legislation. Indeed, I would suggest that the vague drafting of this piece of legislation was intentional. The Government and the Minister lacked the backbone or the guts to bring forth a piece of legislation which would attack or address employment inequity square on. Therefore, I would submit that they intentionally instructed the officials or drafters of this piece of legislation to draft it in a vague fashion.

In conclusion, I wish to say that we will support the thrust of the legislation. We cannot support some of the problems which I have addressed. We will speak very vociferously at committee to ensure that we develop a piece of legislation which will be a model to all in the country.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata), my friend across the hall in the Confederation Building. I am at a total loss to figure out what he is advocating. This Bill clearly expects companies to set internal objectives that are not required by statute. Second, the Bill requires federally regulated employers to implement employment equity and to report on the results. These are controls. He argues that there are no controls in the Bill. Do these not add up to controls? If these are not the controls he wants, does he want quotas? If he wants quotas, what kind of quotas does he want?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, my friend says that he is at a total loss. To that, what can I say? There is precious little we can do. If the Hon. Member reads the legislation and the report of the Abella Commission and listens to all groups with an interest in employment equity, he will recognize what I am saying. By admitting that he is at a total loss, he is admitting that the Government is at a total loss in respect of employment equity. That is the crux of this legislation and the crux of the criticisms levelled at the Government by all major women's organizations. For the Hon. Member to say that he is at a total loss, he is suggesting—

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am at a total loss because the Hon. Member is insisting that the Abella report requires submissions of plans in advance, and this is nowhere in the Abella report.

Mr. Boudria: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) may complete his answer.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, he has just reinforced his statement that he is at a total loss. He is beyond reach. I refer the Hon. Member to page 255 of the Abella report. He should pick up a copy. It is interesting reading. At page 255, Recommendation 2 reads:

> (c) an enforcement mechanism.

The Hon. Member should read that report and read the submissions made by various organizations which have come forward.

To answer his question with regard to whether we are suggesting quotas, of course not; we are not suggesting quotas. That is not what Judge Abella recommended. We put a lot of faith in the process which occurred with regard to the production of this report. It indicated that there should be no quotas, and we agree. However, there are other ways of ensuring employment equity.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Hon. Member did not tell us what kind of controls he wants. He does not want quotas. He does not like what we are suggesting. It is very unclear, and we are at a total loss to know what he is suggesting.

Mr. Nunziata: Rather than wasting the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, all I can suggest is that the Hon. Member should make an appointment to speak with his Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary to be briefed on what has occurred. I know he spent a lot of time over the summer in respect of the special committee, and I should like to take this opportunity to commend him for chairing that very important committee. It resulted in a report written by the Liberal Opposition which had much weight. I ask him to take that time. Perhaps he could speak with me after my discussion, and I will refer him to all specific sections in the Act and in the report to show him where the legislation falls short in respect of the Abella recommendations.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Blainville-Deux-Montagnes (Mrs. Landry) for a question or a comment.

Mrs. Landry: Mr. Speaker, for a comment.

Mr. Speaker, I also have in hand the Abella Report on equity in employment. I have the French copy, and the page numbers may differ. On page 283, in the summary of recommendations, Justice Abella says, and I quote:

(2) That the legislation on employment equity include three major components:

(a) a requirement that employers implement employment equity;

—which we are doing—

(b) a requirement that employers collect and annually file data on the participation rates—

—which we are doing—

(c) an enforcement mechanism.

Now, if my colleague had the French copy, he could go to page 288. The fourth model recommendation on enforcement methods says, and I quote:

(a) The Canadian Human Rights Commission would be asked to issue guidelines on employment equity—

Mr. Speaker, I think we are responding very adequately to the Abella recommendations on employment equity, and I would like to add that with respect to enforcement mechanisms by way of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, we have implemented that indeed. Moreover, I see no reason for having another Government body that would add to Government costs, as the Liberals constantly did. We believe the Canadian people is serious enough to respond to what we are suggesting, and we trust our legislation.

[English]

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite appears to be in the same position as the Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Hockin). The Abella report is quite explicit, quite clear, in respect of its recommendations. They run for a number of pages. In fact, there are some 117, to be exact. I simply invite the Hon. Member to take her copy of the Abella report and to review it in conjunction with Bill C-62 to see where the differences lie.

It is our submission that there is a canyon of difference between what was recommended by Abella and what we see in this particular piece of legislation.

Also I remind the Hon. Member of the criticisms which have been levelled by the major groups involved with regard to Bill C-62. They would lead me to conclude that we are not that far off, if not dead on, in respect of the criticisms of this particular piece of legislation. If she is saying that the Liberal Opposition is off base in respect of Bill C-62—and she nods her head in agreement—therefore she is saying that the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and all other major organizations representing women, aboriginal groups and ethnic minorities are also off base. If we are off base, they must all be off base because they are saying what we are saying and we are saying what they are saying, but we are both not saying what the Government is doing.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I have a question and a comment. Is the Hon. Member aware that the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped in its report tabled in the House in the last Parliament entitled Obstacles made two recommendations on hiring the disabled? Both recommendations, No. 26 and No. 27, dealt specifically with affirmative action programs for the disabled. Those recommendations were agreed to by all members on that committee representing all sides of the House.

Is the Hon. Member aware of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said on August 14, 1985, in response to a question from the Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped asking him whether he would support compulsory contract legislation if elected to form the Government? The Prime Minister responded by saying "Yes, along the lines proposed in recommendations 26 and 27 of the 1981 Obstacles report". Would the Hon. Member agree that the Prime Minister's statement during the election campaign when he was seeking the votes of Canadians was quite different from the one proposed in the present piece of legislation?

Mr. Nunziata: Of course, Mr. Speaker. It is just another example of a promise made and a promise broken. Canadians have come to realize that what they were told during the last election campaign was said because of the thirst for power of members of the Progressive Conservative Party. They had no intention of keeping some of the promises that they made. This leads one to seriously question the integrity of this Government. We have seen time and time again the broken promises, and the Hon. Member points out another broken promise. I guess ultimately their record will be put on the line in the next election campaign—

• (1550)

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: —and we will remind them of the broken promises. I have the greatest amount of faith in the Canadian public who will also remember, will vote accordingly, and vote Liberal in the next election.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis).

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the pleasure of speaking before the House to a subject where the honour of our country is at stake: employment equity. We must provide equal opportunities for everyone in the labour force, including those entering the labour market for the first time and those returning to it. More specifically, I want to mention those people who belong to the designated groups, namely women, native peoples, handicapped persons and visible minorities.

On October 3 of this year, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) moved for second reading of Bill C-62, which is aimed at ensuring employment equity in federally-regulated businesses. I believe it is therefore imperative, Mr. Speaker, to proceed with the consideration of Bill C-62. To further clarify debate, I intend to elaborate on certain elements of this measure. First of all, we must make a distinction between the Bill's purpose and its objectives. The purpose of this Bill is to provide for employment equity, in other words, to guarantee everyone equal rights with respect to employment, advancement and remuneration. To achieve this, in other words, to abide by the intent of the Bill, objectives will have to be set by and for each employer concerned. These objectives cannot be universal, since we must consider the specific circumstances under which each business operates.

Mr. Speaker, in setting these objectives, we must consider the general availability of qualified workers, the availability of such workers within the designated group and their geographical location. Discussing objectives inevitably raises the issue of quotas. When the concept of legislating employment equity began to take shape, there was some apprehension about the possibility of a quota system being imposed. Nothing could be further from the truth, however, and there is absolutely no cause for alarm. In fact, the unfortunate experience of our neighbours to the South in this respect was enough to convince us that we should not consider a formula of this kind. Indeed, we have never considered adopting such a formula, and we do not believe that our independent mind set would ever stand for that kind of mesure, and besides, correcting past abuse by putting another in its place can never be an acceptable solution.

Although it will not impose quotas, Mr. Speaker, the Government nevertheless intends to measure what is being accomplished. The employer concerned will have to file a report by which progress towards employment equity can be evaluated. The first report, to be filed in 1988, will provide the Governemnt with information, for instance, on the number of employees and the number of members in each designated group within the business and the degree of representation of persons in designated groups in each occupational group in the company.

After 1988, thanks to the report we will be in a position to find out whether progress has been made, in other words whether members of the designated groups have achieved fair representation within the company in terms of hiring, promotion and salaries.

Mr. Speaker, some people are probably wondering why Bill C-62 does not provide sanctions to make sure that the goals are reached. I might point out that other aspects—the compulsory statement, for instance—do entail an obligation and that employers know full well it is in their best interest to emulate the endeavour of our Government and set up the necessary structures and systems which will enable them to file acceptable reports.

On the other hand, unrealistic optimism should not blur the goal establishment process. For instance, it would be illogical to expect an employer to report that professional women engineers will eventually account for 42 per cent of his staff when we know for a fact that they actually represent only 6 per cent of all professional engineers.

In short, Mr. Speaker, one would be more reasonable to acknowledge that any perceptible rise in the level of participation by members of the designated groups within various companies is indeed a step in the right direction.

As a woman, I can only rejoice at the new trend pioneered by our Government. This initiative was long overdue. This Bill will at last make it possible for women to take their rightful place in society and on the labour market. The Government intends to legislate in the field of employment equity. Its efforts will come to naught unless it has the support and participation of all partners—employers, unions, associations of designated groups and all individuals concerned.

The employers' responsibility is to provide equal opportunities in hiring, promotion and salaries of members of designated groups, and to take the steps required to do just that. On this latter point, it is essential to specify that an employer cannot dismiss an employee only to hire a member of the target group.

It is the duty of unions to co-operate with employers to ensure the success of steps taken to provide employment equity. Moreover, it is their right and their duty to protect the implementation of collective agreements aimed at in such steps.

Associations of target groups should encourage their members to qualify as required by the employers. Now, Mr. Speaker, since we are trying to correct mistakes that have weighed heavily on our society for a long time, why wait until 1988 to require the filing of reports? This is merely due to the fact that those proposals are a good deal more than just an amendment dealing with traffic in national parks or with a new geographic name.

We are dealing with a Bill which when passed will have a great impact on large areas if not throughout the economic and social fabric of Canada. Considering the scope of the proposals put forward, we could not expect that the reports should actually be provided as soon as the Bill is passed. Our Government has decided to have businesses feel responsible for employment equity. It will give them some time to draw up the inventory or their human resources, and if necessary to correct abuses and to assess what has been done before submitting the reports.

• (1600)

Besides, we should not forget that 1986 is not very far off and that the first reports should reach the Government by June 1988.

There are people who will surely think, Mr. Speaker, that the passage of such an important Bill will bury us in a maze of red tape. No way. The Government has delineated the problem. It has warned the protagonists and it intends to legislate and let the leading actors which are the employers, unions and associations of target groups play their role. It will then be an excellent example of co-operation.

We are very well aware that when the parties concerned are ready to co-operate, when everyone is looking in the same direction, the impossible can be done.

Indeed, since we are considering a piece of legislation of an economic and social nature aimed at correcting conditions in the business sector, the Government will merely intervene to have a Bill passed and to simplify control. We are at the antipodes of the bureaucratic world.

Since the implementation of measures to promote employment equity will not require the setting up of a heavy administrative mechanism, it follows that administrative costs will be low. However, the costs incurred by employers could vary according to the quality of their data collecting systems.

And according to statistics from the United States, the annual cost of updating data systems is estimated at $1.25 per employee.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to remove a last concern.

I said earlier that no employee should be removed in order that a member of a target group may be hired. Later on, I also said that we do not accept the quota formula, because it easily leads to abuses.

Those two statements should convince each and everyone that the employment equity legislation is not at all aimed at forcing underqualified people upon employers through the back door.

Equity provisions are only there in order that everyone may enjoy the same hiring, promotion and salary opportunities, and that businesses have the human resources which they need and which are only asking to contribute to the labour force and the country.

The enacting of an employment equity legislation is not a goal by itself, but a means of helping build a better, sounder society. Employment equity is a major step in the search for full participation of women, native people, members of visible minorities and the handicapped in this country's economy.

The legislation now being considered gives us an opportunity to confirm the democratic and generous nature of our institutions. We should not let it go by. Let us ensure that Canada remains a leader as far as protecting civic liberties and extending personal and collective growth opportunities are concerned. Let women, native people, the handicapped and members of our visible minorities have their rightful place under the sun, in this country!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to comment on something about this Bill which I think is important. After the Abella Report, affirmative action was established on a voluntary basis in Ontario. Of the 10,000 or so firms that could actually have taken part in this, not quite 200 did so in any concrete way. This is a good indication of what voluntary involvement in employment equity is likely to bring about.

Judge Abella suggested that when something is voluntary, regardless of reporting procedures, it is still voluntary and therefore would not likely have a great impact. Perhaps the Hon. Member would comment on what she considers to be the possibility of having an effective program if all the companies have to do is report and if there is no penalty in place which would force them to take action. The companies need only have a program and then report on it. They do not really have to take any action.
