Throughout our history one of the strengths of this country has been the reality that we have invited people from other nations to join with us to build our economic strength, to build our communities, to build our social system. We have been on an unfortunate backward trend in the last few years, that of a reduction in immigration, and I think it is time that we reversed that trend. When this nation does what it has been doing over the last four or five years, we begin to say no to some people who could really benefit this country. On a common sense basis people understand that and when they get an answer which is a no then they appeal the answer. That is what we have created. Members of Parliament have allowed that to happen. That is why we have such an enormous backlog of cases that deserve an appeal hearing.

The basic thrust, the reason for being, of this particular piece of legislation which has been brought forward is to increase the resources for the Immigration Appeal Board so those people stuck in the system can have a hearing. Our courts have said it must be an oral hearing, so the time demands on the Board have increased and there needs to be increased manpower. We were not able to get unanimous agreement in the month of June to move this piece of legislation through, and it is 90 days later and we are now debating it in second reading in the House. What that has cost is 90 days of extra waiting time for those thousands of thousands of people and their relatives and their friends who are jammed up in that system. If we debate in this Chamber for another 30 days or 60 days or 90 days then we are dooming those thousands and thousands of people to a longer wait.

We must have an immigration system that is quick, that is fair, that is sensitive, that operates in the nation's best interests and the interests of people who would like to immigrate to this country. We must have an appeal system characterized by those dimensions as well, quick, fair and sensitive. This Bill C-55 is in that tradition. As I listened to Members opposite I was really disappointed to hear that members of the Liberal Party, as signalled by their critic yesterday, intend to continue to fight the Bill. I hope that that decision was reached because of a misunderstanding rather than the reality of the situation. Can I suggest to the Liberal caucus that our concern is identical to their concern and to the concern of the New Democratic Party about refugees?

We have a problem in the present system in terms of the determination of refugee status. We have a backlog in that system; we have a backlog in the over-all appeal system that is a logical consequence of the first backlog. The system is unfair simply on the dimension of speed. We have people who are in limbo for five years and longer in the present system. I think what the Members opposite are trying to do is to delay this Bill in the belief that it will bring pressure upon the Government to do something about the refugee system. If one reads the speeches, if one listens, that seems to be the mentality. I wish that members of all Parties, and many of them, had been present last night when we talked to Amnesty International about the Plaut Report. Unfortunately there was not, for good reason, a member of the Liberal Party present. But when that transcript is read carefully I think we will begin to discover that the reason we have gone wrong historically in this country in dealing with the refugee situation—and we deal with it better than most if not all other nations in the world, but we are still not dealing with it well enough—is that we have been treating the refugee decision-making process as an immigration decision-making process, and it is not. It is a question of human rights. It is a human rights protection process. The committee is going to have Rabbi Plaut before it next Tuesday night and we will then explore that in even more depth with him, but what has to be done in this country is that we must make that separation in a clear-cut manner. The Board, or the process that we put in place to deal with refugees, will have immigration consequences. If the determination is that a person is or is not a refugee, that person will still have the rights of immigration law and other categories. But we must not confuse the two things in this debate about the Immigration Appeal Board. If we are going philosophically to move in the right direction in terms of refugees, and to say clearly that that is a human rights decision to be made by tribunals that are skilled and sensitive to those aspects, then we are going to reduce the number of appeals that come to the Immigration Appeal Board. We are going to reduce some of that backlog the minute we get a decent system in place that is based on the philosophy that it should be based upon.

Having done that, we still must have some kind of immigration appeal process and at the moment that is lodged in the Immigration Appeal Board, and the cases that are before it, the thousands and thousands of cases that are jammed up and waiting in line, are not all refugee cases. An enormous portion of those cases are landed immigrants or citizens of Canada who want to sponsor a relative, bring him or her to his country, and they feel they have been treated unjustly and they want to appeal. The longer the Opposition delays this Bill the more clearly they are sentencing all of those family members to a continued period of uncertainty and inquietude and psychological stress and turmoil.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I cannot say more strongly that the time to act is now. Today is the very best day to let this Bill pass out of this House of Commons and into committee. Mr. Speaker, you have a sensitive committee, you have a hard working committee. It will revise the bad parts of this Bill and bring it back quickly. Let us get that part of the world cleared up so the committee members and the Government can concentrate on clearing up the refugee situation, because that is the next major piece of initiative that has to be dealt with. The Government is committed to it, your committee is committed to it and I hope all Members of this House of Commons are committed to that process as well. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much many of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) and in particular his statement, and I think I have it almost word for word, that the reason we have gone wrong procedurally in our well meant attempt to handle the flow of refugees who apply from in Canada is that we have been treating refugee decision-making as an immigration process. As he says, it is not; it is a human rights process.

I was interrupted by a couple of Hon. Members on business relating to this debate and I was not clear enough on exactly what he said after that. It appears that the effect of this Bill, as explained by the Minister yesterday, may be to bring more of the refugee decision-making into the Immigration Appeal Board work. In other words, it would compound the problem the Hon. Member has just defined. When he says that we must make that separation a clear-cut matter, how does he deal with what the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. McLean) said yesterday and with what the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) said in her June 19 statement, that the increase in board staff will—this is the only reason she gave—enable us to tackle the refugee backlog? In other words, it seems that the Cabinet thinks of the IAB as the way to deal with this increase in refugee problems whereas the Hon. Member who spoke seems to say that that is the wrong course.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. The concept of ministerial responsibility requires Ministers to administer the law as it sits. Today, at this moment, there is a refugee determination process and an appeal process through the IAB. Until the law is changed that process will continue.

I think it is clear that the Government will not be able to act on the Plaut Report before some time in November and maybe even December. It is clear that the committee is working hard to provide advice to the Government by the end of October so we can influence that decision. Members of the Government caucus and the Opposition may or may not agree with the decisions which are made. However, it is impossible at this point to know how long it will take to get this through because we do not know what it will say. In the meantime, life goes on. In the meantime, refugees are jammed up in the IAB process. They are entitled to that process under Canadian law and we are denying them access because we do not have enough staff to deal with it. In the interim, for the next three, four, five or six months, we cannot deal with all the cases but we can deal with a lot more if we move this Bill quickly through the House. We can then remove the uncertainty and psychological stress these people are suffering. However, at this point in time we must deal with the law as it exists and I think that is what the Minister is doing, administering the law as it exists.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made a passing reference to four, five or six months. Does he wish to state whether it is his opinion that that would be enough time for the legislation to be completed? He spoke about the Government acting in November, which would be in two months. I do not know whether he means to initiate legislation or to bring it to completion. It makes a difference as to how we approach this problem. Are we dealing with something which could become a long-range band-aid to cover the refugee problem, or would it be a more short-range matter, particularly regarding the problem of sponsorship, particularly Canadian residents sponsoring their relatives? Is he suggesting that in six months we would have new legislation in place to handle the refugee problem?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows I am not a member of the Cabinet, but August was an important month in immigration matters because we had a clear-cut signal that the Government recognized the importance of this subject matter. We now have a Minister of State devoted to this matter on a priority basis. That Minister and the Minister of Employment and Immigration have clearly signalled that changes to the refugee process are a priority for the Government.

I believe that if the committee makes a unanimous set of reasonable recommendations by the end of October, that will facilitate the process. The Government, if it has the support of all three Parties, can move more quickly. If we do not have that support, then it takes time. Once we finish with it, the Senate has to deal with it. If the Liberals are opposed in the Senate, they can string it out forever. If not, then it can move forward quickly. These things are beyond the Government's control. However, I think it is crystal clear that the Minister, members of the committee and members of the caucus want us to move quickly and correctly to get the new legislation in place. But speed requires co-operation from both opposition Parties.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a small comment regarding refugees. The Hon. Member, who is chairman of the committee concerned, mentioned that the problem of refugees is an important one. I wonder whether we are going to move in the direction of defining exactly what a political refugee is. Up until now we have been dealing with all sorts of refugees from different countries, some of whom are not political refugees. I think there should be an exception made for political refugees and I hope the committee he chairs will act fast on that.

Mr. Hawkes: I thank the Hon. Member for the question. The Plaut Report and the committee are dealing with Canada's obligations under international law regarding the protection of and asylum for conventional refugees. These are people who, if they returned to their country, have a well-founded fear of persecution on the basis of political activity, race or religion. Those are three definite factors. Yes, your committee is struggling with a process which will enable them to determine in a sensitive way whether refugee claimants have that kind of a fear and whether it is well-founded. However, I think the situation requires some sensitivity in the decision-making process because the situation in a given country can change overnight. One day there is a coup and the next day a different Government is in place. One day a particular person had no legitimate and well-founded fear of persecution, but the next day, after the Government has changed, he does. That is why I know in advance that the committee will not be able to provide the kind of definition which will last us for all time. What we will be able to do, I hope, is to provide a system which is sensitive and up to date. Canada has a well-deserved reputation for providing protection and asylum to the persecuted. We want to maintain that reputation and improve it, and I am convinced that Members on the Government side are dedicated to doing just that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased to be able to participate in this debate on Bill C-55. However, I must take issue with the initial remarks of my friend from Calgary West. At the beginning of his remarks today he said that the vast majority of Canadians could not care less about this Bill. I believe that the federal policy on immigration is very important with regard to human and social impacts. Most Canadians have an interest in immigration. In my constituency of York West, and in a large number of other constituencies, immigration is one of the most important problems next to unemployment. I would like to set the record straight and say that as far as our Party is concerned immigration is a very important aspect of federal public policy to most Canadians.

• (1230)

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I do not necessarily disagree with all of the contents of this particular Bill. Clause 6 would be amended to accord permanent residents the right of appeal which is presently only available to Canadian citizens who sponsor applications for landing. The Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) says that members of the Opposition are opposing the Bill simply for the sake of opposition. That is not the case. We have some legitimate concerns with this Bill, although we also agree with certain clauses of it. The Member for Calgary West also says that we must not continue to waste time. We are not wasting time, Mr. Speaker. This Bill was only introduced in this Chamber yesterday and we have only had some hours of discussion on it. If the Government is concerned about wasting time, why did it not introduce this Bill a year ago? Members are laughing—that is their prerogative.

What will this Bill do for the plight of 20,000 to 23,000 refugees who are awaiting an answer on their future? I do not believe that this Bill does very much for them. With regard to the clause that will increase the number of commissioners on the Appeal Board from 18 to 50, an off-the-cuff reaction would be that it would speed up the appeal process. However, that is not the only approach that can be taken to speed up the procedure. That approach addresses the symptoms of the problem rather than the cause. Another approach that could be taken is to question, as did the Plaut Report, whether many of these individuals ought to be coming before the Appeal Board, whether they do not have the right to remain in this country rather than pleading their case before a board. That is a way of attacking the cause of the problem rather than the symptoms. With respect to increasing the number of commissioners, what will we do with the additional commissioners once we eliminate the backlog? This would establish a temporary structure rather than looking at the long-term issue. I would like to illustrate this thinking by a real life example.

There is a couple in my riding from Argentina who arrived in this country several years ago with refugee status. They fled Argentina because they were teachers there during the military regime. As you know, one of the first communities that was persecuted by that regime was the community of educational institutions. Their home was ransacked and burned and their child was kidnapped. They fled to this country and have been here for a number of years. They made sacrifices to learn English and now both speak it very well. They both hold down responsible jobs and are involved in the community at large as well as in the Latin American community. Their six year old daughter speaks nothing but English, having been involved in our educational system from the ground floor. These individuals have recently been asked to return to Argentina on the basis that there is now a civilian Government there.

Is that a fair request, Mr. Speaker? I think not. I am sure that if Members of the House met this couple they would come to the same conclusion based on two premises. The first is that if these people returned to Argentina the fear of persecution which they felt three years ago would still be there, albeit on a different level. They would fear also that the Government may revert to the previous military dictatorship. The second premise is that they have made a genuine effort to adapt to this country by learning the language and life style and establishing roots here. They are asking themselves whether it is fair to be asked to return to Argentina after making such an effort to become Canadian citizens.

I think this example highlights the problem with this Bill. This legislation assumes that the solution to the refugee problem is to increase the number of commissioners to hear appeals. The case that I just outlined, and I am sure hundreds, thousands of others, ought not to have to come before the Appeal Board at all. These people will be living in danger if they return to their place of origin. They have made sacrifices and contributions to this country and their problems should be looked at from a compassionate philosophical point of view.

I am concerned that the Government is not prepared to do that. In his speech yesterday the Member for Calgary West indicated that the Government has the progressive will to deal with immigration on a compassionate basis. I fear that that is not the truth because I have not seen any evidence of that compassion with respect to immigration. The Member said that he and the committee are in favour of raising immigration levels. However, within weeks of being sworn in last September, with no study or public consultation with professionals serving the immigrant community, the Government reduced the number of entrants to this country from 100,000 to 80,000. How can the Member now say that the Government is in favour of increasing the level after having reduced it? That does not show to me a progressive will with regard to immigration.

Let us also look at the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration, which has a majority of Conservative Members. One of the first things that committee did was to embark upon a path that would suggest that people entering this country should, in large part, be entrepreneurs. It should be made perfectly clear that it was a Liberal Government that established a system of applications for entrepreneurial immigrants. Not only do we welcome those who want to come to this country, we want to make specific provisions for those immigrants who could come here to invest and establish a shop or factory and provide positive economic spinoffs. However, unlike the Government today, our Party has never been prepared to make entrepreneurial ability the basic immigration requirement. I suggest that the committee which is made up of a majority of Conservative Members, is on dangerous ground if it wishes to pursue an immigration policy based purely on entrepreneurial ability, and I hope that the Minister does not decide to follow that course. Such a policy would deny one of the realities in this country that poor immigrants who came to this country with very little became wealthy. The Member from Alberta continues to laugh. Again, that is his prerogative.

It is also a fact that regardless of the economic status that the Government is seeking, many individuals came to Canada with only their trade and desire for betterment, but they have worked and helped to build this country. Many immigrants took jobs that many other Canadians did not want. They too contributed to this country. Our Party will not support a policy for increased immigration if it only applies to the rich.

It is very dangerous for the committee, led mainly by Conservatives, to embark on such a discussion. While we agree that we need entrepreneurs and investors to come to this country and open factories and stores to provide jobs for Canadians, we do not agree that the corner-stone of our immigration policy should be based on whether or not a potential immigrant is whealthy. This country was not built only by wealthy immigrants and it will not continue to grow only with wealthy immigrants. I question the Government's "progressive will" because I have not seen the evidence to put my fears to rest.

Another matter not addressed in this Bill concerns the family assistance stream in our immigration policy. This area merits careful consideration because family reunification has been stressed as a priority for immigration in this country. I hope the committee will consider amendments to the Bill that will make the family assistance level stronger.

As I stated at the beginning of my remarks, many of my case files in York West deal with immigration. Many of those cases concern the fact that Canadians living here are frustrated at their inability to sponsor successfully relatives abroad who wish to come to Canada. Therefore, more latitude must be provided in that stream.

It is true that economics must be taken into consideration with immigration and that we must be careful not to augment unemployment in certain sectors of our economy. However, I agree with the Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) that there is no study indicating that increased levels of immigration coincide with an increased rate of unemployment.

The provisions under the family assistance level in immigration is cause for frustration by Canadians who want to sponsor relatives. However, unlike refugee applications, entrepreneurial applications and applications by those who do not have relatives here, the family assistance application would be most reassuring to those who have concerns about immigrants negatively affecting our country. A broader family assistance immigration policy would alleviate much of the concern of those who believe that increased immigration will cause other Canadians to suffer. An immigrant who is sponsored by an individual living in Canada can be protected if he or she falls on hard times.

There is a definite strength in the family unit in this country and therefore I believe that an immigrant who has relatives living in this country can be given that family support when he or she faces hard times. This is an area of immigration policy that should be given more attention by the House because it will soften those critics who believe that immigration should be based on economics.

I hope the Hon. Member, who is Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, will take my concerns seriously because in my first year as a Member of Parliament, the family assistance level in immigration has been one of my priorities in the riding of York West. I know from my discussions about this problem with other Members that it is an issue in their constituencies as well. Therefore, the House should take notice that it must seriously review that family assistance policy in immigration.

Mr. Speaker, I indicated that I agree with certain parts of the Bill. I am riding today because I feel passionately about immigration and matters affecting my constituents and prospective Canadians who want to determine their future. This Bill will not solve the bottleneck referred to by another Hon. Member in reference to those 23,000 individuals who are waiting to hear about their future. Those who are waiting in groups of 10 or 15 in hotels in Toronto and Montreal want answers. I believe that the Plaut Report provided the right answers and approach to the problem. We should be addressing the question of whether these individuals should present their case before the Appeal Board, as suggested in the Bill, or whether the Government should have the compassion, integrity and vision to consider these people as human beings who are prepared to sacrifice and become involved in the mainstream of Canadian life. I rise in my place to make that point. I also rise in my place to suggest to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration that we in this Party will not and will never waste the time of the House on this Bill. We will certainly be taking him up on the offer to move amendments in order to strengthen the viability of this Bill.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the remarks of the Hon. Member oppsite, and would agree with most of them. This is not a panacea to solve the problem. It will simply make the world a little better for a few more people. They deserve our help, and that is the reason for speed.

Let me make another comment. The degree to which parliamentarians turn the subject of immigration to partisan political advantage, I think, confuses the Canadian public and makes a sane, sensible and humane immigration policy a little more difficult to achieve. One of the ways we do that, sometimes deliberately and sometimes inadvertently, is to take a point of view, take it out of context and put it into some other kind of point of view. The standing committee's second report dealt with levels. We could not get three Party agreement to it, partly because we misunderstood each other. The thrust of that report was the issue of using immigration policy, in part, to create jobs.

I do not think there is any disagreement in this House that someone who lives in Canada who cannot find a job experiences trouble. Those of us who have been aound for six years have seen—certainly someone from Calgary has seen—a situation where a shortage of employees turned into a surplus in a short period of time. Calgary went from a 3 per cent or 4 per cent unemployment rate to a rate 2 per cent higher than the national average for a year and a half. When you go into people's homes and find no food in the fridge and see discouragement on their faces, it is a tragedy.

When we bring refugees or immigrants of one kind or another to this country, they come with a sense of hope and optimism because this is the new life and a new opportunity. If our economy cannot support jobs for those people, then the disappointment is enormous.

There are 9,000 South Vietnamese refugees in the City of Calgary, many of whom are still having difficulty finding employment because the economy of Calgary crashed. Others have found employment.

It was the feeling of the committee that a small portion of increased immigration levels should be devoted deliberately to the kinds of immigrants who could create jobs for the refugees, for the assisted relatives and for those already here. If we want a kind of racial backlash—

Mr. Rodriguez: What is your question?

Mr. Hawkes: —then let us continue with a shortage of jobs because then people look around and say, "He took my job. We do not want any more immigration". If we had a surplus of jobs and a shortage of employees, then the national will to increase immigration levels would be clear and consistent.

Standing in this House today in the year 1985, it is not clear and it is not consistent, partly because the economy is not in good shape. I think it behooves members of all Parties to say levels should be increased, partly for the sake of job creation. People need jobs. Immigrants need jobs. It is not a bad piece of public policy to reach out to other countries and bring those jobs and people to Canada. I hope we can get together on that.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, once again I draw the attention of the House to the Hon. Member's leading-off statements. He said that he hopes that Members do not turn and twist remarks around, but that is what he just did. He was trying to insinuate that this Member and this Party is somehow against creating jobs for Canadians or for immigrants. That is not the case. I am not prepared to labour that point.

He drew the example of a large number of refugees in his city who cannot find work. I have met with refugees in the City of Toronto who cannot find work either. Part of the problem is that everybody knows they are refugees. Various piece of documentation indicate they are refugees. Their social insurance numbers indicate they are refugees. As long as that unknown status is allowed to continue and fester, they will not have those jobs to which the Member alludes.

There are a number of jobs in our communities being created and made available to Canadians from various parts of the country. These individuals who have this refugee cloud over their heads have a secondary and tertiary problem simply because their status has not been resolved. In many cases, these individuals would be able to do the jobs that Canadian employers require, but they are held back simply because of their status.

The Hon. Member also mentioned about the problem of bringing in immigrants and increasing levels of immigration. We do that in many sectors of our economy. Take a look at the tool and dye makers, Mr. Speaker. We still go to Great Britain to get tool and dyemakers. I am not suggesting that a tool and dyemaker in Great Britain or a tool and dyemaker in Australia is a rich entrepreneur. That is an example I was drawing to the Hon. Member's attention. That committee of his was definitely looking at increasing levels of immigration based on the wealth of those individuals.

Mr. Hawkes: No. Read the report.

Mr. Marchi: It is there for everybody to see. In the third report the tune was changed. The Minister never accepted the second report. Rightfully so because the second report was most regressive. The second report denied the existence of the Canadian reality up to today and would have denied it tomorrow as well. When I make those comments, I do not make them to misinterpret the Hon. Member's suggestion.

Mr. Hawkes: You do.

Mr. Marchi: It is very clear in the report not only for these Members but for Canadians across the country to see. I challenge the Hon. Member to bring forward that second report and get approval in this House, regardless of the absolute majority and regardless of closure tactics.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr. Rodriguez: He has had his 10 minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, that report recommended a population increase of 1 per cent. With current birth rates and death rates, it would at least double immigration quotas from the present level of 50,000 to at least 150,000. The committee suggested 3,000 or 4,000 of that increase ot 80,000 be deliberately designed to create jobs. That is what the report said. It said nothing more and nothing different.

Mr. Marchi: That is not true.

Mr. Hawkes: Members who attended those hearings know that. Members who wrote that report know that. Any statement to the contrary is a misinterpretation of the sense of that committee and what it was intending to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, if that were the case and the memory of the reality of that report, I would like to ask the Hon. Member why his Party and that Party offered minority reports on the very nature of the entrepreneurial scheme regarding which this Government had intentions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I intend to give the floor to the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) on debate at two o'clock. With the consent of the House, may we call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 12.59 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, the Chair was ready to recognize the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act as it relates to the Immigration Appeal Board. Although it is a small Bill in some ways, it has been rehashed and unfortunately it has not proceeded as fast as any of us, myself included, would have liked. I will deal with the reasons for this, and I have some suggestions about how I think we could do better.

First I should like to begin by laying very positive groundwork by accepting the principal statement made this morning by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). I have acquired great respect for his work as Chairman of the committee this year. I believe that he, along with others, will be able to work out some kind of negotiation on this matter. I know he has tried very hard. I do not have the "blues", but I wrote down as quickly as I could what he said this morning at the beginning of his remarks. He said that the reason that the Government, Parliament and the country of Canada have gone wrong with refugee work, despite our good intentions, is that we have been treating refugee determination as an immigration question and, as he said, it is not. It is a human rights question, and we must make that separation clear. Rabbi Plaut brought this to our attention in his report earlier this year, but I strongly agree with the way the Hon. Member for Calgary West stated it. On that basis, I believe we can get the Bill passed through all stages soon.

However, in his later remarks, the Hon. Member made some statements which were unintentionally misleading. He said that there had been 40 hearings since June on this subject, and that we were unanimous on increasing immigration levels and on immigration not being a threat to jobs. That is true, but it is not relevant to this debate. Almost all those 40 hearings had nothing to do with the refugee question. The biggest portion of them concerned the entrepreneurial program. We had very few meetings to deal with refugees and only one meeting, in the last week of Parliament, to deal with the Bill. That is very unfortunate.

Also the Hon. Member said that he regretted the 90 days of delay from the end of June to the end of September. Perhaps he has forgotten an earlier delay, that in November, 1984, the Minister asked for and received from the two opposition Parties unanimous support for increasing the Appeal Board to 30 or 35 members but did not act on it. From November to June there was a delay of much more than 90 days.

The Hon. Member who spoke yesterday on behalf of the Liberal Party neglected to mention that the previous Government, under his Minister of Employment and Immigration, obtained unanimous consent from the opposition Parties in February, 1984, but did not put it through. Neither Government was willing to use the unanimous agreement, either in February, 1984 or in November, 1984. I do not know the reason for this, but it is not becoming to either of the two Parties to sound injured now about delay.

When the Bill was brought in, it was almost at the last minute. There was practically no time to negotiate any amendments. It contained some surprises that were not in the original request to which we had agreed. We were able to do a little negotiating with the very strong help of the Chairman, but not enough to make it viable.

The particular problems were that the amendments of the Minister would have potentially hurt the case of every Canadian who was appealing on behalf of a relative he or she wished to sponsor. They had been turned down by the staff—and I will return to the staff because I believe it is the root of our problem—and appealed to the Immigration Appeal Board. Rather than a three-person panel to hear appeals, the Minister wanted to cut it down to one. Every lawyer with experience in this regard has indicated to me that that would be unjust. The Minister stated in her June 19 press release that it was to deal with the refugee backlog and would enable the Immigration Appeal Board to hold "a greater number of oral hearings for refugee claimants by increasing the size of the Board". Also she indicated that a requirement by the Supreme Court to have oral hearings has "made it necessary to expand the Immigration Appeal Board in order to cope with the extra work-load". In June, that was the only reason she gave for this legislation. It was therefore impossible to interpret it in any other way than the way she interpreted it, which was that this was a program to deal with the backlog of 13,000 or 14,000 refugee hearings and that this would mean she would confirm the principle that refugee determination is an immigration matter. That is the very principle that the Chairman of the committee and Rabbi Plaut's Report denies. This legislation would have tripled the size of the Board and reduced the quorum to one. Refugee hearings would have been run through the system like sausages through a sausage machine. That is the way the Plaut Report, the Chairman of the committee, Members of the House and members of the public who have worked with refugees unanimously agree is the wrong way to go.

We have found on experience that the Immigration Department, dominated by the concept of enforcement, is not the appropriate body to deal with people claiming refugee status. It is not only that the Department is hostile to refugees. The former Executive Director of the Department, as reported in the press, repeatedly called refugees queue jumpers and talked about how many of them are bank robbers, terrorists or even Irishmen. I am not quite sure what he had against Irishmen. He continually slandered refugee applicants and misrepresented the statistics. For example, he pointed out that only about 35 per cent of refugee claims were approved by the Minister. He did not point out that after the Refugee Status Advisory Committee had made its recommendations, he and other staff members added their further recommendations behind the scenes so that the Minister's decision was not based simply on the Refugee Status Advisory Committee but also on pressure from staff members.

As I have said, Department of Immigration staff members are enforcement minded and seem to think that they were appointed principally to keep people out of Canada. I agree with the Chairman of the committee who said that we need to have more people come to Canada, but we have to climb over our own staff members to get them here.

Staff members are also hostile to family reunification. In my office, which deals with a great deal of immigration business, there are at least four staff members who spend at least half of their time dealing with immigration matters. We have noticed more and more delays in the applications for family reunification, particularly those coming from non-European countries. Files get lost. Letters do not get answered. Little nit-picky points are raised that were never raised in the past. It is as though someone were going over and over these applications looking for excuses to keep these people out.

I have a file with me relating to claims from Pakistan. It seems that our representatives in Pakistan must have pledged not to let anyone into Canada if they can possibly prevent them from coming. I have encountered many negative examples of this from Pakistan. For example, there is the case of a Canadian who wishes to bring his parents to Canada as well as his sister who is unmarried and of an age at which in Pakistan it would be considered socially improper to live alone. This matter has been going on for about two years. We cannot get a straight answer to our humanitarian plea. All we get is bureaucratic answers going by the book. I could tell the House of many more cases just like this one.

Department staff members are hostile in their actions toward people who are trying to enter Canada for family reunification reasons. The statistics reflect this. One of the things that has come to light lately is that the number of appeals coming before the Immigration Appeal Board has been rising. In 1981, there were 1,136 such appeals. In 1982, the total was 1,296; in 1983, it was 2,077; and in 1984, it was 2,376. Within those statistics, it can be shown that family class sponsorship appeals have almost doubled in three years from 642 to 1,203. Refugee determination has more than doubled from 297 to 669. Other cases including those of illegal immigrants who are being deported after having made their cases have risen from 197 to 504. That is more than double.

Why has there been this increase in appeals to the Immigration Appeal Board? It is because family reunification is being blocked in two ways. First there was a freeze put on family reunification on May 1, 1982 through the requirement that any assisted relative not be considered unless he or she has a certified job offer. By the Minister's own estimate at the time, that chopped family reunification by about 25 per cent of its previous volume. The other way it is blocked is through the actions of staff members. People cannot get their relatives into Canada, so they come here as illegals or as refugee claimants. Then, along with direct appeals on family reunification, these cases go to the Immigration Appeal Board. That has caused this crisis, more than a doubling of the total number of cases before the Board in three years.

In spite of all that has been said about family reunification, the actual practice of the previous Government as well as of the present Government has been to reduce immigration. In 1981, immigration levels fell short of the Department's planned levels by at least 1,500. In 1982, the level fell short by 9,000 and in 1983, the year in which we felt the full effect of the 1982 freeze, it fell short by 45,000. In 1984, it fell short by almost 2,400. These people were shut out by our bureaucracies, our overseas offices and, to some extent, our Canadian offices as well. The principal problem is the attitude of those working in our overseas offices. I met members of the overseas staff this summer and you have to meet them to believe their attitude on immigration, Mr. Speaker. It is really something else.

We have been cutting back on immigration, not because of a decision made by Parliament but because of staff practices. Therefore, we are hearing more appeals through other channels, whether legitimate or not. The attitude of members of the enforcement section of the Immigration Department is such that they try to keep people out of Canada. This has caused an increase in illegal immigration and in appeals before the Immigration Appeal Board.

Granted, we do need a short-term solution. Even if we could follow the advice of Rabbi Plaut and the Chairman of the Immigration Board by separating refugees entirely from the immigraton process until a claim has been determined, we would still have to deal with the backlog that exists. However, people who have worked hard as volunteers to help immigrants and other refugees, people who are well known to the Minister and recognized by her, are afraid that this temporary, interim measure will become permanent just like income tax.

All last year members of the public tried to meet with the Minister on this matter and could not. The Plaut Report was delayed for six months. It was supposed to be put out in December. The Minister promised it month by month but it did not come out until the middle of June. There was no time for the committee to look at it or deal with it seriously before the summer recess. Members of the public who tried to meet with the Minister and who invited her to their meetings were frozen out. They are now uneasy.

Representatives of those groups are meeting tomorrow in Montreal. They have invited the Minister to attend the meeting and she has assured them that she will. I think it will be a very important and fruitful meeting provided the Minister does not go to it with a take-it-or-leave-it, confrontational attitude, the attitude in which the Bill was presented to us in June. In fact, many representatives of these non-governmental organizations urged that this Bill not be introduced this week but that we wait a few days until the Minister had met with those people who have expertise on this matter to hear their views and have some give and take. Then we would be able to work on this Bill. However, for whatever reason, the Cabinet decision was to charge ahead with the Bill, public be damned.

There has been a reference to conversations held between the Minister, the critic of the Liberal Party and the critic of New Democratic Party. There was a meeting of some one and a half to two hours at which the Liberal critic and I urged the Minister to respect what the public was saying in this matter. We were totally unsuccessful. He simply wanted to move ahead. Of course, he has the votes and, if he moves ahead, then that is the way it will be. However, that will not win the co-operation of the public, which the Minister from time to time says is essential in order to get the job done properly.

What I wish to do is to propose three processes by which we might try to resolve the matter, in spite of the awkward way the present Cabinet and the previous Cabinet have handled it up to this point. First, there is the meeting to be held in Montreal tomorrow. Second, there are amendments to which the Minister has made unclear references. Third, there is the report of our committee to which the Chairman has referred.

With respect to the first point, I hope the Minister will attend the meeting tomorrow with the expectation of a genuine exchange of views. She has a great deal going for her. Many people respect her mightily for the fact that last January she corrected a longstanding inhumanity in the regulations so that the spouse of a Canadian who should be landed, according to law, can now be landed without having to return home for a year and, in effect, break up a family. We welcomed the Minister's action in January.

Then there is the committee's report with respect to detentions, which has not yet worked. The staff is still playing silly games at the Montreal Detention Centre. However, we hope that with the Minister's help, the report on the immigration detention centres will have the positive effect which many people in the non-governmental organizations have worked for.

The second point is with the matter of the willingness of the Minister of Employment and Immigration to consider some amendments. I hope that when we discuss these matters tomorrow the distrust will become less and we can move ahead with a sense of co-operation.

With respect to the amendments, the Minister has said, "we will encourage the adoption of an amendment in committee in this regard", that is say, to maintain a panel of three rather than a panel of one. I wish that he had said that the Government will propose such an amendment. We all know it cannot pass until the Government supports it. When he says that we will encourage it, I am not quite sure what he means. However, I would like it to be made quite clear that there will be a quorum of three for all classes.

The Minister has also referred to a two-year term. He said, "It may be important to accept an amendment regarding the length of time Members will serve in order to indicate that this is clearly an emergency reaction to a specific situation". When the Minister says it may be, that is true, it may be and it may not. However, there is no assurance in that regard. I am glad he is thinking about it. I would like to see an assurance in committee, that is, a motion put forward by the Government.

We should also return to the originally proposed size, that is, limit the members to between 30 and 35 altogether for the sake of dealing with the present backlog, especially the backlog of sponsorship cases. If we go to 50 members, then it will be assumed that the Immigration Appeal Board is the instrument for dealing with refugee hearings. That is what Rabbi Plaut's Report opposes, as does the Chairman of the committee and both opposition critics.

I hope the Minister will take this simple action to make it clear that she is not going to let anyone smuggle in a refugee determination process under the name of the Immigration Appeal Board.

With respect to the committee bringing its report to the Minister by the end of October as we had hoped, I hope that the Minister will bring a report to Parliament before she tables legislation and before she burns her bridges behind her. She is a proud woman who does not like to change her mind. I hope she will bring a report to Parliament in which she will propose legislation to do this and this and this. In this way time can be put aside for discussion in Parliament and by the public. A result will be reached faster in this way rather than by her using her ministerial power to say definitely: "This is how it will be." If she were to say that, the rest of us would have to figure out how to mobilize to make the corrections that we see are needed to be made. If she will approach the issue with a spirit of give and take, I believe, as the Chairman of the committee indicated this morning, that we will be able to move readily on this matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Kindy).

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the words of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). He was quite positive with respect to some of his recommendations. I would like to ask him to elaborate on how he would solve the refugee problem. Has he any specific ideas which could be incorporated in future legislation in order that we do not have to face this problem again in a couple of years?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I will not go into that issue at length now. The Hon. Member's question is one which is certainly in the minds of many thousands of interested people across the country. I think Rabbi Plaut's Report should be seriously considered. I am not saying that we should necessarily agree with every page of it. However, he does make two worth-while points. The first is that we should have a refugee determination board separate from the Immigration Appeal Board. This is a point about which the Chairman says we should make a clear-cut distinction. It should be made clear that a person who comes here as a refugee, or is asking to be considered as a refugee, has to have the human rights question examined first before we put him through the mill with respect to accepting him as a potential immigrant or a potential deportee. This is a point which was asked to be implemented in principle about eight years ago by a number of interested people. However, it was ignored at the time. Our experience now shows that it would have saved millions of dollars and a great deal of hardship if it had been followed. I hope we will follow it now.

Second, there are many among this 13,000 or 14,000 for whom oral hearings have been called by the Supreme Court if they want them. These cases could be handled outside the refugee process. People who come from certain countries could be advised that under our policy we do not forcibly return people to those countries because of the conditions there. They sometimes do not meet the precise definition of refugee, but we will not force them to return home. In other words, we will allow them to stay here in Canada unless they find another country which works out better for them. Many people who are in the refugee stream now should not be there. I say that, not because they do not have a good claim, but because their problem could be more readily dealt with by other programs. Why this has never been followed by our enforcement staff is something we may never find out now that the Executive Director of the commission has moved on to other matters. I hope we will at least see some change of attitude now.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have just a couple of words concerning Bill C-55. Just to put the question in focus—

Mr. Dick: How many immigrants did you have in your riding last year?

Mr. Baker: The hon. gentleman opposite asks how many immigrants I had in my riding last year. I can honestly tell him that I have received a couple of requests with which I am dealing.

Since there is a need to say a few words to set this particular debate in its true light, it is for that purpose that I rise today. Number one, Mr. Speaker, speaking personally, I cannot see anything that is wrong in this Bill. I think that is probably the first time I have ever said that. Having said that, I must say that I cannot see any great advantage either.

● (1430)

We have a situation in Canada today, I think Hon. Members will agree, where there are about 1500 cases of family sponsorship applications in the works, give or take 100, and 15,000 cases of refugees appearing before the Board, give or take 5,000. Fifteen thousand cases would probably cover 20,000 people before the Board. By increasing the size of the Board from 18 to 50 and carrying out various changes, perhaps an extra 100 cases per year could be processed. It will not do any harm to make that increase, but when one looks at the magnitude of the problem one asks the question: when is the Government going to address the real problem? That is the question.

When did the problem arise? It did not arise last year or the year before or the year before that. This particular problem of blocking the system arose in the past less than a year ago, and the reason for it is this.

Mr. Dick: A few words, George.

Mr. Baker: Yes, a few words. Why do we have this clogging? When one looks at the appeals under the family sponsorship appeal program, that is not a cumbersome appeal, that can be dealt with very quickly. But a refugee status appeal is very complicated. What has happened? It is nobody's fault. A judge said that these people have the right to an oral hearing. There is nothing wrong with that. The Hon. Member from Calgary asked the question, "How can you solve the refugee problem"? As the Hon. Member knows, the previous system was that when the refugee put in his claim he was interviewed by a representative of the advisory committee. It was a written representation. At no time after that was that person able to appear in person.

So the decision of the judge was perfectly understandable in that particular case. That has clogged the system. What happened then? The system is clogged in any country which is a signatory to a United Nations Charter which agrees to accept refugees because, as the Hon. Member pointed out a few moments ago, the applications for refugee status are before the same board as are the applications for family sponsorship appeals.

So we are left with this incredible problem that happened only recently, since this Government came to power. What we are saying is that this Government has to try to solve that problem immediately. I am not a member of the committee that visited the detention centres.

Mr. Jourdenais: That is why you don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. Baker: If the hon. gentleman listens he is going to learn something. The detention centres were never intended to house the people that are there. They were meant for detention centres. The system was clogged, and therefore that created additional problems. If Members of Parliament would look at the system they would find it to be rather interesting. When landed refugees arrive in, say, Toronto or in Vancouver or some other province, if they do not stay at a detention centre and if an organization will not take them in then they are not entitled, in most provinces, to social assistance. But in other provinces they are, in Quebec they are and in Newfoundland they are. If they get off a plane in Newfoundland and ask for refugee status they are taken care of immediately by the social asssistance department. They qualify to be housed, to eat and to have clothing. But in other provinces they do not qualify for that similar assistance.

The fact of the matter is that this whole thing should be looked at in some detail by the Government, and I am surprised that the Government has not addressed the problem. I think the problem has arisen in this Chamber with the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party saying on this particular Bill, "Now just hold on a minute". There is nothing in it that does any harm but it is not solving the problem and there are so many problems that need to be solved. If the Minister had said, "Look, this is not really going to solve any problems but we are going to process an extra 100 a year" there would not be, I think, the division today. But the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) said in Vancouver, as we will all recall, Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) said that one of our responses to the problems of those seeking refugee status in Canada is Bill C-55. When that happened all of the groups across this country that were concerned about this question were in a virtual uproar and the opposition Parties in the House were then saying, "If this is the response of the Government we are not going to accept it because it is not a good enough response."

Mr. Speaker, having set the record straight and having informed Members of what is really before this Chamber today and why the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party have taken the position they have, I will take my seat and await any questions that the hon. gentlemen might wish to ask.

[Translation]

Mr. Jourdenais: Mr. Speaker, I said I was not going to take part in the debate, but since yesterday, I have been listening to Hon. Members talk about immigration, and I think they need a course on the subject, especially the previous speaker. I was taking some notes while he was speaking, and I would like to ask him a question. The Bill before the House today would increase the number from 18 to 50. Mathematically speaking, he said it would mean only 100 more cases, but I think that, considering the humanitarian aspect, 100 people are worth more than his own attitude to the subject.

Earlier, the Hon. Member said he had seen a few claims by people who had requested immigrant status in his riding. In my riding we have 275 claims pending. Thirty-three per cent of the population consists of new Canadians. There are people who have been in this country for five or six years and who are still waiting to receive employment permits and refugee or immigrant status. This is certainly not the fault of the present Conservative Government, but the Government to which the Hon. Member belonged when it was in power, and which did nothing. Today, we simply want to increase the number so that we can at least admit from 100 to 125 more people and activate the system, pending a complete reform of the legislation on immigration and refugees. Just now, the Hon. Member mixed up refugees and immigrants when he was talking about detention.

When a refugee arrives at a Quebec port of entry and asks for political asylum he is put in a detention camp. It is a prison, my friend, when you consider that the man is locked up in a 7-by-7- or 10-by-12-foot room where he cannot even see daylight. It is particularly bad for someone from another country who was badly treated, both physically and mentally, and gets that kind of reception in Canada. This has always been the Liberal Party approach: Come in, my friend, and we will throw you in jail! That is called detention, Sir.

I think that the Bill should be adopted. I sit on the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration where we debated the issue of refugees and immigrants on at least forty different occasions and, believe me, it is about time we took some action. It is better to take half a step than to stand still as they have done for the past 15 years.

[English]

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I must admit the hon. gentleman is a member of the committee and perhaps he believes he knows more about the subject than I do. However, let me point out where he is a little bit off track. The system became clogged because, although the Immigration Appeal Board deals with those cases he mentioned of family sponsorship, it also deals with people seeking refugee status. That is a complicated procedure compared to the first group, and the IAB should not be dealing with the refugee question. We are saying this because this problem has become so serious that there should be another mechanism in place to deal with it. The Minister promised a legislative reform package, which I understand she is going to introduce this fall, and that is a good thing. However, to say, as the Minister did, that this is a response to the problem and then admit it will take care of about 100 people a month, is not really good enough. Each month in Canada today there are 600 new cases involving claims for refugee status. The Government says we will pass this Bill and deal with 100 more. If we have 600 new cases a month, what will happen if a change is not made? I think it is clear what will happen.

The Hon. Member and I do not disagree as between ourselves, not at all. I think we both have a disagreement with what the Government is doing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate? Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Miss MacDonald, seconded by Mr. Crombie, moved that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baker: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

CANAGREX DISSOLUTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Bob Layton (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-42, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise on second reading of Bill C-42 which is designed to repeal the Canagrex Act and hence dissolve this Crown corporation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kempling: A great day for Canada.

Mr. Layton: As the House is aware, in November, 1984, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced a number of initiatives aimed at reducing Government expenditures. One such initiative involved the decision to phase out Canagrex by April, 1985. This has been done. This Bill is intended to repeal the Canagrex Act and hence formally dissolve this Crown corporation.

It is a short Bill containing seven clauses. Its major feature, Clause 4, provides for all rights, property, obligations and liabilities of Canagrex to be the rights, property, obligations and liabilities of Her Majesty. For example, the contingent liability respecting the loan for sales to Cuba incurred by Canagrex is transformed into a liability of Her Majesty. Subclause 4(3) provides the specific authority for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to do all that is required in the winding up of the corporation. Section 100 of the Financial Administration Act provides that a Crown corporation may not be dissolved unless authorized by Parliament. The Canagrex Dissolution Act is meant to be such an authority.

Members will be pleased to know that positions were found or settlements made for all of the 30 staff of Canagrex, either in the public or the private sector. All operational files were turned over to the Department of Agriculture and measures have been taken by that Department, the Department of External Affairs and the Export Development Corporation to facilitate additional agricultural and food exports by the private sector.

As the Minister explained to the Standing Committee on Agriculture on December 18, 1984, it was obvious to all that Canagrex had start-up problems. While it undoubtedly would over time, have increased the volume of exports assisted, it was clear that Canagrex was not going to achieve the targets originally expected, nor was it going to be utilized by industry as planned. The activities provided for in the Canagrex Act were market identification and promotion, export counselling, provision of grants and contributions, state to state trading, loans and guarantees, the ability upon request to enter into joint ventures, and the power to import, export and buy and sell. Market identification missions, intelligence and analyses can and are being undertaken by both Agriculture Canada and External Affairs, as are market promotion activities, seminars and trade fairs. State to state trading, buying and selling and exporting may, if necessary, be undertaken through the Agricultural Products Board legislation. Grants and contributions are provided for under the PEMD food program of External Affairs. Insurance, loans and guarantees are available from the Export Development Corporation. Their services to the industry are in the process of being expanded. Canagrex's export counselling and co-ordinating role will be undertaken by Agriculture Canada.

On March 11, 1985, Mr. Story, the President of Canagrex, appeared before the Standing Committee on Agriculture. In answer to a question as to who should co-ordinate and follow up the work started by Canagrex, he indicated his personal view that it should be Agriculture Canada. On June 20, 1985, the audit committee of the Board of Directors of Canagrex had a board meeting by way of a conference call in which a member of the Auditor General's office participated, and the report to the Minister on the financial statements of Canagrex for the year ending March 31, 1985, was agreed to. These accounts indicated that for the year and Canagrex had a surplus of $1,846,278. Guarantees outstanding under the Cuban line of credit amounted to $8,311,728 as at March 31, 1985. These guarantees are to be assumed by the Department of Agriculture when the corporation is dissolved pursuant to Bill C-42. It should be noted that these guarantees will expire as of December 9, 1985. When proclaimed, Bill C-42 will result in the orderly liquidation of the corporation.

Canada's current financial situation demands action. The question was where within the agricultural portfolio cuts could be made that would be the least painful in both human and program impact. Canagrex fit such criteria. While painful, it is believed that the end result will be a streamlining and rationalization of agricultural and food exporting activities of the federal Government. The decision to wind up Canagrex was taken after a careful weighing of the factors involved and the impact such a decision would have on the agri-food sector. It should be stressed that the facilitating of additional exports of agricultural and food products continues to be a top priority of the Government. I believe that with the full co-operation of all federal Departments and agencies involved in facilitating export marketing, the private sector will be able to expand its exports on a more cost-effective basis.

I believe, as I know my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture does, that Bill C-42 is sound, desirable, and in the interests of Canadian agriculture and I urge Members on all sides of the House to support it.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have a few words to say on Bill C-42, an Act to dissolve Canagrex. This Bill is designed to wind up this Crown corporation, although it was effectively destroyed last November 8 on "Black Thursday" when the Government cut its financing including $60 million in cuts from agriculture. That was just the beginning of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) taking on the responsibility of presiding over the decline and destruction of the federal Department of Agriculture. It is interesting that while our agricultural industry is facing its most difficult time in the history of the country since the 1930s, we are spending our time dissolving an agency which was established by the Parliament of Canada to promote, develop, and enhance our trading in agricultural commodities around the world with all the flexibility of a Crown corporation. Rather than trying to solve the tremendous problems facing agriculture, we are debating a Bill which will destroy a very fundamental instrument for the development and promotion of agriculture.

During the election campaign the Government talked about enhancing trade, but in the election manifesto which was put out in Prince Albert it was never mentioned that Canagrex would be wound up. There is a whole raft of issues that have been set on the shelf for months with no decisions being made. The Minister of Agriculture put a moratorium on farm bankruptcy foreclosures last fall. All through the winter and spring months we were promised that there would be something in the Budget to deal with the terrible farm financial crisis which is faced by approximately 39,000 farmers in the country. There was provision in the Budget to assist farmers to get out of agriculture, but nothing to help young farmers stay in the business. The 39,000 farmers who are in serious financial difficulties today are our youngest, most technologically advanced, and most productive farmers. Those farmers produce half of the food in this country, but nothing was done for them in the Budget or in the Estimates of the Department of Agriculture. It is really said that rather than debating a Bill to provide enhanced funding to solve the serious financial difficulties, as was recommended and supported by the Conservative caucus Members, we are debating a Bill to destroy one of the agencies which was established by the Parliament of Canada to enhance our trading relationships in the country.

It is interesting that within a matter of three or four weeks of taking office the new Liberal Government in Ontario announced a $50 million program for assistance for farmers facing serious financial difficulties. The federal Government has been in power for over a year and it has been unable to effect a rescue operation to assist agriculture. When one considers the lack of action by the Government one must wonder whether the Government is determined to have a shakedown. It is saying that its policy is that of the survival of the fittest—if these guys can make it on their own, that is great, but if they cannot, that is acceptable.

In the documents that the Government is using in trading with the United States we see that the Government is considering leaving farm stabilization programs and marketing systems in the negotiations. If those marketing systems are thrown on the bargaining table in Washington, I predict that rather than having 23 per cent of our farmers in serious financial difficulty there will be 33 per cent in that situation, as there are in the United States.

I read with great interest the papers which the Minister of Agriculture put on the table at the meeting in St. John's, Newfoundland, in July. He said that the Government would move toward a free market economy in farm commodities.

● (1500)

Mr. Malone: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: I hear the Hon. Member opposite saying "Hear, hear". Does he believe that the United States system of marketing farm commodities or the European Economic Community system of marketing farm commodities is better than the controlled commodities in this country?

This week in the United States there is a conference taking place between the Senate and the House of Representatives to decide whether assistance for farm support and subsidy programs should be $45 billion. Clearly, Washington and other capitals of Europe such as Paris, London and Bonn are much more wealthy central governments than in Canada. If we are going to throw our marketing system and stabilization programs on the table for the free trade negotiations, I do not believe that Canadian farmers will come out very well in that arrangement.

Clearly, the Government documents indicate that that is exactly what it is contemplating. I ask the Hon. Member opposite where he thinks agriculture in western Canada would be today if it was not for the crop insurance program and the western grain stabilization programs which have paid out approximately $1 billion in the last 12 months? We should be debating programs to try to solve the serious financial difficulties facing Canadian farmers today rather than this Bill which winds up Canagrex—an organization which could have promoted and increased our exports in a long list of commodities through assistance in financing, market promotion, insurance and in developing and analysing markets. However, we are debating a Bill to destroy Canagrex rather than addressing other serious problems facing Canadian agriculture.

During the committee meetings the Hon. Minister of Agriculture who I understand has a large farming section in his riding, quoted Mr. Story, President of Canagrex. When Mr. Story appeared before the Agriculture Committee last winter, he described a phone call that he received on the night of November 7, 1984, when the Minister phoned and said that the next day the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) would be destroying Canagrex by removing all of its funding. Mr. Story responded that he was sorry. If one checks the minutes of the committee meeting, the Minister responded that he was also sorry and, of course, this demonstrates the tremendous split in the Tory caucus over the Canagrex Bill. Clearly there was great support from Members like the Minister of Agriculture while others in the Tory caucus from other parts of the country were very much opposed to it.

This Bill to destroy Canagrex will destroy a Crown corporation that was designed to assist in market identification, the penetration of new markets, the expansion of existing markets and the identification of foreign competition. Canagrex had moved effectively in these areas by having trade missions in many countries identifying markets and starting markets analysis in those smaller commodities produced by less organized groups that do not come under the Canadian Wheat Board or the Canadian Dairy Commission. I do not believe that the Department of Agriculture or the Department of External Affairs have the capacity to do that job nearly as well.

Canagrex also worked in promotion asisstance for trade missions, fairs and exhibitions and helped in product development and advertising programs. This is one of the most aggressive times in our history, when every country in the world is fighting for agricultural markets. Practically every country in the world has massive programs to obtain these markets. The United States agricultural food program is a massive program to do those things that Canagrex was designed to do. SOPEXA is the program in France to promote market development and the sale of farm commoditites. Valery Giscard d'Estaing, the President of France, described it as the nation's green oil because no organization, apart from that in the United States, has conducted the kind of aggressive sales, promotion and development that the EEC has done.

Let us consider the EEC. A few years ago it was purchasing approximately 25 million tonnes of grain. Now it is marketing massive amounts of grain throughout the world. The Federal Republic of Germany has its CMA organization. Isreal has its own agricultural promotion and export institute. Mexico has its national company for popular subsistency. Greece has a market promotion program as well.

We are dealing in a very competitive world. We have active promotion of commodities controlled by the Canadian Wheat Board and the Canadian Dairy Commission. However, Canagrex was designed to assist in those other commodities not covered by those commissions. Canagrex would have provided transportation services, information assistance, insurance advice, regulatory advice, estimates and other services in order to assist smaller groups such as co-ops. Canagrex was designed to provide financial assistance, loan guarantees, loan financing, grants and contributions.

It would have assisted service related activities, the transfer of technology, consulting and management activities as well as joint ventures. This was a Crown corporation designed to assist the smaller commodity groups in marketing their products abroad. I believe that the Government is making a mistake by winding up this Crown corporation because it provided a valuable contribution to the agricultural community in this country. Let us look at some of the items and areas of the world where Canagrex was just starting to develop systems and programs. For instance, dairy cattle going to Latin America, Southeast Asia and North Africa. Many of these countries trade state to state. It is a big advantage to have a corporation like Canagrex. We are talking about dozens of millions of dollars providing financial assistance, technical assistance, insurance and promotion.

Look at the opportunities for selling semen to countries in North Africa, a state to state business, estimated at $14 million. Look at selling our Holstein-Friesian dairy cattle to countries in eastern Europe by joint ventures. The estimate was $40 million over the next 10 years for sales of breeding stock.

If we look at the opportunities for breeding swine in Southeast Asia on a joint venture possibility, some $5 million a year was the estimate. What about feed grains to areas in Africa in a joint venture partnership? What about canola going to Latin America, another joint venture? That was estimated at $50 million in the short therm and up to $150 million over the long term.

We are dealing here with an agency that had the flexibility of a Crown corporation. Our Conservative friends have shown us that they are very supportive of some Crown corporations. Look at Petro-Canada. A takeover of an American corporation, Gulf Oil has just been approved at a cost of $900 million. Canagrex is a very small Crown corporation which was serving agriculture, especially commodities that are not supported by massive marketing agencies. The assistance that Canagrex could give in co-ordinating some of Canada's activities is important. Now we have groups going from Ontario, Alberta and other provinces, marketing commodities and livestock in other parts of the world in competition. Canagrex was to be an agency which could have assisted and helped all Canada's provinces, whether big provinces with nine million people, such as Ontario, or whether a small province, such as Prince Edward Island with only 130,000 people.

We see an action here today, the destruction of a Crown corporation, which could have benefited the country.

Mr. Malone: Let us have some more.

Mr. Foster: At the same time we hear the Tories cheering on the destruction of this Crown corporation, we do not hear any word of the drought program, which is needed in western Canada for the grain sector. This program has been promised week after week. I believe three weeks ago the Minister said that in a couple of weeks he would be announcing drought assistance to those areas affected in western Canada. The decision to support the Canadian Commercial Bank was made over a weekend, perhaps made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) alone who passed on the word to the Finance Department and then on to the two Ministers of Finance. This decision involved a billion dollars. Yet it has taken weeks and weeks to come up with any assistance for the drought problem in western Canada.

We have been waiting for months for the Government to act on its new dairy policy. The Minister promised faithfully a year ago that he would have a dairy policy in place by August of this year. It was not until about July 14 that he got around to appointing a couple of representatives to analyse the situation and recommend a dairy policy.

I mentioned earlier that there had been no action in the Budget or in the Estimates on the farm debt crisis. Likewise, there has really been no decision on farm debt legislation relating to foreclosures, specifically a preforeclosure arbitration procedure. The Minister announced on July 10 that legislation would be brought in this fall. He said if the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) did not bring in legislation concerning the Bankruptcy Act, then he would bring in amendments to the existing Bankruptcy Act.

When my motion on that subject was debated a couple of weeks ago, we got a very equivocal statement by the Parliamentary Secretary, who speaks on behalf of the Government in matters of agriculture.

Is the Government supporting that concept or not, which the Minister clearly enunciated in early July? In any event, he said it was all up to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

There is a need for this type of legislation, which was shown in the Grey-Bruce pilot project report. There was a Bill before the House in June, 1984. That is 15 or 16 months ago. All the Government had to do was to reintroduce that legislation, but nothing has happened in the last 14 or 15 months to indicate exactly where the Government is going.

Daily we have the banks turning down the screws on farmers who are losing their farms. The Minister indicated that there were 675 farms waiting to be foreclosed by the FCC at the time he placed a moratorium on that. He has not indicated what he plans to do with regard to the foreclosures in the private sector, if anything at all.

It was not just a $60 million cut-back last November 8 that the Agriculture Department underwent, which snuffed out the life of Canagrex. In the Estimates the Government says it is going to cut back another $50 million, but it is not clear where. Is it in research which would be sort of cutting off the future? Is it in transportation assistance for farm commodities? Is it in the stabilization payments, meaning inadequate assistance for the farm drought plague in western Canada? Is it in the dairy support program?

There is another little hooker in the Budget, which most people missed, about which we made inquiries. We have made inquiries about the budget of the Department of Agriculture being deindexed. Not only will there be a $50 million cut-back every year for the next four years or five years, but with the deindexation of its budget there will be a $10 million or $15 million reduction in its purchasing power. Not only in Canagrex being cut by the Government. The entire Department of Agriculture is being de-emphasized at a time when the agricultural community is experiencing a devaluation of farmlands and a continuing low level of farm commodity prices. This situation is being exacerbated by the programs of other countries such as the United States and those in the European Economic Community.

Last year the Government made a commitment in the election campaign to do away with the farm fuel excise tax. It did away with that tax and gave a rebate on the petroleum compensation charge. The two together amounted to some 3 cents per litre on the excise tax and 1.8 cents per litre on the petroleum compensation charge. Lo and behold, when the petroleum compensation charge was done away with on June 1, the price of gasoline did not drop. It may have even risen because of deregulation. However, the exemption of 1.8 cents per litre or 7 cents per gallon disappeared for farmers. If we look at the Budget, we see that the Minister imposed a fuel tax on all Canadians but provided no exemption for primary producers in the forestry, mining, fishing or farming community.

On September 3, we saw the introduction of what has come to be known in western Canada as a harvest tax of 2 cents per litre or 9 cents per gallon. That was imposed in less than a year, by a day, from the time the Government was elected. It was another promise forgone. During the period from June 1 to September 3, if we total the excise tax and the petroleum compensation exemption, we see a total increase of 16 cents per gallon for farmers. At the same time the Minister of Finance imposed that excise tax, he also imposed a 1-cent tax on all farm input commodities, which will involve another $11 million for 1986.

When the Government finally decided to relent and not to deindex old age pensions, it imposed another 1-cent per litre or 4.5 cents per gallon, effective on January 1, 1987, on fuels for farmers and other primary producers. The Minister of Finance has steadfastly denied that he will give an exemption to farmers. At the same time that 1-cent per litre or 4.5 cents per gallon comes into effect, the exemption of 3 cents per litre provided by the Minister last September will come off. Therefore, from the period of June 1 to a year from December 31, we will see a dramatic increase which will be far greater than that of last year. It certainly breaks another commitment of the election campaign.

We should not be winding up Canagrex. The Minister said to the President of Canagrex he was sorry that the Government was taking this action when he informed him of it last week. Various federations of agriculture and the National Farmers Union have supported Canagrex, as well as small commodity groups which are not large enough or strong enough to compete in the area of international sales. They are the ones who will be hurt by the winding up of Canagrex. They will be unable to compete with the marketing agencies of various countries such as the United States, the United Kingdom, France and those in the EEC. The dissolution of Canagrex is a backward step. I hope the Government will reconsider its action, especially at a time when agriculture faces one of its most difficult times in history.

Just a few weeks ago, in the last week of August, the Bruce County Federation of Agriculture, a responsible group, passed a resolution at a meeting in Chesley. Some 200 to 300 farmers supported this resolution which called for a total moratorium on farm foreclosures. Surely this is the kind of problem we in the House of Commons should be addressing. In view of the farm debt crisis, we should be providing financial assistance, not just calling for a moratorium. We should be debating legislation such as that proposed by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in its report last March.

The Minister called upon people to make representations on how the Farm Credit Corporation can be improved. Last February and March, some of the members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture served on the Finance Committee of the House of Commons which heard from dozens of groups including the provinces and the federal Departments concerned. They received written submissions and heard representations recommending a program for the 39,000 or 40,000 farmers facing serious financial difficulty. The majority of members on that committee were from the Government side and they said that this was the greatest priority. Approximately 12,000 or 14,000 of those farmers facing financial difficulty should be assisted. Some of them do not require assistance, even though they are in serious financial difficulty, because they have other sources of income and so on; perhaps some are at a point where they cannot be helped. The committee identified perhaps 12,000 to 14,000 that could be helped by a program. The committee was composed of representatives from all sides of the House and recommended a program with funds of some $96 million to $98 million per year for the next several years to see that this group of young, productive, technologically advanced farmers could remain on the land through low-interest rate loans of approximately 8 per cent. Surely that is the kind of legislation that we should be debating in the House today. We should be trying to find a solution that will solve the problems of today as well as maintain for tomorrow that group of farmers who will lead the agricultural industry in the years ahead and will provide the food that this country and other countries need.

I cannot agree with the decision of the Government to wind up Canagrex as a Crown corporation. I think we should be enhancing our trading relationships and helping the small commodity groups to enhance their operations. We should be giving them the tools that the large commodity operations like dairy and wheat already have, tools which are needed because of today's world situation.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this can be called my Hon. Eugene Whelan memorial speech. The previous Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor was, of course, the architect of Canagrex. It is important to remember that his long and hard fight as Minister of Agriculture to establish this agency was something which was strongly backed by farm organizations across the country and just as strongly opposed by some of the major multinational companies that operate in the grain trade and in other parts of our agricultural commodity exchange system.

Perhaps it is not by chance that the memorial of this new Government to my predecessor is not only his dismissal from a post which he might have well filled but also a demonstration that this Government listens to large-scale corporate sector interests rather than to farm organizations, virtually every one of which has indicated its strong and continuing support for this organization.

Perhaps, with their boundless confidence in my predecessor, these farm organizations took his actions on faith. I have to confess that I have not always been convinced that their faith in my predecessor was entirely well placed. However, with respect to Canagrex, an institution which became a part of our international trade system, my predecessor, Mr. Whelan, deserves great credit. I simply wish that Members of the House of Commons would give him that credit for this initiative. The farmers of Canada certainly wish that this institution would continue. They strongly oppose what the Government is doing.

To talk realistically about Canagrex, we have first to recognize the immense crisis that exists in the farming community in our country. I would estimate that 75 per cent to 80 per cent of Hon. Members of this House represent constituencies which are mainly urban. Their interest in food policy is mainly from a consumer's perspective. In making their interest that of a consumer, they are being shortsighted. I express my appreciation at being able to represent a constituency which includes a significant share of farmers who produce the food we eat. It has certainly given me some appreciation of the tremendous challenges they face and the tremendous contribution they make to this country. The farmers make their contribution under the most difficult circumstances possible. Frankly, these difficult circumstances have been made more difficult by this Government since September of last year.

I would like to deal with a few pieces of background data if I could, Mr. Speaker. Let me deal first with the debt crisis that faces Canada's farmers. According to Farm Credit Corporation statistics, 18 per cent of Ontario farmers face severe cash flow difficulties. In addition to that, the net worth of farms in Ontario declined by over 14 per cent between 1981 and 1984. I would ask Hon. Members if this is not the most devastating indication of the growth of this severe crisis in the farm community. The result of this crisis is that the average Ontario farm, as of 1985, is carrying over $25,000 worth of short-term debts as compared to just $3,000 in 1981. The consequence is a decrease of significant proportion in investment in the farm community in new equipment, livestock and land.

This reality is not simply a statistical one. I have before me letters I have sent to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) on behalf of farmers in my constituency who have faced foreclosure over the past winter. As the debt crisis has tightened, they have eventually had to give in to the pressures that they face.

This crisis has reached such proportions that it affects not only isolated cases. Rather, official bodies have come to recognize just how serious this crisis is. The Minister of Agriculture himself set up a task force to study the farm credit situation. When the task force reported back in May, it endorsed precisely the point which we in the NDP have been emphasizing and that is that it is essential to set up a farm debt relief board which could review and renegotiate debts faced by farmers. After all, Mr. Speaker, we do this for foreign countries like Argentina, Chile or Peru. Surely to God we should be prepared to make that same kind of basic commitment to the farmers of Canada. If there were a situation characterized simply by high debts and if there were some sort of relief emerging in the form of improved prices, then the crisis might be something which farmers could face with optimism. However, the reality is that the price situation is just as critical as the debt situation this year.

In my own county, Essex County, two of the major commodities are soybeans and corn. The current cash price for soybeans is $6.30 per bushel, while the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food estimates that it costs a farmer $7.49 to produce that same bushel. We are talking about a difference between price and basic costs of production of $1.19 per bushel. One does not have to be an economist to realize that means the loss of one's shirt. The same thing is true with respect to corn. The cash price for corn stands at $2.60 per bushel while production costs are estimated at $3.60 per bushel. That compares to prices in the last two years of $4 per bushel. Thus, it reflects a massive decrease. While there has been some increase in production, which has been at a loss of $1 per bushel, it does not do any good. We have a situation in which debts are high—crippling. We have a situation in which prices are low and falling and the consequence affects farm communities, not just in Ontario, but across the country. We have not had a Farm Aid concert which would have dramatically focused attention on farm prices in this country. It is up to Members of Parliament to try to focus that attention for a Government which farmers in the country do not think is listening.

On September 5, I wrote to the Minister of Agriculture after a series of discussions I had with farmers from across my constituency this summer indicating to him, and I quote:

> —my meetings with farmers and farm groups in Essex County have convinced me that the economic problems in the farm community in Southwestern Ontario continue to be extreme. Many farmers are facing extremely heavy debt loads, prices for products this year remain low, and the accumulation of past debt service burdens is making the financial position of many farms more and more desperate. The strongly expressed view of farmers in the County is that the Government budget released in May does not provide the required relief which they anticipated; indeed, most farmers have described that budget to me as a betrayal.
> In my view, and the view of many of the farmers that I represent, two broad initiatives are very urgently required at this point. First, it is crucial to explore new initiatives to improve prices for Canadian farmers, so that parity objectives can be achieved. As you know, this subject was referred by the House of Commons to the Agricultural Committee last spring, but no further action has yet been taken to pursue the issue. I believe very strongly that you must provide some leadership on these pricing problems, and yourself urge the Agriculture Committee to undertake immediate hearings across the country to investigate various mechanisms for increasing price levels for farm products in this country. It might even make sense to have a special House of Commons task force on this issue, as has been done with a number of other policy questions.
> The second broad issue which I feel is crucial, on the basis of discussions with Essex County farmers, is the establishment of a comprehensive debt review board, able to negotiate between farmers and their creditors, in order to establish new payment schedules and interest relief to ease cash-flow problems for many badly pressured farms.
> Farm group leaders in my constituency state flatly that financial pressures are now squeezing even very well managed farms, and that relief is crucial to maintain the viability of those farm enterprises.

I went on in my letter to indicate that I would be very pleased to meet with the Minister to discuss these concerns in more detail. My letter continues:

> Farm leaders from my constituency, representing both the Essex County Federation of Agriculture and the National Farmers Union would also be very pleased to participate in a discussion with you. There is a great sense of urgency and concern in Essex County, and we all want to provide as much impetus as possible to any government moves in the directions suggested above.

Despite this effort on the part of farmers across the country to push the Government, it has done little in the view of farmers to help their community. In early July we had a meeting in my constituency at which the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Caldwell) and myself reported back to farmers. I have to tell Hon. Members that my poor colleague from Essex-Kent had a tough evening. It was not even necessary for me to be critical of him; the farmers of Essex County raked him over the coals for a Budget which they considered a betrayal of the farmers in this country. They considered it a betrayal because of tax increases on fuel and because of a lack of action on debt—

Mr. Malone: False.

Mr. Langdon: —and increases with respect to taxes on fuel in the past Budget, as my hon. friend, a former member of the joint committee, is all too well aware. There was no action with respect to prices and there was a decrease in the agriculture budget.

Mr. Dick: Are you speaking on Canagrex?

Mr. Langdon: As a consequence of this dismal record, which includes Canagrex, of course, the National Farmers Union, which has not been a significant force in Ontario for a decade, has launched a massive recruiting drive in my county. There is a new local in existence, Local 309 of the National Farmers Union, which is signing up members like wildfire. There is a spirit of rural revolt in southwestern Ontario which is spreading throughout the country and, frankly, it will shake the very foundations of farm support for the Conservative Party.

In my constituency, as in many constituencies with rural constituents in Ontario, those farmers who voted for this Government last September have lost confidence with respect to this Government. How else can we explain the move of the National Farmers Union with its radical commitments to parity pricing and significant change in our agriculture policy sweeping up members across the townships in my constituency? I welcome the move with great pleasure. I wish to tell Hon. Members that it will not stop at the boundaries of the Essex-Windsor constituency. The movement is sweeping across Ontario. There are contacts which have developed between what is happening in Essex County and similar revolts in other parts of rural Ontario. All I can say is thank God for the capacity of farmers to fight back. They have learned that that is the way to make the Government listen. They have learned that they have to fight and push to make the Government realize the dismal error of its ways. Of course, it is tough to do that. In the time which is left I wish to try to do just that with respect to Canagrex. I want to do it knowing that I speak, unlike the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Layton) and it is interesting that the Minister of Mines should be here today defending the demolition of an agricultural exporting agency. The Minister of Agriculture has not seen fit to come and defend his action in winding up this agency here in the House. I want to express my strong view that I stand here speaking on behalf of farmers and on behalf of farm organizations across this country.

My fellow members on the joint committee on trade this summer know that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture came to us in Winnipeg and said that it was a mistake to do away with Canagrex, that Canagrex was doing a good job. The National Farmers Union came to talk to us here in Ottawa. They said it was a mistake to do away with Canagrex and that excellent work was being undertaken by the agency.

I know for whom I speak and I hope the record shows that this Government with this action speaks not for farmers but for the large grain companies for whom it fought a battle against this agency when it was first proposed by my predecessor.

Economists have an approach to assessing institutions and initiatives called cost-benefit analysis. They look at the costs of an institution and they look at the financial benefits of an institution. Usually if the costs are just a little bit less than the benefits they recommend going ahead.

Let us do that with respect to Canagrex. We can do so with official statistics provided by the Minister of Agriculture himself. I quote from the Order Paper, December 21, 1984, in which the Minister of Agriculture indicated that the total expenditure to October 31, 1984 to establish Canagrex, everything, setting it up, putting it in place, starting it off, cost $2,659,000. That is the cost side of the equation. He was asked how many sales have been explicitly and then indirectly established by Canagrex. The total number of explicit sales was $60 million, according to that answer and there were in addition, said the Minister, transactions in process worth a potential $100 million expected to be finalized March 31. If this Government could even come close to a benefit to cost ratio of $100 million to less than $3 million in any other aspect of its economic policy, I would be the first to congratulate it. Its record is a record of a billion dollar loss to the banks in the case of the Canadian Commercial Bank and probably another $500 million to be expected that it will lose with respect to the Northland Bank. So for these guys to even have a cost-benefit ration that is marginally positive should be something to celebrate, but with an unerring instinct for choosing good programs to get rid of they chose a program with a benefit to cost ratio of over $100 million in benefits to under $3 million in costs. Magnificent accounting, Mr. Speaker.

I quote from my own hometown newspaper in Windsor, January 24, 1984, in which the Minister now responsible for the Wheat Pool said that his Party would take an objective look at Canagrex before doing away with it.

Mr. Speaker, what did they do when they got their chance? The reality is they did not even sit down and talk with the management of Canagrex. They did not even do them the courtesy, before winding them up, of sitting down to get an objective evaluation from the people who were managing this agency, people who incidentally all came from the private sector and made quite clear in their testimony to the Agriculture committee that they wanted to operate as an agency which would work hand in glove with the private sector. But no, Mr. Speaker, they did not have the common decency to sit down and talk in order to give this supposed objective look to which they had committed themselves before they got power. Instead, not only did they move to wind up this agency without consideration, without looking at the costs and benefits, but they put on the record statements coming from the Minister of Agriculture that to my mind represent a major libel, a slander of the people in charge of this agency. They suggested that this agency was in fact endangering export sales.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: Very interesting, Members opposite say "Hear, hear!" but they and their Minister have not been prepared to give a single iota of evidence to back up that claim, not a single iota despite questions and attempts by the Agriculture committee to pin down a specific case, not a single example. This from a Government that sanctiomoniously, now that it is under attack, not for questions and contradictions from Opposition Members but instead from contradictions that have come from its own people—

Mr. Dick: Is this about Canagrex?

Mr. Langdon: A Government which sanctimoniously says but you opposition people are not prepared to give an iota of evidence of our wrongdoing despite the fact that we have learned that the Prime Minister's Office knew about the spoiled tuna two months before it came off the shelves—

An Hon. Member: So did the CBC.

Mr. Langdon: —despite the fact that that reality existed, their sanctimonious reply to the Opposition is but you are not prepared to give us evidence. Despite our asking for evidence for months with respect to Canagrex, the Government has not been prepared to give a single iota of that evidence. Instead, despite the opposition of the farming community, despite the favourable cost-benefit ratio of the agency, despite the testimony of the heads of the agency which indicated just how positive the contribution had been, despite all that, for ideological reasons, because of a blind faith in the operation of the large scale corporate sector, the Government wants to do away with Canagrex without being able to justify it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. He will have 12 minutes left in his speech the next time this matter is debated in the House.

It being 4 p.m., the House will now proceed to consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Friday, April 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Jourdenais, that Bill C-221, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to discuss Bill C-221 in this House. The Bill contains two proposals that deal with the Unemployment Insurance Act. I would like to discuss the proposal for the UI appeal system.

The Bill requests that we repeal an existing section of the UI Act, Section 103, and replace it with another. To properly understand this section of the Act and the ramifications of its removal, I believe we must first look at the present UI appeal system and agree on the purpose of Section 103, and what would happen if it was changed along the lines suggested in this Bill. The UI appeal system has been a part of the UI Act since its inception in the 1940s. It is a bi-level appeal system. The first level of appeal is the Board of Referees. The Board is composed of a chairperson and at least two members, divided evenly amongst two groups, employers or representatives of employers, and insured persons or representatives of insured persons. The chairpersons of the Board of Referees are appointed by the Governor in Council and the other members are appointed by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission. Unlike, for example, a provincial Court of Appeal, the Board of Referees is not a permanent body with a fixed number of members, any of whom may at any time be called upon to sit, generally as members of a bench or judges, to hear any case within the jurisdiction of the court. The Board of Referees is constituted afresh, each time an appeal is lodged, from panels of members, one panel for each group of representative members, and a panel of chairpersons. All members of the Board are independent of UI and their decisions are based on the UI Act, regulations and previous jurisprudence of the umpire.

The second level of the UI appeal system is the umpire, who is usually a judge of the Federal Court. The principle of the existence of a second level of appeal is not universally recognized in law. Eminent jurists of both the Anglo-Saxon and civil legal traditions have asserted that the existence of a second level of appeal makes the first level virtually useless. In Canadian law, however, the two-tier appeal is the rule rather than the exception. The existence of the Supreme Court of Canada as a general court of appeal has accustomed Canadians who come before the courts to rely on a second level of appeal which can overrule decisions of their provincial Court of Appeal. The same is also true of administrative tribunals which we, the legislators, frequently endow with at least two, and sometimes more, levels of appeal. This adds to the safeguards flowing from the general power of supervision and review which is invested in the Superior Court of every province and in the Fedreal Court.

The existence of a two-tier appeal system in unemployment insurance cases can be explained easily. The subject matter of these appeals is the administration of a piece of social legislation, the purpose of which is to preserve the economic order by protecting wage-earners and developing a common goal between business and labour. It seemed quite natural to involve representatives of the two groups of society most directly affected, employers and workers, with the actions of the administrative authorities.

In order to establish some mechanism to review individual decisions concerning the application of the statute, it seemed necessary to add to these two elements, administrative and representative, a third element, maintaining values which are, properly speaking, legal in nature. Since there was a long-standing belief in Canada that neither law nor justice could exist outside the realm of the ordinary courts, we turn to the judiciary to provide this strictly legal contribution in the form of a second level of review of administrative decision.

The umpire is usually the final level of appeal for litigation regarding unemployment insurance benefits. The impact of the umpire's decisions, however, is not limited to merely settling the cases brought before him. In contrast to the decisions of the Boards of Referees, decisions of the umpire have been regarded as a source of case law ever since the early days of unemployment insurance.

This is how the UI appeal system is set up. How well does it work? Is it really the impartial, just, fair and logical system everyone tells us? If a claimant disagres with a decision on his or her claim, he or she has the right to appeal that decision to a Board of Referees. All claimants are told of this right when they are told of the decision on their claim. All claimants are told that they have 30 days within which to make this appeal. They are told what information should be included in their letter of appeal and where to send it. It is explained to them how their case will be decided by a Board composed of a chairperson and employer and employee representatives, and what they can expect at the hearing itself.

Every effort is made, Mr. Speaker, to make the Board hearing as easy as possible for people to attend. The hearing itself is free. There are many board centres across Canada so they are easily accessible. For claimants in remote areas, the Commission has established telephone hook-ups so claimants can attend their hearing by phone and answer and ask questions of the Board. Each claimant who appeals receives a copy of the file that the Board of Referees has on their case. They get this document before the hearing so that corrections or additions can be made. They are told when and where the hearing is to be and if they cannot attend, it is rescheduled. Every effort is made to have a fair, just and impartial hearing.

What happens if the Board of Referees upholds the Commission's decision? All claimants have the right to appeal to the second level of appeal, the umpire. The appeal must be made within 60 days. Under special circumstances the umpire can extend that limit. All appeals to the umpire must be made on certain grounds which are explained to claimants when and if they lodge an appeal. It is also carefully explained to all claimants that if the decision of the Board of Referees is favourable to them, then the Commission or their employer also have a right to appeal to the umpire. There is also a 60 day time limit in which to lodge this appeal.

Section 103(1) of the UI Act basically says that if a Board of Referee's decision is favourable to a claimant UI pays that claimant whatever is due, even if the Commission is going to appeal, or does appeal, to the umpire. However, Section 103(2) of the Act goes on to say that if an appeal is lodged within 21 days for either of the following situations, then UI doesn't have to pay the claimant until the umpire has heard the case. The two, and I stress the only two, types of situations when payment can be stopped are where it involves labour disputes or where the Board or Refugees erred in law or did not take into account a provision of the UI Act or regulations.

Naturally, if the umpire rejects the appeal, the benefits that have been withheld are paid. The exception made for appeals involving a labour dispute can be justified by the size of the amounts at stake. Since these are often test appeals, the settlement of which affects an entire group of claimants, large amounts of money are often involved. In those cases where the appeal is based on the allegation that the Board of Referees failed to take into account all relevant provisions of the Act or regulations, the decisions in question are alleged to be manifestly erroneous and it would be an abuse of process to let them take their course. Withholding payments at the instigation of UI is a form of protection for the unemployment insurance amount; in the case of a labour dispute against a decision which, even though it may at first glance seem defensible, entails particularly serious financial consequences for many claims and in the case of an error in law, against a decision which seems indefensible at first glance. If we were to change the existing Section 103 to the one proposed in Bill C-221, a very imaginative and creative Bill, I think the effect would be immediate, and perhaps damaging, to the control of the UI account. The question raised by Bill C-221, what happens if the claimant receives a favourable decision, I believe is a fundamental one.

As I mentioned earlier, the present Section 103(1) states very clearly that if a claimant receives a favorable decision from the Board of Referees, and the area of appeal is not one of those covered by Section 103(2)—labour disputes or an error in law—the claimant is entitled to all benefits payable as a result of that favourable decision. The difference between the present Section and the proposed Section in Bill C-221 is only a few words, but a few words that could cause a difference to the unemployment insurance account.

I believe I can show the House the difference more clearly with the following practical example. A man quits his job and applies for unemployment insurance. He has the necessary weeks of insurable employment and the claim for UI is approved and set up for him. But he quit his job, and after talking to him it is felt that he did not have a good reason for quitting. Consequently, a six-week penalty, called a disqualification, is put on his claim. The man agrees with this decision and does not exercise his right to appeal to the Board of Referees. Ten weeks later, during an interview at the local Canada Unemployment Centre to help him in his search for work, he says that he is tired and plans to take a break and not look for work for a few weeks. He is advised that in order to continue to be eligible for UI he must be available, capable, and actively looking for work each and every day while collecting UI benefits. It is determined that the man has, in fact, stopped looking for work and, consequently, payment of benefits are suspended indefinitely. This decision is felt to be unfair by our hypothetical man and he decides to appeal to the Board of Referees. The Board reviews his case and, for the sake of this example, decides in his favour.

Under the existing Section 103, Mr. Speaker, our man is now entitled to any UI benefits due him since the start of the indefinite suspension. But here is the difference between the present version of Section 103 and that proposed by Bill C-221. Under the Bill C-221 version our man is now entitled to benefits "form the day the initial claim for benefits is made . . ." Since our man also had a six-week disqualification from beneftis for quitting his job, those benefits are now payable too. They are payable under this proposal even though they were not in dispute or even under the Board of Referees' jurisdiction to consider.

The unemployment insurance system has evolved since its inception in the 1940s. It has responded to changing times, but it has never changed without careful examination and long-term study of the effects of these changes. The UI appeal system has changed and evolved over the years too. Section 103 is not there to penalize anyone or any group. It is there to ensure that those people entitled to benefits get them, and that those people not entitled do not.

My hon. colleague's proposal is interesting and comes at an appropriate time. As the House is aware, the Government recently set up a commission of inquiry on unemployment insurance. The commission will be travelling across the country to meet with Canadians to discuss their concerns and listen to their proposals for changes and improvements to the present unemployment insurance program. I think it is fitting to note that the chairman of this commission of inquiry, Mr. Claude Forget, is a distinguished Canadian who has already served the country this year through his expert work with the sub-committee on the revision of the copyright law. Mr. Forget is a former Cabinet Minister in the Liberal Government of the Province of Quebec and his work in social programs is recognized internationally.

I submit that the work of this commission will probe every aspect of unemployment insurance including the actuarial, the financial, the reserve, and the necessity for taxpayers to supplement the system. However, I am told by Mr. Forget that it will also include the humanity of dealing with claimants in unemployment insurance offices. I think that is immensely significant.

I had the opportunity to deal with a constituent in the south side UI office in Edmonton. The Kafkaesque treatment of this claimant, who had been disqualified from benefits because it was suggested that since he was a commission salesman he was not insurable, resulted in this man being reduced to eating one meal a day and truly becoming a hardship case. He was resourceful enough to write an 11-page appeal to Revenue Canada which was assessing his eligibility and he persevered with his claim. If he has not been able to persevere I shudder to think what would have happened to his health, or indeed, his life. I hope that the new commission on UI will deal effectively with the administrative runaround and bureaucratic bungling to which he was subjected.

It has been suggested that perhaps the House should postpone making any changes to the UI program. It has been suggested that we should allow the commission to do the job that we have asked it to do and that when all levels of Canadian society have been polled that will be the time to make the necessary decisions on the direction the UI program will take. Thus, with the greatest regret, I submit that this most creative piece of legislation might be re-examined in the light of what the Forget commission does and that we have an opportunity to examine the Bill sponsored by my hon. friend, the Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) on another occasion.

[Translation]

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part today in the debate on Bill C-221 which is introducing two amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

[English]

The amendments are related to two separate articles of the Act. The first amendment is to Section 103 of the Unemployment Insurance Act which deals with the unemployment insurance appeal system, and specifically with the money payable to claimants as a result of an appeal, and the other amendment is to Section 39 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, which gives the authority to pay unemployment insurance benefits to unemployed people who are on training courses. The intention of the amendment in this area is one that I could hardly object to because it concerns education and training, an area in which I have spent many years of my life. In looking at the explanatory notes I see that:

> This Bill entitles a person attending a course or program of instruction or training chosen and paid for by him to receive benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, subject to the approval of the Commission.

That preamble pleases those of us who believe that education and training are one of the major components to relieve unemployment in this country.

The Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) introduced this Bill and gave us his reasons for its introduction when he last spoke. He asked us to pass both amendments and has given his arguments. Many Members—probably most Members in the House today—are sympathetic to those views. This afternoon we heard another Member speak to this subject in some detail about these proposed amendments and that as simple as they may seem and as worth while as they may seem, they can introduce complexities to an already complex Act—parts of which I readily admit that neither I nor my constituents understand.

However, by introducing this Bill the Hon. Member has shown his concern for his constituents and, of course, for the many unemployed in Canada's larger constituency. As we know, unemployment has been a major concern to many Canadians over the last few years in particular. The Government program that comes to the rescue and serves the unemployed most directly is the unemployment insurance program.

Over the last few years and particularly in the last few months we have heard much discussion on the many aspects of the unemployment insurance program. The variety of comments—indeed on occasion the volume of comments—are an indicator of the complexity of the issue that we face here today in these two amendments. This is a complexity that is recognized by the Government. We also recognize the impact of any change to unemployment insurance on Canadians and Canada. At the moment, unemployment insurance affects and indeed responds to pregnant women, fishermen, workers who have lost their jobs in many areas and workers who are sick. Many millions have been helped over the last few years by this program. As the amendment before us shows, unemployment insurance has helped people who are taking training of various kinds and who wish to re-enter the job market or wish to improve themselves and their job opportunities. However, unemployment insurance is not just another Government program. It is not a grant or a loan program. It is paid for by Canadians through premiums. Employers and workers alike give part of their earnings every working week to the unemployment insurance account.

In 1984, employers and workers together contributed more than $7 billion to that account. That $7 billion was the major share of the almost $10 billion paid out in 1984 to all unemployment insurance claimants. Because of that, changes to this Act cannot be simply a Government decision. Employers and workers across Canada are participants, partners in the unemployment insurance program. As partners, they too have a say. They have some concern about how the program is run. They know what issues they would like to see considered and we cannot make these changes without the significant consultation which is now going on.

There are many significant questions ahead of us in this field. For instance, there is the question of financing, the role of unemployment insurance in labour market adjustment and the very nature of unemployment insurance service to its clients. We heard the previous speaker explain how the program can deny worthy people of an opportunity to participate just because of some of the wording. Each of these issues and indeed many others must be closely examined and decisions taken to determine the future not only of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the programs but on the economic and labour climate of this country.

The Government has taken the initiative to look at the labour market as a whole. The new Canadian Jobs Strategy is a comprehensive plan to help Canadians find longlasting employment. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians will benefit from the Canadian Jobs Strategy which is designed to address specific problems. Federal funds in that strategy are being used to help those Canadians in the greatest need. Yet, while that strategy is being put in place there is still unemployment insurance. One of the major concerns of the Government is to ensure that unemployment insurance is part of the over-all labour strategy. The two must surely work together. As most Members are aware, the unemployment insurance program is now subject to the review of the Commission of Inquiry on Unemployment Insurance. The hearings and consultations with interested parties in the coming months will form the basis of the commission's report to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) next March. Through these public consultations, the Commission will provide the Government with firm and accurate advice upon which to base proposals for the future of the whole unemployment insurance program.

This process requires time, Mr. Speaker. The Commission of Inquiry must be given every opportunity to do its job thoroughly and to do it right. It was for that reason last May that this Government introduced and passed Bill C-52, which extended the variable entrance requirements for unemployment insurance and froze the premium rate until December, 1986. The objective of that Bill was to maintain stability while the Commission was in progress.

In July, in announcing the members of the Commission of Inquiry, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) highlighted the importance of the Commission's task. He stated:

> The questions the review must face are a challenge to all Canadians. The unemployment insurance program must be, and continue to be, a fair and effective investment in people.

The Hon. Member for La Prairie has demonstrated to all of us his belief in that principle. He is concerned that there are people who need our help. I know all of us in this House agree. The Member has done much more by introducing this Bill. He has highlighted the need for the unemployment insurance review and the difficulty the Commission of Inquiry will surely face as it goes about its task.

Unemployment insurance is there to help people who need help. There are questions. What kind of help to they need in today's labour market conditions? Over the last few years, in particular over the last few months, critics and supporters of the unemployment insurance program have suggested many ways. Some have suggested eliminating maternity benefits, making the entrance requirements much stricter or reducing the amount of money paid to claimants. Others have suggested improvements by extending maternity benefits, loosening the entrance requirements and paying out more money. We cannot look at any of these suggestions, even the amendments put forward in this Bill, in isolation. We must know what effect they will have on the rest of the program, and what effect they will have on the labour market.

In the beginning, unemployment insurance was there to help a worker when he lost his job. It was an insurance program. It still is, but it does much more than that now. Maternity benefits, adoption benefits, fishing benefits, illness benefits, special benefits for workers at age 65 are some of the special needs that are filled by the unemployment insurance program.

As we know, unemployment insurance also finances training, job creation and work sharing. There is no simple definition of unemployment insurance today. Is it an insurance program? To some extent yes. Is it a social assistance program? It is certainly there to ensure that Canadians are able to benefit from the safety net we have built.

The Member from Lapierre has helped us to understand more clearly—

Mr. Jourdenais: La Prairie.

Mr. Winegard: La Prairie. The Member from La Prairie has helped us to understand more clearly the need for a comprehensive and thorough examination of the unemployment insurance program. You have to admit, Mr. Speaker, that my first reference to the Member was not bad.

Mr. Jourdenais: It sounds Liberal.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Winegard: I applaud the action and motives of my colleague. I share his concern. Let us not move on this Bill until after the review process is complete when we can start afresh.

[Translation]

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate my colleague for the work he has performed in the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration to make sure that this Bill would be introduced in the House. Since I agree with my party that the measures provided for in the Bill will correct serious oversights in the present legislation, I do not think that I will speak at any length in support of the Bill, because it was thoroughly discussed and analyzed on April 19 when it was introduced in the House originally.

[English]

Indeed, I am sorry to see that although it is only the second time today that this measure has come before the House that significant opposition is being voiced to it. I have to advise the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard) of a trap into which he has fallen, not relating to the content of the Bill, but when given a preformulated speech from the Minister's office, if one starts in French it is necessary to correct the grammar and make sure that one identifies oneself as being of the correct sex. Therefore, it is not right for him to say—

"Je suis heureuse, monsieur le Président."

[English]

I think it will be perceived that what we have here, what in my native country they call a "fit-up", the Government through the Minister's office is attempting to stifle this Bill. I will not be one to co-operate with that, for I perceive that measure which the Bill provides is a common sense one. It would bring our unemployment insurance system much more into line with European systems in providing, through the unemployment insurance system not a meagre insurance against something seen as a casual accident, but a system of helping the unemployed to get back to work.

• (1640)

I think it is well understood in both languages that one has to step back in order to better jump. I think that—

[English]

In the context of an unemployment insurance system, the underlying philosophy has to be consistent. It would appear that we have two separate strains of thought warring for the unemployment insurance system and supplying the philosophical basis for it. On the one hand we have, as is evident in many European systems, the belief that unemployment is a period which should be used to re-equip the unemployed individual for his or her re-entry into the workforce. The other philosophy is that unemployment insurance payments should be made to ease the transition of the individual on to the social assistance system or on to welfare. This Party does not subscribe to that philosophy. It is pessimistic, and I hope no Member of the House would subscribe to it.

I am sad to say that the Government has not brought forth progressive measures in unemployment insurance since its election. That is one reason, I regret, that I cannot hold out too much hope for the present measure. We have seen that vacation pay is to be included in the computation of earnings received after the date of unemployment. This will simply encourage employers and employees to get together so that the person who is to be unemployed will take his or her vacation before being laid off. In a sense it is a measure which will not save much for the Government. It will end up being a needless and ineffective provocation.

We have seen the Government table measures to treat severance pay as earned income for the purpose of calculating unemployment insurance entitlement. I do not believe that measure is consistent with the philosophy which I have outlined for re-equipping people to re-enter the labour force as soon as possible. Severance pay, essentially for older workers, is not something to reduce the financial burden on the unemployment insurance system. It is compensation for loss of employment and, particularly in the case of older workers, compensation for forcible eviction from a pension system which many older workers suffer when they are laid off.

The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) spoke eloquently about the inconsistencies regarding relocation benefits under the unemployment insurance system and the way in which make-work programs, unfortunately, often do not apply to those people who most need them. In the context of the present Bill, the anomaly which is being addressed by it is one of the most serious ones in the present unemployment insurance system. We should have a system which not only encourages but supports all those people, who are prepared to further their education and training, to equip them for areas in which there are skill shortages and demand.

Unfortunately this Bill will end up as another submission to the Forget Commission, which of course we hope will produce progressive results, although we are critical of its structure.

The time I intended to use has passed. I urge Hon. Members opposite to show some understanding and appreciation of the motives of their colleagues in presenting this Bill and to allow it to proceed to committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating my hon. friend from Guelph (Mr. Winegard), who spoke earlier, on his efforts to express himself in French. Unlike the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry), we do not demand perfection, we are not such purists, and I would urge my hon. friend from Guelph to persevere and to speak French more often.

Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to present my views on Bill C-221. I want to congratulate my hon. friend from La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) on his decision to table in the House a Bill aimed at amending the Unemployment Insurance Act. Thanks to his proposals, we now have a chance to take a closer look at the legislation and its implementation on behalf of Canadians.

Today I shall only be concerned with the proposed amendments to Section 39, which specifies the conditions under which an unemployed worker may draw ordinary unemployment insurance benefits when attending a course of training authorized by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission.

Mr. Speaker, in this case we are concerned with innovative uses of the Unemployment Insurance fund. Section 39 repeats Section 57(3)(a) of the 1955 Act. In order to assess the repercussions of the proposed amendment to Section 39, I think we should first have a good understanding of what these innovative uses involve.

In the next few minutes I intend to summarize the objectives of Section 39 in its present form and explain how the legislation is applied.

In accordance with the innovative uses of the Unemployment Insurance fund, trainees receiving unemployment insurance benefits may continue to receive them while taking part in programs designed to upgrade their employability. The purpose of Section 39 of the Unemployment Insurance Act is to simplify the income maintenance provisions for claimants attending occupational training courses.

This procedure supports the following objectives:

First, to accelerate re-entry of claimants in the labour market;

Second, to increase training opportunities for claimants;

Third, to harmonize the objectives of the Unemployment Insurance Act and the National Training Act with respect to training opportunities for claimants;

Fourth, to increase the number of manpower training courses offered to unemployed workers, in accordance with labour market demand.

Trainees may get an extension of their unemployment benefit period and continue to receive unemployment insurance payments for the duration of the course, plus three weeks' benefits afterwards while they seek gainful employment.

Additional allowances—for being away from home, for having someone look after dependents, for moving, or for daily commuting—may be paid pursuant to the National Training Act or allocated directly from funds earmarked for the mobility program. Such additional allowances cannot be given to trainees who pay their own tuition fees.

The selection and presentation of trainess are made in the usual way by employment advisers who follow the normal practice for gathering documentation.

Trainess entitled to unemployment insurance benefits lower than the training allowance they would receive otherwise are eligible for benefits equal to the higher training allowance.

To be eligible for benefits pursuant to the terms of Section 39 the trainee must meet the conditions under which he would apply for unemployment insurance benefits. He must also have been selected by an employment advisor to take an approved training course. Trainees attending approved vocational training courses at their own expense are eligible for unemployment insurance benefits, provided the funds appropriated for that purpose are not used up and the courses meet the requirements of the labour market.

Eligible trainees receive unemployment insurance benefits as income support for the duration of their training. The Government assumes part of the costs, while employers and employees pay the balance through their contributions. However the Government pays the full costs during a benefit period extension granted to a trainee to complete a course, and again during the additional three-week maximum extension to seek employment.

Trainees attending courses paid by the Employment and Immigration Commission are registered for training courses in trades of national or regional importance. Provisions have been made for members of target groups. Trainees may also be asked to take a language course if their lack of knowledge of either official language prevents them from securing employment.

Total appropriations allocated for each calendar year under the terms of Section 39 are set by order in council. The maximum unemployment insurance insurable weekly earnings are reviewed every two years. Maximum weekly benefits in 1984 were $255, and they are up to $276 in 1985, an increase of 8.2 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, statistical data provided by the CEIC indicate that roughly 56 per cent of trainees attending courses this year will have been registered under the terms of Section 39.

The average duration of courses should be 16 weeks and total outlays for fiscal year 1984-85 have been estimated at $234 million—a sizeable sum in every respect. Nobody can say we are stingy and, in fact, it should be considered as a sound investment in our own human resources. It is an effective way to prepare the unemployed for labour market re-integration.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell you more about the proposed amendment to Section 39. In its present wording Section 39 deals with steering benefit recipients towards training courses which meet their aspirations and which are likely to help them improve their earning potential and employment opportunities. Trainees are registered for various courses on the basis of labour market standards set under the National Training Act. In concrete terms, when an unemployed individual attends a course the costs are assumed by the CEIC and income support is provided through unemployment insurance benefits.

If a claimant decides to attend a course of his choice at his own expense and asks that benefits continue to be paid to him under Section 39, he must first comply with the requirements of the National Training Program.

It is expected that during 1984-85, some 4,000 trainees taking courses at their own expense will have complied with these requirements, which are basically concerned with the needs of the labour market and not those of the claimant.

There would not be many changes arising from Bill C-221. Instead of being directed to a training course by the Commission, the claimant would simply be authorized to attend a course. There are some similarities between training courses attended by trainees at their own expense and the policy now in effect which allows the proposed procedure.

According to this policy, a claimant may, on certain conditions, attend a training course and receive unemployment insurance benefits under Section 25, provided an employment counsellor certifies he cannot be sent to a course under Section 39, that he cannot find suitable employment within a reasonable length of time, that the proposed course would increase his chances of finding employment and that he would drop the course if he were offered a job. However, adopting this Bill would entail additional costs for benefits. The claimants covered by Section 39 may receive unemployment insurance benefits equal to the training allowance, if the latter is higher than the former. Furthermore, the benefit period may be extended to 104 weeks if the trainee is on a course.

I would like to point out that the proposed wording of Section 39 would no longer exclude the claimant from benefits for a maximum period of three weeks, for failing to take a course according to the Commission's instructions.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to provide some more details on the financial repercussions of the proposed amendment to Section 39. Out of $227 million earmarked for training in 1984 under Section 39, about $45 million, or 20 per cent, was paid out in the form of extended benefits. These benefits would not have been paid if the recipients had not attended the approved training courses. We are in fact talking about a benefit extension. Take the case of someone who is receiving ordinary unemployment insurance benefits and who is eligible for three more weeks of weekly benefits only. An Employment and Immigration Canada counsellor arranges for the recipient to enroll in a training course at a community college. If the course lasts for nine months, the trainee will be eligible to receive unemployment insurance benefits for a period of nine months. If the trainee receives $275 a week, the extension benefits paid out during these nine months would amount to $10,536.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I want to say that I admire and respect the good intentions of my colleague in proposing this bill. However, during our review of the unemployment insurance system, the proposals made by my hon. friend could be examined more closely. The Inquiry Commission on Unemployment Insurance will be dealing within the next few months with many questions of this type which are related with unemployment insurance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour allotted for Private Members' Business has now expired.

It being 5 o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House resumed from Friday, September 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Frith (p. 6625).

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the cuts proposed in the Progressive Conservative Budget brought down in May 1985 are a direct contradiction to the commitment made by successive Federal Governments to fight poverty in this country. As a result of Conservative measures, the poorest in this country will be losing income and paying more taxes.

Mr. Speaker, we need only analyze the impact felt last spring when the Progressive Conservative Government gave away nearly $2 billion to the oil multinationals. We need only analyze the $500,000 capital gain exemption offered in the May Budget, to realize that this Government is giving to the rich and taxing the poor.

Mr. Speaker, how is it that in 1985, after so many years of debate aimed at establishing a system of social justice that would be fair to everyone in this country, that we should now have to discuss cutbacks that are entirely unacceptable to Canadian families? The Budget is proposing a significant change in the way family allowance payments are distributed. The Government's contention that these changes will increase amounts received by low-income families is incorrect. In fact, most low-income families and all families on modest incomes will be receiving less than they are receiving at the present time.

Families that are most in need, that is, those who are living below the poverty line, will be receiving less in 1986, while the rich—and I am not referring to people like some of my constituents who have a duplex where they use half as their own residence and rent the other half, they are not going to benefit from this capital gains exemption—while the rich, and I mean those who own land for speculative purposes, and those who own apartment buildings, these people will be able to take advantage of the capital gains tax exemption, while our neediest families will have to suffer the consequences of having their purchasing power reduced and having less money to spend on essential needs. The vast majority of these families, including many families living below the poverty line, stand to lose substantial income because of the series of measures proposed by the Conservative Government.

Mr. Speaker, in the May Budget it was announced that the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption would be spread over five years, and the resulting spate of tax planning we are seeing is very discouraging. In fact, call a real estate agent today to ask whether there is any good income property on the market, and the answer will be no, because everyone is waiting until 1988, 1989 or 1990 to take advantage of this measure. And such measures will not create jobs.

Today, the Government wants to cut the average income of our families by deindexing family allowance payments. Families with an income of $15,000 in 1986 will lose $1,879 in income over the next five years, while a family with an income of $35,000 in 1986 stands to lose $3,452 during the same period. By adding tax increases to cuts in the amounts provided under the three family allowance programs, the Conservative Government has created an untenable situation for many Canadian families. Furthermore, since on the whole, the Budget measures tend to benefit rich Canadians, a family with an income of $80,000 in 1986 will suffer a loss of income of only $1,125 over five years. The poor stand to lose $754 more than the rich. Families on modest incomes will be losing over three times as much as Canadian families that are well off.

[English]

The Government began by the deindexation of the pensions of our senior citizens, a most vulnerable group. Yet with the Liberals' influence and persistence the senior citizens of our great nation were able to speak aloud and defend themselves. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) said it is the family and a commitment to community which guarantees stability in our social fabric. He further stated, "it is my role as Minister of National Health and Welfare to put forward signals and initiatives which will strengthen the role of the family and give it more prominence in society". Let me ask this, Mr. Speaker. How is a family to be strengthened under already tight allowances? They are struggling now, and to further decrease their allowance will only create more problems. We all know that family breakdowns are generated mainly because of financial problems before all else. It is unworthy and unacceptable for the Government to reduce the deficit at the expense of the nation's families, our children. With the many alternatives available to the Government, Members opposite should carefully re-examine this approach to reducing the deficit and begin to tax the rich, as they proclaimed they would do in their May Budget.

• (1110)

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government, with its misleading rhetoric, is trying to hide the fact that, for instance, by 1990-91, Canadian families will be receiving $55 million less in family allowance benefits.

Mr. Speaker, that is why this morning, I rise in the House to protest against this measure.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Last May 23, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance, the Hon. Michael Wilson, tabled his Budget in the House of Commons. An adjustment in social programs was one of the measures announced. Mr. Wilson said this in his statement: "When resources are increasingly limited, we must also adjust social programs so that benefits are targeted to those most in need and funds are freed for other social priorities".

Well, these adjustments will be made through Bill C-70. I agree it is a partial response to suggestions made by a great many citizens, social interest groups and the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Obviously all such groups will always ask for more money to help underprivileged people and try to better living conditions. We understand that and we share this concern for social justice. Still it does not mean that they are against opposed to our social policy readjustment and reorganization program, especially if it is to benefit very low income Canadians.

The situation of families with children is in constant evolution and programs designed to help them cannot always be geared automatically to their changing condition. Hence it does become necessary to revamp such programs now and then, and that is the purpose of Bill C-70. We believe our approach to be realistic and fair.

Mr. Speaker, our system is basically sound, but this Bill attests to our intention of fine tuning it and making it even better. We are not advocating radical changes, only slight alterations to improve the product.

For the benefit of the House I should like to recall the principles which guided us in our consultations and which are reflected in this measure.

The main objective of the review of the child benefit system we have undertaken so far is to define and upgrade programs, the better to meet the needs of Canadian families and of our society. One of the most significant aspects therefore is to ensure that benefits and tax incentives will help those who need it most, particularly low income Canadians. For example, a family with two children under age 18—let us say they live in Ontario—with an annual income of less than $20,000 will have a net increase of $328 in yearly benefits between now and 1989, whereas a similar family whose annual income is $60,000 and therefore among the fairly well-to-do will see its benefits drop by $284 over the next three years.

It is patently clear that our aim is to help the most needy.

The second objective of the Bill is to maintain the principle of universality. I should like to emphasize that, in keeping with the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, universality remains the basic principle underlying our social security net. Family allowances are a secure source of benefits for families with children and our Government is there to help them.

Our friends opposite make disparaging remarks about those changes, but what did they do? Between 1974 and 1984 the Liberal Governments cut expenditures for social programs down from 50 to 43 per cent of total public outlays—a one-year temporary suspension of indexation in 1976, a monthly reduction of family allowances from $25.68 to $20 per child in 1978, elimination of the $50 tax reduction then applicable to each child, reduction of the child tax exemption for youngsters aged 16 and 17, and the 1983-84, 6 and 5 per cent ceiling on family allowances indexation and the child tax exemption which was announced in 1982.

Mr. Speaker, the previous Government also made changes in the family assistance system, changes which were much more radical than those we are now suggesting. If family allowances had been fully indexed to the increase in consumer prices since 1976 without interruption, they would amount this year to $51 a month compared with the current figure of $31. When they were in power, the Liberals therefore caused a loss of $20 a month for Canadian families.

Some people sometimes become demagogic at the expense of low income Canadians. Last summer, I saw the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) on television. He was speaking about our poor little children and showing boxes of baby powder. Maybe the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie lacks experience in this field. Perhaps he is not yet a grandparent, but for my part, I have seven grandchildren and I can tell him that baby powder is out of fashion and is even considered bad for babies.

I said earlier that this Bill brings about a readjustment made necessary not only by our economic situation, but mostly by the very serious difficulties in which many low income families find themselves. I would add that this is the first step in a new direction.

I can but refer to the recent report of the MacDonald Commission which pointed out many weaknesses in our family assistance system. What did this Commission suggest? In addition to recommending the elimination of present child benefits and the establishment of a guaranteed annual income, the Commission presented two options which are similar to what we are proposing. These are benefit readjustment formulas aimed, first, at providing maximum assistance for low income families and second at protecting poor families through a reduction in Government expenditures. This is very close to what we are suggesting and what will be the purpose of our reforms.

The Opposition argues that the measures in this bill are regressive and hit poor people harder than the well-off. I would like to remind the House that this bill is only one component of a package proposed by our Government to reform the Canadian child benefit and taxation systems.

As concerns child benefits, the child tax credit will be substantially increased in coming years, which will be of further assistance to needy families. In addition, the reduction of tax exemptions for dependent children will benefit these same people rather than the rich.

Hon. Members will recall that measures were announced in the Budget last May to bring more equity and objectiveness to our tax system, such as the implementation of a minimum personal income tax beginning in the 1986 fiscal year. Second, there will be a temporary additional tax for high income taxpayers and big businesses. Third, there will be a capital tax for financial institutions, including the major banks and trust companies. There is therefore no question of regressing, but rather of progressing towards a more equitable system.

For us, Mr. Speaker, a family policy does not consist simply in a cheque at the end of each month for the welfare of a child. It is much more than that. Jobs for the father, the mother and the children leaving school are really what matters. Fortunately, our economy is showing signs of vigour. Over the past year, 284,000 jobs have been created by our Government. The unemployment rate, which reached 11.6 per cent in September 1984, is now down to 10.3 per cent. In the Eastern Townships where my riding is located, the unemployment rate went down from 10 per cent in July, 1984 to 8.1 per cent in 1986. Interest rates have decreased by 2.75 per cent since September, 1984 and are now at their lowest level in seven years. That is a positive record.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude my remarks by saying that the time has come for us to give a new direction to our social policy for Canada. It should be based on our country's economic recovery. That was the underlying philosophy of the Wilson budget introduced last May. By adopting this budget, the House gave its support to changes. The time has come to implement the proposed measures and to act for the benefit of all Canadians. That is the reason we should act now, Mr. Speaker. Canadians voted for change last September, and I wish this Bill to be sent to the legislative committee for a detailed study.

[English]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to speak against this Bill. I am speaking in defence of all the children of Canada, including my 10 grandchildren. If any Hon. Member suggests, because he has fewer than 10 grandchildren, that I have a conflict of interest, I will point out that he has an equal conflict of interest.

One might call this Bill hate literature against children. This Bill, plus other budget measures, cuts hundreds of millions of dollars from the effective income of families who are raising children.

A typical family with two children and two income earners—which is becoming more common—is likely to lose approximately $2,000 by 1990. Let us look more closely at some other examples. A family earning $10,000, while receiving $79 more in benefits next year, would pay $37 more in tax. Therefore, it would have $42 more. However, by 1990, it would have less in benefits, would pay much more in tax, and would lose $280 altogether. The same picture applies to a family earning $20,000. However, a family earning $80,000 will receive $141 next year and $1,708 in 1990.

We can look at it another way. Family allowance in 1985 is $375. In 1990 it will be $404, an increase of $29. The child tax credit maximum benefit is now $384 and it will go up to $550, an increase of $156, less than $200 altogether. But the child tax exemption will drop from $710 to $404, a drop of $306. In other words, families will lose 50 per cent more than they will gain. The net loss will be 50 per cent.

Let us look at it another way. On these benefits and taxes a family earning less than $10,000 a year by 1990 will perhaps come out to the very same income now less $3. A family earning $10,000 will lose $35 if we reckon 1990 money in 1985 dollars, taking account of inflation.

At $20,000 in 1985 dollars, a family will lose $199. At $30,000 a family will lose $530; at 40,000 a family will lose $486, and so on. Families will lose, and these are families raising children. It is an attack on children. It is an attempt to go behind the progress made in the last two centuries. During that time we had to counteract the effect of the market system. In pre-modern times, families recognized responsibilities within the family and communities recognized reciprocal responsibilities within the community. Nobody was considered absolutely alone, fending totally for himself or herself at whatever age.

Now we are getting into a new scene. We now have a scene in which, for a couple of hundred years, the market overtook nearly all those relationships, nearly everything was marketable and the poor, the women and the children were downgraded, in fact degraded. There was a fight against it. First, child labour was prohibited in the mines and in the mills. Free schools were established because it was found necessary for the nation that everyone have schooling.

Since World War II, family allowance has been based on the principle that everybody, regardless of prosperity, should have an agreed minimum amount. Families who are raising children should not be forced to live at a lower standard than childless families.

We have now had another attack in the last several decades on the principle established to make veterans happy when they came out of the Forces in 1945.

The business elite has attacked, first through the Liberals and now through the Conservatives. In 1945, the family allowances program was established. In 1947, it was made universal when its cost was only 22 per cent of the federal expenditures, the same percentage as it is now. At that time it was 7.7 per cent of the federal expenditures.

Over the last 20 years, payments have been seriously cut. The Liberal Government, through the then Minister of Health, Mr. Munro, together with the Finance Minister, now the Leader of the Liberal Party tried to cut payments by reducing all payments to anyone earning more than $10,000 in the family income support plan. That plan was blocked by the 1972 election when the Government lost its majority and, with the NDP, the Government was obliged to double family allowances. Since then the Government cut back again, by about 20 per cent in 1974. The Liberals again made cuts indirectly through selective child tax credits in 1978. Then, in 1982 and 1983, the Liberals cut back still further with the six and five program, as the previous speaker has reminded us. By 1984, as a share of Government expenditure, the family allowance was cut to 2.4 per cent instead of 7.7 per cent. Now we have the attack by the business elite through the Tories. We have a Budget which, through sales tax on gas, other energy products, health products and other basics of family life, will cost every family about $1,000. What is being taken out by a shovel is being put back with a teaspoon for show.

Also, the Government has cut back on social housing, which is needed by the same families. Almost all families requiring social housing are raising children, and it is about to increase those rents by 20 per cent. It cut the money for planned parenthood. In fact, it will be saving on family benefits, directly and indirectly, $130 million in 1986 and $600 million in 1990. That money is being taken from families with children.

The cost is supposed to be too great. In fact, the cost is less than $2 billion when we consider what is paid out and what is recovered in taxes. The Government wants to take $2 billion from families but is eager to give $1 billion in fresh tax rebates to oil companies and $1 billion to the richest investors in a bank which went broke because of its greed and the greed of its investors. This is an anti-child Government leading an anti-child business elite. It is cutting family allowances, education, health and social housing. At the provincial level, Conservative Governments, such as in Ontario, are supporting indirectly adult only apartments.

Miss MacDonald: What kind of Government is that in Ontario?

Mr. Heap: They do not want anyone with children to live in many of the new apartments which have been built in the last dozen or so years. Both the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party blocked any attempt in the Ontario Legislature in past years to correct that discrimination against children. The message from the Government to the women of this country is that it will cut back on family planning programs and that once they have given birth, they are on their own. It says to these women: "Don't come to us for help because we must give the money to the banks and oil companies; there is not enough left for children".

In conclusion, 1.2 per cent of the Gross National Product for 1974 went to family allowance. Today, before these cuts, it is .57 per cent of the GNP, and the Government wants to cut it even further. Shame on it.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on the deindexation of family allowances. As my colleagues before me have indicated, particularly those in the Opposition, this particular measure will have some very serious effects upon the livelihoods of many young children. This particular measure cannot be looked at in a vacuum. We must remember some of the measures which came down in the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) which were equally harsh. Collectively, they indicate to Canadians that the measures will be devastating.

For instance, we will have increased consumer and gasoline taxes, notwithstanding the fact that there will be a deindexation of family allowances. There has been the imposition of taxes on health goods. Of course, there was the attempt of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to deindex the old age security. However, because of the fight on the part of Her Majesty's Official Opposition, they have backed down. Also there is the erosion of the family benefits package, which will result in less benefits by 1990 to low and middle-income families.

Our official critic with regard to social programs outlined in great detail the ways in which these cut-backs will affect average Canadians and average Canadian families. However, the hypocrisy of the Conservative Party of Canada seems to be appalling. It was not all that long ago that the Conservative Party ran advertisements in newspapers. Its members advertised en masse, at the expense of the Conservative Party of Canada. I will refer to one particular newspaper article which reads: "You have heard a lot about the Constitution lately, but how much have you heard about deindexing?" That ad goes back to 1980. They seem to have forgotten, or perhaps they have not. Maybe the true, classic philosophy or ideology of the Conservative Party is taking over the Chamber—the rich get more and the poor get less. That is very evident in numerous measures which have been put before the House. The Budget in May, and prior thereto the November economic statement of the Minister of Finance, suggest to our Party—and I think very clearly to many Canadians—that the Conservative Party believes there is no room in the country for weak individuals.

Why else would it viciously attack our senior citizens in the deindexation of their money? Fortunately, because of the opposition Parties and because of the strong will of our senior citizens, this measure has been curtailed. I have said in the House before—and I will say it again—that that was the first attempt against senior citizens, and I suggest that the Conservative Party will try again, when the opportunity arises, to implement deindexation for our senior citizens.

Now we have a deindexation proposal for family allowances. Unfortunately there are numerous Canadian families who use that money to buy the necessities of life. There are certain individuals, to whom the Prime Minister refers as bank presidents, who receive sums of money under the Family Allowances Program which they do not need. However, there are literally thousands of young families who purchase the necessities of life with their family allowance payments. In the wintertime those cheques are used to purchase such articles as boots, snowsuits and a whole host of necessities. Hon. Members of Parliament, whether they be Conservative, Liberal or NDP, would not want to begrudge young children that income in order to purchase such goods. Some families use family allowance for investing in the education of their children, whether they attend post-secondary institutions or training schools; some of the money may be put away for that sole purpose. What is the Conservative Party doing as a national Government by saying to young families that they will no longer be given that opportunity, that family allowances will be decreased because it needs to rid itself of debt? The Government ought to have thought about that when it bailed out the Canadian Commercial Bank. We are led to believe that an audit was requested by the chartered banks with regard to the money which was thrown into the CCB, and that was denied. Yet, the Government has the audacity to come before Parliament and to say that it wants to reduce the deficit by taking away money from the Family Allowances Program.

Surely the Government could have attacked some other area in its efforts to save money for the Canadian taxpayers. What about the billions of dollars which have been given in relief to the multinational oil companies, Mr. Speaker? Would it not have been better to deny that relief, instead of denying benefits to young families? Perhaps the Government could have looked at the capital gains exemption. Billions of dollars will be lost to the national treasury as a result of the implementation of the capital gains exemption which is afforded to the rich in this country. This is another example of where money could have been saved to reduce the deficit. But collectively, as a Party and as a Government, they have singled out families in this country to bear the brunt of reducing the deficit, and thus they deny, in my view, young families and young children, and some not so young, an income that they had become accustomed to having. Some Hon. Members suggest, either implicitly or indirectly, that sometimes this money is not used for beneficial purposes. There is no question. There may be some abuses. But does that mean the entire system should be destroyed? I say quite frankly that that is not the way the difficulties should be resolved.

Many families have learned to depend upon family allowance payments. Notwithstanding the gross family income, many women in particular depend upon family allowances in order to exist in what could be a very difficult economic life.

I could go on at length and indicate to the House where I think other cuts could take place in order to save money, but I think it is fair to say that when a national Government selects families to bear the brunt of its total incompetence, whether it is its dealings with the Canadian Commercial Bank, its placing of a million tonnes of tuna on the shelves, or with regards to the bail-outs of the multinational oil companies, that incompetence, in my view, should not become a burden to young families. Many members of our society, and particularly young people, are in desperate need of financial assistance. I would urge Government Members as well as Cabinet Ministers to review this measure which will have such a devastating effect on Canadian families.

Mr. Frank Oberle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to make a few comments in regard to the Bill that is before us. I had not really intended to get into this debate, but in listening to the comments of the opposition members this morning which compared this Bill with the bail-out of banks and rotten tuna, I think it is timely that someone put the matter into proper perspective.

In the few moments I have I will not engage in the suppositions that have been advanced here this morning, namely that by the year 1990 the net revenue to a family with children will be something less than what it is today and by the year 2000 it would be literally impossible for a family to make a living. My hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), says that the children will be back in the sweat shops and in the salt mines by the year 2000 if we keep going the way we are. All of us here know, of course, that that is not so.

What this Bill attempts to do in order to maintain the concept and principle of universality is to use the tax Act, which of course is already arranged in such a way that the rich pay a little more than the poor on a graduating scale, to use scarce public resources to help those who are in greatest need of this kind of help. My friends say that families put the family allowance away in a savings account to help their children or their grandchildren obtain a proper education. People in the higher income tax brackets, with greater disposable income, have other ways of doing that through family trusts. Parents or grandparents can put money away for children in a family trust and thus get some tax concessions. People in the lower income tax brackets do not have sufficient disposable income to create these trusts. Therefore, that argument does not wash.

An Hon. Member: That's what they were saying.

Mr. Oberle: What we have to look at is the fact that we have accumulated over the last 15 years of Liberal socialism a debt of $190 billion. Over the last three years the current account deficit grew by 25 per cent a year. The problem with universality is that if it is continued in the same fashion as it has been, particularly over the last three years, not only will family allowances be threatened but so will the unemployment insurance fund, old age pensions and everything else. The only real way we have to guarantee and to enhance these social programs is to make sure that the economy on which we rely to pay for these programs is healthy and is restored to its former dynamism and health.

How is that done? When things get tough, those who are in greatest need are helped, and that is what this Bill attempts to do.

I look at these social programs in two ways. The unemployment insurance fund and the Canada Pension Plan are programs to which people contribute during their working lives and which will help them when they are in need, that is when they lose their jobs, have to make a transition from one job to another or when they reach old age. We pride ourselves with having one of the most advanced social programs in the world. That, of course, is a myth but it is only a myth because it is in its starting phase. I compare social programs with those of some of the European countries. Bismarck started the old age pensions program in Germany in 1871. The program, which is much more generous than what we have presently and what we hope to have once the Canada Pension Plan becomes mature, has survived two major depressions and two world wars, and people are infinitely better off in their retirement years than they were during their working years. That is, I suppose, responsible management.

We began thinking about pension plans in the Diefenbaker years, but it was not until 1965 that we started the Canada Pension Plan. It will take until the year 2005 or 2010 before that particular program has reached its full value and maturity. In other words, people have contributed to it all their working lives and should therefore be entitled to adequate income in their retirement years. Thus, we have to do something in the meantime, which is where the old age pensions and the guaranteed income supplements come into the picture.

No one has contributed to the guaranteed income supplement or to the old age pension programs. That comes directly from general revenue—

Mr. Benjamin: What about the taxpayers?

Mr. Oberle: The taxpayers contribute, of course; but they have not contributed directly. Nor is the old age pension program universal, since there is the basic old age pension and then there are the income supplements which are designed to help those who are in the greatest need. No one argues with any of these measures. All we are saying is that at this time the country is in such precarious circumstances that we have to ensure that the scarce public resources which are available are put to the best use. This is what the Bill before us proposes to do.

My hon. friend from Spadina said he has ten grandchildren. I have four myself. I suggest that the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) is in a better position than most to help his children and his grandchildren with respect to obtaining a proper education. The problem which the NDP and the Liberals face presently is that they are not so much concerned with helping the needy, which is our main concern. Their concern is with helping the greedy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Mitchell: You are reducing it for the needy. What about the banks and the oil companies, are they not pretty greedy?

Mr. Oberle: I note the reactions to my comments of a particular Hon. Member opposite.

Mr. Hovdebo: Helping the greedy, that is the basic policy of the Conservatives.

Mr. Oberle: The Hon. Member opposite to whom I refer lives in a social housing project in Ottawa because projects of this type are supposed to be universal. There is not supposed to be a stigma attached to being poor. Therefore, everyone, regardless of income, whether it is $100,000 a year or $23,000 a year, should be entitled to these social, non-contributory social programs. However, we know that that is not possible. We know that that will not be possible, particularly in the foreseeable future. We know that it will be necessary for us to bring about measures which will help those in the greatest need to continue to receive these social benefits and to make every effort to see that those in greatest need have these benefits enhanced for them. However, that will have to come about at the expense of those in the higher income brackets, such as the Hon. Member opposite whose income is not great but who can educate his children and look after himself in his old age, particularly with the generous benefits Members of Parliament have. I note my time is up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the amendment with respect to a six-month hoist is not nearly long enough when a Bill such as the one before us is concerned. I appreciate that if there were a last minute conversion on the government side and it decided to support the amendment, the Bill would die on the Order Paper. Although, knowing the Conservatives, I think they would probably bring it back in again at a later date.

Since the establishment of the first social programs in this country, the attacks on them have started the very next day. That has been the history of social programs in our country. It does not matter at all whether we are speaking of old age pensions, medicare, hospitalization, unemployment insurance or worker's compensation. There are those in our society, usually the well-to-do, the organized and the powerful, who start attacking them. Even Governments which institute social programs attempt to erode them, whittle away at the benefits and try to bring into disrepute the fundamental purposes of the programs. With medicare, there is extra billing. Medical care and hospital premiums now amount to a sum of almost $700 per year for a family of four in Ontario, which is the richest province in Canada. These attacks do nothing more than whittle away at the accessibility and the universality of measures such as medicare and hospitalization.

We went through bitter experiences in this regard in Saskatchewan for all too many years. However, we went ahead anyway and saw them through. Every time we have had Liberal and Conservative Governments in this country nationally—which is the only kind we have had—they start something which they then attempt to undo. I think the Liberals have a lot of nerve. In 1970, just two years after Mr. Trudeau took over, they sought to wipe out family allowances completely and replace them with an income test called the family income security plan. That is a plan which would enable the Government to snoop into everyone's affairs. The Family Allowances Program is universal. Those in higher income brackets will have family allowance benefits taxed back and then some. The process is a great deal more efficient in this way. With a little restructuring of the income tax system, this tax back could be all the more certain.

The Liberals wanted to wipe out the family allowance. I am glad to see that they have been converted, although I suspect the conversion will last only as long as they are in opposition. They are notorious for being great progressives when they are in opposition. However, as soon as they are in government they revert to the traditional conservative style of governing and the traditional conservative attitudes toward social programs. It was only when there was a minority Government from 1972 to 1974 that we were able to force the Liberals to abandon the family income security plan. I must say that at that time the Conservatives were just as vociferous as we were that there be no tampering with the Family Allowances Program. The Conservatives and the New Democrats fought together at that time and we won that round.

The faces have now changed but the speeches have not. We have had Liberals stand up in the House and make the same speeches which Tories made in those two years. We have Tories standing up and making speeches which the Liberals made during that period of time. That is something which has occurred a great deal since last September 4. It is pure hypocrisy to hear the Liberals defending the principle of universality in social policy given their record in office. A former Minister of National Health and Welfare, John Munro, assailed universality, while his Cabinet colleague and Minister of Finance at the time was none other than the present Leader of the Opposition. How much credibility do they think they have?

Much has been made about the national debt and the ability of the country to afford family allowance benefits. In 1974, the interest on the national debt was 22 per cent of all federal expenditures, the same percentage as now. In 1947, some 7.7 per cent of federal expenditures went to family allowances. In 1984, some 2.4 per cent of federal Government expenditures went to family allowances. The last major increase in the program occurred in 1974, due to the fact that a minority Government was in power and we forced the Government into making the increase. From 1972 to 1974 family allowances were doubled and indexed, which accounted for only 6.1 per cent of federal expenditures. Today, they make up 2.4 per cent of Government expenditures.

The National Council on Welfare has pointed out what deindexing will mean to families on low incomes. The council has pointed out that those in the $9,000-a-year or less range will lose money. There are many Members in the House with families in their constituencies who fit into that category.

I do not understand the Government now after its many years in opposition—and I have been here for almost 17 of those years. The Conservatives joined with the New Democratic Party to fight the efforts of the Liberal Government to whittle away and destroy universality. But now they do not believe in universality. It seemed then as if the Liberals thought that the old age pension would destroy incentive to work, just like the Tories do now. It does pay to be consistent, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to one's own basic principles, as well as the principles of a political Party. If the Conservatives had stood up in the debate on this Bill and said they have changed their minds and admitted they were wrong, their credibility would have been improved. If they had said that they were wrong in the years in which they fought the Liberals to get those family allowances indexed, if they had said they now agreed with the position the Liberal Party took a number of years ago, then there would be some semblance of honesty in the position taken by both Parties.

We welcome the Liberals who joined with us in fighting to preserve full indexing for family allowances, just as we did when the Conservatives joined us in supporting full indexing. But I wish the Conservatives would be straightforward and tell us honestly and openly that they have changed their minds, that they were wrong before. But, of course, Mr. Speaker, all they have done is to change positions, and there is nothing new about that. The only difference between the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party is that one is in and one is out. In fact, Mr. Speaker, both Parties notoriously and historically have taken money from the rich and votes from the poor, and then promised to protect them from each other. Surely a kind of straightforward honesty is needed from both the Government Party and the Liberal Party. The Conservatives should have the courage to stand up and say, "We've changed our minds. We want to do what the other fellow wanted to do before". If they were honest about this, perhaps they would receive a little more credible treatment from the people of Canada.

I hope the House will decide at the eleventh hour to support the six-month hoist, and that will be the end of that. The Government can come back with a host of other means which are available to it to make up whatever extra funds full indexing will cost. All the Government has to do is to charge a modest interest rate on the $35 billion worth of deferred corporate taxes which are owed to the people of Canada—that is at 10 per cent interest, which is modest—and it would have $3.5 billion to reduce the deficit and maintain full indexing. There are a lot of options open to the Government which would receive the support of the House of Commons. It should look at those options rather than resorting to chiselling the old people, poor families and their children.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a wide-ranging debate. We are talking about multinationals and oil proposals and so on. It was interesting to listen to the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) talking about speeches. We have been listening to the same NDP speeches for years and years and it still has only 30 seats and 20 per cent support, so obviously its line is not being received very well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary but according to the list I have, the Hon. Member has already spoken on the amendment and cannot speak twice.

Mr. Manly: On the hoist motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On the hoist motion. The Hon. Member has already spoken on the amendment, therefore, he is not able to speak again on the same amendment.

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I must say that during my 13 months as a new Member of Parliament, I found it interesting to look at the old faces in the House who do their talking in the way of the old Liberal Party, which controlled, ruled, and governed this country for so many years. My hon. friend in his speech talked about a national debt for $200 billion. The Conservative Government was elected with a large majority by the people of Canada who asked us to give them a better administration and that is exactly what we are doing at this time.

My riding of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine for the past 22 years under what we called Liberal despotic rule. My riding has one of the highest rates of unemployment in the country and we have seen the full gambit of Liberal programs. Every now and then we listen to a member of the New Democratic Party criticizing the Conservatives but providing no better answers than the Liberals had. We can never forget, Mr. Speaker, that the economy must go hand in hand with our social programs. When our pockets are empty, we cannot buy food, and this is the dilemma we are in now in 1985. This is the great heritage left to us by our Liberal predecessors.

Being a young politician and a young man with four children, I realize that with our country' national debt, my children and their children will not be able to survive on our present programs. This is the reason the Government has taken these steps. When the Opposition cries that the poor people are not going to get as much as they already receive, this is false. Families earning less than $25,000 will receive more. The 3 per cent indexation represents 94 cents per month, which, in this day and age, Mr. Speaker, means absolutely nothing. But whether it is a family who earns under $25,000 or a family who earns over $100,000, there is no national pride, and the deeper our national debt grows, the less our national pride will be.

On September 4, 1984, we said that we would put our house in order, and that is exactly what we are doing. The old Liberal programs did not succeed. The only thing the Liberals succeeded in doing was to create a situation where the people could not work and had to depend 100 per cent on Liberal hand-outs. This new Government is about to change completely the national image and will once again instil a national pride in our people. Speaking on behalf of my constituents, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that the change which was made in September of 1984, was a change desperately needed and a change about which the people are proud and happy. They finally have a Government which is realistic, a Government with a good administration, and a Government which is concerned with the poor people in this land.

I trust that the Conservative Party will be in power for the next 100 years. Unfortunately, we in this House will not be around that long. However, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that with the new Government programs and with the contribution of every single Canadian, we must attack our national debt. We must all contribute, and that is what this Government is asking. I can assure this House, as I can assure all Canadians, that with good Government administration, our children, our grandchildren and those who follow will be much better off in the years to come.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make some general comments concerning Bill C-70. A previous Conservative speaker said that "our main concern is to help the needy". I have some difficulty believing that Member. I believe that Canadians generally have considerable difficulty in believing that the main concern of this Conservative Government is to help the needy, and I want to indicate why.

If one looks at the Budget of May 23 and its over-all impact, one cannot help but conclude that the Budget is unfair. It is sneaky. It is a vicious attack on the needy and the disadvantaged in our society. Before the Budget was handed down, we were told by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), Ministers of the Crown, indeed all Conservative Members, that it was going to be tough but fair. Ministers fanned out across the country to tell people that it would be tough but fair. The Opposition asked for the Budget at an early date, but were told by the Prime Minister that the Government was in the process of consulting with Canadians. The Government wanted to know what Canadians had to say about the Budget that was to be handed down, but we were continually told that it would be tough but fair. I would like to ask you, Mr. Speaker, what is fair about that Conservative Budget? What is fair about a Budget that tries to deindex senior citizens' pensions on the one hand, and on the other give a $125,000 cash bonanza to the most affluent in our society by means of a capital gains deduction? Where is the fairness, where is the equity? There was none in that Budget.

The Government recognized that the proposal to deindex senior citizens' pensions was not fair, equitable or just. As a result of the position taken by the Opposition in this Parliament and as a result of a groundswell of opposition to that measure, the Conservative Government had to back down. It had to admit to the people of Canada that what it proposed to do was a mistake. It was unfair. However, not only that measure was unfair, so is this measure we find in Bill C-70. It is an attempt by the Government to deindex family allowance payments.

In his opening comments, the Minister indicated it was the intention of the Government to give more to the needy in society and that Bill C-70 would not only do that, it would also attack the deficit. I need not say that this Government is preoccupied with deficit reduction. It is paranoid about the deficit. It is for that reason we have this Bill before us. It is not, as the Government says, to help those most in need in our society.

If we closely examine the motivation of this Government it is easy to conclude that it is motivated by debt and deficit reduction. That is why this measure is before Parliament. Well, I say to Hon. Members opposite that we in the Liberal Opposition are concerned about the deficit as well. We believe in fiscal responsibility. We believe as parliamentarians and as a Government that we must act responsibly when it comes to the finances of the nation. However, unlike the Conservative Government we believe in people. We believe in families. We believe in children. We care about families and children. This Conservative Government does not appear to care. It is quite prepared to reduce the deficit on the backs of the disadvantaged in our society. Where is the justice, where is the fairness? We in Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition say, if you want to reduce the deficit, do not do it on the backs of the disadvantaged, the poor, the elderly, the young and the unemployed because we will not put up with it. We will fight you every inch of the way. If the Government is concerned about reducing the deficit, then let us be fair and just about it. If the goal of this Government is to redistribute the wealth in this society so that those most in need receive more, then let us not tinker with universality. Let us not assault the social safety net. If the Government is truly concerned about giving more money to the needy, then let us talk about reforming the tax system. Let us talk about a minimum tax on the rich.

In the last election compaign, indeed in this House, Conservative Members indicated that they intended to bring in a minimum tax. Well, here we are a year later and where is that minimum tax on the rich? Where is the fairness and equity in allowing people earning $100,000 or $200,000 to avoid paying any taxes at all? Where is the justice? There is none.

This Government believes that Government is in business to reduce the deficit. Members opposite believe that running this country is like running a business. You know as well as I do that the purpose of a business is to show profit. You must show to your shareholders that you are balancing the books and you are showing a profit. On the other hand, we in the Opposition believe that Government is in business to serve people. Yes, it is quite possible to eliminate the deficit overnight. We all know that. We can do that, no problem at all. Let us get rid of universality and unemployment insurance. Let us get rid of all the transfer payments to the provinces regarding health and education. If we do that, we can eliminate the deficit, no question. But Canadians do not want that. We have a standard of living second to none and Canadians have come to expect and appreciate the highest level of health care and education in the world. Canadians have come to appreciate the fact that regardless of where you live in this great country you will receive a high level of education. But Canadians do not want our standard of living to be affected.

I note that you have indicated that I have but a minute left, Mr. Speaker. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this piece of legislation is regressive, anti-family, and anti-children. I hope that the Government will reconsider and withdraw this unfair piece of legislation, just as it did the proposal to deindex senior citizens' pensions. If the Government truly believes in helping the needy and less fortunate in our society, let us talk about a more equitable and more progressive income tax system.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak in this very important debate. We have heard some suggestions that the Bill before us and the policy which it represents are sneaky. I suggest to you that there is nothing more sneaky than theft, particularly theft in the night. It was the previous Government that stole Canada's Visa card and ran up $8,000 of charges on it for each man, woman, and child in the country. It cannot be paid off. The previous Government would not pay it off. The interest is accumulating at $100 per individual per month and more charges were made at a rate exceeding $1,000 a year for each person in the country until the present Government took office.

This Government is determined to bring the Canadian spending spree to a halt, but not at the expense of social programs. This Bill is about fairness, not sneakiness. The previous speaker referred to some sense of paranoia about the deficit. I would ask him what he would do about the deficit. Would he monetize it? The Liberal Party was at one time interested in balancing the books of this country. Where have its morals and principles gone?

In all seriousness, Mr. Speaker, one of the difficulties which besets us is the fact that following the calamity of World War II our entire system was geared to a preindustrial society. Suddenly most western Governments became affluent and demands were made upon them in the area of invasion of the economy generally that had never been anticipated. Governments responded to those demands, the people responded to those who responded to their demands, and the vicious circle was compounded.

The New Democratic Party has attributed all kinds of woes to the Conservatives and the Liberals. That is awfully easy to do because the New Democratic Party has never had the responsibility of administering anything. When it does take office in other jurisdictions it is clear that sooner or later it has to face the realities of economic life. There have been some drastic roll-backs of benefits in the western European democracies which have had socialist Governments. The proposal here is not to roll back benefits, but rather, as part of a bigger package, to transfer resources to needier families. This whole package has that objective and effect. To move away occasionally from the principle of full indexation is nothing new. No Party has a monopoly on virtue in that regard. I cite the examples of 1976 and 1978 and the six and five program in 1983-84.

The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) referred to some seven, eight, and nine-year projections and predicted calamity for our nation if we proceeded along what was called an anti-family course. We are here proposing to change the structure of these benefits over a three-year period. To assume that that would go on to infinity is ridiculous. I suggest that Members opposite would contribute more to this debate if they occasionally made some constructive suggestions. I believe that among the salient achievements of this Government to date is that we are grapsing the nettle. We are taking the initiative and making hard choices for Canada, which is what Canadian people are looking for. I suggest that members of the Liberal Party and those of the New Democratic Party would benefit greatly from reading some of the wisdom contained in the report of the Macdonald Royal Commission. That commission, appointed by the previous Government, took a fresh look at some programs and has suggested constructive alternatives.

The proposals before us in Bill C-70 relate to the whole package of child and elderly benefits. Family allowances will be increased in future years by the annual increase in the Consumer Price Index in excess of 3 percentage points. That measure takes effect on January 1, 1986. The current value of family allowances is $31.27 per child per month. The child tax credit, which will be payable in the spring of 1987, will be increased by $70 per child from $384 to $454. The income threshold above which the child tax credit is phased out as income rises, currently frozen at $26,330, will be set at $23,500 and will be increased in future years by the annual increase in the CPI in excess of 3 percentage points. So it goes into taxation years 1987, 1988, and 1989. The whole principle is to give the opportunity to needier families to benefit more greatly from these well-placed and, hopefully, well-financed social programs. However, the programs cannot be well financed if we continue along the reckless binge of spending that was initiated by the previous administration.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to take part in this debate. I would like to begin by asking why it is that Governments that get themselves into financial difficulty look to the children of this country as the target for reduction in expenditures. It is striking that this has not only happened with this Government, but has characterized Governments that have got themselves into financial difficulty for 15 years in this country.

There are two reasons for this focus. One is a sense of misunderstanding with respect to what is being accomplished by the Family Allowances Program. People in the context of this House talk about family allowances in terms that demonstrate a lack of understanding about the transfer process that is taking place through the family allowance system. They talk about it as a transfer system from rich to poor, which, of course, it was never designed to be. It was, instead, designed to be a transfer system from those families and individuals without the responsibility for children to those families which have that responsibility. In that sense, to examine and evaluate the program effectively you must look at the significance of the costs of raising children for all categories of families in our society. I think that any Member of the House of Commons who has children would recognize that the costs are significant from a financial viewpoint, but also in terms of the sacrifice of time and the commitment of energy, the process of giving of oneself to the future of your children.

I think that family allowance represents a minor attempt—we must recognize that it is minor—to balance out within our society the burden of taking on the responsibility of the next generation of Canadians. I believe it is a transfer that is badly misunderstood and the reason Governments pick out the family allowance and view it as a magnificent target when looking for ways to achieve economy.

I also believe that the second factor that explains making this the target is the sense of lack of consultation in the real sense and the lack of caring in a sensitive way that characterizes Governments with respect to the future problems of many families in our society.

With respect to the consultation process, although the Government has made an effort to talk with a great many groups about its plans for the future, that talk has not constituted a capacity to listen. Otherwise, how can it be that, at the end of the consultation process, we find that major groups that speak for people who receive the family allowance, who speak in the area of social policy in this country, find themselves completely opposed to what the Government is doing?

For instance, it has already been stated for the record that the Canadian Council on Social Development has opposed this deindexation; the National Council on Welfare has opposed this deindexation; and the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women has opposed this deindexation. The Government will have to realize that it is creating a tremendous sense of cynicism about its own commitment to consult.

I believe that its commitment is quite well intentioned and it started out attempting to reach many groups across the country. I see one of the Ministers on the front benches who has, frankly, taken a lead in that consultation process. I know that she is a Minister who has listened—not enough with respect to certain issues such as unemployment insurance changes—and has taken the process seriously. I hope that she will be able to reach the other Ministers in the Government and persuade them to take the commitment to real consultation as seriously. I believe it represented an interesting new initiative on the part of the Government. Initiatives are only as good as the degree to which they are carried through.

With respect to family allowances, however, all six organizations that are part of the social policy reform group have recognized that consultation as a sham. It is a sham because at no point in that process of consultation did any one of these groups concerned with social policy and the social welfare of families and children in this country, or indeed any other group representing women, children or people interested in the social policy in the country, suggest to the Government that it should effectively cut the value of family allowances by 3 per cent year.

My colleague, the Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) was a member of that committee. She sat and listened to the representations made throughout that set of hearings and she certainly heard no one come before that committee to recommend a real cut-back of 3 per cent in the value of the family allowance. That is because family allowance is a critically important ingredient in the household budget of very many families across the country. These include families led by mothers in single parent situations and families characterized by low incomes. The amount of money received from family allowance is crucial to make ends meet within family budgets.

Therefore, I finish my contribution to this crucial debate with a plea to the Government. First, it is a plea to take its consultation process seriously in the future, unlike this case, and second, to request that it look at what family allowances are actually doing—transfering income from the childless to those who bear the responsibility for the future generations in this country. I ask that the Government cease this attack on the children of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to speak in this debate on family allowance. First of all, I must say I am somewhat surprised at seeing the Opposition trying to delay the passage of this legislation. I get the impression it has forgotten that from 1974 to 1984, it promoted measures to cut back social programs by 50 per cent. In 1976, the same Opposition extended indexation for one year. In 1978, that same Opposition brought about cutbacks in family allowances from $25 to $20 per month per child, it reduced and finally eliminated the $50 per child tax reduction then in effect and reduced the exemption for children of 16 and 17, and finally, in 1982, that same Opposition capped indexation of family allowances at 6 and 5 per cent respectively, for 1983-84.

Their attitude is therefore surprising, to say the least, and one wonders why they now want to postpone the passage of this measure for six months. Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is to give them another chance, as the demagogues they are, to alarm Canadians without telling the whole story, to make people panic and to prolong the debate and waste the time of the House for no good reason. I would therefore ask the Opposition to be a little less partisan and a little more supportive of the legislative process.

To achieve social justice, this Government wants to realign assistance programs for families with children, the emphasis being on the neediest families. We could always help more, we could always cut back more. When the Opposition was in power, although its avowed purpose was to redistribute the wealth of this country, it was actually redistributing its debts. In so doing, it has now put us in a position where we owe $200 billion. This year, the deficit will be more than $35 billion, and we must consider that our measures must help the neediest families and they must also have an economic impact. That is why we are proposing this Bill.

The Opposition should realize that the best way to help our families is not by giving the money borrowed by a Government that is getting deeper and deeper into debt. The best way to help Canadian families is to reduce unemployment and give jobs to the mothers and fathers of those families.

Some 300,000 new jobs have been created over the past year. That is a positive accomplishment which is the result of our administration. The reduction in interest rates is also contributing to our job creation efforts by encouraging new investments. This is the way to help Canadian families.

Our various Ministers have indicated clearly that they were there to help Canadian families through economy-oriented measures.

The Wilson budget mentioned for instance the loans to small businesses and partnerships which will also help promote small businesses.

There have been changes proposed to the use of RRSPs. These changes are likely to have a major impact on the development of small and medium-size businesses, because the self-administered REERs had been previously directed towards national trusts companies and, through them, channelled to every large multinational or national entities, with the result that the capital and the investor were miles apart, Thanks to the Wilson budget, they will be brought closer together, so that larger amounts of capital will be made available to small and medium-size businesses within our respective communities.

That is the way our Government is planning to help Canadian families much more than by increasing by a few dollars the family allowances. In other words, we are not going to give them a fish, but we are going to teach our businessmen and families how to fish.

There are in Canada 750,000 small and medium-size businesses. If each and everyone of them were to create two jobs because of our incentives, there would hardly remain any unemployed people in this country.

I have been talking about the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who put forward proposals, and now I will mention the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) who discovered that his department under the previous Liberal administration had been storing up without using them tremendous data concerning the various registered rights and patents. He is considering marketing those data, giving Canadian men and women and entrepeneurs access to existing patents so they could be made viable and marketed. This is another initiative that will now help create jobs, that will help businesses and, by the same token, Canadian families.

We have seen the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) making money directly available, under Investment Canada and the new Small Business Loans Act, through credit unions, banks and caisses populaires, rather than through bureaucratic laboratories.

Also, rather than asking foreign entrepreneurs to consider investing in Canada as a burden, we opened the door to them, and we now tell them: Come and invest in Canada. Those also are concrete steps.

And you have more of them. I see in front of me the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. MacDonald). She handles a $1.8 billion budget and I would ask Opposition Members to please read her programs for promoting employment. I would ask them to pay special attention to how she is communicating with Canadian men and women, asking them for employment development proposals and offering them Government support, both financial and technical. In addition, we are not merely creating, as was done before, jobs that will simply postpone the payment of unemployment benefits, having them alternate between a short 20-week work period and 20 weeks of UI benefits. Quite the opposite, she is providing Canadians with opportunities to exercise their entrepreneurship. This is what we said during the elections, and this is what we are doing.

Those are initiatives involving a few Ministers, Mr. Speaker, which are much more significant, and Liberal members in particular should be wary of deferring the legislative process in order to score political points. Let us do our job and acknowledge the fine results all our Ministers are getting. This is what I had to say, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to take part in this debate, I would like to remind all Members of this House that the major part of the social policies of this nation has been Liberal legislation over the years. The Liberal Party of Canada laid the foundation for the young, the old and the unemployed in Canada.

Mr. Towers: You forgot about John Diefenbaker.

Mr. Hopkins: The Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) has maintained throughout that the reduction of the deficit will not be done on the backs of the poor, the unemployed and the disadvantaged.

There is one thing I want to put on the record today. In the House of Commons Debates for December 20, 1984, at page 1401 of Hansard, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), the associate finance critic, asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney):

> Could the Prime Minister inform the House whether it is his Government's policy, or whether his Government intends, to reduce gradually over the years the tax exemption for families with children?
> RIGHT HON. BRIAN MULRONEY (PRIME MINISTER): No, Mr. Speaker. That is not what the Government intends to do.

Here for several days in this House we have been debating a Bill brought in by the present Prime Minister's Government which does that very thing.

In speaking a few moments ago, I noticed that the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) said he wished the opposition Parties would bring forth something constructive in this debate. Let me say to him through you, Mr. Speaker, that if there is anything constructive we have to offer in this debate, it is for the Member to tell his own Prime Minister and his own Cabinet that when they make statements, they should either back them up or they should not make them in the first place.

This Government's biggest weakness, and it will be the Government's biggest weakness in the future, is its total lack of credibility. You cannot trust what the Government says it is going to do. If you take for granted what the Government says it is going to do and then take the opposite stance, you will probably know precisely what the Government is going to do.

The child tax exemption and other that exemptions brought in via the May 1985 Budget are affecting children and low income families. That is the reason for this wide-ranging debate. Many other items are increasing local taxes creating an added burden on low-income people. Other services are being withdrawn by this Government. These were not paid by low-income people before but they now face those charges. Tax exemptions for families with children will be reduced gradually over time.

This Government told the senior citizens exemptions would be reduced gradually over time. The Government told senior citizens that it was going to forget about the first 3 per cent of inflation and only pay senior citizens on the increase of inflation above that amount. That policy brought forth a new pressure group called "grey power". This new pressure group, "grey power", won its case and deserves full marks for doing so. Exemptions will be reduced gradually over time—$710 per child by 1986, $560 per child by 1987 and $470 per child by 1988. It does not stop there. The family allowance will be deindexed from 1986 and the child tax credit will be deindexed from 1989 onward. The deindexation of personal income tax exemptions will push lower and middle-income Canadians into higher tax brackets. There is no question about that. Not only are low-income families losing indexation of the child tax credit, they are also being pushed into higher tax brackets. They are getting a double whammy.

Federal sales tax has been increased, which will hit the same families. Low-income families making less than $15,000 per year will lose more than $1,800 due to all these measures. Meanwhile, high-income families have been given various advantages.

A startling revelation is that advantages given to the rich will cost the Government more than the savings realized from changes in the child tax credit and in the child tax exemption. In other words, the money saved from the changes and reductions in the child tax credit and in the child tax exemption will go right across the board to the wealthy. That is what the Government calls progress.

The Government talks about new and innovative policies, but it has removed funds for security services at small airports. Who will pay the bill? Of course it will be local taxpayers. In areas where local airports are not owned by municipalities, the Government wants to sell them to the municipalities. That will be a burden upon local people in those areas. What about CMHC? CMHC has done a pretty good job over the years in terms of building houses for low-income families. What is the Government doing? It is removing the regional offices from various areas in Canada. I lost a CMHC office in my constituency.

An Hon. Member: Good.

Mr. Hopkins: I hear the Hon. Member saying "Good". I want all people in the Ottawa Valley to know that there is a Conservative Member over there who thinks that was a great idea. We will remember that.

People in large rural areas could come into those CMHC offices to sit down and talk. Those managers go with low-income people to see bank managers and real estate agents. These people do not always have an understanding of such dealings. What will they do now? There will only be a long distance system to Ottawa or an impersonal effort.

I see you signalling, Mr. Speaker. In conclusion, the Government promised that it would do all kinds of wonderful things for the Canadian farm community; it was promised the world. Today, hog producers and many other farmers are facing serious conditions.

Mr. Dick: We are talking about family allowances.

Mr. Hopkins: The Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) is becoming a bit upset. I tell him to tell his Prime Minister to start backing up some of his promises.

Mr. Dick: We are talking about family allowances, not about hogs.

Mr. Hopkins: Does the Hon. Member think that hog producers and people who live on farms do not raise children? They are in serious circumstances. The Conservative Government promised them all kinds of income. It is even importing more meat into the country at a time when our red meat industry is in serious trouble. That is the new Tory approach.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member is usually an honest Member in what he says. There is an element of truth in what he is saying, but last year the Liberals allowed 50 million pounds of imported beef from Ireland into the country. He says that it was our administration. He is entirely misleading the House—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised by that. The other day, when I delivered a speech and used factual information, as I am doing today, the Hon. Member sent a note across the floor saying: "And you are a Rotarian; don't you believe in the four-way test?" I say to him that one of those four-way tests is: Is it fair to all concerned? I ask him and I ask the Prime Minister of Canada: Is it fair to all concerned that although the Government had promised not to deindex family allowances or the tax system as it affects children, now it is going ahead with it? Is that fair to all concerned? He had better start talking to his Leader.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act. I should like to refer to a few historical facts arising from the time of the previous administration. I hope the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) listens. At the time of the six and five program, that Member voted for a reduction in the increases to the child allowance system of $1.97; not the 94 cents proposed by this Bill if inflation continues at 4 per cent. I remind the Hon. Member that he voted for that in the past. I think also he was a Member of the House back in 1976. At that time inflation was running at 11.2 per cent, and the child allowances were frozen at $22.08. That resulted in cost of living minus 11.2 per cent, not cost of living minus 3 per cent as proposed in this Bill.

I also remind the Hon. Member that he should be truthful to all of us and to his constituents. He should remind them of all the facts and remember what he did, as part of his Government, back in 1976. Also in 1976, there was no offset increase in child benefits as proposed in our Budget. If Canadians had had full indexation under the previous Liberal Government since 1976, and starting with a child allowance of $22.08 at that time, the child allowance today would be $51.83, not the $31.27 it is now. I remind the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke that his Government did that, not this Government. He prided himself on being a member of the Liberal Government which brought in social programs. I remind him that if the child allowance were fully indexed today, that allowance would not have been reduced from $51.83 to $31.27, a reduction of some $22. I remind him of that, and it was done without any offsetting benefit to the child tax credit. May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE TOLLS

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, as if things were not going badly enough for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the less than influent Conservative Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) has just delivered an ultimatum to him. Sure thing, we learned through The Gazette of September 25 that the Member for La Prairie is threatening not to run again in the next election if the Prime Minister does not abolish tolls on the Champlain bridge.

Mr. Boudria: Now that would be a catastrophy!

Mr. Rossi: The Hon. Member for La Prairie—who would be better off if he did not make waves and who claims he got elected on his own rather than by riding on the Prime Minister's coattails—just might upset our election plans, Mr. Speaker.

That is why I plead with the Prime Minister to fight his enduring urge to look for a better representative in La Prairie and abolish tolls on the Champlain bridge, for what we fear, Mr. Speaker, is that the current incumbent just might decide not to run again.

PLANNED PARENTHOOD WEEK

LEVEL OF ORGANIZATION'S FUNDING

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, today is the first day of Planned Parenthood Week, an annual public education program of the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada. The theme of this year's program is "Kids Need to Know".

As part of the week's kickoff, the Federation released the results of a Gallup poll which for the first time surveyed 15 to 20-year-olds. It indicated that only one-third of teenagers rely on their parents as the primary source of information on sexuality.

Other important sources of information for young people are their peers and school, yet only half of the schools in Canada have sex education programs. Young people have no one reliable source for this information.

The tragically high rate of unplanned teenage pregnancies and the unfortunate number of abortions which partially result from the lack of sex education are totally unnecessary.

The Conservative Government has followed the pattern established by its Liberal predecessor in cutting funding to Planned Parenthood. This year funding from Health and Welfare was cut by 12.5 per cent. I call on the Government to face up to its responsibilities and restore funding to Planned Parenthood to a more realistic level.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RURAL ROUTE CARRIERS—CALL FOR BETTER COMPENSATION

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, Members of Parliament who represent rural constituencies appreciate the dedication and service provided by the country cousins of urban mail carriers. Rural route couriers give their utmost, in many instances at great personal sacrifice, to the rural areas they serve.

It is only fair that these dedicated people be appropriately compensated by Canada Post for this vital service to rural Canadians and for all their expenses which relate to mileage, density of the rural routes, preparation and sortation hours worked. For too long this service has been carried out at great personal cost.

While Canada Post has dramatically increased the rates for change of address and temporary redirection services, not to mention the cost of postage stamps, the rural route couriers continue to be underpaid. It is time that they received recognition for their services and economic parity with their urban counterparts.

I urge all Members of Parliament to support the Association of Rural Route Mail Couriers of Canada in their attempt to improve their conditions of employment with Canada Post.

SOCIAL SERVICES

NEED FOR AFFORDABLE CHILD CARE SERVICES

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, the need for affordable and accessible child care services is growing in Canada as more and more women enter the labour force. Yet, as Judge Abella noted in her report on equality in employment, Canada lags far behind western nations in its provisions for child care services.

It is time to put child care at the top of our social services agenda. The federal Government needs to continue to work closely with provincial and local Governments, community agencies, and the private sector to help develop new and creative child care services.

A very innovative and worth-while project is under-way in Scarborough to introduce private businesses to child care ideas. With the help of a federal grant, the Human Services Organization of Scarborough is holding a series of seminars throughout the city to help interested businesses establish affordable, on-site child care centres.

I applaud the efforts of the Human Services Organization of Scarborough and encourage the Government to continue to fund projects like this, since child care is an investment in Canada's future.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ANNOUNCED EMPLOYEE LAY-OFFS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, last summer during the election campaign, or in the summer of 1984, we heard a number of promises, including a promise by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to recognize and respond to the special needs of Atlantic Canada for better transportation to strengthen the economic base of the entire area and to provide jobs with the transportation sector.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, what we have seen is a Government that has allowed Canadian National to do the exact opposite. It has recently announced its intention to lay off indefinitely more than 1,300 workers across the country, as well as to freeze hiring and reduce management and non-union work force. This pronouncement was made after the CN already reduced its staff complement by 1,350 workers since January.

Where are these jobs going to be lost? In Atlantic Canada, Moncton, 185 shop jobs; Montreal, 262 jobs. Where are the promises of the Prime Minister? Where are the promises of the Government to protect jobs in transportation? This Prime Minister and this Government did not believe the promises when they spoke them, and the Canadian people will make sure they realize that in the next election.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—SUPPORT FOR FULL INDEXATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Last Friday the Ottawa Council for Low-Income Support Services demonstrated on the Hill on behalf of all mothers across Canada to oppose deindexing of family allowances. They said: "The twentieth of the month is baby bonus day. That's the day the cheque arrives, the little bit of money, that is for you, for running shoes, hairdo money or new jeans. For some of us it is the money that will pay for an extra few days of food or keep the phone from being cut off. Thirty-one dollars and twenty seven cents is not a princely sum. If we are lucky it will keep us in Kraft dinners.

The mothers and children of this country are a resource. We are the future. If we are going to be a strong future we need strong children. Strong women and children need good food and warm clothes. Not much to ask for in a country as wealthy as ours.

I am tired of the suggestion that we don't really need the baby bonus. I'm tired of it being our money they want to cut off every time there is an economy drive. I'm tired of having to prove mothers and children are worth spending money on. I'm tired of hearing how good we've got it.

Do soup kitchens and snowsuit funds show how lucky we are? Millions of women and children in poverty in this country are not having it good. These are the people who will not see their money pegged to rises in the cost of living if this Government has its way.

So we are shouting 'Raise the baby bonus or lower the cost of living. Hands off the family allowance'."

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

THE ECONOMY

REDUCTION IN INTEREST RATES—INCREASE IN EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, as you well know, during the last election compaign the main issues were the economy and jobs. Prior to that Canadians had suffered through three years of record high interest rates, bankruptcies, inflation, and unemployment. This month marks the Government's first anniversary in office so it is a good time to review just what has happened to the economy during this past year—the first year of a Progressive Conservative Government.

To begin with, interest rates are down. The Bank of Canada rate, the prime bank rate, and mortgage rates have all fallen by approximately 3 per cent. We now have the lowest borrowing costs in seven years.

• (1410)

The bankruptcy rate has also fallen. Business, individual and farm bankruptcies are down by 12 per cent. Inflation has held steady and during the past year we have experienced the greatest price stability since 1971.

Most important of all, employment is up—up by almost 300,000 jobs which have been created since the last election.

These facts speak for themselves. They may not be news, but they certainly are reality. They demonstrate that the Government has established a climate which has allowed our economy and our country to start growing again.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85 PROGRAM—INCREASED STUDENT EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), private business throughout the country, and provincial Governments for their roles in what has turned out to be an exceedingly successful summer job program—Challenge '85.

In my constituency of Edmonton South 386 jobs were created from the 171 projects funded under Challenge '85. Some $956,000 was spent to employ students in Edmonton South.

The Challenge '85 package of programs is a comprehensive plan designed to provide career-related summer employment for people moving through the educational system. The success of this program cannot be underestimated. Throughout Canada, students and employers applauded the program. Students found it easier to obtain work related to their studies through the student employment offices. Employers found the program to be an excellent way to hire younger talent eager to work for them. This was the first time that Provinces collaborated with the Government in a job strategy for students.

The program resulted in a much improved employment picture in 1985 over 1984. Throughout Canada we created 14,000 more jobs for students than last year. A total of 100,020 jobs were created this summer. This success was reflected in the youth unemployment rate which fell from 18.3 per cent in August of 1984 to 15.9 per cent in August of 1985.

The Government has proven its commitment to students and youth through Challenge—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

COMMUNICATIONS

GOVERNMENT OPINION POLL TAKING

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Government is proposing to centralize public opinion polls in the country. Not content with handing out public opinion poll contracts as patronage plums, as the Government has been doing since last September, it now wants to centralize the results of such polls in the Prime Minister's office. This system will fit in well with the new scheme of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to control information, control the power, and share the blame with everyone else.

Canadians are wondering will the provisions of the contract for this new polling system guarantee access to information for all people. Will the results be made public? What safeguards do we have that the Conservative headquarters will not merely use those polls to their own benefit thereby having polls subsidized by the taxpayers of Canada?

This is a new Pravda Canada scheme by the Conservative Government. It ought not to be implemented. It should be withdrawn immediately.

LAW ENFORCEMENT

MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR SLAIN OFFICERS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege on Sunday, September 29, to participate in the eighth annual memorial service for police and correctional officers who have given their lives in the service of our country. The names of nine officers who lost their lives since last year's memorial service were added to the Honour Roll in the Memorial Book which is located in a room in the East Block of the Parliament Buildings.

We were reminded by Dr. Allen Churchill, Prostestant Chaplin of the RCMP, that the job of our peace officers, as they are commonly called, to maintain law, order and peace in our society, is not only their responsibility but one that we all must share.

The cities within our national capital region of Hull, Aylmer, Gatineau, Ottawa, Gloucester, Vanier, Nepean and Kanata—indeed all cities and towns across Canada—are continually patrolled and protected by our well trained and dedicated police officers. Our prisons are protected by correctional officers.

As we pursue peace in a troubled world, we should never forget the officers who gave their lives so that our families, our friends, our homes and our businesses can continue to remain safe and sound.

BANKS AND BANKING

LIQUIDATION OF BANK

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): This morning we heard the news that a liquidator has been appointed for a second Canadian bank. I would have liked to direct my question to the Prime Minister but in his absence, I shall direct it to the Minister of Finance.

Could the Minister of Finance give the House the assurance that the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs will meet as soon as possible to examine the circumstances that led to the second bank failure in just a few months?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will be aware of the fact that there was an announcement today with respect to the establishment of a commission of inquiry. Because members of the Opposition have not been prepared to proceed with the matter, and because they have stonewalled this matter in terms of proceeding—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —and for other good and legitimate reasons, the committee will not be proceeding to consideration of the matter in light of the fact that the commission is now in place.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader knows perfectly well that he could have called the motion on the Order Paper several days ago. I do not think he should blame the Opposition!

REASONS FOR SIMULTANEOUS DEMANDS FOR LIQUIDATION OF NORTHLAND BANK AND CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): My supplementary is also for the Minister of Finance. I would like to ask him, regarding the Northland Bank affair, why he and his colleague, the Minister of State (Finance), decided to put the Northland Bank and the CCB in the same bag by putting them both under curatorship in the statement made in the Commons at the beginning of September.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Minister of State for Finance and I have been concerned about this matter for a number of weeks. We have carefully watched the development of this debate in the House and in the media. It was felt that we should establish a commission of inquiry to get to the heart of some very complex issues, in a dispassionate and objective way.

In answer to the Hon. Member's question with respect to the establishment of two separate commissions, we believe there are certain common problems between the two matters which should be dealt with by one commissioner. That same commissioner can deal with the individual, specific items relating to each bank. Because there are some common problems we think it would be helpful to have them considered by one commission of inquiry.

GOVERNMENT DECISION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Minister of Finance understood my question. I asked the Minister why, on September 2, when the Government announced the appointment of a curator to the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank and asked for liquidation of both banks the Minister of Finance decided to put the two banks in the same basked requesting liquidation of the Northland Bank at the same time as he was going to ask for liquidation of the CCB.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure I understand the thrust of the Hon. Member's question.

On September 2 we appointed curators to both banks. We had one bank put into immediate liquidation, that is, the Canadian Commercial Bank. However, because there was a sense on the part of management that there was a chance that they could find a partner for restructuring to save the Northland Bank we felt it was in the interests of the bank, as well as the country, to give them the opportunity to seek out a partner to save the bank. That has not been possible. Thus, today, we have moved to appoint a liquidator for the two banks.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I understand the very delicate position in which the Minister of Finance finds himself today with respect to the liquidation of a second bank in Canada. Because of the difficult situation which exists at this time, can the Minister assure the House that from now on he will take all his responsibilities as Minister of Finance seriously and that he will handle this case himself so that the people of the country know that it is a major problem which faces the Government and not something to be delegated to a junior Minister?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me be quite precise on this point. The Minister of State for Finance has been delegated these responsibilities by me. At no time have we had any differences. Every move we have made has been fully discussed and has had my full involvement with respect to the decisions taken. I take those responsibilities very seriously and I will continue to do so. I caution the Hon. Member that he should not try to put any differences between the Minister of State for Finance and myself.

• (1420)

MINISTERIAL CONTROL

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I am not trying to show a difference between the two. I have been in that position. I know how the market looks at the Government in a situation like that. I know that the Minister is facing a terrible and difficult time now. But one thing I am urging him to do, to help him, is to make sure now that the Canadian people will know that we have a Minister of Finance who is in charge, and who is in charge 24 hours a day, so that we will not see again a repetition of the disaster which has come to Canada.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me assure the Hon. Member and my colleagues in this House, as well as Canadians who are watching, that the Minister of Finance is in charge. The Minister of Finance is watching very closely over the things which are happening today and which have been developing over this last six months in relation to these banks. And the Minister will continue to take those responsibilities very seriously.

COMMISSION'S POWERS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Government House Leader. Will the Government empower the Commission which was established today, by special legislation, if necessary, to tell Canadians who the uninsured depositors are who will receive compensation, and who are the depositors who may have bailed out early on the basis of insider information and, perhaps, contributed to this failure?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think if the Hon. Member reads the terms of reference very carefully, he will see that the Commissioner has a wide scope to study all aspects of this particular matter so that those things which the Hon. Member has put before the House to date will be taken into account by the Commissioner.

I should remind the Hon. Member, however, as my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, has said on a number of occasions, there is a legal impediment to us being able to do that. I am sure the Commissioner will take that legal impediment into account.

UNINSURED DEPOSITORS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, as my supplementary question I want to ask the Minister if he will agree that no uninsured depositors will be paid by the Government, and that its legislation on that subject will not be pushed through this House until the Commission has made its report public and has dealt with those questions?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have asked the Commissioner to make his report available "as soon as possible". Those are the words which are in the Order in Council appointing the Commissioner. But I should remind the Hon. Member that there are people who are in need of those funds. They rely on those funds for the running of businesses, their farms, and for personal expenses. That, I should say, has got to be kept uppermost in our minds in order to make sure we do not disrupt the financial markets by long delays.

I encourage the Hon. Member, and his colleagues, to deal expeditiously with this Bill when it is brought forward by my colleague.

COMMISSIONER'S TERMS OF REFERENCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Given the fact that the people of Canada want Mr. Justice Estey to have all of the power and authority to get to the bottom of the Government's $1 billion fiasco with these two banks, will the Minister assure the House that Mr. Justice Estey, in the terms of reference he has been given, will be instructed to get all the information he needs, including a list of the depositors?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Commission of Inquiry, and the Commissioner, have been appointed. The terms of reference have been made public. It is the intention of the Government to co-operate in every way possible with the conduct of that inquiry in order to ensure its complete examination in a non-partisan way of all of the circumstances to which it has been referred, and just as quickly as possible, including, I might add, some of the statements which have been made by the Leader of the Opposition himself, and others in the House of Commons, where it has been suggested that perhaps their neck is out a mile, if not a more vulnerable part of their anatomy.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, all of that and a dollar may get you a cup of coffee, but it did not answer the question.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): We on this side of the House want to get to the bottom of this fiasco and we do not want a judge to be given the kind of mandate which is going to allow him to look into a certain question but to avoid dealing with certain questions if he does not want to. That is what we want to know. We want the Government to assure us that the Commissioner will be looking at the right questions.

The Deputy Prime Minister is apparently going to be answering, so I will ask him if the question of ministerial responsibility will be looked at. The president of the Northland Bank said about 10 days ago that the Government was, to put it mildly, ignoring its responsibility in helping the restructuring of Northland. Will the inquiry deal with the important question of ministerial responsibility in this $1 billion fiasco?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it would be of no purpose to take up the time of the House in reading into the record the precise terms of reference—

Mr. Waddell: Say yes or no.

Mr. Nielsen: —which have been made public in the appointment of the Commission of Inquiry. I am sure that knowing the high regard in which both professionally, and as an individual, Canadians hold Mr. Justice Estey, they will have confidence he will make the fullest and broadest possible inquiry into every aspect of the matter in keeping with his terms of reference.

With respect to the question of ministerial responsibility, at 3 p.m. the Minister of State for Finance will be making a statement and, among other things, that will be a matter which will be refered to. But in the meantime, I would once again refer the Hon. Member to the terms of reference where he will see at once that the fullest possible inquiry has been mandated—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

COMMISSION'S REPORTING DATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister has indicated, the terms of reference have been released. I have seen them. They are very general. They do not instruct Mr. Justice Estey to look at certain specific questions and, if the Government wanted to get to the bottom of this, it ought to have made those instructions very clear.

Considering the Government was prepared to have a Committee of the House look into this fiasco and report back by November 30, will the Government assure us that the report which is to be done by this Commission will be back before the House of Commons, more important before the people of Canada, by November 30?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Again, Mr. Speaker, I refer the Hon. Member to the terms of reference. Mr. Justice Estey has been asked to report back as soon as possible so as not to impede the fullest and broadest possible inquiry which he has been mandated to conduct. No limitation has been placed on that. If a limitation had been placed, the first criticism we would receive is that we are lowering the guillotine on Mr. Justice Estey's inquiry.

I am sure that, given the calibre of the commissioner who has been appointed, we will see that report done in the most thorough and timely fashion. Certainly that is the hope of the Government. And the Hon. Member would have noted that, as soon as that report does come back, it is to be made public immediately, subject to any conditions which Chief Justice Estey might believe are necessary.

BANKS AND BANKING

FAILURE OF CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK AND NORTHLAND BANK—COST TO TAXPAYERS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

It had been estimated that losses incurred as a result of the Canadian Commercial Bank collapse will cost taxpayers anywhere from $600 million to $1 billion, thanks to the mistakes of the Government.

Can the Minister estimate the total cost of his decision to liquidate the Northland Bank? How much will it cost each taxpayer—$60, $70 or $80? How much will this bankruptcy cost?

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as has been indicated, my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, will be making a statement later on this afternoon and I would think some of the questions the Hon. Member has posed will be the subject of that statement.

REQUEST THAT POWERS OF INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS BE INCREASED

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Here is my supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister would rather not make a guess even though some estimates have already been made public.

Can the Minister tell us what the Government has done since March to widen and beef up the administrative powers of the Inspector General of Banks and to monitor this country's banking institutions? We do have 60-odd banks in Canada. Have the powers of the Inspector General of Banks been strengthened, considering the restricted authority which the incumbent has had for a long time under the Liberals and now under the Conservatives?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member rightly points out that over the years there has not been a proper amount of attention given to regulation. My colleague, the Minister of State, from the minute she got into office, started taking steps to strengthen the regulatory process in Canada. That is a continuing objective of our Government. On September 2, with the announcement of the appointment of curators for the two banks, she announced specific measures to strengthen the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation's powers of inspection. I should also inform the Hon. Member that steps have been under way for a while now to add to the staff of the Inspector General's office, and that goes back to the middle of the summer.

COMMISSION'S TERMS OF REFERENCE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In the Prime Minister's statement announcing the appointment of the Estey Commission the Prime Minister says in part:

Mr. Justice Estey will examine all circumstances and factors ... including regulatory and administrative action taken by the Government of Canada with respect to these institutions.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain why the actual terms of reference in the Order in Council setting up the Commission authorize the Commissioner to look into and report on the state of affairs surrounding the cessation of operations of the two banks only with respect to the regulatory action taken by the Government of Canada and its agencies? The word "administrative" appears nowhere in that connection.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if we are going to get into a reading of the specific terms of the Order in Council, it says:

—to inquire into and report on the state of affairs surrounding the cessation of operations of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank—

Those are very broad terms of reference which provide the Commissioner with tremendous scope to explore any elements of the situation which he feels are appropriate. Then there are some specific references, as the Hon. Member has said, but:

—if the Commissioner concludes that the circumstances so require, to recommend any changes in the regulatory and administrative control of the banking industry—

These terms of reference refer specifically to administrative control.

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my supplementary question to the Government House Leader because the Minister of Finance should go back and read the terms of reference again.

The Government House Leader said that the Royal Commission was appointed because the Opposition was not prepared to proceed with the matter, and for further good and sufficient reasons. Is it not a fact, as widely reported in the press over the weekend, that both I, as Opposition House Leader, and the NDP House Leader, stated publicly on Friday that we were quite prepared to have this matter go to a parliamentary committee?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): And is it not curious that only after we confirmed our willingness to have this go to committee the Government suddenly decided to have this hidden in a Royal Commission?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Wiggle and run, Herb.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Isn't that curious?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have always considered it to be part of my negotiations with the Hon. Member that we would not negotiate outside of House Leaders' meetings. I am interested to see that at long last the Opposition is now ready to give consideration to the parliamentary committee, but the Hon. Member will be the first to admit that there were a number of items, which we had put forward right at the beginning of this whole process when I laid down the terms of reference, which would have provided for an open and thorough examination by parliamentarians but the Opposition refused to go along with it because they were interested only in cheap political points, not in getting to the bottom of a very serious matter for Canadians.

FISHERIES

DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Fisheries. He will know and I hope confirm for this House that orders have gone out within the Department of Fisheries that no one is to speak to the former Minister of Fisheries. No one is to speak to the political staff of the former Minister of Fisheries who are still working. No one is to return calls to the Premier of Nova Scotia.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skelly: The Premier of New Brunswick.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): They are all the same to the NDP.

Mr. Skelly: Is it the Government's intention to root out and get rid of officials in the Department who, it believes, are responsible for the present scandal which affected the Government? Or is it in order to get the heat off the Prime Minister's Office?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge the entire preamble of the Hon. Member's question is totally unfounded, and the inferences contained in the question itself are totally unworthy of him.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING MINISTER

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the basic facts contained within the case are there. The morale in the Department is in serious condition. I wonder whether the Minister might be prepared to stand up in this House and admit that the reason he was appointed Acting Minister of Fisheries was to conduct a reign of terror in that Department?

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): My only response, Sir, can be that the Hon. Member brings immediately to mind an analogy between him and the caterpillar discussing with Alice in Alice in Wonderland the meaning of a word or the meaning of a phrase.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CANADIAN URANIUM EXPORTS—REQUEST FOR EMBARGO

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last evening on W5 there was a story on the trade in uranium with the United States. U.S. energy officials were quoted to the effect that Canadian uranium is used in the development of nuclear weapons. This totally contradicts the statements by the Minister in this House last week.

In light of that information will the Minister now take the proper action to ensure that the treaty is lived up to? Will he go so far as to put an embargo on the trade in uranium with the United States until such time as we can put safeguards in place to make sure that very vital treaty is honoured?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have looked at the provisions of the treaty. I have looked at the degree to which they are being honoured. The treaty obligations and the treaty assurances with respect to Canada in relation to the U.S. and other countries are being honoured. I watched the television program with some care last night. I have neither seen nor received any evidence to suggest that the treaty is not being respected. If I may say so, I find it a curious interpretation of responsibility by the Leader of the NDP that he should claim to have such evidence yet will not give it to me.

USE OF URANIUM BY FRENCH AGENCY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that is an unacceptable and disappointing response by the Minister. If there is any abrogation—

An Hon. Member: Absolutely.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I will then put another question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With great respect to the Hon. Member, I cannot hear him until certain other Members allow him to be heard.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, they are all auditioning for The Gong Show.

These reports also include the fact that Canadian uranium is now being used by the French nuclear agency which could have a potential for use in weapons. Has the Canadian Government investigated that possibility and are we also looking into what safeguards are in place to make sure that the French Government, in light of its production of nuclear weaponry, is also not using Canadian uranium for those purposes?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was a Minister of the Crown and it was a Government of his Party, led by a distinguished former Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, who brought this treaty into place. With regard to France, he knows that our arrangements with Euratom ensure that Canada's standards are met with regard to France as they are with others. I ask all Members of the House, if they have any proof that there is any failure to abide by the provisions of Canadian treaties, please bring that evidence to my attention.

Mr. Axworthy: It was in front of your eyes

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I have received none at all to this point, and I invite Members of the House not to make vague accusations and not to indulge in innuendo but, if they have facts, to bring those facts to my attention and I will pursue them.

TELEVISION PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it is with regard to the same issue. He said that he saw the program in question last night. Did he not see the pictures of the barrels of depleted uranium? Did he not hear the American official say that Canadian uranium was being mixed in and was in fact being used to make nuclear bombs? Did he not hear Americans say that there was a piece of Canadian uranium in every American nuclear bomb?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I heard those statements by Mr. Arkin. I have heard the allegation that the Canadian treaty assurances are not being respected. That allegation is false.

Mr. Waddell: I don't know what more evidence the Minister needs.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): There's your proof.

Mr. de Corneille: The Americans would hardly know; after all it's the Americans who are using it.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONDUCT INQUIRY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in order to clear this matter up, is the Minister saying that he has washed his hands of the whole matter, or is he telling the House that he will continue to look into the matter? It is a historic Canadian principle enunciated by Prime Minister Pearson in 1965 that we will use our uranium for peaceful purposes. Therefore, will the Minister look into this matter further, and is he prepared to have an inquiry with respect to the use of—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is three questions.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have explicitly, and now for the third time, asked Members of the House to provide me with any information that they have, and said that I will look into it. So far we have received no evidence at all from CTV, from the NDP, or from anyone else that there has been a violation of treaty.

With regard to commissions, the Hon. Member may well know that there was a Commission of Inquiry appointed by the New Democratic Government of Saskatchewan, the Bayda Commission, which looked into precisely the question that is now being raised, including whether or not there was a danger to proliferation policy. The new Democratic Party commission in Saskatchewan concluded that the treaty provisions that are now in place were adequate. That was the position of Mr. Blakeney in 1978. He has changed his position now, but the facts have not changed.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

AMOUNT OF TRANSFER PAYMENTS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister's decision to cut off $2 billion in transfer payments to the provinces will result in much hardship for students, the elderly, the provinces, and indeed the municipalities. Is the Minister of Finance prepared to table in the House today copies of the impact studies that his Department or other Departments of the Government have done with regard to these cut-backs and how they will affect the individual provinces?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I indicated in the Budget last May that we were going to reduce the rate of growth of the federal-provincial transfers by $2 billion by 1990-1991. That means that instead of going that fast, they are only going to go less fast, and less fast is still pretty fast because there is still going to be a considerable amount of money available to the provinces to be used in the range of programs that are supported by the federal Government. I presented this proposal to the Finance Ministers against the background of the very serious financial position of the federal Government. One thing that came through loud and clear was that the Finance Ministers themselves understand, probably considerably better than the Member opposite, the serious financial position that we are in and, therefore, the need to take this decision.

POSITION OF PROVINCES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Minister of Finance that this measure will substantially reduce the revenues of the provincial Governments, therefore causing extreme havoc for a great number of people. Will the Minister of Finance indicate to the House what remedial measures he will take in his capacity as Minister of Finance to assist those poorer provinces and those poorer municipalities throughout the country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I recognize that it is not easy for any province to see its rate of growth reduced. However, I remind the Hon. Member that the percentage of Government spending in these areas in 1990-91 will be the same as today. The share of the federal Government Budget will be unchanged. By making this announcement today we have given the provinces ample warning and ample opportunity to change the method of delivery of programs by working with the federal Government in order to have the least disruptive transition to this new regime.

DISARMAMENT

NONPROLIFERATION TREATY NEGOTIATIONS—CANADIAN INITIATIVES

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. With the success of the nonproliferation treaty conference behind us and the Geneva summit in front of us, what initiative can the Government take on its own, or with other countries, to move the super powers at Geneva toward definite, clear-cut actions that will lift higher this window of opportunity, specifically the possibility of a comprehensive test ban?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I share with the Hon. Member, and I am sure with all Members of the House, a great deal of satisfaction with the success that was found by all nations in the nonproliferation treaty negotiations in Geneva, particularly because there was some great concern before that conference that no consensus would be found. I think that demonstrates that when all nations are prepared to work toward some agreement, rather than leaving matters exclusively to the super powers, there is an opportunity for progress to be made. We will be continuing the initiatives that Canada has followed in various forums and certainly will be working toward a comprehensive test ban.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CANADIAN EXPORTS OF DEPLETED URANIUM

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is with regard to this very troublesome matter of Canadian depleted uranium being used in the United States for both nuclear and conventional military purposes. Can the Minister now give us the reasons why he is absolutely certain that depleted uranium is not being used for those purposes?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can. The matter was raised both by television reporters and the other day in the House of Commons in a very general way by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. I consequently looked into it. I have informed myself on the principle of fungibility and other arcane matters that are involved in this question. I have learned that there is, in the treaty, a requirement for administrative arrangements to be put into place that deal with the residue as well as with the original uranium. I have learned that those administrative arrangements are in fact in place. I am satisfied, on the basis of the information I now have available, that the treaty is being respected.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What's your proof?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I am asked for proof. The proof is that I have looked for any weakness in the treaty and I have found none. If Hon. Members have any information that that treaty is not being respected, I ask them for the fourth time not to be so secretive. Come forward with your allegations so that we can find out whether they are true or false.

Mr. Axworthy: Do a proper investigation.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TREATY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, apart from the fact that three experts on the matter have said that Canadian depleted uranium is being used, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs assure us that, under the treaty, depleted uranium is dealt with similar to the way in which special uranium is dealt with, or can he tell us that it is dealt with differently and that it is not allowed the proportional treatment that he has been talking about?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State of External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it receives the proportional treatment. There has been no change in this matter in the last 20 years with one exception. As a result of the Royal commission carried out at the instruction of the New Democratic Party Government in Saskatchewan, that Government invested hundreds of millions of dollars of the people of Saskatchewan in the development of the uranium industry and uranium mining in the Province of Saskatchewan.

Ms. Jewett: Answer the question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That now involves some 7,000 Canadian jobs and some leading programs for the training of natives.

Ms. Jewett: That's not answering the question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): My questions to the NDP are: one, will you give me some facts; two, why are you opposed to those 7,000 jobs in Saskatchewan; three, why are you opposed to a training programs for Canadian native people?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Jewett: You are avoiding the question.

Mr. Broadbent: You tried that on fish for a while, too. This sounds like tuna fish all over again.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Phone Allan Blakeney and get a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—GRAPE AND WINE INDUSTRY

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for International Trade. With the Canadian grape and wine industry at the crisis point, mostly because of imports, putting the Niagara fruitlands in jeopardy, what action does the Minister propose to take as he undertakes these negotiations so that the grape and wine industry will not become a loser?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have heard representations from the industry. We are aware of their concerns and they will be taken into consideration in the formulation of our negotiating policy.

BANK CLOSURES—ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Government House Leader. It concerns the decision enunciated today not to have a Commons committee look into the Canadian Commercial Bank collapse.

On Friday, September 27, both the New Democratic Party House Leader, the Opposition House Leader, and the Prime Minister himself, during his press conference which was televised live, indicated to Canadians that they wanted to have a Commons committee investigate the CCB bank failure. What changed in either the House Leader's thinking or the Prime Minister's thinking between Friday morning and this morning to result in the Government's announced intention of scrapping the Commons committee?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there was no change of thinking on our part. The change of thinking was on the part of the Opposition.

Mr. Tobin: The House Leader will know that Canadians saw the Prime Minister indicate that he wanted that committee to work. He said it Friday morning.

APPOINTMENT OF MR. JUSTICE ESTEY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns bargaining in good faith. When did the Government first approach Justice Estey and ask him to undertake this Royal commission, because you were negotiating with two House Leaders until Friday afternoon?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member made reference to "bargain in good faith". "Bargain in good faith" means that there is a sense of confidentiality in House Leaders' meetings where we discuss matters proceeding before the House from time to time. That is my idea of a fair method of negotiation.

I do not negotiate in the media. I have always made a point of respecting the confidentiality of House Leaders opposite and I will continue to do so until it is proven to me that that is not the appropriate way to operate on the basis of actions on the part of the Opposition.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CANADIAN CULTURAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Despite the Prime Minister's promise last week that our cultural identity was not on the table, the United States Ambassador said yesterday: "I would like to see a discussion between the U.S. and Canada . . . of what has come to be known as the cultural area . . . to include broadcasting, book publishing, magazines, cable television, movies, et cetera".

Will the Minister take this opportunity to tell the United States quite explicitly that we will not put Canada's cultural industries on the table and that we will not negotiate these crucial elements of our national independence?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has already made it very clear that Canada's cultural identity is not negotiable. I am proud to repeat that assurance.

Mr. Langdon: Of course, the point is to find out whether cultural identity means cultural industries.

BOOK PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister give a specific commitment, in view of last week's sale of Classic Books and in view of Commerce Secretary Baldridge's recent pressure, that the Government will stick to its Canadian control policy with respect to the book publishing and book distributing industry specifically?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is the Party that brought to Canada the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. This is the Party that had the courage, after 16 years of indolence by the Liberals, to declare Canadian sovereignty in Canada's North. This is a Party that will maintain the strength and vitality of Canada's culture and identity. We are so confident of our culture that we are not afraid of seeking commercial arrangements that will provide jobs and security for Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): If some of my colleagues opposite had been around at the time, their caution would have been such that they would not have let Christopher Columbus get in the boat.

COMMISSION OF INQUIRY—APPOINTMENT OF MR. JUSTICE ESTEY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Government House Leader. In order to refresh his memory, let me quote a statement repeated by the Prime Minister in a news conference on Friday when he said that he desired to have a Commons committee investigate the Canadian Commercial Bank September 1 collapse. He said:

> It must be investigated and those responsible must be held accountable.

When did the Government, the Prime Minister or the House Leader first approach Justice Estey about his taking over the commission which should have been conducted here in the House of Commons? When did he in fact contact Justice Estey?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have not spoken to Mr. Justice Estey for some weeks now. Therefore, I cannot give any response to the Hon. Member.

All I can say is that also in the article referred to by the Hon. Member, the Opposition were complaining about the fact that they did not think we were going to give them enough information. On the contrary, I want it on the record that we were going to give them so much information that they were afraid to go ahead with this inquiry.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I want to give the House Leader the benefit of the doubt.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: He does not need your doubt.

Ms. Copps: You may think that a billion dollar bail-out is a big joke—

Mr. Mazankowski: I think you're a big joke.

Ms. Copps: —but it isn't a joke to the taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Copps: When he misled the House today he said that the reason that the Commission was called for was that the opposition Parties would not agree to a parliamentary investigation. Why in fact did he mislead the House the way he did in Question Period today?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, whenever the Official Opposition is on a sticky wicket and on weak ground, they call on the rats. I am not answering that question. It is simply untrue and unworthy of the Hon. Member. I would ask her if she would not mind trying to do something to restore in her Party at least some of the civility that we expect in the House from Members of Parliament.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns Canada's trade negotiations with the United States. The Minister will know that most Canadians understand the difficulty of discussing trade negotiations in detail before they take place. However, he will also understand that they are most interested in knowing that sort of arrangement is worked out before it is signed.

Will the Minister assure the House that Parliament will have an opportunity to debate and approve of any trade agreement with the United States before it is signed by Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to go farther than that. Of course we will do that. We are also anxious to have the issue debated here in the House of Commons. That is why we had the matter go before a committee that travelled the country. That is why the Prime Minister, in his statement in the House the other day, said that there would be discussion early in the House if possible, if agreeable with the opposition Parties. We have just learned, in the case of the bank, that Governments might want debates and Governments might want references but we cannot achieve them in the face of an obstructionist Opposition.

We want to have the question of trade and the question of our relations with the United States debated in the House.

COMMISSION OF INQUIRY—PROVISION OF INFORMATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, for a Government that wanted debate, it is strange that we did not talk about the matter for a whole week. However, will the Deputy Prime Minister assure us that all of the information that up until now the Government said it could not provide to the committee because it was illegal will be provided to the commissioner?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, why can the Hon. Member not wait with patience for Mr. Justice Estey—

Mr. Gauthier: We don't trust you, Erik.

Mr. Nielsen: If the Hon. Member does not trust me, perhaps—

An Hon. Member: No one does. Even your mother doesn't, Erik.

Mr. Nielsen: She passed away many years ago.

• (1500)

Perhaps he might trust the Hon. Mr. Justice Estey, who is conducting this inquiry. Let us be patient and see what his requirements are.

I can assure the House that all information that it is possible for us to provide, which has been our position all along, will be provided to assist him in conducting that inquiry.

AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION TO COMMISSION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, will all the information in its entirety, that the Ministers had, that the Inspector General of Banks had, that was available to those three individuals prior to the decision to bail out the bank, and prior to the decision to close the banks down, be available to Mr. Justice Estey for the purposes of conducting his Commission of Inquiry?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Why do we not allow Mr. Justice Estey to determine what information he deemes necessary for the proper conduct of his inquiry, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Broadbent: He has to operate with your instructions.

Mr. Deans: Why don't you give us the answer?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

DRAFT DOCUMENT—TASK FORCE ON FREE TRADE—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: I should indicate that I am, contrary to what I thought earlier, in a position to rule on the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) on September 24.

Her complaint was based on a document, a copy of which she furnished to me and which I have read very carefully. It is an unidentified document of unknown authorship which purports to advise on the strategy to be employed in communicating with the public on the bilateral trade initiative between Canada and the United States.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East complains that certain passages of this document violate her privileges as a Member of Parliament. It is not for the Chair to determine whether or not this is so, but only to decide whether sufficient evidence has been presented to justify according priority of debate to this matter.

In the first place, the Hon. Member's complaint does not seem to be directed against any identifiable individual organization. The Chair has no information as to who wrote the document or who issued it.

Second, the Chair must determine whether the document provides evidence of interference with her right to freedom of speech or whether it in any way obstructs her in the fulfilment of her duties.

She is mentioned by name in the document where it is indicated that her riding has the steel industry to represent. This is a statement of fact which is not, in itself, defamatory.

The document also suggests that some Opposition Members, including the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, represent ridings which stand to benefit from the trade initiative and that this could be productively exploited as part of the proposed strategy.

The Hon. Member perhaps, and I presume clearly, does regard this suggestion as offensive, but does it constitute a threat or an attempt to intimidate her? Has it impeded the Hon. Member in any way in the performance of her duties? I have to say that I can find no evidence in this document which would substantiate an affirmative answer to those questions. I am, therefore, unable to accord this matter precedence over other business.

NORTHLAND BANK

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO THE LIQUIDATION OF THE NORTHLAND BANK

NORTHLAND BANK LIQUIDATION—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF STATE FOR FINANCE

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this morning, I announced on behalf of the Government that a court order is being sought today under the Winding Up Act to permit the liquidation of the Northland Bank.

Also this morning, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced that Mr. Justice Willard Estey has been appointed to inquire into and report upon all circumstances and factors that contributed to the condition of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank and resulted in their cessation of operations.

I want this afternoon to explain to the House the circumstances leading up to and the reasons for these decisions.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to point out that the problems experienced by the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank reflect a unique and specific situation.

Canada's banking system is and remains one of the most stable in the world. In fact, as I pointed out earlier, the assets of these two institutions represent less than one per cent of the total assets of the Canadian banking system. Both banks had their beginnings in Western Canada, in the mid seventies. Both banks were established in a region that was experiencing rapid economic growth as a result of an energy boom, and developed significantly during that period.

[English]

The banks focused upon attracting wholesale deposits from corporations and others like municipalities, hospitals, colleges and pension funds with substantial funds to invest. In their loans and other investments, these two banks had highly concentrated exposure in western real estate and in energy-based businesses.

The banks were particularly vulnerable when the resource based boom in western Canada came to an abrupt end. As we all know, the boom was followed by a very severe recession that dramatically weakened the western economy. In fact, only now is the western economy beginning to shake off the effects of that recession.

In March, the Government was approached by the management of the Canadian Commercial Bank for support. At that time, the Bank required write-downs on its loan portfolio. The net effect of these write-downs would have been to erode the capital and reserves of the Bank to such an extent that it would no longer be viable. A Government decision to support the CCB, or any financial institution for that matter, was not an easy decision to make. The Government, over the course of March 14 to March 25, explored many options, asked many questions and produced alternatives. That was our responsibility.

Let me state, Mr. Speaker, that this Government believes that regional financial institutions can play an important role in the development of strong regional economies. Because of this, we decided that it would be appropriate to make all reasonable efforts to enable the CCB to continue to serve western Canadian businesses.

There were a number of very important considerations behind this decision. The recovery in Alberta and British Columbia was lagging behind that of the rest of Canada. The Government was concerned that a regional bank failure would set back the economic recovery that was occurring in western Canada. Liquidation of the CCB in March, when the economy was less healthy, would have considerably disrupted the affairs of many western businesses, with serious risks to their recovery and, indeed, to their future survival. At the national and international level, there was considerable uncertainty in financial markets. The Canadian dollar had recently reached its lowest point ever. Interest rates were high. Financial institutions' failures in the United States had shaken confidence. The prospect of a bank failure in this unsettled environment carried with it significant but incalculable risks.

Faced with these risks, to jobs in western Canada, to the integrity of our banking system and to international confidence in our economy, the Government decided to pursue efforts to support the Canadian Commercial Bank.

In the light of the best information we had available, and recognizing the limited time for decision, we agreed, together with two provincial Governments and the six largest Canadian chartered banks, to propose the support package approved by Parliament in Bill C-37.

The support package was constructed to restore to CCB's viability by the participants absorbing $255 million of losses on the non-performing portion of the loan portfolio. The non-performing loan portfolio was identified by the management of the CCB and,in the limited time available, reviewed by the Inspector General of Banks and representatives of some of the chartered banks that participated in this support package.

Following the passage of Bill C-37 in March, and in consultation with the Chairman of the Board of the CCB, I took steps to attract new board members to strengthen the management of the Bank. I was looking for individuals of the highest professional calibre. Unfortunately, I was not successful in those recruiting efforts.

As required by the support agreement, two special representatives of the office of the Inspector General of Banks were appointed to supervise the arrangement. Those two experienced credit officers conducted a thorough review of the loans in the support package.

Also, as part of the follow-up to the support package, the Government arranged to have a team of banking experts led by Mr. George Hitchman review the total loan portfolio of the CCB. Mr. Hitchman's report identified the need for substantial write-down of the loans covered by the March support package, as well as other loans the Bank had made which the management of the Bank had excluded from the support package. At the same time, it was apparent that the support package had not restored market confidence in the Bank. The result of this lack of confidence was that Bank of Canada advances to the CCB increased substantially over the summer until they amounted to $1.3 billion by late August.

It became clear through the process that significant additional write-downs would be required. In the view of the IGB, the extent of these write-downs was such that the CCB could no longer be considered viable. Based upon these findings, the Bank of Canada could no longer continue to provide liquidity support.

In the absence of any other option, including potential merger opportunities that were explored, the resonsibility of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was to appoint a curator to conserve the financial position of the Bank pending liquidation proceedings. We did not reach this decision on September 1 lightly; we came to it reluctantly and only after the most serious deliberations. We knew that there would be some disruption to the Bank's clients, but we had to weigh that factor against the knowledge that the Bank was no longer a viable financial institution.

To help minimize the impact to western businesses, we asked the curator to carry out his duties in a manner which created the least possible disruption to the business clients of the CCB. That is the background with respect to the Canadian Commercial Bank.

I now want to turn to the situation of the Northland Bank and the decision that was announced this morning. The Office of the Inspector General of Banks has been in frequent contact with the Northland Bank since the Bank was created and has participated in many discussions with management concerning internal operations, audit arrangements, specific lending and financial proposals, and other aspects of the Bank's operations.

When the Canadian Commercial Bank informed the Government of its difficulties that resulted in the March support arrangements, the Office of the Inspector General of Banks, the Bank of Canada, the Minister of Finance and myself were aware of the potential implications for Northland. Over the period following the March support package, it became increasingly clear that the Northland Bank was suffering a lack of market confidence that led to serious funding problems. Bank of Canada advances increased to more than $500 million by the end of August. Through this period the Government worked closely with Northland's officials to try to find solutions to the Bank's problems. As part of this exercise, the Inspector General of Banks undertook a comprehensive examination of the quality of Northland's assets. His report in late August made it clear that Northland's problems were not limited to funding. Indeed, the value of Northland's assets was seriously impaired and the IGB concluded that Northland also was no longer viable.

At the time the decision was being made to liquidate the Canadian Commercial Bank, the Minister of Finance and I met again with officers of the Northland Bank. Northland officials repeated their assurances that a reorganization or merger could soon be accomplished. We agreed that this effort should be accommodated. However, it was clear to us that Northland could not continue normal operations while this effort was in progress. Thus, at the beginning of September, we agreed to treat Northland as a separate situation from the CCB and give the Bank time to develop alternative proposals to liquidation. The Minister of Finance appointed Touche Ross Limited curator of the Northland Bank, with the understanding that Northland management was to be given time to reorganize its affairs to seek amalgamation partners. At that time I retained Mr. Robert Bellamy of Burns Fry Limited to work with the Northland Bank in an attempt to arrive at a reorganization or amalgamation.

On September 27, I received a report from Touche Ross Limited which confirmed the IGB's report that Northland was no longer able to meet its financial obligations as they fell due. The curators stated that the interest of the creditors and the shareholders would best be served by an orderly liquidation. I also received from Mr. Bellamy his conclusions with respect to potential restructuring arrangements for the Northland. Mr. Bellamy concluded that none of the proposals he had discussed with interested parties and examined in detail was likely to be successful. The proposals examined did not effectively limit the exposure of the federal Government, in effect the taxpayers of Canada, in that they required a more or less open-ended commitment to assume the Bank's non-performing loans. Nor did they provide a sufficient degree of certainty that the reorganized Bank would be able to carry on as a viable financial institution without continuing Government support. Those are the documents which I tabled today, the curators' report and Mr. Bellamy's conclusions.

While the Government went to significant lengths to accommodate Northland in its search for a merger partner, we were not and are not prepared to enter into an open-ended commitment. Nor were we prepared to support a solution which did not carry with it the certainty, the absolute certainty, that the Bank would emerge as a viable operation in the foreseeable future. We did not receive a single proposal that met these two basic conditions, despite the fact that Mr. Bellamy, on my behalf, approached a number of parties to see if they were prepared to submit proposals. Given no acceptable proposals and the deteriorating situation at Northland, the Government had no choice but to take the decision announced today. I want to say and to emphasize to all Members of the House that we did everything in our power to assist the Northland Bank in its merger and reorganization efforts. While our efforts were unsuccessful, let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that it was not for lack of trying.

We could not continue with the search for a merger partner indefinitely. Not only was the situation with regard to Northland's current financial picture deteriorating, but we also had the depositors' interest to consider. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation cannot pay insured depositors until an appropriate court order is obtained. Thus I assure you, Mr. Speaker, the decision to liquidate Northland Bank was made regretfully but not until all other possible alternatives were considered fully.

Let me now turn to the announcement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance and myself, to appoint a commission to inquire into the events resulting in the cessation of operations of the Canadian Commerical Bank and the Northland Bank. Since September the Government has been pressing for a full, complete and non-partisan discussion of the circumstances and decisions which have brought these two financial institutions to their current state. We have concluded that the public right for a full and dispassionate investigation can best be served through a commission of inquiry. A further reason for a commission of inquiry is to ensure that all the relevant facts surrounding the liquidation of the two Banks come out and are dealt with appropriately. The issues are complicated, as discussions in the House over the past few weeks have made abundantly clear. Analysis and evaluation of these issues require the expertise that Mr. Justice Estey's commission will bring to bear.

We have no parameters on the extent of the commission of inquiry. It will be up to Mr. Justice Estey to determine the scope and nature of the investigation in any way that he sees fit. We are looking forward to what an independent, objective and most eminent jurist has to say about this entire matter, just as I am sure Hon. Members opposite want to see these results. Further, the Government intends to make public Mr. Justice Estey's report upon receipt, except for any parts of his report that he himself feels should remain confidential. Again in this area, I want to stress that we have not constrained him in any way.

I believe that the approach we are taking in asking Mr. Justice Estey to conduct a commission of inquiry is the approach which is most likely to satisfy the public interest as well as result in a complete explanation of the circumstances.

● (1520)

Mr. Justice Estey has been asked to commence his commission of inquiry immediately and has advised the Government that he will begin hearings on Wednesday, October 2, 1985. He will submit his report to the Governor in Council as soon as possible.

[Translation]

Hon. Members will have further opportunity to debate these issues when the Bill authorizing the Government to compensate uninsured depositors is tabled in the House. In fact, this legislation is to be tabled very shortly, Mr. Speaker.

As I indicated in this morning's press release, the legislation will provide for payment to uninsured depositors of the principal amount plus interest up to September 1, 1985. Sixty per cent of the amount will be paid to each depositor concerned as soon as possible after passage of the Bill, with the remaining amount to be paid by an additional cheque post-dated April 1, 1986.

I may add that no payment will be made for interest that would have been due after September 1.

[English]

I hope that we will have the full co-operation of Members opposite in completing all stages of the legislation expeditiously so that the uninsured depositors can receive their payments.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, these depositors include some municipalities whose ability to function financially has been seriously impaired by the state of affairs involving the Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland.

Hundreds of small businesses, some credit unions, associations, charities, cultural organizations, hospitals and colleges, as well as individual Canadians are also affected and will benefit by the speedy consideration of the proposed legislation by this House.

Mr. Speaker, I hold the view that we in this House should strive to ensure that our financial system remains effective, prudent and well respected in Canada and around the world. To that end the Government will be seeking the co-operation of all Members of the House to revise and reform the legislation and regulatory processes governing the operation of Canadian financial institutions.

On September 1, I announced our intent to introduce legislation that would give federal regulatory authorities increased powers to protect the stability and the soundness of the Canadian financial system. In addition, I have announced my intention to introduce amendments to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act to ensure that the deposit insurance system will have the financial resources to continue to protect Canadian depositors of modest means. The Government intends to proceed with these reforms in the near future.

In addition, the House Finance Committee is currently holding hearings on the Government's discussion paper on financial institution reform. This document outlines the Government's over-all approach to modernizing legislation respecting Canada's financial institutions.

The recent events involving the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank highlight the importance of this work and the need to move quickly but effectively in completing it.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat that I have every faith in the viability and the strength of the Canadian banking system and in its national and international reputation. I am very much looking forward to the work and the report of Mr. Justice Estey. I assure all Members of this House that Mr. Justice Estey can count on the complete co-operation of this Government throughout his inquiry.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in these 24 pages of ministerial statement there is one paragraph missing and it has to do with the resignation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and of the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Garneau: It is a very sad day indeed that should be remembered by all Canadians for many years. After 13 months of Conservative Government we have learned today that the second Bank will be wound up.

An Hon. Member: How many more?

Mr. Garneau: Worst of all, this Government after 13 months in power was taking advantage of the employment situation, the job creation. It has taken all the credit for that even though everybody knew that it was the result of the last Budget speech. But today—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: I would have a lot to say about that.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please—

Mr. La Salle: At least we act responsibly!

Mr. Speaker: The House has listened very attentively to the Minister's statement.

I would now appreciate it, please, if the Hon. Member speaking for the Liberal Party could perhaps be afforded the same courtesy in the House.

[English]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, it is a very serious matter. I do not want to joke about it, and certainly not take those interruptions from the Minister of Public Works who knows nothing about banking except to borrow from the bank.

Worst of all, Mr. Speaker, now we have been told that the parliamentary committee will not be allowed to look very carefully into those two bank failures. In fact, we have been told that a judge has been appointed, and don't tell us that it is not due to the fact that the Member from the Liberal Party tried to ask for more detail before going into the parliamentary committee. I do not know what they have to hide but the Minister has certainly refused to appear before the TV camera in the parliamentary committee. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of this country had promised Canadians a televised inquiry. What are they hiding now, and don't give us the Irish blarney.

An Hon. Member: Another broken promise.

An Hon. Member: What are you afraid of?

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, it is a sad day for Canada when in a matter of weeks, we are now informed of the failure of a second bank.

I think we should consider this as a matter involving the Minister's credibility. That is why I said there was a paragraph missing from this long 24-page statement, a paragraph containing the resignation of the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

On March 29 of this year, the Minister said here in the House that with the exception of the Canadian Commercial Bank, no other financial institution was either in difficulty or appeared to be in difficulty. And now she says in her statement that she had been aware of the problems of the Northland Bank since March!

Mr. Speaker, there is the issue of credibility which is extremely important. If the Minister wants to discuss the bank question and obtain the co-operation of the Members of this House on this very important matter, she must realize that her statements must be consistent. If she does not know the answers, she should remain silent. But she should not tell Canadians that no other bank in this country is or appears to be in financial difficulty.

Why do I hesitate today to ask the Minister: Is there another financial institution in danger? Mr. Speaker, I dare not ask the question because I am afraid I will not be told the truth.

An Hon. Member: Right on!

Mr. Garneau: It is a very serious matter. For instance, here is what the Minister said in her statement today:

[English]

"These banks were particularly vulnerable when the resource based boom in western Canada came to an abrupt end".

[Translation]

Compare today's statement with her remarks to the House last March 25 when she told the people of Canada and Members of the House that the difficulties experienced by the Canadian Commercial Bank stemmed from those loans in California.

Will the Government today, considering the dreadful situation which undermines the security of our entire banking system—

• (1530)

Will the Minister of State . . . and so far the Minister of Finance has refused to assume his responsibilities under the Act. By means of a letter you may delegate certain administrative responsibilities to a Minister of State, but the bottom line is that the Minister of Finance has the ultimate responsibility under the provisions of the Act. I find it rather strange that in such a serious situation he would let the Minister of State (Finance) face the music and assume the responsibilities, while in fact he is the one who should have risen to make the statement.

An Hon. Member: He is scared!

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister expects cooperation from the House she will have to be more careful with her statements. If she wants our cooperation she will have now only to tell us the truth but also appear as if she were telling the truth. Again I would refer to her statements of March 25 and 29 when she said:

[English]

Mr. Chairman, this situation was caused by an isolated incident.

She was speaking about the CCB.

There are no other financial institutions in the country at the moment that are appearing to be insolvent in any way.

[Translation]

It is a very specific statement. If the Minister wants us to cooperate with her with respect to the Bill she is planning to introduce, she will have to learn to tell the whole truth or refrain from commenting on things which she does not know anything about.

Now I would like to say something about the appointment of Mr. Justice Estey. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it is totally inappropriate, particularly after the statements made recently by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court to a gathering of well known lawyers—I think it was in Halifax where he said it was "inappropriate"—to ask a judge of the Supreme Court to defend the Government. That is exactly what is happening today.

We will be putting a justice of the Supreme Court in a situation where he will have to pass judgment on political decisions that were taken by two Ministers of the Crown. If he does not dwell—as I hope he will not—on the political actions that were taken, on the political decisions that were made by the Minister of Finance, the Minister of State (Finance) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), I submit, Mr. Speaker, it is urgent that the Standing Committee should meet, because nobody will have me believe that a Minister of that Government who made the wrong decision concerning a few cans of fish could have had to resign, that another Minister who ventured into a bar to meet a strip-tease dancer could have been forced to resign, while another two Ministers who will be costing the taxpayers $1 billion will manage to whistle their way out of this mess without a word of excuse to the Canadian people. There are limits, and this is not acceptable.

Mr. Speaker, it is my view that the political judgment that was made brought about the demise of the two financial institutions. First, I thought there was one, but now I am more and more convinced that the way they went about it, they killed both Western Canada's financial institutions. And I say they killed them in terms of the relative costs to Canadian taxpayers, and relative costs in terms of Western Canada's economic development.

Mr. Speaker, the decision was made, as announced today for a second time, that all depositors will be reimbursed, and in the statement she made earlier today, the Minister did not draw any line as to who held the deposits. I may therefore conclude that all deposits, outside of equity, will be reimbursed. If everything is reimbursed, this means that the true costs to the Canadian taxpayers originate from the bad loans in that Bank's portfolio.

Well, if that was the cost, why then not have directly invested in the bank's equity those very sums of money, which would have amounted to the same for the Canadian taxpayers and not have written off the bad loans? If there are legal proceedings to be taken against the management, there is nothing to prevent that. But for the same cost, they could have saved those banks with actual Government support, instead of announcing a rescue plan on March 25 and a few days later calling the financial institutions over the telephone and asking them what they would say if the plug was pulled out—

Mr. Speaker, before one undertakes such an operation, one must first consider the situation and not put Parliament and the Canadian citizens on the spot, in a hurry, to avoid bad publicity at the economic summit, where the Prime Minister glowered before TV audiences. They would not tarnish the image . . . They made a decision within a few hours, and this will be costing not only $1 billion in taxes but also the demise of two financial institutions. If I were a Westerner today, as I said recently in the emergency debate we had with the support of Progressive Conservatives, but during which we were provided with no additional information because many Ministers had taken off, Mr. Speaker—In this case, as I was saying, if I were a Westerner, I would be deeply humiliated today by this Government's actions.

As a French-speaking Quebecer, I have to wonder what would happen if institutions as well established in our region as the credit unions or Caisses populaires had to close because of similar problems. This is not at all the case at the present time. These institutions are in very good shape, but in a similar situation, I would feel humiliated as a Quebecer, and I can understand how humiliated the residents of the Prairie provinces must feel because of the action and behaviour of this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Garneau: Millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money have been invested, but finally, both banks will close and the Prairie provinces will lose two of their regional institutions that they wanted to keep and for which Westerners had fought for years.

However, Mr. Speaker, if it had been decided, as it could have been, to let the CCB sink completely last March, my comments would be different today, but as it was decided to reimburse everyone, including the foreign banks, the Canadian banks, the municipalities and the Credit Unions, the real cost of this operation will be the cost of the bad loans. In my opinion, these two institutions could have been saved, but only if the Government had put all its weight behind this operation. Now, we shall have to pay, the banks will close, hundreds of jobs will be lost, and God knows when Western Canada will be able to develop another similar institution.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to come back for a few moments to the role which Mr. Justice Estey will play. Without wanting in the least to minimize his legal ability, I believe that Mr. Justice Estey will be asked to rule on a Government decision which was a political decision made on behalf of all Canadian citizens, and he will be asked to say publicly in a report that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and the Prime Minister made a bad decision. To ask the question is to answer it, Mr. Speaker. It is ridiculous. This is why, at this very moment, my Leader, Mr. Turner, is now in Toronto giving a press conference which was scheduled to begin at 3.30 and where he is requesting the same thing we are requesting in this House, namely that a Parliamentary Committee be asked to rule on the political decisions which this Government has made and which have destroyed two financial institutions.

I think that it would be proper and probably normal to ask a judge to determine whether any thefts or illegal acts were committed by the administrators of these banks, but after the comments made by the Chief Justice recently, you should not ask a judge, especially a Supreme Court Justice, to rule on a political decision. I think that this would place him in an untenable position.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out to the Government and to the Canadian people that I find it strange to hear in this House the Opposition being accused of delaying unanimous consent for a referral to the committee.

I think we should emphasize, for the benefit of the public who is watching us, we should shed light at least on that part ... The Government has tried—I do not know whether this the correct Parliamentary expression—to have this issue quickly referred to a Parliamentary committee without assuring us that the said committee would have every opportunity to examine it in depth. Mr. Speaker, when we are asked to carry out an investigation of this type in only one and a half or two months, when we know how heavy the Parliamentary workload is; when we are told that there is no way we could have a look at the Hitchman report, or consult the list of depositors or find out about the types of assets these banks had, what do you think we will be able to do in committee except participate in the cover-up this Government was trying to force upon us? To do a really good job, we need a minimum of documents.

About this politicial decision which is likely to cost $1 billion, I suggest it will not be possible to get to the bottom of this as long as the committee will not have the privilege of calling as witnesses the Minister of Finance, the Minister of State (Finance), the Prime Minister, and all the other people involved in this matter, And I suggest also that if a judge can carry out an administrative investigation, he cannot carry out a political one. That is the reason why, and I will conclude my remarks with this, I feel today is a very sad day. I just cannot accept that these two banks can go under, that Canadian taxpayers can be called upon to pay up to $1 billion, and that two Ministers can wash their hands of the whole mess by referring it to a judge and remain comfortably seated without assuming their responsibility in the matter.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it was with a great deal of regret that we learned today of the collapse of the Northland Bank. The Government's attempts to rescue the Bank will not succeed and the Government has decided to put the Bank into liquidation. I think this collapse will be a further blow to the economy of western Canada as well as to the taxpayers both in the West and across Canada. Perhaps I can put it into perspective, Mr. Speaker, by reminding the House that the combined cost of the collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank is in the order of $1 billion to the Canadian taxpayer. A great deal of that money has to be put down to this Government which in 12 months or 13 months has intervened directly, has made decisions in supervising officials who, I believe, made errors and we are now seeing the chickens coming home to roost.

This has come about at a time when this House has just had closure imposed on a project of law to deindex the family allowance and to take money out of the mouths of the children of Canada, and we are doing that so that we can spend $1 billion for the depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, many of whom were uninsured depositors and who had absolutely no contract or guarantee that they should get their money back.

I would like to cite for the record the names of Robert Wilson, the chairman, Mr. Charles Neapole, the president and Mr. Martin Fortier, the executive vice-president of the Northland Bank who, according to this week's Financial Post, in August were each given, to compensate for the lack of bonus, a brand new $50,000 Jaguar automobile. That is how it is reported. I hope it is not true. However, I certainly wonder about bail-outs in this kind of stratospheric operation which is so far out of the reach of ordinary Canadians. Ordinary Canadians are spending $60, or $70 per person on the bail-out of these banks.

It is of regret to us, Mr. Speaker, that negotiations between the Government and the Northland Bank were not enough to save the bank. We will learn, as details about the Northland Bank become public, what exactly led to the Bank's ultimate demise. I note in looking at the Minister's statement that, if nothing else, there was something of a double standard which appears to have been imposed in this particular case. The Government claims that it was not prepared to accept an open-ended commitment with respect to the Northland Bank. Yet that is precisely what was done with respect to the Canadian Commercial Bank. The Government says it needed a solution which had certainty that the banks would emerge as a viable operation. It is certainly obvious now, if I can quote the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about the Canadian Commercial Bank, "There was no certainty it would emerge as a viable operation».

If the Government had been adequately informed abou the situation of the Canadian Commercial Bank back in March I wonder whether in fact the Northland Bank might have been saved by intervention at that time, even if the cost was that one of the two banks would have gone down. I noted the Minister's statement—

Mr. Speaker, I notice that in her statement, the Minister once again has blamed this mess on the economic situation in Western Canada without mentioning either the CCB's investments in California, the monitoring and administrative failure of the Inspector General of Banks, the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Bank of Canada itself, or the administrative and political blunders of the Government of Canada.

The Minister does not recognize that the regulators, the Bank of Canada and the Ministers themselves must have played a major part in this situation which has cost so far $1 billion to Canadian taxpayers.

The Minister keeps repeating that the Government acted back in March on the basis of the best information available at the time. In her 24-pages long statement, the Minister has failed to mention that between March 14 and the month of July, the Government did not even try to find out about the CCB's situation as to the so-called non-public assets.

The Government turned down the five chartered banks' request for an examination of the bank's assets. The banks offered to send their own people to carry out this examination. Their offer was repeatedly rejected over a period of several months, until the chartered banks decided to withdraw their investments from the Canadian Commercial Bank.

The Government refused to find out what sort of institution this was in which it decided to invest $250 million, mostly from taxpayers' money, while assuring all organizations with money invested in this institution that they would be fully compensated in case of a failure.

In her statement, Mr. Speaker, the Minister has indicated that ever since September the Government had been trying to set up a full, complete and non-partisan investigation. She has chosen to ignore the fact that it was the New Democratic Party, frustrated by the Government's refusal to provide the Parliamentary committee with the documents it needed to do its job, which last week began to push for a judicial inquiry, with the assurance that the appointed judge would have access to all the information refused to the Parliamentary committee.

[English]

I am distressed, Mr. Speaker I say to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), as well as to his junior minister, that when the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) was asked specifically about information which would be available to the judge in making his inquiry, the Deputy Prime Minister fudged. He repeated the words which have been given time and time again over the course of debates in this House, saying, "All the information it was possible to provide would be made available to Justice Estey". Frankly, I do not feel that is good enough. We were told that it was not possible to provide the report from the United States. It was not possible to provide the report by Mr. Hitchman when he was sent in to look at the other aspects of the Canadian Commercial Bank. We were told it was not possible to provide the list of depositors because of restrictions of the Bank Act. We were told it was not possible to have witnesses come under subpoena. It was not possible to get full and complete answers from the Inspector General of Banks in the spring and we had no guarantee that the Committee would have that right in the fall, Mr. Speaker, if it resumed its inquiry.

Are we being told that a justice of the Supreme Court of Canada is going to be treated in that way by the Government? I would hope not, Mr. Speaker. Yet that was the declaration which came from the Deputy Prime Minister today.

I would like to comment today about what we think should have been in these terms of reference and also what we think Justice Estey should have been asked to do. The Minister states in her statement that there are no parameters, that there are no restrictions surrounding this investigation. That is better than an investigation which is so restricted that it is bound to become a whitewash. However, I have a sense, Mr. Speaker, that this could turn out to be an exercise in using vanishing ink. It could be used as a means of deflecting concern from the Government's activities in this particular area, especially if the inquiry is allowed to go on and on and on without any cease at all. The questions which are very simple, which should have been put to Justice Estey are, to inquire into the matter of the demise of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. This is to be "Without limiting the generality of the foregoing"; that is the phrase commonly used, and then some specific questions should have been put. The Minister could have ensured that Mr. Justice Estey was not restricted, but she could also have asked the questions that we in the Opposition and the people of Canada want answered. The first question is: Why did these banks fail? The second question is: What role did the Ministers and the Government and its officials play in the failure of these two banks? I have a number of more specific questions which I will outline and which I hope Mr. Justice Estey will look into. I know, being a conscientious jurist, he will read these statements quite seriously. I respect him for that. However, the Government should have provided this guidance without limiting the area into which Mr. Justice Estey must look.

Over a period of three and a half weeks of negotiations, Mr. Speaker, the Government insisted that the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs conclude its inquiry by November 30. We raised this question in the House today, and if this is so, then some sense of the urgency of the matter should have been communicated to Mr. Justice Estey as well.

We are now in a situation where the House of Commons is being asked to agree to a bill to compensate the institutions for their deposits in the two bankrupt banks.

We are supposed to authorize the Government to increase the Canadian deficit by $1 billion so as to pay $1 billion to the companies and institutions which were not insured, in other words, to give out the taxpayers' money to people who are not in the least accountable.

Mr. Speaker, do we really have to make such a decision without knowing all the facts? Why did the Government not ask Mr. Justice Estey to present his report by November 30, as we had asked the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs? This would have allowed the House of Commons to conclude its debate on the Bill before Christmas, but with the added information contained in the report of Mr. Justice Estey.

[English]

If the committee is expected to report by November 30, surely we can have at least a preliminary report from Mr. Justice Estey by that time, perhaps even by the end of October. To ask this House to give $1 billion to un-named depositors with no information from this inquiry is, it seems to me, prejudicial to our doing a decent job. It is a violation of the privileges and rights of Parliament. Certainly it is offensive to the people of Canada who are going to have to shell out this money without knowing why.

Given the number of areas into which Mr. Justice Estey can inquire, this inquiry could become like the Ontario commission on the northern environment. That went on for seven and a half or eight years. The report finally came down last month and everyone heaved a sigh of relief that it was out of the way. It cost $9 million or $10 million and this is far past the time when it could be of any use. Therefore, given that the Green Paper is under consideration and that Mr. Justice Estey may want to comment on such matters as regulation of the banks, the quality of inspection of the banks, the quality of the advice coming from the Bank of Canada and the Inspector General and that kind of thing, let alone about the political responsibilities, I do not think his inquiry should under any circumstances last beyond, say, six months. He should be finished by March and we should have an interim report in time to enable us to pass judgment on the Government's request for $1 billion. I do not have any assurances about that because it is not in the terms of reference. Mr. Justice Estey could go on and on and on. I suppose the Government could vary his terms of reference by putting some time limits on it and I regret it was not done at the very beginning.

The matter of information is raised, Mr. Speaker. When the Government gets to reply, either now or later, I would like assurances that the Hitchman report will be available to Mr. Justice Estey, and not barred to him as it was barred to the committee.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It was not barred to the committee.

Mr. Cassidy: The Minister is shaking his head. I am not sure what that means.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It means you could have had it if you had not been so stubborn.

Mr. Cassidy: I would like assurances that the Government will press the American authorities at the Prime Minister's level to share with Mr. Justice Estey the report of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation concerning their findings on the Westland Bank and the CCB's American operations, because that was the trigger which should have signalled to the Government that there were very serious problems. What the Americans found out about the operation of that bank in the U.S. should have been such that the Minister would not write a $1 billion blank cheque as has now been done.

We would like assurances that the list of depositors is available to Mr. Justice Estey. Frankly, I would like him to come back and indicate in no uncertain terms that this House should not give away $1 billion without ensuring that anyone who wants the money, if it is the wisdom of the House to give it, should at least have to reveal who the devil they are. If they want to maintain their confidentiality, that is fine. The rules of the market-place say that they deposited the money in the banks and they should not get it back if they are not prepared at the very least to indicate who is getting it. The Government's secrecy is, to my mind, deplorable.

I want to talk now about the more specific questions which Mr. Justice Estey should be addressing. As I said, in general the question is why did these banks fail and what role did the Government play? One of the major things we want established is the role of Government Departments and ministerial responsibility. If we do not have that determined in the report, then corrective action cannot be taken either by the House or the Government. As I have reconstructed the situation, the Ministers were involved in turning down the repeated requests of the banks to let someone go in and look at the books of the CCB to find out what the devil was happening. Again the Minister of Finance is shaking his head. I am not sure why because those are the facts. I have heard the presidents of two or three of the banks testifying before the committee on this subject. When you ask them if the names of the depositors should be made public, they say that is a Government decision. In other words, they are not going to be critical if the Government decides that should be the case. They know there is nothing to hide. It is the Minister of Finance sticking up for his friends in certain portions of the banking community.

It may become clear that the Department of Finance lacked adequate monitoring of the state of the banks. It may become clear that the Bank of Canada, with all of its resources, inadequately monitored the banks to which it provided liquidity. It may become clear in the end that the entire decision-making process was based on the inadequate advice of an overworked official who had failed to take the appropriate steps to reinforce his demand for adequate staff to do the job. I speak of the Inspector General of Banks. Under the Liberals as well as the Conservatives no action was taken to give that official the kind of resource he needed and, in my view, he should probably have resigned to take his case to the public if he was not able to do the job in the new banking environment which has emerged with the kind of corporal's guard of inspectors that he had to work with. If in fact everyone was relying on the testimony of this poor, overworked official who was stuck here in Ottawa with no real knowledge of what the devil was going on, then you have to ask questions not only with respect to him but with respect to his political masters who came in committed to a mandate for change some 13 months ago and in all that time were unable to enforce effective change in an area where it has been proven we are vulnerable, to the tune of $1 billion.

I would like Mr. Justice Estey to look into the question of the Government role in seeking a partner for the Northland Bank. The events last week were quite extraordinary. The president of the Bank, Mr. Neapole, a former president of the Montreal Stock Exchange, a man with wide experience in business—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): No.

Mr. Cassidy: Was it his brother? I am sorry.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Wrong again.

Mr. Cassidy: Wrong again. Okay, I apologize.

Mr. Neapole went public, after agreeing not to do so, because of his frustration with the assistance he was getting from Government with respect to getting a partner for the Northland Bank. The Government has said that it did not want an open-ended commitment. However, it certainly appears from statements made by Mr. Neapole a week and a half ago that in fact the Northland Bank was less than justly dealt with in terms of its efforts to get a partner that would permit the bank to continue as a viable entity. I would like to ensure that that question is fully looked into and reported on by Justice Estey.

● (1600)

The third question is what in fact has the Government done to reinforce the capacity of the Inspector General of Banks since it was revealed in the spring that he did not have the staff. The fourth question is how much this will cost the taxpayers, both through the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation and also directly. Finally, with respect to the relationship between the United States and the Canadian parts of the CCB, it is my hunch that because the American regulators were vigilant, they bailed out before they had to compensate depositors in that particular bank and we are paying the price for a double failure because of assets that went from the Canadian Commercial Bank into the American bank. That subject should in fact be reported on. Why was no new management put in place? If the Minister could not find any directors, why did she not put some officials from the Bank of Canada or the Department of Finance in as interim directors and tell the CCB that she would remove them when they found some decent directors since she could not find any. I know my time is up, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

In all of this, one question is left unanswered. This will cost the Canadian taxpayers about $70 each. One billion dollars was lost because of the mistakes of the Government and the mismanagement of these banks. We have to know who is responsible. Judge Estey must not be prevented from doing his job by a lack of information and his report must be made completely public.

PETITIONS

DEINDEXATION OF SOCIAL SECURITY PROGRAMS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition which came from a number of women across Canada who attended the Canadian Labour Council Conference of Affirmative Action last week. In this petition they say that deindexation of the universal family allowance and massive cut-backs in public commitment to child benefits are an unfair attack on women and families, especially single-parent mothers. They go on to say that family allowance deindexation will not be off-set by changes in the child tax credit and that cut-backs will mean about $600 million taken from child benefits by 1990, and furthermore, that the cut-backs—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Hon. Member knows that summaries of petitions should be very brief. I thank the Hon. Member. Further petitions?

Ms. Mitchell: Yes Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from a group of mostly women who are connected with the Ottawa Council for Low Income Support Services. The undersigned ask the Prime Minister to restore full indexation to the family allowance and child tax credit as this Budget measure will take away $50 million in family benefits by 1987.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise that question No. 132 will be answered today.

NCC—DEFERRAL OF CAPITAL PROJECTS

Question No. 132—Mr. Malépart:

Will jobs be lost following (a) cutbacks within the National Capital Region (b) the deferral of capital projects and of the construction of an office building in Halifax (c) the deferral of capital investments for dredgers destined to the Department of Public Works (d) the re-examination of redevelopment projects for federal lands located in Montreal's Vieux Port and in the Chicoutimi marina and, if so, in each case, how many?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I am advised by the Department of Public Works and the National Capital Commission as follows:

(a) The recent government spending reductions mainly affect the National Capital Commission's capital program and an estimated 203 person-years of labour will not be required in 1985/1986 in the National Capital Region. There will be no loss of jobs at the National Capital Commission.

(b), (c) and (d) There will be no actual loss of construction jobs for the projects deferred or cancelled. We are looking to a deferral only of approximately 280.5 construction jobs for the Government of Canada Building in Halifax, Nova Scotia and 200 constructio jobs due to the one year postponement of minor capital works projects. No loss of jobs is anticipated due to the deferral of capital investments. There is a potential loss of 10 person-years in 1985/1986 in the shipbuilding, repair and support industries. The decision to recall $2.9 million from Montreal's Vieux-Port will result in the loss of 36 direct and 22 indirect jobs in 1985-1986. Direct jobs refer to on-site employment while indirect jobs refer to those lost by suppliers. The decision will not affect permanent positions. With regard to the Chicoutimi Marina, the effect will be the loss of 17 direct and 10 indirect person-years in the construction industry in 1985/1986. The cancellation of the marina will not result in the loss of jobs at Public Works Canada or the permanent loss of on-going jobs in that operational resources would have been transferred from another marina.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question as enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 31

NORTHLAND BANK COLLAPSE

Mr. Speaker: I am in receipt of an application under Standing Order 31 from the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). The original notice I had was that it was coming from the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, but the Hon. Member being present—

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the reason why we are suggesting an emergency debate is that we learned officially today about the bankruptcy of the Northland Bank and we believe that the Canadian taxpayers should know more about the circumstances of this affair. Even the Minister's statement that we have just heard did not mention any specific figure of what our taxpayers might have to pay and I think that it would be entirely proper to have an emergency debate before a judicial inquiry is launched.

Mr. Speaker: It is the first time that the Hon. Member has followed the procedure under Standing Order 31. Usually, the letter sent to the Speaker is read. This is all. It is in no way a criticism.

[English]

In effect, the Member did send me his preference for his application and the duty of the Chair, as the House knows, is to determine whether an application for an emergency debate under Standing Order 31 meets the requirements of the Standing Order. The House will recall that the Chair received several applications for an emergency debate on the potentially imminent collapse of the Northland Bank and of the consequences thereof, and that the Chair accepted the application that was accepted on the basis that the potential failure of this bank and the consequences therefor constituted an emergency as envisaged by the Standing Order. The House will also remember that that debate took place last Wednesday, September 25.

I cite to the House Standing Order 31(16)(d) which states:

—the motion must not revive discussion on a matter which has been discussed in the same session pursuant to the provisions of this Standing Order;

The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides is now requesting an emergency debate on the Government's winding up of the Northland Bank. With all due respect, it seems to me that the subject matter of this application is no different in any crucial respect from the subject matter of last Wednesday's application, and therefore I must say no.

May I also advise the House at this time that because of the Ministerial statement consideration of Government Orders will be extended by 57 minutes this day. So that the House is aware of these procedures, Private Members' Hour will also be affected, but will begin immediately after the vote that is called for later today. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, you just made a statement to the effect that the Private Members' Hour will start after the vote. The vote having been called for 15 minutes prior to five o'clock, I guess it will be 15 minutes prior to—

Mr. Speaker: Let us make an assumption that the vote is called for 15 minutes prior to 5:57. Read 5:57 as five o'clock in the rules and the Hon. Member knows what happens thereafter.

Mr. Gauthier: But my point, Mr. Speaker, is that Private Members' Hour will not be a total of one hour. It will be whatever is left after the vote is taken.

Mr. Speaker: That is absolutely correct. I simply indicated that it would begin after the vote. I hope that is what I indicated. I take it the Hon. Member is raising the confusion which arises when we talk about Private Members' Hour as a title. Private Members' business will commence immediately after the vote. I thank the Hon. Member.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Frith (p. 6625).

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, in his remarks this morning the Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) was suggesting that it was the Liberals who were the creators and defenders of our social programs and senior citizens. Before the lunch break, however, I pointed out to him that the Liberals had introduced the 6 and 5 per cent limitations on Government programs, that the Liberals had frozen the child allowances in 1976, and finally, that had full indexation been in place since 1976 for the child allowance it would be $51.83 today rather than $31.27.

Our seniors have nothing to fear from this Government. When seniors objected to the six and five program under the Liberals, the Liberals did nothing. In comparison, when the seniors objected and pointed out the problem in our Budget in May, this Government listened, admitted its mistake and changed. That is a tremendous difference from what we saw for 20 years from the previous administration. Seniors have absolutely nothing to fear from this Government. Bill C-70 makes very simple changes. The changes are a limitation to the increases to child allowances which will only begin after inflation exceeds 3 per cent. Therefore, if inflation continues at the present rate of 4 per cent into 1986, the increase will be 94 cents less than the present system. Therefore, there will be no reduction in child allowance and, in fact, there will be a 1 per cent increase of 31 cents. That is far better than what happened under the Liberal regime when they froze child allowances in 1976. If child allowances had been fully indexed since 1976 they would be $20.50 higher today.

This Bill has a twofold purpose. The first is deficit reduction, and the second is a more rational system of aiding those in greatest need.

With respect to deficit reduction, we must remember that presently we are paying $26 billion just on interest on the debt. When we consider the total federal share for health care, old age pensions—including the OAS and GIS combined—the spouses allowance, the entire family allowance system, welfare, social assistance to the needy, the federal share for medical research, we see that all of these cost less than the $26 billion just to pay interest on the debt. If we do not begin to slow the increase of our debt we will not be able to afford our social programs.

Second, we must not consider this measure in isolation but see it in conjunction with other packages in the Budget. We will be enhancing the child tax credit system which will in fact ensure that those at the lower end of the income scale will be receiving more money than they presently receive.

Therefore, I suggest that this is a responsible measure of deficit reduction while ensuring that those whose need is greatest will receive even greater aid from the Government. I commend this Bill for speedy passage.

[Translation]

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to speak in today's debate on the intention of the Conservatives to de-index family allowances, I find it extremely difficult to accept their decision to gag the Official Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I urge all fathers, mothers, grandfathers and grandmothers of my riding of Bourassa to get in touch with my constituency office and seek information concerning a petition which is being circulated to express opposition to the deindexation.

Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to thank the local newspaper Le Point for telling people how they can add their name to the petition.

Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that a party with such a commanding majority would appreciate that it was in its own interest to discuss and listen to the remarks and suggestions of as many Members as possible. But it can readily be seen that mum is the word among Conservatives and what the boss wants the boss gets. That fully explains the silence of Members opposite, and I direct my remarks more particularly to the Quebec Conservative Members who, during July and August, kept shouting that things would change but of course that there would be no change made in family allowances.

To my Quebec Conservative colleagues I say that now is the time to stand up and uphold the right of mothers to continue to get their family allowances.

If I were a Government Member, Mr. Speaker, I would be ashamed to face my constituents after having voted to prevent a real debate on family allowances.

Mr. Speaker, family allowances are sums of money paid to mothers in addition to wages, charitable donations and other supplements, in recognition of the expenses of families, many of whom are single-parent families. This kind of attack against Canadian mothers is tantamount to undermining the very foundations of our society.

The Progressive Conservative Government had no trouble finding and spending $55 million to change the colour of military uniforms, but it did not have $55 million to spend on Canadian mothers. The Progressive Conservative Government had no trouble finding and spending one billion dollars for the big lenders of the Canadian Commercial Bank but it was unable to find $55 million for Canadian mothers. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Cabinet have doubled and even tripled their budget for offices and personal consultants, but the same Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, and his Cabinet were unable to find $55 million for Canadian mothers.

Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that for the Government opposite, family allowances have no importance whatsoever. The Progressive Conservatives fail to realize that the family allowance payments made to Canadians reflect, above all, a concept of social justice. And that concept, Mr. Speaker, is totally absent on the other side. If they had the slightest notion of social justice and responsibility, Canadian men and women would not have found tainted tuna on foodstore shelves. If they knew what social justice meant, they would never have tried to deindex Old Age Security pensions. If they knew what social justice meant, they would never have decided to deindex family allowances. The Conservatives had to backtrack on Old Age Security pensions and restore full indexation. I still have some hope if only Members on the Government side had a little more courage that the Conservatives will backtrack on the family allowance issue.

Mr. Speaker, every day, thousands of Canadian men and women are abandoning the Progressive Conservative Party for the simple reason that this Government and this party have no courage and no convictions, and are led by a man and a bunch of non-elected people who have no time for Government Members.

Last night, Mr. Speaker, during the CBC report on the election of a new Parti Québécois leader, which I followed very attentively, the Progressive Conservative Party was represented neither by a Conservative Senator nor by a Conservative Member. However, that same Progressive Conservative Party was represented by Mr. Jean Bazin, a good friend, I may say a very good friend, of the Prime Minister of Canada. Am I to infer, Mr. Speaker, that if our mothers want to retain full indexation of family allowances, they should go to Fernand Roberge ou Jean Bazin? Every day, and especially today, we are seeing examples of the uselessness of elected representatives.

They are gagging Members and deindexing family allowances.

● (1620)

Mr. Fontaine: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lévis on a point of order.

Mr. Fontaine: The Hon. Member was referring to the Parti Québécois Convention. This has nothing to do with the issue at hand. I would therefore ask the Hon. Member to either aside by the rule of relevance or simply sit down.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I think this is most relevant, even though it concerns the Conservatives, and I will leave it to the Chair to decide that this is not a point of order. But it does get on your nerves!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) has the floor to carry on with his speech.

Mr. Rossi: I have concluded my speech, Mr. Speaker, and I would invite my colleague opposite to get a good look at the Standing Orders. And besides, he has much to learn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I welcome of course this opportunity to take part in the debate on the motion this afternoon, because from the outset, and to respond to the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) that among the Progressive Conservative Members silence is golden, we have been debating the issue for quite a while speaking within our alloted time, and we do not make a habit of constantly repeating ourselves.

We are often told that we forget because we came here from the other side of the House that there is a lack of consultation as we were told this morning, and an Hon. Member opposite also told us this morning that we are running the Government as if we were operating a business and, this might not be good, although in the same speech there was a contradiction on that.

I would like to return to each of those points, Mr. Speaker, not to over-justify but to explain. My honourable friend for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) said this morning: "You voted for a change and you were elected on a change". The least they can say is that we fulfilled our promise. My colleague referred last night to a leadership convention, he said: "At least I wanted to rank last, and I fulfilled that promise".

It is not that we are necessarily forgetting, but we must assess the situation as it is. The Hon. Members opposite are often making fun about the fact that we often mention the deficit, as we often do. But that deficit, the billions of dollars accumulated in that deficit, certainly forced us to revise certain decisions and certain directions in the statements we made. On that point, there was a change. During my election campaign, as people in Beauharnois-Salaberry will admit it, I often repeated that we should, if there was a Conservative vote . . . the Liberal Party always said: "From now on, tomorrow, it will be like yesterday, but with a slight indexation." This is what we wanted to change, Mr. Speaker, and I think we are in the process of changing it.

Indexation, Mr. Speaker, and I am now speaking on my own behalf, is an indebtedness we are laying on our children's shoulders and which we cannot evaluate right now. Honestly I do not think, and when it was stated this morning that we should not run the Government as one operates a business, I believe that quite to the opposite, indexing was not hatched by Canadian Quebec businessmen necessarily, it was devised by the Government and it was not necessarily a good thing for the Quebec Government in 1974 to introduce that. I am in a good position to know, I was a negotiator at that time, and admittedly it was quite reluctantly that I ended my negotiating career for the reason that we were giving something we could not evaluate. It is not possible, Mr. Speaker, to manage the general finances of a country by stating that next year, this or that will be indexed! And when they blame us for not having consultations, I think it is pushing it too far. There were parliamentary committee hearings on that, there were even working papers issued. This was widely discussed, to a point that in my constituency, in many constituencies and even in Liberal and New Democratic constituencies, consultation meetings were held. If we hear Hon. Members speaking here this afternoon, certainly it is because I suppose they consulted people, and I do not question whether this was done in good faith. Let us recognize we had time to consult. If consultation means that we have to listen to everything that people want to say about the matter, no responsible Government can do such a thing. We listen, we assess the advantages and the disadvantages and we make decisions in accordance with the policy or the direction which the Government has chosen. I do not think that there was a lack of consultation. The direction taken is not that suggested by some people and I fully agree but some consultations were held, we listened and we assessed the advantages and disadvantages.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the Government must operate along the same lines as a business or an undertaking, that is on the basis of figures, results and directions, taking into consideration the capacity of the citizen to pay and especially the capacity of our children to pay.

When I was mayor of the City of Beauharnois, I used to say to my people: "I must try to build a city for my children, not for myself, for my children. I want them to stay there." I think this is what the Government is doing by putting an end to that measure which is the largest question-mark in the management of our national finances. If we want to build a country for our children, we have to be wise and acknowledge that this indexation is no longer possible.

In short, Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote for that motion not because I am in favour of reductions, but because I think that we have to stick with our present orientations.

In 1979, my hon. friend who spoke earlier was in this House when indexation was removed. The amount of pensions and family allowances would now be $20 higher each month if indexation had been maintained. I have the speech made by the Hon. Minister at the time, in 1979, and you acted cautiously. You said at one time: We have to put a stop to this automatic increase. In my opinion, it was important to do so. Otherwise, family allowances would now be $20 more a month. Do you really believe that the Canadian people could afford that? You stopped indexation because of that. The issue was quite real at the time. No Minister of Finance ever managed financial affairs of the Government that way.

Mr. Speaker, as this is a motion moved by the Liberal Party, it is very important for the other side to take a positive part in this debate, and I am happy to see that all the Liberal Members are here to defend their motion. Do not leave, everyone; one is staying. All the Members are here to defend the Liberal motion and that is very important.

You know, there is a lot of exaggeration. People have said that the Government has spent $55 million to change the colour of Army uniforms, but is not willing to give the same amount to mothers. I would like to point out that there are mothers working in the worsted and cotton industries, that a $7 million contract was awarded in Huntingdon to produce the new colour material for the Army uniforms, and that these $7 million are important for the men and women who work in these industries in Huntingdon.

It is not 94 cents a month per child which will change anything, but the colours of Army uniforms have changed, even though a lot of uniforms remained exactly the same. In any case, they would have had to be changed within two years. A comparison is being drawn between two completely different matters. We can give a different orientation to our social policy, but we can also keep a commitment which is to provide uniforms for our military. A comparison is being made between two things which have nothing in common. People do not necessarily forget when they move from one side of the House to another, but they have to make their decisions accordingly. There have been consultations and I believe that the Government should be managed in a businesslike way.

Mr. Rossi: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted the record to show that my hon. friend for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Hudon), for whom I have a lot of respect, said: "Do not go away, everyone!" However, I was called to the phone at the back, Mr. Speaker, and I did not leave because I did not want to listen to his excellent speech. I was simply called away and no Liberal Member left the House because he was speaking. His speech was—

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Frith (p. 6625).

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the move of the Conservative Government to deindex the Family Allowance Act is one to which we are unequivocally opposed. The fundamental effect of the Bill, together with the other measures proposed in the Conservative Budget, is to take from the poor and give to the well to do.

The Government was forced by the overwhelming opposition of Canadian senior citizens to back away from its plan to deindex seniors' pensions. Canadian seniors, men and women, have demonstrated that they are a force to be reckoned with fairly, and they fought off the pension grab of the Conservatives. Now it is Canadian women who are the subject of the attack of the Conservatives—women and the family. Canadian women are having to fight the Government on so many fronts in the battle for economic equality that the Conservatives think they will be able to slip this one by without anyone noticing. Canadian women are watching. They are watching while the Conservatives, frequently in an underhanded fashion, break every promise made to us, Canadian women, in the last election. On the matter of family allowances, it was Canadian women, under Thérèse Casgrain, who struggled to have the first family allowance Bill introduced in the mid-1940s. In subsequent years, family allowances were constantly eroded by Liberal Governments. At one time they even wished to abolish them; they sixed and fived them. They cut them back to the point that we have now reached. Since 1974 family allowances have lost a full third of their purchasing power, thanks to the Liberals.

Now the Conservatives want a kick at the can, as is evidenced by their present proposal to deindex family allowances. However, like the Liberals, they are underestimating the concerns and intelligence of Canadian women. The Conservatives say that they are doing this to protect and to promote the family. The Minister has even said: "This Government wants to bring forward initiatives that will both enhance the Government's position relative to the family and, more important, show that the family is the cornerstone of society". How credible can the Government be when it claims to support the family yet introduces legislation such as we are discussing today which will help to undermine the family?

The Canadian Council on Social Development concludes that the impact of the 3 per cent reduction in the indexation of family allowances proposed by the Bill, combined with other budget changes to family benefits, sales taxes and personal income taxes, will decrease the buying power of a typical family with two children by more than $1,000 in 1990. Contrary to the Government's claim that it is increasing support to the most needy, in fact the poor, middle-income and elderly lose more as a percentage of income in real terms through the combined effects of the Conservative Budget.

The Budget proposals reduce the child tax exemption and deindex family allowances and the child tax credit. In the deceptive style which has become characteristic of this Government, as it was with the Liberals, the child tax credit will be increased for three years prior to being deindexed in 1989, providing some small additional benefits to poor families for a little while. However, benefits will decline by 3 per cent per year so that even the poorest families are eventually worse off. As the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) indicated, the poor in Canada now number 4.5 million. This figure includes 1.5 million children. While one in every six Canadians live in poverty, the figure for children under 16 years of age is one in five. In 1982 and 1983 the number of poor people rose by 1,100 per day. In my own Province of British Columbia, one in five are living on social assistance because of years of Socred-style fiscal management. Nowhere is the depression of the eighties more vivid than in British Columbia.

British Columbians are further suffering because of another action of the Conservative Government here in Ottawa. It recently cut federal funding to the voluntary unemployed action centres of the B.C. Federation of Labour, the last remaining lifeline for many unemployed families in that province. The Government does not care, as it says it cares, about the survival of the family in British Columbia and in Canada generally.

The Government says that we cannot afford adequate family allowances and that it would rather give that money to private investors, under the naive and misguided belief that giveaways to the private sector will fuel the engine of growth and create jobs. We in this Party would like to know how the economy is better off and how growth is generated when $1 is taken away, for example, from a low or middle-income earner in British Columbia and is given to a high-income investor in Toronto to buy real estate in Florida. Where is the economic sense in this supply side miasma of the Conservative Party which squeezes the buying power of the low and middle-income Canadians to line the pockets of the well to do or rich. It is all based upon some mystical notion that the private sector, in its usual benevolent manner, will reinvest that prize in Canadian jobs and Canadian industry. Certainly that has not been the case in British Columbia, nor has it been the case in most of the rest of Canada.

These are not the actions of a Government which has a firm grip on the economic realities of this decade or on the kinds of policies which will fulfil the Government's own declared intent, namely, of supporting and enhancing the support of the Canadian family.

We in the New Democratic Party urge the Government to withdraw this regressive piece of legislation. We beg it not to make it any harder than it now is for families already struggling to survive. It should reform the tax system, by all means, so that the well to do and the rich are paying their fair share and are taxed back for the benefits they receive as a result of universality. It should increase the child tax credit by 80 per cent to ensure that more tax revenues go to families in greatest need. Above all, it should not fight the deficit on the backs of those who can least afford it.

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to address the House on Bill C-70. I have listened with some anticipation to the debate on this matter. I find that the Opposition has a total disregard for the truth in this Bill.

I should like to refer to what we inherited as a system. For example, a single-parent family in Ontario with two children and a zero family income receives from this whole system $1,484, whereas a similar family with an income of $50,000 nets $1,048 from it. In other words, the wealthy net 71 per cent of the amount netted by someone truly in need. The system which we inherited last September 4 from the Liberals is not a fair one. We cannot look at this whole system in a vacuum. It is really three separate distinct parts. There is a family allowance portion which is the cash which comes every month; there is the child tax credit and the child tax exemption. The family allowance is available to residents of Canada independent of the recipient's income. The rich get it and the poor get it. These benefits are taxable so they are of the greatest value to people on low income and are of progressively lower value as the income rises.

The second section of this over-all system is refundable tax credit which is a selective program in which a level of benefits is determined according to family income and above a specific threshold the assistance is phased out. Thus this program targets assistance to low-income people and less to the modest-income families.

The third segment of this over-all program is the child tax exemption which reduces the taxable income and thus provides benefits in proportion to the applicable margin rate. It helps the most affluent of our society.

Mr. Speaker, those are the three segments. Let us talk about what this proposal does. First, the child tax credit will be increased, commencing in the 1986 taxation year, by $70 per year per child. It will be increased a further $35 per child per year for each of the years 1987 and 1988. That Mr. Speaker, gives more money to the needy and in conjunction with this child tax credit the threshold is being lowered so, because of this modification, there will be less money available to the affluent of our society. The family allowance portion, that cash portion, is still universally available and will continue to be indexed for any consumer price index increase in excess of 3 per cent. The third segment, that exemption for dependent children, is currently $710 per child. It will be reduced until it is equal the value of the family allowance.

What do all these three things do? Basically it means that more money will go into the hands of the needy and less money will go into the hands of the affluent. Specifically, if you make a comparison of somebody earning $10,000 or less in family earnings, they will get an extra $328 per year per child between what they get in 1985 and what they will be getting in 1989. Conversely the affluent families earning $50,000 or greater in family earnings will decrease their benefits by $284. We have one increasing by $328 to the needy and the affluent decreasing their benefits by $284. I ask you, does this program help the needy? Yes. Is it less help for the affluent? Yes.

Mr. Speaker, I am very strongly in support of this program.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am glad I finally have the opportunity to stand up and say a few words against this particular feature of the Budget and against this procedure of the Government, the idea of having closure. We are now in a debate which is subject to time allocation as a way of preventing, I submit, our fellow Canadians from finding out what really is in this Budget. That is the reason we were so strongly against closure in the first place. That is the reason why the motion has been made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), to give the country some time to realize what is happening in this particular budget provision.

The Hon. Member across the aisle who just spoke was talking about the round one implications of this Bill. But, of course, the Bill has an impact on a number of policies that affect payments and tax credits for families over the next few years. To have talked about only the initial impact of the legislation is to misrepresent it. When one looks at the effect of this legislation over the next four, five or six years as the deindexing feature takes hold, what becomes apparent, and I wonder if my friend has the courage to recognize this and to admit it, is that those low-income families who initially benefit from an increased tax credit end up, with the impact of deindexing, further behind four years from now than they would have been if the Government had not bothered to bring this legislation forward.

It is not legislation to help poor families. It is legislation which gives a good talking point in year one, but by year four those very poor families to whom the Hon. Member opposite advertised and proclaimed this great reform will be further behind than they would have been if this budget measure had not been introduced. That is why we are standing up to oppose it. We want the poorest of Canadian families to know that this beneficent Government is looking to them and to some others over the next five years for a saving of over $11 billion in payments which would otherwise be going to families in Canada if the Government would take our advice and withdraw this feature of the Budget.

We do not think, of course, that it is as bad as the measure that they introduced for senior citizens, the one in which the deindexation caused near riots across the country and united senior citizens, maybe for the first time, to come forward and demand that that aspect of the Budget be withdrawn and that their contribution to and their interest in Canadian society be considered. If I can put it this way, they demanded that they be given a voice and be allowed to say what they felt should be in the Budget. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) consulted with a few friends in Etobicoke Centre and claimed that he had found some senior citizens who agreed with the deindexing, but when we asked him to identify them he could not do it. As the impact of the Budget on senior citizens became known to them they managed to come forward and communicate their wishes.

I say this is not as bad but, as my leader characterized it, it is a sneaky feature of the Budget because it makes the poorest families of the country believe that they are going to be better off as a result of this measure, and therefore they would be inclined to support it. However, four years down the road, as long as the rate of inflation is not more than 3 per cent, they will be worse off than they would have been if the Government would withdraw this feature of the Budget.

I am not asking Hon. Members opposite to take the word of a Liberal Member of Parliament or of the Official Opposition. The Canadian Social Welfare Council, which is not a Liberal organization, which is not in partisan politics, whose mandate is the poor and the poorest in our society, made this observation. It said this feature takes away from the well-to-do but it also takes away, after four years, from the poorest families in the country. We on this side of the House, the Liberals, are standing up for the poorest of families. We are asking the Government to leave the social welfare programs the way they are in that respect so that the poorest families will at least derive the same benefits they derive under the existing arrangements. If the Government really had a heart it would look to different approaches such as tax credits for the poorest families, a measure we do not oppose. It is a measure in which we would be in favour, but not when meshed with another feature which would result in reducing the amount of money going to the poorest families.

● (1650)

Not too much has been said in this debate about the impact this measure will have on average Canadians and on those families which are better off. I think that is as it should be. We have to be most concerned when we talk about a social program such as this one and about its impacts on the poor. I have many poor families in my constituency, most of whom will be hurt by this budget measure. Those families look to their Members of Parliament to be their voice. I wish to make this statement for them. I wish to tell them that we will continue to fight this provision in every way we can. Time allocation has been imposed on us and very little time has been allotted to debate this Bill. A propaganda campaign has been launched by Members opposite to make the poorest families think they are getting something extra out of this measure instead of having something taken away.

Mr. Redway: That's not propaganda.

Mr. Kaplan: The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) will be able to look at the impact of this measure when the next election is called. He will have to look at what he told the poor people in Toronto because by the time the next election comes around they will be receiving less, unless the Government pulls back on this measure now. I do not want to be side-tracked by my hon. friend.

I know the Government claims it believes in the family. The Government says it wants to use the responsibilities it has and the opportunities it has to reinforce the family. That is the issue which arises when one looks at the situation of the middle-income families affected by this Budget.

We know that the average income of a family in Canada is around $26,000 to $30,000 a year. If we consider a family with around $30,000 to $35,000 of family income, Members opposite will say this is a family that does not need the benefits of a social program. Members opposite will say that the effect of this Budget will be that the best of families, and even those in the middle, the ones I have just spoken about, will receive little value from the family allowance. I wish to argue that that is a mistake. The Government should not withdraw indirectly and piecemeal the universal feature of the family allowance. We recognize the fact that a family of whatever income level, be it average or middle, deserves greater recognition by the tax system of their situation than another individual with a similar income who has no family to support.

With respect to someone who is making $50,000 a year, we have heard arguments from Members opposite that that person does not need to be the beneficiary of any social program. That is not the way the Liberals look at the situation. We consider that a person earning $50,000 a year, who has no children and no dependants, should receive the same recognition in terms of the tax system when compared with another person with the same income who has a dependent spouse or who has children they are supporting and educating, doing all the things people wish to do for their families. What the Conservatives are saying to these people earning anywhere from $35,000 to $50,000 is that they should not expect any recognition from the state. Our argument is that that type of family situation, which involves extra expenses and so on, is something that society can afford to support and that we need to support in order to have a fair system. We want to encourage the family. We want our system of taxation and social programs to recognize that fact. Of course, a family in the middle should not receive the same benefits from fellow taxpayers for the children they are raising and for a dependent spouse as poor people receive. I have already made the case that the greatest need is with poor families, which is where we have to do the most. However, it is completely wrong to take this system and work toward the elimination of any recognition that there are extra costs involved and that this society has agreed and has a contract with families to recognize that.

With respect to not being able to afford our social welfare system, and I note my time is almost up, I wish to recognize the fact that more and more analysis is being done with respect to where Canada places internationally. We are not at the top of the list with respect to providing social benefits for our people, nor are we at the bottom. Of the 20 or 25 most prosperous countries we are near the bottom of the list with respect to what we do for our families. Provision of family allowance benefits is something which we can afford. The measure before us is a sneaky one. It is being misrepresented to Canadian people. We in the Liberal Party will do everything we can to prevent it from coming into effect.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few words with respect to the Bill before the House today. I wish to begin by saying that it is very unfortunate that the debate with respect to this Bill has been restricted by time allocation. It has been placed under the guillotine. There is no difference between the Bill before us which will partially eliminate the indexing of family allowances and the Bill which was before us last June with respect to deindexing old age pensions. Last June, the Conservative Party was attacking the old people of the country. Today, the Conservative Party is attacking the children of the country. It is really the same Bill. I think the Government is afraid to give the Bill the appropriate debating time because it realizes that if Canadian people realize what is going on, then, the opposition we saw last June will occur again with respect to the deindexation of family allowances.

I remember well back in June when Madame Denis confronted the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) out on the front lawn of the Parliament Buildings. In effect, she said to him that he had misled the Canadian people. She used much more colourful language than I can use in the House. She told him that he was not being honest with the Canadian people and that he had promised not to tamper with social programs such as the old age pension and family allowance. However, once in power he changed his mind and brought forward a Bill to partially deindex the old age pension. There was a massive uprising of senior citizens. If the children of the country could speak for themselves and organize as the senior citizens did, there would be as massive an uprising today with respect to this Bill as there was then.

For the life of me, I am amazed to see so many silent Conservative back-benchers in the House. During the election campaign they said that social programs were sacred and that they would not be deindexed. All of a sudden, they have changed their minds and are supporting a Bill which attacks the children of our country. They are doing this in the name of the deficit, or so they say. They say that the deficit is too large and that we have to save money. This Government has $1 billion to bail out large depositors in banks which went bankrupt, yet it cannot spend a few tens of millions of dollars for the kids of the country. This is money which goes to the women of Canada who, in many cases, are the poor people of the country.

By the year 1990, the Government will have saved around $500 million or $600 million through this partial deindexation measure. Now, with a snap of its fingers, the Government wants to spend nearly $1 billion to bail out the banks because of their bungling with respect to the bank fiasco. That is not right, nor is it proper. I do not think that is what those Members were elected for. We have to do whatever we can to force the Government to withdraw or amend this Bill.

Family allowances were instituted in the country back in 1945. Benefits were made universal for every Canadian mother in 1947. In 1947, some 7.7 per cent of our federal expenditures went to the payment of family allowances. That is down to only 2.4 per cent of the expenditures of the Government of Canada. About one third of what we spent in 1947 is being spent today in terms of relative expenditures of the Government. Yet it is saying the deficit is too large and it must cut back on social programs to save money so it can bail out "Barbara's banks". I do not agree with that and the ordinary people of this country do not agree and I am sure you, Mr. Speaker, in the chair, sometimes would like to rise and make a speech about how unfair this particular Bill is. That is not what the Government was elected for.

There is something else I find very strange. I remember the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) standing in this House of Commons last fall saying that the Conservative Party had a heart, it had compassion for the poor and that it would do whatever it could to help the ordinary Canadians in this country. He rose in the House and said that any money the Government saved by cutting back on certain social programs would be redistributed to the poorest people in this country in terms of improving the social programs for them. He said that none of this money would be used for cutting the deficit. That is not what the Conservative Party is saying now. It is not what the Minister of National Health and Welfare is saying now. He is saying the deficit is too high, that we have to cut back so that we can lower the deficit. I believe that once again, Mr. Speaker, we are seeing a really serious change of heart by the Government. No wonder people are cynical about politicians, about Governments and political Parties, when they are promised one thing and once these people are elected, they do exactly the opposite. I ask the Government where its priorities are.

I come from a part of the country where there is a tremendous drought. The farmers are in dire need. However, we are told day after day that the Government cannot provide an acreage payment. There can be no emergency assistance for the farmer because we have a big debt. We are now told that we have to cut back on family allowances which will affect the kids of this country and the welfare people of this country, because we have a big debt. At the same time the Government wants $1 billion to bail out the bankers in this country. It will spend hundreds of millions of dollars because of the $500,000 capital gains exemption which will basically go to the wealthy people of this country. It wants to spend hundreds of millions of dollars to subsidize the oil and gas industry. All of this, Mr. Speaker, adds up to billions of dollars. Yet we cannot spend a few extra tens of millions every year to make sure we have indexation of family allowances so that if the cost of living goes up 9 per cent, the family allowance will go up 9 per cent, or if the cost of living goes up 6 per cent, the family allowance will go up 6 per cent.

There are people in this country who, if the family allowance cheque is cut back by even $2 or $3 a child per month, will suffer. It is going to make a major impact on their budget in terms of buying milk and nutritious foods for their kids. The money that the mothers of this country receive for family allowances is money that they spend on consumer goods. That stimulates the economy and provides jobs for Canadians whether they buy milk which helps the dairy industry or clothes for the kids which helps the textile industry. They spend that money in the main creating jobs for Canadians.

I would like to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that I wish the Conservative Members of this Parliament would rebel a little. I wish they would stand up for the principles for which they were elected. I wish they would support the Government child benefits' position paper which was tabled last January. It said that it would redistribute income to help the poorest but it would not take away from social programs to reduce the deficit. I ask the Government Members, where is your courage, where are your convinctions for which you were elected? I ask them not to let the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister continuously push them around in terms of what is important in this country.

I remember when the Conservative Party was in opposition. Those Hon. Members used to make all kinds of speeches about the importance of universality of our social programs and how we should not be cutting back on things like that. All of a sudden they are in Government and they are doing the same thing the Liberal Party used to do year in and year out.

It was interesting to hear the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) speak about how concerned the Liberal Party was about family allowances. I only want to remind the House that back in 1970 the Liberal Party brought in a White Paper which would have virtually wiped out universality of our family allowances. It was called FISP, the Family Income Security Program. The Government wanted to put a cap of around $10,000 per family above which no family would receive the family allowance. Yet we heard a speech a moment ago about the importance of universality. After the Liberal Government tabled its particular White Paper on eliminating universality and family allowances, it introduced two Bills in the House of Commons, and the people of Canada rebelled against them and they were never passed. In 1972, we had a minority Parliament. The Government withdrew those Bills and because it was a minority Government, it doubled the family allowances and indexed them, which was a very progressive move. However, as soon as that Party received a majority once again, after 1974, we saw a cut-back in family allowances by some 20 per cent. Then we saw the family allowances being brought under the six and five program so that if the cost of living went up over six per cent and five per cent, of course, the poor families and their children lost. I therefore make an appeal for pressure to be put on the Conservative Members of Parliament, on the Minister and on the Prime Minister to be honest and true to the promises they made in the election campaign and to withdraw this Bill. The seniors of this country forced the Goverment to withdraw the Bill deindexing pensions last June. Just as that Bill attacked the seniors of this country, the Tories are now going after the children of Canada. The principle is the same and the people of Canada should rally to the defence of their kids and make sure the Government withdraws this very odious Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the House on Bill C-70, which concerns family allowances.

For a number of days I have heard the Opposition accusing the Government of launching an attack on the universality of social programs. The Liberals and New Democrats are saying that these measures are unfair, anti-family and regressive, and that such action is unconscionable. I wonder, Mr. Speaker. Where were these political wonders, where were the Tino Rossi stars we hear singing the same old song in the House for days on end, accusing us of launching an attack on our families? Where were they in 1982-83, Mr. Speaker, when interest rates had reached record levels amounting to sheer usury, and the Liberals even had to amend our loans legislation because interest levels were so high? Where were today's knights riding to the rescue of widows and orphans, when the cost of living index was at 12 and 13 per cent? What did they do to help families when they really needed help? They introduced the 6 and 5 program! They took away their purchasing power, they cut back their purchasing power by an annual 6 and 7 per cent. Today, those same people are here in the House, but at the time we never heard them speak. Maybe they were being restained by their Minister. That was the time their Members were told to keep quiet. At least our Ministers encourage us to speak in the House and defend legislation.

What we are proposing is for families to carry the first 3 per cent of indexation, and not 7 and 8 per cent as was the case in 1982-83. Today, those very same Members are saying: No, you cannot do that. You must give them full indexation. Ladies and gentlemen, why did you not speak up at the time? That was when you should have risen in the House and told your Government: We do not agree with that. What you are trying to do now is play for time and try to discredit the best Government Canada has had since Confederation.

You would have people believe we want to launch an attack on children, the elderly, the aged, and on just about everyone, but you are jealous of our record of activities for this first year.

I have 22 pages here, a summary of the 20 or so Bills and measures we introduced within a few months' time in the House. Looking at the economic indicators, we have more than 300,000 real jobs, not 20-weekers, no band-aid policies. We have created 300,000 real permanent jobs since September. When we came to power, interest rates were at 13 and 14 per cent, and we have brought them back to a seven-year low: 9 per cent at the present time.

An Hon. Member: Not your fault!

Mr. Ferland: Not our fault? Come on! Where were you at the time... Just because we made it possible, because it is happening, it cannot be the present Government's fault... Luckily the Liberals were there to make it happen. You should have made it happen at the time, gentlemen, when you were in power and you were able to. The trouble is, you had the support of the New Democrats in all this!

• (1710)

The consumer price index has declined. National reconciliation is something over which the Liberals never did lose much sleep. What have we done? The economic and regional development agreement signed with Quebec, British Columbia and Ontario; improved search and rescue facilities off the coasts of Newfoundland; the Atlantic energy agreement; the acid rain program; the settlement of the Mirabel dispute; the western agreement on energy; the transfer of five wildlife interpretation centres to private industry; the Yukon agreement on financing reform; the agreement with the Northwest Territories concerning the financing formula. Those are some of our achievements, Mr. Speaker, but the Liberals are trying to hoodwink the Canadian people and the Canadian taxpayers by telling them that the Progressive Conservatives are undermining the social programs.

Mr. Rossi: It is true!

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, we are not undermining the social programs, on the contrary we want to strengthen them. I will tell you all about—

Mr. Rossi: It is true, you are being unfair!

Mr. Ferland: I will tell you all about our achievements and our concerns over the past year, the joint studies on the feasibility of the Saguenay marine park in Quebec. What about consultation? We set up review committees on illegal immigrants; briefing documents on vocational training; the conference on taxation on authors and actors; the establishment of a private sector committee to review the activities of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation; consultation papers on child and elderly benefits. So what have we done? We have not done anything over the past year? And that is not the end of the list: consultation papers on farm taxation; perhaps you think that is of no interest to the Canadian farming community? On the contrary, they know we took action, they know we are not launching an attack against their children and their families. Then there were consultation papers on small businesses.

Mr. Rossi: How is that?

Mr. Ferland: Small businesses also know that we are not attacking children and workers. Consultation papers on the mining industry, on tourism, the national economic conference, something the Liberals were never able to achieve. National unity: you never did understand the meaning of it. The proposed minimum tax: you kept talking about if for years, but we did come up with a concrete proposal. The refundable research and development investment tax credit, the special tax credit for regional investment; the regions, something which did not even exist for the Liberals. Extension of the small business bond program. We are also taking care of small businesses. We have closed down the Canadian Unity Information Centre. We know what it was used for under the Liberals. New air traffic control techniques, improved services to small businesses through Canada Employment Centres.

Let me continue to list these extraordinary achievements, Mr. Speaker. A committee responsible for looking into the productivity mandate of Canada Post, a problem which the Liberals have failed to solve. Report of the internal task force on possible improvements to the administration of the veterans' pensions. Privatization of the Northern Transportation Company Ltd. Announcement concerning the Unemployment Insurance premiums: no change in 1985.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the Hon. Member to deal... I understand that he is quoting from this document, but I would like him to stick to the amendment and the debate.

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, I was merely trying to prove that the opposition parties are making every effort to divert the attention... I do not have to add anything to what my hon. friends have said about the validity of this Bill. With this filibuster, the Liberals are trying to prevent this Bill from going to committee for a clause by clause examination.

That is all what I wanted to say.

Mr. Gauthier: That is enough, you have not said much.

[English]

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the subject of family allowances. I am one of the few who will have that opportunity because, unfortunately, this important measure has had time allocation or closure placed upon it. That means those of us in the Opposition who would like to present our concerns as Members of Parliament on behalf of our constituents will be denied an opportunity to do so. It is an important subject and it is too bad that the Government feels it must muzzle us, silence us, and strangle us. Even though we have a rather small number of people in Opposition, apparently it is still too many for the Government and it has to impose upon us the silence of closure.

Nonetheless, I have this opportunity to make my voice heard today and speak on behalf of my constituents. At the moment I have in mind a single parent in my riding who is living on welfare. Her husband just walked out and left her with two children aged two and four. Her husband, of course, "cannot be found". Mrs. Smith, as I will call her, has a grade 12 high school diploma. Before her marriage she worked as a receptionist. Now she has no money. Her husband cleaned out the bank accounts. She is using our welfare system to buy food and pay her rent. Of course, she is going to have to find a new and cheaper apartment to try and make ends meet. She has to find a job which is never and easy task, especially these days. She has to find someone to look after the kids. She has to cope with the devastating loss of her husband, loss of status as a married woman, her enormous financial difficulties, the hurt feelings of her children; in other words, the stress of these emotional problems. Yet this Government wants to take money away from this woman's mothers' allowance. This Government wants to deindex the baby bonus and, in due course, the child tax credit. It does not want to pay for the rising cost of living for this woman, the increase in cost of groceries or rent or clothing or drugs or whatever. The Government will only give her money in her baby bonus cheque to cover inflation in excess of 3 per cent. Most of us know that inflation right now is around 4 per cent. In other words, there will be no indexation for almost all of the inflation. This woman's ability to purchase the things she needs will be constantly reduced.

The baby bonus or, as it is sometimes called, the family allowance is often the only independent source of income for women such as Mrs. Smith who face enormous problems with suddenly having to cope in a situation. Therefore, why on earth would this Government want to do anything to hurt her even more? Perhaps we should not be surprised. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is dumping on the poor once again. He did it to the seniors and now he is doing it to the Mrs. Smiths of this country. He is going to take $55 million from them in family benefits by 1987. Yes, $55 million by 1987. At the same time that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is doing all this, he says he will increase the child tax credit for the neediest families.

Mr. Redway: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Corneille: They say "hear, hear". What a sad week the Tories have had, Mr. Speaker.

This all sounds good on paper, but once again this Government is trying to put one over on the people. Whether it is canned tuna or the banks or any other thing, it is another attempt to put something over, slide it by, as the Government tried to do with the senior citizens. The truth is the Government is really not going to increase the incomes of the neediest families at all. In three years the child tax credit will be deindexed and this will have the effect of reducing the actual spending money in real dollars that a needy family will get.

I would like to refer to an editorial in The Toronto Star which I hope is being read by all people who have children and by all people who have compassion, whether they are rich or poor. The editorial reads:

> According to the budget papers, an Ontario family of four whose income is $20,000 a year (below the poverty line in a large city) now receives a total of $1,673 in a child benefits. By 1989, the value of the benefits would rise to $1,812 under the proposed reforms. But these figures are misleading since they ignore the cumulative effect of inflation. If it is 4 per cent a year between now and 1989, the real value of these benefits in 1989 would not be $1,812 but $1,549, actually less than they are getting now.

That is not more for the neediest families, that is less than they are getting now. Mr. Speaker, this is a two-faced Government which gives with one hand while it takes with the other. My hon. friends on the Tory benches still refuse to look at evidence like this and refuse to listen to the counsel of social services that are the most responsible and represent the poor and the needy. They do not want to hear that evidence. They want to continue to move forward with blinders and insist that they, in their wisdom, know what is best for the poor. They do not even listen to something that is in black and white in every newspaper in the land. They refuse to hear the words as the poor cry out to them.

How is this possible? Is not one of the purposes of the Government in deindexing the universal baby bonus by 3 per cent to free up more money to give to the poorer families? Is that not what the Government keeps telling us? Is that not what the tell-the-truth Prime Minister and his Minister of Finance are telling us in their reasoning? Mr. Speaker, the Government does not seem to find it easy to tell it like it really is. It hedges and blames others as the Prime Minister has been doing in the fishy tuna incident and the investigations about the banks. This Government, this Minister of Finance, and this Prime Minister cannot seem to tell it like it is because, if they could, they would tell the Canadian public that a needy family in my riding will not gain anything by the so-called increase in child tax credits because the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are going to deindex the child tax credit too so that the gains this poor family might have made will be wiped out by inflation and additional taxation which the Government is also proposing in its unfair Budget.

The Tories will gouge this poor family of four which is struggling to live on $20,000 a year by $239 by 1989. This is how the Government claims it is going to help families like this. What is more, Mr. Speaker, the baby bonus comes to the single mother in my riding, of whom I was speaking, immediately and directly when she needs it month after month and she often depends upon it as the only source of cash which she can say is hers. That is going to be reduced. It is cruel to do this to our families in need. It is shameful to try to pull the wool over the eyes of Canadians and say that deindexing the baby bonus will add money to the federal treasury which will then be used to help the poor and the needy. It is not true.

The Government says that it wants to cut the deficit so it tries to deindex seniors' pensions and deindexes our taxes in a sneaky way while spending billions of dollars on a bank fiasco and giving $500,000 capital gains grants to the wealthy. The poor, the weak, and the middle class will be the victims of the Government's financing. It is no wonder, Mr. Speaker, that confidence in the Government is rapidly dissipating.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I participate in this debate today. It is amazing to see the hypocrisy of Liberals standing in the House and criticizing the Government for indexing family allowances. It is absolutely astounding. For example, the backbench of the Liberal Party, as they were gutting old age pensions and social programs, sat like a bunch of sheep and clapped when Mr. Trudeau stood up in the House and said that this is good for people. They stood like sheep backing a Government destroying social programs. The ironic thing is that maybe today the Conservative back-benchers should have a look at themselves. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to some of them today.

What have they been supporting since the Government came to power on September 4 after they wandered the land making promises on both sides of issues raising expectations out of sight? Mr. Speaker, the Government has raised taxes. We are not only talking about family allowances today, we are talking about the style of Government and gutless back-benchers. What have they been supporting? Every time the dude from Baie Comeau—pardon me, the right hon. gentleman from Baie Comeau—stands up in this House we see the back-benchers cheering and clapping for the raising of taxes which will affect low and middle-income Canadians. If that is what they believe in, the next election will tell the tale. The Conservative back-benchers have been supporting cuts in Government services which affect low and middle-income Canadians and a whole wealth of programs that we treasure in this country. The sacred god that these people worship is Government cuts and smaller public service. However, the cuts and tax increases always seem to affect the low and middle-income Canadians.

The Opposition has a big caucus today, but that will not last forever, especially with what it is doing. I have seen numerous Conservative back-benchers back the deindexing of the old age pension until it was shown that it was one of the most colossal political errors ever committed by any Government. Then the Government moved back. The Cabinet and the Planning and Priorities Committee realized that they had made a terrible mistake and hung the Conservative back-benchers out to dry. The back-benchers were asked for their support and when they gave it they wound up holding the bag. Their constituents will remember whether they spoke out publicly for them. It is time to show some guts and speak up when policies are wrong. Your constituents will remember your record and we will be there to help them.

It is absolutely wrong to deindex pensions of members of the Armed Forces. Yet, back-benchers support a Budget which advocates that. None of them are speaking out against that. Their constituents will know that before the next election. They will know that they failed to speak out. Deindexation of the pensions of public servants is a wrong-headed policy and the constituents of the Conservative back-benchers will know that. A few of the back-benchers may have the guts to speak out. That is the character of this Government. We do not blame the Cabinet Ministers. We know the things they have done and the directions they have taken.

With regard to the Prime Minister's integrity, the other day a poll indicated that 30 out of 30 people thought that he was not being forthcoming, but, of course, that was not the term they used. I would challenge the Conservative back-benchers to stand up and show some guts and some leadership to their electorate. Throughout the tuna scandal, I wonder if the sheep in the Conservative back-bench—the people—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to speak to the motion.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, we are building the context within which to develop the critical thoughts about deindexing family allowance. I will come to the point. Since we know the view of the Cabinet, the deindexing of family allowance shows the failure of the back-benchers to stand up and say that this is a misguided policy. They do not stand up to say that they do not believe in attacking women in Canada and eroding their income because it is the only source of income for many women who are attempting to raise children. Rather than showing independence, the Conservative back-benchers are prepared to stand up publicly and applaud those who are proposing this measure. They are attacking children in this country because those children and families depend on that income. As the inflationary process continues, they fall farther and farther back. It is not Members of Parliament or bank managers whose families fall further back, it is low and middle income people in this country. They are the ones who these back-benchers are attacking.

When will they have the courage to stand up and speak against those who are determined to deindex the old age pension and thereby leave those back-benchers high and dry? When will they speak out against those who created the bank scandal and failed to protect the interests of Canada? They assured us that they did not create this scandal but then watched two banks suddenly fail.

When will those back-benchers stand up publicly to say that they are not part of that mess and are not interested in defending it? When will they show their integrity by speaking out publicly in the interest of those issues for which their constituents elected them?

Considering the Government's past actions, it is certainly time for back-benchers to speak out and not become sheep like Liberal Members during the Trudeau era. It was sad and disgusting to see and I remember many Conservative Members opposite criticizing those Liberal Members. The Liberals deserved that criticism when one recalls the deindexing of social programs, although I recognize some Members who spoke out and now have been sent to oblivion.

The time has come and I believe that the political future of many Members opposite has been cast because people in their ridings—especially senior citizens—have listened for a public statement of solidarity to protect their interests.

An Hon. Member: We were here.

Mr. Skelly: I saw you here. Everyone else saw you here, cheering the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on, saying, "Go for it, Brian". However, we saw the Prime Minister take a 180 degree turn and drop the whole deindexing issue because it was politically dangerous for him while leaving those Members hanging in the wind.

The Bill before us today is as misguided as the proposal to deindex Old Age Security or any Bill that has been introduced. When the constituents of Members opposite ask what their position was on this issue, those Members will say that they were right behind the Prime Minister when he was taking money from their pockets with respect to the family allowance because they thought their constituents had too much money and were living too high on the hog. They will say that they were right behind the Prime Minister when he jacked up taxes affecting low and middle income Canadians because they had too much money. They will say they were there when the Government took money from the pensiona of retired members of the Armed Forces, the RCMP and public servants. They will say they were there when the Prime Minister decided to increase the price of gas and thereby take more money out of the pockets of their constituents.

The point I am making is that Conservative back-benchers are exactly like back-bench Liberal Members of the previous Government, and they know what happened to them. The day draws nigh. Let us see some courage and integrity over there for a change.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry. I recognized the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Do you want to speak?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No.

Mr. Gauthier: Even the Government House Leader does not want to speak. I do not blame him for not wanting to speak.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I want to speak.

Mr. Gauthier: I think it is dishonourable to have such a motion before the House to cut off debate so quickly.

Mr. Boudria: Let the record show that the House Leader does not want to speak.

Mr. Gauthier: The record now shows that the Government House Leader does not want to speak. I don't blame him. Mr. Speaker, today we are speaking to a motion put by my hon. friend, the Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), to hoist this debate six months hence so that this measure will receive the necessary study and serious consideration it deserves.

In 1981-82, the Progressive Conservative Party published an advertisement which stated, "You have heard a lot about the Constitution lately but how much have you heard about deindexing?" It goes on to make several points which are enlightening and interesting. For instance, it states, "The less your income, the harder you get hit". That means that indexing helps those who have less income. Therefore, indexing helps those maintain their purchasing power and gives them a chance to fight inflation and fight lower income.

The ad says, "Deindexing would take away the protection you now have against inflation". That is what the Conservatives were telling Canadians in 1981. The ad goes on to say, "But while deindexing would impose the greatest economic hardships on people living on low incomes, it would mean higher and higher taxes for all Canadians living on any income". It says that deindexing would mean a massive tax increase for all Canadians. That is what the Progressive Conservatives said.

This spring I asked constituents in my riding what they thought of the Government's proposal to deindex the family allowance, the Old Age Security and family benefits, particularly the proposal to deindex the income tax table. Out of 2,733 who responded, 73 per cent said to keep the system as it is and not touch it; 10 per cent said to reduce the monthly instalments to $20; 16 per cent said to abolish the program and 1 per cent had no opinion. When 73 per cent of my constituents say that they want to keep the system, I listen.

Did the Government ask Canadians for that kind of mandate to cut indexing? They would never dare attempt that. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) said, "If I told you what I think we will do, we would never get elected". He said that it would be unbelievable for them to tell the truth.

The Government asks for trust and understanding but it deserves to be told that they are a bunch of reactionaries. They are reacting to events and God knows that there has been enough reaction. We want leadership in this country. Canadians do not want leadership about tuna issues and deindexing family allowances, they want leadership to deal with jobs and a social security system that will be maintained. Canadians do not want the Conservatives to tamper with our social security system in order to lower the deficit.

The Government promised Canadians that the deficit would not be lowered by reducing social programs. However, in a few minutes we will vote on a measure introduced by the Government to deindex family allowances. I think we are justified in suggesting that the Government is being dishonourable by using deindexing to increase its revenues.

I want to say to all Canadians who are listening that the result of a reduction in child benefits and income tax benefits between 1986 and 1990 will cost the poorest families in Canada with an average annual income of $15,000, some $1,879. Middle income families earning $35,000 a year who have two children will see a reduction in their income of $3,452. Those wealthier families earning $80,000 or more who have two children would see a decrease of $1,125.

Who was taking it on the jaw, Mr. Speaker? The middle-income people and the poor, not the rich. That is unacceptable to us. We will vote against this motion for deindexing and we will vote against this Government when it brings in such regressive measures.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the short time I have available before the Government motion to reduce debate takes effect, I would like to express my displeasure with Bill C-70 before us, which is an attempt to deindex the family allowances paid to mothers by 3 per cent per year. The effect will be to reduce money mothers have to spend on their children. By 1990, this will have reduced the actual spending power of Canadian families by $600 million. Why did it happen to mothers and children when the Government backed off on a similar proposal to pensioners?

I think it is very clear. The Government found when it was dealing with pensioners that it was dealing with an older, politically experienced, group of people. Children and mothers do not have time nor the experience to organize politically. They have other things to do. Pensioners are voters. They have long memories and they will be around for the next election. Pensioners would analyze the effects of deindexing when it came time to vote next time. Children do not have votes.

Unfortunately, this callous Government has decided that since children do not have votes, there is no one there to listen to and so the Government can go ahead and make the reduction without any thought being taken to people's special needs.

There are special needs, Mr. Speaker. In a recent report from British Columbia, it shows that 10 per cent of that province's population and 10 per cent of its children are living in real poverty. It is estimated with this change and other changes foreseen in British Columbia that fully one-third of British Columbia's children will be living in poverty by 1990.

I see your signal, Mr. Speaker. I hope the House will vote against this proposal to deindex pensions today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It now being 5.42 p.m., according to an order made on Thursday, September 26, 1985, pursuant to Standing Order 84, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of this Bill.

[English]

The question is as follows: Mr. Epp (Provencher), seconded by Mrs. Blais-Grenier moves that Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and on the amendment of Mr. Frith, seconded by Mr. Robichaud that the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Frith) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition would be willing to have the results of this vote apply to the vote on the main motion but, of course, in the reverse.

Mr. Deans: We are also willing to have the reverse of the vote apply, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the offer made by the Opposition. Even if we lost the vote, I am sure we would have an overwhelming victory and come back with 250 seats.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is the following one. Mr. Epp (Provencher) moves that Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Epp (Provencher)), which was agreed to on the following division:

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

SOCIAL SECURITY

ADVISABILITY OF EXTENDING SPOUSAL ALLOWANCE PROGRAM

Following the interruption of Thursday, April 18, of Mr. Malepart's motion, the House resumes said consideration:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should reconsider its intention to limit the eligibility of the spousal allowance to needy widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64 and that it should extend the program to all persons of this age group living alone and having the same means, without taking their marital status into account.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I rise to reply to a motion presented by a Member who is not in the House, but I trust the information will be passed on to him.

Mr. Waddell: He is finished with debate.

Mrs. Bertrand: I am referring to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), who is asking the Government to reconsider its intention to limit eligibility to needy widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear there is one point that must be made above all and it is that the Government has not restricted eligibility to the spousal allowance. On the contrary, it has expanded eligibility, since thanks to recent changes to the program, 85,000 new recipients will be benefiting from this allowance. I cannot imagine how the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie could see this improvement as limiting eligibility. The Government and 85,000 new recipients see this change as a step in the right direction and a step towards greater social justice.

Like many other social programs, the spousal allowance is not a panacea. It has evolved and will continue to do so, reflecting the changing needs of our society. I say evolve, because even in 1975 when it was introduced, the program was far from perfect. At the beginning the spouse's allowance program was available only to the spouses of old age security pensioners who were getting both the basic old age pension and the guaranteed income supplement, provided the spouse was between the ages of 60 and 64 and the income of the couple did not exceed a set ceiling. This program had been designed to help only those low income couples whose sole source of income was the old age security benefits paid only to the pensioned spouse.

Although this new program did contribute to improve the living conditions of a category of elderly people, its promoters had excluded a fair number of destitute individuals aged 60 to 64—widows, widowers, persons living alone, and married couples, if both spouses were under age 65. Since then, however, the initial eligibility conditions have been relaxed and the program made more generous in order to better meet the needs of a greater number of disadvantaged people within our society.

First of all, in 1979, the coverage of the program was extended so that, when a pensioner died, the surviving younger spouse could continue receiving this allowance. Later, in 1985, the coverage was extended to all widows and widowers between 60 and 64 years of age whose incomes are low, no matter the age of the spouse when he or she died.

Mr. Speaker, you certainly remember that before this amendment to the spouse's allowance, there was a good time to become a widow or a widower and a bad time. If the death of the spouse occurred when he or she was 65 years old or over, the surviving spouse was eligible for an allowance. If, on the other hand, the spouse died at age 64, the widow or widower was not eligible for the allowance. We have eliminated this condition which, more often than not, resulted in disastrous consequences: in addition to being faced with the loss of a loved one, the widow or widower had to cope with a painful financial situation.

Mr. Speaker, we have eliminated this unfair situation, and I am proud of it. We have corrected an injustice against many Canadian men and women who now owe their peace of mind to an amendment to an existing program and not from a program right out of Utopia.

Since September 1985, the spouse's allowances have been made available to all needy widows and widowers between the age of 60 and 64, no matter how old their spouse was when he or she passed away. Rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that when the Government decided to grant the spouse's allowance exclusively to widows and widowers, it never crossed its mind, as the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie seems to believe, that they were more deserving than other Canadians because of their legal status.

Rather, it decided, in view of the limited resources available, to help without further ado one at least of the groups of early retirees in need. Would it be rational, Mr. Speaker, for the Government to deny help to one group it could assist, under the pretext that available financial resources do not allow it to help everyone? In my view, the Government has the moral obligation to help to the extent it can those who are most vulnerable in our society. The new measure now being the extension of the spouse's allowance program to 85,000 people who were excluded since its inception in 1975.

Needless to say, legislators have a difficult task. Every legislative measure has limits. Also, every social program has special eligibility criteria. Let us take for instance the unemployment insurance program. To qualify, one must have had insurable employment for a specified number of weeks.

If we look at the eligibility criteria for total or partial pension under Old Age Security, we find that a person must be 65 or older and meet certain residence requirements. There are other programs, such as veterans allowances, workmen's compensation and so on that have special eligibility criteria.

One may ask: Why do all social programs have eligibility criteria? One thing is certain, they are intended to meet specific needs, to face circumstances which Canadian men and women face in every day life such as death, disability, unemployment, old age. All social programs have different goals, but their only reason is to help persons in need. Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, we would much prefer helping every person in need, but our resources are not unlimited.

The recent change in the program will cost Canadian taxpayers $190 million for the 1985-86 fiscal year and $350 million in 1986-87. To extend the Spouse Allowance Program, as suggested by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), to all low income citizens between 60 and 64 years old whatever their marital status would cost an estimated $1.5 billion. New expenditures as substantial as this are impossible in the present economic situation. This is why we cannot introduce for the moment the kind of new social benefits suggested by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to add that this Government is helping and will continue to help people who have difficulty making ends meet and who are not eligible to the spousal allowance. Indeed, these people can receive assistance under provincial programs the costs of which are shared equally by the Federal Government and the provinces. While there are still people between the ages of 60 and 64 who cannot be eligible to the spousal allowance, it still remains that, since September 1, 85,000 of them are better off than before.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words about the motion which is presently before the House. During debate on the Bill which expanded the benefits under the spousal allowance program to include the individuals who are covered by the Bill, the Minister neglected to include those individuals who are over age 60 and, by circumstances or by choice, never married. The Hon. Stantley knowles has often said in this House that it is totally discriminatory to adopt that kind of attitude. What the Government is doing in essence is saying to women over age 60 that if they did not choose to live with a man in a common law relationship or to become married, that they would not be eligible for any pension benefits or spousal allowance after age 60. That is the major complaint the opposition has in this measure and I presume that is why the Hon. Member for Montréal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) presented his motion to the House.

I made the lengthy argument during second reading of that particular Bill when it was before the House and I do not intend to take up too much time at this point except to point out several things. While the Government argues that it cannot afford to include those single elderly people in this measure because of fiscal restraints, I find it strange that the Government did not use the same argument when it managed to find a substantial amount of money to bail out a couple of banks. We do not know who, because the Government will not give us the information, but in effect, the Government is going to give a sizeable chunk of the taxpayers' dollars to individuals who have invested in excess of $60,000 in that particular bank to compensate them for any moneys lost over that amount. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, to be a little bit cynical, if not hypocritical, to make the argument that the Government cannot help the single elderly because it does not have the fiscal means to do it at the present time.

I would like to quote what someone once said about this:

> The fact that we have 600,000 elderly Canadians living in poverty in a country as rich and bountiful as Canada, in a society supposedly as compassionate and humane as ours, is a national disgrace. The fact that this has been allowed to continue month after month, year after year, is a telling indictment of the Government. The Government is breft of ideas, drained of decency and unable to recognize the priorities which must be dealt with in this society. I know the Government has its priorities: Bail-outs of de Havilland, Canadair and Maislin; bonuses for executive officers in de Havilland and the Canada Development Investment Corporation; . . . We know what the priorities of the Government are. For the people who have, throughout their lifetimes, worked for and contributed to the development of this great country, there is only a promise trotted out time and time again that some day, some time, they too will become a priority.
> Is it any wonder, Sir, that today we condemn the Government? We condemn it not only for its failure to introduce legislation that would meet the current needs of today's elderly poor, but also for its failure to bring about long overdue pension reform of the whole system so that we can ensure that the poverty of today will not be meted out to those who will be senior citizens in 10, 20 or 30 years' time. We must begin to come to grips with this issue and reverse what is happening.

The words I have just quoted were said by the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald), who is now the Minister of Employment and Immigration, on May 10, 1984, when she was in opposition and was levelling a great deal of criticism at the previous Government for not doing exactly what we argue the present Government should be doing today.

I know that the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands has been a strong advocate on behalf of women and women's rights. She has been a strong advocate for adequate pensions for elderly Canadians. I know she is as disappointed as we are that the Government did not include the single elderly who have never been married under the provisions of that particular Bill.

What I am really saying, Mr. Speaker, is that it is time Governments stopped saying they do not have the fiscal capability of helping people who really need it at present and that they will look into it when the economy improves. The same argument has been used for many years for not increasing pensions for those between 60 and 64 who are single and elderly. It is time this Government stopped that and said it will put an end to this nonsense, do what should be done and include those individuals in this legislation.

The Government has argued that seniors, if not collectively then certainly on a selective basis, have other Government programs available which make life a bit easier. For example, there is the rent geared to income formula for CMHC housing. However, earlier this year CMHC notified tenants in buildings it owns and operates that it proposed to increase rents this year in the neighbourhood of 10.4 per cent. In one building located in my constituency, the Main Square apartment building, the tenants have been so notified. There are many elderly people living in those buildings and that increase practically eliminates the $50 increase they got in the supplement last year. It will wipe it out. They will be no better off. In my arguments to the Minister I have said that is totally unfair to seniors. You cannot give them an increase with one hand and then take it back with the other as this Government is doing.

As well, I understand that CMHC is flying kites at this time. Under the rent geared to income program you pay a maximum of 25 per cent of your monthly income in rent. I understand that CMHC is seriously considering raising that limit to 30 per cent. This, on top of everything else the Government is doing to seniors, will devastate many of them.

Most seniors that I know of have a very hard time of it living on a month-to-month basis. When you consider what CMHC will be doing in these subsidized apartment buildings, in addition to all the other items we saw in that Budget last May, things such as increased taxes on gasoline, alcohol, cigarettes, reduced personal exemptions as well as deindexation, we estimate that in all probability this will reduce the disposable income of seniors by something like $500 a year. That is $500 a year they cannot afford to give up.

Rather than talking this Bill out so that it becomes a dead issue after today, if Government back-benchers had any sense of fair play and decency at all they would agree to refer this Bill to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs so we can hear from senior citizens. They have not had a chance to talk about what the Government is doing to or not doing for them. Why not allow seniors to come before that committee and tell us how they are living today? In that way, all Members can get a better appreciation of the difficult financial circumstances they are living in, and perhaps we collectively could persuade the Cabinet to do what is right and proper to ensure that senior Canadians who have given their lives to our country are allowed to live their years of retirement in dignity.

As I said, I am not going to take up too much time. I have said what I wanted to say. It is up to the Government and Members opposite to do the right thing by the seniors of this country.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to make further comments on the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) which asks that the spouses allowance benefit be extended to all needy persons aged 60 to 64 who live alone, regardless of their marital status.

It gives me particular pleasure to discuss this subject on the final day of September, because in the past few days thousands of needy widows and widowers in the 60 to 64 year old age group have already received their first spouses allowance cheques as a result of legislation passed by this Parliament on June 20 and given Royal Assent on June 28.

In his first speech delivered to the House regarding this Bill on April 18 the Hon. Member, I think rather misleadingly, stated that the intention of the legislation is to limit the eligibility of the spousal allowance to needy widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64. He seems to wish to imply that the Government has introduced a cut-back in this program which, in recent years, has grown into an increasingly important vehicle for assisting significant numbers of needy Canadians in that near elderly age group. However, the Government did not limit but rather expanded the existing program to provide income assistance to all needy widow and widowers in this age group.

I believe, then, it will be helpful for the Hon. Member to recognize that no single assistance program can respond to the requirements of all needy Canadians. In a democracy social programs inevitably are designed to provide the maximum possible assistance to a recognized group of beneficiaries within the limitations imposed by current and foreseeable economic realities. Improvements are possible over time in these programs. None of them are perfect and we concede that. All Members will agree that the needs of many groups in our society are of importance and concern to us. But no Government, past, present or future, would have the economic capacity to deal with all of those needs in one single step. It just cannot be done. Everyone must have the courage to look at the situation in their time with a sense of both justice and compassion and decide where the dollars, however limited, can be spent to achieve a positive goal.

To properly appreciate the intention of this Government's new legislation in extending this spouses allowance to all needy widowed persons in the near elderly age group, I think one must first look back to the benefit's introduction 10 years ago. The spouses allowance was created at that time for the particular purpose of assisting low-income couples where only one partner had reached the age of eligibility for the OAS basic pension and the income-tested GIS. Prior to the introduction of the spouses allowance these couples had to get by on benefits designed only for one pensioner and, at best, depending on the couple's assets and resources as well as available income, the younger spouse might have been eligible for provincial welfare. The spouses allowance, however, when introduced, provided these couples with an income guarantee which could be compared with that available to low-income pensioner couples where both had been become eligible for the OAS basic pension and the supplement.

In 1979 the federal Government extended the program so that a recipient, or even a widowed individual who became eligible for benefits at the time of his or her pensioner-spouse's death, could remain eligible for the allowance until reaching age 65 and becoming eligible for full Old Age Security benefits including the supplement.

Nonetheless, there continued to be criticism that the program could be considered arbitrary in providing benefits to men and women who, after they had reached their sixtieth birthday, were married to a pensioner-spouse eligible for the Guaranteed Income Supplement who died subsequently, but not to widows and widowers who had lost their spouse before they could become eligible for the allowance. I am gratified, Mr. Speaker, that our new legislation has corrected this anomaly. We can be proud that we have gone one step further in developing the spouse's allowance program and, consequently, in extending to more Canadians the protection of Canada's on-going system of social program benefits.

I believe I should remind the Hon. Member that the extension of spouse's allowance benefits to all needy widowed individuals from age 60 to 64 was a major recommendation of the all-Party parliamentary task force on pension reform in its final report to the House of Commons during December 1983. The task force's recommendation was made, moreover, for the same reasons that I have been discussing.

I trust, therefore, that the Hon. Member can now agree that our recent improvement to the spouse's allowance program has implemented an important expansion in benefits under the program, and not a restriction as the wording of his motion would indicate. We consider that this legislation, Mr. Speaker, is an important step toward greater social justice.

Naturally, I recognize that there are other persons in need in the 60 to 64 age group who will not benefit from this initiative. Nevertheless, I believe that this improvement to the spouse's allowance is a clear demonstration of the federal Government's firm commitment to provide assistance for all needy Canadians. I can assure the Hon. Member that the decision to extend the spouse's allowance at the present time to all low-income widowed individuals in this age group was not based on any assumption that such persons are more deserving than any others simply by virtue of their former marital status. Rather, given our limited financial resources, it was felt that we had to immediately improve assistance for at least one segment of Canada's near elderly population who have been facing severe financial hardship.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I must emphasize the commitment upon which all members of the present federal Government have agreed, to fiscal responsibility and, in particular, to an improvement in our control of the alarming rise in Canada's national debt. I must point out that the cost of the Hon. Member's proposed amendment to the spouse's allowance legislation would be an additional $300 million during the first full fiscal year. He may be aware, also, that there have been proposals to extend spouse's allowance benefits to all low-income married couples where both partners are between ages 60 and 65. The cost of this proposal would be in the order of $820 million annually. In fact, to extend the spouse's allowance to all single and married low-income individuals in this age group would cost in the order of $1.5 billion per year. Such a drastic expansion of social program benefits that are funded from general taxation revenues is simply out of the question in light of the nation's present economic situation. That is why the level of increased assistance that the Government has determined can be responsibly undertaken at the present time has been directed to a group of Canadians who are among those most in need, namely, 60 to 64 year old widows and widowers.

Rather than lament what might be, Mr. Speaker, we should continue to do what can be done in a fiscally responsible way to help the members of our society most in need while not imposing an unfair burden on all Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to follow my distinguished colleague, the Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) and participate in this second round of debate on the motion of the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). It is interesting to note that neither he nor any other member of the official Opposition is present for the discussion on such an important subject matter.

Mr. Keeper: The real Opposition is here.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Of course, as all Members are now aware, it is not just the Government's intention to extend the spouse's allowance program to include all widowed persons 60 to 64 years of age; the Government has already done so effective September 1985. Now, for the first time, 85,000 widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64 are guaranteed a level of income which is adequate to meet their basic living costs. This group of low income near-elderly persons, like the 89,000 persons who were previously entitled to spouse's allowance, are receiving very necessary and well-deserved financial assistance from the federal Government.

I recognize that it is very easy to criticize a social program. One can always fault the program's design, its eligibility criteria, its benefit amount, and also its cost. I for one want to see more praise for our social programs, not the least of which is the spouse's allowance program. This program is a prime example. These programs have enjoyed the support of all Canadians because they are directing help where it is most needed. Let us ensure that they will continue to deserve their support by keeping social program costs at an affordable level.

Through the application of an income test, many 60 to 64 year old persons residing in this country are provided with sufficient income to assure them some measure of comfort and security so that they can live with dignity. Mr. Speaker, the 60 to 64 year olds in receipt of spouse's allowance—the vast majority of whom are women—have supported this country in many ways over the years. In this group we find the mothers who have stayed in the home for the better part of their adult lives raising their children, caring for their sick relatives, and providing the necessary volunteer labour without which most of our community projects could not operate. This was an important role that these women played in the unpaid labour market for most of their adult lives. They depended financially on the earnings of their husbands.

These women are now widowed, and with their husband's death went the greater part of the family income. In some cases, this income had been partially protected through insurance or under private pension plans. However, more often than not, unfortunately, the widow was left with minimal, if any, income protection either through survivor benefits or through the family's personal savings. And so, what recourse do these women now have? Some are lucky and find paid employment. Very often, though, this is of the physically demanding and low paying type because these women have not had the opportunity to acquire or keep up the technological skills required in today's constantly changing workplace.

For many others, the only avenue of financial assistance is welfare. These menas and/or needs tested provincial social assistance programs are an important part of Canada's social safety net and provide much needed financial assistance to the many thousands of Canadians who are unable to provide for themselves. However, Mr. Speaker, as funds permit, I believe our elderly residents deserve special recognition, and that is exactly what the spouse's allowance program does. That is why the Government took the steps necessary to extend this income-tested assistance to 60 to 64 year old widowed persons.

I am the first to admit that there are other persons in the same age group who have given of themselves just as selflessly. However, I cannot believe that the Hon. Member who proposed this motion would have us deny much-needed financial assistance to 85,000 widowed persons because the money is not available at this time to extend the spouse's allowance program to all 60 to 64 year olds.

The step-by-step approach which successive Governments have followed in building good social programs is not wrong. If it were, then the spouse's allowance program would not have even been introduced in 1975. You remember that at the time, when the program was introduced, it was designed to protect only the 60 to 64 year old spouses of low income Old Age Security pensioner. It left out all other 60 to 64 year olds.

Nevertheless, through gradual steps, the spouse's allowance program has been improved. First, in 1978, the allowance was extended for six months after the Old Age Security pensioner's death. This extension was intended to give widows or widowers a chance to adjust to their changed circumstances.

Then in 1979, under a Conservative Government—as has been pointed out by some of my colleagues—the spouse's allowance was extended until the recipient reached age 65 and became entitled to the Old Age Security pension and its income tested component—the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

We wisk now six years ahead to June, 1985. Parliament took the next logical step when it gave its approval to Bill C-26 and extended the spouse's allowance program to all widowed persons age 60 to 64, regardless of the age of their spouse at death, thus ensuring that some 85,000 more near-elderly persons were guaranteed an adequate basic income. I think it is important to emphasize that the decision to extend the allowance to widowed persons was not just a whim of the Government. This was a proposal resulting from an extensive review of Canada's retirement income system conducted by the all-Party Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform.

After carefully considering the views of all interested Parties in that pension reform debate, the Task Force recommended that the spouse's allowance program be expanded to include all widowed persons in the 60 to 64 year age category. As responsible representatives of the people of this country, that Task Force recognized it would be too expensive to extend income tested assistance to all 60 to 64 year olds, as was pointed out by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Erie. The spouse's allowance program may still not be as good as it could be, but it is better than it was prior to September. I, for one, am pleased that the Government has moved so quickly to legislate this proposal.

The Guaranted Income Supplement is another example of a social program which, since its inception in 1967, has been gradually improved. In step-by-step increments, the level of income guaranteed to Old Age Security beneficiaries was increased so that today, all OAS pensioners are assured of a monthly income which is adequate to meet their daily living needs.

Of course, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie did not suggest that we extend the income tested spouse's allowance to all 60 to 64 year olds, but rather to those in this age group who live alone. I cannot help but wonder why one's living arrangements should be added to the eligibility criteria for this program. Many people share living accommodation with relatives or friends for reasons other than financial. There are those who are not well enough to live alone and those who want the companionship and shared responsibility of living with another person.

It must be remembered that many 60 to 64 year olds live in their own homes; homes that they previously shared with their late spouses and their children. Now that their spouses have died and, in most cases the children have left home, these widowed persons are left alone to maintain, both financially and physically, the family homes.

I commend those persons who open up their homes to others. Not only do they have someone with whom to share the burdens, they are providing alternate housing arrangements to people who might otherwise find themselves living in a small apartment or, too often, a room.

I believe that the Government has demonstrated its sincere concern for elderly Canadians by extending the spouse's allowance program to 85,000 new beneficiaries. Given the enormous financial deficit we inherited when the people of Canada asked us to take charge in September of 1984, it would have been justified had we said, "Sorry, we cannot help any new groups of needy Canadians. The money is just not available". However, that would have been irresponsible. We cannot and will not turn our backs on Canada's needy. We took what money we felt could reasonably be added to the spouse's allowance program and we extended the protection of this very important social program to 85,000 needy 60 to 64 year old widowed persons.

This does not make the spouse's allowance program perfect but the Government recognizes the need to make certain that Canada's needy, particularly those in this age group—spouses aged 60 to 64—do indeed live in dignity in this great country. By working together we can improve Canada's fiscal position which will in turn result in further resources for improving our social programs.

Until that time, I think we should be proud of the help that the spouse's allowance is providing, and let us not down play the importance that the allowance is now playing for an additional 85,000 low income Canadians.

The motion by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should reconsider its intention to limit the eligibility of the spousal allowance to needy widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64 and that it should extend the program to all persons of this age group living alone and having the same means, without taking their marital status into account.

It strikes me that even the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie and his ghostly colleagues on the other side of the House would realize that not only is this an extremely expensive proposition, but that the Government has bitten the bullet as far as doing as much as possible for the spouse's allowance and making certain that 85,000 seniors between the age of 60 and 64 who had never been considered or been eligible for this kind of Government assistance would be included.

I am proud to be a Member of a Government that has taken the spouse's allowance program this far. I will work hard toward taking our social assistance programs for Canada's needy and elderly even further in the future.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT—REQUEST FOR AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, during the last election campaign there were many issues in my riding, but however, there were two primary issues. First was the economy and jobs, and the second was the whole issue surrounding the question of capital punishment.

In my view capital punishment is really a descriptive term that characterizes a much broader issue. That broader issue is the whole question of the adequacy of the criminal justice system at the present time. There are many people in this country who are very concerned about the adequacy of our criminal justice system and feel that it is not working. From time to time we hear Hon. Members from the Opposition say that we have a marvellous system of criminal justice that is working fine and to which no changes are needed. However, that is not the impression of Canadian citizens. That is why I believe that the whole issue of capital punishment is so substantial and why there is a great effort to bring it back after being put aside for many years.

I believe that the issue is not really capital punishment but the criminal justice system as it relates to areas such as the sentencing by judges of those convicted of crimes, the parolling of people either immediately after their conviction or after they have served some time in prison, the whole question of mandatory release of those convicted of crimes as well as the whole question of the Young Offenders Act itself.

All of these issues are part of the question the Canadian public has about our criminal justice system. If we were able to solve some of the issues that are bound up in those questions, the issues relating to sentencing, parole, mandatory release and to the Young Offenders Act, I do not think we would have the same pressure we now have from the public on this matter of a return to capital punishment.

The Government has moved in recent weeks, by the introduction of Bills C-67 and C-68, to addressing the question of mandatory release. Those two Bills have been debated in this House. They have had second reading and have been referred to a committee. The next step, in my view, toward dealing with this whole criminal justice issue is to get on with the amendments which are essentially needed to the Young Offenders Act.

A great many people in recent weeks have pointed out problems with the Young Offenders Act. An example of one of those problems arose in metropolitan Toronto a few months ago. A man who had allegedly committed armed robbery with a sawed- off shotgun was captured. While in prison waiting to be brought before the courts, he escaped custody. The individual was under the age of 18. Therefore, the police were unable to protect citizens of metropolitan Toronto by disclosing the name of the person, which would have been of help in capturing and returning him to custody. They were unable to do so because of provisions in the Young Offenders Act. That is one of many examples.

Another of the problems with the Young Offenders Act involves the whole question of criminal records and how they should be dealt with. There is also the question of young offenders under the age of 12 and how they should be dealt with.

On September 23, I raised a question in the House concerning the Young Offenders Act. I asked when amendments to the Young Offenders Act to correct all of the problems would come forward. The Minister at that time indicated he was still reviewing the matter. It seems to me the time has passed for reviewing the matter. Police departments across the country have pointed out and have identified specific problems with this Act in meetings of chiefs of police and in meetings with deputy attorneys general. Recently these problems have been pointed out in meetings of provincial attorneys general. The Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Beatty) has met with them and has heard submissions. The time has now come for action.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell us tonight whether the Government is now prepared at long last to introduce some amendments to the Young Offenders Act, which will set these things right and allow the police departments to protect the citizens of Canada properly.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the question posed by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) to the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) with respect to amendments to the Young Offenders Act, to correct issues identified by the chiefs of police and the attorneys general. He has just now elaborated further upon these problems?

In June 1985, the Deputy Solicitor General met with deputies responsible for juvenile justice to discuss key areas of concern. On that occasion, the provincial and territorial Governments identified four areas of concern: first, the requirements for predisposition and detention; second, to review provisions to assist in the enforcement of dispositions ordered by the court; third, the limitations occasioned by the ban on publication of the name or identify of a young person, and fourth, the administrative burdens and complexities occasioned by the provisions for the maintenance and destruction of records.

Since that time federal and provincial officials have been carefully reviewing these proposals for change. The Solicitor General has also stated his desire to review all these concerns and to solicit broad input.

As the Hon. Member for York East is aware, the Young Offenders Act is, for all intents and purposes, a new piece of legislation which was proclaimed in force on April 2, 1984, with the uniform maximum age provisions only coming into effect on April 1, 1985. Clearly this Act is in its formative stages. This fact is certainly evident from a number of decisions presently before the courts. As the Solicitor General noted on September 23, when he responded to the Hon. Member's question, it would be premature and indeed improper to comment on matters which are before the courts and may still be subject to appeal.

Independent of these issues, however, it may be helpful to highlight the principal areas of concern. From a public perspective, media commentary has centred around the belief that the Young Offenders Act is lenient in its treatment of young criminals. Consequently, media criticism has focused upon the exclusion of children under 12; the ban on publication of names and identities; the upper age limit of under 18; and the maximum penalties available under the statute, which are perceived to protect young people at the expense of the public. From a provincial perspective, the concerns appear to focus around administrative and procedural matters. In this regard, the Solicitor General is awaiting a report of the meeting of the provincial Attorneys General which took place in Regina on September 19 and September 20.

While the concerns of citizens for public safety cannot be minimized, it is evident that many of the criticisms and the demands for change which have been advanced are the result of a serious misconception about the nature and implications of the Young Offenders Act for the administration of juvenile justice. In short, it could be said at this moment that there is no unanimity of opinion as to the problems with the Young Offenders Act, and certainly as to their solutions.

However, I should like to assure the Hon. Member that the Solicitor General is aware of the concerns of the public and the provincial and territorial Governments and is prepared to respond fairly and effectively to those concerns. In so doing, the Minister recognizes the need for countering unfounded criticisms and unsubstantiated fears about the implications of the Act, so that efforts may be concentrated on those areas which clearly require change.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS—CANADA-UNITED STATES TALKS—GOVERNMENT POLICY. (B) TIME MAGAZINE—POSSIBLE RE-EMERGENCE OF CANADIAN EDITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the question I raised in the House last week with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) concerned the very urgent question of cultural integrity. It is a very simple question. Do we want to have our cultural industries up for bargain in any free trade negotiations? Do we really want to build Canadian culture in the country and ensure that all aspects of it have an opportunity to flourish? Do we want to ensure that jobs are kept for Canadians? Do we want to ensure that there are more opportunities in publishing, music, dance, theatre and all other fields of artistic expression?

The Government's answer has been a little two-faced. When it comes to rhetoric, its Members are quite clear. They are on the side of Canadians and on the side of cultural integrity. I am raising the questions and want very straightforward answers because their practice does not fulfil their rhetoric.

The then Minister of Communications at a conference in Halifax, in reply to questions, suggested that cultural industries were linked to other industries which would be in free trade talks, so they will not be exempted as clearly as they should be in any discussion of free trade. The Government's policy in Investment Canada is clear enough, that there will be exemptions for cultural heritage and national integrity. However, when it comes down to specific cases, we see that the Government does not live up to its promise.

I have raised the case of Prentice-Hall in the House, and all we have seen is delay. There has been an extended period of investigation, and we do not have any assurances. There is the take-over by W.H. Smith of the Classic book chains, which is quite unacceptable to the Canadian cultural community. It promises to have up to 20 per cent Canadian shares in the near future, but that is hardly Canadian control. It is a matter of real concern.

The possibility of a revival of the so-called Canadian edition of Time is a very troubling one inded to the magazine publishing industry. People will recall that when the previous Canadian edition of Time, of which the Canadian content was absolutely minimal and quite laughable, after a very protracted struggle disappeared it meant that advertising dollars were available and went into other Canadian publications. Indeed we saw a flourishing in the Canadian magazine publishing business. Smaller magazines increased their circulation. This was the time when Maclean's went weekly, and it has been an important news magazine for Canada.

We are very concerned that any revival of the so-called Canadian edition would not be truly Canadian in terms of its content and yet would suck off the advertising dollars that are now being spread throughout a growing and quite vital magazine publishing industry right now.

It is troubling also when we get rumours in the press of the possibility of the Prime Minister appearing at a Time sponsored event—perhaps later this fall, perhaps in Chicago, perhaps in November, the rumours are not terribly specific—that would name him on behalf of Time magazine statesman of the year.

Well, Mr. Speaker, one country's statesmen may be another country's sellout and we have to be very concerned about this kind of flattery that has been used by Time magazine in the past. We think of a former Prime Minister, Mr. John Diefenbaker, who was courted actively by Time magazine, flattered and indeed got a great deal of circulation and a great deal of press. We are very troubled to think that a Prime Minister might succumb to the gentle persuasion of a large and important mass media magazine.

The threat of the Time magazine revival is a very real one in the Canadian cultural community and I want the Government to be very clear that the arts community does not want more rhetoric. We do not want these statements of good book publishing policy which then get reversed in practice in Investment Canada and in other decisions that come up. We want the Government to be consistent and to accept the concerns of the arts community and indeed of all Canadians to build Canadian culture, and to make it strong. The talent is there and we want them to have the opportunity. They can only have that by having good policies that are realized in practice.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I respond on behalf of the Acting Minister of Communications to the concerns raised by my friend, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) on the subject of Canadian cultural policy and the possible re-emergence of another Canadian edition of Time magazine.

These matters are of great interest to all Members of this House. It is very timely that the Hon. Member should bring this forth at this adjournment debate on this particular day when she will know that earlier today in Question Period the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has reiterated the very clear and unequivocal statement made by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) that Canada's culture is not an issue in any forthcoming talks with the United States relating to enhanced trade.

The former Minister of Communications, the Hon. Marcel Masse issued in his release at the close of the meeting of the federal-provincial Ministers responsible for culture in Halifax this statement:

> Any trade negotiations we may enter into with any country must and will take into account the fundamental principle that it is culture that guarantees the expression of the distinctive character and identity of a people.

I stand by every word in that news release. The Hon. Member may put that down to rhetoric but not when it is stated in as clear and definite terms by the former Minister of Communications, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Prime Minister of Canada. I shall give the hon. lady my assurance that I share her concerns. I am making my views known to the people responsible as we head into those very delicate negotiations.

• (1915)

With respect to the question of Time magazine, 25 years ago the Royal Commission on Publications recommended that Canadian publications should have better access to the advertising dollars spent by Canadian companies in Canada. In 1965, the Government amended the Income Tax Act to stop Canadian advertisers from buying ads for the Canadian market in foreign publications.

Shortly after the introduction of Bill C-58, Time Inc. decided to stop publishing its Canadian edition. This amendment of the Act meant for Time Inc. a loss in advertising revenues. Canadian advertisers could no longer deduct their advertising expenses in Time Inc. from their revenues for income tax purposes.

The return of a Canadian edition of Time involves a transaction that would transfer 75 per cent of Time Canada's shares to Comac Publications, a large Canadian publisher of controlled circulation publications, and the transfer of 25 per cent of Comac's shares to Time Inc. of New York.

I am informed that while there have been some informal suggestions made by Time that it might want to start up a Canadian edition, they are strictly informal. Time knows what it is up against. We still concur with the philosophy behind the law. We believe that the Canadian newspaper and periodical industries must evolve in a favourable economic context which will consequently guarantee the largest possible dissemination of our Canadian cultural values.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

REPRESENTATION ACT, 1985

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to be able to present this Bill to the House. On September 4, 1984, this Government was given a mandate to make positive changes in our key institutions of Government. These reforms focused on making Government more accountable to the governed for its actions. Parliament, in our democratic society, is the central institution of accountability, and this Government has taken a firm and very positive approach towards finding means by which the individual Member can play an enhanced role in the policy development process.

Very early in its mandate the Government acted on its conviction that the representatives of the people have a right to a significant role in policy development. It did so by placing a high priority on parliamentary reform. The Government took prompt action last spring to implement an important package of reforms to the rules and practices of the House. These reforms have gone a long way to giving committees of the House an important and independent role, which in turn goes a long way to enhancing the legislative and policy development role of the individual Member of Parliament.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the Government has undertaken to consult widely before taking new directions in order to ensure that Canadians feel they have a part to play in the decision-making process. As part of this consultation process the Government published a White Paper on redistribution which I laid on the Table on June 11, 1985, and which was referred for consideration by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. After careful consideration of the proposed amendments to the Constitution Act of 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, the committee reported favourably on the subject matter of the proposed draft Bill contained in the White Paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank members of the Committee for their invaluable assistance in preparing this new legislation.

[English]

I would like to remind the House of some of the key features of this Bill. The first and most significant is the change in the formula for calculating the number of seats for each province. The alteration will mean that the size of the House will grow more slowly than would have been the case if the current legislation were to be left unaltered. The House will know that under the present formula there would be 310 Members in this House after the implementation of the reports of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Commission. Instead, the legislation we have before us now would see the House grow to only 289 seats after a new redistribution which can be in place before the next general election if we act with expedition now.

When the White Paper was published, most of the media attention focused on the direct costs of adding new Members to this House. I do not wish to dwell on this aspect but I will say in passing that we can anticipate a considerable saving by implementing the Bill now before us. Increasing the number of Members in the House will also necessitate increased expenditures on support personnel for Members, security and protective services, maintenance services, messenger and cafeteria services, and outlays for office renovation and accommodation. I think it is important that Parliament itself make cost effective decisions. The fiscally responsible approach to redistribution set out in the White Paper on redistribution may explain much of the very positive media reaction which was generated.

In the first redistribution after the passage of this Bill, even allowing for the cost of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Commissions, the saving will be in the order of $1 million in the first year alone based on 1984 figures. While cost should not be the sole determining factor in deciding whether the House ought to proceed with this legislation, the House cannot ignore its importance to the taxpayers of this country. If unaltered, the House would increase in size over the coming two decades to 343 Members after the decennial census of 1991, and to a projected 369 seats after the decennial census of the year 2001. Such projected dramatic increases in the size of the House have provoked many Members of the House to consider whether such growth is desirable, and to wonder if it is possible to design a better formula which would be consistent with the needs of the electorate, but would not promote such radical growth in the number of Members. It is my view that a major improvement is possible.

In developing a new formula to govern the redistribution process there are a number of matters which must be borne in mind. First, one must assess the impact of increased membership on the character and quality of the House. Mr. Speaker, I am concerned that we will lose an important sense of collegiality if the House becomes much larger, and that private Members will have diminished opportunities to become involved in the legislative and policy development process. Participation in debates on the floor of the House and meaningful involvement in committee work are directly related to the number of Members who are in competition for the limited time available in these forums. House time is scarce and opportunities to participate in debate are limited.

You will be aware, Mr. Speaker, of the increasingly important role being given to the standing committees by the House. The reforms brought in with all Party consent in June have radically altered the significance of membership on committees. This enhanced role has made it certain that there will be greater competition for participation on committees. In addition, there has been a trend toward smaller committees since the reforms of 1982, and still smaller committees have been recommended in the third report of the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons. If accepted, implementation of this recommendation would mean that members of committees will be given even greater opportunity for meaningful contributions to the policy development process and they will be given the chance to develop some real expertise in the policy areas covered by the committees of which they are permanent members. However, it is obvious that, if at the same time the House is permitted to grow in the explosive manner contemplated by the legislation now in force, there will be greater competition for membership on these smaller committees and, as a result, fewer private Members will have the opportunity to play a significant role in policy development.

The House will appreciate that with the significant reforms the Government has undertaken since coming to office, Parliament is a very different institution today than it was a short 12 months ago. Mr. Speaker, I think that the improved quality of Parliament's contribution to the over-all development and implementation of policy argues in itself for an enhanced quality of representation instead of a rapidly expanding quantity of representation. In my view, no evidence exists that a larger House of Commons would be a better House. I must state that the only way to improve the quality of the House is by courageously undertaking a program of reform to make the institution the best that it can be.

You may recall, as I do, that not too many years ago Members had no staff, no private offices nor constituency offices, and few, if any, of the amenities that Members of this House have come to take for granted. In recent years the capacity and quality of service to constituents by Members of Parliament has increased steadily as sophisticated equipment, energetic and dedicated staff, constituency offices, householder mailings, and greatly enhanced transportation facilities have permitted Members to have an immediacy of contact with their constituents such as they have never known before. In the near future rapid technological developments, such as the use of computers and electronic mail, will allow individual Members of Parliament to communicate more and more effectively with an increasing number of constituents. For these reasons, I concluded that it would be unwise to allow a dramatic increase in the size of the House much beyond its present level. This is the first consideration upon which the proposed formula is based.

The second factor which must be borne in mind with respect to the introduction of a new formula concerns the question of whether provinces with stable or declining populations should lose seats in the House of Commons. The loss of seats has always been a matter of genuine concern in the Canadian system. By way of example, this is reflected in the constitutional amendment of 1915 which provided that no province would be represented in the House of Commons by a number of Members less than the number of its Senators. The legitimacy of such concerns was again recognized in 1982 when the so-called "senatorial clause" was made unamendable except with unanimous consent of the provinces. Such concerns of federal balance have led me to recommend that provinces which, on a strict numerical basis, would see their representation reduced should be allowed to keep those seats, even at the expense of absolute representation by population.

There is a third general factor which must be considered when devising a formula. It concerns provinces with growing populations. Recognition must be given to the fact that population distributions change over time. People living in provinces which enjoy population increases are entitled to expect that there will be concomitant increases in the numbers of their representatives in the House of Commons.

This reform must, if it is to be accepted, be seen to be fair. The new method of redistributing seats throughout Canada is fair because it ensures that the proportion of seats and proportion of population of each province does not significantly deviate from the present situation. This means that the relative imbalances which exist today and have long been accepted as necessary compromises on the principle of absolute representation by population will remain.

You will say that this is a typical Canadian compromise. Perhaps it is. However, in a Parliament with only one elected House, our system has come to recognize the need of finding ways of ensuring adequate regional representation in the elected body and this Bill proposes no departure from this position. It is in view of these considerations, that the formula set out in the Bill was devised.

Accordingly, it attempts to accomplish three basic objectives. First, it limits increases in membership in the House of Commons to levels as moderate as are fair and practical; Second, it ensures that no province or Territory will lose seats in the House of Commons through redistribution. Third, it enables provinces with growing populations to get additional seats but in a way that reflects the need to maintain the House of Commons at something close to its present size.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this Bill not only concerns the distribution of seats throughout the country but also contains proposals aimed at improving the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. As Hon. Members are aware, the Act regulates the procedure by which the boundaries of electoral districts are established within the provinces.

[English]

The present wording of the Act obliges commissions to ensure that all constituencies in a province have populations which are within 25 per cent of the so-called provincial quotient.

This obligation has been seen by many Members of Parliament as posing problems with respect to rural and sparsely populated areas. It forces the creation of geographically huge districts in many areas of the country.

In order to try to alleviate these problems, the Bill proposes that commissions be given some added flexibility. It suggests that, in extraordinary circumstances, they be allowed to deviate from the 25 per cent rule in order to protect an historical community of interest or to limit constituencies to a manageable geographical size, where possible.

The Bill also proposes improvements in the way in which commissions conduct their hearings. I do not believe that it should be necessary for them to publish both a map and a written description of boundaries with their newspaper advertisements, yet the current legislation requires this. If only the maps had been published for the last redistribution, a saving of approximately two-thirds of the total amount spent on advertising could have been realized. This would have amounted to approximately $1.6 million. Thus, the Bill provides that only the maps be included in the newspaper inserts. Of course, written descriptions of constituency boundaries will continue to be available, free of charge, from the Electoral Boundaries Commissions' offices.

Finally, Hon. Members will now have a chance to give their views and suggestions regarding the commissions' reports. For the first time, the Bill specifically gives Members the right to submit their views to the commissions.

• (1120)

As well, there will be improved opportunities to debate the reports of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Commission.

Under the old legislation, these reports were discussed on the floor of the House, whereas this Bill would see them automatically referred to a committee for consideration. Members will know of the difficulty in obtaining sufficient time to consider legitimate objections to these reports on the floor of the House. Therefore, the Bill proposes to provide Members a real opportunity to have their concerns fully considered in committee with supporting documentation which can be tabled, together with an appropriate period of time which would be made available for each Member desiring to make representation in terms of any electoral district.

As I have indicated, time limits for each stage of consideration by committee of these reports which the Bill proposes ensure that redistribution takes place on a timely basis.

The House may wonder why it is important to ensure that this legislation is considered expeditiously, aside from the requirement to have the new boundaries for the ridings in place well before the next general election. I am convinced that this Bill, as part of the entire program of institutional reform, will help to modernize and make Canadians' key democratic forum an effective institution which will help to point the way to the next century. The Canadian people gave this Government a mandate for change. I believe this Bill helps to fulfil, as far as this institution is concerned, this part of our responsibility.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ensure that the House is aware of the great period of renewal upon which we have embarked. Reform of this institution can only be achieved by careful attention to the reasons for its continuance and its importance in the society it serves. Reform of obscure rules and arcane practices will not necessarily make Parliament more effective. However, if we have the courage to seize this opportunity to reshape the kind of House this will be, and to raise the expectations of all Canadians for this, the most important democratic institution of our country, we will have done succeeding generations of Canadians, I think, a great service.

Finally, let me reiterate my belief that the proposals set out in this Bill not only represent significant improvements in the redistribution process, but also they will assist us all in the task of ensuring that the House of Commons becomes a more effective and productive institution, and that expanded, it fairly represents the population and diversity, which is Canada.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-74, to amend the legislation regulating the number of seats attributed to a province in Canada after each decennial census.

First of all, I may say we understand the Government's intentions and its reasons for wanting to prevent the number of Members sitting in the House of Commons to keep on increasing at a rate that is considered too fast by some, and that, as a corollary, the Government is attempting with this measure to limit spending which is necessarily proportional to the number of Members that represent Canadians in the House of Commons.

Although we approve the principle or the objectives being pursued by the Government, in other words, although we agree with the reasons for the measure being proposed, we do not, unfortunately, agree with the method.

Although we believe that the Government's intentions are honourable, we think it has not chosen the right way to go about attaining its objectives. In our view, one of the consequences of the measure now before the House will be to undermine the basic principle of any redistribution of seats in Canada, in other words, the fundamental principle of proportional representation. Another consequence would be that the Bill would create an increasing imbalance between the average populations of a riding, from province to province. We also believe this might create an imbalance between the average populations of urban and rural ridings.

Finally, another obvious result of the procedure the Government has decided to follow is,—and I find it rather strange, since one of the Government's objectives was to limit spending connected with representation of the people of this country in Parliament,—in fact the first consequence of this Bill will be to waste about $5 million which were spent to date by the commissions of various provinces on drawing up the electoral map now before Parliament, which could be considered in a couple of hours and become effective in relatively short order. The Government ought to realize that its decisions involve at the very outset wasting $5 million.

Let me get back to what I consider to be the main weakness of this Bill. I said earlier that I thought the principle of proportional representation would be at risk. I said there would be a significant difference between the average riding population in some provinces as compared to others. In other words, if we divide the population of a province by the number of seats, the resulting quotient will vary fairly substantially from province to province. To support my statement I would refer to certain comments by witnesses who appeared before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, and especially to what was said by Professor Andrew Sancton, who appeared before the Committee on June 20. His testimony may be found on page 12:5 of the Committee proceedings. I am just going to quote what Professor Sancton said and comment subsequently. He said, and I quote:

When one divides the population of each province by the number of seats allocated to that province according to the new formula, one finds that the resulting provincial quotients vary to quite a considerable extent. Anyone who has made such calculations for previous redistributions would not be surprised by such a result. The smaller provinces, for one reason or another, always had smaller quotients, and to that extent they have been over-represented in the House of Commons.

What is most unusual about the current calculations is that they produce quotients for British Columbia and Alberta of 91,482 and 97,292 by my calculations, which are significantly higher than the quotients of the two largest provinces of Ontario and Quebec. I think the proper figure for Ontario is 88,919, which is corrected on some of the statements and not on others, and the one for Quebec 85,845.

We already see a sizeable quotient difference of roughly 9,000 between British Columbia and Ontario. Why does the Government tolerate from the very beginning that its proposed measure would create such significant differences, quite obviously built right into the system? As stated earlier by the President of the Privy Council and Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn), the avowed priority objective and main principle guiding the Government in drafting this Bill were to make sure that the proportional representation principle would be maintained. These figures clearly indicate that the result will be altogether different. More important still, we have to consider the long term impact of those differences. Again I quote Professor Sancton on page 12:5 of the proceedings:

Although the difference in the quotients between Ontario and Quebec themselves—

—since it is now only 3,000 in this case, since this quotient—

—is not large, there is no reason why they cannot become larger if this formula were to be applied in future decades.

There is a gap of more than 8,000—

—these figures are taken from documents provided by the Government—

—if one makes the calculations based on the census projections for 2001.

That is beginning to be quite important between two neighbouring provinces whose ridings have so far been roughly similar.

This goes to show why we do not quite agree on the way the Government seeks to achieve an objective which is highly commendable in itself.

The other matter which has me worried and which also undermines the basic principle of proportional representation is the fact that, through this Bill, the Government wants to achieve a second objective, namely make sure that none of the provinces will lose seats through the implementation of this new redistribution system. First I must say that there is nothing to underlay this principle, in the sense that, at the political level, the Government may want to protect itself against the dissatisfaction which might be expressed by the residents of a province slated to lose seats. From a logical viewpoint however, if we want to respect the principle of proportional representation, that is representation based on population, how can we argue in this House and reach the conclusion that, if the population of a province goes down or if a province realizes that its population is not increasing as rapidly as that of neighbouring provinces, we are justified to claim that such a province will not lose seats? However unpalatable this might be for the residents of that province, we must admit that it would amount to a serious breach of the proportional representation principle.

I therefore conclude that the Government is not proposing this measure to uphold the proportional representation principle but rather to cover its rear and avoid being the target of sustained flak from the disgruntled residents of a province. I can understand that the Government would want to protect itself and limit the dissatisfaction of the population, but in my opinion, it would be better to make its pious wishes in other areas of interest, such as the bankruptcy of the banks and the tainted tuna. The Government would be better to try and prevent the dissatisfaction of the population in these areas. However, I cannot say that I agree with the fact that the Government is trying to fool around with the principle of proportional representation.

Once more, I would like to quote the comments made by some of those who appeared before the committee to object to what the Government is proposing, and I again quote from a statement by Professor Andrew Sancton as recorded on page 12:6 of the Minutes of Proceedings of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for Thursday, June 20, 1985. In passing, I should point out that Professor Andrew Sancton is not just anybody. He is in a good position to comment the redistribution proposals because he is professor emeritus at the Western Ontario University, where he teaches political sciences. He was also a full member of the later Ontario Electoral Boundaries Commission. He therefore knows all about this issue. Let us hear what he has to say about the provision to prevent provinces from losing seats:

> My preference in all this is to fix the size of the House at about its current level and to follow the procedure outlined in the white paper but allow provinces to lose seats down to the level of the entrenched senatorial floor and to gain them to the full measure of their relative growth.

He then continued:

> Sure, it will be tough for provinces to lose seats—

This is what I was saying earlier.

> —but I suggest that the people most affected by such losses are incumbent MPs. If the real objective of this exercise is to limit the growth of the House of Commons and to maintain representation by population, then I am convinced that most people in and out of the House will understand that some provinces will have to lose seats.

In this regard, I think that the Government has tried to have it both ways. On the one hand, it tries to meet its objective of limiting the increase in the number of Members in the House of Commons, and on the other hand, it attempts at the same time to develop a system under which a province would not lose seats even if its population did not increase as rapidly as that of other provinces or even, in an extreme case, if its population were to decrease. Yet, these two principles are mutually exclusive and it is strange to see that the Government, by using an acrobatic scheme, has succeeded in combining them in one Bill.

[English]

Although we have to agree that reducing the number of Members of Parliament is a good objective, I would like to warn the Government that there are consequences one has to take into account, one of which is that Members will be called upon to service a larger population. There is nothing proposed by the Government to facilitate the work of the average MP. No additional tools are offered; we have no assurances that some of the recommendations put forward in the report of the committee chaired by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) will be put in place. On the contrary, we believe that the Member will be left with a larger population to service with no additional means. We do not see how this would benefit the people of this country.

[Translation]

Another aspect on which I would like to comment briefly is the issue of timing. The Minister said earlier that these measures would be implemented in time for the next general elections. This does not seem to be quite the case. The Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Hamel, told us in committee that, if this Bill received quick passage this fall, he would be able to organize elections based on the new electoral boundaries, but only in the fall of 1988. Because of a very detailed schedule which he explained to us, he could not, for instance, organize an election in the spring of 1988 based on the new boundaries. This means that, because of the time factor and the schedule presented to us by the Government, neither the population nor any political party will know whether, in 1988, which would seem to be the most logical year to hold an election, four years after the election of the present Government, the election will be based on the present boundaries or on the new ones set in accordance with this bill.

It seems to me that it is rather important for pressure groups throughout the country to know what they can expect. It is important for political parties to know in advance whether they will plan the election based on the new boundaries or on the old ones. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that the only one in Canada who will know on which basis the next elections will be held will be the Prime Minister because he will be the one to call the elections. So I suggest that the proposed schedule or timing for bringing this legislation before Parliament would give the party in power the upper hand, for it would be aware of both the election date and the electoral boundaries for which it must prepare itself. As to the other political parties and the various organizations which would like to exert pressure on them come election time, everybody would have to prepare for both sets of electoral boundaries, the old ones and the new ones, not knowing under which set the election would be fought.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have clearly demonstrated that this Bill has serious weaknesses. Although we can understand the Government's desire to limit the growth of the House of Commons as well as the resulting expenses, we believe that Parliament and the legislative committee to which this bill will be referred will have to consider some of the weaknesses I have just enumerated and a number of amendments will have to be made to this Bill in order to make it more acceptable to more people and political parties in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to take a long time to deal with this. While it is vitally important, I do not think it is terribly complex. I hope that we can get on with the committee deliberations at some early date. I can well appreciate the last comment that was made indicating that if this turns out to be the way the Government will ultimately go, then clearly the decision must be made quickly or else there will be some difficulties all across the country in adjusting to the changes.

• (1140)

Having said that, I would like to begin by expressing concerns about the direction in which the Government is going. I do not doubt for a moment that there would be general support across the country for the intention to demonstrate financial restraint. I think it is fair to say that the majority of Canadians would support that notion no matter who proposed it. Since the majority of Canadians do not pay a lot of attention to the size of the House of Commons or to the work of Members of Parliament other than when it directly affects them, I would be surprised if they were other than glad that the Government has placed such an emphasis on the need to restrain the expenditures of Parliament. I sense, however, from reading various articles and from speaking to people who are directly involved in this question, that there is little support for the way that this measure is being proposed.

I find it passing strange that a reference would be made to the guarantee that there would be no fewer Members of Parliament than there are Senators for any one region. If we wanted to bring about financial restraint, I would have thought that we might have decided to begin with the Senate. We might have decided to ask ourselves if it was appropriate to have a Senate or not. That would be a real financial restraint. Just think of what we could do with the money we would save if we did not have that group of old people from the previous administration and the current administration tripping around the other Chamber. It is interesting to talk about financial restraint and I think it is something with which everyone agrees. However, I think we could have found some place else to start looking for the restraints we need.

I would say to the Minister that we cannot achieve what I consider to be our three objectives through the structuring of this Bill. We cannot limit the size of the House while at the same time ensuring no loss of seats and guaranteeing that each citizen will, to the greatest extent possible, have an equal voice in Government. It cannot be done. Those things are inconsistent with each other. Therefore, there is no point in our trying to pretend that we can do that.

We are changing dramatically the representative system of the Government of Canada. This will not happen in the first year and not even in the second year, but with the passage of time, as we move beyond the year 2000, this measure will have a dramatic effect on the way calculations will be made and on the proportional representations of the regions of the country. Although the need to limit the number of Members of Parliament has some appeal, I would ask why we are doing it. Is it really our responsibility to say that we like things as they are and they suit us just fine? Does the congeniality of the House justify that we should keep it as it is? That is hardly a democratic principle. It may be a principle based on friendship, but if we were to carry that to the extreme, then we could argue that we only need 100 or perhaps 50 Members. Think how congenial we would be then. Look at the opportunities we would all have to take part in debates. Look at the opportunities we would have to serve on committees, assuming we could find sufficient Members to fill them.

When talking about it in this way, we begin to realize that the argument to limit the size of the House in order to preserve the congeniality of it and the opportunities for participation in debate and in committees has some appeal at first blush, but if carried to the ridiculous extreme would be totally unacceptable.

I think the argument being made by the Government is faulty. Representation by population is in fact the cornerstone of the democratic system within which we operate. Guaranteeing that the weight of one vote will be equal to the weight of another vote is a principle which we must attempt to uphold. That principle is being skewered by this particular measure. There is a democratic responsibility on the part of Hon. Members to ensure that we do not mess up the democratic system. I think that the Government is, with all the best intentions in the world, making a determination that would do just that.

The difficulty I see is that we could not, in all good conscience, argue that certain provinces ought to lose representation simply because their growth did not keep pace with others. I think it is commendable of the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to say that we want to guarantee the smaller provinces representation no less than the representation they now enjoy, but in the process of doing that, I think he recognizes that it does penalize the growth areas. It could be said that it penalizes the growth areas only marginally, but that marginal penalty will grow by leaps and bounds in the course of time. Notwithstanding our best efforts, it will not be possible, come the year 2010—by which time, I hope, most of us will be gone from this place but not from this life—for those here then to redo what we have undone and to put back together what we have taken apart.

I suggest that one of the problems is in trying to find a balance between the regions in order to ensure that regions do not have a sense of alienation from the federal Government and yet, at the same time, to ensure that within those regions the representation of rural against urban areas is preserved. We should recognize that the urban areas are the growth areas and the difficulties that confront urban areas are, under normal circumstances, more complex by virtue of size and pressure than the difficulties that confront less urbanized parts of the country. In fact, it will be necessary for there to be a larger number of representatives from the growth areas, the core areas of municipalities, in order to be able to put forward adequately the many and diverse views and concerns that will continue to arise, concerns that we probably cannot even contemplate at this point in time.

In essence, what I am trying to say is that I am not being critical of the Government for considering this measure. I think it is worth considering. I do not think, however, that it will achieve what we are trying to achieve. For example, why would we decide, when making a calculation ostensibly based on the 1971 census for the year 1991, that at some appropriate point in time we would allow for half the number of seats allowed for under the old formula? Why would we allow for only half? Why not a quarter or why not three-quarters? What is the importance of one-half? How has that been democratically determined? What does that mean in terms of representation? I do not think anyone knows. It is simply a figure drawn from nowhere. It is a number drawn from nowhere which would keep the House at a size that we could manage given the confines of the building itself, or some other determination. That is not good enough. There is room in this House for some substantial growth, if need be. I think that if the existing system, which has served us fairly well for a long period of time—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It has only been in effect for 10 years since 1974.

Mr. Deans: That is what I said, it has served us well. It should not be cast away now this quickly.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It isn't.

Mr. Deans: I think it is. The Minister says it is not, but it clearly is. We are no longer going to follow that which we determined is the way it should be done back in the late 1960s. I suppose that was about the time it was determined.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: With a slight modification, I would think.

Mr. Deans: I feel that from our point of view, first, the money saving is not a lot. It depends on how you measure it. It certainly does not measure up to $1 billion for a failed bank, when you think about it. And I do not think that for the amounts of money we are talking about saving, the risks of distorting the representative system would be justified. If we feel that that kind of money needs to be saved—and no doubt it would be nice to save it from the taxpayers' point of view—there are other ways and other places where we could turn to find that necessary capital.

I suggest to the Government that since it took office a year ago in September, there has been much said and much made of its intentions to cut expenditures and to reallocate resources. There has been a lot said up until fairly recently about the size of the deficit. That does not seem to be the big issue now, for some reason. I guess that since we found the $1 billion for the Bank, it is hard to argue that the deficit is too high. Nevertheless, if we looked carefully in other areas, I believe we could save the money which the Minister suggests could and should be saved by this measure.

To sum up, I am frankly not convinced that this direction is the direction we should take. I am concerned that it will unnecessarily alter the method previously used to determine the democratic representation. I am concerned that it will have an adverse effect over time on the way our provinces and Territories feel about their ability to participate in a reasonably equal way in the federal system.

I am not persuaded at this point that the savings we would derive from not having following the original formula will be sufficient to justify the change—not yet, anyway. I am prepared to listen to further argument on that. I enjoy the congeniality of the argument, but I am not sure it is a good argument for this kind of measure.

Mr. Benjamin: Or collegiality.

Mr. Deans: "Colleagiality" my colleague says. It is congeniality, too. With respect to the arguments about participation, I feel we can find ways to encourage further participation. We are doing it now constantly. Therefore, while I like to afford Hon. Members, as does everyone else, lots of opportunity to participate, I do not think we can do it at the expense of representation by population. If we start making that argument and following it to its logical conclusion, we can end up with a real mess on our hands.

I will conclude by saying to the Minister that I think the most important thing that can be done here is to get further input.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I agree.

Mr. Deans: I am persuaded from reading some of the comments which were made before the committee. Certain of those witnesses are perhaps more expert in this than I am—perhaps even more expert than the Minister himself, although that is hard to believe—and some of them have expressed genuine reservations, reservations which were deeply felt, that this is not the time to tinker, that it is not necessary. There is not a sufficient amount of growth in the offing that justifies this sudden readjustment.

So I say to the Minister that for the time being we certainly cannot support the proposal. We will, however, after two or three of my colleagues have commented about it, send it to committee. It will be dealt with in the committee, giving some of those who appeared before, and many others who have not yet appeared, an adequate chance to put on the record their analysis of the effects. Then we could make some further refinement, amendment or alteration to try to take into account what I think have probably been well considered views in opposition.

One point that bothers me, and I say this just in passing, is that there is always a tendency among politicians to want to safeguard their own best interests. That is true. We cannot avoid it. It is part of politics to want to protect yourself and your opportunities. We must guard agains that. We must make sure that that does not motivate us into making changes—I am not suggesting that that is the case, mind you, but it is something to keep in mind. There is that sort of tendency to say that we really would like to leave things the way they are, we do not want to make any changes because, after all, it would upset the apple cart, upset the way in which we play the game. It reminds me of a comment I made when I appeared before the redistribution committee in Hamilton some time ago. They were advocating a change to my electoral boundaries and I said to them that I would welcome the change from a political point of view because it added an area which was at least 80 per cent supportice of me while taking away an area which was somewhat less than 50 per cent supportive of me. I said to them that I would be quite pleased to have it that way but I thought, quite frankly, that it was wrong. I thought that the lines they had drawn were not in keeping with the realities of the community. However, I said that if they were determined to improve my lot, if they want to give me a sinecure, almost like a seat in the Senate, perhaps there were two or three streets in the middle of my riding they could take out. That would be a damn sight better than what they were proposing. They turned it down. That is what we have to watch.

Quite frequently, our own self-interest creeps into the discussions inadvertently and, in making our arguments, we fail to see the much larger picture, and the much larger picture in this case is that we have to guarantee to the greatest extent possible that the vote of a person in one part of the country will have exactly the same weight as the vote of a person in another part of the country, that when those people vote collectively, their collective vote will have the same weight in Ottawa. I venture the opinion that although the change is marginal, and I admit it, the principle which I consider to be vital is being abrogated by the proposal before us.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. At the conclusion of my remarks I should have said that there have been consultations between the Parties with respect to a motion we have on this particular Bill. I believe you would find there would be a disposition—the House Leaders have copies of this motion and have been consulted—that in view of the fact that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has spent some time hearing witnesses and been seized of the White Paper on this matter—and this is not a precedent, by any means—there has been agreement between the Parties that the following motion would be acceptable:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, the motion for the second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-74, An Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-74 An Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be now read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections".

● (1200)

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I just want to confirm, I hope on behalf of my colleague, the Official Opposition House Leader, that we did have this discussion and we did agree that it would be the appropriate way to deal with this Bill but that it should not be considered to be a precedent. We are doing it because the committee was seized of the matter previously and therefore is aware of all of the ramifications of the legislative proposal.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I understood that the Government wants to send this Bill to the standing committee rather than a legislative committee. Is that correct?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): We do not disagree in principle but we would like the assurance that the standing committee will be able to hear witnesses.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Oh, yes. No problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Continuing debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to limit the unrestrained and very costly increase in the number of electoral ridings in this country.

Historically, the Constitution Act, 1867, as amended in 1975, provided for the readjustment of representation in Commons following every decennial census. The formula for calculating the number of members would take into account the population of each province and Quebec's special situation.

The result has been a constant increase in the number of elected representatives, so that the point of saturation in the House of Commons has nearly been reached. We must remind ourselves that the House has a capacity of some 286 seats or so.

On the other hand, it was necessary to ensure that the new formula would respect the rules of equity and provincial representation, while not limiting the rate of growth of Parliamentarians and, at the same time, the operating costs of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I note that our colleagues in the opposition support this Bill and I am glad they do. With the method of calculating provided for under the old Bill, based on the 1981 census, there would be 310 of us here, compared with 289 with the proposed formula.

In 1991 we would have had under the former system 343 Members instead of the 291 figure resulting from the proposed formula, and in 2001, we would have 369 Members instead of the 296 under the proposed formula.

Mr. Speaker, there are concerns voiced by Members opposite who suggest the vote should be proportional. One vote recorded in this House on behalf of one constituency has to be just as representative as one vote from another constituency.

The possibility of using the Senate formula was also suggested. One could say that whenever a seat in the Commons is lost, it might perhaps be replaced with a seat in the Senate.

Under the old formula, and speaking on behalf of Quebec, we would lose one member and gain one senator this time. In 1991 we would lose four members and gain four senators, and in the year 2001 we would lose six members and gain six Senators.

Mr. Speaker, what is important in my view is to make sure that this House has elected members who adequately represent the Canadian population.

There is provision in the proposed formula to reflect regional disparities, ethnic groups or others. Reference is made to the possibility of more or less 25 percent, on the basis established at the constituency level in each Province.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation assures the provinces of the possibility of maintaining the minimum number of seats they now have; no seats will be lost. I think this was a concern that existed at any rate in my area, as in many others in Quebec; we must make sure that the Quebec representation will remain fair, with at least the existing number of seats.

If we turn to provinces where there was a larger increase . . . We know that in other provinces, for all sorts of reasons, there is some kind of a population explosion, and we now have constituencies where there may be for instance 160,000 votes, while there are constituencies in some eastern provinces which may have only 45,000 voters. The Bill will allow an increase in the number of members in that province, of course, but instead of having the number increased at such an astronomical rate as proposed, it would be increased but in a much slower way.

This will then, Mr. Speaker, result in over-all savings just as significant, and it may also allow the possibility of providing members with better tools, in order that they may better perform their work and better represent their constituents.

Mr. Speaker, under this legislation the House would keep a manageable size, and this would make it easier for all members to be heard. Often Liberal or New Democratic Members have remarked that Government members do not often have an opportunity to speak. I understand that. We are 211 here, Mr. Speaker, and I can tell you our Liberal colleagues opposite are somewhat jealous about that. But, of course, if we are to have a greater number of members speaking in this House, it must keep a manageable size, with opportunities for positive interaction.

Mr. Speaker, I am especially happy that our Government has initiated this Bill, and I am convinced that Opposition Members will want to see it through in an expeditious manner, in order that we may send it without delay to the Standing Committee and enact it as soon as possible.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few words on this legislation. The first thing that catches my eye about it is that the extra seat which was recommended for Newfoundland will not now be put in place. Therefore, I look at this legislation which robs Newfoundland and Labrador of an extra seat in this Chamber and I ask myself: Why? We hear the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) say that we do not want to increase costs for the Government of Canada. We want to save some money. That is funny coming from this Government. I notice that in most of the morning papers reference was made to a new $7 million or $7.5 million electronics communications outfit going into the Prime Minister's Office. That is approximatley the amount of money that would be required to extend the House of Commons by the amount recommended. The hon. gentleman is shaking his head. He should read the figures.

• (1210)

Mr. McDermid: I thought it was more.

Mr. Baker: The cost is actually $8.9 million, for the edification of the hon. gentleman. If the Government of Canada is concerned about saving money, why is it carrying on as it is today? Is it denying Newfoundland an extra seat in this Chamber because it wants to make savings in this one particular area? Is that the real reason for doing away with the recommendation for redistribution and an increase in seats? We did not have to spend another $5 million or $6 million setting up a commission. We did not have to spend another $4 million or $5 million dealing with redistribution all over again. We only had to pass one final step in this Chamber. However, the Government said no on the basis that it wants to save money. The Government is going to introduce a new system which will rob Newfoundland of one seat and a lot of other provinces of seats in this Chamber.

The other example used by the Government House Leader is even more alarming to me. He said that if we increased the number of people in this Chamber we could not have meaningful debate. He said that the Government of Canada has embarked upon a new procedural change plan and that it is implementing recommendations to give Members of Parliament a greater say in what takes place in this Chamber. That is a very strange recommendation coming from the House Leader, Mr. Speaker. Of all the Governments that have been elected in this country in this century, this Government should certainly not be saying that it will give Members a greater say.

The Government says that an increase in the number of seats in the Chamber may destroy representation and that an increase is not necessary because there is a new system in effect. Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that Members in this Chamber will only get the freedom to speak that the Government is willing to give them. I am not speaking now of the structural changes which the House Leader spoke of in introducing this Bill. I am talking about the attitude of the Government of Canada toward individual Members of the House. The philosophy should be "the more the merrier". It would not do any harm, but would do some good, to increase the number.

Last night we had a meeting with representatives from the Department of Employment and Immigration. A policy had been adopted by the Government of Canada on which Members of Parliament on the Government side were briefed last week and on which members of the Opposition were briefed this week. What say do we have in what was gone through? What say do Members of the House of Commons have who are, perhaps, more qualified than anyone else in the country to pass judgment on things which affect ordinary people? We get their letters and telephone calls and we know what is wrong with programs introduced in this Chamber by the Government.

Last night we were told that in order to be employed in a government program, you must have been unemployed for 24 of the previous 30 weeks. When Government members were told of that last week they knew it was wrong. They could see all kinds of pitfalls in that regulation, yet they were powerless to do anything about it. They were powerless because it was the policy of the Government of Canada, it was the ruling of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), and that is it. Members on both sides of this Chamber know that that regulation will mean discrimination against young people and women and anyone who had the gumption to work for seven weeks in the previous seven months because they do not now qualify to go to work or even for a referral. Members on both sides know that that is wrong, but the regulation stands.

For the House Leader to say that the Government has brought in a new era in which Members of this Chamber will have input into government policy is simply not true. If the Government House Leader was serious in accepting all of the recommendations of the committee on the reorganization of this Chamber, and even in going further by giving Members input into this Chamber, that would be a structural change. We are also talking about a change of philosophy by the Government.

The Government House Leader said that we probably have too many Members in this Chamber already and that members do not have a chance to participate. The way to solve that problem is through structural change and a change in the philosophy of the Government of Canada. To profess that this has been done is simply not true. You would have to give Members of Parliament an opportunity to originate their own terms of reference in committees of this Chamber. You would have to give Members of Parliament the understanding that their first responsibility is to represent the people of their constituencies and that they need not hesitate to criticize a Minister of their own Government.

You know what I am talking about, Mr. Speaker. In the British system Government members criticize Government Ministers. That is the custom in most of the legislatures of the British parliamentary system, or what remains of it. With the present Government attitude and the present situation in the House of Commons we are behind the other Legislatures which operate under the British system. For the House Leader to say that the Government has introduced changes and, therefore, an increase in representation is not necessary, is a pretty shallow argument.

The reason for my intervention is simply to point out—

An Hon. Member: Get to it.

Mr. Baker: The Hon. Member says "Get to it". He obviously has not been listening very carefully. The point is that the Government is robbing a seat from Newfoundland and Labrador. If you check with any Member of this House from Newfoundland and Labrador, no matter which side of the Chamber he is on, he will tell you that he is overworked. The Hon. Member is laughing. Why does he not ask the four Conservative Members from Newfoundland, of the seven in the House, if they are not drastically overworked? The Hon. Member is shaking his head. He does not know. He does not understand what it is to represent areas with very high unemployment regarding which Members of this Chamber, regardless of which side of the House they are on, have to answer basic questions. It is in these areas that Members, from whatever Party, must appear before boards on appeals or appear before the Federal Tax Court of Canada on behalf of their constituents. They are Members who take calls from constituents who ask why they were not hired on a social assistance program. They are Members who must carry out requests about unemployment insurance, Canada pensions or disability pensions and welfare cases. The hon. gentleman would have to agree that we need more representation in this Chamber, not less.

● (1220)

The rationale given by the House Leader is that it will result in a saving of money. The Government says that it will save money, yet, as was pointed out a minute ago, it gave a billion dollar bail-out to a bank. In fact, when one adds the figures, it comes to $2.5 billion.

I could give further examples of poor management, bad decisions and waste of taxpayers' money that has taken place since the Government came to power. Cabinet Ministers have increased the size of their staff and the Prime Minister has increased his staff by 54 per cent, to 120 people. Yet the Government House Leader does not want to give Newfoundland and Labrador an extra seat in the House of Commons because the Government wants to save money. There is no rationale behind that argument.

He also argued that changes that have taken place in the procedures of the House have allowed Members a greater say in Government policy. Not only has that not occurred, the opposite has taken place. The Government of Canada claims that it was elected to govern and therefore no Member of the House will influence its policy, let alone the regulations.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, was the Hon. Member a member of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections last June when it gave approval in principle—including his Party—to this Bill?

Mr. Baker: No, Mr. Speaker, but I have the committee report before me. Why is the hon. gentleman asking the question? Perhaps he could elaborate on why he is asking that question. However, the answer quite simply is no, I was not a member of that committee.

Mr. Dick: I was wondering if the Hon. Member realizes the appearance of a flip-flop in the position of the Liberal Party between last June and September.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, perhaps this is the problem in the Chamber. The Government House Leader, who is the boss of the Hon. Member for Larnark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick), talked about Members of Parliament having greater input, speaking their mind and so on. I was simply pointing out to the House that under this particular formula Newfoundland was going to lose a seat which would have been given to it had the other formula come into play. That is my input into the debate and it is very important.

I am not talking about committee meetings in June. I do not know what went on, I have not read the minutes, but listening to the Government House Leader, it is clear as the nose on your face why he is introducing the Bill. I simply interjected to point out that I am very disappointed that Newfoundland will not get that extra seat which we believed was assured us with the other recommendation.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy listening to the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) and I agree that Newfoundland, according to the new distribution, will probably lose one seat. However, when we consider that with the rest of the country, Ontario will lose some 10 or 12 new seats that would have been provided under the previous recommendation, it is not only Newfoundland that is losing seats. As a matter of fact, Newfoundland is not losing anything but simply maintaining its current level, as will most provinces across the country.

I do not want the public to be under the misconception that there will be fewer seats in the House of Commons. There will be a very small increase as opposed to an increase of 28 seats that was proposed in the old Bill.

All Members are working hard in this place. I can sympathize with the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate because there are 200,000 people in my constituency and I know what it is like to work hard for my constituents. I believe that all Members work hard for their constituents, and the Hon. Member should not pretend that he or Members from Newfoundland are the only ones who work hard and under difficult conditions. Every Member of Parliament works extremely hard for his constituents, no matter what part of this great country he represents.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I simply elaborated on that point because the Hon. Member who just spoke was sitting in his place shaking his head when I was saying that we need that extra seat because Newfoundland Members of Parliament were overworked. He was shaking his head to signify no—perhaps in answer to another Hon. Member—but that is why I commented on that question in detail.

With respect to his other point, it is true that this recommendation will increase the number of Members by four while the previous proposal recommended an increase of 28. I am suggesting that the rationale used in limiting the increase to four is not correct. I am also saying that Newfoundland needs that extra seat, as do some other provinces.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has terminated. Debate.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring a couple of points briefly to the attention of the House. We have come a long way from the rotten borough system that caused much of the historical concern about how members were chosen. However, I do not believe that we have alleviated the representation problems that we will face if we do not come to an understanding of what the formula should be.

Representation by population has never really worked in Canada because of our diverse country. There are areas which need representation but have very few people. Therefore, we recognize that while representation by population may have been acceptable in deciding the number of members to represent certain areas, it has not worked totally in the past. We should recognize that it will not work in the future.

In fact, it is quite possible to make a good argument against representation by population under the current structure in Canada because it is much easier for a member to represent a large metropolitan area which has a homogeneous population than to have fair representation of a much larger area which has a heterogenous population. I can use as an example the Prince Albert constituency as it has been proposed under the new border structure. It takes in more than half of Saskatchewan. A very small part of the population is a rural farm population. About one-third of the population is comprised of northerners who are of native ancestry and who have a very different lifestyle and interest as far as their representation is concerned. The rest of the constituency is made up of the City of Prince Albert. Not a very large city dominates a tremendously large area. Many northerners in that constituency feel it would be much fairer to have their representation based on the northern area. However, this would be more than half of the Province of Saskatchewan but would consist of only about 35,000 people.

As I said, you can make pretty good arguments for not using representation by population. The power of a region or a province is more important in some ways than representation by the individual. For instance, Mr. Speaker, being a westerner you will recognize that over the years Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia quite often have groups claiming that we in the West do not have enough representation in the House of Commons. It does not matter what kind of representation or what Party is in power. We do not get a fair hearing because central Canada, Quebec and Ontario form such a large part of the representation in the House that in the end any decision made will be slanted toward central Canada.

In my office I have a hat that was presented to me not too long ago. There is a map on it and it says "the Republic of Western Canada". That kind of feeling in the West arises quite often. In a number of elections lately we have had the participation of the Western Canada Concept Party. Criticism is based on the fact that people do not feel the West has had real representation in Ottawa. Although we have changed Government and have more representatives in the Government, that really does not solve the problem.

The House Leader in presenting this Bill said there was a need to save money. That is a pretty spurious reason. We cannot accept that as a particularly good argument. Over a long period of time, that would not hold much water. If the population represented by a Member gets larger, services must be maintained which will cost more money anyway.

As my colleague stated earlier, if you really want to save money, let us look elsewhere. Let us look at the other place. It costs us a lot without giving the representation which we think is necessary and which should be available, in a democracy.

Let me mention a couple of historical approaches which perhaps the committee would like to look at. There are parts of Canada which, on occasion, say they would like to have representation in the House of Commons. I speak of the City of Montreal and the City of Toronto that say that maybe they should have a Government of their own. Let me give you an example from my own experience. When I first went to Nigeria, there were 12 states there. Now there are 19. When the population of a state got too large, the state was divided in half. Northern Ontario has often said it would like to be recognized as a separate province.

Mr. Mantha: Never.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hovdebo: I know that would be an unpopular approach to that problem, but it does make some sense. If you took Montreal out of the Province of Quebec, the population of Quebec would be considerably smaller. It would, though, be a region separate from the rest of Quebec. I know this is an unpopular approach, but it is the kind of innovation we need to look at in order to get the kind of representation which people think they should have.

What are we trying to do? Are we trying to ensure representation by population, or are we trying to ensure that every region of the country gets the kind of representation which makes it feel it is part of the country? There are many parts that do not. I know from close proximity that western Ontario feels an awfully long way from Toronto.

Mr. Rodriguez: What about northern Ontario?

Mr. Hovdebo: Northern Ontario does too. Even if you get as far as Sudbury, you feel a long way from Toronto.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hovdebo: Northern Saskatchewan felt so far from Regina that the Department of Northern Saskatchewan was formed in order to give that part of the province some representation in the Government.

Power is important to the region. Power goes with representation. If you develop a program which does not make any part of Canada feel it has representation, regardless of whether representation by population is the direction you should go—that is part of my feeling and traditionally we have gone that way—it will not work. We must recognize that representation itself is our basic concern.

Let us make sure in whatever we do to solve this problem that we give all parts of Canada the representation they think is necessary to have a voice in the Government of Canada.

Large rural areas and large northern areas need some form of representation which recognizes them as a homogeneous group. They have concerns as to how the country is governed. At the moment we would not want to support this Bill in its present form. The committee, when it looks at this Bill, can examine some of these concerns and make sure that Canadians will feel in the end they are well represented in this Parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any questions or comments? If there are no questions or comments, we will resume debate. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

● (1240)

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-74. I think we should take a minute to talk about the principle of proportional representation in the House of Commons.

[Translation]

I heard a while ago the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) state that he was in favour of a proportional representation system in Canada and indeed, Mr. Speaker, we have such a system but with some difference, and as you know the difference is that there is a minimum below which a province cannot go as regards its number of seats even when the population of that province is proportionally lower that that in other areas and that minimum is the number of seats representing the province in our Senate. This means that a province which has four senators cannot have less than four members in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, apart from that factor, we have to all intents and purposes a proportional representation system in our country.

[English]

We could say that in fact we have a modified system of proportional representation right now because of the guaranteed minimum number of seats represented by senators.

I should like to make a comment now, which I hope will elicit a reply later by the Government House Leader. I refer to Article 42(1) of the Constitution Acts in Canada, 1867 to 1982 which reads as follows:

An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 38(1):

(a) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;—

In its new Bill the Government is modifying the principle of proportionate representation which I have just described because it is adding a second level at which there is a guaranteed number of seats. I described the first level just a moment ago, that is, the number of seats in the Senate. There is a second level of protection, which is the present number of seats that any province has in the House of Commons. In my view it could potentially infringe upon that provision in the Constitution. It is quite clearly indicated that the only floor level shall be the number of seats in the Senate. If that is being modified, perhaps we require a constitutional amendment in order to accomplish it.

I am not saying that I am totally against what has been announced today by the Government House Leader, but I have some reservations about it. I think we should all be conscious of what we are doing. We are changing the entire system of proportional representation that we now have. From now on the existing number of seats in the House will be the guaranteed minimum for the provinces represented by Hon. Members. That is vastly different from what we have had in the past.

Hon. Members opposite should be concerned about it. For instance, Members of Parliament representing the Province of Ontario will be representing 88,819 voters in the House of Commons, on average, after this redistribution has been completed. They should also recognize that it will cost some $5 million to effect this redistribution. We have just finished redistributing the number of seats in the House of Commons, to which all political Parties agreed at the time. If this is to be changed, I believe all Members of the House should be very conscious of these facts and of the fact that it will cost millions of taxpayers' dollars to accomplish it.

Of course, I recognize the dilemma. One redistribution called for an increase in the number of seats, bringing it to somewhere in the order of 340 seats, and therefore would have created considerable expenditures in itself. We recognize that it costs approximately $300,000 or $400,000 per year for every Member of the House of Commons, that is, for support staff, office space and everything else involved. Of course, the 340 seats would have been after the next redistribution. The other redistribution we were discussing would have brought it to 310 seats, but the number we are discussing now is 288 seats. Frankly, that number is sufficient. Some Hon. Members have said in the past that if the House of Commons were represented by a number larger than that, it would become unwieldy. I tend to agree with that. In fact, at this moment I do not envy Conservative back-benchers; I would not envy anyone being a Conservative in any case. Those back-benchers have very little, if any, occasion to speak. Of course, we recognize that they do not often use whatever occasion is available to them. Nevertheless, they have very little opportunity to speak in the House because of the fact that there is a large number of Members from the same political Party. Once we enlarge the House, of course we compound that problem. There are ups and downs no matter which way we look at it.

I see the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) and the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) sitting across the way. No doubt both of them will participate in this debate later. There are considerations on both sides of the issue about which we should be aware. I hope the parliamentary committee looking into the details of the Bill will take them into account.

I should like to turn to a local concern involving my constituency of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

Mr. Nunziata: It is well represented.

Mr. Boudria: Thank you. The people in the western end of my constituency, particularly those in the Township of Cumberland, in the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, are becoming dissatisfied with the fact that their community is divided in half. There are two municipalities for the area of Orleans, two provincial Members of Parliament, two federal ones, two municipal councils and two of everything else. This has been very divisive in the past, and the community of Orleans has requested that every attempt be made to unite that community. Particularly, the Mayor of Cumberland and the Township of Cumberland indicated that one federal Member of Parliament should represent the area. I hope the committee bears that in mind.

There is another problem involving the area, that is, rapid growth, particularly in the eastern end of Ottawa, and its effect on the constituency of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell and, for that matter, on the constituency of Ottawa-Carleton as well. According to the 1981 census, 82,706 people live in my constituency. That is what is indicated on paper, and in theory it is just about the right number in terms of representation in the House of Commons by one Member of Parliament. However, the Township of Cumberland, according to the 1981 census, had only 18,000 people. It had 25,500 by 1984 and will have 29,860 by the end of this year according to the projections of the municipal officials. By the end of next year it will have 35,159 and 46,682 by 1991. Obviously it is a rapidly growing area. That should be taken into account in a special way when the redistribution occurs. I hope the officials doing the preparatory work will bear this in mind. Perhaps they could arrange the electoral map under the redistribution in such a way that if they use the 1981 figures, they make ridings with a smaller number of people in those areas that have experienced the recent urban growth about which we all know. The reality is that at the time of the next election we will have an electoral map with roughly the same number of constituents everywhere. I see the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) sitting across—

An Hon. Member: He is sleeping.

Mr. Boudria: He also represents a riding that has a very large number of constituents. Perhaps if such a formula, including taking into account areas of potential growth and putting a slightly lower number of people in those ridings for the purposes of redistribution, had been considered when the redistribution was made in the past, he would not have had the problem of having a constituency which is so large. For the same reason I think we are going to see the same thing happening in the constituency I represent now. We are seeing in the eastern end of Ottawa, where villages such as Orleans only had 2,000 or 3,000 people ten or fifteen years ago and are now communities of 50,000, 60,000 or 70,000 people, almost the same phenomenon that occurred in the suburbs of Toronto a number of years ago. Those responsible for preparing the electoral map should keep these rapidly growing areas in mind.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I believe it was the Hon. Member for Frontenac (Mr. Masse) who described the minimum representation given to provinces. He was of the view that in the past if a province lost seats in the House of Commons, it gained additional seats in the Senate, or something to that effect. That is not the case at all. The Senate level is established so that the minimum number of seats that any province has in the House of Commons is equivalent to the number of seats that that province has in the Senate. That is what the Senate minimum means. It has nothing to do with gaining additional seats in the Senate when a province loses some in the House. We have never had that situation, otherwise some of the provinces would probably be represented vastly differently in the Senate. As we know, the original allocation of Senate seats was 24 for Canada West, 24 for Canada East and 24 for the Maritimes, to be divided into 10 for New Brunswick, 10 for Nova Scotia and 4 for Prince Edward Island, had it joined Confederation in 1867, which it did not. Therefore, at Confederation the two Maritime Provinces had 12 seats in the Senate each, and they eventually lost two each when Prince Edward Island joined Confederation. That is how the present number of Senators was arrived at. It has nothing to do with losing seats in the House of Commons as such.

I bring those issues to your attention. Yes, I think that having too large a House of Commons could be unwieldy. I agree with that principle. I am frightened because we are changing the principles of proportional representation and we are effecting that now. I hope that the parliamentary committee ensures that we do not change that principle, and I believe as well that we should ensure that we do not offend Section 42 of the Constitution, which is a possibility. I invite those experts in that field to consult the document to ensure that that will not be the case.

The only reason put forward by the Government House Leader that I do not agree with is the fact that we are doing this to save money. That somewhat frightens me as a principle, because democracy is always expensive. There are those who say that elections cost a lot of money, but compared to places that do not have elections, I still think it is a pretty good deal. Adhering to the same principle, we would not reduce the number of seats because we are going to reduce costs. That is the wrong reason and it is frightening to think that that principle might be extended to other areas.

If we want to save money, of course, we could always sell the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) new computer that he brought in this morning or the limousine of the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) or we could reduce the size of the Cabinet. Of course, we could make sure that the job of the Secretary of State is well protected in the Cabinet because surely he would stay. There are many ways of saving money, but the principle of reducing the number of seats in the House allegedly to save money is somewhat frightening, I would suggest.

I invite questions, especially from the Secretary of State.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments? No questions? I think then it is debate.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: I do want to participate in this debate. With a constituency that, in terms of population, is now the third largest in Canada I, of course, am very interested in redistribution and have followed the procedures very, very carefully. I agree with my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria)—

Mr. Boudria: Then I am really worried.

Mr McDermid: —when he talks about expanding areas, the difficulties we have had in the past, using the 1981 census as a base, redistribution taking place some three, four or five years later and growth areas not being taken into consideration.

I am pleased to say that that is one of the major parts of this Act which is being introduced by my friend, the Government House Leader, because it allows the committee to take a look at growth areas and not be held down to 25 per cent on either side of the average within a certain province. In considering an area, they can take a look at planning departments, which they have not done too frequently in the past, to see where the growth is going to be and how it is being phased in and take that into consideration when they are setting up the new constituency.

I think that is very, very important, especially in areas that the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell mentioned and represents, and areas to the west of Toronto such as Mississauga, Brampton, and Oakville and to the east of Toronto the Pickering-Whitby-Oshawa area, Markham and so on, where the growth is phenomenal.

I know that right now, with house sales going at record rates, both resale and new homes, due to the new Government and the confidence in the economy that we find today in Canada, we are finding that these homes are being built at a much quicker pace than had been anticipated and that constituencies are growing at a very rapid rate. I must say that with this Act that can be taken into consideration and I am very pleased about that.

I am sorry that my friend, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), is not here because he was concered about Newfoundland not having that extra seat. I will say to the Hon. Member from Newfoundland, and I would argue, that it would be better for Newfoundland to have seven seats in a 289-seat House than to have eight seats in a 310-seat House. I think you will find that it is getting better representation by population because of that than if it had the increased seat. So I think his argument is not really well founded, and I would say to him that if he rethinks his argument he will agree with me that Newfoundland will be better off under this new program.

Mr. Speaker, we are supporting the Bill and we are looking forward to it going to committee to be discussed and to have many of the questions answered. I know there is an added expense in having other hearings, but I think it will be worth it because we will more effectively represent the people in our constituencies with fewer Members here. Each Member will have a little more time available then to make his or her representations to Government, and in turn, more time will be available for consultation by Government. With the down-size increase, if I can put it that way, I think we will have far more effective representation with the Government and I think that because of that we will serve our constituents much better.

I am going to call it one o'clock at the present time, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Thank you. The Hon. Member will have 15 minutes left in his speech plus 10 minutes of questions and comments after Orders of the Day.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

PROPOSED SALE OF CANADAIR AND DE HAVILLAND CORPORATIONS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a minute and a half to call to the attention of the country the way in which the Government has damaged two very important national institutions that belong to all Canadians, the Canadair aircraft company in Montreal and the de Havilland aircraft company in Toronto. These are both companies which we recognize need more work, attention, and time before they become economically viable in the sense in which the private sector knows that expression. Yet the Government, for two reasons, has been talking about the sale of those two companies. That is objectionable and also very damaging to the companies. Stories arise indicating that the companies will be sold and there is doubt as to whether their products will continue to be made. This ideological line being taken by the Government is actually damaging the marketing of the products of these companies.

One of the reasons the Government has been doing this is because of its ideology. It thinks that it is a good thing for a Government company to go out of business. Liberal Members do not disagree that it is better, all other things being equal, to have businesses operating in the private sector. However, the way the Government is going about this is damaging to the companies.

I think the other reason for this, which only became apparent in the last few months, is a balance sheet kind of attitude. The Government wants these companies off its books, so there is a rumour—

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

WAR CRIMINALS

COMMISSION'S TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, on Saturday the Ukrainian-Canadian Committee and several other organizations of Canadians with roots in the Baltic region and south Europe sponsored full-page newspaper advertisements asking "Why Discriminate?" The focus of their concern and anger is the Commission of Inquiry on War Criminals appointed by the Government on February 7 of this year.

It is clear by now that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a grievous error in focusing the attention of the Commission only on persons responsible for war crimes related to the activities of Nazi Germany during World War II. The Canadian Government should long ago have dealt with the persistent charge that our country has harboured war criminals. However, the Government made its action unnecessarily divisive by failing to authorize the Commission to look for persons who committed war crimes related to the activities of powers other than Nazi Germany.

All of the judicious qualities for which the Commissioner is noted will be required for him to fulfil his responsibilities properly. He will need to be particularly careful in ensuring that documents drawn from archives located within the Soviet Union are authentic and that witnesses testify freely. Even while he does justice in these ways, the Commissioner is finding the terms of reference he was given being criticized as being partial. When it is vitally important that justice be seen to be done regarding war crimes, Ukrainian-Canadians feel themselves the unexpected victims of an attack of "Mulroney-ism".

AIRPORTS

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES ON VERNON, B.C. AIRPORT

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, last week, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) indicated by his remarks in the House that he was badly misinformed about a certain airport in the riding of Okanagan North. This Government, through the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), recently made available a grant of over $400,000 to improve the alignment of the runway in question and to carry out certain much needed reforms. This has been strongly supported by the people of Vernon and the Regional District of Okanagan North. Admittedly there is some opposition to this because obviously many people do not like to live next to an airport. Nevertheless, the airport is there. It is essential to Vernon and surrounding districts because it does provide the impetus for an enlarged industrial base.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, Vernon is also a tourist destination. Tourism is probably one of our most important economic factors. I would like to assure the House and the people of Canada that the Government was wise in its expenditure of over $400,000, and I congratulate the Government for seeing to a very vital need.

INDUSTRY

SHOE MANUFACTURING—CALL FOR LONG-TERM GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, the shoe manufacturing industry makes an important contribution to the socio-economic well-being of many people in the City of Kitchener. Indeed, in the Kitchener-Waterloo-Guelph-Cambridge area, shoe manufacturers account for some 4,500 employees who make an average annual wage of approximately $14,000, making a total yearly payroll of $63 million. These figures do not include the hundreds more people employed in related industries, such as suppliers and sales personnel.

I urge the Government to adopt and pursue a policy of long-term commitment to the shoe manufacturing industry so that it can regain and maintain at least a 50 per cent share of the Canadian market.

Certainly competitiveness within industry is a good thing, but it must be fair. A policy commitment ensuring a 50 per cent share of the market would allow the industry to protect existing jobs, enhance its technology, improve its productivity, and create some 6,000 new jobs nation-wide. Therefore, I call upon and urge the Government to protect the shoe manufacturing industry with a policy that ensures it a 50 per cent share of the domestic Canadian market.

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

IMPORTANCE OF RENEWING QUOTAS

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, once again I would like to speak to a very important subject, namely the footwear industry.

The present quotas are about to expire, at the end of November, and we are already starting to feel the disastrous consequences. I have here a document referring to the fact that Chaussures St-Georges is shutting down after employing more than 150 people.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is imperative and extremely urgent to extend the quotas for five years for 50 per cent of the market. The only argument against extension is the interests of the consumer, which I think hardly holds water, since the interests of the consumer lie in extending the quotas, and I would say there are several arguments in favour of doing so.

I therefore ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to live up to his clear and specific promise to protect the footwear industry. This is your chance to make up for many of your failed endeavours.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—INCREASED BENEFITS URGED

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday three very significant events took place. First the Northland Bank collapsed. Second, the Government stifled debate on Bill C-70, the first step in its plan to reduce the deficit on the backs of Canadian families. Third, the latest Statistics Canada figures showed that the real incomes of families are down and real poverty is up.

Families are the foundation of Canadian society. They are the institutions entrusted with the care and nurturing of our next generation, yet one in every five Canadian children now lives in poverty. Many are lining up at food banks while Governments stand idly by doing nothing.

Cutting family benefits and increasing family taxes will not help. Instead of closing down the Northland Bank, the Government should be closing down food banks. Instead of giving $1 billion to the banks, it should increase family benefits. The Government must begin to show some commitment and support to families by stopping the cut-backs in family benefits and reindexing the family allowance. I urge Canadians to protest the Government's attack on children and families.

AGRICULTURE

GOVERNMENT POLICY—IMPACT ON PRODUCERS

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) announced that a draft tripartite agreement on beef and pork price stabilization programs had been sent to the provinces and producer associations, for comment and, we hope, approval.

The House will recall that last spring, when the Standing Committee on Agriculture was holding its meetings, the Quebec Minister of Agriculture refrained from appearing before the Committee, unlike his counterparts from the other provinces. He thereby deprived Quebec farm producers of their right to be represented by the Minister of Agriculture of their province within the framework of a national consultation process that is important to the future of a healthy agricultural industry in Canada.

Quebec farm producers earnestly hope that this time, their provincial Government will be involved in the discussion, since the proposals made by the Minister are flexible enough to meet the requirements of the provinces and producer associations.

Details of the proposed agreement should be satisfactory to Quebec farmers, because the agreement provides that provinces that have their own programs may still participate in the national program as soon as it is operational.

At the same time, a study will be made to measure or quantify distortions created by all provincial and federal programs in the agricultural sector. In the light of the results of such a study, adjustments will be necessary to ensure that producers in one province do not get more government assistance than producers in other provinces.

FEED FREIGHT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—IMPORTANCE TO EASTERN LIVESTOCK INDUSTRY

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, in 1941 the Feed Freight Assistance Program was introduced. It provided for the payment of 90 per cent of the costs of transporting grain from the Lakehead to eastern Canada. Between 1967 and 1976 the level of feed freight assistance slipped to 59.3 per cent of transportation costs, and the area to be equalized was arbitrarily moved east to Montreal.

• (1410)

Based on the promise of feed cost equalization, a vibrant and significant livestock industry has been built. The food and agricultural sector is the most important component in the maritime economy accounting for one-third of our total jobs. The livestock industry and its supplemental farm supply and processing industries contribute more than $1 billion a year to our maritime economy. Unfortunately, this growth has not been accompanied by research, technical development, or interest in grain production in the maritime provinces.

In 1982 the Maritime Farmers Council made a proposal to the Government of Canada which is designed to achieve greater independence for the maritime agricultural industry. It calls for the maintenance of the livestock industry and the development of feed self-sufficiency in the maritimes.

We look forward to achieving greater independence. The Feed Freight Assistance Program is an important part of the proposal to achieve that result. We look forward to an early announcement confirming the continuation of this program, an important instrument of regional development.

RAILWAYS

FUTURE OF TRANSCONA RAILWAY SHOPS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, last May 30, I asked a question in the House of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski). It concerned the future of the Transcona railway shops. At that time the Minister said: "The future for Transcona and CN in Winnipeg is very bright indeed". That was a very cruel joke played upon Hon. Members of this House as well as upon the CNR workers. An announcement was made this week of the abandonment of the entire VIA Rail maintenance work at the Transcona shops which will permanently shut down the jobs of hundreds of workers in Winnipeg.

This is just one more example of the way in which the Government has abandoned the historic role of Winnipeg as a transportation centre. It has abrogated the agreements which were signed two years ago which designated Winnipeg as the major western transportation centre.

I would suggest to the Minister of Transport that he go back to those agreements and recognize that there is still one other way in which a solution could be found. Under those agreements there was a development of a light-weight prototype grain car which could be manufactured in western Canada. I suggest if the Government has a scintilla of concern left about regional development, it would make sure that that commitment is upheld and that the light-weight prototype grain car is manufactured in the Transcona shops so those jobs can be saved.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT'S ACHIEVEMENTS

Mr. Fernand Ladouceur (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to the numerous efforts made until now by this Government to improve the employment situation at the national level.

As a result of consultations, given our willingness to cooperate openly with the provinces, and considering that the various interest groups of the economic sector have promised their cooperation, our Government, through the Minister of Employment, was successful in establishing an employment planning strategy whose main objectives realistically and concretely meet the aspirations of our fellow Canadians who are faced with a disastrous inheritance—the fruit of 16 years of Liberal administration.

Mr. Speaker, the new strategy will indeed take into consideration the real and lasting needs of the labour market while stressing our commitment to justice and fairness.

Mr. Speaker, more than 300,000 jobs have been created since the September 4, 1984 elections. The unemployment rate has declined from 11.6 to 10.3 per cent. The unemployment rate among youths has dropped from 18.3 to 15.9 per cent. Those figures cannot give rise to sensational and scandalous headlines, Mr. Speaker, for they reflect concrete facts which obviously—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his allotted time has expired.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

LOCATION OF NUCLEAR WASTE DISPOSAL SITE IN EASTERN UNITED STATES

Mr. Jean J. Charest (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to plans being made by the U.S. Government, at the U.S. Department of Energy, for the construction of a nuclear waste disposal site in the eastern United States. At the present time, the U.S. Government is considering 236 sites, including three sites near the border between Vermont and the Province of Quebec.

As soon as our Government became aware of this situation, we asked our embassy to express our concern immediately. The Secretary of State for External Affairs subsequently raised the matter with his U.S. counterpart, Mr. Shultz. The Minister of the Environment did the same with his U.S. conterpart, Mr. Thomas, and later on, the Canadian Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources also took up the matter with his U.S. counterpart, Mr. Herrington.

Recently, on September 26 in Ottawa, U.S. officials gave us the assurance that they were not considering sites near the Canadian border or sites that would require geological or other studies in Canada.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say, for the record, that the Canadian Government can hardly be satisfied with this situation or with the assurances given by the Americans at this stage.

I would also like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that ever since the beginning of this matter, Liberal Opposition Members have maintained the same silence they had always maintained before September 4, despite the fact that—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

TAKEOVER OF GULF CANADA—EFFECT OF TAX RULING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the House Leader is over-anxious. My question is really for the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I was just laughing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister of Finance and his colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, have just blown $1 billion on the bank fiasco. My question relates to another $1 billion, a result of a secret deal by way of a tax ruling in favour of the participants in the Gulf Canada deal. Would the Minister of Finance tell the House whether he knew about that ruling, whether he approved it, and whether that is going to be added to his deficit?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me comment on the introduction to the Right Hon. Member's question. The Government of Canada has not "blown" $1 billion on these banks. The $1 billion has been expended on these banks because of certain bad management practices and a bad economy which led to the failure of these two banks. I remind the Hon. Leader of the Opposition that that bad economy is related to decisions taken by previous Governments in relation to the National Energy Program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: You know it, John.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): So let's get those things clear.

As to the second part of the Hon. Leader's question, matters relating to tax rulings are privileged matters between the Minister of National Revenue and the particular company concerned.

ARRANGEMENT CONCERNING SALE OF GULF CANADA'S ASSETS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I put this question to the Minister to find out whether he was aware of this tax ruling benefiting participants in the Gulf deal—

Would the Minister be agreeable to referring the entire matter to a parliamentary committee, so that all participants in this deal to sell the assets of Gulf Canada . . . so that the parties concerned could appear before the committee and recall the nature of these tax rulings and so that the Canadian people may know how much this is going to cost?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Leader who, as a lawyer, should understand these matters, that the question of a tax ruling, if there is such a tax ruling, is a matter which is a privileged piece of information between the Minister of National Revenue and the company itself.

Questions on the takeover of part of the assets of Gulf Canada by Petro-Canada are matters which the Hon. Leader might want to put to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. However, we have commented on those questions fully over the past few months.

POSSIBLE COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I offered the Minister some advice on the question of the Bank Act relating to the depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. He did not chose to take it. I am going to take this position with him: even conceding that the Minister of National Revenue, within the provisions of the Income Tax Act, cannot reveal those tax rulings, the taxpayers themselves certainly can. Would the Minister of Finance arrange with the Minister of National Revenue to submit the whole affair to a parliamentary committee so that the taxpayers can come up to Parliament and describe the information on the rulings they received?

• (1420)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think what the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is suggesting is that certain matters be brought before a committee of the House of Commons. I cannot control what goes before a committee of the House of Commons. Maybe he would like to put his suggestion to the chairman of that committee.

BASIS FOR TAX RULING

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I can scarcely believe my ears.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We can scarcely believe your tie.

Mr. Johnston: Is the Minister of Finance telling us that the Income Tax Act condones secret cosy deals which in this case may have cost the taxpayers of Canada $1 billion? A gift to a group of wealthy Canadians of $1 billion and he is not prepared to tell the Canadian public the basis upon which that decision was made.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, here we have another example of the famed outrage of the opposition Party's finance critic. He gets so wrapped up in his own words he forgets to ask a question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: If you are going to hide behind it on that basis, stand on your feet and defend yourself!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Johnston: That was a smart-ass answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: Ask a question, mighty mouth.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The method actor.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Supplementary question.

INCOME TAX PROVISIONS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister telling Canadians that the Income Tax Act, as interpreted by the Government, permits secret deals which can pass $1 billion to a small group of Canadians, of whom we know there is an acute shortage according to the Minister without examination by the Canadian public?

Mr. de Jong: You guys did exactly the same thing. What's new?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is that what the Hon. Member, who is a noted author and a tax lawyer in his previous incarnation—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And leadership aspirant.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —what he knows and what his Leader knows is that it is not possible under the Income Tax Act of Canada to discuss specific tax matters relating to a particular company or individual, in public. If he wants to bring before a parliamentary committee a question of general application or a specific element of the Income Tax Act that he would like my views on, I have no hesitation in meeting that committee and discussing the implications of that element of the Tax Act. But only in a general sense.

COMMISSION OF INQUIRY—EXAMINATION OF MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is it the Government's intention that Mr. Justice Estey should examine the exercise of ministerial responsibility in the bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the collapse of the Northland Bank?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question yesterday and the Hon. Member—

Mr. Broadbent: You did not.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, I did.

Mr. Broadbent: You did not answer that question yesterday.

Mr. Nielsen: The Hon. Member should pay some regard to Citation 359 of Beauchesne as well.

I repeat that what I did yesterday in response to the question was to say that it would be totally inapproprite for me to be discussing or attempting to set parameters on terms of reference which were the subject of and attached to the press release and which went into some detail with respect to those terms. Why does he not have the patience to allow Mr. Justice Estey to get on with his inquiry using an approach which he sees fit, rather than requiring Government to lay down parameters for that work? He has the broadest possible terms of reference now.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister knows as well or, dare I say it, perhaps better than anyone else in this House, that the framework within which the Judge acts is the framework provided by the Government. If he wants ministerial responsibility examined, that should have been in the terms of reference. That is what I say to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Now, do you have a question?

TERMS OF REFERENCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in his press conference on Friday the Prime Minister said that the inquiry must include an investigation of all those responsible and they must be held accountable. If that is the intention of the Prime Minister, why was there not a specific reference to ministerial accountability in those terms of reference? Does the Government want to bail itself out of this $1 billion fiasco by giving insufficiently specific terms to the Judge looking into it?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have the terms of reference.

Mr. Broadbent: So have I.

Mr. Nielsen: The Hon. Member has the terms of reference. It would be a waste of time to read them into the record of the House.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, no; go ahead!

Mr. Nielsen: What they constitute is virtually a blank cheque to Mr. Justice Estey to conduct the widest ranging possible inquiry into all of the circumstances. What more than a blank cheque—maybe two blank cheques? I really do not know. We have gone as far as we possibly can to make those terms of reference as broad as they possibly can be.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the problem with the blank cheque is that it may be zero or it may be $1 billion. It could be the whole range. The Government has a lot of experience in wasting $1 billion: we on this side of the House know that very well.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I again direct my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister. If he looks at the terms of reference, two of them, Subsection (a) and Subsection (b), may cause the examiner to ignore ministerial responsibility completely. If the Government wants it looked at, as was done in the Macdonald inquiry into the RCMP, why did the Government not say so?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have more faith in the professionalism and integrity of Mr. Justice Estey than to believe that he would put that kind of distorted interpretation on his terms of reference.

LIQUIDATION OF TWO BANKS—MANNER IN WHICH GOVERNMENT PROCEEDED

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of State (Finance).

Last September 1, the Government announced its decision to seek court authorization to proceed with the liquidation of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. This was mentioned in the September 1 press release of the Minister of State.

Here is my question, the same one I directed to the Minister of Finance yesterday, but to no avail. Perhaps the Minister of State might give me an answer today. Why on September 1 were the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank lumped together, which was like giving the kiss of death to the Northland Bank?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very clear that on September 1 the Northland and the CCB were not put in the same situation. The Bank Act makes very clear what happens under certain conditions. The Northland had a curator, which allowed it time to try to facilitate a merger. For reasons which have become clear, I think, to the other side, having to do with economic circumstances, the management of the bank, and the curator's report, this became not possible. We did not in any way impede the curator in his role as a curator.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION TO LIQUIDATE CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK AND NORTHLAND BANK

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, it would seem that the Minister is not aware of the documents she released on September 1.

In the press release she gave us here in the House it is indicated on page 3 that it was necessary to launch immediately a winding up application for each bank. She has just said it is not true. That is what she told us on September 1. So when is she telling the truth?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, once again the other side is deliberately misinterpreting what happened. The Bank Act makes very clear what action is to be taken when a bank is seen to be no longer viable. We appointed a curator and the steps thereafter were laid out in that the liquidation proceedings were not proceeded with on the basis that a curator was there acting as a curator.

• (1430)

GOVERNMENT'S VIEW

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Deputy Prime Minister. In response to my Leader he indicated that perhaps the Hon. Member for Oshawa was distorting the facts when he suggested that Justice Estey may not have to look into ministerial responsibility. Is it the view of the Government that Justice Estey should look into the question of ministerial responsibility?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that is the same question again that I answered yesterday and again today. The terms of reference to Mr. Justice Estey are broad and clear, "an examination of all the circumstances and factors contributing to the condition of the bank and resulting in the cessation of their operation". If the Hon. Member cannot understand that, I would be glad to see him after Question Period to explain it to him word by painful word, if it is not clear enough now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: That would be painful. I would prefer not, if you don't mind.

PROVISION OF DOCUMENTATION TO COMMISSIONER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, is it the position of the Deputy Prime Minister that all of the documentation and information that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance had in their possession at the time that they were reviewing the situation of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank will be provided to Justice Estey?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, why should the Hon. Member be so presumptuous as to assume what Mr. Justice Estey is going to call for and what he is not going to call for?

Mr. de Jong: Order. Through the Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: In order to address the House properly I do not have to look at the Speaker. I would sooner look at my handsome friend across the way.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Deans: I think you were insulting the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: This only seems like a beauty contest.

Mr. Axworthy: It's the first good choice you've made all year.

Mr. Nielsen: After all, Sir, he only has a moustache.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I think it would be most appropriate if we allow Mr. Justice Estey to determine the approach and direction he wishes to take in the conduct of his wide-ranging inquiry, concerning which he has virtually total authority to go into every nook and cranny that he pleases.

Mr. Benjamin: What do you mean by "virtually"?

REQUEST FOR LIST OF UNINSURED DEPOSITORS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Since the Government's legislation to reimburse uninsured CCB and Northland depositors is on the Order Paper today, will the Minister now assure the House that, as part of our consideration of this Bill, we will have disclosure of who these depositors are so that taxpayers will know where their money is going?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated to the House before that I am prepared to provide a breakdown by categories to the House committee, and that those categories will make very clear where the funds are going. I might say once again that the intent of the Bank Act is that the names of depositors do not go public. If there is not clarity on the legal aspects of the Bank Act, I am quite prepared to release the lists to the commission and have Mr. Justice Estey decide what the legality is in that case.

REQUEST THAT LEGAL OPINIONS BE TABLED

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with former banks, the affairs of which are now subject to the provisions of the Winding-up Act rather than the Bank Act. Will the Minister table in the House the legal opinions on which she has based her refusal to provide this information up until now?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, when I present the legislation later this week, we will enter into a debate in the House and all the information that is required will be forthcoming.

NATURAL RESOURCES

WATER POLICY REPORT—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the absence of the Prime Minister. The report on federal water policy was released yesterday and it indicated that massive overland diversions of water to the U.S. raise profound environmental, economic, and strategic questions. It, however, did not oppose such exports. It did say that it was up to Cabinet to make the decision.

Given that there are a number of demands from the U.S. for more water, and that massive proposals have already been made in this country for diversion schemes, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs now exercise his political responsibility and give the House and the people of Canada guarantees that Canada's water will not be exported?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, one of the major recommendations of the Pearse Inquiry was that Canada proceed cautiously on the matter of interbasin transfers. That is one recommendation the Government will be quick to accept. We will be cautious. There are no specific proposals from the United States, or from any other country to Canada for Canada to divert, in a large scale way, water to that country. Therefore, we do have time and we will take advantage of that timetable.

REQUEST FOR EXCLUSION OF WATER FROM NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is with regard to free trade negotiations. Will the Minister assure the House and the people of Canada that Canada's water heritage will not be an item at the bargaining table?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member, the House, and the country know, those are separate questions and they will be treated in that way.

Mr. Benjamin: How are you going to treat them? That's the question.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

PURCHASE OF CANNED TUNA

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. There are reports today that National Defence orders are being filled by Star-Kist for 131,000 cans of tuna. This is of great concern to personnel of the Canadian Armed Forces because they have been asked to accept substandard tuna in the past. Will the Minister assure Armed Forces personnel and the employees of the Star-Kist plant about the quality of this tuna? According to the Department of Fisheries, there have been no inspection certificates issued for tuna from that plant since the month of May.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there will be no product served in DND kitchens that is not wholesome, fit, healthy and consumable.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That will be posted in all the kitchens now.

INSPECTION CERTIFICATES

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. He stated in an answer to me last Friday that Armed Forces personnel eat very well. Will he reassure the thousands of people in the Canadian Armed Forces, whose well-being he is supposed to protect, by tabling all federal Fisheries inspection certifications issued prior to and pertaining to the orders of tuna that are being filled as we speak here in the House?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member, Sir, that despite great obstacles which were inherited, the Armed Forces are now being fed better—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Answer the question.

Mr. Nielsen: —and they are equipped better and, quite frankly, it is my belief that they feel a heck of a lot better about the change.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CANADIAN DEPLETED URANIUM EXPORTS—USE IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it is with regard to the use of Canadian uranium in the production of U.S. nuclear weapons. I have a letter in which Mr. John Longenecker, the Deputy Assistant Secretary for Uranium Enrichment of the Office of Nuclear Energy of the United States, says:

> The depleted uranium is stockpiled at the enrichment facilities. By contract, if it is not claimed by the enrichment customer, it becomes the property of the United States Government. Some of it has been . . . converted into uranium metal—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Waddell:

—for applications for the U.S. Department of Energy and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Waddell: Yes. It is converted by the United States Department of Defence. Given that evidence, how does the Minister square the difference between what the American officials are saying and what he and his Canadian officials are saying?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no difference between the letter that was quoted by the Hon. Member and the statements I have been giving in the House. The treaty arrangements that are in place between Canada and the United States are being honoured. As part of those treaty arrangements, there is a requirement for administrative arrangements. There is now an intergovernmental mechanism operated in the United States, out of Washington, by the Department of Energy which ensures that the equivalent amount of depleted uranium to that which is derived from Canadian sources is not being used for military purposes.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, given the fact that in the same letter the American official says that there are no separate Canadian uranium tailings at the enrichment plant, and given the fact that the Minister's Department has been quoted yesterday as saying that there are separate tailings and separate measurements, would the Minister not at least look into the problem because there is a possibility that this is not being monitored correctly and that uranium is being diverted into the production of bombs?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are making some progress on this case of accusation by innuendo. Not very long ago, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, without being prepared to offer any evidence or submit any proof, made some general accusations in the House. Now the Hon. Member is saying that there is a possibility of some inconsistency in the reporting of administrative arrangements.

I give the Hon. Member the assurance again that the administrative arrangements called for in the treaty are being carried out in a way which respects Canadian treaty obligations. If he wants to send me the letter, I would be delighted to have it. If he wants to send me any proof that he claims to have, I would be delighted to have it. If his Leader has any proof, instead of innuendo, I would be delighted to receive that proof.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—ENVOYS' DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Minister of the Environment, concerns the important topic of acid rain. Last March, William Davis was appointed Canada's emissary along with Drew Lewis of the United States to prepare a report by March 31, 1986 on this vital issue.

Since they are now half way through that mandate, will the Minister enlighten the House on their progress up to this time? Is there every indication that they will meet that deadline?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know, the United States and Canadian envoys do not report to me. They were not appointed by me, nor by my predecessor. They report, rather, to the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States.

I have met, however, with William Davis and I intend to meet with Drew Lewis. I understand from both of them, either directly or indirectly, that they are making a great deal of progress.

They are scheduled to report before the President and the Prime Minister meet again in summit, and my understanding is that they will be able to report even before that time.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

COMMUNICATIONS COMPUTER SYSTEM

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister who is probably working on his new mailing machine, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Earlier this year Canadians learned that the budget for the Prime Minister's office increased by 57 per cent. Now Canadians learn that it will cost $7 million for a new communications computer system for the Prime Minister's Office. Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House or justify this kind of expenditure at a time when ordinary Canadians are told to tighten their belts and a time when family allowances are being cut by the same Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Acting Minister of Communications): First of all, Mr. Speaker, there is no question of spending $7 million in the Prime Minister's Office. The simple fact is that the Department of Communications is carrying out an experiment costing about $500,000, but I hasten to add that what is costing us $500,000 now cost the previous administration $7 million two years ago. We are simply making an experiment which has nothing to do with the Prime Minister's mail, it concerns the internal proceedings of the Privy Council and the Prime Minister's Office.

As to the $7 million in question, it relates to a general project which has not been approved by the Department, so it has not materialized any further than in the research documents of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

CENTRALIZATION OF POLL TAKING, CORRESPONDENCE AND INFORMATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

We know that the Prime Minister wants to centralize within his own office the whole system of public opinion polls, and now, with expensive equipment, correspondence and information. Can the Minister say, explain or justify why this equipment is necessary, and what guarantee do Hon. Members have that it will not be used almost exclusively by the Progressive Conservative Party to try to solve some of their current problems?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Acting Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that, as usual, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell did not understand anything I told him.

I told him that there is enough correspondence within the offices of the Prime Minister of Canada to justify that, not only—if the Hon. Member would pay attention he would not have to ask a third question—not only in the Prime Minister's Office but in all the operations of the Privy Council as well. Some of the communications now originate from the Clerk of the Privy Council and if you need more details just ask him, I am sure he will give you the correct answer this time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—REPORTED PURCHASE OF COMPUTER SYSTEM

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It has come to my attention that a representative of the South African Council for Scientific and Industrial Research is visiting the British Columbia firm of MacDonald Dettwiler this week to consider the purchase of a computer program that is financed almost entirely by the National Research Council through the Industrial Research Assistance Program. Clearly the Government is giving the Government of South Africa conflicting messages.

Will the Secretary of State investigate this matter and assure the House that federal Departments and agencies of the Crown like NRC have been instructed that in no way are they financially to support exports, indluding technology transfers, to South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question. The statements that I have made with regard to South Africa have, of course, been drawn to the attention of Government Departments. I will, as she requests, look into the particular matter that she has raised and I will report back to her and to the House.

NOTIFICATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Secretary of State. It is an extremely serious matter because it has arisen since his announcement in the House on September 13.

While he is doing that, would he also communicate to all businesses in Canada that it is not "business as usual" any longer when it comes to exports and technology transfers to South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as it happens, I have had the opportunity to hold a number of meetings with Canadian business people who are or have been active one way or another in South Africa. I have been most impressed by the degree to which they stand in support of the policy that has been enunciated by the Government, and indeed they are looking for ways themselves to use channels that they might have that the Government does not have to bring to bear upon the Government of South Africa the sense of repugnance and revulsion that exists throughout this country—in Parliament, in business, in labour and everywhere—to the system of apartheid.

PUBLIC WORKS

CLOSING OF MILITARY INSTALLATIONS AT SAINT-ADOLPHE D'HOWARD, QUE.

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works.

With only a few months to go before the complete shutdown of the Lac Saint-Denis Canadian Forces station at Saint-Adolphe d'Howard, my constituents in that area are concerned, and rightly so, about what is going to happen to the installations on the base, assessed at more that $3 million.

My question is: Does the Minister agree with the documents submitted by the local adjustment committee, proposing that a feasibility study be financed to look into the various ways the facilities on the base could be used?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, for the time being, as you all know, the base installations still belong to National Defence. I am delighted to be able to inform my colleague today that a departmental committee will be responsible for making an assessment with a view to diminishing the potential negative impact on municipalities in the area. However, if the committee were to conclude that a feasibility study would be necessary, in response to the concerns expressed by the parishes in the area, I would not hesitate to recommend such a study.

FISHERIES

PLIGHT OF NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I have raised this question with her before but unfortunately there has been no response.

Last week the Evening Telegram stated that the fishing season in the Nain area of Labrador has been so bad it has left most families with little or no money and a very old tradition has been revived; exchanging clothing for locally picked berries.

• (1450)

The situation is disastrous. The evidence is there. Why is the Minister sitting idly by while her Government lashes out with a billion dollars to the banks and not one cent for fishermen and plant workers in Newfoundland? Why is that situation allowed to exist?

Mr. Benjamin: It is just like the Liberals.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have been monitoring the results of the fall fishing season very carefully. We are aware of the gravity of the situation.

I would inform the House that, in conjunction with my colleagues, the Minister for DRIE and the Minister of Fisheries, we are examining possible options for assistance to those concerned. I can assure the Hon. Member and, indeed, the people affected in the Province of Newfoundland, that action will be taken to alleviate the hardship that might otherwise occur.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, we thought the Minister was a Cape Bretoner who understood us, a Minister with a heart, but she is not showing that she is.

In all seriousness, she cannot change the unemployment insurance system. If she waits until November she cannot start work programs. Will she face reality and look at the evidence? Will she act now to help fishermen and plant workers on the Labrador coast?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have informed the Hon. Member and those concerned that action will be taken—

An Hon. Member: When?

Miss MacDonald: —far sooner than the Liberal Government would ever have taken it.

Mr. Axworthy: We didn't cancel the program, you did.

Miss MacDonald: I can also assure the Hon. Member that the action that will be taken will be to the long term benefit of the people who are concerned.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

DIRECT MAILING SYSTEM

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It pertains to the article today in the newspaper indicating that the Prime Minister's Office will have a new $7.5 million direct mailing program.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister be prepared to admit that this program, in conjunction with the polling contract about to be let, will be used to transfer the cost of campaigning from the Conservative party to the taxpayers of Canada and that it will be under the control of the Prime Minister's Office?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion contained in that question is almost as scurrilous as its source.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POLLING CONTRACT

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my second question and supplementary is to the Minister of Supply and Services. Would the Minister of Supply and Services confirm for this House that the Government is now prepared to grant a $10 million plus contract for Government polling and that the primary recipients will be two Conservative polling firms?

Mr. Crosbie: The master of scurrility.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I might advise the House that invitations have been extended to more than 32 firms to tender on a polling process now being considered.

Mr. Broadbent: Who is getting contracts?

Mr. McInnes: Twenty-two of those have responded. They are now being evaluated, and a large number of firms all across Canada will be involved in the final decision.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BANKS AND BANKING

COMMISSION OF INQUIRY—EXERCISE OF MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am encouraged by the unusual frankness of the Deputy Prime Minister to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing. Let me, therefore, put a question to him. The Deputy Prime Minister knows that it is vital to the inquiry of Mr. Justice Estey to analyze, in the affair of the CCB and the Northland Bank, how the Minister of Finance, the Minister of State for Finance and, indeed, how the Prime Minister exercised their ministerial responsibilities during this whole matter. Does he not think the Government is putting a very eminent judge in as almost impossible position, I suggest even an improper position, for a judicial review of ministerial responsibility, which should be judged by Parliament alone and a committee of Parliament?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have read the terms of reference once today. I am certain that I do not have to read them again to get through to the Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We know the terms. Just give us the answer.

Mr. Nielsen: I would hope that that inquiry will look into the justification of the kind of statement made September 9 by the Leader of the Opposition that the House had been "misled by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and, indeed, the Governor of the Bank of Canada," and that obvious inside trading in the deposits of the Canadian Commercial Bank before the plug was pulled occurred. That statement was made by the Leader of the Opposition. A few other such wild statements were made. The terms of reference are broad enough to encompass that kind of inquiry. I would hope that it is examined.

POWERS OF COMMISSIONER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, does the hon. gentleman, the Deputy Prime Minister, believe it is the judge's role to review what happens in Parliament? Is Parliament not responsible for the actions of Ministers and for the action of everyone here? Why is that being imposed upon a judge?

An Hon. Member: What are you trying to hide, John?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): It would appear that it is necessary, Mr. Speaker, again, to refer to the words of reference where Mr. Justice Estey is empowered to conduct an examination of all of the circumstances and the factors contributing to the condition of the banks resulting in the cessation of their operations. I do not know how much broader such terms of reference could get, even to satisfy the Leader of the Opposition.

EXAMINATION OF MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister for the first time, in reply to questions on the terms of reference, has said he would like statements of the Leader of the Opposition examined. Will he now stand up and say categorically that he wants the ministerial responsibility in these cases examined as well? Will he come clean on that?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I was reminded in answering a question from the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River of a citation from Through the Looking Glass. I cannot help but make the analogy of Tweedledum and Tweedledee here today with respect to this kind of question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I just say categorically to the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, that he is being a complete and utter phoney in this, and he knows it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: You are as bad as Johnston.

Mr. Crosbie: Mickey Mouse the second.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Hon. for Oshawa knows that that language is improper.

An Hon. Member: Ed, you are the phoney.

REQUEST THAT ROLE OF MINISTERS BE EXAMINED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My last supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Stand up and make another innuendo.

Mr. Broadbent: Having said that he wants the role of the Leader of the Opposition examined, will he have the consistency and the integrity to say that the role of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister ought to be examined as well? That is the question.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Nothing, Sir, could more pointedly—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Right.

Mr. Chrétien: Erik is losing his nerve.

Mr. Nielsen: —demonstrate the need for a commission of inquiry by Mr. Justice Estey than this sort of question.

With respect to the definition of my character by the hon. gentleman as being a phoney, I can only say that, unlike him, I am not the real one.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN GOVERNMENT SANCTIONS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As you know, Sir, many prominent South African businessmen are calling upon the South African Government to move, and to move very quickly, to break down the barriers of apartheid. Does the Minister feel that the course the Government of Canada has set for its sanctions is still the right one, and does he feel that it is working?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think all Members of this House are encouraged by the increasing degree to which members of the business community in South Africa are exerting their influence to try to achieve a change in the repugnant apartheid policies of that Government.

An Hon. Member: You are losing money.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Obviously, movements by the business community are only one step, albeit an important one. What we will continue to judge is whether or not there will be action by the Government of South Africa itself. In those circumstances I think it is very important the Government of South Africa understand that the Government of Canada will, if left with no alternatives, resort to the kind of sanctions I outlined in my statement in this House earlier this month.

COMMISSION OF INQUIRY—ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, following on the answers or non-answers given by the Deputy Prime Minister, I want to ask him for the assurance that the Government, facing the Commission of Inquiry, will not claim Cabinet confidentiality, and that the advice given to Ministers by the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the advice given to Ministers by the Inspector General of Banks, and these frequent consultations, about which the Minister of State for Finance has talked, between herself, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance—all this information—will be available to the Commissioner of Inquiry?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am really surprised at that kind of question coming from a former Solicitor General because he knows, as well as I do, that it would be most inappropriate, if not improper—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —to proscribe in any way the conduct of the inquiry by Mr. Justice Estey. Maybe he does not have faith in Mr. Justice Estey, but I certainly do, and we on the Government side of the House certainly do. I would ask him, having been part of the administration of justice, to allow it to take its course within the very broad terms of reference that have been given to Mr. Justice Estey.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) on Monday, September 30, 1985, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

I am in receipt of a request to raise a point of order from the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

POINT OF ORDER

USE OF ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, during the Question Period, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), in answering a question from the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), used the word "scurrilous" in referring both to the Hon. Member's question and to the Hon. Member himself.

However, Mr. Speaker, if you look at page 110 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 320, you will find that the word "scurrilous" has been the subject of a ruling in 1930 to the effect that that word is unparliamentary. Therefore, pursuant to Citation 323 of Beauchesne's, I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to call upon the Deputy Prime Minister to withdraw that offending and offensive word.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is comforting to know how quickly the Liberal House Leader comes to the rescue of the NDP Member, but—

Mr. Axworthy: Of Parliament.

Mr. Gauthier: Of Parliament.

Mr. de Corneille: Of the House.

Mr. Nielsen: —I have no hesitation in withdrawing the word "scurrilous" and substituting therefor the word "rancid".

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to Hon. Members that my difficulty at the time was that the deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) said: "the question and its source", and I did not know in fact whether he meant the Hon. Member or someone else or an outsider, or I would have intervened immediately. However, I will take that as a retraction; I think it was intended as such.

Ms. Copps: There was no retraction.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Comox Powell River (Mr. Skelly).

Mr. Nunziata: That was not an unequivocal withdrawal.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) is hardly in a position to talk to me about what is an unequivocal withdrawal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. It was with some misgiving that I heard the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) use the kind of term that he did in the House in reference to the source of my question today. I think it was just in a moment of pique that he did it and I would be more than prepared to forgive him, knowing that the basic question was true and that he did not have an answer for it.

An Hon. Member: Pick?

Mr. Speaker: I take it the Hon. Member meant "pique"; it is a golf term. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata)—

Ms. Copps: Who is a scumbag?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member just called us a scumbag.

An Hon. Member: Maggot.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rossi: Look at the sheep behind you.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The language continues to deteriorate in this place, on all sides.

Mr. Rossi: He is a phoney.

Mr. Speaker: I invite all Hon. Members—and may I use this phrase one more time—to remember who we are, who put us here, and where we are.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SPEAKER'S COMMENT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, after the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) had spoken, I stated that it was not an unequivocal retraction in respect of his words. You replied that I am hardly one to talk about unequivocal retraction. Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to stand in your place right now and explain to the House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: —and to my constituents what you meant by that.

Mr. Speaker: Gladly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I meant that Hon. Members throughout the House should know that the tradition is to withdraw unequivocally. There has been, to my knowledge, only one occasion in the House when an Hon. Member has withdrawn a statement unequivocally in my presence, only one. It was not the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) today, nor was it the Hon. Member for York South-Weston when it was his turn. It has happened once. It was made by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) in my presence. That, to my knowledge, was the single unequivocal withdrawal.

The Hon. Member for York South-Weston asks what I was trying to get at. I will tell him what I was trying to get at. Every Member should know that withdrawals should be unequivocal. When one Member does not do it properly, it is surely wrong for that Member to say about another Member that that Member is doing it improperly. That is what I meant.

Mr. Nunziata: A point of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South-Weston claims a point of privilege. What is the Member's question?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I am repeating my point of privilege. You indicated that I am hardly one to speak about retracting unequivocally, and I want an explanation of what you meant by that, with specifics, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, I take it, is not raising a question of privilege. He wishes an explanation of what I meant. I invite him to chambers, as I have before.

Mr. Nunziata: You made the statement in the House; you should explain it in the House.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will resume his seat.

Mr. Nunziata: You made the statement here—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will resume his seat. I thought, with respect, that my comment in the beginning, whether it is true or not, was inappropriate. I say that to the Member, but I also say to him that he on one occasion made a withdrawal in here, and he knows my views, because he has had them from me in private, as to whether that was an unequivocal withdrawal.

Ms. Copps: That is not relevant.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) says that that is not relevant. The Deputy Prime Minister made a withdrawal that I suggest, if the Hon. Member for Hamilton East checks the record, was just as unequivocal as that of the Hon. Member for York South-Weston.

An Hon. Member: Well, get though on him, then.

Ms. Copps: You are ruling on this point.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East wants to tell me my job? My job is to decide whether there was a question of privilege—

Mr. Rossi: They get away with everything.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston claims a question of privilege. He has yet to present to me a question of privilege. I therefore find that he does not have a question of privilege.

PETITIONS

SOCIAL SECURITY—RESTORATION OF FULL INDEXATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from the Ottawa Council for Low Income Support Services which represents many low-income mothers across Canada. They ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to restore full indexation to the family allowance and child tax credit. This budget measure will take away $55 million in family benefits by 1987.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from petitioners who state that the deindexation of the universal family allowance is an unfair attack on women and families. They further state that the attack will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit, and that other tax increases in the May Budget will place an unfair burden upon low and middle-income earners. They ask that the House rescind all those measures.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a petition signed by people from every province, from many cities all the way from St. John's to Victoria. They, the undersigned, humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition to present signed by women from across this country who are most outraged by the cut-backs with respect to family allowance and the effect of increases in taxation on families. They call upon this Government to reverse its course of action and to be faithful to the promises that were made during the election campaign.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the honour to present two different petitions. The first is signed by persons across the country resident at various points in the Provinces of Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia protesting the plans of the Government to deindex the family allowance and stating particularly that that is a sorry contrast to the tax break such as the capital gains holiday which the Government is also proposing, and praying Parliament to change that.

LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is signed by persons resident in the City of Thunder Bay who are very concerned about the very real possibility that the U.S. Congress will take action in legislation soon to be before it against lumber exports.

Mr. Crosbie: Stick to the rules.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): The woods industry is of enormous importance in northwestern Ontario as well. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: May I say something to the House?

Mr. Benjamin: Why not, you have been doing it all day.

Mr. Speaker: Earlier today, a few minutes ago, I did something that I think is wrong. I lost my temper, and I do not have the right to do that, and I named a specific member and I should not do that. I wish to apologize both to the House and formally in the record to the member.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S ACT, THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S RETIRING ANNUITY ACT, THE SALARIES ACT AND THE JUDGE'S ACT

On the Order: Introduction of Bills:

May 7, 1985—The Minister of Justice—Bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Governor General's Act, the Governor General's Retiring Annuity Act, the Salaries Act and the Judges Act".

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the Hon. Minister just to suggest that this matter stand?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I have to move first reading of the Bill today. The information is already out, so rather than standing it I would like to read the title of the Act for you.

Mr. Speaker: I cannot. My problem is this, that I cannot introduce a Bill without receipt of the Bill. May I suggest therefore that in order to try to expedite matters we will, with the concurrence of the House, revert to this matter within the next 15 minutes or half an hour to give those who have to try to find—the matter must be delivered here or we cannot read it, I am afraid.

Mr. Crosbie: That would be fine with me if the hon. gentlemen opposite would agree to begin first reading a little later.

Mr. Speaker: I sense there will be consent later to revert to the Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Crosbie: They are nice guys.

Mr. Benjamin: You are getting to be like the Liberals.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all the questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

REPRESENTATION ACT, 1985

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I was just winding up my remarks on this particular Bill. There are a number of constituencies in Canada today that are of great size with over 200,000 constituents in each individual riding.

Mr. Benjamin: Or 50,000 square miles.

Mr. McDermid: Certainly, there are also very large ones as we know in the northern extremities of our country. We feel that redistribution must take place and that it must get under way and go to committee as quickly as possible.

In listening to the debate today I conclude there is general agreement on the philosophy of the Bill. Although there may be a few technical problems that have to be straightened out, those can be done in committee. I would urge the House to pass as quickly as possible on this Bill because otherwise we will not have the time to plan on the new boundaries and by the next election we will still have our old boundaries. That is going to cause considerable problems for certain constituencies, mine included, which now has close to 200,000 people within its boundaries.

One of the major problems, of course, with that number of people is to serve them properly with the limited staff we are given. So it is important that we get under way with this important work of redistribution as soon as possible. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Before I go to debate, is the Minister rising to ask for unanimous consent?

Mr. Crosbie: Can we revert to the Introduction of Bills?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-78, an Act to amend the Governor General's Act, the Governor General's Retiring Annuity Act, the Salaries Act and the Judges Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

REPRESENTATION ACT, 1985

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I want to say a few words on the Bill introduced by my old friend from Saskatoon, Bill C-74, on redistribution.

Mr. Benjamin: Old in ideas.

Mr. Nystrom: I am speaking of chronological age.

Mr. Benjamin: No, it is his ideas that are old.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have some concerns about the Bill and, like others in my Party, this morning I would like to see this Bill referred to committee so we can do some real questioning. I want to spend a few minutes this afternoon just talking about the whole process of redistribution in this country and the whole electoral system because I think the whole system probably needs a real overhaul. First, I believe very strongly that we must have representation by population. My colleagues, such as the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) who have big ridings, have a point when they say that there must be representation by population in a democratic system. However, in any democratic system, we also need representation by region or geography. Those are the two conflicting principles that we have not quite resolved.

● (1520)

The American system has resolved this conflict. In the American Senate, every state, regardless of its size, has two Senators. Whether it is Rhode Island or California, North Dakota or New York, they all have two Senators, so there is representation by region in the Senate of the United States. A small state, through the electoral process, is able to elect Senators to the American Senate and that state then has as much clout as a larger state. We do not have a system like that in this country.

First, in Canada we have an appointed Senate. I think that is a tremendous slight on our democratic image. It is a throwback to a couple of hundred years ago. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) can appoint any of his pals as Senators until the age of 75. This is supposed to be a democratic country. Most Canadians would like to see the Senate as it exists now abolished. If we do keep a second Chamber, we should have it as an elected body so that the people can vote for those who sit in the other place.

I would like to suggest this afternoon that we send this matter to the committee and discuss issues other than the addition of six seats, something that merely delays the ultimate decision and is like putting a band-aid on a wooden leg. It does not resolve anything. Let us have a really good discussion in committee about the kind of representation we wish to have. There are a great many new Members of all Parties in the House of Commons. I think now is a good time to make a break with the past.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West, sat on a special committee of this House on redistribution in 1969-70. Back in those days, we kept trying to solve the problem of representation by population and representation by region by adding Member after Member. This place is growing like Topsy. We have gone from 265 Members to 284 Members. The next proposition is to have 290 Members. Soon we will have over 300 Members. I suggest that that does not solve the problem. It simply makes this place more bureaucratic, expensive and frustrating.

Mr. Benjamin: Where are you going to put them all?

Mr. Nystrom: My friend asks where we would put them all. At that time it was suggested that we take out the back doors, knock down the end wall and add another 50 or 60 seats. Another suggestion was to take down the curtains and put in two extra rows, or to do like the British House in which there is not a seat for each individual Member. Benji and I could use the same seat. One day I would use it, and the next day he would use it.

Mr. Benjamin: Oh, no.

Mr. Nystrom: I do not think that that is the way we want to go. That is certainly not the way I want to go.

Mr. Gormley: I'll take Benjamin.

Mr. Nystrom: That would not help the small provinces. Saskatchewan now has 14 Members in a House with approximately 280 seats. It would not make any difference if we had 20 Members in a House with approximately 400 seats. We would have no more clout. We would simply spend a lot more money and make the system more bureaucratic. We would slow down the entire process and increase the frustration of Members.

I would argue that we need to look at the entire system. We should try to come up with a system that recognizes representation by population on the one hand and representation by region or geography on the other. We may, for example, decide that we ought to have rep by pop in this Chamber and have rep by region in another elected chamber, a chamber with equal representation from all provinces. This would reflect the wishes of people at the provincial level. Each province would have a certain number of Senators. That way, we could have a melding of rep by pop with rep by region or geography. I think it is very important that we do that.

The present system will become very distorted, bulky and cumbersome. The electoral boundaries map proposed by the former Parliament contains some very strange looking ridings. In Saskatchewan, for example, there are now two urban seats in Regina and two urban seats in the City of Saskatoon, two of which are a little bit rural. Under the new proposition, there will be three seats in the City of Saskatoon and three in the City of Regina, and a few of those seats in each case will be almost half urban and half rural. The proposed new riding of Regina East, for example, will be about 50 per cent urban and 50 per cent rural. Those who live in rural areas have nothing in common with people who live in the cities. We get these strange boundaries because of the kind of system we have.

As well, there are all kinds of unique situations in this country. Labrador, for example, is an entity by itself and is different. Perhaps we should have a seat for Labrador. I know my colleagues from northern Ontario will be speaking later on about the uniqueness of their region. Their concern is that if we go strictly for rep by pop, there will be a loss of seats in the northern part of the Province of Ontario. There is also the unique factor of Quebec and Francophone Canada and the need for a protection of representation for Francophone Canadians. The same thing is true, of course, of native Canadians.

My main purpose in rising today is to suggest to my colleagues that we not do this on a piecemeal basis by adding two seats to Ontario, two seats to British Columbia and two seats to Alberta. Rather, we should refer this entire matter to the committee so that it can look at the whole process of representation and try to meld together rep by pop and rep by geography.

Right now there is discontent in various parts of the country. People feel alienated and left out of the system. There have been western separatist movements and unrest in Quebec. There has been alienation felt by native people and those in northern Ontario. I think we must look at the system in terms of trying to protect those differences.

Another point I would like to make is that there is a difference between rural and urban ridings. Urban Canada, and particularly the suburban ridings, can be a homogeneous community composed of people with very similar problems. Many Hon. Members say that that is not so because every individual has a different problem. However, in a rural riding like mine, there are 60 communities, eight Indian reserves and tens of thousands of square kilometres. There are radical cultural differences between one end of the riding and the other. It makes it rather unfair for those who represent rural ridings. If there were a melding of rep by geography and rep by pop, those differences would not be as important. Members with huge, sprawling rural ridings would be allowed extra staff or an extra allowance or whatever it would take to represent the riding adequately. That is not done today except in the case of seats in the Far North.

I suppose one could go on to mention a number of other things that are very important in terms of representation but I would like to stop here and make an appeal. We live in a great country with much diversity between regions and provinces. Rather than adding a few seats every now and then, perhaps we ought to postpone this entire process until the 1991 census, at which time we could make a general proposition that will change the entire system to make it more reflective of what Canadians really want. The Americans and the Swiss have accomplished this. We may not necessarily want to take those routes. Perhaps we would like to have one chamber with the melding of the two systems right here. Perhaps we could have a constitutional floor for the smaller provinces so that in Saskatchewan, for example, no matter what the population would be, there would still be 14 Members. Members from Toronto and Montreal might have twice as many electors as we have. Perhaps that is the way we will go. However, by not analysing and studying the whole thing, all we are doing is postponing making a decision and we could stumble right back into the old decision, which was to keep adding 30, 40 or 50 members after every census. I believe that is going the wrong way and making it a much more costly, complicated, bureaucratic and frustrating chamber in which to represent the people of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments about Bill C-74. It is a Bill of which I am very supportive. Canadians do not want to see Government grow larger and larger.

Mr. Boudria: Like the Prime Minister's office, by 57 per cent.

Mr. Attewell: The people to whom I speak want us to be more responsible in our deliberations. I do not think we have to reinvent the wheel on this process. We can benefit a lot from history and I compliment the people who have spent hours and hours coming up with these final recommendations.

Rather than the House jumping in size from 282 Members to 310 Members, there is a suggesiton for six additional members. I submit that that will go a long way in alleviating a number of very large ridings such as the riding of my colleague, the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan), which is of a very punishing size. There are over a quarter of a million people to serve. My own riding of Don Valley East is well above the average.

In this, the computer age, when each Member of Parliament has advanced telephone equipment, I believe we can reach the people of our ridings in a satisfactory manner. We do not have to keep expanding and, as someone suggested, start to move out the walls of this House of Commons. Canadians do not want that. They want us to serve in a responsible way. However, cost savings do not start somewhere else. I feel they start with the thinking of Hon. Members right in this House. There has been some suggestion that the amounts involved are not significant. They are significant, Mr. Speaker. Many, many millions of dollars will be involved over the coming years. If we are to act in a responsible way, we should be considering that.

In summary, may I say that I support the legislation. It is not a perfect system, but we could spend 10 years trying to get a "so-called" perfect system. I recognize the uniqueness of a number of ridings. The legislation does give more flexibility and, very importantly, it does help a number of very specific ridings where the burden is too heavy by dividing them to that we can serve Canadians to the best of our talents and skills. Also it will be at a much lower cost than the original proposal. It will mean tens of millions of dollars less over the coming years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in addressing the questions posed by Bill C-74, I would like to, first, go back a little in the history of redistribution and, indeed, on the idea of proportional representation. Obviously the idea of proportional representation within a democratic system has been around for a number of centuries. However, it is equally evident that the population shifts and changes in balance of population which necessitated redistribution were not evident in the then very few democratic societies until the time of the industrial revolution.

I believe that while we can fairly state that both the American and French revolutions were founded in the initial structuring of their democratic chambers on proportional representation, the first serious effort at redistribution took place in the United Kingdom during the reform period in the 1840s, I believe—

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Eighteen thirty-two.

Mr. Parry: My colleague tells me it was 1832, and I thank him for the correction. The pre-reformed Parliament of the United Kingdom was characterized by vast differences in representation, not only in terms of quality, obviously, but also in terms of the area and the population represented by an individual Member of Parliament. It was said in those days that there were some Members of Parliament who literally had no constituents. The Borough of Higham Ferrers was frequently mentioned as being almost entirely depopulated yet still having two Members of Parliament to represent it. In those times they had this archaic mechanism, which one would hope, of course, never to see perpetuated in this day and age, of a two-Member constituency. Therefore, Higham Ferrers, with very few people, was electing two Members to the House of Commons as were, indeed, many heavily populated boroughs and parts of the City of London.

There were also, interestingly enough, seats established for the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, another precedent which perhaps we would not want to see repeated in this day and age. The debate in those times was the degreee to which Members should represent equal population units within the country, equal numbers of people. Of course, there were those at that time who spoke out against redistribution on the grounds that it was best to play it safe and stick with what tradition and history had hallowed and sanctioned, that there was no advantage to be gained in having Members of Parliament actually represent people, let alone the same number of people.

Moving through history, we can see the sad tale of the redrawing of constituencies to suit the narrow political interests of a single Party, always, of course, the Party in power. It was said that a type of press conference, a public meeting was held in one of the southern states of what is now the United States—I forget which one it was—and someone pointed to the map and said to Governor Gerry, "But this, Sir, looks like salamander". He replied, "No, sir, that is a gerrymander". So the term "gerrymandering" passed into the language.

I am glad to see that we are not today confronted by a situation of gerrymandering or Rotten boroughs, however much some of us may feel that some boundary changes do not reflect community reality or the sense of the constituency which had grown up in the area. Rather, we are faced with the overhauling—and, I dare say, it is not exactly overhauling but more tinkering—of a typical Canadian practice in which inequities have been reduced but then left unattended with the obvious result that inequities of a new and different nature creep in and are then themselves institutionalized and hallowed by tradition.

I believe there are a number of examples in the present representations in Canada which I would like to speak about. Perhaps, first, I should say that I believe that what we are engaged in today, and what I hope the committee will take very seriously, is a task of great gravity and significance and one which should be accorded due attention, for it is nothing more or less than the maintenance function in our democratic system. It is said that one can have the greatest architect in the world, the most beautiful and most technically elegant design, but none of it is any good unless there is a plumber around to fix the pipes. That is a paradigm of which we should be very cognizant. In a sense we are in the position of the plumber who has to fix a little more than the pipes. It is rather more significant and we should devote our attention to that maintenance task with a full appreciation of the gravity it entails.

What is it, Mr. Speaker, that really governs the divisions of our constituencies as they exist today? I am afraid to say it appears that the number one determinant of those constituency demarcations is that of history; where the population was in the past, sometimes 100 years ago. I am also afraid to say that the Canadian tradition of gradualism has led to some areas of the country being grossly under-represented. I am afraid to say, also, that in the drawing of constituency boundaries great attention has been paid to lines of latitude and longitude and very little to lines of communciation, be they physical or cultural. Some attention has indeed been paid to geography but I suggest that the weight given to geography is such, and done in such an unsystematic fashion, that it does not fundamentally serve to recognize the effect of geography on the nature and quality of the representation that Members of Parliament are able to give their constituents.

There are several examples which I would like to draw out and, lest I be accused of favouritism or merely priming the parish pump in my own constituency, I would start with the City of Scarborough and its federal ridings. I acknowledge that the people in that burgeoning suburban area of Metropolitan Toronto are indeed under-represented when we see the number of electors who elect a single representative in that area. In revising our system of representation we should be taking into account the very real and legitimate concern of citizens of places like Scarborough and adjust boundaries and allocations of representation accordingly. We should also look at the example of the Northwest Territories where we have enormous geographic areas, where either of two constituencies is capable of encompassing the same geographical area as perhaps 150 of the smaller constituencies. The population is culturally and ethnically very different from the majority of Canadians in the provinces. It is not my purpose to say that, because each of the constituencies in the Northwest Territories encompasses far fewer people than the average constituency in the provinces, we should be reducing the number of seats in that area. I think the problems of geography and communications, and the differences in culture, must be adequately recognizes by our system. Let us bear in mind, after all, that the number involved are not of an excessive order of magnitude in my interpretation, being something in the order of three or four to one. I would also like to take the example of Prince Edward Island. That province is a place, and the Islanders a people, which I cannot praise highly enough. I spent my first Canadian holiday ever in Prince Edward Island and enjoyed it greatly. Yet we must question the provisions which fix the representation of that province to a number of people per constituency which is almost exactly the same as the number in the Northwest Territories.

Redistribution must not be a process which swims against trends. It must be a process which follows trends but with a reasoned gait, a measure of caution, and a step which does not either overly weight the past or overly discount the visible trends going into the future.

I would like to also turn to my own constituency and instance the problems of an area which is slightly larger than Germany, that is both the Federal and the Democratic republics put together, and which has 110 communities spread out over most of the area, not all concentrated in one single part.

I, or indeed anyone else who represented that constituency, would be physically incapable of providing the sort of representation that every Canadian ought to enjoy and which should be extended to a number of communities, more than 20, which have no road access. I feel in a sense a prisoner of the present system's not taking into account the geography of this country, not taking into account the difficulties of transportation and communication, and above all, in that context, not taking into account the very special and unique situation of the first peoples of this country with a cultural tradition which is very much under threat—not under deliberate attack but nevertheless under threat—by the majority trends in our society. I believe that just as is done in the Northwest Territories, the boundaries of constituencies ought very much to take account of the differences between people. Where there are obvious identifiable ethnic groups, that should be something that is taken into account in the drawing of constituencies. Unfortunately, that is not the case. The Nishnawbe-Aski Nation, as the Cree and Ojibway people of northern Ontario in my constituency are known, are sliced by those lines of longitude up and down the map. There is no relation to geography, no relation to tradition, culture or the traditional or present day economies of the area. They are divided between four constituencies and thus is their collective interest and political voice muted in the conduct of the affairs of this nation. I am afraid to say that is not the only instance where tradition and culture and geography have been ignored in the formulation of constituency boundaries. In reference to that I would like to congratulate my friend, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), on the introduction of his Bill which proposed to fix the representation of northern Ontario at the number of ridings it has today rather than lose ridings in an area which is so vast and so hard to represent because of an internal redistribution process within the Province of Ontario.

It is a phenomenon of the democratic process that only when a certain mass of support or pressure gets behind an issue is there really a serious examination of that issue. I would suggest that in examining the issue of redistribution we should also examine some connected and related issues. It has been suggested that there would be a considerable financial saving by limiting the expansion of this House. I, for one, am not one to advocate an extension of the House except at the most modest pace because I do not believe that a new varnish of additional layers of Members at every general election will obscure some of the flaws presently inherent in the system. I would rather see us do with approximately the number of Members we have today. However, we also have other entrenched formulas which would appear to compel the increase in the House. One of these, of course, is the relation postulated between the number of seats in this House on a province-by-province basis, and the number of seats in the Senate. I am sure you, Mr. Speaker, would not be surprised to hear me say that the best way to get out of that particular dilemma would be to abolish the Senate. I have observed in this House, and in many other places, that that is not a democratic institution but an anti-democratic institution functioning at the heart of an otherwise democratic society. My belief is that if the saving of money is an objective, the saving by abolishing the Senate would be twenty times what the addition of six seats to this House would cost. Therefore, that question should also be brought before the committee when this Bill is referred to it.

I would like to go on at some length about the principles which underlie representation by population and I can see, Sir, that you are only too willing to hear me, even if others might not be. However, I will content myself with these final observations. When this Bill comes to committee there is a far larger number of factors which need to be considered than have been postulated by the Government side. The process of consideration should be undertaken in a far more serious and effective fashion than seems to be predicated.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

There being no questions or comments, I recognize the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) on debate.

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I rise today because I think this issue is one of very serious concern to my constituents. My riding of York-Scarborough is so well known that three of the last four speakers have referred to it as being the most populous riding in the country. It has been the most populous riding in the country for approximately 30 years even though we have had roughly three redistributions. It would remain the most populous riding in the country under the redistribution which was proposed in the last Parliament. This points out certain problems which I believe are addressed in this Bill in a positive way. I would like to indicate my support for the Bill because I think that, for the first time, we see a hint of something which will make the redistribution process fair for those people who live in the rapidly expanding suburbs of our country, particularly Metro Toronto.

The Bill as proposed does two things which I support. First, it slows down the rate of growth of the House which should have a considerable effect in savings. At the same time it offers protection to certain regions of the country in two different forms. There is protection for provinces such as Prince Edward Island, for the northern areas of the country, and for the Northwest Territories under Clause 2 of the Bill which says that the number of representatives of any area shall not decline. Clause 6 of the Bill states that special consideration shall be taken of northern and very large, sparsely populated regions in drawing up the electoral boundaries. For the first time, in Clause 6 there is also a provision that in drawing the boundaries the commissioners should try to take steps to ensure that each electoral district in the province remains more or less within the 25 per cent average of the province. It is that particular part of the Bill which I feel is the most important part for the rapidly expanding areas, and one which I endorse whole-heartedly.

As an example, when my riding was redistributed in 1978 it was, as I mentioned, the largest riding in the country. At that time there were roughly 155,000 voters and a population of nearly 300,000. That is about 12 times the size of the smallest riding. That riding was divided into the ridings of Don Valley East, Scarborough Centre and York-Scarborough. From the 1979 summer election to the 1980 winter election, a brief period of nine months, the remaining part of York-Scarborough increased by 9,000 voters, a thousands voters a month. The riding of York-Scarborough now has almost 50,000 more voters than it had when it was first created.

The direction to the commissioners to take into account the trends in growth in various areas of Canada to try to ensure that each riding remains within the limit for the ten-year period is very important. If such a limit had existed at the last redistribution, they would not have lumped all of the remaining farmland in Metropolitan Toronto into my riding. They could not have conceivably done it. They could not have set up the ridings of Brampton-Georgetown, York North, or Mississauga North, the other three ridings in the country which have over 100,000 voters. The average riding has close to 40,000 voters. The ridings which I just mentioned were all growing very rapidly. That was known at the time redistribution came into effect in 1978, yet there was no direction whatsoever to the commissioners to take account of anything other than the numbers of the 1971 census or indeed, this time, the numbers of the 1981 census. It is because that particular provision gives direction to the commissioners that I feel this Bill deserves the support of the House. It will rectify a very serious inequity which has existed in my region of the country for many, many years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech? There being no questions, I recognize the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on Bill C-74 which amends our Constitution with regard to the redistribution formula. I am very concerned, both as a Canadian and as a British Columbian, about the effects of this Bill. As a Canadian I see Bill C-74 as one more step away from the principle of representation by population. As a British Columbian I am very concerned that the historical imbalance in our representation in the House of Commons will not only continue, but will be made worse.

Bill C-74 victimizes the provinces of British Columbia and Alberta and, to a lesser extent, the Province of Ontario. The Province of Ontario is victimized to a lesser extent because at the present, on the basis of the 1981 census, it takes a smaller population in Ontario to elect a Member to the House of Commons than it does in British Columbia or Alberta. This will have a lesser effect on the Province of Ontario because our national political life is already dominated by the Province of Ontario which holds 95 seats and the Province of Quebec which holds 75 seats. The two western provinces, which have had population growth in the last few decades, have not had that kind of clout in the House of Commons. The introduction of this Bill, which restricts the rate at whch they will be able to attain proper representation, directly penalizes the voters of those two provinces.

Redistribution is always a rough tool with which to try to provide some equity of representation in a country such as Canada which has constant population shifts. The population of one area grows while that of another declines or remains static. The machinery for redistribution has always been rather cumbersome and redistribution has, therefore, always been seven or eight years behind the population growth and the census which reports on it. For example, the 1971 census showed very clearly that there should be increased representation for the Province of British Columbia but that was not taken into account in the House of Commons in the 1972 or 1974 elections. It was not until 1979, eight years after the census, that British Columbia had the increase in the number of Members of Parliament that the 1971 census indicated we were entitled to have. What was only a lag in previous provisions for redistribution will now become a permanent disability. Provinces like British Columbia are being made victims of previous agreements made to be generous to some of the smaller provinces.

Bill C-74 enshrines those provisions in our Constitution. It enshrines the doctrine that no province will ever have a decrease in the number of MPs, no matter what population shift might take place. This is a very generous provision that is made to some of the provinces that suffer from population decreases or have a fairly stable population growth. However, it works directly against the interests of provinces like British Columbia and Alberta which have suffered historic discrimination in the whole question of representation in the House of Commons.

When the doctrine that no province should ever suffer a decrease in its representation in the House of Commons takes precedence over the principle that there should be some equity in the representation that different parts of the country have in the House of Commons, then we have moved very far from the basic principles of democracy. The reason we have moved from that principle is that the Government has decided that it does not want a dramatic increase in the number of seats for Members of Parliament. It says that it will be too expensive. Other Members from our Party have pointed out that if the Government is really concerned about the expense of operating the Parliament of Canada, there should be some fundamental reform. The Hon. House Leader himself knows that what needs to be done is to abolish the Senate.

The previous redistribution formula tried to protect the historical number of MPs from some of the smaller provinces and to provide increased representation for provinces that had population growth. However, it was only able to do that by increasing the number of Members of Parliament as a whole. Now, the Government says that we cannot increase the number of Members of Parliament as a whole and, as a result, the entire move toward greater equality in terms of representation suffers.

In any conflict between these two doctrines—the doctrine of equality of representation and the doctrine that no province should ever lose the number of seats that it already has in the House of Commons—I believe that the doctrine of equality of representation should be paramount. However, Bill C-74 reverses that and the doctrine of equality of representation has lost out to the doctrine that no province should ever lose the number of MPs it presently has. During his speech, the Government House Leader said that it represented a typical Canadian compromise. Perhaps it is a typical Canadian compromise but democracy will still be the loser from this compromise. The long-term cumulative effects will hurt and further distort the social, economic and political union of Canada.

I do not think it can be said that somehow the population size is balanced by the geographic size of the different ridings because that is simply not the case. Let me present a dramatic example from the Province of British Columbia—the riding of Skeena. It is the largest riding in British Columbia in terms of geography and the tenth largest riding in Canada. It has 253,472 square kilometres, which is almost twice the combined size of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. There are 64 different communities in the riding of Skeena, all of which have diverse problems. Apart from major centres such as Prince Rupert, Terrace, Kitimat and Smithers, the riding of Skeena has a number of Indian villages, some of which are extremely isolated. The riding consists of isolated light houses, logging camps, mining towns and isolated ranches.

Many of these areas can only be reached by boat or charter plane. Some of these communities must be reached by the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) travelling into the Yukon and then back down into British Columbia. Obviously, it is difficult to serve this riding which covers an area which is almost twice the size of Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island combined.

In terms of population, Skeena is the second smallest riding in British Columbia with 75,509 people, 40,000 of whom are voters. Skeena, with its huge and difficult geographical area, had a larger population than 6 of 11 seats in Nova Scotia; 7 of 10 seats in New Brunswick; a larger population than all 4 seats in Prince Edward Island, 9 out of 14 seats in Manitoba; 11 out of 14 seats in Saskatchewan and 24 of 75 seats in Quebec. Skeena has a larger population than six urban Montreal ridings and a larger population than four Toronto ridings. This illustrates the kind of imbalance which exists in the present system of redistribution.

Comox-Powell River is another British Columbia riding with abundant geography. Many of the communities must be reached by boat and plane. It comprises 84,664 square kilometres which makes it larger than either Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. Yet Comox-Powell River, in its 1981 population, had 121,000 people. It is much larger than the Canadian average.

Therefore, we must ask how people in ridings like this, that are difficult to reach in the first place and difficult to travel within, can be expected to have some equality of service and access compared with downtown Montreal or Toronto ridings, some of which have populations that are less than two-thirds of the population of the riding of Comox-Powell River.

I want to stress that this is not a partisan issue. The riding of Cariboo-Chilcotin, held by a very respected Conservative Member of the House, has 111,474 square kilometres and a population of 85,000. The ridings of Kootenay East-Revelstoke, Prince George-Bulkley Valley and Prince George-Peace River all are huge ridings that have populations of over 80,000. Again, I compare those ridings comprising huge areas with some of the ridings that have much smaller areas and populations in other provinces of Canada.

There is a different problem with respect to the suburbs. The riding of Surrey-White Rock-North Delta has the largest population in British Columbia, with 137,642 according to the 1981 census. Four other suburban ridings—Mission-Port Moody, North Vancouver-Burnaby, Richmond-South Delta and Fraser Valley West have populations of over 120,000.

There is a similar situation in Alberta where there are 21 ridings with an average population of over 100,000. This is not fair when one compares it with the situation inother provinces. Calgary East has a population of 155,450, according to the 1981 census. Calgary South has a population of 140,677; Edmonton North has a population of 127,931 and Pembina has a population of 138,712. I expect to hear from some of the Alberta Conservatives speaking out on this issue. I think it is of great concern to them as I know it is to you, Mr. Speaker.

I do not believe we can deal with this kind of a problem in a patchwork fasion. We need to make a decision on principle. I suggest if Members on all sides of the House sit down and think about the principles involved, they will agree that the first one should be fairness in representation in accordance with shifts in population. Once wy accept this first principle, we can, if we want, accept a secondary principle, namely, that within reasonable limits no province should suffer a decrease in the number of Members of Parliament who represent it.

In accepting that secondary principle, we must realize we need to increase the total number of Members of Parliament, otherwise we will end up protecting a secondary principle at the expense of a first principle. I find this unacceptable. Unfortunately that is what Bill C-74 does and I find Bill C-74 unacceptable. I hope the Government will take a hard look at this whole question of principles when we look at this Bill in committee.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member on his speech and the feeling he described about some of these very large constituencies. It is very difficult for any Members to serve constituents of such large ridings.

One of the principles we have at the present time in Section 42 of the Constitution of Canada talks about representation by population. This is a modified principle of representation by population that we have used all along. When I say modified, it refers to the base established by the number of Senate seats in any province. Apart from that, we have generally gone with representation by population. The more we see the urbanization of our country, the more we seem to be having problems in that regard. The rural ridings are getting bigger and bigger. The Hon. Member has just described how his constituency is already very large. How does he see reconciling on the one hand representation by population as a system in order to apportion the representation of this House while on the other hand trying to give some kind of a balance whereby we will not end up 20 years down the road with half a dozen members representing two-thirds of the physical land mass? Maybe we will not be quite that far, but we are certainly going in that direction.

In my own case, although my riding is much smaller, at one time in the past there was a Member for Glengarry, a Member for Prescott and a Member for Russell. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I represent all of Prescott, all of Russell, three-quarters of Glengarry and part of Ottawa-Carleton. That shows the shift of population and what is happening. I invite the Hon. Member to comment on that.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the question points to one of the basic problems that any redistribution formula that does justice to Canada will have to look at if we are to depart from the basic formula of representation by population—we have moved a long way from that already—that there should be some basis on which there would be a recognition of geographic area.

As I pointed out in my speech, there is no recognition of that at present. We have a situation where a riding like Skeena, the tenth largest riding in Canada, has a population larger than the population in many ridings, including many urban ridings.

We have the situation of Comox-Powell River which has a very large and difficult area to serve because of the nature of coastal British Columbia. It has a population of over 120,000. In British Columbia, we suffer from having very large areas and from having very large populations. We are very proud of the kind of geography we have but it makes it very difficult to serve. All we are asking for is a little equity. We are not getting that in Bill C-74.

Mr. Boudria: I am trying to identify in my own mind how we would establish such a system Mr. Speaker. At the present time we have one base which is a representation by populaton. We add a further ingredient, which is the number of Senate seats in one province. Today with this new Bill we have a third form, which is the existing number of seats within a province.

Am I hearing a suggesiton that we should also have another mechanism which recognizes land mass as a form of a base to be incorporated in all of this? I recognize that whoever will be doing the redistribution will have a very complicated formula by the time we get to the end. Nobody said it would be easy. Am I correct that, according to the Member, we should have another form of base; beyond a certain number of square kilometres or square miles that that would guarantee representation as well?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member would not try to put words in my mouth.

Mr. Boudria: I was not doing that.

Mr. Manly: I was not making that suggestion as part of my basic presentation. I was pointing to the inequity in the present situation, the fact that provinces like British Columbia and Alberta suffer from an historic gap. I said I would be open to the development of some kind of a formula that would take account of geography as well as population. I think that whole question has to be looked at very carefully before we opt for it.

The Hon. Member brought forward the very real problem that as we have growth in urban areas resulting in larger and larger populations, we will have a corresponding decrease in the percentage of the population who live in more isolated areas. There has to be some way of looking at that, and I suggested perhaps there could be a formula.

I am not prepared at this time to suggest what that formula should be or what it should contain. That is something for the committee look at.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 46, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Micholson)—Banks and Banking—Role of chartered banks. (b) Expenditures of taxpayers' money; the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)—Trade—Proposed EEC tariff on blueberries. (b) Effect on employment in Nova Scotia; the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson)—Pornography—Request for stronger laws.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

REPRESENTATION ACT, 1985

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my riding takes in the Humber Valley, a large land mass, a river and a mountain chain which go through the central part of western Newfoundland. That explains Humber. Port-au-Port is a large peninsula unto itself, 200 miles south. St. Barbe refers to the St. Barbe northern peninsula of Newfoundland. It runs about 200 miles north from the Humber Valley. In total, it consists of a land mass of about 500 miles of coastline with some 90,000 souls. That is an accurate description of my riding.

I should like to take this opportunity to support what was said by the previous speaker. In the system of representation which now exists in the Parliament of Canada, there is no recognition or substantial distinction between large rural ridings and urban centres. In my judgment that distinction is not made either in respect of determining electoral boundaries nor in respect of determining Members' services.

We are all Members of Parliament. We all take our responsibilities seriously. We rise in our places to speak and to put forward our views and the views of our constituents. We all have offices. We were all elected by vote. However, that is where the similarity between an urban and rural Member stops. Our system is designed, with slight exception, to provide nearly identical services and resources to all Hon. Members. That system does not recognize the incredible and dramatic difference in the work of and the requirements on a rural Member of Parliament and those of an urban Member of Parliament. It is a serious flaw which leads to unequal service being offered to constituents, depending upon whether they live in downtown Toronto or in Cook's Harbour, on the tip of the great northern peninsula in Newfoundland. That is unfortunate, but it is something with which we can deal with in the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services.

Bill C-74 proposes to limit or to place, theoretically, some kind of cap on unending growth or increase in the number of members sitting in the House. I can understand that, and I have some sympathy for the fact that there is a limit on how many Members of Parliament can sit in this Chamber, or in any Chamber for that matter, and provide good Government. As the previous speaker suggested, the Bill is flawed in that it contains no recognition of the huge geographic land masses regardless of population which some Hon. Members represent. In the previous Bill there was to be an increase in the number of members because the principle of representation by population was acknowledged. However, even that old Bill made no recognition of geographic land mass.

I should like to refer to the situation facing those of us in the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador. The land mass of Labrador exceeds the size of the Island of Newfoundland, the Province of Prince Edward Island, the Province of Nova Scotia and the Province of New Brunswick. This area called "Labrador" does not have its own Member of Parliament. The communities of Labrador are not accessible, except by air, for six months of the year. That land mass and its various communities are not accessible by road any time of the year. At least in the summertime there is air and water transportation. People literally live thousands of miles apart in communities separated by thousands of miles of open tundra and northern terrain. There is no means of contact except by air. The people in this land mass do not even have a single Member of Parliament to represent their interests.

When one considers that to be available in a Labrador community, a Member of Parliament has to fly from Ottawa to Montreal, on to Newfoundland and then to Goose Bay, to pick up a chartered boat to sail up to Nain, one begins to understand the demands on a Member of Parliament serving not only Labrador but a good chunk of the Province of Newfoundland. One also begins to appreciate that the Parliament of Canada has not done justice either to the Member or Parliament or to the people of Newfoundland and Labrador in not recognizing their need for a separate Member of Parliament. The current Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) has been eloquent and persistent, in the interests of the people of Labrador, in suggesting, as the Member of Parliament who currently represents all of Labrador and a good chunk of Newfoundland, that his riding needs to be split, that Labrador needs its own Member of Parliament. Yet, we see absolutely no recognition in Bill C-74 of that huge geographic land mass.

I chuckle when I think about urban ridings. God bless their Members of Parliament; they work hard and their demands are certainly as much as mine. However, I think they are able to do more with their time than I am. I chuckle when I hear them talk about a tough weekend. When I want to return to my riding to meet with the fishermen of Port au Choix who have had a disastrous year, for example, I leave Ottawa at 7.15 in the morning. I leave Montreal at 10.05 and I arrive at Stephenville at 1.30; I jump in a car and I arrive at Port au Choix five hours later, at 6.30, at which point I start my meeting, a meeting for which departed 11 hours earlier. I spend a day travelling to have such a meeting, and it takes me a day to return to Ottawa. If I want to leave Port au Choix and go to Cape St. George, I have to spend another nine hours driving there.

The Government has not attempted in this Bill—and I suggest that the previous administration, of which I was a Member, did not attempt it hard enough—to come to grips with the reality of Canada where 25 million people are spread across the second biggest nation on the face of the earth. If citizenship and if service from Government and from Members of Parliament are to have some degree of equality, no matter where one lives, we in Parliament have to begin to address the nature of Canada. The nature of Canada is not only Vancouver, Calgary, Toronto, Montreal and Halifax. Our primary producers do not live in those centres. The people who make their living off the land and from the sea, the people who have dirt under their fingernails, do not live in those centres. God bless the people who do. We in the rural areas envy the amenities which have been provided to them. We as parliamentarians have to do our homework and to take another look at Bill C-74. We have to reach out in all ways and do everything within our power to make Canadians feel that, no matter where they live, they are part of the mainstream and their votes count. We have to make Canadians feel, no matter where they live, that their voice can be heard. We have to make them feel these things by the way we divide political boundaries or constituency boundaries, circonscription, en français. This is a bilingual country; I started my French last weekend. I guarantee in six months that I will talk the leg off a brass stove en français. We have to begin the process.

I heard an Hon. Member opposite say that I cannot even speak English. That is a frequent complaint made about Newfoundlanders.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You made that up.

Mr. Tobin: We may not be very articulate. Although we are people of few words, although we come here with the handicap of being shy and quiet and unable to express ourselves without the benefit of a written speech, we know our duty and we stand and do our best. I see the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), who sits next to the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), grinning.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): With approval.

Mr. Tobin: As I said a few moments ago, I plead with the Government to take another look at the Bill and to give it another shot by bringing in a Bill which recognizes the rural nature of Canada and the huge geographic land masses and how they are currently represented in the Chamber. I do not necessarily disagree with the Government that it may not be wise to proceed with a formula which will result in ever increasing numbers of Members of Parliament sitting in this Chamber after each census.

● (1630)

I accept the concept that if we simply let it go on ad infinitum we can eventually develop a system where we have more Members than are necessary and a cost borne by taxpayers that is not ncessary. As a Member who represents a rural riding I have quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, felt frustrated knowing that I am provided with a budget for a constituency office just like the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), for want of a better example, who is provided with a budget for an office for his constituency which is two square miles and he has his office in the middle of it, when my constituency is 500 square miles. I have my office in the middle of it. I have felt the frustration of knowing that my constituents do not have the same access to their Member as the constituents in Ottawa Centre because they have access to only one office. They might as well be going to Montreal as to try to come to my office to see me from the tip of the great northern peninsula. I have felt the frustration quite frankly of knowing that I have x number of dollars to travel within my riding.

Mr. Waddell: They could hear you for 500 miles.

Mr. Tobin: That's right, I have to speak loudly so they can hear me, echo off the northern lights. An urban Member has basically the same kinds of provisions to do his work. If we are not going to make the changes in the House of Commons within the formula provided under Members' services to recognize the disparity in requirements between an urban and a rural Member, then certainly we have to make changes within the provisions of the Electoral Act contained in Bill C-74 to recognize the geographic differences in the ridings in this country.

I urge the Government, because I think its Members are well intentioned to this point, to go back, to have another look, to seek advice from the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead who smiles and nods his head with compassion and understanding—

An Hon. Member: And leaves.

Mr. Tobin: —and to do the right thing. Mr. Speaker, I can tell by looking at you and I know from your long years in this place and your distinguished record of integrity and compassion and understanding for we poor, young, inexperienced, rural MPs that you have an appreciation for what I am trying to say today. I recommend to the Government House Leader that he confer not only with the Speaker but confer with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and listen to the modest words of wisdom, the plea of desperation spoken on behalf of the people in the large geographic areas and rural areas of this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Any questions for the humble Hon. Member for Humber-Port-au-Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin)? Any questions or comments?

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member is so articulate I think if he is ever defeated from this House he could be a good vacuum cleaner salesman.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any other questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question before us is Bill C-74 which has to do with the representation of the Canadian people in the House of Commons. The proposal of certain safeguards is designed not to recognize the growth of population in some parts of Canada or the shifts in population which have taken place through the past decade and which were reflected in the 1981 census. It seems to me that the proposal the Government has put before us is pretty clearly a depression proposal. It reflects quite obviously the concern of the Government to avoid expenditure and to undertake desperate measures in order to achieve that.

I am reminded of events of something over a half century ago in the Province of British Columbia, which is one of the provinces which will suffer from the proposal the Government puts forward, which were very much like this. A poor Conservative Premier named Simon Fraser Tolmie was staggering under the burden of Depression problems and he felt sufficiently desperate that he was prepared to consider the advice of a collection of Vancouver businessmen who would tell him how to solve the problems of the province. When this collection of businessmen reported, they had all kinds of drastic measures for balancing the province's budget, as they were convinced in those early days of the 1930s that the very source of the evils under which the people of British Columbia suffered was a budget in deficit. They did not appreciate that it was the falling revenues, on the one hand, resulting from Depression circumstances and the increased costs that produced this deficit situation. They felt that if they could only balance the budget they would save the people of the province.

The Tolmie Government, so convinced of the truth of these principles, which have never been heard of again, listened to this commission of Vancouver businessmen who had proposals for balancing the budget. Those proposals included drastic measures in the educational system of the province including drastic action against the University of British Columbia. For our purposes this afternoon the really interesting proposal was the one to reduce drastically the size of the provincial legislature and see one particular area of expenditure by the provincial Government reduced markedly.

It is a very similar Depression mentality based on similarly primitive economic thinking that the Government has brought before us. We heard this morning from the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) a number of arguments for the proposal and I must say in a fairly skillful way—new Members of the House always listen with interest to see what tricks we might learn for passing things off in later years—he had a number of arguments in support of the proposal. One of them was an argument for a more accountable Government and Parliament.

That particular proposition strikes me as quite contradictory to the reality with which the Government has faced us. How it is possible to slow down the legitimate growth or expected growth of the House of Commons and achieve a more accountable House I fail to understand. How it is possible to prevent the people of Canada in the natural increase that occurs and the shifts, the movements of people across the country, how it is possible to force more of them, if you will, to talk to a Member of Parliament and yet achieve a Government that is more accountable, is hare-brained reasoning. It is the kind of argument that this Government will want, I suppose, given 211 Members, numbers it hardly know what to do with in the House, and the conviction it can do anything it likes, and in those circumstances it surely is not necessary for it to add to the number of Members of the House of Commons. There are more than adequate to do the job.

Mr. Benjamin: I would not bet on that.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): As I said, based on the desire to economize, it seems quite contradictory for the Government to suggest that it is going to economize in the area of adding to the number of Members of the House of Commons and consequently hold down somewhat the growth of the salary bill and expense accounts and so on, make savings in those areas and yet begin this new regime by sweeping away millions of dollars spent over the last few years in carrying out the work of redistribution, the work of boundaries commissions, work which was in a state that could have been accepted by the Parliament of Canada quite readily without very much more effort, and obviously without a great deal of expense. That sort of waste by a Government that is anxious about savings strikes me as a second contradiction in what the President of the Privy Council put before us this morning.

Another argument was that to increase our numbers will somehow make it more difficult for Members to participate. Although coming to this House for the first time last fall with a knowledge of the opportunities for participation that Members have had in years past, opportunities to speak at real length on topics, I must say the Standing Orders of the House which restrict one to 20 minutes for most of us private Members on both sides of the House seem to me already a real restriction on participation. There has in fact been a proposal before us which we have accepted and upon which the Government has acted through the new Standing Orders under which Bills will be considered in legislative committees. I am sure Members will have plenty of opportunity to participate. The growth of the House by a dozen Members rather than six would not in fact represent a significant infringement on the opportunities to participate given the way in which the rules of the House presently operate. It seems to me that the argument put before us this morning were contradictory to reality. We have every reason to look very carefully at what the Government is proposing.

It seems to me that with the majority this Government holds and with the conviction that because of the choice of the people, it has the right to do anything it wants, we could end up in highly undesirable circumstances. On our side of the House, we have been pointing out a variety of failures of commission and omission on the part of the Government. I would suggest that the same is true of this Bill.

What I find curious about the way in which this Bill has been debated today is the silence from government Members regarding the proposals in this Bill. One of the features of this Bill, on the face of it, is the doing away with the well established recognition of the Province of Quebec. I am surprised that a Government with so many Members from that province has allowed itself to make this particular proposal in the legislation.

I must also say that this deflation of representation which the Government is putting before us affecting the Province of Alberta and to a lesser extent the Provinces of British Columbia and Ontario should have aroused other Members to protest. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that you, as a Member from the Province of Alberta, are constrained from saying anything. However, I would expect that in private, it would be possible for you to put a little pressure on Members to debate this issue.

As a Member living far from the Province of Alberta, I could, of course, wonder if there is a particular slyness involved in this proposal, the assumption being that after the 1991 Census, it will become clear that the numbers from 1981 would not have justified representation because of the migration from the Province of Alberta that has occurred over the last several years. However, that is a rather sly and insidious notion which I should hesitate to mention since I am trying to create a context of concern for the people of each province of Canada. It seems to me that when Members of Parliament from the provinces of Alberta and Quebec sit silently and let the Government carry on with these proposals to deflate the expected growth of the House of Commons, something quite insidious is going on.

In fact, this action is a revision of the Constitution Act, one of the basic documents of the country. It is a document which created parliamentary monarchy which is based fundamentally upon the will of the people as expressed in the election of Members who serve in the House of Commons. To think that that Constitution can be changed in these insidious ways without arousing Members from all the provinces of Canada is a sorry reflection on the state the Government has reached since September 4, 1984. There is much more reason for concern than has been reflected in today's debate.

In considering the particular problems that will arise if this Bill becomes law, I would like to deal quite particularly with the "province" of northern Ontario. I should, of course, for our friends in the Hansard office, put quotation marks around the word "province", although those who recognize Canadian realities realized many years ago that the only appropriate way to deal with the geographic and demographic realities of this country would in fact have been to recognize a province of northern Ontario. Since there is no such province in the Constitution of this country, the operations of Bill C-74 need to be considered very carefully by all of us who are Members of Parliament from northern Ontario.

We have already heard some representation of the difficulties that arise from the present anomalies in sizes of ridings. Before the last redistribution, northern Ontario had 12 ridings. After the last redistribution, that number was reduced by one. The question that will surely arise when the new formula is worked out for the Province of Ontario is what its effect might be on northern Ontario. According to this Bill, Ontario will only get two more seats while there has been very significant growth in population in various areas like Ottawa and Metro Toronto. In fact, there are inequities in representation there and that will create pressures which we in northern Ontario will do our very best to resist.

The challenges to representation that now exist in northern Ontario ought not to be exacerbated in any way. To have only two more seats to deal with all of those difficulties while the population has grown so much in southern Ontario creates a very great pressure on us in northern Ontario. Particularly in northwestern Ontario, the difficulties involved in providing service to constituents, something which is surely fundamental in fulfilling the functions of a Member of Parliament, are very great. I recognize, of course, that my colleagues from the Metro Toronto area have 100,000 or perhaps even 200,000 constituents—

An Hon. Member: More.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Or more. I heard the figure mentioned before. The Hon. Member really does not need to remind me. There will be some deflation in those realities as well given the Bill before us. However, those Members are still able, without long-distance telephone charges and without unusual amounts of travelling to provide for their constituents. Compared to that, I am inclined to single out the provincial riding of Lake Nipigon because of the incredible problems I see faced by my provincial colleague. The provincial House has 125 seats. One would think that that would make it possible to avoid difficulties. However, the riding of Lake Nipigon which begins about halfway across the north shore of Lake Superior and wraps around the City of Thunder Bay some distance to the southwest is a riding that is very large. The MLA can get to most of the communities he serves only by road. Of course there are northern areas into which he can fly but that requires chartered flights in most cases. The MLA finds himself spending hours and even days on the road simply in order to be able to meet with his constituents in various areas.

I mentioned that particular challenge as a way of indicating that in my own Schedule III riding of Thunder Bay-Nipigon, I face challenges not quite as severe, but a change in distribution along the lines that this Bill suggests would certainly move me in the direction of the challenges faced by the provincial Member for Lake Nipigon. I find myself with communities to which it takes four hours to drive. I leave at 9.30 in the morning, spend some time at a meeting and some time en route and I arrive home at 10.30 that night, as I did just a week ago when I visited one of the small Indian communities. That is a community to which I do not believe I could fly. I have not investigated a charter but I do not think I could fly there. If I wanted to take the train into some of these communities on the northern CN line, Armstrong and Collins on the one side, Ferland and Mud River on the other, around to Auden and through Aroland and Nakina—and I have carefully examined the schedules—I find that a train that goes in one direction is matched by a return train three days later. Using that particular form of land transportation hardly provides for any reasonable form of travel, and that is a line on which there is no matching road at all. A number of those places are located on lakes or rivers so there is a possibility of flying in but no one is going to tell me that getting to those sites is going to save the people of Canada any money. No one can tell me that there are not costs for the people of Canada involved in extending the size of these ridings. One can take the subway in Toronto and be anywhere one wants to be in Metro and there are streetcars, buses and so on at a quite reasonable cost. However, the expense of serving these northern areas is something which should be kept in mind at a time when we have a Government with a Depression mentality, and which is only concerned about saving costs in a number of areas.

Recognizing that it is access to the Member of Parliament and it is the Member's service to each of his constituents which is a fundamental principle of a democratic Government, I suggest that the proposal put before us by the Government slights those principles. In the desperate pursuit of some saving of money, the Government is prepared to violate time-honoured principles in distribution of representation of the House of Commons, particulrly in the Province of Quebec. I have assailed Members of the Government for their silence on this. It is quite incredible that we have had all of this put before us, a few Members of the governing Party having spoken, and the battle being left to us in the opposition who recognize the challenges which can result from what the Government has put before us, which is an enormous mistake.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment and a question which I would like to raise with the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp). The Hon. Member and I represent two Ontario constituencies. I have in the past travelled on a number of occasions to the area represented by the Hon. Member and can relate to the provincial riding of Lake Nipigon which he describes and which was so well represented for a number of years in the legislature by Jack Stokes. The constituency in question, we were told by the Hon. Member, was larger than the country of West Germany and was being served in the legislative assembly of the province by one person. At the federal level, many of the constituencies are even larger than that. I wonder if I could come back to a point I raised earlier. I must preface my remarks by saying I am not trying to put any words in anyone's mouth. I am trying to elicit information and obtain constructive suggestions as to how to reorganize this whole system of electoral redistribution.

I wonder if the Hon. Member could give me his views as to whether he could see some sort of a formula which would use the land mass as a basic criteria, at least for certain regions of the country, such as exist, as I understand it, in the Province of Ontario for its electoral redistributions. I wonder if the Hon. Member would like to comment on that?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): My thanks to my colleague for a challenging question. I am not going to be able to provide him with any formula in any neat way, although I understand that the work done by the provincial legislature, through commissions to establish arrangements, have led in fact to a very complex formula. I realize also that there are dangers in exaggerating representation of land as such. Our system of Government is based on representation of people. However, the key principle linking these two is surely that need for access to the Member to which I referred at the end of my speech, and it is in that context that there must be some recognition of the distances Members face in reaching their constituents, and even more—given the fact that our constituents do not have the travel budgets and funds we have—their difficulty in getting to us. That is a reality which needs to be respected.

We have tried, I suppose over the years, to do that to some extent by being conservative in the representation of areas which were not growing proportionate to the country or to the new regions, and being realistic in recognizing the population growth which was occurring there. What this legislation fails to do is to deal realistically with growth while still, of course, honouring the principle of maintaining or, at least, not decreasing what exists in areas where population is more stable or, conceivably, even falling in relative terms. I think it is a sound principle and democratic for Government to ensure that constituents, in terms of access to their Members, are given some leeway in the arrangement of distribution.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there are any other questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I want to use the few minutes remaining to say that I was on the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections and the Committee on Election Expenses from 1968 to 1974. We went through then what we are going through now with respect to the matter of reconciling the principle of representation by population and taking into account our geography and where our people live. This is a non-partisan debate because it affects all Hon. Members and all Parties. Therefore, where I might part company with some of my own colleagues and my own caucus, so be it. I will be parting company with some Hon. Members in the other Parties as well. An Hon. Member who represents an urban riding with 100,000 voters within 50 square miles can keep in touch with his constituents as easy, if not easier, that the Hon. Member who has 50,000 voters within 50,000 square miles. That is what we tried to resolve in 1968, 1969, 1970 and 1971.

In my province we had 25 Members of Parliament with one million people. Then we had 21 Members of Parliament, then 17, then 13, then back up to 14, which is supposed to be the minimum. We have smaller representation with the same population to accommodate the parts of the country which have a larger population. We still have to continue to reconcile the principle of representation by population and at the same time we must take into account where the heck our people live and how accessible they are to their Member of Parliament. If they have to cover a riding of 50,000 square miles, it is a lot tougher than covering a riding like mine with 50 square miles and 95,000 people. That has to be taken into account by all Members. This country does not just consist of downtown

Toronto or southwestern Ontario. It has to take into account whatever we deal with here, every region and every part of the country.

● (1700)

The principle of representation by population is not disagreed with by any other Member of this House, but over the last 15 or 20 years this House has succeeded in reaching some reasonable representation for those with large populations in small ridings and those with small populations in large georgraphical areas. Surely, in a country like this, we can do no less than continue with that. I do not agree that we should increase this House to 350 or 400 Members. Where the hell are you going to put them? Let's have an elected Senate, if we are not going to abolish it, and take care of the other ones there.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Mr. Hnatyshyn, seconded by Mr. Kelleher, moves that Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867, and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, it being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

MISSING CHILDREN SEARCH ACT

SUGGESTED MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West) moved that Bill C-230, an Act to require assistance in the search of missing children, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as indicated in the motion before the House, I have presented a Bill, the short title of which is the Missing Children Search Act. I will deal with the content of the legislation in a moment. Before I do so, I want to explain in broad terms my purpose in presenting this Bill relating to missing children to the House of Commons for consideration.

For many years those engaged in the administration of justice—police officers, prosecuting officers, social workers and the employees of the provinces and the federal authority who are concerned with justice in Canada—have been faced with the problem of missing children. More important, the problem has had to be faced by the parents and families of those missing children. It is in those interest of the parents and families that I ask the House to give consideration to this matter. While it is a matter of great interest to those responsible for the administration of justice, and while there are a great many technicalities involved in legislation that might be designed to protect children and assist in the search for missing children, we have to put aside those technicalities when we consider the plight of the parents and the families who are the victims of this social situation involving missing children. I want Members to remember that as they consider this Bill. We are not concerned with the mere technicality of the legisative provisions before us. We are concerned with the problem that is presented to Canadian society by missing children. I underline that because I want Members to know that it is not just my idea to do something about missing children. The public has the same idea. An organiation called Victims of Violence wrote to all Members Parliament in January of this year outlining the plight of missing children. I want to read part of the letter. It begins:

> As parents of murdered children, we are deeply concerned with the lack of a good system in Canada to track, and hopefully find missing children.
> Firstly, policies must be changed at local levels as far as officially considering a child missing. Usually, since most missing children do show up within a number of hours, police do not respond to missing children reports with the seriousness they do with a missing car.

Without blaming the police across this nation and without condemning anybody involved in the administration of justice, a fact of life in the administration of our penal laws is that a missing child does not receive the same attention as a missing car. Parliament surely has to do something about that. I ask Parliament to consider this legislation that I presented because of that fact. It has been stated by a parent of a missing child. It goes on to say, just to underline the point—as if it needed underlining—that if you were to ask the police in Canada for a list of missing children they would not have one, but if you ask them for a list of missing motor vehicles or recreational vessels, they would have such a list. That is the horrible situation in which we in Canada find ourselves.

I want to again refer to some literature on the subject of missing children. I came across an article in a periodical, Teaching Today, which was sent to all teachers in the Province of Alberta. This is from the spring 1985 issue. The author of the article, Aaron Bushkowsky, states that the slowness of local law enforcement authorities with respect to investigation of missing children cases is disheartening. He states, and I want to make this point very clearly:

> —to be missing is not a crime:

Because being missing is not a crime, the police are often excluded from the process and procedure involved in the search for missing children. That is exactly what this Bill is designed to deal with. Let me very briefly outline the provisions of the Bill which I have introduced.

What it does is define a missing child. It simply says that a child under the age of 16 whose whereabouts is unknown to his or her parent is a missing child. It is as simple as that. When a child is missing, the parent under this legislaiton has the right to execute a warrant which is then given to any police officer in Canada. The police officer is then required to commence a search for the child. I am sure the representative of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) if he has an opportunity to speak on this Bill, will say that this Bill creates difficulties with respect to jurisdiction between the Parliament of Canada and the legislatures of the provinces of Canada. I certainly admit that that is a problem. I have attempted to overcome that problem by declaring that the missing child procedure as outlined in the Act is to be part of the criminal law of Canada. Clearly the Parliament of Canada has the right and authority to legislate with respect to criminal law. Whether that disposes of the argument I am not prepared to say except that it is the best attempt that I can construct. I want to return to the real heart of the problem which is the missing children across Canada.

Statistics are lean. Inquiries have been made. The Ministry of the Solicitor General of the Province of Ontario had a missing children project and it attempted to compile some statistics. The indication was that approximately 1,081 children are still missing in Canada. That does not include the thousands and thousands of cases involving missing children which are resolved quickly or over a period of time. In the United States it is considered to be an even greater problem with literally thousands and thousands of cases being reported. I have an article here which indicates that no one is sure of the exact numbers but it is estimated that 1.5 million children are missing from their homes each year. The report indicates that many or most of them are returned but some of them end up as victims of abuse or victims of homicide.

If the Parliament of Canada cannot act to at least provide some method or process to deal with the problems, then we are shirking our responsibility to the people of Canada, in particular to the parents and families of missing children. We want to find a viable method that can assist in resolving the problem. Nothing is perfect. Let me depart from that point by saying that so often in the House of Commons and legislatures across the country we abandon any hope of taking action for fear that our action may not be as effective as it could be. In other words, we do not make a start. Missing children is an area in which we have not made a start. At some point we must put some legislation on the statute books which at least recognizes that there is a problem under the laws of Canada and the provinces with respect to missing children.

I do not want to reflect badly on the police, but the problem is that missing children do not fit into our framework of criminal law. The extent to which they fit into the framework of child protection laws is lacking in effectiveness. Child protection laws are affected by provincial boundaries which are difficult to cross in search of a missing child. In some cases it is even difficult to cross municipal boundaries in search of a missing child because quite often child protection agencies are confined to a municipal territory. It has been demonstrated time and again that there must be a national vehicle for dealing with missing children.

The second point which gives rise to legal difficulty with respect to missing children is the characterization of that state. If a 15-year old simply wants to escape the wrath of a person in the home, or for some almost legitimate reason wants to leave home, we must consider whether the child is not entitled to protection outside the home. Consequently, in that kind of a situation, the police authorities are unwilling to become involved and often the child protection authorities act without haste. We get confused in terms of trying to characterize the case. Once you recognize that there are almost legitimate cases of missing children, you tend to colour all the reported cases with that possibility and give the benefit of the doubt and some police agencies and other persons engaged in the administration of justice prefer to take no action. The result is that nothing happens and the missing child is then endangered by being subjected to harmful treatment or even, in some cases, homicide.

We are trying to characterize the cases of missing children which should be assisted by the legal process. That is the first task of this or any Bill which purports to deal with missing children. The second task is to provide a process which will allow a search for missing children and for the return of them to their proper homes. The fact that this Bill may not accomplish that and that some more perfect means can be imagined is not an excuse for not making a start.

I do not want to take all of the time which is available to me because I know there are other Members who want to speak on this Bill. However, I should not leave this subject without referring to the fact that there has been a great deal done by various organizations which are concerned about the subject of missing children. A program called Adam, which was aired in the United States on NBC Television and subsequently in Canada, brought a great deal of national attention in the United States and in Canada to the subject of missing children. It also brought attention to organizations such as Child Find and its programs. There is an organization called the National Centre for Missing and Exploited Children which regularly publishes pictures and identifying material concerning missing children. In many cases, this has resulted in the lost child being found, often in very difficult circumstances.

I do not want to imply that there are not a great many Canadians and other people across North America vitally concerned with this matter and who have taken steps to resolve it by forming organizations in the hope of getting all of the people who are interested in the problem together. I would like to emphasize the fact that most of this work is being carried on by volunteers in our society. That does not excuse Government from taking a specific interest in the matter and seeking techniques, processes, and procedures that will assist at Government levels in resolving this problem.

I would like to end my remarks by repeating that my motivation for bringing this matter before Parliament is to get recognition of the fact that missing children are a problem in Canadian society. We have seen heinous crimes involving missing children. We have seen difficulties experienced by families of missing children. I have responded to this problem by formulating Bill C-230, the Missing Children Search Act. That is only to demonstrate that it is possible to have legislation. I am sure that there are greater legal minds than mine which can formulate more effective legislation. I hope that those minds will be put to work on this subject rather than having it merely swept away and forgotten to become another musty record of the House of Commons. I appeal to all Members of the House of Commons to take into account the concern that has been and will be expressed with respect to missing children. Let us make a start.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for having brought Bill C-230 to the attention of the House. It is a very important subject indeed when we consider that over 1,200 children over the age of 10 are known to be missing. There are 160 children under the age of 10 who we know are missing in this country as we speak right now. In any given year 2,000 children are reported missing. This happens as a result of many things. Some children leave the home, some are abducted by strangers, and some are abducted by family. It is with regard to the latter that I want to make my remarks this afternoon.

On October 13, 1982 a child by the name of Tina Lynn Malette was abducted. At the time the child was in my daughter's class at school. She was abducted by her natural father who, for all intents and purposes, had never seen the child. The father had only lived in this country for a short period of time. He came from another country, abducted the child, and took her to Tunisia. To this day we are still looking for a way to bring the child back to this country. We have found out where the child is and the mother can speak to her by telephone, but we are not able to return her to this country. I have asked for the assistance of the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and I believe that he has done all that he can. However, unfortunately, there are no extradiction treaties between Canada and Tunisia and we are, therefore, powerless to do anything.

The father was never married to the mother and never lived with her for any length of time. For all intents and purposes, he was a complete stranger to that child before the date of the abduction. Since this man is the father of the child, Tunisian authorities claim to have sufficient legal grounds to allow her to stay there. They claim that they have no authority to deport the child. Of course, this is the daughter of a citizen and therefore the child is a citizen as well, even though she never lived with the father, does not bear his name and the father does not even have a birth certificate which attributes him with the paternity of that child. Nevertheless, the child is there.

On several occasions I have attempted to do what I could about this situation. In July, 1983, I wrote a letter to a Member of Parliament from Tunisia whom I met at a parliamentary conference and who purported at the time to be interested in the case. He never responded. In December, 1983, I wrote again to that same Tunisian Member of Parliament about the same issue but the letter was never answered.

I wrote on two other occasions to the leader of the only political party, as I understand it, in that country. Those letters were never answered either. It was only this year, once I became a federal Member of Parliament and raised the issue in the House that we could at least get some reaction from the Tunisian authorities. At that time the Tunisian Ambassador finally said that there was nothing he could do about the case. It is strange that if they thought they were so right in their actions that they would find it so difficult to express it publicly before.

Be that as it may, after writing to the Tunisian Ambassador in December, 1984 and February, 1985, we managed to get some form of a statement from the Ambassador in April or May of this year when he expressed the position of his country which I have already enunciated.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs tells us that the only way to bring this child back to Canada is to launch legal proceedings in the courts of Tunisia. A number of people whom I know have started a Tina Lynn Malette trust fund. A number of prominent people from the Ottawa-Carleton area are trustees of this particular fund. We have begun to raise the money necessary to hopefully launch a successful legal campaign in order to return the child to Canada.

As a father of two children, with one child who was in the same class as this particular girl, one really discovers how powerless each one of us is if someone wants to come to our home and take our child away to another country or even a different province in certain cases. Even if that man was the natural father of the child—because he was otherwise a total stranger, not even in possession of a birth certificate or anything else acknowledging the paternity, much less a passport or visa—what would be the difference if someone came to my house and took away my child who was the same age, her best friend and in the same class at school? I suggest the situation would be almost identical.

If it was my child who was over there, what would I do to bring her back? I would probably do the same as the mother of Tina Lynn Malette and cry a lot and try hard without success to this point. I do not believe that all those officials with whom I have dealt on this issue had anything else but good intentions. Certainly, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs and his precedessor as well as others have made a legitimate effort to assist me and, of course, my constituent in bringing this child back. However, we have not had any success as yet. I commend any Member of the House who attempts to work in such a way as to enhance the chances of bringing lost children home.

The situation that I have described is somewhat different than the one brought to our attention by the Hon. Member who proposed the Bill, but it is another example of lost children in this country and how each one of us, as parents, are really powerless and helpless when these things happen. We always think that it happens to someone else, but this incident happened so closely to me that I really believe I would be totally powerless. I am sure when Members think about it seriously, they will see that we are powerless in such cases.

I tabled a petition in the House earlier this year, consisting of some 7,000 names of Canadians who are concerned about the case of Tina Lynn Malette and wanting a resolution to the problem, urging the Government of Tunisia to bring her back. Of course, it still claims that under its law it is not possible.

It is my hope that the legal action that has begun will be successful. I cannot wait for the day when we will go to Mirabel Airport and hopefully take the child off the plane. However, it is bound to be a while yet. Certainly I, and I am sure my colleagues, intend to allow this Bill to pass. It is a good Bill with good intentions.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the New Democratic Party to speak to this interesting Bill. Before doing so, I want to make a couple of comments. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) made a very powerful and interesting speech. For the record, I would like to associate myself and I believe my Party with the cause of Tina Malette. I hope that the Government and the Ambassador of Tunisia are listening and will be sent a copy of Hansard to see that there is unanimity in the House of Commons with respect to this issue.

Second, I want to take this opportunity to say personally, Godspeed and recovery to the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens). She is a wonderful person and a great friend to all of us in the House. It would be nice if she were watching—I do not want her to become more sick by watching the House of Commons—and I hope she will get better and return to the House quickly. I believe that hope is shared by all Members.

Let me make some remarks about the Bill and the speech made by the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby). I wanted to hear some facts and figures from the Hon. Member for Halifax West but they were given by the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. I believe it is necessary to have more detailed facts on the number of missing children to determine the number missing as a result of a family situation, a non-family situation or whether it is a poor family home situation where the child seems to have run away.

I attempted to find those facts in the Badgley Commission but there is not much information with respect to the problem of using the police power to return missing children as proposed by the Hon. Member in his Bill.

I certainly agree with the Hon. Member that it must be a terrible experience to be a parent of a missing child. As I listened to the speech by the Hon. Member for Halifax West, it appeared that there is a grass roots movement to deal with this problem as often happens in Canadian society. Members will recall the group called MADD. These were people against impaired drivers. They campaigned for tougher penalties because some of their family members had been victims of impaired drivers. They began to pressure Members of Parliament. They were not represented by any funded group, business or labour body. They were ordinary Canadians who were concerned about this problem.

Members of Parliament did receive a letter from a group called The Victims of Violence and I thank them for writing to us. We appreciate the kind of grass roots nature of this group. I will come back to that in a minute.

The Hon. Member for Halifax West says that the police do not respond as quickly to missing children as they do to missing cars and boats. That is a pretty sad thing. I cannot believe, although one notes the concern with property in our society, that that is the situation. The Hon. Member tells we there is no list of missing children but there is a list of missing cars and boats. I agree with him that that sounds wrong and it is terrible. He said that to be missing is not a crime. He is right. This is one part of his Bill I did not understand. Perhaps when it gets to committee the point will be clarified. Is this an amendment to the Criminal Code or not? I think it should be, and it should not stand as a separate Bill. If it becomes an amendment to the Criminal Code, there are certain aspects of the Bill we should look at very closely. We have to balance our concern against missing children and the ability to do something in terms of an investigation and in getting the children back.

Some of the wording in his Bill is not crystal clear. I know he said that this was a general approach to flag he issue and to keep pressure on so that something will be done. I have looked at Clauses 6 and 7 of the Bill. Clause 6 calls for a person to advise the Minister in writing that a police officer has refused to assist in the search for a missing child and that the Minister may order the police officer to take certain actions. In Clause 7 there can be a search warrant to search premises and so on when people suspect a missing child is involved. This goes a little far, and there are some civil liberties concerns here. Do we want to give the police that kind of power? Can that kind of power be abused? We have to weigh that against the concern of getting the bureacracy, and I include the police, to pay more concern to missing children as opposed to missing cars and boats.

The Hon. Member said that 1.5 million children went missing each year in the Unites States.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to interfere with the debate and I hesitate to interrupt the Member, but since there are people listening to the presentation, I want to make it clear that I was taking the information from a presentation made by an organization called Victims of Violence. It is that organization which made the statements about missing children in relation to cars and other matters.

Mr. Waddell: I will accept that statement, Mr. Speaker. I can see that happening.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That really is not a point of order. It is a point of clarification. I hope we will not get into an argument.

Mr. Waddell: The organization made the statement. It is a serious allegation, Mr. Speaker. We are more concerned about property than we are about people. We are more concerned about missing cars and boats than about missing kids. If that is true, it is something we have to change.

The Hon. Member said that 1.5 million children went missing each year in the United States. That is an awful lot of children. We could do well when this Bill gets into committee to debate why that situation is happening. Is it because our victims, in a sense runaways, are a product of home abuse? Are they taken away by another parent because of marriage breakdown and the difficulties associated with that? Are they abducted by the Clifford Olsons of this world because of crime in our society? It would be good to have a breakdown of those figures.

We need to look at the cause of the situation. Is it racism in the United States in terms of black families? Is it poverty? There is certainly a lot of poverty in the United States and in Canada. That should be investigated when we consider the Bill in committee.

I can tell the Hon. Member that there are different ways of dealing with—and I don't think they are mutually exclusive—missing children. One is enforcement; putting some fire under the police in a procedural legal way to search out and take serious reports of missing children. Another way is to deal with the matter in a preventive state so children never go missing in the first place.

In my province of British Columbia, the Government has cut back family services. It has cut back services to children. It has cut back on the number of social workers and on abuse centres. We should be looking at those as preventive measures. If we can ensure strong families, ensure that people do not live in poverty and ensure that there is no family abuse, then things at the other end will change and we will have fewer missing children.

I have to point out that this is a Government prepared to cut back on family allowances while spending a billion dollars to bail out a bank. If the Government cuts back on family allowances, it will guarantee more family problems because income is being cut back to families that really need it. You cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker.

The Badgley Report of which I spoke listed a number of preventive measures. It suggested minimum standards of service be set up for the police and for the social workers. The report talked about sexual abuse cases. In this context, the same could be said generally about missing children. A way of reporting to the police, getting the information to other provinces and agencies, ways of making people aware should be approached. It was suggested we have an office of a commissioner for children which would bring some of these departments together. These are useful suggestions. I think the Hon. Member and I agree that what he was reflecting today is the general grass roots feeling saying that bureaucracy is not doing enough, the police are not doing enough, and it is of real concern that no one is listening and we are frustrated. These are real problems and they must be listened to.

There is alienation and frustration in our society which is reflected in problems like missing children. I know some of it is inevitable and it has always been with us. It seems in our materialistic society that there are more breakdowns and less stability in the family and in society. This is reflected in prostitution where the frustrated in a less caring society find they must resort to prostitutes. It is reflected in children running away and in the crazies in the streets, the Olsons of this world, who murder children. It is reflected in all sorts of ways. That is the negative aspect to society. On the positive side the Hon. Member has taken the time to bring this Bill forward. He is responding to a grass roots situation. I have some concerns about the wording of the Bill, the civil liberties aspects and the way it fits in with the Criminal Code. Also I have some concerns about whether it would really be effective. However, I say to the Hon. Member that it is an initiative well worth looking into.

I will take my seat now and hope that the Bill will pass into committee today so that we can discuss the matter further.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words in support of Bill C-230, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), an Act to require assistance in the search for missing children. As he has indicated, the propose of the Bill is to make it possible for the parents or persons responsible for a child who is missing to obtain assistance to locate that child in Canada. Human and other resources are part of the administration of justice and should be made available for that purpose. Of course the purpose of the Bill is to try to make them available.

I am particularly interested in supporting it because of my own personal experience with a friend, Mrs. Inge Cant, who has gone through a terrifying experience of a similar nature with her own child. Mrs. Cant separated from her husband in about 1981. They had one child. They fought a very bitterly contested custody battle. She received custody from the courts. Her husband appealed and received access to the child on weekends. On one of those weekends, he and the child, Jonathan, disappeared. Mrs. Cant then spent 20 months trying to find her son, Jonathan. Not only did she spend that length of time, but she spent a lot of her own money. Mr. Speaker, you may have read about this case in the newspapers. I should like to quote from an article which appeared in The Toronto Star, on February 16, 1984. In part, it reads:

> With painstaking accuracy, Inge Cant has kept accounts.
> From the $100 long distance telephone bills, to the $20,000 legal bills, the search for her abducted son, Jonathan, cost more than most people could afford.

Certainly more than Cant, a legal secretary who made about $20,000 a year, could ever hope to pay for on her own.

But from the day Jonathan was taken from Cant's estranged husband . . . the search was on. In total, it cost Cant, her family and friends more than $100,000.

That $100,000 was spent as follows—$40,000 for private detectives at $35 per hour, $20,000 in legal fees and other expenses for long distance telephone calls, travel and accommodations. Finally, her search took her to Australia; after 20 months she located her son in that country.

She took with her to Australia a police officer who kindly agreed to accompany her. She paid all the expenses of that police officer to go with her to Australia to try to bring back the child. Once they had boarded the airplane with the child, Australian police got on and took her and the child off the airplane, because the estranged husband had obtained a court order to fight for custody in that country. She had to go through the custody struggle all over again.

Finally, she is back here in Canada with her son, Jonathan. However, the estranged father, who went to Australia on a stolen passport, still has it. She lives in terror that everything will happen again. As I said, it cost here some $100,000 to find her child. That is the type of problem which the Bill tries to address and tries to find a logical solution for.

Just this afternoon I talked with the Deputy Chief of Metropolitan Toronto, Jim Clark, about this problem. He told me that in the last 10 years in Metropolitan Toronto there have been 64,000 reports of missing children and that that figure did not include those abducted by their parents. Of that figure, six have remained missing for a period of over one year. Also he said that from 35 to 70 cases involving missing children are outstanding in Toronto at any one time.

The Hon. Member for Halifax West referred to a number of voluntary organizations which are interested in and try to assist with this problem. Child Find is one to which my hon. friend referred. It takes the fingerprints of children and tries to use them for assistance. There is the Child Photo Program which takes photographs of children, and of course there are the block parent programs which try to keep an eye on children in neighbourhoods. All these organizations are helpful, but it is a sad commentary, as other Hon. Members have said, that it has to be done by volunteers and that the Government is not involved in the program. It is high time the Government became involved.

Also Deputy Chief Clark of Metropolitan Toronto said that the United States had a federally funded program called the National Centre for Missing and Exploited Children. It coordinates information on missing children. We do not have such an organization in Canada. Our police departments are linked by computer and they have to try to search out information via computer when they obtain a report on a missing child. Unfortunately they cannot necessarily access the computer information of all other police departments. The present system is ineffective in dealing with the problem. We need something like a national centre for missing children. It may well tie in with the program under the divorce legislation as well as the maintenance and custody legislation currently before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. Perhaps that information system can be used to assist in these situations.

The Hon. Member brought forward another excellent suggestion as to how this matter should be dealt with. In one way or another, I believe that the matter has to be dealt with quickly by Parliament. We should refer the Bill to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs today so that we can get on with solving the problem.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) on bringing forward Bill C-230. I assure him and all Hon. Members in the House that the Liberal Party supports the Bill in principle. We in Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition would like to see the subject matter referred to either a legislative committee, especially set up to deal with the subject matter, or to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, so that we can look into the entire question of missing children. The Hon. Member made an excellent submission. I assure him of our full support in having the subject matter dealt with as expeditiously as possible.

I need not articulate the pain and anguish which parents suffer as a result of their children who go missing. If there is anything that we as parliamentarians can do to try to assist those parents in finding their children, I think we will have served this subject matter well. The fact remains that nationally we are not doing what we can to assist parents. The Hon. Member for Halifax West has introduced a particular Bill which will address the problem in a particular fashion. As other Hon. Members have indicated, as of January, 1984, a total of 1,224 children between the ages of 10 years and 16 years went missing in Canada. An additional 160 child under the age of nine years were also missing. In total, over 2,000 children are reported missing each year. The Canadian Police Information Centre usually has an accurate record of the number of children missing but not the circumstances of their disappearance. Some police departments across the country may enter incomplete descriptions or conflicting information. As the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) pointed out, missing children fall into three categories—runaways, stranger abductions and parental abductions. Contrary to popular belief most police departments do not wait a prescribed period of time, for example 24 hours, before recording a child as missing. They treat each case individually, taking into consideration factors such as whether the child is known to be a runaway or there are feuding parents where parental abduction is likely.

As other Members have indicated, corporations are eager to get involved in searches for missing children. There are more than a dozen corporations who want to put their names and dollars into any program involving missing children. So we have the private sector that is quite prepared to get involved in this particular area, to try to assist in whatever way possible. What we need is a federal Government initiative. We all know that there is no Canadian legislation dealing specifically with missing children.

In the U.S., as has been pointed out, the Missing Children Act was signed into law in October of 1984. It provides a $4 million fund administered by the Department of Justice to co-ordinate the work of volunteer groups and help them establish toll-free telephone lines and information clearing houses. I think the Government of Canada should look at that particular legislation as a model and as a basis to develop our own procedures to deal with missing children. The United States also requires Attorneys General in each state to allow parents access to police computer systems to ensure that their missing children's names have been entered and if not to find out why not. In this regard it is important to note that RCMP officers and officials of Statistics Canada have not kept national statistics on missing children since 1976 because of conflicting reporting methods. This is another subject matter that ought to be considered by the appropriate committee.

The Liberal Party as well as, I am sure, all Hon. Members in this House are extremely concerned with respect to the problem of missing children. Last February Mr. McGuigan, an Ontario Liberal Member of Parliament, released the results of his three-month study on missing children. He concluded that police departments lack the resources to conduct proper investigations, that Governments have been slow to pass legislation to protect children and that there is a low level of public awareness of this particular problem. His report is an important contribution to the literature that we already have on this particular subject. Mr. McGuigan debunks many of the myths concerning missing children. Some of his conclusions are that most children who run away do so because of intolerable conditions at home, not because they are searching for fun and adventure as some would argue. They are often fleeing from physical, emotional or sexual abuse.

While about 95 per cent of missing children are runaways, an increasing number are victims of abduction. Few children abducted by strangers are recovered alive. The abductors include pedophiles, pornographers, black market baby peddlers or psychotics. He says "Child prostitution, sexual and physical abuse, mental anguish and torment and even death await many of these children in such unfortunate circumstances".

There are an increasing number of cases involving the abduction of children by parents, usually after a divorce or a custody battle. The McGuigan Report said that the main motive is revenge against the other parent, not love for the child. It is a mistake to assume that children abducted by parents are in no real danger. Organizations which are concerned with such children have reported that the majority of them were either beaten, molested or neglected.

Mr. McGuigan also noted in his report that there were 22 children murdered in Canada last year and that children frequently are the victims of serial murderers such as by Clifford Olson in British Columbia and by U.S. mass killer Henry Lee Lucas.

Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity to applaud the efforts of Mr. McGuigan on that in-depth study in which he was involved. He indicated that he plans to introduce a resolution in the legislature in Ontario asking for a full scale inquiry into the problem of missing children and hopes that this inquiry will be conducted by the Legislature's Social Development Committee.

Among some of the recommendations in the McGuigan Report is that a province-wide and eventually nation-wide registry of missing children should be established. I think that is an excellent suggestion and something that Parliament can address and can do so quickly. He also noted that police forces are hampered in their investigations by the lack of an up-to-date central data base. Once again, the federal Government can assist with respect to an up-to-date data base to ensure that as much information as possible is available to parents and others, including police departments in the search for missing children.

It is important to note that most abducted Canadian children are taken to the United States, where provincial custody orders are not always enforced. The McGuigan Report stressed that there has to be a broader international agreement to respect foreign court orders. I call on the Government of Canada to address the problem of parents who abduct their children and take them to foreign jurisdictions, especially to the United States. I should point out that several nations have signed an international agreement called the Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction which binds the signatories to help return missing children within their boundaries. France, Portugal, Switzerland, Ontario and several other Canadian provinces have ratified the agreement. Britain and the United States have signed it but have yet to ratify it.

In conclusion I would urge all Hon. Members in this House to support this particular Bill in principle and to refer the whole subject matter of missing children to a parliamentary committee to ensure that whatever can be done is done by this Parliament to assist those who have searched in vain to find missing children. I think it will be a tremendous step forward and a credit to each and every Member of this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to speak on this most worthwhile proposal.

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do not have very much time but I certainly intended to make a presentation on this Bill and I will go through some of the highlights very quickly.

I support this Bill particularly because it is national in scope and because of the fact that we are bringing to the recognition of all Canadians that there are many Canadian families who are undergoing a great deal of anxiety and suffering. In the City of Saskatoon with a population of 180,000 we had something like 1,205 children reported missing in 1984 and 1,200 were found. Five of those children are still missing and I say that that is five too many.

I would like to very quickly touch on a program that has been operating in Saskatoon as a result of the Child Find Program which operates across Canada and in the United States. This particular program is called All About Me ID and it was referred to by a number of other speakers this afternoon. The instigators of this program, in conjunction with a number of corporate sponsors and a number of media, designed a passport—I have a copy of one here—which includes the picture, fingerprints, and medical history of the child and also a fair bit of information in terms of preventative care. In the City of Saskatoon I am sure we would not have had 1,200 missing children if many parents had taken some of these precautions.

As it is very close to six o'clock I will not have an opportunity to make my complete presentation here. I think there are a number of excellent points in this Bill and one of the things I want to touch on, which may be in opposition to what I have heard from some of my colleagues, is that in my view Government cannot do everything in this country. I very much applaud the gentleman from Halifax West who is suggesting that we have this Act passed. However, I think the private sector, as proven in Saskatoon, can play a very important major role in seeing that they, too, can become involved in assisting the police, the national agency and of course the provincial agencies through the Attorneys General. I would certainly like to see this Bill passed by this House and referred to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for further consideration.

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, sitting through this debate has been a highlight for all present because it has shown us the kind of message that the committee on enhancing the role of the private Member has been trying to convey, namely, that the private Member has an extraordinary opportunity to bring to the attention of the House issues that might be overlooked by Government and by other leadership. As we have seen today, it is possible for a Member to rouse the House of Commons to focus its attention on a pressing and important human issue. I know that we are all grateful for that.

BANKS AND BANKING—ROLE OF CHARTERED BANKS. (B) EXPENDITURES OF TAXPAYERS' MONEY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on another occasion during the Adjournment Debate I stressed my agreement with the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) when she spoke of the importance of confidence to the health and stability of our financial institutions. I pointed out that when Opposition Members ask questions in the House, it is not out of a desire to undermine confidence or create doubts or uncertainty; on the contrary, it is because we have a responsibility as Members of Parliament to assure ourselves and the taxpayers that the decisions made by the Government are sound, reasoned, considered and based on full and complete information.

Since the Government first announced its intention to bail out the Canadian Commercial Bank on March 25 we have tried repeatedly but with limited success, to assure ourselves of the Government's care in examining all the information before committing large sums of taxpayers' money.

We in the Official Opposition supported the Government in the original rescue operation because, although we were not given a full account of what had occurred, we expected to get one when the matter reached committee stage. We also believed that the Government's statements about the Canadian Commercial Bank's viability were based on fact and analysis.

The Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs was in fact given relatively narrow terms of reference when it came to study the CCB issue. We were operating under significant time restraints and for various reasons much of the information requested by the committee was not provided. We were not much better informed after the committee's examinations than we were before. This is why, when the CCB's closing was announced on Labour Day, we came back into the House asking many of the same questions we had been asking all along, questions to which we still do not have full answers.

We know enough from what has been said in the House and from what has been said by players in the financial and banking community to be sure that the Government's many assurances about the effectiveness of the bail-out and the viability of the CCB were not, as we had believed, based on knowledge of the facts. I have not counted the number of times the Minister of State for Finance has said that she acted on the best information available at the time. She has said it often but she has never told us just what that information was.

We know that the decision to bail out the CCB was reached without a full assessment of the bank's loan portfolio. Some of the banks taking part in the bail-out offered to provide expert staff to conduct a complete audit over the weekend the negotiations were taking place. We know that this offer was refused, and that instead the unprecedented decision to use taxpayers' money to bail out a bank was taken with only partial analysis of the bank's loan portfolio and, furthermore, that the CCB itself decided what segment of its loan portfolio was made available to the bail-out group.

The Minister had access to the reports of the external auditors of the CCB but she has not given any assurance that this information was used in the decision-making process. It seems as though there was information available that the Government did not use when it decided to bail out the CCB, and since we are not getting any specific answers about what information was used, we must conclude that last March the Government took an enormous and unwarranted leap of faith.

Not until mid-July did the Government set about finding out just what it had got itself into, and not until mid-August when the results came in did the Government know what little basis there was to believe the bail-out would have saved the CCB. This is an error of truly mind-boggling proportions.

We have had an attempted bail-out which resulted in the failure of two banks, and which will cost the taxpayers of this country up to $1 billion. We have seen the Government bail out a bank, then liquidate that bank and another. Shortly we will be debating the legislation to reimburse uninsured depositors in those institutions, and those who made the decisions that are now costing taxpayers $1 billion are refusing to provide information to this House and refusing to give straight answers to the questions that we as responsible Members of the Opposition have been asking.

The establishment of a commission of inquiry, as announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), takes the matter outside of Parliament. While the commission may be a useful and valuable exercise, it does not answer for the fact that the Government and its Ministers are accountable to Parliament for their decisions and actions and that so far they have not seemed willing to satisfy the House that they have acted properly.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that Hon. Members of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party did not agree at an earlier stage some three or four weeks ago to the proposal of an all-Party committee and it is unfortunate that they have not asked proper and straightforward questions because they would have received proper and straightforward responses.

The Hon. Member and her colleagues have on several occasions suggested that the arrangements for the support of the Canadian Commercial Bank in March were put in place by the three Governments, six chartered banks and the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation without adequate knowledge of the condition of the assets of the Bank, and that they relied solely on information provided by the Bank. It has also been suggested that one or another of the chartered banks offered to provide personnel in sufficient numbers to have carried out a more complete examination and that the Government declined such offers.

It is the case, however, that an independent review of certain of the assets was made by a team drawn from a number of the participating banks, working under the direction of an official of the office of the Inspector General of Banks. During the week of March 18, assets booked in both Edmonton and California were reviewed. In the course of discussions with the participating banks, the question of asset values naturally received a great deal of attention.

Accordingly, on Friday, March 22, arrangements were made to have credit officers of some of the participating banks review a sample of the loans to be included in the support arrangements. That work was carried out on Sunday, March 24, by 10 or 11 bankers at the two locations. As mentioned, those officers devoted their attention to the loans identified by the bank as being unsatisfactory.

Following the completion of the support arrangment, two bankers were appointed as special representatives of the Inspector General of Banks as required by the agreement. Over a period of several weeks those individuals reviewed all of the accounts included in the support arrangement.

As the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) has said more than once, the decision to proceed with the support package was based upon the best information available at the time. Of necessity, in the circumstances, that information was primarily prepared by the bank but it was subjected to a degree of independent review by experienced bankers. The support group of banks offered to participate in a review. The offer was accepted by the other participants, including the CCB itself, and a group of bankers was made available for the prupose. All participants recognized, however, that the final decision and announcement had to be ready for the opening of business on Monday, March 25, 1985.

TRADE—PROPOSED EEC TARIFF ON BLUEBERRIES. (B) EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On March 21, Mr. Speaker, I asked a question of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) concerning a commodity in my province which was being cited by the European Economic Community. They were to impose a sanction, if you will, on the importation of blueberries into the EEC.

I want to say at the outset that the whole issue of trade and trade policy is very important and very germane to any economic policy the Government wishes to see followed. In my province of Nova Scotia we have a number of products which are earmarked for export, both to the rest of Canada and to the international market. We think it is very peculiar, if not strange, that the Government of Canada has been somewhat slack in meeting its responsibility to protect those markets for our producers, whether they be producers of blueberries or any other commodity.

I am not talking about protectionist measures, I am talking about a policy whereby those markets could be improved upon. I do not see from this Government or the Minister of Agriculture any coherent policy to assure those markets which we have enjoyed over the past number of years. Those markets create hundreds of jobs for Nova Scotians in an area where the economic situation is not al that good. I had hoped that the Minister of Agriculture would have shared with us the answers to the questions I had raised.

For example, is there a Cabinet directive? If there is, will it be considered by the relevant committee? Who are the negotiators in Brussels in this regard and what will they do or not do? Unfortunately, he has not. What we have found is a sort of jump here, jump there, jump everywhere approach by this Government. There is no coherent, well thought out policy.

Then, of course, the issue of competence and being able to execute such a policy is certainly in question by all members in view of the disastrous steps which had been taken concerning the collapse of the two banks and the bail-ou of—

Mr. Dick: Blueberries or banks?

Mr. Dingwall: He chides me regarding this industry in Nova Scotia. I want to tell him that this industry is an important one to approximately 800 people. It is important that the Government of Canada be sensitive to the industry and those people involved. I hope the Hon. Member, when he stands in his place to give me a response, will be very forthcoming with the answers I have requested of the Miister of Agriculture on this topic. I hope he understands what I and my Party are attempting to do.

We are not trying to play one region off against the other. We hope the Government will initiate policies which will give us an opportunity in the poorer provinces of this country to raise our families and enjoy a good lifestyle. It does not serve us well in Atlantic Canada, including those workers, for the Hon. Member opposite to make fun, to laugh, and to accept these representations in jest. He should be more serious and diligent on behalf of all those workers in the economy of the Province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): First of all, Mr. Speaker, a note should be made that no one was laughing and that nothing whatsoever was taken in jest. If the Hon. Member would like to try and tailor his remarks to the question he put, he might do an awfully lot better. The question has nothing to do with banks, and in fact this question first arose before there was any collapse of any bank. Considering that the Hon. Member did not know what he was talking about, although he comes from an area in which this product grows, it is rather unfortunate that he was not better prepared.

I am pleased to elaborate on the answer that was provided to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) on March 21 regarding the hypothetical imposition of a tariff on Canadian blueberries entering the European Economic Community.

As the Hon. Member pointed out last March, the ECC had officially notified GATT of its intention to retaliate against quotas that the Canadian Government imposed on imports of beef and veal when we invoked the Meat Import Act on January 1, 1985. The European Economic Community threatened to impose a 25 per cent tariff on imports of Canadian blueberries. The tariff was supposed to go into effect on April 15 and last until the end of the year. Retaliatory actions were also threatened against our exports of beef, veal and pork offals, natural honey, mustard seed and flour, maple syrup, rye whiskey, feeds and unmanufactured, unstemmed tobacco.

The European Economic Community is our leading customer for blueberry exports. In recent years the European market has accounted for nearly 60 per cent of our blueberry exports worth an average of $15.5 million per year. Last year our exports gained strongly, thanks in part to the lower value of the Canadian dollar compared to the U.S. dollar, the absence of tariff barriers, and a strong market development effort by Canadian producers in co-operation with the federal Government.

I should explain that under GATT rules Canada has the right to take action restricting beef and veal imports, but adversely affected trading partners, such as the EEC, also have the right to retaliate if it is not possible to negotiate a mutually agreed upon solution. Mr. Speaker, officials from the Department of External Affairs have, in fact, negotiated an equitable solution to this problem and the blueberries were not affected.

PORNOGRAPHY—REQUEST FOR STRONGER LAWS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to raise the issue of pornography in the House of Commons once again. I am sure that every Member of Parliament agrees that this is one issue which must be kept on the top of the agenda. This House has an obligation to give as much attention as possible to this matter until significant progress can be made in arresting the harm that is being inflicted on our children, our families, and our society.

There are not very many issues which enjoy such a broad base of support as does the opposition to pornography. Everyone recognizes that pornography is a bad influence on those who are directly involved. As well, I think everyone would agree that even those who choose not to involve themselves, including most of society, are in many ways hurt by it. Many innocent young people, and indeed Canadians of all ages, become victims of those depraved individuals who feed on the warped moral values depicted through the pornography industry.

People who buy pornography, and people who become wealthy in promoting it, do so with the justification that they are not hurting anyone. Who are they kidding? It is very clear in speaking to police, doctors, and social agencies, that this industry is claiming more victims with each passing day. People who buy pornography, first and foremost, hurt themselves. It is quite clear that it draws people into a vortex of dependency and addiction leading to increasingly more difficult tastes to satisfy and to a host of related personal problems. More importantly, the person who buys pornography contributes to the health of a vast and growing industry.

This industry does not exist without supporting a great many undesirable industries, including drugs, prostitution, crime, and the exploitation of women and children.

Finally, those who say that pornography does not hurt anyone are ignoring the effect it has on a community where it is permitted in plain sight in the local variety stores, and now in the shops that rent videos for home use. Our children begin to take it for granted when they see adults making use of such material. Do we want the children of our country to consider such trash as the norm? Absolutely not.

• (1820)

The political and social traditions of our country have overwhelmingly supported our community's proper role in defending itself from the creeping social disintegration that is, in a continuous cycle, both a result and a cause of pornography, and a direct attack on the family unit which I believe is the foundation stone of our country.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) has indicated that the Government will present a package of legislation to deal with pornography some time around Christmas. The Government will, to some extent, anchor this legislation on the recommendations of the Fraser Report on Pornography and Prostitution.

The Fraser Report presents a very sophisticated analysis of the problem, but there was a strong suggestion of tolerance toward the pornography that is not of the most offensive quality—that is explicitly violent, or featuring children. In fact, the report recommended that if pornographic material does not reflect these two themes, then it should be freely available if it is marked clearly and only sold to adults over 18. This is totally unacceptable.

Most Canadians do not want pornography in their corner stores, and most do not want to encounter it at all. There is absolutely nothing good or of redeeming value about pornography. So if some people do want it, let us not make it easily accessible.

Because of the increasing flood of pornography on the market today, I believe the time has come for Parliament to deal with its removal in a decisive and forthright manner. Too often in the past, our legislators have been handcuffed by a definition of pornography that is at the same time narrow and vague. Too often material has been defended because it might not be associated with some overt violence, or because it has some transparent claims of artistic merit. Only if the Government provides a broad and sweeping definition of pornography will significant gains occur in reducing this problem.

I believe the stiffest penlaties should be reserved for material exploiting children, or displaying violence. The publishers, wholesalers and retailers of these materials must be held accountable through our courts.

At the same time, let us never for one moment show the slightest tolerance for other forms of pornography. I hope the Government will show the decisive leadership that is necessary to reverse the alarming trends that have been developing. A good example is reflected by the adolescent-oriented material we see daily on television that is obscene in every sense other than the graphic depiction of obscenities. This process can only start with the Canadian people clearly stating, through the Government in Parliament, that pornography in our society is both undesirable and unacceptable. I believe it is our responsibility as legislators to provide the necessary laws to protect our children, not only from the harm inflicted by those individuals who absorb pornography, but more important, from the gradual destruction of their collective sense of moral standards. The future of Canada, above all, depends on the healthy and mature attitudes of our younger generation. I urge the Government to act on this before it is too late.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that my hon. colleague has brought this topic up for a more detailed reply than can be given during Question Period. Of course, I am happy to see that so many Members of the House here tonight who want to be informed further on this subject.

Recent years have seen a dramatic upsurge in the availability of sexually explicit material, a significant diversification of form of that material such as paperback books, comic books, movies, video tapes, so-called marital aids and other paraphernalia and an ever extending system of distribution of the material.

In 1981, the Ministers of Justice and National Health and Welfare created the Committee on Sexual Offences Against Children and Youths, known as the Badgley Committee. The report was submitted on August 22, 1984. It contains recommendations for amendments to the Criminal Code to prohibit the use of a person under the age of 18 years in the making of ponorgraphy and to prohibit the possession and distribution of such material. Further, it recommends that the sale of pornographic materials to persons under 16 should be a criminal offence and that measures should be adopted to improve the investigation and enforcement of these offences. These recommendations are being reviewed by the Department of Justice.

On June 23, 1983, the Minister of Justice announced the creation of a special committee to study pornography and prostitution, under the chairmanship of Mr. Paul Fraser, Q.C. of Vancouver. The committee held a series of public hearings in 20 cities across Canada. The interest generated by the work of the committee was apparent at the public hearings, where there was very active participation of both organized groups and concerned citizens. The Department of Justice conducted a program of empirical research for the committee. This program included: a national population survey on the attitudes and views of Canadians concerning the control of pornography; a comprehensive review of the literature on the impact of pornography; experimental studies on the effects of pornography, and several other related studies of areas not covered by existing research findings.

The report of the Special Committee on Pornography and Prostitution, the Fraser Committee, was tabled in the House of Commons on April 23, 1985.

The proposals of the Fraser Committee with regard to pornography would fundamentally alter the present Criminal Code provisions on obscenity. Mere possession of certain clearly defined pornographic materials, most notably child pornography, would be a criminal offence. The distribution or sale of materials falling within a category of "sexually violent and degrading pornography" would be proscribed unless the material could be shown to have educational or scientific purpose or artistic merit. All other sexually explicit materials would be required to be enclosed in a wrapper and clearly labelled so those who wish could avoid exposure to such materials. Sale of all types of pornography to those under 18 would be prohibited.

The recommendations of the Fraser Committee are now under review by officials in the Department of Justice, and following a period of consultation with provincial Governments and private sector groups, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) will announce the Government's response to those recommendations and those of the Badgley committee.

Until a Federal Court of Appeal decision in March, 1985, Luscher and the Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise, customs officials could interdict at the border materials which they deemed to be "immoral or indecent" pursuant to a provision of the Customs Tariff. The court struck down this legislation as unconstitutional on the basis that it violated Section 2(B) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and freedoms,—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary but his time has expired.

Mr. Dick: Could I have unanimous consent to continue, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but the three minutes provided for the answer have terminated.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

TAKEOVER OF GULF CANADA—TAX RULING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government has granted an extremely unusual, if not unprecedented tax ruling to participants in the Gulf Canada takeover. Up to $1 billion in tax revenue is at stake in this issue. I believe it is critical for Parliament and Canadian taxpayers to know whether there was ministerial involvement in this tax ruling or whether the matter was determined solely by officials of the Departments of National Revenue and Finance. Parliament has a right to know whether the extraordinary tax break was the critical element in the Gulf takeover bid.

This tax ruling raises extraordinary matters of ministerial responsibility, concentration of economic power, and the appearance of fairness. I have repeatedly stated that the most effective means of attacking the federal Government's deficit is by a thoroughgoing examination of corporate tax breaks. This tax ruling is a classic example of my point.

I have no doubt that the businesses involved in this matter acted within their rights, but it is not clear whether Cabinet Ministers acted in the public interest. The tax deal and the huge sums of money involved in the Gulf deal should be examined by Parliament in detail. For a business to seek a favourable tax ruling is perfectly legitimate. It is equally legitimate for Canadian taxpayers to know whether and why a tax break of up to $1 billion was granted.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

OVERHAUL OF DESTROYERS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Good news, Mr. Speaker. Canada's aging St. Laurent-class destroyers are finally coming out of the dry dock. They have been stranded for months while major refits have fallen further and further behind schedule. Now we know that the first destroyer will indeed be ready in time to take up its vital task in defending Canada—to be scrapped or mothballed. That's right. The Government is spending $15 million to overhaul these 30-year-old ships at the same time as it is taking them out of service.

Won't Canadians be proud to know that their navy won't have to be shamefully towed to the junkyard? Instead, Canada's navy can hold its head high as its once proud vessels steam steadily on to the scrap heap. Can't you just see all hands on deck in their spanking new uniforms, saluting their commander as he hands over the keys to the highest bidder? Won't taxpayers be proud to know that the metal that gets melted down into their next Toyota will be taken from the finest fighting ships Canada can muster?

You would think that the Government would be proud of its latest effort to streamline Canada's navy and create jobs at the same time. Think of the benefits to the museums and scrap dealers of Canada. Why does the Government want to cover up this great success story?

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, Canadians had a vigorous debate in recent months on Canada's participation in SDI. I welcomed the Government's decision not to participate. I did so for a variety of reasons, but primarily because I felt strongly that as Canadians we should set our own research agenda. I believe we should concentrate our research initiatives in areas crucial to our economic and social well-being; on things such as transportation, telecommunications and related aerospace systems, on health care, agriculture, forestry, mining, microelectronics, robotics, and our ability to live and work in northern terrains.

It is essential that we compete in the technological world of tomorrow. To do this, we must ensure that we have the scientific and engineering capability to be at the leading edge of future technologies. We must fund the academic and research components of our colleges and universities to ensure the future availability of those required skills, expertise, and new technologies.

Technology is one of our greatest engines of economic growth. Support for research is fundamental to establish a new era in science and technology to meet future challenges of our economic planning. I commend the federal Government for its commitment to exploit this opportunity.

GOVERNMENT ACHIEVEMENTS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, everybody, including the members of this House, knows that the Liberals, sadly bereft of Members and funding, can no longer afford proper research services. They have to rely on their instincts and the headlines in the media. That is the basis on which they are using, and will continue to use, the time of the House: by asking insinuating and insidious questions which mislead Canadians by camouflaging the real issues. The Liberal Government failed miserably on the important issues, specially those related to energy. And the few remaining members have failed in their role as parliamentarians.

During the election campaign, Mr. Speaker, we said that we intended to put the economy back on a sound basis and get this country out of the situation it was put in by the Liberals.

Today, the Globe and Mail published the following headline with commentary on pages B1 and B10: "GDP grows 1 per cent during July". So far, since we came to power, the economy has outperformed the expectations of our forecasters. The output for 1985 will be 4 per cent higher than in 1984, and this will apply to all sectors: housing, manufacturing and durable goods.

Mr. Speaker, these statistics were published yesterday by Statistics Canada. I wish the Liberals would learn to read and comment on the important issues instead of indulging in this eternal nit-picking.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—AIR RAID ON TUNIS CONDEMNED

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, it is my imperative duty to call the attention of Parliament and of the Canadian people to the unbelievable aggression of Israel against Tunisia which is located over 2,500 kilometres away from Israel. Not only is that bombardment an inexcusable aggression, but moreover, it is targeted against the most moderate Arab country whose President, Mr. Habib Bourguiba, has advocated, since 1965 in Jericho, an approach different from that of every other leader in the region with regard to the fact of the existence of Israel.

Besides these tragedies committed against Tunisians, that aggression has jeopardized the peace process and the imminent negotiations between the U.S.A. and a joint delegation of Jordanians and Palestinians.

I do appreciate the condemnation issued by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who stated unequivocally the illegality of that aggression.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am very sad to see that the State of Israel is getting involved in institutionalized terrorism.

Throughout the world, including in Lanarca not long ago, there are people who commit crimes, but this does not mean a Government should kill or mutilate innocent people as the Government of Israel has done in Tunisia.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

TAKEOVER OF GULF CANADA—POSITION OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, what is it about Petro-Canada that causes the Liberals to have such selective memories? Last December we heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) call for an inquiry into tax questions surrounding the PetroCan purchase of Petrofina. Today he calls for another inquiry. He showed no embarrassment that it was a Liberal Government, rather than a Conservative one, which gave $200 million in tax breaks to the Belgian owners of Petrofina enabling them to avoid payment of capital gains tax in Canada.

Now he is hot on the trail—after The Globe and Mail, of course—of the Olympia and York-Gulf-Petro-Canada dealings of last summer. He tells us that the partnership agreement between Gulf and Norcen to own and then resell the Edmonton refinery to Petro-Canada will cost the taxpayers millions of dollars. He selectively forgets that this artificial partnership arrangement, part of the corporate take-over game, was a Liberal tax law.

● (1410)

The Conservative Government gave special tax breaks to the Reichmanns to help them pay for Gulf, and Canadians deserve to find out just how much was given away and how. However, Canadians should also know that it was Liberal give-away tax laws which were used by the companies and the Government, the hypocrisy of the Opposition notwithstanding.

MARINE SAFETY

TRIBUTE TO MARINE RESCUE AUXILLIARY

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend I had the privilege of attending a dedication ceremony of a new marine rescue vessel to be based in Sidney, in my riding, and named after Mr. Jack Simpson, the first westerner to be elected National President of the Power Boat Squadron and a founding member of the Marine Rescue Auxilliary.

Marine safety is a matter of growing concern for Government as even greater numbers of Canadians are taking to the water for their recreation. Others have spoken in the House, and I identify with their remarks, about the need for increased funding of our Canadian Coast Guard. Frequently lost in this debate is the very valuable role played by the Marine Rescue Auxilliary, those men and women who contribute so generously of their own time and their own money so that all of us can enjoy our waters in greater security. I know that you, Mr. Speaker, and other Members of the House would wish to join me in giving recognition and expressing our gratitude to Auxililiary members like the late Jack Simpson for this important voluntary service.

As a footnote, I would ask that those involved in disposal of Crown assets give serious consideration to making available to the Auxilliary, at book cost, marine equipment judged surplus through normal replacement. In this way the valuable work of the Marine Rescue Auxilliary can be enhanced and expanded to provide even greater security to those many of us who enjoy recreation on the water.

DISASTERS

HELP PROVIDED BY CANADIANS

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks, several events have disrupted the lives of people in Mexico and the United States.

The earthquakes in Mexico and the damage caused by Hurricane Gloria, specially in the New England states, have once again given Canadians a chance to show their generosity.

Mr. Speaker, I would like the House to pay tribute to all Canadian men and women dedicated to helping those in need, and this includes Governments, public servants, relief organizations, rescue teams, workers and private citizens. I think it is only natural to congratulate those involved on the good work they have done in these and similar circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay special tribute to the teams of workers who agreed to go to the United States to help restore power supplies in areas that were badly hit by the storm. Hydro Quebec and its employees are doing fantastic work and are worthy representatives of our country. Thanks to their contribution, our relations cannot but improve.

Mr. Speaker, to all those dedicated Canadian men and women, I want to say: Bravo! and thank you on behalf of all Canadians who are proud of what you are doing.

CN LAY-OFFS—IMPACT ON MARITIME PROVINCES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Last Friday, Mr. Speaker, the CN announced 1,328 lay-offs in various yards throughout Canada.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Robichaud: Not only are those job losses considerable, but Eastern Canada yards will be hardest hit by the lay-offs.

Two hundred and twenty-five jobs will disappear in Moncton, New Brunswick, including 73 as early as October 11 and the remainder slated to be gone by December 31. Mr. Speaker, the CN's decision shocks me and makes me very upset.

The fact is that Moncton CN yard workers got together last summer and forcefully demonstrated against the impending CN lay-offs. Through the Hon. Member for Moncton, the Minister of Transport had assured the demonstrating workers that he would speak out against massive lay-offs. There again, Mr. Speaker, the Government chose to betray the workers.

I therefore urge the Government to reverse the decision of the Crown corporation which has been insensitive to the plea of its workers. It has to realize that the loss of those jobs will have dire consequences in the Maritime Provinces.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

ANNEXATION OF VERDUN TO MONTREAL CITY

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun-Saint-Paul): This coming November 3, Mr. Speaker, most of my Verdun-Saint-Paul constituents will vote in a referendum on Montreal's proposed annexation of Verdun.

Federal Members of Parliament have no say in matters such as this one which falls under exclusive municipal jurisdiction. Still, Mr. Speaker, may I urge all my fellow citizens of Verdun to become fully cognizant with all the implications of this important vote, particularly by attending the forthcoming public gatherings. I emphasize that as many Verdun residents as possible should vote in the referendum so that the voice of the people might be heard quite clearly, for the future of the City of Verdun is theirs alone to decide.

The simple fact that the Cities and Towns Act calls for a referendum when enough people are against annexation attests to the great significance of this decision and should be reflected in the interest shown by the people. I intend to follow the debate very closely, convinced as I am that the residents of Verdun will vote in the best interests of their community.

FISHERIES

SALE OF CANNED TUNA—REPORTED TOUR OF PLANT BY MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. This morning, in St. Andrews, New Brunswick, former and current plant employees of Star-Kist stated at a press conference that eight Conservative Members of Parliament from New Brunswick toured the Star-Kist plant on April 22, one week before the former Minister of Fisheries overruled his inspectors and released tainted tuna on the market on April 29.

Does the Prime Minister still expect Canadians to believe that after eight Members of Parliament from his caucus toured the plant, assured the workers they would raise the matter in the highest councils of the Government, they did not raise the matter in caucus or with him directly? Is he asking the country to believe that?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes, indeed, Mr. Speaker. What I have said is exactly what transpired.

The only major item that I can remember, where there was a conflict between a Member of this House and someone else, involved the Leader of the Opposition when Mr. Trudeau accused him of misrepresentation of events in his recollections of events.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: My recollection has been consistent and honest from the beginning, unlike some other Members of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT CORRESPONDENCE BE TABLED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are not on the hustings. We are not in an election. We are in Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think the country expects a straight answer from the Prime Minister of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have a supplementary question for this Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister table in this House correspondence between himself and his office and the eight Members of Parliament concerned from New Brunswick relating to this issue or other relevant matters?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any such correspondence. But I will tell my right hon. friend that not only has the country been getting a straight answer, but I have stood in this House and I have responded fully to questions from my hon. friends. I have challenged the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that if he has anything at variance, let him put his seat on the line and I will meet him.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S CORRESPONDENCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): That kind of bravado and that kind of bluff are not going to fool anybody, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Let's have a full-fledged sword fight.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The only Member from New Brunswick who did not attend the Star-Kist plant was the Hon. Minister of Forestry, who happens to be the regional Minister from New Brunswick.

Would the Prime Minister instruct his Minister of Forestry to table all correspondence relating to the Star-Kist matter?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Put your seat on the line.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I should refer to a document released by the Prime Minister's Office on May 11, 1984, Mr. Speaker. When my hon. friend talks about the accuracy of recollections, Prime Minister Trudeau in reference to this gentleman said:

> The Prime Minister responded that that was surely a misrepresentation of events.

That was Liberal Prime Minister Trudeau speaking about a Liberal leadership candidate. That is what happened in 1984.

DISARMAMENT

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister would be well advised to concentrate on the problems facing this country today instead of talking about problems that existed a long time ago.

Mr. Speaker, my questions are directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

[English]

I would like to ask him a question. A major obstacle to the current Geneva disarmament negotiations is the refusal of President Reagan to place the star wars program on the negotiating table. Yesterday, Canada's disarmament ambassador, Doug Roche, advised a committee of the House that the Government had "consistently" taken the position that the star wars issue should be placed on the negotiating table. Would the Prime Minister confirm that this has been consistently the position of his Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member would be able to be more current with these events if he had more time to spend in the House. He would know that this question has not only been raised but has been answered. He would also know that when the Geneva talks first commenced involving Mr. Gromyko, the then Soviet Foreign Minister, and Mr. Shultz, the question of space was on the agenda. It remains on the agenda.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Yesterday, the ambassador for disarmament stated it was the Government's position that star wars would have to be put on the negotiating table and be part of the negotiations. Is that the Government's position, yes or no?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Canadian Government is that the space issue must be on the negotiating table. It was the Government's position when the Geneva Conference was called and it was the Government's position yesterday, and today, when the ambassador for disarmament discussed that position.

SALE OF CANNED TUNA—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The whole tuna episode is becoming more bizarre with every passing day. Given that the information comes out in dribs and drabs about who was involved and who knew what, does the Prime Minister not now feel that it would be appropriate, in the public interest, to have this whole matter reviewed by a committee of Parliament in order that the public of Canada can know what actually happened?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I stood in this House of Commons, as a Prime Minister must, and I responded for a week fully, completely, and accurately to every question that was put forward including some, I think my hon. friend would agree, that were unworthy of the House in the manner in which they were put.

Mr. Deans: Not asked by me.

Mr. Mulroney: The Prime Minister's responsibility—and it is the responsibility of any Minister of the Crown—is to respond completely and totally to questions put to him. That is exactly what I have done. I can think of nothing that would improve upon that at all.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Surely he recognizes that, notwithstanding what he may believe to be true, there are any number of people who have made contradictory statements. It is important, in the public interest, that the public be able to hear the answers given by those individuals to the questions from Members of Parliament. Does the Prime Minister not recognize that this is not an internal Conservative matter? It is a public matter which ought to be looked at in a public forum, and that public forum is a committee.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asks the same question, but in a different decibel tone, I will admit. It is the same question coming back and forth. The fundamental question is that matters, as raised by Hon. Members on the floor of the House of Commons, were responded to fully by the Prime Minister and his colleagues. I went further and suggested to any Hon. Member of the House that if he or she has any information at all at variance with that, let him or her produce it and accept the consequences. That is the way the parliamentary system is supposed to function, and that is the way we propose to have it function.

● (1425)

OFFICIALS' KNOWLEDGE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): In a different decibel tone, if I may, Mr. Speaker, the facts are very clear. There are those who are now employed within the Ministry of Fisheries and Oceans who have direct information relative to what took place leading up to the decision by the Government to take the tuna off the shelves. Those people have not been able to answer the questions—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a third question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He's calling you to order. You have to sit down when he stands.

An Hon. Member: He can do his job without you.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I look at both sides and say there has been a great deal of back and forth today which would be nice to avoid.

Mr. Deans: Notwithstanding the Prime Minister wants to answer everything himself, would he agree that those individuals who have direct knowledge, who were involved in the process, should be able to answer to the Parliament of Canada and should be given a chance so to do through the parliamentary system?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I never sought to answer everything myself. What I did do, and as a Prime Minister ought to do, I think, was to respond to every question no matter how discourteous or unworthy from some quarters of this House. That is the essence of parliamentary behaviour. All of the information that my friend sought—

An Hon. Member: You are stonewalling, Brian.

Mr. Mulroney: —I have provided fully—

Mr. Deans: No.

Mr. Mulroney: —and completely.

Mr. Deans: No.

Mr. Mulroney: That is what Question Period is all about. That is what this House of Commons is all about, and Canadians know that.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed as well to the Prime Minister. Since the statement last Thursday on the proposed negotiation with the United States, the Government has given no information to Canadians about what kind of industries will be part of that negotiation. At the same time we have had a wide variety of American officials giving us the benefit of their wisdom on what should or should not be negotiated by Canada.

In particular, Mr. Speaker, the United States Ambassador in Saskatoon yesterday said: "Vital issues on national identity and regional development should be involved in the negotiation". He named banking, publishing, broadcasting, and lumber as examples.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Question.

Mr. Axworthy: When will the Government begin to give us a clear idea of what industries will be involved in the negotiations? And when will he begin answering those U.S. officials so that we can set our own negotiating position and not have to rely upon U.S. officials to tell us what we should be talking about?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Ambassador of the United States is, of course, free to indicate what the United States would like to see in any negotiation, if there is to be a negotiation. The Prime Minister of Canada and I, and other Ministers of this Government, have made it clear that in negotiations which might proceed, the cultural identity of Canada is not negotiable by this Government, which has recently asserted the sovereignty of Canada after the former Government declined to do that—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Too much to late.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —for 16 long years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Canada's social programs are not on the table because they are part of the fabric of Canada. Those assurances have been given. The Hon. Member should stop trying to sow fear in the country.

Mr. Axworthy: Apparently, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is incapable of understanding the difference between trying to get the proper information so that Canadians can properly debate this issue, and sowing fear.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs specifically, does he agree, or is the Government rejecting the position of the U.S. Ambassador that we should restrain our lumber exports, that we should put banking, publishing, agriculture and other issues of a cultural nature on the bargaining table. Is the Minister denying at this time that the U.S. Ambassador is wrong? Or is he saying he is right in saying those things should be negotiated?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it may not be asking for much, but I hope this answer is clearer than that question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The American Ambassador is free to state what he wants to state regarding the position of Canada.

Let me make two points, if I may, briefly, Mr. Speaker. I believe that Canadians, as we anticipate these negotiations, are interested in looking at two things. First, we want the interests of Canada to be protected, culturally and socially, and very much our commerical and economic interests. Second, we know that if negotiations proceed we will be entering into negotiation with a very tough group of negotiators in the United States. What I am being invited to do here is to convey in advance, by way of the Liberal Party in the House of Commons, the negotiating position of Canada that we might take to the table. That would be a recipe of failure for Canada. I do not intend to indulge in that Liberal approach to failure.

• (1430)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suppose it clearly is Wednesday.

DISARMAMENT

GENEVA DISCUSSIONS—UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, and indeed only the Prime Minister can answer it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: I would ask Joe if I were you.

Ms. Jewett: However, my question is for the Prime Minister. The important point about which Ambassador Roche spoke yesterday was that he understood that the Prime Minister will be bringing up with President Reagan, when they meet later this month, the matter of the Strategic Defence Initiative being on the table at Geneva. Will the Prime Minister confirm that he will be asking the President to put SDI on the table in Geneva?

Mr. Nystrom: And Joe.

Ms. Jewett: Joe isn't the person we were talking about.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have always respected the status of the Hon. Member as the spokesperson on external affairs for her Party and I hope that, since the matter falls within my jurisdicton, she will accept my reply.

First, although I would have to check the "blues" of the committee, something which may well be unparliamentary, I believe that the Hon. Member has inadvertently characterized the remarks of Ambassador Roche in a way that is not strictly accurate. I would have to check that out. The point is that Canada has welcomed from the outset the inclusion of the question of the discussion of space in the Geneva Accord. It is entirely possible that that matter may be raised when the Prime Minister and other Summit leaders meet with President Reagan prior to the Reagan-Gorbachev meeting. There is no new development. Nothing new has happened.

PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I made very careful notes and I quoted the remarks exactly as I took them. I would not like to ask a question of the Secretary of State as he is not meeting the President. I wish he were, but he is not.

Mr. Nystrom: He's better than Brian anyway.

Ms. Jewett: Therefore, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if, when he meets the President, he will press him to do the very thing that Ambassador Roche understands he has already agreed to do, namely, be sure that star wars is on the agenda in Geneva.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, through the intermediation of the Prime Minister, the Ambassador for Disarmament and many others, Canada has worked consistently to try to bring an end to an arms race that we believe is threatening to all Canadians. We intend to continue to proceed with that posture.

We believe that the meeting that will be occurring between Mr. Gorbachev and Mr. Reagan is a meeting of historic proportions. I think it is helpful that the United States has decided to consult with its allies prior to that meeting. The Prime Minister of Canada will speak in the interest of a peaceful world at that meeting, as he has at others.

Ms. Jewett: I need to ask a further supplementary question.

FISHERIES

SALE OF CANNED TUNA—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the statements made this morning by former employees of Star-Kist in St. Andrews, New Brunswick, in view of the continuing series of contradictions that have been so evident with respect to the entire tuna question, and because we in this House have to accept the Prime Minister's statements, I would ask the Prime Minister why he will not agree with the request made by both opposition Parties that this whole matter be referred to a parliamentary committee for review and that all those involved in the tuna question be given a chance to testify so that we can get to the bottom of the matter. Why will the Prime Minister not agree to that?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Again I would draw to the attention of the Hon. Member the fact that this kind of question has been answered over and over and over again.

Mr. Hopkins: But with no answer.

Mr. Nielsen: As the Hon. Member knows, being an experienced Member, he ought not to do so in such a repetitive fashion because it is offensive to Citation 359 of Beauchesne's.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: In addition, perhaps the Hon. Member is unaware that the Standing Committee is meeting. If he is so all-fired anxious to ask all these questions and have the answers repeated, why does he not do so before the Standing Committee that has been authorized to deal with all of the Estimates of the Department?

STANDING COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I would say with respect to the well experienced Deputy Prime Minister that the public is not aware of Citation 359 but is aware of contradictions in statements from that side of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Tobin: Is the Deputy Prime Minister now telling us that if the Standing Committee on Fisheries is prepared to examine this matter, he will make available to that committee Mr. Anderson, other employees of the Prime Minister's Office and employees of the Department of Fisheries, along with their documents, to explain the obvious contradictions with which the public is fed up, regarding this entire matter?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the only really glaring conflict between two national figures of which I am aware has already been brought to the attention of the House by the Prime Minister, and that was when the then Prime Minister Trudeau responded that the now Leader of the Opposition was surely misrepresenting events.

Ms. Copps: Cover up.

Mr. Nielsen: If the Hon. Member is so interested in the fisheries problem—

Some Hon. Members: Cover up.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Copps: Mulroneygate.

Mr. Speaker: With respect, I am sure it is difficult for others if the noise is such that I cannot hear the answers.

Mr. Nielsen: I never thought that I would have any difficulty being heard, Mr. Speaker.

If the Hon. Member is genuinely interested in the fishery, he will keep track of events as they are occurring with respect to the organization of the Standing Committee. If he were doing that, he would know that arrangements are being made for a briefing of the Standing Committee members by the Department. I would urge him to stay in town, attend those meetings and bring himself up to date.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CULTURAL INDUSTRIES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The U.S. trade representative responsible for Canada, William Merkin, has now followed the path of Ambassador Niles by specifically mentioning Canadian control in book publishing as a policy the U.S. wishes to change through free trade negotiations. Will the Government take the opportunity to make it crystal clear to the Americans that our cultural industries including book publishing, movies, radio and t.v. are excluded from the forthcoming negotiations, or is the Government going to permit U.S. officials to—

Mr. Speaker: That question is very long.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make it crystal clear again that Canada's cultural identity and integrity are not negotiable.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): The Minister has used the same phrase which causes the same confusion in the cultural industries of the country. Why is it that the Government is being so weak willed on this issue when last week the provinces unanimously indicated that the cultural industries, not cultural integrity, should be left out of these negotiations? Why is it so weak willed—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may recall, and certainly other members of his Party would, that it was in 1979 under a Progressive Conservative national Government that, for the first time, the public policy of Canada began to address directly the importance of cultural industries as industries contributing to the growth of this country.

• (1440)

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That was the commitment of this Party at that time. That is our commitment now and will be our commitment in the future. What we are looking to is a Canada that is not only culturally stronger but a Canada that is economically stronger. We believe that involves taking initiatives—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—GOVERNMENT DEPOSITS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. After the March 25 bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank, the Government assured us on many occasions that the bank was viable. However, by the end of July the Government had reduced its own deposits at that bank from $30 million to $11.6 million. Why?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the story as published this morning was accurate. It indicated that Government deposits are spread throughout the banking system according to a formula. It indicated that those deposits were at a level of 0.563 within the banking system in the spring and that they remained at that level until August as Government balances went down.

GOVERNMENT PRACTICE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Government has powers to change formulae. The Government encouraged other depositors to keep their money in the bank to prop it up. Why did the Government maintain normal practice in an abnormal situation?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it is not the job of the Receiver General to maintain liquidity within the banking system. It is the job of the Bank of Canada, which is exactly what it did.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday U.S. Ambassador Niles encouraged Canadian lumber producers to join in an unlawful combine voluntarily to restrain their exports to the U.S. Meanwhile leaders of the U.S. Congress are insisting that limitation of Canadian lumber exports must precede negotiation of any free trade agreement with Canada. Will the Minister remind the U.S. Ambassador and his Government that calls for illegal restraints on exports are incompatitible with an open and fair trading relationship between our two countries?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check to see whether or not the Hon. Member's characterization of the illegality of the proposal is correct. If it is, then of course I will convey it.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday people in the industry in Thunder Bay certainly thought such suggestions were illegal.

SUGGESTED TRADE PROMOTION IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, in responding to a question from the Hon. Member for Skeena a couple of weeks ago the Minister recognized the need to take the battle for Canadian lumber exports outside Congress—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a supplementary question and not a new preamble, please?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, what can the Minister tell us with respect to any actions he has taken since two weeks ago with respect to taking the battle for Canadian lumber exports to the United States outside Congress and across the country to builders, realtors, and consumers of Canadian lumber, to encourage them to put pressure on members of Congress to change their minds with respect to Canadian lumber exports?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated the other day we are, in fact, embarking on that type of program with respect to lumber and to other questions which involve a threat to the livelihood of Canadians. I cannot provide all the details; I do not have them at hand. However, I will get them to the Hon. Member.

I would like to make two points quickly. First, it would be helpful if Members of this House in all Parties would join us in this effort. Second, the Hon. Member identifies precisely the difficulty we now face. There is not only the very major and important challenge to the lumber industry, there are 300 to 400 protectionist Bills in the U.S. Congress which today threaten existing Canadian jobs. This Government wants to protect those existing Canadian jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BANKS AND BANKING

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last Friday morning at his press conference the Prime Minister repeated his commitment to have the Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank matters studied by a parliamentary committee. Yet the following Monday morning he appointed the Estey Commission. Will the Prime Minister tell the House why he did not carry out his commitment? Was it because last Friday afternoon both opposition House Leaders confirmed publicly to the press that they wanted to have the Northland and Canadian Commercial Banks matter studied by a parliamentary committee? Is that why he conveniently forgot his oft-stated commitment that Parliament should look into this serious matter?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, during the course of the week, I believe it was Wednesday, some of our hon. friends from the New Democratic Party suggested that, perhaps, the best and most objective manner by which this important matter could be handled would be through a judicial inquiry. That was one of my suggestions made and considered by the Government. The decision to appoint the Commission of Inquiry headed by Mr. Justice Estey, a jurist of uncommon distinction, was in the interests of all of the facts being brought out in a fair and appropriate manner.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago the Prime Minister, I believe at Baie Comeau, told the press that he not only wanted to see this matter looked into by a parliamentary committee but he even wanted to see it on television. What has happened to his oft-stated belief that Parliament should be enhanced in reputation and activity? Why has he gone back not only on his statement about Parliament but given a slap in the face to the Conservative Chairman of the Finance Committee and the Conservative majority on that committee? Why does he not have any confidence in them, much less—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is very long for a supplementary question.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is pretty obvious, if not to the Hon. Member, then at least to the entire country, that the irresponsible and dilatory conduct of the Opposition has prevented an objective examination of this matter.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: There can be no doubt about the vexatious, frivolous, and irresponsible behaviour of the Opposition with regard to this matter, as a result of which the Government appointed Mr. Justice Estey with the broadest possible terms of reference so that the full truth can come out, including the conduct of everyone involved and the policies that went into the matter. Mr. Justice Estey will put the spotlight on those people who are responsible.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PROJECTED IMPACT ON AGRICULTURE IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the matter of enhanced trade. In the Province of Saskatchewan there has been a great deal of fear fostered and even promoted, I suspect, by the New Democratic Party with respect to the impact of free trade on agriculture. Will the Minister explain to the House the projected impact of a new trade agreement on agriculture in the Province of Saskatchewan?

Mr. Deans: Hypothetical! Give him a hypothetical answer.

Mr. Crosbie: Yours is a hypothetical Party.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was faced with a similar question in the House of Commons when I made it clear that, as a Member of Parliament from western Canada, I understand the harm which has been done in the past to the agricultural industry by certain trading arrangements which were entered into. The determination of this Government is to ensure that if there are new trading negotiations with the United States we will act in ways which will ensure not only the present viability, but a much greater viability, of Canadian agriculture as a result of those talks.

Agriculture, farmers and ranchers, like the rest of Canadians, have an interest in a strong economy. That economy is threatened by protectionism now. We intend to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PRAIRIE DROUGHT—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture my question is for the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. My question is with respect to the drought disaster relief for the Prairies. Will the Minister tell us if the Government is planning to pay the $50 per acre in relief which has been suggested, or does the Government have a more flexible formula? What will be the federal-provincial contributions to those payments? When can farmers expect those payments?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, phase two of the recommendations of the committee chaired by the Hon. Member for Assiniboia was to have been reported at the end of last month. However, as the Hon. Member opposite will know, conditions have changed very much on the Prairies. There is now a severe problem with respect to harvesting the crop. There has been a tremendous amount of rain. We are waiting to see what will happen over the next couple of weeks to see what type of assistance will be necessary, since conditions have changed so drastically over the past six weeks as a result of the weather.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION LOANS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, a second phase, if you wish, or even a third phase, of that disaster relief was with respect to a moratorium being placed on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures. Could the Minister tell us if the Government is allowing the interest on FCC loans to pile up, or is it also being "moratoriumed"?

● (1450)

Some Hon. Members: "Moratoriumed"?

An Hon. Member: That must be a western expression.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Member, in one of his previous incarnations, was a teacher. I do not know whether he was an English teacher and wants to coin some new words.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: John Diefenbaker would be proud.

Mr. Mayer: The Minister of Agriculture has put a moratarium on farm foreclosures by the FCC. I do not think anything has been ruled out pending the report of the FCC as to what should be done regarding farm financing. As I said, the Minister is looking for suggestions from right across the country and we are still waiting to hear from many people involved.

Regarding the previous question, I am also informed that the committee chaired by the Hon. Member for Assiniboia will be meeting in Regina tomorrow to discuss some of the very things—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will have Statements by Ministers later.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

TAKEOVER OF GULF CANADA—TAX RULING

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister tell us whether he gave his blessing in advance to the tax ruling which permitted the acquisition of the assets of Gulf Canada?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, if I might attempt to respond to the Hon. Member, I thought I answered that question last Thursday. I am sure he realizes that this type of question involves the very fundamental principle of confidentiality which is so much a part of our income tax jurisprudence and these matters cannot be discussed.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER REPLY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I find that quite astonishing. I simply asked—

Some Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: I simply asked whether the Prime Minister of this country gave his blessing to a tax ruling which may have cost Canadian taxpayers $1 billion, in advance of that ruling being issued. I do not see how the Minister of National Revenue can reply to such a question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Johnston: Can I not hear from the Prime Minister?

Mr. Speaker: Oh, that is the supplementary? All right.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the inference in that question is totally unworthy of the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Oh!

Some Hon. Members: Yes or no.

AIRPORTS

ACCESS TO OTTAWA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Transport. Could the Minister give her officials instructions that at Uplands Airport in Ottawa, passengers arriving and leaving by car be allowed to use the lane next to the airport? Right now, the handicapped, the elderly and young children have to cross two lanes. Could she also ask her officials to use the airport at Gatineau while work on the expansion project is going on, and perhaps they could make a habit of this and make the airport—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is quite long enough.

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my hon. colleague for her question, in which she has pinpointed a situation we all encounter when we have to get on the plane in Ottawa. Current construction has created a problem for passengers when they get out of their cars to enter the airport. I believe that in the circumstances, we must make every effort to correct a situation that makes things particularly difficult for the elderly and the handicapped.

COALITION OF WOMEN FOR FAMILY ALLOWANCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister.

Yesterday in Montreal I met with the Coalition des femmes pour les allocations familiales. Is the Prime Minister aware of this coalition of more than one million Quebec women? Does he know that the coalition is a strong advocate of complete indexation of family allowances and full respect for the principle of universality?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the coalition and I happen to know as well that a good many of those Quebec women have said how favourably impressed they were with our tax credit program under which the more destitute stand to gain increased benefits.

An Hon. Member: No, it is not true!

An Hon. Member: Yes, it is true!

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the women at this coalition meeting in Montreal yesterday quoted to me the words of the Prime Minister: "Yes, I can give you the assurance that no social program at all affecting anyone in need shall be touched—"

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a supplementary question?

Ms. McDonald: Yes, I do: "—by a Progressive Conservative Government." Will the Prime Minister, who surely remembers these words from the women's debate in the summer of 1984, concede now that at that time he was lying to the people of Canada about the family allowances?

ISRAEL—BOMBING OF TUNIS—EFFECT ON MIDDLE EAST PEACE INITIATIVES

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns a serious matter, the bombing of Tunis by Israel. Could the Minister indicate to the House whether this situation is going to compromise the peace initiatives in the Middle East?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canada has been, through the years, a strong and good friend of the State of Israel and we always will be.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It is precisely because of the strength of that friendship that we feel compelled to deplore the bombing in Tunis. I think it goes without saying that this event underlines how important it is for all of us to contribute in any way we can to the peaceful resolution of disputes in that region.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ORGANIZATIONAL SOCIETY OF SPOUSES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. With the presence today in the gallery of the President of the Organizational Society of Spouses—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Ms. Copps: —I would like to ask the Minister why he has denied military spouses, who have been trying to organize for almost a year to fight for their concerns about traffic safety, rental costs and dental plans, the right to organize, suggesting that instead they would be violating the Queen's Regulations and Orders?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is a long and honoured tradition in Canada that political activity and the military do not mix, and they ought not to. As to the fundamental concerns about traffic safety and what have you that this group is interested in, there is no prohibition against approaching military spouses in this regard. Indeed, when the group approached CFB Calgary, the commander said to go ahead and talk to the spouses on the base. The spouses at CFB Calgary were not interested in this political action group, so it is wrong to suggest they have been denied that kind of access.

Ms. Copps: I asked my question of the Minister because I wanted the facts. I did not ask his sidekick.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ACCESS TO FAMILY PLANNING INFORMATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to ask the Minister why military spouses have not only been denied the right to organize on these fundamental issues, they have been denied the right to access family planning information on the base and they have further been denied the right on certain bases even to organize social functions like Tupperware parties. I would like to ask the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: That was a question, I thought.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. The Hon. Member is entitled to put a question and have it answered in the absence of noise.

Ms. Copps: Can I finish my question?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that I have nothing against Tupperware parties. Absolutely nothing. I also think the Hon. Member would be showing more respect for the House if she had her facts right—

Ms. Copps: I have my facts right.

Mr. Andre: —and put the questions properly when she does.

Ms. Copps: The organization is here in the gallery today; they have the facts.

Some Hon. Members: Shhh!

ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He is aware that present legislation which allows Established Programs Financing for equalization, medicare, and post-secondary education continues to 1987. Would the Prime Minister confirm that when the Minister of Finance met with the provincial Finance Ministers last Thursday he announced that the federal Government plans to end that program one year early?

• (1500)

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, may I ask for the question to be repeated?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I presume this is not my supplementary. My question is directed to the Prime Minister but I am not sure which Minister should answer. Did the Minister of Finance indicate to the provincial Ministers of Finance last week that it is the intention of the federal Government to cut back next year on the funding to the provinces for medicare and post-secondary education?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that there was a range of issues discussed including established programs funding, which would be normal at a meeting of Finance Ministers.

Mr. Speaker: A very short supplementary, please.

FINANCE MINISTERS' DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Since the Minister does not appear to know, who in his office should know whether or not the federal Minister of Finance made that threat to the provinces?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, in the course of conversations and statements in this House the Minister of Finance has indicated that there will not be cut-backs in the kind of spending programs that have been raised here today. We are working very hard to reduce the deficit, which we must do, but there will not be the kind of cut-backs that the Member is talking about.

CHANGES TO FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of people from Delta, Richmond, and Vancouver, British Columbia, in which they indicate their opposition to the Government's plan to remove the full indexation provisions of the family allowance and make changes to the child tax credit. They ask that the Government, led by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) restore the full indexation of the family allowance and child tax credit.

I rise also, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people of my riding of Sudbury who indicate that they as well are in opposition to the plans of the federal Government to deindex the family allowance and the child tax credit.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from Overbrook residents in my constituency of Ottawa-Vanier urging the Government to restore the full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

I present to the House another petition signed by constituents of the riding of Gatineau in Quebec who also ask the Government to restore the full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

Mr. Speaker, yet another petition signed by many residents of the riding of Ottawa-Vanier who plead with the Government to reconsider its position and restore the full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

REINSTATEMENT OF DEATH PENALTY FOR CERTAIN CRIMES

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun-Saint-Paul): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting to the House two petitions from my constituents in Verdun-Saint-Paul, with more than 8,000 signatures.

Mr. Speaker, these petitioners, most of whom have young children, are appalled at the increasing number of crimes of a sexual nature committed against defenceless children. They are asking Parliament to impose capital punishment on persons found guilty of the crime of infanticide, aggravated by sexual assault.

CHANGES TO FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of about 100 constituents from the federal riding of Algoma which calls upon the Government to reinstate full indexation of the family allowance.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of low-income earning women from Ottawa who ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to restore full indexation of the family allowance and the child tax credit.

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the Moose Jaw branch of the Saskatchewan Genealogical Society requesting the release of certain information from the 1891 census.

CHANGES TO FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of individuals from across the country. Those petitioners state that the deindexation of the universal family allowance is an unfair attack on women and families. They further state that this attack will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that other tax increases in the May Budget will place an unfair burden on low and middle income earners. They petition the Government to overturn that decision.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present. One is signed by people from my own riding of Broadview-Greenwood as well as from Spadina, East York, and a number of other Toronto constituencies. It is with regard to the family allowance. The petitioners believe that children are the responsibility of everyone and that parents should receive Government assistance of a value at least as high or higher than present family allowance levels. They, therefore, pray that Parliament will act to protect the cost of living increase in the family allowance.

The second petition I have is signed by a large number of people from the Ottawa area, most of whom are parents with low incomes. The petitioners ask the House to restore full indexation to the family allowance and child tax credit.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition on behalf of my constituents and more specifically, those from the village of Saint-Louis-de-Kent.

These petitioners humbly pray the Government to refrain from proceeding with partial de-indexation of family allowances.

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by petitioners from the riding of Ottawa Centre who beg the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and this Parliament not to deindex the family allowance, but to maintain it, particularly because of its importance to families on low incomes and to women who get the family allowance cheques which will be depleted by the moves of the Government.

CANAGREX DISSOLUTION ACT

The House resumed from Friday, September 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Layton (for the Minister of Agriculture) that Bill C-42, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate this afternoon on the dissolution of Canagrex. When discussing the issue of Canagrex we should remind ourselves of the commitment that the Government made to the farmers of our country last year. When it came to making promises to the agricultural sector, the Tories did not spare any. They promised the farmers of this country just about everything. The Conservatives made no less than 20 different promises to the farmers of Canada. These are listed in the convenient booklet which I have entitled Three Hundred and Thirty-eight Tory Promises, which I think I have spoken to you about on a few previous occasions, Mr. Speaker. However, at no time did the Conservatives speak of the abolition of Canagrex. As a matter of fact, they promised to improve the farming sector. The Conservatives promised to establish boards. They promised greater assistance to the agricultural college. They promised to refinance farms and, as the Hon. Member opposite will know, they promised a farm review board and amendments to the Grain Stabilization Act. In other words, the Conservatives promised just about everything to the farmers of this country.

However, the first thing that farmers were subjected to after the election was a massive set of cut-backs. On November 8—a day which is normally known as "Black Thursday"—the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) launched his first hatchet job on the taxpayers of Canada with his massive cut-backs in agriculture and other sectors. One of those cut-backs announced in the statement of last November 8 was specifically the cut involving the Crown corporation of Canagrex.

During the deliberations of the Agriculture Committee last winter, members of the committee had an opportunity to interview the Chairman and members of the Board of Directors of Canagrex Corporation. We asked members of the board if they believed that this corporation would be useful, recognizing that it had been cut off by the Government in its embryonic stage. Canagrex had never been given a chance to get off the ground and seriously attempt to sell Canadian products abroad. Just as it was beginning, it was cut by a radical, right-wing Conservative Party which believes that the Government should not be involved in ventures like Canagrex. The Government believes that its Tory right-wing philosophy is appropriate, that is that farmers and others who are best able to fend for themselves will do all right while others will disappear. The farmers of this country do not agree. They have said repeatedly through the various farm organizations, such as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Farmers' Union, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and others, that the Canagrex Corporation was never given a fair chance by the Tories.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Government is not concerned about those who are unable to manage at times without such assistance, it essentially broke its promise to the people of Canada. Not only did the Government break the commitments made by the Conservative Party, it broke those commitments made by the preceding Government when the Canagrex Corporation was formed. Many employees who came from the private sector and other areas of Government had joined that organization. In my opinion, that organization had a high level of expertise, with high calibre people who were well able to lead that Crown corporation and make it work to ensure that Canada has a good and strong international marketing arm in the area of agriculture.

During the last year we have witnessed deterioration of the agricultural sector. We have seen those involved in pork and beef production having to contend with greater international pressures. People in the beef industry are competing against imports from the European Community that are robbing Canadian farmers of their market. Pork producers in Canada were not only subjected to very low prices domestically, they have also had to deal with countervails from the United States of America against Canadian pork that was exported to that country. That has created a very difficult situation for Canadian farmers in the last year.

If ever Canadians farmers needed all the help they could get, including appropriate marketing tools, it is precisely now. At a time when prices are very low, we could use an expanded external market for our products. At a time when our farmers are facing these difficulties, a better tool for marketing our products could potentially bring higher returns.

Let us examine what other countries are doing. When one watches television advertisements for such things as New Zealand spring lamb and other products coming from other countries, it becomes evident that those countries obviously have means by which they encourage the export and marketing of products from those countries. They have done it so well that they have now acquired world-wide reputations for the marketing of their products. Why can we not have that kind of vision when we have such vast agricultural potential with the commodities we produce and have produced so well in the past, even if it detracts from the right-wing principles of the Tories to refuse to accept Government involvement in marketing and other areas?

It is difficult to understand why the small amount that will allegedly be saved by closing Canagrex will not be used elsewhere in the agricultural industry.

I see the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) in the House. He is responsible for dissolving Canagrex and cutting the subsidies in other areas of agriculture. I understand that he represents a riding with a rural component and I am sure that the people of his riding are concerned about these massive cut-backs in an area of our economy that needs all the help it can get right now.

If the Government believes in the benefits of cutting back on agricultural subsidies and dissolving Canagrex, one must ask why the Conservative Party did not campaign on that theme. Why did the Conservatives not tell the farmers of my riding that if they voted Conservative there will be cut-backs to their subsidies? That certainly was not advocated in my riding by my Conservative opponent. Being the objective person you are, Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are faced with partisan rhetoric in your riding as well. Conservatives from across the country were telling farmers that the Liberals had not done enough for them and that only the Conservatives would rescue the farming industry.

I see the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) here. I know he has a lot of farmers in his riding. I am sure if the President of the Treasury Board and other senior people in the Conservative caucus allowed him to speak he would say—I am sure he would because he is an honourable Member—that the farmers have been betrayed by the Tory Government. He is a Member who sits on the agricultural committee as I do. He would know that the actions of the Government have been most improper and have betrayed farmers.

There have been several other areas in which Conservatives have betrayed Canadians, such as for instance, in the area of farm finance, the agri-bond program which my Conservative opponent had put in front of my face during the whole of the last election campaign. Let me remind Hon. Members about the agri-bond program. Revisions to Section 31 of the Income Tax Act and the capital gains issue were three main issues in the election campaign of last summer affecting farmers.

The Conservatives, after the cut-backs of last November 8 in which they cut the Canagrex Corporation, announced at the same time that they would be releasing a Government paper outlining the reforms necessary to deal with the three issues I described a moment ago. When the so-called White Paper of the Minister of Finance appeared, it was nothing but a scathing attack on the farmers. It sort of said that farmers were well off and other such nonsense. You and I know, Mr. Speaker, that that is not the case and that the Government was not telling the truth, as has been the case of late.

The Standing Committee on Finance met and deliberated over this White Paper and issued a report. In that report, members of committee said there was a major problem in the area of farm finance. Not once did the committee recommend cuts; it recommended help. We advocated a system of agri-bonds, revisions to the Income Tax Act, as well as the complete removal of capital gains for farms that were to be used only for farmland in the future. What happened, Mr. Speaker? We heard of the removal of capital gains for everybody, including those who wanted to sell yachts, castles in Spain, horses in Kentucky and other things. This will only partly assist farmers but it will benefit the rich investing in all kinds of other things that I have described.

In terms of meaningful assistance to keep farmers in the farming business, there was not word in the Budget of the Minister of Finance. The only thing the Minister of Finance has stated, along with his friend "Erik the Dreaded"—the Minister in charge of cut-backs—the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), a further set of cuts in the agricultural sector to condense and streamline, which is a euphemism for cut, other Government programs.

Farmers in my constituency after the Budget met through their local federation of agriculture and issued a resolution condemning the Budget. I presented that resolution in the House. I am sure you recall it vividly, Mr. Speaker, that resignation called upon the Minister of Finance to come to his senses and help the farmers the way the Conservatives promised last summer. It called upon the Conservatives not to keep cutting various programs, like Canagrex and other meaningful programs established by the previous Liberal Government. In so doing, we all hoped that the Minister of Finance, when he changed his mind on that other disaster in which he got himself involved—the cuts to senior citizen's pensions—would have the good sense to say, "I just did not make one mistake, I made more than one", and would take the golden opportunity to backpeddle and announce that he was going to inject a fair amount of funds into the agricultural sector. We hoped he would see the light and restore Canagrex, allowing it to function, and at least giving it a chance to market Canadian products internationally.

Farmers are feeling more and more the very difficult financial situation in which they find themselves. More and more they feel betrayed by a Government that promised during an election campaign that it would do major things to help out their industry. More and more farmers are going under. Pork producers in the constituency that I represent issued a resolution the other day that I want to read into the record. This motion was sent to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). It reads:

> The Prescott County Pork Producers' Association requests that a national referendum be held in order to allow individual pork producers to freely express their opinion on the subject of supply management in their industry, all this in conformity with pledges made by the federal Government.
> Further we wish to inform the authorities that they reject all systems that would not take into account regional disparities regarding the costs of production, and we reaffirm our solidarity with the arguments raised by the Fédération des Producteurs de Porcs du Québec and by the Pork Producers Association of Ontario, such as Bruce County and others.

Clearly pork producers on supply management have asked for help. They want protection to ensure they have good prices. They do not want to be rich. They only want to have a decent living. Canagrex could have assisted in the international marketing of their products and, hopefully, provided to them that decent standard of living, which is all they were asking for, but again they have been betrayed by this Government.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, although the Hon. Member talked very clearly about the farmers, I do not believe he indicated how this lack of an agency would have an impact on his riding in particular, either in terms of what kinds of products are produced—and I am not that familiar with his riding—or in terms of consumers in his area and of not being able to have a full market abroad to sell agricultural products that would ensure a reasonable rate for products in Canada.

Mr. Boudria: Let me thank the Hon. Member for his question, Mr. Speaker. Much of the agricultural industry in Glengarry-Prescott-Russell consists of dairy, pork, beef, potatoes, some livestock feed, cereals and corn. By and large, that industry in my constituency is suffering quite a bit. Perhaps dairy producers are not suffering as much as others. Only a few years ago there was the view that a dairy producer did well. Now it is said that a dairy producer is not quite as badly off. It is a far different story from what it used to be. Nevertheless, others are worse off than dairy producers.

In fact, pork producers are the worst off. Recently we saw how being dependent on only one international market can affect that industry. I draw the attention of the House to the threat of and the subsequent countervail by the United States of America against pork products which we sell abroad. That countervail had the effect of reducing the price of Canadian pork. It also had a depressing effect upon the market. Prices went down somewhere in the area of twice the countervail rate. That countervail rate varied between 3.5 cents and a little over 5 cents per pound, but the depressing effect of the countervail on the market was almost twice that amount. It understandably created a form of panic in the industry. People were wondering what would happen, whether there would be subsequent increases in the countervail charge and so on.

I recognize that the area which I represent is a part of Ontario where the cost of pork production is greater than in other areas. The southwestern part of the province produces pork for perhaps 4 cents to 5 cents per pound cheaper. Of course there are differences, depending upon the specific way in which individuals run their farming operations. Eastern Ontario already had a smaller profit margin because of higher freight costs, food costs and so on. Therefore that countervail duty resulted in an even further loss. In other words, the disaster was accelerated.

In direct response to the Hon. Member's question let me say that if we had a good, strong network to market agricultural products world-wide, we would not be so dependent upon one market and we would be able to sell more. Those are not my comments; those are the comments of representatives of various agricultural federations who appeared before the Standing Committee on Agriculture. Of all the groups which appeared, none subscribed to the view that Canagrex should be abolished.

If the Conservatives purport to speak for Canadian farmers, how can they reconcile closing down Canagrex when there is not one agricultural group, of which I know, that agrees with their view? One can only conclude that it is the philosophical view of the Conservatives to get out of this business or not to be involved. It is unusual that they have a different view when it comes to bailing out some of their rich friends such as bankers and other groups in society like people purchasing oil companies, as we saw last week. Of course that will involve an expenditure far greater than the cost of the retention of Canagrex. Now we know the priorities of the Government.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but rise to make a few comments on the speech of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) and his idea that he knew what I would say regarding the termination of Canagrex. Apparently he knew how I felt about my Party. He indicated that I would condemn my Party for taking the actions it has taken. I tell the Hon. Member that I support the termination of Canagrex. In fact, the producers and farmers of my area do as well. They did not like seeing another glorified, bureaucratic, very expensive nightmare organization which had no idea as to what it would sell, where it would sell, when it would sell or any such thing. The Hon. Member seems to think that it was a miracle for farmers. From where did he get that dreamy, "schemey" idea? It was never indicated in the formation of Canagrex what it was able to accomplish, although a lot of money was assigned to the things it might be able to do. The Hon. Member used broad statements. He said that it would probably make farmers rich and that it would be their salvation. Can you believe that, Mr. Speaker? Also he said that we should have given it a chance.

The past administration cost Canadians billions of dollars. We were close to $180 billion in debt as a result of giving such programs a chance and we had the highest unemployment rate ever. That is the Liberal idea of trying another program. Instead of only $180 billion, I suppose we would have hit the $250 billion mark by now, had they still been in power. That is the reason for the attitude of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell not having any merit in form. It is the typical attitude. He decided what I thought about the particular Bill. He must be a soothsayer. Perhaps he would have predicted the Ides of March, had he had the chance. I just wanted to clarify his statements about what I thought.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-77

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among House Leaders with regard to the order of business for today. We have agreed—and I think Your Honour will find that disposition in the House—to interrupt this interesting debate on Bill C-42 and move to another item until its conclusion, at which time we would refer it back to the debate in question. I am referring to Bill C-77, an Act to amend the Criminal Code in relation to pari-mutuel betting.

In connection with that change of business, there has been further discussion with respect to the disposition of the Bill. I think Your Honour will find unanimous consent to receive the following motion and to accept it without debate. The motion reads as follows:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, when the Order of the Day for the second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-77, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (pari-mutuel betting), is called and is disposed of this day, it shall stand referred to a Committee of the Whole; and

Provided that no later than the end of the time provided for the consideration of Government Business this day, the Speaker shall interrupt, if necessary, any proceedings then before the House and shall put forthwith all questions necessary to dispose of the then remaining stages of the said Bill without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion of the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn). Is there unanimous consent to accept it?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PARI-MUTUEL BETTING

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-77, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (pari-mutuel betting), be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, certainly it is a pleasure to speak on behalf of the Government on Bill C-77. I think a couple of things need to be said. Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, with a name like I have, I think it is entirely appropriate that I should speak to this Bill. Aside from that, though, I have had a fair amount to do with horses and at least a little to do with racing.

• (1540)

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I believe one of the things of which Canadians are not generally aware is the size and importance of the racing industry. It is an extremely large industry which generates in the neighbourhood of $1.5 billion a year. It employs something like 40,000 permanent employees and, according to the figures I have, approximately 13 million people attended at race-tracks last year which is more than the attendance at professional hockey, football and baseball games put together. I am sure that a lot of people are unaware of the size and significance of this industry.

It is also very much of a renewable resource. What we are attempting to do today is to pass some amendments to the Act which is presently in place which will provide for a better operation for everyone concerned.

The changes are designed to stimulate the economic health of all segments of the racing industry in Canada, and to ensure fair racing for the betting public. To enhance the marketing power of the sector, we would permit Canadians to place legal bets in Canada on foreign races such as the popular and prestigious Kentucky Derby, the Belmont Stakes, the Preakness and others and, when feasible, important races in Europe and even in Japan. I want to assure Hon. Members that because we will permit betting on foreign races, we will not in any way relax Canada's stringent drug control standards. The number and quality of foreign races offered to Canadian bettors will be regulated to ensure that betting on races abroad does not displace live racing in Canada.

All money bet on foreign races will stay in Canada. It will increase revenues for both the tracks, the horsemen and, through them, all sectors of the industry. Racing associations will be able to set and adjust the percentage of the betting dollar they deduct up to the level established in regulations. Most associations split these revenues with the horsemen as prize money on a fifty-fifty basis.

To provide more comfort and convenience for the public, racing associations will be permitted to use other buildings on their property adjacent to the track for the purposes of pari-mutuel betting. In addition, they will be permitted to broadcast their own races and associated betting data live on television. The change will remove the uncertainty as to the legality of this common practice.

I want to assure those who may feel that the Government is in any way encouraging gambling, that by legalizing betting on foreign races, we are ensuring that the revenues which at present have the potential to leave Canada, will stay in Canada to help support the industry.

The proposed changes will also discourage illegal bookmaking. Such betting will contribute to provincial and federal tax revenues through the taxes paid by racing associations. The federal levy, not to exceed 1 per cent on all bets, remains constant. Agriculture Canada's racetrack division conducts all drug testing on horses, videotapes of all pari-mutuel races, and carries out other necessary racetrack supervision to ensure protection for the public on a complete cost recovery basis financed by the levy.

Other amendments to Section 188 to bring regulations into line with modern communications technology and veterinary practices. For example, videotape will replace film as the medium for recording races as an aid to officials.

Tests on other bodily substances such as blood will be officially added to the urine and saliva tests conducted routinely on all racehorses. Regulations will now allow analysis of body tissues from horses which die immediately before, during or after a race.

Other clarifications include the definition of a racing association as an association which actually conducts horseracing, and not merely has racing as its purpose, or one of its purposes. Essentially, these changes are good housekeeping. They are designed to ensure that our legalization reflects reality, protects the public and does not inhibit the viability and potential of the industry.

Race-tracks, as I said, are important economic generators in many of the smaller communities right across the country. I think it is important to mention, Mr. Speaker, that we have racing basically throughout the country, especially during the summer season when there are a lot of smaller fairs which have, as part of their attraction, pari-mutuel betting. Those are my comments on second reading, thank you.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-77, which is before us today, is designed to expand the arrangements for betting at Canadian race-tracks, to provide for broadcasts of races taking place in the United States or in other countries and to allow betting on them here in Canada.

I think that people who are concerned about gambling could well be concerned that this will actually increase the amount of gambling which takes place in our country. However, I think we have to balance that with the prospect that this will be gambling under a controlled situation at Canadian race-tracks rather than people going to the United States. I am told that something like $157,000 was wagered on the Kentucky Derby by Canadians. It has been found that on important race days in the United States, the number of people attending our race-tracks is dramatically reduced. As the Minister indicated, there are something like 40,000 people involved in the race-track industry, and it is one of the major sporting events in the country.

This legislation before us today would provide for the broadcasts of races in other countries at tracks in Canada at a time when live races are taking place here. I have been assured by the Department of Agriculture that this will be a controlled situation and that there will be regulations as to the number of races which are carried in this way.

I also believe it is important that the legislation which now exists is tied in to meet modern day standards with regard to the use of videotape as opposed to film, and with respect to the technical aspect of blood tests and body fluid tests which are carried out on the racehorse. I believe the Department of Agriculture which regulates these horse races which are televised, must take into account the over-all impact on the nearby tracks. For instance, I am told that when live races are carried on television in Toronto, it does have a negative impact on the turnout at the five tracks involved in the jockey club. So I think it is important there be some equity exercised in the operation of this inter-track racing arrangement which would now take place.

I believe those are the only items which I want to mention. I understand that the Minister is going to be proposing amendments at the committee of the whole stage. I hope he will be able to explain the provisions of that amendment. So with those few comments, Mr. Speaker, may I say that we are agreeable to see this Bill passed through committee of the whole stage.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak on the "sin" Bill. It reminds me of a story of a chap who was at a race-track. He was standing in the pari-mutuel line to buy a ticket. He was at the $100 win window. There were six horses in the race. He said to the clerk at the window, "I want to put $500 on number six to win". The teller cranked out the ticket, but the fellow behind him tapped him on his shoulder and said, "Look, buddy, number six is not going to win." The guy said, "Oh, yeah?" So he said to the clerk, "Give me another 500 bucks on number six to win." The guy taps him on the shoulder again and says, "Look, what's the matter with you? Are you crazy? Number six can't win". The guy says, "Yeah? Give me another 500 bucks on number six to win". The other guy got completely frustrated and said, "Look, I own number six and I have told the jockey we're only out for a ride today". The guy turned around and said, "Well, this is going to be one heck of a slow race. I own the other five".

• (1550)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I do not want my remarks to be interpreted as those of a socialist arguing for sin.

Mr. Gormley: We were waiting to see what you were going to do.

Mr. Rodriguez: I do not want it to appear as though we socialists who believe in economic planning would depend upon the exigencies of betting. I would like to lay odds of five to one that Members of the House cannot tell me what the Government will get on the 1 per cent on foreign races on which Canadians will bet.

I am not here to argue that betting is an essential source of income for the Government. However, I think pari-mutuel betting and horse racing in Canada is a civilized and accepted form of recreation. There is no doubt about that. Indeed, as far as I can tell, what this Bill attempts to do is to modernize betting to make sure that the regulations controlling it are in fact up to modern standards. These things include what happens when a horse drops dead after it finishes a race. It provides that we can examine body parts of the animal rather than do only urine or blood tests to detect foreign substances. Indeed, for some horses it does not matter. One can give them anything but there is no way they will win.

I do not think that I could oppose this Bill. After all, there is a race-track in my riding.

Mr. Foster: Conflict of interest?

Mr. Rodriguez: Not at all. Indeed, it is a small "B" track which operates two days a week. In fact, it provides employment opportunities not only for those who are trainers but also for those with few skills. There are very few other opportunities for employment in that regard.

It will be possible for a track like the one to which I just referred to broadcast foreign races of a premier standard including the Kentucky Derby, the English Derby, the Grand National, the Belmont Stakes and the Preakness. I think that Canadians who want to place bets on those races ought to be able to do so at a facility in Canada. I do not think they should have to shuffle off to Buffalo to off-track bet on races occurring in the United States on which they cannot bet in Canada. I think we are now recognizing that betting here is a civilized thing and that such facilities should be available to Canadians.

The other day as I was preparing for this debate, I recognized the considerable investment there is in horse breeding and racing in Canada. For example, in 1983, investment capital in the race-track business was $2.2 billion. We have a surplus trade balance with the United States regarding the whole question of breeding and selling horses. For example, no one can forget Northern Dancer who, at 24 or 25 years of age, still services about 16 mares every year. In fact, all of his offspring has made Northern Dancer, a Canadian-bred stallion, the world's most famous stallion.

We must recognize, Mr. Speaker, that E. P. Taylor did not achieve all of that simply by pulling himself up by his own bootstraps. The provincial Government of Ontario made grants available to horse breeders to improve the breed and to make Canadian-bred horses very attractive to foreign markets. As a matter of fact, through the Income Tax Act under the agricultural section, the federal Government provides tax relief for those who are involved in the businesses of the breeding and racing of horses. I believe that we are finally becoming more civilized with respect to the way we respond to the entire question of horse racing.

One good aspect of this Bill, of course, is the possibility that it would eliminate bookmaking. Bookies take bets and if they get too many heavy bets on one horse in a particular race, they lay them off on bookies in Buffalo or elsewhere in the United States. This Bill will effectively put the run on that kind of illegal activity, activity which is a part of organized crime. That is a step in the right direction.

We are not prepared to oppose this Bill. When it gets to committee of the whole, there are, however, some questions I would like to ask vis-à-vis betting on races across Canada.

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few words to this discussion because I am sure all of us are very conscious of the considerable number of Canadians who may be troubled by this kind of legislation. I think it is very important for the Parliament of Canada, particularly when there is all-Party support, to indicate why this kind of legislation is desirable.

This legislation certainly does not point to an indifference on the part of this Parliament to the moral problem that is faced by many compulsive gamblers, a problem which brings great unhappiness and misery to their families and dependants. However, we also know that there is very little good that comes from the law being used to prohibit and to restrain. There is, however, real good to be achieved from the law being used to control, to ensure honesty and wholesomeness and to ensure the fairness of the facility for all Canadians who wish to participate. I take it that that is the intent of this legislation.

On the negative side, I have some concern that this legislation, like so much legislation in the various provinces and in Parliament, still gives considerable weight to the interests of the major race tracks and confines its benefits to race tracks and the pari-mutuel facilities. There is some argument for that. However, I doubt that the expectations of the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Rodriguez) regarding the elimination of bookmaking will be fulfilled because of the limitations of this legislation. Notwithstanding that, these amendments are taking us a step forward, and perhaps at a later time we can consider a further step that will provide more facilities for the people of Canada who have an interest in this sport.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is as follows: Mr. Hnatyshyn, for Mr. Crosbie and seconded by Mr. de Cotret, moves that Bill C-77, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (parimutuel betting) be now read a second time and, with unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, with unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-77, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (parimutuel betting).

On Clause 1—

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister what sort of regulations he envisions being put in place to regulate the number of races which will be permitted to be used for this purpose which originate from outside the country.

I am sure it is not the intention of the Government to supplant the races which are taking place in Canada at the present time. While everyone knows the Kentucky Derby and similar races hold a great attraction, there are also many other famous races which take place in Europe and other countries. What sort of regulations does the Minister envision being put in place to prevent an over-abundance of races from outside the country?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member raises a valid question. The number of races held will be strictly limited by regulations set by the Minister. Presently, the number being considered is 40, which does not mean races held on 40 different days but 40 different races. For example, if we consider the Breeder Stakes to be held this fall, on one day there will be 10 races covered. We are certainly not looking to a proliferation of races whereby Canadians will be allowed to bet on every race held anywhere. We are talking about the prestigious races. If we consider the number 40, then I believe that would satisfy most people with respect to the concern suggested by the import of the Hon. Member's question.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, will the Minister indicate to the Committee of the Whole what percentage of winnings will be returned in the case of foreign races? Will it be the same formula which we have in place for domestic races or will it be a larger amount? A larger amount would give some sort of preference to Canadian races, if that is all possible. Will it be the existing rate which I understand to be somewhere in the vicinity of 80 per cent? Will that be the case for foreign races as well?

Mr. Mayer: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that is precisely correct. The rules will be exactly the same as those which govern races presently held in Canada.

Mr. Boudria: Have any Canadian racehorse owners or race-track operators indicated any concern along the lines of the concern expressed by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East with respect to whether or not that move would encourage people to bet more on foreign races as opposed to Canadian ones, especially if there is no incentive to ensure that betting is encouraged on Canadian horses as opposed to foreign ones? Have there been any worries to that effect expressed by any of the groups concerned?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, that is a difficult question to answer. It is my understanding that track operators and owners, everyone, want this, not so much to make money but to see that the same type of percentage on return stays in Canada.

To return to the question raised by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East, that is a concern. I would like to assure the House that we are not looking to a wide proliferation of races; we are talking about prestigious races in the very strict sense of the word.

Mr. Boudria: I gather, then, if I can be so blunt, that this is almost a Kentucky Derby type of provision we are looking at. I conclude that there seems to be a great deal of money leaving the country and being bet elsewhere. Perhaps the Minister mentioned that in his opening remarks and I missed it. However, if that is the case, is there any estimate at the present time with respect to the amount of money which leaves Canada and is being bet on races such as the Derby and other races? I recognize that some of this may be illegal right now and it would be difficult to estimate. However, is there any type of estimate at all as to how much money we are losing right now as a result of not having the provisions of this Bill in place at the present time? In other words, how much will we gain as a result of this Bill being enacted? Does the Minister have any idea as to what amount is involved?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, there are a couple of sides to the question. There are some benefits which will flow to us in terms of the advertisement and promotion of the sport itself as a result of televising some of the prestigious races which are held outside the country.

In answer to the Hon. Member's first question, obviously what he suggests is illegal and the money leaves the country. There may be people in the industry who may be able to give the Hon. Member an estimate with respect to the amount of money. However, I certainly cannot. I have not even heard an estimate. If we could keep a percentage of that money in the country, under the same type of rules which exist in the racing industry now, then that will be of benefit to us. With respect to how much, I am certainly not able to begin to give an answer.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask a question with respect to the integrity of the whole pari-mutuel system. When a better goes to a race-track in Canada and bets, he is betting in the full knowledge that there are certain rules enforced by Agriculture Canada with respect to certain forbidden substances, such as drugs, which a horse can be given. For example, butazolidin is forbidden, and there are others. There are certain standards which we have which is a guarantee the bettor has when he goes to place a bet. If we are to allow Canadian bettors to bet on foreign races which are run on certain conditions in a foreign country, then we are not able to give the same guarantees. Thus, we are in a way short-changing the Canadian bettor, are we not?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, no, I do not think that is the case. There is no question that if you bet on a race run outside the country, you are going to bet on a race that is run in a different jurisdiction. However, it should also be recognized that we will not be allowing races to be televised and bet on in Canada unless they are run in accordance with similar or, at least, very strictly supervised rules, similar to what we have in place in Canada. On the one hand, it is a very good question; we cannot totlaly supervise. On the other hand, we can decide, if we think it is not going to be supervised properly, not to list it and carry it as far as pari-mutuel betting is concerned.

Mr. Rodriguez: I also wonder about the odds. Will the pay-out be based on the pay-out shown on the tote board at the foreign track on the day of the race, or will it be determined and the odds established by the amount bet at the particular track in Canada on the particular race?

Mr. Mayer: The latter is correct. It will not be based on odds and betting outside the country, it will be based on what goes on here.

Mr. Rodriguez: Regarding prestigious races in Canada at the moment, can a person bet on the Manitoba Derby at a track in Ontario?

Mr. Mayer: Yes.

Mr. Rodriguez: How about telephone account betting? Can a person place a bet through the telephone account betting on a foreign race as envisaged in the Bill?

Mr. Mayer: I am informed that that is the situation in Manitoba and British Columbia but not in Ontario, as far as telephone betting is concerned.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Chairman, I want to phrase this question carefully. Is the Minister aware that in British Columbia, when the Kentucky Derby was run in the first week of May at Long Acres race-track, approximately two hours from the Canadian border, approximately $500,000 was bet on that race alone? With the handle at that track, generally speaking one-third of their betting action is from Canada. In this case, because we were not permitted to have the Kentucky Derby at Exhibition Park in Vancouver, it is estimated that approximately $150,000 to $175,000 Canadians went south for bets on the Kentucky Derby. That is one of the good reasons for this legislation; Canadians will not be encouraged to cross the border at Detroit, Buffalo or Washington State to bet on some of the premier races. Was the Minister aware of that?

Mr. Mayer: No, I was not aware of that. I am sure my friends from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell and Nickel Belt, indeed the House in general, are glad to hear those figures. The illustrious Whip of our Party is certainly well-known in racing circles throughout the country. He has a keen interest in this sport as does, I might add, the Queen of our country who has a tremendous racing stable. It is truly a sport of kings and we are very pleased to have this information.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, we have established that the return on a dollar bet is 80 cents. That is, by the way, double the return on lotteries. The track and the provincial and federal Governments take 20 cents on the dollar. We all recognize the need to take 20 cents on the dollar. There are certain costs involved with live racing, for example, veterinarian and all sorts of other services which both Governments and the track provide. Given that, why could a greater percentage of the bettor's dollar not be returned to him on foreign races? Why is it essential for the Governments to take the maximum percentages when there are no costs involved for them? All they are doing is simply throwing a picture on the screen and the cashiers are taking the bets.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact, the same amount of supervision will go on. Agriculture Canada officials will be at the track supervising the betting and essentially carrying out the same kind of services they would provide if it was a race being run in Canada. Essentially we will be conducting the same kind of supervision, therefore the costs will be roughly the same.

Mr. Rodriguez: Not exactly, Mr. Chairman. You do not have the in-stable supervision, the people who do the urine and saliva tests and all the rest. You do not have the circuit patrol. You do not have all these other services. Why do you need to take as big a return when you are not supplying the same amount of services?

Mr. Mayer: First of all, the question is valid but if you look at the scale of things, we are talking about something like 40 races throughout the year. I am told that there are approximately 46,000 races conducted in Canada. The number of races involved in this question is so insignificantly small that to adjust the percentage would not really make any sense. Just doing some quick arithmetic, I think that is one one-thousandth of the number of races conducted in Canada. If you look at it from that point of view, you will find that that is why the percentages will remain the same.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is just a small point, Mr. Chairman, but in fact races like the Kentucky Derby, the Belmont and the Preakness, many of the breeder's stakes races, are broadcast on TV. So the betting public is sitting at home and they can watch the race. The coverage starts in some cases almost an hour before the race, or at least 30 minutes. People do not really need to go down to the race-track to watch it on the screen, they can pick up the phone and call in their bet.

I come back to the point that these races do not involve the same costs as live races, and therefore I would suggest that a greater return should be given to the bettor.

Mr. Mayer: Again the Hon. Member is talking about a very, very small amount of money. I would also point out that the federal Government does not have any jurisdiction over what goes on provincially in this respect. Given the small number of races we are talking about here, to have a different set of rules or guidelines does not seem to make a lot of sense.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Government Whip mentioned that $500,000 alone in Canadian bets was placed on the Kentucky Derby. Can you imagine that across the country? Once this facility is provided to the bettor I am sure more people will take advantage of it. If you have 40 prestigious races a year, we can see that we are not talking about nickels and dimes. It is a considerable amount.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, if I heard the Government Whip correctly, he did not say $500,000; he said that was the amount bet, of which approximately one-third would be Canadian betting. The Hon. Member makes a good point, but it does cost a certain amount of money to supervise the races anyway. We will take the comments as notice because it is a valid point. The Government is not looking for ways to make money from this. I think it is generally recognized by everyone that Agriculture Canada has done an exceptionally fine job of managing its jurisdiction in this area, and it will continue to do so. If there are some areas which Hon. Members suggest need to be looked at, they will be looked at.

Mr. Rodriguez: Just to satisfy my curiosity, what is the rationale for the inclusion of the reference to being able to bet in a building that is within 900 metres of the grandstand, I presume? If you are going on site to bet, you go on site to bet. If you start going to 900 metres to bet, very shortly it will be 1,900 metres and then 6 kilometres. I think we will then end up with betting parlours and turf accountants as they have in Britain.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, the 900 metres is stipulated in the Act, and if we wish to change it we will have to come back to the House at which time I am sure the Hon. Member will raise his objections that we are moving further and further away. This is simply for the convenience of the people on the track. The facility has to be on the track. In order to ensure that it is on the track a distance of 900 metres was determined. Rest assured that it cannot be changed by regulation. It is part of the Bill, and in order for it to be changed we will have to come back to the House. I am sure that if we do want it changed the Hon. Member will raise some very legitimate objections at that time. There is no intention to change it. I am just reasurring him that it cannot be changed by regulation, as the Hon. Member knows from looking at the Act.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, if I understand this correctly, at the present time the federal Government's portion of a bet is eight-tenths of 1 per cent, or thereabouts, the provincial Government gets 7 cents of every dollar, 12.2 per cent of every dollar goes to the track and horses, and 80 per cent is the return on winnings. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has advocated that in the case of foreign races we should have a higher return on investment. I would like to express my disagreement with that to the Minister. We were discussing a while ago how we did not want to create any situation in which there would be no incentive to keep the money here. If we are creating an incentive to bet on horses outside the country, we are doing exactly the opposite of what we were all saying a little while ago. In other words, if you receive a high return on your investment by betting on horses outside the country, you are actually creating a circumstance that most Canadian track and horse owners are not going to be pleased with.

The only portions with which the Minister could be concerned are the eight-tenths of 1 per cent going to the federal Government or the 12.2 per cent going to the track and the horses. I do not think the federal Government would change the 7 per cent provincial share or, if it did, it would not be very well looked upon.

Of the 12.2 per cent which goes to the track and horses from races in Canada, is there a set breakdown of how much goes to each? In the case of a race run outside the country, does a portion go to that country in the form of royalties in any way shape or form for the owners of the horses there, or does it simply mean that there is more profit for the track owner here in those cases?

Mr. Mayer: There will have to be some arrangements made between the foreign track and the track here to split fees on whatever basis may be arrived at by the various tracks. I can also advise the Hon. Member that the fee varies from province to province. Some claim 7 cents as the Hon. Member said, and some claim as much as 10 cents.

Mr. Boudria: In the case of betting on races outside the country, am I to conclude that the 12.2 cents that goes to the track and horses in Canada now will be split in some way between the Canadian track and that of the other country? How do we know that the present formula of 80 per cent will be adequate if we do not know what return we will have to give to the track owner outside of the country? Or have we made preliminary arrangements with those tracks which the Minister has referred to as prestigious? If so, will we be able to accommodate that with the present structure of winnings to bets which we have right now?

Mr. Mayer: With regard to the 20 per cent that stays in the system, there would be negotiations between the track and the horse owners. I am informed that "split" is perhaps the wrong word to use and that "fee" would be more appropriate. There would be negotiations between the horseman and the track to decide how the remainder would be split up.

Mr. Boudria: Within the 12 cents?

Mr. Mayer: That is right. We have an amendment forthcoming that will address some of the legal aspects of allowing the track to set that fee.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Chairman, I have one question which I would like to have clarified. The Minister keeps talking about 40 races. In British Columbia we have a six-month thoroughbred racing season. We would be interested in the Queen's Plate, probably the Rothman's race, perhaps some of the major races from New York, and two or three races from California. Those races from California would be of no interest to eastern Canada. Due to the timing they would take place at eight o'clock or nine o'clock at night in the east when, generally speaking, tracks are not open. When you talk of 40 races, you are talking about 40 races which may or may not be picked up by various parts of the country at various times. It does not mean that any single racetrack is going to carry foreign races. In fact, I doubt that any of them would carry more than 10 or 15 in the entire season. Would you agree with that, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Mayer: Thank you for that well put question.

Mr. Rodriguez: The answer is yes?

Mr. Mayer: The answer is yes. I am getting all kinds of coaching from all sides of the House and I appreciate that, but the answer is obviously yes. Because we are such a diverse country there are areas of interest on the West Coast which would not interest people in the central part of Canada. That is entirely correct.

Mr. Rodriguez: I presume that this also covers standard bred racing including such races as The Little Brown Jug. I see a nod from the Minister.

Mr. Mayer: Yes.

Mr. Rodriguez: I disagree with my friend who said that if people got a bigger return on foreign races they would want to bet on them. I understand from the legislation that the particular races on which pari-mutuel betting would be allowed would have to be decided by the Minister. Is that correct?

Mr. Mayer: Yes, that is correct.

• (1630)

Mr. Rodriguez: I presume there is some criteria that will be used to determine which ones are prestigious races as opposed to dog races. Can the Minister elaborate and tell us what sort of criteria will be used to indicate a prestigious form of race?

Mr. Mayer: Obviously there has to be a judgment. Again, I presume that the Minister would be relying for advice and input from people in the industry so that we would in fact know what determines the words "prestigious race". I agree with the Hon. Member. I think that some of the pacers and trotters, if you are talking about harness racing, are very exciting to watch. It is not exclusive to thoroughbreds, but standard breds as well.

Mr. Rodriguez: Out of curiosity, the Bill provides for expanding the testing of bodily substances taken from horses in a race. I presume that that is one of the safeguards to protect the public. How does the Department update its testing procedures? It would seem to me that that is the kind of change that ought to have been made by regulation a long time ago.

Mr. Mayer: I think the Member is correct. We have a research farm and we are continually updating the testing procedure and trying to keep abreast with technology as it is expanded. However, I think the Member makes a very good point that there should be some room, possibly to have some of these procedures added on an ongoing basis without going to the House for amendments. I think he raises a good point.

CANAGREX DISSOLUTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Layton (for the Minister of Agriculture) that Bill C-42, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) had approximately a minute and a half before the end of the period for questions and comments.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, when the order of the House was changed, I was about to respond to questions posed by the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Holtmann). He indicated that I did not reflect his view when I expressed to the House that I knew him to be a Member who would oppose this Bill and favour more support for agriculture than what the Conservative Government was giving. I notice that he took objection to that. I am sorry that I credited the Member for Selkirk-Interlake with caring for agriculture. If he says he does not, then probably he does not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to Bill C-42, the Bill to wind up Canagrex. When the Government was first elected we in the agricultural industry had great hopes because of the many promises to the agricultural sectors of the country. In many ways, these were very logical promises and suggestions that anyone who knew something about the agricultural industry would accept and support.

When the Conservatives formed the Government it was our hope that they would fulfil these promises and become the first Government in many years to take agriculture seriously. Many Conservative Members from the West were farmers in the past and had given the kind of voice to agricultural policies which we considered reasonable and worth while. We anticipated that they would be Members who would help farmers and the industry. Although there has been much talk, so far there have been few results from those promises.

The winding up of Canagrex was an unexpected result because the Government did not mention this policy during the election campaign. It is a direct blow to a number of farm groups who believed that they finally had an organization which would do something for the export of farm products. There is no doubt that even during its short tenure, Canagrex demonstrated a very important need for export assistance to the agriculture industry in Canada.

Of course, export assistance is not a new concept because most other sectors in Canada have specific bodies which are used to provide concrete and substantial help when they need it. Assistance to sell Canadian products abroad is common except in the agricultural industry. For instance, the industrial sector has the Export Development Corporation with a budget of approximately $20 bnillion for contingent liabilities with which to provide specific financing to sell particular products in foreign markets. That financing is essentially speculative as the money is lent to the purchasing countries as insurance to help reduce any possible losses that might incur when selling abroad. The producers of military equipment and capital projects operate under another Crown corporation, the Canadian Commercial Corporation. It also provides specific assistance in order to implement projects abroad. Therefore, the idea that Canagrex was new and untried is false. In fact, the dissolution of Canagrex is a direct attack on the ability of the agricultural sector to export its products and develop markets abroad.

I know the Conservative Government in its statement on the wind-up of Canagrex said that other agencies are in place and that people attached to embassies can do the work. However, people have been attached to embassies for the last 25 or 30 years, and they have not succeeded in developing markets that we know can be developed.

Long before Canagrex, it was recognized that the agricultural community needed an instrument to attack the complex world of international trade. In fact, I looked at the history of Canagrex. It is interesting that the idea of an agricultural export agency was brought before this House during the Diefenbaker Government by the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) who was the Minister responsible in that Government. He suggested that it was time to put an agricultural export agency in place. This concept was discussed again by the Trudeau Government.

During the short-lived Clark Government, the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) prepared and had in place everything to go ahead with an agricultural export agency. Unfortunately, that Government did not stay in power long enough to put the agency in place. When the concept was brought forward later on, the present Minister of Agriculture actually supported the idea of the export agency. On December 9, 1980, we find on page 5540 of Hansard these words of the present Minister of Agriculture:

> We have supported the need for such a structure since 1974. While we were in office the necessary cabinet document had been prepared. What has happened? Has someone canned Canagrex?

Mr. Boudria: Who said that?

Mr. Hovdebo: The present Minister of Agriculture said that in 1980. During the period of time Canagrex was being debated in the House, the Conservative caucus supported it initially. However, some of the Conservatives friends in the export areas were a little concerned that an agency would cut into the possible development of markets of other agencies. Consequently over several months as the Bill was before the House and Committee, many of changes were made, a number of them at the behest of members of the Conservative caucus from across the country who felt there were some dangers in the Bill. Those dangers were taken out of the Bill and the Bill was passed in 1983.

To go back to the need for Canagrex, it was quite apparent to people in the agricultural community that some sophisticated method, some agency, some expertise, was needed to develop agricultural markets around the world. An agency was needed to open new horizons for domestic producers in Canada.

When the then Minister of Agriculture suggested such an agency, he got support from all sides of the House and from all areas of the agricultural industry. That support did not wane as the Bill was developed. It did not disappear after Canagrex was put in place. When this Government presented the wind-up of Canagrex before this House, the issue rose again. A number of farm groups came forward, stating they were disappointed that they were to lose what they considered, for the first time, to be an agency that dealt specifically with them and worked for them in the export world.

In 1980 the idea of Canagrex finally started to bear fruit. A Bill was placed before the House early in 1981. During the parliamentary debate on Canagrex, as I mentioned, particular concern was expressed by some Opposition Members over one clause. I want to zero in on that clause because it seemed to be the basis of the opposition.

Opposition Members said that they feared legislation would be used by the Government to interfere in normal commercial trade. Others felt instruments already in place were being duplicated. During the time this Bill was before Committee, a number of amendments were brought forward. Those amendments were put in place to ensure the agency received plenty of guidance and scrutiny, both from the private and the public sectors; that it would engage in trade only on a state to state basis in the development of markets and that it would not interfere in any private development of trade. Other things were passed in the Bill.

That kinds of corporations have a tendency to grow like Topsy was another concern. People say they will do only a certain amount, but the net result is they do considerably more. They start at $12 million and before you know what happens, they hit $60 million. To be sure that kind of thing did not happen, that the agency did not invade the private sector and raise concerns, very sophisticated control was put in place. No Crown corporation was every established with as many controls or with as much authority and guidance as was Canagrex. Everything was done to make sure that Canagrex did not cut into the trade of the private sector or into any other market sector which might possibly be affected. Everything was done to make sure it would be financially responsible and that it would not expand beyond the references given within the Bill. In fact the Auditor General was given the authority to call a comprehensive audit at any time he felt that it was necessary, so there was no concern about the financial responsibility of this particular organization. It was the first time in Canadian legislation that any corporation or agency was so well controlled or financially regulated by the Government. The Auditor General felt that no other organization or agency was quite as well as scrutinized as Canagrex. It was a bit of a shock, not only to those of us in the House but to those in the agricultural community, to find that it was to be wound down, after a substantial investment and after an auspicious start on the part of the corporation, in that it was starting to do some work and starting to sell products.

Mr. Glenn Flaten, who was chairman of the 11-member Board of Directors of Canagrex, had been the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and a member of numerous other agriculture-related associations and boards. He had an interest in ensuring that the board and its staff had control over what went on. He paid close attention to what happened in the debates in the House of Commons. He knew the concerns of Members of Parliament and of agricultural organizations. He was an excellent choice for chairman. The board worked very closely with the executives. Its members travelled and established many contacts. They worked particularly hard and particularly quickly. The Bill was passed in May, 1984, and toward the end of the following summer the money was put in place for the organization. In fact, an August 29 press release indicated that a $15 million line of credit had been arranged with a Cuban organization for sales and that many other contacts had been made, but of course time was running out. It is interesting to note that in September, when the new Government came into power, it immediately withheld the money voted by Parliament for this organization. As the company was beginning to operate and to show its value, the money was not available. Then, on November 8, 1984, without any consultation or examination, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) indicated in his economic statement that Canagrex was to disappear. Many farm organizations felt that they had been betrayed. They were consulted and made recommendations in favour of the development of Canagrex to help them sell their products. Suddenly, without examination, without a fair trial and without consultation, the Minister of Finance cancelled it, making a farce of the parliamentary system and of the consultative system. The Conservative Government allowed agriculture to drop to third or fourth place in Canadian trade. The Government is trying to develop trade, but it has refused to finance and has withdrawn from an active role in the one agency which could have helped around the world.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that the House allows us an opportunity to learn more about our country. As I looked at the legislation affecting Canagrex and as I listened to my colleague's speech, I could not help but wonder whether there was a parallel. Is there a parallel between the agency which is now being eliminated by the Conservative Government and the Canadian Wheat Board in terms of their function as between Canadian producers and potential markets elsewhere in the world?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question, in that it gives me an opportunity to expand somewhat on the kind of structure which has been in place.

The Canadian Wheat Board is an agency of the Government and Canagrex is a Crown corporation. Technically they are somewhat different. As far as their mandates are concerned, there is much similarity. The Canadian Wheat Board has the responsibility to go out and sell grains and to develop markets to ensure an even flow of grain, as much as possible. Of course other factors are affected as well. Canagrex had eliminated from its responsibility grains which were under the auspices of the Canadian Wheat Board and other products already under other marketing boards. However, it had responsibilities in terms of any other product which could be considered an agricultural one. Honey, apples and other products which came under other boards were not affected. It could work with any of those boards to develop markets overseas. It was aimed at developing the agricultural market and working with existing marketing and producer boards. There is a marginal parallel. It was intended to help those boards.

I suppose one of our most sophisticated marketing boards is the Canadian Wheat Board. It does not need help in developing its market, although it can be prodded on occasion. I see that the Minister is present; we will prod him when it is necessary. The Canadian Wheat Board has very sophisticated marketing in place, and it can help those boards which do not.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I listened very attentively to the Hon. Member's speech. It was very interesting when he said that the Conservative Party had made an about-face. I find it strange that it would do this. I guess it was the first time in the last half hour that I heard about Conservatives changing their mind on a major issue.

What does the Hon. Member think could have possessed the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to change his mind from his good intentions in 1979 and shortly thereafter? Does he think that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), "Mike the Knife" as he is affectionately known to all of us, had anything to do with this twisting of opinion which seems to have happened? Once again the Tories have contradicted themselves. Would he like to comment on that?

● (1700)

Mr. Hovdebo: We, of course, have to surmise the answer to that question. It is very uncharacteristic for the Conservatives to change their mind, as we all know.

Mr. Boudria: They haven't done it in the last half hour.

Mr. Hovdebo: The Minister was no doubt in favour of an export marketing agent for agriculture, and the Party was in favour also, otherwise the Minister, who had been a Minister in the Clark Government, would not have brought it forward. I would think that to some extent the decision to cancel Canagrex was based more on the fact that the Conservatives had publicly opposed it during committee hearings, and across Canada, and felt that they had to follow through in some way even if, in the process of opposing it, they had done a lot of good with improvements and making it a very responsible agency. I have to give Hon. Members of the Conservative Party who were in committee at that time a lot of credit for picking out faults and getting the Government to change those areas about which they were concerned. We did not always agree with those changes but if that was their concern, they did well.

I feel, therefore, that the cancellation of Canagrex is purely political. It is really a disaster because it is done without any basis. They did not look at how well it could do and how much good it could do for the country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any more questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to enter this debate, although I do feel that the Canagrex situation has been discussed many times. However, people are still wondering what happened to it. I think it boils down very simply to the fact that we had an agency which was spending somewhere in the area of $6 million and had $50 million worth of orders. I do not think we could call that very efficient.

One of the reasons I am entering into the debate today, Mr. Speaker, is because I am troubled by some of the things I have heard today. I believe this Government has been one of the most sensitive Goverments to the needs of farmers that this Parliament has seen for many years. I have a list in my hand, and I do not wish to go over them all for the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), of some 90 achievements of this Government since September 4, 1984.

Mr. Boudria: That must be plain paper you have in your hand.

Mr. Caldwell: I can read them, Mr. Speaker. This Government has spent somewhere in the area of $1.53 billion since the election on agricultural issues. I am not too sure we have the time to go through all of the excellent programs the Government has put forward.

Mr. Young: Go for it.

Mr. Caldwell: I believe we are all very cognizant of the fact that we do have problems in agriculture today, but this Government and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) have faced up to them.

Perhaps I will read a few of the programs this Government has put into effect. As early as October 1, 1984, a $60 million federal-provincial prairie livestock drought assistance program was announced by the Minister. A few days later on October 17, 1984, $181,340 was granted through the Agricultural and Rural Development Subsidiary Agreement to Brookside Farms, B.C. On November 2, 1984, a $123 million final payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Program was announced. On November 5, 1984, the Minister of Agriculture announced that up to $627,286 in funding for projects under Agriculture Canada's new Crop Development Fund. Then, of course, the Minister showed his concern for the agriculture community. Many farmers were facing foreclosures due to mismanagement by the previous Government which had told farmers to go out and borrow, borrow, borrow and grow, grow, grow, and we will sell it. That is the reason, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian farmers are in the difficulties in which they are today. Some farmers took the advice of the Liberal Government over the past number of years and now they find themselves unable to pay back those tremendous debts incurred during that period of time. However, the Minister of Agriculture, as early as November 5, two months after the election, put a moratorium on FCC loans which helped the farmers at that time and, of course, he has done it again very recently.

On November 26, 1984, $15 million was given to help the grape growers in the Niagara Peninsula who were suffering from over-production. What were they supposed to do with their grapes? The Liberals have told them in the past what they could do with them. But this Government showed some compassion—

Ms. Copps: That's nonsense, and you know it.

Mr. Caldwell: The Government showed some compassion and bought the crops of the grape growers.

Ms. Copps: Let them eat grapes.

Mr. Caldwell: I know it hurts. I am only down to number nine and I have 89 more to go.

Mr. Althouse: What about the western grain stabilization?

Mr. Caldwell: We can talk a little about the western grain stabilization, if the Hon. Member likes, Mr. Speaker. Bill C-25 was the Western Grain Stabilization Act. The previous Government sat by for many years. It did not have the guts to put the stabilization program through. At that time it would have been much simpler to have a stabilization program in Canada than at the present time because each province had to develop its own programs in order to keep its farmers on the land. The federal Government sat back and said, "Let the provinces do it". Now we have a system whereby every province is top loading. It is almost impossible in some cases to get a national agreement. However, our Minister and this Government have decided that we are going to have an agreement. It will be the best agreement that can possibly be achieved at this present time. It would have been a lot easier had the previous Government moved on that type of legislation. We would not then be in the situation we are today.

I will just highlight some of the programs which had been announced by this Government. On November 30, 1984, a $3.3 million emergency cash advance under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act was made available. On December 3, 1984, it was announced that land was being purchased for the construction of a $10 million research centre on pest control in London, Ontario. On December 7, 1984, $200,000 worth of evaporated milk was donated by Canadian dairy farmers to relieve the starvation in Ethiopia. On December 10, 1984, the Minister of Agriculture announced the Farm Credit Corporation loan rates dropped by .75 per cent to 1 per cent and, of course, they are still going down.

Mr. Brightwell: Four per cent over the year.

Mr. Caldwell: It was 4 per cent over the past year. That is one of the things which this Government has done which the farmers of today certainly appreciate because there was nothing that was hurting them more than the high interest rates which were imposed upon them by the previous Government. As I pointed out before, that is the reason that agriculture has the problems it has today.

Farmers are as good at farming as they were then. The only problem is they could not pay the exorbitant interest rates which were put on to them by the previous Government.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Explain.

Mr. Caldwell: On December 20, 1984, Royal Assent was given to petroleum tax rebates which will save Canadian farmers nearly $100 million annually in operating costs. That was something which we promised during the election campaign and we lived up to it.

Ms. Copps: Why don't you talk about the 18-cents-a-gallon-increase in gas in the Budget?

Mr. Caldwell: I could go on but I know Hon. Members are getting—

Mr. Boudria: Please do.

Mr. Caldwell: I could give them a copy of this and they could examine it for themselves. It all adds up to $1.53 billion which this Government has spent on agriculture in Canada in the past year. That is something which has not been done by the Liberal Government for the past 15 years.

Ms. Copps: What about Canagex?

Mr. Caldwell: Canagrex? That is very simple. Why did we get rid of Canagrex? Because it was not doing its job. Perhaps it is Liberal economics which says it is good for an organization to spend $6 million and to sell $50 million worth of goods.

Ms. Copps: Fifteen million dollars in the first year of operation was good marketing to open up the international markets.

• (1710)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Will the Hon. Member please address the Chair when making his remarks?

Mr. Caldwell: It is difficult to address the Chair with these kinds of interventions. I would point out that if the Hon. Member would like a copy of the list of 90 achievements of this Government over the past year, I would be happy to provide it to her. I am sure the list would make very interesting reading. If she read it, prhaps we would not hear the kinds of things we are hearing today.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I listened with care to the list presented by the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Caldwell) and I was not very surprised to notice that there was really no mention of any new initiatives in spending with the possible exception of the $30-per-head cattle payments to western farmers in drought zones, and that initiative is a copy of a similar program that was in effect on an ad hoc basis in 1981. All of the other programs to which he referred would have provided the same level of service whether this was a Conservative Government, a Liberal Government or no Government. They are programs that have been in effect for years.

The grape program to which he referred was paid for under the Stabilization Act, something which he says his Government put into place. That is an old Act. It has a power which permits the Commodity Board to purchase products when they are in surplus supply so that farmers can have some money. The grape growers of this country have been protected by that action more than once and at least four or five times under previous administrations. I do not know exactly when the pay-outs occurred, but I recall that the grape growers have used that program many times in the past.

Other pay-outs including those under the Western Grain Stabilization Act are automatic payments which would occur whether this Government was in power, that Government was in power or a Government of our own was in power. Of the $1.5 million made available under the drought assistance to livestock, perhaps $30,000 to $40,000 was not initiated by the Government. That particular initiative required the making of an executive decision. I would point out that a similar decision was made under the previous Government and it has become almost an accepted practice that such an ad hoc form of aid will occur during drought season.

To portray $1.4 billion that the Hon. Member says has been paid out to help Canadian farmers as being money that would not have been paid out were it not for this Government is really not being fair or accurate since those programs have been established for many years and would have triggered pay-outs even if the House were not sitting. The way he is portraying this to the House is not accurate and I just wanted to make sure that the record was made clear.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out, I was not nearly finished reading my list. If the Hon. Member wants—

Ms. Copps: What about grapes?

Mr. Caldwell: I could keep on reading the list, but I will not do that. Just off the top of my head, I could mention the fact that this Government took an initiative to save UCO in Ontario, something which is now in a profitable position. How much has the capital gains tax exemption of $500,000 helped farmers? How much has 4 per cent and lower interest rates helped the Canadian farmer?

Ms. Copps: The UCO assistance came from the federal Government before you, you should keep your facts straight.

Mr. Caldwell: The Hon. Member should know—

Ms. Copps: I certainly know because I was in the provincial legislature at the time.

Mr. Caldwell: The Hon. Member should know that the Government came to the rescue of the UCO this past year.

Ms. Copps: And they did it under previous Liberal administrations so you should get your facts straight.

Mr. Caldwell: I think I know what the facts are. This Government put somewhere in the area of $7 million into the UCO program and UCO is now back on a profitable basis and serving the interests of the farmers of Ontario.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif), for questions or comments.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I think the comments made by the Hon. Member opposite are simply absurd. It is like asking: What have you been doing since September 4? and getting the following answer: Listen, we paid so many billion dollars in family allowances, so many billion in Old Age Security benefits and so many billion in Unemployment Insurance benefits. All these payments arise from legislation that has been in effect for years.

If you want us to consider what you referred to, of which you apparently are very proud, I would ask you this... I represent the interests of Quebec producers. You mentioned 90 achievements. My question is: How many of those 90 achievements affect or concern Quebec producers? You also talked about more than one billion dollars. How many of those more than one billion dollars went to Quebec producers? Finally, I would like to know what you have done about the real issues. What about the $13 million that pork producers expected to receive? Thirteen million compared to one billion is peanuts. Why did you not pay up? What about the dairy policy you promised for the first of August? What are you waiting for? You promised that during the election campaign.

As for stabilization... Look at the newspaper articles... There are Quebec Members in this House! Read the papers—and I can assure you farmers read them—read what they say about stabilization, and I think you will have to change your tune somewhat.

[English]

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wishes to debate the pros and cons of Bill C-25, I think he should do so when Bill C-25 comes before the House again. However, I would say that—

Mr. Boudria: We are debating your speech.

Mr. Caldwell: I do not want to debate that now because I know that the Hon. Member has some opinions and I respect his opinions. I also have some opinions as a Member from Ontario.

As far as the initiatives that have been taken for the Province of Quebec go, there are many listed. I do not particularly want to read the list at the present time, but I do recall that on June 19, 1985, the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans opened a $16-million research facility at Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu, Quebec. That is just one of the things that have been done. There are many more but—

Ms. Copps: Who planned it?

Mr. Caldwell: The Hon. Member asked if I could find an example and I quickly found one for him. There are many, many more here. The Province of Quebec has not been neglected by this Government.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Caldwell). Obviously, as evidenced by his speech, the Hon. Member has made a great contribution to this House not only in debating agriculture but in debating this particular provision. I would like to question the Hon. Member about the matter of political will.

Certainly opposition Members are correct in saying that there are many government programs that do in fact transcend the political events of year to year, programs which continue regardless of elections. Conversely, there are some matters that require political will, the will of the cabinet table, the will of the caucus and the will of the Members of the House of Commons. These include the fuel tax rebate, the capital gains tax exemption and the decision to undertake a comprehensive review of the Farm Credit Corpotation. As well, they include the moratorium on farm credit foreclosures. It should not be mistakenly believed that these are things that came from the last Government because even members of the Liberal Party would have to admit that these are new measures that require political will.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member who has made such an excellent contribution to this debate so far about political will. Does this Government have a political will toward agriculture that, in his mind, is any different from the political will of the Liberal Party of Canada?

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, that is certainly a very important question coming from a very honourable Member who represents a rural riding. I am sure he keeps very close contact with his constituents.

I am finding, and I am sure the Hon. Member is finding the same thing, that once we explain the Government policy on agriculture to our constituents, they are very, very pleased with what we are doing. They realize that we have a very tough job to do. We are going through a time that has been one of the toughest times for many, many years. However, the people realize that this Government is willing to try to do the impossible and to try to straighten out a mess that was created by bad management over the past 15 years and a Government that neglected agriculture.

• (1720)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is over. Without commenting on the speeches which have been made on this matter thus far, I would like to ask future speakers to be more specific and address Bill C-42.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I am of course very pleased to be taking part in this debate, but, with your permission, I would like to digress somewhat before starting my comments. In answer to the question I asked earlier, my hon. colleague opposite said that the Government's achievements included a research centre in Saint-Jean, which cost $16 million. I might remind my hon. friend that this project is merely the implementation phase of a project we had already developed. If my time had not run out, I would have asked him what happened to the centre for Victoriaville, which was cancelled outright. This was a project worth $16 million.

An Hon. Member: The Conservatives did that. Incredible!

Mr. Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): That being said, Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to Bill C-42, which is actually a very short Bill, since it contains only one section I find important and that is Section 3, which says: The Corporation is hereby dissolved. One section, and there you have the whole Bill. However, I think it is a real tragedy to see something that had become a veritable institution, and that was the result of an unprecedented round of consultations, die like this.

Canagrex was the result of consultations with all the main parties concerned, without a single exception. Throughout those consultations, a number of concerns and issues were raised. However, I beleive that anyone who took the trouble to really understand and analyze the potential of Canagrex understood that the Corporation would have a positive impact on the entire agro-food industry. Bill C-42 has proved to be a golden opportunity to see the true colours of this administration.

For the first time since September 4, 1984, we can see what kind of policy this Government has with respect to agriculture. Of course, they have tried to camouflage their problems with all sorts of mechanisms and strategies. They were supposed to make a number of decisions and then postponed them, giving the impression or inferring or saying that consultations were not yet completed and a decision would be delayed. I am of course referring to the dairy policy, which was supposed to be known or made public on August 1. This is the first time we have been able to grasp something tangible and significant about this Government's true intentions and its true face. Without going very far back into the past, it is interesting to note how this Government has been administering the country and what kind of image it gave the people, particularly those in the agro-food industry. Of course I am more familiar with the commitments and promises made by different spokesmen to the agricultural community throughout Quebec. For instance I have in mind a man who should be taken at his word—at least I would think so since I am referring to the Minister of Public Works, the Hon. Roch La Salle—who stated in rather colourful words before the largest gathering of farmers in Longueuil: We in the Conservative Party have learned that a man must eat if he wants to go on living. As you can appreciate, it was his way of saying that agriculture was a basic industry, that it was one of the Government's priorities, and he went on to explain what would be done in that sector. That was the principle which, in a way, summed up the electoral commitments to the food producing industry.

Some of those commitments were indeed very specific and very formal. Among other things, and I mentioned this earlier, the Minister of Public Works put his signature to a $13 million symbolic cheque. Well, Mr. Speaker, they are telling you today that they spent over $1 billion to promote agriculture, but they just could not spare the $13 million for pork producers.

They also promised a long term dairy policy. Knowing as we do that this strategic sector is the mainstay of Quebec's agriculture, we can readily imagine the anxiety and concern of producers who have now been waiting for this famous long term policy since August 1 last. It has been put off, practically hidden as a result of what appears to be a tactic of further consultations, but it seems quite clear that we should be prepared for rather drastic cut-backs in that sector.

And then the matter of stabilization about which they said: We will do absolutely nothing! We will not tamper with that. We will consult you and, after reaching a consensus, we will go ahead. We all know what has happened to stabilization. Indeed my colleague opposite was again patting himself on the back a moment ago when he said: This is something fantastic, something of which we are quite proud, something which has been in the interest of Canadian food producers. Unfortunately that is not my opinion and since my opinion might be viewed as biased, or demagogic as my colleague from Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) said earlier today in a statement under Standing Order 22, because it seems that we do not have the research facilities of Members opposite—

But I think that he then opened the door for me so that I could indicate to you ... not the personal view of the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif), but what those who live and develop in close contact with the Quebec farm industry think that you have done since you came to power on September 4, 1984.

Concerning the dairy policy, I should like to quote from an article which was published in La terre de chez nous and which was entitled "Western cereals preferred to milk. Ottawa has broken its promise". I quote:

> Brian Mulroney's Conservative Government has broken another of its election promises. It is already certain that the long term dairy policy will not be announced on August 1.

Here is another quote under the following heading:

> "Quebec farm industry will go through a difficult year following the major gains made in 1984. The producers' indebtedness has increased by 25 per cent—

Here is another quote referring again to the dairy policy:

Dairy producers would like Wise—

—the Minister of Agriculture—

—to know that he might find the weather in late summer quite hot and stormy.

Another quote, again from La terre de chez nous:

The industrial milk industry is in a crisis. New reductions in quotas would have a catastrophic impact on the Quebec economy. Milk producers do not want any more cut backs. They have done their share. They are now calling on the Prime Minister.

These are newspaper quotes which clearly indicate what we are aware of Quebec farm producers in general and dairy producers in particular. The Government should not brag about its performance, for the report I have just made of the situation in Quebec is far from good.

I referred earlier to the hog industry where the Government had promised $13 million.

The Federation of Hog Producers will sue the Federal Government.

And I quote:

Early last week, the Federation of Hog Producers decided to sue the Agricultural Stabilization Board, a Federal Government organization.

The Federation hopes in this way to recover the $13 million which were more than promised to them, as the Minister of Public Works signed a symbolic cheque in the amount of $1 billion and some million dollars. However, the Government cannot find $13 million to fulfil its election promises.

Let us go on to another matter about which the Government seems also to be very proud, the stabilization measure, Bill C-25. I would invite the Quebec Members to speak up on this issue, if there are any here.

This is what we find in the newspaper La terre de chez nous of August 23, 1985, and I quote:

Quebec farmers protest that they have been betrayed—he also denounces the 58 Conservative Members of Parliament, "these men and women who have abandoned us at the first opportunity and who did not stand up to oppose passage of Bill C-25".

This was said by Mr. Proulx, who is President of the UPA. These are not the words of your Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif), but of Mr. Jacques Proulx, President of the UPA.

According to Mr. Proulx, this is an unacceptable intrusion in Quebec affairs, but the Quebec Conservatives did not even realize it.

Here is another quote on the same issue: "The UPA is outraged!"

This article also deplores the way Bill C-25 was debated in the House and given hasty passage at the very end of June.

Let us look at other newspaper cuttings. I shall deal with them more quickly and give only their titles: "Stabilization Bill—Systematic Hypocrisy in Ottawa." These are the comments of Mr. Jacques Proulx, the President of the UPA. I am not the one to say all this.

There is more: "The most centralizing legislation ever adopted by the Federal Government" "Garon—" and this is someone that my colleagues from Quebec are supposed to know; this is Mr. Jean Garon, the Quebec Minister of Agriculture,"—Garon would accept a Parliamentary Commission on Agriculture." He also added: "What the Conservatives have proposed is worst than what we had before."

Mr. Boudria: These are the comments of a Member of the Parti québécois with conservative leanings!

Mr. Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Here is another comment from Mr. Garon: "Bill C-25 will not be accepted in Quebec."

As concerns the Crow's Nest, if I refer to the Longueuil meeting—

• (1730)

[English]

Mr. Gormley: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have been listening with interest to the Hon. Member as I am trying to improve my French. I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his speech. However, he has been referring to the Crowsnest Pass freight rate, Bill C-25, and a number of other subjects, and I am just wondering precisely what he is trying to get at and if the rule of relevance applies in this debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The point raised by the Hon. Member is, of course, well taken by the Chair. However, prior speakers in this debate have spoken in general terms on matters of agriculture. I made a comment prior to the speech of the Hon. Member and I hope he, like other Members in this House, speaks to the Bill as much as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the Hon. Member had listened to my remarks, I think he would not have voiced that objection.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-42 deals with Canagrex. Canagrex was created for the purpose of promoting internationally the Canadian agro-food industry. To my knowledge, agro-food activities cover milk, apples, as well as all other products referred to in my earlier clippings.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I was coming back to Bill C-42 but you will allow me, before I do so, perhaps more specifically and with relevance to Bill C-42 . . . I would like, with your permission, to simply refer to a last clipping headed: "Farm bankruptcies" This is how I relate that to Bill C-42.

"Farm bankruptcies—figures and human impact" Over the last year, there has been a 20 per cent increase in the number of farms sold through TCN because of bankruptcy. While we look at bankruptcy data, we also consider the social, environmental and human damage caused by bankruptcies.

Mr. Speaker, Canadian farming has reached a point where it is essential, absolutely necessary that government should help, support and invest in agriculture. Unfortunately, the farming industry does not have the ability to pay, the capacity to create organizations which would promote its products overseas or on foreign markets. That was indeed the role of Canagrex. That was the purpose, the ultimate goal of that corporation and it is now being destroyed through Bill C-42. That purpose would have been, in difficult periods such as the one Canadian farming is now going through, to open up markets, to help producers faced with tremendous difficulties make ends meet, and hope that at some point in time they will increase their production and thereby make their operations more viable.

Canagrex is and was more specifically in my view an essential tool, for a number of reasons but especially because Canadians, as we all know, do have a very large country with a relatively small population, unfortunately. We are 25 million Canadians. But because of this large country of ours, we have the opportunity, the possibility and the power to develop our farms, to expect to profit from those extremely large farms, to produce, to foster, to develop products which unfortunately our population cannot absorb in all cases, as seen from that little test.

So we must hope, if we want to develop farming, to take our rightful place on foreign markets, to take our place among countries which are privileged with having a much larger population than ours. But the demise of Canagrex, this Government's move to abolish it, mean that suddenly, they are flushing down the drain that absolutely vital tool needed for the Canadian economy really to expand.

We also are in a situation where people talk about competition, and productivity, where everyone agrees that the agro-food industry is no exception, that there are incredible economies of size to be sought out, unbelievable economies to be expected by investing in research, which directly results in increased productivity, and increased production. Canagrex was the tool designed to find markets for those surpluses, and of which clearly the economy has an obvious need.

I feel that the Canagrex move is a direct, unacceptable and most cruel attack against small family farms. Of course, those who have millions of dollars invested in that industry can afford to have a salesman, a sales force, public relations teams to sell their products. However, the small farmers or the families who need every minute of their time to make both ends meet cannot invest in the exploration for new markets and cannot put new funds into marketing. And this was precisely the purpose of Canagrex. And this Government which said it was in sympathy and wanted to support agriculture dissolves Canagrex after just about everybody has recognized its effectiveness and the fact that it could have been a necessary tool.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that Bill C-42 is by a long way the best proof that the concerns and the awareness of this Government are to a much larger extent related to multinationals, banks, big corporations than to small family businesses. This Government wants to apply to the agri-food industry the rules of capitalism and competition to the extent that this will result in countless bankruptcies and breakups, and larger corporations will gradually take over the small family businesses which in my opinion are the true fabric of our agriculture, especially in Quebec.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Nystrom: I should like to ask a question, Mr. Speaker.

I agree with many things which the Hon. Member has just said, but I wonder why the Liberal Government took so long to set up Canagrex. I know Mr. Whelan quite well and I agree with the project, but the Liberal party was in power for 20 years, Mr. Trudeau was there for 15 years, Mr. Whelan for 12 or 13 years. Why did it take so long to set up an organization such as Canagrex, considering the fact that it began operating 18 months ago?

Mr. Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): My hon. colleague knows perfectly well, Mr. Speaker, since he probably took part in the debate, that the Canagrex Bill did not come out of the blue. Consultations were held for several months and even years, and I know, because I was here in the House, that in 1979, the first step was made, and at that time, if I remember correctly, the Progressive Conservatives, the party opposite, had expressed a number of objections, so that the realization of this concept, which could have come in the eighties, had to be postponed. But the Canagrex Corporation was a fact, and it was generally recognized, and I would like to take this opportunity to recall some of what was said by my hon. friend of the New Democratic Party who said earlier that the Auditor General had to admit that this Crown corporation was one of the best administered and best organized and one likely to generate the best results.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), for a supplementary.

Mr. Nystrom: I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I approve of Canagrex. But why did the Liberal Party wait twenty years before proceeding to its creation? You referred to consultations that lasted several months, I agree with that, but why wait twenty years? Because you must not forget that Mr. Pearson won the 1963 elections and Mr. Trudeau those of 1968. Producers experienced so many problems. So why did it take twenty years? I know the Liberal Party is slow, but my God!

Mr. Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): The Liberal Party is infinitely faster than the New Democrats.

Mr. Boudria: More dynamic also. The New Democrats will never be in office.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Here is my answer. Parts of it lie in the question itself, Mr. Speaker. One must go back twenty years. My colleague said that was twenty years ago. The premise of his question seems to me somewhat odd since twenty years ago, we were not even capable of a production such as the one we had in 1982-83, and the problems Quebec's and Canada's agriculture experienced in the 80s cannot be compared to those of the 60s. I think that in reality the appropriateness of that corporation appeared in the 80s. Even though there might have been a delay of one, two or three years, the parliamentary system being what it is, I do not think it is surprising that the corporation was established under our administration. We can see how slowly things evolve under the new administration.

[English]

Mr. Brightwell: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and some questions. I listened carefully to what the Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) said. I thought he may have spoken a little about how Canagrex duplicated the services that are otherwise available within Government and private enterprise, about the fact that we sell 40 per cent of our products of private enterprise abroad, about how Canagrex only succeeded to the small extent that it did because it was able to extend credit, and about how it competed with the private enterprise that opened the Japanese, Polish and Chinese markets.

Instead of speaking of those things, the Member spoke of how the federal Government is now interfering in Quebec—I forget the term he used—by offering Quebec, under the tripartite plan, 3 per cent of its domestic sales if it wishes to come into the stabilization plan. I do not know how he believes that the Government is somehow hurting Quebec by offering to give it money for its scheme. I do not know how the Member can talk about getting additional $13 million from the Agricultural Stabilization Act when the people who would receive that money were already protected by a Government-funded bipartite scheme paying their expenses as well as a specialized wage. I believe that last year they got approximately $28 a hog and they still wished to have the $6.75 per hog which came out of the Agricultural Stabilization Act.

Does the Member for Richmond-Wolfe think it is fair for a Government which must look after the whole of Canada to give hog farmers in Quebec the stabilization plan for the 2.1 million hogs in the Quebec market on top of the very rich plan which is in the Quebec arena at the present time?

[Translation]

Mr. Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): What I would like for Quebec finally is an amount similar to that Western Canada is getting in the first place. Secondly, you raised three points: To start with, you said a number of factors and circumstances affected the sale of farm products overseas. I would like to say that, in terms of farm business, your notion of profit must be wrong, for if it were to be taken to the letter, you would just have caused about 80 percent of the farm businesses to go bankrupt. This is an area where the Government has no choice but to get financially involved. It has to support Canagrex, and even if Canagrex had done nothing else but to provide for its management needs, there was a justification for it, and its activities should be allowed to go on.

The problems of agriculture are so desperate that the Government has to support it. You mentioned stabilization schemes. The answer is dead simple: if you have two programs, with a net result of $10 for one and $1.50 for the other, knowing you as I do, you are bound to opt for the $10 one. That is what we have now. In Quebec, we have a stabilization program which is very generous to producers. There is no damn sense in what you guys are saying, that is: get rid of your program and get in on ours.

The third aspect is hog production. On the matter of hogs, since you are making so much fuss about equity, I will tell you that hog producers are taxpayers just like you, they pay the same taxes as you do. Why should they be deprived of their fair share, the same share as Ontario and Western Canada got, and which they are denied for bureaucratic reasons? That amount is due, the Minister of Public Works pledged it, and it should be paid.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my hon. colleague on an excellent speech. He is clearly able to defend the interests of Quebec in this House, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask him if I was right in understanding that the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle), the Hon. Member for Joliette, during the election campaign, did indeed promise to give $13 million to the producers of Quebec and even wrote out a cheque, and that cheque was made out of rubber, as they say in my riding. Is that indeed what the Minister of Public Works did, and if so, how can it be said that such a Minister, and such a Government are indeed interested in agriculture when they keep backing off from their promises? Did I understand correctly?

Mr. Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): That is indeed what happened and there was I believe ample coverage of that matter in the newspapers. The present Minister of Public Works who was in a generous mood, signed his name—he was not the honourable at the time—Roch La Salle, on a $13 million cheque. He did much more than that, because that is one problem. It is a 13 million problem. But there is another one, a $450,000 problem, the sheep problem. There has been less talk about the smaller producers, because there are fewer of them to speak up and defend their interests. But on that day, in Longueuil, the Minister of Public Works also signed his name on a $450,000 cheque.

Those sheep producers now have to go to court to get what is rightfully theirs. And hog producers have done exactly the same thing, they had to institute proceedings against the Government in order to get back those $13 million. This is quite unacceptable in my opinion! It is unacceptable that this problem should have been allowed to drag on for so long and the reason we were given is that if we paid those $13 million, it would bring about a more or less favourable decision from the United States.

The Minister even recognized in Committee that he had consulted the Americans about the Stabilization Act but that he had not take into account the demands of the province of Quebec. Therefore, the Minister who was obviously feeling very uncomfortable and unhappy about paying those $13 million, because it would affect a decision yet to be taken . . . So, that decision was taken and it was in fact acceptable. We asked the question: Why not pay those $13 million? We were given another reason. Because of that, unfortunately, those to whom that money belonged have to go to court to get what is rightfully theirs.

● (1750)

[English]

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, this is an interesting afternoon in the House. Anyone who was watching this debate—although I am not sure anyone would want to watch what has been going on here—would have to conclude that the Government is made up of a bunch of shysters—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rossi: You are the one who said it.

Mr. Mayer: Let me repeat that anyone listening to what the Opposition has been saying about us would think that no Government Member who is a farmer would dare to go home on the weekend to visit our constituents because the farmers are totally upset with us and at variance with everything we do.

Certainly there are things we would like to do as a Government that we are unable to do for various reasons. However, we have been able to accomplish some of our goals and I think that the Opposition would be more credible if it would acknowledge some of our achievements. We realize that the Opposition will condemn us on most matters but surely they must recognize that we have accomplished some of our goals.

The Opposition may object to our stance on Canagrex but those Members who were here for the part of the debate leading up to the creation of Canagrex will know that there were some major problems associated with that Bill. None of us dealing with the Bill at that time could say anything against the necessity for advertising or financing and promotion of agricultural products. Canada is more dependent than the United States or the European Community on exports of agricultural products for the well-being of its farmers. We recognized that but we also disagreed with a major proposal in the Bill that Canagrex be authorized to own and further process products. We supported the provision of the Bill dealing with the financing and promotion of agriculture and would have been happy to support it on that basis. Perhaps, once Canagrex had a reputation and the expertise was developed in the agency it could have been expanded further as needed. However, Canagrex should not have been created with so many extra powers.

When we took office we took a different approach with respect to Canagrex. Again, let me point out some of the action our Government has taken. The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) says that we have done nothing.

Mr. Althouse: No, I did not. I said that those things would have been done anyway.

Mr. Mayer: Let me finish. He said that we have done nothing that has required initiative on the part of the Government. That is entirely not the case. Let me explain some of the initiatives our Government has taken. Without our initiative there would not have been an interim payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act which pumped some $250 million into the Province of Saskatchewan. I have stated in the House previously that this initiative was supported by the Opposition and we appreciate that. It benefited western farmers. It is wrong for the Opposition to say that we have done nothing that has required initiative on our part. It is simply not the case that the action we have taken is a result of ongoing Government programs.

Furthermore, for the first time, we made use of the provisions under the meat import law which resulted in a reduction in the amount of meat coming into the country. Regardless of what is said, the amount of meat coming to Canada from offshore will be smaller this year than it was in 1984 as a result of the initiatives taken by this Government.

The Opposition talks about the November 8 economic statement. The Minister of Finance found over $100 million to use as a rebate on farm fuel. Surely Members opposite will not stand in the House to say that they are opposed to that measure and state that objection to farmers in their ridings. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) froze the seaway tolls. That was an initiative of the Government that saved producers a significant amount of money. That initiative will benefit farmers.

Last spring, we took the initiative to study the sugar beet industry in this country. It was an initiative that resulted in an interim measure to allow producers in Alberta, Manitoba and Quebec to plant sugar beets. Although we were unable to reach an agreement in Alberta, and Alberta producers did not plant sugar beets, there would have been no sugar beet industry at all without that initiative.

We made a campaign commitment to establish a procedure by which tobacco farmers could establish a marketing board. That was one of the first pieces of legislation passed in the House, in fulfilment of that commitment. However, listening to the Opposition, one would think that we have done absolutely nothing for agriculture and are totally abandoning that sector. That is simply not the case and I think the Opposition would have much more credibility and add a great deal to the demeanor of the House if they would give us credit for some of the initiatives we have taken. The Opposition may criticize the Government for not taking enough action or not taking it soon enough and give us its suggestions but it should not be totally negative and disregard everything we have accomplished. It does not do the Opposition, the House or the agricultural industry any good at all—

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister blames us for all the sins of the world, but I would like to remind him that the purpose of today's debate is to allow Members of Parliament to speak on Canagrex and not to give the Government credit it takes for itself.

I would urge him to speak on the Bill and not on what he calls in other—

[English]

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Opposition does not want to hear about those positive steps we have taken on behalf of farmers. However, if it is fair for a Member of the Opposition to take 20 minutes to do nothing but berate the Government about matters which have nothing to do with Canagrex, at least it should be fair for a Member of the Government to take some time to demonstrate what the Government has done for agriculture. I suggest that it is just common courtesy and good manners, if nothing else.

Let me make some remarks about Canagrex. We all recognize that one of the reasons for the creation of Canagrex was that farmers need as much export earnings as possible. We have taken some initiatives in terms of agricultural financing. As of yesterday, a program under the Export Development Corporation was established to assist in short-term financing with respect to bulk agricultural products. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) is presently in the Soviet Union conducting trade promotion in that part of the world. I was pleased to be invited to the Soviet Union in June. That country is our largest customer for grain. We have not abandoned Canadian farmers in their efforts to export products. I repeat that the Opposition is wrong in using this Bill as a basis for saying that the Government has totally abandoned agriculture. That is certainly not the case. I see that you are signalling that my time is almost up, Mr. Speaker.

One of the other things Canagrex was attempting to do was to provide more advertisement and more market intelligence. We are currently doing that through increased awareness around the world via our embassies. That is the kind of thing going on and about which Hon. Members need to know in terms of this Government taking its responsibilities and seeing that we continue to export as farmers. Canadian farmers have a tremendous record around the world. We are very well thought of.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: That is one thing on which we all agree. I shall conclude on that happy note.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock p.m., the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.01 p.m.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that Bill C-62, an Act respecting Employment equity, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

She said: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise today to move second reading of Bill C-62. Sir, this Bill is an historic piece of legislation. For the first time in the history of this country we have legislation before this House which enshrines the principle of equality in the work place throughout Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Sir, we have legislation that guarantees the removal of employment barriers for women, native people, handicapped persons and visible minorities. This Bill is about opportunity, because employment equity is about opportunity, opportunity for Canadians everywhere to earn a decent living and participate fully in our society, opportunity for people to be judged by what they can do. Bill C-62 is a crucial step forward, the first major step in ensuring equal access to new opportunities for all Canadians.

[Translation]

The fact that we are giving employment equity legal status creates an important precedent. We are showing, as legislators, that we are committed to bringing greater social justice to the work place. We are proving that this House believes strongly that every Canadian is entitled to equal opportunities for employment, and furthermore, we are promoting a spirit of fairness, co-operation and understanding which, I firmly believe, will be reflected throughout the country.

[English]

That spirit of fairness which I speak of, Mr. Speaker, that same spirit of fairness which is fundamental to the legislation, is also reflected in the commitment to equity and equality which characterizes the Canadian job strategy, because employment equity is fundamental to the Canadian job strategy. Again, Sir, that spirit of fairness is reflected in the announcement that was made by myself and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) just two weeks ago. From now on social assistance recipients, many of whom are really the very people affected by this particular piece of legislation, will have opportunities for training and employment that were really not accessible to them heretofore.

The legislation before us today breaks new ground. It is not enough just to say that we are for equal opportunity. For years people have been saying that what we need is real change, we need to shake up the workplace. For many years women and other target groups have demanded legislation on employment equity. Sir, we are providing it. We have gone beyond the removal of barriers. We have demanded in this legislation that employers take special measures to ensure that women, native people, handicapped persons and visible minorities are able to participate fully in the workplace. We are telling employers: look at your operations and make the change now.

This legislation represents a milestone for many Canadians in their struggle to gain proper recognition in the workplace, recognition which, I may say, is long overdue. For too long, Sir, Canadian women have been denied a chance to reach their full earning potential. Native people and visible minorities have been refused job interviews, not because of their competence but because of the colour of their skin. Sir, disabled persons have been rejected because it was thought that it might be too difficult to accommodate them. This Government is not prepared to sit by and let discrimination, whether overt or unintentional, deny these people a chance to get ahead, to grow, to show what they can do and to contribute all their talents, skills and abilities to our society.

This legislation testifies to our readiness to act in the interests of fairness and social justice, to eliminate obvious cases of discrimination and to root out less obvious ones. This kind of systemic discrimination has unfortunately become part of traditional employment practices.

Fairness and equality in the workplace is not just a watchword for social justice. It is also, I may say, a vital element in our economic growth and development. Put simply, we need these people. We need their talent, their skills and their energy if we are to remain productive as a society and as a country.

We face tough competition in the years ahead. If we are to be able to face the challenge posed by rapid technological change and new trade patterns, then we will have to draw on the full range of human resources. We need to build a strong, highly motivated, skilled workforce that will be able to compete with anyone, anywhere in the world, that will be able to increase our productivity and efficiency.

Bill C-62 is the first step, the first step in mobilizing a full human resource potential for the huge challenge that we have ahead.

What does the Bill do, Mr. Speaker? It requires all federal employers, all federally regulated businesses, which have 100 or more employees, whether Crown corporations or businesses in the private sector, to remove employment barriers and to eliminate discrimination in the workplace. This legislation covers all federally regulated employers in the fields of banking, transportation, communication and natural resources.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, employers will have one year to put the appropriate systems in place in order to collect essential data. They will have to examine their hiring methods without delay and find ways to correct unfair practices that have been tolerated far too long. It follows that changes must be initiated as soon as possible. Employers who fail to comply with the obligation to file reports will be liable to a fine of up to $50,000. Each year, a consolidation of these reports will be included in a progress report to Parliament.

[English]

Under this legislation, employers must identify barriers to target groups, and they must remove them. They must adopt special measures that will involve senior level commitment and management accountability. They must begin immediately hiring, training and developing target group members in all areas of their organization, by moving women into occupations from which they have been excluded in the past. They must show the progress they have made.

Beginning in 1988, these employers will be required by law to report annually to Parliament. This means that by January, 1987, just over a year from now, employers must have their systems in place so that they can collect the date needed to provide a full report on 1987 operations.

All employers must provide a detailed breakdown of their labour force by designated group so that we can check the status of designated group members within occupational areas. Employers must report on hirings, on promotions and on terminations of designated group members, and they must supply specific data on the salary ranges of designated group members within the organization. The annual reports, which are submitted by employers, will be made available for public scrutiny and media scrutiny across the country. We will bring the strongest possible pressure to bear on employers—the force of public opinion.

Data will be made available to the Canadian Human Rights Commission. This means that for the first time the commission will have access to data on the participation of women, of native people, of disabled persons and of visible minorities. It will have that data available, data which it has never had before and therefore has never permitted the commission to do the job it should. For the first time the commission will be in a position, not only to respond to complaints received, but to initiate its own investigations based upon information contained in a company's report.

Of course, we recognize—and we have been asked about this—that this will place an extra burden or demand upon the Canadian Human Rights Commission. For this reason we are committed to providing that commission with the additional resources required to carry out this work. In effect, we will have a two-tiered enforcement system. The first is the court of public opinion, and I can say to Hon. Members on all sides of this Chamber that the court of public opinion is the strongest court there is. As well, we have the full force of the Canadian Human Rights Commission.

Mr. Waddell: As well as the criminal division.

Miss MacDonald: The Hon. Member opposite in the New Democratic Party derides the Canadian Human Rights Commission.

Mr. Waddell: No.

Miss MacDonald: As a Member of Parliament, I am proud that the Canadian Human Rights Commission will be involved in this.

What will we achieve through Bill C-62? First of all, we will ensure that all organizations within federal jurisdiction implement employment equity measures. However, there is a further gain.

[Translation]

We want to show all Canadian employers who are not federally regulated that the underlying principle of employment equity is a concept for the future. I believe that in addition to its regulatory aspect, the Bill introduces an element of change that is very instructive.

By setting an example, we intend to demonstrate that distinctions between black and white, men and women, normal and handicaped do not exist when we are talking about employees. Only one criterion counts: the ability to hold a job. We intend to prove to employers and to all Canadians that employment equity is worthwhile.

I would like to share with the House some comments made recently by the President of Xerox Canada Limited, Mr. David McCamus. During an interview for the Financial Times, he said:

If we consider women as a separate group, we are limiting our scope, and we cannot afford to do so in the competitive world we live in today. To remain competitive, we must be able to tap the broadest possible range of ressources.

● (1120)

[English]

That is the kind of thinking that we want to achieve through Bill C-62, not grudging acceptance but a realization that employment equity makes good sense.

In addition to this legislation we will require federal contractors, that is firms doing business with the Government, to implement employment equity. Businesses with 100 or more employees bidding on contracts for goods and services of $200,000 or more will be subject to stringent employment equity guidelines. A formal review process will monitor this policy. Contractors who fail to live up to their signed declaration of action will be denied the opportunity of competing for future Government business.

This new policy will have a far-reaching impact on Government contractors. It will cover about 500 major Canadian firms and well in excess of half a million employees. This policy will cover federal contracts for goods and services with a projected total dollar value of at least $5 billion. At the same time, we are making vigorous efforts to ensure that all contractors, large and small, implement employment equity.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-62 represents a bold new move. It goes further than any Government in this country, federal or provincial has ever gone. Federal Governments in the past have not touched this issue and provincial Governments have not moved as far in this direction.

The issues it raises are complex and they affect a large number of Canadians. We must move carefully to ensure that measures to achieve this goal, which for far too long has eluded us as a society, are now firmly put in place. I know very well that all Members of this House share in the goal of employment equity and I hope that Members will take this opportunity during this debate to share their ideas and their views on this very critical matter.

I would say that if we lived in a perfect world we really would not need legislation like Bill C-62. Unfortunately, we do not live in that perfect world. As long as we do not, then we have to remain vigilant to see that those who suffer from discrimination have an equal chance to share in the rich potential of this country. This Government intends to be more than vigilant. It intends to act. It intends to redress imbalances in the workplace which have existed for far too long. It intends to create a society of equal opportunity in this country, and this legislation will help to achieve that goal.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, before I deal with the substance of this Bill I simply want to say a few words about the way the Government has organized its House business and the fact that we are debating this Bill today when it was not listed on the list of business announced by the Government House Leader last Thursday. The Government House Leader usually on Thursdays lists the business, the Bills to be debated for the following week. That gives all Parties involved an idea as to how to prepare themselves. This Bill was not so listed. It was not listed the week before or the week before that. However, it was listed four weeks ago but did not proceed.

Because we only heard yesterday about the fact that this Bill would be debated today, our critic on women's issues and our critic on issues facing the handicapped cannot be present to debate the Bill because they have to attend an important women's conference outside of Ottawa. This leaves us unable to debate properly an important Bill like this one. When the Government says that it believes in parliamentary reform, and I believe it is serious about that, it should keep in mind these kinds of situations in which we are not able to give proper consideration and debate to an important Bill.

When the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) rises on Thursday to read to the House the list of Government business, that list should be adhered to unless people are sick or there are important crises that require a change in that list. Aside from those important exceptions, the Bills that are listed on Thursday should be proceeded with in the order announced by the Government House Leader so that all Parties that wish to take part in the debate can prepare themselves and participate in it.

With respect to this Bill, on June 24, 1983, the then Minister of Employment and Immigration appointed Judge Rosalee Abella to head the Royal Commission on Equality in Employment. The Abella Commission was to look into effective and equitable means of eliminating discrimination and promoting employment opportunities for four target groups: women, native people, visible minorities and disabled persons. Judge Abella reported in November 1984 and her report recommended that legislation was required to ensure equality in employment. She said that voluntary measures do not work and that quotas were inappropriate and not recommended by the report. She said that legislation of equality requires an enforcement agency, and she put forward three alternatives for an enforcement agency. She said that all federally regulated agencies should be subject to employment equity legislation. She recommended that provincial compliance of international and federal legislation on equal pay for work of equal value was required and she also recommended a national child care Act.

The appointment of the Abella Commission and the report of Judge Abella was a logical follow-up to the Charter of Rights adopted in 1981 and in particular Article 15, the equality section, which has been in force as of the spring of this year. Further legislation with respect to Article 15 is now being studied by a special committee of this House.

As well, it was a logical follow-up to the passage of the Human Rights Act in 1977 and the establishment of the Human Rights Commission, all important accomplishments along the road to equality, not only in the workplace but in society.

It was the logical follow-up as well to several task force reports prepared in the last Parliament including the task force report on visible minorities which made recommendations along these lines, the task force report entitled Obstacles dealing with the problems of handicapped people and the report on employment opportunities in the eighties. All these task force reports recommended the removal of barriers to equity to designated groups in the labour market-place.

We see that there has been a great change in attitude with respect to the matter of employment equity. According to a Gallup poll that was taken in March 1985, Canadians have reversed their position on equal job opportunities for married women in the past 25 years. Today, 77 per cent of Canadians believe that married women should receive the same opportunities as men in the market-place and only 18 per cent would give men first chance at a job. Some 25 years ago only 23 per cent of Canadians favoured that type of equal opportunity. There has been a great change in attitude in this country with respect to equal opportunity for women in the labour market.

• (1130)

On the other hand, systemic discrimination still exists and is fairly widespread in the country. In a report handed down in May of this year by the Urban Alliance on Race Relations of Toronto that organization reported, and I quote from an article found in The Globe and Mail of May 14:

Bigotry, prejudice and discrimination against visible minorities are widespread and entrenched in policies and practices of small and large employers in the Metro Toronto labour market—

The alliance found that slightly more than half of management participants in the study had negative things to say about racial minorities. Only 9 per cent of 199 large employers stated a firm belief in racial equality. That is rather shocking.

In the alliance's 121-page report entitled No Discrimination Here?, it is stated that 28 per cent of employers said they felt non-whites in general do not have the ability to meet job performance criteria when compared with whites. As I have said, that is shocking indictment with respect to those employers in the Toronto area. I have a feeling that that sort of sentiment exists in other parts of the county as well.

On March 8 of this year, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) made a statement in the House responding to the recommendations of Judge Abella in which she announced the Government's intention to take up some of Judge Abella's recommendations but not all of them. In responding to the Minister on that date I said that the Government's announcement was a step in the right direction but that it was enough. I said that some key Abella recommendations had been left out which should not have been left out.

Bill C-62 which is before us today and which was given first reading on June 27 is intended to carry out some of the intentions announced by the Minister on March 8. In examining the Bill we find that in many respects it is even weaker than the indications made in the Minister's statement of March 8. If we look at Clause 2 of the Bill we will see that it states the purpose of the Bill, which is:

—to achieve equality in the work place so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfilment of that goal, to ameliorate the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and person who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada—

We give full support to the principles and purposes set out in the clause. However, when we look further at the Bill we see that the measures introduced are not adequate to accomplish the goals set out in the Purpose. They do not put forward the sort of measures which were recommended by Judge Abella, nor do we believe that the definition of employer is broad enough. The definition takes in a certain number of employers. For private employers under federal Government jurisdiction, which is a minority of employers in the country, it includes all those who have 100 or more employees. The same is true with respect to employers performing a function on behalf of the Government of Canada, other than a Department as defined in the Financial Administration Act. We find that provision could be strengthened as well.

My principal criticism of the Bill is that it simply instructs employers to introduce employment equity while making no provision for a monitoring agency. There are no penalties for employers who do not move ahead with the introduction of employment equity. It is true that employers must file reports with the Minister and there are penalties if they do not file the reports. However, if the report does not show sufficient progress, the penalty set out in the Bill is for not filing the report as opposed to a penalty for not proceeding with employment equity.

If we look at the Bill we will see that the requirements placed on employers are very vague and subjective. In Clause 4 it states:

An employer shall implement employment equity by

(a) identifying and eliminating each of the employer's employment practices, not otherwise authorized by a law, that results in employment barriers against persons in designated groups;

That leaves to the employer the identification of those employment practices which the employer believes are employment barriers against persons in designated groups. The employers are the ones who decide what the barriers are. The barriers are not spelled out, nor are they defined. The guideline is too vague. There are no firm requirements applied to employers. There are no provisions for policemen or enforcement agencies and no penalties for employers who do not move ahead. There are only penalties if they do not report. Judge Abella clearly stated in her report that this was not acceptable and that it does not work. She stated that voluntary measures with guidelines have been tried, they have not worked and that it is unfortunate but that is the fact.

When we look at the wording of the report it states that the commission has concluded that voluntary measures are an unsatisfactory response to the pervasiveness of a systemic discrimination in the Canadian workplace and it has therefore recommended that all federally regulated employers be required by legislation to implement employment equity. Judge Abella also states that the commission's review of the American experience of mandatory affirmative action confirmed that legislated enforceable requirements are essential to the success of affirmative action programs. The commission concluded that the enforcement of employment equity requires an independent agency which has a qualified staff familiar with labour relations, employment systems and human rights issues and which has sufficient resources to discharge its mandate. The Bill does not do any of that. It does not have the provision for an enforcement agency. It does not have clear-cut requirements for employers with respect to employment equity.

What do others say with respect to this measure? I have given Hon. Members my criticism of the Bill, but what do others say? I have in my hand a release put out by a group called the Coalition on Employment Equity for Persons with Disabilities which announced:

> Over 100 consumer activists and agency advocates met on April 10 at the Advocacy Resource Centre for the Handicapped to form a new coalition with the express purpose of ensuring that the recommendations of Judge Rosalie Abella's Royal Commission Report on Equity in Employment are put into effect by government.

In a statement prepared by the coalition it says that the proposed government plan, that is, this Bill, is "ineffective and unacceptable". The coalition states that the program has no effective enforcement mechanism and what is required is equal access to jobs. The report goes on to state that the Government appears to have rejected the recommendations of both the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped in its report Obstacles and those of the Abella Royal Commission.

Further in this regard I read from a statement of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women as reported in The Gazette of September 17. The council says that it wants Ottawa to put sharper teeth in its Bill to force Crown corporations and federally regulated companies to hire more women and minorities.

A few moments ago I referred to the Urban Alliance on Race Relations of Toronto. The alliance also put out a statement which it distributed to all Members of Parliament in which is set out a criticism of this Bill. I quote from the statement in part:

> What is missing from the legislation is the following: (1) one central enforcement and standard-setting agency for all four sectors—departments, crown corporations, contractors, and federally-regulated businesses, with powers to:
> (1) Define program requirements;
> (2) Set standards for goals and timetables;
> (3) Receive, analyze, and publish employers' workforce data;
> (4) Impose program requirements and penalties on non-complying employers;

The alliance states that the legislation is missing mandatory programs for all four sectors and that it is also missing contract compliance for all government contractors with over 50 employees and $200,000 worth of government contracts per year.

I also refer to a report in which a good cross-section of business also agreed that enforceable standards are required if there is to be equity of employment in the workplace. I have a quote of William McEwen, Chairman of the Resources and Equal Opportunity Committee of the U.S. National Association of Manufacturers. He said, and I quote:

● (1140)

> There's no such thing as voluntary compliance with affirmative action laws. If voluntary compliance worked, Moses would have come down from the mountain with the Ten Guidelines.

The article goes on to say that if all employers are going to be treated equally, and if we are going to see real advances among employers, we will need clear-cut standards for employment equity which are enforceable.

Several of my colleagues, as I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, have responsibility for the designated groups referred to in this Bill. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin), is responsible for the status of women for our Party, and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), was the former critic for the status of women. The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) is responsible for visible minorities. The Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) is responsible for the handicapped and the Hon. Member for Cochrane Superior (Mr. Penner) is responsible for Indians and native people. These issues are all touched by this Bill and these Hon. Members will all want to put on record their views as to how this Bill does not satisfy those designated groups in the way that it should. I am sure they will want to participate in this debate.

In committee, Mr. Speaker, we will want a full opportunity for these designated groups to be heard. We would like them to have an opportunity to give their views to the committee. As a result of those hearings, we would hope that the Minister will leave the door open to amendments so that this Bill can be made a much better Bill as a result of the committee system.

We have moved into a new era with respect to committees and if we are serious about greater powers for committees, I would hope that whatever committee deals with the Bill, after hearing many of the things I have said here today, will bring forward amendments and that the Minister will agree to those amendments.

This Bill attempts to move in the right direction. It is a small step in the right direction but it is inadequate and a disappointment. It does not implement the Abella recommendations and it does not satisfy many of the designated groups, nor the Official Opposition.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I believe there is no doubt that employment equity is the goal which all in this House share. I believe the whole area of employment equity is very, very important.

What we are really talking about today is a need in this country for greater fairness and for more jobs. We are talking about fairness in jobs for the women of Canada who still face massive discrimination in the workplace whether in the federal Government, the provincial or municipal Government, or the private sector. What we are talking about is fairness in jobs for the disabled Canadians who, because of their disability, face even more problems when they try to get a job.

We are talking about fairness in jobs for visible minorities who, because of the colour of their skin or other characteristics, face discrimination when seeking a job, and we are also talking about fairness and justice for native Canadians who, despite the fact that they were the first Canadians and have lived here for hundreds of years, face perhaps more discrimination than anyone else when it comes to job training and jobs throughout Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, on September 4 last year, the Governemnt was given a massive mandate. During that election campaign there was a lot of talk about job creation, but this country still has 1.5 million unemployed, which means an unemployment rate of 10.3 per cent.

The situation is even worse for Canadian women and minority groups including visible minorities, the handicapped and our native peoples. Despite the fact that we live in a very rich country with a great deal of natural ressources, and that we have a large number of highly educated people, there still is a lot of discrimination in Canada today.

[English]

Even though the Minister is talking very positively, using all kinds of rhetoric and talking about all kinds of goals and objectives in her speech, and even though she is using all kinds of very fine clothing to dress up the Bill, the Bill before the House has major problems. We can see these major problems by examining the Abella Report. The Bill before the House is voluntary in terms of fighting for affirmative action. In fact, the only thing in the Bill which is mandatory, Mr. Speaker, is the requirement that there must be a report every year.

Second, there is no enforcement mechanism in the Bill in any mandatory sense, and the Minister knows that. Third, the Bill does not strike goals and objectives or give timetables for achieving employment equity for women and minorities. Finally, the Bill is not comprehensive. It does not deal with the concept of equal pay for work of equal value, the whole problem of daycare and all kinds of other problems which women and minorities face in this country.

Miss MacDonald: That's already law.

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister says it is already law.

Ms. Mitchell: It's not in force.

Mr. Nystrom: We have all kinds of problems with those concepts—

Miss MacDonald: It doesn't need legislation.

Mr. Nystrom: —as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself said in the election campaign. And if we are going to have real employment equity for women and minority groups, we need a more comprehensive approach.

I do think we need mandatory affirmative action in this country. We do need an independent enforcement agency and goals, objectives and timetables which are spelled out in the legislation, and we do need, I feel, a more comprehensive Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have also talked to many groups in Quebec, and a number of unions and other Quebec groups have expressed their dissatisfaction with this Bill. For instance, the Vice-President of the Fédération des travailleurs du Québec, Marie Pinsonneault, stated during the conference held by the Canadian Labour Congress last weekend that the Bill itself was an insult to Quebecers . . . Even the French text—

[English]

Perhaps we can get the Minister to take a look at this.

[Translation]

The French text does not reflect the intent made clear in the English text. For instance, on page 2—

[English]

—where they speak about employment equity in English.

[Translation]

In French this is:

ÉQUITÉ PROFESSIONNELLE

It is certainly not équité professionnelle but equity for any woman and any minority group in this country. But in the French text, it says:

"ÉQUITÉ PROFESSIONNELLE"

In English, it says employment equity.

Mr. Speaker, I have another example in Section 4 of the same Bill, where we read in English:

[English]

"Plant employment equity by . . ."

[Translation]

But in French, it reads:

L'employeur vise à l'équité professionnelle par les actions suivantes:

Mr. Speaker, "vise" implies an objective but not an obligation.

Mr. Speaker, this is a distortion. There is a distinct difference between the two versions. Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of discrimination against women here in Canada. In the Abella Report, in Table 5, we read that in the executive and administrative groups only 25 per cent are Canadian women, while 75 per cent are men; in the technical, scientific and mathematic groups, only 14 per cent are Canadian women. In Table 10, the Report says that the gap between men's and women's salaries is enormous, when we consider that the average income of women is only 64 per cent of that for men here in Canada. In her report, Judge Abella also says there are many similar statistics that demonstrate very clearly that discrimination exists against native peoples, visible minorities and the handicapped in this country.

[English]

The Canadian experience in affirmative action programs is very short compared to that in the United States. In the United States they had voluntary affirmative action programs for many years. About 25 years ago they decided that they had to have mandatory programs which were enforced because voluntary programs were not working at all.

I have an article which was in The Globe and Mail very recently. The headline is, "U.S. Big Business Bullish on Affirmative Action Laws". In the United States they found that if affirmative action programs are mandatory it is good for big business, for the economy, and for making a profit. Despite the fact that Ronald Reagan has recently been trying to backtrack on some of the mandatory aspects of affirmative action laws in the United States, big business sees it as a very good thing.

In this country we have tried voluntary equal employment opportunity programs in the past. In most cases they have not been very effective. Judge Abella relates in her report how the proportion of women or minority groups which she studied has not been increased in terms of job opportunities and that discrimination has not really lessened in our country despite voluntary programs. We have the Human Rights Commission and human rights laws, but they only act when someone files a complaint. That is why we need some mandatory action in this country.

I think that Bill C-62 is a signpost that the Government has not really learned that voluntary affirmative action programs do not work. It has not really learned from the American experience and it has not really understood what Judge Abella is saying in her report. Mr. Speaker, the Government is trying to reinvent the wheel. It is trying to do the same old thing that has not worked in this country for years and years. This Bill is only a timid step forward which will not change things in any substantive way. The only part of the program that is mandatory is the reporting procedure and there is a $50,000 fine if someone does not report what they are doing in terms of affirmative action. That is all there is in the Bill and both of the Ministers responsible are fully aware of that.

The working paper of the Minister herself which was issued some time ago says that employers will not have to submit specific operational plans for approval by Government or report on specific initiatives. The Minister is saying that there is only the court of pulic opinion. She says that if it is publicized that Company A is doing a bad thing by not hiring enough women or Canadians from various minority groups, the sheer force of public opinion will force it to change its mind. That has not worked in the past, it has not worked in the United States, and I suggest that it is not going to work here now because there are no penalties. It will not bring fairness or more jobs to this country. In fact, on page 195 of her report, Judge Abella said that voluntary programs do not work. The Minister often speaks of this excellent report of Judge Abella and I will quote from it. It reads:

> A voluntary program with a mandatory reporting requirements is nonetheless voluntary in the absence of a requirement to remedy the discriminatory practices disclosed by the information reported.

She says that it is still a voluntary program if reporting is all that is required. In her report she says time and again that it must be mandatory, that there must be timetables, and that we must ensure that the employment equity requirements are enforced by law. That is why we need mandatory affirmative action in this country.

Another thing we need is an enforcement agency, which we do not now have. We have no goals or timetables. All of this is so despite the fact that the Prime Minister, when he was campaigning as Leader of the Opposition, promised that we would have goals, timetables, and objectives in this country to bring about greater fairness for the women of Canada. He said:

> We support the need for effective human resource planning within the federal bureaucracy which includes goals and objectives to achieve parity for women at all levels of government operations commensurate with their skills and expectations. Numerical goals are one of the several measures required. Training and retraining are others.

Where are the numerical goals, where are the targets, where is the timetable, where is the fulfillment of this particular election campaign? I do not see it, Mr. Speaker. It is another promise made and another promise broken by the Prime Minister of Canada. Time and again reference was made to the need for goals and objecties by Judge Abella, the Americans, women, other groups in our society, and the Prime Minister in his appeal for votes. Yet, it is not in the legislation introduced by the Government.

We have heard much talk about the Prime Minister being a union man, representing working people, and driving a truck on the north shore of the St. Lawrence. We hear that he believes in participatory democracy and that people should have more involvement in their own lives. Yet there is no mention whatsoever of the fact that workers who are unionized can have any participation whatsoever in achieving the goals of employment equity. Why is it that, through their unions in a co-operative way, workers cannot participate in achieving the goals of employment equity on behalf of women or other groups which are mentioned in this particular Bill?

I would also like to discuss contract compliance. Last March and April the Minister made much of the need for contract compliance, of the fact that the Government spends billions of dollars a year buying goods and services, and of the fact that we need more awareness of affirmative action programs by the companies from which we purchase goods and services. Yet, there is nothing to force companies to comply with what the Government wants them to comply with. There is nothing mandatory. There is no penalty. In the United States there is mandatory contract compliance. As I said before, in Canada it is voluntary for companies with over 100 employees or contracts of over $200,000. Why not make it mandatory? Does the Government not believe that that should be the case?

I went back through my records and I see another promise made by the Prime Minister when he was Leader of the Opposition. That guy made a lot of promises, some 300-odd.

Mr. Boudria: Three hundred and thirty-eight.

Mr. Nystrom: Three hundred and thirty-eight promises. When appealing for the votes of women last summer he said the following with regard to contract compliance:

> When seeking government business, these companies will be required to detail their action plans, timetables and programs for attracting, training and advancing women within their operations. This, in my view, is a legitimate and fair requirement.

I ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to show us any clause in the Bill which will put into law the promise of the Prime Minister that these companies will be required to detail their action plans rather than merely to report on what they have done for affirmative action employment equity. I see that one Conservative Member of Parliament is so embarrassed he is already over here on the opposition benches. The Prime Minister said that they would be required to detail their action plans, timetables, and programs for attracting, training and advancing women. If you get elected because you have made certain promises and commitments to the people, then I think you should keep those promises in the legislation you bring forward. It is no wonder that the people are becoming very cynical about this Prime Minister. Did he hear about the tuna? Did he hear about a Minister resigning? What did he say about old age pensions? What is he saying about family allowances? I know that the Minister herself would not break a campaign promise, but she is afraid to take a tough stand against the Prime Minister, or she has tried and cannot do it.

• (1200)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Are you kidding?

Mr. Nystrom: One of the back-benchers says: Are you kidding? That is a pretty big insult against the Minister. I have more confidence in her than he does. I am sure she has fought for this promise. I am sure she stood up in Cabinet and tried to point out to the Prime Minister that he made a promise of goals and objectives and timetables.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And he is delivering. Where was the NDP? It was silent.

Mr. Nystrom: The NDP has not been silent. We have said many times in this House and in the campaign that you must have mandatory goals and targets and objectives. The Prime Minister said, "That is a good idea, Ed". He made that promise and commitment himself. So once again I ask the people of Canada to contact the Conservative Members of Parliament and the Minister and tell them to keep their word. It is a sacred trust, the Prime Minister said. Well, keep your promise to the women and other people of this country. When we talk about affirmative action in contract compliance we are talking about some $12 billion a year of government expenditures, if not more. That is a lot of money, a lot of influence and a lot of impact this Government can have on the private sector from coast to coast.

I said before that I do not think the Bill is comprehensive enough. The whole concept of equal pay for work of equal value is not being enforced in this country as it should be. I do not think you can have any kind of employment equity without a comprehensive Bill which makes sure we have equal pay for work of equal value. We also need more money for daycare. The Minister herself knows that more and more mothers are working when they have small children. Judge Abella said in her report that in 1980 there were some 760,000 children under the age of six whose mothers are in the workforce. We do not have adequate daycare centres in this country.

I think there should also be more initiatives at the federal level to co-operate with the provinces on employment equity and getting rid of discrimination.

Miss MacDonald: Where was the NDP Government in Manitoba?

Mr. Nystrom: In that way we can have greater social equity in this country, if I can coin a phrase. We still have tremendous discrimination in access to education for people from poorer families, native families, and all kinds of other groups. We do not have equal access to training in this country. We have all kinds of discrimination against disabled Canadians. You can see this in the architectural design of our buildings and the fact that there are all kinds of public services not available to them. We have all kinds of additional costs for disabled Canadians. We should be taking a lot more action and stronger stands on matters of social equity.

I am very disappointed that the Minister is not implementing the recommendations of Judge Abella to make sure that we have mandatory employment equity in Canada. As I said before, we can quote page after page where she says we need it, that voluntary employment equity and affirmative action will not work. As the Prime Minister said in the campaign, we need to have it in force and written into the law. I ask her why she is so timid. Why is she taking this very tiny step when she has a massive majority and a mandate to act and when she has an absolutely excellent report by Judge Abella to use as an authority? We need timetables, goals and objectives, and we need enforcement. You cannot just go to a big company like General Motors or any other company—perhaps the tuna affair is a good example—and say that we are expecting it to implement affirmative action.

These programs are becoming more and more important as time goes on. We have a changing world economy, world-wide recessions, along with the whole problem of international finances. When unemployment is created it is usually the disadvantaged groups who are laid off first. That is another reason why we need some mandatory affirmative action. Then we have technological change, jobs which are disappearing very rapidly. We have automation in the offices and in banks. Once again it is women and disadvantaged minority groups who are the first to be laid off. We do not want to create more and more job ghettoes in Canada, and it is for those reasons that we must have goals and enforcement if we are to achieve fairness in this country and create more jobs for one and all.

I want to conclude by saying that I have always believed that if you give people the tools and treat them equally, they will build a tremendous country for one and all. They will make a contribution to our society which will make us all proud. Certainly it is the role of the Government to enforce equality and fairness.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me this morning to have an opportunity to speak on this very important Bill, and I hope to deal with some of the misconceptions which have been portrayed by Members on the opposite side of the House about the objectives of this Bill. As we know, at this point we are talking about the principles of the Bill and I think I can speak with some authority. For a number of years I was actually involved in the development and implementation of employment equity programs, both for women and for native people. I know what it is like on the ground to have to do it, not just to mouth the words of criticism we hear in this place. It is a lot more difficult than perhaps the Hon. Member on the other side of the House would have us believe.

During the past six months I have been fortunate as a member of the Special Committee on Equality Rights to travel across the country and hear representatives of the target groups included in this Bill. I have heard from women's groups, visible minority groups, the handicapped and native people. I heard their concerns about achieving equality of opportunity and employment equity and I would like to address some of those concerns as well. In addition, we heard from other Canadians who had great fears and misunderstandings about employment equity, and we have a responsibility as parliamentarians to address those fears and concerns as well. From what I have heard in the House so far this morning, I think there is as much misunderstanding in this House as there is among the general public about what employment equity is all about and the best way of achieving it. I will come back to these points later, but I want to assure my hon. colleagues that the Bill before us does provide for mandatory employment equity and an enforcement mechanism.

There has been lots of talk for many years about employment equity. I know that 25 years ago when I entered the workforce it certainly was not easy. We were saying that there should be more opportunities for women. But how do you go about doing that in effective ways? My colleagues on the opposite side had, of course, many years in which to address this subject and there were a number of reports which brought to their attention the inequities and problems, but really very little was done. It is only in the last year that positive action has been taken on the part of this Government to show our commitment to all Canadians to provide for employment equity.

The report of Judge Abella has been discussed in the House this morning. It was an excellent report by an outstanding woman of our society. It was laid before the House in November, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration provided a comprehensive response in March outlining the focus of Government initiatives. In June of this year we tabled the legislation and we are now debating it. I hope that we will see early passage and we do not waste more opportunities for more groups, many of whom have appeared before various government committees in the past. I would like to see us get on with this very quickly.

I would like to address the points I heard from across the country, and there are points of concern that come from my constituency, about why we need this legislation. Perhaps for most of us here it is easy to understand that, but there are some Canadians who do not understand. They see Canadian society as a society which prizes individual freedom and individual responsibility. They ask, why are special actions needed for certain Canadians? We had the myth that if you had a strong back, common sense and determination, you could do anything you wanted to do. The Horatio Alger myth is perpetrated in Canada and a lot of people think that that is the way you should do it, a lot of women, too.

We had women appearing before our equality rights committee who said "I don't want special treatment. I got there on my own. I don't think the Government needs to do anything for us". We have a responsibility to listen to those people as well. Unfortunately, the facts that we know are different.

As Sherry Stein of the Coalition for Employment Equity for Disabled Persons who expressed her view before our committee said:

> In an ideal society you do not need affirmative action. But in a society such as ours, where it has been recognized that certain groups of people, including handicapped adults, are at a disadvantage, you do need some kind of measure to catch up to bring these people to a point of equal competition on the job market.

We know also from statistics that there are many groups of disadvantaged. We know that 77 per cent of women in the labour force are in only five of the 22 major job categories. In 1982, a woman with a university degree earned the same as a man with a high school education. Whites have three job prospects for every one for blacks.

My colleague earlier this morning referred to a report done in metropolitan Toronto about discrimination on the basis of race. We know that, unfortunately, it exists in our society still. We know that among employable disabled persons, 50 per cent are unemployed. We know that in many native communities, unemployment is higher than 70 per cent.

Clearly action is required. Also, action, as the Minister said earlier, makes economic sense. We feel all Canadians have a stake in our economic society, that they should have the opportunity to participate and to add to the wealth of society.

It is also consistent with the very beliefs outlined in Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms that we should have positive action to ensure that all Canadians have equal opportunity. We are not prepared to waste the talents and abilities of so many Canadians just because they may be members of a group which, in the past, has suffered from discrimination.

To my mind, it is the mark of the kind of society in which we all believe that we truly provide for equality of opportunity, that we do not allow the weaker in our society to become still weaker, economically or socially, and that it is justified to have special measures to ensure that the economically weaker members of our society have an opportunity to improve their status.

Although I know there is some concern about the kind of approach employment equity will bring, I feel confident myself that if it is done in a sensible, reasonable kind of way, it will be truly to the benefit of our society.

How do you balance employment equity with our concept of a merit system? I do not think they are incompatible. We are still saying, with employment equity, that people have to have basic qualifications to do a job. We are not saying that unqualified people will be given jobs. We are saying that through adequate training opportunities people, who traditionally have been disadvantaged because they are part of minority groups, will now be given the appropriate consideration for employment opportunity.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, this legislation is result oriented. I think that is the only benchmark we should have in this kind of legislation.

We heard this morning, and I have also heard from other groups, that this legislation does not go far enough. Some people would say to us, "We want the full power of the state, whole new bureaucracies to force companies to hire people", but with that goes tremendous paper work and all sorts of things which, quite honestly, I do not think are very meaningful. You can have all sorts of bureaucrats running around with all kinds of reports and statistics, but when you get to the bottom line, the employer himself or herself has to understand the goals and objectives and has to make up his or her mind that a company is really committed to the program. It must not be a bunch of paper work being propounded by bureaucrats.

We also have to have the baseline data. Let me turn the attention of the House to Clause 4 of the Bill. I think this is the important section. Perhaps my colleagues on the other side of the House have missed the importance of this clause. It reads:

> An employer shall implement employment equity by
> (a) identifying and eliminating each of the employer's employment practices, not otherwise authorized by a law, that results in employment barriers against persons in designated groups; and
> (b) instituting such positive policies and practices and making such reasonable accommodation as will ensure that persons in designated groups achieve a degree of representation in the various positions of employment with the employer that is proportionate to their representation
> (i) in the work force, or
> (ii) in those segments of the work force that are identifiable by qualification, eligibility or geography and from which the employer may reasonably be expected to draw or promote employees.

That is what this is really all about. First, you have to know what that data base is; how many employees there are in certain racial minorities, among the disabled, women and native Canadians for certain occupational categories from which you can draw. It is not a matter of saying that there should be 30 per cent women or 20 per cent of people with physical handicaps in this or that company. That is totally unrealistic.

What if I am running an operation in Toronto? We get the information and we know there are people with physical handicaps who have the basic qualifications or through training can achieve those qualifications. What if they make up 20 per cent of the potential workforce in a particular category? As a company, we will problably set a goal for ourselves. No goals can be set by legislation. Each employer in each geographic location, dealing with each kind of employment has to do that.

To me, that is the only rational and reasonable way you can go about implementing employment equity. All this talk about quotas and targets is a red herring. First, nobody wants quotas. Even Rosie Abella said, "No quotas".

Ms. Mitchell: Have you talked to women's groups lately?

Mrs. Collins: I think the kind of approach that we are presenting in this Bill is workable. With the guidelines the Minister is putting forward, employers will understand how they can go about meeting the requirements of Clause 4 and putting them into effect.

Finally, let me speak about the comment on an enforcement mechanism that there is not a great policeman pounding on the door saying, "You have not achieved 20 per cent or you have not done this". But there is an enforcement mechanism. We have the Canadian Human Rights Commission, which already has the power in legislation to initiate complaints and initiative work. I do not think we need another bureaucracy to be the policeman. We have the highly respected Human Rights Commission, which is willing and able—

Ms. Mitchell: They can't make systemic changes in companies.

Mrs. Collins: —and with the resources the Minister has already said will be made available to it, can do this effectively and bring about the enforcement as it is required under this Bill.

I am very confident that this Bill will provide the start we need to bring about employment opportunities for all sectors in our society that so badly need them. We recognize it as a start. We will see by the results what happens.

I see two possibilities. I see, and I hope it is a possibility, that through public education and public participation—because the Minister and her people will be working with employers, unions and target groups—we will achieve employment equity, and ultimately we will not need this legislation. I would like to see a sunset clause. I think that is the ultimate goal. In a way it is an interim measure to bring us up to those standards.

● (1220)

If I am wrong, if I am too optimistic, then perhaps we have to look at other measures. Personally, I do not think that that will be the way in which Canadians will respond to this legislation. Drawing from my own experience in the private sector, when the opportunity was given or the issue was drawn to the attention of the people with whom I worked, they were more than willing to make the accommodation and, with the assistance of the Minister and her officials, to help provide the mechanisms. I think there will be a very positive response throughout the country to this legislation.

Employment equity is not only a goal cherished by Utopian dreamers. It represents a fair approach toward equality and greater efficiency in the labour market. That is really the bottom line; all legislation has to be fair, and I believe this legislation is just that. Also, I believe that an overwhelming majority of Canadians agree with us. The public will support employers who are making an honest attempt to promote equity in the workplace.

As I said, this is the first step. It is the beginning of a process of co-operation on the part of government, large employers, labour, and special interest groups for women, native people, visible minorities and disabled persons. Together we can show progress. The optimal use of our human resources constitutes an essential element of economic development. This legislation testifies to our commitment to social justice and economic renewal. All Canadians will welcome this long overdue step toward employment equity for all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker in this period provided for questions and comments, I want to deal with three different areas. During my speech I raised the difference between the French text and the English text. Perhaps the Hon. Member opposite could explain why the English text indicates "Employment Equity" above Clause 4. I think that would pertain to everyone and to employment in general, not just to professionals. I realize that she talked about employment in general, but the French text indicates "équité professionnelle". Why is there a difference between the two texts?

Also the Hon. Member indicated that the goals and targets were unreasonable. If that is so, why did the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) make a very specific promise that we needed goals and targets in law? If they are unreasonable, why did he make that promise and why, now that the Conservatives are elected, did he break that promise?

Finally, she talked about our not knowing the legislation and she quoted Clause 4 of the Bill, which in part indicates that an employer shall implement employment equity, at least, that is what is indicated in English. It is somewhat different in French. In French it just urges employment equity. However, she did not talk about Clause 5 which tells us how that is to be done. Clause 5 indicates that it will be done through reporting, and that is spelled out in detail. It talks about reporting on how many employees there are in each sector or in each designated group, and so on. It indicates that employers must report about all of that.

If she looks closely at the Bill—and I am not sure whether she has read it—she will find that Clause 6 is the only part of it which deals with an offence. It indicates that it is an offence for these employer groups not to report to the Minister and states that there is a fine of up to $50,000. The only thing that is mandatory is the forcing of each group to report. On page 195 of the Abella Report, it was indicated that the court of public appeal was not good enough and that there had to be something mandatory. Why not make Clause 6 stronger and ensure that there are sanctions if a company fails to comply with employment equity? Why not do that? In Clause 6 there is only a sanction if it fails to report, and in Clause 7 the Minister has to lay a report before Parliament within a year or several months.

Those are my questions. Why is there a difference between the French text and the English text? Does it only apply to professionals or does it apply to everyone? Why was there a campaign promise about targets and goals, if that Party did not mean targets and goals being mandatory or in the law? Finally, can the Hon. Member explain to the House how it is mandatory when the sanctions only apply to reporting, not to forcing a company to comply with the wishes and the words in the Bill? I agree that they are good words, good wishes and good sentiments, but only the court of public appeal enforces them. That is not good enough. The Minister should know that; she is an old-time politician.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I object to my hon. friend saying that I might not have read the Bill. I think that is entirely uncalled for.

Mr. Nystrom: You said that about us.

Mrs. Collins: Any Member of Parliament who has an intense interest in this subject, as I have had for 20 years, will have read the Bill thoroughly and understood it.

With regard to the French version, I am advised by my colleagues that équité professionnelle does indeed mean equity for all. I am sure, if there is any drafting misunderstanding, that this can be cleared up. Certainly the intention is that the meaning be the same in French as it is in English.

Turning to Clause 6, perhaps my hon. colleague might look at Subclause 5(2) in which it is indicated that a report under Subsection (1) shall be made in the prescribed manner. That manner will be outlined by the Minister in the regulations. It is not just that a report be made, but that the report be done in the prescribed manner. This will provide all the information about which we have been talking. It will have to show the data base upon which the employer obtained the information, how many women were in that geographic area and what their plans are to deal with them. All these things will be in the prescription set out by the Minister. It is not just that an employer can come along and put down a piece of paper. The report has to be done in the proper way. Perhaps my colleague might look at that in some detail.

As well, as the Minister and I have said, if these reports do not indicate that the employer is living up to the spirit of the legislation and if, for example, 60 per cent of the women were qualified according to the target qualifications and there was an obvious example that attempts were not being made to bring their own employment up to that, the Canadian Human Rights Commission will have that information, will be able to lay a complaint and conduct a thorough investigation. I really do not understand what more my hon. friend would ask for, other asking perhaps than policemen to go into places. That is not the kind of Government we want. We have perfectly adequate arrangements under this Bill to ensure that our intentions are honoured.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short supplementary question. Why was the campaign promise of the Prime Minister not honoured that there would be targets and goals in legislation? Why was the promise made but not honoured? The Hon. Member seems to think honour is important.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I dealt with that in my earlier discussion. Again, if we turn to Clause 4, it really deals with the concept. I do not know what the Hon. Member wants. Does he want us to put in place a piece of legislation that every employer will employ 40 per cent of a certain target group? The Hon. Member knows that that is ridiculous, that that cannot be put into a piece of legislation. This is the approach which is appropriate.

Mr. Nystrom: Why didn't you say that?

Mrs. Collins: Because you are trying to take someone's words and put them in the wrong context. We are providing legislation which will enable people to implement employment equity fairly throughout the country.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. Has she really discussed the Bill and the practices which the Government is applying, particularly the whole question of enforcement, with recognized women's groups, even with that government body, the National Advisory Council on the Status of Women? Those groups have certainly expressed considerable concern that there is not enforcement in the Bill. There is a requirement to report, but let us not forget that it is only for a few large companies. It is certainly not general throughout the federal jurisdiction, much less among those outside the federal jurisdiction. After the Hon. Member has answered that question, I have another one for her.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I know the interests of my hon. colleague in this particular area and her work in this respect. I certainly respect that. We heard representations before the Standing Committee on Equality Rights from a number of groups representing women. Although they were dealing with a wide variety of issues, many mentioned concerns about this particular Bill, as I am sure they will when this Bill is before committee.

However I think, upon looking at this Bill and thoroughly understanding its relationship with the Human Rights Commission, that perhaps there has been some misunderstanding of how the two Acts together will provide an effective enforcement mechanism. I look forward to the opportunity of discussing this further with delegations from women's organizations.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, on the question of the Human Rights Commission, the Hon. Member and also the Minister have referred to this a number of times. The Minister in particular referred to it and I think the Hon. Member did also, from the point of view of equal pay for work of equal value. Judge Abella made the point that equal pay for work of equal value should be enforced as part of the employment equity policy. There is an Act now that allows individuals to make complaints to the Human Rights Commission. But what women's groups are talking about—and I would certainly think that this is what Judge Abella was talking about—is systemic change, first within the Government and, secondly, within any Crown Corporations or any corporations that the Government does business with. This systemic change would ensure that women are not paid on a different basis than men for jobs of equivalent value. Women should not have to go on a case by case basis to complain—I wish the Minister would allow me to make my remarks without heckling. She sounds very defensive, I might say, Mr. Speaker. It is my belief that women should not have to go through all the trouble of getting their own legal documents and so on and go to the Human Rights Commission to appeal this on a case by case basis, that there should be requirements within legislation and within Government Departments as well that apply to companies that would change the system so there would not have to be these kinds of individual complaints.

Miss MacDonald: She is way behind the times.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I will have the opportunity perhaps of discussing this with my colleague more fully later on, but there is provision in the Human Rights Act for investigation into equal pay for work of equal value cases. I do not think it is really necessary to do that in this particular Bill. I know, from the discussions we have had with the commission, that it is are developing guidelines, as is Treasury Board, to have more implementation of that concept of equal pay for work of equal value within an establishment of an employer.

Ms. Mitchell: We want systemic change.

[Translation]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with this opportunity to take part in the debate, but I am disappointed that I did not know until the very last minute that we would have this debate today. Nevertheless, I am happy to speak to this subject, and perhaps to reflect a little and report on the thoughts, wishes and comments of the groups we met while attending hearings of the Commission on Equality across Canada.

I can assure you, Madam Minister, that some of these groups will not be as delighted as you would wish them to be today because equality in the workplace, equal opportunity, equal access to the workplace were concepts they would welcome and which could be implemented through this legislation. It is unfortunate, but I do not think the legislation is going to be as successful as we would have liked.

That being said—

[English]

I would really like to suggest to you that it is a particular privilege to participate in the debate on the second reading of Bill C-62, an Act representing employment equity. The Bill, which results from the recommendations of the Abella Commission Report released last year, does represent a step forward. We have come some way from 1870 when the first two women were employed by the Public Service and from 1882 when the Toronto Labour Council first supported equal pay for equal work. We have come a long way from the concept of equal pay for equal work, and we have now moved into a concept to respond to systemic discrimination, which we call equal pay for work of equal value, which is a much fairer measure with respect to how we want to look at the society of today and tomorrow.

It has been a very long, hard struggle for these many groups—the women, the native people and the disabled—who have suffered from discrimination in the labour market and continue to be denied equal opportunity.

For them the goal of equality in real practical terms is still a distant goal and not yet realized. In the discussions leading up to the inclusion of Section 15, the equality section of the Canadian Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms, many expectations were raised that the disadvantaged groups in our society would finally achieve equal access to the labour market and that past injustices would be rectified. For these groups I believe the Minister's legislation has been a disappointment, and I say that in full awareness of what these groups have been saying to us we have criss-crossed the country. We thank the Minister of State for Immigration and Minister responsible for the Status of Women (Mr. McLean) who helped the special interest groups, that is the disabled, the visible minorities and the women's groups, with some financing so they could put their reports together for us. In essence, what they had to say in their reports was that perhaps there is a way that the legislation could be amended and moved forward so that the intent behind this legislation in all reality can be realized.

During the election campaign the Tories promised that they would implement an effective affirmative action program with adequate control, monitoring and evaluation mechanisms within the Public Service, its agencies and Crown corporations and that their Government would make clear to companies doing business with the federal Government that their performance in hiring and promoting women would be a key factor in obtaining contracts for goods and services. I would suggest that there are many, many companies which have less than 100 employees and which do business on a scale of less than $200,000 a year that really should be responding to the criteria that the Minister would like to see applied.

In the Throne Speech the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated, "Economic equality is the vehicle through which women will come to full partnership and participation with men in our society". These are laudable principles and are basically the reason the previous Liberal Government appointed Judge Abella to do the research and to set this commission in place so that it could find the reasonable avenues substantiated in fact that would indicate the route by which systemic discrimination could be removed.

I find that the present Government's commitment to all these recommendations has not been matched by its actions and, hopefully, that can be remedied en cours de route. Equality of opportunity takes many forms but the Government has not moved quickly to give clear federal leadership in this regard.

I know that the Minister has said that this is the first step and that this is the first Government to undertake it. In some sense she is not incorrect. I would suggest that the groundwork was laid and the principles ahered to by the previous Government, but this present Government made promises that it did not live up to. I am saying to the Minister, amend the Bill and live up to those promises that were undertaken.

I think it is important to understand the steps that have to be taken to achieve the goal of equal access for disadvantaged groups. I would like to quote from a brief that was presented to the Equality Rights Committee by one of the members of the Citizens for Public Justice group. It reads:

> We must make every effort to identify and remove, barrier by barrier, discriminatory advantages. The federal Government should set an example by further expanding its employment practices and decision-making processes so that all Canadians are not only free from adverse discrimination but, can also enjoy just employment conditions which provide fair access to meaningful work and equitable participation in the life of our society.

When we say we want every barrier and obstacle removed I would suggest that the record of today's employers does not indicate that they have voluntarily undertaken to remove the obstacles and to tear down the barriers. In this Bill, the employers are being given the responsibility to remove obstacles and take down barriers. I would suggest that we have to be more definitive in the description of the barriers and obstacles we want removed and have a measure that will relate specifically to the jobs which have in many instances unnatural and unnecessary qualifications that have nothing to do with the jobs in question.

As Judge Abella stated, employment equity is a strategy designed to obliterate the present and residual effects of discrimination and to open up equitably the competition for employment opportunities to those artitrarily excluded. It requires a special blend of what is necessary, that is fair and what is workable.

Affirmative action as a term refers to a comprehensive planning process for the elimination of systemic situations bringing about inequalities. We must now redress historic patterns of employment disadvantage suffered by designated groups. In an affirmative action program, the impact of employers' systems and practices is measured through an analysis of designated group employment within the organization and a realistic assessment of the number of target group members available in the labour market both in total and in the job and skill groups.

I know that the Hon. Member said that this falls under Clause 4 of the Bill. I would suggest that it is not substantive enough and it is left in the hands of the employers. I do not think that those steps to neutralize discriminatory practices include the kinds of goals and timetables necessary for achieving equitable representation of the designated groups within the organizations. I do not think they establish the kinds of remedial measures which will redress the past imbalances and make achievement of numerical goals possible.

It is important to recognize that for many people, the term "affirmative action" has had negative connotations. It was for this reason, I believe, that Judge Abella coined the phrase "employment equity" but she expanded employment equity to include more than affirmative action. Even with the name having been changed, there is still some resistance to it as is obvious from the way this Bill has been applied.

The purpose of an employment equity plan is to open the competition to anyone who would be eligible for a position but for the existence of discrimination, unintentional or otherwise, and it does not mean that employers are mandated to hire unqualified persons. I think the opponents of these proposals tend to be uninformed about the many positive elements of such programs. Perhaps an education program for personnel departments would be very useful in helping them to undersand the implications of employment equity.

A review of the United States experience has shown that affirmative action programs have had a positive impact on the private sector, and although there was strong resistance at first, employers soon discovered that there was a wealth of talent that they had previously overlooked. Because of their past employment practices, they had restricted themselves to drawing from certain segments of society for their labour force. I think mandatory affirmative action laws showed that these disadvantaged groups could offer a pool of qualified people that could enhance and diversify workforces and bring new skills.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, in her conclusions, Judge Abella said that voluntary measures are an unsatisfactory response to the pervasiveness of systemic discrimination in the Canadian workforce and has therefore recommended that all federally regulated employers be required by legislation to implement employment equity. The key word here is "mandatory", and I do not agree with what the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) has said. There are no mandatory requirements in this Bill and I would suggest that the Hon. Member re-examine its contents. The intent should be made mandatory, but unfortunately the only thing that is mandatory is the reporting provisions and the fine of $50,000 for non-compliance. That will not help the disabled, the women and the visible minorities who pleaded before us for access under the kind of mandatory contract compliance that could be measured and examined in the light of reality.

It is important to note that this Bill is all about voluntary compliance, although there is mandatory reporting. If voluntary compliance had worked, that example would have been set a long time ago. However, it has not been set, and I believe it is very important to recognize that mandatory compliance has been absent from our legislation and businesses practices. Even the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, a group which advises the Government, has said that it wants the Government to go further than it has in its proposals to force Crown corporations and federally regulated companies to hire more women and minorities. The Council has examined the Bill in the light of mandatory requirements and has found it wanting as well.

Regarding the American experience, Victoria Smith, a senior consultant from New York, notes that business is comfortable with numerical goals and targets and that that is how business works. She indicated that she had just done surveys of her clients, most of whom are big Fortune 500 corporations, and of the 142 responses, 95 per cent indicated they would keep on using numerical goals to track the progress of women and minorities regardless of the Government's requirements because it is good, sound business. It is good for the corporation and it is good for the country.

Many groups have testified that voluntary compliance does not work. As Hon. Members well know, a right is only a right if it is enforceable. Otherwise it is just a lot of lovely words that mean nothing.

I think it is about time that the federal Government, its agencies, its Crown corporations and federally regulated sectors and companies doing business with the Government recognized the diversity of Canada's population and the potential of disadvantaged members. The cost of employment-equity programs has often been cited as an impediment to their implementation. However, the United States experience has shown that good use of human resources is just good business practice. Basically, we cannot afford not to apply good business practices in this highly competitive world in which we count on productivity as a bottom line.

Bill C-62 demonstrates that the Government has lacked the willpower and the leadership that is necessary to implement employment-equity programs effectively. I speak not only for myself but for all those groups that came before us with the feeling that the Minister would be applying the kind of regulations and laws that would have the impact that the Minister herself indicated they would. I am referring to the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, the Coalition of Provincial Organizations for the Handicapped and many groups belonging to the National Action Committee. They are all disappointed by the lack of an enforcement mechanism.

It is not enough for the Minister to say that public opinion will pressure companies and the Government to hire actively and to promote men and women from the targeted groups. Did she not read the chapter on enforcement mechanisms in the Abella Report? I believe she did and I am sure she studied it well.

[Translation]

I think the Minister should at least take another look at the following words: . . . "The obligation to implement employment equity" . . . which will remain just words if they do not have force of law. Ideally, enforcement should be entrusted to an agency that would be entirely separate from the Government. This agency would dispose of the necessary resources to fulfil its mandate, including competent staff with a good knowledge of labour relations, employment mechanisms and human rights issues.

[English]

Voluntary measures just do not work. Let us stop pretending that they do. Without goals and timetables, no measurable differences can be noted. The Minister has spoken of criteria and guidelines for employment equity. I would like her to make these available so that we can all know on what premise she is working.

I would just like to remind the Minister that it is a good thing that my neighbour and confrère, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), fought and organized the fight to keep the census on line. The Minister knows that without the instrument to gather the date with which we can measure the base, the whole thing does not work. The question is: What is in the census questions? Do they meet the information needs? I hope the Minister will answer my questions in the affirmative because I wish as much as she that it works.

• (1250)

Miss MacDonald: You have not read the legislation.

Mrs. Finestone: Yes, I have read the legislation. The Minister knows better than that. She knows that I would have read it and read it thoroughly.

The Minister has talked about criteria and guidelines for employment equity. I would like the Minister to make those available. In her job market strategy the Minister has indicated that employment equity will be an integral part of that. I believe that I read that provision correctly. Therefore, can the Minister provide us with her Department's goals and timetables for employment programs? In this way, in the future, the Canadian public can assess if the Government is setting the necessary examples for other sectors.

I would like to remind the Minister that in February, if my memory serves me correctly, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) announced that he had set up a joint committee with labour to review employment equity practices in the federal Government. The committee was to look into the matter of equal pay for work of equal value. He was to report back to us, but I have not heard from him yet. If I have missed his marvellous presentation, then I regret that. If I have missed it, I would like the whole of Canada to know where we have gotten to and what his report entailed, because equal pay for work of equal value is an integral part of the whole employment equity package, which the Minister has happened to overlook in her Bill.

Contract compliance, which is not covered in the legislation as I understand it, will be covered by regulation. I believe the Canadian public has a right to know if the Government and the companies with which it does business are complying with measurable goals and timetables. I recognize the need for flexibility in employment equity programs. I understand that small business and certain sectors need exemption under Section 1 of the Charter. However, that should not be used as a smokescreen for incomplete and insufficient data which are needed to provide an indicator of the success and the effectiveness of the measures taken.

I would now like to deal with the issue of sanctions. Clause 6 of the Bill would allow the Minister to impose a fine of $50,000 for failing to provide her Department with a report containing detailed information on employment practices. While this is not an insignificant amount of money, to say the least, it is not likely to improve the employment status of designated groups. The fact that Mr. Whoever-he-is had to pay a fine will not help the disabled. Nor will it help the minorities, or women, to find jobs. It will only prove he did not do his task.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mrs. Finestone: What is being asked for is an enforcement agency which will be able to monitor—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but the 20-minute time period has now expired.

Mrs. Finestone: Would Members of the House give me just one minute to wrap up my remarks?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member has one minute to wrap up.

Mrs. Finestone: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The key to the whole issue is the importance of having a mechanism put in place which would not be voluntary, but mandatory, and which will have an enforcement principle and sanctions. This could be a step forward. In Judge Abella's terminology, employment equity means a total package. It means hard facts and data, necessary instruments, affirmative action, equal pay for work of equal value, contract compliance and child care. When we measure the contents of this Bill against the reality of the situation I have to say that it falls short in many of the basic elements. I hope that when it is sent to committee we can see to the improvements which will be needed so that the Minister's goal, and our goal, which is to improve the lot of those who have suffered from systemic discrimination, is met in the days to come.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? The Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald).

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with a couple of matters which have arisen from the speeches made in the House this morning. I do not think the attempt is deliberate to try to confuse people about what is involved in this Bill. However, a couple of statements have been made with regard to the absence of legislation relating to equal pay for work of equal value. I do not think we should confuse the Canadian public with respect to the fact that such legislation does not exist in the federal Government. I ask the Hon. Member if she is aware that under Section 11 of the Canadian Human Rights Act it states that it is a discriminatory practice for an employer to establish or maintain differences in wages between male and female employees employed in the same establishment who are performing work of equal value. Is the Hon. Member aware that this legislation exists? Is she aware that it has not been implemented in the past? The implementation processes are now under way. The Treasury Board has agreed to this provision with one public union and others will come on-stream. In this way the provision will be implemented across the Public Service of the country beginning in 1986. It has been undertaken because we believe so firmly in the principles of it.

I also wish to ask the Hon. Member if she is aware that, although the census data will be tremendously important, what this Bill does is to go beyond the census data and ask for information which has never been available from employers with regard to persons who are hired, promoted and terminated with respect to the pool of labour from which they draw. That type of information is normally not available from census data, which is why it is so critical to provide for its coming forward in this Bill. In this way we will be able to determine if employment equity is being properly implemented in company after company across the country. The data is critical to the implementation of employment equity.

Some people say that employment equity can be put in place overnight. I would like to ask those people who advocate that principle to explain how that can be done unless we know what the basic facts are now. We do not have that information now and that is what this Bill is structured to bring out.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for some of the clarifications which she has provided. However, I do have a few concerns which I would like to bring to the attention of the House. We are now asking the Canadian Human Rights Commission to perform an incredible amount of work. Where are the funds and the manpower for the performance of this work? Where is the potential for the commission to follow through on its recommendations? The Minister can perhaps answer me afterward. I would be pleased to hear from her. The Minister is asking the commission to take an expanded role in reviewing this data and then initiate investigations. I think many Canadians are looking to the commission to do exactly what the Minister is saying, and the Minister is anticipating that. The commission will be the watchdog in ensuring that real progress is made.

I would like to tell the Minister that the concept of equal pay for work of equal value was instituted by the Liberals in 1978.

Miss MacDonald: Nothing was done.

Mrs. Finestone: I realize that it was not enforced to the degree it should have been enforced. I was pleased to hear the tribunal's decision in this regard. It has a financial impact, and that is fine. I think that will bring matters into order. As I understand it, the Human Rights Commission has the right to prosecute and investigate, but it needs to have reasonable grounds in law. How will the commission find reasonable grounds in law?

Miss MacDonald: I am not answering the question.

Mrs. Finestone: I suggest you look at that and when we go to study the Bill in committee I suggest we examine that. It does present a problem. I am not a legal expert. However, I know there is a constraint with respect to this matter which I think must be looked at. What I would like to say to the Minister is that the whole thing sounds good. All the right words are there. But what is the penalty if employers do not comply? The Minister really does not have a mandatory way of enforcing the issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mrs. Finestone: It is good but it needs enforcement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

TAX REBATE DISCOUNTING—OUTLAWING OF PRACTICE URGED

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, tax discounting is a service used mostly by low-income families. Indeed, two out of three persons who discounted their tax refunds reported a 1983 income of less than $8,000, and one out of three persons had incomes of less than $2,000. Therefore, the proportion of tax-filers who discount the most are at low income levels. Of the $41 million in refunds that were retained by the tax discounters, $15 million to $20 million was made up of child tax credits which are intended to help low-income families meet their needs.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) is aware of how important these child tax credit refunds are to low-income Canadians. They are used to buy furniture, household appliances, and children's clothing. The Minister is also aware that the tax system is being increasingly used as a vehicle for transfers to low-income Canadians. Poor families cannot continue to lose 15 per cent of their tax credits to discounters.

I would urge the Minister, therefore, to follow the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to take the necessary steps to outlaw tax rebate discounting or, at the very least, to adopt the position agreed upon in mid-September by the provincial Ministers responsible for Consumer and Corporate Affairs to ban tax rebate discounting of the child tax credit.

INDUSTRY

RESTRUCTURING OF INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER PLANT—EFFECT ON EMPLOYEES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, some 300 workers at the International Harvester truck plant in Chatham, Ontario, are facing lay-offs as the company moves jobs and production to Japan. The company is phasing out its Cargo Star line, replacing it with a new modified version to be produced under contract with Nissan, beginning in 1986.

The Government has given much publicity to the inflow of foreign capital and jobs which its new open-door policy claims to have attracted. The Harvester case demonstrates the darker side of this open-door approach. The door swings both ways. This can create outflows of foreign capital and jobs as the multinational corporation restructures its global operations.

I urge the Government to investigate this Harvester move, and to bring in stronger Canadian content legislation to keep these jobs and production lines in Canada. The future of workers and communities like Chatham depends on such tough trade action.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CANCELLATION OF OUR NATIVE LAND RADIO PROGRAM

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the final broadcast of the radio program Our Native Land which has been cancelled by the CBC. I believe this decision on their part is wrong. Our Native Land provided natives in Canada with a means of communicating among themselves and with non-native Canadians for 20 years. A full-time production staff worked in Ottawa where decisions are made that affect native Canadians. Now a new team is in Toronto. This is wrong.

The leaders of the four national aboriginal organizations united to urge the CBC not to cancel the program. The CBC did not listen. Without Our Native Land there will be inadequate coverage of important events impacting on natives and of interest to non-natives.

Seventy thousand listeners per week knew that on Saturday they would hear stories about natives. The loss of a dedicated time slot means that they must listen to non-native public affairs programs and hope that there may be a story concerning their interests. This is unacceptable.

Natives today face many challenges that non-natives are interested in. For example, the 1987 First Ministers' Conference on Aboriginal Rights, the Task Force on Land Claims, review of funding for native programs and organizations, annual conferences of native, Inuit, Metis and Indian organizations, evolution towards self-government, community-based education and health services, and the cultural renaissance in native communities are all reasons why all Canadians need a regular native affairs program in a dedicated time slot. I urge the CBC to reinstate the program.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

ALLEGED TUNA PLANT TOUR—REQUEST FOR APOLOGY

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I refer to unfounded allegations by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), affecting myself and other members of the New Brunswick caucus in which he stated that we had prior knowledge of tainted fish from a New Brunswick cannery and that we had communicated that knowledge to the caucus and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

These allegations, whether direct or made as insinuations, have seriously affected the credibility of a number of Hon. Members, as well as their ability to carry on their functions as Members of this House.

The imputations of the Leader of the Opposition in my case and that of other New Brunswick Hon. Members are false and injurious. They are unfounded and without substantiation. There was no tour of the plant. There was no meeting with officials. There was not in my presence at any time any reference to tainted tuna. There was nothing to refer to caucus or to the Prime Minister, and nothing was referred.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has behaved irresponsibly by launching himself on a mud-slinging expedition on the theory that if enough mud is thrown some is bound to stick. On behalf of other members of our caucus, I protest against Parliament being used for tactics more worthy of the gutter. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition should withdraw statements that he cannot verify or substantiate. He should apologize to the New Brunswick Members of Parliament and to the Prime Minister. He should begin to conduct himself in a way worthy or the dignity of Parliament.

Members of Parliament cannot carry out their functions if they are to be subjected to unfounded allegations damaging their reputations by a person occupying the high position of the Leader of the Opposition. There should be an apology and a withdrawal by the Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

NATIONAL WOMEN'S FIELD HOCKEY TEAM—REAPPOINTMENT OF COACH

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Sports Minister's unilateral decision of September 26 to reappoint Marina Va Der Merwe as coach of the National Women's Field Hockey Team represents an act of unprecedented and blatant political interference. The Canadian Women's Field Hockey Association is absolutely furious and disgusted over this entire affair.

The Association chose not to renew her contract, and this position was supported by a committee established specifically by the Minister to investigate the coaching matter.

Why is the Minister running roughshod over the best interests of this women's team and the recommendation of his own committee? As a result of the Minister's action, six to eight members of last year's Olympic team are thinking of resigning. Players have also been pressured into accepting this directive or risk losing their Sports Canada support. Furthermore, ministry officials have threatened to withhold the half million dollar funding unless the national association accedes to the Minister's recommendations.

Such political and bureaucratic interference and pressure tactics have no place in the workplace of this or any other national sports organization. I ask the Minister, therefore, to reverse his decision and allow the association to manage its own affairs in a competent and fair manner.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

CANCELLATION OF PENSIONERS' RAIL PASSES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, while current employees of Canadian Pacific can bargain through their unions on many issues, including railway passes, the pensioners of CP cannot. They have no bargaining power and must rely on Members of Parliament in all Parties and Government to protect their rights and interests.

These pensioners served Canadian Pacific well all of their working years. "They worked the CP Railway line." One of the few benefits they have is their rail passes which are an earned right. Canadian Pacific has arbitrarily cancelled the passes of their pensioners effective November 1. Its heartless disregard in this matter must be halted by us in this House.

Canadian National Railways will continue to provide passes for their pensioners, which means CP pensioners are victims of discrimination by Canadian Pacific. On behalf of Hon. Members in all Parties in this House, I call upon the Minister Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to make the strongest demands upon Canadian Pacific to continue its rail passes to all of its present pensioners and, as a minimum, give their pensioners the option of either rail passes or a better health and welfare program.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

ALLEGED TUNA PLANT TOUR—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF ALLEGATION

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same matter as was raised by my colleague, the Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett). Yesterday the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) made the allegation that eight Conservative Members of Parliament from New Brunswick, while on a visit to the southern part of the Province in April, made a tour of the Star-Kist plant in St. Andrews. That allegation includes me, and I must tell you and the House that the allegation is categorically false. There was no tour of the plant. I have never ever been near the plant, nor indeed inside its doors.

This allegation was made by a Member of the House who deserves respect, but the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) should know that no honourable purpose can be served by continuing to misrepresent facts and to muck about with the reputation of the entire caucus from New Brunswick. The Right Hon. Member should withdraw his statement and his question with all its sullying innuendo.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

ALLEGED TUNA PLANT TOUR—REQUEST FOR APOLOGY

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to comment upon inaccurate statements made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) as reported in Hansard, the account of the proceedings of the House of Commons, on October 2, 1985. At no time did I, or other Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament from New Brunswick, visit the Star-Kist facility in St. Andrews, nor did we tour this plant as alleged by the right hon. gentleman. I can assure the House that no formal meeting took place between the eight New Brunswick Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament and the management of the Star-Kist plant in St. Andrews.

To set the record straight, I was approached by a small group of what I assumed were workers of the plant, on the front lawn of the Royal Canadian Legion located in St. Stephen, New Brunswick, 10 to 12 miles from St. Andrews and the Star-Kist plant. The group expressed concern that the fisheries inspectors were becoming increasingly harsh and they feared the viability of the Star-Kist plant was in question and their jobs in jeopardy. No action was taken by me as an individual Member of Parliament—

Some Hon. Members: Why not?

Mr. Cochrane: —nor did the New Brunswick caucus take any action collectively. It was not discussed in the New Brunswick caucus, the national caucus, or with the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney).

The misrepresentation of the facts by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition illustrates once again the inaccuracy of statements made in reference to this issue. Now that the record has been set straight, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition should apologize and withdraw his comments and allegations.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Surely Hon. Members can listen to each other's statements with some respect.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONDEMNATION OF PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, recently PLO terrorists struck again, this time killing three innocent Israeli citizens in Cyprus. As usual, the world was silent. The PLO is a terrorist organization. It has always been a terrorist organization. It has never acknowledged the existence of Israel, despite the fact that United Nations resolutions 242 and 248 recognized that Israel has the right to exist behind secure borders. The PLO has harrassed the Israelis, not only within Israel but in many other countries throughout the world. Its members have terrorized, maimed, and killed hundreds of Israeli men, women, and children, as well as many non-Israelis, thereby forcing Israel to deal with these terrorist activities by military operations.

Make no mistake, the PLO originated as an organization dedicated to terrorism and it has continued in this vein. Terrorism is not an acceptable mode of settling differences. Since terrorists do not respect national boundaries, they cannot claim sanctuary behind national boundaries. Israel should not have been condemned by Canada, through its Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), for taking steps to destroy PLO terrorism by bombing the PLO headquarters in Tunisia. Indeed, Tunisia should have been condemned by Canada for giving the PLO a base from which to operate.

FISHERIES

NEWS CONCERNING VISIT TO FISH PLANT BY MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, as a Member from New Brunswick, I would like to draw the attention of this House to the irresponsible attitude of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), who yesterday, during Question Period, repeated and amplified a statement by a member of the employees' union at the Star-Kist plant.

I would have been delighted if the Leader of the Opposition had mentioned the fact that the Conservative Members from New Brunswick were doing a good job visiting the various regions in New Brunswick as part of the responsibilities of their position.

However, that was not the purpose of his statement. Far from it. Without checking his source, he wanted to pursue his campaign to vilify our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and involve eight New Brunswick Members in his pernicious designs.

First of all, I would point out that the tour of southern New Brunswick from April 22 to April 24 by Conservative Members was made by not more than eight Members, while in St. Stephen there were only seven.

In St. Stephen, I never at any time met any union or management representatives from the Star-Kist plant, and I have never visited the plant. Furthermore, the tuna issue was never raised, neither in the New Brunswick caucus nor in the national caucus.

It would therefore be more than appropriate, and the Leader of the Official Opposition would be doing this institution and his own position within that institution a great service, if he were enough of a gentleman to withdraw his allegations and apologize to the Prime Minister, considering the fact that some time ago, he showed he was capable of doing so when his leader, Mr. Trudeau, contradicted his version of events.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—NATIONAL DIRECTOR'S STATEMENTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I had understood that the Prime Minister would be in the House for Question Period today. Good, he has arrived.

This morning, after thinking about it for seven days, Jerry Lampert has joined the ex-Minister of Fisheries and the Member for Carleton-Charlotte in retracting statements contradicting the Prime Minister. I suggest that the Prime Minister owes the House an explanation and I would like to ask him for it. Why did a matter which he considered urgent take seven full days to resolve itself?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as Deputy Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada I can tell the Hon. Member that it was I who conducted the discussions necessary with the President of the Party and his National Director. A press release was issued by the Party this morning. If he does not have a copy of it yet, I will give it to him. It says everything in that press release.

REQUEST FOR REORGANIZATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, what the press release does not say, and the fact that remains, are that two important matters which the Prime Minister should have known about, which led to resignations of Ministers, were known by senior people around him in the Government, in the Party, and in the Prime Minister's Office. It looks like a blind-eye policy has been followed by the Prime Minister in running his office.

What steps is the Prime Minister taking to straighten out affairs in that office so he will know and be informed of the important things that he ought to know as Prime Minister?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the inferences contained in the Hon. Member's question are absolutely false. He started off his questioning by referring to a Party matter and wound up, through his convolutions, trying to fix the responsibility for response on the Prime Minister. The fact remains that this is a Party matter which has been dealt with by the Party and which has been made public. Surely he will allow our Party to determine what should or should not be in the press release, as we allowed him to do on May 11, 1984, when a press release was issued by the Prime Minister of the day accusing the Leader of the Opposition of a misrepresentation of events.

SERVICE PROVIDED TO PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the question which must be put to the Prime Minister, and which he alone can answer is, after all of this, can he tell the House and the country that he is satisfied with the way his office has served him?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if he has read the press release, as I am sure he has, he will see that the Prime Minister's Office was at no time involved as the Leader of the Opposition and others in the House have suggested. There was no communication of the sort that was suggested with anyone on the Prime Minister's staff, including senior Party officials. That is made clear in the press release. Regardless of how the Hon. Member wants to twist, distort, and mar those facts, they are there for all to see and I would urge him to accept them.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF TRIP TO EUROPE BY MINISTER OF STATE (TRANSPORT)

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Transport) who, we are informed, has been "transported" quite a bit in recent months. Today, we heard about the abuse of power and the waste of public funds indulged in by the Minister of State (Transport) when she went on a holiday to Europe with her husband, at the Canadian taxpayers' expense.

How can the Minister justify her trip to Europe, at taxpayers' expense, to attend a conference that was cancelled before she had even left? Would she care to explain how it was that at her request, a meeting was arranged with the OECD official responsible for the environment, in an attempt to justify a visit that was obviously a private trip?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I have absolutely nothing to hide. In answer to the Hon. Member's question, I can say that I made two trips as the Minister of the Environment, one at Easter and one in June and July. Programs for these trips were duly planned and were mentioned in the papers at the time. One of these trips, the second one, had a public and a private portion. The private part was for my own pleasure, and I paid all the expenses of that part of the trip, as prescribed in the Government guidelines.

COST OF TRIPS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I do not know who the Minister is trying to kid here. I am sure the Prime Minister would say that the Minister is a person of unimpeachable integrity and should not be qustioned, but would she tell this House the total cost of her two trips to Europe and what portion of those costs did she pay herself?

Some Hon. Members: Order Paper.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We got into a confusing situation a minute ago where a Minister seemed to be answering regarding a previous portfolio. However, I am going to find these questions are so specific that they properly belong on the Order Paper.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REORGANIZATION OF DEPARTMENT—FUNDING OF PROGRAMS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs. There are reports today of a major reorganization of the Department of Indian Affairs involving the loss of 1,500 jobs. A Tory back-bencher says the reorganization could trim some $200 million from the deficit. Last spring we had two similar leaks of Government plans to cut Indian programs and apply the money to the deficit, and which the Government denied. Since the Minister does not deny the reorganization, will he assure the Indian people that any money saved will go directly to them and their needs?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I not only do not deny the reorganization, I applaud it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: The reorganization, of course, is the other half of Indian self-government. Since I got the job people said to me please get the Government bureaucracy off our back and have Indian self-government. That is what this is about.

With respect to the question regarding funding, in April the Prime Minister indicated that funding levels would not change. Indeed, I have already talked to Indian people about it, and I am happy to assure the NDP who should have known about it.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, Indian self-government should involve Indian people from the very beginning, not half way along the line. Does the Minister deny any link between the proposed cuts and operation Buffalo Jump? And what assurance will the Minister give to this House and to aboriginal people across the country that the reorganization is not just a scheme to trim money from the Indian people and apply it to the deficit? What assurance can he give the Indian people that they can accept?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the only connection between those two events lies in the evil intent the Hon. Member is trying to impute to me. Insofar as it relates to gathering the opinions of Indian people, I spent 14 months doing just that, and I travelled further during that time than any Minister in the history of the Department. I talked to every one of those communities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: Secondly, Mr. Speaker, all the moves by the Government to give Indian people for the first time in their history an opportunity to be in control of their lives come directly from the report of the standing committee which is supported by all political Parties including, I thought up until now, the NDP.

EFFECT ON INDIAN PEOPLE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, this Party does not need to apologize to any Party in the House for its support of Indian self-government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Manly: The Minister knows that. He should also know that the cut of 1,500 jobs in the Department is going to affect vital Indian programs regarding housing, education—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Manly: What assurances will the Minister give to the Indian people that the money cut through reorganization is going to be applied directly to them? What assurances do we have?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, up until now I did not think the NDP had anything to apologize for with respect to Indian policy. However, this line of questioning sure throws that into doubt. We want the 1,500 jobs and more for Indian people, not federal bureaucrats.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POLITICAL ASSEMBLIES ON MILITARY BASES

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister of National Defence. Yesterday we heard a reply to a question in this House from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East regarding political activity of military spouses on Department of National Defence property, and I now quote the Government's reply from page 7252 of Hansard:

—there is a long and honoured tradition in Canada that political activity and the military do not mix, and they ought not to.

I ask the real Minister of National Defence if it is his policy to allow the right of political assembly on military bases only to groups who represent the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member indicated, there has been this long and proper tradition of non-political activity on military bases. I believe that is a wise policy and it should continue. There is not and never has been any prohibition against spouses of military members joining political parties, getting involved in political activities, off the base as private Canadian citizens. They have all the rights everyone else has. The question is: Do we want to see a situation where the military is actively involved in partisan politics? My answer to that question is no.

NEWSPAPER REPORT

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the real Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Crosbie: Where is the real critic?

Mr. Hopkins: I have evidence right here from the Oromocto Post that a Progressive Conservative meeting was held on Canadian Forces Base Gagetown on May 4 of this year.

Will the Minister explain to this House why Members of the Conservative Party of Canada are permitted the right of assembly on military bases at a time when he has denied that right to the rest of Canadians, even to military spouses?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I should answer that question since the real defence critic from Labrador is not here today. However, if in fact such a meeting took place it was contrary to military regulations and I hope the persons responsible were reprimanded for holding such a meeting.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

MINISTER'S EUROPEAN VISITS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Transport who has apparently been off on a junket around Europe at taxpayers' expense.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: The Minister apparently spent three days in April in bed in a luxury hotel in Paris after meeting with a junior OECD official.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Axworthy: Would you care to rephrase that?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Robinson: She went to Stockholm despite the cancellation of the meeting there.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Sexist!

Mr. Robinson: Is the Minister prepared to account to the taxpayers of Canada by tabling in this House all receipts for her personal expenditures on these junkets around Europe?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question, and as I said earlier, those trips represented lengthy preparations and they were approved by the Department of External Affairs. All documents are available, and the part of the trip in June during which I was on a private vacation with my husband was paid for by me, and the receipts exist.

[English]

MINISTERIAL TRAVEL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday we learned that the Minister of Health is on a junket in China with his campaign manager and close friend. In view of that and the Minister of State for Transport's little trips around Europe at public expense, does he really believe that this is an appropriate example for his Government's Ministers to be setting at the same time his Government is cutting back on basic social services, including, as we have just learned today, social services for native people in Canada?

● (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Ministers have to travel; not as much as our predecessors, I will admit that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Not by a long shot.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We are homebodies, compared with them.

Mr. Mulroney: Yes, we are real homebodies compared with the Liberals.

The response which the Minister of State for Transport gave was a very reasonable and thorough answer to a question. There is no reason to go beyond her response, except to tell my hon. friend that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is well known in the House both for his probity and his frugality, is making an important trip and will respond upon his return.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DENTAL PLANS—DISTRIBUTION OF MEMBERSHIP CARDS ON MILITARY BASES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, we have just realized that the Conservative Government of Canada allows Conservative political meetings on military bases at the same time as it denies women the right to form organizations.

I should like to ask the "real Minister" whether, in his opinion, it would be against the law to distribute cards on military bases to families asking for dental plans for their children.

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier—and I think the Hon. Member heard me—if any political meeting took place on base, it should not have. If the persons responsible have not been reprimanded, I will ensure that they are reprimanded because we do not believe that political activities should occur on base.

In terms of dental plans, salaries and so on, perhaps the Hon. Member for Hamilton East is not aware that the remunerations, including salaries and benefits such as dental plans and so on, paid to the Armed Forces are the same as those paid to the Public Service in general. In fact, these questions might more properly be put to the President of the Treasury Board who negotiates with Public Service unions.

An Hon. Member: Don't wake him up.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members might let their own colleague put a supplementary question.

RESPONSE TO ORGANIZATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I understand the Minister's reticence; once burned, twice shy. Why, in a letter last March to the organization about which I spoke in the House yesterday, did the Deputy Prime Minister refuse to provide them with guarantees that they would not face military prosecution if they distributed cards in a door-to-door compaign, calling upon the Prime Minister of Canada to consider a dental plan for military families?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that is a misrepresentation of the contents of the letter from the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Ouellet: Table the letter.

Mr. Andre: The Deputy Prime Minister simply indicated in that letter what I have repeatedly stated in view of repeated questions, that the policy of the Department of National Defence and the Government is that political activity on military bases is not allowed for good and proper reasons.

Mr. Benjamin: What is political about dental plans?

Mr. Andre: Everything else which the Hon. Member is implying about direct sales parties, meetings to discuss alcoholism and counselling, is permitted and in fact happens every day on all our bases in Canada.

Oral Questions

FISHERIES

SOCKEYE SALMON STOCK IN NORTHERN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who is, no doubt by now, fully aware of the cold-blooded murder of sockeye which is taking place on the Fulton and Pinkut river systems in northern British Columbia. I see that his colleagues think it is funny. However, since you have denied commercial fishermen the right to access those stocks, since you have denied Indian people the right to take them for food, since you have denied sports fishermen the right to catch them, and since you are now denying the fish their God-given right to spawn—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Fulton: —will the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Thank you, I think that was the issue.

Mr. Fulton: Will the Minister undertake emergency airlift measures to see that those fish, which can move up those systems to spawn, are given that opportunity?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans I can inform the Hon. Member that enhanced salmon stock returns to the Skeena River system were unexpectedly large this year. However, they could not be fully exploited because to do so would have been to jeopardize the weaker wild salmon and steelhead stocks in the river system. Wild stocks return to the river, mixed with the more numerous enhanced stocks, and hence the fishery must be managed to protect overharvesting of the weaker components of the run.

I appreciate the fact that there are other departmental concerns involved in a resolution of this problem. My colleague, the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and departmental officials in Fisheries are currently attempting to work out those problems.

MANAGEMENT SYSTEM

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to hear the Minister peddle the departmental line. The fact of the matter is that $20 million worth of sockeye are blocked at those gates.

My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will he commit himself and his Government to providing the necessary scientific staff and funds to put in place a management system so that a million fish like this do not have to die unspawned on the Fulton and Pinkut system again?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows full well, but perhaps overlooked smuggling the element into his question, that there has been an unusually large run of sockeye this year in that system.

Mr. Benjamin: That is good news.

Mr. Nielsen: Of course that is a favourable preamble, so he would not have smuggled it into the question. As Acting Minister of Fisheries I can give him the kind of assurance which he seeks. They in that Party are not the originators of new options to deal with this kind of problem. It is being addressed very vigorously, and there will not be any resources of Government withheld in order to ensure an appropriate solution to the problem.

INDUSTRY

SHOE IMPORT QUOTAS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister.

During a pre-election tour of the Eastern Townships you stated, and I quote: "A Conservative Government would not abolish footwear quotas".

Mr. Prime Minister, since more than 20,000 people depend on those quotas, will your Government honour this firm and unequivocal commitment?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should think that the Hon. Member is aware of the fact that the tribunal involved has submitted a report which is now being considered by the Minister. We intend to act in a responsible manner to protect the rights and the jobs of Canadians.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CONSIDER INDUSTRY'S DEMANDS

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Am I to understand that a decision will be made soon? If so, will it take into consideration the objectives of the sector, namely 50 per cent of the market for five years, which would account for 20,000 jobs in Canada? The manufacturers claim that the implementation of such a policy would create 6,000 jobs in the near future.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are fully aware of the number of jobs involved in this case. As I said, the matter is under active consideration by the Government. I must point out that a number of Canadian industries are now threatened by changes in international trade. That is precisely why the Canadian Government is determined to take a constructive approach in its trade relations with the United States and other countries of the world.

INCOME TAX

INTRODUCTION OF MINIMUM TAX

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. It concerns the minimum tax. I understand that the Minister of Finance met with his provincial counterparts last week and that they all agreed to a minimum tax. Could the Minister advise the House on what will be the minimum income level at which the tax will start? Will it be the $30,000 level, as is the case in the United States, or will it be the $50,000 level advocated by the NDP?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague, the Minister of Finance, has indicated his total commitment to the introduction of a minimum tax. I understand that officials are working on the details now and that an announcement will be made within the next several weeks on the kind of detail which the Hon. Member is requesting.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

APPLICATION TO SPOUSES OF MILITARY PERSONNEL

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): My question is directed to the Minister of Justice on the matter of equality rights. Has the Minister been asked to review what appears to be a violation of the basic rights of spouses of military personnel to freedom of association, which are guaranteed under our Charter?

Mr. Riis: Good question.

An Hon. Member: Tweedledum and Tweedledee.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, they have quite a self-admiration group over there.

Mr. Broadbent: You would have a hard time doing it on that side.

An Hon. Member: Don't you wish you had.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I am not given a chance to answer a question very often. Would the hon. gentleman stop trying to interrupt my train of thought?

Mr. Benjamin: It's because we love you, John.

Mr. Crosbie: The answer to the Hon. Member's question is that I have not been asked to look into what has not happened so far as I know.

Mr. Broadbent: Were you at that meeting in New Brunswick?

DENTAL PLANS INQUIRY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am asking the Minister right now to do something. I would like to ask him further whether he feels in view of the comments made yesterday by the Associate Defence Minister which trivialized and demeaned women, does he feel and would he confirm that in his view—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): How about Svend Robinson's question?

Ms. Mitchell: —as Minister of Justice spouses of the military should have the same right to association with dental plans and to group funding as other groups in society.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I accept the Hon. Member's representation, but when it comes to demeaning women we have already seen an example of that from the same Member's Party this afternoon. We also saw it yesterday when there was an attempt to demean the wife of the former Secretary of State who is now the Minister of State for Immigration. When it comes to demeaning, look in your own eyes first.

CLOSING OF BOMBARDIER PLANT IN MONTREAL

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): In the absence of the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Transport.

Can the Minister tell us why her Government did not intervene to prevent Bombardier from closing down its Montreal locomotive manufacturing plant?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, the Bombardier decisions in this case were made in accordance with the best industrial development criteria. We had lengthy discussions with Bombardier representatives who pointed out to us that there was no other solution.

PURCHASE OF LOCOMOTIVES FROM BOMBARDIER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I am quite disappointed by the Minister's answer, coming as she does from that region of Canada where there is such a severe job shortage.

Does the Minister know that since her Government took office roughly 1,000 jobs have been lost in locomotive manufacturing and in a related field, namely locomotive wheel manufacturing? Is the Minister prepared to ask VIA Rail and CN Rail to buy Bombardier locomotives and save this industry which has been operating in Montreal since the turn of the century?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, we are all saddened by job losses in various industries. Still many jobs have been created since we came into office—300,000 new jobs over the past year.

The point to keep in mind in this case is that although Bombardier management have decided not to remain in the locomotive manufacturing sector they are now actively seeking to develop new markets, and I think they will be successful.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LAY-OFFS IN SINGLE INDUSTRY TOWNS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In light of recent lay-off announcements at Inco and Falconbridge and total recent job losses of 17,158 in single industry towns across the country, when is the Minister going to introduce legislation which she promised, outside the House, to prevent lay-offs in single industry towns?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would be the first to admit that, following remarks that I made about Inco, that company saw fit to increase its benefits package by 70 per cent. I would say that that move by the company indicates its responsibility towards its workers. The same applies to Falconbridge. That company has instituted a benefits package which will enable people to have early retirement and thereby hopefully any unnecessary lay-offs will be avoided.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): In light of the very serious loss of jobs in single industry towns across the country and in view of the fact that the Minister is only prepared to talk about legislation, is she prepared at least to withdraw the severance pay provision in the Unemployment Insurance Act and to postpone the calculation of pensions being used as earned income under the Unemployment Insurance Act?

Mr. Broadbent: Good, John.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to believe that when I do talk it brings about some response. The response in the case of Inco has been that they have increased their benefits package by 70 per cent and that has been to the benefit of the workers in that plant.

An Hon. Member: Less than 100 workers.

Oral Questions

AIR TRANSPORT

AIRLINE TICKET TAXES—EFFECT ON NORTHERN TRAVELLERS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): My question is directed to the Acting Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. In that the removal of the cap on airline ticket taxes has been unfair to and discriminates against people who live in northern and remote areas of Canada, is the Government considering any changes to the way in which it levies this tax?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the concern expressed by my hon. colleague but I also have to point out that the needs of the Arctic are being recognized and special fee and tax provisions have been installed. For example, landing fees at Arctic airports have only been increased once since 1957.

An Hon. Member: Table the document.

Mrs. Blais-Grenier: Landing fees at airports such as Whitehorse and Yellowknife are approximately 60 per cent lower than at similar airports in the south.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION—EFFECT ON EMPLOYEES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, we learned a few moments ago from the Minister of Indian Affairs that there would be 1,500 workers, one-quarter of his staff, being laid off in his Department. We also heard about 3,000 workers being laid off in the Post Office and about the 5,000 transport workers being laid off. We have also heard about the 1,150—maybe not the Minister of Indian Affairs, but I want to ask the Minister who is responsible for this lay-off program—

An Hon. Member: Very few are responsible.

An Hon. Member: Question, question.

Mr. Gauthier: Will the Minister tell us what career plans he has for all these workers of the federal Government who have been laid off because of government programs?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could respond since the Hon. Member led off with a question which I hope he knows is mistaken in fact. He did not hear about 1,500 jobs from me nor from anyone else who has responsibility for the matter. In fact, that was a newspaper report and of course is not the figure that anyone else is using.

Mr. Axworthy: Two thousand?

Mr. Crombie: Let me make sure he understands this. The assurance of the Government has always been that anyone who is in these kinds of situations will be treated fairly and equitably through the normal practices of the Treasury Board. I say to him that he should not repeat figures which are untrue or alleged facts.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East.

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Supplementary to the Minister of Indian Affairs, Mr. Speaker. The Minister knows that Indian nations in this country support and that the task force on Indian self-government recommended the dismantling of his Department but only if there was a commitment that that dismantlement would take—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a supplementary, not a new preamble, please.

Mr. Allmand: —place with full consultation and the funds would be—

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a supplementary question.

Mr. Allmand: No, I don't!

Mr. Allmand: You're a joke!

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister and follows up on questions I asked yesterday. At that time, I asked if the Minister of Finance, while in Halifax last Thursday, had announced to his provincial colleagues that he intended to reduce transfer payments to the provinces effective 1986 rather than 1987 as the legislation presently reads.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I owe the Hon. Member an apology. I know I did not give him a good answer yesterday in the House. I think the Budget made it very clear that while we are limiting the future rate of growth in payments to the provinces, it was agreed that Ministers would meet again. The Minister of Finance had made it a point, because of our Government's commitment to national reconciliation, that changes will only be made in consultation with the provinces. That is exactly the process that is under way.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the federal Minister of Finance announced that in 1986 he intended to reduce transfer payments, money for medicare, post-secondary education—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a supplementary question?

An Hon. Member: Is it true?

Mr. Murphy: My question is this, Mr. Speaker. Is the Government going to live up to its election promise by reinstating full funding for post-secondary education? Will the Government keep that promise?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Government's commitment to post-secondary educational funding is very well known. Discussions with the provinces are continuing and the Minister and the provinces will reach an agreement. Speculation about the outcome of those conversations is, I think, not helpful.

REQUEST THAT EUROPEAN TRAVEL VOUCHERS BE TABLED BY MINISTER

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed by the Minister of State for Transport and concerns her two trips to Europe.

Earlier, in reply to a question by the Hon. Member for Burnaby, the Minister said that the travel documents were available and that there were receipts. However, she failed to answer the main part of the Hon. Member's question, which was whether the Minister was prepared to table those documents in the House.

That is the question I wish to put again to the Minister.

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I said earlier, in response to this question, that the trips were very carefully planned and that they were approved by the Minister of External Affairs, and that all the documents exist. In fact, they were available before all this was written up in the newspapers, at Easter and in July.

DEMAND THAT TRAVEL DOCUMENTS BE PRODUCED

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

I wonder whether I am having trouble making myself clear. What I am asking the Minister, who apparently has nothing to hide, is whether she is prepared to table the documents. That is what we want to know, and the question should not be too difficult to understand!

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I understand perfectly well what my hon. friend is driving at, and if he wants to lay charges perhaps he could do so outside the House.

TAKEOVER OF GULF CANADA—TAX RULING

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and concerns the Gulf-Reichmann-Petro-Canada deal. Given that it is a fact that Gulf, Norcen and Petro-Canada formed a refinery partnership for income tax purposes, that Oilweek magazine reported in June that Revenue Canada was not co-operating with the deal and that the Priorities and Planning Committee of the Cabinet was involved, and given that this has all been corroborated by Mr. Dunnery Best in The Financial Post—

Mr. Crosbie: That's who's co-ordinating your Question Period.

An Hon. Member: Great source.

Mr. Waddell: I happen to think it is a pretty good source. Did the Minister go to bat at the Priorities and Planning Committee to cause the Government to pressure Revenue Canada to make a ruling in the takeover favourable to the Reichmanns?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker.

TERMS OF TAX RULING

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister explain whether or not there was a change in the tax ruling in favour of the Reichmanns between the time the first deal which collapsed and the second deal, as a result of pressure from the Priorities and Planning Committee of the Cabinet?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that this question is properly addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It has been answered by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue.

Oral Questions

REFINANCING OF FISHERY PRODUCTS INTERNATIONAL

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Government of Canada has just announced a $105 million refinancing plan for Fishery Products International in Newfoundland as well as the disposal of 15 so-called unprofitable fish plants. Will it be a condition of sale that these fish plants will continue to operate as fish plants? What guarantees can we give to these communities if the plants are not sold?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as usual, the Hon. Member who is putting the question distorts the actual facts. There was a press release issued yesterday by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. If the Hon. Member would read it carefully, he would see that the five-year plan that was approved will provide for a more viable industry and for more jobs in the long run.

To incite fear in the hearts of the people who are affected by the fishing industry, something which he and his colleagues from Newfoundland are continually trying to do, does no service to their constituents or the country.

COMPANY'S SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Let us bring into this question a statement made by the Hon. Member for St. John's East. My supplementary question is the same question posed this afternoon in the media by the Conservative Hon. Member for St. John's East. The question is this: who will assume the social responsibility that Fishery Products was to be carrying? This is a serious unanswered question and we want to know the answer.

[Translation]

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, the fisheries reorganization project was developed to make the Newfoundland fishing industry a viable one, and the amounts invested will be used to safeguard many of the jobs in the industry and to privatize plants, and thus make the industry viable in both the short and long term.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance and follows up on the question posed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill. The Minister of Finance has clearly stated that there will be a reduction in transfer payments from the federal Government to the provinces. Could the Minister of State for Finance advise the House how the Government can talk about a reduction in federal transfer payments without also talking about a reduction in moneys for post-secondary education and medicare?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think I am interpreting my colleague, the Minister of Finance, correctly when I say that what he indicted was that there would be a reduction in the rate of increase. There will still be a substantial increase in transfer payments going to the provinces and all of these programs will continue to have our full commitment. As the Hon. Member knows, we have attempted to bring some discipline to all our spending and the Minister is consulting with the provinces on how best to do that.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance clearly indicated that there would be a reduction of some $2 billion. Could the Minister of State for Finance assure the House that that reduction will not take place so that medicare will not be attacked through the Government's desire to reduce the deficit?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I tried to answer that question the first time by indicating that the reduction is in the rate of increase.

TRADE

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT OF UNITED STATES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. From the release of the correspondence between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States dealing with the proposed free trade negotiations, it comes as a great surprise to many Canadians to see that there is no reference whatsoever in that correspondence to a need to defend and protect Canadian sovereignty in the way of culture and economics. Will the Prime Minister explain why that exclusion was made in the letter? Does he intend to write a second letter outlining the deep commitment which he says his Government has to protect Canadian sovereignty in these areas?

• (1500)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not have to mention every time I turn around, because the President of the United States and every other leader knows, that as Prime Minister of Canada and leader of this Government we epitomize the protection of the cultural integrity of this nation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister may see it that way but many other Canadians do not. There is a high level of uncertainty created by the question of what will and what will not be on the negotiating table.

Will the Prime Minister, in a formal document or letter to the President of the United States, clearly state what the parameters of the negotiations will be? Will he state that there will be a clear defence of our sovereignty in key industrial areas of the country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what it is about my hon. friend which renders him so insecure.

Mr. Axworthy: Canadians want to be secure!

Mr. Mulroney: Every time he stands up it is the nasty Americans doing this and the nasty British doing that. I stand before you, Mr. Speaker, as a proud and confident Canadian, proud of the capacity of this country and this Government to defend and enhance the strengths of our regions and the integrity of our cultural institutions, at all times and in all circumstances.

Mr. Axworthy: Put it in writing.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of four, presented by Hon. Members on Wednesday, October 2, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

STATEMENT MADE OUTSIDE THE CHAMBER

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period, the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), in answering one of my questions, challenged me to repeat outside the House what I had just said. I wish to advise you, Mr. Speaker, and the Minister concerned that I am going to do so forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: Before the Hon. Member leaves the House, I should indicate to him he presumably has made the point he wished to make but it was not a question of privilege.

POINT OF ORDER

DISTINCTION MADE BY MR. SPEAKER BETWEEN TWO QUESTIONS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise now on a point of order, since points of order are not per mitted to be raised during the Question Period.

During Oral Questions is appeared to some Hon. Members that the question asked by the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), which was asked, by you, to be placed on the Order Paper, was very similar to the question asked by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), which was allowed. I wonder if you, Mr. Speaker, can assist us by clarifying the distinction between the two questions.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. House Leader wishes to come and see me, I would be happy to explain it to him.

Some Hon. Members: In here!

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the practice of asking me to spend part of the day giving advice is improper. However, I think the Hon. Member knows that questions which are specific and which require detailed information with regard to numbers are traditionally placed on the Order Paper.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would now like to ask the question with respect to the business of the House. I would appreciate it if the Government House Leader would tell us the House business not only for the balance of this week but for the coming week in as clear and as precise a manner as possible. Will he also indicate to the House the extent to which he intends to stick to that order of business?

Mr. Gauthier: Don't hold your breath.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the question was so garbled I did not quite catch it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I will try to give a clear and unequivocal answer to the question asked with respect to the business of the House. As the Hon. Member knows, and as I keep reminding the House, we meet on a frequent and regular basis to discuss various items which will be coming forward. We try to accommodate all Members, including members of the Hon. Member's Party and members of the New Democratic Party.

As the Hon. Member knows, today, the House will resume consideration of Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity. If the debate with respect to that Bill concludes, then we will return to the debate on second reading of Bill C-42, which is an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.

As I have indicated in a preliminary way to the House Leaders, their staffs and their offices, tomorrow, the House will consider second reading stage of Bill C-76, which is an Act respecting the operation of the Toronto Island Airport by the Toronto Harbour Commissioners.

Following debate on Bill C-76 we will resume consideration of Bill C-42.

Next week, the first item of business will be with respect to an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and the Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits. That Bill will be introduced for first reading later this day. The back-up to the compensation Bill will be Bill C-42, if it has not been completed by that time.

As usual, the Government will monitor the progress made with respect to all legislation, and further announcements well in advance of the introduction of new business will be made to the House Leaders and to the House at the earliest possible date.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a great many fathers and mothers in my constituency of Papineau. The petitioners plead with the Government to restore the full indexation of family allowances and child tax credit. It is sheer injustice, and all petitioners deplore the disastrous consequences of this measure if it is not changed.

The Conservative Government must reverse its decision and honour its commitment by restoring the full indexation of family allowances and child tax credit.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, on behalf of Overbrook voters in my riding, a petition wherein they urge the Government to restore the full indexation of family allowances and child tax credit.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present another petition from the region of Orleans in the riding of Ottawa-Carleton asking the Government to restore the full indexation of family allowances and child tax credit.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from residents of the National Capital Region, Gatineau, Carleton Place, Aylmer, Perkins, Val-des-Monts, Orléans and several local municipalities, from heads of family who ask the Government to reconsider its position. They say that Government programs are important to those families, and they want the reinstatement of full indexation of family allowances and child tax credit.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present to the House a petition from people in New Brunswick, particularly from Saint John, who plead with the Government not to proceed with the partial deindexation of family allowances.

[English]

JUSTICE FOR ISABEL GOLIGHER

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to present which have come from across the country. The first petition demands justice for Isabel Goligher and asks that she either be reinstated to her former job or be given an alternate position of equal status and pay in London with the Government of Canada. It asks that all pay and benefits be paid to her retroactively to the date of her forced resignation and that her reputation be cleared of the false allegations, that she receive written apologies from all parties—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member should make a brief summary of the petitions. I think she has done that. I am afraid she is embarking upon reading the petition.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a large number of petitions from across the country. I am being brief, given the petitions which show support from ridings all across the country. I do have other petitions on other subjects.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from persons concerned with the deindexation of family allowances by the Government.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 363 and 430.

[Text]

PEACE TAX FUND

Question No. 363—Mr. de Jong:

1. For (a) 1980 (b) 1981 (c) 1982 (d) 1983 (e) 1984, how many individuals registered with the Minister of National Revenue or the Department, their intent to withold and/or redirect that portion of their assessed taxes owing which would, as they have determined, contribute to the national defence/military budget to a Peace Tax Fund or Trust Account?

2. Did the Department of National Revenue seek from the Department of Justice any legal opinions and/or advice with respect to initiating legal action against those persons who advised the Department of National Revenue of their intentions to withhold a portion of their taxes for the Peace Tax Fund or Trust Account?

3. For the same years, what was the total amount of taxes, both personal and corporate, which were redirected to the Peace Tax Fund or Trust Account?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): 1. The requested statistics are not maintained, however, general correspondence on the subject of the Peace Tax Fund indicates that 180 letters were received in 1981, 385 in 1982, 141 in 1983 and 133 in 1984.

2. No legal opinion was sought as there is clear authority under the Income Tax Act with respect to the collection of withheld amounts of tax. Normal collections procedures in this regard are followed.

3. Nil.

TRADE WITH CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Question No. 430—Mr. Blenkarn:

In (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981 (d) 1982 (e) 1983 (f) 1984, what was the total amount of goods sold by (i) Canada to Czechoslovakia (ii) Czechoslovakia to Canada?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports: Statistics on the total value of Canadian exports to and imports from Czechoslovakia for the period 1979-84 are show below:

	Exports (Domestic and re-exports)*	Imports
	(thousands of dollars)
1979	36,182	67,509
1980	128,091	63,381
1981	28,238	72,890
1982	31,507	60,337
1983	15,266	54,443
1984	18,972	64,960

* Domestic Exports: Statistics of domestic exports include both goods which are wholly produced in Canada and goods previously included in import statistics which have since been changed in form by further processing and then export.

Re-Exports: Statistics of re-exports include only goods previously included in import statistics which are exported from Canada in the same form as when imported. Minor operations such as sorting or blending are not considered as changing the condition of imported goods.

[Translation]

Mr. Dick: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The questions as enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): When the House rose at one o'clock, there were four minutes remaining in the question and comment period following the speech of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). I see that the Hon. Member is not present in the House at this time. Therefore, we will resume debate.

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in my capacity as Minister Responsible for the Status of Women to address the implications of employment equity for the women of Canada. At the outset, I want to take a moment to congratulate my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), for her achievement with this Bill. She has conducted extensive consultations with all interested parties, consultations which give real meaning to this initiative. This is reflected in the successful drafting of the Bill, a document which is a bold first step. I am pleased and encouraged to hear Members opposite recognize the importance of this first step which represents a position which addresses the sensitive needs of both employers and target groups.

The employment equity legislation before us today ensures that no person will be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to abilities. There is no doubt that such legislation is urgently needed in Canada. Despite a decade of voluntary affirmative action and equal opportunity programs, there has been little progress in the over-all economic advancement of women in the labour force.

As Members of the House will know, the statistics speak for themselves. Historically, the unemployment rate of women has always been higher than that of men. In 1982, women working full time full year earned only 64 cents for every dollar earned by men working full time full year.

The employment options of women are so narrow that fully three-quarters of employed women work in only five of 22 major occupations. Most of these jobs are not only low paying but are also dead-end jobs offering limited scope for advancement. In addition, many of these jobs are threatened by structural changes due to micro-electronics, automation and other technological developments. Further, many women who cannot find full-time jobs are forced to accept part-time work. In fact, in the year 1984, women accounted for 71 per cent of all part-time workers across our nation. This type of employment provides fewer jobs, fewer job benefits, less security and fewer promotion opportunities than full-time work.

Despite these roadblocks, the trend is such that women's participation in the labour force is growing. In the year 1974, the participation rate of women between the ages of 25 and 54 years was 48 per cent. A decade later in 1984, it had jumped to 66.7 per cent. It is estimated that by the year 1990, women will account for two-thirds of the labour force growth. Already over half of women whose youngest children are under three years old are now in the labour force.

Another marked trend is the accelerated rate at which women are turning to self-employment. Women encounter specific barriers in this area of employment, particularly with regard to acquiring loans and financing credit. Although women's contribution to the formal economy as both employees and entrepreneurs has increased, women have not benefited equally. This must change.

Women workers are necessary and valuable contributors to the economy. Their full participation in the labour force is essential to ensure Canada's future growth. What we are proposing here is not merely justice but a part of our whole economic and job-creation thrust. The current under-utilization of women workers and their qualifications is a waste of human resources that Canada can no longer afford. As well, it results in conditions that women themselves cannot afford

I need not remind Hon. Members that women work for the same reasons men do: for their own personal satisfaction and to meet their own economic needs and those of their families. We know for a fact that if women did not work outside the home, over 60 per cent more families would be living below the poverty line. We know too that 85 per cent of all single-parent families are headed by women and that close to half or 47 per cent of these families live in poverty. Clearly, the inequities in our economic system and the social barriers that prevent women's full and equal participation in the economy cannot continue.

The employment equity legislation before us today brings together measures related to equal opportunity and affirmative action. It is designed to counter the restraints that keep women from attaining full parity with men in the labour markets. These constraints include economically limiting job segregation and occupational concentration, social attitudes which lead women to consider only a few types of occupations, systems which overlook significant numbers of trained and skilled women workers and the lack of training opportunities and upward mobility.

Members will recall that at the First Ministers' conference in Regina, the premiers committed themselves to improving access to training and child care in order to help women achieve economic equality. Some of the premiers at the Regina meeting have stated that they too are developing specific policy measures to implement employment equity.

Since we announced our response to the Report of the Commission on Equality in Employment last March, we have met with representatives of women's groups, business, labour, native people, disabled and the visible minorities to discuss employment equity. The swift introduction of employment equity legislation is further proof of our commitment to address this pressing situation.

The Government is setting an example in employment within its own jurisdiction. The federal Government, in strengthening its commitment to employment equity, will be seen to be a leader for provincial Governments and the private sector in supporting and promoting a structure of employment practice founded on merit and not on bias or barriers. We are doing so first for reasons of fundamental justice because barriers restricting the economic future of millions of Canadians must be removed. I also believe that employment equity is a practical measure leading to enhanced productivity and to economic prosperity. Employment equity measures will affect roughly one in five Canadian women. For the first time, the implementation of reporting of employment equity results will be mandatory and reported information will be available on the public record. Public scrutiny will be a valuable instrument of control, bringing pressure to bear for real progress. I have been encouraged by remarks made earlier in the debate by the Minister, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) and Hon. Members opposite who have recognized the importance of data in addressing this sensitive situation.

The principle of employment equity is already established within the federal Public Service. As the employer, the Treasury Board is now working on a number of measures to ensure that this principle is further reflected in federal employment policies and practices. These include immediate initiatives to identify systemic barriers in the Public Service job classification system, intensified implementation of the Government's affirmative action program, with an added commitment for adequate resources. To assist the achieving of the stated goal Hon. Members will know that an invitation has been extended to the Public Service unions to participate in a senior level joint union-management committee to prepare a detailed implementation plan in the area of equal pay for work of equal value throughout the Public Service.

Employment equity measures are an integral part of the Government's economic strategy. Full participation by all Canadians contributes to economic growth. It ensures that our human resources are used to their fullest potential. A priority on jobs and economic renewal must involve an attack on barriers to equity, just as it must involve an attack on obstacles to growth. I believe that employment equity is both beneficial to women and fully compatible with the Government's principal economic priorities. Employment equity is not lip service to those Canadians who have been denied opportunities. Rather, I believe the legislation is a pragmatic program of action which will be the catalyst for change that will spread throughout all sectors of the Canadian economy.

As Minister responsible for the status of women I am aware of the particular systemic problems facing women in employment. For example, employment equity will help debunk outdated myths about working women. It will also alert employers to the cost incurred by overlooking qualified women. It will ensure that employers recognize the benefits to be gained by training, hiring and promoting women on the same basis as they do men. Employment equity is a bold new initiative. While it flows from the recommendations of the Abella Royal Commission on Equality in Employment, and while it is in keeping with the equality provisions of the Charter of Rights, it is as yet an innovative concept which will have to be tried and tested. Because of this we are endeavouring to take a flexible approach to the process of implementing employment equity consistent with individual needs and the capabilities of employers involved.

There are some critics of the legislation and we have heard their comments echoed in the debate thus far. There are those who say the legislation is inadequate, weak, impassive or vague. Others, at the opposite end of the spectrum, charge this is government interference, undue coercive measures, bureaucratic nightmares, regulations or what have you. Yet, the Government's commitment to employment equity is firm and unyielding. We realize that the current under-utilization of women, native Canadians, visible minorities and disabled persons in the labour force is a waste of human resources which Canada can no longer afford. We are determined to involve Canadians fully in the economic renewal and in the life of this nation. The full participation of these groups is essential to ensure our country's future economic growth.

Results are what matter and results are what we are seeking to achieve. Interestingly enough, in her report, Judge Abella encouraged the Government to see that the legislation looked to results rather than regulations. I reiterate that the voluntary approach of the previous Government had very limited success, as Members opposite have recognized in the debate. It is only through legislated, mandatory requirements that we are likely to bring about real employment equity.

Examples of similar mandatory programs which have worked in Canada are the French language program in the federal Public Service, which raised Francophone representation to the same proportion as the over-all Canadian membership, and the preferential hiring of World War II veterans. These two measures were imposed on the system, backed by significant political will, and they yielded positive measurable outcomes.

We ask in 1985 no less for other target group members in our society: women, native people, handicapped persons and visible minorities. Our commitment to this principle of employment equity is on the record.

There is a potential of 1,000 companies employing close to one million workers who will be affected by the legislation. Instead of perceiving employment equity as an obstacle to economic growth, we must realize there are benefits to be gained, not only by the target groups but by employers and the economy as a whole when we promote sound, fair human resource planning—a structure of employment practices founded on merit. In fact, the principles of employment equity go to the very heart of rejuvenated Canadian economy. Canadian economic renewal requires the full participation of all members of the community.

Up to this point in the debate we have been encouraged by the response that this legislation is a step in the right direction. Earlier in the debate the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) indicated that while in the committee stage he wishes to explore some aspects, he and others in his Party see it as a step in the right direction. In response to the concerns raised by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) with respect to the fact that somehow equal pay is not in force and is not related, we wish to remind Hon. Members that this is already in place in the federal jurisdiction but not, of course, in many of the provinces.

Others have been concerned that the provisions are not voluntary. I wish to suggest that not only will public opinion be brought to bear through mandatory reporting mechanisms but that there is the commitment of the Government to strengthen, as necessary, the Human Rights Commission in order to undertake this action.

Earlier in the debate it has been underlined that in order to move forward with this step we require the data. Other than making a bureaucratic effort, what we wish to do is have the companies come back and show us what they are doing to give us that data. We want to assure the House that there will be provisions for enforcement and that there will be in the regulations a number of the concerns addressed which have been raised.

● (1620)

The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) raised a matter which I thought was most important and one on which I would like to encourage suggestions. That was the concern for educational programs, the need for target groups and the importance of this to Canadians. I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that as this legislation moves forward we, as Hon. Members of this House, might be part of that educational program on behalf of women. We might see, as a part of this exercise with employers and employees, that there is an essential educational ingredient for all Canadians.

I am confident that the Government can achieve the goals outlined in this legislation. This legislation can have a meaningful impact on the lives of all members of the designated target groups so that economic equality will be within their grasp. Employment equity legislation clearly spells out the Government's intention to create true equality of opportunity for those who have not enjoyed this right previously. This legislation will go a long way toward ensuring that all Canadians will be able to share the benefits of future economic growth. We look forward to the support of Hon. Members on all sides of the House for this first and historic step in beginning to address these longstanding inequalities and in opening up this truly great opportunity for resource development within Canada.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the remarks of the Minister, and I have a number of questions which I would like to ask him. The Minister said that the Government is adopting a flexible approach consistent with the needs and abilities of the employers. I hope I have quoted him correctly. I would like to ask him if this is not really what the Liberals were saying as well. When the Liberals were in Government, and we were on this side, along with the Conservatives, we were both extremely critical of the Liberal Government because it was saying that we must be flexible. It backed down on mandatory contract compliance, for example, and said, "We'll leave it to the business people to establish their own ideas of what is right". The Government really shied away from the issue.

It seems to me that really the Conservative Government is doing the same as the Liberal Government in trying to use just persuasion and a very flexible approach which has no teeth in it. no "mandatory enforcement" and I insist we use that term because that is really what it means.

Second, the Minister also said that this was a step in the right direction. I would like to ask the Minister why we should only take a step in the right direction. If we are going to do something which is so important and, as the Minister said, which will ensure that no person will be denied employment for reasons other than ability, why should we not go all the way? Why should we only be making this a data collection project? Why should we not be establishing a goal? Why should there not be a mechanism outside of the employer himself which establishes the goals and then enforces these goals? Why do we need to take so much time about it? It will be at least 10 years before the Human Rights Commission can get back to the employers to criticize any changes. It will take that long to get the information together and then to try to do something about it. I would really like to leave those two questions with the Minister.

Mr. McLean: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her comments and assure her that those concerns have been addressed. The Hon. Member raised three items. With respect to the question of flexibility, I want to suggest to the Hon. Member that, as she will recall, the Abella Commission recommended that the Government take a flexible approach—

Ms. Mitchell: It recommended enforcement.

Mr. McLean: —and recognize the diversity of the country and the diverse needs of the employing sector. Second, the Hon. Member speaks of mandatory enforcement. I want to remind her, and the House, that this Bill does have within it mandatory provisions, mandatory for employment equity, mandatory for reporting, and these are legal tools—

Ms. Mitchell: Reporting but not change.

Mr. Cassidy: Tell us what is being done.

Mr. McLean: I suggest to the Hon. Member that she read Clause 4 of the Bill and the comments of the National Action Committee, and others. I understand, as does the Hon. Member, the sense of urgency on the part of the women's movement in relation to this Bill. I am interested to see that the women's movement endorsed Clause 4 which states, and I quote:

An employer shall——not "may". In my understanding of the English language, "shall" implies mandatory—

Ms. Mitchell: How are you going to do it? It's fine to put the words down.

Mr. McLean: In answer to the comments of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville in the debate this morning, we talked about the importance of regulations.

Mr. Cassidy: Its mandatory manipulation.

Mr. McLean: The Hon. Member also spoke about the question of the next steps to be taken. I agree with her entirely. What we are hoping for is that, for example, the Province of Manitoba will follow and join in. This is not something the federal Government can do on its own. What we are trying to do is deal within our own jurisdiction.

Ms. Mitchell: But you're not dealing with it. You're just taking statistics.

Mr. McLean: What we are also trying to do is to set an example in front of the Canadian private sector, the unions and the provinces with the hope that they will begin to follow it. I would like to also reiterate that in the report of Judge Abella, she spoke about the importance of having legislation which was "results oriented", which would not bring back reports from employers which, somehow, do not reflect what is happening but is their way of getting around the regulations. We have here a mechanism in the Human Rights Commission to see that those reports are acted upon, as against the alternative of companies having plans which would have to be approved with more regulatory imposition and fines and so on.

In response to the Hon. Member, I suggest that the concerns she is addressing are concerns which are very much in front of the Government. This is a first step. I remind the Hon. Member that five years ago this was not on the agenda at all and while many quite obviously would wish that there was more in the first step, we make no apologies for coming forward with mandatory provisions, for taking the first step. We will be acting with Crown corporations, with contracts through the Department of Supply and Services, and I believe this Bill will become a complementing part of our action toward a total comprehensive program in relation to justice for target groups.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to characterize the Government's Bill not as flexible, but as flaccid in that it does nothing on a mandatory basis to determine that Crown corporations and the federal Government comply on pay equity issues like affirmative action. Is it not a little embarrassing for his Ministry responsible for the status of women—and I know he sees his wife as more than a rose in his lapel—to be in the same Government which, since the introduction of the new Conservative mandate, has decided that the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation will no longer pay for renovations to make apartments accessible for the disabled? On the one hand, Crown corporations and the federal sector are being told to make a plan to make employment accessible to women, minorities, and the disabled. On the other hand, through the Minister's own Ministry, the Government is cutting back on the issue of accessibility which is obviously critical to those people who will be able to compete in the employment market.

Mr. McLean: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises an issue which is tangential to this particular issue. On the matter of action in this area her Party was not evident over the last number of years with any legislative measures whatsoever. On the matter of sensitizing and education about target groups, let me also remind the Hon. Member that in the last few week the House established a standing committee on the condition of disabled persons.

On the question of education and sensitizing all of our instruments, I would invite her to join with me and others in the Government. Our positions in relation to equality for target groups, be they women or the disabled, are clear. We now need my commitment as the Minister responsible to encourage and work with my colleagues in Cabinet to see that we integrate those concerns into all of our planning processes. As we are able, despite the limited resources that may be available, we must ensure that these groups are targeted as special groups with special concerns. As was indicated earlier in the debate, education in all aspects is important so that when decisions are made the issues of accessibility and the needs of the disabled will be front and centre. This Bill puts that in front of the entire Government as well as the entire community.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments is now over. Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell).

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased, as the New Democratic critic for the status of women, to be speaking on this Bill this afternoon. As we have already indicated, Mr. Speaker, we feel that this is very weak legislation. We agree with the intended thrust of it, but we feel that it is very weak. In fact, I would say that it is mush.

As I said, we support the goal of the Bill which is to bring about true equality in the workplace for women, for physically and mentally handicapped people, for visible minorities, and for natives. However, there are very fundamental flaws in Bill C-62 which will, we believe, prevent the achievement of this goal. Organizations which represent all four sectors are extremely dissatisfied in most cases and would agree with most of the reasons. The Minister said this morning that it will enshrine equality in the workplace and that it ensures access to opportunity for all Canadians. Those are pretty grand goals and I only wish that they could be implemented. I am sure that the Minister sincerely wants to do this, but I have very serious concerns that this is not achievable through this legislation.

The legislation calls only for a reporting of workplace data related to the four groups. It imposes a fine if the designated employers do not complete this report within five years. The reporting is mandatory, but that is only a first step. This legislation does not require the establishment of objective goals set by someone other than the employer, targets, or a timetable for employing members of the designated groups in a much fairer proportion. In other words, there are no real targets, and certainly no quotas.

There is no enforcement mechanism to require compliance by employers, no monitoring agency, and no penalty if the employer does not make changes. I find it hard to understand why there is a fairly stiff penalty if they do not report, but there is no penalty if the employer does not make changes. It is difficult, of course, to impose penalties if you do not know what those changes are going to be. The Bill applies only to selected employers. The Ministers said that it would affect everyone, but in reality it applies only to approximately 500 of the largest corporations in the federal sector. Maybe there is hope for a trickle-down effect, but I think this would be wishful thinking. As well, the time allowance for employers to make changes is far too lengthy. As I understand, it will take three years to compile the first report and another three to five years to study the results. What will happen after that? By then the Government could be changed.

Employers are left to make whatever changes they deem to be reasonable. This whole Bill is so subjective. It is nice to try to get employers to be more progressive and to care more about equal representation in employee groups, but they have a very vested interest. Many of the American business people who were quoted this morning said that they feel that mandatory affirmative action really works. They like it and feel it is productive from a business point of view as well as a human point of view. I do not understand why we have not put more teeth into this Bill.

The Minister said that we will use the force of public opinion. Of all people on the Government side, the knows through her fight for equality that women have never really achieved very much through the force of public opinion. I would think that disabled people, natives, and visible minorities have even less of a chance of achieving this through public opinion. Simply because an employer may feel a little embarrassed is not going to change the whole scheme of things.

As well, the Bill includes no reference to equal pay for work of equal value. According to the experts in this field, equality in employment must include equal access to jobs and equal pay for work of equal value. There is not much point in getting a job if you do not have a fair rate of pay. Judge Albella and all other authorities on affirmative action agree that any plan must include a requirement that employers will practise equal pay for work of equal value. Judge Abella has said that it is not enough to get women and minority groups into jobs, they must be paid fairly according to the value of that job compared to similar jobs.

We know, as the Minister pointed out this morning, that there is equal pay for work of equal value legislation. We all know that there is human rights legislation, but the Minister herself admitted that this has not been enforced and has not worked. We know that this is partly due to lack of staff, but it is more than that. Women still have to prepare complaints and go on a case-by-case basis to the Human Rights Commission. Members will recall that it was two years before the Bell employees were even heard. Many women do not have the ability, the time, or the expertise to prepare their case. They might not even know that this was their right. Therefore, there has not been adequate enforcement of equal pay for work of equal value.

● (1640)

This Bill is an opportunity for the Government to strengthen that principle. Government employers, whether it be Crown corporations or the Government itself, should be required by this legislation to practise that principle. The onus must be on the employer to make systemic changes, it should not left to a woman to complain individually or the Human Rights Commission to wait for complaints. This should be part of the agreement made with every employer involved in employer equity and I urge the Minister to look at this again.

Miss MacDonald: We have looked at it.

Ms. Mitchell: I am not convinced the Minister has done that at all. I think the experts in the field would say the same thing, including Judge Abella.

The sixth point I want to make is that the Bill ignores the important role of collective bargaining. Last week I attended a special conference held by the Canadian Labour Congress. Well over 500 representatives of trade union affiliates were there and expressed great concern about this Bill. The Government has not included in the Bill the importance of referring to the collective bargaining role which is of great concern to these groups. The Minister has already presented some facts regarding the deplorable situation facing women in the job market, a situation which has not improved. We hope very much that this legislation, if it can be improved and toughened, will help women as well as other designated groups.

I would like to make reference to the comments of some other people regarding this Bill. Judge Abella, of course, cannot comment on the legislation but she said that voluntary compliance does not work. There must be an enforcement agency, that is very clear from her remarks. The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women is a Government recognized agency which is supposed to be advising the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. Obviously he has not been taking their advice because he did not refer to their points at all. They said they were very disappointed that crucial elements in Judge Abella's recommendations are absent from the Government's proposal, such as the lack of a mechanism to provide co-ordinated and effective enforcement of employment equity. There are other groups I could refer to, Mr. Speaker, but my time is getting short and I want to introduce a very important document into the record this afternoon. I will be glad to see that the Minister gets a copy of this. It was compiled by the CLC and compares the key Abella Report recommendations with this Bill and also refers to the CLC position on affirmative action, a term they prefer to use regarding this same issue.

The first point they make is that Judge Abella said that all federally regulated employers should be required to implement employment equity. The two key words are "all" and "required". Bill C-62 says that federally regulated employers and Crown corporations employing 100 or more are required to implement employment equity.

Miss MacDonald: That is right, "required".

Ms. Mitchell: The CLC feels that legislation at both federal and provincial levels must make it mandatory for employers to negotiate programs with unions. I hope the Minister will have another look at that.

The second point is that the legislation should require employers to implement a program of filing data, et cetera—this is Judge Abella speaking—and an enforcement mechanism must be implemented. Bill C-62 requires that employers implement a program and file reports. The programs require no approval and there is no enforcement mechanism other than the filing of the reports to be made public. The CLC of course agrees with the Abella Report recommendations.

As well, Judge Abella says that discriminatory barriers should be eliminated. The Bill requires that employment barriers be identified and removed. Those are fairly similar. The fourth point was that employers should be required to have employment equity committees consisting of representatives of management, labour and the designated groups. There is no legislated requirement for committees, so that is another point we will want to look at. The CLC has strongly recommended equal representation by union and management on any committee and the union should select its own representatives. Judge Abella said no quotas should be imposed and the Bill says no quotas or targets will be imposed. The CLC says targets and timetables must be set to ensure progress. Judge Abella says employers must be given flexibility, as the Minister mentioned earlier, and the Bill gives total flexibility to employers. The CLC says that unions must have the right to negotiate changes into collective agreements, including employment practices and procedures.

Miss MacDonald: They are not very willing to do so.

Ms. Mitchell: Judge Abella says there is an obligation to file data but the requirement to implement employment equity should take effect immediately. I think that is quite different from what this Bill requires. It requires that employers shall commence filing reports on June 1, 1988, and once a year thereafter. They will begin to implement employment equity in 1985 and they will submit plans to Treasury Board. The CLC feels there should be regular reporting to an enforcement agency. Judge Abella says that the enforcement of employment equity requires an independent agency with sufficient resources, qualified staff and an ongoing consultative relationship in the development of guidelines with business, labour and designated groups. That is not the type of enforcement agency included in this Bill. There will be complaints that can be lodged with the Human Rights Commission but we do not feel this is effective. The enforcement of change is what has not really been dealt with.

The CLC feels there must be strong penalties for non-compliance and impartial boards to adjudicate disputes. The Abella Report says that contract compliance should be imposed by legislation. This could include specific goals and timetables. There are no goals and timetables in this Bill. The report says that equal pay for work of equal value should be part of all employment equity programs and more resources should be allocated for enforcement.

I could go on and mention the other matters which are not covered at all and which are so important to women. It is not enough to have open access to jobs; they must be jobs at fair rates of pay with opportunity for promotion. More than that, in many cases women cannot move up if they do not have child care, adequate training, including pre-employment training, which will help them to be competitive with traditionally male dominated occupations. We feel that changes are needed to this Bill. I hope very much that there will be a chance to make some of those changes through amendments, but, as the Minister responsible for the Status of Women said, it is only just a step. It is not a big step, and there are serious omissions in the Bill.

• (1650)

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member realize that she just blew her case when she quoted the analysis of the CLC about this Bill? She stated that CLC indicated that the Bill required employers to implement employment equity. The CLC recognizes, as do we, that the Bill requires employers to implement employment equity. That is mandatory, but it does not do it for small business. CLC recognizes that the mandatory action is in Clause 4 of the Bill wherein employers are required, by law, to implement employment equity. Is the Hon. Member aware of that?

Was she aware, when she talked about flexibility, that Judge Abella indicated in her report that it would also be expected that employers would set annual internal objectives, that these would not be required by statute and that no quotas would be imposed? I think the Hon. Member tried to leave the impression that the recommendations of the Abella Report were not being followed. We have followed them in very many cases. particularly the section concerning enforcement mechanisms. Judge Abella recommended four models of consideration by the Government. Is the Hon. Member aware that the fourth model as an enforcement mechanism relied upon the provisions already in effect in the Canada Labour Code and upon the Canadian Human Rights Commission? That is the agency which we chose as the mechanism to ensure the accumulation of data. Does she realize that the Canadian Human Rights Commission, under Article 32(3), has been given the right to initiate a complaint? It has not been able to do that so far. It has never used that particular part of the legislation because it has not had data available to enable it to do so. This legislation makes that possible. Does the Hon. Member realize that?

Finally, when the Hon. Member talks about timing, does she realize that the moment this legisation is passed, employment equity goes into effect? Companies will have 1986 within which to develop their plans and methods. They have to begin counting the data as of January 1, 1987, and reporting on that full year by the beginning of 1988. From the moment the Bill is passed, there is an onward march which leads companies to the development of their plans in 1986, to the implementation of their plans in 1987 and to the reporting on those plans in 1988. If that process is not carried out, they will be subject to the penalties in the Bill. Does she realize those things?

Ms. Mitchell: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I realize what is in the Bill. Of course the Minister does not agree with the criticisms I have been making about the very things which she stated. It is one thing to say that employers "shall" implement employment equity. However, how will they do that? As I understand it, it is really being left up to them to gather the data and, if they do not gather the data, there will be a penalty. However, what will they do with the data? That is left up to them, as I understand it. The Minister can correct me if I am wrong, but it is up to them to establish what is employment equity in their case. How many native people should they employ? How many women should they employ and in what kinds of jobs? How many disabled people or people of a visible minority origin should they employ? My point is that the onus is on the employers to establish their own targets and goals. It is unreasonable and unfair, in a way, to leave that up to employers.

This morning it was indicated that many business people in the United States like mandatory affirmative action. They like to be told what has to be done, and there have been positive results from this requirement. I cannot understand how employers can establish their own targets and how we can be reassured that it will result in an effective systemic change which will provide equal opportunities for the groups I have mentioned.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the Minister left me rather dismayed because she did not admit that the Bill was a weak one. She talked about an enforcement mechanism involving the Canadian Human Rights Commission. I have searched in vain throughout the entire Bill, and the Canadian Human Rights Commission is not in fact mentioned as the enforcement agent. She talked about how this would bring employment equity into the workplace right away, yet went on to agree that reporting was not meant to begin until 1988. Reporting to Parliament will not begin until this time three years hence. An employer who was challenged to that point would certainly say: "We will have to get this under way", but we are talking about some time in the life of the next Parliament. For example, we are talking about a situation where a woman aged 21 in the workplace today would be 24, 26 or 27 before any conceivable action might occur.

Also the Hon. Minister talked about the Abella report. I will refer to page 195 of that report and ask the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) to comment on it. Judge Abella indicated that a voluntary program with a mandatory reporting requirement was nonetheless voluntary in the absence of a requirement to remedy the discrminatory practices disclosed by the information reported. The penalty in the Bill for not reporting is heavy, but there is no penalty for doing nothing. The only penalty is for failing to report that nothing was done.

Also Judge Abella indicated that a requirement of public reporting may result in public pressure on a company to revise its systems, but that it was unrealistic to rely on public opinion as an effective monitoring agent. She went on to indicate that it would result in a speculative and scattered approach and would create the perception, in the absence of enforcement, that the issue was deserving on only casual attention.

When affirmative action on a voluntary basis was tried in Ontario, barely 200 firms out of tens of thousands actually did anything in a concrete way. Does the Hon. Member expect that much more will result from the Bill at the federal level?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the elaboration of my colleague, particularly his references to Judge Abella regarding the absence of any requirement to remedy a discriminatory situation. Again I say to the Minister that that is obviously what is lacking here. I agree completely with the comments about public opinion, that public opinion is not really the way to bring about change and to require it in an authoritative mandatory manner.

I am not from Ontario, but aside from having very fine reports at the end of three years and perhaps a few fines if reports are not submitted, I would certainly be very skeptical about the Bill bringing about the major change urgently needed for the affected groups.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a comment. I think we are taking a very major step forward today as a maturing nation. It is not the end of the road, as some Hon. Members have indicated. We certainly know which route we want to follow. I, for one, congratulate the Hon. Minister. She has worked tirelessly in this area, month after month, year after year, to develop job opportunities and equality programs which all her Liberal predecessors did not put together in the last 15 years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

CANADA PENSION PLAN

MEASURE TO AMEND

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Before proposing the question for second reading in reference to Bill C-247, an Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Chair ought to express some reservations as to the procedural acceptability of this Bill which seems to infringe upon the prerogative of the Crown.

Having entered this caveat, the Chair is prepared to allow debate to take place on the motion for second reading of Bill C-247. However, should such a debate come to an end then the Chair will have to rule on the procedural acceptability of this Bill.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved that Bill C-247, an Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan (survivor's pension) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I at the outset say that I would certainly want to participate in the question of order involving this particular Bill. I have no reservations about the fact that it is a Bill that is properly introduced into the House and should be properly debated.

The purpose of Bill C-247 is to eliminate discrimination on the basis of age from the Canada Pension Plan. A person in receipt of disability benefits under the plan should have the assurance that in the event of his or her death the surviving spouse and dependants will receive whatever benefits are left in the Plan irrespective of the age of the spouse.

At the moment if the spouse is 35 years of age or younger, that spouse cannot collect the survivor's benefits under the Canada Pension Plan Act. I intend to prove that this is an unfair provision in the Act, that in fact the surviving spouse of any age should be able to collect the pension. The Act provides that people start contributing to the Canada Pension Plan at age 18. Therefore, if a person starts contributing to the Canada Pension Plan, providing they meet the basic requirements, which is six years contributions in the last 10 for a disability pension, it seems to me that providing they meet those particular criteria then they should be able to collect the survivor's pension irrespective of the age of the spouse.

I suggest and argue that the law is an arbitrary one. What is so magical about the age 35? Why not 25, or 45, or 30 or 46? The very arbitrariness of picking a number, it seems to me, is not a fair way in which to administer a pension scheme.

I know from my own experience that many workers, because so many of them work in the mines, become disabled at very young ages and many of them pass on as a result of accidents in the mine. Their spouses, of which 99.9 per cent are women, are unable to collect yet they may have families, have no income and are unable to collect the survivor's benefits from the Canada Pension Plan.

That seems to me to discriminate against them not only because of age but, because of the nature of the occupation, it discriminates against them because they are women. I would refer to Section 15(1) of the Charter of Rights under the section of equal rights, and I quote from Section 15(1):

> Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

Clearly, Section 44(1)(d) of the Canada Pension Plan Act is unconstitutional and is outlawed by the Charter of Rights and the equality rights section, Section 15(1). We cannot have a law that contravenes what we now hold as a basic right of Canadians. We cannot discriminate based on age.

The Canada Pension Plan is a plan to which employers and employees contribute. Nine million workers at the present time pay 1.8 per cent of their yearly salary, up to a maximum of $379.80, into the Plan and their employers pay the same. Self-employed people pay the full $759.60 themselves.

The Canada Pension Plan has been accumulating considerable sums of money which the federal Government in turn has loaned back to the provinces for very small rates of return. Indeed, it is estimated that the provinces would never be able to pay back to the Canada Pension Plan the money they owe. Now we have a movement afoot to get workers and employers to put a greater percentage of their income into the Canada Pension Plan. The scenario is simply that the Canada Pension Plan would have larger amounts of money to once again lend to the provinces.

This particular change that I am proposing is not guaranteed to put the Canada Pension Plan into the red. It is not an amendment that encroaches upon the Treasury of Canada. The Canada Pension Plan is the fund into which employers and employees contribute. The Government of Canada does not contribute a penny. My amendment does not encroach upon the federal plan. These are moneys which the Canada Pension Plan program administers. It is money contributed by employers and employees.

I would argue that my amendment is a reasoned one. It conforms to Section 15(1) of the Canadian Constitution, 1981, the equality rights section of the Charter of Rights. It seems to me that it is only fair that the surviving spouse of anyone who is on a disability pension under the Canada Pension Plan Act should receive the survivor's pension irrespective of what age he or she may have attained, whether it is 29 or 34 or what it is.

● (1710)

Right now I am dealing with the case of a widow from my riding who missed the cut-off of 35 years because her thirty-fifth birthday was three days away.

An Hon. Member: Got to have a cut-off.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right. That is a very smart response from the Tory benches. Ministers can trot around Europe at great cost to the taxpayers. The Government can bail out a bank for $1 billion. We can talk about restraint while the Ministers spend taxpayers' money like drunken sailors. She said she spent three days in bed when she was supposed to be out doing Government business.

It is all right for well-heeled Tories to talk about cutting people off. However, we do not have to cut them off. The plan is funded. The contributors are paying their fair share for this kind of coverage. The only reason the money is not there is because we have been lending it to the provinces. Now we are going to have the contributors contribute an even greater percentage to the Canada Pension Plan.

This amendment is fair. It will bring some equity and fairness to the Canada Pension Plan Act of 1966. It will eliminate the arbitrariness built into Section 44(1)(b) of the present Act. It seems that it is only just that the surviving spouse of someone who was collecting a disability pension under the Canada Pension Plan Act should indeed receive a survivor's pension.

I may also point out that things are fine for those who live in urban communities in which there are lots of opportunities for employment, particularly for women. However, in areas like mine, predominantly a mining community, once a spouse dies, the survivor hopes to collect the survivor's pension because there is no possibility for the spouse to step out of mourning and into a job. It is just not possible. That is why the spouse who was working was contributing to the plan. He was paying for this kind of coverage. The plan includes a death benefit, a disability provision and a pension at age 65.

An exception was made in the Act. The present Act indicates that if a surviving spouse is under 35 there is only one way that she can collect the pension and that is if she is disabled. I do not think that those who framed the Act in the first place were aware of the difficulties they created for a person who worked in a mine, was injured, received a disability pension and then passed away leaving his spouse unable to collect the pension because she was under age 35. Children may be involved and there is no opportunity for employment. It is a fund to which the spouse contributed and from which the surviving spouse is entitled to collect.

I call on Hon. Members to support this very reasoned, fair and just amendment. I call for the support of Bill C-247.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased indeed to be able to speak to this amendment to the Canada Pension Plan Act proposed by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). I think all of us in this House realize the importance to our whole pension structure of the Canada Pension Plan. I must commend the Hon. Member for making an attempt to improve the Canada Pension Plan.

We all know or should know that our pension system works on three main tiers. First there is the tier composed of the Canada Pension Plan, the Old Age Security and the GIS, all government programs. The second tier is composed of the industrial and company pension plans and the third tier is composed of personal savings including RRSPs, homes, cars and bank accounts. Those three things are all forms of assistance for which people can plan during their working lives so they may have an adequate pension when they retire.

For most people in Canada, there is no doubt that the Canada Pension Plan and the OAS are the main supports for retirement. That is why I commend the Hon. Member for attempting to make some improvements to these plans. However, I would like to correct some misunderstandings with which he may have left the House while he spoke. The wording of his amendment is liable to cause some difficulty in determining what he said.

From the wording of the motion, one could be given the impression that the Canada Pension Plan survivor benefits are paid only to the surviving spouse of a person who was in receipt of a CPP benefit when he or she died. This, of course, is not the case. I am sure the Hon. Member knows that but that is not clarified by the wording of the amendment.

We should know that CPP benefits are paid to the surviving spouses of deceased contributors who, on their death, met the minimum contributory requirements. What are these requirements? Specificially, benefits are paid to survivors of contributors who have made contributions for at least three years and for one-third of the period during which he or she could have made contributions for 10 years, whichever is less. Further, as the Hon. Member mentioned, if the deceased spouse satisfies these minimum requirements, the surviving spouse must also meet certain conditions. She must be 35 years or older or, if she is not 35 years or older, then she must be disabled or have dependent children. Only when the deceased had made sufficient contributions and the surviving spouse meets one of the eligibility criteria to which I referred does entitlement to a CPP survivor's benefit exist.

If eligibility is determined, then the amount of the benefit to be paid is calculated, once again taking the survivor's age or presence of a disability or dependent children into account. The amendment proposed by the Bill before us suggests that survivor benefits be paid to a surviving spouse under the age of 35 years. Currently, this survivor would be entitled to a benefit only if he or she was disabled or had a dependent child. However, what level of benefit does the Member suggest? I think it would be very relevant in terms of the costs to workers to know the amount of the benefits. The Hon. Member has not mentioned this. The reason I ask this question is because the way the current benefit levels are determined is rather complicated.

Under the current plan, the level of survivor benefits payable is also dependent on age. For instance, survivors over the age of 65 receive 60 per cent of the deceased spouse's retirement pension which was paid or which would have been paid at the time of death had the deceased reached the age of 65. For survivors under the age of 65, the survivor's benefit is composed of two parts. First, there is a flat-rate component of $87.56 per month as of 1985 and an earning-related component equal to 37.5 per cent of the deceased contributor's retirement pension which was paid or which would have been paid had he or she been entitled to receive it. The maximum monthly earnings related component payable in 1985 is $163.28 for a total maximum survivor's pension of $250.84. However, it should be noted that not all eligible surviving spouses under age 65 receive this level of benefit. For example, a surviving spouse between the ages of 35 and 45, who is not disabled or who has no dependent children in his or her care, receives a benefit which is reduced by one one-hundred-and-twentieth for each month he or she is under the age of 45 at the time of the spouse's death. This is equivalent to a 10 per cent reduction per year. Thus, a 40-year old survivor could receive a CPP survivor's benefit which is only one-half of the amount which would have been paid if she or he had been age 45 on the contributor's death.

When we look at these provisions today, these benefit calculations and complex eligibility criteria for survivor's benefits may indeed seem discriminatory. They are certainly complex and not easily understood unless you are in the business. However, I believe it is important to keep in mind that the current CPP survivor's benefit provisions were designed in the early 1960, when the flag was designed. Thus, they reflect the social values of that time. Perhaps my hon. friend is right when he says that now is the time to re-examine these proposals because social values have changed.

In any event, in 1960, it was assumed that the surviving spouse of a CPP contributor would be a woman. That is not necessarily true today. It was assumed that that woman prior to the contributor's death had been financially dependent on her husband's earnings. That is becoming less common today. Thus, legislators decided that the older the spouse the greater the likelihood she could not become financially independent. I think that reasoning is as good today as it was then. Those who were disabled or who had dependent children were also not expected to have the ability to become financially self-sufficient. As a result, these women were provided with the greatest amount of protection under the survivor's benefits provisions. I do not really see anything wrong with that provision, if one is thinking in terms of the cost to the worker of these pensions. Those areas which are most likely to need help should be targeted, which is what the provisions of the CPP did in 1960.

On the other hand, widows under the age of 45 who had no children and who were not disabled were expected to become at least partially responsible for their own financial well-being; and those aged 35 and younger were expected to have the ability to become completely self-sufficient. I am not sure whether that is not an assessment which is even more valid today because there is no doubt about it that today women are better educated, they are out in the workforce and they have better skills. At the age of 35 they are definitely still very employable.

Some of these assumptions may have been perfectly reasonable when the plan was implemented. However, I agree that they may not completely reflect today's values. Today, when a high percentage of women are participating in the paid labour force, the need for lifetime survivor's benefits based strictly on age and/or presence of a disability or dependent children is not really as clear as it was in those days. I do not believe we should look only at the criterion of a surviving spouse being aged 35 to be eligible for CPP protection. We must look at the whole package of survivor's benefits to see how best they can be modified to meet the needs of today's surviving spouse.

As I am sure Hon. Members can appreciate, this is not an easy task. Nevertheless, the Bill before us today asks us to decide whether the current CPP survivor's benefits provisions are out of date and whether or not they should be changed. Because of the complexity of these questions, I am sure Hon. Members realize that the issue of CPP survivor's benefits requires much more study. I can assure Hon. Members that the task force on pensions which reported to the House a year or two ago examined in detail all of the issues flowing from the Canada Pension Plan, including the one brought forward by the Hon. Member. At that time we concluded that the features of the plan with respect to this particular system need not be changed.

For instance, even if a decision is made to change the current system, alternate survivor's benefit provisions must be designed. Like the legislators who put the current plan into effect, we have to determine the needs of CPP contributors and their families and what survivor's benefit protection will best meet those needs.

Of course, as with all major CPP amendments, any future changes to the survivor's benefit provisions must be approved by both the federal Government and two-thirds of the provinces having two-thirds of the population of Canada. Ontario alone can stop any change with respect to the legislation. Hon. Members will recall that the Province did this with respect to another issue.

The Canada Pension Plan belongs to members of the labour force and their families. We must ensure that the plan remains responsive to those people. In any event, I commend the Hon. Member again for bringing this matter before us.

The Canada Pension Plan as devised in 1966 was devised on the basis of what the conditions were at that time. It was well known that in 20 years from that time there would have to be a reassessment. The Hon. Member implied to the House that the Canada Pension Plan was funded, that money was paid in by the workers and their employers and then lent out to the provinces. I can assure the Hon. Member that the Canada Pension Plan is not fully funded. It is far from being fully funded. At the present rate of funding, it would run out of money. In fact, I believe this is the first year the pension plan will pay out more money than it takes in, which is not to say that it is broke or bankrupt. It is merely to say that that is what was planned and that is what is now being reviewed since every so often the plan has to be refinanced.

The Hon. Member opposite also indicated that the interest rate which the provinces pay is very low. Again, I think that is an exaggeration which should be examined. I believe at the moment there is $25 billion in the fund over and above what has been paid out. The provinces have borrowed that money and given back so-called government promissory notes, if you like. They will begin to pay the interest on that money this year, or perhaps they have been paying the interest already. However, they are borrowing that back as well. The interest rates which are paid are adjusted each month to match the rate at which the Government of Canada borrows money on the 25-year bond rate. I admit that is not the market rate and there are higher rates that can be obtained. However, this is a large sum of money about which we are speaking and it is too much to expect to receive the highest rate of interest on that amount in view of the type of risk in which people are interested.

The problem that I see with the CPP is not the amount of interest which it brings in. One of the problems is that it is not fully funded. Right now, it is the best bargain in the world. We now pay only 3.6 per cent—1.8 per cent is paid by the employer and 1.8 per cent is paid by the employee. If the plan were fully funded and if a contributor had to pay for the benefits which he would eventually receive upon retirement, then he would be paying between 9 per cent and 10 per cent of his income. I wonder how many members of the labour force would want to increase their payments to the CPP to 10 per cent. I wonder how many would say: "The plan is getting too rich." That is really what I am saying. If we want to change the plan, then let us look very carefully at what it will cost us and what it will cost the person working in the field. There is no free lunch in this field. At the moment we are depending greatly on an inter-generational gift, as it were. We are hoping that our children will pay sufficient amounts into the fund to provide for us when we retire, just as we have done for past generations. When considering this question, we must keep in mind that there are now six people working for every one who is not working, who is retired or who is of preschool age. In the year 2020, when the current workers move out of the workforce and start to look for payments under the Canada Pension Plan, we find that there will probably be only two workers for every person who is retired or is going to school. The question I believe we, as legislators, must ask ourselves is whether those two persons in the workforce would be prepared to pay the kind of money required to provide for all those persons who are not working. I believe that is why we saw in our last Budget a great emphasis on personal savings. That is why we announced plans to revise the RRSPs and other plans to improve private pensions, to provide for portability for two years so that Canadians can move from job to job. This Governemnt realizes the Canada Pension Plan will not be sufficient to really provide what will be expected by those people who retire in the coming years.

• (1730)

We are saying to Canadians that we will look after the Canada Pension Plan. We will continue to improve it but we are asking Canadians to look after their own pensions as well, which we are making possible through tax incentives. It is easy to say we can improve the Canada Pension Plan without looking at the cost. During the tour of our task force we heard from groups who suggested that we double the benefits of the Canada Pension Plan. They said they were prepared to pay 7 per cent, but it would not be 7 per cent. The real cost would be 20 per cent. We can examine the Canada Pension Plan and try to make improvements but let us not do it lightly and carelessly and let us not do it without a real concern for the ultimate cost to the worker and to the employer.

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, I would like first to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), for his interest in improving surviving spouse's benefits under the Canada Pension Plan, and for introducing Bill C-247 to supress the age factor impact on those benefits.

My honourable colleague's proposal is no doubt well-intended and most progressive. However, it must be recognized that such a proposal concerns an important component of a very complex system of Government and private programs aimed at protecting widows and widowers.

This systems includes provincial assistance programs, the Federal Old Age Security program, the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan, private pension plans, life insurance policies, and so on. Needless to say, before changing any of those components there should be a very serious study the implications thereof.

I consider it important, Mr. Speaker, to mention that this Government has already changed one of the components in that system. In fact, it has introduced and passed some time ago Bill C-26, which amends the Old Age Security program to provide for benefit payments to widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 who have little or no income. Many studies had shown that that group of Canadian men and women were among the most in need.

Further, as announced in the Budget speech, the Government will introduce measures to improve minimum standards for private pension funds coming under the federal Pension Benefits Standards Act. Those measures will be of special benefit to the spouses of contributors to those plans.

Concerning such changes, let me refer specifically to the extension of benefits to the surviving spouse before or after the contributor's retirement; to maintaining the benefits in case of remarriage, and to the possibility of sharing pension credits between spouses in cases of regular or common-law marriage breakdown. Those proposals are the result of an extensive consultation process with employers, employees and the general public, undertaken by the Parliamentary Taskforce on Pension Reform. The Government is indeed proving its commitment to improve the income security system for widows and widowers.

I should at this point, Mr. Speaker, look at the surviving spouses' benefits under the Canada Pension Plan, and the importance of the age factor in their determination. Under the current system, once a spouse's qualifications for that benefit have been established, the amount to which the latter will be entitled is figured out on the basis of his or her age.

First, the survivor's pension payable to surviving spouses aged under 65 is determined on the direct basis of the spouse's age at the time the contributor deceased.

This means a surviving spouse aged 45 to 65 will get full benefits made up of two parts: a flat rate component, and a second one based on the deceased contributor's earnings. In 1985, the maximum benefit paid to those surviving spouses totals $250.84 per month.

On the other hand, a surviving spouse aged 35 to 45, having no disability or no dependent child, will have his or her pension reduced by 1/120 for each month short of his or her 45th birthday. A surviving spouse aged 35 or less will not qualify for the survivor's pension before reaching 65, unless he or she is disabled in the meantime.

Finally, when the surviving spouse reaches 65 and qualifies for the Old Age Security basic pension, the surviving spouse's benefit will be re-determined to equal 60 percent of the pension that was or would have been paid to the deceased contributor. The maximum monthly amount of that benefit is $261.25 in the current year.

It is only when we look, as we have just been doing, at the role of the age factor in determining what benefits the surviving spouse will receive that we can appreciate the significance of the reform proposed by the illustrious Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

The structure of this provision of the Canada Pension Plan can only be explained by the social climate which existed 20 years ago when the plan was created. Hon. Members will recall that, at the time, few women had a paying job outside the home. They lived in virtually absolute economic dependency and the death of the head of the family left them in a precarious economic position.

As women generally live longer than men and are younger than their husbands, the surviving spouses were at the time mostly women, and in fact, the situation is the same today.

In accordance with these social standards, the contributor had to support his dependents during his years of work. The survivor's pension was therefore considered an extension of this role of provider. Thus, a survivor's pension, a death benefit and an orphan's benefit were incorporated into the system.

However, the originators of the plan deemed it appropriate to limit this responsibility of the contributor to his family. Based on certain premises, an attempt was therefore made to develop an adequate measurement of the state of dependency or the need of the dependents of a contributor.

Based on the fact that it is more difficult to enter the labour market at a later age, it was determined that the older a spouse was, the more dependent she was on the provider.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I constantly hear a voice to my left and this disturbs my concentration a great deal.

As I was saying, since the possibilities of remarriage decrease with age, it was also determined that, the older the spouse was, the more her chances of finding another provider decreased. This is why the age factor is so important in setting the amount of the survivor's benefits. The older the survivor, the higher the benefits.

Added to the difficulty of entering the labour market because of age, the fact of having dependent children or of being an invalid means economic dependency as these two factors can also affect the possibility of finding a job.

The full pension of a surviving spouse is therefore paid to widows in this situation.

It should also be pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that in the early days of the Plan, the survivor's pension was paid to all widows, but only to invalid widowers. There were therefore two sets of eligibility requirements for this benefit: on one hand, a set for women based on age, the presence of dependent children and invalidity, and on the other hand, a set for men based essentially on invalidity, which, as we have seen, reflected the social standards of the time.

Obviously, society has changed since the 60s, and so has the Canada Pension Plan. In fact, in 1974, the Government amended the Plan to allow a survivor's pension to be paid without regard for the sex of the recipient. There is now only one set of eligibility requirements, namely that which used to apply only to women.

I suggest that the original purpose of the survivor's pension, which was to protect the family of a contributor against financial hardship resulting from his or her death, is still valid today. However, because of the increased presence of women in the labour force and the new economic weight of the wife both in the family and society, we must reconsider the validity of the age factor in computing the pension the surviving spouse should get. It should be emphasized, however, that the scales now in use are still adequate for a category of surviving spouses, that of generally older widows who have never been part of the labour force.

At first glance, the proposal put forward by my hon. friend would seem to correct an injustice. Its adoption, however, would raise several questions concerning the purpose of this pension which, as I said, is to protect the family of the contributor against any economic hardship resulting from his or her death. Because the age factor is there to determine the level of dependency or need, Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much that we could abolish this factor without updating the basic assumptions and the structure of the benefits to the surviving spouse to reflect today's economic and social reality.

I should mention at this point that even though the Federal Government may propose changes to the Canada Pension Plan, such changes could only come into force with the consent of two-thirds of the provinces that have two-thirds of the population of the country. Discussions between the two levels of Government are therefore necessary, particularly in view of the fact that in would be preferable to maintain a sort of parity between the Canadian Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan. Such changes would therefore require a more in depth study of the benefits structure by the two levels of government.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we should act with utmost care, because this scheme and the Quebec Pension Plan affect the workers of the whole country. I am also convinced that, in co-operation with the provinces, we can meet the current needs of the surviving spouses and thus carry out successfully a major component of the pension reform.

[English]

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I will just say a few words because I would like to have this Bill voted upon in the House. The Speaker who was in the chair prior to you said that there was some doubt concerning the motion because it may involve a government prerogative. He meant that this entails an expenditure of government funds. If that is considered to be a Government prerogative, I am afraid that 99 per cent of the motions brought before the House would have to be disallowed. Practically every Bill introduced, if enacted, would involve an expenditure of Government funds.

The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) who introduced this Bill asked what is so magical about the age 35. I think we have got off track today. This Bill is about disability benefits. I am sure the hon. gentleman will agree that the section which he cited is about disability benefits. The Hon. Member is asking what is so magical about the age 35. If you are two or three days less than 35 you are treated differently than if you are 35.

I would like to add to what the hon. gentleman said and perhaps supply him with some more ammunition for this particular argument before the House today. The section which he wants to amend says:

—if the surviving spouse

(i) has reached 65 years of age, or

(ii) in the case of a surviving spouse who has not reached 65 years of age,

(A) had at the time of the death of the contributor reached 35 years of age.

(B) was at the time of the death of the contributor a surviving spouse with dependent children, or

(C) is disabled;

The "or" does not come between (A) and (B). It says "or (C) is disabled". You must meet the above two conditions and then it says "or (C) is disabled". The question, Mr. Speaker, is what is so magical about the age of 35.

My point is that the hon. gentleman said that this will not involve an expenditure of Government funds because, as he so correctly pointed out, the Canada Pension Plan now has an overabundance of money in it, as it always has. What have they done with the money? There were new agreements signed recently to allow the provincial governments to borrow cheap money from that fund which is contibuted to by the workers of Canada.

Let us narrow it down to only the disability pension. I will alert the hon. gentleman to a fact that I am sure he is aware of, but which he can perhaps use in future arguments. We are talking about disability benefits. A person fighting for a disability pension has to go through quite a procedure before he establishes his entitlement. He must get letters from this doctor and that doctor and then an independent doctor and then another doctor and then another doctor. It is appealed and eventually the person, who may have been on his back in bed for many years and cannot move at all, gets his disability pension.

However, that person may have had to get social assistance to support his family, as most such people do. When it is determined that he was qualified for disability pension from the time that the applied, which may have been two or three years ago, the department sends his cheque to the provincial government to repay what he received while he was on his back having to draw that little amount of social assistance and welfare.

Mr. Rodriguez: Shameful.

Mr. Baker: In this new spirit of co-operation between the federal and provincial Governments it is easy. You do not even have to sign a form now. There is an agreement between the federal Government and the provincial Governments. All you need do is find out that he drew social assistance.

Some of the financial wizards in this Chamber should be asking another basic question about that. The federal Government pays 50 per cent of social assistance. We now get to the point. Half of the money that fellow on his back in bed received came from the federal treasury under the Canada Assistance Plan as every Member knows.

• (1750)

Mr. Rodriguez: They got it twice.

Mr. Baker: The hon. gentleman is catching on. Now, along comes this disability pension which the man has been trying to get all along. What happens? The entire amount he gets is then transferred from the federal to the provincial treasury.

Mr. Brightwell: So what is your point?

Mr. Baker: The hon. gentleman is pretty slow. What you are doing is paying 50 per cent of what he got and then 100 per cent. What is more disgusting is that you look for a way that the money can be recovered and you cannot find one. It is a transfer from the Department of National Health and Welfare to the provincial Department of Finance.

Mr. Brightwell: What has this got to do with the Bill?

Mr. Baker: Very simply this. The Government of Canada cannot see that to do this would not cost any more than what it is already transferring directly from the CPP to the coffers of the provincial Department of Social Services. In other words, the whole thing would not cost the federal treasury anything at all. What is obvious here, however, is that someone involved in this new spirit of co-operation should explain how a disabled person can draw social assistance with the federal treasury paying 50 per cent, and then all of a sudden the federal treasury is reimbursing the provincial government for 150 per cent. It is an interesting question.

There is absolutely nothing wrong with this Bill. Absolutely nothing at all. I think that we should vote on it and the Speaker will have to rule if this is a government prerogative or not, but it removes from the CPP a grave inequity based on age. It is not going to cost the Government of Canada anything at all if we pass this hon. gentleman's Bill and I congratulate him for bringing it to the Chamber.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is always a distinct pleasure to follow in debate such speakers as the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), not to mention the excellent speakers from the Okanagan and Quebec. One cannot help reflecting on the fact that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has brought an important issue before us. I think all Members agree that the age related provision referred to may have had some wisdom 20 years ago, but that has clearly changed in 1985. It also struck me, speaking immediately after the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate, that the provision was put in place 20 years ago by a Liberal Government. They had 20 years to correct it, but all of a sudden, early in the month of October, 1985, a Member discovers the legislation was flawed from the beginning. It is still flawed today and he was part of the caucus which did nothing about it for such a long time.

I urge Members of this Chamber to take the concern raised by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt seriously, but at the same time I urge them not to pass this legislation. How can I have those two thoughts simultaneously? It is because I have thought about the concept of the stewardship which Members of Parliament have over public funds. The first question I ask myself is: Who are the owners of this fund? Do the Canadian taxpayers own the CPP fund? My conclusion is that they do not. Some Canadians, part of the workforce, contribute to this fund and, in the final analysis, they are in reality the owners of the fund.

Mr. Rodriguez: So Canadians own it.

Mr. Hawkes: Is the stewardship of this fund in the hands of Members of the Parliament of Canada?

Mr. Rodriguez: You lost me, brother.

Mr. Hawkes: I suggest it is not. The people who designed this fund some 20 years ago decided that the stewardship was to be in the hands of a combination of elected members from both provincial and federal legislatures. I lived through a period in this Chamber of some four and a half years under increasing distress over the trend in Canada to act unilaterally, to ignore the stewardship of the provinces, whether it was constitutional, agreed to, or whatever. I saw my country begin to fall apart economically, emotionally and in every other way, partly as a consequence of a House of Commons dominated by one Party dedicated to the principle of unilateral action rather than respect for provincial jurisdiction. If this Bill were the best idea in the world and completely unflawed—and I suggest it is flawed—it would still be wrong for members of this Chamber to act unilaterally to change these arrangements. Until there is an agreement between the federal and provincial Governments then we should be reluctant to act. The Government which was elected a year ago declared during the election campaign that it would act in a manner designed to restore respect between the two levels of Government, respect for jurisdiction and respect for agreements entered into. It has done that and done it well. Because that climate of confidence and co-operation has been restored there is every reason to believe that we will come to a collective decision on changes to the fund in a coherent and systematic way, changes for the better in the future. Until you have that kind of discussion, until you work in that way, there is always the danger of going off on a flight of fancy in the belief that you are doing good when in reality you are doing harm.

• (1800)

This particular proposal simply to drop the requirements for benefits puts financial strain on the fund. One of its consequences could be a reduction in the contribution to anyone who is entitled to it.

I see that it is six o'clock. I hope to have an opportunity to finish my remarks on another occasion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

THE ADMINISTRATION—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF CONTRACT AWARDS. (B) CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the adjournment debate tonight. My question relates to a most unsatisfactory reply given by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) on September 16, as reported at page 6644 of Hansard. At that time I asked why it was that the new conflict of interest guidelines for Cabinet Ministers were deficient. I brought two matters to his attention.

The new conflict of interest guidelines, which I have in my possession, are designed in such a way as to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Cabinet Ministers do not appoint their relatives to cushy jobs, as they have been doing in the most abominable way since last year. In their first six months in office the Tories have appointed no less than 1,200 hacks, flacks, bagmen and relatives to various jobs. They are all listed in the Black Paper on Tory patronage. Some of those 1,200 people were relatives of Cabinet Ministers. In the new conflict of interest guidelines, the Prime Minister indicated that in the future it would not be permissible for a Minister to hire his relatives or the relatives of his Cabinet colleagues. The biggest deficiency in the program is what happens to the relatives of Cabinet Ministers who have already been hired.

As we know, the brother of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has been appointed to a very lucrative position to do legal work for and on behalf of the Government of Canada or an agency of the Government, namely, the 1988 Olympics. This has happened in other areas as well.

It will not be possible in the future to appoint people such as those who were hired in the past. In other words, the Prime Minister said that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) is wrong in trying to appoint his sons, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is wrong in practising this nepotism and that it could not happen in the future. If it is wrong in the future, why are those people permitted to keep their jobs now? I am sure you agree, Mr. Speaker, that they should not keep their jobs and that this is a terrible loophole in the conflict of interest guidelines.

There is another loophole as well, and it is an even more important one. I am referring to the entire means of reviewing political appointments. In his reply on September 16, the Deputy Prime Minister said:

—that the entire range of all appointments which have been made are going to be subject to a review by the parliamentary process to see how it works.

This is not the case. Only certain people who have been appointed will be reviewed by the parliamentary process, that is, those appointed by Order in Council. Those people on contracts are not reviewable. As a matter of fact, a large number of people on contract did not even tender for their jobs.

We heard of an instance lately where officials in the Prime Minister's Office are not on salary but are on contract. Therefore, people on contract do not have to adhere to the conflict of interest guidelines. That situation is not even covered in the new conflict of interest book. Of course this means that if a Cabinet Minister wants to hire someone and wants the person not to be subjected to the provisions of the conflict of interest guidelines, all the Minister has to do is say to his or her friend: "Get yourself a contracting business and then I will hire your business on contract". Of course the business may have only one person working in it. In that event, the conflict of interest guidelines are totally bypassed, thereby defeating what the Prime Minister said in the House. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that he was indicating that in good faith. He said in this House that he was going to end this kind of thing. He has not.

● (1805)

We need revisions to those guidelines to make sure that they work because there are these two gigantic loopholes which I have just described and about which the Deputy Prime Minister made a completely erroneous reply. He had it all backwards. He had assumed that everyone who was appointed would be up for review. I am sure that the Parliamentary Secretary sitting across from me would recognize that that is a mistake the Deputy Prime Minister made, so I will now give him the opportunity to correct the record and to state the truth. Hopefully he will state that the Prime Minister will review these conflict of interest guidelines to ensure that they work and put an end in the future to the nepotism practised in the past and the present and to ensure that people cannot bypass the guidelines by simply getting themselves hired by contract.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the outset that this newfound interest of the Liberal Party in tight guidelines is very amusing to those of us who were here over the past five years.

The question which my hon. friend raised confuses several matters and I want to make four points.

The Government, until the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) brought in his measures, has been operating under the regime established by its predecessor.

Mr. Boudria: And even it was broken.

Mr. Lewis: I find that it is interesting that my friends who find themselves in opposition now have come to embrace as a virtue what they never practised in fact. None of the suggestions which they have advanced were adopted by the Liberal Party in the decades during which they were in office. I appreciate that had the Hon. Member been a member of the Liberal Party federally he would have made sure that those guidelines were tightened under the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau. I can just see the Hon. Member taking Prime Minister Trudeau to task on that; yes, I can just envision that.

The measures placed before the House by Prime Minister Mulroney on September 9 constituted the most comprehensive and far-reaching treatment of public sector ethics ever pronounced in a Canadian Parliament.

Mr. Boudria: How can you state that with a straight face?

Mr. Lewis: After great research, my friend.

The new conflict of interest code makes specific provision to ensure that those working for the Government under contract are bound by the appropriate provisions respecting both conflict of interest and post-employment considerations. I refer to Section 10 of the code.

My friend, Mr. Speaker, suggests that we are closing the barn door after the horses have gone. Under the Liberal Party the barn never had a door, and we have taken steps to refine the appointment process. My colleague refers to it as a loophole. Nonsense. We have brought in a review process which was not there during all the years of the previous Liberal Government.

Mr. Boudria: What about the relations?

Mr. Lewis: Where was the appointments process under the previous Liberal Government? Obviously it was not there. I remind my hon. friend that we are a Government which has come to office with the support of hundreds of thousands of Canadians. We have 211 seats from across the country and naturally we are going to find ourselves with many friends. This is a Party with many friends. We make no apologies for that. Because the Hon. Member across the way finds himself without friends, that is the a difficulty he is going to have, not only for the balance of this Parliament but probably for years to come.

I suggest to him that our process of political accountability and the regime that we have set in place for outreaches anything ever done under the previous Liberal Government. We suggest that there is some room for improvement. We are going to try the process. We will look for improvement. However, under the previous Liberal Government, there was never any suggestion of this kind of accountability.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—COMMISSIONER'S REPORT (A) REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION (B) FRENCH AS LANGUAGE OF WORK IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on March 27 of this year, nearly six months ago, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about a very important matter, namely the Report of the Commissioner of Official Languages and the need to amend the legislation in order to broaden the Commissioner's powers.

Mr. Speaker, in the Fifth Report of the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages, recommendations 12 to 18 were aimed precisely at strengthening the role of the Commissioner and giving him more power, thus enabling him to carry out his parliamentary mandate in an effective and efficient manner.

Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that the Prime Minister answered, as reported in Hansard on page 3412, that he considered this a very important issue, extrêmement importante, to quote him directly, and he reminded me that in the Throne Speech, the Government had announced its intention to take action, and he then informed the House that he had that very morning asked a committee of deputy ministers to examine the entire question of amendments to the legislation, amendments which had, in fact, been proposed by the Committee on Official Languages.

Mr. Speaker, the result was that in May, I believe, the committee was established under the chairmanship of Mrs. Huguette Labelle, who is now Chairman of the Public Service Commission. The committee included several deputy ministers from Treasury Board, the Department of the Secretary of State, the Prime Minister's Office and the Privy Council. The Committee referred to by the Prime Minister was set up, I am told, in April, met from that time until July, with a mandate to examine the recommendations of the Committee on Official Languages and also, probably as part of a broader mandate, to examine relations between the federal Government and official language groups and groups that were basically the responsibility of the Secretary of State.

As far as I know, the committee's meetings were held in camera. To date, none of us know what transpired during those meetings, and this evening, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary the following: Could he give us a report on the proceedings to date, and perhaps on any recommendations made by the committee? Who is the chairman, now that Mrs. Huguette Labelle has left? Is it Mr. Gérard Veilleux? There is a rather important question which should be answered: What have been the results of the committee's work to date, and is there perhaps a possibility that the committee of deputy ministers could appear before the Committee on Official Languages to provide some clarification and release or provide details and perhaps inform Hon. Members of the important work they have done?

I therefore invite the Parliamentary Secretary to answer this question: Is he prepared to give the House the assurance this evening that the Chairman of the Committee, Mr. Gérard Veilleux, or someone else, will appear before the Committee to explain what they have accomplished to date?

In the second part of my question I dealt with another aspect of the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages. It is indeed a very important issue—the language of work in the Public Service of Canada. God knows, Mr. Speaker, that the members of the Committee on Official Languages had been concerned over that matter for a long time. We had asked the Government for clear and specific directives with respect to the Government's political intentions, the real intentions of this Government to assist, encourage and even prod certain departments so that public employees might be able to work in the language of their choice, their mother tongue normally being the one they know best!

In answer to my question the Prime Minister said, and I quote from page 3412:

> If people cannot work in French, it is a myth, and everything must be done to maintain the integrity of that instrument, that cultural and linguistic wealth, either by coercion, or by making sure that it will be sought after as an instrument of work.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct another question to the Parliamentary Secretary and ask him whether the Government is through studying the question of language of work, whether it is prepared to share once again with the Committee on Official Languages Policy and Programs its expertise and knowledge, and tell us which way it is headed. Hon. Members are interested in knowing what this Government intends to do about the official languages. We want to know where we stand and what we should do to uphold, promote and expand this right which I consider important to public employees, namely to receive communications from their superiors in their own language, to be able to work in French or in English in their office and thus meet the basic criterion of the Act: Not only must the public be served in English and French in this country, but public employees must also enjoy the right and privilege to be able to work in their mother tongue.

Mr. Speaker, I might point out that 90 per cent of Government working documents are in English. It will take some political will to change the bad habit of thinking that everybody speaks the majority language, which is English.

Let us not forget either how awkward it is for Francophones, and not just unilingual Francophones but also Anglophones who speak French well, when a unilingual Anglophone joins a group of bilingual Anglophones and Francophones who are having a conversation in French in an office situation and all the participants in the conversation adopt the language of the single non bilingual person in the group. This often happens whenever a unilingual Anglophone joins a group of 8, 9 or 10 Francophone civil servants who are having a conversation in French in an office situation; everybody switches to English. Such an attitude is not conducive to making French a language of work in the Public Service.

In bilingual areas, Mr. Speaker, and this is the last point I should like to make, the use of French at the work place has not increased much since 1978. I should like, therefore, the Parliamentary Secretary to advise us whether the Government intends to amend the legislation to make French a language of work in the Public Service.

• (1815)

[English]

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I wish to first suggest to my hon. friend that I am not able at this time to bring him up to date with respect to the deliberations of the committee to which he refers. However, I will make inquiries to see what additional information can be sent to him.

As far as his comments are concerned with respect to the language of work, I will also ask that any further information in that regard be brought to his attention.

In reply to the Hon. Member's question, I wish to state that we are proud of the efforts this Government has made with respect to the official languages program. The Speech from the Throne of November 5, 1984, on the first day of the Thirty-third Session of Parliament, placed the issue in the context of national unity. We indicated our commitment as a Government to ensuring that the equality of the two official languages so vital to our national character and our identity is respected in fact as well as in law. At that time, the Government acknowledged the need for ongoing improvements and for vigilance in this crucial area of our national life.

With respect to the question of law, I suggest that the equality of English and French are already recognized by the Constitution of Canada, as well as by the Official Languages Act. As far as the question of implementation is concerned, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) in speaking before the Joint Committee on Official Languages last May made it clear that the Government intends to review all aspects of the official languages program, to reassess the priorities and improve its effectiveness and efficiency.

When it comes to the language of work we are dealing with a longstanding and difficult issue which, as my hon. friend knows as a result of his interest and involvement in the Official Language Committee, is not amenable to simple or quick solutions.

Having said that, I am pleased to inform the House that the Treasury Board is taking measures to improve the language of work situation in the federal Public Service. We published a catalogue of departmental language of work initiatives in March of this year. It was distributed to departments to suggest ways and means of improving the use of both official languages in the workplace.

Furthermore, the secretariat's analysis of the 1985-86 official languages plan provided evidence that senior departmental managers are giving increasing consideration to measures which would improve opportunities for their employees to work in their preferred official language.

Mr. Speaker, I have further notes with respect to this matter which I will be pleased to provide to my hon. colleague.

TRANSPORT—(A) CLOSING OF A PLANT IN MONTREAL BY BOMBARDIER (B) PURCHASE OF LOCOMOTIVES FROM BOMBARDIER—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, earlier today I asked a question from the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), concerning the Bombardier company, which has not received any help from the Government of Canada and which must now close its locomotive manufacturing plant.

The answer given by the Minister of State, the Hon. Member for Rosemont, is utterly disgraceful. My colleague and friend, the Hon. Member for St. Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), shares my views on the subject and this is why I am challenging immediately tonight in this adjournment debate, the answer given by the Minister. She said, and I quote:

The Bombardier decisions in this case were made in accordance with the best industrial development criteria.

In other words, the lay off of some 1,000 employees in the east end of Montreal does not trouble the Minister, because it follows the best criteria from industrial development.

Ms. Copps: The Schefferville formula.

Mr. Ouellet: Exactly. My colleague, who is in charge of labour questions, is here tonight and shares my view. We are reminded of the attitude held by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he shut down the Schefferville plant after reaping millions for the American company and firing hundreds of workers. This is according to the best criteria for industrial development.

And the Minister of State for Transport has the gall to add:

We had lengthy discussions with Bombardier representatives who pointed out to us that there was no other solution.

Mr. Speaker, certainly there were alternatives because this industry, which has been in operation in Montreal since the turn of this century, has always been a viable and profitable industry providing jobs to thousands of workers in the east end of Montreal. And the previous Government never hesitated to prescribe guidelines to railways such as the CN, the Canadian National Railways, a Crown corporation that can get its guidelines from the Government, or give instructions in particular to VIA Rail which has recently bought locomotives from General Motors instead of Bombardier.

• (1825

If those two Crown corporations, VIA Rail and CN, which further have their headquarters in Montreal, had received instructions from the Minister of State for Transport or the Prime Minister of Canada, the company would not be about to shut down its plant. Hundreds of workers who have been working for years in that plant would not now be forced to look for other jobs.

The steelworkers' union, under the good guidance of their director, Mr. Clément Godbout, has issued a very outspoken press release. It stated: We have had here in the Bombardier plant two and three successive generations of workers who have acquired an outstanding expertise in the area of freight locomotives. We have a manpower that is qualified, available and responsible. Bombardier's proposal to shut down the plant must be stifled." And the steelworkers' union is asking the Government to meet its responsibilities and help them save their plant. This is exactly what I was asking the Minister of State for Transport today, since she has the means and the time to travel to Europe at the expense of Canadian taxpayers.

If the Minister had taken it upon herself this summer to go to Paris or Stockholm to sell Bombardier locomotives, I would have been the first to congratulate her today. However, the Minister strutted about in Europe at the expense of the Crown and the Canadian taxpayers and did not bother about the workers of her own constituency and the ridings of Eastern Montreal, who are now unemployed because the Progressive Conservative Government has abandoned the Bombardier Company.

Jean-Guy Dubuc, editorial writer of La Presse, spoke about this issue in an article titled:

If only Bombardier been helped ... Bombardier will stop making freight locomotives.

Which means hundreds of jobs lost and hundreds more unemployed in Eastern Montreal.

As though Canada, the country with the second longest railways in the world, could afford to lose such a technology and such an industry.

Indeed, the question is: Does the Government—

—the Conservative Government, that is—

—have the right to close down a major industrial sector by refusing to support a company faced with American competition?

The answer is obvious, Mr. Speaker. The Conservative Government has no right to abandon Bombardier, it has no right to put out of work some 1,000 workers who have been earning an honest living by manufacturing locomotives, and I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to tell us that this Government will accept its responsibilities and instruct VIA Rail and the Canadian National to purchase good locomotives made in Montreal by good specialized workers.

[English]

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I regret that there were not more people in the House to hear a vintage speech by my colleague who is a much better speaker in Opposition than he was as a Minister. However, I am surprised that he is playing politics with this very serious matter. I know that I speak for all Members of the House when I state that we share the concern that has been raised by my colleague for those workers at Bombardier who have been displaced by the company's decision—and I emphasize that it was the company's decision—not to continue its operations in the heavy locomotive field and to focus its attention on other markets. I will discuss the assistance that is coming to those other markets in a minute.

It is worth noting that the problems encountered by Bombardier in supplying a technologically efficient diesel locomotive did not occur overnight. This is a field in which technology is always advancing. As a matter of form, I would like to ask the Member what the Liberal Government did during the past 17 years to assist Bombardier in acquiring or developing the technological expertise to compete in Canadian and international diesel locomotive markets. I am not speaking only of directives but of technological improvements, because directives come easy to some political parties. It is technological improvements that will help this country to proceed.

I point out to my hon. colleague, Mr. Speaker, that Bombardier was consulted on the possibility of participating in VIA Rail's recent order for new locomotives. I am advised as well that in 1984 Canadian National offered Bombardier the opportunity to build 15 new locomotives. CN was going to work with Bombardier in developing an acceptable design. Once again in 1985 CN asked Bombardier to quote on the design and construction of 20 locomotives. The Government cannot force a company to quote on business.

The decision to close the Bombardier locomotive plant reflected the company's decision not to compete with the other domestic locomotive companies. It did not in any way represent an abandonment by the Government of any of our commitments to this industry.

Finally, I would point out to my colleagues that VIA Rail's pending order for new rail passenger rolling stock will be procured exclusively from a consortium made up of Bombardier and UTDC companies. There is no question that the Government is continuing its commitment to give the workers of Bombardier every opportunity to keep their jobs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

TRADE

FOOTWEAR IMPORT QUOTAS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, this week Susan Shoes Industries of Hamilton announced that it will be closing its Oakville plant permanently and that it will be laying off 100 employees. The reason for this plant closing is directly linked to the Mulroney Government's failure to state its position on the issue of import quotas. Shoe retailers will not place their orders for shoes because they are waiting to hear on the quota issue.

Once again the Government is called upon to stop playing cat and mouse with the Canadian footwear industry and to start making clear, positive statements ensuring that import quotas will be extended.

The removal of footwear quotas could cost 20,000 Canadian jobs in the footwear and tanning industries. Not only will thousands of Canadians be deprived of their livelihood, but they will also be forced to seek unemployment insurance and welfare assistance.

The Government has launched a so-called discussion with the United States on the issue of free trade, but in the meantime it has left Canadians hanging by footdragging on the issue of the shoe quotas.

A commitment by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) to extend import quotas is essential to ensure that Canadian shoe manufacturers, like Susan Shoes, and, most important, Canadian workers, will have the time necessary for technological adjustment to secure 50 per cent of the market.

Job, jobs, jobs. We are giving the Prime Minister a chance, chance, chance to save 20,000 jobs in the footwear industry, and we call upon him to make his announcement today.

ABORTION

CALL FOR CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, once again Dr. Henry Morgantaler is facing the courts because of his attempt to demonstrate that women who so choose should have access to safe, medical abortions through community clinics as well as hospitals.

How long must these trials, appeals and retrials go on before the federal Government accepts that the real issue is not Dr. Henry Morgantaler's clinics but the need for changes to the Criminal Code of Canada? Section 251 must be repealed.

Difficult decisions about unwanted pregnancies must be a personal, not a state matter. Abortion should be a health matter between a woman and her doctor. Further restrictions of access will only lead to backstreet abortions.

Prevention of unwanted pregnancies is far preferable to abortion. Prevention requires reliable, safe birth control methods and comprehensive birth control education.

The Government must reinstate full funding to recognize family planning agencies which provide complete information on all methods of birth control. These agencies are doing research on fertility problems and more reliable birth control methods. Reproductive freedom for women is an integral part of equality. We ask the Government to repeal Section 251 and reinstate adequate funding to family planning organizations.

CHILDREN

SEXUAL ABUSE—BADGLEY COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, the Family and Children's Services of Oxford County and I are concerned with the need for urgent action on the Badgley Report and its recommendations. It has been indicated by both the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) that internal discussions and selective consultations are taking place. However, this report was tabled one year ago and few, if any, definitive steps appear to have been taken by the Government to act on the report or its contents. This is a matter which impacts on each and every one of our constituencies.

A community in my own constituency, although a modest size, receives reports of over 60 cases of sexual abuse of children each year. It has been suggested that efforts to protect the civil rights of the perpetrators of such acts may explain the lengthly delay in Government legislation. Surely the rights of those young persons who are the victims should be taken into consideration, and the Government should re-order its priorities in terms of forthcoming legislation to address this concern.

Indeed, the Family and Children Services of Oxford County are concerned that, after a year of internal review, a consultation process was announced providing key professional witnesses with little more than one week of response time. In addition, to have a consultation process that provides only two days in one large centre in any province may well be grossly inadequate.

Fundamental changes to the Criminal Code are urgently needed to ensure the safety and well-being of our young Canadians. We, as Members of Parliament, should be deeply concerned that we have allowed ourselves to live in an atmosphere where child abuse has been implicitly condoned by outdated legislation.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

EXPRESSION OF GOOD WISHES TO NEW QUEBEC PREMIER, HON. PIERRE-MARC JOHNSON

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments—and I am sure all my Quebec colleagues in the House will join me—to welcome the new Premier of Quebec, Mr. Pierre-Marc Johnson, who took up his duties officially yesterday morning at 11 o'clock, and wish him good luck. He is the twenty-fourth Premier of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, no one can deny the outstanding intellectual qualifications and leadership skills of Mr. Johnson, and his strong personality and capacity for hard work. Today's successor to René Lévesque is not a newcomer to politics. Mr. Johnson was elected to the National Assembly for the first time in 1976, in the riding of Anjou, and re-elected in 1981. Since then, he has been Minister in a number of important departments, and, until his election as leader, he was Minister of Justice and the Minister responsible for Canadian Intergovernmental Affairs.

Mr. Speaker, the reins of power in Quebec have now been handed over to a man with broad political experience. I am sure he will represent and defend the interests of Quebecers with great dignity like his predecessor. I am sure that like Mr. Lévesque, who had agreed to resume a dialogue with our Government, he will continue to work towards national reconciliation, in the best interests of Quebec and Canada.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION—MINISTER'S CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) informed us yesterday that his Government will be going forward with a sweeping reorganization of the entire Indian Affairs Department. Some sources have suggested that this could mean a reduction of 1,500 jobs.

Yesterday in the House the Minister said that in so far as it relates to gathering the opinions of Indian people, he spent 14 months doing just that, and that he talked to every community.

● (1110)

This morning I spoke with the President of the Union of New Brunswick Indians, and I was informed that they were not consulted and that no other Indian groups from New Brunswick or the other maritime provinces were consulted. Therefore, it is evident that the Minister has not consulted with every Indian community and that, in my opinion, he misled the House.

I wish to remind the Minister that on April 18, in a statement regarding the development of aboriginal policy, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said the following:

> Policies regarding aboriginal people will be made after open, public consultation, especially at the grass roots level.

Evidently the directives of the Prime Minister are not being followed. Therefore, I implore the Government to respect its commitment and meet with all aboriginal groups.

AGRICULTURE

PERFORMANCE TESTING OF DAIRY CATTLE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the philosophy of the Government that all public inspection and testing services should be carried out by private enterprise continues to get Canada in trouble. Today's case in point is the record of performance testing done on Canada's dairy cattle, known as ROP. The production and butterfat figures have been relied upon for years by foreign buyers in selecting our dairy breeding stock. They used to be an accurate reflection of the productive capabilities of the offspring of test animals.

The private testing program is not working. Samples are no longer tested on site but are carried for several days before the tests are completed. Perhaps the technicians have not yet properly learned their jobs. At any rate, results are extremely erratic, yet these results go on the production record for posterity. There is no notation that the result is probably in error due to testing procedure. The conclusion, therefore, by potential foreign buyers will be simply to avoid Canadian stock.

Further damage to our sales reputation must be avoided and corrected. As soon as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) returns from his trip to Russia, he must reverse this dismal decision to privatize ROP testing and get back to a professional program which will reflect the quality of our herds with accuracy. It is in the interest of all Canadians that trade continues in breeding stock. Surely it makes sense that we maintain the high standards needed for it to continue doing so.

TRADE

EXPORT EARNINGS—SUPPORT FOR CANADA—UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, few nations in the world are as dependent upon international trade as is Canada. The fact is that out of every dollar we earn in Canada, 30 cents result directly from exports. That figure would be higher if our trade performance were better, because every billion dollars in exports translates into nearly 16,000 jobs. The issue of bilateral trade is about jobs. Trade liberalization would create more jobs on both sides of the border.

Canada's most urgent need is for the creation of more jobs. What the critics of trade liberalization have consistently failed to realize is that Canadian firms and employees had to make even larger adjustments to the Kennedy and Tokyo Rounds of tariff cuts, yet the economy grew and employment increased. I need not emphasize the dramatic effect an additional 16,000 jobs would have on our unemployed. It is time that we gave our unemployed a fair chance.

A study by Queen's University has shown that employment in Canada would rise by 5 per cent because of increased trade access. The status quo is an option that just does not exist for Canada. The negotiated decision to be made by this Government is of the most strategic importance for all Canada. It will be one of the most important means of making the structural changes required for the security of our nation.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

INCLUSION OF PROPERTY RIGHTS ADVOCATED

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate our Government on steps taken to date in correcting a great disservice done to Canadians by the previous Government and its good friends, the NDP.

Although it is generally recognized that there are four fundamental human freedoms, the last Liberal Government saw fit to include only three of them in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The fourth, the right to enjoyment of property, was deliberately excluded from the Charter. This is all the more atrocious when one considers that the right to property was entrenched in the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights, but slashed from the Trudeau Charter of Rights. It is a strange kind of Charter that ignores one of the fundamental human freedoms. Also it is a strange kind of Government that would adopt a seriously flawed Charter while proclaiming that Canadians would be forever protected because all their rights were now enshrined.

My hon. colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), informed the House last week that the entrenchment of property rights will be on the agenda for the next meeting of provincial and federal Attorneys General.

The week of October 6 to October 14 is National Private Property Week. During that week Canadians from coast to coast will be honouring their heritage and their property rights. Even more significantly, Canadians will be seeking to preserve their rights to property. It is a week to celebrate property ownership. Our Government has given Canadians further cause to celebrate by initiating the process of entrenching property rights in the Charter.

• (1115)

I applaud that action. I urge our Government and the Governments of all provinces to support this initiative so that our Charter will be complete and the rights of all Canadians will be protected.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY WHY MINISTER DID NOT TABLE RECEIPTS FOR TWO EUROPEAN TRIPS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I was going to direct my question to the Prime Minister, but in his absence, perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister might wish to reply.

Yesterday in the House, the Minister of State for Transport said that the documents connected with her two trips to Europe were available. Last night, she said the following in Montreal: "I was prepared to produce all the receipts, but the Deputy Prime Minister suggested I do nothing of the kind, pointing out that it would create a dangerous precedent".

It is bad enough that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the National Director of the Progressive Conservative Party, Mr. Lampert, and the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte have been ordered to remain silent, without the Deputy Prime Minister advising the Minister of State for Transport to do likewise. My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister: What is his justification for preventing the Minister of State for Transport from tabling documents when she is actually willing to do so?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the Hon. Member is quoting from, if anything at all. The public has the right to know. The public—

Mr. Gauthier: The truth; the truth.

Mr. Nielsen: The truth will be more often heard from this side than from that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: You are answering a question.

Mr. Nielsen: The public has a right to know how its tax dollars are spent and there are processes that are well established, and have been for many years, to bring forward that information.

Mr. Deans: It has not been proven conclusively, but nevertheless—

Mr. Nielsen: With respect to the private and personal expenses of any Hon. Member of this House I would suggest that that would not be subject to parliamentary scrutiny. Certainly any expenses made with respect to public taxpayers' dollars should and are available for scrutiny.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, it is strange that the Deputy Prime Minister does not realize that what we are talking about are public funds also. He just said to us that the public has a right to know, and we agree with that. How can he advise the Minister of State for Transport, as she said yesterday in Montreal, that it would be a dangerous precedent to table the documents that she is willing, according to what she says, to table in this House?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): In order to give the question any validity at all, Sir, one must accept the accuracy and truthfulness of the preamble, which I do not. I have just finished saying that public funds are at all times subject to the scrutiny of Parliament. That is what this place is all about. What we are speaking about are journeys that were made partially on Government business and partially for personal and private purposes. The Minister has explained that she has paid personally all of those expenses associated with the personal and private part of those travels, and that should be sufficient for any Hon. Member of this House.

With respect to the public portions of those journeys and the expenses related thereto, they should be and will be subject to parliamentary scrutiny in the usual way through the structures we have in place for that purpose.

REQUEST THAT CERTAIN DOCUMENTS OF MINISTER OF STATE (TRANSPORT) BE TABLED

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, by gagging the Minister of State for Transport, the Deputy Prime Minister may well give the impression that Cabinet Ministers are putting their noses in the trough. I do not know whether she realizes the consequences of her actions.

To be certain there was no abuse of public funds, we would like the Minister of State for Transport to table the documents which she is, in fact, quite willing to table. Is the Deputy Prime Minister willing to take the gag off the Minister of State for Transport?

• (1120)

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, for the Hon. Member to suggest, which he has, that I put a gag order on that particular Minister or any other Minister is utterly false. I hope that the matter rests there.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, another correction.

Mr. Nielsen: It is not, as the Leader of the NDP has just heckled across the floor, another correction. I have always stood for that principle in my 28 years here and will continue to stand by the principle that the whole purpose of this place is the management of taxpayers' dollars.

The Hon. Member knows as well as I that the Estimates examination will provide a full opportunity for questioning on this or any other matter with respect to the administration of Ministers' offices. He knows that, and all Hon. Members should know that.

ALLEGATIONS OF MINISTER OF STATE (TRANSPORT)—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Transport, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It is very simple: considering that the Minister of State for Transport herself said she is quite prepared to produce vouchers, and that the Deputy Prime Minister is saying that it is not so, can he tell us simply who is telling the truth, he or the Minister of State for Transport?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, when I hear a question accompanied by a preamble like that, I ask myself what is the truth in the preamble and its origination and the question itself. I think I am justified in asking that kind of question when looking at the quality of the question.

Mr. Deans: And what do you answer yourself?

Mr. Nielsen: The Hon. Member is a new Member but he has been here a year. He should know that there are Standing Committees of the House that are authorized—

Mr. Gauthier: Don't lecture, Erik, for God's sake. You are the worst offender.

Mr. Nielsen: —that are authorized—the opposition Whip tells me not to lecture. Let them not lecture by way of smuggling lectures into the preambles to their questions and their questions.

REQUEST FOR REIMBURSEMENT OF COST

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question on the "April in Paris" matter. The Deputy Prime Minister tells us that in the case of the first trip, the Paris and Stockholm trip, the Minister has paid a portion of that cost. If such is the case, and in view of the fact that the original meaning of the trip had been completely cancelled by the time the trip occurred as the conference was no longer to take place, can the Deputy Prime Minister give his own personal assurance to the House that the total cost of the first trip, including the cost to fly an aide there two days ahead of time to identify the Minister, will be reimbursed to the taxpayers of Canada by the Minister in question?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, again one would have to accept the honesty and truthfulness of the preamble and the pseudofacts that have been smuggled into that question. I can tell the Hon. Member that they are absolutely false and I do not know why he and others continue to propagate that canard. It is probably on the basis of the article that appeared in the Ottawa Citizen written by one whom I regarded at one time as having some professional integrity, but after having read the column and the article that appeared in that newspaper yesterday and seeing the manner in which it was followed up today, I asked myself whether the motivation was not to arouse some kind of racism here, something which I think—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —which I—

Mr. Gauthier: Explain!

Mr. Nielsen: —which I—

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw!

• (1125)

Mr. Nielsen: —which I think is most regrettable. I will not withdraw a personal view which I hold. I agree with him; it is quite shameful for a professional to embark on that kind of course.

REQUEST THAT TRAVEL DOCUMENTS BE TABLED

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, if a Minister is incompetent, she is incompetent. She is incompetent in both French and English. Suggestions of racism are totally inappropriate in the context of this question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are unilingually incompetent.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who has said that Canadian taxpayers have a right to know how public tax dollars are being spent. In that context, are the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister of State for Transport prepared to table forthwith in this House all documents relating to the public expenditures by the Minister of State for Transport with respect to the two trips in question to Europe, including not just her own expenditures but any expenditures relating to her Chief of Staff and anyone accompanying her Chief of Staff?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has been around here long enough to know that he and other Members of this House have the absolute right to ask for that type of information during the examination of the Estimates in committee. That is the place to do it.

Mr. Broadbent: Good luck!

Mr. Nielsen: That is where the information will be forthcoming.

There is another method, in case the Hon. Member has overlooked it, which is to place the appropriate question on the Order Paper where it will be answered—

Mr. Rodriguez: It will never be answered.

Mr. Nielsen: —and answered with alacrity.

With respect to the over-all question of that travel and those accompanying, the Hon. Member will be glad to know that I have had a comparison done with respect to the use of aircraft in the final year of the administration of the last Liberal Government and this one—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Nielsen: —and travel is down in terms of hours by 21.3 per cent. In terms of the frequency of trips, it is down by 37.5 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXAMINATION OF ESTIMATES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the place for the Government to answer for possible abuse of taxpayers' funds is right here in this House—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson:—and not in committees of this House six months later.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You ought to be here more often.

Mr. Robinson: I wish to ask the Deputy Prime Minister a specific question. Is the Deputy Prime Minister suggesting to this House and to the taxpayers of Canada that we have to wait several months before we can raise this question in a committee, as opposed to obtaining this information today, as taxpayers are entitled to know whether or not there has been abuse by high-flying Ministers junketing around Europe at taxpayers' expense?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to forget that standing committees of this House are part of this House.

Mr. Rodriguez: So is Question Period.

Mr. Nielsen: That is where Estimates are examined and that is where the fullest possible information is given. Certainly more information has been given in the last year than was given during the collective years of the previous administration.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: That openess will continue and all of that information will be produced with respect to the management of taxpayers' funds.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MILITARY SPOUSES' ORGANIZATION—ACTIVITIES ON MILITARY BASES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I must say that in my eight years in political activity I have never seen the—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order, order.

Ms. Copps: —question of racism raised in a way which is as despicable and as insidious as what we saw today by the Deputy Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Question, if you have a question.

Ms. Copps: My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Can he explain the sexist hypocrisy of his Government when, on the one hand, his Government is denying the right to women on military bases to organize a dental plan—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could we have a question from the Hon. Member, please?

Ms. Copps: I am asking the Minister to explain the sexist hypocrisy when, on the one hand, the Government refuses the women the right to organize with respect to a dental plan and, on the other hand, it funds the United Services Institute of current and former military officers to lobby the Government on issues such as defence, external affairs, and women's equality issues.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on every base or station in Canada there are Married Quarters Community Councils which have, under orders, to provide specifically a forum for the points of view of men, women and youth, and to address such problems related to social, fiscal, cultural and welfare interests of all members of the base. The activities of this group are in part funded. Although not a line item, its operations are supported by the military budget. And the purpose of those organizations is to look after the welfare of all members living in married quarters. So we do support them.

• (1130)

If the Hon. Member has suggestions as to how this could be improved to benefit the people who live on military bases, I would be delighted to hear them—

Mr. Deans: Give them the same rights as everyone else.

Mr. Andre: —because I can assure the Hon. Member that I, the military, and this Government want to ensure that our military is the best treated military there is.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, this morning on Canada A.M., the self-same Associate Minister said that he was concerned that groups of this nature might get involved in issues like star wars and other issues. Is he aware of the fact that the Government-funded United Services Institute is currently involved on the bases in support of such apolitical issues as star wars and South Africa's oppression in Namibia? Has the time not come for a full investigation into the Government's selective use and memory when it comes to political prohibition on the bases?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of that information. I have stated in this House that political activity on military bases is, in my opinion, wrong.

Mr. Deans: Why?

Mr. Andre: The question has come up—

Mr. Deans: Why?

Mr. Andre: For all kinds of obvious reasons.

Mr. Deans: Why?

Mr. Andre: Questions have come up as to what would be appropriate political activity and could we have an organization on the military base demanding that Canada introduce nuclear weapons—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): We've got one.

Mr. Andre: —and could we have an organization on a military base demanding that Canada participate in SDI. Those kinds of things would be wrong.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It's a free country, or used to be.

Mr. Andre: If the Hon. Members would listen to the answer, as I have indicated, a question has arisen as to what are appropriate levels of political activity. For that reason I asked the Department last week to examine this question to see if our definitions—the definitions I inherited from the Government the Hon. Member supported—are appropriate in today's world. If not, they will be amended.

In the meantime, I invite the Hon. Member and anyone else who has an interest to forward their suggestions on how this might be handled. I am open to suggestions. For the first time this morning the president of that group contacted me. We are going to meet next week to discuss this and other important questions. And if we stop being too shrill, I am sure we can reach a satisfactory conclusion—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

IDENTITY OF DEPOSITORS BEING COMPENSATED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Just a moment ago we heard the Deputy Prime Minister say—and I am pretty sure I got his words down correctly—that "Any spending of taxpayers' money means also that the taxpayers have a right to know where that goes".

Considering that the Government introduced a Bill yesterday which is going to transfer some $875 million from the pockets of some taxpayers not only to the pockets of other taxpayers but to the pockets of foreign banks, will the Minister explain to the House why she does not believe the taxpayers of Canada have the right to know precisely where that money is going? And if she does, why is it not included in the Bill?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It's a matter before the House now.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated previously to the Hon. Member, who has been nagging me quite consistently on this topic—

Mr. Broadbent: Nagging you, yes, and you're going to get more.

Mrs. McDougall: —that I am prepared to release a list of categories—

Mr. Deans: No; names!

Mrs. McDougall: —for this House to look at. I have also indicated that I am prepared to provide a list to the Commission of Inquiry and place it in the hands of Mr. Justice Estey for his consideration of this very topic.

RECIPIENTS OF TAXPAYERS' MONEY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we in this House were rushed last March with a Bill which is going to cost the taxpayers $1 billion because the Government did not at that point take the time to think through carefully what it was doing. We in this Party are not going to stand by and let that happen again. The Minister is going to have the debate of her life.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are always against western Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Does the Minister, who is sitting there smiling about spending this $875 million, think it is enough to say that some of it is going to foreign banks, some of it is going to chartered banks, and some of it is going to brokerage firms?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And credit unions.

Mr. Broadbent: Does she not think that the people of Canada have a right to know about everyone who is getting money from other taxpayers? That's the issue.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): It will also show, Mr. Speaker, that some of the money is going to credit unions and municipalities and some of the money is going to small business people. I would have thought the Hon. Member might have had some interest in that.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what we want to know.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF LIST

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): It is the case under the Bankruptcy Act that if someone claims money in a bankruptcy, as the Minister well knows, they have to submit their name in order to get that money. We are quite happy to get the list of credit unions and everyone else, but will the Minister give us that list? Will she come clean now about the $1 billion of the taxpayers' money which she wants to spend?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated what I am prepared to give to this House.

Mr. Rodriguez: It's not enough.

Mrs. McDougall: I have also indicated, I think in quite a reasonable way, that I am prepared to put the list before the Commission of Inquiry—

Mr. Rodriguez: Let's get all the facts.

Mrs. McDougall: —and have Mr. Justice Estey reach a decision on what I regard as a matter of principle—

Mr. Rodriguez: What are you covering up?

Mrs. McDougall: —which is not clear within the law.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—NATIONAL DIRECTOR'S NOTIFICATION OF ELECTION EXPENSES INQUIRY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In order to remove the cloud of doubt which still hangs over the Government's handling of the Lampert affair, will the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House the names of all of the individuals whom Mr. Lampert notified about the clarification the chief electoral officer was seeking about the election returns of the Hon. Member for Frontenac?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair does not believe that the question as asked deals with Government policy. I will give the opportunity to the Hon. Member for Windsor West to rephrase the question.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have not referred to anything other than the Deputy Prime Minister and I am asking him to provide information. May I respectfully rephrase the question and we'll see what the answer is.

I would like the Deputy Prime Minister to tell us the names of all the individuals whom the executive director of the Conservative Party said he notified about the activities of the former Minister of Communications with reference to his election expenses? And were any of those individuals, in particular, in his office or in the Prime Minister's Office?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has some difficulty because, according to the Chair, the question does not deal with any administrative responsibility. The Chair believes it is strictly a Party matter. So for the last time I invite the Hon. Member to rephrase the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair understands what the Hon. Member is getting at, but the way the question is asked, the Chair does not believe it deals with any administrative responsibility of the Government. There is no mention of anyone in the Government.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I made no reference to any Party matter. I am asking a question of the Deputy Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): —and, Mr. Speaker, if the Government has nothing to hide and if it does not want to appear to be participating in a cover-up, the Deputy Prime Minister will get up and give me the information I seek, otherwise the people of Canada will draw their own conclusions that the Government has something to hide and is engaging in a cover-up.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister give me that information or not?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): There is no problem, Mr. Speaker. Ordinarily, I would not bother to reply to such a question because it does indeed pertain to internal Party matters and I would not expect the Liberal Party to make that kind of disclosure to me. But we have, as a matter of fact. If the Hon. Member will look carefully at the press release and accompanying documents which were released yesterday, he will see that attached thereto is the letter from Mr. Lampert to Mr. Masse dated June 14, which indicates at the bottom of its page three Party officials to whom the letter was directed.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister is so full of obfuscation and evasion—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): —that I have to ponder a bit in phrasing my supplementary question.

Mr. Deans: Why are you insisting that he ask a supplementary question?

NAMING OF INDIVIDUALS NOTIFIED

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Deputy Prime Minister himself, in answering the question, has referred to a letter in the context of his duties as Deputy Prime Minister, and in view of the fact that the question can well pertain to personnel in the Prime Minister's Office and in the Deputy Prime Minister's office, which are within the administrative responsibility of the Government, will he give us names? If he will not give us names, I suggest that the people of Canada will believe that he is engaging in a cover-up. Give us the names.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, let me relieve the Hon. Member's difficulty with obfuscation and read to him what has been made public, and which he could have read himself. At the bottom of the letter to which I referred in my previous answer, there appear, in bold type, the names: Jean Guilbeault, Don Oliver, and Gisele Morgan. That is the answer to his question. It is in the public domain.

BANKRUPTCIES

POSSIBILITY OF PUBLIC LEARNING NAMES OF DEPOSITORS RECEIVING COMPENSATION—POSITION OF MINISTER OF STATE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance and has to do with a matter of principle.

Does the Minister endorse the principle expressed by the Deputy Prime Minister, namely that taxpayers have the right to know where and to whom their money is going? Does she subscribe to the Bankruptcy Act principle whereby, in cases of bankruptcies, the names of compensated creditors ought to be made public? If so, why would this Bill throw a veil of secrecy over the names of companies which stand to get $875 million of the taxpayers' money?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, by agreeing to the kinds of categories and the very fine breakdown I have offered to provide the Opposition I am meeting that principle wholeheartedly. The intent of the Bank Act is that the names of individual depositors, small business people, cultural organizations and the kinds of people who keep bank accounts, not be made public.

Mr. Rodriguez: We have never bailed out a bank before.

Mrs. McDougall: The intent of the Bank Act is that those names—

Mr. Rodriguez: Change the Act.

Mrs. McDougall: —stay private. Until that is clarified for me in a court of law I intend to stand by that principle.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is a unique situation and the Minister does not seem to understand that we are being asked as taxpayers to pay $875 million to certain companies and institutions which, according to her, will be nameless. The Government of Canada rules require that anyone who gets a payment of more than $30,000 or $40,000 from the Government has to be named in the Public Accounts of Canada. Why the double standard when it comes to the depositors of this bank?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have to answer the Hon. Member regarding double standards and principles. I have stated what my principle is and it is based on the intent of the Bank Act and how I view my responsibilities. I have indicated that I am prepared to table a very fine breakdown of categories which I think will meet the Hon. Member's demands. Until the position is clarified by a court I stand by the privacy provisions—

Mr. Rodriguez: We won't give you the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Cassidy: We are going to oppose this, you know, because of that fact.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: Try and get the Bill through the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are entitled to debate the issue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Could we please allow the Minister to complete her answer?

Mr. Dick: Is that a threat, Ed?

Mrs. McDougall: I stand by the principle of privacy for depositors in this country, large and small, in financial institutions unless I can clarify the legal position in some other way.

AGRICULTURE

FARMERS' ACCOUNTING PRACTICES—STUDY BY INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants has conducted a study called Accounting and Financial Reporting by Agricultural Producers. According to the Institute there is a diversity of accounting principles and practices as well as a complete lack of understanding by farmers of the objectives of accounting and financial reporting. They advance many theories in their draft to address the apparent lack of sophistication on the part of agricultural producers. The main objective, however, seems to be to force farmers to use the accrual method in reporting income.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Can the Hon. Member put a question, please?

Mr. Gottselig: Do you support the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Will the Hon. Member conclude his question, please?

Mr. Gottselig: Is the Minister's Department aware of this study and does he support the recommendations of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to tell my colleague that in fact I have not had this study brought to my attention. It may be that it involves a question of tax policy. I will undertake to the Hon. Member and the House to consult with my colleague, the Minister of Finance, ascertain in what category this question should be, and either he or I will get back to the Hon. Member.

Oral Questions

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—NATIONAL DIRECTOR'S NOTIFICATION OF ELECTION EXPENSE INQUIRY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the answers regarding the Lampert business this morning, I have sadly come to the conclusion—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Tobin: —that when the Prime Minister says he is a man of unimpeachable integrity, there is some truth in that. He is unimpeachable.

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Tobin: My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is he prepared to make available to the House the names of those people who work for the Government as ministerial exempt staff, or in other positions, and were contacted by Mr. Lampert regarding the Masse affair?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, all of the facts, Sir, are disclosed in the public press release and I am sure the Hon. Member has read it. It clearly states those senior officials whom I have had to identify by reading their names because of the inability of his own House Leader to read the facts. Those are the senior officials of the Party who were advised by Mr. Lampert.

Mr. Tobin: In listening to these answers, I come to the conclusion that the Government needs a choirmaster and we need a riddle master to try to make some sense in this place.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a very straightforward question. The Prime Minister is now telling Members of the House, despite the incredible spectacle of people swallowing themselves whole this last week, that Mr. Lampert did not speak to any member of the Government or any—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could the Hon. Member please ask the question now?

Mr. Tobin: Nor did he speak to any member of the Minister's exempt staff regarding this matter.

Some Hon. Members: Come on!

Mr. Tobin: Is that what the Prime Minister is telling this House? He spoke to no one but Party officials?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not telling the Member any such thing. Mr. Lampert has said precisely that in his letter. It seems to me that if that Hon. Member particularly, and others in that Party, are going to whine, they should whine about something important.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

NAMING OF DEPOSITORS RECEIVING COMPENSATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. A Commission of Inquiry has absolutely no authority or jurisdiction over the Bill which will ultimately, I assume, pay money in excess of the deposit insurance limits to depositors of the CCB and Northland banks. Given that, will the Minister recognize that this is an unprecedented action by the Government dealing with an unprecedented situation in Canada? Will she agree that a change must be made to the Bill we now have before us stipulating that those who wish to claim compensation from the Government must have their names made public, and that would be an appropriate thing to do given that the Deputy Prime Minister has indicated that any Government monies paid out to any individual ought to be made public?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have tried to make clear to the Hon. Member where I stand on this issue in providing the categories which I think will give the Hon. Member far more information than is essential. This situation is not unprecedented. Uninsured depositors have been paid before by this House and in that sense it is not unprecedented. What is important is that there is in the Bank Act an intent which I stand by, that of the right to privacy of depositors in financial institutions. I have made that as clear as I possibly can. I am sure the debate will rage on, but I have made my position clear.

REQUEST THAT LIST BE PUBLISHED

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says she stands by the provisions of the Bank Act. We stand by the provision that the depositors are entitled to $60,000 as insured. Now that we are changing the rules of the game, why do we not require that those people who want more than they are entitled to under the insurance program be treated like all other creditors in bankruptcies and list themselves for payment and accept the fact that their names will become public?

• (1150)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is at his best when he shouts. I have made my position—

Mr. Deans: It is such a stupid position that you are taking.

Mrs. McDougall: —clear time after time.

Mr. Broadbent: It is the wrong position.

Mrs. McDougall: I have tried to tell the House that I will provide it with the necessary information to satisfy the taxpayers' needs. In the meantime, I stand by the depositors who put their money into financial institutions—

Mr. Deans: Then give them the $60,000.

Mrs. McDougall: —on a confidential basis.

EMPLOYMENT

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY—NEEDS OF THE OLDER UNEMPLOYED

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the tremendous hardship many older unemployed people face, will the Minister tell the House what provisions in the Canadian Jobs Strategy will directly benefit unemployed people over the age of 50?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Jobs Strategy is designed to meet the needs of those who are most in need, particularly older workers.

For example, in the job development program, long-term unemployed—many of whom are older workers—will be given training and employment opportunities in fields where they have not had any previous expertise. In the job re-entry program, women who have been out of the workforce for a number of years will be given on-site and in-class training in fields where they have not worked before.

The reason is that this will provide older workers with opportunities to take part in the economic growth which is occurring in this country as evidenced in the 4 per cent increase in the Gross National Product, by the decline in the bank rate to less than 9 per cent for the first time in seven years, and as evidenced by the fact that 300,000 new jobs have been created.

REFINANCING OF FISHERIES PRODUCTS INTERNATIONAL

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The business plan of Fisheries Products International is unacceptable. It will displace many workers and threaten communities in Newfoundland. Second, it is causing havoc for workers and industries in the Province of Nova Scotia.

Will the Minister explain to the House why he acted so insensitively to those workers in Newfoundland and why he has acted so insensitively to the representations made by the Minister of Fisheries from Nova Scotia who said that this announcement is both stupid and insensitive?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what information the Hon. Member has upon which to base the declaration that the plan that has been announced is insensitive to the needs of Newfoundland. That plan has had the endorsement and wholehearted support of the Government of Newfoundland. That five-year plan is intended to revitalize the deep-sea fishery of that province and, in the long run, result in a very much improved industry with more jobs and more security for the fishermen of Newfoundland.

Mr. Dingwall: I say it is insensitive because it will close 15 plants in the Province of Newfoundland.

GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. For his edification, the Minister of Fisheries in Nova Scotia stated: "It is difficult for us to fathom the insensitivity of the Governments of Newfoundland and Canada in taking such a step in the middle of a countervail action".

Will the Acting Minister of Fisheries explain why he has acted so negligently on behalf of the workers of Newfoundland and workers and fishermen in the Province of Nova Scotia?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we do not believe that the Government has acted insensitively at all. In approving as it did, with the Government of Newfoundland, the new five-year plan for F.P.I, the Government has embarked on a program which will revitalize the deep-sea fishery for Newfoundland and which will have nothing but long-range and short-range benefits for the industry. I would think that the Hon. Member would be grateful for the kind of action that has been taken here, rather than being critical of it.

FINANCE

SPREAD BETWEEN BANK OF CANADA RATE AND PRIME RATE CHARGED BY CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Finance. Now that the official Bank of Canada rate has dropped below 9 per cent and the basic bank loan rate is still 10.25 per cent, can the Minister of State tell the House what measures she is prepared to take to reduce the abnormal 1.25 per cent gap which now benefits the banks?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to inform the Hon. Member who is a little bit behind, that one leading bank has announced that it is reducing its prime rate to 10 per cent as of Monday, which is once again the lowest interest rate level that we have seen in the prime rate since 1978.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Parry: I am delighted that one Member is a little faster in getting her news than the Prime Minister, who gets it from the TV networks.

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, what about the other banks and what about the fact that the last time the Bank of Canada prime rate interest level was 9 per cent, the spread was only three-quarters of a per cent?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member should be delighted, as we are, that the interest rate levels in this country are going down. I am sure that the banks, which compete with each other, will reduce their rates accordingly. That will be a decision of the market-place.

However, the Hon. Member should simply be pleased that the people of Canada are paying less interest now than they were a year ago.

BANKS AND BANKING

NORTHLAND BANK DECISION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance and concerns the failure of the two Canadian banks.

As we have mentioned on several occasions, the Government gave the Northland Bank the kiss of death on the first of September when it associated it with the Canadian Commercial Bank in its liquidation request.

I would like to ask the Minister of State, considering that the Northland Bank has decided to sue and challenge the bank's liquidation in the courts, whether the Government intends to fight this challenge by the Northland Bank's management?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the liquidation is coming before the courts in Manitoba today, I believe. I think it would be most inappropriate for me to comment on speculation of what the action of the Northland Bank may or may not be.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL OPPOSE NORTHLAND BANK APPLICATION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, that is not at all what I asked the Minister. I asked whether her Government intended to fight this challenge by the Northland Bank—I am not asking you to make the decision for the judge—I was asking whether the Government was going to fight the request that is to be submitted by the Northland Bank in court.

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it is a hypothetical question. We do not even know that it is going to happen. It is in the court room even as we speak. What is the Hon. Member asking me to do? I do not understand.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER DEPARTMENT WILL OPPOSE NORTHLAND BANK APPLICATION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

The Northland Bank has gone to court to ask for the liquidation order that was sought by the Government to be declared null and void. I am asking the Minister whether there are any officials, any lawyers in her department who are going to challenge this request by the Bank. It is quite simple.

Ms. Copps: It is quite simple indeed.

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this is being played out in a court room and I find this line of questioning totally hypothetical.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HONDURAS—RAID ON REFUGEE CAMP

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. As he undoubtedly knows, on August 29 more than 800 Honduran soldiers raided Colomoncagua, a camp in Honduras holding thousands of Salvadoran refugees. They kidnapped 10 and beat, raped or killed others in this camp. For years, Honduras has threatened to send these refugees back by force to the land they fled.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister, on behalf of Canada, direct our officers in Honduras to offer sanctuary to those 10 who have been kidnapped and ask that they be released for that purpose?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that this matter is receiving urgent attention. Immigration officials were scheduled to be on the site yesterday. I am expecting a report and I will get back to the Hon. Member as soon as I have that information.

CANADIAN AID TO HONDURAS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence. Since he knows that this refugee camp is also on the potential invasion route by which Honduran, Salvadoran or U.S. forces may invade El Salvador to attack the FMLN in the rear, will the Minister remind Honduras of Canada's very generous CIDA aid and request that they assure us that the Salvadorans who have been kidnapped will be released and there will be no invasion of the FMLN in El Salvador through Honduran territory?

• (1200)

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I just came back from the U.N. General Assembly, where I had a chance to talk to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Honduras. We discussed this subject which is one of mutual concern, and I can assure the Hon. Member that CIDA and the Department of External Affairs are continuing negotiations and keeping in touch with our embassy in Guatemala. We are monitoring the situation very closely.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED IMPUTATION OF MOTIVES BY MR. NIELSEN

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has received two notices of questions of privilege. In the order they were received, the first one is from the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise with respect to a serious matter flowing from questions asked today of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) concerning certain allegations with respect to the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier).

The reply of the Deputy Prime Minister was in breach of the rules of order of this House, specifically Beauchesne's Citation

319(3). This citation makes it very clear that it is improper to impute in the House of Commons to any Member or Members unworthy motives for their actions in a particular case.

The offensive and totally unacceptable suggestion by the Deputy Prime Minister that questions with respect to the conduct of the Minister of State for Transport were in some way motivated by a concern about the fact that she was a francophone Minister are unworthy of this House, and unworthy of the Deputy Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson: In addition to being unworthy of the Deputy Prime Minister, they are also clearly in breach of the rules of order of this House. The Deputy Prime Minister clearly suggested, in echoing the suggestions made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on other occasions, that Members in this House who have questioned the improper conduct of the Minister of State for Transport were motivated by "racism", which was the word he used.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, all I want to say is that a Minister who wastes taxpayers' money is incompetent, whether she speaks French or English.

Mr. Speaker, I urge you to ask the Deputy Prime Minister to withdraw his allegations which are totally unacceptable to the House.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I do not accept for a moment the twists and distortions which the Hon. Member has placed on my words—

Mr. Rodriguez: It is not a twist. You said it, brother.

Mr. Nielsen: —all of which is absolutely and utterly false and unworthy of him in even making the suggestion.

With respect to my reference in Question Period, if the Hon. Member had read the article by the journalist concerned, he would know that that was its subject matter. It has he, the journalist, who raised it in the first instance, not me.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) on the same question of privilege.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the notice I had given you concerns the same matter and I suppose it might be considered now so we might avoid raising two different questions of privilege.

Mr. Speaker, we are outraged that the Deputy Prime Minister would accuse the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) of racism because he asks questions concerning the expenses incurred by the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier).

Those accusations are extremely serious and unacceptable to the House, and we do not intend to let it go unchallenged.

However I must admit that it is always difficult to decipher the convoluted remarks of the Deputy Prime Minister, so we will wait for the blues to find out exactly what he said.

I take the floor at this time to ask Your Honour to reserve our right to rise on a question of privilege after we have had an opportunity to examine the blues and determine the exact nature of the accusations of racism made by the Deputy Prime Minister.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will read the record of Question Period. If I find that the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) and the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault)—

PETITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from the United Food and Commercial Workers Union. It involves members from Toronto, Mississauga, Rexdale, Sudbury, Burlington, Windsor, Orillia, Midland, Stroud, Brampton and Bramalea.

The petition is signed by hundreds of members of the retail United Food and Commercial Workers Union which calls on the Government and on Parliament to ensure that all retired employees keep their pension benefits and receive their unemployment insurance benefits without deduction of pension income.

RESTORATION OF FULL INDEXATION TO FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present from Essex County and Windsor criticizing strongly the Government's intentions to decrease the indexation for family allowances and suggesting that this represents an inequitable approach to the tax system in view of the other benefits being given to upper income people in the tax changes in the May Budget.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 376 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 376 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FEDERALLY APPOINTED PROSECUTORS

Question No. 376—Mr. Angus:

As of April 1, 1985, what was the name, law firm and community of all federally appointed prosecutors?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Nunziata: With respect to questions on the Order Paper, Mr. Speaker, I have asked the Parliamentary Secretary on several occasions to give me some indication when Question No. 296 concerning the Richard Hatfield marijuana case might be answered in the House of Commons. It has been some six months now since the questions have been put on the Order Paper.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You should have been here before.

Mr. Nunziata: The Parliamentary Secretary gave his undertaking in the House that he would consult with the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) and give us some indication as to when these questions might be answered.

I would like to put the question to the Parliamentary Secretary or to the Solicitor General to give us a clear indication when those questions might be answered.

If those questions are not answered in a reasonable period of time—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Nunziata: —unanimous consent may not be given in future to have the remaining questions stood.

Mr. Dick: Threats.

Mr. Beatty: By golly, Mr. Speaker, he is as scrappy as the old devil today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Since the Hon. Member raised this question a week or so ago, I have had a chance to see what the status is because I certainly do have an obligation to all Hon. Members who put questions on the Order Paper to respond to them as quickly as possible. Indeed I will do that with Question No. 296.

However, I think it is appropriate to point out to the House that Question No. 296 has some 40 parts and some 180 or so subparts. The person who was counting them lost track after 180. The question is shared by the Department of the Solicitor General and five other Departments, some of which have little involvement in it. We have been able to obtain answers from two of the six Departments. The Departments involved are Agriculture, Employment and Immigration, Justice, Solicitor General, Transport Canada and the PMO.

We will do everything humanly possible to get the information as soon as possible for my hon. colleague. I appreciate his patience.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, why has it taken six months to answer these questions? Is the Solicitor General prepared to table the answers to the questions which have already been dealt with in the House immediately, rather than wait for the answers to all the questions?

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, it takes longer to answer a 180-part question than it does to draft one. What we have to do is to contract five or six Departments to obtain all the information. If they had been separate questions and each of them had referred to a separate Department, we could have easily abided by the requests of the hon. gentleman and responded specifically, Department by Department. However, because the question itself cuts across several Departments, we are trying to pull all the requested information together and answer it as quickly as possible. Again I undertake to do that at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

TORONTO ISLAND AIRPORT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-76, an Act respecting the operation of the Toronto Island Airport by the Toronto Harbour Commissioners, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it appears to be my lucky day.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is our lucky day.

Mr. Beatty: As the Government House Leader says as he leaves, it is our lucky day.

I want to make a few brief comments in the name of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) with regard to Bill C-76.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Toronto Island Airport is located in the Toronto Harbour area, about two miles from City Hall, on a property owned by the Toronto Harbour Commissioners, the City of Toronto and the federal Government. It has been designated as an airport to relieve pressure on Pearson International Airport. It serves a large general aviation community and a number of commercial aviation enterprises. It is also a STOL terminal for DASH-7 and DASH-8 aircraft.

[English]

In 1984-85, traffic at Toronto Island Airport reached over 156,000 aircraft movements and approximately 47,000 passengers. By the end of the decade, it is forecast that these figures will increase to about 200,000 aircraft movements and over 200,000 passengers. It was in recognition of the importance of Toronto Island Airport to the Toronto area aviation system that the federal Government entered into a 50-year lease agreement in June, 1983, with the City of Toronto and the Toronto Harbour Commissioners. In signing this lease agreement, the federal Government has ensured that the Toronto Island Airport will continue as an important airport in the Toronto area for general aviation and STOL services.

By way of background for the proposed amendments, I might say that Toronto Island Airport, until June 30, 1983, was operated under a lease agreement between the Toronto Harbour Commissioners and the City of Toronto. That lease expired on June 30, 1983, and in the absence of a new agreement, the Island Airport could have closed, causing severe congestion problems for other airports in the Toronto area, particularly for Pearson International.

Negotiations for a new agreement for the airport were long and protracted, primarily because of the environmental concerns of the City of Toronto with respect to air operations that would be allowed at the airport. Through the patience and understanding of all parties, a new lease was successfully negotiated with ensured continued use of the site for airport purposes. However, it contains certain conditions which were requested by the city to address its environmental concerns with respect to operations at the airport and a need to preserve the integrity of neighbouring parkland. The former Minister of Transport, on behalf of the federal Government, agreed to recommend to Parliament amendments to the Toronto Harbour Commissioners Act to give effect to these conditions. Specifically, the city insisted that all jet aircraft and aircraft generating excessive noise, as defined in the lease, be prohibited from operating at the airport as a prerequisite to the city agreeing to enter into a long-term lease.

The amendments before the House are designed to provide statutory authority to allow the Toronto Harbour Commissioners to make by-laws to prohibit jet-powered aircraft and aircraft generating excessive noise, as defined in the lease, from operating at the airport, and will provide for a maximum fine of $25,000 upon summary conviction for owners of prohibited aircraft who use such aircraft at the airport.

It should be noted that although the proposed amendments appear to give discretionary power to the Toronto Harbour Commissioners to make the by-laws which I mentioned previously, under terms of the lease arrangement for Toronto Island Airport, the operator of the airport is obligated under Section 15(2) of the lease to make these by-laws and to enforce them strictly.

A further amendment requested by the City of Toronto concerning the operation of the airport is also addressed in the Bill. At the present time, under Section 7 of the Toronto Harbour Commissioners Act, 1911, the Island Airport is operated by the Toronto Harbour Commissioners on behalf of the City of Toronto. The city no longer wishes to be involved in the operation of the airport and wants to be indemnified against any financial or legal liability for the airport. Accordingly, an amendment is proposed to allow the Toronto Harbour Commissioners to operate the airport on its own behalf or, following agreement between the commissioners and the Minister of Transport, on behalf of Transport Canada.

It is intended that the Toronto Harbour Commissioners would in future operate the airport on behalf of Transport Canada. This would not increase federal Government expenditures because Transport Canada already funds all operating deficits and capital expenditures incurred by the Island Airport. In 1984, for example, the operating subsidy provided by the federal Government was about $475,000.

An additional amendment is also proposed concerning the appointment of commissioners by the City of Toronto to the Toronto Harbour Commissioners. Currently the city appoints three of the five members to the commission. The federal Government appoints the two other members, one being on the recommendation of the Metro Toronto Board of Trade. At present, the city appointments require nomination by the city's executive committee. The amendment will allow for members to be appointed by the majority of the Toronto City Council, without nomination by the executive committee. This amendment will bring the city's commissioner appointment process into line with city appointments for other agencies and commissions.

[Translation]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of these amendments is to make the Toronto Harbour Commissioners Act consistent with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

In concluding, I would like to point out that these amendments are being proposed in order to fulfil the federal Government's obligation under the lease for the Toronto Island Airport. The amendments are fundamental to the implementation of the specific terms of the lease, were prepared in consultation with the City of Toronto and the Toronto Harbour Commissioners, and have their support.

Signing a long-term lease ensures the continued use of the airport for general aviation and STOL operations. In turn, these operations benefit users of the air transportation network of Southern Ontario. Furthermore, they have and will continue to have a favourable impact on the economy of the Toronto urban area.

[English]

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my intervention will be a short one. I thank the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) for giving us such an interesting statistical description of the activities on Toronto Island emanating from the airport, as well as the history of this legislation and the economic considerations which he put before us.

• (1220)

In analysing this Bill it is important to keep in mind that there is more than just economic wellbeing, as described by the Minister, at stake here. There is also a very important set of islands that provide citizens with amenities and most enjoyable recreational outlets. In addition to that, the islands also provide, from an environmental point of view, a very important place of rest for migratory birds. Therefore, there are environmental as well as economic considerations that have to be taken into account.

In analysing this Bill it seems to me it would be desirable to produce a piece of legislation that will also have the input of interested individuals, groups of citizens, environmentalists, sailing and boating clubs as well as the groups already referred to by the Minister. It is my impression that the consultation process that has led to Bill C-76, an Act respecting the operation of the Toronto Island Airport by the Toronto Harbour Commission, requires a much broader base of consultation than has been given it so far. The Minister has already alluded to consultations with the City of Toronto, which is of course desirable and which we support. It seems to me that, once the Bill has been given second reading, a process of consultation ought to be launched by the committee to permit local consultations which so far have not taken place.

I would urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) through the Solicitor General to permit the Transport Committee to hold hearings in metro Toronto so as to hear from interested individuals and groups and, as I mentioned, environmentalist groups among them, sailing and boating clubs and the like.

It is important to remember that the islands are more than just a landing and take-off strip for transport purposes. This is a beautiful set of islands which have at one extreme, on Ward Island, a healthy and thriving community of homes and families. There is a set of parks that covers the balance of the area and the airport activities, large in number as they are—I was surprised to hear the Minister referring to 156,000 aircraft movements—representing in terms of land use only a small fraction of the totality of what these islands are all about. From the point of view of Toronto citizens, the islands mean much more than just aircraft movements.

The powers given to the commissioners in this Bill seem to me to be too sweeping. Looking at the expropriation powers outlined in Section 7 it seems to me that the commissioners, if given the opportunity, would have expropriation powers that are unusually strong without any provision for appeal that I was able to detect in the Bill. Therefore, I would like to draw the attention of the Minister to the necessity of introducing in the Bill a mechanism for individuals, clubs, environmentalist groups or whoever has some kind of activity on the island that would be endangered by a process of expropriation to have a recourse—and I know that the Solicitor General is very keen and well versed and has had considerable experience—

Mr. Beatty: You are trying to flatter me into something.

Mr. Caccia: —an avenue for appealing to the powers established under any piece of legislation. It is important that an appeal process be provided, when one thinks not just of tomorrow or five years from now but of future generations of Canadians and Torontonians who enjoy very much the use of the islands for recreational purposes.

Under Section 7 there are power being outlined that may be given to the commission for the use of jet-powered aircraft. I urge the Government to reconsider the possibility envisaged in this Bill to permit jet-powered aircraft. We have Malton; we have excellent facilities at the Lester B. Pearson Airport. There is no need in the downtown area to expand the activities of that airport to include jets.

The reason for that will become more evident when we talk about the island as an area being used by migratory birds.

The section that permits commissioners to deal with levels of noise leaves me a little bit puzzled because I do not know what the definition of the words "excessive levels of noise" will be. Will it be the levels of noise as defined and applied by the City of Toronto under its present by-laws, or will it be a definition that the commissioners will develop on their own and, if so, will they do it in consultation with the city? As we all know, words like "excessive", are very hard to define when it comes to the practical application of a proposed piece of legislation. I would be grateful if the Solicitor General or the Minister of Transport would come back and explain to us how in the term "excessive levels of noise", the word "excessive" is to be applied in practice.

In Section 10 there is phraseoly which I suppose is quite common and I would not want to be misunderstood in trying to pick every detail out of this Bill. But it seems to me that wherever the words "his successor" are used, as on the last line of page 4, the implication is that only male commissioners would be appointed. I think that as the general practice from now on, for all the good reasons that we know, the drafters of the Bill should insert the words "his or her successor" and thus give the fullest opportunity to interpret the full meaning of what the legislators had in mind.

The general picture that emerges from this Bill is one that I look at with a bit of concern. We are considering the commissioners regulating air traffic and airport activities in dowtown Toronto. This is an increasingly heavily built up area. We have the CN Tower, several hotels and a number of existing high-rise buildings. More will follow if existing plans are carried out. Therefore, it seems to me that caution should be used here in looking at the future use of this airport. That is why the reference is made to the undesirability of permitting jet aircraft traffic.

I would like to raise a question on which the Minister of Transport may wish to comment at the end of the debate. At this airport, do we have the latest and most adequate radar facilities to assist and permit flights in bad weather? In the winter months and when visibility becomes difficult, this airport must be equipped with the best and latest facilities that exist in larger airports. We cannot afford to take any risks at all.

This Bill does not have an environmental clause, and it seems to me that a word or two is needed on the migration of birds. In the area, I am told that there is an intensive activity from North to South and vice versa in the appropriate migration seasons. The islands are considered to be a green oasis for all species of birds existing in our climate and others. Some 250 species of birds have been counted over a year and easily several million individual birds have been counted annually.

Lake Ontario has a habitat different from the neighbouring Great Lakes and therefore the type of bird migration that we see here on the island has a unique characteristic that must be kept in mind and protected. This area is the only place in Metro Toronto where certain types of birds can be observed by naturalists, school children and those interested in wildlife and nature. In fact, on Toronto Island there is a unique school with a fine and ancient tradition of outdoor education. At every time of year possible, children are taken there for a full week in order to carry on nature studies on site.

We have in this area a stopover point for migrating birds. We have a nesting place and an area in which birds live year round. Therefore, we have a natural asset that must be taken into account whenever we begin to talk about aircraft activity. In conclusion, since we are talking about powers being transferred by the city to the commissioners, what is missing in this Bill is that the commissioners should have the power to close the island airport for any number of days required during the critical migration time of the birds if and when this seems to be desirable and required. I welcome the opportunity to have the ear of the Solicitor General during this intervention. I know that he will take to heart the points that are being made. I know that he is a very keen, devoted and committed environmentalist and I know that he is particularly keen about the protection of the migration paths of birds. Therefore, we will have in him a champion for the cause of Toronto Island which, as I said, is much more than a place in which to put an airport. It is a very important recreational and environmental part of Metro-Toronto, something which makes Metro-Toronto such an admired city the world over.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, as transportation critic for my Party, I am happy to rise to speak on this Bill. First, I wish to express my appreciation to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), for allowing me to speak before he does. Although this airport is located in his constituency, he has been good enough to let me speak first so that I can leave town later this afternoon.

I have a question of the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty). What the heck is he doing introducing this Bill? In all my years here, the Minister of Transport or at times even his Parliamentary Secretary led off any debate on transportation. Why did the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) not lead off this debate in the justifiable absence of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski)? I do not understand it. Is it because the Minister of State for Transport is being relieved of her duties by the back door because of other events and other situations? Is the Minister of State for Transport being hidden from Parliament and prevented from carrying out her responsibilities? It is a question I hope a subsequent speaker from the Government side will answer.

Mr. Beatty: No, it's because I was desperate to speak to this Bill, Les.

Mr. Benjamin: I appreciated the remarks of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). However, I would remind him that it was the Liberals who started all this.

Mr. Caccia: Started what?

Mr. Benjamin: I would remind him that it was three successive Liberal Ministers of Transport who promoted and encouraged STOL aircraft service and who supported the expansion and increased use of the Toronto Island Airport. Now the Tories are doing the same thing in spades. I think the Hon. Member for Davenport should have made the speech he made today on the numerous opportunities he would have had over the last number of years.

Mr. Caccia: This is the first time this Bill has been introduced.

Mr. Benjamin: The Hon. Member for Davenport and anyone else who was on the Government side when the Liberals were in power could have spoken on this matter in a Throne Speech debate or a budget debate. They could have raised hell in the debate on the Estimates. They could have said a lot of things. It is amazing how their tunes change when the two old Parties change places.

It is too bad that we did not have more time to look into the ramifications of this little Bill because they go far beyond what is contained in it. For many years, the operation of this airport has created a controversy on the Toronto waterfront, the Toronto City Council and among citizens of Toronto in general. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina, who is also a former member of the city council for the area, will probably fill us in on some of the history of the development of the Toronto Island in general and the airport in particular. He shall undoubtedly let us know about the not-so-glorious history of the Toronto Harbour Commission as well. I leave that to him to do as I know he will do so very well.

It is too bad the Government wants to put this Bill through. The debate on this matter has been going on for some time, not only in the context of the Toronto Island Airport and the short take-off and landing services but in the context of how the Government of the day works at cross purposes. Regarding Via Rail, the Government has invested tens of millions of dollars in a high-speed passenger train called the LRC in order to provide a high speed, frequent and efficient service in the Quebec City-Montreal-Ottawa-Toronto-Windsor corridor. It has made this investment to attract people away from their automobiles and, hopefully, out of some of the congested airports in order to provide a service which a large number of people want. That is fine. Then, what does the Government do? At the same time, through the provision of capital, it proceeds to make way for the operations of a short take-off and landing aircraft service in the same corridor. That move can do nothing but inhibit, if not decrease, the potential for passenger increases on VIA Rail.

When the Government sinks a few hundred million dollars into some 31 locomotives and, I believe, something in the order of 150 passenger cars for the LRC, and then at the same time turns around and spends money to provide an additional service, even though there are lots of buses, trains and other aircraft operating in the same corridor, it seems to defeat the original purpose. I do not see the Toronto Harbour Commission having the money to spend on this measure since, as far as I know, the commission does not have any money. I do not understand.

I criticized the previous Liberal Government for working at cross purposes within its own ranks. I thought we would see some change on the part of the new Conservative Government. I'll be darned if it is not doing exactly the same thing. It is incredible. There were Conservatives who stood up as often as we did in previous years to criticize what the Liberals were attempting to do with respect to the Toronto Island Airport and the whole matter of short take-off and landing services in the Quebec-Windsor corridor, including Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto.

The place for that type of service is not in a highly populated and congested area where there are numerous other services such as super-highways, eight or ten buses a day, four or five airlines operating flights and VIA Rail's operations. What does the Government do? It inserts another service which divides the market up into even smaller pieces. People participating in the market take turns at going broke and the taxpayers pick up the tab. I do not understand it.

The place for short take-off and landing aircraft is not on expensive runways with expensive infrastructures. The place for this type of service is in sparseley populated areas in the northern parts of our provinces and in Arctic Canada. Short take-off and landing aircraft can be used on a gravel strip if need be. Low cost and frequent service can be provided, and those are the places for that type of aircraft.

I understand and appreciate that the Government is anxious with respect to the sale of Dash-7s and Dash-8s. I understand the Government is trying to entice countries such as Brazil, Argentina, other South American countries in the Andes Mountains such as Chile, Peru and Bolivia, as well as some European countries, to buy short take-off and landing aircraft, which are darned good aircraft. Those countries have large isolated areas and widely scattered populations where the use of that type of aircraft is ideal, such as in the jungles of Brazil, the prairies of the Argentine or the mountains of western South America.

We were told by the bureaucrats and the Government of the day a few years ago that this short take-off and landing service out of Toronto Island Airport would serve as a demonstration model for potential buyers. Well, the potential buyers received all types of demonstration models out of metropolitan areas all over the world and had the experience of probably 100 different airlines to draw from. Canada had a golden opportunity to make a much better and proper use of short take-off and landing aircraft for a demonstration model in order to entice other countries to buy those aircraft. Instead of doing that, the Government is setting up an elitist air service for business executives, corporate directors and MPs. I do not know of many pensioners or low income people who will be able to use the service.

Thus, the Government has done it backward again. From the content of the Bill, we are not sure what the Government plans for the work of the Toronto Harbour Commission. In fact, members of the New Democratic Party are not sure what the intentions of the harbour commission are toward the future of the airport. We are not convinced it will keep jets out of the airport in accordance with its agreement with the City of Toronto. The Bill states that the Toronto Harbour Commission may prohibit the use of jets. All that means is that if the commission does not say anything, then someone else can use jets. That is all that means. It seems to me the Government had better make up its mind since there is an agreement between the City of Toronto and the Toronto Harbour Commission. Is the Government trying to undermine the City of Toronto and undermine the agreement and allow the harbour commission to do whatever it likes? We are not sure the harbour commission will not use the powers of expropriation which it will be given by this Bill to obtain the lands it needs to build the bridge it wants, to expand its terminal and runway to accommodate larger and, perhaps, jet-powered aircraft at the Toronto Island Airport.

I can recall a time when the Transport Committee visited the Toronto Island Airport. It was a boar's nest. What passes for a terminal there would not make a good granary on the Prairies. The best thing that could happen to it would be a fire.

Mr. McLean: Good Lord, an arsonist!

Mr. Benjamin: Obviously, what will have to happen if, as and when this Bill passes, will be the building of a new terminal. More and larger fire and emergency services will have to be put in place. The airport will need more land. The City of Toronto and the residents of Toronto Island have been most vociferous, with some justification, about the preservation of the parks, the nice residences and the milieu in which they live on Toronto Island. They can kiss all that good-bye since there is no doubt the move is eventually to have a major airport operation in the Toronto harbour compared to what is in place now.

I cannot understand that the hell a harbour commission is doing running an airport. However, if it can improve matters then I wonder if we can have a harbour commission in Regina to run our airport and perhaps it could even run the international airport in Edmonton. It passes my understanding what the dickens a harbour commission is doing running an airport. I thought its concerns were with water and not air.

We feel these matters need to be cleared up before we can give support to the Minister's proposed changes. For example, Mr. Speaker, large co-op housing developments are being built only a short distance from that airport. That may cause those who are going to build, whether co-op housing or any other kind, to step back and take another look, because a few years down the road when this becomes something of a major metropolitan airport operation, they probably will not be able to give the development away.

At the moment, we are inclined to oppose this legislation and we want a lot of answers. We believe that this Bill should not only go to committee but we want a commitment from the Solicitor General, since he is in charge of this Bill at least for today, that the committee on Transport or the Legislative Committee will be authorized and empowered by an order of reference in this House to hold hearings in the City of Toronto. If that takes two or three days, that's fine, but hearings just in Ottawa will not be sufficient. There are too many people who are interested who cannot afford the travelling expense. The great thing about Toronto is that there are members of the New Democratic Party who are members of the Legislative Assembly, it has the Blue Jays, and my son, daughter-in-law and grandson live there. The New Democratic Party in the Prairies has a secret plan for Toronto—we just fill it full of wheat. There are some great people living there and there is a nice park there which they want preserved. You can bet your bottom dollar, Mr. Speaker, that by the time these great Tory business types get through with that place in two or three years, some of those residents, if they do not sell out now, will not be able to get much for their property.

The Minister has proposed privatizing airports, which is something we do not generally support, although there is nothing new about provincially and municipally owned airports. We did not think, however, that he meant to give over the operation and the profits, if any, while retaining the responsibility for any potential loss. That is great Tory business sense, Mr. Speaker. If it makes money, business gets to keep it, and if it loses money, the taxpayers get to pay for it. They are marvellous businessmen. I am sure that this is a principle which would go over pretty well at the local Chamber of Commerce meeting. This is, of course, a standard procedure not only in this administration but in previous administrations as well. That's what happens when the tweedle-dees and the tweedle-dums are in charge. They involve themselves in business only when business needs the money.

Who is in this Toronto Harbour Commission which the Conservatives wish to put in charge of the Toronto Island Airport? The City Council gets to elect three of its members, and I suppose it is an improvement in the Bill that it will take a majority vote of the City Council and that any member of the Council can nominate a candidate for the position. I suppose that is a democratic improvement. However, why should the Toronto Board of Trade get to pick those fellows who run around in their yachting caps, blue blazers and grey flannels, the big wheels? How about the Toronto the District Labour Council or the residents' association in that area nominating someone to that harbour commission? This Government has bragged about being open and more democratic. Why should this body not be beefed up to include real elected representatives from City Council instead of a few nauticals types? Why not someone who lives on the island? No one will suffer greater change than the residents of the island community if a bridge or tunnel to link the islands were approved or built by the harbour commission.

Obviously, because the Minister has opened up the membership of the commission through this Bill even he recognizes that there should be some changes. I think we may have to move some amendments which will make a few more changes. I think we may have to move amendments which will make a few more changes.

I look on this, Mr. Speaker, as part of the whole "freedom to move" syndrome of the Government which wa started by the Liberals in 1974-1975 under the Hon. Otto Lang. It was user-pay, deregulation, too much Government, cut-backs, restraint; the "proposition 13" syndrome imported from California. It means, in the case of the Toronto Island Airport, freedom to change the different types of aircraft. It means new companies serving that airport with no need to justify their arrival, and they will want roads and warehouses and service centres and so on. It means more congestion and crowding on the island which is already congested. Getting there in a car is enough to give a coyote heartburn, and this will make it even worse for the people who reside on that island. This will involve changes to the whole waterfront because of the change to the regulations of railroads and shipping which the Government proposes in its "freedom to move White Paper". In fact, the Toronto Island Airport Bill is only one of a whole host of relatively minor things in the total package which this Government, following the lead of the previous Government, wants to implement in Canada in order to impose a theory which is at best unproven and at worst, I submit, is proven to be bad transportation economics, bad for the public and bad for the taxpayers.

The experience in other places has not shown that the so-called "freedom to move" syndrome, which I call "freedom to manoeuvre", in fact will be any kind of an improvement except to a few of the big operators. They will have a ball, as usual. But the ordinary people who live in places like the Toronto Island, who cannot afford the luxury of flying on executive-type aircraft, are not being taken into consideration.

I submit that this Bill, Mr. Speaker, is just a continuation of a Government working at cross purposes when it invests in high speed rail passenger service and also invests in a competing mode of transportation which will take customers away from the rail service.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Did the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) say that he was not going to be back after lunch? I wanted to make sure that I was back in the Chair to listen to the rest of his speech. He still has 20 minutes or so. Or will he be leaving for his riding?

Mr. Benjamin: I expect to use up five or ten minutes after two o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry, may I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All right. Following the Hon. Member's speech this afternoon, we will to 20-minute speeches with questions and comments.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) had the floor.

Mr. Benjamin: If my colleagues are lucky, I will wind up my remarks very quickly. The Minister of Transport has continued to announce plans and proceed with them before thinking about their consequences. The announcements made by the Minister last summer are an indication of his lack of planning.

Furthermore, the Minister of State for Transport has not made those studies either. She did not even introduce the Bill, although she has some responsibilities—particularly in the absence of the Minister of Transport. I assume that the Minister of State for Transport will speak in the debate today on the merits of this Bill, whatever they are, concerning the Toronto Island Airport.

Let me elaborate on how the Minister of Transport has not thought about the ramifications of the action he has taken up to this point. One of the main purposes of this Bill is to allow corporate jets to operate out of the Toronto Island Airport. A lot of those "mucky-mucks" want to operate out of the Toronto Island Airport but I am sure the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is not one of them. He might muck around a lot but—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Shame on you. You know me too well.

Mr. Benjamin: This Bill is an example of how the Minister of Transport introduces legislation without thinking it through. While this Bill may appear to be relatively minor in terms of the total context of national transportation, it is typical of the path we have been on since the days of Otto Lang, Jean-Luc Pépin, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and now the Minister of Transport and the Minister of State for Transport.

Perhaps an Hon. Member from the Government side could tell me why the Solicitor General was interested in introducing this Bill rather than the Minister of State for Finance? I do not know why he would be bothered because the Lester Pearson Airport is much closer to his riding than the Toronto Island Airport. He could utilize a number of airlines into Lester Pearson Airport and could even use a Challenger jet—although I am sure he would not—to go to Lester Pearson Airport rather than the Toronto Island Airport.

We must take another issue into consideration when dealing with this Bill at second reading stage and later in committee. The Toronto Harbour Commissioners had all of the development rights on the railway lands in downtown Toronto. They want to build a stadium in downtown Toronto. While I do not care where it is, they should build a stadium so that the World Series between the Toronto Blue Jays and the Montreal Expos three or four years from now can take place in Canada and give the United States a nervous breakdown. In any event, that land deal gave them all of the development rights on the railway lands.

I must question the competence, intelligence or foresight of the Toronto Harbour Commissioners for selling their development rights to those railway lands owned by CN and CP—primarily CN—for a million dollars. This is some time back, probably after the Blue Jays arrived in Toronto. On that land, that would probably buy you one acre. It is worth $30 or $40 million. But the Toronto Harbour Commission gave it away. The Toronto Harbour Commission has no money. It is broke. That means that while one or both railroads are putting up a stadium, while the Government is allowing different airline companies, whether the airlines have propeller or jet-driven aircraft, to take business away from one of its own companies for which the Government is responsible on behalf of the taxpayers, it will finance and pay the bill for Toronto Island Airport.

• (1410)

All the expenditures will have to be made because of an additional volume of air transport, and the Government will pay that in competition with its own Crown corporations. I do not understand it. If it were all a private operation and if the private operation got the authority from the Ministry of Transport, the Toronto Harbour Commission and the Toronto City Council or the Toronto Metro Council for putting up the competition for Air Canada or VIA Rail, then fine. So long as they pay the Bills for the construction of a new airport terminal, improvement of the runways, the addition of fire-fighting and emergency services et cetera, they can have their so-called competition game.

Any outfit that would give away the entire development rights for those lands for $1 million calls into question—I do not want to be unkind about this—its intelligence and foresightedness.

I have a number of other suspicions which you, Mr. Speaker, and all other Hon. Members of this House likely have. When the Minister keeps making these announcements, statements and bringing in legislation without really thinking it through, he leads us down the path we have been on since the days of one, Otto Lang.

The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West was one who was more vociferous, or as much as I was, about user pay, cost recovery, restraint, cut-back, use it or lose it. He was equally adamant in opposing that sort of concept put forward by the Liberal administration. Now we are getting the same damn thing in spades whether it is "the freedom to move White Paper", Operation 1990, or the revamping of the Department of Transport. Incidentally, I am not necessarily against that because there has been some revamping needed for quite a while, to our bitter experience in western Canada. It is not what the Government is going to do but how the Government is going to do it, who is the Government going to do it for, and who it is going to do it with.

I want to say that the whole concept of volume movement of people, goods and services in terms of transportation out of densely populated metropolitan areas has always been left to the movers and shakers who can make the biggest and the fastest bucks.

There has been inadequate, to put it mildly, consideration given to the users of those services and inadequate consideration given to small manufacturers, processors and transporters not only in the Quebec-Windsor corridor, but all over the country.

We continue to set up transportation facilities that discriminate against people because of where they happen to live or against the goods they happen to produce, process or manufacture. More particularly, the last to get consideration are ordinary people who have to, and I repeat "have to", use the service either directly or indirectly whether they like it or not. To put additional costs on taxpayers and an additional service that is neither wanted nor needed by the overwhelming majority of ordinary citizens, whether they be in Toronto or anywhere between Montreal, Toronto and Ottawa, an additional service which they cannot use, that is luxury or elitist or one that provides accommodation for corporate jets, surely does not meet the transportation needs of the ordinary producers, processors, manufacturers, shippers and travelling public.

Surely the Toronto Island Airport syndrome that has been around for a number of years has never been designed for the ordinary citizens who travel in and out of Toronto, most of whom are residents of or residents close to Toronto. I think the Minister brings in this Bill in a hurry without really having thought it all through or having thought about its ramifications.

There is nothing personal about it. I do not question the integrity or the honesty of the Toronto Harbour Commission. I have met with the commission. I was given a harbour commission necktie, which I think the commission wanted me to hang myself with. But I question the commission on the kind of priorities it follows, which are nothing more than the logical result of the priorities established by the Government of the day, its legislation, regulations and policies.

The Toronto Island Airport is in existence. It is suitable for private light aircraft. It creates only minimal disturbance for wildlife, migratory birds, the citizens who live there and the park located there.

Why do we need—and I wish someone would explain this to me—a multiplicity of transportation services to compete in a limited market in which there are already a dozen or more companies operating? I hate to give advice to my private enterprise friends across the way in the Liberal Party, but it seems to me a good private enterprise principle. If the market is divided into too many parts, those who move in to share in the gravy take turns going broke and the service deteriorates. The problem is that the Liberals and the Conservatives want a champagne operation in a beer market.

● (1420)

If people of Newfoundland, the people on the Prairies or those in the northern parts of our provinces were asked about the project, I am sure they would say: "What about our services?". There should be a priority to spread the services around in a reasonable manner so that Canadian citizens are not discriminated against because of where they happen to live or what they happen to produce, process or manufacture. It is not only airports; it is everything.

I hope the Government will take another look at this minor detail, relatively speaking, in its total transportation policy. Perhaps it could take another look at it and realize that it should reconsider its entire thrust.

I say to the President of the Privy Council in all sincerity that we will go full circle as we did during World War I and World War II when a regulatory body was brought in which did not serve consumers and the public in general well enough. Even though we will go in a full circle, a few years down the road this Government or another one will be faced with having to reinstate a regulatory agency which will hopefully be better than the one in the past. That will be the logical result.

I hope the Minister of State for Transport comes into the House to answer the questions I have raised. The Hon. Member for Spadina and I will not ask her about travelling; we will talk about transportation.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment at this stage in the debate on Bill C-76, an Act respecting the operation of the Toronto Island Airport by the Toronto Harbour Commissioners.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I must say I am not very pleased with the way this Bill was put before the House. I would say this was a hasty affair. In fact, first reading of the Bill took place on September 24, 1985, that is, last week, and this week, we get the Bill for second reading, when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is absent. What is so urgent about this Bill that it had to be considered today, when neither the Minister of Transport nor the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) are in the House to talk about the Bill and explain why it must be approved by the House? This department has two Ministers, one senior and one junior, and neither is here to explain why this Bill is so important. I regret this, Mr. Speaker, because we would have liked to have heard from the Minister what reasons motivated the Department to hand over to the Toronto Harbour Commissioners the operations of a small airport that is practically in the heart of the City of Toronto.

This morning, my hon. friend from Davenport (Mr. Caccia) spoke with great eloquence about the fears that many people in Toronto have and will continue to have about operations that might be a threat to the environment and the tranquillity of the people of Toronto, if jets are allowed to land and take off at this small airport in the very heart of the City of Toronto.

I feel that Bill C-76, and especially the section dealing with the powers of the Toronto Harbour Commissioners to make by-laws, is a very dangerous one. I was quite astonished when I read Section 7 of Bill C-76 for the first time.

Mr. Speaker, I think it shows a lack of responsibility on the part of the Minister of Transport of this country. It is not the first time the Minister has been willing to abdicate his responsibilities in the area of transportation in this country. In the newspapers this summer, we read that the Minister of Transport was getting ready to delegate to municipal authorities, or even to private entreprise, the management and operations of many of Canada's airports. I even met a mayor from the Maritimes, who had been approached on behalf of the Minister of Transport by officials from his department, and who had expressed some interest in taking over responsibility for a municipal airport and involving his council in the daily management of an airport, and who took back what he said only a few days later, saying: No thanks! "What the Minister of Transport is trying to do is give me a booby-trapped present, a present that would involve excessively large expenditures by the municipality, and I do not want any part of this new responsibility the Minister of Transport is so anxious to give me."

But what I am concerned about, Mr. Speaker, is that we know that the Minister of Transport, to please the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), is getting ready to cut spending in his department and to make very severe cuts in his department's budget, to help the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance reduce this country's deficit. Now, this desire on the part of the Minister of Transport to abdicate his responsibility for operating our Canadian airports has not been fully explained in this House. We still do not know where he wants to go nor the full extent of such decentralization of airport operations in Canada.

I am looking forward to hearing the Minister of Transport express clearly in the House or in parliamentary committee his views on this question. Is the Minister planning to hand all Canadian airport operations over to the private sector or to municipal authorities? Or will just the odd airport be involved, like this Maritime airport where in fact the Government was trying to pull a fast one on municipal authorities and have them assume the responsibilities of the Canadian Government and force them to pick up the rather expensive tab in some of the remote regions of Canada?

What has me concerned is that the Minister of Transport is prepared to hand over to local authorities an airport located in the heart of the City of Toronto. The consequences can be very serious. To put it another way, the Minister of Transport is prepared to give free rein to five commissioners, three appointed by local authorities and two by the Governor in Council, but in one case on the recommendation of the City of Toronto Board of Trade. In fact, four locally made appointments and only one under the responsibility of the Canadian Government.

● (1430)

It could mean that those people, anxious to turn this small airport in the middle of Toronto into a profitable operation, would have unlimited powers to authorize jet aircraft service some time in the future. I think that would be a tragedy, Mr. Speaker, because for a number of years the Government of Canada has been trying to protect the public from air and noise pollution in major Canadian cities. I remember that the previous Government took drastic measures to prevent aircraft from landing late at night at airports located close to major urban centres to protect the public from so much noise pollution. Special efforts have been made in recent years to build airports in the suburbs of major centres. We all know about the decision to build an international airport in Mirabel rather than leaving all airport operations in Dorval where they used to be. People may now have forgotten about it, but one of the major reasons of this decision was that the population of Dorval, Lachine and other towns in the vicinity complained about the noise of planes landing at night in Dorval. However, since we have set very strict requirements for air service, especially for jets, remarkable efforts have been made to protect the environment, as well as the peace and quiet of residents. Yet, in my opinion, Section 7 of Bill C-76 could annihilate all the efforts made in this regard in recent years. I find it unacceptable that this bill should give the five Harbour Commissioners in Toronto the exclusive responsibility to decide whether jets will land at the Toronto Island Airport.

I had a meeting today with the Ontario Minister of Municipal Affairs who explained to me how carefully this issue should be examined and how important it was for everyone involved, especially those who have already expressed their views in the Toronto area, to be heard.

Mr. Speaker, one of the first things that the new Progressive Conservative Government told us after the elections of September 4 was that they would consult the population and that their Government would be an open Government, one willing to hear the complaints of everyone. Yet, as we all know, since September 4, 1984, many major decisions affecting very important matters have been made by this Government without any consultation whatsoever. The Government tried to use the back-door to de-index Old Age Security pensions without any consultation, but the outcry of senior citizens forced the Government to back down.

I would not want Bill C-26 to be the cause of another useless reversal by the Conservative Government, but the fact is, Mr. Speaker, that in my opinion, the Minister of Transport did not consult the population before tabling this bill. It is wrong to give five Toronto Harbour Commissioners the full power to decide whether or not jets will be able to land at this airport. If there had been previous consultations, I am certain that the wording of this bill would be different. I therefore believe that this bill, instead of being rammed through the House, should be scrutinized and that public hearings should be held.

I believe that the committee to which this bill will be referred after it receives second reading should hold public briefings on this Bill in Toronto. It is unthinkable for a Government which calls itself a Government of consultation to ignore the grievances of the Ontario population and of groups which are interested in the development of the Toronto Islands, and for various organizations that want to protect the peace and quiet and quality of life of Toronto residents not to be heard and to be deprived of their right to speak and express their views during the consideration of this bill.

This Bill is therefore a source of concern for me, Mr. Speaker. If this is the first of a series of moves by the Minister of Transport to elude his responsibilities in the area of airport facilities in Canada, if this is the first of such moves by the Minister of Transport, involving as it does today the Toronto Island Airport, and if tomorrow it is going to be an airport in the Maritime Provinces, and the day after an airport in Quebec, and the next day an airport in Western Canada, certainly we should not allow the Minister of Transport to so elude his responsibilities one after the other. In my view, the Minister should make a statement in the House or appear before the Standing Committee on Transport, to indicate clearly his position on Canadian airports.

We know the Minister wants to save money, we know his hope is to transfer the operation of many airports to municipalities or private enterprise, but we do not know how and in what form. And above all we do not have a list of such airports which the Minister of Transport wants to get rid off. I submit this is not good enough. We should know where we are going. We cannot accept that the Minister should come here hurriedly on a Friday afternoon and introduce a piece of legislation, expecting us to approve it without knowing what will happen next week and which other airport will be turned over to strangers. And I say "strangers" because the Government of Canada has an important responsibility in the area of transportation in Canada. And, as my colleague for the New Democratic Party said earlier, I ask: How is this policy going to mesh with the rail transportation policy?

Some time ago, the Minister of Transport stated he wanted to invest very large sums of money to help rail transportation in Canada's major centres. Will not allowing a privileged operation of the Toronto Island Airport cause direct competition with VIA Rail, which intends to make its operations viable between Windsor, Toronto and Montreal? Does the Government really know where it is going?

I am asking that question, Mr. Speaker, because it is incumbent on the Minister of Transport to keep us informed on that. We want to know exactly whether there is an over-all plan, a master plan in the Department of Transport, or whether they are simply acting on impulse with day-to-day policies, and to top it all coming here in a hurry on a Friday afternoon to have us approve a piece of legislation that looks quite dangerous to me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions, comments? The Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Girard).

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): On the same subject, Mr. Speaker. Is the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) referring to the same concernes the people of Toronto voiced when the Liberal Party did nothing for the people of Pickering about the airport being built?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the very positive response of the previous Government to those citizens will be an example to be followed by this Tory Government. The Hon. Member should know that no airport was built in Pickering. There is no Pickering airport. Our Government had consultations and decided afterwards according to the wishes of the population not to build an airport in Pickering.

I just hope now that the people of Toronto who are worried about jets being allowed to land in downtown Toronto will be heard by the Tory Government.

[English]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity to speak on this Bill which would have the effect of establishing an airport on Toronto Island of a different sort from the one that exists now.

[Translation]

I will deal mainly with the problems as they are in Toronto, because I think that the Hon. Members are unaware of the conditions there.

[English]

The fact is that this airport site has been under discussion in Toronto for many years. It has been a matter of discussion, particularly between the City Council of Toronto and the harbour commission.

For a great many years, the harbour commission has been nominally responsible for conducting the business of the harbour. It has been winding up that business—for whatever reason, the harbour seems to be disappearing—and it is gradually converting itself into a real estate operation. As new buildings are built in Toronto, cheap fill is made available and the harbour commission has been busy for many decades filling the lake and selling the new land thereby created at next to no cost to the harbour commission. The harbour commission is going out of the shipping business, or at least the shipping business is certainly leaving Toronto, but the harbour commission does not seem to care if the use it makes of the old land and the new land created under its jurisdiction is a use that is desired by the citizens and residents of the City of Toronto.

Over the years, there have been many discussions between Toronto City Council, which appointed some of the members of the harbour commission, and the harbour commission itself about its accounts. The harbour commission was always complaining that the airport was losing money. This was an airport designed primarily for recreational and occasional light commercial use, not for regular commercial schedules. Hundreds of thousands of flights did go through that airport, but they were primarily recreational and light commercial flights.

When the commission complained it was losing money and had to expand in order to recoup its losses, it would never make available its accounts. The City Council could never find out why the Toronto Harbour Commission was always losing money when it was in the land selling business as well as in the transportation business.

There are other disputes surrounding that area. There have been disputes regarding the Toronto islands themselves. At one time there was a move afoot to clear out all the residents from the islands, and most of them were cleared off. A major regional park was developed and a good deal of water and land was left in a natural state. That is to say, marshes exist there and, as has been mentioned, birds nest there regularly and migratory birds make it a regular stop. There is a school on the island which takes in children from Toronto for a week at a time to study natural things which cannot be studies at any other school in the city.

The citizens of Toronto have been very actively concerned with that park. When it was found that there was sufficient parkland for the needs of those people of Metro Toronto who wanted to use it, the City of Toronto pushed to stop the demolition and removal of houses because it has been found that the park is better off for having a few hundred people living alongside it. Now we have an island community as well as a park in the area.

Across the water on the mainland, as the harbour commission has been moving the harbour business to the east end of the harbour where there is now a container park, the land along the waterfront has been made available for housing, commerce and a variety of uses other than heavy industry. Heavy industry is slowly being phased out of the central part of the waterfront. In fact, a number of residential buildings have already been built and occupied on the waterfront and there are many more planned. As well, recreational, commercial and very light industrial buildings are planned.

City Council has given a great deal of attention to planning the housing and other facilities that should go in the waterfront area so that there is a good balance. The City Council wants to make sure that there are housing opportunities for families who wish to live there. The present Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) who is responsible for housing thinks that it is a stupid idea to put family housing on the waterfront because the land is too expensive. However, City Council feels that the waterfront should be made available to all sorts of people. The council feels that the waterfront should be accessed from the land at many points and that the people who live in the waterfront area should be people of all incomes and of all family styles including singles and families. Through experience, that is the kind of neighbourhood that we have found works for Toronto.

There has been a continual debate with the harbour commission over City Council's plans for the waterfront. For that matter, there had been a continual debate with the previous federal Government which had other plans for the waterfront. It wanted to turn it into a much more expensive, aristocratic commercial and residential area. The pressure being exerted by Toronto City Council is with respect to keeping that waterfront, including the island and the Toronto Island Airport, as part of the City of Toronto. Therefore, it is disappointing to find that Bill C-76 was slipped in with the least possible notice and without any consultation with the City of Toronto.

When I raised the matter a few days ago with a member of Toronto City Council, who has been actively concerned with this issue for 12 or 13 years and who is one of the aldermen for Ward 9 in the Beaches, I found that Toronto City Council and Toronto planning staff had been given no information whatsoever about this Bill. That is just part of the wonderful record of consultation about which the Tory Government advertised a year ago. This Government continues to send out bales and bales of printed material to our offices which say absolutely nothing. When there is something to say with respect to a proposed law which will make basic changes to Toronto's airports, there is not a word, not one line of notice. There was not the slightest invitation to the members of Toronto City Council, or to the Planning Department of the City of Toronto, to comment on the Bill during its drafting. Nor was there an invitation extended to it to get in on the debate until this point.

I heartily support the suggestion of the three previous speakers that this matter should be referred not only to committee but that the committee should hold hearings in the City of Toronto. That is where the airport will make a difference, for better or worse.

Of course, it is always posssible to point out the benefits of an airport to those people who have the occasion, the leisure and the money to travel. What has to be pointed out, and what has been pointed out by Toronto City Council many times, is that there is a down side to the issue. For example, if jets are allowed, as this Bill tacitly permits, there will be a tremendous increase of noise over the mainland and the island. If jets come in, there will be a tremendous increase of surface traffic, of people and freight, going to and from the island. There will be a disruption of the present traffic on streets such as Front, York, University and Spadina. There will have to be a long construction process in regard to putting up the facilities necessary for a jet port and, no doubt, a new bridge or tunnel will have to be cosntructed, which will spell the end to the island park as the quiet place it is now. There is talk of putting a light rapid transit system along the waterfront and up Spadina. That plan is opposed by many people. However, perhaps it is part of someone else's plan. Perhaps it is part of someone's plan relating to the airport and the idea that there will be jets at the airport which, as I say, is hinted at in the Bill in an upside-down way. It is stated in the Bill that the commissioners may pass by-laws to prevent jets or other noisy planes. In other words, if the commissioners neglect to do that, there will be jets and noisy planes in violation of an agreement negotiated between City Council, the previous Government of Canada and the Toronto Harbour Commissioners. I will come to that agreement in a moment.

In addition to the disruption of the traffic, and in addition to that noise, there will be pressure to either stop any further residential buildings or even to do away with the residential buildings which are there on the mainland and on the island now. It will be argued that people have to move away to make more room for the jet planes. That would be the most serious violation of the spirit of the agreement which was negotiated four years ago between the Government of Canada and its harbour commission, which it controls, and the Toronto City Council.

In regard to the options for an airport, it has been pointed out by many people, including many people from the City of Toronto and many who sit on city council, that the money spent to upgrade the airport, and the money that will be spent in much greater quantity to upgrade it for a jet port, is needed to upgrade the rail system which runs east, west and north of Toronto. Rail fares are substantially lower than air fares. In fact, the travel time on the better trains between Toronto and Montreal are not that much greater than the STOL time. Of course, between Toronto and Ottawa that is a different story, which involves a train that often does not travel all the way. The train often stops in Kingston.

What is wanted by the people of Toronto is cheap and efficient rail transport, which could be available if the money were not diverted into an airport which, by its very nature, will be more expensive than rail transport and which will be used by only a few whose business or leisure concerns make that appropriate.

The Clerk of the Standing Committee on Transport is in receipt of a letter from Alderman Dale Martin, one of the aldermen in Ward 6 where this airport is located. Mr. Martin is very much concerned with the possibility of this Bill slipping through. He states, in part, in his letter:

> As you are no doubt aware, the issue of jet plane traffic and commercial air traffic into the Toronto Island Airport is a very controversial one. There has been considerable debate both at the Council level and between the Council and the Toronto Harbour Commissioners on both matters. The proposals to transfer jurisdiction for the regulation and operation of the Island Airport to the Toronto Harbour Commission is, in vew of the Harbour Commission's stated agreement to allowing jet aircraft to use the Island Airport, of some concern.

He points out in his letter that the change of the method of appointment of commissioners will have some effect toward the weakening of the sense of responsibility and answerability of the harbour commission members to the Toronto City Council. He concludes his letter thus:

> I would, therefore, respectfully submit that the Committee should hold public hearings into both of these matters, preferably in the City of Toronto prior to the Committee making its decision on the proposals.

Alderman Martin is referring, of course, to the Standing Committee on Transport which, in fact, will not be conducting these hearings. We now have in place a double system of committees which will mean twice as many meetings. There is no doubt that the meetings Alderman Martin seeks are meetings of the legislative committee with respect to this Bill. He is urging that those meetings be held in Toronto to give ample opportunity to members of the City Council, other municipalities which are concerned with the airport, the public, groups who use transportation other than air transportation, residents of the island and of the mainland, and representatives of the recreational industries around Toronto harbour and Toronto Island to speak to the committee in an effort to try to ensure that the agreement worked out with such long and arduous negotiation between City Council, the Government and its harbour commission is not just wiped out by one hastily and poorly considered Bill put through by Members of the House.

I know from my own experience, and other Hon. Members have probably had the same experience, that the new committee system is a problem. In effect, each committee has been split into two operations. Apparently, each operation must have as many meetings as the previous committee. In other words, there is almost a doubling of the work. In some cases, witnesses who give testimony before one committee will find it necessary to speak to the other half of the committee because the subject matters are different. We may have the same experience with the Committee on Transport, I don't know. It probably would have made much more sense had the Committee on Transport, prior to this Bill being introduced, held a meeting in Toronto to hear the views of Toronto people about the airport which is growing up within the City of Toronto. Had that been done, I think Bill C-76 would have been much better considered. Rather than saying the commissioners "may" make bylaws strictly prohibiting jet aircraft, I think it would have been better saying "there shall be no jet aircraft". Rather than making bylaws to prohbiit excessive noise, perhaps some kind of standard for noise should have been indicated, as has already been pointed out by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). The City of Toronto has engineers who have a great deal of experience in dealing with the noises of a modern city. They make sure that the noise level is not intolerable and at the same time the necessary operations of the city can continue. They know something about noise in Toronto.

● (1500)

Perhaps the Department of Transport knows something about noise as well. However, there should have been some agreement before this Bill was brought to Parliament about how the noise factor is going to be handled. I would also like to point out that it has been an unusual handling of the Bill. It has been slipped through with no notice. It was almost as if the Bill was to be given first reading last week before it was printed. It was not available to Hon. Members at the time first reading was asked for. There was no notice to the city which will be substantially affected one way or another by this Bill. There is no clarity as to whether there will be time for discussion. It may be that the committee will give the city only a couple of days in which to respond to this Bill. That is the way one committee I know of is operating. It wants to have everything wrapped up by the end of two weeks from now. That does not give City Council or the planning department a fair chance to respond. I ask that this Bill not only go to committee but that the committee hold hearings in Toronto and that the hearings be at a time which is practical and workable for the Toronto City Council in order to prepare its response. It should be given time to inquire of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) about the details which are not spelled out in order to have a fair assessment of what the impact of this law would be upon the 600,000 people who live in suburbs of Toronto and the two million who live in Metropolitan Toronto. I ask Hon. Members who do not live in Toronto to consider how they would feel if this were being dropped into the middle of the communities which each of them represents. I ask those Hon. Members to consider the necessity of giving Toronto time to consider this.

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member in his speech talked about not knowing about the agreement, but later on he referred to a letter written by council with respect to the Toronto Island Airport. I am curious to know on what he was basing his remarks.

I believe the noise by-law provided for in the Bill does have the protection about which the Hon. Member is so worried. It also specifies that no straight jets will be permitted. It is also in the agreement, to my understanding, that no bridges or tunnels will be permitted. That is already in the agreement. The agreement is a public document. It is not something which is being hidden as implied by the Hon. Member.

With respect to the appointment system, it is my understanding that the City of Toronto will be able to appoint three out of five members to the Commission. It also goes one step further in that the members will not just be appointed by the executive of the City Council but will go before the total of the council, the whole council itself, which will make it in line with the rest of the nominations which go to other boards. Therefore, the council has the protection there. This has been worked out with the City of Toronto and the Commission and it is not all one way as the Hon. Member would lead us to believe.

I think those were the points I wanted to cover. I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to comment on those points or should we just leave it at that?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, those are quite relevant points and more will be said about them when there are hearings in Toronto. The agreement may or may not be superseded by this legislation. It is not clear. I tried to make an inquiry as to the effects of this legislation on the agreement and I have not found here or in Toronto clear answers as to what can happen to the terms of that agreement once this legislation goes into effect.

With respect to the appointment of the commissioners, the Hon. Member is not quite accurate when he says they are appointed by the executive. They are nominated by the executive, according to the current system, and that nomination must be ratified by a vote of two thirds of council. In other words, no one becomes a commissioner unless he or she has the confidence of two thirds of council. This will reduce the base of the commissioner's support to possibly a bare majority of council which is more likely to leave the way open for pressure from the Toronto Harbour Commissioners to have the terms of that agreement renegotiated so as to allow a drainage or tunnel or jets.

The powers of expropriation, newly given to the Harbour commission, will enable it to put pressure on the city, either through the council or through other enterprises, public or private, as a bargaining lever for getting what it wants on the airport land. These things, I believe, have not been considered by council because when I made an inquiry I did not find anything with respect to it. I know it was discussed in the Committee on Transport a number of years ago, but I do not believe the terms of this Bill were discussed in any way which made it known to members of the Toronto City Council who are the most concerned.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), given his concern, is aware of the noise level created by jet aircraft using that airport? Is he aware that technology in that area has improved very significantly over the past years and that the jet aircraft using that airport, like the Challenger and other jets, have a noise level far below the parameters about which he is worried? Therefore, they would not infringe upon those parameters. The Hon. Member may have a legitimate concern about noise levels but if he draws the boundaries where he is, does he not realize that he is worried about the wrong thing?

Second, if Toronto is asking for this provision, does the Hon. Member not think that Toronto has a right to the services for which it is asking? Are we in a position to override what Toronto is asking for?

Mr. Heap: On the second point, it has not been shown that Toronto is asking for this Bill. It is not a matter of whether Toronto should be given what it is asking for, it is a matter of whether Toronto should get what certain narrow interests are asking for.

As to the noise of the jets, it is true that there are some quiet jets, and there may well be in future some quieter jets. That does not prove those will be the only ones which come into Toronto Airport. The objection to the jet service is not based solely on the question of noise, it is based also on the amount of room taken up by the new facilities which will have to be constructed, and on the amount of heavy traffic in people and freight which will be required to justify the expenditure on a jet service. It is much more than the question of noise.

• (1510)

If the Hon. Member is so sure that jets no longer provide any problem to a residential community, perhaps he is going to get some jets in his backyard, and I invite him to come to Toronto and explain to the people there the benefit of having a jet airport in your neighbourhood.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, just a few words concerning this particular Bill. I was inspired by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) who made his case so clearly a few moments ago.

I do not think anyone can deny that there should be a public hearing in Toronto on this particular request since there is some concern. If there is no concern, then what is wrong with having public hearings? Surely the Government of Canada should not be afraid of having people comment on this legislation. Surely it is not afraid of the environmentalists who will probably appear before the hearings and talk about the migratory birds—which this Government has abandonned through cuts in the Department of the Environment. Surely the Government of Canada is not afraid of that type of criticism.

There are obvious concerns regarding this Bill, Mr. Speaker, and what the Government is going to do. I have some concerns about the Government's policy regarding airports in Canada. Clause 3(1) of this Bill under the heading "Jurisdiction and Powers" is very interesting. It says:

The Commissioners shall have power to operate the Airport for and at the expense of the Commissioners or, where there is an agreement between the Commissioners and the Government of Canada with respect to the operation of the Airport by the Commissioners for the Government of Canada, for and at the expense of the Government of Canada during such period as is described in the agreement and on such terms and conditions as are specified in the agreement.

Clause 3(2) says:

Subsection (1) shall not be read or construed so as to prevent the Government of Canada from providing financial or other assistance to the Commissioners with respect to the operation of the Airport, whether or not there is an agreement between the Commissioners and the Government of Canada as described in that subsection.

That clause will perhaps become very common in future policies of this Government. We heard about that when the Hon. Member for Humber-Port-au-Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) brought the matter up during Question Period. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), under whose name this Bill was introduced, admitted that consultations were going on which would affect the policy of the Government with respect to someone other than the Government operating and financing airports. You can see where these two particular clauses are going to be used in the future by the Government to implement a policy whereby someone other than the Government will be asked to operate these small airports. Perhaps, in some cases, it will not just be small airports. This will be seen by the general public, correctly, to be a move by the Government to try and shift financial responsibility onto municipalities or local commissions in an effort to save money. In other words, it is very clear to the general public that you just cannot operate an airport in, say, Deer Lake or some part of British Columbia the way Transport Canada operates it at substantially less cost. The Minister should realize he cannot have it both ways.

In outlining this policy to the municipalities across this country, the Minister has really enacted a double standard. What he is saying is that the operating costs of the airport will be borne by the local commission or authority with the safety clause as I read it:

—shall not be read or construed so as to prevent the Government of Canada from providing financial or other assistance to the Commissioners with respect to the operation of the Airport—

However, there will certainly be no outright commitment of funds as far as the airport property is concerned. The Minister then turns around and says that as far as revenues associated with the operation of that airport are concerned, where a contact by a plane coming from the Pacific, the Atlantic or across the Northern Hemisphere is made with the air traffic control centre, there will be a charge. The airline pays an initial charge of $65 to contact air traffic control, and so on. However, the Minister is clearly saying that those revenues which currently go into the Consolidated Revenue Fund will remain as revenues to that fund and not be attributable to the operation of a particular airport. In other words, the airport will still have landing fees, yes, but it will not receive credit for these other fees collected on a daily basis by the Government. All we need look at in this regard are some of the cases which went through the Supreme Court of Canada. Over the past five, six or seven years there were some U.S. airlines which did not land here in Canada, did not use our facilities at all, but made an inital contact by radio with Canadian authorities and they were charged by the Government of Canada for that contact. These airlines, mostly in the United States, then claimed that they did not really owe this money to the Government of Canada. I stand to be corrected, but I believe it was Trans World and—well, I know for sure it was Trans World but two other U.S. airlines as well which owed the Government of Canada something like $15 million. That issue had to go to court and as I understand it, and I cannot be sued for anything I say in this Chamber, they eventually paid the money they owed to the Government and the people of Canada. I believe they paid that amount, but they certainly owed the $15 million or $16 million. When an air traffic controller or air radio operator in a small airport makes an initial contact with a foreign air carrier he collects $65 for the Government and taxpayers of Canada. The air radio operator collects $45 for the people of Canada. It is incredible to think that the Bill for three airlines from the United States amounted to $15 million or $16 million over a period of four years and had to be collected through the courts.

● (1520)

The Minister of Transport intends to transfer the control of airports to local authority commissions in Canada and municipalities. However, he says, "We will not take into account these revenues that are generated by air radio and air traffic control. You can only have the landing fees". The reason is that the money goes into the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the Government of Canada.

It is absolutely atrocious. In fact, for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane), when one checks the Consolidated Revenue Fund listed under Moncton, New Brunswick, one sees that the funds amount to more money than the cost of air traffic and air radio control. The same can be said for airports in British Columbia, northern Ontario and southern Canada which make initial contact.

For example, when we look at marine radio operators in Gander, Newfoundland, there is an incredible amount of money involved. The Minister of Transport is going to transfer those airports in Moncton, Gander and elsewhere in southern Ontario and western Canada to commissions but he will not give them the revenues that come into those airports as a result of the air traffic controller or air radio operator. It is absolutely shameful. In fact, it is quite conceivable that one could make $2 million or $3 million a year at some airports in Canada if one took the money from the Consolidated Revenue Fund and added it to the revenue of those airports.

If we look at the revenues for the airports listed in the Estimates, we see that it shows a deficit and that not one national or local airport is making any money at all. That is not true. Some of those airports are making significant amounts of money when one takes into account the revenues generated from the example I have given concerning air traffic controllers and air radio operators. In fact, I could never understand why the unions representing air radio operators and air traffic controllers do not use that argument in bargaining because they perform a service that actually makes money for the Government of Canada.

When these clauses are to be used in other Bills to be presented in the House in relation to airports in Canada that the Government wishes to transfer to commissions or municipalities, the Government should tell the truth and give the airports all of the revenue that they deserve. Before doing so, the people in each community, as the people in Toronto, should be allowed a free and open debate through public hearings. We certainly should not be doing anything that the people in those areas do not want.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to participate in this debate on Bill C-76. I must say that I stand with trepidation behind so distinguished a person as the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) who has exhibited but a smidgen of the experience he has accumulated over the years with regard to transport matters.

Having said that, I shall attempt to make my own humble contribution to this debate. Let me say at the outset that we see an immediate dilemma facing the Toronto islands when we read Bill C-76. Bill C-76, the Toronto Harbour Commissioners Act is an Act to replace the Toronto Harbour Commissioners Act, 1939 which is an Act to amend the Toronto Harbour Commissioners Act of 1911. Even within the title of the Bill, we find the first and most pronounced difficulty that Members on this side—certainly in the Liberal Party—have with this exercise.

There is no recognition of the fact that we are not simply talking about a small class B airport operation in Toronto. This concerns a series of islands that represent the most important and critical recreation facility for the people who live in one of the most densely populated cities in Canada. For the people of Toronto, Bill C-76 is not just a Bill dealing with how an airport should be run and who should make decisions about such things as the kind of aircraft allowed, the number and frequency with which they land. While they are concerned about that aspect, they also see the islands as the last great important recreation area for millions of people in a city of concrete, steel, glass and diminishing green spaces. It is the last great important recreation area for them and their children.

It is with great regret that every Member from every part of this country wil discover that not a single iota, not a comma, a jot or a word has been dedicated to the preservation and recognition of the environmentally sensitive nature of the area on the islands surrounding this airport facility.

Bill C-76 could most kindly be described as a housekeeping measure. It is important from time to time to update Acts that go back to 1939 and 1911. But surely circumstances have changes dramatically in the nearly 50 years since 1939 and surely circumstances have changed dramatically in the nearly 75 years since 1911 and that reality should be recognized. We in this Party believe that if the Minister is at all conscious of the importance of this facility to the people of Toronto he would agree to allow for public meetings in the City of Toronto so that those citizens may have input before this Bill receives final passage in the House.

It is not my objective to stop passage of the Bill or to suggest that there are not more efficient ways for the Harbour Commissioners to work. However, when we are talking about one of the last green spaces and most important recreational areas in that city, certainly there ought to be an opportunity for the people of Toronto to have a say and demand that the environmentally sensitive nature of that facility be recognized in this Bill and protected in law.

● (1530)

I suppose one of the good things about the way this airport has been run is that we have not seen large volume jet traffic cruising down into the heart and soul of the City of Toronto, splitting eardrums, wrecking the environment and abusing the sacred place. That has been a good thing. With this environment of deregulation, with this pronouncement by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) in his paper Freedom to Move, if a company is fit, able and qualified it can fly with unfettered competition, which will be the new law of the land in the airline industry as soon as he gets his legislation before the House in January. If I were concerned about the unique nature of this Toronto Island Airport, if I had not been concerned before, I would be terrified now.

What do we find in this Bill, Mr. Speaker? Talk about doublespeak. We have the Bill saying the following:

> Without restricting the generality of section 6, the Commissioners may, in a like manner and subject to the like conditions as in the case of by-laws made under The Toronto Harbour Commissioners' Act, 1911, make by-laws for the regulation and control of the airport and all persons engaged in the operation of Aircraft at the Airport, including by-laws prohibiting the landing or taking off of
> (a) jet-powered aircraft—

There is provision in the Bill to give the Commissioners the right to make by-laws to prohibit the taking off or landing of jet-powered aircraft at this environmentally sensitive location.

A clause that gives the commissioners—I am sure the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate is pondering this—the right to prohibit the taking off or landing of jet-powered aircraft at the airport implicitly also gives them the right to allow the landing or taking off of jet-powered aircraft at the airport. Rather than say we are going to give to these commissioners in this era of deregulation permission to allow jet aircraft to land or depart at that airport, which up until now they have not done, the Government with doublespeak decides to write it in, giving them permission to prohibit such a thing from happening. Implicitly the commission, if it wants, under this Bill, via Clause 7 under by-laws, theoretically, can allow jet service into that airport, can allow that sanctuary to be violated, can allow this green place, our migratory birds, this recreational complex, which has become the womb of those who care about God's green earth and a city surrounded by concrete, steel and glass, to be violated.

I come from Newfoundland, Mr. Speaker. In Newfoundland we do not have a lot of concrete, steel, glass and high-rises. We have a lot of green space, God's fresh air, forest and blue sky. We have a continuing compassion and empathy for those people who have been denied the abundance of God's green earth that has been given to us. There is a special sympathy and a deep anger and frustration that I feel and see because the kind of thing we can take for granted in Newfoundland is not even recognized in Bill C-76. It is a tragedy.

What else does this Bill fail to deal with? This Bill has given the commissioners, approved by the majority of the Toronto City Council, the ability to move in, to take land and property and expropriate it away from entities in this environmentally sensitive area. You may say that is quite normal, Mr. Speaker, that this kind of commission should have the power to expropriate. Perhaps it might be. But there is no power of appeal. The collective will and voice of six million people will not have an opportunity to be heard under the Expropriation Act. You ought to read the Bill, Sir. There is no power to appeal. That is the reason the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), who I think has earned a place of distinction in Canada as the most ardent and genuine—and those two words together are quite a testimony to the Member—environmentalist in this House, perhaps in this land, demands, before this Bill be given final reading in this Chamber that the Standing Committee on Transport be struck and a sub-committee go to Toronto to engage in public hearings so people in that city can be heard. The Minister himself and his officials should make themselves available for public meetings in the City of Toronto.

I do not think the message has got through. I do not think the Canadian public is yet aware that after January when the Minister brings in the legislation, he wants the Transport Committee to study his paper "Freedom to Move" in two months, which is an impossible task. It took the Minister and his officials 15 months to write the paper "Freedom to Move". With all the resources of Transport Canada, the resources of the Government of Canada, the resources in the Budget to hire specialists, consultants and airplanes to fly him all over the land, it took 15 months to write the paper. Yet the Minister advised us last week that he will give the Transport Committee two months to study it. He wants a report by November 30. Here I see the calendar in front of me stating that it is October 4. This House has not even provided a reference yet for that committee to study the Bill.

We have not even begun to look at the implications of deregulation, yet we are supposed to report by November 30. Something is being rushed through for some reason. I suspect that once Canadians fully appreciate what unfettered frre enterprise in this proposed deregulation package of the Minister will mean, there will be an outcry from one end of the country to the other. Canadians know that we are not a branch plant of the United States and that if something works in the United States, it will not necessarily work in Canada. Canadians know we are a nation of 25 million people spread over a huge beautiful geographic land mass and that you cannot impose an American formula on a Canadian problem and expect the problem to go away.

Deregulation in the United States has meant that 350 communities have had reduced air service, 105 communities have lost air service entirely. It has also meant that environmentally sensitive areas in the heart of major urban centres, like Toronto Island Airport, have been changed forever because the pressure of an unregulated air industry will result—mark my words—in companies seeking to extend the facilities on Toronto Island and will seek to land jet aircraft right in the heart of that environmentally sensitive area.

Every Canadian whether living in British Columbia or Cape St. George, the tip of the Port au Port peninsula on the west coast of Newfoundland, or in the riding of the Member sitting opposite, of Burin-St. George where the great and beautiful community of Rose Blanche or Port aux Basques, Grey River, François or Ramea, ought to stand and make his or her voice heard to ensure that his or her right to see something that belongs to all of us, something that is part of the character and part of the riches afforded to us as Canadians that exist downtown in Toronto not be violated by a Government insensitive to the historic concern and historic level of Torontonians for this environmental space on their doorsteps in the heart of Canada's largest city.

It is no secret that many Newfoundlanders have been persuaded with great difficulty over the decades to leave their native Newfoundland and to lend their talents to the development of Toronto. Despite their reluctance to leave Newfoundland and to provide their skills to the great Province of Ontario, particularly to the great City of Toronto, on occasion they have done so. Perhaps that city would not be so great without the expertise of Newfoundlanders. I have had the pleasure of talking with fellow Newfoundlanders living in the City of Toronto. They make a contribution to the City of Toronto and to its province. When I ask them how they survive in that big, concrete jungle, or how they keep their sanity now that they were removed from salt water and fresh air, without exception they say: "I take a stroll along the shores of Toronto Island for a time of peace and solitude downtown where the environment still reigns supreme in a modern jungle; that is what helps me maintain my sanity".

It was in recalling those conversations that I decided to rise in my place this Friday afternoon to beg, urge and demand of the Minister that the people of Toronto, including my expatriate colleagues from Newfoundland, have an opportunity to be heard before the Bill receives its final reading in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hicks: Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to thank the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) for setting the record straight about the great City of Toronto. Earlier today the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) made some scathing, unfortunate, deflammatory comments about that city. I did not have the opportunity to rise on that occasion because comments and questions were not allowed. However, the record has been set straight by the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe who used the word "sacred" in his comments. That was more than I had even hoped for, but I appreciated it very much. Also he used the words "great City of Toronto" and "great Province of Ontario". Again I thank him for that.

I was born and raised in Toronto. I am very proud of that city. It is the greatest and safest city in North America. I assure the Hon. Member that his concerns about the people of Toronto, including transplanted people from the Province of Newfoundland, are appreciated very much. I do not think their interests will be jeopardized because much thought has gone into the formulation of this Bill. If the birds of the island and the people of the City of Toronto were to be jeopardized, the Bill would not have been put forward.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that I did not hear the Hon. Member's last few comments. I do not know whether he asked a question at the end of his remarks, as I was distracted for a moment. In any event, in case there was any doubt in his mind, the Liberal Party has always believed in the City of Toronto. That is why we in the Liberal Party have done so much over the years to contribute to its growth.

We in this Party look to the future. Actually it is similar to what is said in Newfoundland—if one builds a wharf and builds it strong, it will withstand the biggest storm. When that hurricane of last week took a look at Newfoundland wharves, it went the other way. The same is true with Liberals and their approach to Toronto. We have worked hard for Toronto. We believe in Toronto. We know that Toronto, given the chance soon, will indicate that it believes in us.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. It deals with the Government's decision to move ahead on the possibility of jet aircraft on Toronto Island. We have heard much talk around the Chamber today about the wonderful City of Toronto. We also know of the great struggle on the part of the people of Toronto to keep Toronto Island as a haven for people who want to get away from the city. These people hop on the ferry to take part in Caribana or any number of activities which—and I must admit that Toronto is a suburb of Hamilton—make Toronto a great place within the Province of Ontario.

Does the Hon. Member feel that the Conservative Members of Toronto in fact believe that jet aircraft should be allowed at the Toronto Island Airport without any public hearings, without any response from the people of Toronto or without any chance for comment, not only by the island residents who fought long and hard to save their own community, but also by literally hundreds of thousands if not millions of people who use Toronto Island as a summer refuge? Does the Hon. Member think that those people should be consulted before we allow jet aircraft to take over what is currently a beautiful recreational oasis in the Toronto area?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to attempt to answer that question. Of course it is a very difficult one. I am a humble fellow from Newfoundland who took the trouble to research and spend many hours of preparation to understand the impact of the Bill on Toronto. While I can give the Hon. Member my views on its impact, I have great difficulty in giving her the views of Conservative Members from Toronto.

Ms. Copps: Because we have not heard from them.

Mr. Tobin: That is right. In the interests of solidarity between the constituents of Toronto and their Conservative Members, I will send them a copy of my comments. I hope it will help them focus on and appreciate this environmentally beautiful, rare area in this part of Canada. I hope they will stand and be heard. Once they understand the feelings of their constituents, they will ensure that this area is preserved, protected and enhanced as an environmentally sensitive area for future generations of Canadians.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, has the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) ever landed at the Toronto Island Airport?

Mr. Tobin: No, Mr. Speaker. There are many unique and profound experiences which I have not yet had. One of them is landing at Toronto Island Airport. I am saving it for a particularly black and depressing time when I really need my spirits lifted.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member wants to talk out this Bill until four o'clock so that we cannot get on to dealing with Canagrex.

Mr. Gauthier: No.

Mr. Dick: Oh, you want it to pass right now?

Ms. Copps: What are you, the House Leader?

Mr. Dick: Sometimes; more than I can say for you. At any rate, is the Hon. Member aware that there is a lease on the land which prohibits the use of jet aircraft?

Mr. Tobin: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that. However, I am also aware that for some reason the Toronto Harbour Commissioners are given the power to prohibit jet aircraft from taking off or landing at that airport according to Clause 7 of the Bill.

Mr. Dick: I understand that.

Mr. Tobin: I would say that that is a double-edged sword. If they have the power to prohibit jet aircraft from landing and taking off, they now implicitly have the power to permit it. That is something new being introduced in the Bill and it brings into question whether or not that airport will be maintained in its current status. When the deregulatory pressure begins to be felt, when airlines are suddenly competing for every buck, and when people are demanding an opportunity for jet aircraft to land at and take off from that airport, that new power, along with the ability to expropriate with no right of appeal, brings into question whether we will see some pressure to expand the facility and do away with that womb of environmental beauty in the heart of Toronto. It also brings into question whether we will see an attempt by airline companies to start flying jet aircraft into that airport. Those are my concerns.

I am well aware of the history of the airport and of that piece of land. I say that it has been a proper one. Whether it be under a Liberal administration, a Conservative administration or an NDP administration, it is irrelevant, because Mother Nature is non-partisan; she does not care. Migratory birds do not vote. If the Government allows that airport to be expanded and allows jet aircraft to land and take off from that airport, all I can say is that that Party is not for the birds.

● (1550)

Mr. Langdon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to briefly come to the defence of my colleage from Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) who after all gave Toronto the greatest possible compliment, that somebody from Saskatchewan could give, when he said that he wanted to plant it so that it would look like a wheat field. That is not an insult, Mr. Speaker. If he had wanted to insult he could have quoted people from Windsor who talk about a travel contest there in which they offer as first prize a week in Toronto and as second prize two weeks in Toronto.

I want however to finish with my question which is, in view of my limited experience with Newfoundland—

Mr. Dick: You have been lucky so far.

Mr. Langdon: I want to ask the Hon. Member how he is going to manage, after these paeons of praise for this marvellous City of Toronto, to return successfully to his constituency and survive.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, because we were the last into this country, in 1949, and because we came in of our own volition, after two votes, Newfoundlanders are not Canadians by accident of geography, or accidents of history. They are Canadian by choice. I say this sincerely. After having chosen this country, not having been forced into it by accident of history or geography but having made the choice to be a Canadian, despite his deep pride and often heard pride in his own province, in his people, in his culture and in his history, no one will ever find a Newfoundlander who will hesitate to stand up and say that he is proud of every part of this country, every foot between the Grand Banks of Newfoundland and Victoria. I have no trouble going back to Newfoundland and telling them that on their behalf I spoke of our pride in this great country, every damned part of it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is over. Resuming debate.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to speak not only in defence of the City of Toronto, but to issue a challenge because many of those on the government side of the House know that we in the Liberal Party were somewhat reduced in number after the last federal election. Our Toronto caucus numbers six. Some of us have had experience working in Toronto as Members of the Legislature and have known and loved and continue to love the City of Toronto. There are also Members, like the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), who have taken the time on behalf of the Liberal caucus under the extremely able and effective leadership of Charles Caccia to explore the issue of the Toronto Island Airport Bill which is before us today. What I cannot understand, and perhaps what some of the Government Members could elucidate to me and to the people of Canada, is where are their voices on this important issue of the literally dozens of Conservative Members who have been elected from the City of Toronto? Where are their voices on an issue which could change the very nature, the very direction and the very quality of life on Toronto Island? Where are the voices from downtown Toronto? Who is speaking up for the residents of the Toronto Island area? I can tell the Government Assistant House Leader that I have landed at the airport on Toronto Island; I have flown from the airport on Toronto Island and I for one would object vehemently if jets were allowed to land at that airport without any public consultation and if further expropriations were allowed to be carried out without any recourse or any public appeal.

Environmental concerns and the issue of quality of life were addressed very effectively by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) but we have not heard from the Conservatives. We have not heard from the dozens of Conservative Members in the City of Toronto. In fact, the responsibility to defend the interests of the people of Toronto is being placed in the hands of the Liberal Members from Hamilton, Newfoundland and from other areas across the country because we do not hear for the Toronto Members.

I can understand why the Toronto Members did not want to talk about "tunagate". I can understand why the Toronto Members did not want to talk about the Canadian Commercial Bank. After all, their Government had been caught in billion dollar booboos which were going to cost the taxpayers of Canada dearly. However, on the issue of the Toronto Island Airport we have a question, a Bill, an amendment which should bear the scrutiny and the discussion of every Toronto member of the Conservative Party but, as usual, they have been muzzled. They are sitting on the sidelines; they cannot enter the debate; they have nothing to say on an issue of extreme and urgent public importance within the City of Toronto. Therefore it falls upon us, and upon myself from the City of Hamilton. When I called Toronto a suburb of Hamilton I was not joking. Our football team is better. We are going to make it to the Grey Cup. Unfortunately our Toronto cohorts are not going to have the same privilege. We hope, and I think all of us are hoping and praying, that the City of Toronto will make it when it comes to the World Series. We are looking for the big number two to come down some time this weekend, Mr. Speaker. However, we also expect that when it comes to issues that involve a major change in public policy for airports which have a national, local and provincial significance that we would have at the very least expected some kind of contribution, some statement, some appeal by the Members from the City of Toronto to say to the Government, "We don't want expropriation without appeal. We don't want jet airplanes without public input. We want to give the people of Toronto a chance to have a say in this extremely major change in public policy as it deals with the Toronto Island Airport and in particular we want the beauty and the environment and the tranquility of Toronto Island saved for future generations".

As usual, Mr. Speaker, the Members have been muzzled. The Progressive Conservative Government Members came to Ottawa in droves, 211 they numbered on September 4, and are rapidly falling like flies as Ministers go. They go down. The former Minister of Fisheries is muzzled; the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) and the Party Leader are muzzled; the Toronto Members are muzzled. Mr. Speaker, where are the Conservatives? Where are those 211 Members who were sent to Ottawa to defend the interests of the people of Toronto? Why is it that we in the Liberal Party, small though we may be in number, and I, the Member for Hamilton East, are here in this House defending the interests of the people of the City of Toronto when not one Toronto Progressive Conservative MP has stood up to speak on this Bill?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Where are your Toronto Members?

Ms. Copps: There is a question to the people of Canada. Where are the Toronto Conservatives?

An Hon. Member: Bring on the Tories.

Ms. Copps: We may be small in number but we will continue to defend their interests and we challenge those Conservatives to get off their backsides, to get into the House of Commons and start talking about the real issues.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Hnatyshyn, (for the Minister of Transport), seconded by Mr. Beatty, moves that Bill C-76, an Act respecting the operation of the Toronto Island Airport by the Toronto Harbour Commissioners, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being four o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[Translation]

TEXTILES

ADVISABILITY OF GOVERNMENT SUPPORT FOR INDUSTRY

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond) moved that

In the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of supporting the textile industry by:

1. using the provisions of section 19 of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade to impose a global quota on the importation of textiles; and

2. amending section 11 of the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act to extend the program to layoffs which represent 10 per cent of the employees in a particular branch or division of a company and not only to those layoffs involving at least 10 per cent or 50 employees of the total establishment.

He said: Mr. Speaker, thank you for putting my motion before the House. My purpose is to increase the Government's awareness of the situation in the textile and garment industry.

Mr. Speaker, this is an industry that I know and support, and I know what I am talking about because I spent thirteen years there. I also would like to take this opportunity to say a few words about my beautiful part of the country. The Saint-François River flows across the entire breadth of the riding of Drummond, which is located a few kilometers south of the St. Lawrence River. It is situated between Montreal and Quebec City, if one takes the Trans-Canada Highway, and between Trois-Rivières and Sherbrooke if one is travelling on Highway 55. The location of Drummond between these four cities puts it right in Quebec's heartland.

The riding has a population of 75,000, spread over 28 municipalities and an area of 1,675 square kilometers.

The majority of the population is francophone, but the cultural, social and economic contribution of various ethnic groups in the region is still significant.

An industrial profile of Drummond would not be complete without a reference to the textile industry, because in the past, the industry's contribution to the economy of the riding was a very important one. Nevertheless, companies such as Celanese, Dominion Textile, Consoltex, Textile Dionne, Teinture Élite and several other enterprises in Drummondville continue to provide a living for the people in this riding.

The total number of jobs that depend on the textile and garment industry in the riding exceeds 5,000, which shows that the industry is still responsible for the major part of the region's economy.

To illustrate the importance of an industry like Celanese in the Drummondville area, I can inform Hon. Members that this compagny generates a payroll of $25 million a year, that it pays $500,000 in taxes to the City of Drummondville, that it contributes over $100,000 per year through its budget for social activities, and that furthermore, it has just spent over one million dollars converting its heating plant to natural gas. It has also just invested another million in two silos for storing chemical products used in manufacturing yarns.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the motion before the House is to provide some solutions to the problems of the textile and garment industry and to ensure its protection and survival. As we all know, jobs are being threatened by imports from the semi-industrialized countries of the Pacific Rim.

As evidence of this I would mention the numerous plant closures such as Wabasso last March and, quite recently, Dominion Textile's announcement concerning the shutdown of two plants in Beauharnois and Valleyfield, with the resulting loss of 850 jobs. According to company spokesmen, the main reason for closing those plants was the ever growing clothing imports from low wage countries.

Mr. Speaker, the number of imported clothing units was 160 million in 1981 as compared with 244 million last year. In fact, on a per capita basis we let in twice as many imports as the United States do.

It is obvious that rising imports far exceed Canada's economic growth. It is an increase of 45 per cent, whereas over the past five years the market has expanded by only 1.5 per cent a year, and it is now at the 540 million unit level.

Higher imports in the last ten years have led to 35,000 fewer jobs in Canada. In addition those imports now account for more than 60 per cent of our domestic market. American textile industries have an advantage because most manufacturing operations in foreign countries are done in American branch plants or by companies under their control in developing countries. The net result is that they improve their financial situation through profits from foreign operations.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a few examples of countries which did not hesitate to come to the rescue of their industries. Over the past 15 years the Japanese have intervened directly in that sector to prevent the decline of their industries, and their annual textile and clothing imports have gone up by only 2 per cent. Think about it, Mr. Speaker, 2 per cent in Japan against a 45 per cent increase in four years in Canada. Many Japanese textile manufacturers have moved their operations to Southeast Asia where labour is cheap. Those manufacturers can then ship their exports through other Asian countries. Mr. Speaker, I would like to give you more examples about the Japanese. Here, from Global Textile Industries Figure 48, Annex 7: preferential financing at interest rates of 2.6 to 7.6 per cent for ten years; unit production costs financed by the national Government to the tune of 50 to 70 per cent, not to mention deferred payments, grants and what have you. And then Figure 52 reveals that Japanese companies have set up shop in various countries of Western Asia, such as Taiwan where they have 47 plants or industries, Hong Kong with 18, Korea with 47, Thailand with 32, and so on down the list.

There is also the European Economic Community, or EEC, also called the Common Market, which includes 13 European countries. Their per capita textile imports have gone down from $11.80 in 1980 to $8.30 in 1984 and their clothing imports from $22.30 in 1980 to $18.40 in 1984. Incidentally, during the Multifibre Arrangements III negotiations, the EEC asked for more restrictions on imports. They proposed a 1 per cent increase and advised the European Commissioner that they would take unilateral action if other countries refused their proposals. Both the industries and the unions agreed to ask for better protection against low cost suppliers. The employers and the unions found a 6 per cent rate increase for imports excessive in view of an estimated yearly market increase of between 1 and 1.5 per cent and demanded that the rate of increase for imports be lower than the rate of increase of the market to allow European businesses to make some slight progress. The unions also suggested that the EEC fine the member countries which would authorize imports in excess of their quotas and that unused parts of quotas no longer be carried over or transferred.

Imports from the main suppliers were to decrease by 10 percent over five years. The mechanism to prevent sudden increases and designed to stop an excessive inflow of imports, whatever the level of quotas, was agreed to at the same time as arrangements for an anti-fraud clause.

• (1610)

Mr. Speaker, this information comes from an article published in the autumn 1983 issue of the periodical International Organization.

Certain countries try to get around the rules of the MFA. For instance, Hong Kong buys and sells used quotas from other countries. Another means is to use a third country which does not have any quota agreement. For example, Mr. Speaker, the allocation cost for selling a quota for a pair of jeans was 55 per cent of the allocation price of these same jeans.

We can see that most textile and clothing producing countries provide assistance of various types to their own industries.

Through the CIRB, the federal Government has granted subsidies of $108 million and $70 million respectively to the textile and clothing industries. During the last 10 years, the textile industry has invested $2.4 billion to modernize its equipment. Incidentally, the federal Members of Parliament had an opportunity last August to visit the textile, clothing and shoe industries in Quebec and Ontario during a tour organized by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens).

Like many EEC countries and semi-industrialized or developing countries, Canada must develop a federal textile and clothing policy as quickly as possile to determine the rules of the game. Industries in these sectors in Canada are not asking for any subsidies. They want the Government to reduce the quotas and to give them a larger share of the domestic market.

Let me remind the House that the clothing industry is a very fragmented and labour-intensive industry and that between 24 and 40 cents out of every dollar produced by the sales of a clothing item go back to the worker. I think it would be difficult to find many other industrial sectors where the cost of creating one job is so low. On the other hand, the textile industry is very complex and capital-intensive. It costs at least $300,000 to create one job in this industry. Manpower costs represent only 15 percent of total costs. In addition, the western petro-chemical industry is dependent on the textile industry for $100 million in sales each year. This industry provides jobs for 75,100 people and the clothing industry gives employment to 99,000 workers in Canada. Also, it is estimated that 275,000 additional jobs in Canada are indirectly related to these industries.

Our industries have trouble competing against countries where wages are low and workers receive an hourly wage of between 21 cents and $1.50 an hour. This is why, Mr. Speaker, I am asking the Government to state its policies as soon as possible. The Multifibre Agreement was extended in 1977, and again in 1981. Each time, Sections 3 and 4 remained unchanged. In the 1977 Protocol extending the agreement, the parties thereto however allowed the possibility of jointly agreeing on reasonable temporary adjustments on specific points in given cases. The 1981 Protocol was worded in a more liberal way still, and it increased the extent to which importing countries could restrain importats under Sections 3 and 4.

The 1981 Protocol allowed importing countries to align their levels of importation on the domestic consumption growth rate, in order to determine market disruptions. Further, the Protocol enabled the parties to reach an understanding based on a level of positive growth lower than that provided for in Schedule B of the MFA in exceptional cases where there was a recurrence or intensification of market disruption. It also authorized any mutually acceptable agreement for reasons of flexibility in cases where the generous use of quotas with a very high level of restrictions represents an important share of the market. Finally, the 1981 Protocol provided for an "anti-increase" mechanism. It left the contracting parties quite free to negotiate agreements to resolve important difficulties arising from the repeated under-utilization of significant levels of restrictions that threaten to result in serious and real damage.

To that end, I have thought out a few scenarios. A 200 million unit per year quota would enable us to create 6,500 jobs more than in 1984. A 175 million unit quota would enable us to create 17,900 jobs in the textile and clothing industries.

Mr. Speaker, according to the Canadian textile industry, their share of the Canadian market has declined from 43 per cent in 1981 to 37 per cent in 1984. This is a good enough reason to invoke Section XIX of the GATT Agreement. They recognize that the increase in importation depresses activity in the primary textile industries which supply raw materials to the clothing industry. Further, it should be noted that the textile industry and the clothing industry are dependent on each other as it was emphasized in a study made in 1985 by the Quebec Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Therefore, it is my view that the Government should impose an overall quota on imports from all sources under Section 19 of the GATT Agreement. Such action is self-explanatory, because when we negotiated the agreements we were not as tough as we should have been and our legitimate rights, as described in the Multifibre Agreement, have not been adequatly defended by the previous administration.

The use of Section 19 would abrogate the 21 bilateral agreements signed by Canada with fabric and clothing exporting countries. Those agreements would be replaced by an overall ceiling on clothing imports from all sources, whether from under-developed countries, newly industrialized nations or nations with state controlled or market-oriented economies.

The Government has to make sure that existing and future quota agreements are administered and negotiated by taking advantage of all the international rights Canada has under the Multifibre Agreement.

Such instruments are subject to the international rules grouped in the various GATT codes. Their legitimate use has nothing to do with protectionism. Within its jurisdiction and under the international agreements that were ratified, the Government has the right and the responsibility to do so.

This Government must develop a policy designed to provide leadership, to create a framework and conditions for development aimed at promoting a climate of confidence in which the industry will invest, and undertake or continue the manufacturing of competitive products.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few words concerning the second part of the motion, which is designed to amend the legislation on manpower adjustment benefits, Chapter 89 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. In fact, Section 11(c), as now worded, is prejudicial in my view to certain workers in the textiles, clothing and shoe industries.

As it now stands, one of the requirements before employees are certified is that the number of employees in the plant has been reduced through lay-offs by at least 10 per cent or, if the reduction is lower than 10 per cent, by at least 50 employees.

Mr. Speaker, this is unfair for some of the workers because generally it is a branch or a department of the plant rather than the whole plant that is closed. This means that some workers cannot be registered under that legislation. We should not forget that this legislation comes under the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) and its purpose is to protect older workers who have been permanently laid off in sectors of operations designated by the federal Government. They do not qualify for unemployment insurance benefits and they have no prospect of getting a job. Those benefits to be considered as a continuation of income are a last resort adjustment for older workers who on account of their age and their qualifications do not qualify for the manpower employment program and find it very difficult to cope with the new conditions.

The program is of valuable assistance to those who are more deeply affected by the shutdown of plants and the loss of jobs. It is an answer to some rather difficult conditions and helps people who have no other alternative. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, it does not apply to millions of people since, according to the most recent report from October 1st to December 31st, 1984, there were 198 applications for certification of which 150 only were approved and 48 were disallowed mainly for the above-mentioned reason.

Mr. Speaker, this amendment seems to me to be important and I ask the Government to act quickly since the shutdown of other plants in the textile, clothing and footwear industries has been announced.

• (1620)

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have listened very carefully to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault). At the outset, as he launched into a description of his constituency, I started wondering if he was delivering the Address in reply to the Throne Speech. But I soon came to realize that in describing his constituency, he was in fact outlining how important the textile industry was in that area.

The textile industry, Mr. Speaker, is also very important for the constituency I represent. Now, in the western part of that constituency, as you get closer to the National Capital, textile industry nothing to write home about, but in the eastern part of my constituency, in cities like Alexandria, Hawkesbury, l'Original and others, that industry does play an important part. In the towns of Hawkesbury and Alexandria, and other town as well, we have textile plants such as Amoco, Consoltex, Fibre World, White Sister, Canadian Uniforms, Canadian Buttons, Texturon, Wonder Bra, and a few others—those manufacturers are going to be angry at me for not mentioning their names, but it was not intentional—we have a lot of those plants in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, and they bear heavily on the employment picture for my constituents.

The footwear industry also plays an important part in my constituency, and I feel it would be appropriate for me to dwell on that textile related subject for a minute or two this afternoon.

As everyone knows, footwear quotas will be lifted in a few weeks' time, on the 30th of November, and as the deadline looms, the Secretary of States for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and his counterpart the Minister for International Trade still have made no statement to the House with respect to the footwear industry. This is most inappropriate as that industry employs 350 people in the Glengarry-Prescott-Russell constituency. Over the last few days, I have received 131 letters from employees asking for my help so that they don't get laid off as a result of this Conservative Government's carelessness, and I wish to take this opportunity to raise the matter in the House, as it is of utmost importance for my constituents.

Having said that, I will get back to the file on the textile industry itself, before you call me to order, Mr. Speaker, since the file on the footwear industry is similar but not quite the same. Let us say that ... Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interrupt those Conservative Members who are saying goodbye to everybody, but I would like to continue with my remarks.

In my riding, aside from the 350 jobs in the footwear industry which I have already mentioned, there are some 1,500 or 1,600 jobs in the textile industry. These too are very important for my constituents.

Mr. Speaker, I have here some letters from employees of textile companies in my riding who are asking my help so that they, too, can keep their jobs, which they feel are threatened by this Progressive Conservative Government's inaction. But I am pleased to see that some Progressive Conservative Members in this House share the view that the Government should do something to protect the jobs of the textile workers; I am pleased as well to know that the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) is among those who think that the Government should move and help people in his riding and within the whole industry.

[English]

Last summer during the election campaign, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Party made a number of promises which I believe I may have raised with you once or twice previously. More particularly, it made a number of promises to the textile workers. I would like to read some of them to you, Mr. Speaker. The first promise was to "promote fair trade but not free trade". Would you believe that the Conservatives said that last summer, Mr. Speaker? Second, "promote stability through the rigorous enforcement of our existing international rights and obligations including, if necessary, the establishment of global quotas and a controlled increase of import volumes". That is a promise made by the Conservatives last summer. I know that the Hon. Member for Dollar (Mr. Weiner), who is listening attentively, has taken note of that particular promise which was made in Sherbrooke, would you believe, Mr. Speaker, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), then Leader of the Conservative Party? I am sure that other Hon. Members might want to speak on this subject in the future and say whether or not they agree with promise No. 2 made by the Leader of the Conservative Party last summer. The third promise made by the Conservative Party, and again I read from the "Book of Promises", "review Canada's existing obligations in order to ascertain whether modifications should be pursued". A fourth promise was, "promote specialization in those areas with the best prospects for long-term economic viability". The fifth promise was, "promote the nationalization of Canadian production through the use of duty remission schemes so that Canadian producers can work with low-cost foreign producers, combining Canadian expertise in fashion, marketing, and financial techniques with foreign products in pursuit of other markets in the world". That is a long-winded promise which I have read on a number of occasions and I am still not quite able to decipher what exactly it means except that it seems to contradict promise No. 2. Of course, that would not be the first time that Conservative promises were not consistent. The only consistency in Conservative promises has been the fact that they have been so inconsistent.

Promise No. 6 was to "promote the auctioning of import quotas in order to provide funds for the modernization of the industry". Promise No. 7 was to "decrease the use of grants". I wonder how one would reconcile that with promise No. 4. However, Tories can sometimes rationalize these things. Promise No. 8 was to "increase the use of tax incentives to reward success, including the broadening of the tax definition of research and development". I remind you of promise No. 7, Mr. Speaker, which I read a few seconds ago. You can see how consistent that is. The ninth promise was to "promote the greater partipation by representatives of the industry in the formulation of textile and apparel policy". I will stop right here, Mr. Speaker, because I think it is important to discuss promise No. 9. As you recall, that promise talks about consultation with industry. I want to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, a letter written in December, 1984, by the Moderator of the Canadian Textile Labour-Management Committee of the Industrial Relations Department of the University of Laval in Quebec City to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). The Reverend pointed out that he had been trying to get a meeting with the Minister for six months and never could meet him. The promise was that the Conservative Party would consult with the textile industry. Yet, six months later, they did not have the time to meet with the people who had a lot to do with that industry. I think this could be interpreted by some as being inconsistent.

• (1630)

Promise No. 10 was to promote diversification of the economic base in those areas which are highly dependent on these industries. I represent a riding which is highly dependent on that industry. Since the Conservatives have been in power, they have been cutting off grants and cancelling program after program which could assist the constituency I represent in diversifying into other businesses. Not that there is anything wrong with those people or those businesses now being operated, but of course we want to diversify our economic base. We have been trying to do exactly what promise No. 10 says we are supposed to do but the Conservatives cut off the money. It was very, very difficult to live with that promise, Mr. Speaker.

Promise No. 11 was to create training programs to assist workers in adapting to technological change in the textile sector.

That is the list of promises made by the Conservative Party regarding the textile and apparel industry. This, of course, comes from a campaign document released in Sherbrooke last year. When I decided to run for office, Mr. Speaker, an elderly gentleman said to me: "When you run for office, you should ask yourself what happens in case you win." Not what happens if you lose, Mr. Speaker. If you lose, you do not have to deliver on the campaign promises. What you are supposed to remember is what happens in case you win. Maybe the Tories should have remembered that during the last election campaign. Maybe they should have asked themselves what if they have to deliver on these promises. How are they going to do it? Will they be able to deliver on all these promises, one contradicting the other? Will they be able to increase grants and reduce grants to the same industry at the same time? Highly unlikely, Mr. Speaker. Will they be able to deliver on a set of campaign promises costing $20 billion, 113 of which were to spend more money, five to spend less, two to increase revenues, 26 to decrease revenues? Maybe they should have asked themselves the question: What happens in case I win? Had they done that, they would not be in the mess they are in today a little over a year after the election. Were there an election today they would be turfed out at the polls.

Some Hon. Members: Dream on.

Mr. Boudria: I cannot wait for the next round of public polls and we will see what they have to say about the resignations and the scandal-a-day Tories sitting across the way.

Some Hon. Members: Textiles!

Mr. Boudria: The team across the way say "next time".

Some Hon. Members: No, textiles.

Mr. Boudria: Maybe next time they will come across the floor. In the meantime, I am going to keep talking about the importance of keeping their promises to the textile workers in my riding. Maybe the Tories do not want to talk about that. They are embarrassed and I do not blame them. I do not blame the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) for being embarrassed.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: The Hon. Member will start again with the same old story, he will name each and everyone of us, in order to point out if we are here or not. He will give us a lot of nonsense. Why does he not stick to the subject? We are dealing with a very important matter that my colleague has fully explained. Then, let him stick to the subject rather than starting to mention our presence.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is not a point of order as far as the Chair is concerned. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: As you said, Mr. Speaker, it is not a point of order nor is it a good point. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) will nonetheless have an opportunity later on to talk about the textile workers of her riding and say how she intends to give her constituents the textile jobs that were promised by the Progressive Conservative Party. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I have every intention of talking about textile, about the commitments this Government made to the people in my riding and elsewhere who work in that field.

Mr. Speaker, we know that over 80,000 people earn their living in the textile and footwear industry and that it is very important not only in the riding of Drummond, but also here in Ontario, in the riding of Glengarry-Russell-Prescott as well as in other ridings, although I think I have the greatest number of jobs in mine, with the exception perhaps of the city of Toronto, in Ontario.

We are told there are 44,000 workers in the textile industry in Quebec, close to 38,000 in Ontario, about 1,000 in Manitoba and in the rest of Canada, approximately 7,000 for a total of about 90,000 jobs of which 42 per cent in the province I have the honour and privilege of representing in the House of Commons, the province of Ontario. So, as you can see, Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious and important matter for the constituents of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

In conclusion, very briefly, I ask the Government to fulfil the promises he made to the textile and footwear workers. It will have trouble keeping them all because they contradict one another but it should at least act on those that will provide permanent jobs to my constituents and guarantee them their right to work. The people of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell are not to blame for the fact we have a Progressive Conservative government. Rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that I will keep on asking and demanding assistance from this Government for the textile, clothing and footwear industry of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell and elsewhere.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Price).

Mr. Joe Price (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Cassidy: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I was on my feet and it is normally the custom that all three Parties have the opportunity to participate in Private Members' hour. Is that no longer the custom or may I have the right to speak?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member will know, of course, that the order of speaking in the House is entirely within the discretion of the Speaker. At this time, during Private Members' hour, I do not believe that Parties are recognized by the Speaker, but rather private members. However, for the Hon. Member's benefit, it was the intention of the Chair to recognize him after the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's.

Mr. Cassidy: With great respect, what you are saying—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Cassidy: —is that it is now going to be the policy of the Chair to prevent Members of the NDP from participating in Private Members' hour.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Cassidy: That is effectively the situation you are creating, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The ruling has been made by the Chair.

Mr. Cassidy: Point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The ruling has been made by the Chair, which is that the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's will speak. If the Hon. Member wishes time to speak, it may be in his interest to allow the Hon. Member to start his speech.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Speaker is surely aware that Members have a right to speak for 20 minutes and that will take us to five o'clock. It seems to me, therefore, that it denies opportunities for any Members of this Party to participate and debate on this important subject, a subject which affects a large number of working people and consumers. As well, as spokesperson on the subject for my Party, I had prepared to participate. I find myself in some difficulty. I do not wish to challenge your ruling—

• (1640)

An Hon. Member: Sit down, then.

Mr. Cassidy: If the Hon. Member would agree to speak for 10 minutes and let me speak for 10 minutes, then I would be happy to sit down at this point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to allow the Hon. Member to start his speech.

Mr. Cassidy: I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. Price: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is there a quorum?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, the Chair believes that there is a quorum.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order, I intend and my Party intends to raise this with the Speaker of the House of Commons, since you were standing in on his behalf. I think it is a serious matter and that an injustice is being done, not just to Members of my Party but also to the millions of Canadians who supported our Party in the election campaign.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: If in fact the Chair is abusing its power—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: —to stifle debate from my Party in this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Member for Burin-St.-George's (Mr. Price) has the floor.

Mr. Cassidy: That is exactly what is happening, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Price: Mr. Speaker, I was getting rather apprehensive that perhaps I would not get a chance to speak. The Member seemed to be prepared to carry on for some time.

I should also remind the Member that there are people in my riding who would like to hear me make representations on their behalf. As well, I would like to make some comments for the record on behalf of the Department that I represent, the Department of Labour.

I want to begin by thanking and commending the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) for bringing to the floor of the House an issue that is indeed important to him and I know very important to his constituents. I come from a riding, Burin-St. George's on the south coast of Newfoundland, that has seen many years of great hardship and many years of great anxiety as a result of the difficulties of a very fragile fishing industry. I can sympathize with my hon. friend and I can sympathize with the problems in the textile industry that he is so concerned about. I can assure him that I, as a Member of the House, do indeed understand his comments and concerns.

I am sure that he would agree that the adjustment issues that he refers to are not new only to his riding but indeed are relevant to all of Canada. What we do have to ensure is that our capacity to grow and prosper as a nation goes hand in hand with our ability to manage the attendant changes with care and sensitivity.

As you know, we are living through a difficult transition period brought about by many factors, including international competition and rapid technological change. The challenge is to manage this process in a way to ensure that the benefits and costs of economic adjustment are shared in a fair and equitable manner. In this regard, the Federal Labour Adjustment Benefits Program plays an important role in assisting those who are most adversely affected by plant closures and job loss, namely older workers with a long employment history in a designated industry and with little prospect of re-employment.

The Labour Adjustment Benefits Program provides payments to assist older workers who have been laid off as a result of import competition, industrial restructuring or severe economic disruption in a designated industry and/or region. The program provides last resort income maintenance benefits and is targeted to older workers who have exhausted their unemployment insurance entitlement and are generally not well suited to other adjustment programs. They are not readily employable in other industries or occupations because of their age and because their skills are usually specific to the industry from which they have been laid off.

In order to appreciate the intent of the program and its limitations, I would like to provide some background for the record. Labour Canada has maintained an adjustment assistance program since 1972. The program, initially referred to as the Adjustment Assistance Benefits Program, provided benefits to qualified individuals who have been laid off from the textile and clothing industries. This program was extended to workers in the footwear and tanning industries in 1978. Also in 1978, a total review of all Government adjustment measures was undertaken, resulting in the establishment of the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program, more commonly known as ILAP, in 1981.

The Labour Adjustment Benefits Act, promulgated on May 1, 1982, was created to include labour adjustment benefits as part of the ILAP program and to provide for a continuation of benefits from the four general designated industries; textiles, clothing, footwear and tanning. Other industries can be designated either generally or regionally, but to date, only the above-mentioned four industries have been designated generally.

The Act also provided for the establishment of a Labour Adjustment Review Board; the five-person tripartite board which certifies persons, whose lay-offs meet the criteria under the Act, as being eligible to apply to Employment and Immigration for benefits. The following are criteria for certification: the lay-off must have taken place in a designated industry and/or region within the time frame stipulated by the relevant order under the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act; the lay-offs must have been part of a workforce reduction of 10 per cent or 50 employees, which ever is less, within a 12 month period; the workforce reduction must have been caused by one or more of the economic factors causing the designation to be created.

The board's secretariat receives applications, investigates the circumstances and reports and makes recommendations to the board which then renders certification decisions. Qualification of certified individuals to receive Labour Adjustment Benefits is carried out by Employment and Immigration upon receipt of applications from the secretariat.

I think at this point it would be useful to note the conditions under which certified persons may receive benefits. They must be Canadian citizens resident in Canada. They must have worked 1,000 hours in each of 10 of the last 15 years in the relevant designated industry. They must be at least 54 years old at the time of the lay-off and not more than 65 years old. In cases of extreme financial hardship, a person may also qualify if their age and years of service at the time of lay-off add up to 80 years. Their unemployment insurance entitlement must be exhausted and they must have no present prospect of employment or have accepted employment that pays less than the average weekly insurable earnings before lay-off.

Benefits are payable until age 65 and are approximately equal to the unemployment insurance benefits. Benefits are administered by Employment and Immigration, which is then reimbursed by Labour Canada. Policy and designation recommendations are developed by the policy program of Labour Canada. In the case of regional designations, Labour Canada works in close conjunction with Employment and Immigration.

Hon. Members may recall that on April 10, 1984, the Cabinet approved the creation of a modified version of the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program. This program, administered jointly by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and Labour Canada, serves as a means of providing emergency assistance to communities experiencing severe economic difficulties of a structural nature resulting in serious disruption of employment.

As the financial resources of the modified Industry and Labour Adjustment Program are limited only the most severely affected communities, which meet the strict criteria of the program can be designated.

● (1650)

The modified ILAP provides two levels of assistance. Workers laid off in communities designated Level 1 are eligible for supplementary job creation measures, training and mobility assistance and CEIC portable wage subsidies. Designation at Level 2 of the program are made in accordance with the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act. In addition to CEIC adjustment measures, older workers laid off in designated industries in communities designated Level 2 are eligible for labour adjustment benefits.

A detailed review of the economic situation of some 240 communities throughout Canada have been made in connection with the modified ILAP. Following this review, the Cabinet on June 21, 1984, announced nine designations of communities most severely affected by massive and permanent lay-offs. Five of these nine designations were at Level 1 of the modified ILAP. These five Level 1 designations were to communities in Newfoundland, Quebec and British Columbia. Three additional designations have subsequently been made, one in Nova Scotia, one other in Newfoundland and an additional one in British Columbia.

Four communities have been designated Level 2 under the modified ILAP. These four communities are located in eastern Quebec and Labrador, and are totally dependent on the iron ore and asbestos industries.

All workers laid off in these designated communities can benefit from CEIC active adjustment measures. In addition to these measures, as I stated, older workers laid off by regional key industries designated under the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act can apply for labour adjustment benefits if they meet the criteria for eligibility.

As far as certification is concerned, the Labour Adjustment Review Board is authorized to grant certification where certain conditions, as outlined in Section 2 of the Act, have been met.

First, the employee must have been laid off. The legislation stipulates that the lay-offs must have taken place in order for certification to be granted. Although lay-offs may be scheduled for a specific date, for example, in a plant closing, the Labour Adjustment Review Board is not empowered to grant certification nor to provide assessments as to whether certification will be granted in advance of the lay-offs.

Second, the establishment where the lay-offs took place must be part of a designated industry. The determination of whether a company is part of a designated industry is made by the Labour Adjustment Review Board, taking into account the effective dates of designation for the industry.

In the case of general designations, that is the textile, clothing, footwear and tanning industries, there are limitations on the components of the industries which are considered to be designated. These limitations are based on industry definitions, and in this context the board generally refers to the standard industrial classification codes describing the major industry groupings.

In the case of regional designations, the specific industries included are based on Cabinet decisions. Again the board refers to the applicable standard industrial classification codes. Industries can be designated retroactively, Mr. Speaker, and lay-offs which have taken place since the retroactive date of designation may be considered for certification. All existing general designations are retroactive to May 1. 1978.

To determine that the lay-off is within a designated industry and that it meets other requirements of the Act, the secretariat of the Labour Adjustment Review Board carries out a detailed review of the case on behalf of the Board. Notwithstanding that an industry is no longer designated, an employee may be certified provided that the lay-off took place while the industry was designated.

The third condition for granting certification requires that the number of employees in the establishment must have been reduced as a result of lay-offs in any 12 month period by at least 10 per cent or 50 employees, whichever is less. This criterion is designed to ensure that the intent of the legislation is maintained, that is, to offer adjustment assistance where major lay-offs have taken place and where such lay-offs are of a non-cyclical nature.

Since a reduction in the number of employees as a result of lay-offs is a necessary condition for certification, laid-off employees who have been replaced will not be eligible for certification. In cases where lay-offs are taking place but, because of recalls and new hiring, the employee level in a company is stable or rising, certification cannot be granted.

Should lay-offs in the order of 10 per cent take place during part of a 12 month period, additional employees laid off in the remainder of that 12 month period can be certified only where a further reduction in the number of employees is evident and where the other requirements of certification have been met. In considering lay-offs which have taken place during a second 12 month period, it is necessary to establish that the full requirements for certification have been met in relation to the new period. Reduction in the number of employees in an establishment due to retirements, dismissals or resignations cannot be taken into account when determining whether a reduction of 10 per cent or 50 employees has taken place.

The last condition for certification, which I want to mention, is that the lay-offs must have resulted from the economic adjustment which caused the industry to be designated. In the case of general designations, economic adjustment must be non-cyclical and must be the result of import competition or industrial restructuring including technological change pursuant to a policy or program of the Government of Canada.

In the case of regional designations, economic adjustment refers to the serious non-cyclical downturn in the industry causing economic disruption in the region and serious loss of employment in the region.

In conclusion, I would like to emphasize that the Government's financial commitment, while limited, has increased significantly for this fiscal year. For 1985-86 the estimated funds are $20 million more than the amount in 1984-85, almost double the amount allocated last year. This is due to a significant increase in lay-offs in the textile and clothing industries in the Province of Quebec, and in response to the needs of workers in particular industries that have been designated on a regional basis.

I should also like to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member for Drummond that this amount represents the largest allocation of funds in Labour Canada's 1985-86 estimates. That is a very significant point indeed.

I want to assure the Hon. Member that his representations have been heard, are being listened to and are appreciated. As I have mentioned before, I have an industry, unfortunately an industry not designated under the Act, namely the fishing industry, and several references have been made in the House over the last couple of days with respect to that industry. Very few people have indicated that although the fishing industry has not been designated under the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act, Governments—this Government in particular—have responded to the needs of the industry by injecting additional new equity into a company called FBI of Newfoundland. As a result, that industry should now be in a position not only to stabilize but for the first time in five years show a profit. That is a Government responding to the needs of people.

I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Drummond for his representations and for giving me an opportunity to address it on behalf of the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair would like to advise the House that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) will have the floor the next time this matter is debated in the House.

It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

She said: Mr. Speaker, the legislation the Government is proposing intends to compensate uninsured depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank as well as the CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation if this institution cannot resolve liquidity and other problems resulting from the failure of the CCB, and to arrange the appointment of new advisers.

Before I address the Bill more fully I want to make perfectly clear that it is not the Government's intention to set a precedent in compensating uninsured depositors in our financial institutions. We are compensating these depositors because the situation facing these two banks reflects unique and particular circumstances.

Although these two banks accounted for less than 1 per cent of the Canadian banking system they provided important support to economic activity in western Canada at a very critical time. Depositors who stayed with these banks shared the Government's view that regional financial institutions can play an important role in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as I said last week, the problems experienced by the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank reflect a set of unique and particular circumstances. The Canadian banking system is and remains one of the most stable in the world. In fact, as I indicated earlier, the assets of these two institutions represent less than 1 per cent of the total assets of the Canadian banking system.

Both banks had their beginnings in Western Canada in the middle of the seventies. Both were located in a region that was experiencing rapid economic growth as a result of the energy boom, and both grew substantially during this period.

[English]

The economic recovery in western Canada is still fragile. The boom came in the late 1970s for western Canada, and Alberta in particular was a vibrant and buoyant market-place. It was in that environment that the CCB and the Northland were born and prospered. The bubble burst in the early 1980s when world energy market conditions and the National Energy Program depressed the economy of Alberta. Through the depression those institutions, and those who kept deposits with them, helped cushion the serious economic impact of the recession on western Canadians.

My colleagues and I consider this legislation a matter of the highest priority. It is a high priority because of the importance that we on this side of the House place on easing of financial and economic problems of municipalities, small businesses, charitable organizations, credit unions, labour unions, hospitals, colleges and particularly individual Canadians. These problems are a direct result of the collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank.

The major elements of this Bill will come as no surprise to this House. They have been the subject of some considerable discussion over the past few weeks. The circumstances surrounding both the Canadian Commercial and the Northland Bank have been put forward to this House on many occasions and most recently in a statement made here last Monday.

Let me say again that the action our Government took last March regarding the CCB was on our Government's recognition of regional financial institutions and also in recognition of the importance of the CCB to the western economy. We also based our decision on the international circumstances last March.

Our Government examined all the options at that time and in consultation with two provinces and six chartered banks we went forward with the support package. These facts are well known to the House.

Let me now also outline the key elements of this legislation so we can all speak from the same point of reference on the matter.

First, this Bill would authorize the Government to compensate all the depositors of the two banks who maintained deposits in excess of the $60,000 amount protected through the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Second, the Government is proposing that the uninsured depositors covered under the legislation be paid in two installments. The first installment would be paid as quickly as possible following Royal Assent to this Bill and would represent 60 per cent of the total amount payable to each depositor. The balance, 40 per cent of the outstanding deposits, would be paid on April 1, 1986 through a post-dated cheque which each depositor will receive with the initial payment once the legislation has been adopted by Parliament and given Royal Assent.

As Hon. Members may be aware, the payments in respect of insured depositors are made by the CDIC under the CDIC Act. The payment of the uninsured portion of the deposits is to be made under Bill C-79 following the coming into force of the Act.

Accordingly, all that is now required is that the Act be passed by Parliament. The ruling of the Manitoba court has no effect on the process of compensating all depositors.

• (1110)

Depositors will receive full compensation for amounts on deposit as of September 1 but they will receive no interest between September 1 and the date of actual payment. This decision reflects a careful balance between the Government's desire to compensate uninsured depositors in this particular case and the need to ensure continuing market discipline with respect to financial institutions.

This Bill also provides for the offsetting of deposits where possible. In such situations, depositors who have outstanding loans with the banks may have their cash payments reduced by the amount of those loans. This action is normal practice in a liquidation.

That is the essence of the Bill, Mr. Speaker. I would urge Hon. Members to give the elements of this Bill their full consideration. However, I would also urge them to do so expeditiously.

There will be many questions relating to the circumstances surrounding the demise of the CCB and the Northland Bank. I would like to remind all Members that those circumstances surrounding the failure of both banks are currently being examined by Mr. Justice Willard Estey. Therefore, today we are talking about the imperative to help those organizations and individuals across the country who have been adversely affected by the closure of the two banks. The debate today should focus on the elements of this legislation. I ask Hon. Member opposite to put the needs and concerns of Canadians above partisan politics so that this House can meet those needs in a fair and expeditious manner.

Over the past few weeks, Members of the House have voiced a number of concerns with respect to the legislation the Government has proposed. I want to address those concerns because I believe that once concerns like these are laid to rest, we can move quickly to approve the Bill.

Hon. Members opposite have demanded that the Government release the names of the depositors who will be compensated under the terms of the legislation. I have said on many occasions that the privacy of individuals must be protected and that the laws of this country do not appear to permit the publication of this information.

Mr. Cassidy: They do in a bankruptcy.

Mrs. McDougall: To violate the confidentiality of the Bank Act would put all depositors in Canadian institutions at peril should any Government in future wish to get access to and publish that data.

Mr. Cassidy: Not true. This is a unique situation.

Mrs. McDougall: That is the law, and despite the fact that the broad based nature of the depositors would probably help demonstrate that the Government is doing the right thing, the Government must respect that law and principle.

I promised the House that I would provide a detailed breakdown of the classification of uninsured depositors which should meet all reasonable requirements for information on the nature and amounts of the payments that will be made. Let me state now those categories of depositors and the value of their uninsured deposits. I shall table in the House as soon as the French version is available a list of the categories and the amounts of deposits as of August 31, 1985. In the meantime, let me tell the House of some of the highlights of that document which we expect to have available shortly.

With regard to the Canadian Commercial Bank, credit unions and credit union centrals and $67,840,043; municipalities, $41,059,682; school boards, schools and post-secondary institutions, $3,102,928; religious organizations, $2,267,241; charitable organizations, $1,499,763; labour unions, $6,510,-856; and hospitals, $5,192,054.

With regard to the Northland Bank, uninsured depositors included credit unions and credit union centrals to the extent of $61,921,647; municipalities, $40,707,740; school boards, schools and post-secondary institutions, $216,461; religious organizations, $4,970,452; charitable organizations, $13,172,-093; labour unions, $331,496; and hospitals, $4,716,434.

• (1115)

Mr. Cassidy: What about the other $600 million?

Mrs. McDougall: It will be in the document, Michael.

Mr. Cassidy: How much will foreign banks receive? What about Peter Pocklington, is he on the list?

Mrs. McDougall: The total amount of these uninsured deposits, the amount being requested under the terms of this legislation, is $414 million in the case of the Northland Bank and $532 million in the case of the Canadian Commercial Bank. The numbers which I have just quoted suggest $946 million for uninsured deposits in the two institutions. However, the liquidator anticipates about $140 million in set-offs, which would result in the Government compensating uninsured depositors for approximately $806 million. As some set-offs are likely to be subject to further legal consideration, the $875 million appropriation figure in the Bill assumes the exercising of only one-half of the anticipated set-offs. Therefore, I believe that the $875 million figure is an overestimation of what will be required.

I would like to emphasize as well that the appropriation of $875 million requested in the Bill will not be the final cost to the Government or the taxpayer. That cost will be lower by the amount of recoveries from liquidation of the assets of the two banks.

The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation has already begun payments to insure depositors of the CCB and is starting to make payments to insured depositors of the Northland Bank. Insured deposits for the CCB and the Northland together total $275 million and $318 million respectively. These funds will be obtained by borrowings by the CDIC which will eventually be recovered, with interest, through recoveries from the liquidation and through premium payments made by financial institutions which are members of the CDIC.

Once this legislation has been approved by the House, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation will act as the agent for the Government of Canada in connection with payments on uninsured deposits. Application forms will be mailed as quickly as possible by the CDIC to all those eligible under the Bill. Depositors may complete these forms and return them to the CDIC which will then issue the two cheques. Depositors will have until April 1, 1986 to file such applications to the CDIC.

I have described some of the classifications of depositors who will be paid under the Bill. These are deposits within the meaning of the definition of "deposits" in the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. This includes demand deposits, term deposits and U.S. dollar accounts.

The public policy underlying the Bill applies only to depositors—those who have entrusted their money to the banks. Other creditors are more analogous to creditors in a conventional bankruptcy and will rely on the liquidation process. The legislation does not include shareholders of common or preferred shares or debentures, nor does it include participants in the support package which was arranged for the Canadian Commercial Bank last March.

As well, the funds advanced by the Bank of Canada to both the CCB and the Northland are not covered by this legislation. Those advances, some $1.3 billion to the CCB and $500 million to the Northland, are secured by assets of the banks. The six chartered banks and the two provincial Governments which participated in the support package will have, together with the Government of Canada, the right to claim a pro rata share of the proceeds of the realization of the assets of the two banks once the affairs have been wound down. As holders of subordinated debt, the Governments of Canada, Alberta and B.C. will not receive a share from the realization of the CCB's assets.

Under the terms of this Bill, the depositors, in return for compensation of their uninsured deposits, will assign to the Government all their uninsured rights to a share in the assets of the banks following liquidation proceedings. In effect, the Government of Canada will become the major uninsured depositor.

I would like to be able to advise the House of the final cost to the Government of this compensation package. At this stage, though, it is too early to determine what final recoveries might be. I do not want to tie the hands of the liquidators by engaging in speculation in the House today. Every effort is being made, with the co-operation of the liquidators and the other creditors, to ensure that the sale of the assets of the two banks is undertaken in an orderly manner in order to obtain a maximum value from them.

The decision to provide compensation to the uninsured depositors was not a decision which we made without careful attention to all the factors relating to this issue. I believe very strongly in the importance of the deposit insurance system and in the necessity for investors to act responsibly in choosing where to place their money. So the support we are proposing today should not be interpreted as blanket insurance that similar support would be forthcoming in the event that a financial institution faces difficulties in the future. That is why we will move to increase the powers of the federal regulatory authorities and to change the CDIC Act so that the deposit insurance system will have the financial resources necessary to protect Canadian depositors of modest means.

• (1120)

Over the period since the completion of the CCB support arrangement, the Inspector General of Banks has supplemented the resources of his office through the engagement of individuals outside of the Public Service on a contract basis. Following implementation of the support agreement, two bankers were engaged as special representatives to supervise the arrangement.

Subsequently, three recently retired bankers were engaged to conduct an examination of the CCB loan portfolio. Another retired banker was engaged to assist with the review of the Northland portfolio.

Currently, the Inspector General of Banks is finalizing arrangements to bring under contract a number of active and retired bankers to assist in the regular program of bank inspections now in progress. All this followed, Mr. Speaker, a 30 per cent increase in the Inspector General's staff over the course of last year.

At the same time, the Inspector General will be seeking the authority to increase the permanent resources of his office. I have already indicated, Mr. Speaker, that the Government intends to introduce legislation very shortly to increase substantially the power and authority of our regulators. We will continue to do our best as supervisors, regulators and policy makers to ensure that our financial institutions meet the highest possible standards. These changes will ensure that we have the best regulatory system in the world.

As I said at the outset, Mr. Speaker, we are proposing to compensate the uninsured depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank because the situation of those banks reflects unique factors. These depositors stayed with the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank as an expression of confidence in the viability of regional financial institutions which we were all supporting. When I say "we", Mr. Speaker, I include the major chartered banks and two provincial Governments in addition to the federal Government.

We are paying these depositors as well because of the serious economic impact which would result, especially in western Canada, from forcing municipalities, credit unions, charities and small businesses, to absorb the total loss of all their deposits in excess of the $60,000 limit insured by the CDIC.

I have already indicated to the House some of the classifications of the depositors, and all Hon. Members can imagine the impact on these organizations and the individuals they serve and employ if the Government were not taking the action proposed today. Many of them would be in serious financial difficulties. We are talking about the domino effect which insolvencies have with lay-offs, permanent loss of jobs and all of the problems which go with business failures of that sort.

The plight of some municipalities which invested their surplus cash in the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank has been well documented in the media. In this part of the country we have heard of the situation facing Kanata which has been forced to defer many of its capital projects and provide only essential services until the status of its deposit has been resolved. Kanata is not the only municipality in this situation. What were we to do in the circumstances, Mr. Speaker? Should this House be telling those municipalities, "Sorry. Tough luck. Raise your property taxes or go to your provincial Government"? Surely we have a responsibility to them, having participated in the March support arrangements.

Hon. Members opposite are openly critical of the decision of the Government to include the deposits of foreign banks as part of the terms of this Bill. However, it would not be a responsible action on the part of this Government to protect only certain kinds of depositors. What kind of signals would we send to the international financial community if we were to take that kind of action? I suggest that any refusal to indemnify foreign depositors would have been seen as a major breach of trust, both at home and abroad, and our banking system would become truly insular if we paid off Canadian depositors while not paying off non-Canadians.

Therefore, the Government had to weigh the impact and the criticism from the other side of the House which it might receive because of our decision to pay all uninsured depositors against the widespread difficulties which would occur across the system had there not been such indemnification.

I mentioned at the beginning that it is the Government's hope that the House will move speedily to pass this Bill through all stages so that it can send out the cheques as soon as possible. The organizations and individuals affected by this problem are very concerned. Over the past few weeks, the CDIC has received over 400 calls a day from people who want to know what their status is and when they might expect to receive their compensation. Many people have written directly to me because they or their companies are facing serious problems.

Let me give a few examples. A small construction company which put its partial payment for a job into a 30-day certificate is now in the position of being unable to pay its workers and sub-contractors and will have to start laying off employees. I have also received a letter from a small western Canadian business which employe 25 individuals. The uncertainty around the status of the company's deposits and the timing of the payments means again that the business must start laying off its employees. I mentioned the plight of the Municipality of Kanata, and it is not the only municipality caught in these circumstances.

I could go on and talk about calls from individual Canadians to many Members of the House and to the CDIC. These are ordinary businesses, ordinary organizations employing ordinary Canadians and engaged in standard investment practices. They deserve the support of the House and its assistance and they need speedy consideration of this Bill so that they can get their lives and their companies back to financial stability again.

In conclusion, let me repeat what I said in the House in May when all Members agreed to the speedy passage of similar legislation with respect to Pioneer Trust. As a Government, we are committed to the responsible management of the affairs of this country. That is a heavy responsibility and one that we take seriously. It is one that carries with it the necessity of making difficult and complex decisions. We have made those decisions and we have concluded that our responsibilities include the protection of depositiors faced with the unique and unusual circumstances surrounding the fate of the Canadian Commercial and the Northland Banks.

I would like to thank Members opposite in advance for their co-operation in this matter. Believe me when I say that they are not helping the Government, they are helping thousands of Canadians who have been caught up in this regrettable matter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it was just a Monday morning speech, but that was not a very spirited defence of this legislation. I can understand why.

As a matter of fact, I am surprised that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is not in his place today either to present the Bill or to hear his colleague, the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). He has general responsibility for the banking system and for the financial system in the country. It has been delegated, to a certain extent, to the Minister of State for Finance. However, a billion dollars is a billion dollars and the Minister of Finance should have been here to address the issue and hold himself accountable to Parliament for that issue.

In March, the Government put together a bail-out for the Canadian Commercial Bank. Those of us on this side of the House were skeptical but we—

Mr. Cassidy: But you supported it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We supported it and we agreed with the Government on the basis of ironclad solutions that the bail-out would be successful and render the bank solvent and viable again. We supported the Bill on the basis of that assurance.

We were told that it was a temporary problem that was a result of a few bad management decisions. Upon review of the history of that bank, it turns out that it was more than a few bad management decisions. That bank was badly managed from its inception.

We were also told that it was an isolated incident. I want to put on the record what the Minister of State for Finance told Parliament at that time. I am quoting from Hansard on March 25. She said: "We are satisfied that this bank is now a viable bank, that it will be profitable in the future, that we will be repaid as will other members of the support group out of the future profits of the bank". That was an undertaking. That was a clear statement. It was not conditional. It was not hedged. She went on to say: "This particular problem was triggered by something that happened within the bank's loan portfolio in California, which then of course created problems with the organization as a whole". That was the position of the Minister at that time. It was not just the western Canadian economic position or the National Energy Program. It was the bank. The fact happened to be that the bank invested very heavily into Texas and California, into loans directed at the oil and gas industry and directed at the real estate in those states. That had as much to do with bringing down this bank as did the economic situation in western Canada.

Then she went on to say: "Indeed the matter must be clearly explained so that Canadians understand that this is an isolated incident due to very particular circumstances, an incident that poses no threat to the integrity of the banking system". Of course we now have a companion piece with the Northland Bank; that is about how isolated the incident was.

We agreed that the $255 million bail-out should be passed by Parliament after being told repeatedly by the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Finance that the problem had been solved and that there would be business as usual. We also supported the Bill at that time and the bail-out then because we wanted, as did the Government, to restore full confidence in our banking system, a banking system which, despite these set-backs, remains in our opinion among the strongest in the world. We also gave a vote of confidence to the Government at that time because we were giving a vote of confidence to our regional banks and a vote of confidence in the western Canadian economy. Regional banks have been chartered under previous Liberal administrations because we recognized that western Canadians were becoming fed up with having to come to Montreal and Toronto all the time for a loan beyond a certain loan authorization limit. They wanted banks with head offices in British Columbia, Alberta and other parts of western Canada, so that they would not have to board an airplane, come to eastern Canada and lay their problems before a remote credit institution. I believe that has helped to decentralize and to bring our banking system closer to the people of western Canada. That is why we supported the original bail-out in March. However, the undertakings which were given to Parliament and to us were pretty flimsy and very fragile, indeed. Now, just six months later, we have been told that not only one bank is in trouble, but that two banks have collapsed and that it will cost Canadian taxpayers $1 billion plus to reimburse uninsured depositors.

It is absolutely mind-boggling. We now know, on the basis of evidence before the Finance Committee, evidence given by chief executive officers and senior officers of the chartered banks, that at the time the Government brought the bail-out to Parliament, it did not know the facts. Despite the pleas of the senior officers of the chartered banks to look at the loan portfolio of the Canadian Commercial Bank, neither the Inspector General, nor the Department of Finance, nor any government official, went into that loan portfolio. The chartered banks said to the Government on a Friday night: "Give us a weekend. We will lend you some people, 40 or 50 experts, to go into the loan portfolio of the bank and to examine the assets of the bank". That was not done. That offer was refused. The Government flew absolutely blind. It did not do its homework. It had no idea of the state of that loan portfolio and, as it turns out, instead of $255 million, those loans were sour to the extent of $600 million to $800 million. The bail-out was inadequate. If we are going to bail out, then bail out; and get to the bottom of the boat.

Mrs. McDougall: Like Maislin.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Hon. Minister ought to know that this matter is far more serious; it goes right to the confidence of our banking system. She should know that well and not retort in a flippant way, which has really characterized her whole performance on this issue.

The chartered banks volunteered their experts and they volunteered an analysis. All that was refused. We had a situation where the Government was flying blind. On the day before Parliament reopened in September, I called it "amateur night on the Rideau". We on this side of the House were conned at that time. We relied on the Ministers for their undertaking that this bank would be rendered viable once again. We were conned. The chartered banks were sucked in. The Government did not know anything about what it was doing. It was absolute, sheer negligence. None of the homework had been done. It was really "amateur night on the Rideau". Apparently a letter of comfort was also provided to the other chartered banks which participated in the deal. It guaranteed the survival of the bank and guaranteed that the banks would get their money back. In purchasing the proportionate assets of the Canadian Commercial Bank, the banks were guaranteed by the Government that they would be treated as depositors. We will have to look into that more closely as we get into committee.

As I said, it now turns out that about a third of the loans of the Canadian Commercial Bank were rotten, that $255 million were thrown away and that the taxpayers' bill is at least $1 billion. The Hon. Minister said this morning that, in addition, the Governor of the Bank of Canada authorized $1.3 billion against the Canadian Commercial Bank and another $500 million to $600 million against the Northland Bank. She said that those were fully covered by the assets of the bank. We will wait and see. I hope the Minister will eventually report back to Parliament as to what are the set-offs and as to what is the final bill for the Bank of Canada. It ought to be added to the bill.

What we have here is a shaking of confidence in our system by reason of the incompetence of the Government. As a matter of fact, that confidence has now been shaken to such an extent that the market is now in control. Ottawa has lost control. Only the resignation of this Minister and the resignation of the Minister of Finance will restore confidence in the country that there are Ministers who devote their full attention to the banking system, who supervise it with care and who pay attention to the deals negotiated. Only that type of action by the Government, giving the supervisory force a fresh face, will restore what has been lost.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister of State for Finance solemnly assured us in March that no other banks were in trouble. Then, seemingly out of the blue, on September 1, she tied the problems of the Northland Bank to those of the CCB. She announced the appointment of curators for both banks. In that September 1, 1985 press release she gave Northland, "a limited time period to seek to reorganize its affairs or amalgamate with another financial institution". That was the kiss of death of the Northland Bank. Once she linked the Northland to the Canadian Commercial Bank, which had then gone into liquidation, investors, depositors and other financial institutions were given a clear warning by the Minister that the Government did not really have any confidence in the bank and was giving it just a limited period of time.

Given the complete irresponsibility of the Government in the CCB collapse in not fully examining the books of that bank, how can we now presume that a thorough examination of the books of Northland was undertaken before it, too, was declared no longer viable?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this is unprecedented. The President of the Northland Bank said before the TV cameras that he had the impression the Government wanted to force the Bank to close, although he felt the Bank could have survived.

We are also informed that a letter delivered by hand to the Minister on September 6 informed her of a rescue operation set up by the Bank, and that the Government has yet to reply to this letter. This raises some pretty obvious questions: Did the Minister actually carry out a thorough examination of the situation at the Northland Bank? Was the Bank really insolvent? To what extent did the Government's intervention contribute to the Bank's collapse? Why was the Canadian Commercial Bank given the benefit of the doubt in March and why was the Northland Bank denied that benefit in September?

We feel the Government committed a serious mistake by giving both banks the same treatment, and it has failed to give us a satisfactory explanation for its decision to act in this way.

These issues ought to be looked into, not only by Mr. Justice Estey in the course of his inquiry but also by a committee of the House. Considering that the courts have now decided to grant the Northland Bank a reprieve, should this Bill even be before the House? Should we postpone this Bill until the courts have had a chance to rule on the matter?

Why, for instance, did the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) not attend the negotiations back in March? Why did the Canadian Commercial Bank decide for itself which loans would be examined by the bail-out group?

According to some reports, officials of the Canadian Commercial Bank got rid of their own shares in the Bank before the Minister's announcement that the Bank would be bailed out, which would have depressed the value of these shares.

• (1140)

[English]

Questions have also been raised about insider information and secret meetings. Why was no evaluation of the Canadian Commercial Bank begun until three months after the bail-out? I have already said that, on the basis of evidence given to the committee, the homework was not done and that the books of the bank were not examined before the Government came to Parliament with the $255 million bail-out package. Even then it took three or four months before George Hitchman, a former senior executive of the Bank of Nova Scotia, was finally commissioned by the Government to look at the books of the bank. It was shortly after his report was received by the Minister in late August that on September 1 the plug was pulled by the Government.

Why was a report of February 14 from the Federal Reserve Board in San Francisco not forwarded by the Inspector General to the Minister? Why did she not see that the Federal Reserve Board system of United States has serious doubts in February about the viability of the bank and its subsidiary, the Westlands Bank of California? These warnings from the American banking system were ignored by the Government.

We are now being asked to authorize the expenditure of nearly $1 billion of taxpayers' money. I venture to say, from what I was able to gather from officials who wanted to speak quietly about the matter, that the Minister of Finance was not too keen about the bail-out in March, and neither was the Minister of State for Finance. They both went to see the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who said that there was no way he was going to allow the first bank since 1923 to go bankrupt under a Conservative administration. He operatee without the facts. He did not ask for them and, if he had asked, he would not have got them from the Ministers because they did not know the facts. If the story is correct that the Ministers did not want to support the bail-out in the first instance and were over-ruled by the Prime Minister, they may still be in their places because the Prime Minister owes them one. Otherwise it does not make any sense.

This is the first bankruptcy of any bank since 1923. The Ministers absolutely failed to do the elementary homework of looking at the books of the CCB, and they are still around with the price tag of $1 billion to the Canadian taxpayers and another $2 billion outstanding by way of the Bank of Canada. This Parliament is now being asked to authorize nearly $1 billion of taxpayers' money to be turned over to a group of anonymous depositors. The Minister said this morning that this was not going to set a precedent.

However, the people of Canada are entitled to ask the Government if in future all depositors and investors will be bailed out. Is there no meaning any more to the interest rate structure and the market system? Depositors were paid a higher rate of interest because the market presumed that there was a greater risk and now that differential and margin means nothing. Is there now to be an implicit guarantee of the Government of Canada that it will bail out future depositors in any difficulty in any financial institution in the country? The people of Canada are entitled to ask that question.

We know that there are some legitimate claims by native bands, pension funds, municipalities and credit unions. They have been in touch with us. The Minister has read out some global figures. All of these institutions were misled by the Minister in March, by the Prime Minister when he authorized the deal, and by the Minister of Finance in categorical statements before this House. On the basis of those statements, reinforced, it must be said, by statements of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, credit unions, smaller municipalities, and school commissions across the country deposited with this bank for short and medium terms. I suppose that is the moral justification, if there be any, for the Government bailing them out. The incompetence of the Government misled $1 billion worth of depositors.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): During our debate on this Bill, Mr. Speaker, we will want to examine the difference between short-term demand deposits and medium-term debentures. A good many of the credit unions and municipalities were persuaded to go in by way of debenture. If the Bill passes Parliament we will want to ensure that there is some equity between deposit holders and debenture holders despite the rather vague reference in the Bill to security under deposits.

We have repeatedly asked the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance for the names of all the depositors of the Northland and CCB. They tell us that under the Bank Act it is illegal to provide the names of depositors and that the confidentiality of deposits is fundamental to the banking system. That may be so, but as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), set forth very clearly in questions to the Hon. Minister, these institutions no longer fall under the Bank Act. According to the terms of the Bank Act, when a curator and liquidator are appointed, the Winding-up Act takes precedence and under the Winding-up Act the liquidator is entitled to know the list of all creditors and debtors. Among the creditors, of course, are the deposit holders. More than that, not only is there no legal bond in our view, it is absolutely unprecedented for the people of Canada, through the House of Commons and Parliament, to be asked to disburse $1 billion without knowing where a cent of it is going.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We take the position that we will not support this Bill until we know who is being bailed out. This quarter of the House will not authorize any blank cheques from Parliament. How much of the money which we are being requested to authorize is going off-shore, to foreign banks, and to other banks in our own system? How much is going to class A and class B banks? How much is going to wealthy individuals who took a chance of a higher return? It may be that many who are being bailed out are of the same group who benefited from the Budget of the Minister of Finance by getting a $500,000 capital gains tax exemption for a lifetime bonanza of $125,000. How many friends of the Government are on that list? We would like to see that list to know just how coincidental the direction of this Bill is.

Mr. Hees: You certainly have no friends in western Canada.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Now, George.

Mr. Hees: I was just saying that you guys certainly have no friends in western Canada.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): George, life is long and, as Mr. Diefenbaker used to say, it's a long road that has no ash cans. This is one of the ash cans facing western Canada as a result of that action.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Is this the real reason we are not getting the names? Who are they? I think it would be a fascinating list. I am sure the Minister would be intrigued to give us that list. She has a bit of an enigmatic smile on her face. I think we have reached her a bit. Only she and the Minister of Finance know, and I am sure the Prime Minister has taken a look at the list. I have heard of buying a pig in a poke, but never for $1 billion. We believe that it is high time the Government was honest with the people of Canada.

[Translation]

The Government is asking us to make the same mistake it made in March, to spend millions of dollars of taxpayers' money without knowing all the facts, especially the most important fact which is: Who is going to receive this money? Who are the anonymous invisible beneficiaries of the Government's generosity? Are they friends of this Government?

In fact, by tabling this Bill, the Government is saying to Canadians: "Trust us, we know what has to be done. There is nothing to fear. Just trust us." Well, we trusted them in March, and six months later, not one but two banks have gone bankrupt!

Canadians, and I say this through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Government, Canadians believed you a year ago when you said that social programs were a sacred trust. And then, in your very first Budget, you attacked the Old Age Security pension and family allowances.

[English]

Canadians trusted this Government when it said that it would revise the patronage system. That was one of the great ones. Twelve hundred names later, when every thirsty Tory had been to the trough, not only directly but through uncles, aunts, brothers, and brothers-in-law, when they had satisfied their thirst for patronage, we heard a sanctimonious statement by the Prime Minister and some reference to the committee of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). So where is the reform; where is the trust? Canadians trusted this Government when it said there would be improved standards for Ministers. What are the standards? It is asking for trust here, for a blank cheque of $1 billion. We in this House are entitled to ask, where is the trust? We are losing about $1 billion in taxpayers' money, plus whatever the Bank of Canada is unable to set off against the $2 billion that the Bank of Canada had advanced. That should be reason enough for both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance to turn in their resignations. I believe they contributed to a loss of confidence in the system.

• (1150)

Where is the new morality in this Government? The former Minister of National Defence goes to a questionable bar and he resigns. The former Minister of Fisheries allows rancid tuna on the shelves, but the Prime Minister sticks with him until the Minister contradicts the Prime Minister. There is the morality. The former Solicitor General calls into doubt the whole administration of our justice by having a secret, clandestine meeting in the Chateau Laurier with a potential accused who happens to be the Tory Premier of New Brunswick, and he stays. The former Minister of the Environment, now the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) undermines the credibility of our fight to protect the environment by emasculating her Department, then she takes extended business trips to Europe on questionable grounds, five hours work for a ten-day trip. She stays. Now the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance blow $1 billion of the taxpayers' money through sheer incompetence, and they both stay on the job. That is the new morality; that is the new credibility; that is the new standard of behaviour for Ministers.

Last Wednesday night in which the Tory Government almost refused the emergency debate and almost put into jeopardy your authority and the authority of the Chair, Mr. Speaker. It was only those on this side of the House who rescued the House Leader by reminding him that if they had not voted against allowing the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) to bring in his motion he would be in effect sapping the confidence in the Speaker and in the Chair of the House.

An Hon. Member: You all voted for it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Last Wednesday, after we insisted upon a registered vote from every Member on the other side, to restore confidence in the Chair, Member after Member on that side of the House got up and blamed past Liberal Governments for this fiasco. How absurd can one get.

Mr. Lewis: You just did.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): How feeble an excuse. In March the Minister of State for Finance did not talk about past administrations. She said then the bank's difficulties had to do with loans into the American market in the southwest and California and Texas. Now the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance are blaming past Governments. We never had a bank go bankrupt under our administration, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That whole argument is a farce.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The question is not why the Canadian Commercial Bank found itself in trouble. It found itself in trouble because of world economic conditions but primarily because of bad management.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The issue before this House is, why did this Government come in March with an inadequate picture, with an inadequate factual background, has not done its homework, misled the Parliament of Canada and misled the Canadian people? That is the real issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): On Saturday at Question Period—

An Hon. Member: The House doesn't sit on Saturday.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —I am saying CTVs Question Period on September 20, the Minister of State, even after admitting to the reporters who were interrogating her that the decision to bail out the bank was made on false or at least inadequate information, even though she admitted it was based on inadequate information, said that she would do it again. I refer to CTV's Question Period, September 20. That is an astounding statement from the Minister. We in this Party believe that the banking system in this country remains strong. It is still strong and will continue to be so. We do believe that this unprecedented situation has created a crisis of confidence in the ability of this Government to supervise the system. The system has taken over. The market has taken over. The banking financial system considers Ottawa to be irrelevant in the resolution of its problems. The Government is being ignored by the financial institutions of the country in coming to a stabilization of our system.

In appointing Mr. Justice Estey to investigate the matter the Government attempted to sidestep this House. We are going to use this Bill as best we can to get some answers that relate to the political responsibility of the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Finance.

An Hon. Member: And the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And the Prime Minister, indeed. These issues go to the responsibility of Ministers before the House of Commons and thereby to the people of Canada. These are not judicial matters. These are matters not properly put before a Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada. Indeed by giving him that mandate, no matter how large, the judge is being placed in an improper, indeed an impossible position. We are not going to allow the Government, Mr. Speaker, to sidestep your House. We are going to continue to press for answers because the people of Canada deserve those answers; and the people of Canada certainly deserve a more competent confident demonstration of supervision than they have received from the two Ministers and from this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have an amendment which reads:

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "that" and by substituting the following:

This House declines to give second reading to a Bill, the principle of which is to permit payments of large, but unspecified amounts of public moneys to unspecified persons or corporations, thereby substantially denigrating parliamentary accountability for expenditure of public funds.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that the Government wants full debate on this particular Bill and I know that the Speaker will want to spend some time reflecting on whether or not this motion is in order. At the time that the Speaker makes that reflection, I would ask him to take a look at Beauchesne, Citation 436(2) in which it states that an amendment—

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order, Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: He is circumventing the rules.

Mr. Deans: That is what he is pulling.

Ms. Copps: You should learn your rules.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will read the motion and then will recognize the Hon. Member for Simcoe North.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), seconded by Mr. Gauthier moved:

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and by substituting the following:

This House declines to give second reading to a Bill, the principle of which is to permit payments of large, but unspecified amounts of public moneys to unspecified persons or corporations, thereby substantially denigrating parliamentary accountability for expenditure of public funds.

The Chair does in fact intend to take the amendment under advisement and will render a decision as soon as possible.

The Hon. Member for Simcoe North on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: If I may say so, I appreciate that I should have waited until the Chair read the motion.

I would like to point out that I think you, Mr. Speaker, may wish to address yourself to Citation 436(2) of Beauchesne's which states that an amendment which would produce the same result as if the original motion were simply negatived is out of order. I suggest that the Government has every interest in having this Bill fully debated in order that the Opposition can bring out whatever facts it wishes to bring out and what we wish to see—

Mr. Murphy: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair takes note of the representations made by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North. We will resume debate.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) on the same point of order.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I am speaking to the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis). I want to draw the Speaker's attention to Citation 744 of Beauchesne with respect to reasoned amendments. Citation 744 says:

It is also competent for a Member, who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a Bill, to move what is known as a "reasoned amendment". This amendment leaves out all the words in the main question after the word "That" to add other words. A reasoned amendment is in the form of a motion and may fall into one of several categories:

● (1200)

I would particularly like to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that the Citation goes on to say:

(1) It must be declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy or provisions of the Bill.

I submit that the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) falls squarely within the provisions of the Citation I have just read in that it is certainly declaratory of a principle adverse to or differing from the principles, policy or provisions of the Bill, because the Bill indicates very clearly that the money in question is to be paid without disclosing the identity of those persons to whom the money is to be paid and the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition clearly opposes that fundamental principle. Again, the amendment falls squarely within the long-standing and well upheld and understood provision that a reasoned amendment can be accepted from a Member who desires to place on record special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a Bill. Therefore, I respectfully urge you, Mr. Speaker, to accept this amendment.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of my Party to speak unequivocally against the Bill that has been introduced today. It is very clear from this Bill and from the related lack of action by the Government over the summer on whose side the Government is. When a group of municipalities, people in the industry and workers from Vancouver Island asked for some $22-million worth of assistance to provide concrete jobs for those in the wood-producing sector, the Government said no.

[Translation]

In the Province of Quebec, when they have problems with their factories or in their communities, the Government once again says no.

[English]

When prairie farmers who have experienced the worst drought in several decades asked for speedy assistance, the Government said no. However, when uninsured depositors, most of whom are wealthy individuals or corporations, came to the Government, then within 48 hours the Government indicated it was prepared to give them millions of dollars and shortly thereafter billions of dollars. It is clear to us on whose side the Tories are. It is time that the Tories started listening to the people of Canada rather than the bankers of Canada.

Having heard the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) say that the Liberals were not going to give, in his words, a blank cheque to the Government today, I would say that it is too bad that the Liberals did not take that position last March. If they had taken that position last March, we might have been able to stop the Government from carrying on with the incredible bungling that has occurred since then.

The Leader of the Opposition says he is not going to sign the blank cheque. None other than the Leader of the Opposition was the co-signer of the blank cheque last March. If the Liberals have learned a little bit since then, perhaps the people of Canada will reap some benefit from that wisdom.

I listened with care to what the Leader of the Opposition had to say. He did not say that the Liberals would oppose this Bill in principle. He indicated that after they received a list of the names of uninsured depositors, something which this Party has showed great concern over in the last week, then they will probably support the Bill.

Mr. Gauthier: Who said so?

Mr. Broadbent: Of course he did not say so. I know how the Liberal Party works, however. The Leader implied that they would do again in October what they did last March. When the bankers call, the Liberals will come to their assistance just as fast as the Conservatives.

The average Canadian, whether a farmer on the Prairies, a steelworker in Hamilton or a bank clerk in the Minister's own riding, probably finds it hard to envisage that which the Minister throws around so casually; namely, $1 billion. To give it some concrete reality, I would say to the Minister that what she is now proposing to put as a charge on the taxpayers of Canada is equivalent to all the groceries required for one week for every family in Canada. It is equivalent to writing off the personal income taxes of every income tax payer in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland combined. It is equivalent to an amount of $80 being paid by every individual taxpayer. As well, after making a rough calculation, $1 billion would be enough to send every man, woman and child in my constituency a cheque for $10,000. In other words, we are talking about a lot of money that this Government is now wasting because of its own mismanagement.

That the Government is wasting $1 billion is bad enough, but we should put this in the context of the other expenditures that have occurred in relation to this mess. The total net effect of this fiasco could be in the neighbourhood of $3 billion. That is the equivalent of three tax-free years for every person in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. The other examples to which I referred a moment ago could also be multiplied by three.

Let us add to the $1 billion bail-out the following costs: $135 million was spent in the original bail-out which occurred in March; $1.8 billion was advanced by the Bank of Canada to Northland and the CCB between March of last year and September; and another $420 million is likely to be added to the taxpayers' charges because this amount will be provided by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to the insured depositors, and as the Minister well knows, this tab is likely to be picked up by the taxpayers because the CDIC is currently running at a deficit of $1.2 billion. We are talking not only about a $1-billion fiasco but quite conceivably about a $3-billion fiasco.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the irresponsibility and superficiality of the two Ministers are as great as the amount this affair is going to cost the taxpayer. Just consider for a moment: the bail-out operation for the Canadian Commercial Bank was put together in just 48 hours, back in March, and at that time the Ministers refused an offer from the chartered banks to make a detailed study of the Canadian Commercial Bank's financial situation, which would have taken only two or three days. And during the summer, the Ministers failed to attend some very important meetings on the subject. The Ministers did nothing when the chartered banks, including the banks taking part in the bail out, withdrew $360 million from the Canadian Commercial Bank during the summer.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the President of the Northland Bank accused the Government of sabotaging the Bank's restructuring operations. The truth of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that we have here a monumental Government fiasco.

[English]

I want to indicate briefly why we are against this course of action. There are already provisions in place in legislation making it possible, through the CDIC, to compensate depositors of up to $60,000. Those beyond that were taking a risk and they knew it. Surely, the Minister who practises the efficacy of the market-place in such situations ought to be practising what she preaches. Those depositors above the $60,000 level were making those deposits to obtain additional interest for moving in the non-insurable category. They were taking risks. They knew what they were getting into. I say that, overwhelmingly, people and institutions in that category, whether they be chartered banks, other financial institutions here or banks in the United States, rich individuals or other groups in the Canadian community, were taking risks. It is inappropriate to come to the taxpayers of Canada now and ask them to bail them out.

● (1210)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That is our view in principle.

A bad precedent will indeed be created no matter what the Minister says today. If we are to say now that all uninsured depositors with deposits over $60,000 will be bailed out by the taxpayers, then what type of effect will this have on management decisions in our banking institutions in the future? Will they be prudent in the future or will they simply say: "We had better not risk our capital on that sort of speculative venture in California, western Canada or eastern Canada"? Not at all. What the Government is doing by this legislation is encouraging the opposite of prudence. What the Government will be saying to banking institutions is: "There is no longer a distinction to be made between insured and uninsured depositors. Go ahead and take whatever risks you want; be however irresponsible you want to be. The people of Canada will pick up the Bill". I want to emphasize at this point that it is the people of Canada involved here, not some abstraction known as the Government of Canada or some political Party. We are saying that this is a bad example to set. We will not support it for that reason.

In recent days in the House we have given a great deal of attention to the fact that we will be giving almost $1 billion to a group of individuals, corporate entities or municipalities whose precise names we do not know. I thought it was a great bit of unintended irony for the Deputy Prime Minister who, in the House on Friday, in answer to questions on a different matter, underlined the important principle that the people of Canada as taxpayers have a right to know where their money is going. I say to the Minister responsible for this Bill that if they have a right to know in some categories where their money is going, then they surely have a right to know where the money is going in today's circumstances when the Government is proposing to pay $1 billion out of some taxpayers' pockets into other taxpayers' pockets. They have a right to know where that money is going. That is the important principle.

In the House last week the Minister replied that she could not supply that list because there is a tradition embedded in Canadian law, in fact, in the Bank Act, which says that names of uninsured depositors have to remain secret. How quaint. She does not hesitate as a Minister of a Conservative Government to change another tradition, namely, to use taxpayers' money to bail out uninsured depositors for the first time in Canadian history. She will do that but she will not similarly change this other old tradition with respect to the names of uninsured depositors being released.

To make a point I have made in the past, she cannot have it both ways. She cannot say that we will change one tradition but we are unprepared to change another, that is, with respect to the withholding of names of uninsured depositors. We are saying, quite apart from other points about this Bill, that it is absolutely fundamental to the whole notion of parliamentary democracy that when taxpayers are footing the bill they ought to know where their money is going. If uninsured depositors such as foreign banks, rich individuals or corporations inside or outside of Canada are to be paid off, then we want a list of those names.

I noted some ambivalence on the Government's part on Friday in replying to questions on this matter. In making this proposal we say there are two options. First, there is the option provided by the Conservative Chairman of the House Finance Committee, and also the President of the Toronto Dominion Bank, both of whom have said publicly that the list of all depositors, uninsured as well as insured, should be made known. We would go for that. Second, if the Government is giving this money away and if the Government will use taxpayers' money to pay off uninsured depositors, then, at the very least, it can provide us with a list of the names of the uninsured depositors.

I have made the points I want to make in this debate for my Party today. I want to conclude with these observations. We want a list of names. We do not want it in abstract categories, as I have said. We are opposed to this Bill in principle. This Government was elected on a mandate just over a year ago which promised constructive change. This Government promised to build a new atmosphere of optimism for ordinary Canadians in all regions. Since it has come to power it has increased taxes on the average Canadian by almost $1,000. That figure is before we take into account the impact of this Bill. The Government has ignored the increasing concerns of unemployed Canadians. It has not been prepared to support financially the legitimate concerns of working Canadians, whether they be prairie farmers, those in the logging industry or fishermen. The Government has made it clear whose side it is on. That could not be demonstrated more clearly than through the Bill which is before us. The Conservative Party is quite clearly not living up to its mandate to help the ordinary Canadian. It is living up to its own private agenda with respect to aiding the wealthy and the powerful.

We are opposed to this Bill. Unlike the Liberals, we will vote against it, whether or not we receive a list of the names. We think it is bad for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has been informed of the amendment moved by Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), seconded by Mr. Gauthier—

[English]

It meets the requirements of the recent amendment to pages 530 and 531 of Erskine May. Therefore, the Chair finds the amendment in order.

The House has heard the motion. The question, therefore, is on the amendment.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During her speech the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) mentioned several amounts of money which referred to either depositors or groups of depositors. Will the Minister table that document today so that we can have access to the figures before we make our speeches this afternoon?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order as far as the Chair is concerned. I understand the Hon. Member has received an informal answer from the Minister.

Mr. Gauthier: Have I received an informal answer?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair rules it is not a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: I will make it a point of order, then, Mr. Speaker. I will make it a real point of order. There is no doubt in my mind that the Minister was reading from a text. If she was reading from a text, then that text should be available to us. I submit to you that I have a real point of order in asking the Minister to table those figures now.

• (1220)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair finds that—

[Translation]

—regarding the information to which the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is referring, the Minister—

[English]

—would have been quoting a state paper which the Chair believes was not the case.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I indicated in my address that I would be tabling the documents with the detailed breakdown as soon as I had a French version. If the Hon. Member would accept an English version, I can give it to him now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand that the Minister would like to——table the document now in one language?

[English]

Very well. We will wait for the Minister, then.

Resuming debate on the amendment. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier).

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, are we debating the amendment of the Bill itself?

An Hon. Member: The amendment.

Mr. Lanthier: I was not prepared to debate the amendment, Mr. Speaker, I just came in!

An Hon. Member: Ask your colleague to the right!

Mr. Lanthier: Very well then.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate to support the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) and this important and essential measure to provide compensation to uninsured Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank depositors.

The one and only purpose of this Bill is to repay uninsured depositors, although it is obvious that Members of the Opposition intend to raise many other irrelevant issues which do not relate in any way, shape or form to the legislative measure now under consideration.

I intend to focus my simple remarks on the sound reasons why this measure is both necessary and warranted, as well as on the reasons why the Bill is of utmost significance to depositors and the economy of Western Canada. It is quite clear that Parliament must endorse these repayments without delay. Indeed the issue we are debating has to do with the savings of individuals, the cash flow which small-and medium-size businesses so badly need, the temporary deposits of municipalities, small and big alike, the cash reserves of religious and charitable organizations, and many other such deposits.

Surely all Hon. Members must realize that any undue and irresponsible delay in the consideration of this Bill will have wide-ranging and disastrous consequences. For example, if a businessman were unable to cash in an investment certificate redeemable this month when he needs it to pay suppliers, subcontractors or his employees, the shortage of cash facing the businessman would have an impact on several other branch plants and their staff. This problem could be the source of unexpected and rather heavy additional expenses that are harmful to small businesses and might even lead dependent companies to bankruptcy.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I urge all reasonable Members of the House not to delay for ever the adoption of this Bill. I suggest it would be quite unfair to seek to score doubtful political points in a spirit of shortsighted partisanship by trying to take advantage of the fact that many Canadians would thus find themselves in an economic bind.

Still, some important questions must be raised in their proper context. Some people mention the basic principle whereby it is bad policy to provide financial compensation to the depositors of the institutions, in addition to the payments they receive from the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation on the first $60,000. They gratuitously add that the insurance money is enough and that we ought to reject all other applications for additional assistance, no matter what the mitigating circumstances might be or without any consideration for the impact on the business community.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State (Finance) was very clear and altogether unequivocal in supporting the existing deposit insurance system. I might remind Hon. Members that last June a private sector committee chaired by Mr. Robert Wyman of Vancouver published a detailed report on ways to strengthen Canada's deposit insurance system. The Minister is actively seeking ways and means to consolidate our deposit insurance scheme and especially to reinforce the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation's ability to protect Canadian depositors of modest savings.

The Government feels that this protection system is fundamental, that it is a crucial and essential feature of our financial system. The bill before us, therefore, should not be viewed as weakening in any way Canada's deposit insurance system.

The Minister has clearly indicated that the Government's decision to grant additional support to the depositors in question had been made in the light of the very special circumstances under which deposits had been made in these institutions and that this additional help is in no way an indication that the Government would take similar action if and when other financial institutions duly insured under the CDIC failed in the future. I should like to remind the hon. members of the reasons why the Government has deemed it necessary and essential to take this major decision and to go beyond the normal limit provided for under our deposit insurance scheme. I suggest that the Government's decision was based on two major considerations. First of all, the very serious financial and economic difficulties which would result if the uninsured deposits were not compensated by the Canadian Government. The sustained profitability and, in some cases, the very existence of a number of small and medium-sized businesses, organizations and other smaller depositors depended upon funds frozen in both these financial institutions.

As I said earlier, a major company unable to recover most of the funds it had deposited in one of these banks might possibly fail, which might in turn cause a number of secondary firms in business with this major company to fail.

It has been repeated on many occasions that both these banks are relatively small. Their cumulative assets account for only 1 per cent of the total assets of our banking system. But everything is relative. The fact remains that within the regional context in which they operated, they played major roles indeed and were major institutions. I urge, therefore, all hon. members, while dealing with this Bill which is to provide for the compensation of all uninsured depositors, to consider the regional problems which would result in the economy of western Canada if the Government failed to act to ensure a proper treatment of the depositors.

In this regard, I should like once again to go over the detailed breakdown list of uninsured depositors of these two banks which was provided by the Minister of State (Finance). I will state the total amounts at stake for each category of depositors.

Religious and charitable institutions, for instance, have nearly $22 million invested in uninsured deposits in the two banks. The credit union movement in western Canada, which is the western equivalent of our "caisses populaires", has about $130 million in deposits of the same type as the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. Corporations generally hold over $141 million of these deposits, while individuals and non-incorporated businesses hold some $32 billion. The great majority of individuals, or 88 per cent of them, had uninsured deposits under $60,000 in addition to the first $60,000 already insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. The provincial Governments had deposits of nearly $145 million, while small and large municipal administrations had deposits of some $82 million. As for the hospitals, their deposits only amounted to about $5 million.

Obviously, these are the total amounts deposited in both banks. I have only tried to summarize a few details included in the report given today by the Minister of State for Finance. However, these figures show eloquently how significant the impact would be if we did not approve quickly the bill now under consideration.

The second major factor which influenced the decision by the Government concerns the events of last spring and last summer, especially as regards the position of the Canadian Commercial Bank after the Government and its financial partners, the major Canadian banks, implemented their support program to provide assistance to this bank last March.

• (1230)

With such a program, the Government and its financial partners showed their support for the concept of regional financial institutions. As agreed, the Bank of Canada provided the required cash, first to the Canadian Commercial Bank, and later also to the Northland Bank. Depositors who kept their deposits in these banks thus showed their confidence in the action and the moral endorsement provided by a responsible Canadian Government. Unfortunately, despite these well-designed support measures, it finally became obvious that the two banks were unfortunately no longer viable. However, if we consider all the circumstances existing at the time, I believe that any reasonable person will agree that the Government acted responsibly by helping the depositors who had shown their confidence in both regional institutions and who also had confidence in the moral support they had received from the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I am not minimizing the cost of these support measures. Payments to insured depositors will total about $875 million, or perhaps somewhat less when we know the exact amount of the liabilities of the depositors with these banks. In addition, the amounts produced by liquidating the assets of both banks will reduce the total cost.

Uninsured depositors will also incur significant costs. Indeed, their deposits have stopped earning interest since September 1. In addition, they will receive nothing as long as this Bill is not implemented; afterwards, as official trustee, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation will act as quickly as possible to make the first payments, amounting to 60 per cent of the deposits and interest earned until September 1. The second cheque of the CDIC covering the difference of 40 per cent of the deposits will be sent with the first payment, but it will be postdated April 1. In view of all these facts, I once more urge all the Hon. Members to allow this Bill to receive quick passage and not to delay unduly compensation of the depositors by debating at length matters which are irrelevant or only indirectly related to it.

I am not denying the crucial importance of some of these questions. However, they will be settled by other means and we shall have every opportunity to examine them in two ways. First, Mr. Justice Estey has been given the most general terms of reference possible to investigate all the circumstances surrounding the bankruptcy of these two unfortunate banking institutions. I am certain that all Canadians can trust him to make a detailed, careful and in-depth examination of these very important issues. The haste with which he has immediately set down to work is a most encouraging indication of his wish to solve the problem as quickly as possible.

Second, strengthening the system for regulating and monitoring our financial institutions raises major questions. The Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) has indicated how the Office of the Inspector General of Banks had already found extra resources by calling upon a number of retired bankers to help complete some urgent tasks he had to do last summer. The Minister has also announced that the Government intended to take legislative action as soon as possible to give increased powers to the regulating bodies, in order to guarantee the stability of our Canadian financial system, and in term that of all Canadian citizens generally who are directly or indirectly involved in this country's healthy financial climate.

Third, the working paper on the reform of this country's financial institutions, that is the green paper submitted by the Government refers to significant changes. This green paper is now being considered by the Standing Committee of the House. It might be useful, Mr. Speaker, to add in that respect that the committee is on schedule, and last week there was a sitting of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade, and Economic Affairs to which members of all parties were invited. It was with great pleasure that we enjoyed the cooperation of the New Democratic Party, however we must point out the noticeable absence of the Liberal Party from those three-day discussions that were held last week.

If Members of the Official Opposition had attended, Mr. Speaker, maybe their Leader would have made quite a different speech today. I therefore give you my word that this second item of the green paper discussion is very important, and it is unfortunate that the Official Opposition did not assume its responsibilities in delegating some of its expert Members capable of playing an intelligent part right where the work has to be done, that is in the Standing Committees.

If I referred to those other questions that will be investigated and considered from a legislative point of view, it was because I wanted to make it quite clear that this Government is not today closing the door to public debate on any of those questions. In fact, we are hoping for a comprehensive and an in-depth study of the facts. Many aspects of that complex issue have to be debated. But I would like once more to urge Hon. Members to realize that the legislation should not be subjected to a protracted debate on those other irrelevant issues, however important. Let us examine the Bill with an objective eye, keeping in mind that we must act quickly so that the depositors do not have to wait unduly for the funds they so urgently need and to which we feel they have an imprescriptible right.

Mr. Speaker, on all those questions we believe that, although the matter is not sub judice, there are two ways of discussing the Bill, and all matters which are relevant thereto or which indirectly, involve this legislation. There are two forums: first, the Standing Committee on Finance, which is now studying in a very positive way the matter of financial institution reform, and, second, a judicial one, where we have a judge with very broad terms of reference was appointed to make an inquiry using all the means left to his discretion. Therefore, with those two points in mind, we feel we must ask the House to approve the legislation within the shortest possible time frame, in order to avoid possibly irreparable harm to small and medium-sized business in Western Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions, comments. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier) that if as it seems to me he is only debating a mere trifle, that is a meaningless Bill which will not cost very much, we have to consider the fact that the Bill now before us will cost some $800 million which will be paid through the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation and the advances made by the Bank of Canada. I also find it unacceptable that the Hon. Member should have started using information available to the Government concerning organizations and institutions which had deposits at the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, as if he had in his hands the names of those corporations and individuals. In my opinion, this is an improper use of that information. I suggest, judging by the statements made by the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) and the Hon. Member, that the Government intends to use all the information available on the nature of companies having deposits with both institutions without actually giving out their names.

Mr. Speaker, I would say that I can make my own judgments as all other Canadians can. For example, I find it unacceptable for the Minister of State (Finance) to name credit unions, religious institutions, municipalities without mentioning chartered banks from abroad as well as large financial corporations and other institutions which do not need any protection against market hazards but will also be compensated. Why is the Hon. Member ready to use such information in that entirely partisan and political manner?

• (1240)

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, today we are being accused of disclosing certain classes of depositors, although this was directly in line with a previous proposal by the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall), in which she said she was prepared to table lists of the classes of depositors, but that the Bank Act did not allow here to disclose the identity of the depositors.

The purpose of my speech was to make the Members of this House aware, first of all, of the urgency of dealing with the motion now before the House and second, of the possible repercussions of such a motion. At one point there was a reference to the names of the major banks. It is quite probable, although I could not vouch for this, that the major banks would not be in great financial difficulty if a postponement were granted. However, there are small institutions, which I do not know by name, and I feel quite comfortable here, I am not hiding them from anyone, but as I said, there are financial institutions acting as sub-contractors or rather secondary institutions, and depending on primary institutions that are unable to pay them, and there is a danger there. My sole purpose in mentioning these classes of corporations or persons in my speech was to make Hon. Members aware of the urgency of dealing with this question as soon as possible instead of using it to indulge in petty partisanship.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Parliamentary Secretary is aware of the fact that the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) had already agreed to release, at least that is what she said in a letter she sent me last May, a list of depositors by group.

But that is neither here nor there. We already have such a list. What we are asking now is: Who are the depositors?

My question to the Parliamentary Secretary is this. They are using the Bank Act to say: We cannot disclose that because the Bank Act precludes disclosing the names of depositors. I submit to the Hon. Member ... my question is: This exceptional legislation we are considering today, this Bill, comes under the rule of exception. The Bankruptcy Act should apply, since we are talking about two banks that have failed. How can he rationalize, how can he go on maintaining the position taken by his party or by the Government, which is to refuse to disclose the names, because this "comes under the Bank Act", while everyone knows that no Bank Act but the Banruptcy Act applies in this case, as well as the exceptional legislation referred to as Bill C-79? How can he reconcile all that?

Mr. Lanthier : Mr. Speaker, there are two points of view. With respect to the first remark, it stands to reason and I am fully aware of it, but I can only repeat what the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) told us earlier. The Minister did repeat on many occasions that she was prepared to give the list of categories of depositors, and so she did. What Hon. Members wanted however was the list of names of depositors, and again I repeat what the Minister said, namely that legal advice given to her would indicate that she may not be authorized to make those names public.

Still, without giving out privileged information I can say that the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs were public. We heard evidence from bankers who were shaking in their boots. They did not make any bones about it, Mr. Speaker, releasing the names of depositors would undermine the very structure of our banking system. Confidentiality about depositors is the time-honoured hallmark of our banking institutions and it has always been like that. I can assure Hon. Members that the rescue operation launched last March by the partners—the Government and the banks—would have been meaningless if, after earmarking so much money for that purpose, it had been irresponsibly decided to release the names of all depositors. Mr. Speaker, let me tell you that there are two principles involved: first the legal principle on which, as a modest engineer, I do not feel qualified to comment, and then the other principle about which I as a depositor can indeed say that confidentiality has to be honoured. I would think that all of us here, and on behalf of our constituents, want our financial system to remain sound, and one of the basic principles in that respect has to be the confidentiality of depositors' names.

Two principles are involved here. I would not dare debate the first one, but I will certainly uphold the second.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a supplementary question.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Hon. Member says that the Minister of State for Finance has had a legal opinion from her advisors to the effect that she should not or must not reveal the names of individual depositors.

My question to the Parliamentary Secretary is as follows: Why not table this legal opinion in this House? We could then read it and draw our own conclusions.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, the Minister said during the debate that she had received legal opinions to the effect that there were serious doubts about the propriety of revealing these names in view of the Bank Act. As for whether the Minister can table these opinions, it is not up to me to reply for her. I am replying on behalf of my Minister, but about issues that she has debated in this House and which are on the public record, and this is what she has said.

If Hon. Members want to ask her to table some papers, there are all kinds of procedures which could be used more appropriately than a request to a parliamentary assistant.

[English]

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the amendment which was moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). The amendment makes it clear that we on this side are not ready to proceed without having further information about the people to whom this very large sum of money will be paid out. The Government is asking for $865 million to be paid to the uninsured depositors, that is, those people who have over $60,000 on deposit in the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Westland Bank. Let us not forget that those with deposits of $60,000 or less will be fully compensated by the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation. We are talking about people who are not entitled to be compensated for over $60,000 who will have received their full $60,000 back. These people, whether individuals or businesses, will be asking the Government to pay them moneys in excess of that. The Minister wants us to agree to these payments without knowing where they are going.

This is absolutely unprecedented. Treasury Board rules require that payments be disclosed in the Public Accounts of Canada. The Bill itself requires these people to complete an application in a specified form. We will know these names in any case. What on earth can the Government hope to achieve by hiding the names from us now since they will be made public sooner or later? The taxpayers of Canada have a right to know where this money is going. It must be absolutely unprecedented that an amount of almost $1 billion be paid out without public disclosure, although a large number of people will know because the application forms will surely have to be handled by officials at varying levels of seniority in many government Departments.

When we return to the circumstances under which this bail-out was put together, we end up with some very serious questions of trust. The Government assured us, as the Official Opposition, that it was essential to bail out the Canadian Commercial Bank. It assured us of this in private meetings and asked for our agreement to let a Bill go through all stages of the House with remarkably little information. We were assured this as well on the floor of the House.

Let us look at some of the assurances given, assurances which were absolutely unequivocal. Starting on March 25, the Minister in her own speech stated that with the bail-out, the Canadian Commercial Bank would be viable and that it would continue to make a contribution to the economy of western Canada. Assurances were also given by the same Minister that, with the bail-out which was arranged on March 25, the bank could be expected to be profitable and that some of the moneys put in by the Government might in fact be recovered. Afterwards we found that it was all based upon hope of some kind. The Minister has repeated many times in the House that the decision was based upon "the best information available". I am referring to the original decision in March to put together a rescue operation of $255 million. It was supposed to make the bank viable and profitable and was supposed to get the taxpayers' money back to them eventually. Yet on September 1, the same bank was put into liquidation.

If we look back at the sequence of events, it becomes more and more difficult to accept the Government's word, and I say that with great regret. This is why we could not possibly consider accepting on faith that the moneys would be paid to depositors and that the depositors were all hospitals, municipalities, school boards and so on.

Let us look at what happened. Early in the morning on March 25, we were told that over the weekend the Government had concluded negotiations with six banks and two provincial Governments to provide a major infusion of funds to the Canadian Commercial Bank, which otherwise, we were told, would not have been able to open its doors that day. We were told then that the CCB had sought assistance from the Government on March 14 and that prior thereto there had been no indication of the seriousness of the bank's problems. Later we found that the Government really did not know. We have had the banks concerned say that they had to make their decision based upon a segment of information provided only by the Canadian Commercial Bank, and that when they offered their staff and expertise to go in and make a full examination, they were refused. One bank president said that the only reason given for the refusal was that the Canadian Commercial Bank did not want competitors examining its assets. This was the first time a bank had failed in 62 years. When a bank comes hat in hand to Ottawa asking for $255 million, I have great difficulty understanding why it is in a position to dictate its terms and say that we may only look at the information offered, not at anything more. I cannot understand why the Government would accept that. We have asked these questions in the House and have received no answers.

Afterwards we learned a number of specific things in committee. We agreed to the passage of the Bill because we accepted the Government's word. The Official Opposition should be able to accept the word of the Government. Then we went into committee and found that there were many other problems. For example, we found that the bank was greatly over-extended as a result of imprudent lending practices. The committee found much of concern in the accounting policies of the bank and in its information disclosure. We have increasingly discovered, as a result of information before the committee and elsewhere, that the Government made its decision with inadequate information. We found that the Government did not seek out the opinion of CCB's external auditors in March before deciding to put in $255 million. The Government did not consult the minutes of the bank's own audit committee.

The Government did not attempt to inform itself about the February 1985 report of the American regulators on the Canadian Commercial Bank's U.S. agency. As I said, the Government did not insist upon a full examination of all assets but accepted the portion or segment of information provided by the Canadian Commercial Bank as a basis for decision.

At the same time as the Finance Committee was hearing these disquieting facts, and after the initial report of the Finance Committee was released, the Government continued to issue assurances about the effectiveness of the bail-out and the viability of the Canadian Commercial Bank. It was known throughout the summer that the Bank of Canada was providing considerable amounts of money to the Canadian Commercial Bank, obviously because large amounts were leaving the bank. Nevertheless, with the Government's assurances still ringing in our ears, the announcement on Labour Day of the appointment of curators for the Canadian Commercial Bank and for Northland came as a shock to most Canadians. Why had the Government put $255 million of taxpayers' money into a bank rescue, only to preside over its failure six months later? Clearly, confidence in the Government's original decision was badly misplaced. Obviously there were things which the Government had not known when it put together the bail-out.

When the House resumed in September, we asked questions, but our questions have not been answered. Today the Minister offered to table something to which she has referred for weeks, a partial list of categories of depositors. That will not meet our needs. We need full disclosure and exactly who are the depositors for which the Government is now showing a lot of concern, although it showed no similar concern for the shareholders.

Many of the shareholders are little people. I received a poignant letter from a 70-year old man who sold his house and on the advice of a broker invested all the proceeds in the Canadian Commercial Bank following the bail-out, when the Government was telling us that the bank was viable. This man has lost every penny. There is no concern for the shareholders. The shareholders include the pension plans of many Canadians. Air Canada, various teachers' groups and railway workers had invested in the shares of the Canadian Commercial Bank. They have lost every penny.

The Government has an obligation to explain why it is bringing in special legislation to pay out almost $1 billion to depositors whose names we do not know, while it is refusing to consider any special assistance for shareholders whose names we know. We know who some of the depositors are because they have chosen to identify themselves. The municipalities of Kanata, St. Catharines and Toronto have chosen to identify themselves. I have also received letters from municipalities in western Canada; they have made their position known. However, who are the depositors who have not been identified and for whom the Government wishes special legislation to pay out many millions of dollars of taxpayers' money without disclosure? We must have those names.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member will have seven minutes remaining in her speech this afternoon.

S.O. 22

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Department of the Environment suffered several blows last year and this year. In particular, as time passes, the damage caused by the $3.8 million cut from the Canadian Wildlife Service becomes increasingly felt.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the mandate of the Canadian Wildlife Service is to protect wildlife, to understand the impacts of man's activities on nature, to study the reaction of wildlife to pesticides, toxic chemicals and water pollution, and to recognize warning signals for human health while there is still time to act.

Each fall budgets are prepared for the following year. Today I call on the new Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to use his office to provide the funds required to restore the Canadian Wildlife Service to its full strength. If the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) can come to the House requesting $875 million, the Minister of the Environment can find the $3.8 million needed to restore 82 jobs in the Canadian Wildlife Service. Canadians benefit from the Canadian Wildlife Service. The new Minister of the Environment has an opportunity to prove that he has the political muscle needed to restore the Canadian Wildlife Service. He should act now.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S SUPPORT FOR GREENPEACE ORGANIZATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a statement on Greenpeace.

On September 23 the Vancouver Sun reported as follows, and I quote:

The New Democrats, usually the champions of Greenpeace environmental concerns, have been deathly silent on the subject (of the Rainbow Warrior). Some NDP MPs in fact have been ordered to shut up about the matter. The reason is that the French Government is a socialist Government and socialists never—ever—criticize socialists who make it to Government.

In fact not only did the New Zealand Government, a socialist one, condemn the French Government but on the same day, September 23, on behalf of the NDP I gave a press conference on this subject. This was not covered by the Sun, likely because that was also the day of the resignation of the Fisheries Minister.

Greenpeace was started in Vancouver a few blocks from my house—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: —by people who are personal friends of myself and some of my NDP colleagues from B.C. Except for the fur issue, involving as it does the livelihood of many native Canadians, the causes and sufferings of Greenpeace have been our causes and our sufferings. The French Government's sinking of the Rainbow Warrior was an act of international terrorism. The French Government has no business testing nuclear weapons in the Pacific.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: The NDP position is clear. I challenge the Canadian Government to speak out as strongly as the NDP national convention which, last July, unanimously condemned French nuclear tests in the Pacific and urged that the South Pacific be a nuclear-free zone.

STATUS OF WOMEN

SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, over the weekend more than 400 aggressive, enthusiastic Progressive Conservative women participated in Interaction '85.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Collins: Women from all regions, all ages and diverse backgrounds debated such issues as peace and security, employment equity—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): How to pour tea.

Mrs. Collins: —pornography, aging, and volunteerism. Their opinions and input will prove invaluable as our Government proceeds with policy initiatives in all of these areas.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: The women took pride in the record of achievements on women's issues of this Government in its first year.

Mr. Deans: Such as?

Mrs. Collins: Among them are amendments to the Indian Act, to remove discrimination against Indian women which previous Governments had failed to do; introduction of employment equity legislation to promote equality for women in the work place; new job-creation training programs focused on the needs of women re-entering the work force, and a 67 per cent increase in the number of women appointed to federal boards and commissions.

We applauded the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) statement on Saturday night as he reinforced the Government's intention to move ahead and take new measures on such matters as pension reform and child care.

It is this Government which will provide the environment and the tools for women so they can finally achieve economic equlity and social justice in our Canadian society.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BEHAVIOUR OF CERTAIN PARLIAMENTARIANS

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, the events of the past few weeks have given our neighbours in the Opposition and even the media an opportunity to exploit a few blunders or human errors with an insolence that at times verged on paranoia. More still, Mr. Speaker, certain star performers in those same Opposition benches have led the Canadian people to believe that politics is a jungle swarming with politicians who have not yet grown out of their frustrations and have become shamefully passionate predators, and this tarnishes the image of this House.

Without wanting to indulge in self-righteousness, let me, Mr. Speaker, point out to you that too often, too many members hide behind the shield of parliamentary immunity to indulge in a language that has nothing akin to parliamentary ethics, where instinct rather than judgment prevails.

On the other hand, we see Members of the Opposition trying to be outrageously harsh to this Government. They try to inject in the population the idea that they can expect just as much from a Government hardly a year old as from a Government that has been in place for years.

In these times, Mr. Speaker, Opposition Members cannot be blamed for not doing their work, but it is no secret that many Canadian men and women are already questioning the dubious quality of their work.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

FUTURE OF CANADAIR AND DE HAVILLAND

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call the attention of the country and particularly of Members in this House to the way in which the Government has damaged two very important national institutions that belong to all Canadians, they being Canadair in Montreal and the de Havilland aircraft company in Toronto.

There is a great deal of speculation and, in fact, rumours surrounding these two Crown corporations as to whom they might be sold, to foreign interests or Canadian interests. In fact news story after news story seems to contradict various previous statements, on whether it is going to be Gulfstream Aerospace Corporation of the United States which is going to purchase the shares or whether it is going to be the Boeing Company of Seattle.

I believe that it is time for the Minister responsible for the two Crown Corporations, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), to stand in this place at three o'clock and indicate to the House exactly what is taking place with these two Crown Corporations and whether it is the intention of the Government of Canada to sell these two Crown Corporations to Canadians and, if so, what bids he has received to date.

We have been informed by a number of sources that there are a group of Canadians, particularly workers at those plants, who would be interested in submitting a bid, but because of the reluctance of Government Members to support their cause in purchasing these two Crown Corporations, those bids have not been made public. I would urge that the Minister responsible stand in this place and indicate the Canadian—

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

SPORTS

"OKAY, OKAY! BLUE JAYS, BLUE JAYS!"

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, Canada's national passion, the National Hockey League, is due to get under way this week, but for the first time in the history of our country nobody really cares.

The attention of all Canadians is riveted on Toronto, not for the reasons that Toronto usually likes to dwell upon, but because the Blue Jays are about to launch their drive for Canada's first World Series.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Angus: On the shop floors and in the boardrooms across the country, and even in the halls of Parliament, the talk is of that last, long fly ball to left field which allowed the Blue Jays to clinch the American League East championship.

Mr. Althouse: There must be some significance in that.

Mr. Angus: There has been a lot of concern amongst our friends to the south about having to play baseball amid the ice and the snow of a Canadian October so I would like to tell them that there is no need to worry. The sun is shining on the Blue Jays and heat generated by the blistering Toronto bats will be enough to thaw the coldest temperatures.

Mr. Speaker, the rules of the House do not allow me to make congratulatory statements under Standing Order 22, so I will not take this opportunity to congratulate Bobby Cox and the Blue Jays on their magnificent season and to wish them well in the playoffs. Instead, I would simply ask all Members of the House to join me in saying "Let's go, Blue Jays".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oberle: Batting to the left.

THE ECONOMY

DROP IN INTEREST RATES

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, last week the Bank of Canada rate dropped to its lowest level in seven years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Browes: This is not only good news for Canadian businesses, it is also good news for home owners, borrowers, and the country as a whole. Lower interest rates will give business people a new incentive to expand and increase production. Lower interest rates will shave billions of dollars from our federal debt charges, and lower interest rates will help Canadians borrow and finance the projects of their dreams. Above all, lower interest rates will help spur economic growth and create jobs.

● (1410)

Nearly one year ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled in the House a document entitled A New Direction for Canada. In that document the Minister wrote:

> This Government must take action to restore fiscal flexibility and by doing so help to create an environment that would allow interest rates to fall.

We, the Government, under the leadership of our great Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), have done just that.

SPORTS

EXCITEMENT OF BLUE JAYS DIVISIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to make a statement which transcends all partisan politics. I know the congratulations that I am not allowed to express would be on behalf of every Member in this House, those congratulations being directed at the Toronto Blue Jays for winning the American League East championship on Saturday.

I was born in Toronto and have lived all my life in Toronto. Forty-two years ago I used to go to Maple Leaf Stadium on Fleet Street to watch the Toronto Maple Leaf baseball team, a member of the International League. The price of admission was 18 cents to sit in the left-field bleachers. The price of admission has escalated slightly over the past 42 years, but so has the excitement. This year all Canadians have shared in that excitement as they watched and listened to the team which ended the season with the best record in major league baseball.

Being from Toronto, Mr. Speaker, I do not know how you can sit in that huge chair looking so composed when I know that inside you are just bursting with excitement as well. I know I speak on behalf of all proud Canadians when I wish this great Blue Jay team the best of luck, inning by inning, over the next two or three weeks.

THE FAMILY

NEED TO CONSIDER FAMILY AS CONTRACT BETWEEN EQUALS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, this week is National Family Week. This even does not aim at glorifying this institution, but simply at pointing out the difficulties faced by families in a world where children are more a problem than a source of happiness.

The structure of the labour market and our whole social organization do not favour the family, on the contrary.

Mr. Speaker, National Family Week provides me with an opportunity to demand economic equality for women. When women have their proper place in society, it will be because we shall have created social structures to accommodate families, in other words the parents who choose whether to work or not, and the children who are entitled to quality services and who we must not forget are our collective responsibility.

The decreasing enthusiasm of Canadian men and women for having children is indicative of the difficulties which children represent in our society. The best policy to promote an increase in the birth rate is to give women their legitimate place in society and consider the family as a contract between equals.

NATIONAL FIRE PREVENTION WEEK

FAMILY SAFETY PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, statistics show that 49 per cent of all fires and 90 per cent of all fire deaths in Canada occur in homes. One-third of those who die in fires are children. Such a grim record prompted fire departments from across Canada and McDonald's restaurants to launch Canada's first national family fire drill as part of National Fire Prevention Week, October 6 to 12.

Families are invited to participate in a home fire evacuation drill called "How To Get Out Alive", on October 9. The intent of the plan is to encourage families to develop their own fire evacuation routes and to educate their children about what to do in the event of a fire in the home.

The promoters of the event aim at reaching as many families as possible in order to increase awareness of fire-related tragedies and to reduce the loss of life that occurs through residential fires. I encourage all Canadians concerned about the safety of their loved ones to join the organizers in their laudable initiative.

Firemen, many of whom are volunteers, as in Nepean-Carleton, have helped to develop this program. They constantly put their lives at risk responding to direct fire alarms. I want to commend these men and women for their contribution to fire safety and prevention, and the preservation of human lives.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—WOMEN'S PROTEST

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, today in Halifax a group of single mothers demonstrated at the provincial Legislature against the partial deindexation of family allowances. These women know that there is a profound discrepancy between what the Government promised and what it has delivered. They know that the Conservative cut-back will take milk from the mouths of Canadian children.

Conservative Members say that they are helping those in need, but these women know that after 1990 even the poorest families will lose money. Conservative Members say that they are helping those who are unemployed, but these women know that cut-backs in the family allowance will increase poverty. They know that 80 per cent of those living under the poverty line, those in the soup-kitchen lines and those in the food-bank lines, are women and children.

Conservative Members say that they can make up for these cut-backs in the family allowance by changing the child tax credit provision, but these women know that that cheque comes only once a year and not at the end of every month when they need the money. Today these women sent a telegram to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) telling him that they are opposed to any changes in the family allowance. They know that, such changes discriminate against women and children. They know that in the Conservative lifeboat, the rich go first and the women and children last.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF BELGIAN PATRIOTS

Mr. Speaker: May I advise Hon. Members of the presence in our gallery today of a very special group of people who, during the Second World War, assisted Canadian airmen in Belgium to escape or evade capture. They are hosted by the Canadian Branch of the Royal Air Force Escaping Society.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

MINISTER'S EUROPEAN TRAVELS—DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On Friday the Deputy Prime Minister attempted to deflect what we believe was legitimate criticism directed against the Minister of State for Transport by using these words, and I quote from Hansard:

—I asked myself whether the motivation was not to arouse some kind of racism here—

After saying to him in his own constituency, where I spent the weekend, that those words were inflammatory, divisive and paranoiac, and were reflective of the bunker mentality of a Government in desperation, has he reflected upon those words and would he be willing to withdraw them?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question, Sir, is that indeed I have reflected upon those words. As the Leader of the Opposition himself well knows, certainly it has been my experience in the House of Commons over the years that, upon occasion, Hon. Members react and say things that might better have been left unsaid. I certainly would not want to cast aspersions of racism on anyone.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to accept those words from the Deputy Prime Minister.

THE CABINET

WORDS ALLEGEDLY SPOKEN BY PRIME MINISTER ON TELEVISION PROGRAM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister should realize that in making this reference to racism, the Deputy Prime Minister was inspired by the Prime Minister's own comments on the television program Le Point broadcast on September 4. The House will recall that at the time, the Prime Minister said that his Minister was doing a good job, and to quote what the Prime Minister said, "regardless of what Anglophones have to say on the subject". Will the Prime Minister admit that his own remarks were offensive and make the appropriate apologies?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Deputy Prime Minister made himself quite clear. It is public knowledge that for instance, during the election campaign, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides called me the leader of an Orange Lodge party, and did so in public, and that the Leader of the Opposition accused my candidates, at least three of them, of being separatists. These remarks were not made in the middle of an election campaign for the purpose of spreading brotherly love and national unity. The comments I made were entirely truthful. I did not recall any past problems and like all Members of this House, I accept the excuses and comments of my hon. friend, the Deputy Prime Minister.

● (1420)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, this is not election time, and I may remind the Prime Minister that we are in Canada's Parliament, and I am still waiting for him to give a clear explanation. So, about the TV broadcast Le Point?

Mr. Mulroney: There is nothing more to explain. I think my comments were crystal clear. It was for instance, deplorable that during the election campaign, the Liberal Member said . . . Yes, but just a second! They said that I was the leader of an Orange Lodge party. What is that supposed to mean? I said: This is not an Orange Lodge party, it is a party of Orange Lodges, Knights of Columbus, Filles d'Isabelle, of all Canadians—

Mr. Gauthier: Answer the question!

[English]

Mr. Mulroney: We are speaking on national unity as opposed to people who are trying to sow difficulty.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: We talked about national reconcialiation and we are acting accordingly. And when a comment was judged to be unacceptable, the Deputy Prime Minister withdrew it willingly and with good grace.

Oral Questions

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF ALLEGED STATEMENT BY DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of State (Transport).

Last Thursday evening the Minister made the following statement in Montreal: "I was prepared to produce all my vouchers, but the Deputy Prime Minister suggested that I should not do that because it would create a dangerous precedent".

Then the next day I put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister here in the House, namely—

An Hon. Member: The question!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Just wait for my question!

[English]

The next day the answer of the Deputy Prime Minister to my question was this:

Mr. Speaker, for the Hon. Member to suggest, which he has, that I put a gag order on that particular Minister or any other Minister is utterly false.

[Translation]

Here is my question to the Minister. Can she confirm today that she really stated in Montreal that the Deputy Prime Minister had asked her not to table the documents?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, just so the Hon. Member does not lose any sleep over this matter, I can say that there were no diverging views between the Deputy Prime Minister and me, and that all personal expenses incurred during the personal leg of my trip were personal expenses which are part of my private life. However, given the very peculiar and even bizarre circumstances of my current situation, I am prepared to make them available.

REQUEST THAT EUROPEAN TRAVEL VOUCHERS BE TABLED BY MINISTER OF STATE (TRANSPORT)

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, this being the second time the Minister indicates she is prepared to make these documents public, I would like to ask her a very simple question: Will she table the documents in the House of Commons today?

An Hon. Member: Yes or no!

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, the trips were made up of official and personal travels. As soon as I have the final statement of the full expenses of those trips, I will table, in the most appropriate manner, a summary of all expenses.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

EXPENDITURES INCURRED IN FRONTENAC, QUE.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by saying that I was very pleased to hear the Deputy Prime Minister withdraw unconditionally the comments he made in the House last Friday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: But I have another question for the Prime Minister.

According to another press report today there is a $3,000 expense which was not declared by the riding of Frontenac nor by Conservative Party national campaign officials. Apparently there has been a breach of the Canada Elections Act in both instances. Is the Prime Minister aware of this fact and what did he do?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will ask the Hon. Member to rephrase his question because, as I heard it, it related to electoral expenses of one or more Members of the House. Questions with respect to electoral expenses of any Member do not fall within the purview of the Government. Therefore, they are not matters for Question Period when one is questioning the Government about Government policy. I invite the Hon. Member to rephrase his question.

NEWSPAPER REPORT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the Government House Leader was rising to answer my question which simply concerned a report which stated that there was some $3,000 not declared in the constituency of Frontenac or in the national campaign list for the Conservative Party. In either case federal law would have been broken if these figures had been taken into account. We have a bit of a problem in asking questions, as you well understand, Mr. Speaker.

I will put my question in this way. I will restrict it to the national Conservative Party campaign. Is the House Leader prepared to comment on this item? Can he tell the House what steps, if any, the Government has taken to conduct an inquiry—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What nonsense is this?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member cannot make it a matter of Government policy by calling it a matter of a Party.

I am also in some difficulty since these matters are administered, as the Hon. Member knows, by an officer of Parliament and not by the Government. Therefore, I must find these questions out of order. Does the Hon. Member want to try again?

Mr. Broadbent: I understand your difficulty, Your Honour—

Mr. Dick: It is your difficulty, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: —and perhaps you will understand mine, Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Innuendo is getting tougher.

Mr. Broadbent: Joe's at it again.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It will not get any easier if the heckling continues.

Mr. Broadbent: I do not know why the Secretary of State for External Affairs is twitching. I do not think he had responsibility for this matter.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT MAKE INQUIRIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I would like to ask the Government House Leader or the Prime Minister, since last week they took in a serious way an undertaking to make certain inquiries of their own national party office, would they do likewise in this particular case?

Mr. Andre: Strike three!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is no Blue Jays' fan.

All I can say in response to the Leader of the New Democratic Party is that my answer has to be, in part, the point which was raised by Your Honour with respect to the appropriateness of the Hon. Member's question. I think the NDP Leader and his Party should be the first to understand that when there is a matter under investigation it is totally inappropriate to speculate at this point in time on those matters until the investigation is complete.

Mr. Broadbent: That is the answer I expected.

INDUSTRY

JOBS IN JEOPARDY AT GULF OPERATION IN MONTREAL

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. We know that some 450 Gulf employees in Montreal might now loose their jobs following his Government's decision to allow Petro Canada to purchase part of Gulf Canada's assets. We have learned over the past weekend that Motoco Petroleum is waiting for Ottawa's assistance to buy and operate this refinery.

Could the Prime Minister assure the House that Ottawa will provide the necessary money to save the 450 jobs he has himself jeopardized?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, Gulf announced the close-down of the refinery in Montreal because of the over-supply of refinery capacity throughout the world, which has led to the shut-down of 13 refineries in Canada over the last few years. Gulf extended the period of the shut-down to ensure that employees could find alternative employment and to ensure that, should there be a buyer, there would be time for one to step forward.

[Translation]

REQUEST FROM MOTOCO PETROLEUM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Two months to find other jobs, Mr. Speaker? That is not what the Gulf employees are asking. They are asking to keep their jobs at the Montreal East plant. What I should like the Minister to tell us is whether her Government will provide the required money and give Motoco Petroleum the $100 million guarantee it is seeking, in order to protect the jobs in Montreal East and nowhere else.

● (1430)

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the decision to close down the Gulf refinery—as was the decision to close down all the other refineries in Canada—was a private sector decision because of over-capacity in the refinery field throughout the world. For instance, the residential consumption of crude oil in Quebec has fallen from 50 per cent to 25 per cent because of the efforts of that province to encourage hydroelectric developments, and the efforts of all Governments to encourage conservation measures.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

HYUNDAI CANADA—DUTY-FREE IMPORT PRIVILEGES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The President of Hyundai Canada, Mr. Park Sung Hak, met with Ministers and clearly influenced the 1984 Budget, and is reported, before the May 1985 Budget, to have met, through lobbyists, with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Minister of International Trade. Can the Minister tell us, given the way Hyundai has kept duty-free import privileges until 1987 despite low production levels of Canadian content, who is making automotive industry policy in this country, the Government or South Korea?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor, may I say that I thought he was standing to compliment the Government on getting the unemployment level in Windsor down to 5.9 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: That level of 5.9 per cent in Windsor is the lowest unemployment level of any urban area in Canada, and the Government of Canada has done that in spite of the opposition from the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party.

Mr. Langdon: The Minister has struck out again. If he knew anything about Windsor, he would know that no one in that city believes those jobless figures.

DECISIONS BY CERTAIN OFFICIALS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. We realize that this Minister will not answer questions for the Prime Minister.

Does the Government feel that everything is fine when the senior officials who make decisions concerning South Korea happen to be members of the Canada-Korea Association?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again in reply to the Hon. Member, on Thursday I was at the construction of the American Motors Corporation factory at Brampton, Ontario. It will consist of 2.2 million square feet under one roof and will employ 3,000 Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Believe me, the Government of Canada has a plan. We are working with the auto industry and the parts manufacturers to ensure jobs for Canadians, and we would appreciate a little support from the opposition Parties.

THE FAMILY

CHILD CARE SERVICES

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last weekend, he promised to create a new task force on daycare services.

I am somewhat surprised at this decision, Mr. Speaker, as the previous Liberal Government established a similar task force under the leadership of Mrs. Katie Cook. Its report has been in the hands of the Government for several months and has never been published.

I would therefore like the Prime Minister to tell us when he intends to make this report public and, more specifically, at what date it will be tabled in this House.

[English]

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration) and Minister Responsible for the Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, through you to the Hon. Member, who will know that this Government has made a priority of child care, the important report of Dr. Katie Cook will be given to the Government. It is at the moment in the midst of translation. Shortly the Government will be naming a parliamentary task force and this will become an important resource for the parliamentary committee in order for it to do its work.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR REASON REPORT NOT PUBLISHED

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is this. Why try to reinvent the wheel by creating a new commission? The Government has had this report for several months. Why not publish the report instead and implement its recommendations? Women need action, not another commission.

[English]

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration) and Minister Responsible for the Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, through you to the Hon. Member, the intention of the Government is just what the Hon. Member suggests, that is, action. The background papers will provide the opportunity for the public to be heard through Members of Parliament. As the Hon. Member will know, this issue is of national concern, but largely a provincial responsibility. The importance of that dialogue and moving deliberately carefully and thoughtfully so that we come to a consensus is something about which this Government is principally concerned.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY EXPENDITURES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He will realize that if the two allegations made by the members of the Frontenac Conservative Association are true—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Mr. Murphy: —then the federal Conservative Party went over its election expenses—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Murphy: Will the federal Government ensure that any investigation also looks at whether or not the federal Conservative Party exceeded the limitations—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member heard me make a comment earlier about the propriety of such questions. Does the Hon. Member have a question on a different subject?

Mr. Murphy: My question, Mr. Speaker, is will the Government insist that there be an investigation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Don Valley East.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOVEREIGNTY LINE DRIVE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He has spoken often and strongly about the extreme importance of sovereignty in Canada. Would the Minister tell us what impact there might be on our sovereignty, or on our new baseline relations, when a Canadian team wins the World Series later this month?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members will understand my deep regret at having to rule that question out of order.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

DE HAVILLAND—POSSIBLE SALE TO BOEING CORPORATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. There are again rumours that de Havilland is about to be sold, this time to the Boeing Corporation of Seattle.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Kaplan: We know that in a sale like that, there won't be any true financial consideration—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Kaplan: —with all the Government support programs in the area. Will the Minister assure the House that he will protect jobs at de Havilland, that he will protect the research and development and continuing research and development, and that that company will continue to manufacture its products for world markets?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member for York Centre, who is widely known to represent the "Pessimists of the World Incorporated", I want to assure not only the Hon. Member but all Hon. Members of the House that in any negotiations we have with respect to the possible sale of de Havilland, we will keep as an uppermost consideration the eventual employment of the workers at Havilland, the retention of technology, and the furtherance of the aerospace industry in this country.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I represent the pessimists who votes against the Government Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: More.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Perhaps I will ask the Prime Minister what happened to the campaign promise, to that beautiful promise that Canadair and de Havilland would be brought together into a Canadian aerospace company and that that company would be nurtured until a time that when shares could be offered to all Canadians? What happened to that promise?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member who has demonstrated why he will stay in his present seat for a long, long time, let me assure him that all alternatives are being weighed and he should not, in his pessimistic way, jump to any conclusions.

FISHERIES

NEWSPAPER REPORT OF STAR-KIST PLANT OPERATIONS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Today, in The Globe and Mail, Michael Dugas, a quality control officer in the Star-Kist plant, indicated that a horror show was taking place in terms of lack of quality control in that plant and lack of protection for the public. Would the Prime Minister undertake to launch an investigation into the operations of that Star-Kist plant, or is he attempting to have Michael Dugas retract his statement?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as Acting Minister of Fisheries I can assure the Hon. Member that one of the first things I did on assuming the acting responsibilities was to cause in-depth inquiries to be made into the quality control of all aspects of the inspection services.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, since the matter is of such a serious nature, would the Acting Minister ensure that this matter is referred to the proper standing committee, with a reference from himself and the Government, to ensure that the matter is dealt with fully and in public? Furthermore, would the Acting Minister of Fisheries indicate what is happening with a federal Government grant of $80,000 which will be paid to this plant, considering the rampant rumours that the plant will shut down? What are the Government's intentions with respect to this matter?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the embedded inference in the second part of that question.

With respect to the first part of the question, I would expect that Members of Parliament will aggressively approach this matter in the standing committee as they do with all other matters coming before standing committees.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

MUNICIPAL SEWER IMPROVEMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. He will know that the report on national water policy that was released last week recommended that the Government join in the fight against water pollution by assisting the provinces and the municipalities with the financing of local sewer improvements. Will the Minister advise the House if he supports that recommendation, and will he be urging the Government to help pay the costs of local sewer improvement programs?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has correctly put his finger on a major national question, given that in eastern Canada, for example, only about 10 per cent of municipal sewage is adequately treated.

I met with my colleagues, the Environmental and Resource Ministers from the provinces and territories, to discuss the Pearse inquiry. We considered the very question raised by the Hon. Member in the context of that inquiry. We will pursue various instruments, including those available to the federal Government, for a joint effort in this regard.

TRADE

CANADIAN LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns a comment in a statement made by the United States Ambassador to Canada in Saskatoon when he said that Canadian forest companies should consider voluntarily slowing down the flow of Canadian lumber into the United States market. Does the Minister agree with this statement and, if not, what has he done about it?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with that statement and I think that my view on the statement is well known to the American Ambassador to our country.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister would be candid enough to share with us in the House of Commons what he has indicated to the United States Ambassador in this regard?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated to him, through public and private means, that it is the Government of Canada that speaks for the policy of Canada.

AGRICULTURE

PRAIRIE DROUGHT—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE POLICY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who will know that on December 21 last year his Minister of Agriculture said, after paying $10 per acre in matching grants for flooded acreage in northeast Saskatchewan, parts of Manitoba and Quebec: "There will no more ad hoc assistance programs when crop insurance is available to help farmers through the effects of bad weather".

If that is the Government's clear policy, why does the Member for Assiniboia leave the clear impression that he has a mandate to make recommendations for further assistance in this year's drought area, or has the Government's policy as enunciated by the Minister of Agriculture last December been reversed?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been no reversal or alteration. The Member for Assiniboia, one of the most devoted and knowledgeable people about agriculture in western Canada, has spent the summer and much of early autumn working very closely with farmers and farm organizations in western Canada in putting together a program that would be helpful and beneficial to them.

I believe that all Members of the House, including those in the NDP, would want me to thank the Member for Assiniboia who exemplifies the best dimensions of the House for doing precisely those things.

RECOMMENDATION TO CABINET

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, since it has been 10 days since that same Member for Assiniboia promised farmers in Regina that a recommendation would be made to the Prime Minister and Cabinet "next week", to quote him, would the Prime Minister tell us what that recommendation is and if it includes assistance for the crop producers?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at an appropriate time that information will be divulged in a comprehensive way.

Let me say that the recommendations of the Member for Assiniboia will form an integral part of that comprehensive plan. Indeed, given all the work that he has done, I would offer a salute to the Member for Assiniboia, except in my family it is unacceptable.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

TRADE

SHOE IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, most of us are aware that the Canadian footwear manufacturing industry is having a very difficult time mainly because of unfair competition from offshore countries which pay their footwear employees only a fraction of the wages paid by our industry. In order to offset some of this, the footwear industry is requesting that offshore quotas be limited to 50 per cent of the shoe market in Canada to help safeguard some 26,000 jobs. It is a very reasonable request.

Would the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion give this request active and serious consideration so as to keep the Canadian footwear manufacturing industry viable and help maintain the thousands of jobs on which so many people depend for their livelihood?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in acceding to the Hon. Member's request. I compliment him on the way he has been pressing the case for an industry in Canada that I believe the Government of Canada would very much like to see remain viable.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

NATURAL SCIENCES AND ENGINEERING RESEARCH COUNCIL

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Science and Technology, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Government has had the five-year plan of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council for almost four months now. Recently, in answer to questions from the Minister, the Science Council of Canada called on the Government to fund fully the plans of the federal granting councils.

Does the Government support NSERC's five-year plan and, more particularly, will he state now that the Government will fully fund the plan to enable 30,000 university students and researchers to do work that is vital for Canada's future?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I know that I do not have to remind most Members of the House of the ad hocery that took place with respect to this council during the Liberal Government's reign in Ottawa. I can assure the Hon. Member that that ad hocery will not continue and that an announcement will be made shortly concerning the important matter that he has raised.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, we have seen the greatest example of ad hocery with the bank fiasco in recent months.

UNIVERSITY RESEARCH

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Government wasted no time in finding a thousand million dollars for bank bail-outs. Why does it take so long to commit a similar amount over five years for university research which, unlike the bank bail-outs, will do something useful for Canadian jobs?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member that this Government is dedicated to increasing research and development and the development of new technology in this country. I agree that that is where jobs will be created. The jobs we promised in the election are the jobs that will be produced.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS DEREGULATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Alberta's Minister of Energy recently said that the November 1 deadline for natural gas deregulation set out in the Western Accord was arbitrary and that negotiators need not feel bound by it. This morning the Minister received a report of the Natural Gas Industry Summit Group which agreed to disagree on the most contentious price issue. Does the Minister agree with Mr. Aaozirny, the Alberta Minister, or is it the intention of the Government to stick to the November 1 deadline?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct in saying that today was the day that I gave the summit group to bring forward its proposals for consideration to find a system of domestic gas pricing which, as I have said, must be acceptable to both buyers and sellers. I will be reviewing that report this afternoon and I will be discussing its contents with my provincial colleagues later this week. When I have something further to report, I will do so.

Mr. Waddell: I note that the Minister did not answer my question about November 1.

COST TO CONSUMERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, is it the Government's policy that Canadian gas consumers right across the country will not have to pay more for natural gas than American consumers will have to pay after the deregulation on November 1?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have long been on record as saying that Canadian consumers will never pay more than their American neighbours. That has been central to these discussions between the producers and consuming interests. I cannot add more than that. Once I read the report I will be in a position to comment on it.

MEDICAL CARE

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Is the Minister going to take seriously the warnings from the provincial Health Ministers of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick that they will have no choice but to cut back on programs in medicare unless the federal Government remains a fair partner and reverses its decision to decrease the number of tax dollars being transferred for medicare and education?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think that I have made it very clear that we take our discussions with our provincial counterparts very seriously. The Minister of Finance has been discussing program funding with them and has reassured them that there will be no cutbacks. Yes, we always take those remarks seriously, Mr. Speaker.

PAYMENTS TO ONTARIO

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware of the discrepancy between the numbers tabled on May 23 when the Budget was produced and those now used by the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario? He now indicates that the losses to Ontario will total $2 billion and as a result the Treasurer will have no choice but to increase the provincial deficit, or to increase taxes, or to reduce services. Whom are we trying to fool?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we are not trying to fool anybody. I do not know who the Hon. Member is trying to fool. We indicated very clearly in the Budget that there will continue to be an increase in payments to the provinces and that the proportion of federal spending to the provinces will be the same at the end of the decade as it is now.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

SALES TAX ON WHEELCHAIR PARTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and I know it is of concern to him. For many disabled Canadians the use of wheelchairs is absolutely necessary. Will the Government move now to remove the sales tax on wheelchair replacement parts?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, all of the measures which were introduced in the Budget have been the subject of further discussion. In terms of some things we have already made some changes.

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF TAX

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly delighted to know that we have made changes on some things, but the point I want to make is that for many people a wheelchair is an absolute necessity. I want to ask either the Prime Minister or the Minister of State for Finance whether, recognizing that fact, the Government might not move immediately to remove the sales tax on replacement parts necessary to keep wheelchairs operating and effective.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, we have already taken measures designed to be of assistance to the disabled in Canada. I think this was widely regarded as being very helpful. My hon. friend brings to my attention an observation which strikes me as helpful and one upon which perhaps the Government would be well advised to act. I will consult with the Minister of State for Finance and advise the House and my hon. friend as quickly as possible. I thank him for bringing it to my attention.

HISTORIC SITES

GRASSY ISLAND PROJECT, N.S.

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The Minister is aware of the Government's efforts to identify new economic initiatives for the Strait of Canso region of Nova Scotia. Development of Grassy Island has been put forward as such an initiative. Can the Minister tell us the status of plans for development of the Grassy Island National Historic Site at Canso?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I share the Hon. Member's high regard for Grassy Island because of the role the Canso area played in the international fishery in the eighteenth, and even in the seventeenth century. There is a management plan which predated my appointment as Minister of the Environment but I have embraced it as one of my own priorities. To date the federal Government has spent approximately $350,000 of an estimated total of $1.7 million. We expect to proceed with some dispatch. I pay tribute to the Hon. Member for his persistent representations on behalf of his constituents.

STATUS OF WOMEN

WOMEN'S FREEDOM OF ACTION ON MILITARY BASES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for the status of women. I would like to ask him whether he believes our Armed Forces are providing equal opportunities by not letting women canvass door-to-door with antiwar plans while members of the Armed Forces have the right to lobby for things like Star Wars and other national and international projects. Does this represent equality for women?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicted, there remains as part of the regulations under which the military operated, a rule that political activity on base is prohibited, by whatever group. As I have also indicated, the question of the definition of political activity is under review. In view of today's circumstances, it may well be that the internal definition used could be subject to change. We are looking into that question.

[Translation]

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, my question was to the Minister of State for the status of women. I do not know whether he has had time to consult his wife, but I would like to ask him what representations he has made to Cabinet as concerns the status of women on military bases because women now have no rights there and he should take some action on their behalf.

[English]

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, let me remind the Hon. Member that this Government has undertaken to review the matter, which the previous Government did not.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McLean: Second, let me remind the Hon. Member that when the Minister of Justice brought forward his amendments coming out of the Charter there were some areas which were not clear and at that moment we established a parliamentary committee to study those sensitive areas. Third, let me remind the Hon. Member that it was this Government that enhanced the Charter challenges to include women. If this is an area which needs that specific definition, there is a provision to undertake it under our Charter Challenges Program.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

REPLACEMENT OF SEWER SYSTEMS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The Minister may remember that prior to the Budget this year the Canadian Federation of Municipalities met with the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Employment and Immigration to point out the serious condition of municipal infrastructure. The water quality report has said much the same thing.

Would the Minister indicate to the House and to the municipalities of Canada whether his Government will now move to provide the necessary federal funding in order that municipalities can replace their existing sewer systems so that we can have quality water in our country?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know, as I suppose he does, that the federal Government got out of national programs in support of municipal infrastructure largely because the provinces resented what they thought was an intrusion into provincial jurisdiction by the federal Government.

• (1500)

In that connection, the previous Government also abolished the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs for the same reason. I do not hold out much possibility for the resuscitation of national programs in support of infrastructure. However, if the provinces, in individual cases, can demonstrate that they consider municipal infrastructure a priority, then the federal Government would be very open to discussing with individual provinces on a bilateral basis the possibility of federal funding, perhaps through ERDA.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONSULTATION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Perhaps the Minister might want to take some leadership, approach the provinces directly and encourage them to get involved with the federal Government to provide that kind of funding now, when they need it.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, within minutes of receiving the Pearse inquiry report, which addressed itself to this very question, I was personally in touch with every Minister of the Environment in the country.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Friday, October 4, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SPEAKER'S RULING RESPECTING SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION

Mr. Speaker: I have the notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, October 3, I attempted to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) with regard to personnel cuts in his Department. It was supplementary to the principal question put by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

On that occasion, before I could get four lines of Hansard out of my mouth, I was interrupted on two occasions by Your Honour who asked me to put my question immediately. I finally did not do that because I was completely frustrated, feeling that I could not put the question without a brief outline of the situation leading to the question and the parameters of the question.

I was to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I am completely opposed to long preambles to principal questions or to supplementary questions; I might say as well, to long, rambling questions which disguise the same material as preambles within the questions and accomplish the same thing. I submit, with great sincerity, that I feel that many of Your Honour's rulings with regard to supplementary questions and preambles unduly restrictive and without precedent.

I decided to check Hansard of the last Parliament on this matter, and I found numerous, numerous precedents. I started with the most recent dates. For example, on May 18, the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick)—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Clearly the Hon. Member has a complaint which he wishes to make to me. That is his privilege, and he may want to come and do that. If he wants to pursue this, he will have to convince me pretty quickly that there is a question of privilege. Therefore, I think he will have to deal with the foundation of his question of privilege, not the issue he wishes to raise.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the foundation of my question of privilege is that Question Period is one of the few opportunities for Members of Parliament to hold the Government accountable for its actions by putting questions and by putting them in a way which can be understood by the Government, by all Members of Parliament and by Your Honour. I submit that the type of restrictive application of the rules which Your Honour applied to me—and I say "rules" very loosely—or your ruling with respect to me last Thursday was such that it restricted my right to put a question to the Minister in a way in which I could hold him responsible or have him answer on a very important issue of policy which was being implemented by his Department. I felt completely unable to do that in the House and I submit to Your Honour that if that sort of ruling—

Mr. Speaker: Clearly that is not a question of privilege, nor is it a point of order. The Hon. Member appears to be unhappy with the fact that when I asked him if he wished to put a supplementary question, he said "no" and sat down. If the Hon. Member wishes to discuss with me or to debate with me the practices with regard to Question Period, he is perfectly free to come and do so. As he knows, his House Leader and the other House Leaders do that regularly, as do his Whip and the other Whips. However, it clearly has no foundation for a point of order or for a question of privilege in this Chamber, and that is the end of the matter.

Mr. Allmand: On a brief point of order—

Mr. Speaker: That is the end of the matter.

Mr. Allmand: On a brief point of order—

Mr. Speaker: No. I invite the Hon. Member to come and see me to discuss it, if he wishes.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations among the Parties, and I think Your Honour will find that the following Order of Reference will be received now by the House and passed without debate, by unanimous consent. The Order of Reference is as follows:

That the document entitled "Freedom to Move", tabled in the House earlier this day, be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport;

That the Committee examine and report on the proposals contained therein and, in particular:

(1) the role of transportation in improving Canada's trade position; developing employment opportunities; and complementing regional economic development in Canada;

(2) the role of transportation Crown corporations in an open and competitive transportation environment;

(3) foreign control of Canadian transportation companies;

(4) the ways and means of improving services in northern and remote areas in a new regulatory environment;

(5) the issue of compensatory rail rates and suggested measures to discourage predatory pricing in a new regulatory environment; and

(6) the measures to protect and/or enhance services to captive shippers;

That the Committee be empowered to travel within Canada; and

That the Committee report its findings no later than December 13, 1985.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, indeed the House Leader for the Official Opposition has informed me that negotiations have taken place, and we are pleased to give our concurrence.

Mr. Deans: Yes, we would too, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion?

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canada Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 7379).

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, earlier today I was speaking about the reasons we on this side of the House would like information about depositors who will be paid over and above the $60,000 insurance as a result of this special Bill before us which requires $875 million to be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

While I was speaking this morning, there was delivered to my office a letter from a group called—

This group made a very special plea that individual depositors be reimbursed early on and gave some rather interesting reasons. It also gave a total figure which I have not as yet been able to check because just two minutes ago, in fact as I was rising to speak, I received the list just tabled by the Minister detailing some of the depositors by categories. It shows foreign banks, Schedule A banks, Schedule B banks, trust companies, et cetera. I suppose by adding up all this, separating it from the total, one might arrive at the individual depositors, although not necessarily, because I believe that when the Minister spoke this morning she said this would not be a complete breakdown.

● (1510)

However this group who delivered the letter to me this morning says that it would cost approximately $37 million to compensate fully all the individual depositors for the non-insured portions. In their letter which, as I say, is addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), but of which they have made copies available to some people, they speak very sadly about the fact that they made some of their decisions based on wrong information from the Government. They say in part:

[Translation]

Canadian savers are now being seriously penalized as a result of the bankruptcy of a Canadian bank among others because ... the officials of the Tory Government of Canada have ill advised and badly protected them.

We believed you, Mr. Mulroney, when you and your officials stated on several occasions between March and August, 1985, that with the bailing-out plan of March, 1985, the Canadian Commercial Bank was solvent and that investments in that bank could be made with the utmost security.

We trusted you, Mr. Mulroney, we made deposits and we kept our savings in that institution.

[English]

It is easy to understand why this group feels that it was misled when one looks at the statement in this House made by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) on March 25, an I quote from page 3312 of Hansard. The Minister said:

—we are satisfied that this bank is now a viable bank, that it will be profitable in the future, and that we will be repaid, as will other members of the support group, out of the future profits of the bank.

The Minister also said on March 25 that the decision to bail out the bank to the extent of $265 million was, and based on her confidence, I now quote:

It indicates, I think the faith of the Province of Alberta, its confidence and our confidence in the ability of the bank in the future—

That was said by the Minister on March 25.

In view of those assurances, Mr. Speaker, one can understand the concerns of the individual depositors, that they were misled. While I am not necessarily supporting the view expressed by the writers of this letter that individual depositors should be reimbursed first, and while I would like to check their figures, this is however additional proof that we do need more information about the depositors.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member who was, of course, a member of the Government Party prior to the last election and who has served in this House for some time and whose interest in these areas of financial responsibility is well known.

My question is this. The new Government has certainly made many errors in this particular area. However, it inherited the Inspector General of Banks; it inherited an office of the Inspector General of Banks which was woefully weak and understaffed; it inherited in fact a can of worms from the old Government which had allowed the shenanigans of the Canadian Commercial Bank to go on, the playing around, the chairman in California, the shoddy loans, the consorting with people of the reputation of Leonard Rosenberg and so on. I would simply like to ask the Hon. Member where she and her Party were and where her Government was when seeds of the problems, which will cost the taxpayers $1 billion if this Bill goes through, were being sowed under the former Government. Why on earth were not members of the Liberal Party at that time speaking up and saying that something has to be done to make these banks act responsibly?

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, what is at issue in this debate is not the conduct of the banks per se but the conduct of the present Government. No Liberal Government ever let a bank fail, neither did any Liberal Government pump in taxpayers' money to rescue banks. It is no secret that in a similar situation what the previous Liberal Government had done was to ask other banks to arrange a merger or to put their own house in order. I have raised this point more than once in this House. We have never seen fit to put in taxpayers' money to rescue a bank. This Government did, and did it without looking at the facts.

Furthermore, the Government not only put in taxpayers' money to bail out the bank in March and assured us that it was then safe, but in September, only six months later, it is presiding over the failure of the bank and asking us to agree to use more taxpayers' money in order to compensate those people who were led to keep their money in the bank between March and September by the assurances of the Government.

In this debate we deal with the conduct of the present Government not previous Governments.

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the Hon. Member in that last statement. As the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) says, if the previous Government had made sure that the office of the Inspector General of Banks was functioning properly—he only has eight people working for him, for heaven's sake—if he had a full support staff—the State of New York has 300 people in such an office—if we had a situation where we had the proper staff, does not the Hon. Member agree that this kind of thing would not have happened?

The Hon. Member said in her speech this morning that this Government was not aware of what was going on until March 14 when the CCB people came to the Government for help. Surely to goodness, when we look back into what has happened, proper inspection would have indicated that this bank was in trouble a long time before that, and the blame lies right in the pocket of the Member opposite, in the previous Government's purview.

Miss Nicholson: I said this morning indeed that the Government told us on March 25 that it had no indication the bank was in difficulty prior to March 14, but in fact, in response to further questions in the House, it emerged that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had had a discussion with the Inspector General of Banks in September, 1984 in which he was alerted to certain problems.

While I think the Hon. Member opposite certainly has a point in saying that the Inspector General of Banks can use more staff, that does not alter the fact that a political decision was made on March 25; that in fact existing information was not used and, while the Government might very well have arrived at a better decision if it had had additional information, it did not use existing information because it made a political decision and chose not to look at facts and at material which was available.

Mr. Fraleigh: Mr. Speaker, through you to the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), whose knowledge of the financial world I had grown to respect, and I admit my inexperience in that world. I would like the Hon. Member to respond to one straightforward question with a yes or no answer. Does she support her Party's position that individual depositors' names should be disclosed and made public?

● (1520)

Miss Nicholson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) is a reflection of the earlier questions regarding the lack of regulation and supervision that occurred and resulted in the collapse of these banks. Can the Hon. Member explain why, over the years, the office of the Inspector General of Banks had only eight inspectors to do the job of supervising and monitoring the entire banking system? Why was there any hesitation in expanding that office when the banks themselves paid for the Inspector General of Banks and all the people he hired? Why did the Government not go out of its way to expand the size of that office when it was not costing the taxpayers of Canada a red cent?

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why additional staff was not added to the office of the Inspector General of Banks at a time when, following the revision of the Bank Act, the number of banks in Canada greatly increased. There was a rather obvious case to be made for increasing the number of inspectors. However, I still say that that is not relevant to the present situation because there was information available from the Inspector General of Banks which the Government did not look at in making its decision.

Furthermore, no matter how many inspectors there are or what information they can provide, political decisions are the final responsibility of Ministers. The Ministers chose to make a decision based upon very little information. Even if we accept that because of the small size of the staff in the Department of the Inspector General the information presented to the Ministers was inadequate for them to make a responsible decision, we must not forget that the banks concerned offered staff and resources to make a fuller appraisal before the final decision was taken and their offer was refused.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to say a few words about Bill C-79, the famous banking bail-out Bill. It has been referred to in all sorts of ways but I think the people of Canada have now begun to appreciate the seriousness of this situation.

If the last few weeks have been any indication, I suspect that the people of Canada have become rather confused by the Government. There have been statements one day saying one thing and then retractions the next day. For many weeks, we have heard Ministers and other members of the Government say one thing, only to have to reverse their positions within 24 or even 48 hours. By and large, people are beginning to wonder to what extent they can believe what the Government says.

Today we are debating the $875-million bail-out Bill. This is just the first instalment in a long list of pay-outs. I do not want anyone to get the impression that only $875 million will be shovelled out of the taxpayers' sack into the bail-out operation. Much more is yet to come.

Regarding the changing points of view of the Government, do we not all remember when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) rose in the House of Commons to say that the Canadian Commercial Bank was a viable bank, and after he said that the bank failed? The Governor of the Bank of Canada phoned the offices of The Globe and Mail on a number of occasions to say that he had full confidence in the Canadian Commercial Bank, that it was a viable operation and that he would stand behind it. As a matter of fact, at a meeting of the Finance Committee held on May 19, he said that he had a high regard for the management of that bank. Since then, we have come to understand just what kind of management the Canadian Commercial Bank had. Certainly some very questionable practices were being used.

The Inspector General of Banks, time and time again, said that the Canadian Commercial Bank was indeed a viable Canadian bank and that no one had anything to fear. Of course, as we all know, the bank failed. Unfortunately, my good friend, the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), was required on a number of occasions to rise in the House to say that the Canadian Commercial Bank was a viable operation in western Canada and that no one had anything to fear. Of course, the bank failed.

We cannot have a viable institution on Monday and a failed institution the next Monday unless the people to whom we look to supervise and monitor the bank did not do so. It cannot have happened unless Governor Bouey and all the other players did not know that about which they were speaking when they made those public commitments.

What has become very clear is that this is an example of group-think. The Minister of Finance, the Minister of State for Finance, Finance Department officials and senior bankers all got together to say that they were wonderful, sophisticated people with a great deal of banking expertise, that the Canadian Commercial Bank is viable and that they would all agree to that. What they forgot to do was their homework. They forgot to ask if they had the facts that enabled them to make those comments. As we now know, they had incomplete information.

We are told, and of course we do not know the facts, that the Inspector General went to the management of the Canadian Commercial Bank, a management we now know is highly suspect in terms of carrying out prudent bank management practices, and asked for the facts. The management provided the Inspector General with facts that were not facts but fiction regarding the viability of the assets of the Canadian Commercial Bank.

We did not have the facts. Since the Minister of State for Finance is an experienced Bay Street financier as is the Minister of Finance, I do hope that this is not a reflection of those on Bay Street. Hopefully others are not making decisions regarding Canada's banking and financial future based upon incomplete or even no information.

I would like to make one suggestion today. I suspect that we will hear from members opposite regarding a retraction or explanation of this. We are now dealing not only with the Canadian Commercial Bank failure but the Northland Bank failure. I suspect that one of the reasons for the Northland Bank's failure was that when the Minister of State for Finance made her announcement after the Labour Day weekend, she said that the Government would rescue the uninsured depositors as well as the insured depositors not only of the Canadian Commercial Bank but of the Northland Bank. I suspect that a great many people took that as a very clear message that the Northland Bank was in serious difficulty. If they had not removed their funds already, they certainly did so after hearing that announcement. In a sense, we could say that the Minister of State for Finance began the slow demise of Northland Bank which was trying to rescue itself in the troubled western economy.

I would repeat what the President of the Northland Bank himself said. He called a press conference and said that the Government of Canada was sabotaging western banks. He said that it was not interested in providing assistance to get the Northland Bank back on its feet. Just the other day, one of the directors of the bank said that they were considering suing the Government of Canada because it had not given their proposals a fair hearing. This is a very serious set of allegations.

If the President of the Northland Bank and one of its major directors is saying that the Government of Canada did not do what it could to rescue this ailing western institution at a time when it was experiencing serious difficulties because of the problems in the western economy, that is a very serious case. I assume that the inquiry being carried out by Mr. Justice Estey will bring this out into the open.

The people of Canada have become rather confused by the antics of those on the government benches in the last few weeks. I suspect a great many people are scratching their heads. For as long as I have been a Member of this House, I can recall hearing members of the Conservatives Party prefacing their remarks with the belief in a free market system. They said that they believed in free enterprise and in the invisible hand of the market-place to direct decision making. They said that they believed in the discipline of the market-place. When the previous administration provided bail-out money to ailing corporations it said that this action must stop, that market discipline must prevail if we want to see a decent economy unfold. What has become extremely clear is that the comments about the free market which are directed at the small business sector, farmers, ranchers, fishermen or Canadian individuals does not hold when it comes to banks. When banks get into trouble they are not allowed to go under. They do not even have the opportunity to go under because the Government steps in to rescue them. It is not like any other bankruptcy where 40 cents, 60 cents or even 70 cents is paid on the dollar—in this case 100 cents will be paid on the dollar. The Government of Canada has made itself the laughing stock of the financial community of the country.

I encourage Hon. Members who sit on the Government benches to stand in their places and say who they believe are recognized financiers in our country who think this move is a good example for the financial community to have placed before it. I do not think we will find anyone who will say that. I believe it was the Chief Executive Officer of the Bank of Montreal who could not help himself from laughing in front of the television cameras when asked: "What do you think about this bail-out?" He said: "I cannot believe it. We cannot believe we are being bailed out at 100 cents on the dollar. We were thinking of writing off those deposits, but the Government of Canada in its wisdom is going to bail us out." The banks could not believe it.

It must be recognized that what we have here is a direct repudiation of the free market-place. What we have here is reward for failure. In other words, the message which has gone out is that if you are an imprudent lender and if you run a sloppy management system with your bank or trust company, do not worry about it because the Government of Canada will come in and rescue you. What kind of message is that to send out to the investment community of Canada and abroad? We are saying that pay-offs for incompetence is the rule of the day. We are telling these investors: "You are an incompetent banker, do not worry because the Government of Canada will stand behind you." I do not think that is the type of message the Government of Canada ought to be sending out at this point in time.

I say that $875 million, which is the amount of money involved in Bill C-79, is only the down payment—it is only the beginning. The Government has already paid out $60 million which some folks may have forgotten. That is what was paid out in the original bail-out scheme. We will also pay out the $60 million which the banks paid out in the first rescue package. Those banks have letters from the Government saying that their bail-out money is to be considered on the same level as a deposit. As a number of bank presidents have indicated, they are expecting a full return on their original bail-out contribution, which is another $60 million. Then, of course, there is the sum of $450 million in the CDIC which is part of the insurance plan to bail out those depositors who have $60,000 on deposit or less. It is obvious that that sum will come from the taxpayer of Canada in the short term. Then, there is the big figure of $1.8 billion which the Bank of Canada has advanced to the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank because of everyone running off with their deposits. They have to fill them up with taxpayers' money. We will not get a good portion of that money back. When it starts to come back it will not be next Friday or next year. It will take a number of years, perhaps even 40 or 50, before all assets can be dumped on to the market in western Canada. That cannot be done all at once. It will take many years for that money to be returned to the Central Bank. Again, it will cost a few hundred million dollars in addition to the sum we are debating here today. When one looks at the total picture, it could involve a billion plus—that plus could be another billion or another billion-and-a-half.

While we were falling over ourselves to get legislation through Parliament originally in this respect the Government was making plans to cut back increases in senior citizens' pensions because it said it could not afford an increase. The other day the Government said it could not afford to increase family allowances to keep up with the cost of living. The Government says it can afford $1 billion or $2 billion for the banks but it cannot afford to give any increases to mothers receiving family allowance cheques. There is no help being provided to ailing small businesses in the country. Nor is there any help being given to the drought-stricken ranchers in western Canada. There is no help being extended to those who cannot afford a first mortgage. The Government cannot just afford expenditures of that type. I could go on and on in this respect but I do not want to sound silly by going on for half an hour describing all the things the Government says it cannot afford.

Mr. Thacker: They are all getting help.

Mr. Riis: If they are all getting help then tell that to those drought-stricken people in British Columbia. Tell that to small-businessmen on whom the banks have pulled loans prematurely. The Hon. Member is wise enough to know that the banks have moved in on all sorts of small businesses in the country and pulled loans even when those loans are being kept up.

Mr. Gauthier: Tell that to the 15,000 public servants whose jobs will be cut.

Mr. Riis: The Government says that it cannot afford to help those whom I have outlined but when it comes to the banks there is not even a bloody murmur. There has not been a single member of the Government stand in his place to disagree with this move. Thus, I am assuming that the 210 government Members are in support of this bail-out package to the banks. The lowest blow of all is the handing over of hundreds of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money to unknown persons, unknown companies and unknown banks.

There is a certain morality involved in the House, Mr. Speaker. We are given the responsibility—nay, the duty—to disburse the moneys we collect from taxpayers wisely. All we have done in this instance is we have created a new financial black hole. A black hole has been created which we call the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. The Government has backed up its trucks to the big financial black hole and dumped money in by the hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. Malone: Keep dreaming!

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) says: "Keep dreaming." This is a nightmare and not a dream. This is a bloody financial nightmare. The Hon. Member says that he does not want to know the names of these depositors. He says he wants to give out a $20 million cheque to a numbered account held by a faceless phantom out there.

The Minister of State for Finance has been courteous enough to provide us with a list of categories. I appreciate her gesture. When we look at this list we notice that the largest beneficiaries of this bail-out-Bill—those who will receive in the order of $113 million—are the foreign banks. It will not be the small businesses which will receive this sum. It will be the foreign banks. I am speaking of the Deutsch Bank, the Bank of Singapore, Lloyds International, the Bank of America, the Bank of Tokyo, the poor Chase Manhattan Bank and the Hong Kong Bank. These are the banks which will receive taxpayers' money by the tens of millions of dollars without ever having to come forward to ask for it. That is what members of the Government say they support.

In terms of these banks, we are dealing with some of the most sophisticated investors in the country—in fact, some of the most sophisticated investors in the world. They knew that when they put their deposits in these banks they were not insured. They knew they were risky deposits. They receive higher returns because of that risk. However, in this case there is no risk involved. The discipline of the market-place has been eradicated. In other words, for the big investor there is no risk at all. When one considers that $332 million will be going to large financial institutions of one kind or another and $113 million to foreign banks such as the Bank of America—

Mrs. McDougall: You do not know that.

Mr. Riis: The Minister of State says to me, and rightly so, that I do not know that for sure. We do not know if it is the Bank of America, the Deutsch Bank, the Bank of Singapore or Barclays Bank. We do not know that for sure because she refuses to tell us. She is hiding behind the Bank Act which she says does not allow the release of those names. I say that if that is the case—and there is some question whether it is—

Mr. Frith: It is not.

Mr. Riis: There is no mention in the Bank Act that this information cannot be provided. There is also no mention in the Bank Act of bailing out banks which get into trouble. If the Minister wanted to introduce legislation today, because of this unique situation, which would allow the Government of Canada to release 100 cents on the dollar bail-out to insured depositors, I suspect that the Liberal Party—although I cannot speak for it—would support us and we would pass the legislation in 15 minutes. There are other ways, of course, Mr. Speaker. One recognizes, perhaps, that there are groups which are experiencing some hardships because they were encouraged to deposit money into an institution—which they should not have done—because of the words of the Minister of State for Finance After all, she is the highest authority in finance except for the Minister of Finance and he said the same things. They said, "we stand behind the bank. The bank is viable". If they say that, one has to believe them. If they misled the people of Canada, if they did not know or made a wrong commitment, that is their problem. If there are some hardship cases, why not put a special hardship fund together to pay out to those folks who are indeed going to be hard hit as a result of their lost deposit? That would cost perhaps $5 million or $10 million but it certainly would not cost $875 million.

● (1540)

If we are going to hand out money in a bankruptcy, it is unheard of that a person is given 100 cents on the dollar. When the assets of these two banks are liquidated, we will find out what the uninsured depositor ought to get. It might be 70 cents on the dollar or 30 cents on the dollar, but that is what they should get, if anything. They should not get 100 cents on the dollar. That is unheard of.

Let us ask ourselves, Mr. Speaker, what they do in the United States. It has had failed institutions. Are the uninsured depositors bailed out with taxpayers' money?

Mrs. McDougall: Sometimes.

Mr. Riis: They are not, Mr. Speaker. The United States does not do this. It uses other ways. It finds mergers to pull banks together but the United States does not come in with taxpayers' money to bail out uninsured depositors of its banks. But we do. The Government of Canada does. The people who are the most sophisticated financial investors in the world knew what they were doing with those deposits. They were uninsured. By the Government's action, we are rewarding failure and in a sense encouraging imprudent banking practices.

This Party, for one, will not support this Bill in any way, shape or form. We think it is inappropriate to spend the money of the taxpayers of Canada in that way.

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, I found the comments of the Hon. Member this afternoon a real revelation. I am impressed at how much in love he now appears to be with the banking system of the United States of America. I did not know that was part of the New Democratic Party philosophy. I listened to him say, "It's all for the banks, for the banks", and how that Party would have nothing to do with it. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the members of credit unions who have $100 million at stake will remember the position of the NDP on this Bill. I hope members of hospitals who have $5 million at stake will remember the position of the NDP on this Bill. I hope that small business with its $5 million at stake, the charitable organizations with their $15 million at stake and the municipalities with their $80 million at stake will remember the position of the NDP on this Bill. Those people are going to be very pleased with that Party. With respect to the $150 million to the provinces, it was only today during Question Period that someone in that Party moaned that we might actually cut back funding to the provinces and what a terrible thing that would be. The Minister said, of course, that the Government was not going to do that, but the NDP was worried about the provinces during Question Period and here it is now a quarter to four in the afternoon and the NDP does not care about the provinces any longer. It is prepared to let that $150 million go down the drain. What a turn-about in an hour and a half. It has been a real revelation; it really has.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, that is one of the most succinct questions I have heard from the Conservative Party in a long while.

Mr. Frith: And he didn't ask you a question.

Mr. Riis: He did not ask a question, he made a few statements. However, let me respond to the Hon. Member by saying that I indicated very clearly that I was unimpressed with any Government which spends hundreds of millions of dollars in bailing out foreign banks. I suppose the Hon. Member missed that comment in his list of categories. I wonder if the Hon. Member heard me when I said that we should put together a special hardship fund and if those groups, individuals and organizations could clearly demonstrate that they would be in a hardship situation if they were to lose their deposit, then we would return it. Of course, if there were hardship cases, we would do something. However, I do not think the Chase Manhattan or the Bank of America is a hardship case.

Mrs. Sparrow: You don't know that.

Mr. Riis: I do not know that because you refused to tell us. There is $130 million for foreign banks. These are not Schedule B banks, these are foreign banks. I am just assuming who they might be. I am assuming it is the Bank of America, the Chase Manhattan Bank, the Citibank. I want to find out but you refuse to tell me.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question, Mr. Speaker. I would like him to explain how it is he supports taxpayers money being—

An Hon. Member: You're not supposed to ask questions.

Mr. Riis: I know I am not supposed to but I suspect the Hon. Member has the integrity to stand up and answer my question. Would he say whether he supports using taxpayers' money to bail out foreign banks and large financial institutions which knew what they were getting into, if he believes in a free market-place?

Mr. Fraleigh: Mr. Speaker, I thought the questions were to be directed to the person who had made the speech.

Mr. Riis: You guys never make any speeches.

Mr. Fraleigh: I know that the New Democratic Party has some pie in the sky economic philosophy which would allow it to make fish of one and foul of another.

Mr. Cassidy: Pie in the sky? You should talk.

Mr. Fraleigh: I want those Hon. Members opposite to be sure to go back to their credit unions, many of which have a very small capital base. If their names were disclosed, it would probably ruin them overnight. I want them to go back to their people and tell them that. I wish those Hon. Members would, for my edification, tell me how they are going to explain that to those credit unions.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, first, I asked the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard) a question. I realized he probably would not answer, but the point is that we very seldom have an opportunity to question Conservatives because they very seldom participate in this kind of debate. We hope that that will change, however, as the opportunity presents itself.

Mr. Frith: As we come closer to the next election.

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Member talks about "pie in the sky". We are talking about a $1 billion pie today. It is perhaps a $1.5 billion pie or, perhaps, a $2 billion pie. I believe the Hon. Member who just spoke is a new Member of Parliament and I want to remind him of the fact that there was a provincial Government in this country which did not have a deficit. That Government was deficit-free for years and years. That province was the Province of Saskatchewan under a new Democratic Party Government. For many, many years it was the only province which had no deficit.

Mr. Malone: False.

Mr. Riis: That's not false.

Mr. Malone: That is false.

Mr. Riis: Well, stand up and make a speech some time, will you? The point I want to make is that the Hon. Member raises the question of a "pie in the sky" philosophy—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) has a point of order.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, the Province of Alberta did not have a debt.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order, of course. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has the floor.

Mr. Riis: I stand corrected, Mr. Speaker. With a multibillion dollar heritage fund and sitting on the vast oil reserves it does—our version of Saudi America—no, Alberta did not have a deficit. However, I want to talk about Saskatchewan, a have-not province. That situation does not exist any longer. It has a deficit today and it is quite a large deficit because of the change of Government.

Mr. Cassidy: Under a Tory Government.

Mr. Riis: Under a Conservative Government that province went from being deficit free to having a significantly large deficit.

Mr. McCurdy: How much is it?

Mr. Riis: It is over $1 billion now.

Mr. McCurdy: Why doesn't the Government give the Government of Saskatchewan the $1 billion instead of giving it to the banks?

Mr. Riis: That is a reasonable suggestion, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps $1 billion would help out the Tory Government in Saskatchewan. The point I want to make is that—

• (1550)

Mr. Fraleigh: Answer the question.

Mr. Riis: In my speech, and in response to my friend from Guelph, I indicated—

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Riis: I will be waiting for those Members to make their speeches later. Let me tell the Hon. Member that we said that a hardship fund could have been established to assist any firm that experienced serious financial difficulty by not being bailed out beyond the $60,000. We say that if there is an ailing firm in western Canada, or anywhere in Canada, as a result of the collapse of these two institutions let us establish a special fund to assist those individuals, firms, corporations or agencies. That is the kind of response that I would give to any credit union or organization experiencing financial difficulty as a result of this collapse.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I believe that my hon. friend, the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), is saying quite specifically that despite being the defenders of free enterprise, the Conservatives are effectively advocating imprudent and irresponsible banking because they are prepared to bail out to the last penny people who made deposits in these institutions without any regard to whether these institutions were being run responsibly. I believe he is also saying that the New Democrats are committed to a prudent banking system as opposed to irresponsibility on the Government side.

Mr. Riis: Let me remind Members opposite particularly that their reputation on Bay Street today has been tarnished as a result of this decision to bail out uninsured depositors. To my knowledge there is not a single respected financier who supports the Government's decision.

If some of the 210 Members opposite know a responsible and respected financier who will say that a bail-out of 100 cents on the dollar under these circumstances is the appropriate action, I challenge them to rise in their places, even on a point of order, to tell me the names of those financiers. Certainly when they make their speeches they could indicate who supports them. Really, do they not also feel embarrassed that the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Finance got them into this mess?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, when the finance committee held meetings in May and June of this year, it heard evidence about the tremendous difficulties facing the Canadian Commercial Bank. The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) stated that if it was assisted it would continue to be a viable organization. Could the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) give us an indication of how many hundreds of millions of dollars less we would be asked to approve in this Bill if we had faced the real facts at that time and closed the operations of Canadian Commercial Bank or both banks at that time?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, it has become clear that when the banking witnesses offered the Government unlimited staff to go in and seriously evaluate the situation and identify the problem, the Government did not bother and said that it did not need their help and the extra staff. It was not until the eleventh hour, when Mr. Hitchman, the retired banker, was sent in and then reported that the bank was too far gone when the collapse actually took place.

I suggest that the Government did not act on the best advice of the financial community at that time. I might add that had it acted on the Canadian Commercial Bank when the offers of assistance first came from the banking community, I do not believe we would be dealing with the collapse of the Northland Bank today. I believe it was the Minister's comments and the run on the Canadian Commercial Bank that led to the demise of the Northland Bank as well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak in support of Bill C-79. In view of the urgency among uninsured depositors of the Canadian Commercial and Northland Banks to receive the payments which this Bill would authorize, I do not intend to unduly prolong this debate. It is important that the Bill come to an early vote and be sent to a legislative committee for detailed consideration.

I think it is important, however, to emphasize just how vital it is to western Canada that Parliament should act promptly on this legislation. There are some people who argue that we should reject this proposal, that these depositors should be left to sink or swim. The image that comes to mind is that of the ocean liner whose captain refused to stop and put out lifeboats to rescue the crew of a foundering fishing boat.

There are also those who feel that the names of the banks' depositors whose deposits exceed the insured limit should be revealed to all and sundry prior to this Bill being debated. I wonder if those who advocate such a revelation would also like Canadian income tax returns published in book form? The privacy which a depositor expects with regard to his or her banking arrangements is just as important, in my view, as the privacy accorded to an income tax return.

I do not think that it is discounting the importance of the deposit insurance principle when we recognize that there are particular circumstances which had to be considered in the case of the failure of these two banks. The Government should be commended for its willingness to stop and pay attention to the problems raised by these bank failures and to show concern for economic dislocations which these developments threatened in western Canada.

Anyone with a first-hand knowledge of how business operates will appreciate the danger to a business should a large part of its funds be tied up in another institution or lost in the failure of a bank. Some businesses cannot survive the shock and go bankrupt even though they are innocent third parties which deposited their funds in good faith. Moreover, bankruptcies can have a domino effect, hurting still other businesses, supplies and employees. Even if the business depositor manages to avoid bankruptcy, it is still highly likely that her or she will incur very substantial costs in terms of lost funds and unforeseen expenses.

We must recognize clearly that it is not possible for the federal Government to come to the rescue of everyone who is hurt by bankruptcy. Moreover, the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) has made the important point that we are not establishing a blanket policy of rescuing uninsured depositors in the future event of failure of financial institutions belonging to the Canada Deposit Insurance system.

However, we cannot ignore the magnitude of the problem that has been created by the failures of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. Granted, they were not major players on the national banking scene, but they did play a very significant role in the economies of the western provinces. The potential losses to uninsured depositors, estimated at some $875 million in this Bill, would have an impact in the western business community that we simply cannot disregard.

The figures that were provided by the Minister of State for Finance show just how large that impact could be if we do not act. In the two banks there are 437 business corporations with uninsured deposits totalling over $140 million. Small unincorporated businesses have another $4.7 million at stake. However, the potential problem is far wider than those figures alone indicate. Over 750 individuals had a total of some $27 million in deposits not protected by CDIC. Religious and charitable organizations stand to lose more than $21 million; hostpitals $4.7 million; school boards and other educational institutions some $3.3 million and labour unions close to $7 million. The list goes on and on. The credit union movement has a very large amount at stake, nearly $130 million in the two banks. Municipal governments, some of them in eastern Canada, stand to lose over $80 million in uninsured deposits and provincial governments stand to lose close to $145 million. That is still only a partial list of the amounts involved. It is obvious from these figures that we are dealing with a very substantial problem which, due to its very size, demands special consideration.

● (1600)

The Government has stated a policy of supporting and promoting the development of regional financial institutions and I commend it for this approach. Regional institutions can fill a very real need in their own areas. In the case of depositors in these two banks, their deposits were a vote of confidence in a regional financial institution. There can be no doubt that one consideration which we must keep in mind is the question of confidence in other financial institutions. That confidence could be damaged if we decide that uninsured depositors in these two banks must absorb losses in the amounts I have just indicated.

There is just one culprit in this whole affair, Mr. Speaker, and that is the infamous National Energy Program which came down in 1980. These two banks were born during a buoyant economy in the West. If they had been able to hold on until the steadily mounting benefits of the Western Accord had reached a level to sustain them, this whole affair might never have happened. How were western Canadians to know that the main source of that buoyant economy was to be raped by the machinations of the Liberal Government in 1980? I personally would not like to feel that the future of other regional banks in our country is jeopardized by this unhappy affair. It was brought about, without any doubt whatsoever, by the actions of an eastern oriented and anti-western regime which wanted for itself the hard-earned profits of western innovation and determined effort.

This Bill deserves the support of this House, but what is more important is that this support should not be delayed. It has been argued that adoption of the Bill should be stalled until Mr. Justice Estey completes his inquiry. Nothing has been advanced to suggest that the issues to be examined by that inquiry have any relevance whatsoever to the question of reimbursing these uninsured depositors. It is misleading to suggest otherwise.

Let us consider the question of reimbursing these depositors on the merits of that issue alone. The issues which Mr. Justice Estey will be examining are important in themselves and the Government has ensured that there will be the widest possible inquiry. Surely, however, the question of whether or not to reimburse the depositors is quite irrelevant to the inquiry. To delay the Bill on those false grounds would be a mistake. The only result would be to add to the uncertainties and costs facing the uninsured depositors. No payments can be made until this Bill becomes law. Prolonged delay of this Bill would simply add to the depositors' costs in the form of interest earnings foregone on their funds and extra costs incurred in borrowing the necessary interim funding. I therefore urge all Hon. Members to recognize their responsibilities and allow speedy passage of this legislation which is so vital to so many businesses, organizations, and individuals in western Canada and elsewhere.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, there has been the frequent expression of hope that the government Party would enter the debate in a constructive way. I really must say that I am shocked to hear the allegation of the moral equivalent of racism. The situation of the western banks exists because the East has raped the West. What nonsense! I hope the Member will reconsider the significance of her comments in terms of Canadian unity and the need for all of us to address the situation that is before us in a reasoned way.

When we are talking about reasons, let us pose these questions as matters of principle. The Member says that this bail-out should not be identified as establishing a new principle. How can it be otherwise? Are we now eschewing what I thought were the very fundamental principles motivating the Government, described in a variety of ways and in various contexts? Let private enterprise, in an unfettered way, proceed to take risks. Risk is what makes the economy go and you are now telling us that in this particular situation risk ought not to mean anything because if the effects of taking risks and losing becomes severe enough in its implications as to involve large amounts of money, then the risk should be eliminated.

The Member says that this is a different situation because the amount of money is so large. Well, suppose the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce should find itself in the same situation. My God, the risk would be huge. Would she then argue that it is the East and we therefore should not do it? What principle will one apply? She says that we should bail out those who are uninsured. Where is the principle of insurance involved here? There are all kinds of situations in this world where people are not insured for a variety of things. I think that many of us can identify with the homeowner who has 10 children and is uninsured. I think that most of us would be far more sympathetic to furnishing the money needed to rebuild and re-establish a home for a family in that situation than to placing money in the hands of those who ought to be sophisticated enough to know that there is a danger of losing. How does one ensure prudent investment if there is a vague assurance by the Tory Government, which is so clearly identified with free enterprise, that even imprudent investment in the last analysis is deserving of a reward?

I ask the Member to please elaborate on what principle she has identified herself with. What principle motivates this free enterprise party of which she is a member in this particular situation? How does she preclude a future situation in which the same kind of bail-out will occur? Tell me why, again in terms of this instance, it is not reasonable to identify those who are going to receive the money whereas in bankruptcies in every other similar situation, where they only get part of the money that they would have lost, they must be identified.

There are a number of questions there and I pose them because on the one hand I think that the speech of the Hon. Member was not based on what I thought were the principles motivating her particular political philosophy, and, on the other hand, I think that much of what she said is not only not reasoned, but dangerous in that it sets one part of the country against the other.

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) obviously does not understand the value of regional banking. To compare a large major bank such as the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce to a small regional bank in western Canada is to indicate that you have no idea of what the West has been through. I had the opportunity in 1980 to come to Ontario to try to explain to some of the people here what the effects would be in western Canada if the National Energy Program went through. There was high employment not only in the West, but right across the country. The Member does not seem to realize that the West does need regional banking. We need banks that will take care of small businesses. We need banks that will take care of private individuals. We have banks which will look after hospitals and municipalities. Even municipalities from Ontario were investing in our banks because they cared about the small person. This is why regional banking is so necessary. I am not pitting the east against the west. I am saying exactly what happened. If we had had a decent energy program, these banks probably would never have fallen.

It is very interesting how people can rise and criticize now. Obviously the regulatory system has failed to adapt to changes in the banking system over the last eight or ten years. The Inspector General will simply require more authority and power to go in and review all operations of all banks. We will require more inspectors and tougher audits in order to keep the banking system straight.

I support the Minister of State for Finance in that she put forth a Green Paper to review the banking system. Hopefully we will move forward on that, so that there will not be another disaster in western Canada or in eastern Canada. We are one nation and we stand together.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) on her excellent and positive address. It was refreshing. It was like a fresh breath of air to hear someone speak positively from that side of the House. I congratulate the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: Hon. Members of the NDP are making a lot of noise. They are opposing the Bill. If they were in power, they would nationalize all banks, and we would be responsible for every cent they spend. They keep on saying that we are paying the banks. I am glad the Hon. Member for Calgary South put that straight. We are not paying the banks anything. We are compensating the people. I suppose the NDP would like to see payment denied the people who put their pension moneys into the banks and had no reason to believe that they would fail. I suppose NDP Members would rejoice if we denied the school boards, school teachers' associations and the Alberta Government telephone people that invested their pension funds. These are ordinary, everyday people. They are not rich and wealthy people. I tell the NDP Members to wake up. Who are they fighting for? Common people of the country had every reason to believe that they could put their money in the banks. Because of non-failure for many years, there is an obligation to look after the people, not the banks. We are not putting money into the hands of the banks. We are looking after the people who put their money in the banks and trusted them. That is what we want to continue. There is a world of difference between giving money to the people and giving money to the banks. Having listened to some speeches, I get the idea that they think we will make millionaires out of the banks, out of an odd bank manager or shareholder. This Bill will help people who put their money in the banks.

Mr. Frith: People who trusted your Government.

Mr. Taylor: I see the Hon. Liberal Member shaking his head. There would never have been a bank failure in the West if it had not been for the national energy policy. That was the beginning of it. It took money out of the pockets of the people. The Liberal plan was to discriminate, destroy and cripple industry in the west. Now the Liberals rise and indicate sorrow. They did it. They have the gall to rise when we talk about the savings of the people of the west.

I enjoyed the Hon. Member's comments about the national energy policy. Would she once again emphasize that this money is being paid to the people, so that it might get into the heads of Liberal and NDP Members?

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for his very kind remarks. He is absolutely right. We are paying the moneys to the uninsured depositors, to the people of western Canada as well as those of eastern Canada. We are also paying the hospitals and the municipalities which invested pension funds. That is about whom the Government cares. That is why it is necessary for us to act immediately and get the Bill before the legislative committee.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 46, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James)—Customs and Excise—Service at Blue Water bridge international crossing; the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—Indian Affairs—Departmental reorganization—Effect on employees; the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson)—Air Transport—Airline ticket taxes—Effect on northern travellers.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 7379).

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, over the course of the next 15 minutes to 20 minutes, I hope to put this debate into references which the average people on the street can understand. Frankly, there is a great deal of confusion in the minds of the Canadian public about what exactly the Bill is supposed to do and about the bail-out package. This comes as no surprise to me, or to many Members of Parliament. Many people do not even understand the basic concept of what is a billion dollars. Each day during Question Period Members of Parliament, in an attempt to get average Canadians to understand the sum of a billion dollars, use the term "one thousand million dollars". Part of the problem is to make average Canadians understand that amount. That is complicated by the fact that there is a great deal of confusion on the part of average Canadians about what the Bill will do.

What is the difference between the rights of shareholders and the rights of depositors? That may well be understood by some Hon. Members of the House, but I do not think that it is well understood by the majority of Canadians. If they began to understand some of the definitions, then we could begin to focus the debate as it should be focused. What is at the heart of discussion today is not so much the fact that a bank collapsed; at the heart of the discussion is the trust issue. Fundamental to the way in which the House of Commons operates, we must have a degree of civility and a degree of trust between both sides of the House. That trust factor was broken in this debate by the Government front-benches several months ago.

I should like to bring into the debate the chronological series of events which occurred last spring so that average Canadians can begin to understand why we in the Opposition at this stage, now that we have had the collapse of a commercial bank, are taking our position. Back some time prior to March 25, in other words, in the months of February and March 1985, a degree of concern was raised by inspectors in the banking system as to the viability of the Canadian Commercial Bank. I would assume at that stage that those inspectors would report to the Bank of Canada, namely to Mr. Bouey, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, and indicate that they had a great deal of concern about the commercial and financial integrity and viability of the CCB. In other words, warning bells would sound. This is what inspection systems are all about. Therefore, the inspection system was operating under normal conditions at that stage. Once the Governor of the Bank of Canada was handed a report by his Inspector General, he had no choice but to report to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who is the Minister responsible in the House of Commons for the way in which the Bank Act is to be administered. He takes the political responsibility.

Let us for the first time in this debate separate the two responsibilities. There is an administrative responsibility which is in the hands of the Governor of the Bank of Canada and his officials, and there is a political responsibility for the banks which rests with the Minister of Finance. In this case, as we did in previous Governemnts, because of the work-load on the Minister of Finance the position of Minister of State for Finance was created. I would also assume that the events which transpired in late February and March, 1985, indicated that the Minister of Finance, who was preoccupied at the time, no doubt, with consultations in order to bring forward his first Budget on May 23, indicated to his Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) that he wished her to take responsibility for shepherding the problems of the Canadian Commercial Bank through the various stages for which the Government had responsibility.

I suppose it is going to be up to the Estey Commission to determine exactly what were the prime reasons for the collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank. I doubt very much if Mr. Justice Estey is going to comment on the political considerations that went into the bail-out of the bank but rather he will focus his investigations on other considerations that led to the collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank.

Those questions that are going to be raised by Mr. Justice Estey deserve to be raised and the Canadian taxpayers have the right to know the answers to them. Equally, or I would say even more important, the Canadian taxpayers have a right to demand of their political masters, namely the Government of Canada, in this case the Conservative Government and its front-benchers, political accountability for their actions in this whole process of the bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank.

There are rumours to the effect that the Minister of Finance and his junior Minister, the Minister of State for Finance both personally opposed the bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank. There are other rumours as well, that it was the direct intervention of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) that led to the decision by the Government to bail out the bank. If rumours are correct, and this is why it was rather interesting to hear some of the comments from the Members of Parliament from western Canada, the Prime Minister made his decision not on facts that he had in his hands at that moment but on the basis that he did not want to have the political responsibility to be the Prime Minister of the country at the time when it had its first bank failure in almost 62 years. He wished to make sure that he would not have any stains on his own being concerning the collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank.

For that reason, on the weekend leading to March 25 the Prime Minister and his senior financial advisers, including the two Ministers I mentioned previously, despite the fact that they did not have any idea of the worth of the assets of the Canadian Commercial Bank, decided to bail out the bank. That decision having been made by the Government of Canada, I would like the people here in the galleries and across this country to understand how the political system works. Once that decision was made, representations were made by the Prime Minister and by his Finance Minister to make sure that the Official Opposition in this country would agree to that package bail-out that they had agreed to on that weekend. Frankly, they said, trust us. Here is the trust factor. They said "Trust us when we say that this bail-out package is going to work and, if you raise any serious questions on the floor of the House of Commons in Question Period on Monday, March 25 there is going to be a run on the assets of the Canadian Commercial Bank the like of which you have never seen."

Members of the Government said, "As a responsible Official Opposition, we are asking you to take the words of the Minister of State for Finance, the Minister of Finance and the word of the Prime Minister of this country that the bail-out package that we put together for the Canadian Commercial Bank is going to save that institution."

That was the trust factor that led to our decision on this side of the House to support the bail-out package at that time. Clearly, as has been pointed out today in interventions, the NDP Party wished to have no part of that bail-out. That is fine, they can answer for their Party. I am just indicating to you, Mr. Speaker, that the reason that the Liberal Party acquiesced to the demands for that bail-out were because we trusted the Government and we understood as well, as the Official Opposition, that we had a responsibility to the financial structures of this country and simply do not for frivolous reasons decide not to take the word of a Minister of Finance on such an important issue as the potential failure of a bank in this country. Therefore the trust factor was entered into for the first time.

Since that time we have had reason to doubt why we decided to take the word of these Ministers that I have mentioned but surely it is critical to the political process that when a decision is made, when a Government gives its stamp of approval to a bail-out that the bail-out had better work. As my leader said this morning, if there is going to be a bail-out, make sure to get to the bottom of the boat, get all the water out and keep the boat afloat. What happened in this case was that after the bail-out package was presented on the floor of the House of Commons, it was another three months before the Minister responsible asked for a separate accounting of the assets to occur.

Mrs. McDougall: Wrong.

Mr. Frith: These are the events that have been chronologically put forward by the questions and responses made by the Minister of State for Finance on the floor of the House of Commons. To suggest "wrong", good heavens, Mr. Speaker, if the bail-out was going to work last March 25 the bail-out should never have occurred again in September of this year because the price tags have certainly increased in the intervening six months.

I come back to this trust factor. The Opposition trusted that that bail-out package would work and so did every one of the depositors who had money in those banks. They took the word of the Ministers. Unfortunately the Ministers made a mistake. Clearly something happened from March 25 to September 1 of this year in which the wind-up of the Canadian Commercial Bank was announced by the Minister of State for Finance. In those intervening six months I have no idea about which institutions and which individuals took out moneys and at least saved their deposits, but there were a lot of institutions in this country and a lot of people who took the word of the Government and lost their money.

Therefore, I come back to what is at the heart of the issue. Is it a trust factor? I say it is. What led to the decisions that made for bad management of the Canadian Commercial Bank? Was it the National Energy Program? I scoff at the idea but let's take that suggestion for one moment. It comes as a surprise to me to learn that the Members of Parliament from western Canada want to indicate that it was the National Energy Program that shut down the Canadian Commercial Bank.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Frith: They do not want us to talk about the mismanagement at the Canadian Commercial Bank. They do not want to talk about the collapse of banks in the State of California, such as the Westland Bank, during the same period of time. There is no National Energy Program in California that I am aware of. They want to quietly go over the fact that the Continental Bank of Illinois collapsed and had to have a bail-out package by its federal Government in the United States in this past 12 months. Was there a National Energy Program in effect south of the border as well? No. I do not have the time so I am not going to digress into what happened as a result of the National Energy Program in some other sectors of the economy in western Canada. The point I am making is that there was bad management at the Canadian Commercial Bank. Those questions will have to be answered by Mr. Justice Estey. I will be very plain about what should be answered on the floor of the House of Commons and that is the political accountability of the two Ministers who guaranteed, in their words, that this bail-out package was going to work. That is why this Bill does nothing, nor does the manoeuvre of getting the problem of the Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank into the hands of Chief Justice Estey take away from the fact that this Government should have political responsibility here.

I want to talk a bit about the essence of the Bill. It is going to cost, as I mentioned earlier, an estimated $875 million of taxpayers' money to undertake the bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. In addition there was the original Bank of Canada's $225 million that was put in. Let us say $1 billion. Let us put that in some perspective. We had a report a year ago that said it would only cost $600 million to clean up International Nickel Company's smelting operations, Noranda Company's smelting operations in Quebec and the Hudson Bay's smelting operations in the Province of Manitoba. These are the smelting operations that have made the major contributions to acid rain in this country. In other words, this bank bail-out is going to cost the Canadian taxpayers more than it would cost to clean up acid rain. That is the perspective that one has to look at. Put another way, and this is the only other thing I am going to have to say about this, it is going to cost every man, woman and child in this country $35 each to bail out this bank.

The Members of Parliament for the Conservative Party sat here, wrapping themselves around the western flag, the Alberta flag, around the fact that these poor depositors need bail-outs. Let us take a look at the rationale. I come back to this. A bad decision is a bad decision whether it is made in western Canada, central Canada, Quebec or the Maritimes. That is number one.

Second, before we give approval to the $875-million bail-out, we would like to see tabled on the floor of the House of Commons a list of the names of the depositors involved. We have been told by the Minister of State for Finance that she is now wrapping herself in the privacy provisions of the Bank Act. She has said that the Bank Act prevents her from revealing the names of the depositors. We are not dealing with the Bank Act in this legislation. The reason this Bill is before us is because the Bank Act will not allow the Minister to give back moneys to the depositors, and that is why she has come before us with this Bill. Therefore, the Bank Act does not apply in this case and it should not apply in the case of the release of the names of depositors who want their money back.

There is a good, legal case to be made that it is not the Bank Act at issue here nor is it the Bill that is before us. Frankly, what is at issue is part of the Winding-up Act. In my opinion the Winding-up Act allows for a person filing under the Winding-up Act who wishes to have compensation to be forced to sign a release indicating that his name can be made public. It seems fundamental to parliamentary democracy and accountability that when $875 million of taxpayers' money is going out the front door, my constituents should at least know who it is they are using the $875 million to bail out. However, that is not the case. We are told we are not allowed to ask who the depositors are.

I said that this is a very complex subject, and that is quite true. Frankly, most Canadians can better understand the political errors that were made in the "tunagate" affair than they can the failure of the Canadian Commercial Bank. That does not surprise me because they understand what it means to have a million cans of rancid tuna fish on the supermarket shelves. They can conceptualize what that is all about. They cannot conceptualize the meaning of $875 million and $225 million. I sure know one thing, though, Mr. Speaker. What they do understand is that it is not right that the Government is bailing out every one of the depositors in the bank with taxpayers' dollars while not coming to the aid of the shareholders. This comes as a surprise.

Let us return to the events of March 25. The reason we have a bail-out package and the reason this is such an exceptional occurrence is that the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Finance put their words on the line when they said the bail-out package would work. That is the only reason we are bailing out the depositors above and beyond the $60,000 to which they are entitled under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation's scheme. If that is the case, why is it just that the depositors be fully reimbursed while every one of the small pension funds in this country that invested in the shares of that bank will not be helped at all by this bail-out package?

I have heard from Hon. Members opposite who have asked if we are trying to delay this Bill and who have said that credit unions in western Canada will be down our backs because we are delaying the passage of the Bill. They have said that the poor pension funds that have deposits in this bank will complain. Damn it, if they are worried about them, why are they not worried about the shareholders who are losing just as much as the depositors? We have already broken all the rules by bringing foward this Bill to bail out the depositors to the tune of $875 million.

Let us not deal with whether the depositors are foreign multinational banking interests, credit unions or pension funds. Please, do me a favour and do not suggest to me that because we want to delay the passage of this Bill until we find out who the depositors are, we are not being a good Opposition. Frankly, I think that Hon. Members opposite should look into their own hearts. They should go back to their home towns this coming weekend and ask their constituents whether or not they feel it is fair that they are being asked to fork over $35 for every man, woman and child to pay for this bail-out. I say this in all sincerity as most of us do go home every weekend. I do not know in which world Members opposite have been living but they certainly have not walked the main streets of their home towns and asked their constituents whether or not they think this is fair. I can tell you the answer to that question right now, Mr. Speaker. They think that this bail-out is a complete desaster.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to take some time during this debate to try to set the record straight. Members of the Liberal Party have spoken in animated indignation and have tried to pretend that in this chain of dominoes, it is only the last domino to fall that caused the whole collapse. The truth of the matter is that we are faced with a history of western economics which was affected by a Liberal regime that preceded the present Government. That Liberal regime brought about the most destructive ruination of the western economy that ever took place in a free, western, industrialized nation.

The Liberals of the previous administration basically caused the collapse of the western economy. They chased $20 billion and 250,000 jobs out of the Canadian economy. Now they have the audacity to come to the House of Commons, bearing in mind that that kind of drain of economic activity out of any region of this country would cause ramifications, and try to pretend that this happened with the flick of a switch yesterday.

One thing about billions of dollars is that that kind of capital has a sort of momentum. Very rarely if ever would billions of dollars ever fall into a state of ruin overnight. The National Energy Program chased from the western sedimentary basin 50 per cent of the drilling rigs into Venezuela, Mexico, Oklahoma, Montana, Colorado, Australia and the North Sea off the coast of England. It chased away with it the talent, the workers and the capital. Along with that went some 250,000 Canadian jobs. After taking that much of the economy out of the country through the National Energy Program, it simply is not possible for Liberal Members to rise and say that this collapse took place because of recent events.

For one not to suspect that Liberal Members had some responsibility for the collapse of the two western regional banks would be for one not to suspect the tomcat when the canary is missing.

Mr. McMillan: Wait a minute.

Mr. Malone: Sorry, Sir. I forgot that your name is Tom. It would be like not suspecting any cat when the canary is missing. The truth of the matter is that the western economy went straight downhill following the introduction of the National Energy Program in 1980.

Just as an indication of what happened when that program was turned around through the signing of the Western Accord under the present Government, numerous companies have announced an increase in their investment intentions. For example, Imperial Oil has indicated that it intends to invest some $1 billion in 1985. Shell Oil recently announced its plans for $500 million capital spending for 1985 plus $200 million in expansion for its oilsands plants near Peace River. The Peace River expansion is expected to generate 900 person-years of direct employment and 1,800 person-years of spinoff employment. Other major investments include $1.75 billion by Trans-Canada Pipelines; a $500 million expansion by Nova in its natural gas generating system; $450 million for expansion by BP Canada in its Wolf Lake heavy oil project; and numerous other spinoffs.

Taken in context for the country, in 1980 we were in a period of recession with one shining star in the whole economic picture. I am speaking of the energy sector. That was just not good enough for a Liberal Government. It could not stand to have the western part of the country working with some type of success.

The National Energy Program introduced five new sets of taxes. In the first year the program was in place the tax on that particular industry in that particular region of the country doubled. In the second year it doubled again. In four years $20 billion drained out of the area, chased not only by capital but by jobs and investment. The whole economy shrunk. Now these pompous people stand up in their places and say: "You killed two banks." They pretend as if it happened today. They pretend that since we came into government a year ago all of the tragedies which have happened to the western economy happened within the year.

The truth of the matter is that the tragedy started in 1980 with the National Energy Program. It started when we chased our jobs to Venezuela, Mexico, the United States and Australia. Anyone who lived in the western basin knew families who were being damaged and hurt by the spinoff of the Liberal policies. These policies had an effect on the Nisku Industrial Park which is located just south of Edmonton. The Hon. Member for Wetaskawin (Mr. Schellenberger), if he were here now, could relate firsthand the experience of grown people crying as they sold off their investments for a fraction of their worth. I am speaking of major million dollar investments which were being sold for less than 10 per cent of their value. I speak of the community of Brooks in the riding of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), which is a service sector community. It virtually dried up because the activity simply disappeared. I speak of the expansion in Calgary's downtown core which simply froze as a result of one single policy of the Liberal Government. Those Liberals have the audacity to stand here and pretend the collapse of these two banks happened simply because the Conservatives came to power one year ago. In their own pontification they may foool some people. They may make Canadians somewhere believe that somehow this collapse was as a result of events very recent. However, they will not fool the people of the energy sector in western Canada who know that these two banks made the majority of their loans to the small business community and to the service sector of the oil industry. By and large the deposits of these banks were related to the growth which was taking place in a province which depended upon the energy sector. When the National Energy Program was put into place it killed the economic motivation of that area which subsequently began to shut down its potential.

With respect to the impact of the NEP, the Syncrude project was slowed down as a result of it. The Cold Lake heavy oil project was stopped. I will come back to the specifics of how important that was. New tarsands plants were stopped. The Judy Creek project was put on hold, as was the Alsands project. The Petro-Canada-Nova project was stopped, as was the Lloydminister heavy oil upgrader. Sometimes people think that when we speak about these matters we are speaking principally about regional issues—apples in the Annapolis Valley or the Okanagan, grain in Saskatchewan or Alberta, oil in Alberta or manufacturing in Ontario. The truth of the matter is that every sector of the economy impacts on every other sector. One oilsands plant in its 25-year lifetime will put $108 billion of direct spending into the Province of Ontario.

I just read a list of a number of projects which were closed down as a result of the National Energy Program. We will feel the impact of the Liberals coming to power in 1980 for the rest of this century. It is not surprising, or it ought not to be, that there are ramifications with respect to bank closures because the economy was so adversely and unfairly affected. It was affected by a Government which had grossly over-spent and allowed its debt to spiral and spiral. Irrespective of the constitutional guarantee with respect to resource ownership for the provinces, it chose to directly tax the resources in the Province of Alberta as if they belonged to the federal Government and it upped taxes to such a level that after four years it amounted to $20 billion. Some 250,000 jobs fled the country. Then, the Liberals over the past week have pretended in animated indignation that the last domino to fall was the only one that mattered. They speak as if there is no history to the issue. How cynical can the Liberals be? When they point their finger at us the other fingers on their hands are pointing back at them. They are the real cause for the ruination of our banks today.

We saw a great many cut-backs, reduction in services, rigs leaving the country, plant expansons being stopped along with tarsands projects, all at a time when we were importing 200,000 barrels of oil a day from off-shore. It was in that context which the Liberals stopped the expansion in western Canada through an unfair and unmitgated tax regime.

In our first year in power we brought in the Western Accord and the Atlantic Accord. We have the data to establish the turn-around in western Canada. In fact, you can sense that it is more buoyant. As an absolute statement of fact I say that had the Western Accord been put in place two-and-one-half years ago these two banks would not have been in a state of collapse. Moreover, had the National Energy Program not been introduced, these banks would not have collapsed.

Mr. Gauthier: That is nonsense.

Mr. Malone: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is taking the opportunity to laugh. Somehow he does not believe that $20 billion can leave a relatively small economic sector and not have any ramifications. He ought to be one who should know. He is an experienced Member of Parliament. With the introduction of the incremental oil revenue tax, the oil export tax, the natural gas and liquid gas tax, the Canadian ownership charge tax and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax the taxation to the region doubled in one year and doubled again in the next, which took $20 billion out of the economy. Liberals opposite laugh because they think those taxes had nothing to do with the collapse of these banks today. It had everything to do with the banks and their collapse. It is the Liberal history which brought about the demise of the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank. Their collapse rests on the backs of the Liberals since it was Liberal policy which brought about the ruination of the economy in western Canada on which those banks depended for their financial generation. The National Energy Program confiscated 25 per cent of the oil companies' assets in the offshore drilling and north slope. In addition to five new taxes which doubled in each of the first two years, it also confiscated in the offshore situation 25 per cent of its assets, all because of one piece of legislation. Those Liberals stand in the House and pretend to be squeaky clean, saying the banks went down and the Conservatives did it. No Canadian is going to believe such tom-foolery. Canadians know very well, I am sure, that there is a history to this problem. We do not lose billions of dollars in an overnight flash. That comes about because of significant and long-term ramifications of change. When these changes come into fruition during the period of a new administration, it is nothing but pure audacity to stand up and point one's finger and pretend it all happened within the time of the present administration.

● (1650)

We have the loss of $20 billion. What did that do? The loss of $20 billion meant the loss of jobs. It meant that our dollar, relative to that of the United States, lost its value. The loss of $20 billion and the lost value of our dollar vis-a-vis the United States meant that interest rates went up. All of that is part of the impact which caused the terrible recession which followed throughout the rest of the tenure of the Trudeau years. The Liberals did not care about the principal economic engine of growth which at that time was the energy industry in Canada. It did not matter to that Government that we were importing more than 200 million barrels of oil per day. That Government not only allowed the industry to shrink but caused it to do so. It caused the industry to have a decrease in its economic initiatives. Subsequently, we find ourselves in this situation where we are now bearing the unfortunate ramifications of the Liberal policies. We must stand here and watch the Liberals blame someone else for their own fault.

The people who have caused this dilemma like to pretend that there is someone else they can blame. Prior to the National Energy Program, the oil industry was the one bright light in the whole of the Canadian economy. Before May 1980, most of our rigs were working in western Canada. Following the National Energy Program, in May 1983, one year later, we had 51 rigs drilling, 17 rigs moving, and 388 rigs which were shut down, stopped, closed. When we talk about the rigs, we in western Canada saw the photographs of line-ups of trucks at the Montana border. Most people do not understand what it is to move a rig. They think all you need is a truck or two. It takes 16 liner trucks to move a rig. It costs $500,000 to move a rig from Alberta to Texas. We lost more than half of our drilling capacity. Two thirds of it was shut down. However, somehow the Liberals stand here today and pretend that when the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank closed, the Conservatives did it. You would have to believe in the Easter bunny to believe that this all happened since the day before yesterday.

This is a problem which comes about as a result of a history of attack on western Canada and its principal resource. Perhaps you have noticed, Mr. Speaker, that when one talks about Liberals, one gets pretty hoarse. That is probably because I have a sense that I am speaking to one. Suffice it to say that we have turned the corner in the Atlantic Provinces with the Atlantic Accord and in the western provinces with the Western Accord. Investment is now taking place. It is unfortunate that we could not have sustained for a longer period the viability of those banks because I am one who believes in the premise that Canada needs more banks and more competition in banking. We need regional banks and, had we had the viability of the present Western Accord for another six months to eight months, I believe that the new economic initiatives which are now taking place throughout the country would have sustained these banks and they would not have collapsed. It is clearly the past policy of the Liberals which has brought the death to those banks. What an unfortunate shame for Canadians.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) put himself into an unfortunate position. He did not address the Bill before us and, therefore, I take it that he will be addressing the Bill when we get to it after discussing this amendment to not proceed with Bill C-79 which encompasses expenditures of $875 million.

The Hon. Member began his speech by talking about the National Energy Program. Of course, I would not argue with him on that matter because I believe he knows much more about that subject than I do. He made me smile when he said that one has to suspect the tomcat when the canary is missing. It came to mind, Mr. Speaker, that one cannot soar like an eagle when one is dealing with a turkey.

The arguments put forward by the Hon. Member were not in the least convincing. What he did was bring in a subject which was not the purpose of this debate. He did not tell us why we should vote for this $875 million. He did not tell us why Canadians should not be told where this money is going to be spent, in his opinion. He did not tell us anything about the Bill. He went on a rampage of diatribe about the National Energy Program, and we have heard that from the Hon. Member before. He is a great specialist on diatribe. However, the accuracy of his statements, Mr. Speaker, only hides the fact that he failed to address the Bill before us.

I would ask the Hon. Member how he can explain to Canadians the expenditures of $875 million without telling them where this money is going. I ask the Hon. Member honestly if he does not think it would be proper and appropriate for the Government to table the list of those uninsured depositors who are going to be covered by this $875 million. That is a great amount of money and I am concerned about the fact that he never once in his 20 minute speech addressed the issue at hand. I say to the Hon. Member that I understand he has his problems. I have mine. He talked about the National Energy Program but let's talk about the Bill before us today. What does he think should be done with the uninsured depositors? Does he think we should hide them away and still pay them that amount of money? Is the Hon. Member telling us that he would vote for this Bill without knowing how he, as an accountable Member of Parliament, is going to account for that money? Is he going to let the public accounts tell us in a year hence where that money went and not tell Canadians today what that money is going to be spent for? I ask the Hon. Member to honestly give me an answer to that question.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I intend to honestly answer the question of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier. He asks me if we will tell Canadians what the money is going to be used for. Of course, we will. It is going to be used for the depositors.

Mr. Gauthier: Who are they?

Mr. Malone: There he comes again with a question. He asks me who they are. He also wants to know how much the deposits are. The Hon. Member knows full well that it is very much a part of the fabric of Canadian society that both with respect to income tax and bank accounts, it is no one else in the country's business to know anything about someone's personal business as to how much one has, how much one has deposited or how much money one has in his account. The principle is that we are securing the depositors, not the shareholder. We are securing the depositor who had his money in those two banks which are in a state of ruin because of past Liberal policies. That is why my speech is relevant to the debate. It explains why the banks are where they are today.

• (1700)

If we were to take the thesis of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier to its logical conclusion, he would have us expose income tax data. If he wants to become involved in exposing who had deposits and how much, surely he recognizes that in Canada there is a sense of privacy about one's individual banking practices.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

OFFICIAL APOLOGY RESPECTING "ON TO OTTAWA" TREK

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East) moved:

That, on this the 50th Anniversary of the 'On to Ottawa' trek, the Government of Canada does now extend to those who participated its unequivocal and official apology for the Government of the day having perpetuated the following:

(1) Having caused through the use of violence as administered by the combined police forces of the Regina City Police and the RCMP the termination of the trek in Regina, Saskatchewan on July 1, 1935 with attendent loss of life, and numerous trek and citizen participants being injured and imprisoned;

(2) Having contributed to rather than detracted from the plight of the unemployed by;

(a) forcing many unemployed young men into work camps,

(b) abrogating its responsibility of providing the necessary leadership in a time of high unemployment which would have created decent and rewarding full time employment;

(3) Displaying a total lack of policy initiatives which would have provide meaningful work and wages for the unemployed and for the violent attack on the participants of the 'On to Ottawa' trek.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Whips of the three Parties have agreed that I can proceed with my remarks while seated because of a foot injury.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am the one who recommended that he remain seated because he has a fractured foot. However, he wants to make his point and I think we should hear him out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House agrees to make an exception to Standing Order 33 and allow the Hon. Member for Regina East to proceed.

Mr. de Jong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to thank Members of the House for allowing me to proceed with my remarks while seated.

The motion I have before the House today calls for an apology which is half a century overdue. The tragic events that took place on July 1, 1935, in Regina's Old Market Square are an infamous blot on the history of Canada. The events of that day, commonly referred to as the Regina Riot, were, however, at least in hindsight a logical result of the social and economic circumstances of the time.

The social and economic crisis that gripped this and other western countries during the 1930s left few untouched. Thousands of Canadian men and women, blue collar workers, white collar workers and professionals, lost their jobs. Businesses were lost. Farms were lost. Homes were lost. Droves of unemployed workers crossed and recrossed the country in a futile search for non-existent jobs. Soup kitchens, flop-houses and "hobo jungles", where the jobless spent cheerless nights huddled together for companionship, safety and moral support over communal cookpots, sprang up across the country. Farm families, their pitiful possessions loaded in ancient automobiles or on horse-drawn wagons, were a familiar sight on prairie roads in their desperate flight from the drought-ravaged land. The good times were gone. Despair, defeat and depression filled the country.

The Government of the day, which will never be remembered for its generosity and speed of action, was finally forced to respond to the crisis. Relief centres for destitute families were set up across Canada but everywhere it was mean, stingy and humiliating. Even this small measure of cold comfort, however, was not available to everyone. There was no relief for the single, unemployed army of men whom the Government regarded as a potential threat to peace, order and good government. For them, the Government of the day had another solution—the Single Men's Unemployed Relief Work Camps. Here, the men were given meals, a bunk and 20 cents a day spending money, hardly a princely sum even in those days. The men who lived in these camps have described the conditions there as having been very hard.

Official Apology

One man, a founding member of the Relief Camp Workers' Union, provides us with the following description:

The camp rules were British Army rules. The camps were under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Defence and all the camp superintendents were former World War One army officers, some of whom used to try to put the men through drill . . . the Government deliberately picked remote spots for the camps. Some were in nice, scenic locations but the camps themselves were terrible. Some were nothing more than tarpaper shacks . . . The beds varied. Everything from spring cots to wooden bunks. Our clothing consisted of surplus World War One sweaters, pants and boots. They didn't have any of those warm greatcoats left over from World War One. They would have been nice but we all had back jackets and caps. They were new . . . The camps, in some cases, were set up around projects. Some of the projects were sensible and had a reasonable purpose but most of the work we did was meaningless, particularly the road (construction) work which had to be redone later on. In a camp of 150 men, there might have been four meaningful jobs. There was no incentive to work . . . Every man in the camps was issued a card. When you got thrown out of the camp (for some misdemeanor), the card was stamped on the back. You had one crack at being reinstated if you confessed. When you got blacklisted, they'd transport you out of the camp and dump you miles from anywhere. You were on your own—

Such were the conditions that led to a general strike called by the British Columbia Relief Camp Workers' Union in the late spring of 1935. The camps emptied. One June 3, 1935, a thousand men met at the foot of Gore Avenue on the Vancouver waterfront. They were on their way to Ottawa to put their grievances before the Government of Prime Minister R. B. Bennett. By the time the trekkers reached Regina, their numbers had swelled to 2,000. Unknown to the trekkers, however, Regina, not Ottawa, was the ultimate destination and there the trek was terminated.

At eight o'clock on the evening of July 1, 1935, a mass meeting was in progress on market square in Regina. In the crowd of 2,200 that had gathered to hear a report-back of the trekkers' delegation to Ottawa there were no more than 300 trekkers, many others having gone off to attend a local ball game. On the platform sat representatives of the local city council, the citizens' committee and the trekkers' committee. Jerry Winters, a member of the trekkers' committee, was in the process of making an appeal when his words were cut short by the sharp blast of a police whistle. Suddenly, mounted members of the RCMP poured from the huge vans that had pulled up on three sides of the square. Armed with batons, they charged into the crowd and disrupted the meeting which, until that moment, had been entirely peaceful and orderly. Onlookers were clubbed to the ground, making them instant "recruits" to the trekkers' cause. Joined by Regina citizens and armed only with makeshift clubs, the trekkers fought back against police officers armed with guns. The shooting and fighting continued until midnight. When the smoke cleared, one police officer lay dead, 21 other people were taken to hospital for treatment of injuries and 120 citizens and trekkers were arrested.

Police reports and newspaper accounts of the day have left a misleading impression of the circumstances surrounding the riot, laying blame for the riot on the heads of the trekkers. Much of what was written then and unfortunately believed to this day is nothing more than a "masterpiece of lies" as one trekker has described it. I repeat that the assembly was peaceful and only broken up on orders from the Government in Ottawa.

The facts of the case are that the riot was planned and provoked, not by the trekkers, but by the police on direct orders of the federal Government which, in so doing, illegally usurped the authority of the provincial Government which was in the process of negotiating a settlement with the trekkers. Such action, Mr. Speaker, not only warrants an apolicy but begs forgiveness.

● (1710)

The motion I have placed before the House might merely be regarded as a footnote to history were it not for the fact that history has a tendency to repeat itself. The sad fact of the matter is that the history I have just outlined is in many ways and many places across this country repeating itself today. Many of the problems for which the trekkers sought solutions in the 1930s have returned in spades in the 1980s. Once again we have massive unemployment. Once again we are faced with widespread business failures, farm foreclosures, personal bankruptcies and food banks.

The parallels which can be drawn between 1935 and 1985 are truly staggering. Even nature has co-operated by providing prairie farmers with a return engagement of the drought and grasshopper epidemic which plagued their parents and grandparents 50 years ago. Once obvious parallel for which nature cannot be given credit, however, is the return engagement of a Conservative Government in Ottawa with identical attitudes in an identical situation. A little more than 50 years ago Conservative R. B. Bennett promised to "end unemployment or perish in the attempt". Last year the present Progressive Conservative Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised "jobs, jobs, jobs". Fifty years ago the Conservative Prime Minister, R. B. Bennett, espoused "imperial preference" as the key to economic recovery. Today the Progressive Conservative Prime Minister espouses the private sector and free trade with the United States as the key to economic recovery.

One and a half million jobless Canadians, men and women, young and not-so-young, cannot be written off. As much as the Government opposite might wish, they will not disappear or go away for the simple reason that they have nowhere to go except, perhaps, to fall further down into a sea of entirely understandable despair and disillusionment on their part.

What does 1.5 million unemployed Canadians really mean? To economists and statisticians it means a nice round figure that can be played with and juggled about on paper with relative ease. To the Government opposite it probably means a pain in the neck that refuses to go away. To the country as a whole, however, it means a shameful waste of precious human resources. To the 1.5 million Canadian men and women who find themselves without work and with little hope of finding work, it means personal disaster. To the unemployed auto worker with a family to support and a mortgage to be paid it means the probable loss of a home. To the unemployed professional—and their numbers are growing every day—it means a greatly reduced standard of living all too often culminating in a one-way ticket to poverty. To the unemployed single mother it frequently means welfare and a day-to-day struggle just to keep herself and her children fed, never mind adequately clothed. To the unemployed young person just graduated from high school, technical school, or university, it means a wasted effort and a future without hope. That is what unemployment really means, Mr. Speaker.

What does the Government opposite propose to do about this most grave situation? Leave it to the private sector, that is where the jobs will be created we are told. We are told that but we do not believe it and neither do the 1.5 million unemployed Canadians whose lives are being wasted by the do-nothing attitude of a pass-the-buck Government.

Massive unemployment and its attendant social problems, contrary to what the Government opposite might wish to believe, is not the result of an act of God, Mr. Speaker. It is a man-made problem and it demands a man-made Government-led solution. Unfortunately, the solution to such massive unemployment as we are faced with today will never be found by leaving it to the private sector and various applications of the tried-but-not-true trickle down economic theory. We need solid, sensible action by Government on unemployment and we need it now.

Canada is not a poor nation despite the obsessive pleas of the Government opposite regarding our deficit. Canada is a rich nation in both natural and human resources. We have vast natural resources that lie waiting to be developed and a highly educated, highly skilled workforce waiting to be allowed to develop those resources. We are not only a rich nation, we are a young nation, and much remains to be done. Much remains to be done in agriculture, in forestry, in industry, in education, in health care, in communications, and in technology. We have hundreds of projects which lie crying to be undertaken. We have hundreds of thousands of jobs that lie crying to be created and hundreds of thousands of unemployed Canadians waiting to fill those jobs. We cannot leave that to the private sector alone, Mr. Speaker. It is the responsibility of the Government to ensure that those projects are undertaken and those jobs created.

We cannot wait for a solution to unemployment to fall from the sky. That is what the Government did 50 years ago when the solution to the unemployment problem of that ear finally arrived in the form of a world war. Such a solution in this day and age would mean the end of civilization. I do not mean to suggest for a second that the Government opposite would ever consider such a solution to our present unemployment problem. What I do mean to suggest, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government should take a lesson from the past and undertake sensible and constructive projects that will put people back to work and this country on the road to economic recovery and prosperity.

Fifty years ago a handful of tired, hungry, destitute trekkers tried to do something about unemployment and were beaten and insulted by a callous and uncaring Conservative Government. The survivors of that valiant group of men deserve an apology from this Government for the actions of the Government of that day. This is not a new idea, Mr. Speaker. I remind the House that on June 29, 1984, the former Leader of the Opposition and present Prime Minister asked the Government of the day to apologize to the Japanese Canadians. He said:

> I am asking him if he will rise to the occasion and convey, on behalf of the Government of Canada, a genuine apology to Canadian citizens who were so badly done by.

I use the same words of the then Leader of the Opposition to appeal to him and to his Government to apologize to those Canadians who were so badly done by that previous Conservative Government.

There is much more that can be done, that must be done for the mean and women who today face the same problems experienced by the trekkers half a century ago. I hope the House will unanimously and whole-heartedly accept the motion that I have placed before it. I understand as well, Mr. Speaker, that after the Prime Minister met with the trekkers earlier this year he promised to give serious consideration to their request for an official apology and said that he would take this matter to Cabinet. I hope that when we hear from the spokesperson of the Government that he or she will indicate the Government's support for the resolution that I have placed before the House today.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) on making his speech in difficult physical circumstances. I realize he felt it was his duty to be here in the House today, and I think that is admirable, although I do not agree with the text of his motion.

Mr. Speaker, from the text it is clear that what is being asked is an unequivocal apology. I would have expected the Hon. Member to concentrate more on showering abuse on a Government that refuses to side with the workers, since today, there is a tendency to say that the same situation may be repeated.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to take part in the debate, because I have been active in the labour movement, both as a union member and member of an association. I also worked for twelve years on the management side as a negotiator in collective bargaining sessions at the local and provincial levels. I am also pleased because the motion before the House today, which of course refers to the past, to events that occurred 50 years ago, also goes back to a time in history which I find it interesting to recall, as a former history teacher.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I think the Government will conclude by saying, I do not think, I am sure that the best way to build the future is to look to the past, to analyze events, and instead of constantly apologizing for what happened in the past, to be prepared to change things for the better.

• (1720)

Mr. Speaker, 50 years ago, conditions were terrible. It was in the beginning of the thirties, in fact during 1930-40 eight or nine years before the war, the Great Depression, when economic conditions were poor, and the Government at the time did not have the kind of economic leverage that we have today, and people did the best they could according to the time-honoured method of trial and error.

I remember when I was younger, at Sainte-Anne-de-la-Pocatière, when my grandfather was terribly insulted when the first Old Age Security pensions came through, because old people had to declare their income. It was not an ideal situation, but instead of spending our time apologizing to these people because we forced them to make these declarations, what did we do? We established a different and necessarily better system.

That is past experience. The same thing goes for family allowances and a great many social measures which did not exist in those days but which we enjoy today. Mr. Speaker, I do not have to apologize for my father's or my grandfather's actions because had my grandfather chosen a different field of activity I might be a little bit richer today. I do not have to apologize for that.

History does teach us that it ought to be used to understand rather than to accuse, and I rely on historians to relate what went on in Government. We will analyze the situation and attempt to benefit from all those trying experiences so as to leave something better for our children.

So with respect to the past, Mr. Speaker, we must always keep the historical context in mind, never forget that the passage of time clears up past incidents which must be viewed in their proper perspective. I would suggest that my colleague is getting carried away when he claims that history is repeating itself right now.

All we need do is examine some figures or data. For the past five or six months, Mr. Speaker, I have been working on the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program—ILAP for short. Mistakes were made and corrected, and again last week benefits paid by the employer and deposited in a trust account were deducted from benefits available under ILAP. A change had been made on October 16, not through a ministerial order, but by amending the regulations, and then was implemented—Your Honour knows how fast we are—on April 25. As soon as we realized that a mistake had been made, instead of apologizing for that mistake, we tried to remedy the situation, which has been done as of last week.

Was it a mistake? When the Department of Justice analyzed the last ILAP proposals, did it make a mistake? I cannot answer in term of mistake, but what I can say, though, is that we have taken into account the working men and women who had based their decisions to retire early on their expectation as to their income: they would get their unemployment insurance benefits, as well as their early retirement benefits and a Government program. Now, their Government program was being taken away from them.

Instead of apologizing to them, Mr. Speaker, what we did out of respect for them was to change the regulations. That was important to understand the historical background. There is not a Government, not a politician, not a single member on either side of the House, who enjoyed certain events that happened in the province of Quebec. I am referring to the strike of asbestos-industry workers which was a turning point in the history of union development in Quebec and contributed more to the establishment of a labour code in that province than hours after hours of interminable discussions in an assembly.

When the Quebec government or the Iron Ore decided to close its operation in Schefferville, I can say that the negotiations that took place at this occasion has helped us achieve some progress, and I was able to realize that when the Quebec Government decided to close the town of Gagnon located North of Sept-Iles. If experiences such as those of Schefferville have helped us in the case of the town of Gagnon, the Gagnon experience will in turn help us settle other problems. The idea is not to apologize but to work harder for a better future.

My hon. colleague says that he is afraid that the same thing will happen and that the situation might come up once again. I do not think it can, Mr. Speaker.

You just have to look at some of the figures. In fact, let us take the first figure, which is the Gross National Product. It has increased annually by 4.1 per cent. This increase in the GNP is very important in assessing the situation, and I do not think that the same conditions existed in the 30's.

There is another interesting figure, Mr. Speaker. We have 284,000 less unemployed now as 284,000 jobs have been created since last year. Unemployment has fallen from 11.6 per cent in September 1984 to 10.3 per cent in August 1985. Youth unemployment has also fallen from 18.3 per cent to 15.9 per cent. This is still high, but the situation is under control and the rate is going down. Another figure which is often forgotten and which has a direct effect on all working men and women concerns the interest rates. Current interest rates in Canada are lower than they have been in the past seven or eight years.

It is not only the Members of Parliament who pay lower interest rates, but ordinary workers. These are ordinary people and consumers. For instance, the amount spent on car purchases or current expenses have increased by 25 per cent since last year. This also has an impact. As a Government, we should not be content with spending our time making excuses for the past. Instead, we should build better conditions for the future, conditions without uncertainty, and try to control them as much as possible. The interest rates are a very important factor for consumers, in building a house, in obtaining individual loans or in getting commercial loans. Mr. Speaker, the confidence of investors is important for the future of the Quebec economy.

According to a Conference Board survey, 53 per cent of owners want to make investments in the coming year, while 8 per cent do not want to do so and the remainder are undecided. What does this show, Mr. Speaker? It shows that people are confident in the future and are willing to gamble on it. Moreover, Statistics Canada says that capital expenditures have increased by 12 per cent in 1985. All these facts show that the conditions have changed.

Mr. Speaker, consumer expenditures have increased by 12 per cent. The increase has been 23 per cent in automotive purchases alone, as I mentioned earlier. Here is a clue, a sign as people say, that conditions are not as they were in 1930. Times are bad, but not as bad as in 1930. The number of building permits has increased by 19 per cent. In 1930, I doubt the increase was as high. The consumer price index has never been that stable since 1971, and statistics are self eloquent: 4 per cent. We have the most stable consumer price index since 1971. The conditions are not the same. This is the best token of consideration that can be given workers, giving them those conditions rather than having to apologize. Bankruptcies have been fewer. Economic activity is on the upswing. All that, Mr. Speaker, to say that the best token of consideration that can be give to a worker, instead of apologizing, is not to prevent a recurrence of those conditions, and to work arduously, in cooperation.

We may disagree—the Opposition Party, the New Democratic Party—we may disagree as to the means, but the facts are there and must be taken into consideration.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, interest rates for eight years—we are just out of last year's election, and that matter of interest rates has been a sensitive issue for the Official Opposition. But rates are now the lowest in eight years. Those are facts!

They can argue. They can say this is not the right way of doing it. They may say it is our fault, it is not our fault! But the facts are there, Mr. Speaker.

As I said, the best way to honour a worker is to provide him with better economic conditions. The best way to correct a mistake, in my experience as a personnal manager, was not to send letters of apologies to everyone, it was to try and not to repeat the same error twice, and when I did so you may be sure that they confronted me with it. They said: "Besides memory, I think you also lack judgment." This is the way to show people consideration, Mr. Speaker.

For all those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I think we are building something sound, and one of the efficient tools we have now set up is the new employment strategy the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) announced in this House. This is an employment strategy that is based first on flexibility, and second on agreement with the Provinces.

There are six possible ways in which this may be developed, and for the first time, Mr. Speaker, we have a program that is not readymade in Ottawa and undiversified for the whole country, because previously, whether you came from Nova Scotia or British Columbia, your program was the same. Now we have divided it along regions, and there will be six possible avenues. A region may chose this option or this strategy, rather than another one.

Mr. Speaker, this is not all. We have even thought that in a given Province, in the district of Regina, Hamilton or Valleyfield, according to circumstances, there were employment development trails that could be more interesting. This is something that we did! First we must show flexibility and then try to reach an agreement or seek a consensus. All manpower centres will have working committees which will call upon working men and women.

Mr. Speaker, a case in point is the new Jobs Strategy, its guiding principles and its purposes, all geared to basic training. All employment development programs are based on training, and that is what we call building for the future. We want to make sure that tomorrow will be more than a slightly indexed yesterday! That is what the Government has been working on for a year, Mr. Speaker, and the results are promising. Some 284,000 jobs have been created and there will be more now that the new strategy has been set in motion.

That is an important consideration, Mr. Speaker, for we know we have to attract the private sector. Not only do we attract private sector interests, but we get them involved and tell them: We need you, we will support you and you will create new jobs.

All that has been set in motion, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think past conditions reflect the current situation. Most important, we must not fall asleep or gaze at our navels. A lot remains to be done because a 15.9 per cent unemployment rate among youths is still much too high even though we made some progress since it once stood at 18.3 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, the best homage we can pay working men and women or the union movement which did much for the economic expansion of our country is to encourage them to build a different future and call upon every available resource to make sure that we will indeed have a more promising future and not repeat past mistakes.

Mr. Speaker, again I say that we respect working men and women as well as unions and management. A good Government relies upon its people, Mr. Speaker, and I suggest that our Government has made a commendable effort in that direction.

● (1730)

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard, according to the Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Hudon), that even considering what was said to workers and the unemployed 50 years ago, we should not apologize to them because we must look to the future.

Mr. Speaker, if we consider the case made by Japanese Canadians, and if we look at other situations and even the Riel case which was examined in the House since I became a Member of Parliament, it is quite obvious that if we want to understand the future, if we want to act responsibly as a Government, and in our dealings with young people or the unemployed, everyone ought to know what happened under a Conservative Government 50 years ago. And we, both as Members and as the Government, should apologize to the unemployed workers who were forced to take to the streets to seek their own rights which they should have been given by the Prime Minister at the time, who abdicated his responsibilities in this respect.

I think it would be useful for all students of Canadian history, not just for us who are considering the problem in Parliament today in a rather abstract context, if we could look at the situation as it was in 1935. We know very well, for instance, that it was a terrible time for all unemployed in all the provinces. And I quote:

[English]

Beyond the evidence of the human condition there are the statistics drawn here from the report of the Royal Commission on Dominion Provincial Relations on an index of 100 for July, 1929 on unemployment. In 1929 there were 107,000 unemployed workers across Canada. By 1933 there were 646,000. Per capita incomes across the country had fallen dramatically and at an appalling rate. We see, between 1929 and 1933, that the income in the Province of Saskatchewan alone fell by 72 per cent. The per capital income in Alberta fell by 61 per cent. In the Province of Ontario it fell by 44 per cent and in P.E.I. 45 per cent. In British Columbia it fell by 47 per cent; in New Brunswick by 39 per cent and in Nova Scotia by 36 per cent.

What was the federal Government's response at that time? Was it in fact to assist in programs which would facilitate municipalities and provinces to develop work programs? No. It took the same attitude as this Government is taking. That is it wants a hands-off approach. It does not want to be involved in the creation of jobs because somehow Conservative Governments see something distasteful in direct Government job-creation. In fact, the Bennett solution at that time was to send the workers off to work camps where they lived in intolerable circumstances and in fact were not ever able to have the dignity of a democratic election in those particular camps.

We know the situation and I would agree the support systems that have been built over the past 20 years here, no thanks to the Conservative Government, have in fact led to a situation where in the recession that we suffered over the last couple of years the workers were not as hard hit as they were in the Great Depression. For those of us who did not live in that time, I think it behooves all of us to look at history, to consider the situation as cited in the report of the Royal Commission. Canada had never again experienced an unemployment problem of such magnitude. During previous periods of economic depression the problems of unemployment and destitution had usually found their solution in self-sufficiency; self-sufficiency of the household; solidarity of the family; the establishment of new homes on the agricultural frontier and the increase of emigration to the United States. By the 1930s such opportunities had all but disappeared.

We know that the workers were in a desperate situation. In fact it was spoken in the House of Commons in the words of J. S. Woodsworth, and I think this question applies today in 1985 when we are hearing about the unemployment figures of 15 per cent and 16 per cent among young people, and this is the quote:

—I do suggest that you cannot expect young men in the prime of life—

Of course, in those days they did not talk about young women, but it continues:

—young men in the prime of life to go into these camps to get a bare living month after month, and some of them, year after year, without their losing hope. I think of the moral influences which prevail in such places. Young men who under normal circumstances would have a certain amount of social life and would look forward to marrying and rearing their own families are now deprived of all the amenities of home life and are simply kept in these camps for an indefinite future. Really I wonder that there are not more criminal acts in this country than there have been in the immediate past.

● (1740)

The book goes on:

A growing conviction seems to have entered the minds of most of the men that they are a forgotten group. The isolation of many of the camps renders it impossible for men to keep in touch personally with former employment or with new work opening up. It is true that the Provincial Labour Bureau does seek to bring men in camps to the attention of employers—yet the employment of the men from the Relief Camps is so rare that a fixed idea prevails among the men that they are deemed unsuitable for employment, and are shunned by those seeking workmen.

We can see the sense of desperation that had arisen at that time. I am sure the Government of this day, being of a Progressive Conservative stripe, can argue that we should look to the future and not dwell on the past. However, I would suggest that if we look to another Conservative government, we would see the difficulties that are currently being experienced in the great country of Great Britain. There has been so much hopelessness and despair felt by young people in Britain that it has led them to violence and that is the kind of hopelessness and despair that we in Parliament should address before we see the same kind of situation arising here in Canada.

Hon. Members of the Government side can say that apologies or excuses have no place in a plan for employment for our young people. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Hudon) has spoken of the Government programs. We know that the programs that have been instituted by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) are too little too late.

We know that the current regional program is in a shambles because employers are not taking up the 25 per cent subsidy that was offered by the Government on make-work programs in the private sector. We know that there are very serious problems that have manifested themselves in Government Departments across this country because instead of adopting a program that had already been put in place by the Liberal Government, the First Chance Program, the Minister of Employment and Immigration took it upon herself to wash her hands of any Liberal initiative and to leave young people waiting for weeks, months and in some cases years for their first chance to get out into the workforce.

For those of us in the House who are really concerned not only about the unemployment of our young but about the unemployment of older people, I think that the record of the Government with respect to older workers is as shameful as was the record of the Bennett Government with respect to those who were driven into work camps. I cite the insidious provisions that have been instituted by the Minister of Employment and Immigration to gouge older workers, to cut their severance benefits and to make them use up their holiday pay by insisting that as of next January, they must exhaust all pension benefits before they can collect unemployment insurance. We heard an Hon. Member say today how wonderful it was that they had discovered a discrepancy between the amount of money that employers paid in ILAP areas paid into unemployment insurance and the amount paid by those in other areas.

As soon as the discrepancy in the employer program was discovered, the Government acted quickly. It moved in to make sure that employers were not paying too much into the program. In fact, in 1985, older workers who are in their fifties and sixties many of whom have no real chance for future employment, the same as in 1935, have to spend every last penny of their pension benefits, severance benefits and holiday pay before they can collect one dime from the Government. That is the kind of compassion and humanity that we see coming from the Conservative Government of 1985.

I would suggest that when speaking of a lost generation, the lost generation is not only the youth but also those older men and women who have been replaced through technological change, the euphemism for being replaced by machines and becoming redundant. These people have been hit by Government indecision and waffling on issues such as the shoe quotas. In my riding, there are literally hundreds of jobs that are currently being threatened by the Government's failure to act. In a sense, these men and women are facing the same situation as those men and women in the work camps faced some 50 years ago.

In my riding, the unemployment rate is at over 10 per cent across the board and not only among young people. Older workers, many of whom may not have a great command of the English language, knock on doors. They may have an old back injury or they may be 55 years of age and greying. They may not have the kind of marketable skills that would put them back into the market-place. They are being turned away. Those people are members of a lost generation and a generation the Government has a responsibility to address through specific Government-initiated job-creation programs.

It is folly for the Minister of Employment and Immigration to say that the private sector will help these people out. We saw what the private sector had to say to the Minister when she commented on the corporate behaviour of INCO in the riding of Sudbury. We saw what kind of corporate response came from that company when it came to developing an agreement with the union in that particular industry. It seems to me that in this area, we have a responsibility to lead, not to follow. We also have a responsibility to ensure that Government programs are not whittled away while we wait for private-sector response to a 25 per cent subsidy in the job market.

It is my understanding that the 25 per cent subsidy program is not working and that it is in shambles across the country, notwithstanding the fact that it was with great brouhaha and fanfare that the Minister announced the program at the beginning of September. More than a month later, many of those programs are not yet operational. They are still waiting to be launched because the Minister has not even passed along the information to regional Departments regarding what will be offered and what is necessary.

That being said, I think it is clear that one way of clearing the record and beginning the new trek is to say to those Depression workers and their families, just as we said to the families of those Japanese Canadians who were wrongly interned, that we were wrong and made a mistake. We should say that we are sorry. While it may not mean much in terms of individual compensation for the agony suffered by those people who lived through the Depression, it would certainly be a first step on the road to clearing the record. There is a saying with which I am sure Members of the House are familiar and that is that "Tory times are tough times". Dating back to the days of the Great Depression and the days of the Bennett Government, there is a sense that when times were tough, instead of reaching out to help workers, the Government of the day reached out to line the pockets of the rich, wealthy, powerful and famous.

It seems to me that we saw a manifestation of this same sense in the first Conservative Budget of this administration. In that Budget, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said to the Canadian people that they would cut back on baby bonuses, reduce increases in family allowances and at the same time offer a $500,000 capital gains tax write-off to that top 4 per cent of the population that is in a position to take advantage of it.

Mr. Malone: What about the farmers?

Ms. Copps: We are not talking about the farmers. Of course Members will talk about the farmers. The farmers will only benefit when they sell out. Most of the farmers I know want to hang on to their land. That Budget offered nothing for those farmers. At the same time, there is an underlying Conservative philosophy that, "Them that has, gets, and them that hasn't gets put down even further". That is why we are concerned and fearful and rightfully dismayed when reading about the kinds of initiatives that this Government has undertaken with respect to older workers.

An Hon. Member: Can't hear you.

Official Apology

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member may not be able to hear me but the people of Canada are getting the message that this Government was elected on a platform of broken promises. The Prime Minister cannot be trusted to believe that universality is a sacred trust. As soon as the Minister of Employment and Immigration was given the chance, she moved in to cut away on workers' pensions, workers' severance benefits and workers' holiday pay. Yes, even as we speak in the House of Commons, those employees of this place who did not have their pension benefits deducted are now being penalized by monthly deductions from their pay cheques for a mistake which was made by the Government and for which they had no responsibility. I am speaking of House of Commons employees who earn somewhere in the neighbourhood of $12,000 to $15,000 a year. They are not living in the lap of luxury. However, as soon as the Government discovered its mistake it moved in quickly to institute automatic salary deductions from those employees in the same way as it is suggesting to workers who have been laid off at companies such as Consolidated Bathurst in Hamilton that their pension funds, holiday pay and severance benefits should be taken into account before they collect one cent of unemployment insurance. Consolidated Bathurst is a company which shut its doors no more to open. Employees with 30 years of service have been let go. The average length of service at the company was about 24 to 25 years. I am speaking of people who invested their lives, hopes and dreams in a company which has closed its doors. If this particular piece of legislation had been in place at that time, those employees would have been required to liquidate every last penny of their pension funds, as well as their holiday pay and their severance benefits, before they could collect one cent of unemployment insurance.

• (1750)

The people of Canada recognize that this Government initiative is wrong. They further recognize that there comes a point in the life of any man or woman when the ordinary channels of law do not succeed. We have seen that in the "On To Ottawa" trek. They called the politicians. The Prime Minister met them with deaf ears. They contacted their provincial officials and, in fact, were given no satisfaction.

I would like to quote for the record a comment made by one of the trekkers when he spoke directly with the Prime Minister of Canada at that time. He said:

—I was satisfied that Mr. Bennett was not there for he had not been prepared to deal with us sympathetically or to discuss in detail any of our demands. So that I did not think it was necessary for me to accept any more of his bullying and brow-beating and when he told me I was a thief, then I told him he was a liar . . . He said, "You have just come out of the penitentiary at Westminster." Objection was taken to this encounter by Mr. Cosgrove.

Mr. Speaker, do you know what those men were seeking in terms of justice for Canadian workers? They had a list of demands which were considered communist by the Prime Minister of the day. The list of demands included something as simple as work wages being instituted at a minimum of 50 cents per hour for unskilled workers and trade union rates for skilled work being instituted on the basis of a six-hour day, five-day week, with a minimum of 20 work days a month. They wanted to work, but they wanted to do it for a living wage. Can Members of the House imagine how revolutionary it was for these people to ask that all workers in relief camps be covered by the Compensation Act? They asked that adequate first aid supplies be carried on the job at all times. Those were some of the requests which the Government found so heinous that it would not allow them to even come to Ottawa. They were stopped in Saskatchewan. The borders were closed, as were the rails. These people were prevented from coming to Ottawa to express their democratic God-given rights for better conditions in the work camps. They also asked that the system of blacklisting with respect to national defence and all military control in which men are cut off from all means of livelihood be abolished. They asked for a discontinuance of blacklisting, Mr. Speaker. That was a simple request. They also asked that democratically elected committees be recognized in every camp.

I do not think these requests by the trekkers were heinous enough to have resulted in the type of brutal application of government force which we saw in 1935. I further feel as a Canadian it is important for this Government today, in 1985, if it is truly sincere about beginning to gain back the confidence of young working people, young unemployed people, older working people and older unemployed people to realize that the time has come for it to endorse an all-Party resolution which calls for an apology to redress an event which occurred 50 years ago and which is indicative of the type of Conservative mentality which has led all Canadians to realize that Tory times are tough times.

The Government has its chance today. Private Members have their chance today. They can stand up and vote in favour of a democratically elected institution and vote for democracy. They can stand up and make to these people a general, all-encompassing public apology. I suggest that that act of good faith and of goodwill on the part of the Government would begin to restore the credibility which this Government has lost in insisting upon measures which are anti-worker, anti-family, anti-labour and anti-union with respect to the type of measures we have seen outlined in our discussions today.

Work must be done or the Government's word cannot be believed. Now is the chance for the Government to win back some of the credibility it has frittered away since September 4.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, we have just discovered that if you sit while you speak you get a bum speech. I have certainly noticed that the speeches we have heard fit that category absolutely. We have heard about an issue which took place some 50 years ago. Some of the debate has been twisted in order to put it in a perspective relevant to today. All this under the guise of a Private Member's Bill to advocate socialism! In all of the singsong which the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) has put forward with respect to the riot of 1935 he spoke about one person having been killed. He ought to have mentioned that the person who was killed was a police officer.

Mr. de Jong: I did.

Mr. Malone: It was not one of the trekkers but one of the police officers.

These are the people who, in their mentality, would like to take the time of the House of Commons to apologize. They would apologize for the Acadians, for small pox given to the Indians, for the tooth decay of the Inuit, for the Chinese Canadians who built the railway and for the FLQ crisis. They would have us apologize to Oregon and Washington because the British Empire did not act fast enough to make them part of Canadian territory. Members opposite wish to rewrite history. They have read up on Engels and they know about Joseph Stalin. They know about how those two rewrote history. They say: "That is for me. Let us rewrite the stuff."

Today, we are talking about a crisis which was world-wide 50 years ago. It was not just a Canadian crisis. It was something which was taking place in the United States, north and west Europe, the Soviet Union and throughout the British Empire. A world-wide Depression was taking place. The Depression occurred because at that period of time in history countries were building protectionist walls around each other. They were building walls so that the economies could not expand. All around the world in 1935, before the Depression, country after country was saying: "It is me. It is mine."

We stand here today after having come through the last few years which were solely concerned with protectionism. Today, the Government says: "Let's open up. Let's use efficiency and initiative so that we can get our products on the world markets. Let's open up trade initiatives." Yet, what is the response of Liberals and New Democrats to that forward piece of thinking? They say: "Do not talk with the United States. Let's close our borders." These are the very people who came here today to apologize for 1935. They are asking to do the same thing as that which took place in 1935. They want us to close up the borders and not talk to the Americans about expanded trade. They are saying that they want to have it all here in Canada without a world market. Now they want us to apologize for that. They want us to apologize for something which took place 50 years ago. The Hon. Member for Regina East cannot even get his facts straight. I cannot think of anything more unbelievable—

Mr. de Jong: Six o'clock. Saved by the bell!

Mr. Malone: I have four more pages of notes. However, since the Hon. Member himself has realized his Bill is not worth a darn and he is calling it six o'clock, why would I want to stand here and debate? Since the Hon. Member has called it six o'clcok, we will let the Bill go where it should.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1800)

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not believe it was six o'clock when the Hon. Member sat down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE—SERVICE AT BLUE WATER BRIDGE INTERNATIONAL CROSSING

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about a particular and very serious problem in my area. Personnel of the Blue Water Bridge Authority at Sarnia have compiled statistics for me which detail the extent of the traffic back-up on the bridge over the last number of months. These statistics were recorded at 15 minute intervals for four months, from April 29 to August 31, 1985. What these statistics reveal to me is that there is a very serious problem which must be addressed as soon as possible.

Until the end of June there were six custom lanes available for use by customs officers at the Blue Water bridge. In July of this year, the seventh lane was constructed. However, due to a shortage of customs personnel and staff—and we are again threatened with further cut-backs—only half of the available seven lanes were staffed most of this summer with customs officers. Because of this, 44 per cent of the lanes were closed but traffic flows, if anything, continued to increase daily. As a matter of fact, car traffic is up 5 per cent and truck traffic is up a fantastic 20 per cent over 1984.

While this may not seem so terrible because 56 per cent of the lanes were open, in reality this causes back-ups and/or a waiting period of anywhere from 10 minutes to an astronomical five hours, which makes the severity of the situation very apparent and lends to it a note of urgency for action.

On certain occasions during peak periods there is a back-up of vehicles waiting a horrendous two hours just to get over the bridge. This results in cars, buses, transport trucks, in fact all motor vehicles being backed up the full length of the Blue Water bridge and onto the I-94 freeway which approaches the bridge on the Michigan, United States, side.

I would like to cite a few examples. On August 15 at 11.30 a.m. the cars and trucks were backed up 7,000 feet on the bridge. At 1.30 p.m. vehicles were still backed up 3,500 feet, which resulted in a two-hour clearance time. On May 24 five lanes were open at 5.50 p.m. and the cars and trucks were backed up for 2,500 feet. At 6.15 p.m., with the same number of lanes open, the back-up was approximately 5,500 feet for a four hour and thirty-five minute time to clear.

I know my colleague, the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), has similar problems with the bridge in his constituency. I think I can speak on behalf of the tourists who come to Sarnia-Lambton by saying that when faced with such a lengthy delay it would be very easy to throw in the towel and turn around and go home.

It seems ludicrous to me that we now have a Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. Murta) who is placing this year, for the first time, greater emphasis on the beneficial effects of a productive tourist industry, and yet we make it so very difficult for these tourists to come into our country to spend their dollars and boost our economy. I feel that if we do not begin to remove the causes of this problem, we will not have to worry about the tourism industry because we will be lacking the one essential ingredient—tourists.

● (1805)

On the July 4 weekend traffic was backed up on the Blue Water bridge 3,500 feet and there was a five hour clearance time on the bridge on that particular day. Such delays add much frustration to the tourists and does much to discourage Americans and Canadian tourists from western Canada who come to our area via that route, from visiting my area and the rest of Ontario and Canada through this very important port.

Considering that tourism is an $18 billion a year industry and employs more than 600,000 Canadians directly and thousands more indirectly, I believe this is very good reason to look at the problem seriously and make every effort to find a solution. The Government must stop cutting off the right hand with the left hand, as in this case.

I would like to address the problem we are facing with trucks attempting to clear customs. While there are two specific Customs lanes available for clearance, on all problem occasions only one booth was open, again through the shortage and/or deployment of customs personnel. Particular trucks were faced with delays of anywhere from 10 minutes to one hour and fifteen minutes to get through those lanes. Delays are occurring in all instances, even when trucks wish to leave our country. They are probably trucking those very important Canadian exports into the United States.

The outbound booth for traffic is supposed to be manned 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Yet, it has been noted that this booth was closed for 157 hours during this review period. This forces the driver to park his truck and cross three busy lanes of westbound traffic in order to have the appropriate documentation arranged in order to allow him to leave. Must we wait until a serious traffic accident occurs before we act to correct this matter? We should not stand by while our exports are being held up.

Also, during the review period customs employed an extra 12 students. I am concerned about how these students were deployed and whether there was the flexibility to deploy them in the proper manner so that they would be most effective. I suspect that this did not happen.

It is imperative that we find a way to get people across the bridge and through customs more expeditiously. Our inability to do this affects the attitudes of our visitors. I believe that word of mouth is one way to either completely enhance or suffocate our tourist industry. It also effects the commerce and thus the well-being and standard of living of the community and the country, as well as affecting the ability of our customs officers, as first-line officers, to do their job properly. If we must, I suggest that we find a means to make the existing quota of person years for customs officers work more efficiently and effectively for us.

I believe that the solution is simple. We need to consider having more rather than less personnel at those first-line positions, as well as flexibility for deployment of those first-line officers. This becomes even more crucial when we consider that the I-69 Freeway through the State of Michigan, which will be completed soon, will bring even more traffic through and across the Blue Water bridge.

There is a positive working relationship between the Blue Water Bridge Authority and the customs management. Over $70 million in duties was realized at that bridge last year. It is a very important port.

It would seem that the domino effect is very strong in this particular case. Actions of the customs officers affect the tourism industry and the commerce of the area and the increased traffic flows with the decreasing number of staff manning the booths do little to relieve the problem.

I urge the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) to act on this matter swiftly. I offer my assistance to them in any way which may help correct this problem.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for raising this issue and offering to co-operate with us. Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that the level of services offered by Customs at Sarnia's Blue Water Bridge in Ontario is presently under on-going monitoring. Monitoring has revealed that in certain cases many factors may have contributed to delays and traffic tie-ups.

Improvements to the main local highways—the link between Interstate 69 in the United States and Highways 402 and 401 between Sarnia and London, among others—have contributed to higher traffic density. Roughly 6 per cent more passenger cars and 20 per cent more trucks have used the Blue Water Bridge. In addition, traffic figures were 54 per cent higher than in winter.

Customs noted four incidents which led to abnormally long delays this past summer. Delays resulted from problems related to work hour schedules and unexpected traffic density. Customs officials agree that customs clearing has to be made easier, but as you know, Mr. Speaker, they are responsible for making sure that our laws are applied and respected.

The Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise, constantly monitors traffic trends at the Blue Water Bridge to establish peak hours and make sure that enough employees are on duty, as recommended by my colleague. In addition, better use of part time and seasonal employees during summer peak periods will contribute to increase regular staff so that the level of services will be adequate and generally acceptable.

Now that students hired for the summer are gone, more part time employees will be on duty in October 1985. Those part time employees are added to the regular staff, something we found necessary as a result of last summer's monitoring.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Minister of Customs and Excise has told the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) and myself that there is no plan to reduce the number of inspectors at the Blue Water Bridge. There are now 89 year-persons at that location, including 50 for border traffic operations.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION—EFFECT ON EMPLOYEES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, start on a more personal note. I welcome this opportunity to participate in the adjournment debate before you the Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Marin). As you know, my grandfather, Louis-Philippe Gauthier, would have been delighted to see you in the Chair. I hereby salute his memory and the riding of Gaspé!

Mr. Speaker, the adjournment debate is supposed to give Hon. Members a chance to expand or reflect on answers given by the Government during Question Period. A while ago, on October 3, I put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) about the changes in his department and the eventuality that 1,500 workers in his department, representing one quarter of the establishment, would be laid off. The Minister corrected me, saying that he had never talked about 1,500 jobs, and I would like to quote verbatim from page 7302 of Hansard, October 3, and I am quoting the Minister:

> I did not hear about 1,500 jobs from me or from anyone else who has responsibility for the matter. In fact, that was a newspaper report and of course is not the figure that anyone else is using.

Mr. Speaker, during the same Question Period, but perhaps fifteen minutes earlier, I heard the answer given by the Minister to the Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). In his reply to concerns expressed by the Hon. Member regarding the same matter, the Minister said: "Mr. Speaker, we want the 1,500 jobs and more for Indian people, not federal bureaucrats." And that was followed by "Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!"

Mr. Speaker, I was not talking through my hat 20 minutes later, when I told the Minister: You talked to us about 1,500 jobs. He said as much himself. So perhaps the Minister would like to apologize because he implied to me or at least the House that I was spreading false rumours, and I do not like that sort of thing. He may have given the public the impression that this was only a lot of idle gossip being spread around by the Liberals.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard about these Government cutbacks and jobs ever since they came to power. According to their Budget, 15,000 jobs will be cut between now and 1990-91, and not long ago, we were told that in departments like the Department of Transport, an estimated 5,000 employees might be laid off.

• (1815)

We were informed that in the public service in general, there were 1,150 jobs in departments such as—and I quote here from an article appearing in The Citizen on October 5: "308 jobs cut at the Department of Public Works, including 300 low-paying jobs mostly held by women. The Department of National Health and Welfare is cutting 26 full-time jobs and six term jobs, while the Minister responsible for Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) is cutting five clerical and administrative jobs. The Department of External Affairs is to eliminate 182 positions this year". And I could go on, Mr. Speaker. I could tell you that at the Department of the Secretary of State, it seems 329 positions will be abolished. Several agencies, several Crown corporations have implemented one of this Government's policies, which is to reduce their establishment.

The Minister says that the Hon. Member is spreading false rumours! I wish the Parliamentary Secretary would at least confirm what the Minister said. It is true! He said: "We want the 1,500 jobs and more for Indian people, not federal bureaucrats". I am not here to criticize the Minister or to suggest what he should do, and whether his department should cut jobs to improve the services this Government is supposed to provide to our native peoples. It is not up to me to criticize the Government's policy to decentralize. I believe it is a good thing, but when they say we are spreading false rumours when we are only repeating what the Minister told us in the House, that is cutting it a bit fine.

Mr. Speaker, in last May's budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) himself announced that he intended to cut 15,000 jobs in the Public Service of Canada between now and 1990-91.

I repeat, the way this Government is hurrying to cut back human resources in the public service and agencies and Crown corporations, you would think they are trying to achieve in one or two years the goals they are supposed to attain in four or five, to make the Public Service more effective and efficient.

[English]

We were told that this would be done by attrition. At the time of the 1979 Government of a former Prime Minister, attrition was a buzz word. It was the gimmick used to tell people that the Government would cut into the Public Service of Canada and that no one would be affected. Attrition works sometimes, but it does not work all the time.

I should not make an allusion to who is present in the House, but I see an Hon. Member across the way who knows what I am talking about. Attrition is the wrong tool to utilize when trying to make the Public Service more efficient and more effective. The attrition which we are told would be put into effect in this new program of 15,000 job cuts was indeed targeted to reduce x number of jobs in Departments. Months ago I asked the Government to come clean with the directives as to where, what and who would be affected. I have yet to receive a satisfactory answer on the objectives of the Government with regard to cutting the Public Service of Canada.

The most simple-minded individual would tell us that attrition, if used as a tool, will not work. We know that. We cannot replace an engineer with a technician. We cannot replace a meat inspector with someone doing clerical work in a level below the inspector. We cannot possibly use attrition to cut back in the Public Service. That has been proven in practice. It is not a good and efficient manner by which to cut into the Public Service.

In my opinion greater efficiency and effectiveness would be reached if we could consider and discuss here on the floor of this House the policies this Government wants to put into effect to make the Public Service more efficient and more effective. We will get savings by more efficiency; we will get possibly better results and better services by having more effective use of the people presently in the Public Service. We must remember that we have one of the best public services in the world and we must maintain it. We must not continue to spread the fear and the anxiety that these programs are creating amongst public servants.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) is committed to the principles of self-government for native people. In order to achieve this, the Department must transfer programs to Indian and Inuit people, a process which will involve careful planning and consultation. One of the major effects of such a transfer of programs is a down- sizing of the bureaucracy. The Minister is certainly concerned about the affected employees and will ensure that the impacts on them are minimized.

Departmental officials have begun the process of briefing employees, as well as continuing the consultation process with Indian organizations and chiefs across the country. Given the diverse nature of the Department, this process will take some time, but all employees will be made aware of the plan for reorganization.

The cornerstones of this new initiative have been articulated by the Minister. Each of these will have as its central theme programs and policies which respect the dignity and the way of life of Canada's Indian and Inuit peoples.

The Department has been transferring programs to bands for a number of years and has been handling the resultant work force adjustment I think reasonably well. The Minister is calling for a redoubling of efforts within the Department to ensure that all reasonable efforts are made to meet the needs of those affected individuals.

Foremost will be the efforts by the Department to avoid laying off employees. The Department, through human resource planning, will ensure that normal attrition, a word which my colleague likes, and retirements are used to redeploy vulnerable employees into jobs which will not be affected by the down-sizing. These plans and all resourcing for the Department will be tightly controlled, and they will be monitored. If retraining is required for redeployment it will be provided, I assure you.

Eventually some employees will be given notices that they will be surplus. I wish to assure the Hon. Member and the House that every effort will be made to ensure that these employees have continuing employment. In the past many departmental employees have been hired by the bands or Indian organizations, and the Department has established policies which allow bands to set up pension plans reciprocal with those in the federal Government.

Other employees will choose continuing employment in the federal Government. The Department has set up a special work force adjustment unit which controls staffing at a departmental level and ensures fair consideration of surplus staff. The unit provides professional counselling services, helps establish retraining plans and works to meet the needs of individuals affected by changes in the Department.

Mr. Speaker, the Department has led the way in affording employees longer notice than was necessary under the administrative rules of the past Government. The Department gives at least six months notice of surplus to employees.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is concerned. He is concerned about ensuring that Indian people manage the programs which affect their communities. As a result of this initiative the Department will have to down-size, but it will be done in partnership with the Indian people of Canada, with concern for the individual needs of employees and in a manner which minimizes the impact on departmental employees. It will be done in accordance with a timetable that will be developed with the Indian people of Canada. When this timetable is established, the Minister will be in a better position to inform the House about the number of employees affected and the details of special programs to ensure that their needs are met.

AIR TRANSPORT—AIRLINE TICKET TAXES—EFFECT ON NORTHERN TRAVELLERS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, by Order in Council P.C. 1985-2026 dated June 20, 1985, the cap or ceiling of $30 previously applied to the 9 per cent airline ticket tax was removed. In my question to the Acting Minister of Transport put on October 3, 1985, just a few days ago, I pointed out how this was unfair to and discriminatory against northern air travellers.

I am not suggesting that members of the Cabinet, when they sat to discuss that Order in Council, passed it maliciously. I suspect it was an oversight on their part. They were looking at ways to raise additional revenue, in this case about $90 million Canada-wide, and they just did not consider the ramifications for the remote areas of the country. This points out the difficulties that occur when these things are done without proper parliamentary debate. When things are done through Order in Council, all the arguments cannot be brought to bear and things slip by. I would hope, Sir, that as a result of my presentation tonight the Government will change its policy.

In the North, there is very often no alternative but to fly. In a great many places there are no roads, and distances between sizeable communities are much greater than in the south. Per-mile costs are very much higher than in the south. They range from 10 per cent to more than 100 per cent higher. As well, it would appear that unless some changes in policy are to be made, the North is to be denied the full benefits of deregulation. The deregulation process is carrying on quite well in the south but whether or not it will be applied in its entirety to the North yet remains to be seen.

At the same time as this additional tax burden was placed on northerners, we see that literally hundreds of millions of dollars have been spent on transportation subsidies in the south. We need only look at the amount of money being given to Via Rail, for instance, none of which is of any advantage to northern travellers because we do not have Via Rail in that part of the country. I would hope that the policy being pursued is not to subsidize transportation in the south while applying the user-pay concept in the North.

In certain circumstances there has been an increase of up to tenfold in lease and rental fees being charged at the new air terminals in Whitehorse and Inuvik. Fees have been levied to such an extent that operators are not able to use the new facilities.

You will undoubtedly recall, Mr. Speaker, the recommendation of the Air Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission which reported on the adequacy of air services in northern and remote areas in December of last year. The recommendation made as a result of a detailed study by the Air Transport Committee was the very reverse of that brought about by the Government. The commission's recommendation was that the air transport tax in the North be eliminated, quite the reverse of what really happened.

Let us take a look at some typical air fares. In the south, travelling from Toronto to Vancouver, a distance of 4,200 kilometres, costs $842 on a basic fare, and that brings about a tax of $76. In the North, the typical route of Yellowknife to Frobisher Bay, 2,900 kilometres, costs $1,488 on a basic fare, about twice as much per kilometre as in the south, and this would result in a tax of $134, about a 350 per cent increase in the tax previously levied when a cap was in place. At the same time, the tax on international flights has remained at only $15. How are we to encourage tourism in our own country and particularly in northern and remote parts, when there is this discriminatory tax?

If you lived in Vancouver, Sir, you could fly to Hawaii on a special seat sale fare by spending just about the same amount of money you would pay in taxes to go from Vancouver to Frobisher Bay. That really does not encourage tourism. In the North perhaps 75 per cent to 80 per cent of air travellers are Government sponsored. They are either public servants flying around the country, or people involved with native organizations which are funded by Government. Perhaps they are people travelling for medical reasons, again, at public expense. Thus, in those cases, it is just taxpayers' money being shuffled from one pocket to the other.

• (1830)

This leaves a small number of people such as local business people and tourists who have to bear the brunt of this increase in taxation. That is hardly fair. This measure puts a disproportionate amount of hardship on northerners. I hope the Government will reconsider this matter, and take into account the advice of the Air Transport Committee and its recommendations. I hope the wide-ranging advice which has been received from all types of northern organizations, whether they be municipalities, chambers of commerce, organizations designed to promote tourism, or Ministers of Transport and Ministers of Finance will be taken into consideration. I hope that the cap will be placed back on in the case of northern transportation or, preferably, that the tax will be removed altogether.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure my colleague from Western Arctic that it is not the intention of the Minister to pay the $778 million anticipated deficit on the air side through the collection of taxes in the high north. Very few Ministers have shown as much concern for transport in the Arctic as has our present Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski). I share the Minister's concern. I appreciate the remarks of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). As he knows, the Standing Committee on Transport will have an opportunity to travel to the North. I am sure the Minister would want me to invite the Hon. Member along on that trip. Indeed, I am sure he would want me to invite all Members from the North to make their views clearly known.

The air transportation tax is the one method by which we help pay for airport facilities and air navigation requirements and needs. As I have just mentioned, the deficit is some $778 million in this regard. That works out to about $58 for each round trip, which is a great deal of money. I was shocked and surprised to learn just how high the formula could take this amount in the North.

The change in tax will shift more of this burden to those who benefit directly. Not very many of us from the south fly in the North, just as I appreciate not very many northerners have access to VIA Rail. The federal Government has given special attention to the development of airport facilities and air navigation aids in the North because, as I have mentioned, it is of concern. There is a general exemption from the air transportation tax for all air travel on aircraft weighing less than 18,000 pounds. My distinguished colleague is aware of that. He may not be aware of the following. It is established that as many as 35,000 Arctic trips annually may benefit from this provision on at least part of their journey, if not the entirety.

Since 1979, smaller Arctic airports have been exempted from landing fees, aircraft parking fees and fuel concession fees, points so ably made by the Hon. Member. With respect to the larger airports and larger aircraft, the points he makes are substantial and true. However, landing fees have only been increased once since 1957 and they still remain approximately 60 per cent lower in the North than they are here in the south.

I reiterate to my distinguished colleague the pending presence in the North of the Standing Committee on Transport. I invite and urge him to make sure that his views are made clear and well known to the members of that committee.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canada Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 7379).

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take part in this debate on Bill C-79, because we in the New Democratic Party are definitely opposed to the Government's decision to hand more than one billion dollars over to companies that had deposits with both banks, that is, with the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, and to do so despite the fact that the deposits were not insured.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of myths that have been spread around in this debate by some of the speakers on the Conservative side. The story is that the Canadian Commercial Bank was a small Western bank, a regional bank, that was helping the average customer out West and was forced into bankruptcy as a result of the National Energy Program.

Mr. Speaker, I have just looked into the growth figures for the assets of this bank, since some of the Conservative Members have pointed out that the bank was forced into bankruptcy as a result of a program launched by the Liberal Government in 1980.

Mr. Speaker, the facts show otherwise. Between 1982 and 1984, the assets of the Canadian Commercial Bank grew from less than $2 billion to about $4.5 billion, thus tripling within a two-and-a-half-year period. This means that most of the bank's obligations, most of its loans were contracted after the Liberal Government's energy program was put into place. So it was the management of the Canadian Commercial Bank that knowingly made loans on an unsound basis, which have now forced the bank into bankruptcy.

Mr. Speaker, it is also clear that it was not just a small bank run by well-intentioned businessmen and women. There is a whole history of poor management at the Canadian Commercial Bank. In 1981, the bank decided to expand and diversify, the result being that 45 per cent of its assets would be in the U.S. This is not just a regional bank! It was a bank with dealings across Canada that now decided to purchase the Westland Bank in California and also to make further investments in the United States.

However, instead of investing in other sectors of the American economy, it decided to invest in the energy sector. This meant that all its eggs were in one basket, or just about.

Mr. Speaker, they knew that nearly half of their business would be in the United States. So it was not a regional bank.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Members who have spoken on this particular subject seemed to think that this was a jolly little western bank, a regional bank and that it should be encouraged because it was making westerners stand proud and giving them a chance to deal with someone locally who would understand the problems of their region.

What the Conservative Members do not say is that while the CCB may have intended to fulfil that role when it first began, it had many other plans as well. They do not talk about the way in which the Chairman, Howard Eaton, took the bank into all kinds of very shaky financial deals. They do not talk about the link with Leonard Rosenberg, the man who at one time sank Crown Trust, Greymac and Seaway Trust in Ontario, who at one point controlled 27 per cent of the share capital of the Canadian Commercial Bank despite the Canadian rules that indicate that a shareholder's holdings should be no more than a maximum of 10 per cent. They do not talk about the fact that in 1983 a cease and desist order was issued on the subsidiary that the CCB had acquired in the United States, the Westland Bank. The cease and desist order made it quite clear that the Westland Bank had made lousy investments, that its accounting practices were wrong, its lending practices were questionable, its costs of doing business and therefore its overheads were too high. Those were the same problems which prevailed with respect to the Canadian Commercial Bank as well.

In its drive to expand at an imprudent pace the Canadian Commercial Bank almost tripled in terms of assets between 1981 and 1984. Its biggest growth, and therefore the biggest increase in obligations which we as taxpayers are now being asked to pay for, was not taken into account before the National Energy Program was put forward as some Conservative Members have been saying, but came after the National Energy Program was a fact of life. The various taxes imposed by the Liberal Government were a fact of life. The impact that that was going to have, if there was going to be an impact, on drilling, on exploration and on the growth of the oil industry in western Canada was a known quantity when most of the growth of the Canadian Commercial Bank occurred. Therefore it is a myth for members of the Government to claim as they are claiming that it was the NEP that did this poor little bank in.

Incompetence is incompetence whether it takes place in western Canada or whether it takes place in eastern Canada. Mismanagement is mismanagement whether it takes place in western Canada or whether it takes place in eastern Canada. I think that for Conservatives to use this debate as an excuse to vent their frustrations about the National Energy Program is a complete red herring. They should in fact be looking at the factors that brought this Bank down, looking at the incompetence not just of the management of the Canadian Commercial Bank but also the incompetence of the Inspector General of Banks, both under the old Government and the new Government, and the political incompetence which has led us into a commitment made by this Government to bail out depositors in these banks to the tune of something over $1 billion.

The current Bill calls for a payment of $875 million, but that is not all. The Bill does not count the costs that have already been incurred, including the fact that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is in for some $600 million in insured deposits, $280 million for the CCB and $320 million for the Northland Bank. The Bill does not talk about the fact that the Government of Canada and the CDIC already incurred an obligation of some $120 million in the $250-million bail-out that was entered into in March. The Bill does not count the fact that the Bank of Canada has advanced some $1.3 billion to the Canadian Commercial Bank and some $500 million to the Northland Bank through its rescue efforts over the course of the last six months.

Taken all together, we are talking about more than $3 billion, $875 million of which is a direct charge on the Treasury. The money advanced by CDIC will also be a charge in terms of borrowing from the Government of Canada because the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is broke right now and any money it advances has to be borrowed from the Treasury. Back in the spring, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) presented a Budget which projected that we would reduce the deficit by $2 billion or from some $35 billion to some $33 billion. Now we see that more than half of that has been taken up through this one foolhardy project. I for one say that the deficit of Canada should not be allowed to rise and rise continuously just because we are bailing out big corporations and individuals who put money into these banks when they should have known the risks they were taking.

In addition, the money advanced by the Bank of Canada may well wind up being a charge. We just do not know yet if we will have to pay that charge indirectly.

[Translation]

What we are seeing, Mr. Speaker, is considerable incompetence on the part of the bank and also of the Government, and we can see this as failure on the part of the Government to act responsibly.

Mr. Speaker, let us first talk about the Government's competence. If a company had financial problems and decided to go to ask a bank for a loan, obviously, a banker would say: Show us all your accounts and prove you are capable of repaying the loan and of recovering once your problems have been solved.

Mr. Speaker, I know people who go to a bank, individuals as well as companies and who are not forthright about their problems. They say: I need $5,000 or $5 million, if they really need $10,000 or $10 million, but they do not want to be frank with the bank because it would refuse to help them if they asked for a more substantial amount.

That was the situation at the Canadian Commercial Bank. The director, the president, the entire executive of this bank decided to hide the bank's real position, thinking they might be able to solve their problems. They asked for a bail-out of $255 million, although they themselves knew perfectly well that the kind of situation they were in would require much more.

Mr. Speaker, for a number of years, the Canadian Commercial Bank had a policy of safeguarding some of its loans by making additional ones.

[English]

They gave more money to borrowers to allow them to pay their interest payments and keep their loans from going into default.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the bank knew that, and the Bank of Canada . . . the Inspector General of Banks should have known that as well, but instead of asking the kind of questions a bank would have asked, no question were asked at all.

• (1115)

[English]

In fact, last May when we debated this matter involving the $255 million, we saw a very curious situation. The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) at that time assured the House that the profits of the Canadian Commercial Bank would rise. I believe I gave some figures with which she agreed. She said that the estimates were that the bank, which had made only $800,000 in 1984 and which was going into a terrible situation with the write-offs in 1985, would nonetheless make $12 million in profit in 1986; $32 million in 1987; $38 million 1989; and $38 million per annum thereafter.

The Minister of State for Finance used to be a respected excutive on Bay Street. She used to work for the Minister of Finance. He, too, was an executive on Bay Street. I wonder what on earth the country would come to if these people were running the financial affairs of the private sector. Last spring, they were acting as if they were babes in the woods. They were accepting stories which no one in their right mind would have accepted.

Certainly, in participating in that debate, I for one cast my doubts on those estimates of the types of profits which were said to be available. As I indicated, if that type of profitability were available in the banking sector and if the laws of free enterprise worked, then there would be a great many other people to skim off those profits and bring them down to a level which would be more reasonable. In fact, that prediction came true. The bank was nowhere near restoring solvency and nothing was done by the Government to establish exactly what the situation was for a full four months after the Canadian Commercial Bank came in and asked for assistance.

On behalf of my Party I asked where the devil the Bank of Canada was when the press reports came out about the Westland Bank and its problems. I asked where the devil the Inspector General of Banks was. Even if he had only eight inspectors, it seems to me he could well have gone to the tenth largest bank in the country and placed some inspectors in it in order to find out what the devil was going on. If he was not aware of what the situation was, then he was incompetent. If he was aware and was not telling the Minister, then he was irresponsible. Either way, we feel very strongly that his resignation is one of the things which should result from this particular affair.

I am talking not of events which occurred in the course of a month or two, as happened with the rape of Crown Trust in Ontario. I am talking about events which went on for a very long period of time. The rotten management and the rotten management practices at the Canadian Commercial Bank were known for a long time. They were common parlance in the banking industry. The bankers themselves in the big five banks knew the problems they were having with prudent lending practices, in terms of losses which they were taking in Alberta and in British Columbia. They knew, too, that the Canadian Commercial Bank, as a junior bank, was taking risks which they were not prepared to take. Let us face it, pigs do not fly and rotten loans do not turn to gold. Therefore, they knew that the losses experienced by those banks must be a lot greater than the loss experiences they were having with their rather more prudent lending.

Did the Inspector General go in? No. Did the Inspector General hire consultants if he was unable to send his own inspectors in? No. Did the Minister of State for Finance, who must have been seized of these problems when she took over responsibility for the banks back in the fall of 1984, tell him that something should be done? No. The Minister of State for Finance keeps on joking that women are not good enough to sit on the boards of directors of Canadian banks; but now she is running them. Is that not a turn-around? Yes, it is. Quite frankly, I say to her that her responsibility is to prove the type of confidence women can have in the banking sector and not just demonstrate incompetence. We are looking at $1 billion which will flow down the drain because of incompetence, not just of the staff but of the ministry.

I am reminded of the fact that the Minister said she tried to get a director and could not obtain one. She could have named the Inspector General to the board of directors of the Canadian Commercial Bank and told the management of that bank that she would take him off as soon as they put someone decent on the board. She could have placed officials from the Department of Finance on the board, or even retired bankers, as her nominies. She would have been entitled to do that as a condition of the bail-out. However, that did not take place.

Some three years ago, we saw an example of responsibility under the parliamentary system in Great Britain. The Minister and Hon. Members will recall that at that time the Foreign Office staff in Buenos Aires failed to notify their superiors in Whitehall that Argentina was on the verge of making an attack on the Falklands. The gossip was abroad in Buenos Aires at that time and either the Foreign Office staff, the diplomatic staff, did not know, in which case they were incompetent, or they knew and did not tell Whitehall, in which case they were irresponsible. Lord Carrington, who was a very trusted and very senior member of the British Cabinet, submitted his resignation which was accepted because he took full responsibility for the incompetence or irresponsibility of the people who worked under him. He had no knowledge of this, it was not his fault, but he took the responsibility.

• (1120)

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is about time we had that kind of behaviour in this House of Commons. I suggest that when it became clear to the Minister of State for Finance that the bail-out was not working and that the commitments she, the Minister of Finance, the Governor of the Bank and the Inspector General of Banks made might cost the taxpayers a large amount of money, she should in fact have submitted her resignation—which should have been accepted—because that would have been the honourable thing to do. In this case, as well, I would point out, it is not just a matter of things which were done on behalf of the Minister of State for Finance without her knowing. This was a dosier which was a major responsibility in which she was very closely involved and, therefore, she had the ability to know what was going on.

When the Inspector General did not go in, Mr. Speaker, for months upon months to find out about the other portfolio, the Minister of State for Finance should have demanded his head. She should have said, "go in there and find out what is happening". But she did not. She waited for four months, and that was totally irresponsible.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What have you got against western Canada?

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member who is heckling is not in his seat, Mr. Speaker. Incompetence is incompetence whether it is in the east or the west. The Minister of State for Finance comes from the riding of St. Paul's, which is in eastern Canada. If she came from Alberta, I would still demand her resignation because of her irresponsibility, which is costing the taxpayers of Canada more than $8 billion.

I would like to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by suggesting what we could do with $1 billion. We are going to be told over the next three years that we cannot do all of these things because of the deficit. We are going to be told, "We do not have any money". We have heard that already. The National Research Council is devastated because of spending cuts. Environmental services are devastated because of spending cuts. With $1 billion, we could spend $500 million and create 66,000 jobs by increasing the number of social housing units financed by CMHC to 50,000. That is something we could do right now but we will not be able to do it because the Minister of State for Finance blew $1 billion on the bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank.

We could spend $150 million as a down payment in developing a national universal daycare system so that women and families could have that kind of care for their kids, which is essential for young families in these days. The Progressive Conservatives promised a nationwide network of transition houses. That was one of the promises made on television by the now Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). We could take $50 million and use that to produce 4,000 new jobs for women and support 300 transition houses to provide refuge for women whose lives and health have been threatened by sexual and physical violence, one of whom in Ottawa, in my riding, was killed a few months ago after 30 years of abuse by her husband.

We could use funding to put $200 million into reforestation and put the economy in western Canada, particularly British Columbia, back on its feet. The forests are being raped right now, Mr. Speaker. We could use $100 million to provide farm mortgage refinancing and $7 million to restore Canagrex as an international marketing agency for farmers, again to help the economy of western Canada.

But if our Party proposes these things, the Government is going to say, "No, we cannot do that because we blew $1 billion on Barbara's folly," and that, Mr. Speaker, is inexcusable. That is why we are opposing this particular Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There being no questions or comments, we shall resume debate.

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in the debate on Bill C-79. I feel it is important that we develop the history leading up to the need to bring this Bill forward, what actually took place. I believe this has a bearing on why this Bill is here today.

We were seven months old as a Government, Mr. Speaker, when we were faced with this situation in western Canada. I might point out that these problems occurred far before we, as a government, had the responsibility to deal with this matter. In 1980, changes to the Bank Act resulted in 58 new banks being established in our country. Yet the regulations affecting banks have not even been revised since that date. There has been no regulatory change at all. Not only that, the Liberal Government of the day came out with its famous National Energy Program which devastated the banks in western Canada. We know the effect it had on our economy, yet the Government made no effort to change the regulations or assist in the development of a regional bank in western Canada. I might add that the NDP supported the Liberal Government in establishing the NEP. As a member of the Government from western Canada, I am very proud that we tried to save these regional banks in western Canada. Regional banks are very, very important to our economy, not only in western Canada but in all areas of the country. Regional banks have the pulse of the community in which they operate. They know the small business community, they are part of it. I am a member of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and we had a long series of hearings during which we had the good fortune to hear a presentation from a well-known U.S. economist by the name of Thibaut de Saint Phalle. He is well known in the economic field. I want to quote the following from page 8 of his brief to the committee:

● (1125)

> Regional development is particularly important to Canada given the extent of its undeveloped wealth. It should be high on the Government's priority list. But regional development in no way depends upon local regulatory authority.

He believes the regional banking system is important to our economy, and I support 100 per cent the efforts of our Government to retain these regional banks in western Canada. He went on to say:

> Recent events in western Canada involving the difficulties of two small Canadian banks may well discourage the Canadian Government from taking action at the present time on the proposals before this committee. There is always a natural tendency to believe in such situations that the event would not have occurred if there had been more Government regulation. We are passing through a similar phase in the United States during a period of time where savings and loans, a large money-centre bank, and numerous government-securities firms have gone under. If local development, which is so necessary in a developing, though mature, economy like Canada's, is to progress, local banking institutions are in my view to be encouraged regardless of temporary set backs.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to comment on the Opposition's position and the effect it had on this entire situation. Back in March the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Inspector General of Banks, six of the Schedule A banks, along with the Provinces of Alberta and B.C. as well as the federal Government, sat down and decided it was worth while saving these regional banks based on the information they had at that time. That to me was a visible assurance to the people who had money deposited in these banks. This group of Government and industry representatives came together and said that this cash infusion should result in the stability of the bank. That was a visual insurance to the investors and depositors that it was safe to leave their money there. There is no doubt in my mind that the depositors felt assured that everything was going to be fine.

● (1130)

What was the Opposition's position on this, Mr. Speaker? It had an integral part in this scenario, and I believe it was a discredited part. There were wild statements made in the House of Commons by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). To give you an idea of how the Opposition was trying to disturb the stability of the depositors and investors, I would like to quote the Leader of the Opposition as reported in Hansard of September 17. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister have authorized the bail-out if he had known, as we now know, that between the time the CCB received a cease and desist order from the Federal Reserve Bank in San Francisco and the time it came before the Inspector General of Banks on March 14, it had transferred all of its good assets and good loans down to the California subsidiary? The California subsidiary is still prospering; it is the Canadian parent in western Canada which is now bankrupt.

A headline the next norning read, "CCB transferred millions of dollars to the U.S., Liberals charge". I quote from The Globe and Mail of September 18 the following:

> The Liberals charged in the House of Commons yesterday that the Canadian Commercial Bank transferred up to $300 million in good loans to its ailing U.S. subsidiary shortly before the CCB itself received a $255 million bail-out.

The next day in The Citizen a headline read, "U.S. contradicts Grits on CCB cash transfer". The article reads in part as follows:

> However, David Scott, deputy superintendent of the State Banking Department in Los Angeles, told The Citizen Wednesday the U.S. Federal Reserve Board did not warn the CCB of a pending "cease and desist order" about Feb. 21 as Turner claimed.
> He also said there was no flow of $300 million in assets to the Commercial Center Bank, the CCB's California subsidiary.

I think that was part of discouraging the depositors and investors in the Canadian Commercial Bank. It obviously concerned them when the Leader of the Opposition made false charges of this nature right in the House. This is the kind of support that the Official Opposition gave to the attempt to save a western regional bank. The NDP itself is not without fault. It called for an emergency debate on the Northland Bank.

Mr. Riis: The Speaker agreed with it and so did you.

Mr. Minaker: They talked about the CCB and its potential failure. They talked about the crisis in the banking industry. All of these words are cause for alarm for depositors and investors in those banks. At that time the Government was trying to assist the integration of moneys into the Northland Bank to help it survive the situation it was in. Therefore, the NDP is not without fault in my opinion. They discouraged the attempted salvation of these two regional banks in western Canada.

I feel that the Government has a moral obligation to help the depositors and investors who stayed with the bank upon receiving visual assurance in March when the banking community got together with the provincial and federal Governments to save these institutions. Who are these depositors?

Mr. Riis: The Bank of America.

Mr. Minaker: It is interesting to note who they are. If we had decided not to help these uninsured depositors I wonder whether the Opposition would have taken the reverse approach and asked us why we were not helping the credit unions. There is approximately $130 million on deposit by the credit unions and their centrals in these facilities. Does the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) have a credit union in his riding which has moneys in that bank?

Mr. Riis: Three of them.

Mr. Minaker: Is there a school in his riding which is a depositor in that bank?

Mr. Riis: No.

Mr. Minaker: They are very selective in the way in which they would like this assistance to flow. Among the depositors are pension funds, both public and private, with third parties involved.

Mr. Riis: Which ones are they?

Mr. Minaker: Why should they not get their money back if there is a moral obligation? Does the Opposition want to become selective and give the money only to the credit unions, universities, colleges, and schools?

Mr. Riis: That's right.

Mr. Minaker: If it does not want to give any money back, why does it persist in giving the Government heck with regard to transfer payments to the provinces? The transfer payments which the federal Government gives to the provinces cover education, medicare, and the costs of the provincial Governments themselves which have deposits in these banks. On one hand opposition Members say that we are not giving enough in provincial transfer payments, and on the other hand they are criticizing us for helping out the facilities and institutions which happen to have deposits in this bank. I have great difficulty in understanding why, on the one hand they want to save the credit unions but, on the other hand, they criticize us for assisting them in this particular situation. My understanding is that the credit unions have more money invested in these two banks than the foreign banks have. Can we decide to give money only to the credit unions? There are labour unions with money on deposit. Do we give money only to them?

Mr. Riis: Name them. Who are they?

Mr. Minaker: I find it difficult to understand how the members of the Liberal Opposition can say that $100 million is needed for Domtar in Quebec, and, on the other hand, they criticize the federal Government for trying to help small industries across Canada which have moneys on deposit in this bank. As Hon. Members know, small businesses could have been using this bank as a clearing house. At the time when the bank was closed down they may have had accounts in a surplus situation. They owe people money, and all of a sudden they lost $140,000. This is a situation through which we can help a wide range of institutions by supporting the uninsured depositors.

I would like to refer again to the Opposition's approach to what I call selective aid. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) said that we could assist other agencies with that money. A member of the Liberal Party stood up and said that the fishermen need $6 million or $8 million in aid. A member of the NDP stood up and said that we must help the farmers. I agree that we have problems in western Canada, but do we become so selective that we decide to help the farmers, but not those farmers who have retired and have their pension money in these banks? Does the Opposition want selective aid? Does it want to discriminate against depositors? Does it feel that there is no moral obligation to those who had faith and tried to keep this western regional bank going?

Mr. Riis: Not the Bank of America.

Mr. Minaker: Is that the position the NDP has taken? In my opinion we have a responsibility to ensure that our economy continues to grow.

● (1140)

Finally, the statement we hear about a billion dollar bail-out is incorrect.

Mr. Riis: It is $3 billion.

Mr. Minaker: A $3 billion bail-out is also incorrect. You are assuming that there is a 100 per cent loss on all of the assets of those two failed banks. However, there will be some money left when these banks are wound down. Perhaps it will be 60 cents or 70 cents on the dollar.

Mr. Riis: It could be 30 cents.

Mr. Minaker: It could be 50 cents or 60 cents. However, we are looking at the difference. For example, if there is $530 million in uninsured deposits, we are talking about only $160 million if there is a return of 70 cents on the dollar. Is it not worth-while for the economy of Canada to spend $160 million on that one bank, if that is the liquidation cost, to save the credit unions, the hospitals, institutions, schools, unions and those third-party depositors who have their money invested in pension plans? The statements in the press reflect a 100 per cent loss, yet we know that this will not happen.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre suggested that all the money will come under general budgetary costs. That is not correct. Members of the Finance Committee know and Members of the House should know that the deposit insurance fund, which is financed by the banking institution, will bear a major portion of the costs. They know that there is a proposal being considered to increase the premium from one-thirtieth of 1 per cent to one-tenth of 1 per cent of the deposits. Yet, Members of the Opposition will not say so. They claim that the taxpayers will bear all the costs.

I am pleased to support this Bill. I believe that we are correct in recognizing the moral obligation to these depositors and that it will be good for the country in the long run. When Canadians realize that the actual costs are much lower than those being projected by the media and the Opposition, they will see that in the long run this measure will be good for Canada and Canadians.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I understand that I will be the next speaker for the Official Opposition. However, before entering the debate, I want to ask the Hon. Member how he can claim that statements made by the Leader of the Official Opposition on September 17 harmed the confidence of depositors and investors in the Canadian Commercial Bank when the Government itself closed down that bank two weeks before?

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I believe that it was harmful to the Northland Bank and the whole banking system in western Canada. It caused fear not only among depositors but among investors about the stability of the banks and whether there would be a run on the banks. The general public does not really differentiate between the CCB and the Northland Bank. They consider it in terms of a western regional bank.

It was not only that statement that was harmful but also the general questioning throughout the period after the infusion of funds took place in March. I believe that the constant questioning on this issue undermined the confidence of those people who may have either deposited or invested in the CCB. I was using the statement referred to by the Hon. Member as an example of how the Opposition would make any statement in order to gain political points. I believe that affected the ability of Northland to find investors to keep it going.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, surely the lack of confidence in the Northland Bank was created by the Government itself when it linked the Northland Bank with the Canadian Commercial Bank by trying to wind it up last March at the same time it applied to wind up the Canadian Commercial Bank. If the Government itself made that expression of lack of confidence, how can the Hon. Member expect the financial community itself to have any more confidence in that bank?

Furthermore, is it not a fact that doubts about the viability of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank were expressed from the time of the rescue in March and afterwards by financial journalists and the financial community itself, which is well before questions were raised last September when the Government announced that it was closing down the Canadian Commercial Bank? Is the Hon. Member telling the financial community that it should have shut up and not asked any questions?

Mr. Minaker: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question and, depending on the answer, a quick supplementary. Does the Hon. Member believe in free enterprise? A yes or no answer would be adequate.

Mr. Minaker: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I believe in free enterprise. I also believe that there are moral obligations involved when the free enterprise system is encouraged to save a facility. The provinces of Alberta and British Columbia, the Government of Canada, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Inspector General of Banks and six major banks indicated at the time they invested their money that, based upon the information they had the bank was sound and could continue operations. They asked free enterprise to stick with the bank, and I believe there is a moral obligation to those people who stayed with it pursuant to the assurances they had in March. I believe in free enterprise.

Mr. Nystrom: How can this be called free enterprise when there is such massive government interference amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars? It was always my understanding that the free enterprise system meant letting the market forces determine the weak from the strong so that those who cannot compete in the market-place would unfortunately fail. That is what I have been told by many free enterprisers over the years, "If you cannot survive in the market-place, you probably should not be there because you are inefficient".

How can the Hon. Member be a free enterpriser on the one hand while, on the other hand, justify such massive Government intervention and bail-outs? That is not free enterprise at all.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, let me throw the question back to the Hon. Member. If he is for free enterprise, does he support the request for aid to the farming community because of the drought situation or do we just let the market-place take its toll? In the case of a drought, it was an act of God, while in the other case it was an act of the Liberal Party with its National Energy Program.

Mr. Clinch: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to the National Energy Program and how it negatively affected western Canada. Would he elaborate on that statement, because it would be very enlightening for Members from the east to know how that program affected confidence in western Canada and ultimately how confidence in those banks may have been diminished because of that program?

Mr. Minaker: I thank my colleague for that question. I will attempt to keep my answer short but I could go on for 25 minutes on this subject.

The first impact after the National Energy Program was announced was an exodus of drilling rigs to the United States. Without the search for oil and gas, primarily in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, the demand for manpower began to decrease. There was no drilling or construction of new refineries. The demand in the real estate markets for such things as housing and the activity in the business community fell.

These banks obviously had real estate holdings in the various spinoff industries from the oil finds. That was the general impact that took place and one of the major reasons that these banks failed.

• (1150)

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and then a question for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Minaker). He made much about the fact that the National Energy Program created hardships in western Canada. However, if he looks at the situation, especially the one at the Canadian Commercial Bank, he will realize that there was bad management of that bank. Certainly that was made very public over the last few months.

We, as taxpayers of Canada, are being asked to bail out an undisclosed number of individuals and corporations. We do not know who they are or how much they will get. I think we should know those facts.

I realize that I have very little time in which to direct my question to the Hon. Member. However, he used to be a Cabinet Minister in the Province of Manitoba under the premiership of Sterling Lyon. Does he not believe that Sterling Lyon, who is a member of the Board of Directors of the Canadian Commercial Bank and who has always been a strong free enterpriser, would tell him that if we do not know to whom the money is going, we should not pay it?

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that I would be giving away Cabinet secrets by saying that when we were in the Government of Manitoba we discussed the question of saving the credit unions in that province.

Mr. Murphy: But you did not do it.

Mr. Minaker: We would have done it. We were in the final stages at the time defeat occurred; we were in the throes of saving the credit unions. We, as a Government, did not ask for the names of the people who had moneys on deposit with the credit unions.

Mr. Murphy: And you did not bail them out.

Mr. Minaker: The Premier of Manitoba at that time, Sterling Lyon, did not request the names of the depositors in all credit unions in Manitoba. I see no difference in this case.

I have been a member of different levels of Government, and I had to sign declarations of holdings, et cetera. I never believed in them but I signed them. If an individual obeys the regulations of the land and the regulations of a bank, if he has moneys on deposit in that bank and has the faith to leave it there, then I see no reason why we would need to know his or her name.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not agree with the comment that the National Energy Program caused the problems in these two western banks. The Government is trying to throw the blame on the former Liberal Government. It is ridiculous to state that that is the reason; we have heard the comments about bad management and about the moneys which went from this bank out of the country.

If the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Minaker) and his Government firmly believe that the National Energy Program was the cause of the problems, and since the NEP has been in place for quite a number of years, why did they not bite the bullet in March? Surely, if it was only the National Energy Program, the additional months would not make any difference.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I will try to keep my answer short. The information given to the Government and to the bank involved indicated that an infusion of money at that time would stabilize the bank. Being a Government which believes in regional banks, we have tried to maintain both banks. If the Hon. Member has an opportunity to read Hansard tomorrow, he will see that I indicated that I felt the National Energy Program was a major contributor to the failure of these banks, not the only one.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) moved the following amendment:

this House declines to give second reading to a Bill, the principle of which is to permit payments of large, but unspecified amounts of public moneys to unspecified persons or corporations, thereby substantially denigrating parliamentary accountability for expenditure of public funds.

In speaking about this Bill, and in particular about the amendment, the first point which has to be made is that this Conservative Government must bear the full and ultimate responsibility and blame for a fiasco which will cost taxpayers, not simply the $875 million requested in the Bill, but close to $3 billion in total. I am talking about the Government's bungling first last March of the rescue of the Canadian Commercial Bank, the failure and closing of that bank itself and then the failure of the Northland Bank over the past few weeks. The $875 million, which the Bill indicates would be needed to reimburse uninsured depositors in the Canadian Commercial Bank and in the Northland Bank, is only one part, the smallest part, of what Canadians will have to pay for the Government's mismanagement of the CCB and the Northland Bank affairs. The Government will have to find close to $2 billion to cover the advances of the Bank of Canada to the two banks in question. We are talking about amounts which are very large. Certainly the $875 million in this Bill alone is a very large amount by anyone's standards, by the standards of any Canadian in any walk of life.

There is a basic principle which in this case above all has to apply, that is, if taxpayers' moneys are to be spent, then Parliament on behalf of taxpayers should know who will get that money. If, as the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) said, this principle applies to cases such as the travel expenditures of the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), surely it must apply when we are talking about billions of dollars, not just thousands of dollars, which have to come from the ordinary taxpayer, the ordinary Canadian.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) said yesterday that the privacy of individuals has to be protected, that was what the law indicated and that was what individual depositors were entitled to, if they were to have faith in our banking system. Surely what she said applies only in circumstances where depositors deal with their banks in the ordinary way and when their banks are doing business in the ordinary way. However, when we are talking about the failure of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, surely we are not dealing with normal circumstances. These banks have failed, and the normal course of action under the law is that depositors would be compensated only for deposits under $60,000. Surely depositors knew that, or should have known that, when they put their money into those two banks. Canadians are entitled to ask why Parliament should treat these depositors differently when it comes to reimbursing them for amounts above $60,000, if these people are not even willing to disclose their identity and the Government is not even insisting that they disclose their identity to Parliament and to Canadians generally.

The Government in itself and by itself supplies the reason for the approach in this Bill. It provides the answer to the basic question as to why depositors should be reimbursed for deposits in the Canadian Commercial Bank and in the Northland Bank in excess of the amounts insured under the ordinary law. The answer is a simple one. The Government is saying that this should be done because this incompetent Conservative Government induced depositors to stay with these banks when it said that they were viable and would survive. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State for Finance said over and over again that the bail-out or the rescue last March of the Canadian Commercial Bank made the bank viable. In effect, the Government gave its word that the Canadian Commercial Bank would survive.

The Government was wrong. It bungled the bail-out. It bungled its obligation to monitor the situation properly after the bail-out had been approved by Parliament. This incompetent Conservative Government is asking Parliament, and therefore ordinary taxpayers, individual Canadians, to pay for its own incompetence and its own mishandling of this bank fiasco.

• (1200)

Mr. Speaker, these are extraordinary circumstances and surely the Government's argument that the privacy of depositors should be respected cannot apply in these extraordinary circumstances. The Government says that the Bank Act prevents it from releasing the names of the depositors. I say, show us exactly where in The Bank Act it says that this cannot be done. If there are legal opinions that the Bank Act says this, show us the legal opinions in question; table them in the House. Even if the Bank Act does say that the confidentiality and the identity of depositors has to be respected, surely the Act can be amended to clear up this point to take into account the very extraordinary circumstances that we are dealing with now, circumstances that the Bank Act was not intended to deal with in the ordinary course of its application to the banking industry of this country.

Let me say again, surely the Bank Act and what it says about the privacy of depositors applies only in a normal bank situation where a bank continues to do business in the ordinary way. Here we are dealing with the winding up of a bank, in effect a bankruptcy proceeding, in effect the bankruptcy of a bank. In a bankruptcy proceeding if a creditor wants to be paid what he is owed by the bankrupt firm, that creditor has to file a claim and his identity is public, it is known, it is listed. That list is public. If he does not want to do that, then that creditor's claim is not paid.

The Government has failed to provide any convincing and reasonable explanation that any ordinary Canadian would accept as to why things should be different when it comes to paying the uninsured depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. I say that no bona fide depositor would feel that the terms on which he or she put money into the Canadian Commercial Bank or the Northland Bank were not being followed if it was a requirement of the law that in order to be reimbursed for uninsured deposits his or her identity had to be disclosed. Those terms were only that deposits were confidential in the ordinary course of banking business and if the bank failed each depositor would get only $60,000 from the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. Any person who wants his identity to remain confidential, if that person is a depositor in the Canadian Commercial Bank or the Northland Bank, is saying in effect that reimbursement should be made only for the first $60,000 of the deposit.

In this Bill the Government has gone partway toward the Liberal position in that the Bill says that a depositor must file a claim for the uninsured amount of his deposit. However, the Bill does not specifically say that the depositor's identity must be publicly disclosed. We say that the Government can and should insist on this as a condition of the claim being paid, and in fact the list of claimants has to be made public and this has to be written clearly into the law.

Why should any bona fide depositor object to this? What has any depositor got to hide, or, a much better question, what does this incompetent and bungling Government have to hide? Are we talking about firms or individuals who are particular friends of the Government? What exactly, under the circumstances, is the Government trying to keep back if identities are not disclosed? If the indentities of uninsured depositors are not disclosed, then the Government itself has created doubt and a suspicion which will be left hanging over this fiasco for a long time to come.

We are not talking, after all, only about little guys looking for a safe place in which to put their life savings. The figures tabled yesterday by the Minister also suggest that there are a lot of depositors who put their money into these banks as an investment to get a higher return. A higher return implies a higher risk, and this Government has not yet made a convincing case as to why people who put money in deposits into the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank as investment should not bear all or part of that risk above $60,000 rather than having the burden assumed by the ordinary Canadian taxpayer.

The only real answer to this kind of question is that the Government is saying that the depositors in these banks should not have to suffer from the bungling of the Governemnt and its Ministers and that the burden should be placed on the ordinary taxpayer. There was bungling here, there was incompetence, there was mismanagement of the situation by the Government and its Ministers in how they dealt with this bank fiasco.

The Government is trying to evade its responsibility by talking about the economy of western Canada and by suggesting that the problems of the banks were recent and even hinting at problems with the system of bank regulation and bank inspection. When the Government first proposed the bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank last March it blamed the problems of the Canadian Commercial Bank not on the western Canadian economy and the National Energy Program but on the Canadian Commercial Bank's own investments in California in energy projects and real estate. There was not any National Energy Program in California.

When it comes to the possibility of problems with the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, going back several years, and the question of the efficiency of the regulatory system with which the Government found itself when it took office, let me say this. No bank failed under the last Liberal Government. No bank has failed in this country since 1923. It is only after this incompetent Conservative Government took office that we have the failure of not one but two banks. If there are problems with the regulatory system, is it not funny that that regulatory system worked until the Conservatives took office? I repeat, no bank failures took place under previous Liberal Governments. They happened only when the Conservatives took over.

If the system of bank inspection needed improvement, why did the Conservative Government not move immediately to make changes as soon as it took office? The Conservatives boasted how they had been spending years to plan the transition, years to plan what had to be done once they took office. They moved quickly in their November economic statement to modify all sorts of Government programs and Departments. They could have done something with the office of the Inspector General of Banks if the problems connected with it were so obvious. Instead, they continued to make decisions based on the operations of the Inspector General's office as they found it when they took office. They made decisions for which they have to assume responsibility.

The fact is that only this incompetent Government and its two incompetent Ministers, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance, are responsible for the decision to bail out the Canadian Commercial Bank and only they are responsible for the decision about the form and manner of that bail-out last March. This took place after the Conservatives had been in office for a good seven months—or should I say a very bad seven months.

The Conservatives said to Parliament last March: "The situation is urgent; the Bill to save the Canadian Commercial Bank has to be passed quickly. We worked out a package", they said, "and it is the right package. We worked it out in consultation with the banks and the provincial Governments. Trust us", the Government said, "we know what we are doing".

With all the doubts we had about the Government, we felt, with great reluctance, that if the banks and the provinces were involved surely the Government would not put forward a proposal that had not been properly worked out and was not soundly based. It turns out that this Conservative Government misled the Canadian people and Parliament because we now know that there was no proper basis for the Government's decision to structure and carry out the bail-out package it had put before Parliament last March. We now find that there had been no independent evaluation or assessment of the Canadian Commercial Bank's loan portfolio before the Government decided to rescue that Bank. The Government in fact, before that rescue decision, rejected offers of the other chartered banks to carry out a quick but sound independent assessment of the value of the Canadian Commercial Bank loan portfolio. This bungling Government, instead of carrying out a sound assessment of the loans or having the other banks do it, took the word of the bank management, the very people who had been there when the Canadian Commercial Bank got into trouble. This bungling Government did not even insist as a condition of its rescue of the Canadian Commercial Bank that that incompetent management be replaced.

Obviously this bungling Government did not properly monitor the operations of the Canadian Commercial Bank once the rescue package was in place. Its previous management was left in place by the Government and the Government did not even make sure that that management filed reports of liquidity, reports required by the law. The rescue package was in place and the Government went back to sleep and put the wellbeing of the financial system at risk. The Government finally got around to having an independent assessment done of the value of the Canadian Commercial Bank loans only months after the bail-out was approved.

Not only the Government as such but the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance must bear personal responsibility for this fiasco. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) also must bear personal responsibility. There are strong rumours which have not been denied indicating that the Prime Minister personally insisted that this bail-out be carried out in a rushed, hurried and incomplete manner so as not to spoil the PR image of his national economic showcase, a showcase he has put forward in his imperial presidential style under the guise of valid consultation with the Canadian people. That did not turn out to be the case at all, as we learned from the Budget.

It is this incompetent Conservative Government and its bungling Ministers who made the deision and must bear the responsibility for the decision to rescue the Canadian Commercial Bank. The form of the rescue package and the lack of proper analysis before the package was decided on is their responsibility as well. They must bear the responsibility and blame for saying over and over again that the Canadian Commercial Bank was viable once the package was in place, thus enticing people to deposit and keep money in that bank. They must bear the blame for the failure of Northland by linking Northland to the Canadian Commercial Bank last March in a way that I think almost ensured its failure. Now, to compound its bungling, this incompetent Government wants Parliament to hand over almost $1 billion to people it will not identify. Taxpayers have a right to know who is being bailed out. Parliament has a right to have, on behalf of the Canadian people, a list of the names and addresses of all those who have deposits in those banks. To conclude, I would like to say that if the Government does not do this, Canadians will ask what the incompetent Government has to hide in this entire matter and whom it is protecting. Canadians will draw their own conclusions, conclusions which will, quite properly, be adverse to this incompetent Government.

The amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition must be approved by this House if the public interest is to be protected. I say on behalf of all Canadians, approve this amendment or this Bill does not deserve to be approved by the House.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. In his speech, he mentioned that no bank failed while the Liberal Party formed the Government and it is only since this Conservative Government took over that we have had these problems. Does the Hon. Member not recognize the fact that while no banks failed between the years 1980 and 1984 while the Liberals formed the Government, 17 trust companies failed? People with deposits in those trust companies have been compensated or will be compensated by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, a federal institution.

Does the Hon. Member not realize that if the Liberal Government had established the kind of monitoring policies which were needed and which we now see were so deficient, we would not have had the failures of those trust companies or of the banks with which we are now dealing? The Hon. Member shoul look at his own record and not simply attack the Conservatives, though I am certainly not here to defend the Conservative Government.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that he is not here to defend the Conservative Government. However, he certainly sounds as if he were. He may want to rise later to withdraw his remarks.

I would like to deal with the specific question raised by the Hon. Member. If the Hon. Member were to check, he would find that the trust companies in question all fell under provincial jurisdiction—

Mr. Blenkarn: They were not.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): They were not subject to federal jurisdiction. If I am wrong, I will correct that but either all or most of them fell under provincial jurisdiction. If I am not mistaken, most of the trust companies in question fell under the jurisdiction of Conservative provincial Governments. I think we have to deal with matters under our own jurisdiction. I repeat that the regulatory system of banks worked until the Conservatives took over. No banks failed until this incompetent Conservative Government took office.

[Translation]

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, the House is now debating an amendment aimed at revealing the identity of the banks' depositors. Members opposite seem to have their signals mixed up, they are attempting to compare or add apples and oranges.

I learned the rudiments of finance on St. James Street, which may or may not be in the same league as Bay Street, but the Hon. Member can always consult his colleague, the little guy from Bay Street, and find out whether the principles are different. We were told there is no common link between the depositors and the shareholders of a banking institution. In a case of liquidation debenture holders and shareholders are not covered and their identity is made public as it is in any other bankruptcy, Mr. Speaker. I think an attempt is being made in the debate at confusing the issue of confidentiality in banking institutions. Incidentally I might point out that confidentiality is a relative concept here since the Government has access to everything. There are some countries where confidentiality is a commercial commodity—Switzerland to name one. We are not prepared to go that far, but had Liberal Party Members attended all sittings of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs they would have seen for themselves the banks, credit unions and caisses populaires were all strongly against publishing the names of depositors before or after the collapse of a banking institution.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, fortunately I do not have my colleague's experience on St. James Street. Quite possibly such experience is no better than that of the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on Bay Street, because it sure did not help them avoid the bank fiasco.

Mr. Speaker, I emphasize the fact the identity of bank depositors must remain secret only when the institutions continue to operate in the normal way. We are talking about an extraordinary situation, the collapse of a bank. On behalf of ordinary Canadians I have to say that if the Government wants to waste almost $3 billion of the taxpayers' money, we want to know the names of individuals who expect to get their money back, because this whole exercise is due to the incompetence of this bankrupt Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Windsor West claims that not a single bank went belly up when his Government was in office. Well, the whole country went bankrupt while you were in office! Unemployment reached unprecedented levels, interest rates skyrocketed to the extent that the one region in Canada which at long last might have spurred our economic recovery had to throw in the towel, not only because of those interest rates but because of the National Energy Program as well. There is no need to hide the facts and take this holier-than-thou approach. You know that your policies did ruin our country's economy. The only explanation for the fact that not a single bank declared bankruptcy is that they had agreements which we want to honour today.

Some individuals may have made the unfortunate decision to deposit money in banks which perhaps were not as conventional as others, but I fail to see why we should punish them by revealing their identity as well as jeopardizing their privacy and their confidentiality. That is indeed a lack of ethics which is strangely similar to the kind of approach you took when you were on the Government side.

• (1220)

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say first of all that if the Hon. Member is referring to a situation which has existed in Canada for a number of years, she should recognize that Canada shared these economic problems with all the other countries of the Western world, and that if the situation is now better than it used to be, it is not so much because of the policies of this Government but rather because of those of the Liberal Government, the impact of which took a little time to be felt.

Also, Mr. Speaker, if we refer to the situation of the banks, in spite of the economic situation and the energy program, we are blaming a decision of this Conservative Government . . . an ill-advised decision made in March of this year to bail out the Commercial Bank of Canada. I have presented the facts to clearly demonstrate that this decision was quite wrong then and that the Government must now assume full responsibility for that decision, as well as for allowing both these banks to fail a month or so ago.

No matter what Hon. Members opposite may say, Mr. Speaker, and whatever the economic situation may have been these past few years, their party was in power when these two banks failed, and they failed because of decisions taken last March by this same Government. We have been dealing daily with this situation for over a month now, and this bankrupt Government must assume full responsibility for the failure of these two banks, although it is the Canadian people who in the end will have to foot the bill.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that it is this bankrupt Government which will foot the bill come election time.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now terminated. I recognize the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) on debate.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to say a few words with respect to this Bill. A good place to start is by taking a look at what happened in this House many years ago, long before I arrive. In 1957 the Government of the day under the leadership of Louis St. Laurent had grown arrogant with old age. At the time there was the great pipeline debate. Prior to the 1957 election, C. D. Howe, a powerful Minister in that Government, threw up his hands and said: "What's a million?" We now have a Government which, after only a year in office, is in effect throwing up its hands and saying: "What's a billion?" C. D. Howe was defeated after he made that comment. He was defeated by Douglas Fisher in the Lakehead riding. The people thought he was being sloppy and arrogant with the use of taxpayers' money when he made his comment. How times change.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is C. D. Howe who asked a long time ago: "What is a million?" He was defeated by the Ontario voters of Thunder-Bay becaused he had asked this question: "What's a million?"

Now we have a Government which has just asked "What's a billion?" As if it was not enough for this Government to give away one billion dollars of our money, it also refuses to tell us to whom the money will be paid.

[English]

We do not even have a list of the depositors of this particular bank.

I make my second point because I am surprised at some of my good friends in the Conservative Party who believe in free enterprise. They believe in the capitalist system. They believe that the market-place should determine what happens. They believe in free trade. They believe that the efficient survive and the inefficient go under. Yet we now have two banks which have gone bankrupt and these same free enterprisers are saying they should be rescued through massive Government intervention. I say to my friends in the Conservative Party: Rebel, you disciples of free entreprise. Do they not believe in the system? Do Members opposite not see that these banks have been inefficient through bad management? The shareholders of these banks have invested money at their own risk. They were taking a risk. If they are badly managed institutions then why not let them go belly up?

I have listened for years and years to members of the Conservative Party espouse the philosophy of free enterprise. I disagree with the whole ideology. However, I respect what those people are saying. I expect them to remain consistent. I want to know how they can stand up in the House and say that we should have socialism for the rich and free enterprise for the poor.

I come from a part of the country in which a drought is affecting the farmers of southerwestern Saskatchewan. We have had the double disaster of too much rain and too much snow. If Hon. Members had watched television last night they would have seen the snow falling down. Yet, the Saskatchewan Chamber of Commerce said lst week that there should not be emergency aid for the farmers. It said that it is their tough luck. However, there should be emergency aid for the big banks and big depositors in this country because they are friends of the Government. This Government espouses socialism for the rich and free enterprise for the poor.

I say to Government Members across the way: If the Government is to bail out big bankers and rich Tory friends, why can it not supply emergency aid to the farmers of western Canada? If John Diefenbaker were in the House today, I am sure he would be absolutely astounded and shocked. He used to stand in the front row. He would be shocked at the utter disregard of ordinary Canadians by a Conservative Government in Canada. The Conservative Party is now more interested in Bay Street and its friends. It is a Government which is bringing in socialism for the rich and free enterprise for the poor.

[Translation]

And I know, Mr. Speaker, that my new Quebec colleagues probably do not agree at all with the situation.

[English]

I do not know if it is the type of Party these people thought they were joining. I make that appeal. Disciples of free enterprise, stand up and rebel in the House. If they want a free enterprise system, then let them be consistent and have one. If they do not want that type of system, then let them not fool us with rhetoric and let them not mislead the people of Canada. I say that if we can spend $1 billion on bankers in the country, then we can spend a few million dollars on farmers who are suffering from a national disaster.

I was in Regina a week ago last Friday and I saw a few hundred farmers in a demonstration who came out and said: "Why is there not any assistance?" My good friend, the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), has been given the task by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of studying the drought situation in southern Saskatchewan and the southern Prairies. We have been told time and time again that his report would be on the Prime Minister's desk in September. We were told there would be something coming from the report very soon. Yet we have not seen the report. Where is the report? It seems to take the Government weeks and weeks to study a situation affecting ordinary Canadians, the farmers of the West, yet it takes it only a few days to bail out banks and rich people in the country. That is a contradiction. That shows who the true friends of the Conservative Party are in this country. I see an Hon. Member on the back bench of the Conservative Party agreeing with me.

Where is the report from the Hon. Member for Assiniboia? The farmers want to know where it is. The farmers want to know why there is a double standard. They want to know why the Government is so fast in bailing out rich bankers, many of them foreigners, and so slow to bring aid to the farmers of Saskatchewan. I believe there is something in the order of $108 million being given to foreign bankers—

Mr. Riis: It is $134 million.

Mr. Nystrom: Some $134 million will be given to foreign bankers. Instead of that money going to foreign bankers, let us put up the same amount to start an emergency fund for prairie farmers because of the weather situation on the Prairies. I hope we have some support for this idea from some of the back-benchers of the Conservative Party. I know I have a few friends in that Party who believe that the western farmers need some help. I believe the whole thing we are seeing now is a tremendous double standard. I can give the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) a list of bankrupt farmers in my riding who could be bailed out if we are going to bail out the banks. I can think of a farmer in the town of Kenora, for example, who, through no fault of his own, had to undergo the process very recently of forclosure on his farm. I know another farmer in the Yorkton area and other farmers throughout Saskatchewan and, indeed, Canada, who went bankrupt. I know small businessmen and small businesswomen who have gone bankrupt. I know people who are having trouble with their mortgages. There are Albertans who are having trouble with their mortgages because of the oil boom which has collapsed. Why not bail out some of those people?

I am talking about consistency, Mr. Speaker. I am talking about having the same philosophy for the small people of this country as we have for the big people. Why this double standard? Why can we not have an emergency fund of several hundred million dollars for farmers if we can put up $1 billion for the banks of this country?

Another point I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, is that we are told we are helping western Canada is when we help the great western institutions. What I say as a western Canadian, that there has been bad management and that there is a bad Bill before the House. If this is because there is an incompetent Minister, it is still wrong whether the bank is in western Canada or in eastern Canada. To me a wrong is a wrong and I do not feel we should play the kind of regional politics in this House, saying that the only reason we are doing this is that the bank is located in western Canada. A wrong is a wrong, Mr. Speaker, whether it is in Saskatchewan, Quebec, Newfoundland or even in Edmonton, your beautiful city, Mr. Speaker. I can understand why you would agree with that particular point.

I do not want to defend my colleagues in the Liberal Party but with respect to the point which is made that it is the National Energy Program which destroyed absolutely everything in western Canada, I ask the question: Why have the assets in the Canadian Commercial Bank from 1981 to 1984 gone up from around $2 billion to around $4.5 billion? Obviously the National Energy Program cannot be the only reason, otherwise the assets in that particular bank would not have gone up so radically between 1981 and 1984.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that what we are seeing here is incompetence on the part of the Government. We have seen in the last few months the collapse of two banks in this country, the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. This is the first time in 60 odd years we have seen this happen in Canada. We have a Government which is falling apart at the seams in spite of its very large majority. We are seeing a Prime Minister who has communication problems right in his own office. He is not being told of important political problems in the country. In fact, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) said in Newfoundland yesterday or the day before, according to newspaper reports, that the Prime Minister's senior advisers are not politically smart. I agree with the Minister of Justice. That is just another side of the incompetence of the Government across the way. I know the Minister of Justice is a very competent long-time politician and he would not say this unless he knew what he spoke of. The Prime Minister's Office is incompetent. It does not have political smarts. That is one reason this Government is floundering.

We have seen in the last few weeks two Ministers resign, and now there is a third Minister who should resign. A Minister resigned last fall as well. Several different Conservative Party officials disagreed publicly with the Prime Minister, but many of them have retracted or changed what they said after they had been quoted and named in the press. We have heard the charges of racism in this House, which were withdrawn by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), and we have heard innuendoes from the Prime Minister himself that, for example, the Anglophone press is very unfair to the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier). Those kind of innuendoes are not withdrawn. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is across the way a very incompetent Government.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering just how relevant the remarks of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) are.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I was asking myself the same thing. I think the Hon. Member, who has been here 17 years that I can remember, knows very well that there is such a thing as relevancy and I hope that he will get back to the debate of the day.

Mr. Nystrom: I never argue with you, Mr. Speaker. The Speaker is part of the club of '68. I would never argue with him. He is a very distinguished and senior statesman in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: I really resent, Mr. Speaker, that some members of the Party with whom you used to sit laughed at you when I called you a statesman.

Some Hon. Members: Never.

Mr. Nystrom: I feel that to be a terrible slight when we have such a very distinguished gentleman in the chair, and I would not argue with him.

I was just talking about how incompetent the Government was and that is one of the reasons these banks have collapsed. I suppose I got carried away in mentioning the resignations of two Ministers, the failure of the banks and the lack of communication in the Prime Minister's Office, and so on, but I thought that I should mention, them as further evidence that what we are dealing with here is an incompetent Government.

By interjecting, Mr. Speaker, you have reminded me of something I was not going to mention, but I will. We are hearing time and time again from across the way—and in fact the Hon. Member from New Brunswick mentioned it a few minutes ago—that it is the incompetence of the Liberal Government with its National Energy Program which caused this country so many problems. I do not disagree with that. Last September 4, of course, the voters of this country punished the Liberal Party and threw it out. That Party went down from approximately 140 seats to only 40 seats. It was a massive reduction. The people of Canada had spoken and we all agree with their decision. I am sure the Liberals themselves agree with it. But this new Government has now had over a year. Finally the time must come when a Government begins to stand on its own record. The time must come when a Government must take responsibility for itself rather than blame someone else for everything that has gone wrong. I think that time has come. I think that judgment date has arrived. It has come piece by piece, and this particular Bill before us today is another example of the incompetence of the Government.

We are told, Mr. Speaker, to vote for a Bill to provide around $1 billion to the depositors of these particular banks. I represent 70,000 people in the Yorkton-Melville constituency. And $1 billion is a lot of money to them. As C. D. Howe said, "What is $1 million?". But he was thrown out on his ear. We now have a Minister who in effect is saying "What is $1 billion?". I was elected, Mr. Speaker, to represent the people of Yorkton-Melville. I am not going to sign a blank cheque for $1 billion, or participate in signing that blank cheque, particularly when I do not know who is getting that money.

According to the profile of the Canadian Commercial Bank as of June 30—and I want to put this on the record—the Government of Canada had $14.4 million on deposit; the various provinces had $45 million on deposit; the individuals, and we do not know who all those individual Canadians are, had $308.5 million on deposit. I said, "Canadians". They are not all Canadians, of course, they could be individuals anywhere in the world. The banks themselves had $267.2 million on deposit. Then there is a category called "others". I do not know who the "others" might be. Perhaps they are the Edmonton Eskimo football team, but $774.6 million was on deposit from "others" in the Canadian Commercial Bank. That totals up to $1.4 billion.

I am not about to agree, Mr. Speaker, and facilitate the passage of a Bill which in effect asks Parliament to sign a blank cheque for money which I believe could be used in a much better way. It could be used to create jobs, to help the small business people and, in particular, the farmers of western Canada through an emergency drought relief fund because of the natural disasters with which they are faced. There was a drought in the beginning and now there is snow. That is a double disaster the farmers are facing in western Canada. I believe we can stimulate the economy of this country by helping the base industry such as the farmers and the fishermen. You do not stimulate the economy of this country by helping the big banks.

● (1240)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we now have a Government which is bent on helping multinational corporations as well as the rich in this country. It is not at all bent on helping the farm producers of Western Canada, our unemployed and ordinary Canadians.

[English]

I plead with my friends in the Conservative backbenches to be consistent with their philosophy of free enterprise. Here are two companies which failed because of bad management. If you believe in free enterprise, then the efficient company, the one that can make it in the market-place, will survive and the others will fall by the wayside. Here are two giants who have fallen. I ask my friends in the Conservative Party, why the rush to support a Minister of Finance and a Minister of State for Finance in bailing out these big, big people in our country when they cannot give similar aid or even half of it to the ordinary farmers of the West and the ordinary working people of Canada?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, as I look through the list of those who deposited money in both these banks, I note that labour unions had almost $7 million invested. I gather that labour unions are made up of ordinary people, not big bankers as the Hon. Member refers to them. I notice as well among the list of depositors some school boards, colleges and universities, and religious organizations. I notice charitable organizations have almost $15 million on deposit. Those organizations are made up of ordinary people donating money to a cause trying to do good for other Canadians. How can the Hon. Member go on and talk about the big banks being saved when in most instances, when you go through this list, you find it is the ordinary people who are being helped?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I would like to see that information. All we have is a listing by category. We do not have a list of how much individual big banks or big business have deposited in the bank. I do not think he or I were elected to sign a blank cheque. If he were in opposition, he would be getting up and asking the same kinds of questions. Why a blank cheque? How much do we have to pay to the foreign banks and big companies? I do not know. If we could see a list, perhaps we could set up a hardship fund for organizations like the ones he has mentioned. All I am asking for is to see a list of the companies and individuals affected, and I say that is not asking too much. He mentions $7 million for labour unions. I am sure there are municipalities and pension funds involved, but from what I can see those are in the minority.

Mr. McDermid: They are not.

Mr. Nystrom: I would like to see the list and have it tabled in the House because I am not going to sign a blank cheque.

Mr. McDermid: You want the labour union's name?

Mr. Nystrom: We have responsible Government. We are supposed to have freedom of information. I remember Jed Baldwin, a great and distinguished parliamentarian from Alberta, getting up and saying that what we need is greater freedom of information in this country. I remember the Government of Joe Clark moving in that direction. What has happened to that philosophy in the Conservative Party now that it is in power, albeit with another man at the head? All I am asking for is that the Government provide us with a list of those depositors.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I recall that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) urged me very strongly last winter to pay off uninsured depositors in Pioneer Trust. He never once asked for a list of those depositors. Neither did the NDP in the Province of Saskatchewan raise the issue of a list of uninsured depositors when the Government paid those depositors. Perhaps he can explain the inconsistency?

Mr. Nystrom: Someone used the word "hypocrisy". If the Minister will look back at that case, it was a different situation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Nystrom: I will explain it.

Mr. McDermid: Maybe because you are from Saskatchewan.

Mr. Nystrom: No. I raised the question about people who were uninsured despite the fact they had less than $60,000 on deposit. The Minister remembers that. I gave her documentation concerning ordinary farmers in Saskatchewan who bought income averaging certificates. The Minister is nodding her head. These were people who thought they were insured and they received documentation from the CDIC to that effect. Pioneer Trust said that they were insured. These were deposits of less than $60,000 but the regulation at the time—and I think it was number 12 or number 13, I cannot remember all the details—said that if the IAC was for a term in excess of five years it was not insured. These people thought they were insured up to $60,000. It was not one farmer, it was a lot of them.

Mr. McDermid: What about the rest of the depositors?

Mr. Nystrom: I remember a guy from Englefeld who had, I think, $30,000 invested in Pioneer Trust and he was not insured. This was the specific case that I brought to the attention of the Minister. She looked into it, went over it with her officials, agreed this was an injustice, people had been misled, and of course that was rectified. As you can see, I am not always negative; I am giving the Minister credit for doing something good. I am saying to my friends across the way that they should stand up for something good as well.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made quite a thing out of C. D. Howe's remark about a million and I presume he is unfamiliar with what C. D. Howe had to say, which was not that at all. He was being cross-examined by the Hon. Howard Green and what he actually said was:

> So I hope the Hon. Member will agree that to operate a department with 1,100 people for a year, $3 million is not exorbitant. Will he go that far with me?

This was translated by the press into: "What's a million?", which he never said. I think the reason Doug Fisher beat him in the subsequent election might have had more to do with another quotation of Mr. Howe's when he said:

> Who would stop us? Don't take yourself too seriously. If we wanted to get away with it who would stop us?

He was talking about a constant whittling down of trade preferences by the Government. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) just paid tribute to the Conservative attitude over the years and I thought I might repay a small favour.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his contribution. He is a former paperboy in the City of Yorkton and I always listen very closely to his words of wisdom. No doubt that is what C. D. Howe said in the House. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), who has been in politics much longer than me, said that C. D. Howe actually said: "What's a million?" in the election campaign of 1957. My comment today was that C. D. Howe was defeated after he said that, and today we have a Government which is saying in effect: "What's a billion?" I think that is wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition is delaying passage of this Bill. That means that the depositors who had confidently invested their money in a Western regional bank will have to wait a long time before being reimbursed.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), who boasted about having our friendship and respect, should know that our respect for him has gone down a lot since he has risen to speak. Mr. Speaker, he says that the big banks, the bigwigs, the very wealthy, will benefit from this legislation. He complains about not having the list of those who will be reimbursed. Yet, the Minister of State for Finance tabled yesterday the list of categories of depositors, and I do not see that many very wealthy people on it. When we look, for instance, at the figures for the municipalities, we see things things like populations of 25,000. I cannot believe that in a village with a population of 25,000, all 25,000 would be very wealthy people.

This small municipality is owed $10 million. An amount of $10 million is a lot for a municipality of 25,000 people.

Another municipality has a population of 50,000. That is even smaller than my city of Gatineau, which is considered an average-size town. This small town is owed $143,000. Then, there is a town with the same population as Gatineau which is owed $4 million.

I can tell the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville that if the town of Gatineau had had the misfortune of investing $4 million of the Gatineau taxpayers' money in the Canadian Commercial Bank, there would be a major crisis in the municipality.

In fact, I heard this morning on the radio a financial advisor for the city of Hull who spoke about the investment of this city, which has a population of 55,000 and is therefore a small town, which investment had been recommended by financial experts. The Hull advisor said that the town had been approached by the big chartered bank after people had been encouraged to trust the Canadian Commercial Bank and it was the big bank which told him: Why do you no longer have your deposits with us? Why do you have your deposits with a small regional bank? That is when the City of Hull tried to withdraw part of its investment.

However, there is still at least $5 million in the Canadian Commercial Bank which belong to Hull taxpayers. Yet, I do not believe that these are very wealthy people, Mr. Speaker.

In my opinion, the Hon. Member, whom we used to respect, does not do himself any credit by using such methods and by trying to criticize the Government and to suggest that the decision made last March was ill-advised. He speaks about the list of depositors. He wants the names of those who had deposits with the Canadian Commercial Bank. But would he pass a judgment after receiving such a list? Would he be the one to decide, for instance, that Municipality A and Pension Fund B would be reimbursed, but Labour Union C would not be because it had invested an enormous amount, which means that it is a big union and therefore very wealthy. Does this mean that Union C should not be reimbursed?

How would he choose amongst the mutual funds? Would he choose on the basis of the amount invested? Of the population served? Of the language spoken? Of the size of the area? Of whether the area served is rural or urban? How would he choose?

Mr. Speaker, it is nonsense to ask for a list of depositors before helping all of those who invested in all good faith in the Canadian Commercial Bank.

As recently as yesterday, we saw the lawyers involved with the Estey Commission which is investigating the unfortunate situation of the two banks, and it is very difficult to get access to documents deemed confidential under the legislation.

• (1250)

Mr. Speaker, it is provided for in our conventions that the indentity of depositors and the amounts of their deposits are to be kept confidential. It is a well-known fact that we have a most stable society in which private property and the privacy of citizens are respected. Our banking system, also one of the most stable in the world, requires that sort of confidentiality. When we have expert and legal opinion to the effect that the names of those depositors should not be disclosed, I see no reason why the Opposition could ask us to breach conventions that have been serving us well.

We know full well, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal Party, when they were in power, did breach a number of times and seriously several of those conventions with respect to business matters. This is why confidence of the business community declined to a point where there was tremendous harm done to the economy and an astronomical rise in unemployment. In their Government's energy program the Liberals also failed to show any respect for the business people who are building this country and who were on the point of providing Western Canada with the most remarkable development opportunities.

As far as the New Democratic Party is concerned, they believe that private property is some sort of a sin or crime. Virtue is not being rich, it is being poor. It is indeed because of that lack of respect for business conventions such as for instance the passing of retroactive legislation aimed at people who had invested in confidence in Western Canada's oil development that this country's economy was undermined. So Mr. Speaker, we are once again witnessing an effort, a new attack from the Liberals in the Official Opposition and from the New Democratic Party against conventions that are protecting our economic community and and our quality of life.

With their meddling habits, the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party have developed an attitude that is harmful to the business community and public enterprise. We, who belong to a party that respects private enterprise, private property, and the privacy of citizens, will not accept that, under the guise of feigned outrage, a new attack be launched to once more undermine efforts at protecting private property and the privacy of citizens. This is witchhunting, Mr. Speaker. It is true that those depositors will be getting refunds from the Public Treasury, but they are still entitled to that confidentiality so long as we are not satisfied that there is an essential need to brush it aside. This would then be a most serious precedent, as stated a number of times by witnesses before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. They said that if ever there was a breach of banking confidentiality, then the whole banking system would be endangered. One has but to check the minutes of the Committee to see how concerned they were with the Opposition launching such a witchhunt, using that kind of an excuse.

As far as the Leader of the Official Opposition is concerned, reading from press clippings and Hansard for mid-March, we see that he was absolutely silent on the issue. Maybe he recalled that he represented a Western constituency, or maybe he wanted to act responsibly. It is unfortunate that he has now strayed from that responsible position that honored him last March. We even noted in the speech he made yesterday, that he is trying to backtrack from that first attitude. This in my view is quite typical coming from the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker. He does not seem to be able to stick to his decisions. He suggests they were imposed upon him or, when he finds out that the wind has turned, he makes an about-face.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is almost one p.m., and I would like to continue this afternoon, if you will allow me, rather than being cut right in the middle—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has eight more minutes, plus ten minutes for questions and comments.

TOURISM

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, "Tourism Tomorrow" is the title of a conference taking place this week here in Ottawa. Industry and Government have gathered at the Congress Centre to discuss the future of tourism. I too am concerned about what lies ahead for tourism. However, my concerns run through a different vein.

The tourism sector has been hailed as our proudest growth industry. But there will be no tourism industry tomorrow if the Government continues to stymie the efforts of operators across the country. "Change the image of Canada", the Government says. "Give it more sex appeal". This industry needs serious consideration before sex appeal.

How do we convince Canadians to vacation in their own country when the price of gasoline has skyrocketed? By January, 1987, the cost of filling up at the pumps will have jumped 18 cents a gallon. Canadians will stop dead in their tracks when that hits them in the pocket book.

How do we persuade foreigners to explore our vast and diverse regions when the Government is not prepared to launch an effective marketing campaign? It will not spend the dollars to sell our wares in a way that works.

Closer to home, our local operators need assistance to grow and prosper. They are small business people. Provide them with what it takes to ensure that tourists return to our rugged regions year after year.

S.O. 22

It is time for the Government to accommodate the tourist operators. Bailing out the banks does not build a healthy economy. Supporting a growth industry like tourism does. Listen to what the industry is saying. The tourist operators know what works.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM—EFFECT OF CANCELLATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) is treating the Province of Nova Scotia in particular as a poor orphan.

Unbelievably, without any replacement or alternatives, she announced the end of the Petroleum Incentives Program, or PIP grants, which had sparked offshore drilling for gas and oil. Either in business terms or public policy terms, it is totally unacceptable to pull the plug without an alternative plan.

Uncertainty will kill hopes for prosperity from offshore gas development. Companies must plan, even if the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources does not. Drilling projects are ending, leases are expiring and, give it another month or so, companies will leave and not come back.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised "jobs, jobs, jobs" and economic development for Atlantic Canada. However, the September report of Informetrica predicts a loss of jobs and no production from the Venture development. That would be a tragedy.

There you have it, Mr. Speaker. No PIP, no alternatives, no hurry, and no concern. Why has the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who was such a Santa Claus with the Western Accord, become such a Scrooge to Nova Scotia? Surely Nova Scotia deserves more than this foggy silence from the Minister.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—CONDEMNATION OF AIR RAID ON TUNIS AND OF PALESTINIAN TERRORISTS

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, the bombing and devastation of Tunis last week by the State of Israel was in direct violation of the Geneva and Hague conventions as well as of the United Nations Charter to which both Israel and Canada are signatories.

The terrorist activities by a dissident group of Palestinians in piracy on the high seas, as well as the murder of innocent Israelis in Egypt, can no doubt be tied into the bombing.

The attack on Tunisia resulted in the death of women and children, not by a phantom terrorist group, claimed by no one, but by the most sophisticated armed force in the world—the State of Israel.

Canada, as a respected and peaceful nation and as a friend of Tunisia, Egypt, and Israel, should not hestitate to indicate our disgust with the unlawful incursion on the sovereignty of Tunisia, the murder of innocent civilians in Egypt, and the terrorist piracy by a fanatical few Palestinians.

I urge the Government to move as soon as possible to raise a motion of censure and condemnation in the United Nations of the State of Israel as being in willful and direct violation of the ninth and tenth Conventions of the Hague and Geneva and United Nations Charter, in concert with a motion of condemnation of the terrorist activities of Palestinians against innocent people of any nationality.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

HUNTING AND TRAPPING—SUSPENSION OF GREENPEACE ANTI-FUR CAMPAIGN

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, we welcome the decision by Greenpeace to suspend their European anti-fur campaign and trust that this signifies a new appreciation of the importance of hunting and trapping to Canada's aboriginal peoples. We are proud of the success which Indigenous Survival International has achieved, particularly through the efforts of its co-chairman, Mr. Georges Erasmus.

Canada's native peoples have enjoyed a harmonious relationship with nature for thousands of years. Indigenous Survival International promotes an awareness that cultural survival for native peoples depends upon their right to hunt, trap and fish. Our Government believes in the sustainable use of the world's renewable resources and encourages the efforts of Indigenous Survival International to promote the wise conservation of these resources.

While this recent success by ISI is encouraging, it is only a beginning. Much work remains to be done before other groups realize that their anti-fur crusades threaten to destroy native peoples and their cultures.

I am confident that the Government of Canada will continue to support the right of native peoples to pursue their traditional ways of life.

THE FAMILY

REQUEST FOR GREATER SOCIAL JUSTICE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have with me thousands of petitions signed by mothers protesting the Government's decision to cut $55 million from income support programs for families with children, and more specifically, to de-index family allowances.

Mr. Speaker, the families I met in Montreal, in Quebec City and in other communities seriously question the Government's decision to cut $55 million from these important programs, while at the same time it is tabling a Bill for the purpose of spending $800 million to compensate rich people and rich corporations in connection with the two bank failures, and they also wonder why the Progressive Conservative Government, at a time when it is cutting $55 million from programs that are vital to families with children, has decided to table a Bill to raise the salaries of our poor judges from a mere $117,000 to $135,000.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that all the Members of this House will invite the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to withdraw Bill C-70, in order to deal fairly with families with children.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

FRONTENAC, QUE.—STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE ASSOCIATION OFFICIAL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I realize that it is only Tuesday, but we already have a winner for the "Retraction of the Week" award. He is John Vincent, a key figure in the Frontenac Riding Association of the former Minister of Communications. On the weekend, Mr. Vincent claimed that $3,000 for chartering buses to the Conservative Leader's election rally was not the responsibility of the local campaign but was properly the responsibility of the federal Conservative campaign. This figure would have put either Conservative campaign in violation of the law.

Yesterday, after the issue was raised publicly, Mr. Vincent claimed that the undeclared cost of the buses was only $2,000, an amount which would, by itself, keep the federal campaign under the election expense limits. In awarding this week's retraction award to Mr. Vincent, I ask only this question: Who from the Prime Minister's office called Mr. Vincent?

Obviously, this series of statements by Conservative campaign officials points out the necessity for ensuring that the RCMP inquiry not only looks at the undeclared expenses of the Frontenac campaign but at the national Conservative campaign as well. In that vein, I have written to the Chief Electoral Officer and the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty).

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY'S FUND RAISING LETTER

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, recently I was the recipient of a fund raising plea from the Liberal Party of Canada. That was their first mistake, for why in their confused minds would they include me, a true blue Tory, on their mailing list?

However, their confusion does not stop there. That same letter goes on to set out Liberal Party achievements. Talk about stretching, misrepresentation and dreaming. One achievement they claim is that Ontario Liberals managed to defeat the Tories in last May's election.

Just to keep the record straight, not only did the Liberals not defeat the Conservatives in the May election, the Tories hold five more seats than the Liberals. However, the Liberals had to bow down, compromise, and sell out to their friends, the NDP, to defeat the Tories in the Legislature.

There is still more of this distortion of fact and truth. The Liberals say they scored an upset victory in the Yukon. I feel certain that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) would not want the public to be misled that way. He has too much respect for the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) for that. The Tories are strongly entrenched in the Yukon federally and they form the Oppositon in the Territorial Government were the NDP, not the Liberals, are in power.

I urge the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to check with his officials, speech writers and fund raisers so that he can bring a halt to the pot calling the kettle black.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

OPPOSITION CHARGED WITH CHARACTER ASSASSINATION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition is losing all credibility. A few days ago the Liberal Leader stated in the House that the CCB had moved $300 million in assets to a U.S. subsidiary, which was promptly denied by the American authorities. It appears that he was angry because the rat pack was outratting him, so he took over the job of ratting. Incidentally, he is doing a better job at it than the rat pack. Whenever the Liberals make an untrue statement, the NDP, not to be outdone, say: "Me too, me too, me too".

• (1410)

Instead of taking the high road by improving legislation and working for a united Canada, opposition Members revel in character assassination of good and honest Ministers. When they think they have a Minister down, they all jump on him or her at once like a pack of wolves. Will the Opposition ever learn that one does not build a country or a Party by negativism or by making untrue sensational statements just to get the headlines in the press?

Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government are acting positively. We are carrying out the mandate given to us by the Canadian people to heal the wounds inflicted by the Liberals during years of misrule. We may make mistakes, but they will be honest errors. We may have to bleed a little at times, but we will keep right on building a united nation, creating a climate to encourage investment and jobs, fostering prosperious agricultural and manufacturing industries until every—

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

COMMISSIONER'S LETTER TO NEWSPAPER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, it appears that Commission Simmonds of the RCMP has allowed himself to become a mouthpiece for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). In a politically partisan letter to a Toronto newspaper, the Commissioner challenged journalist Claire Hoy to name his source to substantiate the claim that Mrs. Mulroney asked the RCMP to salute her.

This type of action by the Commissioner is very uncharacteristic. In the RCMP's internal review of the Hatfield case, the Commissioner took a completely different view of a journalist revealing his source. Writing on Mr. Nick Hill's involvement in the Hatfield case, the Commissioner indicated:

> He refused to disclose his source, which is an understandable position for a journalist to take.

Why does the Commissioner change his tune in this instance and challenge Claire Hoy to reveal his source?

Editorializing on the work of Mr. Hoy, the Commissioner went on to indicate:

> There is little that Hoy writes . . . that holds much appeal for members of the RCMP who have little respect for vitriolic babbling.

It is highly unusual for the Commissioner of the RCMP to criticize a journalist just because the journalist happens to be critical of the Conservative Government or reveals information which is embarrassing to the Government. It is not his role to be a propaganda organ for the Prime Minister's Office. It is unprofessional and unbecoming of the head of the RCMP to criticize the work of a journalist in such a partisan fashion. I would hope that the Commissioner realizes that the RCMP is there—

S.O. 22

PREPAYMENT OF TAX BY SENIOR CITIZENS HOLDING CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform Hon. Members of the House of a situation which was brought to my attention by several senior citizens in my riding of Brandon-Souris. As we are aware, many senior citizens invest a large portion of their savings in Canada Savings Bonds. However, as income tax is not deducted from interest payments, or from most other sources of income for seniors, that income tax frequently must be prepaid on a quarterly basis, even though interest from those bonds is not received until November.

Unfortunately, it is often quite difficult for many senior citizens to do their own calculations on the amount of interest they will receive and on the amount their payments must be. Furthermore, they fail to understand why they must make income tax payments on money which is yet to be received.

Perhaps, to alleviate some of these problems, income tax could be automatically deducted from interest payments on bonds as it is from RRSP pay-outs, or perhaps bond holders might be able to have their interest paid on a quarterly basis as well. Certainly in an age of electronic banking this could be an option. Failing these reforms, the least that could be done to ease the situation would be to ask the Government to issue a statement, or a bill, to senior citizens reminding them of when to pay and calculating that payment for them.

Senior citizens in Canada are not opposed to paying their fair share of income tax, but they do not feel that that tax should be paid until the income is actually received.

AGRICULTURE

PLIGHT OF PRAIRIE GRAIN FARMERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members of Parliament are no doubt aware of the terrible drought which affected southern Saskatchewan or the southern Prairies last summer. Now we have the double disaster of a drought on one hand and rain and snow on the other hand, so that the grain in the fields is lying under snow and cannot be harvested.

Last summer, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) asked the Hon. Member or Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) to head up a task force which would make recommendations to assist farmers suffering from the drought. That was not weeks and weeks and weeks ago. Where is that report? Farmers want to see it and its recommendations. They want that report made public now.

A number of years ago C. D. Howe said: "What's a million?" and he was thrown out of office. We now have a Government which is in effect saying in aiding the banks: "What's a billion?" The Government has a billion dollars for the banks but it has nothing at all for the grain farmers of western Canada. I call upon the Government to come up with an acreage payment immediately for western farmers who are suffering from the drought, and for other western farmers who are suffering because their grain is lying under snow and rain. We need that assistance now. We want an acreage payment, and we want it now.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

UNINSURED DEPOSITORS—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Yesterday, in the House of Commons, she said that it was not the Government's intention to set a precedent in compensating uninsured depositors in our financial institutions.

My question relates to the future policy of the Government. Is it, then, her intention to rescue only depositors who were led into error by her statements and those of her colleagues and by the report of the Inspector General?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have already made it clear in the House, and in other statements I have made, that we have in every way regarded institutions which have come to our attention as unique, and we have taken into account, in the circumstances, what we feel must be done on behalf of depositors, taxpayers, and economic conditions. In this case we made a decision which we feel is perfectly appropriate. We will continue to make our decisions on those bases, should such an eventuality arise again.

INQUIRY WHY FOREIGN BANKS WILL BE COMPENSATED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister. Could she inform the House why she thinks it is fair to compensate foreign banks which had deposits with the Canadian Commercial Bank or the Northland Bank, but refuses to reimburse holders of debentures or shares, such as investment funds, pension funds and credit unions?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I had thought that this Bill was being debated before the House, but I am prepared to answer the question. There is a definition of "depositor" within the CDIC Act. It is the only appropriate precedent for how one defines a depositor. We have used that definition in this case, and I think it is perfectly appropriate.

REQUEST FOR IDENTIFICATION OF TWO DEPOSITORS RECEIVING COMPENSATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to put a supplementary, in the public interest, Mr. Speaker.

The documents released yesterday by the Minister show that one private citizen had invested $1,423,668 at the Canadian Commercial Bank and another had invested $2,154,555 at the Northland Bank, which means that these two people, and we do not even know whether they are Canadians or not, will receive a total of over $3.5 million—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid I had risen to ask the Right Hon. Member to ask his question and that his question was asked when the microphone was off. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman could repeat his question.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Who are these two people, Mr. Speaker, who were mentioned yesterday by the Minister and who will receive more than $3.5 million, if the Bill now before the House is adopted?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that I have prepared for the House a table of the categories of depositors. I continue to be prepared to put before Mr. Justice Estey a full list of the depositors and have him reach a decision on whether or not it should be published.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: This is the highest court right here.

MINISTER'S PRESENCE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Can the Minister confirm that she was in Canada during the entire month of July and the first two weeks of August, a period which was crucial for the health and safety of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I was not in Canada in July, and I was in Canada in the first two weeks of August.

MINISTER'S ABSENCE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, given the magnitude of this problem, given that Canadian taxpayers are now being left with a bill of almost $1 billion, and that this was the most important issue for financial institutions in 62 years, did the Minister not consider that it might have been wise to remain in Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, we live in the age of the telephone.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for a man of unimpeachable integrity, namely, the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Crosbie: Thank you.

Mr. Broadbent: In recent weeks we have had a Cabinet Minister, a Member of Parliament, and the National Director of the Conservative Party all publicly contradict the Prime Minister's staff. Today, however, another step has been taken that is potentially quite serious. We have had the Minister of Justice describe the performance of the staff in very negative terms.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are out of order again today.

Mr. Broadbent: My question to the Minister is this. Given the importance of the Prime Minister's staff to the functioning of the Government will the Minister of Justice elaborate on what he had to say earlier?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Don't you know the rules around here?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Sure he does, although he breaks them. He shows contempt for the House of Commons.

An Hon. Member: He knows better.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Hon. Member for Oshawa knows full well that questions to the Minister of Justice should relate to the Justice portfolio. I invite him to ask questions of the Minister of Justice in his ministerial portfolio.

Mr. Broadbent: My question of course pertains to the work that is done by the Minister of Justice. I want to ask him, when he described the Prime Minister's staff in those terms, was it because in exercising his responsibility as Minister of Justice he made a request to the Prime Minister's office that was never conveyed to the Prime Minister, or did he ask for some other project to be carried out that was not carried out by the Prime Minister's staff.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, both the question and the Leader of the New Democratic Party are peachable rather than impeachable. I made no statement yesterday giving my views on the PMO. I said what other people were alleging with reference to the PMO.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is right.

Mr. Crosbie: Those personages being Members of the Opposition offices. The present PMO is far superior to anything that Coutts or Axworthy could possibly produce.

An Hon. Member: Where is Pinocchio today?

Mr. Crosbie: I find it to be perfectly satisfactory despite the scurvy allegations and imputations of the hon. gentlemen opposite.

DESCRIPTION OF STAFF

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Making that comparison with Mr. Coutts is to damn with faint praise, may I put it that way.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, you may.

Mr. Broadbent: With reference to the question that was put to him, which was would he say that the Prime Minister's staff consists of a bunch of dolts, the Minister is quoted to have said "that is as good as possible interpretation as any".

Is the Minister of Justice taking back those words or does he stand by them?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The Member for Oshawa knows full well that—I think we all know what he is doing but it is not a question that is appropriate to Question Period.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It is abuse of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Egmont.

SALE OF CANNED TUNA—MINISTER'S ALLEGED STATEMENT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): My question on the same subject is to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister of Justice has criticized the Prime Minister's staff for its handling of the tuna affair. The Minister said that the senior staff in the Prime Minister's office should have taken immediate action to withdraw the tainted tuna from supermarkets as soon as they found out it was unfit for human consumption.

Mr. Crosbie: I did not state that.

Mr. Henderson: Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree with that statement by the Minister of Justice?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The answer to that question has been given over and over and over again.

An Hon. Member: It still smells.

Mr. Nielsen: With respect to the staff in the Prime Minister's office, unlike many of those critics who advance uninformed and unfounded opinions with respect to those personnel—

An Hon. Member: Like the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Nielsen: —I can assure him that they are of the highest possible calibre, certainly an improvement over the previous crew that was there.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): The Deputy Prime Minister is suggesting that the Member for St. John's West is ill informed. My supplementary question is to the Deputy Prime Minister. Why did the Justice Minister change his statement about the level of competency in the Prime Minister's office? Did the Minister of Justice have a sudden attack of amnesia or was he given an ultimatum, change your story or resign?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have stated in this House and I state again, that I made no such statement. I have not been asked by anyone to withdraw any statement because I can't withdraw a statement I did not make. An interview was twisted, and the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Angus: You mean they got the best of you, John?

Mr. Crosbie: —seeks to twist it further. No such statement has been made; no word of criticism has passed my lips about the PMO and that is the position, so there it is.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

CATEGORIES OF DEPOSITORS RECEIVING COMPENSATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crosbie: And anyone who wants to put his seat on the line, do so. You are running out of seats over there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Riis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For someone who has not made a statement, he seems a little jumpy.

My question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Now that she has committed the taxpayers of Canada to this billion dollar bail-out, given the information she provided to the House yesterday, would she confirm that 70 per cent of the bail-out money will go to domestic banks, foreign banks, investment dealers, large corporations and provincial Governments? Will she confirm that 70 per cent would go to those categories?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We had a question earlier relating to policy in the future which became a question relating to anticipation of the Bill before the House. The Hon. Member is indeed asking a question about the matter that is currently under debate in the House and he should know that that is not therefore in order. Does the Hon. Member have a question with regard to other policy?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Could I invite all the Ministers who want to tell me what Beauchesne's says, to do it somewhere else.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my new question to the Minister of State for Finance is this. Considering that in the United Kingdom as well as West Germany and the United States the Governments in those countries have never seen it appropriate to use taxpayers' money to bail out uninsured depositors above the insured limit, would she explain why the Government of Canada has felt that this is required in Canada when it has not been required in West Germany, in the United Kingdom or in the United States of America?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am not responsible for policy in West Germany, the United Kingdom or any such country. I am responsible for policy in this country and I stand by our decision to assist the economy of western Canada, which I am sorry that the NDP has totally lost interest in, by looking after our financial institutions in those areas, and the depositors and the borrowers in those areas.

PENITENTIARIES

PRIVATIZATION OF PRISONS INQUIRY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General I would like to address my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Can he advise the House whether it is the intention of the federal Government to privatize federal prisons in order to cut costs?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I am afraid that that is a question that will have to await the return of the Solicitor General. I will take it as notice and bring it to his attention.

PROGRAM REVIEW INQUIRY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Can the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that as part of his task force a study has been conducted which will recommend the privatization of federal prisons and is he prepared to table that report in this House of Commons?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I know of no such plan with respect to the work on program review. The study team that is examining Justice has just been composed. It is one of the last to be composed and hopefully it will be completing its work by the end of November.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

COMPENSATION FOR UNINSURED DEPOSITORS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. I wonder if the Minister could explain why she feels it is appropriate to use taxpayers' money to bail out foreign banks with uninsured deposits in Canadian institutions when that does not happen in the United States, West Germany and the United Kingdom. In other words, if those countries do not bail out their own banks, why should we feel an obligation to do so?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I feel the responsibility to look after the integrity of our banking system. Those depositors to which the Hon. Member referred are just as legitimate as other depositors. As well, we do not have the kinds of regulations that exist in those countries, regulations which I very much want to put before the House and have passed as quickly as possible.

SHIPBUILDING

CONSTRUCTION OF FRIGATES IN MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services.

Last September 30 the Prime Minister reluctantly met with Canadian Vickers Limited workers in Montreal. Since then, did the Prime Minister ask the Minister of Supply and Services to look into this matter, did he report on that meeting, and does the Minister intend to make sure that this contract, awarded for the construction of frigates in Montreal, will be honoured?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has not been in touch with me concerning this matter but the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve has made representations on behalf of all the workers. He brought representatives of the union to my office last week. Tomorrow I will be having a meeting with the president of Vickers. This matter involves a very complicated legal question and I have solicited a legal opinion to determine what course of action we might have available. It is a serious problem. We are dealing with it and we hope to have an appropriate response shortly.

[Translation]

INQUIRY IF CONTRACTS WILL BE HONOURED

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his answer. I am glad he will meet with Vickers management.

I would like to ask him whether he will tell company officials that all frigate and shipbuilding contracts must be honoured. Under those contracts awarded by his predecessor, the work was to be shared equitably by the various shipbuilding yards throughout Canada, and this contract in particular was to be carried out by Vickers workers in Montreal.

Will the Minister tell the president of Vickers that the contracts must be honoured?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the question was, but I can indicate that there will be no movement of workers out of the Province of Quebec. All that is envisaged by Vickers is a possible move of workers from Montreal to Quebec City. That may be something over which the Government of Canada has no power. It may be a matter of contract. That is what I have undertaken to determine: what are we legally entitled to do?

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, this is Family Week and I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister about the Government's priorities. Is it more important to the Government to use $1 billion to bail out banks or is it more important to use this money to maintain fully indexed family allowances for Canada's children through 1990?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Party that now forms the Government has always considered the family unit to be at the root of all of its policies and will always use the appropriate priority whenever any of these decisions have to be made.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

FUNDING OF TRANSITION HOUSES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, if the family is the most important unit, I would like to know why there has been no action taken on the promise made by the Prime Minister to do something about battered women and families. Why would the Deputy Prime Minister not recommend to Cabinet that the Government take just 3 per cent of the bank bail-out money to create 300 new transition houses across Canada?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member suggests that there is an instant answer. The Hon. Member knows that the delivery of service to battered women and the question of the funding of transition houses is a number one priority. My colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, has been dealing with the provinces, as well as the Minister responsible for housing. This is a priority in federal-provincial discussions. The Hon. Member has our assurance that this is a priority of the Government.

OPERATION OF SERVICES BELOW COMPENSATORY RATES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the Government's White Paper entitled Freedom to Move quite properly observes that the Government should be sensitive to allowing Crown corporations unfairly to cross-subsidize their operations, will the Minister now move to forbid CN from operating any rail service below a compensatory rate?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Hon. Member is aware, the document entitled Freedom to Move has been referred to the Standing Committee on Transport. Through its terms of reference, I have asked it specifically to consider this important matter as it is an issue that has been raised throughout the country.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CAREER PLANNING FOR EMPLOYEES FACING LAY-OFFS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Last week the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development confirmed to the House that through a massive reorganization of his Department there were up to 1,500 job cuts in that Department. Weeks before we had been told of job cuts in the Public Service of Canada, in Transport Canada, in the Department of Communications and in the Department of the Secretary of State, affecting thousands of employees. What career planning does the Minister have in mind for these public servants? Does he plan to offer them retraining, or does the Government have a plan to help these workers recycle themselves or find alternative employment in the Public Service of Canada?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is quite true that in the last several days announcements have been made about the potential layoff of some employees in the Public Service, quite in line with what was announced in the May Budget, which was a reduction of 2 per cent in the actual workforce for the coming fiscal year. However, I am very happy to say that regarding workforce adjustment policies as well as most of the other commitments we have undertaken vis-à-vis the unions, we have worked out a policy that provides for the kind of pre-notice, retraining and recycling within the Public Service that will minimize the adjustment of these workers to an obviously difficult situation.

[Translation]

JOB SECURITY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Can the Minister confirm to the House that those employees will get the same service and the same attention from the Public Service Commission and, for instance, will a priority list be established? Will they have the right to appear before the PSC to make sure that everything is done to help them find other jobs?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, not only is everything done to enable them to find other jobs within the Public Service, but they are indeed given priority. Notice periods have been negotiated with the unions so that displaced employees may benefit from the most complete retraining available. If I may refer to what happened after last November's exercises, all but 130-odd employees out of about 3,000—I do not remember the exact figure—have so far been recycled within the Public Service. We hope to be able to do the same thing in the future.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

DISCOUNTING OF INCOME TAX REFUNDS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Minister has been urged repeatedly by church, consumer, and anti-poverty organizations to stop the discounting of income tax refunds. Last month at a federal-provincial meeting of Ministers of Consumer Affairs, it was agreed that income tax discounting of tax returns of persons receiving the child tax credit should be stopped. Today the Minister received a telex from the Manitoba Minister of Consumer Affairs asking when action would be taken. Can the Minister give the House any information as to when he proposes to deal with this question?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to answer that we have been considering this matter for several months. We have had many consultations with the parties concerned as well as with the provinces. I may remind my hon. friend that a policy of this kind involves a number of other departments as well. We are consulting with our colleagues and intend to make a decision as soon as possible.

REQUEST THAT PRACTICE BE BANNED

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it is now less than three months until the next tax year commences. The Minister has to do something. Can he tell these organizations and the Manitoba Minister why he cannot ban the discounting of the child tax credit and of all income tax returns since this has already been done successfully in Quebec and the United States? What is the difficulty the Minister has in defending our poorest Canadians?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, there are of course a number of problems, but it would take too long to mention all of them this afternoon. Can you imagine what is involved?

However, I have already indicated I intend to deal with the situation as soon as possible, and I hope the matter will be settled before the start of the new income tax season.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It involves the same extraordinary interview of the Hon. Member for St. John's West at VOCM in St. John's. My question involves the way the Government passes information on to the public.

With respect to the Prime Minister telling the truth, the Minister was quoted as saying that he would be crazy if he was not because these things are not important enough for him not to have told the truth. Does that statement suggest that for matters of unimportance the Government will tell the truth and that for matters of extreme importance the Government may not tell the truth? Will he please clarify how the Government decides to fess up or not?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much the relevancy of the Hon. Member's question with respect to my ministerial responsibilities. Nonetheless, I can assure him, as I have assured Hon. Members before him who have asked the same type of question, that the calibre of staff in the Prime Minister's Office is of the highest possible quality. I am sure the Minister of Justice shares that view with me, as he has already stated in the House today.

Mr. Penner: He does not share any such view.

POLICY INQUIRY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I think the Deputy Prime Minister failed to understand the question. It is critical when a Minister of Justice of the Government of Canada suggests the Prime Minister was telling the truth because the matter was not important enough not to have told the truth. It other words, the matter was not important enough to have lied. Is there such a policy in this administration, as suggested by the Minister of Justice, that on unimportant matters they will tell the truth but on matters of great importance, great political exposure, they may not tell the truth? Is that the policy of the Government?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, that is the most extraordinary pulling out of a 10-minute interview, a scattered word here and there. It befouls and smirches the reputation of the hon. gentleman in the way he asks his question. It should not be permitted, Mr. Speaker. It is a disgrace that this type of questioning is permitted.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That won't work, John.

Ms. Copps: Tell the truth, John.

Mr. Crosbie: You would not know the truth if it struck you in the head.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Copps: Erase the tape, John.

Mr. Crosbie: Another bunch of twisters. You are incapable of even reading straight.

Mr. Speaker: Are Hon. Members finished yelling at each other now?

Mr. Crosbie: I have not even started.

Mr. Speaker: Would Hon. Members like us to stop Question Period for three or four minutes so that they can go on? Question. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

SMALL BUSINESS

CLOSING OF DOMINION TEXTILE PLANTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, they do not even know enough to calm down!

My question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and concerns the closing of Dominion Textiles plants at Saint-Jean and Valleyfield.

Considering statements by the union that these shutdowns were an attempt on the part of the company to break the union, will the Minister conduct an inquiry into the use of public funds and review all federal subsidies earmarked for modernizing the plant, in order to establish this was not an attempt to break the union?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, we are well acquainted with the problem at Dominion Textile. Yesterday, I met with the president of the company, and we are trying to find solutions so that Dominion Textile will not have to close down, and if it were obliged to do so as a result of the situation in the textile industry, we will find another use for the plant, even before it closes down.

JOBS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is this an undertaking that the jobs of these employees will be restored, especially considering the fact that this is the most modern textile plant in Quebec?

Will the Government give the House the assurance that the company will not close down simply to try to avoid having a union that works for its employees?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, the Government cannot interfere in the operations of a private company, nor can it dictate any guidelines. However, our Government, unlike what happened during the last five years, is trying to find jobs and to restore the textile industry.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST THAT UNITED STATES ALLEGED CRIMINAL BE DEPORTED

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. He will know that the Federal Court of Canada has ruled that the Minister of Justice and not the courts must deal with the extradition matter of Joseph Kindler. When will the Minister send this man back to the United States where he can be properly tried and punished for a most heinous murder committed there?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be asked a relevant question about a matter of public policy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The position with reference to the person involved is that the appeal period has not yet expired. However, counsel for Mr. Kindler wishes to write me to set out reasons why I should exercise my discretion under the extradition treaty, on behalf of her client. I may well give her a chance to come to make an oral presentation as well. Once that is done, then a decision will be made.

Mr. Broadbent: Check it with the PMO.

Mr. Crosbie: I cannot make a decision until the lawyer for the person involved has been given a chance to make representations.

NATIONAL REVENUE

GULF TAKEOVER—TAX RULING

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. If the Minister has been briefed, he will have read an article in Maclean's magazine dated October 14 entitled "Sweetheart Tax Ruling" which deals with the Gulf acquisition. If the Minister has read the article he will have seen that the taxpayer was able to accomplish indirectly what could not be accomplished directly. Will the Minister not agree that it would be improper and not in accordance with the guidelines of his Department to give a ruling in such circumstances?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, again, the distinguished Member opposite, because of his previous experience, knows that in asking a question such as the one he has asked he is inviting me to violate some of the important principles of Canadian income tax jurisprudence. He knows that I cannot make such an observation under the circumstances. I have assured him before that to the best of my knowledge any such actions which were taken with reference to the provisions of our Income Tax Act were taken according to law. Unless he has evidence to the contrary, I can go no further.

AMOUNT INVOLVED

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, if the Government will not be forthcoming with respect to the contents of this ruling, will the Minister at least tell the House—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Minister follows the law.

Mr. Crosbie: You are a lawyer, remember?

Mr. Johnston: We have heard enough from you today.

Mr. Crosbie: You are a tax expert.

Mr. Johnston: Will the Minister please tell the House whether in fact the contribution of Canadian taxpayers—you and me, Mr. Speaker, and other Members of this Chamber—exceeds $1 billion?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, again, my hon. friend knows that for me to hazard an opinion, a guess, or to provide information of that nature, would be very much against the traditions of what the income tax laws of this country stand for. I ask the Hon. Member opposite how he would like to have his affairs disclosed in the House of Commons.

ENERGY

EXPLORATION INCENTIVES PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Last spring, in the Western Accord, she announced the end of the Petroleum Incentive Program grants called the PIP grants. These are grants for offshore exploration mainly in Canada Lands. The Minister is aware that these grants led to quite a bit of offshore exploration in Nova Scotia. She has put nothing in to replace it. Does she think this is fair, especially to the Province of Nova Scotia, whose oil and gas boom is collapsing now around Nova Scotians?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Supply and Services, has announced, in Halifax, that we will be revealing shortly the contents of our new incentive program. I am sure that he will welcome such an initiative.

• (1450)

Mr. Waddell: The Minister should know, perhaps, that her Department said not before the end of the year.

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, given that the rigs are leaving now, that companies are making other plans, that there is instability in Nova Scotia, would the Minister speed up that decision and, for goodness sake, announce a decision fairly soon so that the Government does not treat Nova Scotia like some orphaned province?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can be assured that we are not treating Nova Scotia like an orphaned province. I have already told the Hon. Member that we are going to be announcing our new incentive program shortly. Is he suggesting that he would prefer we do nothing?

BANKS AND BANKING

SOCIAL JUSTICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Finance being absent, I will direct my question to the Minister of State (Finance) who is carrying on the fight in the House of Commons to reward individuals who have deposited more than $60,000 in the banking institutions.

I have here petitions signed by people from across Canada. Can the Minister explain what social justice notion prompted her action to cut $55 million off income support programs for families with children, and then hand out $1 billion to banks whose depositors have more than $60,000? On what social justice notion did she base her decision?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, our actions with respect to the bank are designed to help ordinary Canadians. Many of the Canadians who have deposits in these banks, who are westerness, are individuals. They are small businesses and employ people. I have pointed that out to this House time after time.

Mr. Broadbent: Give us the list, Barbara.

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-79

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister know that she will penalize 3.5 million Canadian families just to reward 100-odd rich bank depositors? Is the Minister prepared to recommend to the Prime Minister that Bill C-79 be withdrawn?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of withdrawing Bill C-79.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR EDUCATION PROGRAM ON AIDS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Could the Deputy Prime Minister advise the House whether the Government is considering entering into a public education campaign across the country to satisfy a growing concern amongst Canadians with respect to AIDS?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, not to my knowledge. I know the Minister of National Health and Welfare is very concerned about increasing public awareness with respect to this disease. Perhaps I could take the question as notice and ensure that it is brought to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare for a fuller response on his return.

FUNDING OF RESEARCH

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed again to the Deputy Prime Minister. Could he take it as notice to the Minister of National Health and Welfare to inquire whether the Government intends to increase the amount of monies which could be made available for research into Aids?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take it as notice and ensure that the Minister of National Health and Welfare gets back to the Hon. Member. If my recollection is accurate, I believe that the Government is already assisting some operations to increase public awareness in this area, particularly—as I am informed by my colleague—in the Vancouver area.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

COMPLAINTS ABOUT SERVICE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada

Post. I continue to receive many complaints about this Crown Corporation, its high cost and its poor service. I understand there are at least three studies under way, the private sector task force, the Auditor General's review, and the Laventhol and Horwath Review. What is the Minister's timetable for action in this area of vital concern to thousands and thousands of Canadians?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, the Auditor General's final report is expected to be submitted to the board of directors of the Post Office by the middle of November. It is its responsibility to decide whether or not to make it public. The Fisher report on the Ed Varma situation is expected to be submitted by the end of this month and, again, it will be submitted to the Minister, Ed Varma, and the corporation, and we intend to make it public as soon as we receive it. The Marchment report is expected to be submitted at the beginning of November and as soon as we receive the recommendations we will properly deal with that.

ENERGY

LLOYDMINSTER HEAVY OIL UPGRADER PROJECT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Would the Minister tell the House why her Government is reviewing the federal commitment to the Husky Oil upgrader project in Lloydminster?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be prudent of any Government to review the terms of a $750 million loan guarantee in the light of the improved conditions which the Western Accord has given the industry.

IMPACT OF WESTERN ACCORD

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Will she explain why she said last May that this project was a direct result of the Western Accord? And why did she take credit for creating 15,000 person years of employment when the federal Government is now reviewing its commitment to the entire project which was originally approved by the former Liberal Government?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this Government is on record as supporting the biprovincial project. It is because of the improved economics of the project under the terms of the Western Accord that we are making sure that the over-all financial package is attractive enough for it to proceed.

PORTS

PORT OF CHURCHILL—IMPROVEMENT PROJECTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister knows that in 1984 there was a federal-provincial agreement signed which was aimed at revitalizing the Port of Churchill. In the timetable set out in that agreement, work was supposed to be done on dust control immediately, dredging of the harbour was to be done by the summer of 1985, and a new tugboat was to be ready for the summer of 1986. Would the Minister tell western Canadians when that work is actually going to start?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, those projects are still under active consideration. In fact, I have had discussions with the Minister of Transport for the Province of Alberta with a view to an extension of the shipping season into Churchill and the assurance that ice-breaking services would be made available. In so far as the subagreement is concerned, ongoing discussions have taken place. The rehabilitation of boxcars is occurring. Some other elements of it are still under active consideration. With respect to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is beginning to be a statement.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Transport meant to refer to the provincial Minister of Transportation in Manitoba with respect to consultations about extending the port season.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has responsibility for certain aspects of that federal-provincial agreement. When is he going to live up to those aspects of the agreement? When is the money going to come from the federal Government?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we do have responsibilities with respect to the ERDA subagreements. We also have responsibilities to the taxpayers to see that the money is spent prudently and wisely.

FISHERIES

SALE OF CANNED TUNA—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Government House Leader. In view of the comments made by the Minister of Justice in reference to the Member of Parliament, Mr. McCain, that "The only issue that might have been brought up was the complaint that fish inspectors, the bureaucrats, were out of hand. I mean, he may have complained somewhere of bureaucrats, so it could have been brought up in that way"—he was referring to caucus—in view of these new comments and revelations, will the House Leader agree now to appoint a parliamentary committee to investigate the whole tuna affair in order to exonerate the Minister of Justice?

Mr. Broadbent: Just say yes, Ray, and sit down.

• (1500)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that I or most Canadians feel that the Minister of Justice requires any exoneration. He just finished pointing out that the statements attributed to him are not in fact what he said. I do not think anything can be clearer than that, and the normal parliamentary tradition is that we accept the word of the Hon. Minister.

AGRICULTURE

USE OF GRAIN ELEVATORS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Prairie farmers have a considerable investment in grain elevators across the country. Could the Minister give us some indication of whether the policy of the Government is to force farmers to haul to elevators other than their own in an attempt to have them pay back their advance payments?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Member raises a rather technical matter having to do with how farmers are required to pay back their advance payments before they are considered in default and charged interest. We have been dealing with a lot of these cases and I would be very happy to deal with whatever concerns are raised by his constituents if he would provide me with the full details. It is a serious matter and we are perfectly willing and able to do whatever we can to assist farmers if, as the import of his question suggests, a hardship is caused by asking people to haul their grain further than they need to haul it.

POINT OF ORDER

DISTINCTION MADE BY MR. SPEAKER BETWEEN TWO QUESTIONS

Mr. Speaker: I am in receipt of a notice concerning a point of order by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) posed an appropriate question asking for the names of individuals who were large depositors in the two failed banks in western Canada. Later on in that same Question Period I asked a general question about the Minister's reaction to a large category and you said that was an inappropriate question. I seek a clarification on why one was appropriate and one was not?

Mr. Speaker: I invite the Hon. Member to come and see me. I tried to indicate at the time that I had been in some difficulty in the earlier questions because the questioning had begun with questions about future policy and then came back to what might have been a matter of the Bill. When I heard the Hon. Member's first question it was quite clear to me that it related specifically to the Bill. It is always difficult in a situation as fluid and as political as the bank question to make a distinction between the Bill and other matters. If the Hon. Member is aggrieved, I would be more than happy to consider it again with him. My only intent was to remind Hon. Members that it is improper to ask questions during Question Period on a matter currently before the House.

PETITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION DEDUCTIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of the Kamloops area who are concerned that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has announced that workers laid off after December 31 of this year will have their pension benefits deducted from their unemployment insurance benefits, thus effectively eliminating the pension package benefit for the workers.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed by residents of Flin Flon, Manitoba, in which they complain about the Government's intention to have pension benefits, which are essential to the maintenance of family income and compensation to workers for their lifelong contribution to society, included as income for unemployment insurance purposes. They ask that all retired employees keep their pension benefits and receive their unemployment benefits without deduction of pension income.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by many members of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers Federation protesting changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act which are to come into effect on January 1, 1986. They call upon Parliament to ensure that such a change is not proceeded with and that those who are pensioned off are able to collect their pensions as well as unemployment insurance if they so qualify.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and honour to present to the House a petition signed by a number of residents of the area surrounding Prince Albert in which they ask the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and rescind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour in this National Family Week to present petitions from constituents in the City of Thunder Bay and the Township of Nipigon. They protest deindexation of the family allowance and the massive cut-backs to our child care system, and call upon the House of Commons to restore indexation of family allowances.

TRANSPORT

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations among the Parties and I think you will find there will be unanimous consent without debate of the following motion:

That the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Transport, presented to the House on Tuesday, October 1, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There being such consent, shall the motion carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary when he could hope to provide an answer to Question No. 379 which I asked on May 24, and inquired about again a month ago. This is one of a pair of questions on closely related subjects, one having to do with the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, which has been answered, and one to do with the Canadian Forces superannuation account, which has not been answered. I am worried that one of these is being held up because it will present a view opposite to the one that the Parliamentary Secretary or someone else may want to present to the House.

I would like to point out as well that the answer to Question No. 383 contained a gratuitous note at the bottom which appears to be an answer to a question I did not ask. It is purely subjective in nature and I ask, when the Parliamentary Secretary does answer Question No. 379, that he spare me the editorializing on the subject matter.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I can indicate to the Hon. Member that part of the answer to the question he asked would involve some other areas of Government where there are negotiations going on at present. I propose to answer that question upon the completion of those negotiations.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) and the Parliamentary Secretary have a meeting later?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canada Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 7379).

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, in concluding this morning, I said it was unfortunate that the Leader of the Opposition had relinquished the responsible ways he had shown so well last March when he supported the rescue plan.

I read in an article in the Edmonton Journal that what the Leader of the Opposition, claimed, was unfounded and I quote:

[English]

"It's unlikely that the Canadian Commercial Bank pumped $300 million into its U.S. subsidiary, as charged by Liberal Leader John Turner, a California banking regulator said Wednesday. "To my knowledge, there was no such infusion of funds", said David Scott, California deputy superintendent of banks "Remember that Westlands only has $386 million of assets in total"."

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this reminds me of a statement made by the Leader of the Opposition when he was Prime Minister, when he said that the Progressive Conservative Party was going to fire 600,000 public servants as soon as we were elected, although everybody knew perfectly well we only had 258,000 public servants in Canada. So there was some amateur exaggeration involved, and unfortunately, the Leader of the Opposition is now resuming this practice.

Journalists, whom the Leader of the Opposition quotes with such authority and relish, also had a few things to say, namely that the Government had no choice but to lend a helping hand to this regional bank so as to safeguard its deposits and also avoid hurting the economy of Western Canada which was slow to recoup and was in fact lagging behind the rest of the country's economic recovery. I would like to quote here from a column by John Ferguson of Southam News, which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen on March 26, 1985, the day after the rescue plan for the Canadian Commercial Bank was announced. He said, and I quote:

• (1510)

[English]

"The continuing problems faced by the Canadian Commercial Bank underline the fact that the economic recovery is still very uneven, with the West lagging well behind the rest of the country. A major part of the Commercial Bank's problems are the result of the large number of poor loans it has in western Canada, much of the money loaned to the oil and gas industry or for home mortgages during the boom years".

[Translation]

He went on to say:

[English]

"Money that would have been paid to the debenture holders out of future bank profits now will increase the Commercial Bank cash flow making it more likely the banks and the governments will get paid back".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, people really thought the rescue plan would succeed. This journalist also had the following to say, and I quote:

[English]

"Allowing the ten-year-old bank to go under would have negative impact on financial markets, possibly even with some effect on the value of the dollar. Finally, if the Commercial Bank had gone under, there would have been losses to several pension fund investors. Quebec's Caisse de Depot, which invests money for the Quebec Pension plan, held 10 per cent ownership according to a 1983 prospectus filed by the bank. The Canadian National Rail pension fund, the Air Canada pension trust, the Alberta Government Telephone pension fund, and the Alberta Teachers' retirement fund also would have lost out if the bank had been allowed to go under".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that a decision had been made, and even our journalist who does not have a reputation for being particularly soft on this Government admitted that the decision was a sound one. However, Mr. Speaker, a few weeks later, at a meeting of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, some doubts were raised about this measure which had been taken to help the regional bank, and they were raised by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), which led the chairman of the board of directors of the Canadian Commercial Bank, Mr. Paul Paine, to complain in June that the proceedings of the committee on which this particular Member was sitting had undermined the public's confidence in the Bank during the rescue period. I would like to quote from an article in the Calgary Herald of June 14, by David Triguero, where he says, and I quote:

[English]

"Paine emphasized that CCB management practice had been approved and supported by William Kennett, Federal Inspector General of Banks, and Gerald Bouey, Governor of the Bank of Canada, who may be described as 'all people of high degree of independent credibility and people who understand banking'. Its critics, on the other hand, 'are not terribly familiar with banking and could not be expected to learn much in the few short sessions that the committee heard evidence' ".

[Translation]

However, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Trinity had already raised doubts about the rescue operations. Lack of responsibility, Mr. Speaker? It is not surprising that the rescue plan did not succeed.

Another subject is that of deregulation of the banking system.

[English]

A very good part of this debate, Mr. Speaker, should focus on Liberal inaction on regulatory reform for the last 16 years. Even John Evans, former Liberal Chairman of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, admitted last week on the CBC that the previous Government was well aware of the problems vis-à-vis financial institution regulations, and yet did not act. Our Government, Mr. Speaker, on the contrary, is committed to regulatory reform and has indicated so in the Throne Speech, the economic statement, the Wyman Report, and a discussion paper on financial institutions. Earlier, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) asked why we did not do anything immediately. The reason for that is that we were busy mopping up the mess that the Liberals left us; a mess of unemployment, high interest rates, and a large deficit.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, eleven institutions were operating in Canada when the Bank Act was revised in 1980. After that, the number jumped to 70, which means that 59 new institutions began to operate after the revision of the Bank Act, yet no effort was made by the previous administration to change the regulations.

So Mr. Kennett had to make do with what was there when the Canadian Commercial Bank problem arose.

Why did the Liberals fail to make the necessary changes? Perhaps they were too busy trying to thwart the western petroleum industry which was about to show that it no longer needed to depend on the central Government.

For instance we know that Mr. Lalonde's philosophy was that the central Government had to be very strong, intervene in everything, and tell the regions how and when to develop.

[English]

In other words, Mr. Speaker, instead of backing the winners they were bleeding the winners. That is why we found ourselves in a situation where a bank that was doing very well in the boom years suddenly found itself in difficulty. Today we are faced with the results of the bad administration which we suffered for almost 20 years, and we want to help its victims. However, we are told by the same Liberal Party and by the same NDP, which supported the energy program and several other policies that were so detrimental to the West, that they cannot have their money, that they are big, rich and powerful, even though they are small municipalities, small credit unions, and small insurance companies. Somebody somewhere has a life insurance policy on a loved one and would probably depend on the insurance money to raise a family if a tragedy happened. However, the money is tied up in the Canadian Commercial Bank and we are not allowed to give them relief because they are considered to be very rich people.

[Translation]

Again, Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said earlier. I think that the request for a list of depositors is nonsense. I think it is immoral to want to intervene in the private life of Canadians. And I think it is about time this Bill be adopted by the House. We have wasted enough time and must get back to work immediately, as we began to do, on a review of the banking regulations and give the Inspector of Banks the tools he needs to ensure that our banking system remains sound.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, you speak Fench very well. I have a question for the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly). This morning she spoke eloquently on the issue of the Canadian Commercial Bank collapse and she argued why she thinks it has now become necessary to help people who have deposits with the Canadian Commercial Bank.

Here is my question. If we are going to help the Canadian Commercial Bank, should we not do the same thing for small- and medium-sized businesses? A lot of them in my riding face similar problems and a good many of them had to close down. There are quite a few farmers in my riding, they had to cope with drought, then lots of snow and rain, bad weather generally, so should we not now do for farmers and small businesses what the Hon. Member wants to do for the Canadian Commercial Bank?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) knows very well that in cases of small businessmen and farmers he is talking about shareholders, people who own businesses and are experiencing difficulties, whereas the Bill we are debating today has to do with depositors, people who invested their savings in a bank they thought was sound. That is an aspect of our overall banking system and a different situation altogether.

But as you know, Mr. Speaker, we already help farmers as well as small- and medium-sized businesses. We have already brought in legislation to help such businesses in Canada. We also advocated a legislative measure—for which the New Democratic Party had no use at all, as I recall—to abolish the capital gains tax on farms.

• (1520)

Again they sang the same old tune: those farmers are too rich as it is, we should not abolish the capital gains tax.

They said the same thing when we wanted to abolish the capital gains tax on small- and medium-sized businesses. In our judgment that is one way to help them and make sure that the business remains in the family.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should be consistent. If he wants to do something worthwhile for people he should take a second look at this measure—Bill C-79—and approve it to help the depositors, just as he should do in the case of other legislative measures designed to assist small businessmen and farmers through abolition of the capital gains tax.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) on a supplementary question.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has just referred to capital gains. If a small- or medium-sized business were to file for bankruptcy, how could any change in the capital gains legislation be of any help? I fail to see the logic, Mr. Speaker. I am talking about a situation where a company is bankrupt, yet she suggested an amendment to the capital gains legislation. It has to be the other way around! To help someone through the capital gains tax, that someone must have capital gains to begin with.

Mrs. Mailly: Exactly, Mr. Speaker, there is no ambiguity. The abolition of the capital gains tax will give a bit more cash to small businesses. You always make the same mistake. The NDP Members always make this mistake, and so do the Liberals, when they say that those who have capital gains are wealthy because they have made a profit. However, they should know that small businesses which do not make a profit will soon be in trouble.

There is no ambiguity. In one case, the good is to help the depositors who got caught in a bankruptcy caused by the deterioration of the economic climate due to ill-advised policies of the previous Government. The other is an assistance program for small businesses, because when they go under, it is very often because they do not have the cash they need to operate.

We saw this with small businesses in the oil sector. These small businesses which borrowed from the Canadian Commercial Bank did not have enough cash flow because they were overtaxed by the Liberal Government which wanted to centralize everything in Ottawa without allowing a single region to develop.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) has raised a very important point in saying that, in 1980, the Canadian financial market included 11 banks and that, one year later, this figure increased to approximately 70.

I would like the Hon. Member for Gatineau to comment on the relationship between the haphazard manner in which our predecessors launched all these new banks and the situation last week at the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, which was considering the reform of financial institutions, when the Liberal Party did not see fit to send any representatives to the Committee while this serious work was going on. I would also like her to comment on the relationship between these two things which are strangely similar.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, my colleague has just given a perfect example of the ambivalence of the Liberals who pretend to want to help everyone, but who are never there when the time comes to make a positive rather than a negative contribution.

We are certainly interested in reviewing these regulations. This should have been done a long time ago, Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out in my speech, and I am very happy that my Government is following up on the promise made in the throne speech to the effect that these regulations would be reviewed urgently. If this had been done two years ago, heaven knows that we would not be faced with such a tragic situation today!

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, in view of the exchanges between Government Members, I should like to quote from an editorial from the well-known Edmonton Journal dated October 2, 1985, which reads as follows:

[English]

"The Tories say the Liberals allowed foreign banks to open with inadequate regulations". That is from the Edmonton Journal of Octber 2. It goes on to say, "If the regulation was so lax why did McDougall's spring Green Paper on Banking propose to further deregulate the industry by allowing insurance companies to get into money lending, perhaps creating hundreds of new Schedule C banks?"

If deregulation is not the answer, what is?

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, as usual, the Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is taking something out of context.

Mr. Gauthier: No.

Mrs. Mailly: He is taking an article from the paper. They seem to run their Opposition by reading the paper. Every morning they read the paper and decide what their position will be for the day. If the paper changes the day after, they change their position. We have seen that with the Leader of the Opposition.

[Translation]

As a reed bowing in the wind; if reporters tell them that they are good-looking, that they are fair and chubby, they are pleased, but as soon as the circumstances change, everything becomes different. The regulatory process is not the only issue with which he deals, there is also deregulation and a new control procedure. Did you know, Mr. Speaker, that in Mr. Kennett's office there are only six employees to help him audit the banks while in the state of New York there are 300 experts working under the Inspector of Banks, for they have of course a banking system which is said to be less conventional than ours. However, six employees for a whole country compared with 300 employees for one single state—

Then, Mr. Speaker, obviously what we needed was a new approach to review and regulation. Besides, we came to realize that when another bill relating to trusts, for instance, was debated under the previous administration. We were well aware that the Liberal Party which was then in power wanted to extend to trusts all sorts of measures which were previously unavailable while they were not required to assume as many responsibilities as the banks but they wanted the same advantages—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has expired. Debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) is going to stay near her seat, because we have a few things to say to each other. In any case, I would like to read to her the last paragraph, since I only have a minute, of the editorial that appeared in the Edmonton Journal on October 2, 1985, which reads as follows:

[English]

"Principles lost in bank fiasco". It states, "By trying to blame the Liberals for the collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank, the Government shows it is bankrupt of any sense of responsibility for its actions".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in taking this opportunity to speak to Bill C-79 and especially to the amendment. I would simply like to clarify the issue and start by saying that the amendment before the House is what is referred to as a reasoned amendment and objects to the principle contained in Bill C-79. The House will recall the amendment was moved by the Leader of my party, Mr. Turner, and seconded by myself, and it reads as follows:

"this House declines to give second reading to a Bill, the principle of which is to permit payments of large, but unspecified amounts of public monies to unspecified persons or corporations, thereby substantially denigrating Parliamentary accountability for expenditure of public funds."

Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing we do in this House, it is that we are accountable to our constituents and to Canadians in general, and in this respect, I think it is very important that the federal Government, with the spending powers it has, should be able at all times to justify its expenditures and do so publicly.

The purpose of Bill C-79 being considered today is to authorize the expenditure of $875 million to compensate uninsured depositors who had invested money with the Canadian Commercial Bank, the Northland Bank and the CCB Mortgages Investment Corporation, and all this without revealing the names of the people who stand to benefit from this legislation. The legislation is of course meant to compensate over and above the usual $60,000 paid to any Canadian depositor in a bank that is a member of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. In other words, Canadians are insured for up to $60,000 by public funds, an insurance fund to which we contribute a percentage of our deposits.

Mr. Speaker, all the editorials I have in front of me obviously repeat the same thing. I am going to read one that appeared in the Toronto Star on October 7, which reads as follows:

• (1530)

[English]

"How on earth can the Progressive Conservative Government continue to argue that Canadians should not be told the names of depositors in two failed western banks who are being bailed out with public money? A Government Bill asks Parliament to approve an $875 million public expenditure to finance the bail-out but it ignores the taxpayers' right to know where their money will go".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that is what the argument is essentially about. Why not release the list of uninsured depositors covered by this legislation?

[English]

Are they trying to pass the buck? Is the Government saying what it said in March of this year when it requested money from taxpayers to save the Canadian Commercial Bank which indeed failed? At that time we had to trust the Government and have confidence in it. Should its continued stonewalling on the issue to date require from us an act of faith or an act of good will? Should we tell the Government to go ahead and spend close to $1 billion without telling us where the money is going? On the basis of its lack of disclosure, we ask the Government today to come clean and tell us who is covered or who will benefit. Confidence in the Government is not enhanced by stonewalling on its part.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, last March, the Government told the House: "Quick, something must be done, it is very urgent and our banking system is in peril. One of our banks is in trouble. Now be nice and adopt the Bill, without too much debate, please, and you are going to be asked to give us your support, because trust us, this measure is going to help make viable one of our banking institutions, the Canadian Commercial Bank."

Mr. Speaker, we all know this was false, that the Government had failed to do its homework, that it misled the Canadian people, that it spoke without sufficient knowledge of the facts, without having the requisite studies on the table, studies that should have been done. It misled us, and the result is that $255 million were spent in March 1985, and that today, they are asking us for another $875 million—

[English]

In Bill C-79, the Government is asking for $875 million, as I said. In my riding of Ottawa-Vanier, $875 million is a lot of money. I have been asked by constituents to whom these moneys are going. Will it go to the poor, the unemployed, elderly people, widows or women living below the poverty line? The answer is no. Will the money be used for economically deprived children in our schools to better feed and clothe them? Again the answer is no. This huge sum of money, this king's ransom, will be used to bail out uninsured depositors of two chartered banks which the Government allowed to die. More important, this Bill will bail out not only two banks but two Ministers, two incompetent Ministers—the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). That is what the Bill does. It bails them out. It gives them an out on the backs of taxpayers.

I remind the House and the people who are listening today that both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance assured the House on numerous occasions in debate, in Committee of the Whole and repeatedly in Question Period, that both banks would be or could be kept in business.

I return to the magnitude of the sum involved. I have done some calculations. Since it is not going to the poor or to the elderly, since it is not going to clothe and feed children, I asked myself with what people would identify when considering $875 million. It could mean 28 million family allowance cheques of $31.27. It could mean 3.1 million Old Age Security cheques of $282.94 per month. It could mean 2.6 million Guaranteed Income Security payments or 1.5 million spousal allowance payments. The $875 million is not going to the poor or to the elderly. It is going to bail out people who, by the admission of many specialists, benefited from an investment which was superior to the going market rate. They took that money, and I hope they took the risk; they should bear the brunt. One cannot argue, as the Government is doing, that this is a precedent. If it happens in a year or so from now, the Government will say that it could not be anticipated and hide behind ignorance of the facts.

I should like to refer to the City of Ottawa and to put the $875 million into perspective once again. The City of Ottawa raises approximately $300 million per year in taxes. In fact, the exact figures for 1985 are as follows: municipal taxes, $66,527,600; regional taxes, $81,834,600; school taxes, separate and public combined, $143,052,000, for a grand total of $291,414,200. The total tax collected by the City of Vanier in the year 1985 was $11,268,000. If we combine the taxes for the City of Ottawa and for the City of Vanier, $875 million would mean no taxes for a period of three years. Of course that is discounting the interest on the money which would be deposited. That is the magnitude of this sum of money. At the going rate of interest of 8 or 9 per cent today, it is a phenomenal amount of money.

Mr. McDermid: What about the municipalities?

Mr. Gauthier: I will get to the municipalities. I see the Hon. Member has moved over to be one of the book-ends; he is much better across the way.

Mr. McDermid: What about the shareholders?

Mr. Gauthier: I will deal with the shareholders, but right now I am trying to explain—and the Hon. Member would not understand that—what $875 million means in my riding. I will talk about the shareholders, because it is an interesting point. On the question of depositors and shareholders I wrote to the Minister in April—and I do not know if the Hon. Member did that—because I was concerned. We had participated in a very serious debate here, so I wrote to the Minister on April 22 asking her specifically what were the commitments of the Canadian Commercial Bank with regard to the proportion of the bank's business in Canadian and United States loans. I also asked the Minister about ownership, for a list of shareholders showing the number of shares held, and so on.

● (1540)

On May 21, 1985 the Minister answered and supplied me with a profile of deposits showing at least $635 million of deposits. I also saw in the answer she gave me a profile of the loan portfolios and something which I thought rather interesting, the major common shareholders and major preferred shareholders. Up until now we have failed to talk much about shareholders and I would like to address that point since I was invited to do so by the Hon. Member.

The common shareholders were pension trust funds, and I can name them all: Air Canada pension trust fund; Alberta Government telephone employees trust fund; the Teacher's Retirement Fund of Alberta; la Caisse de dépôt du Placement du Québec; the CNR pension trust fund; the CBC—I even find in there the City of Ottawa superannuation fund, 106,086 common shares—down the drain—they have lost it, pretty well. What were those shares worth in March as compared to today? There is a whole list of shareholders which I would be glad to submit to anyone who is interested. I only have 20 minutes so I do not want to read this into the record. I have already made this public so people can have access to this document if they so desire. The reason I am talking about the magnitude of $875 million is, as stated in the reasoned amendment before us, that we on this side object to paying out $875 million to unknown depositors. We object to being asked again by this Government to perform blindly an act of faith.

I asked myself when I first saw this, why would the Government have what we would call—

[Translation]

—a special bill. Why did the Government introduce such a bill in the House when we are all aware that the Winding-up Act could perfectly apply to the failure of a bank. I believe it is Section 87 of the Winding-up Act which provides that when a creditor wants to submit a claim, he or she must do so openly and publicly. Section 97(7) of the Bankruptcy Act, which does not apply to banks, but does apply in all other cases, provides for something similar. Whoever wants to be reimbursed must publicly submit a claim to a receiver, providing him with his or her name, the amount claimed and all the necessary evidence in support of the claim.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, why do we have before us a bill which exceptionally changes the rules of the game. For instance, Clause 3 states that the Minister of Finance may, on application in the prescribed form and manner, make payment to the depositor of an amount equal to so much of the deposit—

Mr. Speaker, the Government had to find a way out, because the Winding-up Act, which applies to Banks, and the Bankruptcy Act, which does not, would both have compelled it to provide the names of all the creditors who have so far submitted claims to the curator or the receiver. Mr. Speaker, that is the purpose of our amendment to the legislation we are dealing with today. We want to know who the depositors are, as it is our duty to do so, that we may say to our constituents: The depositors are simply Mr. or Mrs. so and so, this and that corporation, this or that financial institution, this or that foreign bank, for they have submitted claims to the curator or the receiver.

[English]

When speaking to the main motion, I will want to review the history and the reasons why we voted for this promise of a bail-out in March and why today we are so mad—that is the word—at a Government that did not play ball as seriously as it should have. We were asked to restore confidence by performing an act of faith in the Government's proposal. I have a chronology of events here. The Government had not even asked the external auditors what was going on in the CCB. It had not even bothered to ask experts in the banking field, although the banks offered voluntarily to do it. The banks said,

"We will examine the portfolio of loans and we will tell you". This was in March, before this fiasco occurred, and the Government said no.

By refusing to do the elementary and serious investigation that it should have done it put Canadians as a whole, taxpayers specifically, and Members of Parliament in a situation where we have a Bill before us that proposes to bailout two banks, Canadian Commercial and Northland.

Northland is an entity by itself that was brought in, dragged in, pushed in, or packaged by this Government. We all remember the famous interview that Mr. Neapole gave on TV when he said that this Government wanted to destroy him. Here is a president of a bank accusing this Government, several weeks before, saying that the Government is out to get him. I would like to speak on that on the main motion, but I think I made my point on the $875 million and why this reasoned amendment has to be approved by this House. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) knows very well that it was the practice for the banks to have their auditing done by their own internal auditors and the Inspector of Banks, under the existing statute, which we want to change because we feel it does not protect Canadian citizens as we can see now. As I said, the Hon. Member knows very well that it was the practice not to perform any special bank audits, since they were left to the auditor himself.

He knows also he did not have time, over the week-end when we had to make a rapid decision to ensure that the next Monday, when the Commercial Bank of Canada would open its doors, depositors would not feel afraid of losing their investments. It was in order to restore confidence that the Government stepped in, and the chartered banks at that point were in agreement to save that bank. Now, with hindsight, and because a "20-20 retroactive vision is very clear" as the saying goes, trying re-do what had not been possible to do at that point is not fair.

I would like to ask him a question. How would he make the difference, simply looking at a list of depositors, in order to decide who is going to be compensated and who is not to be, with compensation based on the financial status of the person or the institution that made the deposit with the Commercial Bank of Canada?

Mr. Speaker, I am looking, for instance, at a list that was supplied by the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall), where, if banks, whether Schedule A or B banks or Trust Companies are eliminated, there are at least $123 million of investments that would be lost if the Bill were not to pass.

And by coincidence, he mentioned that the City of Vanier, I believe, had some $11 million in tax revenues. Looking at the first two classes of municipalities, those with populations of 25,000 and 50,000, and I think this is about the size of the municipality he is representing, that totals $11 million.

In other words, we would ask a municipality like Vanier to relinquinsh some $11 million, unless we make a choice from that list. How would he go about making that choice?

Moreover, looking at individuals, at the $60,000-$99,999 deposit levels, I am saying that individuals who invested that kind of money may be pensioners who sold their family house and invested the money in that bank, in order to have subsistance income, to enjoy a secure retirement in later years. At that point, are we to decide that those are rich people and that we will not compensate them, simply because the figure here exceeds $60,000? This would be simply dropping pensioners who perhaps had put all their savings in that bank and would be left with nothing to live on. The Bill is intended for them also.

Tell me, Mr. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), how would you make the difference? Whom would you compensate, and whom would you not compensate?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, two points were raised by the Hon. Member for Gatineau. First, whether banks are inspected and how that is done.

I can say that regarding the inspection of the Canadian Commercial Bank, and this is the opinion of the Committee of the House that examined the bankruptcy question, and I refer to what was reported in the proceedings of the Committee, namely that the history of the CCB has been marked by a series of imprudent loans, dubious accounting policies, inadequate disclosure of information and deficient supervision. That says it all.

Even if inspection was carried out, if accounting policies are dubious, loans imprudent and disclosure is inadequate, it seems to me that says it all. It was the bank's own poor administrative practice which caused it to collapse.

As for the second question raised by the Hon. Member, I think she made an important point. Of course municipalities are anxious to recover their deposits. I would be the first to agree. I would say to the Hon. Member: Let these municipalities say so publicly. Thus far, and the Hon. Member knows as well as I do, Kanata has said: We have $9 million in the Canadian Commercial Bank. Everybody knows that today. This is one of the municipalities with a population of between 50,000 and 100,000, perhaps a bit more, but in any case, it has $9 million on deposit with the Canadian Commercial Bank.

It is also a fact, and it was said publicly, that St. Catharines in Ontario was in the same position. Toronto as well. Hull had a few million dollars. Some municipalities, and I know municipal affairs as well as I do education, had made a habit of investing in debentures and other investments with these banks because their rates were a quarter or half a point higher.

I do not know whether the Hon. Member for Gatineau saw the interview with the Mayor of Kanata on the weekend. She told the public clearly what her position was, which one had some trouble accepting as a valid reason. She said: "Our administrators have a mandate to invest the municipality's revenues at the best going rate, for as long as we do not need those monies". I would say to the Hon. Member for Gatineau, that if interest rates had gone down and if the investment in question had been discussed by the Mayor at that time, perhaps her administrators would have been more prudent. Now the Mayor has publicly admitted that Kanata has changed its investment methods as a result of this unfortunate experience, and that it will no longer be left up to the discretion of the select few to decide what should be done with public monies.

I think there is a lesson here for municipalities to be more careful and to be a little less, I do not want to say demanding but they will have to be a little more reasonable. And they should not invest in high risk situations. Of course the rate is higher. The profits are higher. But if the risk is greater, it means you might lose your shirt. I am not saying that the municipalities of Kanata and St. Catharines and Toronto, which are public bodies, should lose their deposits. I am just saying that all these municipalities should have the good grace to tell us publicly tomorrow morning who they are. And why not do so on a voluntary basis? I urge all depositors to do so, to make this information public before the House, by sending a letter to the Clerk of the House saying: I am a depositor, I have x dollars on deposit. What is wrong with that, what is wrong with saying these things in public, with saying: I want to be helped with public funds, and I am in a position, and am agreeable to, releasing that information?

I think that is the solution. I say to the Hon. Member for Gatineau that neither of us can vote blindfold, our ears muffled and our mouths shut. There is a fishy smell, but the fact remains that Members of this House will have to remember that when they spend money, they are to be accountable to their constituents. That is the answer to the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to my friend the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier.

I agree with the thrust of his remarks, and our Party has been saying the same thing all along. However I am wondering why the Hon. Member was in favour of the Bill last March when the Government introduced its legislative measure to rescue the Canadian Commercial Bank. Why did you co-sign the cheques, why did you support the Minister of Finance, why did you support the Prime Minister? I think you showed a lot of faith in the Conservative Government. Why did you do that? You no longer agree now, so why did you co-sign the cheques five or six months ago?

Mr. Gauthier: I think I answered that question in my remarks, Mr. Speaker. I said we had been misled, that perhaps we had been dragged into the operation without realizing its full impact. I admit that last March I voted to try to save a banking institution because the Government, which I believed and thought sincere and serious, had told us many times in the House "If you do as we ask, one bank will be saved, a lot of people will be spared, and the deposits will be guaranteed". Well, I am confident that the Canadian banking system is second to none and I did the act of faith the Government expected from me. Today, people with perfect hindsight tell me: "You made a mistake, Gauthier!" So I did, I was led down the garden path by a Government in which I had faith, but never ever will I again have faith in this Government, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret, but questions and comments are over. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we are now being asked to call upon the people of Canada to put $875 million into the winding up of the affairs of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. We ought to remember that this is not the first such request made of this House. We ought to remember that in March, Parliament agreed, over the objections of members of the New Democratic Party, to put $225 million into the failing bank. We were told by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that if that $225 million was made available, the Canadian Commercial Bank would become a viable operation.

These two banks are the first in recent history to find themselves in this kind of trouble. However, in recent years, financial institutions and trust companies have got into trouble. Indeed, from 1980 on, 17 trust companies went bankrupt. We learned today that another trust company in Alberta is no longer financially viable.

This morning when I asked the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) a question about the responsibility of the former Liberal Government which did not set up a system to protect the people against failures of trust companies, he said that all or most of these failed trust companies were operating under provincial charters and therefore the then Liberal federal Government was not responsible. However, we have a federal corporation called the Canada Deposit Corporation which was set up to guarantee people who have deposits in trust companies and banks that they will not lose their money if they have less than $60,000 on deposit. This is a Crown corporation which has already had to pay out well over $1 billion. Since the Crown corporation, in the process of dealing with trust companies which became insolvent, now owns $1.5 billion worth of property, surely the former Government ought to have begun to ask what was wrong with our financial institutions. We cannot blame this Conservative Government for the failure of the former Government to bring in legislation to set up a system which would regulate and protect the people who deposit money in financial institutions.

However, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance told the people of Canada in March that if $225 million was provided to help the Canadian Commercial Bank it would become a viable operation. We have to ask ourselves on what basis they said that. Don McGillivray, who writes a regular column in the Southam papers, in an article which appeared in The Citizen of Ottawa in September asked: "Who pays for the crash of the Canadian Commercial Bank?" He said that it would be the ordinary Canadians. About the present situation and the amount of money required, he said, "it need not have been so large if the bank regulators had been watching more closely and the Government had not tried to pump life into a bank which was clinically dead in March". Don McGillivray is correct. In fact, in March, that bank was dead. It could not be revived.

How did the Government conclude in March that it should try to keep that bank going? The Government depended upon the Inspector General of Banks and the Governor of the Bank of Canada. If the Government did not know in March that the advice it was receiving was bad, then it certainly should have known in May and June. In May and June the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs heard representations regarding the CCB from bank officials, the Inspector General of Banks, auditors of the banks and the Governor of the Bank of Canada. The evidence in that regard was damning. It was clear that the advice given to the Government belief was all wrong. It was clear that the Canadian Commercial Bank could not survive. I say that if the Government did not know in March it was receiving bad advice from the Inspector General of Banks, then it should have known in May and June. It should certainly know now when it is asking the people of Canada to put up substantially more than $1 billion to take care of the mistakes made by those officials and by the Government.

I would like to deal for a moment with the Inspector General of Banks. Several years before the news in 1985 about the CCB's difficulties, he was told by the Superintendent of Insurance that Leonard Rosenberg, who was so instrumental in creating one of the largest disasters in the field of trust companies which this country has ever seen, was involved in wheeling and dealing with the then President of the Canadian Commercial Bank, Mr. Eaton. This was several years before it became apparent that the bank was in grave trouble and that it was involved in very questionable financial dealings. Indeed, at one point, Mr. Rosenberg, or Mr. Rosenberg and his family, controlled probably more than twice as many of the shares of the bank as are permitted to be held under the provisions of the Bank Act. Surely, the Inspector General of Banks should have been aware of what was happening. Surely he should have taken notice. Surely he should have been monitoring the operations of the Canadian Commercial Bank on a careful and day-to-day basis. He did not do that. When he appeared before the Finance committee he said that when he looked at the operations of the bank in trying to find out about the poor loans, loans which were probably never to be repaid, he depended almost exclusively on the information which he received from the officers of the bank and bank employees.

There was another occasion when the Inspector General of Banks should have been put on notice. I would like to quote one short paragraph from page 6 of the June report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs which reads:

> On October 12, 1983, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) issued a "Cease and Desist Order" against the Westlands Bank. The FDIC cited numerous reasons for the order, including hazardous lending, lax collection practices, large volume of poor quality loans, inadequate liquidity, inadequate equity capital and reserves, inadequate loan loss provision, large overhead expenses and poor management.

The Westlands Bank was 100 per cent owned by the Canadian Commercial Bank. It started with a minority share of that bank. However, when it was told by the American regulatory authorities that the Westlands bank was in some difficulty and that the authorities were not satisfied with the way the bank was operating, the Canadian Commercial Bank moved to take 100 per cent control of the bank. Surely, in 1983, when the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation of the United States issued that cease and desist order, the Inspector General of Banks should have been on notice that he had to keep a very careful eye on the Canadian Commercial Bank. He seemed not to pay any attention to that. He did virtually nothing until he was told in 1985 that the bank needed a major infusion of financial help or it would be forced to close down.

The Governor of the Bank of Canada intervened in the CCB situation. In 1983 he did something which was unprecedented. He called The Globe and Mail and said that, in his view, the Canadian Commercial Bank was a viable operation. Indeed, while the Finance committee was holding its hearings in May and June, and after the committee had heard from the officials of the bank, the Inspector General and the auditors about all the things which had gone wrong with the Canadian Commercial Bank and the dishonest way in which it had acted on some occasions, the Governor of the Bank of Canada told the committee that he still had confidence that the then officers of the bank could mount a viable operation.

I ask Hon. Members to compare those statements of the Governor of the Bank of Canada with a speech he made just a few days ago on September 25 in Toronto when he said:

> The Bank of Canada . . . is not involved in monitoring the financial soundness of individual banks and supervising their behaviour. Parliament has not given us that responsibility or the powers that would enable us to fulfil that function. The Bank of Canada has no bank auditors, no bank examiners, no power to require details of individual loans, deposits or any other kind of private transaction.

If the Bank of Canada does not have the type of power about which the Governor of the bank spoke a few days ago, whey then did he intervene in 1983 and again in the spring of this year to tell the people of Canada that he considered the bank to be a viable operation?
